Any material sent through the mail should include the following factors:

1. A well-planned mailing piece.
2. Material attractively prepared.
3. Message and theme embodying proper appeal.

The mailing should be done at proper time, and in a proper manner.

Announcement cards are excellent for mailing purposes. These cards should be about three by five and one-half inches, or a convenient size to slip inside of a small envelope. Certain types of print give these cards an engraved appearance. Such cards should be of medium weight and expertly printed. This announcement is more formal than any other publicity, and great care should be given so that it meets every requirement for which it is intended. When it is enclosed inside a one and one-half or three cent stamped envelope, it carries a more personal touch than the postal card.

Newspapers afford the missionary an opportunity to present his message to many readers in a variety of homes. If you are fortunate enough to be working in a community where a daily paper is being published, either you or the pastor should stop in and make the acquaintance of the editor. Many editors are quite anxious to co-operate with the churches in their community. If the proper approach can be made, perhaps you may be able to have a brief 'resume' of each sermon published throughout your series of meetings. In one community, two local papers carry the Sunday sermons that are preached in our pulpit, and many nonmembers remark that they read the write-ups each week. These sermons are reported by one of the women in that congregation. We should be willing to place an advertisement in any newspaper that gives us such accommodation.

The radio is one of the greatest organized mediums of publicity known to date. This method of communicating news and interesting programs is playing a definite part in creating public opinion. We must begin now to prepare ourselves so that we can utilize this great industry to help evangelize the world. We must train ourselves to speak over the radio, and to write scripts suitable for use on the air. At our earliest convenience, we should enroll in classes that teach speech for radio work. Good talent must be available before we can hope to produce a high quality service over the air. Music is important in any service, and especially on radio programs. We should be sure that any talent used reaches the highest possible standards.

Radio programs are not too expensive where careful thought and well-supervised planning go into them. Work is being done by our radio department to prepare script which can be mailed to congregations for use on stations in the vicinity of the church. One of the first places we can start is by having "spot announcements" made over the air by local announcers telling about our services. We should solicit the help of our Radio Director before attempting any programs of our own.

Introductory folders are good for introducing your series of meetings in a semi-formal way. An appropriate size for these folders would be three by four and one-half inches. They should include a picture of the speaker, a list of subjects, time of the services, date of the series, the address of the church, and the pastor's name. These folders can either be passed out at the services, mailed, or handed out at the homes in the community.

in front of the church. Only a few of our churches have gone so far as to put a signboard which announces the name of the church and the time of the services on the high-way leading into the city. Such a sign should carry a friendly welcome as well as the address of the church.

Bulletin boards are quite effective in publicizing the various services to be held at the church. When a series is being held, they afford an excellent means of keeping the traffic passing the church informed about the meetings. These boards are usually thirty-six by sixty inches in size, and should be enclosed in a tight wood or metal case with a glass door in the front; an added attraction to these boards is neon lighting in attractive colors. The lettering is made on small steel plates with interchanging letters which fit on a grooved panel. The cost of these boards runs from $50 to $400. This expense can be greatly reduced by making your own case and buying the steel panel and letters. Every church should have one of these bulletin boards for its publicity program. When such boards are available to the missionary, he should take advantage of them by keeping his sermon topics posted each day. These bulletins are easily made-up, and it takes only a few minutes to make a complete change.

Conclusion

Money used in publicity should be considered an expense only when the publicity is poorly done. Keep in mind that not all publicity will work in every community. You should know something about the community that you are going to work in, and then plan your publicity accordingly. Close co-operation is necessary between the pastor, missionary and membership in planning and publicizing a series of meetings. Good music is an excellent means of winning music lovers to the gospel, and their abilities should be used whenever possible.

A successful series of meetings not only calls for well-organized sermons, but also good organization in planning the publicity for the meetings. If your series is not producing the desired results, then find out as soon as possible where the errors are and go to work on them. It costs more to complete an unsuccessful series than it does a good one. Quite often the sermons have been well presented but have lacked something in attracting a large audience. Perhaps it is the publicity that has brought about this slump in the meetings. Don't be afraid to admit defeat or failure; the catastrophe comes when we fail to make improvements. Let this be our slogan: "Make truth attractive, and still more attractive."

CHALLENGES

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

Mexico City, May 16:

WHEN Cortez and a few Franciscan monks came to old Tenochtitlan, they decided to destroy all vestiges of the "heathen," Aztec religion. They tore down the large pyramid and erected a cathedral. It was begun in 1530, and today I witnessed its decadence. Last year I roamed, practically at will, through its halls and shrines. Tonight only a few square feet are open to public use. No music is allowed—only muffled chanting. The floors are sagging in many places. Three feet of water stand under these rough boards, and an engineer is in constant attendance to watch for strains or vibrations which might bring the whole cathedral tumbling down. Much of this real danger developed in less than a year.

I saw this sight with mixed feelings. Years of humble and sincere devotion went into the structure. Those devoted Lamanite descendants worked hard to create a national shrine, now headquarters of Catholicism in Mexico. Yet, in this decay, I see a sign. Why did this occur? A simple reason—poor foundations. This was originally swamp land, a city of island dwellers. The drained ground is unstable today, even with modern mechanical methods of preparing foundations. This particular edifice has only a nine foot base resting on morass. Too often a huge structure—political, social, religious—is built upon as infirm a base, and time proves its inadequacy. Either a church or an individual must dig deep into fundamentals before being sufficiently grounded to face obstacles or time.

The waitress brought my pan dulce and te caliente and we exchanged a few greetings. I had met her in 1941, when my Spanish was much less understandable; now we reminisced. I began to enumerate the things available in Mexico which are much rarer in the States—nylons, sugar, automobiles! She interrupted me with, "Yes, we have everything, and with money, you can buy it. The poor people just stand and look." It is the same old story of inflation—those with money get richer, and the poor grow more miserable. I began to think deep thoughts about the advance of civilization. Can it really be good if the common people are not permitted to take advantage of the new life?

No way of life can ever be completely effective until its advantages are felt by all men. This is one of the beauties of Christ's gospel. It is available to every human being. Therein rests our responsibility—to make this way of life a part of man's existence. There need never be inflation in the church of God.

May 18:

Today I wandered again through Chapultepec Park and climbed the heights to the castle, home of the Montezumas, Carlotta, Maximilian, and a number of the presidents. The castle was the scene of the International Monetary Conference in 1945, and has witnessed diplomatic affairs many times through the years. Today the rooms house a museum of valuable relics of historical times. One may spend many profitable hours going through these rooms. You cannot long be in Mexico without realizing the values of former days. Here is a modern office building, straight and tall, its lines duplicated in all other new buildings. It might be on any street, in any city, in any country. But here is an old structure, like the Iturbide Palace built in 1530, which houses modern stores; it does not soar so high into the sky, but is rich in the ornate rococo carving of the Spanish Conquest. This building has stood through the years, as has Chapultepec Castle, and continues to serve efficiently and gracefully. Age need not mean deterioration; often it is the real mark of quality.

There are new fads arising every day, and in religion there is no exception. Somehow many people have forgotten the "old Jerusalem gospel" and attached themselves to cults, lodges, and "isms." These are the things which glitter and beckon, but when time has taken its toll, which will still be standing? There is beauty in age, when it is serviceable; the new is not necessarily the best. God's will among men is as old as man himself, and cannot be replaced by any new idea.

May 20:

Today I had an interesting experience. I was visiting the piramides again, and after much hiking sat down under a tree to rest. Three well-dressed people, obviously a mother, father, and son, also stood there in the shade. They knew little English, but we were soon engaged in a spirited conversation about archaeology. The son spoke with much authority; I discovered later that he was a professor at the University of Quito, Ecuador. He told about his ranch where many ruins remain, among them the summer home of one of the Inca kings. He was particularly interested in a possible common ancestry between the Aztecs and the Incas.

With quite an ulterior motive in mind, I took their pictures and asked for their address so that I could mail them copies of the photographs. I want to keep in touch with those people; who knows, a few words later on may help them find their way to the truth.

May 22:

At the top of the Chalula Pyramid one may view remnants of personal effects of ancient peoples. Two skeletons are exposed to public view. I glanced at them, but spent most of my time in a near-by cornfield. The newly plowed earth had released bits of ancient pottery, obsidian, several miniature idols, and amulets. A wealth of history still remains to be uncovered there, and at other known and unknown areas of archaeological importance.

Human nature is often thus. Everyone sees the obvious, yet much of beauty and real value is lost because the individual does not scratch beneath the surface.

slightest suspicion of its presence.

And a few simple precautions exercised in an epidemic area may prevent the disease or mitigate its severity:

Avoid chilling and overtiring.

Do not swim or bathe in polluted waters.

Avoid tonsil and adenoid operations.

Protect food from flies.

Above all, don't yield to panic and don't worry about the expense. Experienced medical personnel and the best equipment known are ready and, although infantile paralysis is one of the most expensive diseases known to medicine and few families can afford prolonged treatment, the National Foundation and its chapters, supported by your March of Dimes, are pledged that no victim need lack treatment for want of funds—regardless of age, race, creed, or color.

Ie Shima in the Ryukyus Islands, April 17, 1945. He was a humble man, and far more able and intelligent than he pretended. One can understand his appeal from his writing and from the picture on the book jacket. This is a fine last message from an able correspondent.

PIERRE VAN PAASSEN: Earth Could Be Fair, Dial Press, 1946. 509 pages. $3.75. . . . A chronicle of real events, written in novel style, with names changed for the protection of living persons, covering events of the time of the First World War, although the problems and types involved are those of Holland throughout a long period of time, and up to the present day. The author is a foremost literary figure among international writers. Race relations, the Jewish problem, the gray danger to the east, local politics and struggles, the whole scene of good and evil among a people, are presented in intensely dramatic story form in this account.

The Devil and God, by William Robinson. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1945. 125 pages. $1. . . . An examination of the problem of evil, and the relation of the doctrine of Satan to it; of the true nature of the Old Testament references to the Adversary, correcting mistakes of translation and misunderstanding. The author presents clearly the problem involved in a dualistic philosophy and, for those who must believe in a personal Devil, puts him in his proper place. The summary on pages 73 to 77 is especially clear and good.

Memorable Experiences

I have had two very pleasant visits with the Saints at Sabetha, Kansas, and Coal Hill, Missouri, recently. While at Coal Hill, there came to my memory some testimonies that I should like to pass on to Herald readers. One Sunday morning, about fifty years ago, I was attending church at Coal Hill; during the short recess between services I was standing in the yard and noticed a team coming from Eldorado Springs. Dr. and Mrs. Phipps drove up, tied the horses, and entered the church. Pastor Charles Schroder gave the sermon that morning; as soon as he had finished speaking, a strange lady arose and asked the privilege to talk. In a very pleasant voice, she said that she had come to Eldorado Springs three months before, seeking benefit from the water. She added, however, that the night before she realized she was near death and began praying earnestly for wisdom and direction as to what she should do before entering the next life. Her prayer was answered, and she was given a vision in which she saw the two men at the front of the church. She said she was given their names and told to apply for baptism that day. She was baptized, confirmed, and given administration; she was completely healed and returned to her home rejoicing. Mrs. Phipps also became a member of the church.

I should like to relate another wonderful experience which was told me by Brother Ammon White a short time before his death. I had been called to administer to a member who lived three miles east of Independence. Since I had no car, I called Brother White, and he consented to take me. While we were riding, he told me that immediately after his ordination to the office of patriarch, he was advised to go to Coal Hill and fulfill his calling. He went on a Saturday afternoon, but decided he could not give patriarchal blessings; he wrote Brother U. W. Greene, stating that he wished to give up the responsibility which had been placed upon him. On the following Sunday my father, Abner Lloyd, was directed to go to Coal Hill; during the service, he arose and spoke in an unknown tongue, admonishing Brother White to accept his calling. He was told that God would grant him strength if he would give blessings to those who asked for them. Today hundreds of people can testify of his work in that field of the ministry.

I have many other experiences to relate to Herald readers. I am now in my eighty-first year; I continue to enjoy life and the liberty of preaching. I have knelt in prayer at the bedside of many friends in Kansas City, and they have been comforted. How great is the love of our Heavenly Father for the children he has created! I am glad to be his servant.

A Young Mother's Conversion

Today I received my first copy of the Saints' Herald; I have read it from cover to cover and found many articles that were of great interest to me.

I have been a member of the Reorganized Church for about a year and a half. I haven't the words to express my appreciation for the difference the gospel has made in my life. Before I joined the church, I tried to convince myself that it was all wrong. Although I married a young man of the Reorganized faith, whose parents were staunch members, I still refused to see the light. Then my husband joined the Navy and was sent overseas. During his absence, our oldest son had his eye punctured with a stick. We rushed him to a hospital, but as soon as the examination was made, the doctor told us to bring him home to rest, so that he would be in better condition to have his eye stitched the following day.

I was very much worried and finally asked for administration for my injured son. My husband's mother called Elder Frank Fry, who came and administered to Gene; he was greatly relieved and slept peacefully. I went to my room and prayed, "Father, if it be thy church, send thy Son to show me the way." Then the room was illuminated with the whitest, brightest light I have ever seen, and in the distance I saw a city of gold. The huge gates to this city swung open, and a figure walked through them toward me. I knew immediately that it was Christ. He wore a white robe, no shoes, and his hair fell to his shoulders. He continued to walk toward me until all I could see was his face. In his eyes were all the kindness and strength in the world; he looked at me, and I felt the peace of a thousand angels. Then he was gone.

The next day was Sunday. Gene's eye was entirely healed, and not the slightest scar was left. Several days later I called Brother Fry and requested baptism.

When Gene was eight years old, he also became a member. His younger brother, now six, is already asking about being baptized. It is my prayer that both sons will be able to help in some way in the work of the church.

A Sorrow Is Lightened

"God will be mindful concerning those you love" was a statement made in my husband's patriarchal blessing, given a short while before his death. That statement surely must have been a comfort to him, for God has watched over us.

My husband died suddenly—I had never once thought he might be taken that way—but I was comforted during those first days after his passing to the extent that I felt it didn't matter. I wondered if I were being hard-hearted, but the experience helped me a great deal in the days and weeks ahead. I did wish I had known beforehand that he wouldn't be with us long, but looking back I knew God had been preparing me, and there were many things for which I could be thankful. I was grateful that he had heard and accepted the restored gospel, and was an active member of the priesthood before his death. At the district conference in February I felt, through the Spirit, that I must be dearer to my family. In April, the Easter story seemed to have a special significance to me; it was in May that my husband died. Even the fact that he had been permitted to live through the night and have that last leisurely breakfast with us was a blessing. As Brother Z. Z. Renfroe said, it seemed that everything worked out to make it as easy as possible for us.

I found comfort in hymns and poems, and Brother Elbert Smith's "Blue Pencil Notes." My husband's death brought a longing to return to the land of Zion. I pondered and prayed many hours as to what was best for me to do—I had my young daughter as well as myself to think of. One morning, after much deliberating, these lines came to me:

"When we prove faithful, God will take the cup
For which we long, and place it in our hand."

I feel I have a promise that I shall return—if I am faithful.

We spent six weeks in Independence and Lamoni the year after my husband died. It helped to go back to the "center place" and travel over the rolling hills of Missouri and Iowa again. I came home with the songs of Zion in my heart and on my lips, hoping to be worthy of returning permanently, whenever it might be best for me to do so.

News Briefs

Australia

MUSIC AND DRAMA FESTIVAL.—Victoria district's annual reunion was replaced by a music and drama festival held at Wesgarth, Melbourne, Easter week. It was dedicated to all those who have contributed to the enrichment of music in the church. The Easter story was portrayed in music, with the Victoria district choir and Wesgarth's girl's choir participating. Plays were presented by the members of Carnegie, Hastings, Geelong, and Wesgarth branches. A Communion choral service, a musical quiz, and lectures by church leaders were other features of the festival. Meals were provided on the church grounds, and a picnic was held Easter Monday at Caulfield Park.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S DEATH.—News of the death of President Frederick M. Smith came as a shock to Australian Saints. The few that have visited America and met him, spoke well of him. An announcement of his death was made in all branches; special services and prayers testified to the place he occupied in the hearts of the Australian members.

IONA, MICHIGAN.—The news brief appearing in the June 8 edition of the Herald stated that the Iona group had been organized into a branch. Since then the editors have been informed that it is not a branch, but a district mission.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, Central Church.—The Seattle Saints are engaged in an "all-out" drive to raise funds for the new church. Members of the LaDaSa Club are embroidering pillow cases, the Leaguers are collecting dimes, individual members are selling boxes of gift cards, and the women are planning a rummage sale for July. Estimate cards have been distributed for determining the amount to be paid to the fund.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Two successful suppers have been held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wright; proceeds were applied to the building fund. A business meeting was held on March 31 for the election of a hostess, press representative, building committee, and an attendant to take care of the sign on the outside of the church. On Thursday evening, May 26, a special service was held with District President Reed Holmes in charge and Apostle George Lewis as speaker. Musical programs, under the direction of Genevieve Chesworth, have added much to recent services. Seventy Albert Scherer was present on Children's Day to give the talk; with him was his new wife, Twyla, a member of the 1946 graduating class of Graceland.

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—Apostle John Rushton and Seventy David Larmour were present on January 22 for a special business session. On January 27 an all-day meeting was held in Tucson for the members of the reunion committee and friends from neighboring congregations. A basket dinner was served at noon; in the afternoon the Leaguers took their guests on a tour of the town, visiting the university museum and "A" mountain. The prayer service on March 29 was for the family of President Frederick M. Smith. The Saints came fasting to the Communion service on April 7; prayers were for General Conference. Reports on the conference were given on April 28 and May 19 for the benefit of those who could not attend. The choir, under the direction of Alice Constance, provided special music on Easter and Mother's Day. The building fund is steadily growing, with at least one activity being sponsored each month to raise money for it.

NAMPA, IDAHO.—Charles Whipple and Reginald Fritschle, Jr., veterans, told of their overseas experiences at the worship hour on January 13. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ford joined the mission on March 18, coming from Kingston, Missouri. They were helpful in organizing a young married people's class which meets on Sunday mornings and every other Friday evening for study and social activities. On April 28 District President Silas Condit of Hagerman and Elder Cecil Gilmore of Boise were present for an afternoon service.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.—On May 5 Pastor John F. Sheehy of Toronto and Seventy Percy E. Farrow were the speakers at the morning and evening services. The young people's convention held in Toronto on June 1 and 2 was voted a success by all who attended; E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College, was a guest speaker.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA.—A mother-daughter banquet was held on May 10, at which the men served as waiters. Mrs. C. E. Burnett was in charge of the meal, and Bernadine Kudrle was toastmaster. Pastor C. E. Burnett gave the Mother's Day sermon; in the afternoon a tea was given by the young people for their mothers, with a short musicale as entertainment. C. S. Van Eaton presented a film on the ruins in Mexico at the evening service. On June 6 the women of the branch met at the church for the annual spring cleaning. A church picnic was held at Riverside Park on June 7. Two servicemen have returned in the past month; they are Lt. Jack Gernhart, who was in Burma, India, and Duane Bruggeman, S 1/C, home from Tokyo.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.—A baptismal service was held on the morning of June 9 at the First Christian Church, Elder C. J. Lant officiating. Five children were baptized; in each case the parents, grandparents, and great-grandparents were members of the church. The confirmation service was held on Children's Day; John Davis of Long Beach was the speaker on this occasion. Much credit is due N. T. ("Uncle Tom") Chapman for the service he is rendering as pastor of the branch.

BULLETIN BOARD

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent Scandinavian Mission

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Jens W. Blume, VIBY, Shell, Denmark, as bishop's agent of the Scandinavian mission, succeeding A. W. Lundstrom, whose resignation has been received.

We wish to take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Lundstrom for the fine co-operation and years of service he has given in this office. We have also appreciated the support given by the Saints to Brother Lundstrom, and commend Brother Blume to the Saints for their favorable consideration and support.

Northern Saskatchewan District Reunion

The northern Saskatchewan district reunion will be held from July 18 to 21 at Saskatoon. Apostles Charles Hield and D. T. Williams are to be in attendance. Those planning to attend should write to Mrs. E. A. Ward, 136 7th Street, Saskatoon, stating the sleeping accommodations desired, so that the housing committee can make necessary arrangements. Guests will supply their own meals.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Maud Bartley and Sidney Crandall of Sylvania, Ohio, that they may be healed of their afflictions.

Prayers are requested for Nellie Harper of Senlac, Saskatchewan, who is helpless as the result of paralysis.

WEDDINGS

LaPointe-Riddle

Joyce Riddle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Riddle of Maryland Heights, Missouri, and Edward LaPointe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis LaPointe of Keene, New Hampshire, were united in marriage on June 1 at the church in Maryland Heights. The doubling ceremony was performed by Brother Knussmann; a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother. They are honeymooning in New Hampshire.

Births

Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Cline of Sacramento, California, announce the birth of a son, Bruce Richard, born May 19. Mrs. Cline is the former June Bevard.

A daughter, Linda Loraine, was born to Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Aaron of Kilgore, Texas.

Our Departed Ones

BUSCHOW.—Rose Maria, daughter of William and Maria Bozarth, was born January 7, 1881, at Cameron, Missouri, and died June 12, On April 21, 1889, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, remaining faithful to its teachings throughout her life. On December 13 she was united in marriage to Adolph A. Buschow, who preceded her in death on March 17, 1941.

She is survived by a son, Adolph Buschow, Jr., of Wichita, Kansas; a daughter, Mrs. Doris Brewer, also of Wichita; two sisters: Mrs. Anna Murphy and Mrs. Mattie Mills, both of Independence; and two grandsons. Funeral services were conducted by Pastor D. J. Williams. Interment was in Wichita Park Cemetery.

DODSON.—Mary Elizabeth, was born November 17, 1871, in Decatur County, Iowa, and passed away June 7 at the Independence Sanitarium. She was married to William T. Dodson in 1888; nine children were born to this union, seven of which survive. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on June 26, 1892, and attended Second Church in Independence for thirty-three years.

She leaves a son, Raymond Dodson, Seattle, Washington; six daughters: Mrs. Margaret Burns, Grain Valley, Missouri; Mrs. Jennie McElya, Gasparilla, Florida; Mrs. Dora Garity, Baldwin Park, California; Mrs. Mary Johnson, Mrs. Easter Bates, and Mrs. Opal Doubt, all of Independence, Missouri; two sisters: Mrs. Jane Drake, Maxwell, Nebraska; and Mrs. Kate Sides, Loup City, Nebraska; a brother, Nelson Trembly, Arapahoe, Nebraska; twenty-seven grandchildren, twelve great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. Funeral services were held in Second Church in Independence, Pastor W. Blair McClain officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MURPHY.—Gladys Marguerita, only child of the late Charles J. and Mattie Kaighan, was born in San Francisco, California, and passed away June 2 in New York, following a year of severe illness. She was married to William L. Murphy of Tuolumne County, California; one son, William K., was born to this marriage. She belonged to one of the oldest church families on the coast; being a gifted singer, she contributed much to the services of the branch she attended.

Besides her husband and son, she leaves many other relatives and friends. Funeral services were held in San Francisco, Apostle John W. Rushton officiating. She was laid to rest in the family plot at Cypress Lawn.

HARRIS.—Jean Baillie, daughter of James and Janet Baillie, was born in Scranton, Kansas, on October 9, 1890, and died at Ottawa, Kansas, on April 19. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of ten.

She leaves her husband, Grover C. Harris; a daughter, Mrs. Yvonne Hoyt, Homewood, Kansas; two sisters: Mrs. L. C. Oliphant, Comanche Oklahoma; and Mrs. Dave Little, Newton, Kansas; and two granddaughters.

LONG.—Fannie Antoinette, daughter of Frank and Mary Bondurant, was born May 13, 1887, in Monroe County, Alabama, and died June 8 at her home in Canoe, Alabama. She was a devoted Saint for forty-two years, and a member of the Range group at the time of her death.

She is survived by her husband, Charles B. Long, to whom she was married on February 20, 1908; four daughters: Mrs. Katie Bell, Mrs. Ruby Nail, and Mrs. Mary Over of Canoe, and Mrs. Fannie Spasojevich of Chicago, Illinois; four sons: William Alton, Clyde Bernard, and Joe Neil of Canoe; two sisters: Mrs. Lillie Whitfield, Century, Florida; and Mrs. Cornelia Blackmon, Bluff Springs, Florida; two brothers: J. L. and J. D. Bondurant of Flomaton, Alabama; and seven grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Hall Cemetery near Range, Alabama, W. H. Drake and John W. Baldwin of McKenzie officiating.

REELFS.—Martha Anderson, was born January 20, 1904, at Stotts City, Missouri, and died May 17 at her home near Missouri Valley, Iowa. She was united in marriage to Henry O. Reelfs in 1926, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church the following year. She was a devoted wife and friend; her greatest joy was in ministering to the sick, many of whom can testify of her love and skill.

She is survived by her husband; her mother, Mrs. Thomas Stewart of Council Bluffs, Iowa; two sisters, Mrs. William Race of Santa Monica, California, and Mrs. Thomas Leichter of Alameda, California. Elder E. L. Edwards of Woodbine officiated at the funeral services. Burial was in the Hazel Dell Cemetery.

WYMAN.—Eugene, sixty-three years old and a resident of Port Huron, Michigan, died May 5 in Port Huron Hospital following a brief illness.

He is survived by his wife, Minnie; three daughters: Mrs. Harry Barnes, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Leo Draveling, Detroit, Michigan; and Mrs. Charles Drude, Port Huron, Michigan; two sisters and two brothers. Elders John R. Grice and J. A. Pray were in charge of the funeral services.

GREGG.—Thomas Jefferson, was born at Creighton, Missouri, on July 17, 1859, and passed away at Lakeside Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri, on May 25. He was united in marriage to Ida Harrington at Great Bend, Kansas, on September 20, 1884; seven children were born to this union. Mrs. Gregg preceded him in death on October 22, 1932. He united with the Reorganized Church in 1921, and remained a faithful member throughout life.

He is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Frank Anderson, Yakima, Washington; Mrs. Peter Kesselring and Mrs. Henry Bowdish, Valentine, Nebraska; four sons: John Gregg, Harpster, Idaho; Claude Gregg, Parmalee, South Dakota; George and Grover Gregg, Yakima, Washington; and a stepson, Henry Tienken, Independence, Missouri. Services were held in Creighton, after which the body was returned to Valentine for burial in the Mount Hope Cemetery.

GERSTEN.—Everett W., twenty-five years old and a veteran of three years overseas duty in Europe, died in Hines Hospital, Chicago, after an illness of two months. He was a member of the Port Huron, Michigan, branch.

Left to mourn are his mother, Alice Bartow; Philip J. Gersten; two brothers: Captain Arnold Gersten and Keith Gersten; a sister, Mrs. Gerald Ferguson; and his two grandmothers: Mrs. William Pease and Mrs. Mary Gerstenschlager. Elders J. A. Pray and Carl E. Muir officiated at the funeral services.

SEARS.—Helen Nichols, was born April 11, 1873, at Norton Creek, Canada, and died after a protracted illness on May 2, at Independence, Missouri. She was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church; before moving to Independence in September, 1942, she was a member of the Brooklyn, New York, branch for twenty-nine years. She was preceded in death by her husband, Warren C. Sears. Surviving are one sister, Sara S. Nichols, and a brother, William E. Nichols. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home, Apostle Charles Hield officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ME

By LAURAYNE NORRIS

Each morning I wake from my slumber
And God's latest gift comes to view.
Though many have passed into history,
The day just ahead is brand new.
How careful I must be to use it,
For I can't exchange it, you see.
Each day of my life, I am writing
The Gospel according to Me.

My actions print clear on the new day
The message I seek to proclaim.
What care I must use, that, in action,
The words that I speak are not vain!
As part of a living library,
It's there for the whole world to see—
Each day of my life I am writing
The Gospel according to Me.

The author is serving with the U. S. Army, and wrote the above verses after hearing a sermon at the Des Moines district conference. Her identification is Pfc., A-910505; Co. 5, ORD, Det. AS; Fort Des Moines, Iowa.

* CRUISE OF THE "S.S. INKSPOT"

For two summers, the editorial land yacht, the S.S. Inkspot, lay in its home wharf, gathering literary barnacles, while its navigator took his vacation in the hospital—a wonderful place when you need it. This summer he escaped. All steamed up (literally) the Inkspot weighed anchor and moved out for a new destination.

MISSOURI

Among the most beautiful of the smaller mountains of America are the Ozarks of Missouri. The road from Jefferson City to Rolla and Winona passes through some fine alpine country. One may see a great distance from the lookout tower at Eminence. Near Van Buren is the Big Spring State Park, reputed (by Missouri authorities) to contain the largest single spring in the world, having a maximum daily flow of 485,000,000 gallons. But a gallon went into the editor's jug, leaving a mere 484,999,999 for that day.

It is a great thrill to observe the joining of two mighty rivers, the Mississippi and the Ohio, from the bridges of U. S. 60, where it goes from Missouri, by-passes Illinois, and enters Kentucky. If anything, the Ohio looks the greater.

KENTUCKY

The ways of life vary so much from one state to another that they seem like different countries. Kentucky is definitely "Dixie Land." Most of the evening life is home life. Every house has its pillared porch and the family sits there in the coolness of the evening, watching friends and strangers go by.

The great Kentucky Lake lies like an inland sea along the western half of the state. Kentucky is an old state, heavily populated, with a house of some kind everywhere you look.

Courtesy extends like a charm in all this part of Dixie Land, and it's fine because it's perfectly natural and not put on for effect nor as a matter of policy.

TENNESSEE

Nashville is a great place to have your car break down, if it must. The friendly people do all they can to take the disappointment out of it, and help the traveler on his way. Old, historic, a mixture of the quaint and practical, Nashville represents the best of the Old South and the new. Andrew Jackson's home, "The Hermitage," the Parthenon (replica of the Greek), the great Vanderbilt University, and the capitol, looking as old as a Civil War cannon and standing on a commanding eminence—all are here.

* GRACE

Shall I give thanks to God
For this food spread upon this table?
Shall I bow my head in humble gratefulness
For this privilege of enjoyment?
It takes an extra moment and my life
Is such a rush!
I'm not sure I can spare the time
Or lend a moment's thought to Him Whose gift this bounty is.
But yes, my elders wait . . .
With quiet patience they expect this spoken word.
God knows I'm thankful for my lot,
But I'll just say it anyhow!

My, —how could I know this little prayer
Would seem so right
And bring such peace!

Day of Preparation

Shortage of Time

If we could know in our youth how short a time a life is, and how important, costly, and precious the days of our preparation are, we would guard every minute and use it to the maximum advantage. Only when the days of preparation are gone, and we must face life with the training and equipment we have, whether it be good or bad, ready or not, do we understand how we have betrayed ourselves by wasting our opportunities, day-dreaming, wishing, building "castles in Spain," and laying the groundwork of future failure.

The youthful student has many temptations to divert him from his main purpose. Moonlight and romance may lead him to devote too many evenings to interfering with some young woman's preparation for a career. Physical appetite may urge him to take time off for another hamburger or a chocolate soda. Or he may delude himself with the notion that he can learn more in a talk-fest with some fellow students, who substitute opinion for the solid information of the neglected textbooks. Moonlight and romance, food and refreshments, argument and discussion, all have their place in the necessary periphery of an education. Without them, life would be stale and would deny the student an understanding of some of its most important realities. A common, ordinary life can be filled with them. But they do not bring attainment, leadership, or success, when divorced from hard work and study.

In every life there is a shortage of time that becomes more apparent as one grows older. Each of us is like Cinderella. Whatever fun she obtained at the party must be had before the stroke of twelve, or it would be lost forever. At midnight, the magic would inevitably fail, and the old garments and realities return. The days of preparation are short.

Concerning the Church

These are days of preparation in the church. In them we may prepare for the building of Christian community life at home and for extending the missionary program abroad—or, as President Frederick M. Smith used to say, "We must Zionize the church and evangelize the world."

There is a shortage of time, and in many ways we are wasting our opportunities which are here now but which, neglected, may never return.

The tragedy we see is that some are toiling beyond their strength while others are dreaming and waiting, willing to let something happen, but doing nothing to make it happen.

As we see it, the development of organization and personnel must go forward together. Sometimes effective organization is retarded for lack of trained men and women to carry out its program; and sometimes good men and women rust because organization is not ready to use them.

Problems of the Gathering

One thing that hastens us is the fact that members of the church are coming from many parts of the country and, if permitted to do so, would be coming from many other parts of the world to settle in the central places and the "regions round about." The people are present.

Not all of them are ready to participate in any kind of Christian community life simply because they do not have, individually, Christian ways of living. They increase the numbers without increasing the strength; in some cases they decrease the strength because they demand so much help to keep their lives in any kind of order. But most of those who come have something good to contribute, either actually or potentially. One is encouraged to observe, on the average, the high quality, the personal attainments, the capacity for service, and the dedication to the cause of the church, among the incoming members. These are the people who make the church feel its responsibility for planning and organization.

Losses

For the incoming members, there is a pattern of church work and activity into which they can fit and find opportunities for service. In this department, the problem is mechanical: congregations must grow, new ones must be established, churches must be built or enlarged. The means of accomplishing this is well known because there has been much experience with it.

In the economic field, the newly arrived members must fit into established businesses or create new ones. In either case, they become a part of the existing economic order. To those who believe in it, this is good; to those who do not, it is bad. They can become a part of the religious community life; they can become a part of Christian social life; but there is no distinctly Christian economic life for them to join. They can behave individually as Christians in their economic life, but as yet no arrangements for organized economic endeavor exist.

Such observations as these are concerned with fact, not with censure. The establishment of new ways of Christian community life may seem simple to many; but to

BOYS AND GIRLS BAPTIZED IN ANCIENT KIRTLAND POOL

The Presidency is pleased to observe the progress being made through the ministry of Elder John W. Banks at Kirtland, where, on Children's Day, thirteen were baptized into the Church. Mr. Frank Stewart, a reporter, was present, and on the following day the Cleveland Press printed his story under the heading "A Stranger Goes to Church." It is so entertaining we pass it on for the benefit of our readers.

Trodding on vernal-green of nature's carpet, thirteen boys and girls walked along a path that cut a swath through overhanging trees.

As they trooped down a gentle slope that led to a bower of loveliness on the side of a hill, the majestic 110-year-old the student of these matters, the enormous cost and difficulty of any new adventure, the tremendous outlay of expense and effort, the uncertainties and failures, and—above all—the terrible cost of human transience and unreliability, are well known.

These are some of the problems that meet us in our days of preparation. Leaders must face them as a government must face its problems—with tremendous pressures and oppositions from all sides, with conflicting counsel and desire, and with the practical knowledge that it will be impossible to please everybody with any one plan.

Yet we must have faith, and we must work in confidence in these days of preparation, believing that all things can and eventually will be accomplished as divine guidance has planned them.

Close behind came men and women of all ages in a processional—grandmothers and grandfathers with gray hair, and young folks in fresh bloom of life.

Slowly they edged along, step by step, as the lads and lassies descended further into the rich lushness of the vale.

Soon they formed a circle about a great stone pool surrounded by a screen of rugged wild ferns.

Broad steps cut in the rock, that led to the water, reminds one of the spring house on the old farm in the long ago.

From the crowd emerged a youngish man—the minister—and he started down the stone steps until he was waist deep in water.

Then, one by one, the children, who were eight to ten years in age, followed him. With right hand raised, as the people stood in silence under the canopy of heaven, he began the solemn words, "I baptize thee in the name—"

Gently grasping each child by the back, he immersed them in the pool that sets over the hill from Kirtland's historic Mormon Temple along Route 306.

Year after year, through the decades since 1836, this scene has been re-enacted in baptism and confirmation day at Kirtland.

The baptismal ceremonies ended, the processional re-formed, and the line of Mormons—young and old—marched back into the church for the 11 o'clock Children's Day worship at Kirtland Temple.

One seldom gets the opportunity to witness the graphic beauty of an outdoor baptismal service in the settings of a wood undisturbed in its primitive loveliness.

It was a deeply religious preliminary to the most unusual Children's Day program this reporter ever witnessed.

As I sat in the Temple within sight of the two groups of pulpits in the auditorium—one at each end of the room—representing the Melchisedec and Aaronic orders of priesthood—I was captivated by the impressive scene.

Before the huge front pulpit, which is divided in four sections with a stairway at either side, sat the minister, John W. Banks, Evangelist Richard Baldwin, Elder Thomas E. Thomas, and Elder Joseph Biggs.

At either side of the pulpits—and there are really twelve of them—are slightly elevated box pews. They aren't quite as high as the pulpits, and ordinarily they are supposed to be occupied by missionaries or officials of the church.

But yesterday they were filled with pig-tailed girls and chubby-faced boys—the children's choir. When they sat down you could just about see their heads bobbing over the top of the white pews.

After Elder Thomas gave the invocation the choir sang "'Tis Children's Day." How I wish you could have heard them sing!

Then Richard McNabb and David Flack, who were hardly bigger than a minute, took up the collection. And they did it with all the dignity and precision that an elder might have employed.

After that, the elders conducted a blessing of babies, and that was something this church rambler never had observed before. The parents stood to one side as the elders prayed and blessed the child.

The minister and elders officiated in the ordinance of confirmation. These were the children who had been baptized earlier in the pool at the side of the hill.

The two elders placed their hands on the child's head and recited prayers and ceremonies of ordinance. The children who were confirmed were: Sherman Lanning, Lola Lanning, Pamela Rimes, Floyd Strittmatter, Arlene Bertleff, Kay Davies, Rita Branem, Dorothy Branem, Mary Lou Branem, Marjorie Butler, Elaine Butler, James Bertleff and Ronald Bertleff.

I noted on the program that a baptismal service will be held July 7 at the pool for adults. If you care to see an impressive outdoor religious ceremony, you might want to remember that date.

Visitors are always welcome at Kirtland Temple, which is three miles south of Willoughby on Route 306, reached by either Route 20 or 84.

Mrs. Frank Gray Passes

Sister Ethel Gray, wife of Brother Frank Gray of London, Ontario, passed away on June 10 and was buried on the thirteenth. Services were conducted by Bishop John C. Dent and Evangelist John McGregor. Brother and Sister Gray have been prominent in both civic and church work, and have made a fine contribution to our activities there. Our sympathy goes to Brother Gray, and to the Toronto branch in this loss.

Notice to Women

The material and lectures presented during the class sessions for women at General Conference are now available in mimeographed, pamphlet form. Orders should be sent directly to the General Department of Women, care of Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. The price is 25c.

The New Birth and Baptism

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

WE HAVE ALREADY pointed out that in the history of Israel a process of enlightenment was carried forward through the instrumentality of great prophet-souls which revealed the nature of God. In Jesus this process was consummated. Prophets in our day have been at pains to make explicit what was implicit in the ministry of Christ, and under his Spirit they have elucidated the nature of the coming kingdom in terms we moderns can understand.

But not only was the nature of God and his ideal for man and society shown forth. Correspondingly the nature of man comes clearly into focus, and it will be necessary for us to analyze what we have on this subject, so as to see, perhaps a little more clearly, the nature of those to whom our ministry is to be directed. We shall endeavor to discuss the nature of man and the evaluation of him as given in the Scriptures, and compare it with some modern theories.

SIN AND THE FALL

The fact that the Scripture proclaims a gospel of redemption rests upon the assumption that in humanity as it stands there is something radically perverted, something which nothing but the action of God can remedy, something which forever disqualifies man from association and communion with his Maker, and which robs him of his own best possibilities. The cause of this perversion is sin. "There is no man that sinneth not" (I Kings 8: 46; cf. Ecclesiastes 7: 20; Job 4: 17 Revised Version, margin, 14: 4; 15: 14-16) Moses, Aaron and Samuel were "heard," "forgiven," and "punished" (Psalm 99: 8) Isaiah confesses his own sin and that of his people (6: 5). Even before his birth the Psalmist acknowledges sin as inherent in his nature (51: 5). A keen sense of humanity's sin pervaded Jewish literature. Thus when John the Baptist came he preached "the remission of sins." Jesus did not seem to think however, that humanity was entirely hopeless. He appreciated natural goodness. Some are "not far from the kingdom of God." Others by their natural disposition bind his healing power to themselves. Publicans and harlots are assured a ready forgiveness if only they repent. The absence of ceremonial observance he seems in no case to evaluate as the cause of sin. He places sin firmly in its rightful place, in the heart or in the desires of men. He thus sets about to make their lives right at the center. But hypocrisy, self-righteousness, avarice and pride he saw as insurmountable barriers to the good life. Unmercifulness and the failure to do good actively he casts into outer darkness.

While we acknowledge that Jesus was ready and eager to forgive sin when the sinner repented, we must never forget that he infinitely deepened and broadened the sense of sin. "It hath been said by them of old time—but I say unto you." He is not deceived by appearances. "If ye being evil know how to give good gifts . . ." And again, "But Jesus did not trust himself to man, for he knew what was in man." And, if his redeeming power was to be applied, it demanded the equivalent of self-mutilation. "This is my body which I will give for (or in exchange for) the life of the world . . ." Thus, he said, none can be fit for the kingdom without a fundamental reconstruction of their nature, which begins by a voluntary turning of man from his own past under the glory of the revelation of God in Christ. "Except ye be born again." "Except ye become as little children." Jesus knew that humanity was untrustworthy as it stood—many a philanthropist by bitter experience has been turned into a cynic, and wise men have gone mad when their trust in their fellows has played them false.

So, then, Jesus, and indeed the whole New Testament, assures us of the nature of God, and of his free forgiveness and renewal upon repentance. We do not find the ways of God there manifest to satisfy our curiosity. But we do find a Gospel, good news of life and renewal for all. "Whosoever will may come . . ."

The Book of Mormon is quite clear, in the main, in supporting this estimate of man. "I would that ye should remember . . . your own nothingness before him." "Are we not all beggars?" "Our natures have become evil before thee continually because of the fall . . ." In moments of exalted insight something like the following is uttered, "O! the frailties and the vainness and the foolishness of men!" "Yea, the very God of Heaven they trample under foot."

Modern prophecy has the same thing to say. "Every man walketh in his own way after the image of his own God." "All flesh is corruptible before me." The tremendous impulsion to cleanse and purify the sons of men which is the genius of priesthood, and the sense of urgency which accompanies this throughout the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, is given in order that men might be prepared against the "day when the wicked shall be consumed . . ."

THE CURRENT CONCEPTION

to appreciate the spirit abroad today we find a great contrast. Ever since the Renaissance we have listened to the gospel of the kingdom of man. The industrial revolution and the tremendous advance in scientific knowledge has caused the outer world to be made subservient to man's purposes, and a gigantic sense of power has come to him, which has almost if not entirely obliterated the sense of his own inner need. The Bible is now considered out of date, because it seems to disparage what delights the modern mind—the conception of "God in man." Psychology has rationalized prayer, and psychiatry has cast out the devil. "Within you is the power," is what we hear time and again.

Strangely enough, along with this sense of power and the inflation of the modern ego, there prevails a cynically low estimate of man's ability to restrain his lusts. We moderns seem to want a God who will sit with us in the gutter, and be so fully identified with us as to take us as we are—or else. He must not condemn us for our sins. In conformity with this attitude we are content with what we find of him as a result of our own searchings and stirrings. But, we are not in very good heart about world redemption. The new atomic bomb is a bomb for the "benefit" of mankind. With all our strivings and our searchings, with all our vaunted power and dominion, our hearts are failing us for fear.

What a contrast to the optimism of Christianity! While it sees clearly the need for humanity's utter renewal and cleansing, while it certainly affirms that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God," yet it goes forth in triumphant glory at the prospect of new life found in association with Christ's society. There, brethren, you have a paradox which you will do well to think about. Our church needs to rediscover the "joy of its salvation."

But, as if in confirmation of the prophets and of Jesus, the seers of the human spirit—the poets—whose works endure because they had insight into human nature, are as emphatic as the Scriptures that "our life is a false nature—'tis not the harmony of things." Thus, in effect Rousseau, Byron and Shelley. And what shall we say of Shakespeare, that greatest of all Renaissance prophets—that profound student of human nature? Listen to what he says:

What a piece of work is man!
How noble in reason!
How infinite in faculty.
In form and moving how express and admirable.
In action, how like an angel.
In apprehension how like a god
The beauty of the world. The paragon of animals.

This man wrote in a time when bitter religious controversies were sweeping the world, when acrimony and bigotry were rife, when the human personality did not count for much. Yet he stood marvelously aloof. He approached mankind as a spectator, free from all this bickering. Yet observe how his estimate slowly and inexorably and subtly changes. His last sonnets particularly the 129th give us this picture of lust as

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action.

And he concludes

All the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

How that confirms the ancient statement:

There is a way that seemeth right unto a man,
But the end thereof is the ways of death.

Shakespeare's great tragedies tell the same story. Macbeth trusted in powers that destroyed him, and none was so blind as he himself. Thus it is that sin destroys men, by deceiving them. It blinds them. It leads them captive. (Genesis 3: 5, Inspired Version.)

It is like a cancer. It feeds on the best of them. And it has within itself no means of cure.

"All have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

THE SCRIPTURES AND MODERN THEORIES

The scriptural doctrine of sin and the fall was not arrived at by philosophical speculation, but was received as part of a teaching about God and man. Today there are many theories to account for the origin of evil and about three of these I wish briefly to speak.

1. The first of these imputes sin to be in the flesh or in the material world. Christian Science denies the reality of evil by denying the reality of the visible created order. The early church fought a battle against this error many years ago with the Gnostics, who vacillated between extreme asceticism and ribald license. The Gnostics felt that to believe in matter as evil begets the desire to be free from the body, so some of them renounced earthly pleasures. "But we cannot so be free," others said—and so the body was viewed by these as the temporary envelope of the soul, and bodily acts as morally indifferent. So, the rebound to license.

But the early church and the Scripture as a whole teach that nothing is bad but the will to evil—the will to misuse the things of this world. They clearly teach that there are not two rival gods or created orders, but that Jehovah who is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is the creator and sustainer of all that is, and that he must take responsibility, in the very last analysis, for all that happens. So Paul admonishes the saints to "present your bodies, holy, a living sacrifice." This unfortunate tendency to see the source of sin in the material world led to all sorts of weird theories of the nature of Christ. Some said he was a Ghost, since he could not have been contaminated with a material body.

Self-Knowledge for Mothers

By Lottie Clarke Diggle

BEFORE beginning an intensive study of child guidance, we would do well to spend some time in conscientiously studying ourselves; then having applied the measuring line, let us do something about it. Heredity, environment, and habit need not master us. We can, to a certain extent, create our own environment, and, with the application of will power, exchange new habits for old. With sufficient incentive (and what greater incentive could we have than our children's success and happiness?) and the help of continued prayer, we may become as the virtuous woman in Proverbs whose "children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

We need, occasionally, to look inward with critical eye and take an inventory of our assets and liabilities, our potentialities, and our possibilities, for unless a mother (who is unquestionably the most important factor in shaping the lives of children) is well-adjusted, emotionally stable, and intellectually honest, she can not hope to lead and guide these children who are her divine responsibility. It is indeed unfortunate that children should ever have to be exposed to the influence of a mal-adjusted mother.

He who knows not, and knows not that he knows not, he is a fool. Shun him!

He who knows not and knows that he knows not, he is teachable. Teach him!

It has been said that a boy should choose a gentleman for his father. Perhaps it would be better stated that a father should choose to be a gentleman for his child's sake. Still more important, a mother should choose to readjust herself lest she cause her children to stumble. Therefore, "let us study to show ourselves approved."

As a first step in the process of self-adjustment for better child guidance, let us put ourselves in harmony with the father of our children. Do we, in our souls or audibly, attribute the children's virtues to ourselves and their faults to our husband or his relatives? Do we belittle him in the presence of the children? Parents sometimes disagree as to their course in child training, not because they disagree on the point in question, but because their own relations to each other are antagonistic. Usually, when right relationships are established between husband and wife, the fogs of dissension over the disciplining of their children are dissipated. The father can not afford to wash his hands of his rightful share in the guidance of his child, nor can the children afford to have a father who has a critical attitude toward the efforts of the mother. Not only the child's security, but his emotional balance and social adjustment as well depend on the degree of sympathy between his parents. An occasional "get together" on the part of the parents will work wonders in the home atmosphere.

IN THE PROCESS of getting to know ourselves, some grueling questions might contribute much to the analysis.

Have we emotional balance, or do we fly into a temper at the slightest provocation? Are we offended if husband and children forget the attentions which we think are our due, or do we tactfully adjust the situation? Do we permit petty jealousies to limit the child's interest in his father and friends, or are we big enough to be devoutly thankful that the child has ever-widening social contacts?

Are we using our children to feed our ego, urging a "B" mentality to attain an "A" standing, or a below-average student to enter university in order to satisfy our pride?

Are we absolutely honest with our children? Do we cheat the railroad company out of half a fare, or say, "The dentist won't hurt you"? "To thine own self be true, and thou canst not be false to any man."

No woman, however humble and soul-searching, has ever been known to admit that she was anything so obnoxious as a nagger; therefore, for tact's sake, let us ask ourselves if we are guilty of continual, destructive criticism. Don't is a word that comes to our lips all too readily. The gentle Quakeress in Uncle Tom's Cabin who substituted "hadn't thee better" for our hurried and thoughtless repetition of that withering little don't, was an example which, as mothers in Zion, we would do well to emulate.

Do we allow our children to make their own decisions whenever possible, or do we decide all matters for them, causing them to grow up as weaklings, lacking in judgment and incapable of managing their own affairs when they reach the age of maturity?

ARE WE GUILTY of dwarfing our children's development by making them so dependent upon us that they grow up with a mother-fixation? The following case will serve to illustrate this point.

Mrs. B. had few friends and no outside interests, so she lavished all her time and affection on her only child, a boy. She nursed him until he was nearly two years old and then, each evening before retiring, prepared five bottles of milk which she gave him during the night. At the age of three he weighed over seventy pounds. Although he was quite able to walk, he insisted on his mother's carrying him wherever he wished to go. At the age of eleven he played with boys of six or seven, cried over the slightest hurt, and refused to join in sports. When he was twenty-nine, his mother died, and, for the first time, he exhibited interest in the opposite sex. Although he married a woman who was well-adjusted, his continual and obnoxious references to his mother's cooking, methods, and dress, created intense unhappiness in the home. His social development was so retarded that he was incapable of managing his own affairs successfully, yet his mother-fixation barred him from consulting his wife. His attitude toward her colored the lives of their children and undermined their confidence in their mother.

Again, do we love our waxed floors or satin sofa pillows more than the moral welfare of our sons who desire to bring their pals home?

Have we such childish hangovers as defenses—blaming someone or something else for faults which are our own?

Last, are we self-sacrificing to a fault—teaching our children to be selfish or indolent because we wait upon them too much, or do without necessities for ourselves in order that our children may have luxuries? Would we rather make the cake than be “bothered with the mess” of our small daughter who can learn only by doing, and who receives much satisfaction from her sense of success and the fact that she is helping mother?

NOW, HAVING rooted out the smothering, poor personality growths, and being stripped bare of all our little subterfuges, hypocrisies and defenses, robbed of the delightful incense of public approval, our secret enjoyment of being martyrs to our husband, children, or community, and our periodical basking in the luxury of self-pity, let us plant in their stead the healthy traits of self-control, honesty, understanding, tolerance, objective attitude, and all that contributes to a well-rounded personality. “He who knows, and knows that he knows, he is wise. Follow him!”

For several decades the emphasis has been placed upon child-rearing; the health, comfort, and protection of the child from physical dangers were stressed, but a new era has dawned on the horizon of the home.

Not child-rearing, but child-education is the slogan. Mothers are no longer mere cooks, housekeepers, and watch dogs; they are the teachers who sympathetically lead their beloved pupils along the delightful paths of learning. This is proving an altogether satisfying exploration for the child, and a happy excursion for the mother.

Expose Your Child to Good Reading

By Eleanor Russell

AT ONE TIME I was an assistant cabin mother to a group of girls at a weekend retreat; I was astonished at the thick stacks of comic magazines brought to camp by many of the girls. Perhaps the magazines were harmless, but I couldn't help thinking of the money spent and the time wasted on them. I wondered if those girls had sufficient reading material at an early age to give them a firm footing in our church beliefs and ideals. If not, the amount of money involved in the purchase of those comic magazines would have bought several good books. The results would have been much better, however, if the girls had been exposed to good reading when they were younger. A few years ago a lovely mother, who was a newcomer to our city, approached me with a problem. Her twelve-year-old daughter was not happy in her church school association. Embarrassed because she could not answer many of the questions the teacher asked in class, the little girl did not want to go to church school. “You see,” the mother explained, “we have been isolated from church privileges and my daughter knows nothing about Latter Day Saint history or doctrine.” This story disturbed me, but there was nothing I could do at the time except talk with the teacher of the class, explain the situation, and suggest that she not expect too much of the little newcomer. I couldn't help wishing I had known this mother's problem a few years earlier. One doesn't just snatch a comic book or mystery story away from a youngster, offer a church book in its place, and see him eagerly take the proffered book and absorb its contents. If the child is young, the teaching is easier. A Bible or nature story told at a time when the child is in a “why” mood, will serve as a good beginning. He will beg to hear those stories over and over.

The home must lead in the religious education of the child. The old proverb, “An ounce of mother is worth a pound the autocratic to the democratic form of parenthood—from the old system of driving, to a new system of intelligent leadership in which children will no longer be fearful subjects, but persons, having natural urges and personality traits which require expression to promote growth. Thus shall we lay enduring foundations for the ideals of Zion, and raise up a people that shall build it.

of clergy,” still holds true. I am afraid the average Latter Day Saint mother (especially the isolated one) isn't aware of the materials available to help her in this task. For some time I have felt that practical suggestions would be welcomed by the average parent.

Let's consider the members of an isolated family first. They should write to our Department of Religious Education for help in outlining a reading program, stating the ages of the children (any family whose attendance at church or church school is spasmodic should do this). The most fascinating and inexpensive story book available for a four- or five-year-old is a kindergarten quarterly written especially for future Latter Day Saints. A year's subscription at a price far below a dollar will fortify the mother with fifty-two stories which can be enjoyed over and over. The isolated family should have quarterlies for all the children.

We can be proud of the materials our church prints for the religious education of our youngsters. Not long ago I heard an older woman of another church, who is an expert story teller, complain that the only material her church offered for children's use was the Bible itself; and she added, “The teachers do not even attempt to explain the verses to the children!” I recently taught a group of boys and girls from our own second year junior quarterly. One was a neighbor boy, Freddie, whose parents belonged to another church. When the new quarterlies were passed out I gave one to Freddie, too. The next Sunday he said, “I studied my lesson, and the quarterly was so interesting I read five or six lessons before I stopped!” His enthusiasm continued as long as he lived in the neighborhood. Both our primary and junior quarterlies contain so many choice bits of the Bible and church doctrine that I feel sorry for the Latter Day Saint children who do not have access to them. Many parents living in a Latter Day Saint community fail to see that the children go to church school regularly. Surely we should capitalize on the work of the consecrated men and women who write and edit our church literature.

When a child is approaching the age of eight years, whether isolated or living in a Latter Day Saint community, it is a good idea to secure a copy of the current baptism quarterly for the primary age. This quarterly answers the question of so many parents, "What should my eight-year-old know about the church before he is baptized?"

An allowance for the purchasing of good books should be included in the family budget. One of the mottoes of our home has been, "Expose the children to good reading." Have one or two books around where they may be picked up when the youngsters are at loose ends for entertainment. Look through your book shelves. If you find there a book that has in it something your child needs, keep it out on an end table for awhile. I'll venture a guess it will be read. At the age of eight or nine, the child should be encouraged to read for himself. Start by having him read aloud to you some simple material while you are washing dishes or mending; he will soon learn to enjoy it. It is a fact that today many high school and college young people have not learned to enjoy reading. It is also a fact that there is but a small percentage who could not be taught to read well.

A good Bible story book is a "must" in the home library. The daughter of one busy minister had been credited with the ability to answer more questions than any other girl in her church school class. The other girls said, "Oh, that's just because her father is a minister." But she confided to me that the reason she knew the answers was that she remembered most of the things she had read in their big volume of Bible stories. We have found the Faris Bible Readers, too, have been greatly enjoyed by children, especially volumes 1 and 2. Walking with Jesus, a book of illustrated verse, tells the gospel story in a simple but beautiful manner that all children can understand. The whole family would enjoy In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage or Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon. A subscription to Zion's Hope or Stepping Stones would be a nice gift for some child unable to attend church school. An extra special gift for a tiny tot between three and seven years of age would be Tell Me About Jesus or Tell Me About God, by Mary Alice Jones.

Leaf through a book before buying it, to make sure it is going to fit the need and be worth the money it costs. Also take advantage of the displays at general conferences, reunions, institutes, and

The Responsibility of Today's Mothers

By Esther Schrunk

THE RESPONSIBILITY of today's mothers is, in many respects, no greater than at any other time in history, but there is a keener challenge for them to live up to the best that is in them.

The destiny of the child is always determined by the mother, and "the child is happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace in his home" (Goethe). It is the mother's responsibility to mold the character of her children. Her heart is their schoolroom.

Motherhood places an obligation upon us, as women, for the welfare of our children. It is our duty to see that they have the proper diet, sufficient sleep, and lots of love; we must strive to understand the problems which they face, and help in the solving of them. Above all, it is our duty to see that they grow up in an atmosphere in which God is a living, vital force; to do this we, ourselves, must walk humbly with Him. The story is told of a young man who said the reason he was serving the church was because of the teachings he received, as a child, from his mother. One day, when he was only five years old, he came in from play and heard his mother praying, "Oh, God, help my boy to grow up to serve thee." He tiptoed away, but never forgot the statement.

Care should be taken to include teachings that will create a wholesome regard for the church, reverence for God, and a definite faith in the operations of his holy spirit. Timothy was trained during the plastic years of his childhood by a devout mother and grandmother. It was then that he was taught the Scriptures. He knew they were divine truths, having divine authority; God was the author, and his mother the teacher.

Perhaps we leave too much to agencies outside the home; perhaps we expect too much from our church schools. There are many good mothers in the world who teach truth, honesty, and the other virtues, but we, the Latter Day Saint mothers, have a greater responsibility because we have been told to help build the kingdom. It is for us to kindle within our children the spark youth gatherings, and make a list of books you want to buy when your budget will permit.

No reading materials have been mentioned here except those for religious training. Any good library has a list of other books that should be read by the children at various ages. As the child grows, he may be encouraged to read from the Bible, too. The material mentioned will enhance, rather than detract from his pleasure in reading the Bible.

I know a dear little grandmother who, at one time, worked two or three days a week in a used clothing shop established by the PTA. She did this to provide needed clothing for her grandchildren. She recognized their spiritual needs, too, and, though very poor, she bought every one of the Faris Bible Readers for those grandchildren, and she saw that they were read. Many loving aunts, uncles, and grandparents could take it upon themselves to supply little tots, whose religious education is being postponed, with church books such as I have mentioned. Quoting President Edwards, "No man must think of his own salvation apart from the extension of the reign of God into the lives of other people."¹ Why shouldn't we start with the children?

Case after case could be cited where Latter Day Saints are neglecting their children in the matter of good reading. It is a serious thing. All too soon our children will be grown. We shall have helped in the molding of their characters in a very definite way if, while they are young, we quietly but constantly keep good reading material in front of them, and as unobtrusively push into the background the poorer books and magazines. Whether isolated from the church or permitted to attend every Sunday, we still must direct our children's religious training. The type of training depends largely upon us. Let's give them a good start with good reading materials!

of genuine appreciation of the church, and then foster that spark until it becomes an unquenchable flame that will lead our young people to choose wisely when major decisions are to be made.

A famous artist once said, "A kiss from my mother's lips made me a great painter." When we feel our responsibilities are endless, I am sure we can think of something our children have said or done that will give us a new hold. Once a small child, who was lost, was asked, "Where is your home?" Sobbing, the child replied, "Where Mommie is." The Psalmist said, "I will walk within my house with a perfect heart." If each of us would do that, it wouldn't be such a task to train a child in the way he should go. As mothers, "Let us not weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

A Testimony of Gratitude

I have been a member of the church for forty-three years, having been baptized at the age of twelve. I have never regretted the step I took then. I have received many wonderful blessings, and can say that I know this is the only true church.

A year ago I was very ill, and sent for Brother Metcalf of New Albany to administer to me. I experienced an immediate blessing. My husband has received like blessings through administration. We are glad there is a Heavenly Father who hears and answers our prayers.

There are only a few Saints here in Francisco. Meetings used to be held in our home, and on one occasion, Brother E. F. Robertson conducted fifteen services, baptizing eleven new members at the end of the series.

We receive much spiritual food by reading the Herald. Since neither of us is able to work, we cannot afford a subscription, but Sister Burns, a neighbor, shares her Herald with us. We are grateful to be living near good Latter Day Saints who are so helpful.

We desire the prayers of God's people that we may live to be worthy of his blessings.

THE SEVENTIES SUGGEST

Visual Aids in Missionary Work

By Eugene A. Theys

(Compiled by M. L. Draper from materials submitted by a panel composed of R. E. Davey, A. F. Gibbs, and M. L. Draper, and presented to the Quorum of Seventy at the 1946 General Conference.)

IT IS A well-established fact that we learn from experience with all our senses—touch, taste, smell, hearing, and sight, and that we probably learn more through the sense of sight than by all the others put together. Some educators insist that we learn ninety per cent of all we come to know through the sense of sight. While others may dispute this figure, there is universal agreement that the sense of sight is the medium through which we gain much of our knowledge; and, because of this, there is no hesitancy in suggesting that visual aids to learning are probably among the most effective helps a teacher can use. Missionaries are teachers of the gospel, and what is true of all other teachers is true of them and their work. They will find that visual aids will do much to facilitate the work of teaching the gospel.

Visual aids are not new, although some methods of using them may be. Every speaker who uses gestures to emphasize his thoughts is using visual aids, conveying to his listeners a more vivid understanding by means of which they can see, as well as hear. When we speak of visual aids, we think only of carrying over this age-old and universal idea of emphasizing and teaching by means that the congregation can see into the field of mechanical aids. The speaker is unable, with his hands, to create the figure of Jesus being baptized by John in the River Jordan, but he can show to his hearers a picture of the event, fixing it in their minds far more effectively than by merely stating it in words.

There are several kinds of visual aids. Bishop Koehler once used in the Stone Church a large pair of scissors, tied about with bunches of ribbons. Some of them were tied around the blades, impairing the function of the scissors, while some were tied on the handle, not impairing the function, but getting in the way. He used this simple apparatus very effectively in several ways while discussing the functions of the church. This was using visual aids, and the congregation will remember some of the ideas expressed in that way long after they have forgotten many of the things he only said. Visual aids, then, are any devices which can be used to appeal to the sense of sight in order to teach a lesson. They may be simple illustrations like Brother Koehler's scissors, or some other commonplace object which can be carried to the service, or they can be—and are more likely to be—mechanical contrivances designed to present pictures by projection, or by manipulation, or, in the case of talented persons, by drawing. These include the flannelgraph, sometimes called the story-o-graph, moving and still picture projectors, blackboards, and easels.

Slides, projected by a miniature machine upon screens which vary in size from those usable in homes to those necessary in a large auditorium, are among the most effective instruments of visual education that can be used. Before discussing their good points, however, it would be well to note some dangers. Care must be exercised lest the missionary allow his use of slides to degenerate into a form of free entertainment. He should study the subject matter constantly, so as to keep his own mind alert as to the lessons he is trying to teach. This will help him to avoid this danger. Of course, arrangements may be made to use certain periods of time largely for entertainment, when travelogues and personal pictures may be shown, but these are special occasions, and should be treated as such. When the purpose is teaching, let the use of the slides be pointed toward the achievement of that purpose. Another danger is that the speaker may lose personal touch with his congregation while the room is dark and they cannot see his face. In order that the force of his own personality may not be lost, the speaker should cultivate his personality in his voice as much as possible, and should be sure to allow plenty of opportunity to address the people in fully-lighted rooms. Each missionary will want to experiment with this problem until he finds a solution best suited to his personality and methods.

Some of the advantages of using slides are obvious. They are among the most effective means of attracting people to cottage services and public meetings. They furnish a splendid means of making an introduction of the missionary into the home of strangers or casual acquaintances. It has been the experience of many that even bad weather is not the deterrent to attendance when slides are advertised. Modern equipment is easily portable, so the objection raised against the more bulky machines and large glass slides of a few years ago is no longer valid. Projectors can be purchased which weigh less than five pounds, and which occupy only a corner of a suitcase, while the two-inch square, glass-mounted slides can be carried by the hundreds in a small box.

An advantage of slides is that their use can be introduced by the exhibition of only one set of pictures and texts, and additions may be made as money and knowledge are available. They are more effective; however, if several sets are used at the beginning, interspersed with preaching or other means of teaching. Brother Gibbs suggests five sets of slides, including forty each on American archaeology, church history, life of Christ, Old Testament prophecy, and twenty on the acts of the apostles. He would also include several hymn slides. Another missionary suggests this group of lectures: one on American archaeology, one on Restoration prophecies, church history, life after death, church organization and principles, and some incidental scenic views to be used for novelties or special occasions. Brother R. E. Davey's sets include the life of Christ, Book of Mormon in archaeology and prophecy, apostasy and restoration, life after death, financial law, church organization, Zion, and several travelogues of national parks. These are all in color. In each case, these missionaries made their initial investment in a minimum outlay, and have added to their supply with experience and careful thought. Every beginner should start on a very small scale, and build his equipment carefully, being sure to become well acquainted with his material as his work expands. Nothing is more pitiful than to watch someone, who doesn't know how, try to base a lecture on slides which he doesn't understand. The missionary must know his material so well that he anticipates the slides just as he anticipates his thoughts in preaching. This can be done only by adding carefully to a modest beginning, until an adequate library is built up.

Slides can be an expensive investment. Some persons have thought that the church should provide the slides and lend them to the missionary. Unless they were to become a permanent part of the missionary's equipment, this would probably not be very practical. If he has to call for every set of slides he wants, the opportunity to use them may have disappeared before he can obtain them. Then, too, getting lectures prearranged, which could be used by a large number of missionaries, would be almost impossible. Every missionary needs to have an arrangement which fits his own style; this can be done only by close supervision of the missionary in the selection and arrangement of the slides he is to use. Even in the use of the splendid sets prepared by Brother S. A. Bryant, the missionaries may discard some of the slides, and incorporate others into the sets. But he can do this effectively only if the slides are a part of his own equipment. Prearranged lectures are helpful, and the slide material needs to be standardized for the sake of production, but the missionary must have the freedom of familiarity if he is to be successful in his use of slides.

Many missionaries who are using the slide projectors have also adopted the procedure of posing and photographing some illustrations with their own cameras, using 35mm or Bantam cameras and color film. Perhaps a great deal more of this can be done using live models to illustrate some of the principles, particularly the sacraments of the church. In addition, personal cameras can be used to make a pictorial record of the missionary's travels and experiences, and to preserve for future use the beauties of natural scenery. Travelogues can be built up in time from the missionary's traveling in the natural course of his work. Some recommended cameras for this purpose are: several models of Argus 35mm, especially the C-3; several models of Eastman's Kodak 35; and the Kodak Bantam. Projectors for two-inch slides are numerous, but those which appear to be most popular are the SVE projectors, of which there are several models, made by the Society for Visual Education in Chicago. Screens are also available in various sizes and styles, from the midget, glass-beaded screens to the large, electrically operated, beaded screens. Both are made by the Da-Lite Company, which also has matte-surface screens. Beaded and matte surfaces are made in all sizes by the Radiant Company. A fine screen for use in larger auditoriums was made by Brother Davey from a six foot window shade, painted with a matte white surface, and mounted in a suitable box.

The cost of cameras, projectors, screens, and slides is not prohibitive if the beginner will proceed slowly. First he should obtain the projector and at least one set of slides. He can add screen and camera, and more slides later. A medium-priced outfit, including projector, four-foot square glass-beaded screen, and camera, would cost about $150. The slides vary in price from about ten cents each for black and white texts (mounted complete) from Brother S. A. Bryant, to sixty cents each for mounted Kodachrome reproductions of art masterpieces by the Society for Visual Education. A beginning could be made with a 300-watt projector and one set of color slides on church history or Book of Mormon archaeology for about $75.

The flannelgraph, perhaps better called the story-o-graph, can be of great value in presenting the gospel message of Jesus Christ. It can be used both in cottage meetings, and at the church. It gives action to the sermon, and can be used to advantage as an introduction to the lecture. It has all the value of a chalk-talk, with the added advantage that one does not need to be gifted in drawing to use it. Almost anyone with a bit of imagination and ingenuity can make use of it. It is doubtful that the story-o-graph has the advertising value of slides, but it will nevertheless increase the interest of the public and help to build attendance. It is more advantageous than slides in that there is no need of turning out the lights. In full illumination, the speaker may make greater use of his own personality in presenting the message. The story-o-graph may be used to review material previously presented, in connection with a slide lecture, or to introduce a regular sermon. Children like them, and as one missionary says, if you use them, children will be present.

The missionary must be able to make the characters come to life. They must portray emotions and exercise feeling. Let the lions roar, the snakes bite, and the people get excited. Let the auditors live the story with you, and if possible, get a vocal response from the audience. No more than a hundred people should be presented such a lecture, nor should they be allowed to sit too far from the easel. It should be close enough for clear vision, no closer.

Here are some story-o-graph arrangements that might be used separately or in a series. 1. A decision-getting sermon—"The Rich Young Ruler," this requires the characters of Jesus and the young man. Another, "Paul Before Festus and Agrippa." For these stories, scenery sets 4F, 8F, and 3F will be needed. (These sets refer to order numbers of a company to be indicated later.) 2. For visions, leading up to that of Joseph Smith, the following stories are available: "Moses in Midian" and the "Voice in the Burning Bush," "Peter's Vision of the Sheet," "Saul on the Way to Damascus," and "Jacob's Ladder into Heaven." There are scenery sets to go with these. For the kingdom, "Daniel Refuses King's Wine," and "Nebuchadnezzar's Dream." One would have to make up his own image, and scenery set 3F would be needed. Sermons on other subjects are possible, such as "Gifts of the Spirit," "Baptism," "Healing," "Repentance," "Brother's Keeper," "Angelic Ministry," "The Lord's Supper," "The Power of God," "The Future Life," and "The Atonement;" these can be made up from materials available.

A catalog folder may be obtained, listing materials necessary for the above mentioned subjects, by addressing Story-O-Graphs, P. O. Box 145, Pasadena 16, California. Another company publishing materials suitable for small groups and church schools is Christian Publications, Inc., Third and Reilly Street, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Still another is David C. Cook, Elgin, Illinois. From the Pasadena company, scenery sets cost $4.85 each, and characters cost 45 cents per uncolored sheet, and $1.85 per colored sheet. A good initial set can be obtained for $30 to $50, and would include several lectures. Additions can be added at any time. For a try-out, one illustration could be obtained for about $6.

It takes from two to five hours to paint and arrange one of these cut-out sets. The illustrations may be colored by a professional painter, but the missionary should do the cutting out of the characters himself, as it gives him an opportunity to get acquainted with them.

One of the greatest questions confronting us in the use of visual aids is that of standardizing and producing suitable materials at prices the missionaries and local forces can afford to pay. One of the first steps in this direction will be the expansion of the department of visual aids by providing the personnel qualified to manage it, and installing the equipment necessary to produce professional work. This would mean a sizable appropriation by the general church. Other churches, seeing the possibilities along these lines, are making this a major item in their budgets. Just before the war, one denomination spent over $50,000 on a motion picture, which taught a valuable lesson for their church; because it could be used in the various congregations throughout the United States, it was considered a very good investment. At present, numerous churches are joining forces, and will soon be spending several hundred thousand dollars in developing visual aid materials. In the words of Brother Davey, "As long as we do things on a ten cent scale, we will get only ten cent results."

There are men in the church with splendid abilities in the field of visual aids, who are willing to serve the church. A few are Marvin McDole, S. A. Bryant, and Harold D. Smith of Fort Madison, Iowa. At least one, if not two, of these men should be full-time appointees, placed in charge of this department with provisions for expanding it as the need and opportunity may require. Brother C. Ed. Miller has devoted many years to work of the Graphic Arts Bureau and has developed some laboratory material, as well as a rich fund of experience that can be of great value in further visual aid developments. This work can serve as a nucleus for further growth and development.

Several men of the church have been working on visual aids, and have developed some usable material. Provision could be made whereby this material could all be pooled in the department, and those in charge, or a committee appointed for the purpose, could improve upon, standardize, and add to such material, making it available to all who desire to use it. Such work could easily be done during the summer months, when long days and excessive heat make the projection method difficult to use.

Most of the materials used by the church in presenting the missionary message will probably have to be developed, or at least revised to a great extent, because of the specific point of our message. When it comes to using visual aids in local branches, however, for pastoral work and for the purpose of developing Christ-consciousness, the value of righteousness, etc., there is much material in slides and 16mm movie film that has been made available by various religious and commercial organizations. Among these organizations, the following are suggested:

2. Bell and Howell, 1801 Larchmont Avenue, Chicago 13, Illinois.
3. Brandon Films, 1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
4. Ideal Pictures Corp., 28 East 8th Street, Chicago, Illinois.
5. W. O. Gutlohn Inc., 25 West 45th Street, New York, N. Y.
6. Denominations Book Stores and Publishing Houses, Affiliated with Religious Film Association—Local Distributors.

For slides:

1. Same as number six above.
2. Cathedral Pictures, 3441 Olive Street, St. Louis, Missouri.
3. Keystone View Co., Meadville, Pennsylvania.
4. Visual Education Service, The Divinity School, Yale University, 409 Prospect Street, New Haven, Connecticut.
5. Society for Visual Education, 100 East Ohio Street, Chicago, Illinois.

A point always to be remembered is that when we speak of visual aids, we mean just that—aids in presenting the message. The message is the important matter. Illustrations, story-o-graphs, slides, movies, or any other form of visual aids should be to the end of preaching the gospel, and not an end in themselves.

Another Echo of the General Conference Leadership Training Workshop

On the last Saturday of General Conference, the Leadership Training Workshop was held. At that time, several speakers expressed their reactions to the study program of the church, and, according to promise, we are sharing their thoughts with the readers of the Saints' Herald. Below are the thoughts expressed on that occasion by Brother Paul L. Duvic of Port Orchard, Washington. Brother Duvic is teaching a class for credit, and is otherwise actively engaged in promoting leadership training in his local.

THELONA D. STEVENS,
Director of Leadership Training.

THE VALUE OF LEADERSHIP TRAINING

We sometimes read in the Scripture the statement, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." These words give to us a feeling that such advice is timely, and that we would do well to heed it. Then in the press of our daily affairs, our mind is turned to other things, and we forget to carry out our momentary resolve.

This is also true of the great majority of us when we read of the leadership training program and the courses of study that are offered in it. We make a mental resolution to take a course soon so that we can learn more; then we put off starting that course because we center our attention on other matters.

I have found that taking the courses offered by the Department of Religious Education, and continuing through with them, has been of distinct benefit to me. Some courses have helped me to better understand our church and the functions of its various departments. Others have helped me to see my weaknesses and shortcomings, and how to overcome or correct them. Some have helped me to understand better and appreciate the love that God has for us. The requirements for taking a course are designed to encourage thorough study, so that greater benefit will be gained from it. This constant effort to meet certain standards increases the good we obtain from our study.

I believe that the members of the church in general do not realize the value of these helps that are being provided. Certainly if only three persons out of every hundred register for leadership training, and only one or perhaps two of these complete the study, it seems there is a definite lack of appreciation on the part of the people.

We may say to ourselves that we are not leaders, and that only those who are qualified as leaders should take this training. Perhaps we do not have the natural ability to be a leader, but we can develop our talents and become better qualified. How can we lead our children into the Kingdom of God unless we develop more ability to teach and guide them?

As a church we have been given the task of leading the world into a state of righteous living. We need to become more united so that we may bend our every effort to this end. How can we better accomplish this than by following the steps outlined by those whom we have accepted as our leaders? The world waits for us to go forward. God waits for us to do his will, and accomplish his purposes. Let us take advantage of every bit of help we have at hand, so that we may fulfill these righteous obligations.

For information about the training program, write to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Wants Biography of Joseph Smith III

We have been readers of the Herald for many years, and look forward to its arrival each week as a welcome friend; the many spiritual messages and letters help us to get a little closer to the God who directed us in our youth to find the angel message. My husband, John A. Henry, was seventy-one in June, and I will be seventy-one in August.

We should like to complete our collection of Heralds containing the biography of Joseph Smith, the father of Frederick M. Smith. At the time it was being printed, we lent various copies out to friends, and have since lost track of them. I believe it was published in 1935. We are hoping, also, to find the biography of Elder Arthur Leverton, who was a very good friend of ours.

Because of ill health, we do not get to attend church regularly. We humbly ask the prayers of all those who know the worth of prayer, that we may overcome our weaknesses and endure faithful to the end.

Worship Suggestions for August

By Ruby Strand

Theme for the Month: "THE KINGDOM OF GOD ON EARTH."

AUGUST 4, 1946

Theme: The Kingdom Calls.

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 315.

Call to Worship: A Prayer.

Our Father who in heaven doth dwell,
Hallowed be thy name;
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done,
In heaven and earth the same.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 7. Stanzas 1 and 2.

Food for Thought:

The Kingdom calls us. When his disciples asked him how to pray, the Master answered, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." There was never a time when we needed more of the Master's teaching. God is calling us to establish his righteousness in the midst of Babylon. We have only to look about us to see the great need of mankind for that which we have to share. The fruit of ungodly living is at all sides of us and far too often we have helped to produce it. It is our day to serve. It is our day to hear the call of the Kingdom.

There is a hymn composed by David H. Smith which has a timely admonition for all who classify themselves as Saints in the latter days. In Stories of Our Hymns we read about how the hymn "Let Us Shake Off the Coals" came into being. It was written in a time of bitter prejudice. The courage of the little band of Saints was sorely tried. There had been so much suffering, so many lives lost, and so much property sacrificed. In 1861 David Smith was baptized and two years later, following a prophecy given by Young Joseph, the President of the Reorganization, he arose and sang by the spirit the first two stanzas of this hymn—"Let us shake off the coals from our garments and arise in the strength of the Lord." In a poetic way they embraced some of the features of the prophecy. The congregation seemed spellbound as with eagerness they listened to the heaven-inspired song as it fell from David's lips in all its richness and power. Every soul was thrilled and every heart melted under the sweet, peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit which attended and bore witness to the word. Later when the third stanza was added, he must have been guided by that same spirit, for the words

"Thank the Lord for the plan he has given
That will render us pure as a child,
That will shange this cold world into heaven,
By his Spirit so holy and mild."

indicate this to be the case. May we bow our heads in silent prayer for a few moments, asking that we might recapture the spirit of this hymn?

Period of silent prayer with 188, Saints' Hymnal played softly as an accompaniment.

Closing Hymn: 188, Saints' Hymnal. (Stand.)

Closing Prayer: Asking that we might be in tune to hear the call of the Kingdom and that we might so order our lives to be used in its establishment.

Meditation with Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 4.

AUGUST 11, 1946

Theme: The Kingdom Waits.

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 66.

Call to Worship:

Some day, some happy day,
The tumult of the earth shall cease,
The heavens above shall speak of peace,
And all men pray.

This earth, this darkened earth
Shall rest in peace forever more
All free from strife and angry war,
And want and dearth.

For Christ, the Christ of light,
Shall come to be our mighty King,
And His eternal love we'll sing
By day and night.

—Phyllis Moore.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 66.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants, 6: 1, 2, 3.

Message: The Kingdom waits. It waits for you. It waits for me. This Scripture reading tells us why. Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith received these words in 1829. Today, one hundred and twenty-seven years later, we find them just as opportune. We note several points for us to consider as they apply to us as individuals. Firstly, give heed to the Word. Could it not be that the Kingdom waits because some of us have failed in this admonition? Secondly, thrust in your sickle with your might! Does the Kingdom wait for us to put forth a greater effort? Have we served with all our might? Thirdly, keep my commandments and seek to establish the cause of Zion. The Kingdom waits for us to heed this counsel. Our book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Bible, and the Book of Mormon are all full of needed admonition. The Kingdom waits for us to study these books, to feast upon them, to build their teachings into our daily lives.

A Psalm: Know you the Lord? Know you his friendly dwelling? In that dwelling he has a storehouse, out of which he gives treasures. Yea, treasures of knowledge, wisdom, and faith and they are given in love and charity. There is enough for all his children, yea, every one. He has given out of this storehouse multiple upon multiple of treasures to his children and yet it remains full. His bosom is filled with compassion. His heart yearns over you. Out of his loins goes forth power.

Some of you have said, "I have not strength to praise my Lord. I have not courage to speak for him; I have not time to use for him." Know you that his storehouse is full of strength, courage, and yea, even an increase of years?

"Awake, O Zion, my people," saith the Lord your God to you, "and put on My strength, put on robes of righteousness and purity; put on humility and meekness of a lamb; put on garments of charity and love, and great shall be your joy."

—Zelma McKee.

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 189. (Stand.)

Prayer: One of petition that we may not keep the Kingdom waiting; that instead we may be found doing that which will hasten its coming.

Special Music: Saints' Hymnal, 344. (Sung as a solo or duet behind a screen or at the rear.)

AUGUST 18, 1946

Theme: "The Kingdom Seeks."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 397.

Call to Worship: A Psalm.

Happy is the man who seeks after the riches of the Kingdom of God for he will be clothed, and his bin will never be empty.

His soul will be fed and he will never thirst; for he eats the manna of heaven and drinks at the well of satisfaction.

His feet will be shod and he shall run and not be weary, for he has kept God's commandments and ministered to his children.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

"Behold I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 12: 2.

"Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yet, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive, if you will knock it shall be opened unto you."

Scripture Reading: I John 4: 8-11.

"He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, nor that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

Scripture Reading: Matthew 5: 18.

"Therefore, let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

Food for Thought:

The Kingdom is seeking to save mankind—all mankind. This was Jesus' aim, the salvation of all men. God's Kingdom must work for the things Jesus worked for, else it is not his Kingdom. The children of God are seeking to bring about his Kingdom, and those who have thus pledged themselves are seeking not only their own salvation through righteous living, but are seeking also the salvation of those who have not yet found the light—those not yet redeemed through obedience to the laws of the Kingdom.

The Kingdom is seeking the perfection of the lives of those who enter therein through obedience to all of God's commandments.

A Reading: The Good Shepherd.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheepfold." Yes, he is the door of kindness, and of happiness, if we will but enter into the sheepfold of his protection and care. Often we are thieves and robbers. We steal from our neighbors and friends the message God gave to us for them. We tell it not.

He is the door and "if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go out and find pasture." We shall find pastures of love and contentment, if we will enter in. How beautiful and happy his people look to him when they serve together in his Spirit.

The thief cometh only to steal, kill and destroy the love and kindness of others from our hearts.

Jesus has come that we might have life and have it more abundantly, not alone, but with our fellowmen.

The Good Shepherd giveth his life for his sheep. We must give our lives to help others find the door, and then they, too, with us may go in and out and find pastures with him.

The Shepherd is not as a hireling who does not care for the sheep, that fleeth and the wolves of material possessions, self, and pleasures come and scattereth them over the earth. No, the Good Shepherd knows his sheep and will lay down his life for them, to keep them safe within the fold of his love and care.

Other sheep he has which are not of our little fold here, and they also must be brought within the pasture if we will but serve as he asks us. They, too, must hear and know his voice and there shall be one fold and one shepherd, and Zion, the beautiful, shall come again and God will reign with men.

—Bernice Bonham.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 292. (Stand.)

Period of silent prayer: Saints' Hymnal, 292 (played softly).

Prayer: Asking that we might be found living so humbly, so prayerfully, so courageously, and so Christ-like that Zion may be redeemed.

AUGUST 25, 1946

Theme: "The Kingdom Shall Be."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 436.

Call to Worship: "Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 11. (Stand.)

Prayer: Asking that we might receive the assurance that the Kingdom shall be and that we might find joy in cleansing our lives of those things which retard its establishment.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 39: 5; 65.

Leader's Comments: The Scriptures just read need very little explanation. They are clear, concise, and easily understood by those who will to hear. There is no question but what the Kingdom shall be. The question which should be in the mind of each is, "What am I doing to promote its building?" There is a great similarity between the people of our day and James Covill, the man to whom section 39 of the Doctrine and Covenants was given. Reading from A Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, by F. Henry Edwards, we learn that this man, when he first heard the message of the Restoration, seemed very interested and at his request sought the word of the Lord, but when this was received, he rejected it. Are we apt to be guilty of the same offense? There is a time, says F. Henry Edwards, when every man must make his great decision, starting on a life of promise in the work of the church. Then, having made that decision, it is necessary to prayerfully press forward daily lest we fall by the wayside in our service to God. "If men and nations continue in wickedness and thus sow the seeds of their own destruction, that destruction is certain to come when they ripen in iniquity. The evil effects of a course of wickedness can only be avoided by aggressive righteousness."

Yes, the Kingdom shall be and we have the greatest privilege awarded a people, that of assisting in its establishment. Referring to section 65, given the same year, 1831, we find it is a revelation on prayer and consists of one paragraph, which Brother Edwards analyzes thus:

Listen to the voice of one sent down from on high:

Who is mighty and powerful.

Whose going forth is unto the ends of the earth.

Whose voice is unto men:

Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his path straight.

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth:

The gospel shall roll forth unto the ends of the earth.

The gospel is as a voice crying:

Prepare ye the way of the Lord.

Prepare ye the supper of the Lamb.

Make ready for the bridegroom.

Make known his wonderful works among the people.

Pray unto the Lord, call upon his holy name:

That his kingdom may go forth upon the earth.

That the inhabitants of the earth may be prepared to receive the gospel.

That the inhabitants of the earth may be prepared for the second coming of the Son of Man.

The Son of Man shall come down from heaven:

Clothed in the brightness of his glory.

To meet the kingdom of God which is set upon earth.

May the kingdom of God go forth;

That the kingdom of heaven may come.

That God may be glorified in heaven and on earth.

That the enemies of God may be subdued.

Honor, power and glory be unto God for ever and ever.

We know that a righteous city can be built. We have the record of Enoch's city and it would be well for us to read it from time to time, using it as a challenge.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 173.

Challenge: Arise, children of Zion. Turn your feet Zionward! Walk the highway of the Lord, which leads to the mountain of the Lord's house. Put on the armour of righteousness! Yea, put on the armour which reflects the brightness of Zion's holy place. Let it be polished until it shines brighter than the noonday sun for the armour of the children of Zion sheds forth light, yea, a beacon of light, revealing the attributes of the Master—love, peace, purity, faith, hope, courage, humility, meekness, tenderness, patience, brotherly kindness and charity.

—Zelma McKee.

Postlude: Chorus only, Saints' Hymnal, 353. (Played softly.)

"In reaction experiments, if you ask a subject how he is performing he will say, 'I am performing much better,' although he is performing worse. The subject may think he is driving an automobile slowly when he is really driving fast. In traffic considerations the important thing is the increased ego of the drinking motorist."—Dr. E. M. Jellinek, Director, School of Alcoholic Studies, Yale University.

News Briefs

Central Missouri Stake

LEAGUE MEMBERS VISIT NAUVOO.—Sixty Leaguers from Central Missouri Stake visited Nauvoo on the weekend of May 25-26. Leaving Warrensburg at 4 a.m. Saturday morning, the bus stopped at Knob Noster, Sedalia, and Marshall to pick up passengers; stops for meals and scenic tours were made at Moberly, where the group visited the famed Mark Twain cave, and Carthage, where the old jail stands. At 7 o'clock Sunday morning, a prayer service was held at the Mansion House, after which the young people were taken for a tour of the town by a guide. Old buildings and historical sites were visited; on the way home the bus stopped at "David's Chamber" long enough for the group to sing one of David Smith's hymns and offer a prayer in the outdoor shrine. Another stop was made at Keokuk power dam, where a river tug and three barges were passing through the locks.

GARDNER'S LAKE RETREAT.—"I Need The Kingdom" was the theme for the first retreat held by the young adults of Central Missouri Stake at Gardner's Lake on June 8 and 9. Apostle Blair Jensen, Missionary Loyd Adams, and Orville Hulmes, stake director of young adults, were present. A campfire fellowship service was held on the lake bank Saturday evening. A business meeting, for the election of officers, and a dedication service, with Stake President Ward A. Hougas in charge, were held on Sunday.

BARN RALLY.—The second annual barn rally was held June 15 and 16 at the Darnell Dude Ranch; 130 Leaguers attended. Games, a hotdog feast, a mystery campfire raffle, and slides of the Nauvoo trip were important features of Saturday's activities. Barney Beridge was the supervisor of recreation. Missionary Loyd Adams spoke at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning, and Stake President Ward A. Hougas was in charge of the dedication hour held in the afternoon.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.—Members of the recently-organized drama club have selected the name of The LaDaSa Players; Mrs. B. S. Lampkin is president. At present, three one-act plays are being prepared by Mrs. W. K. Gard, Mrs. Martin Crabtree, Jr., and Miss Metta Anderson. The Zion's League presented the evening worship service on April 28. Elder C. F. Scarcliff was the speaker on Mother's Day. One hundred sixty people attended the June Communion service in the newly-decorated church.

GRANDVIEW, MISSOURI.—Pastor Lester Bronson has moved to Grandview, and Sunday evening services are now being held. Stake President Ward A. Hougas was the speaker on Mother's Day. A spelling match was held at the May branch night gathering; Mrs. Grove Harp was the winner.

LEXINGTON, MISSOURI.—The March 20 meeting of the women's department was held at the home of Mrs. Ed Church, who has been unable to attend previous meetings. Elder Roy Weldon was the speaker on Easter Sunday; a basket dinner was served in the lower auditorium at noon. The juniors presented a play on Mother's Day. A baptismal service was held on May 26 with Pastor L. M. Payne officiating. With the increase of attendance, evening services are again being held.

MARSHALL, MISSOURI.—A young adults' class was organized by Orville Hulmes on April 7. On Easter Sunday, a sunrise prayer service was held in the morning, and a children's program in the evening. Missionary O. W. Okerlind began a series of missionary services on May 26; two were baptized at the end of the week.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI. Eden Heights.—Regular Sunday morning prayer services are held each week, in addition to the Wednesday evening meetings. The choir has been on vacation since May, and special musical numbers are being furnished by soloists and various groups of singers. One hundred six children from Eden Heights registered for vacation Bible school. The final feature of the school was a baptismal service held at 11 o'clock on Children's Day, at which time ten young people were baptized. Since there is no font at the Gudgeon Park church, another service was held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon for the candidates from that congregation.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—An overflow crowd attended the Communion service on June 2; many isolated Saints from surrounding vicinities were present. A covered-dish luncheon was served by the young people at noon, and a candlelight worship service was presented by the Zion's League in the evening. Leadership training courses were held on June 4, 5, and 6, with general church representatives in charge; these were conducted to train workers for vacation Bible school. Movies and community singing were enjoyed on family night. Each church school class has made a pledge to raise funds for the new air-conditioning unit recently installed. The devotional service on Children's Day was in charge of the young people. Following a program and sermonette, several children were blessed and seven new members baptized. Another baptismal service was held on Father's Day. Sixty young people attended the private skating party held at Doling Park on June 14.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—Under the able leadership of Lillian Cockcroft, members of the Zion's League have been carrying out their yearly activities. They attended the youth conference held in Boston, and received much inspiration and help. Each Leaguer wrote to a young person in Brisbane, Australia; some interesting letters were received in return. A present project is the identifying with colored pins of all branches on a map of the United States. In addition to the regular weekly prayer service, the League sponsors an early morning service one Sunday each month. At a dinner party on June 8, officers were elected for the coming year. The Loyal Workers have also elected new officers. Apostle George Lewis spoke on Wednesday evening, May 22.

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.—The young people were in charge of the Children's Day program; two small boys acted as ushers, and another young man offered the prayer. Each child received a flower at the service. The latest improvement to the church is the installation of fluorescent lights.

TORONTO, CANADA.—One hundred fifty young people attended the district youth convention held in Toronto on June 1 and 2. Representatives from London, Hamilton, Chatham, Niagara Falls, Ottawa, and Buffalo were present. Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College, was guest speaker. The convention program included spiritual, recreational, and educational features. Almer Sheehy conducted a class on "Preparation." The Communion service on Sunday morning was the largest ever held in Toronto. The banquet on Saturday night was a memorable event. Music was provided by the choir, under the direction of Harold Neal and Quirt McKinney. Bob Withrow and Al Lefevre supervised an excursion to the art gallery and museum. Each activity of the convention served to increase the sense of responsibility of those attending of their place in the church and the world.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—Pastor Francis Schunk chose "The First Easter in America" for his April 21 sermon topic; the primary department was in charge of the morning worship service. A mother-daughter social was sponsored by the women's department on May 10; Mrs. J. P. Jensen of Blair, Nebraska, was guest speaker. Corsages were presented to each grandmother who was accompanied by a daughter and granddaughter. Members of the young people's class recently spent an evening making recordings; the older adult class has sponsored several parties. Leaguers are studying the Book of Mormon with Dave Krahl as teacher. Their regular May 5 meeting was in the form of an outing at the farm home of Clarence Chesbrough. Wayne Smith is now president of the League.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO.—The juniors and Oriole Girls were in charge of the special Mother's Day services presented on May 12. On Thursday evening, May 16, the annual mother-daughter banquet was held in the lower auditorium. The Junior Leaguers went on a nature hike May 24; the Sunbeam Blue Birds held their hike on June 8. Special features of the Children's Day activities were the presentation of church school awards, the blessing of several children, a baptismal service in the church font, and an evening confirmation service. A father-son banquet was held in the lower auditorium on June 20, with Elder Almer Sheehy of London as guest speaker. The annual branch business meeting was held Monday evening, June 17, for the election of officers and a discussion of branch business.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—Letters from the Saints in Norway, expressing gratitude for clothing sent by the women of Ottawa congregation, have been received. The women have established a birthday fund; the money is also used to send the Saints' Herald to members and nonmembers who would not otherwise be subscribers. Eight young people attended the Toronto district youth convention on May 1 and 2. Priest Otto Flegel has recently returned from service with the Canadian Occupation Army in Germany.

BOISE, IDAHO.—The Saints in Boise are happy to have Phillip Moore appointed missionary to the Idaho district. A full basement to the church is being constructed by members of the congregation who are willing to work on it in their spare time. Several new families have moved into the branch; under the able direction of Pastor Cecil Gilmore, the group is making noticeable progress. A Children's Day program was presented by the juniors on the morning of June 9, after which a baptismal service was held in the municipal park.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.—Benson Belrose was ordained an evangelist on April 18 at General Conference. Rosalind Reed, district League leader, was the guest speaker on May 22 at the young people's meeting. A capacity crowd was present to hear E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College, on June 4. The choir, under the direction of George Furness, provided special music on this occasion. The primary and cradle roll classes held a party at the church on June 8; the mothers of the children were present. A social evening for three recently married couples was sponsored by the Zion's League on June 12.

BULLETIN BOARD

Central Missouri Reunion

The central Missouri reunion will be held at Gardner's Lake, August 3 to 11. President J. F. Garver, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Apostle George Mesley, High Priest Glaude Smith, and Missionary O. W. Okerlind will be in attendance. Reservations and requests for information should be sent to the Central Missouri Stake Office, Box 355, Warrensburg, Missouri.

Columbus, Nebraska, Youth Camp

The annual youth camp for the southwestern Iowa, central and northeastern Nebraska districts will be held at Camp Sheldon, near Columbus, Nebraska, August 30 to September 2. This camp is equipped with sixteen cabins, a dining hall, assembly hall, outdoor chapel, council ring, ball diamonds, volleyball court, tennis court, swimming pool, and a canal for canoeing. Young people between the ages of twelve and twenty-five are invited to attend. The cost, including nine meals and sleeping quarters, is $4.50 per person. The camp will accommodate only 150 people, so attendance will be limited to that number. Registrations must be made in advance, and a deposit of $2.00 must accompany each registration. The official registrars are Lester Hunt, Box 486, Pacific Junction, Iowa, and Byron Constance, 3035 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Dr. Roy Chevillie of Graceland College will be in attendance. For further information, write V. D. Ruch, 217 Tenth Avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Northern and Western Michigan Reunion

The annual reunion of the northern and western Michigan districts will be held at the Park of the Pines, four and one-half miles north of Boyne City, August 9 to 18. A well-organized program is being completed that will keep all busy and interested the entire ten days. Apostle E. J. Gleazer will be in charge. Those desiring cottages, rooms, tents, or cots, may contact Mrs. Ada Alldread, Boyne City, Michigan. Meals will be served in the dining hall.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Sharon Wallace of Camas, Washington, who is ill with rheumatic fever.

William J. Young of Lockwood, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints. He has a cancer on his lip and suffers greatly.

Ina Ardyce Hershey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hershey, Hammond, Indiana, and Harlan James Metcalf, son of Mr. Roland Metcalf, Mondovi, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Laura Metcalf, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, were married at the Reorganized Church in Hammond on June 8. Elder Roy W. Smith performed the double-ring ceremony. Both the bride and groom attended Graceland College. They will make their home in Hammond this summer, moving to Lamoni in September so that Mr. Metcalf may continue his work at Graceland.

Custer-Butterworth

Beverly Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Butterworth, Ainsworth, Iowa, and Robert Custer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Custer, Washington, Iowa, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents on June 18. The bride's father officiated at the double-ring ceremony.

Day-Sumner

Leota Sumner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Sumner of Kingsville, Missouri, and Ralph Day, son of Mrs. Sarah Day, were united in marriage on April 22. Elder W. K. Gard performed the double-ring ceremony. At present, the couple are making their home with the bride's parents.

Miller-Pooler

Ruth Pooler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pooler of Peculiar, Missouri, and R. J. Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Miller of Butler, Missouri, were married at Grandview, Missouri, on June 2. Elder James Thomas officiating. They will make their home in Butler.

Births

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald C. Smith of Nevada, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Carolyn Laudell, born May 14.

A son, David Hopkins, was born April 17 to Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Swayne of Seattle, Washington. Mrs. Swayne is the former Rosemary Clisby.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy M. Sperry of Centerview, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Diana Katharine, born June 19.

A son, Dexter Alexander, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Matt Ellison of Sterling, Michigan, on May 14. Mrs. Ellison was formerly Katie Moffett.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Want of Chatham, Ontario, announce the birth of a daughter, Diana Lynn, born May 15 at St. Joseph's Hospital in Chatham.

A daughter, Carol Ann, was born to Helen and Sherman Christner at the Public General Hospital in Chatham, Ontario, on May 5.

Our Departed Ones

WILLIAMS.—Ann, daughter of William and Kathryn Powell, was born April 22, 1856, in South Wales, and came to America, with her parents, at the age of fifteen months. In 1867 they moved from Pennsylvania to Des Moines, and from there to Lucas, Iowa, where she remained until her death (date not given). She became a member of the Reorganized Church when she was nine years old. On October 11, 1879, she was married to Robert D. Williams; nine children were born to this union, five of whom preceded their mother in death.

She is survived by her husband; one son, Robert, of Omaha, Nebraska; three daughters: Ann Box, Pershing, Iowa; Margaret J. Box and Ruth Mitchell of Lucas; one sister, Mrs. Lizzie Batten, Chariton, Iowa; nine grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held February 10 at the Reorganized Church in Lucas, Elder John Blackstock officiating. Burial was in Fry Hill Cemetery.

SHINN.—Mosie D., was born August 26, 1878, at Rockford, West Virginia, and died May 31 in the Woman's Hospital in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on July 12, 1908.

She leaves to mourn her husband, Frank L. Shinn of Pittsburgh; two sons: Arthur Darrell of Clarksville, West Virginia; and Manfred Lyle of Oak Ridge, Tennessee; three daughters: Ann Gray of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Walter Caskey and Mrs. Paul L. Beyer, both of Pittsburgh; and six grandchildren. Services were held at the Beinhauer Mortuary, with Elders T. A. Dershimer and Henry Winship in charge. The body was then taken to Clarksburg, where services were conducted by Elders E. Guy Hammond and O. O. Forester at the Reorganized Church. Interment was in the Odd Fellows Cemetery.

RUDD.—Harry Lee, was born November 17, 1895, at Lee's Summit, Missouri, and passed away of a heart attack at El Monte, California, on June 8. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, the Order of Odd Fellows, and the Durfee and Pomona Granges.

He is survived by his wife, Pearl, and seven children: Dorothy, Kenneth, Mildred, and Shirley of the home; Mrs. Pauline Simcox, Banning, California; Mrs. Norma Hagar, Cincinnati, Ohio; and Victor of the U. S. Navy; two sisters: Mrs. Nettie Bowers of El Monte, and Mrs. Alta Crawford of Pensacola, Florida; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Schonel Mortuary, Elder V. L. Lum of Los Angeles officiating. Burial was in Rose Hill Memorial Park.

WELLINGTON.—Albert, was born June 9, 1915, and passed away on May 1 at the Victoria Hospital, London, Ontario. Services were held on May 4 at the Campbell Funeral Home in Chatham, Elder H. A. Engle officiating. Interment was in the Maple Leaf Cemetery.

PUTNAM.—Nancy M., was born January 29, 1864, at Dow City, Iowa, and passed away May 27, 1946, in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She is survived by one son, Charles F. Putnam of Council Bluffs; four daughters: Ethel G. Lewis, Marion, Illinois; Carrie J. Carr, Leon, Iowa; Hazel M. Phillips, Vancouver, Washington; and Joyce E. Radtke, Council Bluffs; a brother, R. A. Ballantyne, Lamoni, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. Mattie Amundsen, Moorehead, Iowa; and Mrs. Fannie Moore, Des Moines, Iowa; twenty-two grandchildren and twenty-four great-grandchildren.

"Nursing is an art—and if it be made an art, requires as exclusive a devotion, as hard a preparation as any painter's work, for what is the training to do with dead canvas or cold marble, compared with having to do with the living body—the temple of God's spirit. Nursing is an art which concerns every family in the world."

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Visual Educational Aids

The Herald Publishing House will have a section in the catalogue of Church and Church School Supplies devoted to projectors, screens and supplies for use in the visual education work of the church. We are working in close co-operation with the Advisory Committee for Visual Education, which was appointed at the recent General Conference. Marvin McDole will be in charge of this department of our work.

To get started and to obtain all possible help for the promotion of this work, we ask all those who are interested in materials for visual education to write us, and we will do all that is possible to meet the needs.

* REPORT ON EVAN FRY

Our readers will be interested in a late report on the condition of our Radio Director, Evan Fry, who has been ill for some months. This information is received from his father, Charles Fry, of Independence. On Wednesday morning, June 26, a specially equipped ambulance started the trip from Independence, taking him to the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota. He arrived in the evening, feeling well, and not suffering from the trip. Sister Fry is with him, the children are with relatives, and the home is in charge of his parents. He will remain in Rochester for observation and diagnosis, after which a course of treatment will be arranged. His present address is: St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, Minnesota.

Woman's Great Career

A Woman's World

Careers have become a definite and indispensable part of a woman's world. The young woman growing up does not know certainly that she will marry, and so must proceed to plan a career as an alternate possibility. Even if she marries, she knows that death could take her companion, possibly leaving her with young children to support. Accident or disease could make it necessary to take care of her husband for a period of time. Therefore the intelligent young woman plans a career, regardless of what the future may bring her. A career is part of her security. A very few, highly favored by fortune (or are they?) may have inheritances that seem to provide for the future, but inflation can destroy such wealth. A career provides greater security than a fortune. This is the kind of world that all young women face.

Choices

By nature and instinct, both men and women want homes, and need them. Two normal, healthy, balanced people—a man and a woman—can make a home the most beautiful place in the world, and they can make living in it the most wonderful and happy of all experiences. It is the woman's part to make the home clean and attractive; it is the man's part to provide the means of support, and to assist with the heavier and more tedious tasks. This is one of the oldest and best kinds of co-operation known to us.

Marriage and homemaking is a natural first choice. After that come the others: business, teaching, nursing, and a thousand possible specializations.

Nursing

For young women, nothing surpasses the nursing profession in importance, usefulness, and satisfaction. Nursing is directly related to the home. When there is sickness, the patient first remains at home, where he can receive the care of wife or mother, who is always the first nurse on the case. How fortunate if she is a trained nurse, and has given some of her life before marriage to the practice of her work. The doctor can safely leave the care of the patient and the fulfillment of his instructions to her.

If the young woman continues in her profession, she is a highly respected and necessary member of her community. She is skilled in a profession that everybody needs many times in his life. The work is sometimes hard, but it is well paid. The good nurse can make much more money per day or per week than her sisters who serve in business or those engaged in teaching. And, if engaged in private practice, she can take a vacation when her case is finished, whenever she needs it. New cases will be waiting when she returns.

Nursing During the War

In the late war, there was a great additional need of nurses. The U. S. Government instituted the Cadet Nurse Training program, with uniforms, pay, and many other advantages for the nurses. But there was a price the nurse had to pay in answering the call of her country.

Young women may regret that the Cadet Nurse Training program is no longer available. But they may be glad that nurses who finance their own training are now fully free to determine where, when, and how long they shall serve. Nursing as a profession is now back on its own feet, without subsidy, and without external restraints.

The Question of Cost

Some people think that because a nurse works hard during her training that she should be paid for her labor; that her training should not cost her anything.

Students at the universities have to work hard to earn their degrees, and they do not get pay for it. Doctors and dentists have to work very hard, and receive no pay for their labor.

The fact is that the beginning student is not efficient in the work, in any profession. His work is not worth much at first, and requires constant supervision. Education costs far more than the student pays, and somebody else has to make up the difference, either in endowment or appropriation.

All education costs money, and nursing is no exception. The professions offer rich rewards, but those who enter them have to pay for their own training, at least partly. Young people can begin unskilled labor without training cost, but they will be limited and dissatisfied all their lives.

Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing

Our church organization, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, has a fine School of Nursing that provides great opportunities for young church women to take their training under good conditions, and with some of the best medical instruction available. Young women who are considering their careers would do well to write to the Sanitarium, as indicated in articles that appear elsewhere in this issue, and learn about the plan and the opportunities offered.

Nursing is not a career for the Miss Morgan of the Sanitarium Staff was in the office this week and reported an excellent response to the Book-Bank idea through which the students of the Sanitarium have provided a splendid nucleus for a professional library. They already have about six hundred books and hope to push this up to a thousand carefully selected volumes within the next few months. A new and interesting development is in the use of accredited films as part of the library equipment and in connection with the educational activities of the School of Nursing.

A short time ago Brother John G. Wight wrote us from Austria, stating that he would soon have an opportunity to visit Denmark and Germany and would like the addresses of the Saints in those countries. We sent some addresses and now have a report of Brother Wight's visit to Copenhagen. We feel sure that his letter will be of interest to the Saints throughout the church.

The First Presidency
The Auditorium

"Dear Brethren:

The enclosed copies will give you the complete picture of my humble efforts of ministry in Denmark. It gave me a great deal of pleasure to be able to combine some church activity with a few days' leave, and I was richly repaid for the efforts I put forth. I trust that it will be another link in the chain of friendship which binds the Denmark Saints to the church at home.

The Saints there were deeply appreciative of your greeting, and they send their very best wishes and prayers for your success.

Probably the most important desire in their hearts now is to procure a church building. I have included the details concerning their investigation of such a possibility in one of the enclosed reports. Any help that the General Church can extend will be greatly appreciated.

Perhaps just as great a desire is their wish that they might have the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants made available in the Danish language. A translation of the Church History by Inez Smith Davis would be very helpful, too. If such translations can be provided, it will greatly enhance their missionary efforts. If the Herald Publishing House has such translations of the Book of Mormon on hand, I am sure that it would be a good investment for the Saints at home to send them to Denmark. Though there may be regulations which prevent the Danish Saints from sending money out of Denmark, I am sure there are none which would prevent our sending books to them as gifts.

They dearly remember the Sanbedens Banner which was formerly published, with Peter Muceus as editor. They asked specifically that I call to your attention their need of a paper like that, and they will greatly appreciate some contact with the church, even if it is only a monthly mimeographed letter. Their interest warrants every consideration we can give them, and when I return home (in September, I hope) I will gladly assist in publishing something like the Sanbedens Banner.

I enjoyed very much worshiping with them, and I trust that my efforts may meet with your approval. My greatest desire is to serve the church to the best of my ability, however humble the task. My prayers and best personal wishes go with you always.

Fraternally,
John G. Wight.

The following additional paragraph from a personal letter will also be interesting in this connection:

This much I do want to add as an interesting sidelight. In the ordination and confirmation prayers, I would express a thought, then pause while Brother Blume translated it to the group. I was surprised at the smoothness with which we were able to work. Only once was I asked to repeat a phrase. It was a most interesting and educational experience.

Mesleys Arrive Safely

On Monday, July 1, the First Presidency received the following telegram from Apostle C. G. Mesley and his family: "Arrived safely. Clearing baggage. Hope to arrive in Kansas City Saturday."

The Mesleys have had to wait through long delays for transportation, and their friends will be glad to know that all obstacles have at last been overcome. We are very happy for their safe return.

Conference Music Correction

After making out our last list, we find that it will be impossible to get three of the numbers through regular jobber channels, in which case it would have been necessary to order from two different sources. We felt this would be confusing, so we are changing the list.

The anthems to be used by the next General Conference choir will be as follows:

Come, Thou Almighty King—Alfred Whitehead—SATB @ 15c. Published by Carl Fischer, No. CM602.

Let All the World in Every Corner Sing—E. T. Chapman—SATB @ 15c. Published by C. C. Birchard & Co., No. 1189.

Sing Praises to God, the Almighty—Russian—Whitford—SATB @ 15c. Published by C. C. Birchard & Co., No. 344.

A Festival Prelude—Bach—SATB @ 25c. Published by C. C. Birchard & Co., No. 316.

O Lord Most Holy—Cesar Franck—SATB @ 12c. Neil A. Kjos Music Company, No. 7020.

A Prayer for Wisdom (Kol Slaven)—D. S. Bortnianski—SATB @ 12c. Published by B. F. Wood Music Company, No. 490.

Note of Thanks

As it is impossible for me to write to each person individually, I wish to thank the Saints through the Herald for sending me greetings from all parts of the United States and Canada on my ninetieth birthday.

The gifts, kind wishes, and beautiful expressions of good will were deeply appreciated, and will not be forgotten.

I am thankful to the Lord for sight, hearing, and the good health that I enjoy in my old age; also for the blessings he has bestowed upon me.

May God bless you all abundantly and assist you, by his Holy Spirit, to live saintly lives.

Education Through Repentance

By John R. Darling

For many years, as I have watched graduating classes leave high schools and colleges, I have been deeply concerned as to what kind of philosophy of life these students were taking away to support and guide them. Certainly that high school or college is best which sends out the greatest proportion of its able graduates with high ideals of right and justice, and a clear determination to live up to these ideals. We recognize, without doubt, that the need of the world today—the need, by the way, which has always existed from the time of creation—is great for generous-hearted leaders with a dependable philosophy of life grounded on full acceptance of Christian teachings. We believe that on no other basis than Christian teachings can a philosophy of life be based that will meet the needs of men and nations, and lead us all to peace and true happiness.

If we accept this philosophy as our ideal, as the conduct objective, that we wish both for ourselves and for others, then our next procedure is one of analysis—an analysis of our theology in search of keys to full living and accomplishment, and peace as found only in the acceptance of the teachings of Jesus, the Christ. The crying need of both individuals and the world at large today is the discovery of the “know how” in order that we may overcome the dilemma in which we find ourselves. What is the answer? Surely within the Christian teachings are to be found methods of attainment. As we examine our situation realistically and with a willingness to frankly admit our findings, we must make two admissions: First, world conditions reflect chaos and despair. Second, with all our provocation and complaining and fear relative to these world conditions, we must admit that we have never honestly tried out the philosophy of the Christian teachings that promise peace.

Basic to accepting and practicing any theory is faith. This is one of the first principles of the Gospel of Jesus. Another principle which he taught as being essential to life and happiness is that of repentance. Repentance is closely allied with faith. Indeed, repentance is of such great importance that some have named it as being the first and foremost principle to be applied in Christian living. It is one of the keys to effective education in Christian techniques.

Believing as we do in the teachings of Jesus, we are anxious to pattern our lives by them, for has not God said, “I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise” (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3). This same truth, while not expressed in this same arrangement of words, is implied many, many times in both the Old and New Testaments, and time after time also in the Book of Mormon.

Service to an ideal, a way of life, or a scriptural pattern, to which we merely give lip support with no effort to discover and put into action its theologies, is hypocrisy. We answer, without question, that any lasting enthusiasm for a cause depends upon convictions arrived at through accepted real or vicarious experiences. Certainly, we must admit that much of our time is spent in rearranging that which we have learned erroneously, or in rearranging prejudices which we recognize, but are unwilling to admit. We cannot indefinitely keep a workable philosophy of our own, much less pass it on to others, unless it is supported by some definite convictions. Purposeless living has been, and always will continue to be, mere existence, for such living lacks point of direction. This condition may exist for a number of reasons. Perhaps there is a lack of information, a state of ignorance relative to the interpretation of the Scriptures. Perhaps we know more than we are willing to admit, but are motivated by the spirit of indifference; perhaps we hold a distorted sense of values because of worldly interests.

Surely there is greater significance to the meaning of repentance than we are willing, for the most part, to accept. Joseph Smith, the latter day prophet, was admonished to “say nothing but repentance to this generation.” As we read the Scriptures, we note that prophets of all ages have cried repentance to the people. Again and again they have emphasized this principle. Why has it crucial meaning? What is really reflected in a greater definition of the term repentance? How must we respond to the admonition which it makes in its clarion call? God, through Isaiah, said:

“For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.”

In this manner does the Prophet Isaiah give us an idea of the difference between the ordinary affairs of God and men. The goal of our religious life may be indicated as an attempt, first, to find out what God is like, and second, to approximate more nearly in our lives the thoughts and ways of God.

Finding out what God is like lies in the realm of revelation. Bringing our lives into accord with the life of God involves a number of processes. As we come to understand God’s ways, and seek to understand still more through repentance and prayerful living, God reveals his will to us.

When we speak of repentance, there usually comes to our minds the picture of one whose life has been filled with unrighteous acts, turning from these sins to a better way of living. It is true that this is one phase of repentance, but it by no means tells the entire story. If we were to ask a group of people for a definition of repentance, we would probably receive a variety of answers. For instance, one might say that repentance is a confession of wrongdoing; another, that it is restitution for injury; another, the ceasing to do evil and learning to do well.

But if we analyze these answers closely, we find that, in reality, they are the outgrowths or fruitage of some almost indefinable change that has come into the life of the individual. It is this change which really constitutes the process of repentance. Such a change involves the bringing of the life of the individual into a new relationship with the divine life; in other words, it has required, an adjustment on the part of the individual.

Doctor Frank Crane has said that this word adjustment is the most important word in our language. It would be unwise to start a discussion as to what is the most important word, but a brief analysis of the many ways in which adjustment is required in human life will convince us of its importance.

First of all, it is at the very basis of good health. If a part of the body is diseased, the entire body suffers. Because of the very complexity of our bodily relationships, it is often difficult to locate the exact seat of a disease. But once the difficulty has been located, it becomes necessary to bring about an adjustment through some sort of treatment, so that the disease will gradually disappear. We cannot imagine the presence of disease when all parts of the body are in perfect adjustment, functioning completely.

Adjustment is the basis of harmony. If a piano gives forth sounds that are inharmonious, we say it is "out of tune." In tuning a piano, each of its strings must be brought into the proper relation, or adjustment, with all of the other strings. When that adjustment has been made, we have harmony instead of discord.

Adjustment is at the basis of radio. Radio terms are now so familiar to all of us that we may well use them by way of illustration. We speak of the sending station having a certain wave length. Then we speak of the receiving station having to "tune in." This simply means that, by the turning of the dial, we have adjusted the receiving set to the wave length of the sending station and are thereby enabled to receive the message.

One of the most interesting stories illustrative of the principle of adjustment is told of a race of people inhabiting one of the very mountainous countries of South America. We say that when we climb to the top of a high mountain, we find it difficult to "get our breath." This simply means that the air is so rarified that we find it hard to take in enough to supply the body with the necessary amount of oxygen. The ordinary individual, coming to the top of the mountains inhabited by these people, finds it almost impossible to live. Yet, the natives get along very nicely. The reason is soon evident. Their chests have become abnormally large, so large, in fact, that they look almost deformed. Tradition has it that they formerly lived in the valleys, but gradually went up the mountain side until, after many generations, they reached their present location. As they moved higher and higher, nature provided for them, through the principle of adjustment, a lung capacity sufficient to give them the necessary oxygen.

On a number of occasions an interesting experiment has been conducted to illustrate the basis upon which adjustment must take place. Several persons with watches have been asked to tell the time. No two persons have found their watches to agree exactly. Then the question was asked, "With whose watch shall the rest of us set our own?" It was recognized at once that to arbitrarily set the balance of the watches to agree with the time of a certain one, might cause all to be wrong. On what basis, then, should the adjustment be made? In the final analysis it could be made only on the basis of the sun. As we analyze our conclusion in order that we may appreciate its implications, we are led to the following logical deductions. First, that our watches are of finite workmanship. Second, that the sun is of infinite workmanship. Third, that we agree if we go by another's watch, we are very apt to all be wrong; and fourth, that the only real basis is that of the adjustment of the finite with the infinite.

That which holds true in the physical world, holds true in greater degree in the spiritual world. A conscious change must take place in the heart of the individual, and it must be on the basis of an adjustment with the infinite or perfect life.

If we are to consider repentance from the standpoint of the change which takes place in the life of the hardened sinner alone, it will probably be considered as a preliminary step only. But when we consider it from the standpoint of a constant series of adjustments which must be made in the life of the individual before it can be brought into full accord with the life of God, we face a different situation. We find it to be a principle that must continue throughout our lives.

For instance, let us assume that I have been out in the world, engaged in a number of activities that are out of harmony with the teachings of God. I become convinced of the error of my ways and attempt to make a change. As a result of this change, I make a confession of wrongdoing, make restitution so far as possible, and forsake my evil ways, which were especially objectionable to my church standing, but my goodness may be of the passive nature. Most certainly I have need to repent. I must adjust my life to that of an active, rather than

Your Future---Job or Career?

Just a Moment, Girls!

Are you hunting a job? or are you PLANNING YOUR LIFE?

If it's a job you want, scan the classified newspaper advertisements, or apply at the nearest employment agency. You'll find one in the twinkling of an eye—and at pretty good pay, too!

But if you are planning your life, the attack is different. You'll take time to assemble facts about yourself and about all phases of living, for you will need a blueprint to follow all through your life. You won't deliberately leave anything to chance. You'll become expert in personal engineering. You'll tell yourself where to go—not dazedly ask yourself some future day how you got where you are. You will choose your way of life.

One of the most important decisions you will make is that of your choice of vocation. Today's girl is usually a realist. She wants marriage, but she also wants to be able to earn her own living, if the desire or necessity persist after marriage. She wants to be prepared for whatever happens.

HAVE YOU CONSIDERED NURSING AS A VOCATION?

Between July 1, 1946, and June 30, 1947, nursing schools in the United States will enroll 40,000 students. The war is over, but veteran and civilian needs are still "calling all nurses" and will for years to come.

The cost of professional nursing is moderate in comparison with that of other professions. The reason for this lies partly in the fact that while the student of nursing is learning, she is also giving services to the patients in the hospital with which her school is connected, and for which the hospital serves as a nursing laboratory. She could not learn to be a good nurse without this supervised day-after-day practice. As a student, she is not indispensable to a particular hospital, for many hospitals operate with registered nurses only; but as a student, the hospital is indispensable to her. Since the government subsidy to nursing education no longer exists, the student nurse, like students of other professions, bears the cost of her education herself. The approximate cost of the three-year course is less than one year of college.

But before you seek enrollment in a nursing school, you should try for an honest answer to the most important question of all: "Should I be a nurse?" Emerson said that the disgrace is in not yielding the peculiar fruit one was created to bear. Doing work for which one is not fitted, either by aptitude and attitude, is certainly not yielding one's "peculiar fruit." There is no need to be ashamed when you discover that a certain work is not for you. It is wisdom in the highest degree to choose a work because it is yours.

SHOULD YOU BE A NURSE?

Nursing is hard work. It is for the tough-fibered and the tender-hearted. It is for the emotionally mature—for the girl who can stand on her own feet, yet accept guidance. It is for the well-adjusted, the self-disciplined; for the one who demands a high mental wage for her services, as well as a good living. But enough of generalities. To give you definite help in deciding if you would be happy in nursing, the acting educational director of the school, Miss Edith Davey, and the faculty have devised a simple quiz by which you can roughly rate yourself in a few moments of honest thought. The test is not conclusive, and in no wise replaces the usual methods of selecting applicants for nursing education, nor the psychological tests given to enrollees after classes begin. You will find it interesting, and you may be surprised to discover that you have an unsuspected talent for nursing. Allow yourself five points for each affirmative answer. A score of 75 or above is evidence that you are probably good nurse material. Ready? Reach for your pencil . . .

1. APTITUDES AND ATTITUDES:

- a. Do you like to work with your hands, carrying on such activities as sewing, typing, and playing the piano?
- b. Are you able to work well with others?
- c. Do you have an imagination whereby you can feel pain that another person experiences?
- d. Can you offer sympathy without becoming overemotional?
- e. Can you meet an emergency without feeling frightened and nervous?

2. PERSONAL-SOCIAL ADJUSTMENTS.

- a. Are you happy now, every day, instead of waiting for happiness in the future only?
- b. Do you accept necessary changes in plans cheerfully?
- c. Are you tolerant of all classes, creeds, races, and nationalities?
- d. Do you make your own bed, hang up your own clothing, and supervise your own personal hygiene?
- e. Is religion a necessary part of your daily life?

3. HEALTH.

- a. Do you know the proper foods to eat, and eat them because they will help keep you in good health?
- b. Do you believe in having the vaccinations and immunizations that science has made possible for us to help keep us in good health?
- c. Do you feel that it is important to observe rules of isolation and

- quarantine when the doctor tells you to do so?
- d. Do you believe that it is important to have a physical examination periodically?
 - e. Do you feel that it is important for people to study hygiene, even though they do not plan to become nurses or doctors?

4. EDUCATION.

- a. Do you enjoy studying the sciences and mathematics, and acquiring factual knowledge?
- b. Have you had at least one science course in high school such as physics, chemistry, biology, or general science?
- c. Did you take algebra in high school?

- d. Can you keep an accurate account of where and how your money is spent?
- e. Can you make practical application of things you learn from books?

Was your score 75 or above? If so, turn to the symposium on nursing education and opportunities on the following pages. If, after reading it, you are convinced that nursing is your work, Miss Nelle Morgan, R. N., Director of Nurses, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Independence, Missouri, will be happy to receive your application for enrollment in the Sanitarium School of Nursing.

Honors and Rewards of Nursing

Comments by Professional and Social Leaders

NELLE MORGAN, R. N., DIRECTOR OF NURSES: Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing: The present day schools of nursing are democratic institutions of learning. The administration, faculty, and student body work together in solving problems and in making strides toward progress. Students are encouraged to use their intelligence in analyzing the education they are receiving and to make suggestions for improvement. In many modern schools, the student organization assumes full responsibility for extra-curricular activities. This student participation in the affairs of the school gives them an insight into the problems and the assets of the school, and has a beneficial effect on their cultural and social development.

GERTRUDE E. COPELAND, R. N., SUPERINTENDENT OF THE INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL:

Contrary to popular conception, a modern hospital does not operate a school of nursing in order to obtain inexpensive nursing service. A properly conducted school of nursing can be operated at about the same expense to the hospital as that of an all-graduate nursing staff. It takes three students to do the same amount of work one graduate nurse can do.

But there are things which students give to the hospital which no all-graduate nursing staff can give. The youthful, happy, hopeful atmosphere brought in by these young girls is a therapeutic measure which actually does help in the healing process. The fact that a hospital has to turn out good nurses in order to make and keep a reputation for giving good nursing care keeps the whole institution on its toes. In my estimation, patients receive better care in a hospital having student nurses, as all of the work is carefully supervised.

So far as the Sanitarium and the church are concerned, it would be a calamity if ever the school were to close its doors. It makes available a fine professional education for our church girls. The graduate takes a personal knowledge of this institution home with her, interpreting its aims in her community, thus helping to unify the thinking of the members of the church concerning one of their most valuable assets—the Sanitarium.

CHARLES F. GRABSKE, M. D., MEMBER OF SANITARIUM MEDICAL STAFF:

Every woman needs to feel that she is needed. To be able to ease pain in those who suffer, to bring comfort to those in distress, and to aid the physician in the cure of illness, makes her know that she is, without question, of value in any society.

As long as sickness exists, while accidents, calamity, and war continue, the human race will demand nursing. The more able and qualified a nurse becomes, the more her service will be demanded. People will always divide with those who can give them peace, rest, and relief from pain. Economic security is naturally, one of the dividends of becoming a good nurse.

Monotony is destructive. The drama of anticipation and birth is a daily occurrence in the life of a nurse. Her lot is to bring peace, contentment, and health, and to turn incipient destruction into abundant life.

Because it offers those who follow it the chance to be worth-while, to have security, and to live among the summits of life's experiences, nursing is one of the most appealing of all of the professions open to women.

VIDA E. BUTTERWORTH, R. N., B. S., M. A.; EDUCATIONAL DIRECTOR, INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL SCHOOL OF NURSING:

Nursing education has always been an active type of education—a "learn it on the job" method. A certain amount of theory must be presented in the classroom, but this is done by student participation in the nursing arts laboratory, giving good nursing care to each other; in the science laboratory, seeing how things work; and in the nutrition laboratory, by preparing foods. The modern teaching methods make use of visual aids such as films, lantern slides, charts, models, and specimens. Musty lectures give place to student projects, student panel discussions, or student seminar groups. The hospital ward, the operating room, pharmacy, diet kitchen, central supply, labor and delivery rooms, nursery, emergency room, and other hospital units become classrooms under the guidance of skilled, well-prepared instructors and supervisors.

Nursing education is becoming more highly specialized by the day. To teach in the nursing education field, one must have a thorough preparation in subject matter and teaching methods obtained by intensive theoretical and clinical experiences in colleges and universities, hospitals, and schools of nursing. A teacher of nursing is not just a nurse or a teacher, but a skilled craftsman with all of the latest techniques and methods at her fingertips.

Nursing education has become so highly specialized that it has given rise to a new field in nursing education—that of personnel administration, guidance, and counseling. In the past year the Teachers College at Columbia University has set up a course to prepare nurses for such positions. Other colleges and universities will undoubtedly establish such courses also. This service is expected to lead to a more careful selection of students who enter schools of nursing, and will follow them through the basic nursing course with careful educational, social, religious, and personal guidance. The purpose of this is not just to secure better nurses, but to prepare mature individuals capable of actively participating in modern American life. This service continues after graduation, placing the individual nurse in the field and position for which her abilities and talents best suit her, and guiding her in continuing her growth and education throughout life.

MRS. S. E. BRADY, NORTH KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, MOTHER OF LEOLA BRADY WIGHT, STUDENT IN THE SCHOOL OF NURSING AT THE SANITARIUM:

As the mother of a senior student, I am pleased with the opportunities and advantages this school of nursing has afforded my daughter. Her education is giving her the knowledge and equipment with which to face the realities of life and obtain satisfaction by serving others. Her schooling, plus the association with those of the church, has shaped her whole perspective of life.

IOLA TORDOFF, NURSING STUDENT: Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing:

Nursing is not just a job, a career, a profession of which one can be proud, and an excellent chance for an ever-expanding education—it is even more. It is a "way of life" that gives an opportunity for Christlike service and love to those who most need it. It affords the stabilizing influence of dorm life and close companionship with students from many places who are of like faith and high ideals. These, and many more, are the things which have made it worthwhile for me.

MARGARET E. WILEY, R.N., R.P.T.T.:

There never has been a doubt in my mind in regard to the profession which I chose. After serving as a nurse for a number of years, I still feel the same way as when I first began.

Nurse's training is advantageous in these respects; it is a foundation for marriage, homemaking, public health, and community improvement. It is also a steppingstone to other fields of endeavor, such as physical and occupational therapy.

Salaries are now equal to other allied professions. Membership in national organizations for the betterment of nurses is also an advantage.

MRS. SHANKLAND ARNSON, CHAIRMAN, THE GENERAL DEPARTMENT OF WOMEN, REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS:

From the viewpoint of a woman and church worker, I see nursing education as valuable for two important reasons: first, the profession is a help to the homemaker in rearing a healthy and happy

Letter from Norway

June 14, 1946

To the Herald:

The letter from Norway herewith presented, written by Brother Arthur Iversen, may give a better insight to the heart of the Norwegians. Arthur Iversen was my first baptism candidate in Norway when I was serving as one of our church missionaries appointed to Scandinavia in 1922. I baptized him on May 25, 1924, on the date of my fifth baptism anniversary. He had been contemplating the step for some time. It required a great deal of courage to become a member of our church in Norway, for prejudice was strong and bitter, and any one who stepped out and affiliated with the Restoration movement was in the spotlight for ridicule. I shall never forget how, after my sermon on Sunday afternoon, May 25, having made an especial appeal to any interested attendants at the service to accept Christ and his truth on the conditions of the word of God, Arthur came forward to me at the close of the meeting. His face was pale and the entire reaction he made revealed that he was deeply agitated. He took me to one side and said: "I want to be baptized, and I want it done right away. Do you think we can do it?" I asked him if he didn't want to get his wife (who was not a member, either) and possibly his parents. He said: "No, it has been hard to make the decision, but now I am ready, so if you will do it, I'd like for it to be now." He and I went to a little river, and at a secluded but beautiful spot, I baptized him. He came forth from the water, and afterward, as we were on our way to family; second, a nurse's knowledge of health habits enables her to make a worth-while contribution to her church, community, and nation. The honorarium is adequate, and the professional standing is high.

his home he was one of the happiest persons I had ever seen. Brother Arthur became one of our steady and devoted members. He was sincere and earnest.

The time soon came when I received spiritual light as to Arthur's call to the office of priest. He accepted and has served as best he could since then. Following the surrender of the Germans, 1945, and Norway's subsequent liberation, I began to receive letters from our faithful people over there. We have but slight comprehension of that through which they have passed during the time of the Nazi occupation of their country. Those who have written to me have informed that those Norwegians who would not join the Nazi party were denied many privileges and strictly restricted as to food and clothing. Many of them went hungry and lost pounds of weight. When the war ended they had no clothing left except the patched garments they wore on their bodies. But those who remained true to their country's true spirit and democratic ideals are now assured that a good conscience is more desirable than ease and riches through betrayal of their own people.

Norwegians, for the more part, are intensely patriotic. They love with burning zeal their beautiful land. They have a number of moving and lovely songs in which their love and devotion to their country are expressed fittingly. One such song is referred to by Brother Iversen in his letter of greeting to the church members in America. One of its stanzas he quotes, and I have seen Norwegians stand with bared heads and tears trickling down their cheeks when this song was played or sung. The title is "Naar Fjordene Blaaner," which literally translated reads: "When The Fjords are Bluing," or "When the Fjords Turn Blue."

In translating Brother Iversen's article, I have given first the words of the first stanza in its original Norwegian. Then beneath I have tried to give a reproduction of it in our language. I tried in Minneapolis to find a translation of it in the English, but was unsuccessful. I shall here give a free translation of it, which of course, will not be in rhyme or meter, but will give the more nearly exact meaning. You will note that the song is a patriotic one, something like our own "America The Beautiful."

'When the fjords turn blue like the field's violets,
And the snow-fields glitter in the sparkling
sun,
When the lilies of the valley by the foot of the hedge,
Stand fragrantly beautiful along the wall of the cliff,
When the river behind the alderscrub dances itself wild,

And the thrush from the pine-covered slope sings to it,
Then stirred, then stirred is my breast, then
I only can whisper,
"God bless thee, dear Norway, my beautiful
land,
God bless thee, dear Norway, my beautiful
land."

E. Y. Hunker.

Lilleaker, Norway
May 7, 1946

Greetings from Norway:

Far, far here to the north lies a land, and this land is called Norway. It is now the month of May and the gracious sun is spreading its warm rays over old Mother Norway. Winter is indeed magnificent and beautiful. The snow lies like a lovely white blanket over field and wood. But there is no time as beautiful as spring:

Naar fjordene blaaner som markens fæl,
Og braerne glitrer i spillende sol,
Naar liljekonvalen ved foten av hegg
Staar duftende skjon langs klippernes vegg,
Naar elven bak orkrattet danser sig vild,
Og trosten fra granlien synger detilig;
Da rores, da rores mit bryst, da blot hviske
jeg kan,
"Gud signe dig, Norge, mit deilige land,
"Gud signe dig Norge, mit deilige land."

When fjords are bluing, when winter is done,
When high snow-fields glitter in sparkling
sun,

When lilies of valley by the foot of the hedge
Stand fragrant and sweet along the cliff's edge,
When streams behind alderbrush dance wild and insane,

And the thrush from the pine-slope sings back
the refrain,

Then stirred, then stirred is my soul, merely whisper I can:

"God bless thee, dear Norway, my beautiful
land,
God bless thee, dear Norway, my beautiful
land."

It is a joyful time when spring returns to the North, and again, like a miracle, new life springs from the dead.

The war between the nations is, so to speak, ended, but Christian warriors continue their battle. And I am gratefully indebted to God because He sent some of them up here to Norway, and that I am one whose eyes were opened for the truth, and that I was permitted entrance into the church. And I can testify that I have never regretted it. I know that what we have is the truth, and I am glad that God has given me a strong faith, and that it does not fail in the hard time of adversity. And we, as one people, can in common, say with Paul: "But we have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but, by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. . . . For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, has shined in our hearts, to give the light of knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Yes, a bright future is ours, if we hold out faithful to the end.

When I heard that President F. M.
Smith had departed from this existence, it pierced my heart like a sting, but I believe it was according to God's plan.
And I believe, too, that God had chosen a man as his successor. God's ways are not our ways.

God, through His Church, has brought us much good. And I desire at this time to herewith send heartfelt thanks to all those who have organized the sending of gifts to Norway. Our heartfelt gratitude to all who have sent us bundles.
This has, in fact, made me very happy, and I have often thought how truly wonderful it is that we actually have so many kind and generous unknown brothers, sisters, and friends.

May we so live that God can continue to bless us, and my wish and hope are that we sometime may meet "beyond the River, where the billows cease to roll."

With brotherly greetings, (Signed) A. M. Iversen.

a passive, believer. Perhaps as I make this adjustment, the possession of a certain talent is discovered.
If this talent is permitted to remain unused, so that it will finally disappear, I have need to repent. It usually happens that with the development of one talent, others are discovered. If, as a result of this,
I see that, through utilization of the talents God has given, I may live on a higher plane of activity tomorrow than I do today, I yet have need to make the adjustment necessary to bring me to a still better way of life.

In other words, may we not say that life is a constant series of adjustments? That, in our spiritual endeavor, we are confronted daily with the necessity for making an adjustment that will bring us from the lower to the higher plane of existence? It is not merely a matter of comparing the evil ways with those of righteousness; it is a matter of comparing ways that are good with those that are better, and still better.
The adjustment I made yesterday will not suffice for today. As soon as I fail to permit this adjustment to take place, I stop growing.

Just because God tells us that his ways and thoughts are higher than ours, are we justified in the conclusion that we should not endeavor to bring our ways and thoughts up to the level of his own? We talk with some people whose minds are constantly devoted to only the things of the world. Out of their lives come thoughts that, for the most part, are uninspiring—apparently the natural result of limited perspective. What, then, is the yardstick by which the degree of quality living may be measured? Simply this: living that reflects a purely physical plane restricts quality living. Living that results from thinking things through with God extends horizons, clarifies goals, and gives motivation to consistent endeavor. A frank appraisal or self-examination, so to speak, will indicate with reasonable accuracy our true position.

The thoughts of yesterday are not sufficient for today. With the high and noble thoughts that came to us yesterday, there also came a higher concept and a new revelation of God. This means that today we must raise our thinking processes to a still higher level. So, day by day, through the process of rethinking with God and making the necessary adjustments, we may sometime find that his ways are our ways and his thoughts, our thoughts. The process is one of repentance, a conscious adjustment of our finite lives with that of the Infinite One.

The wholehearted and enthusiastic attitude to accept and practice an expanding definition of repentance —this responsiveness to light and truth—involves an attitude, a practice, and a reward. We read in closing a brief quotation from the Scriptures which, as a key to quality living, catches up in one brief statement the significant path to achievement. It reflects in no uncertain terms the result of practicing, with sincerity, true repentance. It points in no uncertain terms to a condition or state of mind which must under-

THE SEVENTIES SUGGEST

Personal Contacts in Conversions

Committee:

Seventy Joseph H. Yager
Seventy David K. Larmour
Seventy Glen H. Johnson, chairman.

PRESIDENT Frederick M. Smith has given a definition of evangelism which summarizes the idea of conversion; it is "Bringing the love of God into the hearts of men, and the lives of men into the kingdom of God." To effect this process, we must consider and utilize the important method of personal contacts. The major concern of the church is to arouse and develop in men a deep and abiding faith in God, and a proper implementation of his will. One of the essential methods which will effectuate these goals is personal contact work in evangelism. Methods of personal contacts will be presented in the following topics:

Personal contacts by priesthood before the series.

Personal contacts by members under pastoral supervision.

Personal contacts by development of the prospect list.

Personal contacts by the missionary.

Personal contacts in cottage meetings.

Personal contacts by family visiting.

Personal contacts in gaining a decision.

Personal contacts in follow-up work.

Personal contacts with the new member.

gird all efforts in Christian education. I quote: "Keep my commandments, and assist to bring forth my work according to my commandments, and you shall be blessed."—Doctrine and Covenants 10:4. This is a philosophy of righteous action. This is the course with divine approval. This is the guarantee of real accomplishment. Little or nothing can be accomplished without the acceptance of this ideal to the point of action in our individual and group living.

He who would be truly educated for worth-while living and accomplishment must needs believe in, have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and apply daily His plan of repentance.

Personal Contacts by Priesthood Before the Series

A deep love for people must pervade the life of every man of the ministry if missionary work is to be done effectively. If such a love is not present, then methods are inconsequential. However, we need to methodize this love.

The series of meetings must be in the local calendar of activities for the year. Co-ordination of missionary activities with the local program is essential to a balanced ministry.

First in order is the pastor. All local activities must be co-ordinated and directed by him. This includes pre-series work. He should welcome an outline of suggestions from the missionary as to prayer meeting themes, methods in visiting, distributing tracts, advertising, and other important items prior to the series. This procedure unifies the branch in the missionary series effort.

The pastor should organize priesthood visiting teams. This work is essential in contacting interested friends of the church. Conduct a missionary workers' conference in the branch with instruction as to methods and manners in personal contacts. Literature should be supplied by the branch for the visiting teams. It is well to limit the first call to a few minutes. Reports should be made to the pastor on the families visited, and comments regarding the response to each visit. These reports should be kept on file for future reference by the pastor and missionary. If possible, the missionary should arrive several days before the series begins. He could meet with the pastor and visiting teams as a "special assistant" to give helpful suggestions. He could go with the pastor and some of the visiting teams on these calls. This type of personal contact work establishes the church as a friendly and interested group. The effectiveness of this work is measured far above the mere announcement of the meetings in the papers. Never seek for conversion in this preliminary work. Seek to inform and invite. Leave the work of conversion to the series and post-series ministry. Be humble and prayerful in all the work of the church. Let Him guide in every activity.

Personal Contact Work by Members Under Pastoral Supervision

must be supervised by the pastor under the counsel of the missionary. The missionary program should not overlook the member's responsibility and privilege in evangelization. The work of the church must be accomplished through combined effort. The members often feel left out due to our emphasis on ministry through priesthood. Our work is entrusted to all.

The member should bear in mind that he is a constant advertiser of the church. Basic to all missionary work is qualitative living in Christ. The church is Christ-centered and Zion-centered, and must be conduct-centered. Jesus' personal righteousness gave force to his personal testimony. Other considerations which should be made after this process has been set in motion, are as follows:

1. Classes and discussion groups in the church school or special periods under supervision of pastor or assistant.
2. Branch missionary library supervised by a competent layman. Records kept of books, tracts, Herald, etc., sent to prospects. This information to be used by the pastor and missionary in their contact work.
3. Member visiting-teams organized to distribute literature. These teams should meet with the priesthood visiting-teams for instruction in methods and manners in personal contacts.
4. Member visiting-teams should canvass the neighborhood to invite and encourage nonmembers to attend our church school activities. Classes should be provided for these visitors. Quarterlyies should be issued the prospect.
5. Members should be encouraged to participate in community affairs. We are members of the community as well as the church.
6. Membership participation in choir, drama, and social activities is important in the work of evangelization. An active membership arouses activity in the prospect. Encourage the prospect to participate in these activities. Many work themselves into the church in this manner.

Development of the Prospect List

The pastor should keep a file of all prospect lists. This should be used in determining an intelligent, planned approach to the prospect. The missionary should have free access to the lists at all times.

Methods used in developing a prospect list:

1. Check membership records and list "divided families."
2. Hostess to get names and addresses of visitors.
3. Nonmember relatives of Saints.
4. Children of baptismal age.
5. Contacts made at social activities, funerals, school, etc.
6. Names of engaged couples which may result in divided homes.
7. Parents of nonmember children who attend church school.

These people should be visited and general information secured. It is well to keep a case history on each prospect. This is to be kept in the hands of the pastor and missionary as confidential material. Such information is needed to determine the approach and obvious quality of a prospect.

Here are some ideas on general information to be secured:

1. Moral and spiritual condition of prospect.
2. General disposition.
3. Occupation.
4. Education.
5. Family conditions.
6. Attitude toward the church.
7. Hobbies.

During the series a record of nonmember attendance should be kept. Any new friend should be contacted and listed with the prospects. General information for the prospect list includes the following:

1. Sermon theme the evening prospect was present. This provides a discussion lead in visiting.
2. Name and address.
3. Church affiliation.
4. Married or single.
5. Apparent attitude during the service.

Contacts by the Missionary

The missionary secures his contacts in three ways:

1. The prospect list.
2. The preaching service.
3. The house to house calls.

The missionary should depend upon the prospect list in an organized branch or group. As has already been noted, the list is developed through personal contacts by the branch workers. When the missionary arrives, he should be issued a list of the prospects. From this list, appointments may be made for personal contact work. The members of the branch must understand that the first responsibility of the missionary is to the prospects. All activities should be adjusted to their needs. If sufficient work has been done to establish friendly relationships with the prospects, make appointments for the missionary to meet with them in their homes. This type of work often results in effective cottage meeting contacts.

The missionary must come to know the prospect by name. He must be able to recognize any new person in the congregation. A spirit of friendliness must be manifest in his conduct with the people of the church and the prospect. He should be on hand to greet the prospect and thank him for his attendance at the service. This is an excellent time for the reception committee to get the name and address of the prospect. People are seldom offended by asking for this information. The missionary must be a friend as well as a preacher. Make the prospect feel at home.

The sermons should be Christ-centered and Zion-centered. Preach in a positive, constructive manner. Build the principle qualities of the church in the mind of the prospect. If he has any sense of comparative values, he will see qualitative differences in our religious interpretations. Our preaching mission is to seek and to save. Though the missionary must use the personal pronoun in relating his experiences, he should leave Christ in the mind of the hearer. The minister is merely the instrument intrusted with the responsibility of sharing the Restoration Message. The prospect must see him in whose name we preach. We are converting the prospect to the way, the truth, and the life of Christ, and the gospel of the kingdom which he preached.

The house to house calls are self-explanatory. Here are suggestions for this type of work:

1. Distribute tracts and other pertinent literature.
2. Make a card outline of sermon topics, name and picture of speaker, location of branch, name and address of the general church headquarters, time schedule, statement of epitome of faith, etc.
3. Give personal invitation to services.
4. Secure name and address during introduction.

Personal Contact Work Through Cottage Meetings

The cottage meeting is an excellent approach in personal contact work. It affords a direct ministry in the home. One type of cottage service is the general meeting in the home. This has the atmosphere of a miniature church service. The other is the missionary's contact with the divided family, or nonmember family, in the home. We shall give our attention to the latter type of service.

1. Personal contacts are most effective.
2. Discussions held in the informal atmosphere of the prospect's home are usually successful.
3. Minister to the primary social unit; this strengthens the individual and the home.
4. Sermons may be projected on a screen. The use of charts and placards is also helpful; this relieves the tension of the regular preaching service, and is good for both new prospects and new missionaries.
5. Use noncontroversial material as an approach.
6. Invite discussion to topic after lecture.
7. Encourage prospect to invite friends to their homes. This provides another prospect for cottage meetings.
8. Encourage prospect to hear complete series.
9. Make appointment for another meeting before leaving.
10. One or two appointments per week is sufficient. Give the prospect time to think through your presentations.
11. Leave tract or mimeographed outline of topic discussed with prospect. Request the prospect to study material; this should stimulate further discussion.
12. If prospect is interested, invite him and his family to church services. They must contact the larger unit.
13. This method is conducive to an intelligent acceptance of or rejection of the church. It contributes to an informed candidate for baptism. We are after conversions. Baptism becomes a means and not an end in the process of conversion.
14. The cottage contact opens the way for further family visiting and ministry after membership. It opens the door to continued pastoral ministry in the home.

Personal Contacts Through Family Visiting

This is a neglected field in the work of evangelism. We are living in an impersonal age. Our intent in this part of the thesis is family visiting in view of gaining a prospect.

Suggestions:

1. Social visiting between members.
2. Social contacts through family night at the church.
3. Evening of visiting and fun in the home with prospect.

Visiting helps:

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

2. There is a doctrine abroad to-day which grows out of the idea of development. This doctrine or idea is applied to the historical process and states that the animal and tiger in us is responsible for the ill will in the world, that "sin is a relic of man's rise, and not a result of his fall." Accordingly, all we need is a little more time, and some further enlightenment, and we will outgrow the animal within us. Now, no doubt, there is an important element of truth in the doctrine of development. Mankind has had a checkered career, and we can see where improvement has been made over the years and where the social conscience of mankind is being slowly and painfully developed. But to say that the millenium will come inevitably regardless of what we may do or may not do is to deny the very thing that sin is. Sin is rebellion against God, which subverts the order of creation, and places our entire being out of harmony with the law which is designed to preserve us. And—there is as much sin today in New York as there was in New Amsterdam three or four generations or so ago. There is as much sin in modern London as there was in ancient Britain. It may be of a little different kind, but it shows no signs of being outgrown. The history of war will suffice to prove that the veneer of civilization is indeed thin, and bestiality comparable with that of Atilla's Huns still is ready to stalk abroad at the least provocation. And what, brethren, shall we say of the twisted, distorted minds which our present culture rears? Shall the powers and forces of nature forever produce that which is their crowning glory to be used for cannon fodder?

3. Again, the doctrine of determinism is also rife. According to this idea, whatever has occurred in general or in particular has, in the last analysis, been inevitable. It could have been no other way. But if you were to insist that today I am what I am because I could have been no other, and I believe it, you destroy the springs of moral effort within me. Calvin might have caused many to believe that human actions were absolutely determined by God. But we have grown wiser since that time. Or have we? "Scientific" determinism (and this phrase is open to question) which affirms that what I am is inevitable, fixed and determined, and could have been in no other case, makes my sense of responsibility and personal guilt an illusion. And my sense of responsibility and the conviction of personal guilt is the only basis upon which moral progress can be made. Science may observe that the energy in the human organism is liberated a certain way. It may study the results of such action thus entailed. But it is not within the province of science to say that such energy could not have been liberated in any other course of action as if the incidence of human lives, the one upon the other, were the result of mechanical laws such as are put in motion when two billiard balls strike each other. We must insist on human freedom and upon agency, within certain limits of course, as a principle of our own experience, known from within.

All these theories remind one of the language of the Scriptures which refer to the function of the evil one to "deceive," and "to blind and to lead captive." Any of them, or all of them, if believed, will destroy the springs of moral effort, and so, effectively destroy agency. Against them we must insistently proclaim and steadfastly work.

THE GENESIS STORY AND EVOLUTION

The Christian doctrine of sin faces

a difficulty when it is confronted by the doctrine of evolution or the theory or principle of evolution. A word must be said in this connection. The gospel has not been content to assert that men are individually and generally sinners. It has attributed to mankind an organic unity based upon descent from a common origin. "As in Adam all died." As "Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec while in the loins of Abraham," so we, in the loins of Adam, "fell short of the glory of God." What was done then, disordered the whole race; and the drift of human life has been selfish from that day forward. As a modern Catholic writer truly affirms, "The whole dogmatic system of the Church revolves upon the two poles of sin and redemption, the old humanity and the new, Adam and Christ." There, brethren, you have it.

Popularly stated the contradiction between Genesis and Evolution took about this form. The Bible teaches that man "began at the top and fell into a brutish and sensual condition from which he can only be redeemed by act of God; while evolution presents him as beginning from a single cell and working upwards through his own efforts. Here it is in poetry:

A fire-mist and a planet,
A crystal and a cell,
A jelly-fish and a saurian,
And caves where the cave-men dwell;
Then a sense of law and beauty
And a face turned from the clod—
Some call it Evolution
And others call it God.

And Emerson:

The Book of Nature is the Book of Fate. She turns the gigantic pages, leaf after leaf, never returning one. One leaf she lays down, a floor of granite; a thousand ages, and a bed of slate; a thousand ages, and a measure of coal; a thousand ages and a layer of marl and mud; vegetable forms appear; her first misshapen animals, zoophyte, trilobium, fish; then saurians—rude forms in which she had only blocked her future statue concealing under these unwieldy monsters the fine type of her coming king. The face of the planet cools and dries, the races meliora te, and man is born. But, when a race has lived its term, it comes no more again.

We learn what patient periods must round themselves before the rock is broken, and the first lichen race has disintegrated the thinnest external plate into soil, and opened the door for the remote Flora, Fauna, Ceres and Pomona to come in. How far off yet is the trilobite, how far the quadruped, how inconceivably remote is man! All duly arrive, and then race after race of men. It is a long way from granite to the oyster; further yet to Plato and the preaching of the immortality of the soul!

—Essays on
"Fate," "Nature," "Culture."

John Milton was responsible for putting about the idea that man was created in the full-blown glory of intellect and virtue, and Michelangelo objectified this in his paintings. But Genesis does not even hint at it. It suggests the complete ignorance and innocence of childhood. Clement says that man was not created perfect, but "only in a condition to attain or to receive perfection." So, in effect, all the early church fathers, and so, also, the Doctrine and Covenants. "Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning." The Bible teaches that man was created free and empowered to co-operate with God in further perfecting his nature. Man's advance might have been inconceivably more intelligent and less costly and more glorious had he obeyed his Maker. But, constantly, since his days in the Garden of Eden, he has rebelled, and has perverted his nature. Man was made for constant dependence upon God. His growth and development, his immortality and eternal life, depend absolutely upon his maintaining relations with his Creator. But his rebellion has placed him in bondage, and he cannot redeem himself out of his prison. He can only be rescued upon conditions of repentance; and, while man is surrounded with every inducement to turn to God, God can have no ultimate guarantee that man will finally respond. (The atonement was treated in the preceding issue.) The agony and poignancy of that doctrine rests upon this fact; that man, in the last analysis, has been created in such a manner as to be enabled to "follow after his own will"—if he so desires.

This statement in no sense conflicts with science. And the story in Genesis, whether it is fact or fiction, whether it is allegory or not, certainly objectifies the truth in simple language which every child can understand. Let the critics of the Genesis story try to invent a fable that will testify of sin in more moving and clearer terms. Genesis is confirmed every time a drunkard rolls in the gutter. Sin is always a fall, and while we may learn from our mistakes, it is foolish to suppose that the fruit of the tree of knowledge can only be obtained by going against the law of our being.

ORIGINAL SIN

I have been at pains to discuss the nature of man and of sin. Let me remind you that this is essential in order to bring out the absolute necessity of a new birth. The change required of man, if man is to inherit the Kingdom of God, is so deeply fundamental that Jesus could find no other analogy than "Except a man be born again, he cannot [even] see, the Kingdom of God." What makes this rebirth so necessary? The answer is, that our natural birth, the first birth, condemns us; and prevents us from seeing our need, or from finding our way to God. Original sin, with its sentence of death, physical and spiritual, has been passed on all of us. What is original sin? What has happened to us to make the new birth so utterly necessary? William Temple has cogently phrased the doctrine thus:

When we open our eyes as babies we see the world stretching out around us;

we are in the middle of it; all proportions and perspectives in what we see are determined by the relation—distance, height, and so forth—of the various visible objects to ourselves. This will remain true of our bodily vision as long as we live. I am the center of the world I see; where the horizon is depends on where I stand. Now just the same thing is true at first of our mental and spiritual visions. Some things hurt us; we hope they will not happen again; we call them bad. Some things please us; we hope they will happen again; we call them good. Our standard of value is the way things affect ourselves. So each of us takes his place in the center of his own world. But I am not the center of the world, or the standard of reference as between good and bad; I am not, and God is. In other words, from the beginning I put myself in God's place. This is my original sin. I was doing it before I could speak, and everyone else has been doing it from early infancy. I am not "guilty" on this account because I could not help it. But I am in a state, from birth, in which I shall bring disaster on myself and everyone affected by my conduct unless I can escape from it. Education may make my self-centeredness less disastrous by widening my horizon of interest; so far it is like the climbing of a tower, which widens the horizon for physical vision while leaving me still the center and standard of reference. Education may do more than this if it succeeds in winning me into devotion to truth or to beauty; that devotion may effect a partial deliverance from self-centeredness. But complete deliverance can be effected only by the winning of my whole heart's devotion, the total allegiance of my will—and this only the Divine Love disclosed by Christ in his life and death can do.

The fundamental task of our ministry, then, is to so preach repentance that a conviction of sin will come to our hearers, that thereupon may be set in motion forces and powers which will sweep guilt away and refresh and renew the inward vision, and grace the souls of men with the love of God. And I submit to you, brethren, that this is a task which we dare not enter upon without deep humility, and without being conscious of Divine aid.

Nothing in the world so strengthens democracy as public recognition of the standards of Christian morality.

1. Let conversation be free and normal.
2. Be alert to notice likes and dislikes.
3. Learn prospect's hobbies.
4. Always maintain friendly attitude.
5. Be frank about all discussions. Be patient and pleasant.
6. Be sure to speak positively about the church; the prospect comes to know the church through you.
7. Feel free to invite him to church.

Personal Contacts in Gaining a Decision

An appeal for membership must not be made until the prospect is properly informed on all principle phases of the church. An understanding of the message must be followed by an urgent appeal for membership. This is often done in the pulpit and has its rightful place in preaching.

The prospect must not feel that we are begging for members. He must feel and understand that discipleship demands discipline of the strictest nature. This is our baptismal requirement. When a decision has been made, bind it with a season of prayer. Make God a real partner in this newly-won fellowship.

Decisions are more often made by personal contacts than appeals from the pulpit. The prospect's baptism should grow out of his personal decision. The decision must be his. Therefore, meeting with the individual is important. The minister will learn the nature of delaying doubts and hesitations. He will experience greater freedom in discussion of faults to be overcome by the prospect, and offer assistance in that direction. This personal contact evidences greater personal interest. Invitation to church membership becomes more personal.

Personal Contacts Through Follow-Up Work

This is an important aspect of missionary work. The follow-up is often neglected to the loss of the prospect for membership. This work is closely related to gaining a decision in further personal contact, either by private conversation or the cottage meeting.

Often the missionary must move on to new appointments and the follow-up is left to the local ministry. Therefore, it is necessary for the missionary to coach the pastor and local ministry in methods of follow-up work. The missionary must urge the local priesthood to do cottage meeting work with those who were not baptized and those who need more information and encouragement. All this ministry must be consistent with the feelings of the prospects involved. Never lose a prospect through negligence. Let this occur when all prayerful effort has failed, and when the prospect decides.

Personal Contacts With the New Members

This is a field for competent local leadership. The new member has many adjustments to make. He needs the spiritual support of the men of the local ministry. The new member should be visited at least once a month. Only competent men should be assigned by the pastor to visit the homes of new members. Their faith must be kept growing. The responsibility of ministry begins after baptism. If the lives of men are to be brought into the kingdom of God, then the love of God, effecting complete conversion, must be given every new convert through the men of the ministry.

News Briefs

TORRINGTON, WYOMING.—There was $47 cleared at the spring bazaar sponsored by the women's department. A group of the Torrington Saints motored to Wheatland on April 28 to hear Elder Willard Hield speak. Elder Alvin Knisley was a welcome visitor on June 9; a baptismal service was held in the afternoon, followed by a confirmation service, at which Brother Knisley officiated, with Elders M. M. Bilyue and J. R. Croft assisting.

SALINAS, CALIFORNIA.—Eleven new members were baptized on Children's Day; the baptismal service was held in the Baptist church, but the confirmations were given at the regular meeting place. Pastor LeRoy Harris and Kenneth Richmond were in charge. A pie social, sponsored by the women's department, was held at the Kettner home to raise money for the building fund.

INDIAN CREEK, WEST VIRGINIA.—An institute for the young people of West Virginia was held on Sunday, June 23. Chartered busses were used for transportation, and a record crowd attended. Talks were given at the morning service by Roy Hanes, Charles Nixon, Roy Givens, and Elmer Frieze. Louis Zonker was the 11 o'clock speaker; his sermon theme was "Share and Prepare." A picnic lunch and social hour followed. A priesthood meeting was held at one o'clock, after which the Zion's League of Wellsburg presented a play. The vesper service was in charge of Wayne Wilson, with John Treiber delivering the sermon. District President R. E. Rodgers was in charge of the institute; Anna Schoenian supervised the music. Special numbers were presented by the Wellsburg choir, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Anderson, and John Treiber.

GRAND ISLAND, NEBRASKA.—Eugene Goodrich, who served with the armed forces during the war, is now pastor of the Grand Island congregation. Much credit is due those members who assumed the responsibility of "carrying on" during the difficult war years; Mrs. F. W. Black, church school superintendent, has given especially fine service. A memorial service was held on the Sunday following President Frederick M. Smith's death. District President Ernest Keller of Eustis, Nebraska, conducted a baptismal-confirmation service on June 23. The Bible study class has been holding regular monthly meetings on Wednesday evening. The La Da Sa society meets every other Tuesday for a devotional, followed by a social hour.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—Stone Church.—Two thousand people attended the first meeting of the annual summer campus series held Sunday evening, June 16. Preceding the service, a concert was presented by the Cantanina Chorus, under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Westwood, Jr.; Garland Tickeymyer was the speaker. The Stone Church Savings Credit Union, a co-operative savings association to operate for the benefit of church members and friends, is being organized under the sponsorship of an interested group of workers. Shares, to the amount of $520, have already been purchased. The Presiding Bishopric has urged the Saints to familiarize themselves with the principles of the co-operative movement, and has approved the by-laws which are being adopted by the credit union. A concert of sacred and secular numbers by the Clematic Chorus, under the direction of Mrs. John Lentell, was given at 8 p.m., Friday, June 21, at the Liberty Street Church.

Chicago District

MOTHER-DAUGHTER BANQUET.—The Chicago district mother-daughter banquet was held May 10 at the Piccadilly Tea Room on Michigan Avenue, overlooking Grand Park and Lake Michigan; fifty-nine women were present. Immediately following the dinner, Fern Baldwin, wife of the district president, presented corsages to the oldest and youngest mothers, with tributes being sung by the group. Esther Goetz Gilliland, director of music at Wilson College, was the guest speaker. A leader in the field of musical therapy, Miss Gilliland told of the benefits accomplished in several institutions and veteran's hospitals through this type of treatment.

FIRST CHICAGO CHURCH.—Patriarch John Worth of England was a recent speaker; he also gave several blessings during his stay in Chicago. Other speakers have been Lyman Jones, Kenneth Lusha, H. T. McCaig, and B. A. Lenox. Members of the Zion's League attended a television show at the State-Lake Building on May 17. The annual election of officers for the women's department was held May 28; Mrs. Genevieve Lusha, district leader of women, was in charge, assisted by Mrs. Fern Baldwin. Following the election, District President Joseph E. Baldwin gave the charge to officers, and Mrs. Bertha Burgess reviewed Joseph's City Beautiful.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—A large number of Tri-City young people made a trip to Nauvoo in May, attending church services there in the morning, and visiting historic sights in the afternoon. They returned home via Carthage, where they stopped to visit the jail where Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed. Other recent activities included a hobby show and chicken supper sponsored by the women's department, and a demonstration of the picture machine being purchased by the men's club. The district conference convened June 23, with Apostle Arthur Oakman and Evangelist John Grice in attendance. Meetings were held in the Scottish Rite Cathedral in Moline. Brother Grice remained in the Tri-Cities to conduct services and give blessings. It was voted that a reunion should be held at the Aledo fair grounds, August 9 to 18.

GARY, INDIANA.—A special service honoring the mothers of the congregation was held on May 12; flowers were presented to each mother; readings and music significant of the occasion were provided by Gary Conrad, Patty Essie, Marion Rhodes, and Dorothy Smith. Elder R. W. Smith, of the district presidency, was the speaker. The theme for May was "What Is God Doing?" Elder Terrell Cochran of Chicago conducted missionary services each Sunday evening during the month.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Second Congregation.—On May 9 the department of women held a mother-daughter banquet; Dorothy McVitty Emig, a well-known radio personality, sang several solos, accompanied by Helen Kiess. Seventy-eight women attended. Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Blair Jensen were present at a special business meeting held June 24; a city-wide unification plan, whereby the two congregations in the city will operate as one branch, was accepted. On June 30 the Zion's League presented a "Sunday evening hour," featuring organ music, poems, solos, and a trio. Robert Brush was in charge of the service; Norma Anne Kirkendall presided at the organ.

powder-puff type of girl. A nurse should have good health, be able to work, willing, intelligent, cheerful, friendly. There are also other qualifications which average young women who finish high school or go on to college can meet. Superwomen are not expected, but the successful nurse needs strength, sense, character, and determination. The Sanitarium will soon enroll a new class of such young women. Very possibly, you may be such a young woman, or may know one. Here is a field of service that should receive careful consideration.

BULLETIN BOARD

Notice to Musicians of Flint-Port Huron and Detroit-Windsor Districts

Instrumental music will be used to augment the choir this year at reunion. If you are a vocal or instrumental soloist, please come prepared to make your contribution to the services. Those planning to participate should contact Richard L. Gault, 18614 Floral, Farmington, Route No. 2, Michigan.

Pittsburgh District Young People's Convention

A convention for the young people of Pittsburgh district will be held July 27 and 28 at Lock No. 4, Pennsylvania. Casimir Nikle, past of the Cleveland, Ohio, church, will be the guest speaker. Beginning at 2:30 p. m., Saturday's activities will include class-work, recreation, and a banquet at 6:30. A 9:15 devotional service will be held on Sunday, followed by a prayer meeting, preaching, lunch at the cafeteria, a dedication service at 2 p. m., and a musicale at 3.

Pittsburgh District Priesthood Meeting

A district priesthood meeting will be held on July 26 at Lock No. 4, Pennsylvania. The theme for the meeting is "Priesthood Duties and Responsibilities." All members of the priesthood, and interested young men, are invited to attend.

Attention, Saints Going to Montana

Members of the Columbia Falls, Montana, congregation invite all Saints who are planning to work on the Hungry Horse Dam to worship with them at 10 o'clock on Sunday mornings in the hall above Anderson's store.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Kenneth Raymond Wheeler, age three and a half, who was dangerously injured June 7 when struck by a car, receiving fractured skull, brain concussion, broken leg, loss of sight, and partial loss of hearing. He is making some physical recovery, but doctors say they can do no more for him to restore sight and memory. Request is made by his grandmother, Mrs. Iona Dustin, Route 1, Weyerhauser, Wisconsin, who also requests prayers for the child's mother.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Edd Rodifer of Tomah, Wisconsin, that she may be healed of her affliction.

The following is an anonymous request: "Although my husband has been a member of the church since childhood, he is now indifferent to its teachings and is beginning to drink and gamble. I can see a great change in his physical condition, as well as in his disposition. I've stayed with him because, in spite of the heartaches and discouragement it has meant to me, I still love him and have faith that someday he will turn, in all humility, to Christ and his church. I'm not saying that I have been a perfect wife; whenever I have failed, I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be able to do my part. Please pray for my husband, also, that he might truly repent and turn from worldly things to Christian living."

Mr. and Mrs. Alton E. Gill of Sandpoint, Idaho, announce the birth of a son, Lloyd Alton, born June 18 at the Community Hospital in Sandpoint. The mother is the former Ethel Crabb of Vay, Idaho.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester A. Shereiv of Chicago, Illinois, announce the birth of a daughter, Ellen Eunice, born May 2. Mrs. Shereiv was formerly Priscilla Symon.

Our Departed Ones

SCHINZE.—Mrs. Verline E., daughter of William and Etta Mason was born October 30, 1911, at St. Joseph, Missouri, and passed away April 21, 1946. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when she was eight years old.

She is survived by her parents; three brothers: Richard W., Maurice L., and David W., all of St. Joseph. Evangelist Milo Burnett officiated at the funeral. Burial was in the Memorial Park Cemetery.

LEEKA.—Nellie, eldest child of Thomas A. and Nancy (Hams) Irwin, was born near Thurman, Iowa, on January 18, 1876, and passed away May 15, 1946, in Thurman. She was married on March 14, 1900, to William Madison Leeka, five children were born to this union, two of them dying in infancy. Mrs. Leeka was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on July 29, 1906.

She is survived by her husband; one daughter, Dolores Kelley, Independence, Missouri; two sons: Joy of McPaul, Iowa, and Irwin of Thurman; two sisters: Mrs. Jessie Hultz, Lodge Grass, Montana, and Mrs. Myrtle Morris, Decker, Montana; and two granddaughters. Funeral services were held in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Thurman, Elder Nels Johnson of Underwood, Iowa, officiating. Interment was in the Thurman cemetery.

BENDER.—Margaret Dobson, was born June 16, 1892, in Shell City, Missouri, and died June 13 in Los Angeles, California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 23, 1917, and remained a faithful member until her death. In 1911 she was married to Max Bender; one daughter was born to this union.

Left to mourn are her husband; her daughter, Mrs. Maxine Workman of Los Angeles; two sisters; Mrs. Lula Amon of Los Angeles, and Mrs. T. Sheppard of Missouri; and a brother, Ambrose Dobson, also of Los Angeles. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John Blackmore in the Los Angeles Central Church. Burial was in the Englewood Cemetery.

Wishes to Contact Saints

I should like to hear from any of the Saints in or near Jamestown or Carrington, North Dakota. I am a member of the church, and hope, someday, to be able to attend our meetings. EVVARD WEST.

* ADVENTURES OF THE MESLEYS

The Presidency announces, in another column, the safe arrival of Apostle C. G. Mesley and his family. In our brief and happy visit with Brother Mesley, we find him unchanged, and as wonderful a man as ever. Australia's loss: our gain. We welcome him, and thank the Australians for giving him to the church.

It was a long trip from "Down Under" to the States. As they approached Papeete, Tahiti, Brother Mesley earnestly desired a long enough stop-over to hold an ordination service for Brother Vivian Sorensen, who is in charge there, to visit, and to talk over problems. The ship's officers said no such stop was planned. Jocularly, Brother Mesley told the captain he was praying that the engine would break down. Arriving at Papeete, the engine really broke down! They held the ordination service, and stayed up all night to talk. Next day there was further delay, so the church had a picnic. After forty-eight hours, the ship weighed anchor and continued the voyage.

Approaching Balboa, Panama Canal Zone,

the Mesleys desired another stop to visit with Sister Anna May (Huff) Lavinghouse. Again, no stop was planned. More engine trouble, and a three-day stop! The captain wondered not only, who was this man who had friends everywhere, but as well, was he a Jonah? He hinted they might be forced to throw Brother Mesley overboard, but it seemed like a faint threat. Brother Mesley countered that, if they did throw him overboard, he would pray for the ship to sink. That took care of it very well, and the voyage continued, except that there were no breakdown stops for the Isle of Pines, Aruba, and other places. Well, one can't have everything!

* EVAN FRY

News of the progress of our Radio Director was received in an air letter written on July 8. He has been under treatment and examination at the Mayo Clinic, in Rochester, Minnesota, and is improved, being able to sit up at intervals each day and also for meals. He is permitted to move about and leave his room on occasion. There has been no operation and none is planned now. A course of treatment for the condition which caused the pleurisy and other painful disorders has been prescribed. It can be administered here in Independence, and so he will be permitted to return to this city. Treatment may continue from two to four months, with hope of complete recovery. For this good news we are very glad, and trust that his restoration to health may be speedy and complete.

* ACCURATE TIME

If your local radio stations do not give accurate time signals for setting your watches and clocks, you can get a reliable signal by short wave radio. The National Bureau of Standards maintains a constant broadcast throughout the day and into the evening. An announcer broadcasts the time and explains the signal on the hour, and at the half hour. The broadcast makes a sound pulse for each second, except the fifty-ninth, and the new minute begins with the sound pulse. There is also a sound tone through four minutes of every five, which is silent during the first minute of the five. The announcement says that the broadcast is made on 2.5, 5, 10, and 15 megacycles. The 10 megacycle is most audible in the Middle West. Sharp tuning is necessary to contact the short wave broadcasts.

* WHERE PEOPLE are few and must depend on each other for help, their best qualities are often developed, and human life is placed at a high value, which means that the individual receives more consideration. . . . Where great populations are concentrated, and people are crowded and jostled, getting in each other's way and on each other's nerves, their worst qualities are often developed, they dislike other people, and human life is held cheaply, which means that the individual receives scant consideration. . . . But the state is good or bad according to the way in which its society treats the individual. Here is a problem of population that civilization and Christianity will have to meet, one that will tax all our resources, as the world becomes more crowded, to find a solution.

* THE PROBLEM OF THE CHURCH is to love humanity—all men, all races, all classes. But in all this business of universal love, it must not forget to love, care for, and help, individuals. A church is tested by how it treats one person at a time.

* It is after sorrow has struck us, when we ought to be recovering, that we are in greatest danger; for then, if we are not careful, self-pity sets in.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: "All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Graceland College Enrollment

From New Zealand, Canada, Australia, England, the Hawaiian Islands, and all sections of the United States, letters are finding their way to the business office of Graceland College. And for the first time in history, the church's college is having to say "No" to many outstanding prospective students. A word of explanation to the membership of the church therefore seems to be in order.

In December, 1945, A. R. Gilbert, Acting President of Graceland College, appeared before the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and submitted a detailed statement of the faculty, housing and financial requirements involved in adequately servicing an enrollment of 300, 375, and 475 students. In view of these costs, it was the opinion of the Council that the demands coming to the church from other departments require that the college administration ought not to undertake to serve more than 500 students in the immediate future. The Council actually had little choice in this matter. If an enrollment beyond five hundred had been authorized, this would have involved expenditures which would have raised the college budget out of all proportion to the budgets of the other departments, or it would have boosted the total church budget beyond all reasonable estimates of our general church income.

We are now in the midst of the first enrollment period since the decision of the Council was reached, and the college authorities are being besieged by young people who desire to further their education at Graceland. As had been expected in view of the decision mentioned above, the college administration has had to return more than three hundred applications for admission. There have been more than eight hundred such applications in all. Everyone concerned is extremely sorry that these prospective students have to be refused admission, but we have to face the fact that our finances and available facilities will not permit us to serve more than five hundred students.

Both the general church authorities and the college administration hope that the friends of Graceland will understand the situation, and will continue the fine support which they have given for so many years.

A Personal Matter--- Masonry

By action of the General Conference, the members of the Presidency are editors of the Herald. Being an editor of the Herald in 1946, with an able Managing Editor like Brother Leonard Lea, is much less of a task than it was in the days of Joseph Smith from the 'sixties through the closing decades of the last century, because we write only when we feel like it. Our excuse (or reason) in this instance involves a question of editorial policy—not a grave one, but of sufficient importance we think to justify a paragraph or two.

It is a uniform practice of editors to ignore anonymous communications. Our predecessors have honored such a policy; but in two instances within recent days unsigned letters have come to hand, which are premised, quite obviously, on a misapprehension of fact with respect to the undersigned. I would ignore the issues involved, and do not now purpose any discussion of a controversial nature; but I am persuaded a timely statement may relieve the mental strain of the unknown writers.

The first writer states that President Frederick M. Smith was a Mason and says, "We wonder where you stand."

The second writer apparently believes and assumes that I am a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a communist, aims abusive language at me. In this he is mistaken, as I am not a member of any society or order except the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and I trust and pray I shall be able always to be a member of that society, and in good standing to the end of my days.

Now, since I am not a member of the Masonic order, nor a communist, it should be obvious that the worry, criticism, effort, and concern on my behalf by these and other such writers are wholly fruitless and wasted effort. And now that one writer in particular knows the facts, as he undoubtedly reads the Herald (I have the assurance of this), he need no longer direct his anti-Masonry, anti-Communistic barbs at, about, around, or through your innocent and humble servant.

Little Lessons From Life

THERE IS so much good in others to love and admire, that if we think of it, we can forget or forgive their faults—the imaginary ones as well as the real ones.

ANDREW JACKSON'S mother wrote to him in her later years that no man could succeed in life without friends, and that to keep them he would have to help them, if he expected to receive help from them. People cannot be your friends if they know that at any moment you are likely to turn upon them and attack them. Only a friendship that endures in times of adversity and mistakes, when things go wrong, is worth anything.

From the Presidency's Office

SUNDAY, July 7, was marked by two large communion services at the Stone Church. At 8:15 a.m. there were in attendance almost six hundred and at 11 o'clock a few had to overflow to the lower auditorium, a total attendance at both meetings of probably about fourteen hundred. The Presiding Bishopric were in charge of the early meeting; the Presidency presided over the second.

AFTER sixty-six days enroute, Apostle C. G. Mesley and Sister Blanche, his wife, and son Gordon have arrived safely at the center place. They were met by numerous Kansas City and Independence relatives and friends. They traveled to New York by Liberty ship which stopped at Papeete where they ministered to the Saints for some days while repairs were made. Brother Mesley while there ordained Elder V. C. Sorenson to the office of seventy, as provided by General Conference.

The official circle welcomes Brother Mesley and family, and we look forward with much interest to his work in the Stakes.

THE FOLLOWING note appeared in the Church Department of the Educational Screen, edited by William S. Hockman:

Visual Aids Teaching Helps (Guidelines to Leadership Series) by the Department of Religious Education, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Auditorium, Independence, Mo. This well-written and illustrated booklet of 64 pages has value and significance beyond the communion for which it was written. Its articles cover every media and method of visual teaching, and each is written by a practitioner, not a theorist, in religious education. If interested, write direct.

We are sure that the Saints will be interested in this recognition of the good work being done by the Department of Religious Education.

Memorial Services at Nauvoo

We are indebted to Elder James E. Bishop for an account of the Memorial services on June 27 at Nauvoo, published in the Nauvoo Independent of July 4. From his article we give our readers the following excerpts:

Memorial services honoring the anniversary of the deaths of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and also Emma Hale Smith, were held at two o'clock Thursday afternoon in the L. D. S. pavilion and at the graves on the Homestead grounds. Elder A. A. Oakman was apostle in charge. The address was by Elder G. E. Tickemyer, pastor of Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

In his eulogy Elder Tickemyer stated that he had made the memorial pilgrimage to Nauvoo for each of the past five years to pay tribute to the lives of Joseph Smith, his wife Emma, and his brother Hyrum. As he viewed the ruins of a once great city, he would be possessed of the spirit of melancholy. A city once so full of life, vitality and promise now lay dead. Yet, he felt a sense of nearness to the founders of the church and the labors they performed in Nauvoo, which was one of the cradles of the church. . . . What a glorious city this might have been had the leaders not been murdered.

The problem brought before us is, what contribution did these martyrs make? Joseph Smith lives spiritually in the lives of each of us, "his life runs across my life every day." Emma, his wife, was called the "Elect Lady." She was the wife of Joseph's youth and the only one he ever had. The speaker referred to the scurrilous attack made on the character of Emma Smith by Vardis Fisher, wherein he said Emma swore like a Billingsgate fisherwoman. That infamous remark was resented vigorously by her descendants because Emma was a righteous, God-fearing woman.

Some years ago the speaker said that he visited four or five old folks, natives of Nauvoo, who had known Emma Smith in their early days. He received their testimonies as to her character, which in effect was that she was a lady in every sense of the word. She attended to her business and reared her children in the fear and admonition of the Lord. She always maintained her poise in disastrous moments. She loved children, frequently gave them cookies and otherwise helped them. She was a devoted Latter Day Saint, and her life contributed in a marked degree to the founding of the Reorganization. . . .

Joseph stood six feet tall, fair-headed with blue eyes. He was a handsome man of unusual physical strength. He dominated his surroundings whether in pulpit, court room, or jail. . . .

He was a phenomenon and very difficult to explain. He pioneered in religion. He successfully brought to light the original pattern laid down by Jesus. He was a fountain of new truth; not a cistern of old dogma. He was a great leader. He could inspire men with enthusiasm and never let them cool. Such men went forth and did wonders. General Alexander Doniphan said that Lyman Wight was the bravest man he had ever met, Sidney Rigdon the most eloquent man he had ever heard, and only Joseph Smith could demand the respect and loyalty of such great characters.

The speaker referred to the oft-repeated statement that Brigham Young was the real leader, and that Smith was weak and vacillating. This is a fundamental untruth. Joseph

D. T. Williams to Hawaii

Elder D. T. Williams of the Quorum of Twelve will sail for Hawaii about July 18, and expects to be in the Islands for about six weeks. He will meet many of our local church leaders and will make a careful study of Hawaiian problems and opportunities as a basis for his report to the fall Joint Council. Brother Williams expects to be in attendance at the Mission Conference, August 1, 2, and 3.

After the fall council, Brother Williams will rejoin Apostle Charles R. Hield in the Northwest Mission, to which they were both assigned at the last General Conference. In the meantime all correspondence requiring early attention should be addressed to Brother Hield.

Graceland Homecoming and College Day

After consultation with the college authorities and the general church officers concerned, we take pleasure in announcing that College Day for this year will be Sunday, October 20, and the Home Coming activities will be October 25 to 27.

Advance notice is given so that district, branch, and mission authorities can reserve October 20 for the usual local observance of College Day.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

THE FOLLOWING item has appeared in recent newspapers:

NOTED AUTHOR
EXCOMMUNICATED

SALT LAKE CITY, June 18.—AP—Fawn M. Brodie, author of the book, No Man Knows My Name, has been excommunicated by the Latter-day Saints (Mormon) church.

Notice of the church's action was published in the Deseret News, church owned daily newspaper. No reason was given. The notice merely said she was excommunicated June 1 in the New England mission.

What Is Your Religion Worth?

By Apostle D. T. Williams

IT SOMETIMES happens that serious thinking comes out of humorous situations. One evening, at the hospitable home of a friend, this little story—meaningless in itself, perhaps, but nevertheless thought-provoking—was related by the host. A father and mother had spent their usual Sunday morning hour at church, and were on their way home. Nothing had proved satisfactory about the morning devotion. The father was criticising the preacher and his sermon; the mother was criticising the chorister and the choir. Perhaps neither of them gave sufficient consideration to the little lad who walked between them. But the boy, was noticing things. He remembered the amount his father had put on the collection plate, and, speaking up in what might seem to be out of turn for a youngster, he said to his father, "But, Dad, it wasn't a bad show when you consider we only had to pay a nickel."

This simple story poses the question, "What is your religion worth?" What one's religion is worth may depend upon what value he places upon things that might seem immaterial. However, religion is much more than an immaterial matter: While it deals with things of the spirit, it deals as well with matters of our everyday life. And this religion, which touches both spheres of our activity, is the most valuable thing in human experience.

Three important questions are related to our subject: first, "How much has our religion cost?" second, "How much is our religion worth?" and third, "How much are we willing to contribute to its success?"

HOW MUCH HAS OUR RELIGION COST?

Our religion is the costliest thing in the world. We might consider, by way of contrast, the material inventions that have made our present civilization a possibility. We utilize all of these modern conveniences without asking ourselves, "How much have they cost in worry and sweat, in sleepless nights, and back-breaking toil?" We press the switch, and the room is flooded with light. It is seldom that we ask ourselves, "How much has this cost?" We put our foot upon the car starter and are ready to travel like the god Mercury. But how often do we ask ourselves, "How much worry and inconvenience and actual persecution have these, with a thousand other modern conveniences, cost?"

They have cost much indeed. Men, who have seen a vision that the common hordes of mankind have not beheld have always been persecuted. But when we have summed up the cost of our modern civilization, with all of its triumphs of engineering skills and inventive genius, and contrast that cost with the price of our religion, it is infinitesimal indeed. Our religion has cost the best thought of the ages. To it have been devoted the souls of millions of men and women who have borne the inconveniences, the toils, the strifes, and the persecutions of life without a murmur.

No one who reads the history of the past can be unconscious or unresponsive to this great and magnificent price. The plains of Europe have been deluged in blood. The Thirty Year War, with all of its enmities, malices, and hatreds, was but one incident in the unnumbered experiences through which Christianity has passed to make its institutions living realities in the life of the world. The massacre of St. Bartholomew's Eve, wherein a hundred fifty thousand Protestants were laid within the chill embrace of death, was another manifestation of the willingness of people to pay, whatever the cost.

In these days, when religion has claimed a high place in the councils of the nations, and reserves for itself a still higher place in the future "Parliament of Man," the wars and strifes, the malices and hatreds of the past seem but a shadowy phantom of a previous ghastly experience.

As we sit today in the quietude of our Christian assemblies, we have no fear of any disrupting element entering into our services and dragging us forth from the altars of worship. But such has not always been the case. The catacombs of Rome tell us of a day when things were much different. Those narrow caverns from which Augustus Caesar tore the living marble to turn Rome from a collection of mud huts into a city of marble palaces, could tell us a story of the deepest tragedy. If the cries that reverberated through those chill chambers in the centuries past could again be recaptured, they would record the sad lamentations of those survivors who had seen their relatives cast to the wild beasts or made to fight in the open arena with the yet wilder gladiators, for the amusement of the Roman populace.

All of this and much more tell us the story of the cost of our religion. How much has it cost? Who can answer? Who can comprehend the physical sufferings, the mental agonies, and the spiritual pangs of the departed generations, and, summing them up, tell us how much our religion has cost? No mathematician, no matter how ingenious, would be capable of giving us the answer to this question. But this we know, that our religion, as we have previously related, has cost more than anything else in the world.

HOW MUCH IS OUR RELIGION WORTH?

What a thing has cost may indicating something of its value, but again it may not. Its value can be determined only by the service it gives. Often we go to the bargain counter to see things that are marked at ninety-eight cents, and we make a purchase, only to discover after the first wash that our bargains have faded out. At other times we make a purchase with which we are wholly satisfied because it has rendered us as good, if not better, service than we had anticipated. So religion, too, might be evaluated upon the basis of the service it has rendered to human kind.

Let us take note of the situation of the race with regard to liberty and freedom, and compare it with the situation which existed prior to the coming of Christ. Today the commonality of mankind has privileges which were never experienced by men in previous ages. Today, liberty and freedom are the usual heritages of boys and girls born within the pales of our democratic civilization. It was not so with the children of the past. They were born under a despotic government, whose king was the supreme lord of life, limb, and property. Such a sovereign held in the hollow of his hand, all the possessions of his realm, which included the soul as well as the lives of his subjects.

What revolutionist in all of the catalog of human heroes could eventually transform such despotisms into democracies? If you are searching for the greatest revolutionist of all time, do not seek for him among the leaders of nations and empires. You will find him represented in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.

Christ did not fight with sword or staff, but his lips gave form to a divine philosophy that is eventually to transform the world. He uttered one word which was so full of power that it turned the world upside down. It is no wonder that when the followers of Christ appeared in some of the Grecian cities to preach the philosophy of the Master that the cry should be raised, with the excited hysteria of the Greek religionists and slave holders, "These that turn the world upside down have come hither also." Such was the business of these ancient Christians and such, too, is our task today—to turn the world from greed and avarice to unselfishness and altruism.

But what is this mystic word, so full of power that it changes the geographical lines of the nations, and displaces the victories of the despots by the triumphs of the democracies? It is none other than the paternal appellation, Father.

To appreciate the value of this suggestion, we must remember that in the Greek city states—though they professed to be the harbingers of liberty to an enslaved world—there were twelve slaves to every free man. And the Roman republic, to which we often refer as one of the ancient free states, had twenty serfs for every man who possessed his liberty. You can well imagine the feelings of this vast body of slaves, bowed to the earth with the bondage of centuries, when the philosophy of Christ reached them. The Christian missionary came to teach them, as well as their masters, that God is the father of all mankind.

When the disciples of Christ came to teach this vast body of serfs that God is the father of all men, no matter what may be their geographical location or their political situation, it was but natural that the slaves should begin to lift their stooped and wearied shoulders. The day came when, having arisen from their place of humility, and taking their eyes from the earth, they looked into the face of their masters to proclaim that God is the father of every man, whether he be ruler or slave. We, too, then proclaimed the slaves "are equal with our owners." From that moment on, the mighty Roman empire began to crack. In previous years the slave had thought his master was made of finer fiber than himself; that in his master's veins flowed a better blood than in his own. But now, with the proclamation of Christian philosophy, it was determined, at least in the minds of many, that all men were equal. From that hour on, slaves began to rise against their masters, and serfs against their governments; in the coming centuries, the fruitage of their almost hopeless toil resulted in the collapse of the ancient despotisms that had held, in the grasp of their iron hands, the souls of their unnumbered subjects.

Thrones were crumbled in the dust, diadems were snatched from the brows of tyrants; democracies were born, and liberty began its sway of freedom over the human race. Today we enjoy the freedom we possess as a result of the toils and sacrifices of the past. Millions have died upon the field of carnage that we might possess the priceless principles that have made possible our present privileges as free men. "Myriads of martyrs have signed away their souls in the flames," that we might have the religious liberty which we now enjoy.

And how did all of this momentous change take place? As we have already suggested, Christ himself was the inspiration for this vast movement, which so changed the world. He who never raised a sword or cast a javelin, he who never aimed a gun or wielded a bayonet became the greatest of all warriors for human rights.

This philosophy enunciated by Christ which has proved so transformational, has been perpetuated by the church. Thus have the institutions of religion become the harbingers of peace and liberty. In light of these facts, who can judge the value of religion to the human race?

Of this one thing we may be quite certain: regardless of what it may have cost, religion has proved to be the most influential factor in human living.

The first and second world wars cost the lives of millions of men, women, and children, and hundreds of billions of dollars in treasure. We may not be so sure in the future years that it was worth the price. In fact, most of the nations that engaged in these terrific conflicts, while analyzing the results, are telling us that no matter who won, we all lost. A like analysis however does not present such a conclusion with regard to the cost of our religion. We are assured that if the price had been a hundredfold more, still we would have made the sacrifices necessary and felt that the results were very much worth it all.

HOW MUCH ARE YOU WILLING TO PAY?

In light of the foregoing, it seems but logical that we should ask ourselves, "How much are we willing to pay?" It is often true that for the things which are worth most, we pay least. We are not asking this question in the terminology of the collection plate. In fact, we would not limit such a momentous matter to the nickels, dimes, or dollars of the Sunday morning offering. Let us consider it, rather, from the viewpoint of bigger things. Paul, upon one occasion, was confronted with this same problem. His answer as to what and how much we should contribute was made in the terminology of life itself—"Your body upon the altar a living sacrifice . . . which is your reasonable service." Such was the requirements according to this great apostle to the Gentiles. Paul well knew that if one's own heart and soul were devoted chiefly and inclusively to the service of the Almighty, there would be no question as to one's monetary contribution.

And so we are asking ourselves, in the light of the sublime sacrifices of Christ, and in respect to his universal contribution to the human family, "What are we willing to contribute?" How much are we willing to suffer? How many inconveniences are we willing to endure? How much thought are we willing to give to the necessities of the kingdom of God? How much are we willing to pay for the many things which Christ has suffered for us? In light of the millions who have lived and died that our religion might be a living reality, it seems we should set aside the lethargies of the dying soul and live with Christ in the possibilities of the present.

AN APPEAL

I cannot ask myself, "How much has my religion cost?" "How much is my religion worth?" and "How much am I willing to pay?" unless I think of these interrogations in light of the sacrifices that have been made for the creation and maintenance of our own particular denomination. I must think of the early days at Kirtland, in which so much suffering was experienced in building the first temple for the advancement of our faith. I must think of Haun's Mill with almost a score of dead, who had been slaughtered by the fanatical zeal of a mob of irreligionists. I must contemplate the sacrifice of the young prophet who initiated the Restoration, and who was instrumental in the organization of the church. After having been driven, beaten, and buffeted, he discovered the avenue of exile as the only way of escape from the unremitting enmity of his enemies. Prior to his being delivered into the hands of the so-called law, he returned to Nauvoo to say to his wife, "Emma, I am led as a lamb to the slaughter, and it will yet be said of me, that I was murdered in cold blood."

I cannot think of what my religion has cost, what it is worth, and what I am willing to pay, unless, in a vision of the past, I see these two young men, Joseph and Hyrum, taking their way over the hills and across the plains to meet the fateful issues of assassination—to fall dead, pierced with the bullets of malice and murder, having shed their blood as an emblem of their willingness to make the supreme sacrifice for the sake of the religion they had been instrumental, under God, in founding, and which they hoped would live forever after they were dead.

Surely, in view of the hosts who have thus lived and died that we might have what we have today, no price is too great to pay in behalf of the religion we have inherited from the divine message and sufferings of Jesus, and the sacrifices of our fathers.

Smith was a builder and an organizer. The plans intended for the city of Independence, Missouri, were his own. They were appropriated by Brigham Young, and Salt Lake City was built therefrom. Joseph Smith was the original inspiration, and whatever little good Brigham did was an echo of that original work. . . .

After the speech, the procession walked to the three graves, where the program was continued. Beautiful wreaths were prepared and Mrs. Thomas Worth of London, England, laid the first on the grave of Joseph Smith, Mary Catherine Mackie on the grave of Hyrum Smith, and Mrs. Ruth Stiegel on the grave of Emma Hale Smith Bidamon.

The memorial oration was brief but significant. Apostle Oakman said in part: No woman suffered greater tragedy than did the wife of Joseph Smith. When her murdered husband was brought home she arose from the profundity of her grief and dedicated her life to rearing her son so that he would inherit the promise made to him by his father. This was fulfilled, and for over 50 years he presided over the Reorganization and made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in the land. She guarded with zeal and devotion the manuscript of the Inspired Translation which is to the Reorganization what the Book of Mormon was to the original church. Next to Jesus, whom Joseph Smith held to be incomparable and the sole and sufficient leader and redeemer of mankind, Joseph Smith has done more for mankind than any other man in modern times. Hyrum, his brother, was also a prophet, seer, and revelator. He was inseparable from his brother in life and in death they were not divided.

"In the brief space of his life he gave the world the Book of Mormon, 104 documented revelations. He laid the foundations of the New Jerusalem. Others can only build on that foundation. Under the inspiration of God he founded the Church of Jesus Christ and that by the process of restoration. What he was in life so was he in death. He died nobly and without fear, with the name of God on his lips."

The speaker admonished his auditors that upon them laid a grave responsibility; "that of the unfinished task: the redemption of the good name of Joseph Smith and the fulfilling of his prophetic vision, which is the warning of the whole wide world in the proclamation of the gospel of Christ and the redemption of Zion, which is the Christian brotherhood that the world waits for and which will be the final witness that Christ has come to man."

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

A MAN wrote to us about Zion, and about building the Kingdom of God. But he used the language of Babylon, and his ideas and attitudes were those of Babylon. He does not know it, but he has shut the gates against himself, and only a change of heart can open them.

Effective Missionary Preaching

By George A. Njeim

EFFECTIVE missionary preaching can be learned by observing the effectiveness of missionary preaching as recorded in the Gospels and the Epistles. The preaching of these early missionaries appears to have been a combination of announcing a divine revelation and teaching. The secret of the Baptist's success lies in this fact. His announcement of the immediacy of the coming of the kingdom of heaven attracted popular attention. That, however, was only half of his message. The other half consisted of teaching repentance and baptism.

The effectiveness of the preaching of Christ can also be attributed to this combination. The kingdom of God, finding its fulfillment in Himself, was His proclamation. That also was only a half. The other half consisted in his teaching to the disciples, and the multitude that followed him, as the result of the announcement. The sermon that netted three thousand baptisms to the early Church of Christ embodied these two elements.

Peter's way of attracting attention was his announcement of the victory of Jesus over the cruel death that was inflicted upon him. "This Jesus," he proclaimed, "God hath raised up, whereof we are all witnesses." The announcement immediately brought a consciousness of guilt to the hearts of the hearers. After that, Peter became the teacher. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

The apostle to the Gentiles does not seem to have deviated from the procedure already established. Paul's first recorded sermon, which was preached at Antioch Pisidia, declared the "glad tidings in the great revelation of God through the resurrection of Jesus Christ." The declaration was so outstanding that "the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath." Some, indeed, have objected that the men of the early church spent so much of their time witnessing, that they forgot to teach men how to live to become like Christ. But those acquainted with the sixth chapter of Romans, the thirteenth of I Corinthians, the eighth of II Corinthians, the second of Philippians, the second of Colossians, and the second and third chapter of I Peter, know how absurd that assumption is. All preaching in the New Testament was a mixture of declaring a new revelation of God, through Jesus Christ, and teaching the way men might come to him.

One point of difference between the experience behind the early church's declaration and that of John's must be noted. The experience underlying the declaration of the early church was based on the evidence of the senses plus that of the soul. The experience of John was based on the evidence of the soul only. That is why, perhaps, the "least of the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." The mission of John was limited to the Jews only, hence his experience was of a limited nature. The mission of the Christian church was universal, and needed greater potency to arouse the common interests of mankind. Hence the condescending Lord supplied his missionaries by the miraculous experience of a sensory vision of his risen body. Finally he augmented that extraordinary experience by touching their souls with his Holy Spirit. Their preaching then aroused the interest of the Jew and Gentile, because it had what man needed the most. Death, the common enemy of mankind, had been vanquished and, though this experience of the senses was only given the few, all earnest seekers received the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ through his Spirit. This was more particularly true of the preacher. This double evidence was much stronger than John's single evidence, and gave added significance to the preaching of the early twelve and seventies.

With the passage of years, this type of preaching had to give way to a lesser and very ineffective type. The reasons for that are now written on the pages of history. From the aforementioned, it was plainly evident that the preacher was divinely chosen as an instrument of transmission through which the revelation of God was carried to man. With the passage of years, man gradually assumed the role of a producer. Among our Roman Catholic friends the revelation of God is comprehended only through the teaching of the fathers. Among our Protestant friends the Bible, as seen through the eyes of man, is the new revelation. The preaching, which is largely known in the world today, is rooted in these two facts. To the divine contents there has been added the fears, doubts, and ambitions of man, making an unsavory mixture. A worldwide rebellion against this concoction is plainly manifest. To remedy the situation, the preacher is exerting his efforts to improve preaching by a process of education. Education helps to improve the preacher's language, the organization of his thoughts, and the delivery of his message, but we can hardly call such a message preaching. The divine revelation is still needed. Education can't supply that. Preaching is not made effective by using glowing terms to tell of the birth of Christ. Neither can we call it preaching when one uses the most appealing oratorical methods to tell of His life and efforts in saving man. Even though men are moved to tears by the descriptive ability of the preacher in analyzing the suffering and death of the Savior, we still cannot call it effective preaching. There is no preaching that can be called effective which ignores the perpetuity of Christ's active interest

As missionaries for Him, Christ has given us that which makes our preaching effective. We have his revelation to us, and it is of a potency and sufficient authority to compare favorably with the revelation of the apostolic church. What we need is the faith to confirm the revelation to our soul. That faith makes the seventy a special witness, and goes hand in hand with his call. Faith, however, is not something that is engendered within us. Neither can it be had by a process of education or the accumulation of knowledge. It is something that comes from without. We can only, of ourselves, furnish a desire or a hunger. God does the filling. It is when this hunger for righteousness is satiated by the feeding of the Spirit that faith is conceived. When that faith is there, the preaching of the missionaries of Christ becomes effective.

God Almighty has seen fit to reveal himself once more. You and I are fortunate enough to have been chosen to preach this revelation. If we exercise the utmost caution, not adding our doubts, fears, and personal ambitions to it, our preaching will be effective. Sincerity and humility are the sword and shield of a warrior for Christ. Christ supplies the power.

A noticeable defect in our missionary preaching is our reversal of that revelation. The revelation that was given to us puts Christ ahead of his teaching. The phrase, "their doctrine is of man," came after the announcement, "This is my son, hear ye him." Our emphasis should be on the declaration "son," which arrests attention, and then on the teaching. It is becoming more noticeable with the passage of years that men need to be convinced that Jesus is the Christ. When six or seven preaching assignments of an ever-shrinking series are spent on doctrine, there is not much time left to the declaration. The visible evidence of our divine revelation is the Book of Mormon. Ordinarily we give this all-important evidence one or two assignments, and that at the close of the series. This is not only a reversal of the order of preaching as taught us by the early Christian church, but also an unproportionate reversal. It worked well when men were acquainted with the Bible, but now we are facing an ever-growing number of Biblical illiterates and cynics. A declaration of a divine revelation sufficiently authenticated is the only thing that is capable of jarring them from their destructive and complacent attitude. Once awakened, they will be more ready to listen to the doctrine of Christ.

The reason for this reversal is an unwarranted inferiority complex because of the evil behavior of some who took upon themselves the name of "Mormon." But despite the action of man, the book remains the only divine strategem for the convincing of men that Jesus is the Christ. Its authority is of sufficient dimension to allow it to rise above the evil that has been cast upon its name, and to challenge us to a degree of justifiable pride. There is no other substitute containing the "fullness of the gospel." There are nine reasons that make it stand higher than any criticism that man is capable of marshaling against it:

1. The Bible gives witness of it.
2. The Spirit gives witness to those who humbly and sincerely investigate it.
3. Three men gave witness to angelic visitation in its behalf.
4. Its miraculous appearing.
5. The witness of its pure message.
6. The fulfillment of its prophetic utterances.
7. The suffering of those who preserved it for us.
8. The witness of archaeology.
9. The type of men that believe in it.

Such a cloud of witnesses added to the faith that goes with our calling should make our preaching bold and uncompromising. God is revealing himself. The passing of years is adding to the authority of that revelation. That, added to the sincerity and humility characterizing the messengers of Christ, should make our preaching effective.

Battleship or Fellowship

By Grace L. Krahl

RECENTLY a speaker in one of our pulpits made the statement that what we read in the morning newspaper is obsolete before night, so rapidly do changes occur today.

I am reminded that since writing the title of this article, which was some time ago, battleships have become obsolete, being superseded by the atomic bomb as a weapon of swifter destruction and extermination.

And now, before the technicalities of atomic physics are fully understood, we hear of a biological weapon being devised, in the form of disease germ, which will spare vegetation, buildings, and bridges, killing only human beings—the ultimate in God's creations.

The cost of the experimental preparation of the atomic bomb is reported to be two billion dollars. One might hastily think that if all that money, investigation, and preparation, had been used in an experiment with fellowship, we could have agreement and peace the world over. But since money cannot buy fellowship, and peace conferences without end pursue their unpeaceful proceedings and unsuccessful conclusions, what then is left to the world as recourse to the solution of its problems?

It may be that a demonstration of community living, in which the laws of God govern, men's hearts are regenerated, and human nature is molded after the pattern that emanates from a divine source, would show the way to peace. The same principles that would control community life of this kind would be applicable to national and international life. Such a demonstration lies in the future—not too far off, we believe—for it is written: "But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9.

This divine forecast implies that numbers (missionary work) and sanctification (holiness) are the two qualifications by which an effective demonstration can be made. Zion must show that it is not an expedient for a few in the hours of trouble, but a principle for the ages.

The Restoration

13. Nauvoo—The Beautiful City

By Evan A. Fry

WE PICK UP THE story of the Latter Day Saints who were driven from their homes in northeastern Missouri in the fall and winter of 1838-9 by the "extermination order" of Governor Boggs, and who found themselves once again facing winter with most of their crops, their livestock, their homes, and their household goods either appropriated or destroyed by the mobs that roamed at will over the countryside. In their minds were bitter memories, but in their hearts was only a stanch determination to remain true to the religious beliefs which had only been strengthened by the persecutions that had come upon them.

Many of them turned their footsteps towards the city of Quincy, Illinois. The Mississippi river had long been a dividing line between widely divergent schools of political thought. The people of Illinois hated the people of Missouri right heartily, and the feeling was returned with interest by the citizens of Missouri, who on more than one occasion had had reason to suspect that their escaped slaves had been given aid and comfort at Quincy and other Illinois towns, and started on the underground railway to Canada. Abolitionists, who unwisely said too much thereby incurring the enmity of their Missouri neighbors, had often found sanctuary in Quincy. Naturally, the people of Illinois welcomed this opportunity to offer asylum to a whole group of people who were the victims of Missouri's violence, for it added discomfiture to the people they already hated.

EMMA SMITH, wife of Joseph Smith, crossed the Mississippi River on the ice, February 15, 1839. She had not heard from her husband for several weeks, and did not know whether he was alive or dead. She had last seen him when she visited him in the jail at Liberty, taking with her young Joseph, who on this occasion was designated by his father as his successor, and blessed to that purpose. As she walked into the bitter wind, she carried her two smallest children, and two more clung to her skirts as they made their way on foot to the shelter of the state of Illinois. Emma Smith and her children found shelter in the home of Judge Cleaveland; and others of the saints were welcomed in the homes of influential and wealthy citizens. A part of their welcome was no doubt occasioned by the political situation in which the state found itself that year. The Whigs and the Democrats were almost equally divided. 1840 was to be a presidential election year. The politicians, with an eye to that election, may have figured that if they could befriend the Saints and get them on the right side, they might swing the election the following year. At any rate, many prominent men—whether from this or some other motive—befriended these exiled people, and gave them every assistance. Stephen A. Douglas cultivated the close friendship of Joseph Smith, and with John C. Bennet, Quartermaster of the State of Illinois, steered the City Charter and other legislation through the state legislature when it came time to establish the city of Nauvoo. Judge Richard M. Young, who later became Democratic Senator from Illinois, and their spokesman in Congress, also befriended them. The law firm of Ralston and Browning undertook to represent the church in legal matters. Abraham Lincoln, a gangling young representative in the Illinois House, favored the Nauvoo charter, and congratulated Bennet on his success in getting it.

AFTER SPENDING a miserable winter in Liberty jail, as we have previously recounted, Joseph Smith was invited to escape the following spring, and allowed to walk away. He arrived in Quincy on April 22, 1839, and almost immediately called together a church council, which appointed a committee to investigate a new location for the Saints. They had some intentions of trying to settle in Iowa Territory, but on hearing of a location across the river in Illinois, they changed their plans, and agreed on the little settlement of Commerce, Illinois. On May 1, 1839, Joseph Smith purchased the farm and homestead of Hugh White, situated about a mile south of Commerce. The farm consisted of about 135 acres of rich river bottom; the house was a simple two story log building which had once been used as an Indian trading post. A few days later, the committee also purchased the farm of Dr. Isaac Galland, adjoining the White homestead on the west, for $9,000. Joseph Smith moved his family into the new home on May 10, 1839, and on the following June 11, Theodore Turley raised the first house in the new settlement. The committee later purchased in addition, some 20,000 acres in Iowa Territory, which were never developed because of later developments at Nauvoo. On April 21, 1840, with the help of friends in Washington, the post office was changed from Commerce to Nauvoo, and one of the new settlers—Sidney Rigdon's son-in-law—was appointed postmaster.

There followed one of the most unbelievable and unprecedented periods of rapid growth and spectacular expansion ever to be recorded in the annals of American history. When Joseph Smith moved into his new home in May of 1839, there were only six houses in the little settlement of Commerce, over a mile away. Six years later, at the time of his death, Nauvoo was the largest city in the state of Illinois—yes, the largest in the middle west—and she held the balance of political power in the state, just as the politicians had half hoped, half feared she would do. On the same place where others had failed to establish a city, Joseph Smith and his followers built a city which was far ahead of its day—a city which now is only an empty shell, haunted by memories of what might have been and the ghosts of blasted hopes and frustrated ambitions and ideals.

THE SPOT SELECTED was certainly the most beautiful in over a hundred miles of river course, and it would be difficult to find more beautiful river scenery anywhere in the world than is to be found on this part of the Mississippi. The river wound around Nauvoo on three sides—the north, the west, and the south—in the shape of a horseshoe, with a distance of about four miles across the open end of the shoe. Much of the land was low and swampy. (Incidentally, this very low land is now completely covered by the water impounded behind the Keokuk Dam.) Above that was a very fertile stretch of second bottom, and still beyond, the land rose abruptly to a hill which stood almost exactly in the center of the open end of the horseshoe. This hill was designated as the site of a new temple, which with its tall tower eventually commanded the broad sweep of the river and a wide sweep of prairie to the north and east. Because so much of the land was low-lying and swampy, it had a well-deserved reputation for being infested with malarial fevers; but drainage ditches and deep wells for drinking water eventually cleared up that danger, leaving an exceedingly fertile river bottom for farming operations.

Hope flamed high in the breasts of these people, who thought that at last they had found opportunity and peace.

With the help of their political friends, they were granted a charter—the most liberal charter ever to be granted any American city. The charter provided for a mayor and four aldermen, nine councilors, city courts of original jurisdiction which also had the right of issuing writs of habeas corpus. It granted authority to organize the Nauvoo Legion—which was considered a part of the State Militia, furnished with state arms, and officered by men under the commission of the governor. The charter contained provisions for the University of Nauvoo, which was to be governed by a chancellor, registrar, and a board of twenty-three regents. Under this board, a system of free public schools was to be worked out, which would make education freely available to every child from first grade through the university. If anything, the terms of the charter were too liberal. They excited the envy of other cities. Some sections were so liberally and loosely drawn that there was doubt as to their meaning, and as to the legality of some acts performed under their sanction.

Among other things, the city council under this charter passed an ordinance guaranteeing religious freedom to all who should settle in the city. They passed an ordinance forbidding the sale of liquor by the drink, for they were a temperate people who believed in total abstinence. The city council was empowered by the charter to regulate retail business establishments, roads and streets, ferries, health and quarantine laws, hospitals, wells for public water supply and fire protection, bridges, street lighting, night watches, all traffic such as hacks, carriages, wagons, carts, and drays; theatrical performances and other amusements, weights and measures, food inspection, storage of explosives and combustibles, and many other things which sound quite modern to today's reader or student.

Many houses and public buildings were soon under construction. A stone quarry was opened east of the town; a brick yard established; an expedition sent into Wisconsin for the purpose of cutting and floating lumber down the river to be used in the building of the temple and the Nauvoo House. Joseph Smith first added to the two room log cabin which was his first home in Nauvoo; then planned and built the Mansion House. Visitors were coming from all over the world to see the strange new prophet and his city, and to inquire concerning his religion. There was no hotel, and with the free and easy hospitality of the day, all these visitors expected to be entertained in the prophet's home. Even the Mansion House with its many rooms soon became too small, and plans were drawn up for a three story brick hotel, or boarding house, to be called the Nauvoo House, with a frontage of half a city block. A magnificent temple was begun on the hill. Substantial two and three story brick homes—many of which still stand in good repair—began to rise here and there all over town.

One whole city block was set aside as "widow's row," where small homes and apartments were built for the widows of the community, at very low cost, or sometimes at no cost at all. Plans were drawn up, and work actually started on a huge project of cutting a ship canal across the city from north to south. As the river came round its horseshoe bend, it dropped considerably, and went at once into the rapids just below the city. By means of a cofferdam to divert the water at the upper end, the canal would have furnished limitless power for mills and factories, and also provided a means of bringing river boats to the back door of every store along the main street of the town. The press and type which had been buried at Far West were dug up, and a new paper—the Times and Seasons—started in the printing office of Don Carlos Smith and Ebenezer Robinson. A new edition of the Book of Mormon was published, for the church had been without a supply of them to use in missionary work for some time. A river steamer was bought and commissioned to carry new converts and other passengers up the river from St. Louis to Nauvoo. Missionaries spread to England, to the South Seas, and all over the United States; and it was not unusual for as many as 200 people to arrive on one boat, ready to make their homes in Nauvoo. Everyone willingly shared with the newcomers until they could get themselves established and become self-supporting. A dramatic society of real professional caliber was organized, and produced such plays as King Lear, As You Like It, and Wilhelm Tell. The women of the town organized themselves into the "Ladies' Relief Society," and the young people likewise formed their organization for social and religious purposes.

We have given you only the bright side of the picture, but all during this growth and expansion there were darker happenings, which were to eventuate in the summer of 1844 in the death of the prophet, the division of the church, and the scattering of its various factions to Utah, to California, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Texas, Missouri, and all points of the compass. Next we shall bring you an account of these troublesome happenings, and of the decline and fall of Nauvoo, which was even more rapid and spectacular than its development and rise.

Thanks From Norway

(Elder V. D. Ruch, President of Southwestern Iowa district, formerly a missionary to Norway, writes as follows presenting a letter from Norway.)

DEAR EDITORS: Attached you will find the translation of a letter of thanks which I have received from Brother Carl Carlsen, Porsgrunn, Norway, expressing for the Norwegian Saints their thanks for the clothing sent to them from this country. I have also received several other letters from other Saints over there expressing their gratitude for the clothing sent to them, and they have requested me to convey their thanks to the ones who sent the packages. Many people have had a part in this project and it would be impossible for me to thank them all, even if I knew who they were. The attached letter of thanks I think will reach most of the contributors if it is published in the Herald.

Sincerely,
V. D. Ruch.

FROM NORWAY

Since we do not know the names and address of all the Saints who have so kindly and generously sent clothing and other things to us here in Norway, I take this means through the Saints' Herald to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to each contributor. Also, we wish to thank those who went to the trouble of collecting the clothing, packing it, and mailing it to us. On each package the name and address of the sender were written, but in most instances these had become marred or completely destroyed in transportation, so that we were unable to read them. Because of this we cannot send a special greeting and letter of thanks to each person. Let me assure you, however, that the things you sent were sorely needed and greatly appreciated. May God bless you for your kindness.

For the Norwegian Saints,

Appreciates Letters

I was pleased to see my recent testimony in the June 29 Herald. Since it was printed, I have received many wonderful letters from Herald readers. They are coming from young and old, and from men and women. Many are filled with inspiring, religious experiences. It is heartwarming to realize that, through the church publication, we may contact people from all walks of life and from all parts of the country.

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

THE PREPARATORY GOSPEL

If, then, men are to be won from their sin, and saved from themselves, they must first of all be exposed to righteousness. This can be done through certain agencies which we must recognize as primary—the Spirit of Christ and the ordinances.

First, the life of Christ must be lived among men. It is still his province to quicken men; it is not ours. He it is and not us, who converts them and renews them. It is not what we may do in the church that counts, so much, but rather that which Christ can do through us. Christ's whole life was a drama which was enacted to prepare the souls of men to receive the word of life. When some came to him to ask "What shall we do that we might work the works of God," the answer was "This is the work of God, that ye receive the Son." In other words, "All these miracles which I do are simply to make the soil,—your souls,—ready to receive the seed." Men are prepared for the reception of the Divine Word by the life of Christ. "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." Whoever is truly won to Christ is won through those who manifest His spirit. What a calling and what a challenge to us! It is not alone that we must minister ideas, although we must be intelligent. It is not alone that we must have infallible methods, although these should be given careful thought. It is rather that through all these things there shall shine the love of Christ, which sees the better nature which is like him beneath the sordid exterior of the worst sinner, and loves that sinner to the point where complete surrender to the Lord Jesus is achieved. This is the gospel of preparation. There it stands, brethren, the supreme life, challenging, condemning and shaming us, yet persisting in us, and inviting us to join with it in winning men from their degradation.

The key to this doctrine of the preparatory gospel is found in Section 18:2, which says "when I had finished my preparations unto the children of men . . ." How extremely significant! Only when men see in us that we have chosen the better part, that we have been with Jesus, only then will the common ore of our physical nature be baptized with fire and the Holy Ghost, and radiate that light which will warm and melt the hearts of others. Our ministry is one of life, not simply one of ideas, or of methods or of buildings or lands, or of gatherings, of goings to and fro. It is indeed tremendously sobering to contemplate that into our hands has been yielded, for good or ill, the opportunity Christ has of winning others to Him.

The new birth begins as men are exposed to the life of the Master. It is our profession to reveal that life. Here, before proceeding to the ordinances which consummate the new birth, I must speak of one other thing—Education.

EDUCATION AND THE NEW BIRTH

This is the most enlightened age that ever was. Knowledge has been increased. Our dominion over the external world has been immeasurably extended. We have conquered time, we have eliminated space, and subdued substance and made them serve our purposes. But we have not subdued our rebellion against the law of our inward being. The truth is we have lost the way.

Education has been likened to the headlamps on an automobile carrying a body of men through a dark night on a lonely road. Its function is to light the way. "Our knowledge," says Santayana, "is a torch of smoky pine" which lights the pathway. But if we take this analogy it will readily be seen that the people in the car choose the road, and that education, therefore, is simply the servant of the purposes men choose in life. Education (as we know it now) can never direct human life. It can only shed its light as men direct its influence. The choice of destiny which is the essence of freedom, lies deep in the action of the will. It is in the action of the will, not in the accumulation of knowledge, that solutions for world problems must be found. A murderer may step into an aeroplane in London, and fly, nonstop, to Melbourne. He is still a murderer when he gets out of the plane.

We are told, repeatedly, that the cure for the wrongs of our age will be found in a reformed education. We are told that our education trains people for a world that is dying, instead of seeking to refashion their minds for a world that is struggling to be born. "Could we but make men aware of the meaning of their inheritance, a newer and better spirit would," we are informed, "preside over the destinies of mankind." It is true we need more education, education better adapted to the needs and nature of our times. The main body of people in a very large sense is untouched by the culture of the past. The masses go through life utterly unaware of the forces which shape their destiny, and they are an easy prey, consequently, to every glib tongue or electric personality, and to catch-phrases or façades which glitter with unreality. Any charlatan who can persuade the unthinking to accept his nostrum to alleviate their ills becomes successful. The needs of the masses are not known to the masses, and even if they were known, it is not likely they are trained sufficiently to make their needs known. A new spirit in education can only come when men admit the evils which a lack of it has brought about, and when the changes which the new spirit of education would bring, would be welcomed by the majority. But this is precisely what is impossible. There are vested interests who pay heavily to foster ignorance, and half-truth, and any attempt to eliminate those vested interests means war—civil war.

If lack of education is not the cause of our trouble, what is? "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, from your lusts that war in your members?" For the works of the flesh are . . . idolatry . . . hatred . . . wrath . . . strife . . . seditions . . . heresies . . ." The fact is that human nature is in need of deep reconstruction. "Our natures have become evil before thee continually . . ." Our need is rebirth and redemption. It is not fundamentally enlightenment and education. These are secondary, they are not primary. Until a person is, how can he become? We cannot "grow up unto Him in all things . . ." until we are born. The Christian doctrine of world-redemption begins with rebirth. "Except a man be born again . . ." "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope . . ." "According to his divine power hath given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness . . . exceeding great and precious promises, that by these, ye may be made partakers of the Divine Nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust . . ." "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, (the seed of the flesh) but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which is alive, and abides forever . . ."

Clearly, then the Creator has to do something for men which they cannot do for themselves. As one ancient king put it, "Men must have this wicked spirit rooted out," and "receive his image" in their countenances. John W. Rushton has put it this way—"Social reformation through individual regeneration." There can be no true and lasting reform, capable of bringing in the "new world struggling to be born" unless individuals are begotten unto God. That leads us to the illustration of the principle of incarnation so vividly portrayed in Christ.

THE BASIS OF THE NEW LIFE

The modern doctrine of evolution utterly repudiates the idea of the virgin birth as told in the Scriptures. If man gradually evolved from the slime, and if his struggle upwards to the rational purpose thought to be inherent in life itself has been by his own efforts, then, clearly, there is no need for a special intervention of a supernatural and transcendent personal God such as envisaged in the doctrine of the incarnation. In that case all we need is time and education. But that is not what Christianity teaches. Christianity says that man's nature has been perverted through sin, and the Creator, seeing his work endangered, moved by supernatural (although not unnatural) means to counter the threat. Christ came into the world. He came into the circle of our flesh, flesh which ever has been since the fall of Adam, under the sentence of death. He came into the ken of our spiritual life, spiritual life which, ever since sin entered the frame of man, has been darkened by separation from God. Sin is not the "relic of man's rise," as the evolutionary theory says. Sin is the cause of man's degradation. Sin is not the "ape and tiger" within us. It is humanity corrupted and made vicious through a misuse of freedom. No man has the power within his own body, or within his own seed, to overcome death. No man has the power, according to the Scriptures, to "ascend into Heaven," or, in other words, to live on the moral planes outlined in the Sermon on the Mount; unless his nature is changed. Unto this vicious circle of death, so Christianity says, comes Christ who "dwells in Heaven." Since this level of power, or this manifestation of the divine energy was not in man, it was sown there by God himself. Plainly, the seed of life in Mary, the mother of Jesus, was quickened by the Holy Ghost, and not by human seed. This is the cardinal doctrine of redemption and the archetype of every new life.

Christ is a new level of humanity. He is what God originally intended man to be. He is truly man, because real man was destined to be brought forth by the power of the Spirit unto immortality and eternal life. Sin has robbed him of his heritage, and so wars, disorders, disease and famine come upon him, and the whole creation is perverted. Education will not help him to overcome this radical reversal of the course of Nature. Where, today, is the culture of Europe? It is buried in a bloody shambles. To restore man to his true nature requires that he, too, shall be born of the same spirit that made alive the seed of the flesh when the "power of the Highest" overshadowed Mary, and, as a result, Christ was born.

How can this restoration take place? How can man's nature be changed? I come now to the second of the agencies involving the new birth. The answer is plain. By reason of obedience to the ordinance of God's choosing and ordaining. The first man who fell from his own better nature was the first to be restored to them.

And it came to pass that when the Lord had spoken with Adam our father, that Adam cried unto the Lord, and was carried away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water, and was brought forth out of the water; and thus he was baptized.

And the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit, and became quickened (or made alive) in the inner man.

And he heard a voice out of heaven saying, Thou art baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost; this is the record of the Father and the Son, from henceforth and forever; and thou art after the order of him who was without beginning of days or end of years, from all eternity to all eternity.

Behold, thou art one in me, a Son of God; and thus may all become my sons.

That embodies the doctrine of the Restoration. First, revelation. "When the Lord had spoken with Adam . . ." Second, baptism of water and spirit.

Now this emphasis on the redemptive power of God is precisely what the modern temper of mind refuses to contemplate or admit. It is opposed to miracles (although there are thousands of them). It is even more violently opposed to the need of humility in morals, which the process of redemption assuredly presupposes. Men do not like to be told they are sinners. They would prefer to be informed that their wickedness is "just human nature," or "natural." What a welter of sin and crime has been committed under that word—"It's only natural." Well, it may be only natural, but it's bringing untold misery. We are told, also, "you can't change human nature." No, you cannot. But God can, if you'll let him.

Thus it is that Joseph Smith said, "Being born again, comes by the Spirit of God through ordinances." Baptism is designed precisely to objectify the facts of repentance and rebirth, and it liberates within those submitting thereto, forces and powers which remake man. The baptismal font was instituted as a type of the grave. The candidate submits himself to the minister voluntarily, enters that grave as a symbol of his spiritual death, yields himself to the representative of Christ in the person of the minister, and thus symbolizes his trust and confidence of being able to emerge from the grave and walk in newness of life.

We are educated by what we do. What we do remains with us. All we have is what we do.

Only let men be exposed to the life and ministry of Jesus, and his life, power will quicken them into a consciousness of their need—as deep answering to deep. Then let them be led into the watery grave so that they may freely register in their own natures their determination to die to sin, and then the most significant of all processes will take place, and silently, from those realms unseen, the Divine nature will be vouchsafed.

How silently . . .
The wondrous gift is given.
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of His Heaven.
No ear may hear his coming
But in this world of sin
When weak souls will receive Him still
The Dear Christ enters in.

Let us so live then that it will please God to reveal his Son in us, so that men may be prepared to receive the gift of life.

LETTERS

Wants Experiences of Older Members

I have enjoyed having the Herald in my home for many years; it is one of the visitors I look forward to seeing each week. While discussing the pioneer work of the church during General Conference, a friend suggested that I share some of my experiences with Herald readers, and so I write this, my first contribution, for the letter column.

My great-grandparents were driven from Missouri; some years later my grandparents, both father's family (the D. S. Bowens) and mothers (the James Farrows) moved to Independence. My parents were there during their courtship days, and helped in the building of the old brick church on East Lexington. When this church became too small, Grandfather Bowen was told in a vision that he had been directed to come to Independence and buy land, because the Lord wanted it for His church. Stone Church now stands on property donated by Grandfather. I was born there; the house we were living in had to be moved before the basement of the church could be dug.

Several years of my early school life were spent in Chillicothe, Missouri. There we were isolated, but our home was always open to missionaries, who came and stayed from two to ten weeks at a time. It was then that I began my work in the children's department; later I taught a class in Stone Church, and finally in Lee's Summit. Altogether I have spent forty years in teaching and supervising church school work; in 1942 I was forced to resign because of illness.

I believe that my health is now being restored, and that, as I am told in my blessing, my days will be lengthened, and I shall live to complete the work God has assigned me. Whatever it is he requires of me, I pray for strength, wisdom, and willingness to complete the task.

I wish to thank those who have sent me their personal testimonies; I hope others will send theirs. These testimonies and spiritual experiences will be made into a book for the Pioneer's Club. Before his death, President Frederick Smith said, "It's a wonderful work. I pray God will bless you in it, for so many valuable testimonies are being lost to the church with the passing of our old, faithful Saints who don't write down their blessings before it is too late."

I pray always for God's people, and ask to be remembered in your prayers.

Daisy Bowen Brown,
Vice-president and Secretary of Brick Church Pioneer's Club.

Receives Blessing Through Prayer

I should like to tell of a blessing I received on March 20, 1945. Ten days before that date I was seriously injured, and the doctors said nothing but an operation could save my life. Because of my heart, however, I was afraid to have the operation, so my husband took me to Brother V. R. Chandler's home in Birmingham for administration. On the way back I prayed for relief, and immediately felt my injuries being healed. I shall never forget the feeling of peace that came over me; I had been blessed many times, but that was the first physical aid I had experienced through prayer.

We are isolated, and I miss the Saints very much. I know, however, that God answers when we call, regardless of where we may be. I ask an interest in the prayers of all who read this, that my health may improve, and that someday I shall again be permitted to live among Saints.

Would Like to Hear From Saints

I am isolated from church privileges, and would appreciate getting letters from any of the Saints who care to write.

Asks for Prayers

I want to thank all who wrote to me for their wonderful letters. I returned home from Rochester on June 25; my cure now lies in the hands of God. I should appreciate the continued prayers of the Saints that I may be healed.

News Briefs

KIRTLAND, OHIO.—The young people of four districts, Northwestern Ohio, Kirtland, Southern Ohio, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, held a youth conference in Kirtland on June 22 and 23. The theme, "Take Us on the Quest," proved to be a real challenge. The opening session was a class taught by Apostle Blair Jensen in the upper auditorium of the temple, after which Apostle E. J. Gleazer lectured on the conference theme. Two hundred forty people attended the turkey banquet served Saturday evening by the women's department. Sunday's activities began with a prayer service, and Apostle Gleazer again spoke at the 11 o'clock hour. A musicale was presented at 2 p.m., with musicians from each district participating. A forum discussion was held at 3:30, and the final meeting was a service of dedication. It was voted that this conference should be termed the "first annual" as there will be one held each year from now on.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA.—The eastern Montana district conference and reunion convened at Fairview, Montana, on June 22 with Joseph H. Yager preaching the evening sermon. Sunday's activities began with a prayer service, as did all the other daily meetings throughout the week. Preaching and a song service were held every evening; sermons were also given during the day. A business meeting was held on Saturday in charge of District President Vernon Ditton and Missionary J. H. Yager. Delegates to the next General Conference were chosen, and district officers for the coming year elected. One new member was baptized.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI.—District President William Patterson spent a recent week end visiting the Saints and nonmembers in Rich Hill; he was also the speaker on Sunday morning. Ten young people from the congregation attended the district youth convention held at Fort Scott in May. The Leaguers have set apart regular meeting nights to visit and sing to the aged and shut-ins. A new furnace has been installed and is ready for use when cold weather arrives. Members of the women's department have sponsored various activities to raise money for the reunion ground kitchen equipment and local building fund; recent projects include a book review, silver tea, farm sale, quilting, and a skating party. Servicemen returning to the group are John, Tom, and Charlie Lawson, Walter and Marion Hursh, Glen Davis, Charles Erwin, J. C. and Harry Ruchaber, Tom Hursh, Tom O'Neal, Westley Mills, Jack Martin, and Albert Crothorn.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—District President Reed Holmes gave the morning radio address on May 29 over station WJAR; the program on which he appeared is sponsored by the Rhode Island Council of Churches. At their June 3 meeting, members of the Marietta Club elected the following officers for the coming year: Elsie Garlick, president; Helen Stern, vice-president; and Hazel Potter, secretary-treasurer. The annual branch business meeting was held June 5, with District President Reed Holmes in charge. A. A. Scherer was elected pastor; Sydney Thompson, treasurer; James Milligan, secretary; Charles Cockcroft, church school director; Gladys Loyd, women's leader; Lila Bradbury, publicity agent; Carolyn Kirby, church school secretary; and Marion Tift, chorister.

SAN LEANDRO, CALIFORNIA.—A baptismal service was held on April 28 at which eight new members were added to the mission; they were confirmed on May 5. Brother Hartsaugh of Redwood City was the guest speaker on June 15. Other visiting ministers have been William Roy and H. W. of Berkeley, and J. J. Keifer of Honolulu. The women meet each Thursday at the homes of various members; a business meeting is held once each month. A financial program is being planned, which includes a bazaar to be held in the fall. Don and Mark MacDougall have returned from service. Don saw action with the Navy, and Mark was with the Canadian Army.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—The Zion's League held its annual spring banquet on May 24 at the Hotel Admiral Semmes; the theme for the banquet was "The Church in Peace." Alto Locke was master of ceremonies, and Apostle M. A. McConley guest speaker. An installation service was held on June 2, at which A. Orlin Crownover officially accepted the pastorate. The Mobile young people were hosts to members of the district Zion's League at a rally held June 14, 15, and 16. The rally theme was "Does It Make Any Difference?" A splendid spirit was present throughout the various services and activities.

COAL HILL, MISSOURI.—Elder E. W. Lloyd of Kansas City, who spent his boyhood in Coal Hill, and his son, Ray Lloyd of Independence, were the speakers at an all-day meeting held in May. Brother E. W. Lloyd returned on June 16 for a second ministerial visit. Elder John Deller of Rich Hill gave the sermon on Children's Day. On June 23, a group of young people from Independence were in charge of the services. Elder Ivan Andes gave the 11 o'clock address, and James Doty, a veteran, spoke in the afternoon. A candlelight worship service was presented in the evening by the Independence young people and members of the local Zion's League.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO.—A fellowship supper was held April 19, at which time reports on General Conference were given by those who had attended. Members of the women's department, who had been given twenty-five cents each to increase as best they could, presented sixty-four dollars to the project fund, telling how the original quarter had been used in each case. An Easter program was given by the children on the morning of April 21; the Zion's League presented a play at the evening service. The girls of the League gave a mother's tea in the lower auditorium on Mother's Day. Plans are being made for the reunion to be held in August; a large gas range for the kitchen was purchased recently.

BELOIT, WISCONSIN.—Wilbur Johnson did a commendable work as associate pastor of the Beloit branch during the absence of Pastor Harry Wassou. He was assisted by Elders C. C. Hoague, Ormand Kimball, Clyde Funk, and J. O. Dutton, Apostle Arthur Oakman, Seventy E. Y. Hunker, and Missionary James Daugherty. Those attending General Conference from Beloit were Wilma Johnson, Dorothy Pinkerton, Harry and Gertrude Wassou.

ESSEX, ONTARIO.—On Sunday, June 9, the members of Essex branch journeyed to the shores of Lake Erie for a baptismal service. Seven candidates were baptized by Elders William Andrew and Willard Kettlewell; Pastor Ezra Mifflin was in charge. A confirmation service was held at 11 o'clock. The twelfth anniversary of the organization of the branch was celebrated on June 23. All-day services were held with Elder Robert Brown of Merlin as the morning speaker, and Elder James Pycock of Windsor as the evening speaker. Eldon V. Osborne, district church school director, conducted a class in religious education at 2:30 in the afternoon. Special music for the services was arranged and conducted by Bessie Smith. Two diligent workers, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Robinson, have moved from Essex to Missouri; their contributions to the group are greatly missed.

OWENDALE, MICHIGAN.—A one-day convention for the eastern Michigan district was held in Owendale on June 16. The first service of the day was a prayer meeting at 9:30 a.m., after which Elder Carl Muir of Port Huron delivered the morning sermon. A basket lunch was served in the dining hall at noon. A service was held at 2:30 in the afternoon for the presentation of awards to those who had completed credit courses offered by the Department of Religious Education. Seventy-five credit cards have been awarded to workers in the eastern Michigan district during the past year. At 3:15 the women met in the upper auditorium with Jennie Booth, district women's leader, and members of the priesthood met in the lower auditorium with District President John Booth. Elder Meril Howard of Midland gave the final sermon at 8 p.m.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—A welcome home reception was held at the church on June 10 for all returned veterans. Following the banquet at 7 p.m., a program was presented with Dr. D. A. Campbell as master of ceremonies. On Sunday evening, June 23, Seventy George Njeim gave his farewell message; after the service, a party in honor of the Njeims was held in the lower auditorium of the church. The women of the branch sponsored a potluck supper on June 17; the Friendship Group held a white elephant sale. Officers for the coming year were elected following the supper. A children's recital was sponsored by the Las Amigas Group on June 18; proceeds will be used to assist needy and talented children. London branch now has a softball team which plays in the city-wide church league; Bruce MacGregor and Clare Kennedy are the co-captains.

A Prophecy Fulfilled

July 8 will mark the fiftieth milestone of my life, and the forty-second year of my membership in the church. God has been good to me, granting blessings far richer than I deserved. I believe with all my heart that the Reorganized Church is the true successor of the Church of Jesus Christ restored in these, the last days.

To my many friends and acquaintances in the church, I send my greetings and best wishes. My parents, John and Mary Kaler, were missionaries to Australia; I was born in Tunnacurry, New South Wales. There were only a few Saints there at that time, but shortly before leaving the Balmain church, my father spoke through the inspiration of the Spirit, saying that thousands would be gathered into the church in that land.

I noticed in the 1946 General Conference statistical report that there were over 3,000 members in Australia. Thus, in our land and in the lands over the sea, the honest in heart are gathered into the fold.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc. will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

P. S.

* "DEAR ———"

Among the curious formalities of the letters you write is the salutation, which begins with "Dear." No matter how many short cuts the business world has developed, it has never been able to omit this archaic courtesy. From the most formal business communication to mere direct-mail advertising, the usual letter will—after giving your dog tag of name-and-address—take you by the lapels of your personality and call you "Dear ———," as if you were specially precious, an object of tender affection. What is the use of that "Dear"? Little, it seems.

Of course, love letters are different, whether to one's sweetheart or wife (presuming her to be the same person, before or after taking). A good suitor or husband would never begin with just "Mary." He will always say, "Dear Mary," until "Dear" becomes a part of the name. It will help any man to make "Dear" a part of his wife's name, even in conversation. It will change him, and it will change her. But this is a digression, and we must return to the other letters.

Why can't we save that space and omit the extra line, "Dear Mr. John"? After giving the dog tag, why not begin the letter? Why not?

Well, there are many why not's. Generations of stenographers—millions of them—have been trained under this law of the Medes and Persians: A letter must begin "Dear Mr. John" even if you are sending him curses instead of blessings, even if you are calling him hard names, and threatening him with annihilation. You must call him "Dear" or the stenographer cannot write the letter. Moreover, all the copybooks, the treatises, and helps on letter writing, all the customs of the country, are against any change.

Oh, it is true that there are a few, out in the distant townships, rigid souls of the old school tie, wearing wing collars and writing in the stiff and angular Spencerian penmanship of a by-gone era, who will address you with a frosty "Sir." And you will see it in letters to the "Times."

Maybe there is some divine intent in this arrangement. One must try not to be a hypocrite. It is hard to call a man "Dear" and go on hating him. No matter how despicable the wretch is, we assume that he is still loved by his mother and God, if nobody else; and this love compels a certain minimum of respect.

Maybe there is some use in it. It may have a softening effect on our hard hearts. We rebel at times against it, but perhaps, after all, we had better leave it there!

* HOW TO GET THEM TO ATTEND

A member of the Seventies was in the office, and among the many fine experiences related, he told this one. He had baptized a fine family into the church. Across the street from them lived another family of church members who had not been attending for some time. So our Seventy went across the street and had a good visit with them. He talked to them like an uncle. He said:

"Here we have baptized a good family into the church right under your noses, while you have not been attending. They are new in the faith and will need help. I want you to be responsible for them for a year. I want you to see that they get to church. Take your car and bring them. Bring them to all the services and socials. See that they never lack an opportunity to attend."

This older family showed its truly fine quality. It met its responsibility. All members of it immediately began to attend regularly, bringing the new members with them. Needless to say, all of them were happier for it. The pastor was especially happy not only for the new family, but for the return of the old one. It is wonderful how the spirit of the gospel takes hold of us when we find something we can do for it.

* CATS. A cat would be a terrible thing if he were as big as a lion. It is only his small size that makes him harmless. It is remarkable to humans that cats hate other cats and will not tolerate their presence. Our young Goldy, who had to be rescued from the cruel claws of an older cat, was himself rather naughty in his attitude toward a younger kitten. He wanted to attack, but didn't quite know how to go about it. With juvenile boldness, the kitten put up a small paw, defied him, and made him sit down. Yet who are we to criticize the cruelty of animals, when we consider the more terrible and useless cruelties inflicted upon human beings in war and peace, simply because they speak another language and love another flag?

* IF YOU CAN'T UNDERSTAND a piece of art or literature, look for symbolism.

* APOLOGIES!

In the "Herald" of July 6 the article in the department "The Seventies Suggest" entitled "Visual Aids in Missionary Work," was wrongly credited to Eugene A. Theys. It should have been credited to Maurice L. Draper, President of Seventy. Brother Theys was early in disclaiming credit. We extend our apologies to Brother Draper, who has given much labor, not only to this article, but to the whole series.

Working For Zion

The Work Cure

People need work. The normal, wholesome individual must have useful, purposeful activity, somehow related to the needs and interests of his society, something that will bring him sufficient reward to sustain the ordinary necessities and expectations of life, and something, too, that carries with it a degree of respect and honor on the part of others. Only the parasite, the criminal, the immature, and the subnormal—a small proportion of the total group—are willing, and in some cases determined, to “live by the sweat of other men’s brows.”

Work has a healing power. It can give relief from anxiety and worry. It can restore weakened muscles and minds. In the military hospitals where many wounded soldiers are treated to refit them for places in the economic life of the nation, they call it “occupational therapy.” That is simply a fancy phrase for “the work cure,” with implications, of course, of scientific application of the principle.

Some years ago, when this nation was facing one of its many critical times, a prominent man said, “There is nothing wrong with America that work won’t cure.” It is not necessarily a charge of laziness. It meant that we needed to be called to our tasks, and to respond to the call.

Work for the Branches

Many a congregation of the church thrives and flourishes when it has some building project under way. Attendance increases, the flow of contributions mounts, a spirit of happiness and confidence pervades the people, and they enjoy the hard work that leads to achievement. But when the tasks are over and they can sit back at ease and take their rest, attendance declines; contributions, having no specific objective, fall off, and the church struggles along trying to promote attendance.

The best thing that any church can have is something to work and struggle for. It may be a building fund, an addition of church school rooms, a new organ, or a debt to pay. If the people approach their task with enthusiasm, they will not be hurt by it.

It would be a wise branch leader who could always keep some task before his people, varying it so that the work would be really beneficial in its results and so that it would provide an interesting variety or at least a change in each new project. He would be a wise leader if he arranged it so that there would be work that some could do with their minds, and that many could do with their hands, for larger numbers are adept in the manual skills than in the intellectual ones.

The general church is, in a sense, a larger pattern of the branch. It, too, needs work, projects, tasks. We thrive on work. Attendance and contributions increase when we have something to do. People from the outside are attracted to a working organization, particularly if the work has some great usefulness, merit, or value. People are seldom attracted to an organization that has everything done and nothing left to do. This is because people know that there is so much that needs to be done in the world, and they know that any organization is useless if it regards its job as being finished. The outfit that has nothing to do soon dies, because only the sluggards remain with it, and the young and the vigorous look elsewhere for occupation, not where people are resting in the shadow of anciently won laurel wreaths, but where people are struggling to earn new ones.

The general church, like the local church, the family, and the individual, needs projects and work in order to maintain its health.

People do not leave an organization because they are asked to give help and money. They leave when they are asked for nothing but to sit and listen.

Between Tasks

But it must be remembered by those who become impatient that work cannot be continuous. Work and rest are the law of life. Work that is too long continued exhausts and destroys. Rest that is too long continued atrophies and paralyzes. There must be a sane balance between work and rest. And after one task is finished, time is required to plan the new tasks, to equip, to enlist and train personnel, and to get the program under way. This is the situation in which the church is found today.

The New Tasks

What are the principal new tasks that are before the church? Those who long for something to do may well take a good look at them, for the day will soon come when help will be needed upon some of those tasks, and it is already here when help is needed upon others.

One of the principal needs now is to rebuild our missionary forces to something like adequate strength. We need especially a return of the missionary spirit among the people, the desire of the volunteer as well as of the full-time appointee to serve. We need (as soon as paper can be had) to rebuild our missionary literature and publications—tracts, books, and periodicals.

This fall, because of limited space, lack of classrooms, dormitories, and facilities, some hundreds of church young people will not be able to go to Graceland. So far as we know, this is the first time in our history that Graceland has had to turn away students for the reason that there is no place to house or teach them. This is an emergency that neither college nor church authorities could clearly foresee in time to take corrective measures. Even so, the means are not now available to expand to meet the need. No educational institution can expand that rapidly. But every parent in the church should be thinking in terms of the needs of our young people at Graceland College, and be ready for the call of the church to help meet that need.

The greatest task of the church, and one requiring the most thorough study and preparation, and the most care to prevent costly or even disastrous mistakes and losses, is in the field of the social and economic ideals of the church. The membership is very strong in its interest in and its demand for something to be done toward the realization of Zionite community life. In the coming years we look forward with hope for the plans and developments that will be made in this direction.

What can the individual do? He can examine creatively the whole range of services and activities that will be needed in Zionite, or Christian community life, select the field in which he feels best adapted to serve, and prepare himself for that work.

Those who look to Zion for what it will do for them may be a long time finding it. But those who are looking for an opportunity to contribute to it are finding a rich foretaste of Zion now.

Another Echo of the

General Conference Leadership Training Workshop

Southern California is one of the areas most actively engaged in Leadership Training at the present time. This is largely due to the untiring, highly efficient work of Brother Glen E. Holmes, who is serving that district as both Director of Religious Education and Examiner. From this district come so many registrations that our department requested him to discuss his methods of approach at the recent General Conference, in the Workshop on Leadership Training. Brother Holmes consented to summarize his thoughts for us, in order that we might share with our Herald readers. His article follows:

How I Secure Registrations

By Glen E. Holmes

I BELIEVE that the main reason we have been successful in securing registrations in leadership training is because we have such a fertile field in the Southern California district. Two years ago we did not have a half dozen students enrolled in study courses, whereas today over 150 students have either completed courses or are now studying for credit. Such an interest has developed in the training program that even the district president has enrolled in a course—and he is doing good work, too!

The first year was spent in sowing the seed or instilling the desire for leadership training. During the second year we have begun to reap the harvest and enjoy the fruits of the sowing. Now, the membership of the district is acquainted with the Leadership Training Program, and registrations are received weekly for organized classes and correspondence students.

Two methods have proved to be quite satisfactory in securing registrations: First, by contacting individuals personally, explaining the purpose of leadership training, telling of the many fine courses of study offered by our church, and thus helping to instill the desire to study. Closely related to this personal contact has been the second method, that of advertising by displaying the attractive books, quarterlies, study guides, and helpful material supplied by the Department of Religious Education through the Herald Publishing House.

It has been my good fortune to work as both District Director of Religious Education and District Examiner, and in this capacity, I have found it very convenient to coordinate the church school and leadership training. When visiting the branches and missions, I try to work closely with the church school directors, giving talks in the assembly period, discussing training with prospective teachers and students, helping to organize classes, and arranging attractive displays of leadership training material. This is a year-around job and can be repeated often.

During young people's district meetings, I plan to be on hand and arrange with the leaders to have a period when we can counsel and discuss the training program, either in groups or individually. This is a good time to select and arrange a display of books and material most interesting to the youth of the church.

The district conference affords time to meet and discuss leadership training with members from all parts of the district. Now is the time to display a well-rounded-out selection of study material to cover all age groups and specialized subjects; these should be located in a convenient place, where prospective students may examine and peruse the material, and have the privilege of purchasing necessary material as they enroll in study courses. This mid-year contact is well worth-while and

The Meaning of the Lord's Supper

By Apostle John W. Rushton

FROM THE BEGINNING, the Christian church has been a sacramental church, through which the judgment and absolution of Jesus Christ were mediated. Baptism, the Laying on of Hands in confirmation and ordination to the ministry, and what is called the Eucharist, the Lord's Supper, and the Holy Communion were evidently recognized as sacraments in the New Testament times. Others which have become accepted by some of the Christian churches are not so discovered as sacred rites of the church carrying a divine gift with them in the strict sense.

However, with the growing belief that the church and the sacraments were the extension of the ministry of the Incarnation ("God manifest in flesh"—St. Paul; and the "Word [Logos] was made flesh and dwelt among us."—St. John), other sacraments developed as the priestly remitting and retaining of sins, the "unction" as described by St. James, and then marriage. The seven sacraments which are familiar to some churches, viz: the Roman Catholic, were first enumerated in the 13th century by Peter Lombard and are catalogued as follows: baptism, confirmation, the Eucharist, ordination, penance, unction, and marriage.

SOME CONSIDERATIONS OF SACRAMENTALISM

Primarily, what is meant by a sacrament is the symbolizing and mediating of spiritual values through material means and processes. This same principle runs through nature. As expressed by Carlyle in his Sartor Resartus, "The universe is the Time-vesture of the Eternal." And, modern science through its authoritative spokesmen expresses the same thought "Speaking or thinking of the universe," says Sir Oliver Lodge, "God and man constitute a unity." Not only man, but the "Whole":

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,

Whose body Nature is, and God the soul.

And, as one of the modern mystics reminds us, "We ourselves form part of the creative apparatus of God" (Evelyn Underhill).

The history of religion emphasizes the principle that religion is first of all a group consciousness, and the tribal character of religion everywhere expresses itself in what are sacramental forms. Hence "sacraments" are social ceremonies through which "Spiritual gifts" are mediated. The essential meaning of this religious communion is "sharing"—sharing between God and man, man and his fellows, and man with God. The full Christian life is a continuing sacrament. Through sacraments the highest gifts are made accessible, equally to all who by faith appreciate the symbolizing of moral and spiritual values embodied in the forms and ceremonies, such as baptisms and washings, the blessings through the laying on of hands, and partaking of the sacred bread and wine. These spiritual values, the sacramental gifts, as regeneration, the reception of the Holy Spirit and absolution, the communion with God through Jesus Christ, are imparted to us objectively in outward acts and signs. We are bidden therefore in the sacrament to act as sons of God and sharers in Christ, knowing by these outward signs that we are so. (See Bishop Gore's The Holy Spirit and the Church.)

The secular meaning of sacrament is "to bind by an oath, to consecrate," meaning a covenant in which at least two parties share.

Theologically, a sacrament is a rite ordained as an outward sign of an inward and spiritual grace; specifically, a rite instituted directly by Christ or by the church. It is recognized that there are three features necessary to the constitution of a sacrament in this sense: (a) a material thing as a fitting symbol; (b) the consecrating authority of the priesthood; (c) the attitude of the participant in the sacrament.

Altogether this implies an expression of dedication to the divine purpose through sharing mutually in that which belongs to each one; God's grace and man's faith and obedience. Dr. Wm. R. Inge expresses this thought very effectively in the Bampton Lectures of 1899 on Christian Mysticism:

A sacrament is a symbolic act, not arbitrarily chosen, but resting, to the mind of the recipient, on Divine authority, which has no ulterior object except to give expression to, and in so doing to effectuate, a relation which is too purely spiritual to find utterance in the customary activities of life. There are three requisites (on the human side) for the validity of a sacramental act. The symbol must be appropriate; the thing symbolized must be a spiritual truth; and there must be the intention to perform the act AS a sacrament. The sacraments of Baptism, and the Lord's Supper fulfill these conditions. Both are symbols of that mystical union between the Christian and his ascended Lord. Baptism symbolizes that union in its inception. The Eucharist in its organic life. . . . The Holy Communion as the symbol of the maintenance of the mystical union, and the strengthening and refreshing of our souls, which we derive from the indwelling presence of our Lord. The Church claims an absolute prerogative for its duly ordained ministers in the case of this sacrament, because the common meal is the symbol of the organic unity with Christ and the church." (See pages 255 and 256.)

It must be stressed earnestly, that to hold this sacrament only as a "commemoration" destroys its value as a sacrament. As there are those in the church who assert that this is the only virtue of the Sacrament service, namely to commemorate the Lord's death until he comes again; thus keeping him in remembrance, we elaborate further and quote in this connection another recognized theologian of our time, namely Dr. R. C. Moberly:

The Christian sacraments, as mere pieces of formal observance, are nothing, or less than nothing. They really are means in themselves of the simplest kind that can be conceived, by the use of which, in humble and dutiful belief, that personal union in spirit with the personal Christ, towards which prayerfulness yearns and which obedience makes effort to practice, is by Christ's act, and on the side of Christ, in response to approaches reverently made in the way precisely dictated by Himself, more and more progressively and effectively made real. Personal union with Christ, the early token and earnest of a consummation more than any words or thoughts of ours can compass, this is the one essential significance of sacramental ordinances.—Atonement and Personality, pages 258, 259.

A sacrament therefore realizes the union between God as spirit and the spirit of man through the medium of the material bread and wine. In baptism, water is the material medium, and is for the induction of the believer into the church, also and most important of all, as stated by St. Paul "as many as are baptized into Christ have put on Christ . . . for ye are all one man in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3: 27-29).

So, in the Lord's Supper, it is not only the social relationship as church members who partake of the common loaf and cup, but the significance is the "Spirit with Spirit communing." The interpenetration of the Divine with the human in which the soul of the disciple is sustained. As the Master has said: "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life. . . . As the living Father sent me and I live because of the Father; so he that eateth me, he also shall live because of me" (St. John 6: 53-57). This was not to be taken literally; at the back of the bread and wine Jesus identified the spiritual values which were the "True values by which the spirit was sustained." And he said further, when some were offended because of his sayings: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth [makes alive], the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life" (St. John 6: 63).

WHO ARE QUALIFIED TO PARTAKE OF THE SACRAMENT?

The answer to these questions, "Who has the right to partake of the sacred bread and wine? and; Does anyone have the right to take part in the Communion service?" must be in the light of the implications of church membership, initiation, and prerogatives. As already seen, baptism and confirmation must be included in the consideration of the Communion. These three are inseparable. There can be no doubt that baptism in water was for the remission of sins and also induction into church membership, this was followed by the laying on of hands for confirmation and the reception of the Holy Spirit, these together constitute the necessary qualification for fellowship in the spiritual community—the Holy Catholic Church.

In speaking of this we again quote Dr. Moberly:

Due to the fact that Baptism, as standing alone, does not constitute the whole initiation into the privileges and prerogatives of Christian life. This initiation as we see in the New Testament, included also the Laying on of Apostolic Hands—the symbol of inclusion within the range of the mighty Pentecostal blessing; the consummation of the right to the de facto exercise of the prerogatives of the Christian franchise: the ordination as it were, to the activity of the universal priesthood. Without this initiation the Pentecostal privilege was not yet complete.—Page 262.

Further:

When the Baptism by water begins to be spoken of in patristic writings in contrast with unction and the laying on of hands, the word "regeneration" is the word which (along with cleansing or remission) is more and more reserved as the characteristic word for the exposition of it: even though such baptism does really exhaust by itself, the conceptions inherent in "regeneration" as fully explained; so both in early patristic literature, and in Scripture itself, the laying on of hands, when viewed in separation from baptism, is characteristically identified with the gift, once for all, of the pentecostal spirit. . . . On the other hand it may be said that—in whatever sense or degree, the power of practically exercising spiritual rights (whether some or all) may remain, for a time, in abeyance,—the essential right to all rights is, from the moment of baptism, already there. Whoever has been admitted into Christ, has been admitted implicitly at least, into all the fullness of the powers of the Spirit of Christ.—Ibid., page 263.

We have quoted at length from this authority because it appears he has stated the position which as the Church of Christ, we hold to in a manner which logically marshalls the evidences and presents the arguments with which we agree; and reaches the conclusion that membership in the church of Jesus Christ, is a spiritual fellowship, in which fellowship certain definitized prerogatives may be enjoyed. And, conversely, the unbaptized, unconfirmed, or "unregenerated" cannot claim title to these prerogatives of "fellowship." Initiation into the church is the result of baptism, confirmation, and allegiance to all that Christ represents, which implies faith in him as our personal Savior and his way of life; repentance of the kind of life which previously had been lived, out of harmony with the will of God and therefore "at enmity against God," which would render such an one "unworthy" to eat and drink the sacramental emblems. In baptism there is symbolized the "death" and "burial" of the "old man of sin" and the "rising to newness of life," which signifies the "putting on of Christ" (see Romans 6: 1-11).

This "new life" is that which is "covenanted and Christian," and is the relationship between the individual personality and Christ. All of this means much more than mere enrollment into the society called the church. This is but a superficial view of the meaning of baptism. Incorporation into the church through baptism is the outward sign which implies identification with Christ and all that the church as his body is intended to impart by way of spiritual power, which is "Christ in you, the Hope of glory." This is summarized by Dr. Leonard Hodgson in his Croall Lectures on The Doctrine of the Trinity:

St. Paul shows clearly that he thinks of the Christian life as a life of a definite, distinct kind. The Christian "is in Christ," a "new creature," whose "citizenship is in Heaven" (see Galatians 2: 20; 6: 16; Philippians 3: 20). This teaching is not peculiar to St. Paul, in the Johannine literature the Christian "is born again," and "hath the Father, hath the Son also, and the Paraclete"—all giving to him a new kind of life—called the Eternal Life. (St. John 3: 1-9; I St. John 1: 3, 5.) And, in the Catechism (of the Episcopal Church) we learn to speak of our baptism as making us members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven. Which reminds us of the St. Paul's words—"Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular." (I Corinthians 12: 27; Romans 12: 4, 5.)

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper symbolizes the most intimate relationship between Christ and the disciple; also the sustenance necessary for the Christian as a particular member of the body of Christ, the church—the "Fellowship of the Spirit," which he draws from Christ as the nutriment and refreshment only He can give. Consequently, only those who are incorporated into him and are members of that spiritual union can partake of these elements with spiritual profit. Christ has made it clear that this discrimination must be recognized: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and are life" (see St. John 6: 63).

The conclusion would seem to be inevitable, that this covenanted relationship is renewed through the Communion service in which we pledge ourselves to "remember him until he shall come again" (St. Matthew 26: 26-29), and renew the baptismal covenant "to follow and serve him through good and evil report unto the end of our days."

The instruction concerning this sacrament as found in the church's discipline, namely, The Book of Doctrine and Covenants abundantly confirms this (see pages 40, 41, 43, 44). We summarize as follows:

All who desire to be baptized must humble themselves, witness to the church that they have repented, and their willingness to take upon themselves the name of Jesus Christ, being determined to serve him to the end; and manifest by their works they have received of the Spirit of Christ, then they shall be received by baptism into the church. Afterwards, it is the duty of the priesthood to administer the bread and wine—emblems of the body and blood of the Lord—and to confirm those who are baptized into the church that they may receive the Holy Ghost. There follows the specified duty of "members after they are received by baptism"—The elders shall have sufficient time to expound the meaning of their new relationship as church members—previous to their partaking of the Sacrament. They are admonished to meet together often to partake of the bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus Christ.

As already pointed out—The eating and drinking are not the chief ends to be considered but the attitude we cultivate in glorifying God.

None are to be cast out of the Sacrament services who are earnestly seeking the kingdom; but, if any are in transgression, let them not partake until they make reconciliation. There is also included the instruction as to the times when such services shall be held (it has become the established custom of the church to hold such services on the first Sunday of each month), also the preparation of the emblems and the ritual to be followed; all of which is in accord with the foregoing conclusions.

It is instructive to read the Liturgy of the Episcopal Church which appears to be the pattern most of the so-called non-conformist churches have followed:

If among those who come to be partakers of the Holy Communion the Minister shall know any to be an open and notorious evil liver, or to have done any wrong to his neighbour by word or deed, so that the congregation be thereby offended; he shall advertise him, that he presume not to come to the Lord's table, until he have openly declared himself to have truly repented and amended his former evil life, that the congregation may thereby be satisfied; and that he hath recompensed to the parties to whom he hath done the wrong; or at least declare himself to be in full purpose so to do, as soon as he conveniently may.

"Ye are also commanded not to cast anyone, who belongeth to the church, out of your sacrament meetings; nevertheless, if any have trespassed, let him not partake until he makes reconciliation." (Section 46: 1, Doctrine and Covenants.) This of course, is based upon the instruction of the Master found in St. Matthew 5: 23, 24, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

SUMMARY

The Lord's Supper, or the Holy Communion, or the Eucharist, commonly called among us the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is of high spiritual significance. It is not to be regarded as merely social hospitality of which anyone may be the host. Theologically, it implies a spiritual fellowship, the host being Jesus Christ, and as a prerogative is enjoyed because of fellowship in the church with the Father and the Son through the Holy Spirit "by which we are adopted as sons and claim God as Father" (see Romans 8: 12-17).

A Sacrament in the theological sense requires the three elements, namely: the appropriate material symbol, the priestly authority, and the attitude of the participant. In the case of the Communion, the bread and wine through the prayer of dedication become the symbols of the body and blood of the Savior, and administered by priestly authority to all "who are worthy," through the baptismal covenant and confirmation and incorporation into the "Body of the Lord Jesus Christ—Church," together with a spirit of reconciliation to God and man, is recognized as the Communion.

It is clear that nonmembers of the church who have failed to establish this necessary relationship, together with those even though members, have disqualified themselves because of "evil" conduct, shall not find welcome at the "Table of the Lord." Reconciliations between man and God, and our fellow man are the pre-requisites to effective partaking in this most intimate service of the church. The primary meaning of "sacrament" being "covenant" which binds two parties, the Communion could not have efficacy to those not parties to the Covenant. Consequently in the partaking of the Communion there is a renewal of the original covenant entered into at baptism, namely "To follow and serve Jesus Christ through good and evil report to end of our days."

Each participant should subject himself to severe heart-searching and be sure that in heart and mind he is at peace with God and man. If there should be any impediment, then "first" there must be reconciliation through confession and restitution so far as possible. Hence, it follows logically that in the sacrament service entered into with sincerity, sins and offences duly repented of, are forgiven. The essence of Christianity is reconciliation with God and the doing of his will, so it follows that in remembering Jesus Christ and his atoning sacrifice, the renewing of the baptismal covenant from which all our prerogatives flow as members of the fellowship of Christ, the Communion symbolizes the cancellation of all that in us may be detrimental to the intimacy of that union between God and the church and the communicant. Hence, through the partaking of the sacred loaf and the sacred cup the spiritual life is renewed and we go from strength to strength.

The following prayer based upon the Episcopalian liturgy is a fitting close to this study:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, accept this our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving; and grant that by the merits and death of Thy Son Jesus Christ, and through faith in His sacrifice of His body and blood, we and Thy whole Church, may obtain remission of our sins and all the benefits of His passion. Here we present to Thee, O Lord, ourselves, body, mind and spirit, as a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee: humbly beseeching Thee, that we and all others who have partaken in this Holy Communion, the precious body and blood of Thy Son, may be filled with all grace and heavenly benediction, and be made one with His body, the Church, that he may dwell in us and we in Him.

Although unworthy because of our manifold sins, to offer unto Thee any sacrifice; yet we humbly beseech Thee to accept this our bounden duty and service; not because of our merits, but pardoning our offences, through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Mercifully help us by Thy Grace that we may continue in that Holy fellowship, doing all such good works as Thou hast ordained for us to walk in, and so to find that Joy unspeakable according to Thy promises, through Jesus Christ, our Lord, to Whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

results in new students for leadership training.

The yearly reunion furnishes the most fruitful time to the examiner, who wishes to have ample time to enroll correspondence students and help organize local classes. We have had very good success by serving as the Herald Publishing House representative, in conjunction with the work of examiner. By this method, the store serves the purpose of displaying the material available, and prospective students, who are naturally attracted to the bookstore, will find interest in the study material, as well as to take advantage of the convenient way of registering for Leadership Training.

Of course, all registrations do not have to be made in district meetings or visits to the branches. Young men ordained to the priesthood, young people returning from the Armed Forces, students finishing school, members who recently joined the church, newlyweds, newly-elected pastors, leaders and church school workers are all prospective students. These contacts should be kept always, and the examiner should be alert to discover new students at all times.

Students who have completed study courses will quite likely want to continue their studies. By this time the examiner is well enough acquainted to make suggestions that will help them select the proper courses to study. Here again, personal contact should be maintained. We have done this by visits, telephone, and letter-writing. Letters! Letters! Letters! and postal cards! All of these means should be used to encourage students who have the desire to improve their ability through leadership training.

I know that the Leadership Training Program has helped our district in training the personnel in religious education. The support that we have received from district and branch leaders has been in direct proportion to their understanding of the program. The success that we have had is the result of the support and co-operation received from the entire district.

Truly, the fertile field has yielded abundantly in good fruits.

Since Brother Holmes sent to us this summary of his conference talk, more registrations have been pouring in. The latest one, received two days ago, was for a class of 37 students in Los Angeles, with Brother W. W. Powers as teacher.

Though this account conveys only a suggestion of Brother Holmes' strong personality, it contains a wealth of information for procedure for other district Directors of Religious Education and Examiners.

THE SEVENTIES SUGGEST

The Follow Through

By John R. Grice

IN THESE DAYS of mass-production, speed, and pressure, the business world is intensely interested, not only in marketing its manufactured products, but also in producing ways and means whereby there will be made possible a continuation of repeat orders. This, after all, is the thing that brings in the most money, and money to them means survival and opportunity to extend relationships that can prove both pleasant and profitable.

While the church needs money also, the greater need is for men and women thoroughly converted to its great plan—the survival or utter defeat of kingdom objectives. Vital, then, to both the world of business and the church is a plan of “follow through” which will insure a keeping of the gains already made, and offer a reasonable guarantee that new prospects will not be lost along with the cost of manpower and labor.

Information as to how this is to be carried out is very meager indeed, except that included as a part of the instruction given in Section 104, paragraph 11, 13, Doctrine and Covenants, where we read:

“The seventy are also called to preach the gospel and to be especial witnesses unto the gentiles in all the world . . . to act in the name of the Lord under the direction of the twelve, or the travelling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations.”

In those words, viz., “building up and regulating,” we have been given direction as to what to do rather than how it shall be done, with the exception that it is to be done always “under the direction of the twelve,” of course.

This information may be intended to give plenty of latitude to the work, but certainly humility of spirit and divine guidance are needed in approaching a task of such magnitude, reaching as it does, into “all nations.”

That this matter of “follow through” is quite essential is clearly evident and ably stated by President Farrow, of the seven Presidents of Seventy. I quote: “In all too many cases our ministry of witnessing is rendered entirely fruitless by a lack of proper ‘follow through’ by those in whose care we leave both baptized converts and prospective members. Our considerations and study should be devoted to the proper and vital methods of closing the gap between missionary and pastoral endeavors.” With these thoughts I am quite in harmony, but just how to do this is our big problem.

We, as the seventy, cannot formulate plans nor attempt to carry them into execution without the “advice and consent of the twelve.” Collaboration is absolutely necessary; otherwise we act under a handicap which makes “the closing of the gap between missionary and pastoral endeavors” an impossibility.

For long years the missionaries have been laboring under the necessity of baptizing new members and leaving them to fend for themselves, hoping against hope, but having very little assurance that anything would be done “to help them on to perfection.” Seldom have classes been provided in which the new member could find opportunity to grow by reason of having his many questions answered. If such were provided there was a danger of their being used—to discuss the erratic and unsound views of some one or two energetic members. This is not an occasional happening; it occurs frequently, and constitutes a real problem.

New members, introduced to such experiences, do well if they are not disillusioned. Some lose the ardor they possessed, and consequently drift back into ways of carelessness and indifference, losing all of the spiritual insight they once had. Thus, thrown again upon their own resources, they drift on the waves of discontent.

It appears that expert advice and teaching are needed, and in addition to this, something should be required of the pastoral arm, insuring a “follow through,” both with the newly-baptized converts and prospective members.

From one of our older seventies who labored for many years in missionary work and is now president of central Michigan district, we have this suggestion: “During my missionary service I found the best results were obtained by doing the ‘follow-up work’ before I ended a series of meetings. I never announced I would be at a place to remain a week, ten days, or two weeks, but went and remained long enough to follow through and baptize those who were ready. Then, as soon as I could I would return and hold another series. This, in my opinion, is by far a more successful plan than simply preaching a few nights, then leaving and placing the interested ones in the care of a man or men incapable of ministering to them, while the missionary goes to other places and is under the necessity of laboring again to try to interest those who may be entirely disinterested. The crying need of the hour is for men who are willing to qualify to be real shepherds. Where we have men of this type, others may safely go in and preach a short series, and, if necessary, leave the interested ones to be helped by a ministry that will willingly sacrifice to help them to understandingly unite with the church.”

Can it be that we of the older school have been too slow in our methods? Have we been spending time unnecessarily, or will the reports of baptism tell the tale?

Instead of hurrying through a series of possibly one or two weeks’ duration, we should move in and encourage the Saints to fast and pray; then perhaps, they would be willing to spend three to six weeks, if necessary, and attend every evening in order to catch the spirit of the work. Under such conditions it is certain that the newly-baptized people and prospective members will be safely cared for.

It is my opinion that both Saints and priesthood need to be taught in this matter of “follow through.” However, a spiritual revival is also necessary in order that teaching may fall upon receptive minds. Until that happens, we aren’t going to get very far, as past experiences reveal. Men and women must become twice-born, before they will be willing to sacrifice in order that the gospel may be preached and meetings continued as long as necessary.

In a recent series of services, I have been asking the members to fast and pray, selecting three days out of the week and three meals (any three days and any three meals as may be convenient) for the benefit of the services and the stranger who may come within our gates. It works. I find them, on their own initiative, fasting more than the three meals as asked. Nonmembers have also joined in this fasting, with the result that they later became members. Saints who had grown indifferent and had not attended church for twelve to fifteen years were reconverted, and we left them rejoicing. But again we ask, what care will they get when we leave? It takes more than the spiritual light alone that was engendered while the services were going on, to hold them when left entirely to themselves. Tragedy frequently follows unless the baptized converts are given additional schooling. They must share experiences with those of like faith.

Man’s basic urges or hungers must and will be satisfied, because the God in man seeks for its level, and only through obedience to spiritual laws can spiritual and temporal security be found.

While the missionary, in his short stay, may have appealed to the spiritual nature of some so that they request baptism, he cannot remain and be sure that his instruction will be made complete.

How, then, shall plans be set in motion which will more surely guarantee that in the future our labors shall not be as fruitless as many of the labors of the past have been? Those who come in and then soon wander away are frequently laid at the door of the missionary as "converts baptized too soon," when, actually, they would have remained had they been adequately cared for and taught. Priesthood visits and proper interest shown can do wonders for newborn babes in Christ. They do not take the same diet as older members, but need "the sincere milk of the word" that they may grow to the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

As seventies serving under direction of the twelve it is not within our province to formulate plans whereby we would direct the pastoral arm and make it incumbent upon them to respond. Those who have tried this in the past have aroused the opposition of the branches, but we could formulate plans, the results of our discussions, and submit them to the Twelve, thus working with them so that our gains may be kept in the future with more assurance than in the past. Without such assurance we would continue, as many times in the past, to labor in vain.

It seems to me that the development of the pastoral arm, as good shepherds of the flock, through teaching and counseling, until all members of the priesthood feel the great responsibility for souls, and are willing to "take them in their arms," so to speak, until they are safely grounded as members of the kingdom of God, is a thing that will greatly assist in holding our gains.

The prospects, which nearly every series of services leaves with the branch, are not to be treated lightly. There should be a continued schooling until such are either baptized or found to be "suspects" rather than prospects.

A spiritual-minded corps of ministers will be found frequently trying to re-evangelize their straying or cold members, and reaching out for new ones who can become contributors to the well-being of the group.

A big task, you say! Yes, indeed, but those who are faithful in the performance of duty are bound to receive help from God, and will be successful as they merit the guidance needed.

The general cry in the local ministry today is "lack of time," "too busy," etc., but in the face of such a cry I submit that we have better working hours than ever the laborers of the past have had, and, that facilities for transportation are much better today than at any time in our history. Men have automobiles, making distance much less a hindrance but still they cry for time. I like Disraeli's statement, "Great men think of opportunity, not time. Time is the excuse of feeble and puzzled spirit." In addition to these things the church has put into our hands more adequate teaching and helps than men of the past ever had but still the cry goes up; I am quite satisfied that until more is required of those ordained to priesthood responsibility, we shall continue to see this evident failure. Members of the local priesthood, in the main, do not sustain their pastors by giving unselfish service.

If the seventy, as a body, will hold out for the need that can be seen clearly and definitely, and will try to formulate plans by which the needed help may be obtained, there is no doubt that the twelve will work with them to the end that more teaching and help shall be given to the local priesthood, until losses shall be reduced to a minimum; then more missionary activities will spring naturally from such a body of men imbued with the desire to save souls.

There is no doubt that we, as missionaries, can become more efficient. It is necessary for the pastoral arm to become more efficient likewise if we shall fulfill our task of evangelizing the world. Important and most essential to successful missionary endeavor is this matter of "follow through." To see a good crop of sheaves harvested, then left out in the cold, and rain, where no spiritual warmth is to be had, and where no drawing power is continuously felt; is discouraging to the missionary; many tears have been shed by those who love the souls of men and can do so little to safeguard against this evident neglect.

People are differently constituted. One person, feeling individual responsibility, will dig for more truth and, consequently, through study and asking questions he is soon stabilized and becomes a jewel of great worth in the kingdom. Others, who have felt the touch of the spirit, but are backward and lacking aggressiveness, soon lose the spirit, and are lost unless some wise member of the priesthood teaches and leads them on into green pastures. Only when they get their feet on solid ground and have sufficient knowledge, testimony, and spiritual evidence can they be held safely through the storms and tempest which are sure to come as men are tried in the great mill of circumstances.

I believe our tasks can be solved and that light and direction will come with the solving. If we say, "It is a hard task," we may be like the man Charles F. Kettering, one of our greatest industrialists, told about: "When a man says, 'This is a difficult problem,' he really says, 'I am a soft drill on a hard piece of steel.'" These words of a busy man of the world should have consideration in the light of facts which we must face.

I humbly suggest that we try to get our men of the priestly ranks to see that if they more evenly divided their time between family responsibilities, and time taken for the pleasures of the world, more time would be had for the work of the Lord. I cannot believe that the great, all-wise God of the universe and church outlined priestly duties for his servants (Doctrine and Covenants 17), knowing at the same time that they could not be fulfilled. Lack of willingness to sacrifice some worldly pleasure is usually the real hindrance.

When I hold services for several weeks in a place and find both men of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods failing to attend and support the services except for two or four meetings a week and coming in the morning on Sunday but not in the evening, I am persuaded that I am not harsh or unduly critical of my brethren, when I say that I can easily see the reason why there are no Sunday evening services in some of our important branches. We cannot expect our membership to be enthused when our priesthood are lazy and indifferent.

When we have more attention given to priestly responsibility, and when more captains and leaders shall be required to be more interested in their personal duties as men of God, then we shall have better "follow through" after our missionary efforts in branches have been completed.

I have already mentioned the matter of fasting, and I say it works. I also say that with more of this kind of approach, we shall be able to reap greater results in our missionary endeavors and will find greater interest in "follow through" methods. More gains will then be kept in the church, and more prospects will be kept alive for future reapings by reason of the spirit engendered, and the evident desires to labor on the part of both priesthood and membership. This will cause a greater inflow which will be more stable and continuous than in years past. To this end, as one of God's servants and your fellow-laborer, I pledge my earnest labors and faith. If we all do this, I am sure our ministry of witnessing will become increasingly more fruitful as the years pass.

If I have failed to offer as much, by way of solution, as may have been expected in the matter of "follow through" it is because of my desire to stimulate thought and discussion, that all may grow together as ministers in the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Perhaps this matter of "follow through," may be summed up in a few ideas such as: (1) Adequate shepherding through pastoral care must continue throughout the first few years of membership in the church, or, until the candidate gets his feet on the ground and is stabilized in the faith. (2) The missionary and pastor should give consideration to the types of prospective members attending throughout the series of meetings noting the candidates' degree of conversion which in this matter a great deal of latitude must be allowed because people are so differently constituted. One person, under reasonable shepherding, will go on to perfection, while another will do as well only if he has the necessary coaching which, due to his nature, must continue for a greater length of time. (3) Help the pastor to see the need of the candidate's being introduced to all branch officers, in harmony with his family needs, such as church school director; women's department leader; Zion's League officers; bishop's solicitor; etc., in order that he may have an adequate knowledge of the functioning of all departments. Note should be taken of his response by way of attendance at the services of the church. He should be introduced to the publicity agent so that he may gain a knowledge of our church literature and be given direction as to the books best intended to meet his individual and family needs. (4) Remind the pastor that new members need visiting regularly and frequently in order that they do not lose interest. It is necessary that they be given congenial social contacts with other members of the church, or they may wander back to old friends, especially if the new ones do not adequately meet their growing needs. Other members of the priesthood need to call upon the newly-baptized converts also.

All special talents should be utilized for the good of the member and the branch that both may profit. Music, dramatics, and teaching ability should be especially recognized and used.

It is necessary that the spirituality of the Saints and the services of the church be kept at such a high degree that the convert may not be disappointed with the new associations he has formed, or find the spiritual food offered inadequate to satisfy his individual needs.

The same interest manifest when we were trying to win members should be maintained and not allowed to wane, as is so often the case, rendering our labors futile.

The seventy, alone, cannot guarantee that all the members he converts to the gospel can be kept, but with adequate shepherding, or, "follow through" most of the gains can be kept. This "follow

The Restoration

14. The Decline of Nauvoo, and the Death of Joseph Smith

By Evan A. Fry

OUR LAST CHAPTER told you the story of the spectacular rise of Nauvoo, the beautiful city—of how it was befriended by influential statesmen and politicians, granted the most liberal charter ever to be given to an American city, and augmented by converts and other new citizens until it became the largest city in the State of Illinois. We told you of its free public school system, which took students through university at public expense—of the many industries and business enterprises undertaken—of the new temple which was built and almost finished—of an ambitious canal project to bring water power and steamer traffic down the main street of the city.

Many contemporary men, both within and without the church, have left us descriptions of the city of Nauvoo. Almost uniformly, they describe its beauty, its remarkable advancement and spirit of energetic progress, its morality, its industry. A Reverend Mr. Prior, a Methodist minister, is quoted in Smucker's History of the Mormons (a work unfriendly to the church) as saying that he sought in vain for any sign of immorality—that he found no drunkards, no ruffians; heard no oaths, and found all the people polite, cheerful, and industrious. William Law, whose defection from the church contributed much to the tragedy which we describe later wrote on June 17, 1842 that though surrounded by enemies who could be expected to make the most of any such opportunity, no member of the church had ever been convicted of a penitentiary offense, and that the laws of the city were extraordinarily strict against liquor, vice, and vagrancy.

Yet in a city of 25 to 30 thousand population—and that the largest in the state—it was inevitable that there should be some attempt on the part of the criminal element to headquarter there, where there would be the safety of anonymity among the large numbers of people—just as criminals today tend to flock to population centers where they can become lost in the crowd. Many and violent charges were hurled at the citizens of Nauvoo, which you will often find repeated in sensational anti-Mormon books—charges that they stole livestock and grain, charges that they were engaged in counterfeiting—charges that the people of Nauvoo were knaves, stupid dupes of Joseph Smith, living in poverty and squalor and filth and ignorance. But these stories were only a part of the trouble which was eventually to come upon Nauvoo—trouble which was soon to result in the death of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, and the disruption and division of the church over which they presided.

IT IS DIFFICULT to pick one's way through the history of this period, unless there is a sympathetic understanding of the nature of the times in which all these events took place. Newspapers were violent, sensational, bitterly biased according to the political faith of the editor, and violently vituperative of all who disagreed. There were no laws for protection against libel. If an editor published something slanderous, his victim could grin and bear it, or he could (if large enough or influential enough) beat up the editor, or raise a mob and destroy his type and press. Nauvoo had a charter which was new. Many of its provisions had never been tested in the courts, and when the citizens of Nauvoo acted in all good faith on those provisions (though perhaps not always wisely) their infuriated enemies charged them with lawlessness and treason against the state. The people of Nauvoo held the balance of political power in the state. The rest of the state was pretty evenly divided between the Whigs and Democrats, and it was up to Nauvoo to vote off the tie. That was not an easy or an enviable position, because no matter which way Nauvoo voted, or by how small a majority, it incurred the enmity of one party or the other, or sometimes of both. If we can keep this background in mind, it will do much to explain the unfortunate and tragic events which we recount here.

Enemies of Joseph Smith in Missouri persisted in their attempts to get him out of the State of Illinois. He never set foot in that state again, after his arrival in Quincy, Illinois, in April of 1839. He had been invited and allowed to escape from custody that spring, after languishing in jail all winter, because even his enemies knew that he could not be convicted in a court of law. But three years later, on May 6, 1842, Governor Lillburn W. Boggs (who issued the "extermination order" against the saints in the fall of 1838) was shot and seriously wounded by an assassin who fired through the window of his home on South Pleasant Street, in Independence. He recovered, and charged Porter Rockwell and Joseph Smith with the crime. Governor Reynolds, his successor, made requisition on Governor Carlin and the State of Illinois for the extradition of Smith and Rockwell. Rockwell on a charge of assault with intent to murder, and Joseph Smith on a charge of being an accessory. The two accused were arrested in Nauvoo on the Governor's warrant, and taken before the Municipal Court, where they were released on a writ of habeas corpus.

A great hue and cry arose in protest to this action, on the grounds that the municipal court was defying the processes of the sovereign State of Illinois. The Saints countered that their charter gave them the right of habeas corpus—and in that opinion they had been advised and supported by some of the ablest lawyers of the state. Since this was a point which had never been adjudicated, there was room for considerable difference of opinion, and neither side was in any mood to consider the subject dispassionately. Joseph Smith went into hiding for a time on hearing that another warrant had been issued for his extradition to Missouri, but on advice of counsel (whom he had consulted meanwhile) he voluntarily surrendered, and appeared before Judge Nathaniel Pope of the Circuit Court of the United States, sitting at Springfield, Illinois—the state capital. In this court—which was certainly unbiased and legal—Joseph Smith was discharged for lack of evidence. Incidentally, Porter Rockwell was later extradited to Missouri, and tried on the charge in a very hostile atmosphere in Independence. His defense lawyer was Alexander W. Doniphan. He was also discharged for lack of evidence. An interesting and nice point of law was raised at Joseph Smith's trial before Judge Pope. The question was asked, "How could he be extradited and tried by the State of Missouri for a crime, which if it had been committed at all, must needs have been committed in the State of Illinois?" It was a well known and easily proved fact that Joseph Smith had not been in Missouri for about 37 months, prior to the alleged crime in Missouri.

Even this decision in a United States Court did not stop the Missourians from trying to get Joseph Smith into their state. On June 10, 1841, there had been a hearing before Judge Stephen A. Douglas, growing out of attempts to extradite him on charges growing out of the trouble in and around Far West, in 1838. Judge Douglas had summarily dismissed the proceedings, and denied extradition. Now, in June, 1843, these old charges were revived, and new warrants issued. Missouri officers, knowing that they could not take him legally, kidnaped Joseph Smith at the little town of Dixon, and attempted to hurry him across the line to Missouri; but he was rescued by his friends of the Nauvoo Legion, and brought again before the Municipal Court of Nauvoo, where he was of course released on another writ of habeas corpus. Missouri appealed to Governor Ford (then governor of Illinois) for an armed escort to force him across the border, and Ford, though not in the least friendly to the Saints, refused their demand in the light of previous court decisions.

IT IS EASY to see that a man constantly harrassed as Joseph Smith was during this time could not keep the close watch and control on things in the church and in the city as he would like to do. Ugly rumors began to be circulated! For some time there had been suspicion of John C. Bennett. His first contact with the Saints had been as quartermaster of Illinois, in which capacity he helped get the city charter, and state arms for the Nauvoo Legion. He came to Nauvoo in August, 1840, joined the church, and though he never rose to any office in the church, he did hold high office in the city, and in the military company of the Nauvoo Legion. Several things happened to arouse the suspicions of the church authorities, and a little quiet investigation disclosed that he was a floater who never held a job very long, a man involved in several scandals in the east, one of which had cost him his membership in the Masonic order. In spite of the fact that he had a wife and several children in Ohio whom he had callously deserted, he insisted on paying court to the ladies of Nauvoo. To some of them he told the story that Joseph Smith had sanctioned and originated the idea that there was no sin in promiscuous sexual relationships. It was not long before he was brought to task for these statements, expelled from the church, and forced to resign as mayor of Nauvoo. Whereupon he joined with some of the enemies of the church in Missouri in writing a bitter and virulently untruthful attack on Mormonism.

Another thing which contributed to the high feeling of this period was the political situation. Joseph Smith had addressed the four possible candidates for the presidency—Van Buren, Lewis Cass, J. C. Calhoun, and Henry Clay—asking them what their policy towards the Saints would be if elected. All undertook to give a satisfactory answer without promising anything. Such fence-straddling did not please the people of Nauvoo at all. So they did what today may seem like a very foolish thing—they put up their own ticket, nominating Joseph Smith for President of the United States, and Sidney Rigdon for Vice-President. Not that they had the slightest hope of electing their candidates. They knew that they could expect nothing from either of the major parties, and rather than give their votes to men they could not trust, they simply decided to register a protest vote in favor of men they could trust. If they had wanted to play politics, as their enemies alleged, they would have made some sort of deal with one side or the other, and at least had half the state on their side. But by putting their own candidates in the field, they incurred only the enmity of both parties.

In the spring of 1844, other troubles developed in Nauvoo. Wilson, William, and Jane Law; Robert D. Foster, and later F. M. Higbee and others, were expelled from the church "for unchristianlike conduct." History does not record exactly what the charges were, but ugly rumors flew back and forth. On May 6th, 1844, Joseph Smith was arrested on a warrant signed by F. M. Higbee, claiming damages of $5,000. There was no crime charged, and no explanation of what was the injury which had caused the damages to be sought. The case came before the Municipal Court on another habeas corpus proceeding. Higbee did not appear, and was not represented by counsel, so the case was dismissed.

On June 7th, the first issue of a new paper—published by the Laws, Foster, and Higbee, was distributed in Nauvoo. Its prospectus had laid down as one of its policies, the repeal of the Nauvoo City Charter. This first issue contained some of the old J. C. Bennett charges, several sworn affidavits charging Joseph Smith with various crimes and immoralities, and a good many serious and libelous allegations which were unsigned. On June 10, the Nauvoo City Council met, declared the paper a nuisance, and ordered the city marshal to abate the nuisance. The marshal proceeded to remove the type and press to the street, and destroy them. Whether this action was legal or not (and the council maintained that it was—that the charter granted them the right to abate nuisances) it was quite unwise. In extenuation of this action, however, let us remind you again that there was no legal recourse in those days for libel or slander; that the press of that day was almost consistently wild, inflammatory, and irresponsible; and that it was by no means unusual for editors and their papers to incur the wrath and violence of people or political parties whom they had vilified in their columns.

Following this incident, Higbee issued warrants against Joseph Smith, mayor of the city, and against almost the whole city council, charging them with riot. The Municipal Court found that the men had destroyed the press and type in accordance with the City Charter and the law, and dismissed the warrants at habeas corpus proceedings; but on May 14, Joseph Smith made a detailed report of the whole matter to Governor Ford, offering to appear voluntarily in the state capital for a review of the proceedings in any court the governor cared to name.

On advice of Judge Jesse Thomas, the accused mayor and councilmen submitted to re-arrest, however, and went to trial on charges of riot before Justice of the Peace Daniel H. Wells, who though not a member of the church, was friendly to it. He acquitted all the accused. Public feeling ran high. Mob violence was threatened. Both political parties joined in denouncing the people who would not vote on their side to break the almost even balance of power that existed between Whigs and Democrats. Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum fled across the river to Iowa, indicating in a letter to Joseph's wife, Emma Smith, their intention of going to Washington, D. C., to appeal again for help in straightening out the tangle. Rumors flew thick and fast, until both citizens and Saints expected the direct calamities of massacre and looting and bloodshed. The Saints appealed to their leader to come back, and reluctantly he did, knowing that death probably awaited him.

Governor Ford had pledged the state militia to protect Joseph Smith and his brother, if he would appear at Carthage to stand trial on these riot charges. They accordingly surrendered at Carthage—the county seat, and were released on bond to appear later for trial. Late that night, however, they were taken out of their hotel rooms, and without any sort of an appearance or hearing, committed to the county jail on a charge of treason, in spite of the protests of their attorneys. 12 o'clock noon, June 27, was set as the day and time of their trial on the treason charge, but the time was extended to the 29th on the pretext that all the witnesses were not available.

On the morning of June 27, 1844, Governor Ford (who had taken personal command of the situation) disbanded all the troops who had been guarding the town of Carthage, except the Carthage Greys, and marched away to Nauvoo to make a speech, leaving only eight men to guard the jail, and sixty more encamped a quarter of a mile away. To say the least, the governor was most naive in believing that the prisoners would be safe during his absence, for it had been publicly reported in Carthage that "there is nothing against these men; the law cannot reach them, but powder and ball will."

Shortly after five o'clock on the afternoon of June 27, 1844, an armed mob of somewhere between two and three hundred men invaded Carthage, their faces painted black and red. The few guards discharged some blank shells and fled, according to previous arrangement. Unopposed, the mob stormed into the jail, up the narrow stairway at the side of the building, and into the upstairs sitting room at the front of the building, where the two prisoners sat visiting with friends. Hyrum Smith was killed by a ball which came upwards from the stairway, and through the door. Joseph ran to a window to leap out, and was met by a storm of bullets from without. He toppled into the yard; was picked up, leaned against a stone well-curb, and riddled by four more bullets from a firing squad. Then the mob slunk away, and a deathly and ominous silence descended over Carthage as the populace realized what had been done, and to visualize the vengeance of the people of Nauvoo when word should reach them. But we must wait for the next chapter of our story.

CHALLENGES

Songs quite often bring memories. The Kashmir Song reminds me of Bob S., who constantly sang of "pale hands." The hymn "Glad Tidings" reminds me of Elbert S., a child of eight who always asked for it in junior church; "We're Marching to Zion" makes me envision my first church school teacher; "The Old, Old Path" brings memories of a Mexican plaza; and "The Sun Is Shining Somewhere" recalls a rainy day with very pleasant company.

Too few people who "sing . . . seek to understand," and we find a church school song sung for prayer service, a song whose words are concerning the Nativity used at Thanksgiving, and a communion song at junior church. I would recommend that a course in hymn-singing be given in every branch.

We hear a lot these days about the "average man." Statisticians have compiled long lists of figures concerning body measurements, intelligence quotients, and living costs. The average man eats so much, sleeps so long, and owns so many white shirts. Of course they recognize that there probably is no person in existence who fits that average standard to perfection, but they continue to measure all mankind against statistics.

It was the average man of the street who rejected Christ and chose Barabbas. The average man scoffed at the possibility of a "hidden record." The average man in Germany embraced the Nazi philosophy as a new way of life.

"What do ye more than others?" —Matthew 5: 47. There is no distinction in being a common man. The average man attends church only periodically; the average man owns a Bible but never has read more than one whole book; the average man does not pay tithing in any form. Mere compliance with the basic laws of the church would raise one above the level of the "average man."

I've had a number of instances related to me during my life of actual persecution of members of our ministry by nonmembers, and also by church members. In everyday life we elect our political representatives who make and enforce laws; then we criticize them, evade their rule, and crucify their careers. The public makes and breaks its officials. But there's a difference in the church. The priesthood are God-chosen, and even though they may commit human errors, they are God's representatives on earth.

"Who can stretch forth his hand against the Lord's anointed, and be guiltless?"—I Samuel 26: 9.

Look back into your memory. What has happened to those individuals who have actually actively worked against the church or a sincere representative of God? They are forgotten and completely estranged from church relationship, unless they have realized their mistake and made an honest attempt at restitution. Personally, even if I wanted to hinder the work of God's men, I would be afraid to do so, for the way of the guilty is hard.

Recent magazines and newspapers have carried much publicity about a movie named "Lost Week End." However, those same publications veer away from mentioning the many week ends lost every week. Every Sabbath which passes by without attendance at church is a lost opportunity. It is not only an opportunity to refresh one's spiritual outlook, but also a chance to serve. Many people quote, "Sunday is the day of rest," without realizing that physical relaxation is not the only type of rest needed. Human souls are troubled by the world turmoil, by intolerance and selfishness. Peaceful communion with God and man brings rest to the restless soul. That's what is lost each week end.

A wise old Negro once said, "A chip on de shoulder is 'bout de heavies' load a body ever carried." And when that proverbial chip is knocked off, its weight is not lessened. You know the individual who goes around with this attitude: "Now my feelings are easily hurt.

Everyone always picks on me. Go ahead and speak, and no matter what you say, it will strike me wrong." This individual is miserable and so are his associates. A chip is a poor accoutrement. The armor of protection against barbs, verbal or otherwise, is light and easily worn.

Ever think about a wastebasket? It is the final resting place of the errors of the worker. A letter is finally written, but the first attempts are crushed and tossed aside. An advertising man worked hard on that ad that was thrown away with little thought. Receipts representing expenditures for all types of livelihood lay discarded with scraps of cloth from the new dress. There is nothing there that anyone wants. A wastebasket gathers all the errors, worthless ideas, and aged materials. These are destroyed and forgotten. A wastebasket plays its part in life by serving as a spot where one may begin again.

Members for Fifty Years

Fifty years ago this month Patriarch Gomer Griffith baptized my wife and me into the church; God has been so wonderful to us that we feel we shall always be indebted to him. We have been blessed both spiritually and temporally.

God first spoke to me in 1879; I was then told, "The time will come when you will preach the gospel." Ten years later, He spoke again and said, "When you preach, I want you to speak as you are led by the power of the Holy Ghost." One night, as I repeated the Lord's prayer, saying, "Lead us not into temptation," a voice admonished, "Never repeat that I tempt you." How glad I was when I learned, in 1892, the correct version of that prayer, and found the church which had brought it forth.

After hearing of the restored gospel, I devoted much time to prayer and study; God poured out his spirit with unquestionable power. I was reluctant to be baptized, however, as I disliked the idea of being immersed. Again God spoke to me, and I was made to see the folly of my fears. I made an unconditional surrender to Christ. . . . I was willing to give up all, even life itself, to become a true follower of His.

I was ordained a priest in 1910, and an elder in 1917. Once I was divinely directed to a home where a young girl had been injured in an accident. When I asked her if she cared for administration, she said "Yes." God was there, the prayer was answered, and she was spared the operation which was to have been performed the following day. Again I was directed to administer to a dying man, who recovered to preach the gospel to others. The experiences I have had would make a book; certainly God has been good to me. A. B. Klar

One Hundred Famous American Books

The Grolier Club in 1902 exhibited and printed a catalogue of "One Hundred Books Famous in English Literature." The same club is now exhibiting, in their original editions, what Mr. Frederick B. Adams, Jr., and two others of a committee, have selected as the one hundred books which have had the most influence on the "life and culture of the American people."

Says a writer in the New York Times: "Interpreting 'America' in its widest sense, they have included books not written in America, as Susanna Rowson's Charlotte; books not written by Americans, as Henry W. Herbert's (Frank Forester's) The Warwick Woodlands (our first sporting novel); books not first published in America, as Franklin's Autobiography. And included in the term books, as Mr. Adams pointed out are items strict constructionists can fairly claim are not "books" at all, but broadsides. And, lest the uninitiated think that it was only in the larger cities that these works of lasting importance found their way into print, consider the following birthplaces of some of the hundred: Newburyport, Massachusetts; Augusta, Georgia; Plattsburg, New York; Nashville, Tennessee; Palmyra, New York; Cincinnati, Ohio, and Madison, Wisconsin."

Among these books so selected and now on display at 47 East 60th Street, New York City, is the Book of Mormon, credited to Joseph Smith and Palmyra, New York, 1830. Israel A. Smith.

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank the Saints for their prayers in my behalf during my recent illness. Through their petitions and administration I have been restored to health. I still need the prayers of all for the grace and will to carry on my Master's work. MECY ANNA EARNES.

News Briefs

WOODBINE, IOWA.—The semi-annual conference of the northwestern Iowa district was held at Woodbine on June 23. Apostle Paul Hanson and the district officers were in charge of the services. The day began with a prayer meeting at 9:30 a.m., followed by Apostle Hanson's address at 11 o'clock. Lunches were served in the basement and on the lawn. At 1:30 in the afternoon the young people held a business meeting to complete plans for an outing at Crystal Lake. A general business session was held at 2:30, with a number of recommendations for ordinations being made. Apostle Hanson then addressed the conference and the young men who had been called to the priesthood. The Saints of Woodbine were given a vote of thanks for their hospitality at the close of the service, and the conference was adjourned.

SYLVAN LAKE, ALBERTA.—Members of the Alberta district Zion's League met for their first youth camp at Sylvan Lake the week of June 29 to July 6. Eighty young people were present to enjoy the ministry of Charles R. Hield, Phillip Moore, James Menzies, and David Larmour. The camp was made possible through the untiring effort of Doris Shaw, president of the League. At the business meeting, it was decided that the youth camp be made an annual event.

COALVILLE, IOWA.—Harold Mann, recently ordained an elder, is doing much to further the work of the priesthood in Coalville. Nine new members were baptized on June 16, and confirmed on June 23. Officiating at these services were Pastor F. H. Higgins, Henry Castens, and Elders Nutgrass, Richardson, and Mann.

TRENTON, MISSOURI.—The annual business meeting was held July 7; Stake President Emery Jennings and Elder Moffit were in charge. Since former Pastor C. F. Cunningham is leaving for Greenwich, South Carolina, Paul Sparks was elected to take his place; Charles Wintermeyer will be the associate pastor. Other officers elected were Elsie Marriott, secretary and church school director; Roland Lambkin, treasurer; Florence Wintermeyer, director of music; and Nell Lambkin, reporter and assistant church school director. Following the meeting, a basket lunch was held on the church lawn.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Stone Church.—A picnic dinner honoring G. E. Tickemyer, who has just completed eight years of service as pastor of Stone Church, was sponsored by the hostesses at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Gault on June 18; seventy-two guests, including the husbands of the hostesses and several church officers, were present. Rufus Vincent, of the Stone Church Doctrine and Covenants class, showed colored pictures of Old Mexico at Bartholomew Hall on June 17; Brother Vincent took the pictures himself while visiting Mexico recently. Fifty members of the Y. K. T. class held a picnic supper at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Basset at Lake Tapawingo on June 30. Servicemen returning to the Stone Church congregation are Robert White, Frederick Thompson, David Wheeler, and Paul Brackenberry. Cpl. John Chapman is now stationed in Korea, and is singing in the chapel choir there.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI.—Two children were blessed at the morning service on Children's Day, and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon nine new members were baptized; Pastor A. N. Barnes and D. W. Sherman were the officiating ministers. The children assisted in the service by singing "Following the Master." At 7:30 twelve young girls presented a candlelight pledge service and the "Children's Hour" under the direction of Mildred and Hildred Thomas, with Irene Williams at the piano. On June 16, Elder A. O. Crownover, pastor of Mobile branch, was the evening speaker. Those baptized on Children's Day were confirmed at this service.

PORT ELGIN, ONTARIO.—The Owen Sound reunion, held the week of June 29-July 7 at Port Elgin, was voted the most successful ever to be held in the area. Presiding over the reunion activities were Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Blair Jensen, Seventies Percy Farrow and H. I. Velt, High Priests John and Almer Sheehy, and Evangelists Shields, Fligg, Worth, Belrose, Hewett, and McGregor. Mrs. H. I. Velt conducted a daily class for women. An average of 400 attended the weekly services, with approximately 700 present on the closing Sunday. A special ceremony for the opening of the new dining hall was held on the evening of June 29; the mayor and councilmen of Port Elgin, the editor of the Port Elgin Times, and the Reverend Paddon of the United Church were featured speakers on this occasion. The hall was constructed by volunteer workers at a cost of $3,500; it is fully equipped and free of debt. As many as 600 meals can be served within an hour. Classes for young people were supervised by Dr. D. A. Campbell, Clara Dobson, and Pat Lockeyer; Mrs. Percy Farrow was in charge of music. On the closing day, $1,000 was taken in collection; this money will be used in the erection of an auditorium for use in the future.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—District President William Patterson was the guest speaker in June. Special musical numbers were provided by Rosalee and Betty Martin, Kenneth and Betty Buckmaster, and Ann and Hazel Williams. The third Thursday evening of every month has been set apart as family night, at which time the members of the congregation meet for social entertainment. The Zion's League held a party on June 28 at the Roy Williams home.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN.—The annual western Michigan district conference was held at Traverse City on June 29 and 30. Missionary Virgil Billings, Elder Harry Simons, and Sylvia McKeage were guest speakers. The conference began at 10 a.m. Saturday with a prayer service, followed by a business session, which was adjourned at noon and continued at 2 p.m. At 4 o'clock Harry Simons addressed the conference. The evening service consisted of a song fest and motion pictures. Sunday's activities included a prayer meeting and sermon by Virgil Billings in the morning; a lecture by Sylvia McKeage and a talk by Elder Simons in the afternoon. It was voted that the time and place for next year's conference be designated by the district presidency.

DES MOINES, IOWA.—Seventy Roscoe Davey recently completed a series of illustrated lectures. The women's department sponsored a mother-daughter banquet in observance of Mother's Day. With the exception of the Deserters, all women's groups have discontinued having meetings for the summer. The Des Moines choir and six guest soloists gave a recital to raise funds for an organ. The May 19 district conference began with a prayer service for the young people at 7 a.m., a general prayer meeting at 9, and a sermon by Apostle Paul Hanson at 11. Following a brief business session in the afternoon, Roscoe Davey spoke; Apostle Hanson was again the speaker in the evening. Six new members were baptized on Children's Day. The Zion's League is in charge of the evening service the last Sunday of each month. The softball team, sponsored by the men's club, is participating in the inter-city league, playing on Tuesday and Saturday evenings.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—The men's club sponsored a father-son banquet on the evening of June 18; Dr. H. A. Merchant was the toastmaster, and Apostle Arthur Oakman the guest speaker. Recognition was given the oldest father with a son present, the youngest son with a father present, and the largest family group represented. Apostle Paul Hanson was among the honored guests. The recently-organized Camera Club meets weekly at the church; Esmond Crown and Lester Ruffcorn are the instructors. The annual branch picnic was held Saturday, June 22, at Fontenelle Park; contests, games, and a basket dinner were features of the day. Three new members were baptized during the church school hour on Children's Day; a confirmation service followed at 11 o'clock.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—Dr. Floyd McDowell and Apostles Arthur Oakman and Paul Hanson have been recent speakers; Pastor V. D. Ruch gave the sermon at the first meeting in Bayliss Park. The adult choir and Cecilian Singers provide music for all services. Fifty young people from Council Bluffs and Omaha attended the Easter sunrise service and breakfast. A mother-daughter social was held with members of the Rosetta Club acting as hostesses; the Wa-He-Lo group was in charge of the program. Mother's Day was observed with a service of music, under the direction of Aleta Runkle, with Rogene Stephun and Mrs. V. D. Ruch as readers. The primary, junior, and intermediate classes presented the Children's Day program; fifteen new members were baptized. Plans are being made for the annual summer festival to be held on the church lawn. A similar project in March netted $6,400 for the building fund.

FIFTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.—Elder and Mrs. T. A. Dershimer celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on July 9. Since Elder Dershimer is pastor of the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, congregation, a special service was held in honor of the occasion. Refreshments were served in the lower auditorium of the church, after which a brief musical program was presented, and Elder E. B. Hull, former pastor of the group, gave a resumé of the lives of Brother and Sister Dershimer, emphasizing the years of service they had given the church. At the close of the program, they were presented a basket of daisies containing fifty-eight one dollar bills as a token of appreciation from members of the branch.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Recognition was given the oldest and youngest mother present at the Mother's Day service on May 12. Dorothy Joy was in charge of the Children's Day program, which was based on the outline contained in the Herald. Eight new members were baptized, Elders Frank McDonald and Paul Counts officiating. The district conference was held on June 16. President J. E. Nicholson was in charge of the early prayer service, after which Apostle Paul Hanson and Elder John Darling conducted classes for the adults and young people. The branch extends sympathy to C. Cleveland Parker in the loss of his wife and baby son; Mr. Parker was discharged from service last fall, after serving three and one-half years overseas.

Our Departed Ones

EDWARDS.—Edward Thomas, was born on November 21, 1888, at Omaha, Nebraska, and passed away, after several months of illness, at his home in Grand Island, Nebraska, where he had lived for the past twenty-two years. On March 13, 1913, he was united in marriage to Vera Brookhouser. He united with the Reorganized Church when he was eight years old; his membership was at Sterling, Colorado. He also belonged to several fraternal organizations.

He is survived by his wife; two sisters: Mrs. Ruth Jenks of Omaha, and Miss Minta Gaines of Denver; and one brother, Roy Edwards. Services were held from the Crosby-Meyer Funeral Home in Omaha, with Elder V. D. Ruch in charge. Burial was in the Hillcrest Cemetery.

COLEMAN.—Elizabeth Lilley, was born December 14, 1861, in Sice Command, Wales, and died in Fraser, Iowa, on May 12, 1946. She came to America at the age of nine. In 1874 she was married to John W. Coleman; thirteen children were born to this union. Her husband, two sons, and a daughter preceded her in death. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1904.

Surviving are three sons: George W., Bonnevill, Wyoming; William J., Madrid, Iowa; Alonzo, Boone, Iowa; seven daughters: Mrs. Edith Davis of Canada; Mrs. Alice Winkie, Akin, Minnesota; Mrs. Emily Rogers, Custer, Wyoming; Mrs. Laura Phipps, Fraser, Iowa; Mrs. Violet Wheeler of Illinois; Mrs. Golda Mallas and Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, Boone, Iowa; two brothers: John Lilley, Big Horn, Wyoming, and Joseph Lilley, Boone, Iowa; sixty-one grandchildren; thirty-five great-grandchildren, and seven great-great-grandchildren. The funeral service was held at the Reorganized Church in Boone, Elders Frank Fry and A. P. Winans officiating. Interment was in the Bluff Creek cemetery.

LOFF.—Mary S., was born February 23, 1880, in Drammen, Norway, and died June 13, 1946, at Duluth, Minnesota. She came to the United States in 1904, and was united in marriage to Carl J. Loff in 1907. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on March 4, 1921, and by her fine example succeeded in converting her entire family to the faith.

She is survived by her husband; two daughters: Mrs. Phillip Hedenburg, Duluth; and Mrs. Walter Duncan, Seattle, Washington; one son, Carl H., also of Duluth; a brother, Oscar Gunderson, Minneapolis, Minnesota; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held from Johnson's Mortuary in charge of Seventy J. H. Yager. Interment was in Oneota Cemetery.

McKEOWN.—Arthur L., was born at Crescent, Iowa, May 22, 1874, and lived in Council Bluffs, Iowa, most of his life. After a brief illness, he passed away at the Jennie Edmundsen Hospital on June 24, 1946. In 1898 he was united in marriage to Emma Humphries; to this union, two children were born. Mrs. McKeown and both children preceded him in death. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Underwood, Iowa, on June 15, 1900.

Left to mourn are three sisters: Mrs. E. J. Vayhinger, Logan, Iowa; Mrs. Louis Schneider, Shenandoah, Iowa; and Miss Alice McKeown, Council Bluffs; one brother, J. R. McKeown, Harlan, Iowa; three grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Services were held from Woodring's Funeral Home in Council Bluffs, with Elder V. D. Ruch in charge. Burial was in Walnut Hill Cemetery.

HARPER.—Frederick, was born in West Malvern, England, January 13, 1879, and died June 6, 1946, at New Britain, Connecticut. He became a member of the Reorganized Church while in England, and occupied the office of priest; after coming to New York, he was ordained an elder, which office he held until his death.

He leaves his wife, Mary; a daughter, Mrs. Robert Brewster; and a son, Frederick, Jr. Services were held from the home of his son in Alden, New York; Elders P. L. Weegar, W. O. Simpson, and E. V. Wagner officiating.

VANFLEET.—Nelson Schuyler, son of Nelson and Abigail VanFleet, was born August 27, 1882, at Abilene, Kansas, and passed away June 30 at his home in Alta Loma, California. In 1913 he was married to Minnie Kubitsky; to this union six children were born. At the age of ten, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and remained a faithful member throughout his life. His desire was that his children should have all the spiritual culture which the church and college could afford.

He leaves his wife; a daughter, Sarah, of Alta Loma, California; five sons: William of Denver; Robert of the Army; Frank, Ralph, and Edgar of Alta Loma; two grandchildren; three step-grandchildren, and one step-great-grandchild. Also surviving are four sisters: Mrs. Mary Crum, Los Angeles; Mrs. Sarah Mills, Inglewood; Mrs. Cora Garner, Sunland; and Mrs. Roberta Shoemaker, Ontario, California. Funeral services were held at Ontario, Apostle John W. Rushton and L. J. Ostertag officiating. Interment was in the Belle Vue Cemetery.

Gold Star Column 15

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

P. S.

* POLIO. As swimming pools are being closed in the very middle of the sports and vacation season, many young persons will be sad to see swimming suits hanging dry and unused in the clothes closets, while their owners perspire in the hot weather. Worried parents who fear for the injury of their children from the dreaded infantile paralysis will do well to co-operate with the advice of medical and civil authorities. The danger is great at this time. . . . A visiting medical friend points to the establishment of "spastic centers" in other parts of the country to help fight poliomyelitis, and to treat and rehabilitate those who have suffered from it. It is possible that the disease may reach proportions too great for doctors to give all necessary treatment, and that under their direction, training centers should be established to meet the need here in the Middle West.

* BISHOP AND MRS. MARK H. SIEGFRIED celebrated their fortieth wedding anniversary at the home on West Walnut Street—a home that during these years has opened its hospitable doors to incalculable numbers of church people and visitors, during conferences and at all seasons. In that very house they were married, and Patriarch Elbert A. Smith who had married them was present to help them celebrate. Children came, and later the in-laws and grandchildren; and all these were present to add charm and happiness to the occasion, together with many friends who have visited them and congratulated them on other anniversaries. The bride's brother, Paul N. Craig, had sketched a picture of the two as they appeared at their wedding, and this was printed on the napkins with which refreshments were served. A slender granddaughter wore the original wedding gown; that gracious old-fashioned garment seemed to have shrunk during the years so that it no longer fits the owner.

In one room were the presents just given them: lovely ruby crystal, stemware and ornaments, flowers and books. And in another room were the older presents of forty years ago; equally lovely, somewhat quaint now, but proving well that the modern age has no monopoly of skill and artistry, for the paper thin porcelain cups, the lamps and dishes of another generation represent a spirit and concept of beauty that modern makers have lost. Then there was a tableful of presents from the bride's mother's wedding—items to make the antique collector envious, showing equally the skill and artistry of an even earlier time. It is good to appreciate the present, but also fine to respect and enjoy the achievements of ancestors whose works have endured beyond their time.

In all this the hosts appeared as happy, as young in spirit, as when they first joined hands. Friends, congratulating them, wished them a good start on their "second forty."

* IT IS MORE FUN to have an honor that you do not advertise than to advertise an honor you do not have.

* UNCLE JOE was at the magazine shop, purchasing a popular periodical of doubtful value.

"Why do you buy that one?" a friend asked him.

"Because it's still only a dime," Uncle Joe responded dourly.

Then, as an afterthought, he added, "And it's still not worth it."

Reflections

Zion Reunion

The sun shone bright on the richly wooded Missouri hills, and in a quiet retreat on the Richmond road, church people from Independence and "regions round about" were gathered for the second annual reunion. Though the day was hot, a cool breeze rose from the blue surface of the lake, ascended the hill, and brought refreshing comfort to the people who filled the tent to overflowing. So beautiful was the scene that one member exclaimed, "It must have been something like this looking out over the Sea of Galilee!" And if people want a name for that lovely little body of water, could they do better than to follow a time-honored custom and take it from the Good Book? "Lake Galilee" would be appropriate and pretty.

Speakers

Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the speaker at the eleven o'clock preaching service, and delivered a message on "The Gathering" which we hope before too long to have for publication—a message that would bring great benefits to the church and its people, if they would observe it.

At the noon hour, a long line of campers and visitors was served with dinner in the rustic lodge, while many others opened baskets and spread picnic lunches on the grass beneath the trees. There were not five thousand present, and very few if any—had fish on the menu. But the spirit of the great repast, when Jesus fed the multitude, was there.

The afternoon bell rang at two o'clock, and brought a ready response from the people, who came streaming back to the large tent on the hill, to hear Apostle C. G. Mesley speak on the subject, "Let the solemnities of eternity rest upon your minds" (Doctrine and Covenants 43: 8). It was good to hear his voice again, and many an old friend who had known and appreciated him in his work in Kansas City Stake was there to hear him, visibly moved with gratitude for his return. Eight years of service in his Australian homeland have strengthened him and deepened his seriousness, and at the same time people find the same kindness in his eyes, the same friendliness in his smile that they knew before his going.

"Yes!" for the Reunion

The question has often been asked, "Does Independence need a reunion? Don't we see enough of each other anyway?" No, we do not see enough of each other in the routine of daily work. We don't always see the best parts of our personalities, and since there are so many of us, we often don't see each other at all. At reunion you greet people who are practically your neighbors, some of whom you haven't seen for months! Moreover, we need to see each other under different circumstances than the usual city noise and haste. It is the spirit of reunion time that brings out qualities in our friends we had never known, or had forgotten. Certainly Independence needs the reunion.

And it would appear a safe statement that in this second annual meeting the Independence reunion has established itself, and with good administration should continue to grow in importance. A few years hence, and this could be one of the great reunions of the church.

A fine young man, Bishop Wayne Updike of Kansas City, was responsible for the evening sermons.

Premonitions of Zion

We were sitting in a garden—a beautiful garden. It was made so by the hands of one who loved it. He knew what soil each plant, bush, bulb, and tree required, what treatment of water, sun, and shade would help each one to grow best. Knowledge, patience, toil, and care had made it beautiful so that from any point the visitor would get a new perspective or, moving along the paths, observe a rapidly changing scene delightful to the eye. And along the paths there were nooks and alcoves, with chairs for the visitor to rest in, tables where he might read or write. A waning moon swimming in a blue sea with cloud-land shores overhead, cast soft shadows under the trees, and one inhaled the clean country air, fragrant with the scents of growing plants of many kinds. . .

But that evening there was food on the tables, products of the soil and of human skill. And when the eating was done there was talk—good talk unhurried and uninterrupted, the kind of talk in which one re-examines life and his thoughts about it. A surgeon, under questions, discussed new medicines that had been described in the papers, and a new type of operation. A teacher talked of social and racial problems in his city. An orchardist talked of his plans for the soil, and new varieties of trees. A philosopher swung the talk around to the objectives of the church, and what might be expected in the future.

Under such circumstances, talk of Zion was the most natural thing in the world, and all things seemed possible. And were not these very circumstances a foretaste of fulfillments yet to come? This happiness, this comity of minds, this brave examination of reality and faith was an "assurance of things hoped for, an evidence of things not seen." If this much could be realized, why not the rest?

If we could only realize that many things we have now are steps on the way, promises already partly filled, the groundwork of the plan yet to be completed in detail, we could be much happier and more grateful for what we have.

OFFICIAL

Regional Conferences on Religious Education

The Department of Religious Education, with the wholehearted co-operation of members of the Twelve involved, have arranged a series of Regional Conferences on Religious Education as follows:

PLACES	DATES	AREA REPRESENTED	REGIONAL CHAIRMAN
London, Ontario	Sept. 13-15	All districts and branches of Ontario	Almer Sheehy
Flint, Michigan	Sept. 20-22	All districts of Michigan	Harry Simons
Chicago, or Aurora, Illinois	Sept. 27-29	All branches and districts of Chicago-land and Northeastern Illinois districts.	Joseph Baldwin

The theme for these conferences will be: "More effective religious education in our smaller (typical) branches." Each conference will be in session from Friday 6:00 p.m. to Sunday 4:00 p.m. The staff of each conference will consist of F. M. McDowell and John R. Darling from the Department of Religious Education, any general church officials available, and selected assistants among district and local workers.

Each conference will have five major divisions as follows:

1. More effective religious education for young adults and adults.
2. More effective religious education for young people.
3. More effective religious education for the junior high age.
4. More effective religious education for children.
5. More effective administration of religious education.

Each of these divisions will be called a commission, and each division will be provided with a commission chairman, secretary, and stenographer. Meetings of all the commissions will be interspersed with worship services, demonstrations, and social and recreational features.

Attendance at these conferences will be limited generally to administrative officers and key religious education workers of the branches and districts represented.

A registration fee of $1.50 will be charged each individual attending the conference. This to assist in defraying the expense of the conference.

Regular sessions of the conference will continue on Sunday. While Sunday visitors are not anticipated, should such come they will be cared for in special services separate from the sessions of the conference, with the possible exception of the Sunday evening service which, if desired, may be provided by the local authorities of the branch where the conference is held.

An attempt will be made to place in the hands of district and local workers further analyses of each of the problems to be discussed. Letters of inquiry should be addressed to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, or to the regional chairman.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

It is extremely inhospitable to invite people to your house and give a certain number of them not a single swallow of anything they can drink. In other words, to force people to go thirsty or to drink an alcoholic beverage which they do not want, is as inhospitable as to invite them to dine and put nothing on their plates but the one item of food to which they happen to be allergic.—Emily Post.

Across the Desk

IN HIS CURRENT report to the First Presidency, Elder Casimir Nikel comments on the problems arising in the Cleveland Branch, over which he presides, by reason of transfers to the Center Place and elsewhere. Brother Nikel reports:

The predominant spirit of migration in our national life has shown up in a definite way here. We lost fifty-eight members by transfer during the past year, which began with my coming to Cleveland in June of 1945. Thirty-eight of these members were active by way of attendance and financial support. Nine of the thirty-eight were priesthood members. Consequently our working personnel has been depleted and our financial strength has been undermined. Our total gains for that same period consist of thirteen adult members; eleven by transfer and two by baptism, which occurred the last Sunday of June. Besides the losses by transfer, we had several deaths, among them one charter member of the branch.

This arresting example of the influence of transfers out of an important center illustrates a problem which is causing the general officers of the church considerable perturbation. Without any specific reference to Cleveland, we would like to point out that many persons are gathering to the Center Place and the regions round about without the consultation provided in the law and are moving to centers where we cannot minister to them adequately and at the same time are leaving branches which can ill afford the loss of their spiritual and financial support. If the work of the gathering is to go forward as designed by God, it is imperative there shall be stable branches throughout the domestic fields and in the missions abroad, and that these branches shall be maintained without serious loss by migration.

The Glory of God

By Robert J. Miller

Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also, otherwise there is no existence. Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light. And every man whose spirit receiveth not the light is under condemnation, for man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God; yea, man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple. The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5, 6.

WE AS A PEOPLE talk of Zion, and wonder when it will be established.

God has set no specific time for the building of Zion in point of years—but in point of human behavior. When Zion does come, it will have been created and sanctified by intelligence; it will be governed by intelligence; and it will be perpetuated by intelligence; for intelligence is the glory of God.

Intelligence is a universal spiritual entity as eternal as God, and coexistent with him in point of time. It is the highest attribute of God, for it is his glory, and is possessed by him in its fullness.

In the day God created man “in his image, and after his likeness” he shared this prized attribute with man, and thereby endowed him with the quality essential to free agency and ultimate fellowship with him. Today, as at creation, man possesses intelligence in varying degrees by the grace of God; and in this common bond, man recognizes a true relationship with God the Father.

INTELLIGENCE would not be considered “the glory of God” by Christ himself, were it not for the fact that intelligence is basically good and honest, forsaking evil. But it is possible, however, to pervert its use, just as it is possible to pervert truth and use it for evil.

In the work of God it operates creatively evolving new works and processes, compatible and in harmony with existing law. It is worthy to pass judgment on all creation for in its bosom creation was conceived.

The sphere in which intelligence operates in and through the mind of man is that of comprehending truth and directing its use. It seeks to understand the purposes of God in all created things; and in its understanding and comprehension, man finds the power to “have dominion over all the earth and subdue it.”

THE OPINION has often been expressed that “we are getting too smart”—that modern inventions and discoveries are leading us away from God; that we no longer have the time to seek God in worship, or to fulfill our proper social obligations by the “good neighbor policy,” because science has created too many distracting influences.

It is true that man is awakening, as it were, from a deep sleep, and now appreciates the tremendous power latent in his intelligence. This has been proved innumerable times in the recent past as well as today. It has also been proved that perversion is possible in its use. But dare we lay the sins of man in any way at the door of intelligence?

That which intelligence reveals in spiritual and physical things testifies to the glory of God, to his power, might, and dominion. Surely then, it cannot be condemned for doing its work. Neither can men who exercise intelligence be condemned for their part in scientific achievement—whether it be the revelation of spiritual truth or the discovery of atomic energy.

Progress in science is not under condemnation, as some might have us believe, but enjoys the blessings of God, because it glorifies God. Discovery and invention are the fruits of intelligence acting in their proper sphere, and upon the truths of God as they are “independent in the sphere in which God has placed them.” In other words, scientists work with truth as it exists.

If atomic energy is wrongly used to destroy, intelligence has no part in the dictation of that policy. If we do not neighbor as we once did, the fault does not lie with the railroads, busses, or automobiles. If we spend all our time in pernicious ways, we cannot blame the products of creative, honest thought. Intelligence "in its proper sphere" has no part in dictating any destructive use of truth.

THE FACT that we have made a havoc of our lives and muddled up society is not a fault of intelligence. The sin lies within ourselves, and is directly attributable to the error of our ways. Honest thought—intelligence—does not tell us to swear, use tobacco, drink intoxicating liquors, snub our neighbors, procrastinate our work, and waste our time, or break any of the moral and physical laws. We do those things because we want to indulge our appetites, give vent to our feelings, or satisfy the lusts of the flesh. And as a rule, we don't think too hard upon whether or not they are right before we do them. In fact, we often feed ourselves a lie to induce the conviction that they are right and will do us no harm.

The answer to our trouble does not lie with the progress of man in the realm of thought, but within ourselves. We have proved capable of dealing honestly with truth in abstract matters; but we find it hard to do so with truth as it enters into our daily living. For instance: We like the taste of food, so we eat to excess; intelligence tells us this is wrong and will injure our health; in fact, intelligence proves it to us, yet we deliberately eat unwisely to satisfy taste. We like to ride in automobiles and take long trips, so we devote a lot of time to pleasure riding, and we find ourselves away from home so much during our idle hours we have little time to neighbor. We could go on and cite more vicious examples; but it is unnecessary, for we know this to be true.

We are prone to do the things our senses crave, and give vent to the passions within us. We know when we are wrong, for these things were "plainly manifest from the beginning,"

but we want to do them because they appeal to us, and are so satisfying at the moment. Herein lies the answer to the question, "Why has science outstripped the church in progress?"

Learned men of the world, and of the church, who can and do deal honestly with truth in impersonal matters, have trouble in being honest with truth as it affects them personally. They all know what is good or bad for them—intelligence tells them that; yet they too fail to deal honestly with truth in personal matters on many occasions.

WHERE, THEN, lies the failure? Where is the condemnation of man? "Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive [obey] not the light [truth]. And every man whose spirit receiveth [obeyeth] not the light [truth] is under condemnation, for man is spirit." The failure lies in disobedience to all natural and spiritual law, for it is of God.

The law dealing directly with man has been given of God through Christ and the prophets that man might learn to live in harmony with God and his fellow man; that his spirit and body might be in perfect accord—for only in this manner can there be a fullness of life. To quote, "The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple."

The hope of each of us lies in being honest with ourselves in all our thinking, and in acting honestly upon it. We must learn self-denial and self-discipline. We must learn to be our own severest critics, and admit our faults to ourselves and to God. There is no hope for us when we close our eyes to our weaknesses; and there is little hope for the church. God can only work with us when we are willing to work with ourselves; for only then will we humbly turn to God, accept his

15. The Dark and Cloudy Day

OUR PREVIOUS CHAPTER brought us to the tragic date of June 27, 1844, when Joseph Smith and his brother were murdered in cold blood at Carthage jail, while under the protection and custody of the State of Illinois, although Governor Thomas Ford had solemnly promised them protection and a fair trial. The death of these two leaders was the beginning of the end for the beautiful and thriving city of Nauvoo. It was also the beginning of what the church has come to term since, "The Dark and Cloudy Day,"—a period of hardship and trial, frustration and disappointment.

On July 15, 1844, three members of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles in Nauvoo, were joined by W. W. Phelps in a letter, advising the Saints to be resigned, to trust in God, and to continue to build the city and the temple which had recently been begun. On July 30, 1844, Samuel H. Smith, a brother of Joseph and Hyrum, also died, presumably as a result of an injury incurred some time previous at the hands of a mob. In October, 1844, notices were published in many of the newspapers in towns about Nauvoo, calling all men to meet at Warsaw on a certain date for a great "wolf hunt." It was generally understood that the "wolves" to be hunted would be Mormons. Governor Ford heard of the proposed hunt, and sent the militia to keep the peace. The wolf hunters fled without getting any wolves when they heard of this development.

Things continued more or less peaceably in Nauvoo until January 21, 1845. On that date the legislature of the state repealed the Nauvoo Charter, and thereby sealed the doom of the city, which was thus left without any form of local government. Governor Ford's advice was ignored in this action, for he had counseled only the revision of the charter to eliminate its objectionable features; he had pointed out the manifest impossibility of keeping any semblance of order or progress in a city of 30,000 without any sort of local government.

THE PROBLEM OF civil government was perplexing enough, but the Saints had another problem which was to them even more serious. That was the problem of ecclesiastical government. When their leader had been killed, most of the church officials were far away. Sidney Rigdon and Parley P. Pratt arrived shortly after, making three members of the Twelve, and one member of the Presidency in Nauvoo. If the church had been able to present a united front to its enemies, the history following 1844 might have been different, but the church was torn internally with strife and inordinate ambition, and dishonest, as well as honest difference of opinion. As early as 1831, instruction had been given, which, if heeded, would have enabled them to steer safely through this troublesome period. That instruction, given in a revelation through Joseph Smith, and accepted by the church as law, was that "... none else shall be appointed to this gift [i. e., of being prophet and head of the church] except it be through him." The church was further warned; "... receive not the teaching of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; ... For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate, and be ordained as I have told you before."

During the first years of this "dark and cloudy day" then, the church was harrassed not only by its enemies from without, but by the jockeyings for power of the men within. Brigham Young, who was the president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, published an article in the Millennial Star on August 8, 1844, stating in part: "You cannot fill the office of prophet, seer, and revelator. God must do this. . . . You cannot take any man and put him at your head; you would scatter the saints to the four winds. You would sever the Priesthood. I again repeat, No man can stand at our head, except God reveals it from the heavens." On August 15, in the following issue of the same paper, he declared, "Let no man presume for a moment that his [Joseph's] place will be filled by another; for remember, he stands in his own place, and always will." And in the September Times and Seasons, published by John Taylor, one of the Twelve, this promise is made: "When any alteration in the Presidency shall be required, seasonable notice shall be given." We ask you to remember these statements as we proceed with our history, and as we trace for you later the attempts of various leaders to establish themselves as heads of the church.

On the death of the prophet, Sidney Rigdon who was not far from Nauvoo at the time, and who was one of Joseph Smith's counselors in the First Presidency, asserted his right to preside over the church. He called a conference at which to present his claims, but Brigham Young, arriving before the conference date, took charge of affairs, and succeeded in having Rigdon repudiated unanimously by the people. At that conference, it was unanimously resolved that "the twelve be upheld in their calling." This was entirely proper and legal, because the Quorum of Twelve was second in authority to the Presidency in the church, and the ones who would normally be expected to undertake the government of the church until the Presidency could be re-constituted. So, the closing days of Nauvoo found the various members of the Quorum of Twelve, under the leadership of their quorum president, Brigham Young, carrying on the business of the church in Nauvoo.

AFTER THE repeal of the charter, things went from bad to worse. The neighboring counties charged repeatedly that Nauvoo was the center of organized bands of thieves and counterfeiterers, and these inflammatory charges, founded entirely upon rumor, were published in all the opposition newspapers up and down the river. The Saints charged on the other hand—and probably not without some justification—that thieves and criminals fled to Nauvoo after their crimes, not only because they could easily become lost in a large city of thirty thousand people, but because to do so would intensify the suspicion and hatred which the anti-Mormons held for the people of the city. Feeling ran very high during the summer of 1845, with many of the anti-Mormon newspapers demanding that they be expelled from the state.

On September 10, 1845, anti-Mormon mobs began burning scattered farm homes of the Saints who had settled in the farm territory adjoining Nauvoo, and destroyed from 100 to 125 of them, oftentimes with much grain and farm equipment as well. Sheriff Deming died in office about the time of these deprivations, and at a special election J. B. Backenstos, a nonmember favorable to the Mormons, was chosen to fill his place. Backenstos issued a proclamation, calling on the rioters to desist, but without results. Then he called for volunteers to form a posse to apprehend and punish the men perpetrating these deprivations, suggesting that because of the delicate situations involved, they should be drawn from men not of the church. No one came, so Backenstos called for Mormons to fill his posse, swore in as many as he needed, and gave battle to the rioters, dispersing them and killing two of their number.

Governor Ford sent General Hardin and the militia to restore order, and Backenstos was indicted for murder, but acquitted in court upon his showing that he was carrying out his sworn duty in an orderly and legal manner.

ON OCTOBER 1 and 2, 1845, a convention was held at Carthage, Illinois, attended by delegates from the nine neighboring counties. This convention considered the Mormon question, and published their conclusions in a resolution, which asserted, among other things: "it is too late to attempt settlement on any other basis than that of the removal of the Mormons from the state . . . We do not believe them to be a persecuted people—whatever grievances they may suffer are the necessary and legitimate consequences of their illegal, wicked, dishonest acts." This convention appointed four commissioners, (one of whom by the way was Stephen A. Douglas) to request the removal of the Saints from the State of Illinois. There was no alternative. Their leader was dead; their charter canceled, their lives and property no longer safe. The church leaders agreed to move the following spring, and in their letter of acceptance informed the commissioners that preparations were already under way; that four companies of 100 families each were already organized to move, and six more companies of equal size were preparing. This made a total of 1,000 families, probably five or six thousand souls, preparing to move as soon as weather permitted in the spring.

But the history of Jackson County and of Far West was to be repeated again. Each of the other expulsions of the Saints, you may remember, took place in the fall of the year, after the crops had been harvested, so that the mobsters could move into the homes the Saints had built and enjoy the fruits of their labors. Mobs roamed the country, burning and pillaging the people who had promised to move in the spring. No one's life was safe outside the city of Nauvoo, if he were known as a Mormon. The Saints speeded up their preparations, and by February of 1846, two thousand of them had crossed the Mississippi River ice on their way to the West. Governor Ford, in his account of these troubled days, says that by spring, 12,000 wagons were built in Nauvoo shops and ready to leave. By May of 1846, 16,000 people had left Nauvoo in organized groups and headed for various destinations, and the once thriving city of 30,000 had dwindled to less than 1,000. Mobsters continued to terrorize the countryside. On September 10, 1846, occurred the Battle of Nauvoo, after which the city was completely deserted, save for the old, the sick, and the dying. A posse headed by a specially appointed political opportunist named Carlin, and by a Reverend Brockman, who is characterized in Governor Ford's book as ignorant, uncouth, a grafter, thief, and tax-dodger, encamped before Nauvoo. In the posse were 1,000 men, well armed, equipped with six pound cannon and a well-supplied wagon train of food and equipment. Defending the city were 150 remaining Mormons, and 150 of the people who had bought Mormon property in the city, and more or less half-heartedly joined in the defense of the city. Though the posse which was intent on burning and sacking the city was repulsed, the Saints saw the futility of further defense, and left—leaving the city in full possession of their enemies by September 17, 1846.

TO FOLLOW AND trace minutely all the groups that left Nauvoo would be a lengthy and confusing task. Some went to Texas under the leadership of Lyman Wight, where they opened up five new counties, established several grist and saw mills, and hired out as contractors for the construction of public buildings. Lyman Wight never claimed to be the leader of the church, but acted in his capacity as a member of the Quorum of Twelve, to preserve this colony of the church until "Young Joseph" should be mature enough to take his father's place.

Wight had been present with Joseph Smith in Liberty Jail when hands had been laid on this small lad—not quite twelve years old when his father was killed—and he had been blessed and set apart and designated as his father's successor. Wight died in Texas in 1858, and many of the people who had followed him there lived to join forces with "Young Joseph" in later years.

James J. Strang was another leader who produced a letter from Joseph Smith which he claimed gave him authority to lead the church into Wisconsin. He took his followers first to Voree, Wisconsin, and later removed to Beaver Island in Lake Michigan, where he founded the town of St. James, and established himself as king. He was elected to the Wisconsin legislature, and proved to be an able man and a shrewd politician. He was murdered June 16, 1856, presumably by political enemies. Other groups were led away from Nauvoo by Charles B. Thompson, who established the town of Preparation, Iowa—by Bickerton, Cutler, Rigdon, and several others. The majority of the church outside of Nauvoo simply refused to follow any leader, and entered upon a period of watchful waiting, or perhaps simply forgot the church and drifted into other organizations.

The largest single group to follow any leader during this period was the group which went west with Brigham Young. Before sketching their history briefly, these facts should be established. In 1844, at the death of Joseph Smith, the membership of the church was not less than 150,000, of whom some 30,000 were in Nauvoo, and some 9,000 in the British Isles. Members were scattered all through eastern United States, Canada, and England. Anything done in the name of the church, then, would have to take into consideration the rights and the wishes of these widely scattered members, or it would be manifestly unfair and illegal.

plant winter wheat in preparation for the main body that was to follow, and establish temporary shelter at Winter Quarters, near the present site of Omaha and Council Bluffs. On December 5, 1847, seven members of the Quorum of Twelve met in Winter Quarters, and appointed Brigham Young president of the church, and Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards his counselors. With only seven of the twelve members of the quorum present, it would have been impossible to obtain a majority vote in favor of this action, unless Brigham Young had voted for himself.

On December 23, 1847, eighteen days after this appointment had been accomplished, an epistle was published from the Twelve, in which they announced that they "had it in contemplation" soon to reorganize the church with a First Presidency, etc. The following day, December 24, this action of December 5 was presented to a conference, and Brigham Young, who only a few months before had told the church that they had no right to choose Joseph's successor until God spoke, was elected president of the church. Only 19 days intervened between the action of the seven members of the Twelve and the "conference." No attempt was made to notify the church members in the East, in Canada, in England, or to allow them to send representatives. Yet a meeting held without notice on the very outposts of civilization, presumed to choose a new head for a church of 150,000 members.

The business meeting was held in a new log building 60 by 40 feet in size. Brigham Young says that it seated 1,000 persons comfortably. If it did, they must have been remarkably small people, for that gives only 2.4 square feet of floor space for each person. But granted that it did seat 1,000—you will see at once the unfairness and the illegality of accepting the legislative action of 1,000 people out of 150,000, when the other 149,000 had no notice of the meeting, and no opportunity to get there or to send delegates.

How many people followed Brigham Young to Utah? There are no very accurate figures that I know of, but three years after their arrival in Utah, a census disclosed a total population of only 11,380, including nonmembers and slaves. We have stressed these figures to make this point—that the main body of the church did not follow Brigham Young at all; that he achieved his position by trickery and fraud. In Utah he and all his followers were rebaptized, reconfirmed, and reordained. And it was in Utah, on August 29, 1852, that Brigham Young first publicly proclaimed what had been privately practiced in Utah for some time before—and what continues to plague the Utah church to this day—the doctrine of polygamy. Several other doctrines were also proclaimed—doctrines which were drastically and radically different from the things Joseph Smith taught in his lifetime—until the church in Utah bore little resemblance to the church of Joseph Smith's day.

mercies and avail ourselves of the effectual working of his power through the sacrifice and victory of his Only Begotten Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. This is true repentance. The problem is personal, and is concerned with both the sins of the body and of the spirit.

Yes—when Zion does come, it will have been created and sanctified by intelligence; it will be governed by intelligence; and it will be perpetuated by intelligence—for intelligence is the glory of God.

WHEN YOU LISTEN to a sermon, look for lessons by which you can improve your own life. If you think only of how much good it should do your neighbors, that sermon is useless to you.

Creative Preaching

HOW DID I get along with my sermon at Pin Oak? Not so well, I'm afraid. The audience was noisy and restless, and I couldn't get lined out on my sermon. I don't quite understand, for I did very well on that sermon last month at Orchardville, and I used the very same notes again this time. It's strange how sometimes a sermon will click, and other times it will fall flat."

I think few will dispute the statement that the above remarks are indicative of the general attitude toward the sermon throughout the church today. It is my belief, however, that this attitude is fundamentally wrong; it is hindering our spiritual growth as individuals and rendering our preaching service impotent.

Great preaching experiences that stir us to the depths of our souls and set us on fire with the vision and spirit of the kingdom are indispensable to this work of God. But, somehow, life and power must be put into our sermons if we are to have great preaching experiences in our local branches. Somehow a fire must be kindled in the sermon, or better yet, in the preacher, if the sermon is to again assume its rightfully important place in the work of evangelism and religious education of the Church of Jesus Christ.

From the days of Adam and Enoch until now, preaching has been one of the chief methods, if not the chief method, of instructing men in the ways of the Lord, and of persuading them to follow him. Preaching was the means used by Adam, Enoch, Noah, Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Peter, Paul, and the Master himself. It was used by Alma when he sought to set the church of his day aright and call the people back to God. It was by preaching that the Nephite disciples of Jesus converted the whole land to the Lord in two years' time. It was principally through preaching that the early church spread the story with such remarkable rapidity.

Preaching as a method has proved itself. It has been said, and truly so, "The preaching service is not on trial today, but this generation is on trial." In every dispensation of the gospel, God has called men and sent them out to preach. These men, in each period have gone out with power and set others afire with their impassioned and inspired preaching. Surely this, our day, is no exception. Surely today such preaching will produce similar results.

If this is true, then why are the preaching services at present not more virile and inspiring? Why are they unattractive to the majority of our youth and adults? Many of our youth and menfolk, especially, have lost interest, or perhaps never found interest in the average preaching service. When a special speaker is imported for a series or a special day, the attendance is somewhat better, depending, of course, on his reputation as an entertaining speaker; yet the local priesthood usually preaches to disappointingly small congregations.

What is the reason for this? Is there a solution to this problem? I believe there is.

I think one of the main reasons for this condition, and at least a partial solution to it, will not be too hard to find.

POOOR ATTENDANCE at the preaching service is not principally because of impatience or boredom with preaching, but rather with poorly-composed and unskillfully executed lectures. This is said with all kindness, and with an eye to my own shortcomings, yet it is still very true.

We have long taught our priesthood to prepare a formal sermon, much as a sectarian minister or religious lecturer might go about preparing a sermon or speech. Naturally our preachers have, in most cases, become formal, but ineffective sermonizers and, because of their lack of training, the pulpit service has degenerated into a rather amateurish lecture hour.

If this seems overdrawn or too strongly put, it is because of a desire to make the picture vivid. Who has not labored and perspired with some brother who, in spite of being a poor reader, has attempted to half read and half tell a sermon which he had written, perhaps months previously, for some other service, or which he had borrowed from a book or another brother? What preacher has not worried and fretted about what to say—say in his next sermon? What minister has not gone home, sick at heart because he felt his efforts were a complete failure, and wondered why his warmed-over notes had lost their old heat and left both him and his audience cold?

How can our local ministry expect to compete with the experts in all fields of commercialized entertainment, and with the vast number of other attractions which claim our people's attention, time, energy, and money, if they persist in using methods for which they have neither the training, the capacity, the background, nor the time? The answer is given by the embarrassingly numerous empty pews in our church services. We are not meeting this competition successfully today, nor will we do so in the future, with our present methods of sermon preparation and delivery.

I refer to those that are generally variations of the following example: An elder of a certain locality, who was a business manager and had little spare time, was asked to preach in a neighboring branch. About two weeks before the set date, he asked the president of the branch if he had preached a certain sermon to that congregation at any previous appointment. When the pastor replied that he thought not, the elder expressed his relief, for this was the only one of his sermons that he could be sure had not been used in the branch before, and at this busy season he would not have time to construct another. He further explained that he had used this sermon in several other branches recently, and thus felt he would be better able to deliver it than any of his older sermons or a new one. He was advertised, but because of his lack of reputation as an entertaining, forceful, or challenging speaker, the congregation was small. The people received what they expected—a few good thoughts, warmed over and served in a laboriously uninteresting, though earnest, fashion.

Probably someone is asking the question, "What is wrong with this method, and is there a better one?" Here is the answer as I see it. The purpose of the sermon is that of instruction, inspiration, and persuasion in righteousness. It is the purpose of the sermon to meet the mental and emotional needs of a particular congregation, or perhaps a part of the congregation, on a specific occasion. And since only God can know what these needs are and how they should be met, only he can know what kind of sermon will truly minister to a waiting congregation. Since obviously no two congregations will be exactly the same, it naturally follows that no two sermons should be the same if they are to minister effectively. Sometimes a need has been so urgent in a congregation that the Lord has nearly forced the speaker to change his subject completely. We all have heard such testimonies from our experienced priesthood, but who knows how many times hungry people have been turned away unfed because the preacher was unresponsive to the leadings of God's Spirit. Surely such divine direction to abandon a ready-prepared sermon is a plain condemnation of our attitude toward and approach to a preaching experience.

A PERSONAL experience may help to illustrate my point. I had been under general church appointment as a missionary elder for a little over a year when I was asked to conduct a series of meetings at a small branch in the Middle West. As usual, with some thought and prayer, I selected a list of sermons from my limited supply and mailed the list to the pastor for the advertising. When I arrived on the scene of action, I proceeded according to the usual pattern. The first Sunday I preached two sermons from two sets of notes which I thought were especially suited, but my audiences, though polite and sympathetic, were obviously unimpressed, and I realized I had failed to minister adequately to members or nonmembers.

I was a thoroughly discouraged young missionary when I retired to my room that night. I need not tell you what was the theme of my prayers. This experience was not my first, nor my worst, but I was becoming increasingly aware of the needs of people, and my desire to minister to these needs was growing stronger.

In the two or three days that followed, I studied and prayed over this problem every chance I had until one forenoon, while reading again Section 83 of the Doctrine and Covenants, I came upon the words, "Neither take ye thought beforehand what we shall say, but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man" (paragraph 14). Those words seemed to stand out from the page, and the thought that therein lay the answer came to me with considerable force. After a couple of hours of study and prayer on the matter, I came to the conclusion that God desired we should become fully saturated with his word and any other worth-while knowledge in order that we would have a rich source from which to draw, but that we should trust to him to guide our thoughts for the particular preaching service, since he alone knows the need. Consequently I prepared for the next service by studying the general subject which had been advertised, but did not outline a definite sermon. That night and the following nights, I preached without notes and had unusual liberty of thought and expression. I closed the series with eight baptisms and the assurance that I had been able to minister to the people.

MY EXPERIENCES since then have convinced me that though God could direct us in writing out a sermon, word for word, that would be just what was needed for our next preaching experience, he has not deemed it wise to do so in all ordinary cases. Even if he did, we would not be able to read it effectively unless he quickened and inspired us at the time. It is my sincere belief that our Heavenly Father wants us to walk by faith in this, as in all other activities of his church. This is the advice which was given to the New Testament priesthood and was repeated in our own dispensation: "Let the morrow take thought for the things of itself."

After a few years of experience in preaching, I have now developed the method of continual study of the Word of God and other good books and articles, constant observation of people, regular prayer, and periodic attempts to write on different subjects that pertain to my ministry. I do not write out formal sermon notes, but when a preaching experience draws near, I begin to pray for direction and try to think of different needs which seem to be apparent, and analyze how they might best be met. I also often browse through the Scriptures, praying for, and expecting to receive, direction. Sometimes I get a "lead" on a subject several days before the sermon—sometimes not until the service starts, and a few times I have not received direction until I started to talk. However, or whenever, it comes, even if I have time to do so, I do not compose a definite sermon even in outline, either on paper or in my mind. Instead, I think in terms of subjects, principles, laws, illustrations, definitions, Scripture passages, and introductory statements, and wait for such inspiration as the Lord sees fit to bestow, and as the congregation and I are prepared to receive.

I recognize that I am not a great preacher, and I do not always preach with insight, coherence, clarity, and force, but I know my pulpit ministry is far better when I obey the admonition to "treasure up in your minds continually the words of life" and then trust to God for inspiration at the very hour of need. Because I have proved to myself the value of this method, I wanted to share my experiences and beliefs with my brethren, in the hope that they may be helped as I have been.

Of course, each man must work out for himself that particular method which is best suited to his own nature and situation. My plea, however, is that each minister should get away from the idea of formal "canned" lectures, delve more deeply into the Word of God and the spiritual needs of the people, and then trust to our Lord for inspiration in the hour of need.

The Lord has said, "first seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then, if you desire, you shall have my Spirit, and my word; yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men."—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 10.

"Unto what were ye ordained? To preach my gospel by the Spirit, even the Comforter, which was sent forth to teach the truth; . . . why is it that ye can not understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth? Wherefore he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together."—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 4, 5, 6.

Worship Suggestions for September

By Ruby Strand

Theme for the Month: "WAYS OF ACHIEVING THE KINGDOM."

SEPTEMBER 1, 1946

Theme: "Achieving Through Loving."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 31, or "Admonition," tune, "I Will Sing of My Redeemer."

Call to Worship:

Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Hear the word of God today;
Be not slothful, but obedient;
'Tis the world's momentous day!
Unto honor I have called you—
Honor great as angels know;
Heed ye, then, a Father's counsel,
And by deeds your purpose show.

Love ye me and love all people—
Love as I have loved you;
This your calling, this my purpose,
Thus be my disciples true.
Then in this exalted station
Your companion I will be;
Every promise of my Scriptures
Will be verified in thee.

—Admonition, Stanzas 1, 6.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 31.

Scripture Reading:

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 34, 35, Inspired Version.

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 191.

Suggestions for Theme Talk:

True religion involves love, real inward love, and nothing externally religious means a great deal without this type of love for others. The happiest people on earth are those who think most upon the needs of others, those who are loving most. Daniel Webster said the strongest argument for religion that he knew was an old aunt of his who lived up in the New Hampshire hills. Apparently she was a woman who felt a deep and abiding love for others. Is anyone likely to think

We dare not treat this matter lightly, for if we do, we are trifling with the souls of men, and playing at our ministry. God will hold us accountable for the way we approach and conduct our preaching services, for we are called to reveal him unto the people and to reconcile the people unto him. This requires inspired preaching which grows out of a life of devotion to Christ and to his people. This type of sermon is not to be borrowed, all cut and dried, from any book or notebook whatsoever. It is a new creation which is individually suited to a particular preaching experience.

of our lives as reasons for believing in Christ and his church?

Whenever a man did Jesus a wrong, he looked upon the wrong as a sure sign of a deep need in the man's life. An insult or a blow signified a need in that individual's life. He thought first of the man's need—not of the wrong done. This is LOVE. When the Samaritan village used him spitefully, he was sorry for the village, rather than resentful for himself. This was LOVE. When Judas betrayed him, he thought of the man's pitiable failure—turned into an apostate when he might have been an apostle. This was LOVE.

Character is transformed by our capacity to love deeply. Let us ponder on the great love of Christ and pattern our lives accordingly, starting in our homes and letting this spirit of love radiate out into the lives of all mankind.

Poem:

WE MUST ALL LOVE

We must all love one another
And have Zion in our homes.
Love our neighbor and our brother;
We must all love one another,
Forget self to serve the other;
Speaking in sweet loving tones.
We must all love one another,
And have ZION in our homes.

—Jeannette Weldon.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 316 (Stand).

Prayer: One of consecration, asking for a deeper love.

Challenge:

"Wherefore, my beloved brethren, pray unto the Father with all the energy of heart, that ye may be filled with this love which he hath bestowed upon all who are true followers of his Son Jesus Christ, that ye may become the sons of God, that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is, that we may have this hope, that we may be purified even as he is pure. Amen."—Moroni 7: 53.

SEPTEMBER 8, 1946

Theme: "Achieving Through Serving."

Worship Center: Picture, "The Good Shepherd."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 263.

Call to Worship:

"If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honour."—John 12: 26.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 66 (stand).

Prayer: Asking that we might achieve the kingdom through serving.

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 344, stanza 1.

Scripture Reading:

"Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 344, stanza 2.

Scripture Reading:

"When ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of your God."

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 344, stanza 3.

Poem:

A PROMISE

I made a promise to my King,
Head bowed, on bended knee;
I said that I would follow him,
Where're he wanted me.

I made a promise to my King,
What else was I to do?
He wanted me, I wanted him,
And now to see it through.

I made a promise to my King,
'Twas what he'd have me do.
Oh! Father, hear this prayer, though weak,
And let me come to you.

I made a promise to my King,
A bond of liberty,
And if that promise is fulfilled,
Then he will make me free.
—Muriel Bush.

Suggestions for Theme Talk:

There is a work for each of us. By experience we learn that the deepest satisfaction in life lies in service. Doing some real kindness for a person who has no special reason to expect it from you is a rich experience. Jesus' joy was at heart this satisfaction which comes from finding those whom he could serve. When asked one time by a lawyer this question, "Who is my neighbor?" he told the story of the Good Samaritan. We know it well, but have we always applied it? Have there been times when we have passed by on the other side of the road? At another time Jesus admonished his disciples in this manner: "When thou makest a dinner, or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14: 12-14. How often we fail to see the truly needy ones, those who are poor, maimed, lame, blind spiritually as well as physically. Service to mankind is a never ending process of ever being on the alert for those with whom we might share the gospel of Jesus Christ. That is our REASONABLE SERVICE, as Paul reminded the Roman Saints. His exact words were: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans 12: 1.

He also said, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Romans 12: 20, 21. People many times, by the spirit of the evil one, are found rejecting the ministry of those servants of God who would serve, and yet in their need we must always be ready to serve, forgetting all else except the desire to serve mankind.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 345.

Challenge:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, This is my gospel; and ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works which ye have seen me do, that shall ye also do; for that which ye have seen me do, even that shall ye do; therefore if ye do these things, blessed are ye, for ye shall be lifted up at the last day."—3 Nephi 12: 34, 35.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1946

Theme: "Achieving Through Seeking."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 3.

Call to Worship:

"They that know thy name will put their trust in thee; for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee."—Psalm 8: 10.

Response by Congregation: Psalm 63: 1, 2, 3. (This may be typed on individual slips, or placed on a board.)

"O God, thou art my God; early will I seek thee; my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is; to see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary. Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee."

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 45. (One in charge reads words first. Note "And seek thy glory to promote" in last stanza.)

Scripture Reading:

"But if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient unto his voice; for the Lord thy God is a merciful God; he will not forsake thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he sware unto them."

Suggestions for Theme Talk:

In the Scripture reading just read, Moses is exhorting Israel. What is more important to us, his counsel holds good for us today. Note that he said, "When thou art in tribulation and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God [in other words, seek the Lord] and shalt be obedient to his voice . . . he will not forsake thee." What were some of these things to which Moses had reference? For one thing, he warned against graven images. How many graven images have we, his so-called chosen people of the latter days, set up to worship? There are many material possessions which play too important a place in our lives. The Lord said, "I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me."—Proverbs 8: 17. Many times other loves, other images, obstruct our view, and we fail to seek our Lord.

Moses spoke also of a scattered condition. We today are scattered geographically. Furthermore, we are scattered in our interpretation of God's laws and commandments. This is even more serious. Our greatest need as a people today, if we are to achieve the kingdom, is to seek daily the Lord's will in our lives.

Vocal Solo: "Seek Ye the Lord," page 52, in Lorenz's Favorite Anthem Classics, Lorenz Publishing Co., Chicago, Illinois. (If this is not available, use Saints' Hymnal, 208. Notice the 2nd stanza.)

Prayer.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 284, stanzas 1, 2.

Closing Admonition:

"And now I would commend you to seek this Jesus of whom the prophets and apostles have written, that the grace of God the Father, and also the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of them, may be, and abide in you for ever. Amen."—Ether 5: 41.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1946

Theme: "Achieving Through Learning."

Worship Center: The Three Books, with Sallman's "Head of Christ."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, 335.

Call to Worship:

"For out of the books which shall be written, I will judge the world, every man according to their works, according to that which is written."—2 Nephi 12: 66.

Suggestions for Theme Talk:

Because a young boy took the words of this Scripture seriously, we have a deeper appreciation of the sacred word as found in the Bible, and added to this we have the Scripture found in our two books, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. Learning people are growing people. Achieving the kingdom through learning indicates a growing appreciation of the Scriptures added to which we have the growth made in daily application of these fundamental truths. We are admonished to study all good books. We need as a background the guideposts as contained in the Scriptures. These will point the way to the good books. Our bookstores are full of all kinds. Much which passes as good is in reality little better than trash, and only seeks to clutter our minds. "O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned, they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves; wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness, and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish. But to be learned is good, IF they hearken unto the counsels of God." These words are familiar to Book of Mormon students. They are timely for all of us. Many books are written in the wisdom of men, and without the Spirit of God to guide us, we find ourselves confused. The kingdom will be achieved as we learn to separate truth from error, light from darkness. Many places in our Scripture we are admonished to FEAST on the word. This suggests more than a nibbling, more than a snack now and then. It means a full course meal, consisting of all the vitamins as found in the three books. Nephi reminds us that his soul delighted in the Scriptures. Jacob, his brother, spoke of the peace and the love of God which come to a people who search the Scriptures. That can be our experience if we set aside time each day to sit at the feet of the Master Teacher. In this way we shall make contribution to the achievement of the kingdom. We can then say with the Psalmist—

Scripture Reading:

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psalm 119: 105.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 404.

Prayer.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1946

Theme: "Achieving Through Living."

Worship Center: "Christ Knocking at the Door."

Call to Worship:

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3: 20.

Solo: Saints' Hymnal, 328. (This may be hidden music.)

Opening Hymn: (A response) Saints' Hymnal, 333 (stand).

Story: Reverently grouped about the small city of Zion they had built, forty little children sang:

"We want to be like Jesus,
We love him, yes we do;
We want to be like Jesus
And build his Zion, too."

And they did want to build his Zion as happily as they sang, gazing upon the miniature city, the work of their own hands.

And yet, there were those in the group who could not sing. They were older, much older than the happy children. Why were they silent? Ah! the words of the song had touched their hearts. The Spirit of God had flooded their souls. They felt the need of Zion. And looking upon his children, they sensed their own unworthiness to teach.

The last strains of the song faded softly away,

"Jesus, Jesus, we love you,
Jesus, Jesus, we love you."

Truly they did love Jesus, for the light of his love was shining in their faces. And as those, who were older, saw that light a silent prayer ascended: "Oh, Father, we know that Zion will be and that those little ones desire a part in building. Help us to build, too, O Lord, lives and homes that are Zion. And grant, dear Father, that the light of thy love may ever shine in our hearts to help us guide these little ones to Zion."—Camilla Collins.

Solo: (hidden music) Saints' Hymnal, 332, stanzas 1, 3.

Poem:

I AM THE WAY

"I am the Way," he gently spake,
"To God. No path man dares to take
But mine. I am the Open Door
Unto his kingdom evermore;
And if you will but enter in
And strive to keep thy life from sin,
You shall be saved. I am the Light
Of life, and if you seek the right,
In me you ever shall abide;
I'll be the Shepherd at your side.
Of living water you shall drink
And never thirst; You shall not sink
Into the mire; no worldly snare
Can harm, if you'll be aware.
Come unto me! I am the Vine!
You are the branches; all are mine!
You shall not hunger midst the strife,
My child; I am the bread of Life."

—Camilla Collins.

Period of Silent Prayer: Saints' Hymnal, 297, played softly.

Closing Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, 213 (stand).

Prayer: That we might achieve the kingdom through our living.

From a Mother of Twelve

I am the mother of twelve children, and am writing this letter in hopes it will comfort someone who may need encouragement. I know that God is our friend, and will be with us in the hour of need. I have been healed several times, and my children have received divine blessings also. Often we have trials that seem unbearable, but if we look to God, he will see us through. My youngest son was killed in an airplane accident while training for overseas service. I could not believe the telegram when it came, but as God's Spirit came to me, I was able to accept the fact that my boy was really dead. I found comfort in remembering that he would never again need to endure pain or trials. That God may bless all who have lost loved ones is my prayer.

News Briefs

Independence, Missouri

More than 200 Oriole and Blue Bird girls from Independence enjoyed a twelve-day session in June at Gardner's Lake near Excelsior Springs. This was the largest number ever to attend camp in any one season. Moving pictures were taken of the girls participating in the various supervised activities, which included swimming, boating, archery, nature study, handcraft, music, and dramatics. On Saturday evening, June 29, three representatives from the Kansas City Red Cross Association gave a demonstration in life-saving. Campfires were lighted each night and, on one occasion, burning candles were set adrift on the lake. The campers ate their meals in the lodge, and cabins were used for sleeping quarters. Each Saturday evening an informal party was held and refreshments served. Banquets were given for both the Blue Birds and Orioles, with Elder Glaude Smith and Dr. Floyd McDowell as guest speakers. On these occasions the tables were decorated with spring flowers and favors.

Kirtland Temple

Pastor, John W. Banks

In April, members of the women's department served dinner to 185 members of the Kiwanis Club at the auditorium, after which a community chorus composed of singers from the Temple Choir and high school chorus presented the cantata, Olives to Calvary, under the direction of Clyde Ebeling. The women also served dinner to those attending the district conference in May. Two young men, William Rimes and T. Evan Thomas were recently ordained to the office of priest. Thirteen new members were baptized and confirmed on Children's Day. A branch dinner in honor of Brother and Sister Gomer T. Griffiths, who are now making their home in Kirtland, was held in June. The regional youth conference, attended by 240 young people, was also held in June; Apostles Blair Jensen and E. J. Gleazer were in charge.

—Elizabeth Thomas, reporter.

East Jordan, Michigan

The northern Michigan district youth conference was held at East Jordan on June 22 and 23. Sault Ste. Marie, Gulliver, Gladstone, Boyne City, Gaylord, and East Jordan were represented. District officers Rex Stowe, Walter Fritz, and Joseph Engmark were present. Saturday's activities began with a fellowship service at 9 a.m., followed by a talk by Seventy Virgil Billings; features of the afternoon were recreation and a treasure hunt. A banquet was held in the evening. Sunday also began with a fellowship service, after which the group participated in a forum discussion on "What I can Do to Help My Branch Build the Kingdom." Elder Billings was again the speaker in the afternoon. The conference closed with a dedication and consecration service.

—Betty Scott, reporter.

Sparta, Wisconsin

On Sunday, June 23, a young people's rally was held at Sparta in the U. S. O. building. Representatives from the northern and southern Wisconsin districts were in attendance. The rally began with a prayer service at 10 a.m., after which Missionary James Daugherty gave the sermon. A basket dinner was served at noon. Two new members were baptized by Seventy E. Y. Hunker and confirmed following the afternoon classes, which were conducted by Brother Daugherty. A dedication service concluded the activities of the day. Short talks, based on the theme, "I Would Be True," were presented by Lyle Shedd, Bill Scaries, and Romaine Lafferty. Special music was provided by Corabelle Fitzsimmons, Arlene Michelson, Zion Ihde, and Inez Ott. This was the first young people's gathering to be held in northern Wisconsin since 1942.

Essex, Ontario

Pastor, J. A. W. Kettlewell

Seven new members were added, through baptism, to the congregation in June. Those leaving the branch are Elder and Mrs. Charles Robinson; Elder and Mrs. Ezra Mifflin, and Elder and Mrs. William Andrew; all three families are moving to Missouri. Elder Andrew has been associated with the presidency of the Detroit-Windsor district; Elder Mifflin is the former pastor of Essex branch, and Elder Robinson, the former church school supervisor. Their effective service and affable association will be greatly missed. Elder J. A. W. Kettlewell was elected to the pastorate; Priest Marvin Kendrick has been appointed church school director; and June Brown will succeed Mrs. Andrew as director of music.

Santa Rosa, California

Pastor, Herbert Hinton

Ronald and David Hinton, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Leland Hinton of Sonoma, were baptized in the church font on Easter Sunday morning; Elder E. B. Hinton, grandfather of the boys, officiated. The children and adults participated in a joint worship service at the 11 o'clock hour on Children's Day. During the service, some of the children told their best-loved stories of Jesus, and others sang their favorite hymns. Father's Day was honored with a potluck dinner and program sponsored by the church school. Frederick Budworth, who recently returned from Graceland, is assisting in the music department; he was director of music prior to his leaving for college. The third annual picnic and swim were held at the Sebastopol pool on July 4. New carpet runners have been added to the main auditorium; funds for this project were raised by the women's department.

Pensacola, Florida

Pastor, H. M. Cooper

District President Maurice Draper recently completed a six-weeks' series of illustrated, Sunday-evening lectures. July 7 culminated a concerted building fund drive, at which time $800 was given in cash, and more was pledged. One family, the Ousleys, sacrificed for a month and donated $410.53—the proceeds of the entire month's business; Mr. and Mrs. Ousley operate a small grocery store. Mrs. L. G. Tipton, supervisor of the Zion's League, is also teacher of the young people's class; there are nearly forty members enrolled in this class at present. The young people recently sponsored a chicken gumbo supper on the church lawn, netting $107 for the building fund. Captain and Mrs. Gillespie were in charge of an entertainment honoring Sister Joyce House, teacher of a nursery class in the church school. The first Tuesday evening of each month has been set apart for the priesthood and women's department to meet together for classwork and a social hour. The size of the congregation has grown so that there is no longer adequate seating for those attending services.

Captain Joseph Roy Lewis

Joseph Roy Lewis was born August 13, 1921, in Ottumwa, Iowa. He received his education in the Harlingen and Fort Worth, Texas, schools, being graduated from Amon Carter Riverside High. He was active in Scout and Sea Scout work, holding both Eagle and Quartermaster ranks. He attended North Texas Agricultural College, and during his last year took civilian pilot training. He entered the service in December, 1941, and received his pilot training at Victory, Randolph, and Moore fields. Pilot's wings and a commission as second lieutenant were awarded to him in September, 1942. He served as an instructor at Army Air Fields in Sherman, Texas, and Coffeyville, Kansas, receiving his promotion to first lieutenant in April, 1943. As commander of a B-29, he went to Tinian in January, 1945. On May 23 of the same year, while on his seventeenth mission, his plane was badly damaged and the crew bailed out near the coast of Shikoku. Three of the men were rescued by submarine.

He was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal, the Unit Citation Badge, and was recommended for the Cluster to the Air Medal. His promotion to captain came shortly after his last mission.

He is survived by his wife, formerly Vivian Lamb of Vernon, Texas; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Lewis; and a sister, Margaret Lee Lewis. A memorial service was held for him on June 9 at the Reorganized Church in Fort Worth, of which he had been a member. Elder Z. Z. Renfro gave the address, and Chaplain James P. Hornbuckle, Jr., the obituary and Scripture.

Our Departed Ones

RATTERREE.—U. S., was born November 13, 1874, at Greenwood, Arkansas, and died June 21 at Bisbee, Arizona. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1923, being ordained to the office of deacon in 1934. He was a well-known mining man, and belonged to the Fraternal Order of Police; for the past seven years he served as deputy sheriff of Cochise County.

He is survived by his wife, Maude; his mother, Julia Ratterree; three sons: R. F., Sanford, and Wess; a daughter, Mrs. Ola Hamrick; two sisters: Mrs. Mattie Burris and Mrs. S. J. Wilder; and eleven grandchildren. Apostle John Rushton and T. R. Davis were in charge of the funeral service. Interment was in the Evergreen Cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—William L., was born March 4, 1869, at Hamburg, Arkansas, and died May 27, 1946, at Eros, Louisiana. He became a member of the Reorganized Church on November 13, 1892, and was ordained to the office of teacher.

He is survived by seven daughters: Mrs.

(This space for Address Label.)

J. B. Gryder, Mrs. J. E. Phillips, Mrs. Ina Sevier, and Mrs. Marion Parrett of Eros; Mrs. W. M. Maddox, Rushton, Louisiana; Mrs. W. J. Carpenter, Chatham, Louisiana; and Mrs. Bill Williams, Lake Village, Arkansas; three sons: Alma, Herman, and Jeff; a step-daughter, Katherine Copper; and two step-sons, Aubrey and James Mobley, all of Eros. He also leaves forty grandchildren and four-teen great-grandchildren.

YOUNG.—Florence K., adopted daughter of Samuel and Katie Gurley, was born June 2, 1858, at Blanchardville, Wisconsin, and passed away on June 12, 1946, at Oak, Missouri. She was married to David Young on June 17, 1877, at Lamoni, Iowa; seven children were born to this union, six of whom survive. Mrs. Young was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church early in life, and remained faithful until her death.

Left to mourn are five sons: Samuel P., Stewartsville, Missouri; Ansel, Faulkton, South Dakota; Bert G., Oak, Missouri; Roy M. and David A., Independence, Missouri; one daughter, Mrs. Chloe Wease, Oak, Missouri; twenty-two grandchildren, twenty-six great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. Funeral services were held in the Christian Church at Oak, Elders Roy V. Hopkins and Archie Constance officiating. Interment was in the Rose Hill Cemetery at Lamoni.

BROOKS.—William Welsh, was born in Wingham, Ontario, November 10, 1832, and died in an Oakland, California, hospital on July 18, 1944. He was baptized when eight years old in St. Joseph, Missouri. In 1909 he was married to Bertha Hassenbusch; to this union one daughter was born. He did much to develop the music department at St. Joseph, and later helped to organize the choir in Kansas City. Although offered attractive salaries to sing in other churches, and was asked to travel with the Chautauqua as a soloist, he refused in order that he might continue helping in his own church.

He is survived by his daughter, Mrs. Walter McDaniel of Santa Ana, California; four sisters: Mrs. Paul H. Pugsley and Mrs. George Moffett, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Allan Cameron, Hudson, Ohio; and Mabel Brooks, Phoenix, Arizona; three brothers: James A. of Dongola, Illinois; Mark H. of Chicago, Illinois; and Howard W. of Tempe, Arizona. His funeral service was held in Independence, Missouri, Elder Evan Fry officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

NADIN.—Mary, was born at Hazel Grove, Cheshire County, England, on July 16, 1869, and passed away June 29, 1946, in Independence, Missouri. She was married to Francis Nadin in November, 1893, at Stockport, England. In 1920 they came to Independence, where they enjoyed church privileges through the ensuing years. Their only child died in 1939. Mr. Nadin, an elder for many years, passed away on May 7, 1944.

She is survived by two brothers in England; a grandson, Dr. Alwyn F. Lewis; and a granddaughter, Mrs. D. N. Ettinger, both of Independence; and four grandchildren. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Chapel, Elders C. S. Warren and A. T. Whipple officiating. Burial was in Floral Hill Cemetery.

BURRIS.—Mary Ellen, daughter of James and Easter Martin, was born April 6, 1867, at Hartville, Missouri. On January 14, 1890, she was married to Samuel Burris; eight children, six of whom are living, were born to this union. She became a member of the Reorganized Church forty years ago.

Left to mourn are her husband; three sons: James Nelson, Chow Chella, California; Roy E. and Calvin R. of Hartville; three daughters: Julia Henderson, Branson, Missouri; Martha Fahrubel and Gertrude Perry, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; nineteen grandchildren; one great-grandchild; two brothers, and a sister. Funeral services were held July 3 at the Durbin Baptist Church near Hartville; Elder Joseph Breshears and Priest George Fahrubel were in charge. Interment was in the Durbin cemetery.

VANRIETTE.—Joseph John, son of Joseph and Emarant VanRietie, was born December 23, 1867, near Brussels, Belgium, and died at his home in Independence on June 10, 1946. He came to America in 1887, settling in Rich Hill, Missouri. On December 23, 1893, he was married to Bertha Dave, also a native of Belgium, at Nevada, Missouri.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Mary VanRietie and Mrs. Alma Wolbourn, both of the home; a sister, Grace Berger of Detroit, Michigan; two brothers: Florent of Mulberry, Kansas, and Ora of Foster, Missouri; three grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. His two sons, Joseph and Edmund, preceded him in death.

History of Graceland College

Through The West Door

by ROY A. CHEVILLE

Here is an interesting story of an institution that started with the most meager of beginnings, of the struggles of the young college for existence. It is a story of the vision and devotion of her founders, who, never losing sight of their dream of a college for the church's youth, sacrificed to keep Graceland's doors open through the lean and hungry years. It tells of the persistent effort of a president to gain recognition for the growing college—resulting in Graceland's complete accreditation as a junior college.

P. S.

* YOUR FATE FOR TODAY

You have a fate for the day, the week, the year, as well as for the distant future of your life. What that fate is to be depends as much upon what you take with you, as upon what you find in the places where you go. Some people go to the office radiantly cheerful and pleasant, and so have a day of happiness. Others go reluctantly, and endure hours of boredom. When you wake up tomorrow morning, think of this. What mental and spiritual equipment—what invisible accessories—will you take with you to your work? Lift up your heart in joy and gratitude for life and all its opportunities, lift up your mind in friendly good will toward your fellow creatures, lift the corners of your mouth in a smile. Do this, and the day can be an experience of happiness. You can determine your fate, one day at a time.

* HOW TO WIN FRIENDS

Friends can be found almost anywhere simply by liking people. Unless they are founded upon sincere appreciation, all of the rules for getting along with people fail. With that appreciation, most of the rules are unnecessary, except for basic good ethics, fair treatment, and honesty. Cultivate good will in your mind toward others, and the change will create effects in your personality that will automatically make it easier for others to like you. People are responsive to the most subtle and intangible of impressions, and they cannot long be deceived. Even the most cleverly created masks and pretenses will soon become transparent; the human face, like the surface of the deepest pool of water, will eventually reveal what is below. Whatever you are, be genuine. But always remember, you can be what you choose to be. If you wish people to like you, be sure that you like them.

* BACK YARD PARKS

Perhaps this isn't news to you, but it is very probable that you haven't done anything about it yet. You don't need to go to the public park to enjoy green grass, shade trees, the privacy of a hedge of bushes. You can have a private park in your own back yard. Of course, it will take time and effort, but it is worth more than it costs. . . . The one absolute necessity is a level bit of ground for your terrace or patio. Without this you will never have any comfort, and you will never rest long there. If you have a slope—and you probably do—level it. Then put in grass or pavement of some kind. Surround it with bushes—common spiraea or "bridal wreath"—are most practical. Use whatever good trees you have, or begin a planting program. Then place a two-hundred-watt light at least ten feet above ground, with a shade to prevent throwing a glare of light around the neighborhood, and you will have a daytime retreat and an evening fairyland where you can relax and rest at any time.

Such a retreat will make your home seem nearer heaven. This alliance with nature will be wholesome, will give you something to do that you enjoy, provide the outdoor activity to care for it, and the pleasure of enjoyment that all people should find in their homes.

* UNCLE JOE is currently referring to his ancient motor vehicle as his "occasional" car. "Occasionally, it runs," he says. The proportion of service is about two days with a mechanic to repair the damage of one day's driving.

Something to Do

Prodigal Parents

People find it hard to evaluate themselves accurately. The reason is that they cannot see themselves clearly. Even with a mirror, a man sees his own face in reverse of what the rest of the world sees—left side right, and right side left; and this is nothing compared with the changes effected by tints of the glass and conditions of light. So, when a person praises himself, we discount it and consider him worse than his account; and when a person condemns himself we also discount it and consider him better than his account.

With this in mind we quote from a self-critical letter received some days ago:

Even though I have been blessed many times, I have never been anything but a sinner, and am inclined to sleep on and wait until somebody does something practical toward building Zion. But because of my children I am writing this letter. If there is a God in heaven he knows there is nothing within my power I would not do or give to have them raised so close to the Savior that they could live a life of love instead of a life of lust. . . . As parents, so few of us are fit to raise our children. Do we want them to grow up like us, while God's work continues to go backward, or to bring them up away from the world and close to God?

This draws our correspondent's attention to the need of Zion, and he continues:

We should ask ourselves these questions: What good is received from the church today that cannot be received from any other church? What good does it do to have children baptized and then send them out into Satan's world? Is there any advantage in bringing children up in Independence?

Such questions are asked frequently, and it seems that a serious attempt should be made to provide answers, that we may not be misled in our thinking, and so take the wrong course of action.

Personal Responsibility

The first thing to consider is our personal and family responsibility. Our correspondent describes his own slothful attitude and his shortcomings. If this is true (and we hope it is not as bad as he says) he has not done his best, according to his own statment, to provide the moral, cultural, intellectual, and spiritual environment needed by his children. No parent does as well by his children as he wishes to do—he can't, if he is a conscientious parent. He always wishes to do better than strength, time, and resources permit. But this should be recognized: we cannot expect to find others who will give our children a better life than we do. The responsibility is upon us to provide for our own. Rich or poor, parents do have control of the home life. It does not take large sums of money to make that life a wonderful, happy, righteous experience for both parents and children. Parents who wish to achieve high standards can always get willing and generous help from others—from teachers, church, library, and from government agencies; not money help, but the more important help of information, advice, direction, and some materials. If a parent gives time and thought to his responsibilities, he can create good home life for his children, and contribute much to their welfare and happiness.

The Place of the Community

But, as this parent recognizes, children are not brought up exclusively in the home environment. Important as it is, home is not the only power at work on the characters of the children. There is the community, and children live in it and partake of its life just as they do the home life. How important, then, to select a good community for the home. We have known church families to give up attractive business opportunities because they did not wish to rear their children in inferior communities. Instead of profits they chose welfare. But in the end they did not lose anything of real value by the apparent sacrifice.

For members of our church, a community is not complete or fully desirable unless it has one of our congregations where the family can regularly attend services. A congregation of our people is needed to provide church school instruction, worship and preaching services, a social group, and all the other things that go with branch life. If parents are truly interested in their children, and want them to grow up in the church, they must realize that there is no substitute for church privileges and opportunities. A community should measure up to a high standard in other respects, but if it is lacking in this one, it does not provide what the family needs.

The Church Community

Finally, there are the questions about the character of the life in a community where there is a concentration of members of the church. There are many such communities, with varying numbers of our people. One principle must be recognized: the community life is the total effect created by the individual and family life of the people. If our people are creating in their own individual lives and homes better moral, spiritual, cultural, and economic relationships, then life there will be better and more desirable. If they are no better than the world, they offer no advantage.

But our observation and conviction is that definite advantages are found in association with our own

Adjustment in the contract between radio station KMBC and the church made necessary by Federal Communications Commission rulings.

In the summer of 1945 officials of KMBC called to the attention of the General Church officers certain rulings made by the Federal Communications Commission respecting broadcasting stations having long-term contracts with religious and educational institutions. These rulings necessitated adjustments in the contracts existing between these stations and the institutions with which such long-term contracts had been made.

The basis of the Commission's ruling was that licensees (the licensees being those broadcasting stations which receive their licenses to operate from the Federal Communications Commission) have no right to enter into any agreement which denies to them full control of every program which goes on the air. Basic to this ruling is the contention of the Commission that the public interest in what is broadcast is so great that the Commission can refuse to renew the license of any station which does not meet its wishes in this matter. When stripped of legal terminology, this seemed to mean that the broadcasting station must have a right to cancel any contract for the use of radio time at the discretion of the broadcasting station officials. This right to cancel is customarily included in every contract between a broadcasting station and purchasers of radio time. No such right to cancel was accorded the broadcasting station in their contract with the church.

Negotiations between the officials of the radio station KMBC and the General Church officers concerned have continued since last summer. The General Church officials took the position that our contract was satisfactory, that it was a partial consideration for the purchase of the station by KMBC, and that the church was not desirous of making any changes or adjustments in the contract.

During the process of negotiation, additional information was submitted by the officials of KMBC which finally necessitated the church's employing legal counsel familiar with the work and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, to represent us in further negotiations. In January of this year, Israel A. Smith of the First Presidency and G. L. DeLapp of the Presiding Bishopric made a trip to Washington for the purpose of employing such legal counsel. After careful consideration and personal interviews with a number of attorneys specializing in this field, Mr. George B. Porter, one-time resident of the State of Iowa and formerly acting general counselor for the Federal Communications Commission, was employed to represent our interests and to carry on further negotiations.

Mr. Porter advised that the rulings of the Federal Communications Commission make it mandatory that KMBC have the right to cancel the church contract at their discretion. A new contract was therefore drawn up providing that the church receive $35,000.00 in cash for the three and one-half hours of time which had been allowed the church under the old contract, but which the church had not found it possible to use to advantage, plus fifteen minutes of the time which the church has hitherto used on her early Sunday morning program. The $35,000.00 just mentioned has already been paid to the church by KMBC, and has been placed in a special radio reserve where it will be available for properly authorized capital expenditures in the radio field. As general church finances permit, we expect to recommend that the $75,000.00 received from KMBC in 1932 as part of the purchase price for the station, and at that time absorbed in the general fund, be reappropriated for capital expenditures in the radio field and added to this special radio reserve.

The new contract further provides that at their discretion KMBC may cancel the remaining three and one-quarter hours of radio time being used by the church, but on doing so must pay to the church an additional $50,000.00. However, it is our hope that our broadcasting privileges will be continued automatically, our contract being renewed whenever the license of the Federal Communications Commission to KMBC is renewed up to November 10, 2027. Provision for such automatic renewal has been included in the contract, but is subject to the cancellation provision above indicated.

Many subsidiary factors enter into this transaction such as the development of Frequency Modulation (F.M.) frequency broadcasting, which may possibly replace the present method of broadcasting known as the Amplitude Modulation (A.M.) frequency. All of these factors have been considered at length by the church officials concerned. They were covered thoroughly by members of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric prior to the last General Conference, and again by members of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric since the conference. The Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric were informed of the developments as negotiations were carried on. Finally, the whole matter was placed before the Standing High Council, and they gave approval to the completion of negotiations with radio station KMBC on the basis hereinbefore set forth.

The status of our broadcasting interests has been a vital concern to the members of the church and this concern continues. This report is therefore submitted to inform the Saints concerning the present and possible radio situation.

Religious Education Week

September 29-October 6, 1946

The 16th annual observance of Religious Education Week will be given nation-wide recognition September 29 to October 6, 1946.

This period should be recognized by our people as providing an opportunity for the promotion of our educational program throughout the church. The administrative and departmental officers are urged to plan and conduct suitable services and activities during that time.

The Department of Religious Education will provide, through the pages of the Herald and in reply to direct inquiry, program plans and suggestions for such special services. The theme will be, "God's Word for Today." Inquiry pertaining thereto will be appreciated.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards.

Notice of Changes in Eastern Bishoprics

The resignations of Bishop M. C. Fisher of the Southern New England District and Bishop E. L. Traver of the Maine District have been submitted by them and accepted by the General Church officers. Because of the long years of service of both of these men, a formal notice such as this is hardly adequate to express the appreciation of the General Church for the service given. Both Brethren Traver and Fisher have served the church without stint of time or expense over a period of a great many years. That their years of service are terminated at the same time seems quite fitting, and words cannot express adequately the extent to which the General Church is obligated to them for that which they have contributed.

Bishop Donald Chesworth has already been assigned as Bishop of Maine, Southern New England,

New York and Philadelphia, and New York Districts, and he will assume responsibility on September 1, 1946.

F. C. Mesle of New York District and Samuel Worrell of New York and Philadelphia District will continue to handle their work as Bishop's Agents under the general supervision of Brother Don Chesworth. Solicitors in these districts are requested to continue to send their reports to the bishop's agent of their district. Solicitors in the Maine District and the Southern New England District should send their reports to Bishop Chesworth, 56 Alumni Street, Fall River, Massachusetts, beginning with the September report, which is to be mailed after September 25.

New Church at Osborn, Missouri

On Sunday, June 30, the writer had a very pleasant experience. By arrangement with President Emery Jennings and Bishop Earl Higdon, par excellent officials of the Far West Stake, we went to Osborn, Missouri, and assisted in the initial services in the Osborn church building.

While I was driving Osborn way somewhat deliberately, if not leisurely, planning my arrival not much in advance of eleven o'clock, I was overtaken and signaled down by Everett McPherson, of Independence, en route with wife and children and his sister—Sister McCall of Brewton, Alabama, who is the mother of Sister Higdon—and was whisked to our destination in time for a ten o'clock meeting, one I would not now have missed, when Bishop Higdon told the story of this new church home at Osborn.

Not many months ago, learning that the Methodists there—who were building a new structure, desired to sell their old one—our energetic brethren made a quick decision, after conferring with the Presiding Bishopric and the Presidency, and bought the former Methodist church home. The officers of that church, by the way, when they learned of our desire to buy, gave us a substantial reduction from the price they had formerly put on the old building. The deal closed, our people went into quick action. Result: a church of substantial construction and finished "like new"—commodious, one of which all are proud, and the Saints at Osborn are finally worshipping in their own home.

The cost: Here are the figures, as supplied by Bishop Higdon:

Building	$ 350.00
Material	1,019.57
Labor	314.38
Miscellaneous	1.25
Total	$1,685.20

The Osborn Saints have a lot to show for their investment.

The writer occupied at the eleven o'clock hour. Afterward there was a picnic lunch in the City Park directly across the street, and another service at three o'clock when President Jennings spoke. Unfortunately we could not stay to hear Brother Jennings.

The new branch is under the charge of Brother David C. Coffman. Saints from all over the Far West Stake were present and altogether it was a happy and joyous occasion.

Congratulations to Brethren Jennings and Higdon and Pastor Coffman, the Saints of Far West Stake, and especially, the members of the Osborn branch.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Study Courses for the Church School

By Chris B. Hartshorn

Editor of Church School Literature

Directors, superintendents, and teachers of the local schools will soon be ordering their material for the new year, which starts October 6. This action will depend upon certain contingencies: they must know what to order. This article will help meet that need. But they also will need to feel a sense of responsibility for action which does not come easily to those who feel that they may be replaced at the next business meeting. We may not be able to do much to change the uncertainty and consequent inertia of this group, but we can try.

KEEP IN STEP

The Department of Religious Education and the Herald Publishing House planned long ago the graded courses to be used this fall. The church required them to do that. A failure on their part at this time would be serious. Therefore, whoever may lead or teach in your church school will wish to follow the general church plan and get the same material you would order at this time. To ignore the curriculum plans and order other quarterlies and texts will get your school out of step and create an unbalance in publisher's supplies.

All teachers should plan now to be ready for the pupil changes attending the new school year. Finish your fourth quarter's lessons on September 29. New pupils will be promoted to your class; old ones will leave. Even the young adult classes will receive some from the senior high department. You may not be able to exhaust the good in all the lessons, but that is not serious. The pupils will be exposed to other material as good or better.

THE B COURSES ARE CURRENT

In all schools needing only one course in each age group, the approved quarterly for this fall is the B course. Each pupil should have a quarterly. To economize at the risk of depriving boys and girls of a better opportunity to understand these lessons is to assume a great responsibility. It is defeatist psychology. By the implication of this attitude, public school education is rated at a hundred cents on the dollar, while religious education is in the nickel class. This weakens the foundations of character building.

The titles of the current courses are:

Kindergarten, "Habits and Attitudes of God's Children" (new).

Primary, "Thinking of Others" (new).

Junior, "Preparing for the Coming of Jesus" (new).

Junior High, "How Persons Become Great" (revised).

Senior High, "Relation of Our Church to Other Churches."

The nursery course is the same as used the last two years, "Religious Nurture in Nursery Class and Home."

THE CURRICULUM CYCLE

Some of the larger schools may need three quarterlies in each age group. It is recommended that the A courses be used for the youngest pupils, the B course for those a year older, and the C course for those who have been in the department for two years. For example, the six-year-olds, first year primary, should study the A course; the seven-year-olds, the B course; and the eight-year-olds, the C course.

There are no new elective courses for young adults or adults. The texts for these should be selected to suit local needs. Try to offer the courses which will give a better balance to the religious knowledge of the group. Classes without quarterlies or prepared lesson texts, it is commonly conceded, make the least progress. Opinions are expressed which tend to displace the interpretations of church leaders, historical facts, and tested judgments. "Doubtful disputations" and contentions are more likely to arise in such classes.

Guide-Lines to Leadership, which is now ready to print, carries several articles about the new year's courses and other helps for workers in religious education.

A new Catalogue of Supplies for Church and Church School has been printed. All pastors, superintendents, and book stewards known to us will receive copies. Others who will write for one will be mailed a copy free of cost.

church people. More than this, the influence of the church is toward providing better things to come, a hope for the future. It is this hope which is one of the great reasons for such concentrations of our people as exist in the communities of Independence, Lamoni, Warrensburg, St. Joseph, and many other places farther away. Our people can do two things: they can improve their own individual and family conditions; and they can live near other church people where they can develop and co-operate in all good church projects.

An Affirmation of Faith

By Martha Ford Floro

IN THIS MODERN world, which has shrunk to such small dimensions that no single section of it is free from conflict, and where numerous forces are constantly threatening to destroy our faith, it is imperative that we, individually, make frequent affirmations of belief. This is necessary for two purposes: first, it is vital to any social reconstruction which we as a church plan to accomplish; and second, it requires constant vigilance to maintain personal equilibrium in these times.

This is my affirmation of belief; it does not speak for anyone else. However, there is a possibility that it may coincide in some respects with other people's ideas, because all of us are subject to many of the same influences and observations. As members of the same religious movement, we are concerned with some of the same social tendencies and share the same optimism that this religious faith offers. But again I state, this is my personal affirmation of belief, growing out of my own life.

Although I am still classified as a member of the younger generation, I have long since grown weary of the oversimplified approach to religion, based upon platitudes and speculation. I make this confession humbly, with no intention of being unduly critical. We cannot expect the thousands of men and women who call themselves Latter Day Saints to develop assembly-line philosophies, because each one of us must forge his own out of the everyday fiber of his own life, and therefore each one may be expected to bear something of its owner's originality of experience. I am quite sure that differences of opinion are stimulating to a democratic body, but what I am referring to is not this healthy type of discussion, but what I mentally term "religious chitchatter," usually highly speculative in nature, which, when it is all over, leaves us with a what-difference-does-it-all-make-anyway? feeling. My personal weariness with this sort of thing is the underlying reason for this article, which is a venture in self-discovery, a personal declaration of faith.

IN LOOKING AT LIFE squarely, we may well ask ourselves the age-old question, "What can I believe?" Doubtless, members of the human race have been asking themselves this same question ever since there was a man of intelligence on the earth. Looking about us, we see evidences of old superstitions which have been whispered down the ages, and these I cannot accept. However, I do not intend to dwell on these things which I cannot believe, but rather to speak out in a positive statement what I can believe and on what foundations I am building my personal faith.

With the smattering of information and training I have acquired thus far in life. I have looked at the universe and found God. It is true, he is much too great for me to put on paper; speaking figuratively, I have merely seen the hem of his robe. But his creative genius, kingdoms, laws, and universal order are there, and even I can see and recognize these evidences of this great personality at work throughout the centuries. I have seen enough of these processes to know that here is the basis of a personal philosophy, here is sufficient challenge to unfold my small personal powers in the direction of his universe. I am not afraid to give my personal allegiance to this evolutionary movement which my faith envisions as going on and on, always building toward the "immortality and eternal life of man." I believe in God.

AFTER ESTABLISHING FAITH in a universal creator, it is only human to look to great men and women for leadership and inspiration. There have been thousands of such leaders in the past, and at the present time there are also such men and women whose lives are filled with the greatness of humility and service to others. It is natural for us to look back to Jesus of Nazareth and find in him the simple faith of a carpenter who found God and pointed the western world toward his way of life. A few disciples followed him then, but the greatness of his message is evident today more than ever, and most of it is equally applicable. Surely there is more need today for the Sermon on the Mount and the spirit of brotherhood which prompted the five thousand souls to share their loaves and fishes. No one can read the account of Jesus' ministry and fail to find new optimism and courage for the good tasks of life. So I reaffirm my belief in the message of Jesus, whose favorite title was one of humility, "the son of man," but whose life was such a testimony of righteousness to his followers that he earned the right to be called "the Son of God." Because I believe wholeheartedly in the spirit and purpose of his mission, Jesus symbolizes to me the highest achievement of man in the direction of godlike personality.

I BELIEVE in the word of God as it is discovered in our Scriptures, other literature of worth, in the world of nature all about us, and in human personality. Wherever I have found truth which can be applied to social development, regardless of the source, there have I acknowledged the revelation of God's purposes, and these truths I have attempted to incorporate into my philosophy. To me, the story told by the rocks of the earth is as meaningful as is the written record of God's purpose running like a small golden thread through many generations, for from both sources have I heard God speak. To believe in the cessation of such revelation would be sheer folly, for so long as human capacities continue to expand, individuals here and there shall continue to reach upward to God and discover more and more of his purposes for mankind. This is one of the basic reasons why I believe in Latter Day Saintism; it was founded on the assumption that all truth is not yet known, that "there is yet more light and truth to break forth from his word."

I BELIEVE THAT it is the responsibility of religion to illustrate the principles of equality and justice in community projects. In my opinion, such a movement gives our church its major reason for existence, and it is obvious that the world is dawdling on the brink of international disaster if someone, somewhere, doesn't lead the way to a peace based on equality and justice. How can we rest when there is mistrust and lack of understanding between so-called free people in our own country? I believe in the potential contributions of Zion communities to the solution of these numerous problems and anticipate the adventure of supporting such a project. In my thinking, "Zion the beautiful" is very realistic and made up of people like you and me, growing individuals, who have been touched with the world's needs and are pioneering with God in the building of a better world.

MY AFFIRMATION of belief would not be complete without mention of my faith in the inherent goodness of men and women. Many of our fellow human beings are thwarted, misdirected individuals, whose mental and spiritual lives are cruelly misshapen and underdeveloped, but as a unit of society, part of the blame for such tragedies rests upon my shoulders. Never before has there been a keener awareness of social interdependence, and the shrinking globe on which we live emphasizes this interdependence. A small portion of the optimism which Jesus possessed has lighted within me the hope that world-wide brotherhood can be achieved. I ask only for the opportunity to assist in the furtherance of such brotherhood and good will.

This personal survey of which I have written is sketchy at best, but it covers the basic fundamentals on which I shall continue to build a life philosophy. These beliefs have not been built up overnight, but have evolved during the ten years in which I have been concerned with religion. In these days of stress, when it is easy to lose faith, there is personal value in pausing in the midst of life to reaffirm "I believe."

Historic Hastings Branch a Link With Alexander Kippe

By H. G. McGurk, Historian of the Australian Mission

Last January, Hastings Branch celebrated its diamond jubilee. Elder Joseph Burton organized it on the first Sunday in January, 1886. It is Victoria District's oldest branch in years of unbroken continuity of activities. The small high-roofed and well preserved wooden church was built under Apostle T. W. Smith's direction and is the oldest in use in the mission. It housed the first conference when Apostle Smith created Victoria District, the first district in Australia, in December, 1887, with Evan Gilbert Jones, Hastings pastor, as the first president. The branch has given three missionaries to the church, four district presidents, and provided a number of pastors for other branches.

The first gospel seed sown near Geelong and Euroa, Victoria, Adelaide, South Australia, and Perth, in West Australia, where branches now function, was through the initiative of Hastings' members. One member in particular, Ashton Woolley, took Joseph Burton to Geelong, and paid the fares of Elder J. W. Wight, another early missionary, to Euroa district and Adelaide before any Saints were there. Edwin H. Davies, a former active member, worked his passage from Melbourne to West Australia and labored there as a local man and pioneer, and built up Perth Branch, and won converts in other centers in the west. Later he entered the mission field.

Hastings branch has experienced the gifts of the Spirit—tongues and interpretation and prophecy—to an outstanding degree, especially in the early days of its existence. Elders exercising the ordinance of laying on of hands have witnessed advancing blindness suddenly arrested in one of the local elders. This man in turn, with a colleague, saw an apparently dead woman restored to life. On another occasion, in response to an urgent call, he traveled nearly one hundred miles to become the instrument of blessing to a mentally afflicted Saint. Through the years there have been many other healings. Two members claimed angelic visitations, and those experiences they vouched for in even the darkest moments of their lives. One of these men ceased to be active in the church, yet, at the ripe age of nearly 100, just before he died, he would still relate the vivid experience he had received with an earnestness that was convincing. The other

16. Gathering the Scattered Fragments

BEFORE PROCEEDING with our discussion of Gathering the Scattered Fragments, we want to review for you certain facts which have an important bearing on the over-all picture. The total membership of the church at the time of Joseph Smith's death in 1844 was variously estimated at from 150,000 to 200,000, with preference for the former figure. The population of Nauvoo (and not all of the population were members of the church by any means) was 30,000. There were more than 9,000 members in England and the British Isles, and many thousands more scattered in branches or congregations of the church throughout the eastern states, Canada, and a few locations in the south. A missionary had even been sent to the Society Islands.

In sketching for you the various leaders who attempted to head factions of the church after the fall of Nauvoo, we mentioned Lyman Wight, James J. Strang, Charles Thompson, Alpheus Cutler, Sidney Rigdon, and others. But the principal contender was Brigham Young, who had been president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles in the days of Joseph Smith. He led the largest single group in a westward exodus to Utah, where all his followers were rebaptized and reordained. On the way, while the caravan was wintering near Council Bluffs, Iowa, Brigham Young called a general conference of the church on one day's notice, and with less than 1,000 people present, and no notification to the thousands in other states and nations, had himself elected president of the church, in spite of his earlier pronouncements that the people could not elect a prophet, but that he must be called of God. Our point is, that only a fragment of the church voted this illegal action, and that only a very small minority of the original church ever followed Brigham Young; for three years after his arrival in Utah, there were only about 11,000 people in the whole Utah territory, including slaves and "Gentiles," as well as church members.

THE CHURCH continued to exist during the "Dark and Cloudy Day" in congregational form. The thousands of people who refused to follow Brigham Young were not all lost to the church, by any means. They were still organized in "branches," or congregations, with their presiding officers, and their other functioning officers in various grades of priesthood. Many of these branches, even in the days of Joseph Smith, had been largely isolated, independent, and self-sustaining, subject to a minimum of supervision by traveling church officials. These branches continued to regard themselves as the church, just as they had always done. They continued to teach, to preach, to exhort, to call to repentance, to baptize and officiate in all the ordinances of the church. Many of them tried first one leader after another, seeking truth and satisfaction, sometimes with more, but usually with less success than they had hoped.

The story of gathering the scattered fragments of the church which thus existed in congregational form, is a story of spiritual guidance and direction coming to several of these branches at about the same time, which eventually united them in a common cause and gave them instruction as to how they should proceed. The first name we should mention in connection with this study is that of Jason W. Briggs. He had been baptized in 1841, and soon after ordained an elder. He had been almost solely responsible for establishing two branches in Wisconsin—at Beloit, and Waukesha, baptizing and organizing the members himself. He visited Nauvoo in 1843, and came back much satisfied with what he found. But after the events of 1844 and 1845, he found himself more and more out of sympathy with Brigham Young and his claims, and he refused to leave his home in Wisconsin to follow him. He tried fellowship with James J. Strang for a time, and becoming dissatisfied, renounced him. He fellowshipped for a while with William Smith, a brother of the slain prophet, but found no satisfaction in his claims either. While wondering what to do, he was reminded one day of the way the church first came into existence—when a small lad discovered the instruction of James and asked of the Lord what he should do. He asked of God, and received what he believed to be a revelation of God's will. He was told that the elders of the church still had authority and the responsibility of teaching, preaching, exhorting to repentance, baptizing, and officiating in the usual ordinances of the church. And the promise was also given that in due time, "I will call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church."

He presented this revelation to three of his friends, who were reluctant to accept it because the church law was that only the prophet could receive revelations for the church. But there was no prophet. These men likewise inquired of the Lord what they should do, trying the promise with which the revelation closed, that if any asked they should receive a spiritual testimony of the truthfulness of the document.

Meanwhile, the usual Sunday service of the Beloit branch was called to meet in the home of Polly Briggs, Jason's mother. Elder Briggs preached, and following his sermon read his document, which was received with solemnity and intense feeling, but with some caution. Another meeting was appointed for the following evening to discuss it. At this meeting, the claims of various leaders were reviewed, and one by one rejected. Then the congregation voted to accept the document of their presiding elder as the word of the Lord. They copied it many times, again and again, in longhand, so that they might have copies to send out to other branches for their consideration. They made special effort to see that everyone who reportedly had accepted Brigham Young's doctrine of polygamy received a copy of this message. They formally resolved to withdraw confidence from any and all organizations and pretended leaders and successors to the presidency of the church, claiming the promise of the new revelation that in due time the seed of Joseph should be called. They did not consult "Young Joseph" who was still in the household his mother had maintained at Nauvoo. They saw no need to do so as yet.

CONCURRENTLY with these experiences of Jason W. Briggs and his branch, Zenos H. Gurley was also being led in the same direction. Gurley had been converted as a young man of twenty-nine by James Blakeslee, and had arrived in Missouri just in time to be driven out with the rest of the church towards Illinois in 1839. He was ordained an elder, and later a seventy, and served as a missionary for the church. After the events of 1844, he planned in all good faith to follow Brigham Young in the westward exodus from Nauvoo, but having lost his team and wagon and most of his goods in a depredation of the mob, found himself unable to undertake the journey. He took temporary refuge in an adjoining county, and later moved to Burlington, Wisconsin. By this time he knew more of the claims of Brigham Young, and rejected him in favor of James J. Strang. By authority of his original ordination, he converted several people and organized a branch of the church on Yellowstone Creek in Wisconsin, called the Yellowstone Branch. When Strang espoused polygamy, Gurley and the Yellowstone Branch publicly denounced him, and published a document openly stating their disapproval.

Like Briggs, Gurley was concerned about what he should do, and what was the status of the church. Like Briggs, he made it a matter of special prayer. In vision he saw the work of the church, and then in contrast, the work of Strang, which he says looked little and mean beside the larger work. The word of the Lord came to him, "Rise up; cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet to complete his work." He told his experience to a friend, Reuben Newkirk, who solemnly covenanted to join him in his stand. David Powell arrived soon after with news of the experience of Jason W. Briggs and his congregation, and the two men and their respective congregations were brought together by the very simple reply which Gurley sent to Briggs "We have received evidence of your revelation."

WORD WAS spread about the country insofar as possible, of a conference called for June 12, 1852, which was not regarded as a general conference of the church, but a conference of the several branches interested, to determine a course of future procedure. This conference was unique, in that there was no recognized church official or leader to call it. Many laughed at the presumption of the people who thus met. But the conference was moving slowly and cautiously. Representatives from the several branches deliberated carefully for two days, and concluded their business by appointing a committee of three to draw up a document setting forth their position—this document to be called, A Word of Consolation. They also adopted resolutions rejecting the claims of all leaders, asserting their confidence in the coming of Young Joseph, recognizing all ordinations in the original church as still valid in their fellowship, stating their belief that wherever six or more members are organized in branch organization, there is the church; reasserting their belief in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants as containing the basic law of the church; stating their belief that Jackson County, Missouri, was still the place appointed for the gathering; and calling upon all elders to continue their duty of crying repentance to this generation.

Other conferences were held at three month intervals. In October, 1852, another resolution was passed, "the highest authority among the priesthood represents the legitimate President as a presiding authority." At the same conference, the committee on the pamphlet, A Word of Consolation reported partial completion of their work, and the conference authorized the printing of 2,000 copies when finished.

On January 9, 1853, another quarterly conference was held. Meanwhile, polygamy had been publicly proclaimed in Utah. Strang was openly practicing it in his Beaver Island colony, and some other factions were dabbling with the idea, wondering whether they dared accept it. This conference put the question straight to God, asking for an answer to this query: "Is polygamy of God?" They also inquired as to whether the pamphlet as then constituted was complete and approved in God's sight. As they presented these petitions in solemn prayer, both questions were answered in one reply. The pamphlet needed three more pages, in which should be included a denunciation of polygamy in this strong language: "Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God; it is not of me; I abhor it, as also the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, and the men or set of men who practice it . . . Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine; many will be led into it honestly, for the Devil will seek to establish it and roll it forth to deceive." They also received the command to organize themselves, for soon God would require the prophet at their hand. But they were puzzled and uncertain as to how they could or should organize. In their congregations they had high priests, seventies, elders, etc., but they were puzzled as to who should take the lead.

On March 20, a special meeting of prayer was called to consider this problem, as preparation for the conference which was to be called the following April. Again solemn prayer was offered, and the congregation waited the word of the Lord, which came through H. H. Deam. His message said that the pattern was before them—the same pattern which had always been in the church. Let the highest in authority preside. Respect the authority set in the church. Let three men appointed by the conference select seven men to form a majority of a new Quorum of Twelve after approval of the conference, leaving five to be called later; and let the seven apostles be ordained by the president of the conference and two other high priests. The conference was also commanded to let the apostles then select twelve men for a standing High Council—all of which was along the lines of a pattern familiar to the members of the original church. On April 8, the recommendations of this document were carried out at the next conference, the first seven members of the Quorum of Twelve were ordained, and chose Jason W. Briggs as their quorum president. This was the beginning of the Reorganization, which was really not a reorganization, but simply a gathering together of the scattered membership of the church. No one was required to be rebaptized or reordained, unless his own conscience demanded it, and all concerned regarded themselves as still members of the church which they had originally accepted in the days of Joseph Smith.

We should not close our account of the gathering of the fragments without a short mention of one more name—William Marks. Marks had been high in the councils of the church in the days of the martyr, and after his death had examined the claims of Sidney Rigdon, James J. Strang, and Charles B. Thompson, only to be disappointed each time. He made at least one attempt to call together a few other people who like himself were dissatisfied, but without any results to show for his sincere efforts. In 1859 he heard of the Reorganization Movement, and joined his fortunes with theirs. He was destined to rise high again in the councils of the church.

The struggling little group continued to meet in semi-annual conferences, to invite all former members of the church to join them, and to await the day when Young Joseph should be sent to take his father's place. Some became impatient, and wanted to choose and ordain another president; and some left the church over this issue, too impatient to await the "due time" of the Lord. At the June conference of 1859, a letter came from a Brother Isaac Sheen, in Cincinnati, Ohio, asking information about the reorganization. And at the fall conference of 1859, the Saints authorized the publication of The True Latter Day Saints' Herald for an experimental period of six months. Isaac Sheen was to be sole editor. The first monthly issue came from Cincinnati in January, 1860, and though it is now a weekly publication, The Saints' Herald still continues to be the official publication of the church.

"The Voice of the Waves of the Sea"

By Arthur F. Gibbs, Seventy

"And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people: for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunders, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.)

Little could the prophet Joseph Smith have known of himself in eighteen hundred thirty-two, "of waves heaving themselves beyond their bounds," for he had not seen the sea, let alone a tidal wave. A person has to see a seismic wave, and its results before one's imagination can be stirred to pen such words as these. I know of no better words to describe a tidal wave. So because of my experience of a few weeks ago I am even more convinced of the divinity of the prophecies of Joseph Smith and of the work brought forth by him under the direction of God.

I have often read verse 25, of the 85th section of the Doctrine and Covenants and have used it in sermons, but I never was impressed with the power of the waves of the sea to destroy and bring destruction, but I am now after my experience of April Fool's day of 1946.

After having seen massive steel bridges torn loose and carried hundreds of feet inland, ten ton boulders picked up from a breakwater and hurled hundreds of feet, city blocks wiped clean as if a reaper had gone over the ground, and houses picked up and deposited nearly a mile inland, one can appreciate the perils that abound when nature goes berserk and is not held in the merciful hand of our God. After having seen warehouses of food picked up, some to be deposited against other buildings and in other buildings and some to be carried out to sea, where massive machinery once stood nothing but bare ground, with lumber yards gone, steel buildings looking as if a gigantic sledge hammer had been taken to them, fine residential districts stripped: their houses, new automobiles, bathtubs, clothes, and uprooted trees piled together in a twisted wreck, with what little vegetation remaining scorched brown with salt water, one can appreciate the devastation that can come suddenly and completely upon a community. After having seen railroad trains, boxcars, and tankers which had been tossed about like playthings, great piles of contaminated rubble, millions of dollars of damage, hundreds made homeless, scores killed and injured in a few minutes, one can appreciate why the revealing God caused Joseph Smith to include the above words of warning to the inhabitants of the world. When one sees these things one can not but be impressed with the power of the hands of the Omnipotent God to preserve, to destroy, to care for his own, to punish the wicked, and to bring His will to pass.

I wouldn't want to say that this calamity was a judgment pronounced upon the city of Hilo like the fire that came to the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, but at least it should be a warning to this ungodly and sinful city which stands upon a bay and beneath a live volcano whose logical path is to flow towards the city of Hilo, filling its bay and ruining its location forever. The city is ungodly with not more than ten per cent of its people churchgoing, with the sins of greediness expressed very evidently, with a lot of its population turning back to idol worship now that the war is over. This surely should be a warning to this city, and other cities and communities as well.

One could not experience this small wave and not think of the gigantic waves that Joseph Burton saw in his vision as recorded in the book Infallible Proofs, when he saw waves deluge the Eastern and Western coasts of the United States, of cities flooded and crumbling beneath the earthquake and back lash of waves. You would also think of the terrible destruction that was visited upon America when Jesus Christ was crucified at Jerusalem as recorded in the Book of Mormon, which also came as a fulfillment of prophecy. The kind of tidal waves that would accompany the earthquake that John records in his prophecy in Revelation 16: 18, would no doubt dwarf this little one we experienced in Hilo.

In light of all this knowledge of what will come upon the world of our day unless we repent, we should appreciate the message of Zion more and more where safety can be obtained by God's people. It was hard indeed to convince many of the Saints in the Islands that the day might come when they would need to flee their island paradise for the safety of Zion. Perhaps today some of them would be more easily convinced.

Several of the Saints here have greater faith in God's power to preserve his people in time of peril. Sister Puuohau, her daughter, and daughter-in-law, with their six children turned to God in prayer as the water swept around their home, the homes on their right and left going down, the large recreation hall across the street lifted and hurled upon the road, pieces of the wharf landing in their front yard, the water filling the basement of their stilted house, knocking the concrete washtubs through the wall; yet God's hand did not allow the water to crumple the timbers and settle their house within the waves. God can and will hear our prayers in time of peril. Many of our church school children told of the prayers they offered as they rode the crest of the waves sweeping them inland in their homes, or on roofs, or clinging to whatever they could find. Miraculous indeed was their escape from death.

The prophetic spirit brought warning to me of the imminence of the tidal wave before it struck. For the last year and a half I have several times spoken to Sister Gibbs concerning my spiritual intuition that some calamity was going to be visited upon Hilo. My mind always turned to the volcano and earthquake as I could see them and feel them from time to time. It is my intuition that the wave that came to visit these Islands on April Fool's Day is only a warning of what is to come, if the islands continue in their ungodly and greedy ways.

The words in the Doctrine and Covenants, "Surely men's hearts shall fail them, for fear shall come upon all people" were fulfilled here in the Island of Hawaii on April 1. Whether this fear shall continue and turn these people towards God is something to be seen, but surely the message, "Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the Judgment of our God is come; Behold and lo, the bridegroom cometh," should be heeded by those who understand.

CHALLENGES

THE AMERICAN "hello" and "good-by" are two of the least colorful words of greeting and farewell in the languages of the world. The other day I was bidding farewell to a friend and said my usual adios when its meaning suddenly caught my attention. Adios is not just a simple good-by, for its Spanish complement is "a" and "dios," or "to God." Thus when one bids his farewell he is actually leaving the affairs and health of the individual in God's hands. The French adieu is of similar meaning.

Much of the worry of the world would be eliminated if we could leave our material and spiritual affairs adios.

I'm wondering if anyone else noticed a great coincidence concerning the recent atomic bomb tests? I was looking at a chart of the location of the ships to be used in the tests. The map not only charted the location of these ships, but listed their names and types. There, close to the striking center were two similar vessels, one named "Salt Lake City" and the other, "Independence." It is natural that these names would be used for ships, but what queer quirk brought them together at the hub of a test of what is now thought to be the strongest force on earth?

I have a ruler on my desk which I keep in great use. Its sides measure inches, angles, and centimeters, and there is a printed scale to help measure other dimensions. But I have found that my most frequent use of that ruler is to draw a straight line. The edge is metal-rimmed and rigid and a pencil or pen guided along this edge produces a long, straight line.

There are a lot of extra helps in the world today which are designed to aid in producing a well-rounded personality. Once again I mention the "Y," the lodges and the clubs which have excellent programs of self-improvement. Yet the straight edged truth of the gospel would fulfill this purpose for the majority of people if they would use it.

I have had several comments by people who feel that I have been too hard on lodges. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have never purposefully criticized any lodge or organization of that type, but I have included them in lists of organizations which tend to detract from the church program. If an individual puts his energies into an outside organization, he is borrowing from the energies which he could be putting into church work.

Unions have been in the newspapers prominently for several months. One of the arguments for a "closed shop" is that the non-union workers are like hitchhikers who are getting a free ride by enjoying the benefits won by the union members who put up the money and the fight. Conceding their point, why not carry a closed-shop policy into other activities?

There are too many individuals who ride along with the church. They want certain activities to proceed, but they do not come to a business meeting because "we don't want to become involved." These are the ones on the fence in every controversy. They like to hear a choir but can't spare the time to practice. They like to see a pretty lawn but ignore pleas for help. They want the church to send out missionaries, but they fail to pay tithing.

I'm afraid that if our church observed a closed-shop policy, our adherents would drop in quantity, although the average quality might rise perceptibly.

An old campfire song says that "it isn't any trouble just to s-m-i-l-e," and it is a fundamental truth that a smile is one of the most powerful forces available to a man. Accidentally one day I discovered that by smiling while standing in a safety zone that I could stop the street car or bus directly in front of me so that I would not have to crowd among all the people waiting to board the vehicle. I stood facing the approaching car, looked directly at the driver and smiled. It works for I've done it again and again. So easy—and the results so convenient.

It isn't much trouble to be cheerful, even when in deep sorrow. Your smile may help lighten the load of another. A smile does not necessarily reflect gait, but shows genuine friendliness, and the time of trouble is that time when you most need your friends.

LETTERS

From a Youth Camp Enthusiast

I am writing this letter to the young people of the church to tell them about the wonderful camp I attended at Pawnee, Oklahoma. We were sort of pioneering, as this was the first camp ever to be held in Oklahoma; we hope it will be the stepping stone to others. The name selected for it was Camp Yakoma.

As Brother McDowell says, a good camp just doesn't happen—you have to make it. It takes fellowship and working together. Since I have never lived where I could attend church regularly, the association with other young people of like faith at camp meant a lot to me. Even though I was ill part of the time, I was able to participate in many of the activities of camp life. I hope to attend reunion and enjoy the blessings that are received there, also.

I am sixteen years old, and have been a member since 1941. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may always be a help, not a hindrance, to my church.

Healed Through Prayer

Just ten days ago I wrote requesting prayers for my three-year-old grandson, Kenneth Wheeler, who was struck by a car and seriously injured on June 7. Today I am writing with a heart filled with gratitude to our Heavenly Father, and to all who responded to that request.

I sent the request on July 8, and during that same week Kenneth regained his sight, memory, and speech; he has now undergone the final operation on his broken leg. The doctors say he will be able to leave the hospital soon. Do you wonder that my heart is overflowing with thankfulness to my Father in heaven for his goodness and mercy?

When Kenneth's voice returned, his mother asked, "Kenny, can you say your little bedtime prayer?" and without hesitation he repeated, "Now I lay me down to sleep"—remembering every word of it, including the "Amen." He now enjoys his picture books, and talks of things that happened before the accident, so we know that his memory has been completely restored.

Saints, pray for us that we may have the wisdom and understanding of His will, to show our gratitude for this great blessing by living our daily lives as he would have us. May those doctors, nurses, and all who witnessed this miracle be benefitted also.

Asks for Prayers

God has been with me through many trials and temptations, and I know that he is ever present to share our burdens. Miles away from friends and loved ones, I have felt his divine presence; there is no night so dark nor day so drear that God will not help us.

I have been reading the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and by so doing have found the solution to many problems. As workers for Christ's kingdom, we should study his word. We must remember that the sacred covenant which we made in the waters of baptism may be broken if we do not wholeheartedly give our every effort to establishing the cause of Zion.

I often wonder if I am worthy to be called a Latter Day Saint. The question frequently comes to me, also, "Am I a true servant?" I feel very weak, and realize that I have many faults. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may go forward and be able to overcome the temptations of life. Please remember my small daughter, also, that she may be healed of her illness. I know God answers the prayers of his people, when they are earnest and in accordance with his will. My prayer is that we may be ever watchful, and that the powers of evil may never be found among us.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for John Pettersson of Chicago, Illinois, who has been ill for several months.

Prayers are requested for Pete Brown of Dinuba, California, who is suffering from an affliction which has been pronounced incurable by medical doctors. It is hoped that, through prayer, he may be healed.

Mrs. George Brown of Onawa, Iowa, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may soon recover from the effects of a recent operation.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. A. M. Bailey of Huron, Tennessee, that her health might be restored.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

First Chicago Congregation

Pastor, Lyman Jones

Janet Ruth Smelzer, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Smelzer, was blessed at the June Communion service. Four new members were baptized on Children's Day; they are Carole Edstrom, Carol Schulz, Rochelle Reisinger, and Harold Schulz. On June 30, Thelona Stevens of the Department of Religious Education spoke at the 11 o'clock service and also presented credit certificates to fifty people who had completed courses. District President Joseph Baldwin presided over the service, and the Zion's League provided special music. A basket lunch was served at noon. A fellowship meeting was held at 2:30, followed by formal recital featuring Gloria Fisher and Paul Deaver as guest artists. After the recital, the Zion's League sponsored a tea for all present.

Calgary, Alberta

Apostle C. R. Hield and Seventies Phillip Moore and James Menzies recently visited Calgary to minister to the Saints. Elder J. Hockaday of Guelph, Ontario, and Brother Irby Mundy of Texas have also visited the branch; Elder Hockaday was the evening speaker on July 14 and 21. The church orchestra and assisting artists presented another in a series of concerts on June 28, the proceeds being applied to the building fund. The Alberta district Zion's League sponsored a successful youth camp at Sylvan Lake June 29 to July 6 inclusive. Seventies James Menzies, Phillip Moore, David Larmour, and Apostle Charles Hield were in charge. As many as seventy-five young people were present for week-end services; the average week-day attendance was fifty-five. Outstanding activities of the camp were the early morning prayer meetings, the enlightening sermons of Apostle Hield, and the evening campfire gatherings. Much credit is due Doris Shaw, district League president, for the organization work. A substantial balance in registration fees was voted to promote future camps.

—Stanley Walker, reporter.

LADYSMITH, WISCONSIN.—Seventy E. Y. Hunker was the guest speaker on June 24. He was also in charge of the all-day meeting held June 30.

Central Michigan District

A regional priesthood class is being held the fourth Sunday of each month in the various branches; a class for women is held at the same time. Elder Byron Doty and Christy Doty are the instructors; both groups are studying Elbert Smith's Restoration. Recent missionary efforts have done much to stimulate interest in branch activities. Family night is quickly becoming the major social feature. One such occasion grew into an old-fashioned "house warming" at the remodeled home of District President and Mrs. Doty; more than 100 guests were present. Gifts and a purse of money conveyed the appreciation of the Saints and friends throughout the district for the loyal service given by the Dotys. Finals for the various volleyball teams will be played at the Leahona Park reunion. Plans for the religious and educational features of the reunion are also being completed.

—Leora Gussman, reporter.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, W. J. Breshears

An early morning prayer meeting preceded the July Communion service; the monthly priesthood meeting was held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Elder J. J. Keifer, who recently moved to Springfield from Honolulu, spoke on July 14, relating several interesting personal experiences. Patriarch R. V. Hopkins was present from July 20 to 24 to give blessings; he was also the morning and evening speaker on July 21. A group of Leaguers recently visited Sister Anna Guss, one of the "early-day" Saints, conducting an outdoor service of song at her home. It is their plan to visit some shut-in each month. A bus was chartered to take the young people to the Spring River reunion at Columbus, Kansas.

Weyburn, Saskatchewan

The southern Saskatchewan reunion was held in Weyburn from July 11 to 14 with Apostle C. R. Hield, Seventy Phillip Moore, and Missionary James Menzies in charge. Representatives were present from Bromhead, Regina, Bethune, Moose Jaw, Brandon, and Saskatoon. Each day began with a prayer service, followed by class periods at 10, 11, and 2:30. From 4 to 6 in the afternoon, various types of recreation were sponsored for the different age groups. The children's classes were supervised by Elder and Mrs. Menzies. Evening activities consisted of a song service at 7:45, followed by preaching. On Saturday afternoon the district business meeting convened and the following officers were elected: Cliff Carson, secretary and Boy Scout director; J. W. Mountenay, treasurer and bishop's agent; Mrs. James Menzies, director of music and Blue Bird leader; Roland Jensen, Zion's League leader; Leonard Jensen, church school director; Mrs. S. Brooks, women's leader; and J. M. Taylor, nonresident pastor. Delegates for the 1947 General Conference were also chosen. On Sunday, four candidates: Dale Williams, Carol McPherson, Gladys Ireland, and Mrs. Minnie Lowe, were baptized and confirmed. Apostle Hield gave the final sermon of the reunion, following special meetings of the priesthood and women's department. Seventy Phillip Moore presented an illustrated lecture on Nauvoo at the regular evening service.

Gary, Indiana

Pastor, D. H. Smith

The women's department met in the home of Faye Benbow for the annual election of officers on June 4. Those elected for the coming year are as follows: Hazel Smith, president; Nora Hedelius, vice-president; Vida Rhodes, secretary; and Hazel Hughes, treasurer. Genevieve Lusha, district leader, was present for the meeting. Patriarch John Worth of England gave several blessings on June 6 and 7 while in Gary. The Children's Day program included recitations and songs by the members of the primary and junior departments. Barbara Jane Rhodes, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Rhodes, was blessed at the morning service. In the afternoon, an experience meeting and round-table discussion was conducted by District President J. E. Baldwin. Pastor D. H. Smith was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service on Father's Day. A potluck dinner was held in the Victory Room of the YMCA building on June 27; tiny aprons had previously been passed out to members of the branch with instructions to put as much money in the pockets as they wished to donate to the building fund. A total of thirty-eight dollars was collected. The Bible Class attended a meeting at the First Chicago Church on June 30; Thelona Stevens of the Department of Religious Education was the speaker.

—Thelma Conrad, reporter.

Buffalo, New York

The annual western New York district conference was held at Buffalo on May 18 and 19. A program in charge of Ann Voltmann, district youth leader, was held on Saturday night. Sunday's services began with a prayer meeting, followed by church school, and morning worship at 11 o'clock. Apostle G. G. Lewis was the guest speaker. A priesthood meeting was held at 2 p.m., after which the annual business session took place. District officers elected for the coming year are as follows: P. L. Weegar, president; F. C. Mesle and E. V. Wagner, counselors; Louise MacDonald, secretary; Thomas Yates, treasurer; E. V. Wagner, director of religious education; Forrest Landes, Zion's League leader; Catherine Devins, director of music; Florence Kennedy, women's supervisor; and F. C. Mesle, bishop's agent. The conference closed with a vesper hour, in which the combined choirs of the district participated.

Our Departed Ones

SHOOK.—Carrie Zinser, widow of Charles Shook, passed away December 28, 1945, at her home in Grand Rapids, Michigan; she was eighty-six years old.

She is survived by a half-brother, William Brown. Funeral services were held from the Alt Mortuary in Grand Rapids. Interment was in the Greenwood Cemetery.

HOWELL.—Eva Leanas, daughter of George and Mary Carter, was born September 11, 1873, near Richmond, Missouri, and died July 7 in Joplin, Missouri. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on August 22, 1887. In 1891, she was married to Thomas Howell; four children were born to this union.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. Grace Lohr of Joplin, Missouri; a son, Henry Howell of Kansas City, Kansas; two sisters: Nancy Teagarden of Rayville, Missouri, and Lillie Watkins of Richmond; two brothers: Emsly Carter of Baxter Springs, Missouri, and Clayton Carter of Richmond; four grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted from the Reorganized Church in Joplin by Elder Arthur J. Rock. Interment was in the Forest Park Cemetery.

COCHRAN.—Stella May, daughter of William and Ellen Adair, was born September 25, 1883, near Davis City, Iowa, and died at Tonkawa, Oklahoma, on June 15 of a heart attack. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church as a girl, and remained always faithful. She was married to Leroy Cochran in 1903; seven children were born to this union, all of whom live in or near Tonkawa, with the exception of the youngest daughter, whose home is in St. Louis, Missouri. Mrs. Cochran was a devoted mother and good neighbor, and was loved by all who knew her.

The funeral service was in charge of Elder Gose of Arkansas City. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Blackwell, Oklahoma.

DePUY.—Calvin, oldest resident of Lee's Summit, Missouri, was born November 17, 1852, at Granville, Ohio, and died April 27 at the Jackson County Emergency Hospital. He was united in marriage to Elize Jane Summers on March 29, 1877; they observed their sixty-ninth wedding anniversary this year. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1883, being ordained a priest in 1891, and an elder in 1894. The first Reorganized services in Lee's Summit were held in the DePuy home until a church could be secured.

He is survived by his wife; one son, Thomas; two daughters: Mrs. Mary Plinn, Lee's Summit, and Mrs. Elizabeth Adams, Kansas City, Missouri; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Christie Kearns at the church. Interment was in the Lee's Summit cemetery.

POWELL.—John Ernest Aylmer, was born at Elsinore, Ontario, February 13, 1916, and passed away in the Grey Nun's Hospital at Regina, Saskatchewan, on June 21 from injuries received when he was thrown from a wagon on May 24. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1929, being ordained to the office of priest in July, 1942. Although isolated from the church, he carried his religion into the co-operative organizations of which he was an active member.

He is survived by his parents, Aylmer and Ida Powell; and a sister, Amy, all of Nokomis, Saskatchewan. Services were held June 23 in the Regina Funeral Home, Elder James Menzies officiating. A memorial service was held the following day in the Nokomis United Church, with Elder Menzies and the Reverend G. Mills in charge. Interment was in Nokomis cemetery.

GARFIELD.—Salome Howes, was born February 23, 1871, in Dennis, Massachusetts, and passed away March 13, 1946, at Abington, Massachusetts. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1887, and was a true and devoted Saint. In 1888 she was married to Lincoln Baker Garfield; five children, Harry, William, Harold, Leslie, and Lorraine, were born to this union.

Funeral services were conducted at the Garfield home by Elder Herman Chelline. Burial was in the Swan Lake Cemetery in Dennisport, Massachusetts.

SPILLMAN.—John Henry, was born at Hedengen, Switzerland, on March 12, 1864, and passed away June 20, 1946. In June, 1886, he was married to Christina Serr at Baren Pheinphalz, Rhedt, Germany; twelve children were born to this union, ten of whom survive. They came to America in 1888, where they were baptized into the Reorganized Church. Mrs. Spillman preceded her husband in death in 1944.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. W. H. Childers, Bethel, Kansas; Mrs. W. C. McGuire, Mrs. R. R. Routh, Mrs. S. N. Moore, and Mrs. M. H. Whittington, St. Joseph, Missouri; five sons: Louis, Los Angeles, California; Frank, Leavenworth, Kansas; Robert, Henry, and Harry, St. Joseph, Missouri; thirty-one grandchildren, and thirty-three great-grandchildren. Elder C. E. Harpe of Lamoni, Iowa, preached the funeral sermon.

GAMBLE.—Robert Nelson, was born October 19, 1874, at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, and died June 13, 1946, at Compton, California. On June 14, 1897, he was united in marriage to Lilly Craven, and in 1910 became a member of the Reorganized Church.

He is survived by his wife; three sons: Elroy, Edward, and Edwin; and five daughters: Mary McGuire, Reno Lewis, Lilly Robinson, Catherine Morris, and Betty Fundukian. Funeral services were held in the Lock Four, Pennsylvania, church, with Elders E. B. Hull and Samuel Winship officiating. Interment was in the Roscoe, Pennsylvania, cemetery.

BIERMAN.—Sena J., daughter of Oltman and Tiika Johnson, was born in Hanover, Germany, on September 20, 1895, and passed away April 11 in Burlington, Iowa, after an extended illness. In 1882 she was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and was the oldest member of the Burlington congregation at the time of her death. On April 9, 1884, she was united in marriage to Fred Bierman, who preceded her in death.

Surviving are two sons: Fred G. and Elmer O., and a daughter, Mrs. G. E. Schweers, all of Burlington; three sisters: Mrs. Katherine Wilke, also of Burlington; Mrs. Emma Green, St. Joseph, Missouri; and Mrs. Anna Dyer, Stewartsville, Missouri; one brother, Henry H. Johnson, Cameron, Missouri; two grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the church by Pastor Frederick A. Kunz. Burial was in Aspen Grove Cemetery.

GOULD.—Winifred M., daughter of Donald and Sara McIntyre, was born June 5, 1889, at Beloit, Kansas, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on July 12, 1946. On December 29, 1897, she moved to Independence and was married to George A. Gould; nine children were born to this marriage, eight of whom survive. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1903. Mr. Gould preceded her in death in 1940, after which she moved to California, and then returned to make her home at Rest Haven.

Left to mourn are three daughters: Mrs. Ferne Whitehead, Kitchener, Ontario; Mrs. Eva Davis and Mrs. Faye McLean, Toronto, Ontario; five sons: Jay M., Portland, Oregon; Max, Independence, Missouri; Paul M., Sugar Creek, Missouri; Roy H. and Donald S., Los Angeles, California. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home, Elder James F. Keir officiating. Interment was in the Mt. Nebo Cemetery near Stover, Missouri.

QUICK.—Joseph Francis, son of Cornealius and Hanna Quick, was born near Marion, Indiana, on February 2, 1874, and died June 26 at Fort Scott, Kansas, following a long illness. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty-two years.

He is survived by his wife; three sons: Alfred, Harvey, and Floyd; two daughters: Mrs. Alta Seger and Mrs. Leba Beleher; two brothers: Merle and Lee; three sisters: Mrs. Iva Christensen, Mrs. Jennie Hutchinson, and Mrs. Maude Smith; four grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. The funeral was held on June 30 with Elders Dale Crown and C. C. Martin officiating.

CHAMBERLIN.—Ellen Lane, was born June 28, 1855, at Underhill, Vermont, and passed away at her home in Lamoni, Iowa, on June 29, 1946. She was united in marriage to Joseph Lane on July 4, 1871; seven children were born to this union, four of whom survive. Mrs. Lane was baptized into the Reorganized Church soon after her marriage, and remained faithful until her death. In 1919 she became the wife of Horace Chamberlin, who preceded her in death on December 20, 1929.

She is survived by two sons: Frank Lane, Lamoni, Iowa; and Ed Lane, Diagonal, Iowa; two daughters: Mrs. David Lewis, Omaha, Nebraska; and Mrs. E. J. Coffelt, Leon, Iowa; twenty-four grandchildren; thirty-four great-grandchildren, and four great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church, Elder J. A. Lane officiating. Interment was in Rosehill Cemetery.

MOODY.—Edna Mary, daughter of Andrew Jackson and Charlotte Oglevie, was born April 17, 1888, near Guide Rock, Nebraska, and passed away at the Independence Sanitarium on July 10, 1946. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when twelve years old, and remained a faithful worker until her death. On April 18, 1909, she was married to Clarence V. Moody; five children were born to this marriage, all of whom survive. Since 1927 she and her husband have made their home in Kingsville, Missouri.

She leaves her husband; two sons: Elmer of Atherton, Missouri, and Everett of Kingsville; three daughters: Mrs. Ocie Feske, St. Clair, Michigan; Mrs. Opal Atkins and Vida Mae of the home; four sisters: Mrs. Abbie Dixon, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Mrs. Lula Allen, Olathe, Colorado; Mrs. Ida Farmer, Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. Marie Wardrop, Freedom, Oklahoma; four brothers: Edward Oglevie, Blue Springs, Missouri; Raleigh, Vern, and Jesse Oglevie of Kingsville; and five grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Holden, Missouri, by Elders Amos Allen and Robert Dillon. Burial was in the Fairview Cemetery.

RUDD.—David Moroni, son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Rudd, was born February 26, 1862, in Crawford County, Iowa, and died February 1, 1946, at Pensacola, Florida. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and in 1889 was ordained an elder; he also served as a member of the Quorum of Seventy, laboring in Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, and Missouri until ill health forced him to retire. On November 17, 1889, he was married to Helen Blanche Cooper; two children were born to this union. Mrs. Rudd preceded him in death. After moving to Florida he continued to serve the church; he was the first pastor of the Pensacola congregation, and for several years held the office of district president.

He is survived by his daughter, Blanche Merron; a son, Blair Rudd; and two grandsons, all of Pensacola. Funeral services were conducted from the home, with Elder A. D. McCall and Apostle Charles R. Field in charge. Burial was in St. John's Cemetery.

man is alive and active today. Visiting elders are conscious of an aura from the past as they minister to the small loyal group of Hastings Saints today. This branch must have made almost a record for length of office by a father and son as pastors. Max Kippe, and his son William, who followed him, share over 41 years' leadership between them.

Despite the number of members who have married through the years, only two weddings are known to have been held in the church. The last one occurred December 29, when two of the young people, Dana Idella Kippe, daughter of the pastor, and close relative of the Ballards and Lovings—names well known in Australia—was married to Mervyn Unthank, by Elder S. W. Ballard. Velma Kippe, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Bert Jackson, best man. High Priest R. A. Butterworth, son of Apostle C. A. Butterworth, assisted in the ceremony.

The death of Alexander Kippe, translator of the Book of Mormon into German, last year as reported in The Saints' Herald recently, severed a link between Hastings Branch and the development of the church in Germany. Though Alexander Kippe never saw Hastings branch, this church stalwart owes his conversion to it. Max Kippe, a brother of Alexander, came to Australia and settled in Hastings. There he contacted the church and was baptized by Seventy (later Apostle) C. A. Butterworth in 1895. Max lost little time before writing to Alexander about the church. He also translated the Doctrine and Covenants into German and sent it to his brother. This finally converted Alexander to the church. Max Kippe, after serving twenty years as Hastings' pastor and many terms as district president, died about two decades ago. Now Alexander has joined his brother. The Saints at Hastings will ever remember their connection with the giving of the Book of Mormon to the German Saints.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

* EDITOR'S DREAMS

Visiting the Herald Publishing House, many of you have noted with approval the steady improvement of the offices, the fine bookstore, the attractive appearance of many features about the place. Your Board of Publication has given active direction to these improvements, and a great deal of credit goes to our Business Manager, Kenneth L. Graham, a man as devoted to the church as he is to his work. The Editors are seeing dreams and hopes fulfilled, and are very gratified. Give the Board and the Management an opportunity, and they will make a great publishing house here for the church. A wonderful future is possible, if we can ever get enough paper again.

They say it doesn't cost anything to dream, so the Editors feel no inhibitions against indulging in this inexpensive pleasure.

But we wonder sometimes, is that statement true? If you do anything about your dreams, they can be very costly. But they bring rich returns, too.

Our favorite editorial dreams include something like this: The roof insulated, a new stairway installed, good editorial offices and a library and consultation room upstairs; all the downstairs devoted to business offices and a vastly enlarged bookstore, which is greatly needed. . . . Our really ultimate dream, however—a thing that may be realized in our old age—is a larger building, new and beautiful, away from the business district, with lawn, trees, and a bit of garden for the employees in their rest periods, a chapel for worship and book reviews, air-conditioning, library, and conference rooms, and all needed facilities. But, above all, hundreds of book and tract publications written by our own people, and distributed around the world in many languages! Is that dream too big? No dream is too big for the work of the Lord.

* AN AMERICAN MISSIONARY who had spent twenty-five years in northern Burma before the war was addressing a civic club in one of our neighboring cities here. He was one of only two Americans able to speak and write the Kachin language spoken by the people there. He performed a fine service during the war, translating messages to be dropped from airplanes to the people, and later helped in recruiting Kachin natives for the American forces to assist in the struggle against the Japanese. This was important, since Burma was the highway to China.

People have often thought of missionary work as something impractical. Yet the humble, unselfish, devoted service of missionaries to the poor people of northern Burma won their hearts and loyalty in a great struggle that could not have been won without their aid. Missionary work has values not always realized by "practical" people.

This good man said, "In the war, I was asked to assist the government in its propaganda work. It later proved that the propaganda was more effective than the bullets. Now there are two kinds of propaganda: black propaganda, and white propaganda. I found two agencies bidding for my services, one dealing in the black kind, in which they would publish any statement, true or false. The other took great care, and checked every statement to verify its truth before publication. Being a missionary, I chose to serve where they issued only white propaganda."

As we consider the future of missionary work, our young people should be aware of the necessity of learning the languages of other people, and of being able to help those people in some good way, so that their religion will be of demonstrated value.

First Church Building Loan Goes to Cash, Michigan

The first loan from the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund has been made to the branch at Cash, Michigan. We are delighted to welcome Cash as the forerunner of many branches which we expect to participate in this important joint enterprise, and we hope that during the next few years local initiative plus the revolving fund will enable us to build attractive, adequate, and debt-free houses of worship in hundreds of communities.

Cash is a small center in the "thumb" district of Eastern Michigan where a handful of Saints built their first church more than forty years ago. The original structure was remodeled and enlarged from time to time, and an ambitious repair and enlargement program was under way when the church was destroyed by a cyclone in April, 1945. Discouraged, the Saints felt the burden of rebuilding was too heavy for them to bear. At this critical moment Brother Albert Duckert received a letter from his soldier son, Orlo, in which Orlo offered to sell part of his livestock to help along the good cause. After that there was no question as to what would be done, and today practically everyone of the sixty-six members of the branch is proud to have contributed both money and labor to the new building.

The new church has been constructed according to plans projected by Brethren Eldon Winters and William Bosky, as perfected by the architect and approved by the branch and the general church officials concerned. It is so constructed that additions may be built as necessities require without injuring the architectural design. The Saints already have plans to repay the revolving fund well within the period called for in their arrangement with the Presiding Bishopric.

The General Church—which means all the church in all the world—has always been interested in the work at Cash and at every other local center. Indeed, the General Church does not exist except as its local branches grow strong and stable. Now, we have all helped Cash; which means that we have helped ourselves. In time we shall help other local groups which can meet the conditions which necessity imposes. Then Cash and the other branches, being stronger for our help, will repay the loans made to them and will join gladly in helping other branches to build and to grow and to become strong in fellowship.

Living Testimonies

Have you ever thought of yourself as a living testimony? You are, whether you wish to be one or not. You are a living example of a way of life, a philosophy, a religion, a faith. You show what the things you believe in will do for a person.

Some living examples are good, and pay high tribute to the beliefs that people profess. Other examples are poor, and sadly misrepresent the church or group with which they are identified. They are all testimonies, and the public judges not only the man by his conduct, but also his family, his church, his politics, and everything with which he is associated.

Every day, one may see living testimonies upon the streets. Today I saw a man whose faith has been triumphant over years of suffering due to an accident for which he was not responsible. While bearing his testimony, he was healed of his painful affliction, and today enjoys finer health than he had before he was hurt. Today I saw a young man whose faith and courage were triumphant over handicaps and poverty, and who has attained a fine business of his own, the respect of the community, and the gratitude of the congregation in which he worships and serves. Today, across the street I saw a man who was redeemed by the gospel from a life of uselessness and sin, and now has a good wife, a happy home, the respect and confidence of good people, and many friends. Today I saw men and women who from their very youth have been fine, honorable people, who have been happy and successful because they have been blessed in trying to do good.

Today I saw also some other kinds of living testimonies—a few negative ones. Very fortunately, they are in the minority. Some of them cannot be trusted; some cannot be believed; some will not pay their bills; a few have broken up their homes for wicked purposes. They, too, are identified with the Christian religion and the church. A few people who have no other acquaintance with the church will look at such folk and say, "If he is an example, I don't want any of it."

But most of the living testimonies are good ones.

I was in a store making a purchase. At the cashier's desk I misplaced the bill I had, and thought it was lost. The clerk recovered it for me. A lady standing near me said, "That clerk was honest. You are lucky." I replied, "Yes, I am glad he is honest. Most of the people one meets are honest." I shall remember that man, and probably look for him the next time I go in to that store. In fact, I will think of that store the next time I want something in their line. There is a living testimony. It is not something that happened by accident. There is always something back of any good

Policy on Houses of Worship Fund

The following statement of policy regarding the use of the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund has been drawn up by the Presiding Bishopric, and approved by the First Presidency, and is printed here for the information of the Saints. We trust that local presiding officers will give this document careful scrutiny, since familiarity with its provisions will enable us to co-operate in arranging for church loans for building purpose wherever these come within the provisions of the policy set forth:

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

Independence, Missouri
July 30, 1946

The recommendations of the Board of Appropriations for the setting up of a Houses of Worship Revolving Fund was approved by the General Conference. During the period of debt payment, it was impossible for the General Church to allocate back to the districts and branches a proportionate amount of contributions it received from tithes and offerings to give assistance in building houses of worship. It is anticipated that a substantial portion of funds needed for the construction of church buildings would be provided by the local congregations, the General Church to grant loans for additional sums to be amortized over a period of years. We are setting forth the basis upon which branches may expect to take advantage of this fund in building their houses of worship.

The purpose, in making loans available to branches, is not to take over the responsibilities of the local congregations in their building program, but to assist such congregations who have put forth reasonable efforts to accumulate funds, thus enabling them to realize their objective and have the use of a house of worship without undue delay. It should be borne in mind that we are entering a new field of endeavor so far as the General Church is concerned, and it is therefore quite obvious that we need to understand clearly the basis upon which help is to be extended.

I. Branches or groups should follow approved procedure for building programs.

a. Because church-building projects are regarded as tasks of spiritual import affecting the general work of the church, the conference has adopted several resolutions touching building programs. These make available to local officers the consideration and advice of the general officers in respect to their building program. "That stakes, districts, local congregations, and reunion associations be requested to make no local expenditures in any considerable sum or incur any local indebtedness except such as shall be approved by the First Presidency, and Presiding Bishopric or their representatives, and the member of the Twelve in charge of the respective field." (Resolution of April 14, 1927.)

Resolution No. 785 provides "that no church site be chosen or edifice erected by any branch without first conferring with the Presiding Bishopric and the Church Architect."

The purpose of this legislation is not to curtail the activities of any branch, district, or stake, but to safeguard the interest of all concerned and promote better co-operation among local and general officers for the accomplishment of the work of the church. The general officers have a stewardship responsibility, and it is to be remembered that members are more than just members of a branch or group, they are members of the General Church.

b. The first step in any building project for a branch or group is the appointment of a building committee to be in charge of the program. This appointment should be made at a regular business meeting or a special meeting called for that purpose. The members of the committee should be selected because of their qualifications for the work assigned to them. It is customary for the branch president and the local bishop or bishop's agent to be ex officio members of the committee. The work of the committee is to investigate thoroughly the housing needs of the branch. Studies should include the requirements of the entire congregation, giving consideration to all ages. The building site should be carefully chosen with due regard to its convenience for present membership and its advantages for possible expansion through missionary work.

The committee should develop plans for the building. It is usually preferable to obtain the services of a local architect as he is acquainted with building problems and restrictions of his own area. The architect should submit several studies of building possibilities for the consideration of the committee. The utmost freedom should be assumed by the committee in the changing of these preliminary studies to meet the needs of the branch. It is important that these preliminary studies be submitted to the general church officers for recommendations and suggestions before the final plans are drawn. The committee should make provision for adequate equipment in its building plan. It has been estimated that this cost will range from 20 to 30 per cent of the total cost of the building.

c. The general church policy for financing the building of Houses of Worship is not especially affected by the creation of the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund. We recommend that wherever it is possible, building programs should be on the cash or "pay-as-you-go" basis. The exception to that policy has been for groups who are paying rent and who find themselves in a position to purchase a property suitable for use or build their own building by assuming some obligation. In these cases arrangements for monthly payments that would not exceed the cost of rent is suggested. The intent of this policy is to prevent groups from becoming involved with indebtedness to outside interests which might prove embarrassing to them. While loans from Houses of Worship Revolving Fund will create a debt for the local group, yet in our opinion it may be justified because it will keep the indebtedness of any group within the church itself and adjustments regarding the terms of repayment can be made as conditions make necessary. Under this arrangement indebtedness would not be a threat to the local congregations.

II. If the foregoing has been complied with by local congregations, the building committee should be eligible for a loan from the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund. The following circumstances would govern:

a. By action of the branch, district, or stake in business meeting, the building committee should be authorized to make application for a loan from the Presiding Bishopric. Application forms will be sent on request.

b. The loan cannot exceed 50 per cent of the building cost, including pews. It is recommended that the branch have on hand at least half of the funds to complete the building needs, and it is highly recommended that more than this amount be on hand if possible. The loan would be made subject to a small interest charge of 1 per cent, this to meet the cost of administration of the fund. Plans for repayment should be worked out with the branch commensurate with its ability to pay. It is recommended that regular monthly payments plus interest be made.

c. First consideration will be given to groups that are building new churches, or to those who are under necessity to enlarge their quarters. This priority is necessary in view of the fact we are not certain of the demands to be made upon us, and we are interested that congregations without buildings or with houses of worship not adequate for their needs be provided for first.

d. Therefore, under present circumstances, the fund is not to be loaned to groups for repairs of church properties unless major alterations are involved. It is anticipated that any active group in the nature of things will take care of the depreciation of its properties and keep them in a good state of repair. Therefore, only such alterations that would involve enlargement of the building to provide more adequate quarters would be considered.

e. Favorable consideration will be given to applications providing the branch or group evidences justifiable activity and interest in the growth of the work of the church and gives evidence that they are financially able to repay the loan extended. Therefore, its growth of membership of new families, its accumulation of financial resources, its future possibilities will all be considered. It is particularly desirable that the Apostle in charge of the field and/or General Church officers who make recommendation for loans will have the work of the church in that area clearly in mind so that adequate information can be supplied.

f. It will be required that the local group or branch obtaining the loan for its building carry adequate insurance. All church buildings and equipment should be protected against fire, water, windstorm damage. Many branches provide their own insurances through local agencies; however, arrangements can be made for insurance through the Presiding Bishopric.

Announcements

District Presidents,
District Directors of Religious Education,
Pastors, and

Local Directors of Religious Education:

When copies of A Yearbook for Church School Workers were distributed the first of the year, a September check-up was mentioned. Forms for this annual checkup of the church school are being mailed to all district presidents and to all pastors.

District directors of religious education will receive their forms from the district presidents, and the local directors will receive theirs from the pastors. If any of the above officers do not receive their copies on or before August 15, they should notify at once the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and copies will be sent.

The completed reports are to be filed by the local directors with the district director, who will summarize the information and make a report for his district to the General Department of Religious Education on or by September 1.

F. M. McDOWELL, Director,
Department of Religious Education.

Across the Desk

THE Akron Beacon Journal runs a weekly column under the heading of "Let's Take a Trip Sunday." In the issue of July 6 are the following comments which will be of interest to our people:

From Chagrin along modern highways traveling through the farmlands, make your next stop at Kirtland.

Towering above the village is a stately temple—built between 1833 and 1836 by the Mormon sect.

It is one of the most striking pieces of architecture in the state and is still used for worship today, but not by Mormons.

The temple itself dominates the entire community. Its exterior is of stuccoed sandstone, and the entire building embraces casually, yet harmoniously, Venetian and Grecian types of architecture.

Original glass is in many of the windows and in general, all of the temple has withstood the elements and remains in its original state.

Today, the church is used by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The building is open throughout every day, and a guide is available to conduct you through its interesting expanses.

A FEW DAYS AGO the First Presidency received a letter from Paul E. Kaiser of Biloxi, Mississippi, who stated that his parents were members of the Reorganized Church and that because of this contact he and his wife had become interested in reading the books of the church. During the last few months these good people have studied the Standard Books and the Herald, and on a recent visit to relatives in Independence they talked with Brother Tickemyer and Brother Higdon, and last week both of them were baptized. Brother Kaiser's brother, who lives in Kansas City, remembers what the gospel did for his parents, and he too is considering joining the church. We wish that our good friends had obeyed the gospel while they were yet young, and we have a suspicion that they might have done so if someone down the line had been a little more careful to see that they were instructed and invited. Nevertheless we are very happy that now, toward the close of their lives, they are returning to the faith of their fathers.

Think, now, what kind of living testimony you are for what you believe, for the work and the religion you represent, for your family and friends. People are judging some of them by you. It is serious enough when they judge you by you. But when they judge others by you, a responsibility is placed upon you.

Last of all, people even judge the love and mercy of God by those who profess to be his children. Have you given wrong impressions of God? There is a responsibility you cannot escape.

Buildings are now being torn down from the ground up. Ordinarily, after removal of all parts that could profitably be salvaged from the interior, wreckers began on the top floors and debris was dumped down chutes. In applying the new idea, the first step is to take out the street-level floor and clear the basement of partitions and pipes. Then holes are cut in the second floor. Interior partitions and walls are torn out and dropped through the openings. As the wreckers work upward, a floor at a time, they tumble all debris through the holes underneath, straight down to the basement. Then they tear down the outer walls from the top, dropping the wreckage inside the empty shell of the building. By the time the walls are down to the second story, the growing heaps of debris is level with them, and a steam shovel scoops walls and all into trucks to be hauled away.—Jesse F. Gelders in Popular Science.

Trip to New York State

The writer, referred to herein as editorial "we," spent two very interesting days at Niagara Falls, New York, on July 13 and 14, when the branch there celebrated its fortieth anniversary. We arrived about three in the afternoon of Saturday and were quite busy until we left on Monday morning for a visit to Palmyra and "the Hill."

All the proceedings were under the able direction of Pastor Clifford C. Spilsbury. At 4 p.m., Saturday, registration, followed by a banquet at the Y. W. C. A. auditorium, which was attended by almost one hundred fifty members, among whom were all but one of those who have served as pastor, including Elder F. C. Mesle who was the first to occupy in charge. Many were there from Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Toronto, Hamilton, and other branches, including Brethren A. F. McLean, Leslie Prentice, James H. Wilson of Toronto, and of course Doctor P. L. Weegar, district president. Miss Gertrude Copeland, Miss Vida Butterworth, of the Sanitarium, were present, as also Brother and Sister Harry Sprague of Independence. We were the speaker on this memorable occasion.

From the hour of the prayer service, 8:30 on Sunday morning, in charge of Elder George Landes, the hours were crowded: Church school discussion under leadership of Doctor Weegar; morning worship at eleven; dinner; a meeting of reminiscence at two in charge of the first pastor; and vesper service at 4 o'clock.

We occupied at both the eleven o'clock and four o'clock services.

By invitation of the local broadcasting company, the Niagara Falls branch Sunday morning services through July are being broadcast. So our effort at this service was "on the air" and, necessarily, was read. We experienced a little difficulty in crowding a forty minute address into less than thirty-two minutes; but we made it in time for Pastor Spilsbury's feeling and appropriate benediction and the theme song by the choir.

The programs throughout had been carefully prepared, and Brother Spilsbury is to be congratulated on a good task well performed. He is especially adept in keeping everybody smiling.

I was the recipient of special favors by Brother Paul Morden who contributed much to make my visit delightful.

No more fitting climax to my New York trip could have been planned than a trip to Palmyra and the Hill Cumorah. Brother Walter O. Simpson, pastor of the Buffalo branch, came for me on Monday morning, and before we arrived at his hospitable home about five o'clock we had visited, besides "the Hill," the Martin Harris home, the Sacred Grove, and the old Smith homestead.

At eight on Monday, 15, I spoke at Buffalo, taking a late train for Chicago—and home, well repaid personally for time and effort in meeting with the Saints at Niagara Falls and Buffalo.

Corrections for Worship Services

NOTE: From Sister Ruby Strand comes the following letter indicating mistakes made in the publication of the worship services by her, and the proper corrections to be made.—Editors.

In reading over the Worship Services for the month of September in the August 3rd issue of the Herald I note that an omission has been made in the service for September 22. Will it be convenient for you to correct the error, please? Between the Call to Worship and the Suggestions for Theme Talk, there should be Opening Hymn No. 402, Saints' Hymnal, followed by Scripture Reading, James 1: 5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." If the above is inserted it makes a much smoother and more effective worship, I believe. Thank you.

RUBY STRAND.

So Black the Rose

Have you ever seen a black rose? Have you ever walked down an avenue of giant rose trees—16 to 20 feet high—that made you think you were wearing magnifying glasses? If you have, it probably means you've visited the experimental gardens of the 74-year-old Catholic priest in Santa Barbara—Father Schoener. A rosiculturist for close to half a century, he has in his gardens at present 2300 varieties of roses. His velvety black rose, whose creation has cost him much trouble, he has named in honor of his friend, the late Chief Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The 111 giant rose trees of his Avenida de las Rosas have been grown mainly to demonstrate that, where climate favors, the rose is a practical street tree, even a practical shade tree. Some of his 20-footers have a 10-foot spread. He developed his giants by crossing roses grown from seeds of rare species, seeds he obtained from the Royal Botanic Garden of Calcutta, India. The big trees are of 13 varieties, all very beautiful, with white roses, cream roses, yellow, orange, pink and red roses.

Father Schoener intends to make these lofty rose trees fruit trees, too. It's perfectly possible. The apple is a member of the rose family. Rosa macrocarpa grows very large fruit (seedpods or "hips") in its native India. Father Schoener is crossing macrocarpa with various apples, and is confident that in a few years he'll produce, to bud onto his giants, a rose with an edible rose fruit, spicy and sweet. His confidence is encouraged by the fact that in Oregon he once crossed Rosa pomifera and the Spitzenberg apple, and got a rose plant that bore midget apples that made a fine jelly with a rose fragrance.—The Sunset Magazine.

Some years ago a woman writer, visiting in San Francisco, was presented with one of Henry James' novels to read on her return journey. In this she put as a marker the business card of a little German watchmaker in the city, who had made some repairs on her watch just before she left. The book, however, remained unread until, two years later, on a return trip from Europe, she brought it out on deck.

As she seated herself in her deck chair, she noticed near her a young foreigner who, though a stranger, had attracted her attention by his apparent melancholy and loneliness. She made some trifling remark to him, and to her horror he burst into tears. Sympathetically she drew from him his story. He had lost his parents, his sister and two brothers in an epidemic in Germany, and was utterly alone in the world except for a brother in America to whom he was now journeying; and he had neither heard from this brother for years nor had told him of his coming.

"But how do you expect to find your brother?" she asked.

The young man answered: "The last time he wrote, he told us the name of the town he was going to move to. It is called 'Outwest'."

"Out West." As gently as she could the writer explained the nature of that mighty territory. She laid her hand on his shoulder to comfort him, and her book fell to the deck. He stooped to pick it up and suddenly gave a shriek of joy.

"Oh, Fraulein! You know my brother! It is his name! It is Otto himself!"

Out of the book had fallen the forgotten card of the little German watchmaker, carelessly thrust within it two years before, thousands of miles away.

How Pray Ye?

By Maurine Cottew

OUR FATHER which art in heaven” Thus do we often begin our prayers, just as Christ taught us to do, as recorded in the New Testament. We speak of the comfort to be gained through prayer, the help in daily tasks, the strength of purpose, the poise we attain from God’s presence in our lives. There are our prayers of thanksgiving, for guidance, for healing, health. We have been told that all prayer, uttered or unexpressed, reaches God, so long as we pray in humility and faith. Tennyson in his “Idylls of the King” says,

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of.

Considering all these things, we can realize that as a Christian nation we have a responsibility to be achieved in wise and earnest prayer. In the last decade our church men, and those great leaders who have attempted to guide us toward world brotherhood in lasting peace, have taught us that we must make larger prayers, seek blessings for a greater number, voice petitions that include all humanity. Christ gave no examples of selfish prayers for just “me and mine.” His prayers were big, to include all men, and to seek God’s great mercy for all his children. So should our own prayers be.

NOT SO MANY WEEKS ago a prayer for the immediate ending of the war would have seemed the largest prayer we could offer. It was indeed a big order, but the world received that blessing. Did it solve our problems? Anyone reading this will know that is a foolish question. All of us know that the ending of the war was only the beginning of what we hope—and pray—will be a better day.

Think of two boys fighting on the school playground. The supervisor, principal, or even a classmate pulls them apart. They loose all holds and release all pressure for a time. Then what happens? Ask any teacher or parent. Unless they are under constant surveillance, they will be at it again at recess or after school. Unless someone helps them to a better understanding of each other; unless a respect for the other fellow is created; unless love develops, or some other change of heart, they will finish the fight after hours.

THIS IS just as true of countries. Without an interest in each other, which will set aside the selfish demands for power or trade or territory, they will be “at it again at recess.” Those selfish cravings must be replaced by a strong desire to be of service to others, and by the will to recognize the citizens of other countries as brothers. If our leaders cannot maintain this Christian attitude in our peace plans, then war will come again. This is true, because the same evils which brought on this great catastrophe are still occupying almost uncontested places in many homes throughout the continents. The greediness, the frivolity, the “me first” attitude grow into our homes, our schools, and our churches unless we are careful and prayerful.

I AM REMINDED of the story told by the president of one of our mid-west colleges for girls. She had been personnel director in a large industrial center during the last depression. Conditions were pitiful. Fathers, sunken in depths of hopelessness, came crying to her office. On the lips of each one was an earnest plea, “Please, teach my daughter so she can always get a job.” An earnest plea, but a selfish one. In all those trying years, not one father came to say, “Please, Miss M—educate all our young people so they’ll know how to avoid another depression.” Such a request would have given evidence that their interest reached beyond their own door.

Our prayers today must reach beyond the fences of our Food-for-Europe gardens, beyond the soldier on duty overseas, and above our fastest planes. If we are to succeed in establishing the fellowship Christ labored toward, we must pray for all nationalities and all races. When the ideal of world citizenship truly grips our hearts and minds, we will pray not only for those we know and love but for those we do not know, for whom we yearn to seek God’s help. We will pray for the lives and souls of all men whose problems we have grown to see and appreciate. We must pray for understanding of this great movement that has been preached down through the ages. We must pray for wisdom. Christ himself gave the instruction, “Seek and ye shall find.” Our prayers must be for that change of heart which will cause us to love all men as brothers.

American Animals

Few laymen know that the camels originated in America and went through most of their evolutionary history in what is now the western part of the United States. During the height of the glacial period enough oceanic water was tied up in the gigantic polar icecap to lower the level of the oceans, so that many land areas now separated by water were then connected. Thus the camels reached the Old World and the elephants reached the New, and strangely enough, according to a Russian scholar, Nazoroff by name, the sheep not only passed from Asia to North America but went back again, leaving the ancestors of all our various species of bighorn behind them.

Geologically speaking, a fairly recent uplift of land formed Central America (for the Caribbean Sea was once a bay of the Pacific) and allowed camels to reach South America, where they persist as the llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuna. The stock then died out in North America. The elephants pushed down as far as Ecuador and likewise disappeared as they did all over North America, where they once existed in countless numbers of individuals and a great variety of species.

The Restoration

By Evan A. Fry

17. The Coming of Young Joseph

OUR LAST chapter told how several of the branches or congregations of the church which had refused to follow any of the factional leaders that had assumed control after the death of Joseph Smith, were drawn together in the work of reorganizing the church and preparing for the coming of "Young Joseph," the son of the martyred prophet. The special and miraculous power of God directed these congregations and their leaders in this work, and confirmed that direction with an outpouring of spiritual gifts such as had not been seen or experienced since the early days of the church. To these people the promise had been given that in the Lord's due time, the seed of Joseph should be raised up and sent to take his father's place as president and prophet of the church; and though some lost patience and gave up hope, the majority of them waited patiently for the fulfillment of the promise.

Young Joseph, as he was called, was not yet twelve years old when his father was killed. As a lad, he had been the close companion of his father whenever that father was at home. It was the father's custom to take the young boy with him into the speaker's stand when there was public speaking or preaching to be done, although the boy had little liking for thus being elevated above his fellows, and preferred to sit with his mother in the congregation. He was too young to know much of the difficulties which his father encountered, but not too young to have been impressed with the fact that his father expected him to take his place at the head of the church some day. On at least three different occasions his father had designated him in the presence of witnesses as his successor.

YOUNG JOSEPH was the oldest living son of the family, and in spite of his youth was soon made keenly aware that his mother had a tremendous load of responsibility. Enemies of her husband brought suit against her for payment of some notes on which her husband had gone the security, and which the family had every reason to believe had been paid. Only the untiring and zealous efforts of a friendly lawyer saved the little family from losing even their home and furniture. Unfriendly courts appointed an administrator for the estate who allowed young Joseph's mother $124 per year for the support of the family. When it became obvious that Emma Smith, widow of the prophet, was not going to be a party to Brigham Young's efforts to seize the reins of church government, she was placed under surveillance; people who came to see her were turned away from her door without being allowed to speak to her; and she was more than once threatened with bodily harm to herself and family if she did not leave the city of Nauvoo at once. She was denied possession of many of her husband's official and private papers by the administrator in charge of his estate, and even some important legal papers such as deeds and title papers were secured after much trouble and long delay. She was called "apostate," and warned that unless she followed the leadership of the Twelve, they would strip her of all her property and force her to beg their pardon and go with them to the West.

In the fall of 1846, when rumor constantly repeated that a mob was coming to sack the city, Emma Smith and her family left Nauvoo, renting the Mansion House which had been their home, and went to spend the winter at Fulton City, up the river. In February, hearing that the tenant who was operating the Mansion House as a hotel was preparing to leave and take all the furniture with him, Emma and her children and a kindly neighbor drove back to Nauvoo and took possession of home and furniture, to the consternation of the man who thought he had a complete stock of hotel furniture free for the taking. He left precipitately, without even taking time to pay the rent for his winter's tenancy.

Emma debated what to do. Nauvoo was full of enemies, both within and without the church. But it was her home. Her meager remaining property was there. Her husband's last counsel to her had been to keep the children together and to remain in or near her home to await the culmination of events. That was her decision. In December, 1847, she married Major L. C. Bidamon, one of the new citizens of Nauvoo, and calmly settled down to the task of rearing her children in the community where their father had been killed.

Young Joseph tried a mercantile business with the help of his stepfather, but the location was poor, and the store failed. He and his brothers farmed a year or two, contracted for some grading on a near-by railroad, and finally undertook to study law under a William McLennan. In the summer of 1853, he suffered a severe attack of fever, in which sickness he lost thirty-three pounds in two weeks, and during his convalescence was visited by a delegation of people who had camped down the river near Keokuk on their way to Utah. His sickness, this delegation, and his approaching twenty-first birthday, turned his thoughts to the work of his father, and made him wonder whether he should ever have anything to do with Mormonism—for other than his mother's teaching, he had had no contact with the church since the exodus from Nauvoo in 1846. While lying on his bed one warm afternoon in the fall, he pondered his problem. Suddenly the room expanded and passed away, and in vision he saw stretched out before him towns, cities, busy marts, courthouses, courts and assemblies of men—with din, bustle, confusion—where men could win money, success, and acclaim. Then in transition, he was gazing over a wide expanse of prairie, dotted with hamlet and village, farm and farmhouse, where everything betokened thrift, industry, and the pursuits of a happy peace. Then for the first time he noticed a personage standing beside him who said, "Which would you prefer, success, and renown among the busy scenes that you first saw; or a place among these people, without honors or renown? Think of it well, for the choice will be offered to you sooner or later, and you must be prepared to decide. Your decision once made, you cannot recall it, and you must abide the result." And as suddenly as it had come, the vision was gone, and young Joseph found himself sitting on the edge of the bed in his familiar room.

IN JANUARY, 1855, he went to Canton, Illinois, to continue his legal studies under William Kellog, where he continued for a year, serving part of the time also as assistant postmaster. The year 1856 found him again at home, lacking means to continue his studies, farming with his brother Frederick. On October 22 he married Miss Emmaline Griswold, whose family heartily disapproved of the match, and refused to attend the wedding. And that same fall his attention was again turned to religion by the return of Putnam Yates, a boyhood friend whose father had come to Nauvoo at the time of the disturbances in Hancock County, though not a member of the church. Young Putnam had made several trips across the plains to Utah and California, and from his first-hand knowledge of the West insisted that Joseph would do well to go there and either break up the system of things there by taking the lead away from Brigham Young, or simply fall in with the crowd, get rich, and enjoy life. Joseph considered seriously the question, "Why not go to Utah?" One day while pondering, he again found himself in vision. He seemed to be with Putnam Yates in a wheat field, and they were discussing the old questions that had bothered Joseph's mind for so long. Then, to quote Joseph's own words, "I heard a slight noise like the rush of the breeze . . . and saw descending towards me a sort of cloud, funnel shaped, with the wide part upward. It was luminous, and of such color and brightness that it was clearly seen, though the sun shone in its summer strength. It descended rapidly, and settling upon and over me enveloped me completely . . . As the cloud rested upon the ground at my feet, the words, 'Because the light in which you stand is greater than theirs' sounded in my ears."

In a similar experience, he received an answer to another question—"Is polygamy of God?" and was directed to have nothing to do with it, but to oppose it with all his might.

With these two experiences, Joseph was prepared when two elders of the Utah church visited him with the intention of persuading him to go to Utah. They were pleasantly received but soon were unmistakably convinced that Joseph had no intentions of going to Utah. Some three or four weeks later he was visited by two more men—this time a delegation composed of Samuel H. Gurley and Edmund C. Briggs. They had been sent by the Wisconsin Saints, who had taken the first steps towards reorganization, and had been promised that the seed of Joseph should come to them. They brought a carefully worded document from that group, inviting and urging young Joseph to join them and take his father's place as leader. Though Joseph knew that he did not want to go to Utah, he was not so sure of what he did want to do. He had received no evidence from God that he was called to any such position as these men offered him, and he was resolved not to accept it until such evidence came. He believed in the work of his father, and was ready and willing to continue that work if it was God's will, but not without personal evidence to this effect.

In the spring of 1858, young Joseph was chosen Justice of the Peace for the village of Nauvoo, in which office he found his legal training useful. The partnership venture in farming with his brother was found to be inadequate to the needs of two families, so the partnership was dissolved, and Joseph supported himself with day labor and his fees as justice of the peace. In the fall of 1859, he received the evidence for which he had been waiting, and resolved to cast his lot with the group from Wisconsin. Accordingly, the following winter he addressed a letter to William Marks, who was now a member of that group, but who had been a close friend and neighbor of his father and himself in the early days of Nauvoo, asking Marks to come and discuss the matter with him. Marks, Israel L. Rogers, and W. W. Blair came in reply to the letter, and agreed that if Joseph would attend the spring conference next April at Amboy, Illinois, the matter would be laid before the church for appropriate action.

ON APRIL 4, 1860, in the midst of a spring storm, Young Joseph and his mother were rowed across the Mississippi, and started on their way to Amboy and the conference which was to change and permanently establish the course of Joseph's life. They arrived in time for evening prayer meeting on April 5. The morning of the 6th was occupied with organization and preaching. At 1:30 in the afternoon the Saints gathered again, and after the meeting had been formally opened, Elder Zenas H. Gurley, Sr., simply, but in a voice choked with emotion arose and said, "I present to you, my brethren, Joseph Smith," as young Joseph came to the front of the room. He addressed the conference in simple, straightforward language, stating that he came not of himself but by the power of the Spirit which had led him step by step to that day. He stated that it was not his intention to obey the dictates of any men or set of men, but to obey the Spirit and power which had sent him. He denied any desire for amassing wealth or prestige or power. He expressed his tolerance for all faiths and all men, but his utter intolerance and abhorrence of the principle of polygamy. He restated his belief in the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, and in closing used these words: "if the same Spirit which prompts my coming prompts also my reception, I am with you."

At the conclusion of the address, a motion was made by Isaac Sheen that Brother Joseph be received as prophet, seer, revelator, and successor to his father. The motion was unanimously adopted, and after a pause in which Joseph Smith's mother was also accepted by the group on the strength of her original baptism, young Joseph was ordained to his new position by Zenas H. Gurley, William Marks, Samuel Powers, and W. W. Blair. Elder Gurley then turned to the young man and said, "Brother Joseph, I present this church to you in the name of Jesus Christ." And Joseph replied, "May God grant in his infinite mercy that I may never do anything to forfeit the high trust confided to me. I pray that he may grant us power to recall the scattered ones of Israel, and I ask your prayers." Thus closed the long period of waiting, from 1844 to 1860, and thus began a new era in which the church was to undergo slow growth and expansion, and the name Latter Day Saints was to be rescued and cleansed of the opprobrium which had been brought upon it by the doctrines and crimes of Utah.

Not What You Have—But Can You Enjoy It?

Among the mind's powers is one that comes of itself to many children and artists. It need not be lost, to the end of his days, by anyone who has ever had it. This is the power of taking delight in a thing, or rather in anything, everything, not as a means to some other end but just because it is what it is, as the lover dotes on whatever may be the traits of the beloved object. A child in the full health of his mind will put his hand flat on the summer turf, feel it, and give a little shiver of private glee at the elastic firmness of the globe. He is not thinking how well it will do for some game or to feed sheep upon. That would be the way of the wooer whose mind runs on his mistress's money. The child's is sheer affection, the true ecstatic sense of the thing's inherent characteristics. No matter what the things may be, no matter what they are good or no good for, there they are, each with a thrilling unique look and feel of its own, like a face; the iron astringently cool under its paint, the painted wood familiarly warmer, the clod crumbling enchantingly down in the hands, with its little dry smell of the sun and of hot nettles; each common thing a personality marked by delicious differences . . .

The right education, if we could find it, would work up this creative faculty of delight into all its branching possibilities of knowledge, wisdom and nobility. Of all three it is the beginning, condition, or raw material.

Echoes of the General Conference

Leadership Training Workshop

Another speaker whose thoughts were presented in the Conference Workshop on Leadership Training was Sister Hattie K. Bell, the Chicago District Director of Religious Education. Sister Bell has a wide range of friends in the church, who value her ability as a leader, and who marvel at her tireless energy for the work which has been entrusted to her. Her district has quite decidedly answered the question raised in the title of the talk which she was asked to give at the conference, for during the first six months of the current year, 53 students have completed 91 units of credit study, and several classes are continuing steadily at work.

Sister Bell's experiences are such that she is in a position to speak with authority, for she is one of the few who has qualified for the THIRD CERTIFICATE OF PROGRESS and has the highest count of credit units of any individual in the church. Her conscientious example lends strength to her words. We happily share her thoughts presented to the conference.

Is the Struggle to Get Our People to Study for Credit Worth the Effort?

By Hattie K. Bell

Leaders who have learned through personal experience the value of the leadership-training program offered by the Department of Religious Education are in a position to speak with enthusiasm and inspiration in recommending this study program to others.

Such leaders are more convincing if they are members of the priesthood, for the priesthood administer the affairs of the branches and districts, and when the administrative officers take hold of and push the leadership-training program, it "goes." No matter how much training or experience a layman may have, he cannot hope to accomplish much in a leadership-training program if his administrative officers are not converted to the value of the program and give their wholehearted support. Enlisting the support of these officers is at present one of our greatest hurdles.

Brother Roy Cheville once said, "We have all the leaders we deserve." When we use the means at hand, we will have plenty of leaders. We cry for leaders and refuse to use the plan provided by the department, whose business it is to provide such a plan. Leaders are not born. They are developed. They represent days and months and years of struggle and work, the long sure way of education and experience. We are like one who calls for a doctor to diagnose his ailment and then refuses to take the treatment prescribed.

LABORATORY SCHOOLS

We need more laboratory schools, like Nauvoo camp; Youth Institutes, like those held at Lamoni, where the young promising leaders work under able supervision at the things which they can and should do in their home branches, only we need regional ones. Districts should so combine that classes will not be overcrowded—so that all who wish may attend and will not be crowded into one room with little or no chance to participate in the program—such as has been experienced at General Conference classes and also Lamoni; and dare I suggest that some inducement be found to coax some of our local priesthood into these schools?

If we really want efficient leaders and are willing to pay the price, such schools held in this way in various parts of the country, under able leadership would be the best and quickest way to provide them. One institute at Lamoni every two years is inadequate to meet the need. Branches and districts could well afford to pay the expenses for some who might not be able to attend at their own expense.

Many times our members could take advantage of "methods" classes held by the International Council, where skill in techniques in teaching could be developed.

SUPERVISED TEACHING

Then, there is the field of supervision in teaching which is used in public school teaching, but which we have with few exceptions attempted. This field offers great possibilities. Often in our branches there are teachers of training and experience who could help young teachers (or any others) who are willing to learn in planning their class sessions, and even in administering them, until they have become confident enough to carry on alone. In the public school one must do practice-teaching before being entrusted with a school. Certainly, we need to do everything possible to raise the standards of our church school teaching. Dare we do less than does the public school in this respect?

STANDARDIZATION

Our teaching in the church school must eventually be standardized. Certain standards are set up for the public schools, and they are expected to adhere to them. Standards for church schools have been set up by the Department of Religious Education in A Yearbook for Church Schools. Why not set as a goal for this year the achieving of some of the standards?

WILL WE OR WON'T WE?

A church alert to its responsibility to the community and to the world will be alert to the need of developing many leaders and the most efficient leaders possible. We cannot hope to redeem Zion without such leaders. Everyone of us should be about the business of becoming a specialist in his own field. This is a day of education and specialization. The Lord has commanded us to study, and if we won't, he will raise up a people who will make the necessary preparation, just as he did in former days, and we shall lose our part in the building of the kingdom.

God's Spirit is essential to our accomplishment of our tasks, but his Spirit comes as a reward of obedience to his commands. He has said, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." A specific command of God is to study. If we make use of the program of study offered by the church wholeheartedly this year, can we imagine the results? Let us try it and see.

We appreciate Sister Bell's urgent plea to respond to the commands of God to study, and we in the Department of Religious Education stand ready and anxious to help you with your study problems. Won't you

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK

Sunday, September 29 - Sunday, October 6

Theme: "God's Word for Today"

By John R. Darling

Dr. John B. Ketcham of the International Council of Religious Education gives a real "kick off" to stimulating interest in an effectual observance of Religious Education Week in the year of our Lord, 1946. May we quote:

"Apple Week," "Clean-Up Week," "Safety First Week," and many another Week claim national attention. It is well, therefore, for those of us who believe in religious education as a primary factor in solving individual and world problems to consider the most effective use of Religious Education Week.

This year Religious Education Week will be observed from Sunday, September 29, to Sunday, October 6. This week is usually used by the local church as a time for preparing and launching the fall educational program of the entire church. There should also be an observance of the week in which all the churches of the community take part. This would unite the forces of all the churches in awakening the citizens of the community to the importance of religious education in developing Christian character and Christian brotherhood in this Year One A.A.B. (After Atomic Bomb.)

Why Religious Education Week?

1. For launching a live church school program for the year.
2. For getting the new church school year off to an enthusiastic start.
3. For "tackling" the job of getting back those irregulars, absentees, and finding those newcomers to the community. You've got to do more than "hold that line!"
4. For lining up new teachers and starting the regular monthly teachers' meetings. The next play depends on the "huddle!"
5. For dramatically emphasizing the sense of spiritual power that comes only from farsighted planning of the total educational program of the church.
6. For working together in the task of religious education. It's teamwork that counts!
7. For developing a carefully planned strategy of forward steps for the year such as: increased home-church co-operation; regular, fully attended workers' conferences; leadership education courses; more regular attendance; increased enrollment; more regular church attendance of church school members; effective evangelism through the church school; better worship programs; deepening of devotional life of leaders and pupils.
8. For rallying the forces of the church for the year's work.

Suggested Daily Themes for the Week

"God's Word for Christian Teachers," featuring rally day or promotion day and emphasizing educational evangelism.

"God's Word for Leaders," featuring a church school leaders' conference for inspiration, fellowship, and planning.

"God's Word for Families," featuring the first fall family night at church and emphasizing the planning of religion for the family.

"God's Word for Churches," featuring church fellowship meetings.

"God's Word for Communities," featuring planning conferences, particularly a dinner meeting of all Sunday school superintendents.

"God's Word for Youth," featuring youth rallies and institutes.

"God's Word for America," featuring spiritual retreats and discipline needed for executive leadership and completion of home visitation.

Things to Do in the Church

Retreat: A Sunday afternoon and evening retreat of the Christian Education Committee early in September to perfect plans for a week's observance and for the year. A spiritual preparation for the year's work.

Rally Day: The last Sunday in September is a good time to rally absentees, vacationers, and newcomers, and make a special effort to get urgent invitations out, possibly through an evening home visitation. Then be sure the program will make them want to come back.

Promotion Day: This is sometimes combined with Rally Day and may be observed on either the opening or closing Sunday of Religious Education Week.

Workers' Conference: Carefully set up to get an enthusiastic and thoroughly planned approach to the year's work.

Family Night at Church: Hold the first of your family nights during this week. Around the tables announce general plans of the church school. Departmental open house is a good way of presenting briefly plans of study and activities for the year.

Service Enlistment gives every person a chance to check types of service or activities he would be interested in and willing to do.

Every Home Visitation may provide for a visit to every family. Be callers promoting good fellowship, interest in the church school and its program, and attendance at the Communion service, October 6.

Installation of Teachers and Officers on either of the Sundays in the regular church service.

Sermon on Christian Education the first Sunday.

Teachers' Appreciation Banquet honoring these faithful volunteer workers.

Parent-Teacher Conference to plan closer co-operation in Christian Teaching.

Church School Open House welcoming parents and visitors in a tour of observation through the church school, seeing rooms, materials, curriculum, products of work.

Helps for the Week

This year we are attempting to provide many suggestions that the week may become more meaningful. They are presented for the purpose of developing an enthusiastic and stimulating response upon our part. The Herald will publish special helps during the coming three or four weeks under the following titles:

Sermon Outline:

On the first and last Sundays of the week, the pastor of the branch no doubt will desire to speak on some phase of Christian education. Let us remember that a good send-off and a good conclusion are most important if the purposes of the week are to be attained.

Daily Scripture:

"Behold, I am God, and give heed to my word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow; therefore, give heed unto my word." —Doctrine and Covenants 10: 1.

Theme and Program:

We depend a great deal for effective progress on new and revamped suggestions in program construction. We recognize that from insignificant beginnings great works frequently develop. As we share together through trial and error, themes and programs take form, and we formulate new approaches towards educational concepts.

Midweek Prayer Service:

No effort, be it humble or great, can depend on the wisdom of man. Through effort on our part to tap divine truth, we discover that which is worth-while. Through prayer, Religious Education becomes purposeful and "God's Word for Today" in action becomes a goal.

Promotion Day Program:

Nothing moves us more quickly to exultation or tears than to see and experience progressive advancement on the part of others. We need to encourage at every opportunity this progress, for we recognize its importance. It is quite fitting therefore that we experience such a day on the opening or closing Sunday of Religious Education Week.

Installation Service:

The challenge of an impressive installation into new or perhaps a continuation of familiar responsibilities is not wasted effort. The torch of progress is lighted through unified effort sustained by mutual love. A good beginning sets a much needed tempo.

Plans for Teachers' and Officers' Supper:

As we experience the fellowship of kindred minds and as we grow in Christian endeavor, we like to show our appreciation for each other. May this be a growing desire upon the part of our people as we move forward as co-workers with God.

Church School Open House:

Parents and visitors are given a chance to observe the church school, see the housing conditions, materials, courses of study in action, activities, and products of work. It presents a golden opportunity to view practical needs and to encourage parent-church interest.

Workers' Conference:

We feel that branch council, church council, school council, Zion's League cabinet, teachers' and officers' meetings, and parent-teacher meetings could make use of the suggested topics for discussion as some of these are listed in the columns of the Herald during coming weeks. We hope you will add to the list and also supplement them by forums and panel discussions. The objective, no matter what the selected method may be, is to plan greater co-operation in the approach and solution of problems.

Home Visitations:

Just a little personal interest is frequently quite effective. The feeling that someone is interested in you often helps to "remove mountains." Let us develop a sincere interest in home visitation.

Retreat:

This is spiritual preparation for the work that lies ahead. Basic to effectual branch work is spiritual strength growing out of spiritual readiness. Spiritual readiness does not fall like manna, rather, it is like physical life that matures satisfactorily as the result of proper food. A retreat may well be considered a "must" in preparation for Religious Education Week.

Rally Day:

We hear much today about rallying to causes—good, bad, and indifferent. In absentees, newcomers, and the unchurched, we recognize potential power for the cause of Christ. Programs built up through prayer and consecration are not wasted effort. We must learn to capitalize on our opportunities.

No branch or group is expected to plan to use all of these suggestions. They are presented now and will be developed later as potential possibilities, and you are encouraged to select from them and develop plans of your own. Working together we can make this week meaningful in our church—the cause of Christ truly calls for an appreciation and understanding of God's word translated into action—not yesterday nor tomorrow, but today!

A Four-Question Test

1. Do you believe in the observance of a program that will start a new church year with enthusiasm and punch?
2. Are you concerned with the ministerial and evangelistic efforts of our church?
3. Are you dissatisfied with a church school program that drifts and merely marks time?
4. Are you moved to the point of doing something about indifference?

If your answers are "yes," then your observance of Religious Education Week will be a contributing force to launching the fall educational program of the entire church. "Yes" means that you have pledged yourself to evaluate thoroughly and honestly the educational program of your church.

If your answer is "no" to any of the above questions, perhaps another question is sufficient: Do you profess to be a follower of the Master Teacher?

This, then, we are challenged to do in observance of Religious Education Week, because of our concern that every person shall have opportunity to find a deeper sense of God's abiding reality and power. We are convinced that mere agreement with the positive thoughts which we have expressed is not enough; we suggest, without the least hesitation, that proper observance will include:

1. Making careful plans for the celebration of Religious Education Week.
2. Providing workers and officers with well-defined and obtainable aims for the year.
3. Installing a full staff of teachers.
4. Providing an adequate supply of study materials and helps.
5. Launching a program for teacher and leadership training.
6. Recruiting for active membership the absentees, irregulars, and new residents of the community.
7. Planning and instituting a program for the co-operation of the home, school, church, and community.

Again may we emphasize: Watch for helps in the columns of the Herald. Write to your Department of Religious Education for the "Blue" leaflet entitled Religious Education Week.

Bellevue Hospital and Prohibition

The "Lost Week End" is the hardest blow the liquor evil has received in this country for quite some time, but Hollywood had to throw a sop to the liquor traffic and they did so by taking, what is popularly called, a "crack" at prohibition. One of the characters, a male nurse in the alcoholic ward of Bellevue Hospital says, "You ought to have seen it under prohibition."

All right, let's take a look at it under prohibition. We turn to "Mental Diseases and Social Welfare" by Dr. Horatio M. Pollock, Director of Mental Hygiene Statistics, New York State Department of Mental Hygiene. Dr. Pollock discusses at length the record of alcoholic admissions to Bellevue Hospital during the 30 years from 1909 to 1939.

In 1909 there were 10,521 alcoholic admissions to Bellevue, increasing in 1910 to 11,307 and this total, of course, was drawn from a population much smaller than that of today. This 1910 figure was not exceeded until 1936, when repeal had been operating for several years. Beginning with 1912, a declining trend of admissions set in, and this was coincidental with the progress of prohibition in the United States. In 1920, the first year of Federal prohibition, only 2,091 alcoholic cases were admitted. This figure increased as the attack upon the prohibition law by the encouragement of criminal sabotage of its enforcement developed.

In 1938 the number of alcoholic admissions was 12,084, the largest number in the entire period of 30 years. In case you do not remember, we did not have prohibition in 1938. We had "true temperance," à la repeal.

These are the facts, and we suggest to certain liquor distillers that they incorporate them in a large advertisement congratulating Ray Milland on his magnificent performance in the "Lost Week End."

O Zion, haste, thy mission high fulfilling,
To tell to all the world that God is light;
That he who made all nations is not willing
One soul should perish, lost in shades of night.
Publish glad tidings, tidings of peace,
Tidings of Jesus, redemption and release.

Recognition From the State of Iowa

The articles below are quoted from the Annals of Iowa for July, 1946, and contain expressions of appreciation for President Israel A. Smith, and a tribute to the late President Frederick M. Smith. This good publication is issued quarterly by the Iowa State Department of History and Archives, at Des Moines, Iowa. We thank the Editors for the privilege of quoting:

ADVANCED TO HEAD OF CHURCH

Added honors and responsibilities have come to a well-known former Iowan who still maintains personal ties and interest in the affairs of the Hawkeye State. Israel A. Smith of Independence, Missouri, for long years a resident of Lamoni, Iowa, and a member of the Thirty-fourth Iowa General Assembly, has been elevated to the position of President and Prophet of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He succeeds to this position following the death on March 20th last of his brother, Dr. Frederick M. Smith, whose obituary appears in the Notable Death section of this issue of THE ANNALS.

The action of the General Conference of the church held in April at the headquarters of the organization in Independence, continues the headship of the church in direct line of succession from its founder, as Israel A. Smith is the grandson of Joseph Smith, who established the Mormon church in 1830 at Fayette, New York. He is a man of sterling worth and ability, experienced in the church leadership, having served as counselor with the late President for a number of years, and has enjoyed wide experience in business and public affairs.

Besides his service in the Iowa assembly, he recently was a member of the constitutional convention of Missouri, its notable report and recommendations being adopted in entirety by the people of the state at a special election as the new state constitution, and now generally regarded as the most advanced and modern pattern for a state government. Mr. Smith is also serving a four-year term as president of the Pioneer Lawmakers Association of Iowa, and undoubtedly will preside at its sessions in Des Moines to be held early in 1947. The legislative assembly of which he was a member was the turbulent one at which Senator William S. Kenyon was selected to succeed Senator Lafayette Young, the balloting at noon-day joint sessions continuing practically every day until that of final adjournment when the election of Kenyon took place. Mr. Smith made a fine legislative record, just as he has in every position in which he has served; and the friends in Iowa join with those in other areas, which have known his soundness of ideals and fixedness of purpose, in predicting continued success in his life's work.

NOTABLE DEATHS

Frederick Madison Smith, prophet and president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since 1915, died March 20, 1946, at Independence, Missouri; born in 1873, at Plano, Illinois, son of Joseph Smith, whom he succeeded as head of the church organization, and grandson of Joseph Smith "the seer" and martyr, its organizer on April 6, 1830, at Fayette, Seneca county, New York, and its prophet and president for fourteen years until his assassination June 27, 1844, at Carthage, Illinois.

The church headquarters of the non-polygamous branch of the Mormon faith were located at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1881, where also was established Graceland college, in which Frederick M. was a student and its first graduate in 1898; prior to this he attended the Iowa City academy in 1895, and State University of Iowa in 1896, where he took a pre-engineering course; his degrees included a B.S. in natural sciences and an M.A. from Kansas University in sociology and economics; was finishing his Ph.D. in genetic psychology at Worcester, Mass., when word of his father's death reached him on May 5, 1915; had taken great interest in the organization's mammoth printing plant at Lamoni and was one of the editors of the Saints' Herald published by the society; in 1902 had been called to assist his father as counselor in the world organization; in 1904 moved to Independence, Missouri; the burden and responsibility of the presidency came to rest upon his shoulders in 1915, having received careful training for church leadership under the efficient and loving guidance of his father, whom he succeeded in the great life's work that he performed.

It was from the Joseph Smith church organization at Nauvoo, Illinois, that Brigham Young led his band of followers to Utah to form the branch of the Mormon church there. Dr. Smith always earnestly defended the memory of his grandfather against any charge that he instituted the doctrine of polygamy promulgated by Brigham Young in 1852, who assumed leadership after the death of the elder Joseph Smith, who during his lifetime, both by precept and teaching, was a monogamist. Dr. Frederick M. once was quoted as saying in regard to his church and his people, that: "It is a strange thing, although not a single lineal descendant of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon church, is a member of the Utah branch, that we, who are his descendants and successors, who have waged a never-ceasing fight against polygamy, blood atonement, the Adam God theory and other sacrilegious teachings that are practiced in the name of Mormonism; we are the ones who are compelled to fight for recognition as a separate and distinct body, and happily our work has not been in vain."

During forty-six years Dr. Smith ably and wisely led the organization, and was beloved and respected throughout the entire church body, and probably was more instrumental than any other person in the church in encouraging the youth to secure the benefits of higher education, not only in their own college but in the colleges and universities of the land.

"The effects of alcohol are exercised after it is circulated in the blood. The alcohol in a man's stomach and intestines does not affect him. It only affects him after it has been absorbed. It requires no digestion and much of it passes into the blood stream directly from the stomach. If that were not true we would have fewer users of alcohol. If it were absorbed only through the intestines there would be no immediate effect and it is a quick effect which is sought."

The Autobiography of
ELBERT A. SMITH

On Memory's Beam

THE WRITINGS of Elbert A. Smith I have always found a ready welcome among the thousands of people who know him so well. There is a quality in his work that cannot be imitated—a combination of wisdom, spiritual insight, tolerance, kindness, good humor and human understanding.

ON MEMORY'S BEAM is a book that helps us to see, not only Brother Elbert's life, but a period in the development of the church, through his eyes, and with his kindness and comprehension. It appeared first in serial form in the church publication, the SAINTS' HERALD. It is presented in book form, not only because many wish to read it again and to have it in their libraries, but also because young people are growing up and new members are joining the church who will not have access to the periodical. This book will take its place in the permanent literature of the church. It has been edited and has received some revisions and additions by the author.

"A Service Institution"

News Briefs

Huron, Tennessee

Elder O. S. Caldwell of Paris, Tennessee, conducted a two-weeks' series of meetings beginning the evening of June 30. Despite unfavorable weather conditions, the services were held in a grove and attendance was exceptionally good. On July 14 B. F. Sutton, also of Paris, was the 11 o'clock speaker. Following the basket lunch at noon, a baptismal service was held; Lester Perry was the candidate, and Elder Caldwell officiated. The confirmation service was in charge of Elders Caldwell and Bailey. On Saturday evening, July 13, the young people met and were officially organized; much interest has been stimulated by this organization.

Jacksonville, Illinois

Elder Merle Guthrie has left the local congregation to serve under general church appointment; his family will remain in Jacksonville while he is in the field. Although no church home has been secured as yet, the Saints meet each Sunday morning for classwork, and each Wednesday evening for prayer service. Mrs. Nettie Shotten, district women's leader, was present on Thursday evening, July 18, to conduct a special meeting. A two-day women's institute will be held in Beardstown the last of August.

Vancleave, Mississippi

Pastor, A. G. Miller

The annual branch homecoming was held on May 26, with Elder R. L. Booker of Mobile as the speaker of the day. This year many returned servicemen were present to share in the activities. One soldier, T/Sgt. John Yocom, had not been home for fourteen years, serving the entire time in the Philippines. For three and one-half years during the war, he was a prisoner of the Japanese. Four babies were blessed, and four new members baptized on Children's Day. The confirmation service was held on July 7, with Elders A. G. Miller and Franklin Steiner officiating.

—Myrtle Jennings, reporter.

Rock Island, Illinois

Apostle D. T. Williams and Missionary James Daugherty were the speakers on July 7 and 14. Michael Edward, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Williams, was blessed at the July 7 service by his grandfather, E. R. Williams, and his great-uncle, Apostle Williams. A number of the Tri-City Saints enjoyed a picnic at Blaser's Grove on July 4. The union prayer service recently held at the Rock Island church was well attended. Other activities of the month include the reception held in the lower auditorium on July 28 in honor of the returning servicemen and women, and the League-sponsored ice cream social held July 30 on the church lawn.

—Lora Sackfield, reporter.

SAN LEANDRO MISSION, California, now has a meeting place for church members at Club Iberico Hall, 1247 Hays Street. Meetings are held on Sunday mornings for church school and preaching services. Elder Wm. H. Hall, the pastor, may be phoned at Trinidad 6415.

Northwestern Iowa District

At the semi-annual conference held in Woodbine, Iowa, on June 23, the following young men were recommended for ordination to the office of elder: Lyle Winans, Glidden; Charles Skinner and John Jensen, Missouri Valley; priest: John Allen, Denison; Mitchel Juergens, Glidden; Everett Nielsen, Logan; Louis Whitehead, Logan; Harold Mickey, Missouri Valley; Ervin Fields, Kenneth Smith, and Lawrence Jones, Sioux City; teacher: Harold Baughman, Dow City; deacon: Wilber Mann, Moorhead; Alfred Nielsen, Logan; and Joseph Noyes, Sioux City. All ordinations were ratified by the conference.

—Mrs. W. R. Adams.

Chatham, Ontario

Pastor, Harry Engle

The new pulpit and Communion table, made by four members of the congregation and donated by William Green, were dedicated at the close of the Communion service on July 7. Dinner was served by the women's department to the visiting Orange Lodge members on July 12; the proceeds will be applied to the church beautification fund. Evangelist John Worth was the speaker on July 14, giving an interesting account of his visit in Holland following the war. On Thursday afternoon, July 18, the Saints gathered at the Erie Beach reunion grounds for their branch picnic sponsored by the church school. Almer Sheehy, pastor of London church, gave the evening sermon on July 21; Mrs. Winn McCoy, also of London, was the guest soloist.

—Gladys Ferguson, reporter.

Persia, Iowa

On Sunday, July 21, the members of Persia branch journeyed to Woodbine, Iowa, to witness a baptismal service. Five candidates, Deloras Housh, Mary Lou Postalwait, Jack Postalwait, Harley and Stanley Martens, were baptized in a flower-bedecked font by Pastor Roy Shumate. A confirmation service, followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, was held at 11 o'clock on the following Sunday. Elder R. L. Amsberry of Lamoni and Earl Yager of Denison officiated at the confirmation service. Boutonnières and corsages were presented the new members by Vera Martens. A basket lunch was held at noon on the Peterson lawn.

—Mrs. John Pieper.

Sacramento, California

Pastor, Myron Schall

A Memorial Day service was held on May 26, with Pastor Myron Schall as the morning speaker. Special music was furnished by the choir and a guest soloist. On the evening of June 2, three members of the choir, Edna Burdick, Virginia Winsor, and Laurence MacDonald, pupils of the Maude Redmon Torrey Voice Studios, presented a vesper hour of song. Children's Day was observed on June 9; six new members, Donald Winslow, Lynna Childs, Fred Jensen, Coral Jensen, Charlotte Jensen, and Geraldine Trimmer, were baptized and confirmed. At the close of the service each child was given a potted plant. Two other candidates, Thomas and Robert Howe, were baptized the preceding Friday. A panel discussion on "Religious Education in the Church" was presented by three of the younger members of the priesthood on June 20; Pastor Myron Schall presided over it. A brief business session was held following the July Communion service. Members of the Sacramento, San Jose, and Stockton Zion's Leagues are planning a carnival to be held soon; half the proceeds will be given to the European relief fund.

—Lena Swaney, reporter.

London, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

The first garden party in six years was held in the church garden on July 18. This activity was sponsored by the women's department, with the various groups arranging booths and tables. Evangelist John Worth of London, England, was the guest-of-honor. Fred Heddington acted as master of ceremonies; special music was provided by the London Promenade Orchestra; Margaret Bradford, soprano soloist; and a sextet. Bob Moore sang a comedy song and Lou Judkins gave a reading. On July 19 and 20, twenty-three members of the Zion's League journeyed to Merlin, Erie Beach, and Chatham. This goodwill tour served both a recreational and religious purpose. Following a softball game, the Merlin young people gave a country banquet. Raymond Neal, director of music, has organized a new mixed quartet. The contributions of this group have been greatly appreciated by the congregation.

A Testimony of Healing

I am glad that I belong to a church in which Christ's Spirit is present. Recently I experienced a blessing of healing while in the hospital at Little Rock, Arkansas. After receiving administration, I immediately showed improvement. I am now in the best of health, and I thank God for his kindness to me. I also wish to thank all who remembered me in their prayers at General Conference.

At present I am living in Long Island City and would appreciate contacting other Saints in this locality.

MRS. GLADYS TONETTI.

Another Testimony of Healing

I should like to add my testimony to that of many others who have been witnesses of divine healing. I was baptized in Saint Joseph, Missouri, many years ago by Hyrum O. Smith, and had the privilege of being a parishoner under the leadership of J. M. Terry, H. O. Smith, J. W. Gunsolley, V. M. Goodrich, B. J. Scott, and Charles Fry. Mark Forscutt was pastor at Saint Joseph when I was five years old. I shall always remember "Uncle" Mark, as he was affectionately called, as being kind to the children in his congregation.

I have experienced divine healing many times. When I was seventeen years old, I was spoken to through the spirit and told that I would never be strong, but if faithful, I would live to do a great work among those not of my church. Last Sunday I was very ill and was administered to by Harry Sheffer and Keizo Tsuji. As soon as Brother Tsuji's hands were placed on my head, all distress left me and I was instantly healed. I was thankful for this blessing, because it reassured me that divine healing was still a gift of God to his people. I know that if we are faithful and live up to the light given, we shall receive even greater blessings.

Our Departed Ones

SHOEMAKER.—Letha Elkins, was born March 25, 1904, at Lee's Summit, Missouri, and died at her home in Roswell, New Mexico, on June 23, 1946, after a long illness. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in early youth, and was an active worker in the Lexington, Missouri, branch until she moved to Roswell, where there are no other Saints. She made her home open to many Latter Day Saint servicemen stationed there during the war. On December 31, 1923, she was married to George Shoemaker; four children were born to this marriage: George W., Jr., Bobby Joe, Betty Ann and Aleatha Jean.

Besides her husband and children she leaves her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Elkins of California, Missouri; four brothers: Richard of Kansas City, Missouri; Joseph of Salt Lake City, Utah; Robert of Baldwin, Wisconsin; and Howard of California, Missouri; three sisters: Mrs. Hannah Darnell of Dover, Missouri; Mrs. Mary Clark of Long Beach, California; and Mrs. Edith Magargee of Sibley, Missouri. Interment was in the Roswell cemetery.

HOUGAS.—T. A., was born December 12, 1864, and passed away July 24, 1946, at Warrensburg, Missouri. On December 25, 1889, he was married to Mary Emma Gamet; two sons, Ward A. and Almon G., were born to this union. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, and served as the second general superintendent of church schools for seventeen years. He was also active in his community, serving as president of the Farmers' Union and Farm Bureau. A memorial service was held at Warrensburg on Thursday evening, July 25, after which the body was shipped to Henderson, Iowa, for burial in the Farm Creek Cemetery.

LEE.—William John, son of John H. and Margaret A. Lee, was born March 20, 1883, at North Freedom, Wisconsin, and died July 10 in Independence, Missouri. In 1909 he was married to Mary Shedd; one child was born to this union. He became a member of the Reorganized Church on March 30, 1913, and was known to have always lived a consistently Christian life.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Dr. William J. Lee, Jr., of Independence, Missouri; two brothers: Vernon W., of Independence, and John W., of Denver, Colorado; three sisters: Mrs. Mae Fenn of Independence, Mrs. Jeannette Thorp and Mrs. Margaret Forhan, both of Long Beach, California; and two grandchildren. Services were held at the George C. Carson Funeral Home, Elder G. E. Tickemyer officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

FLOOD.—Lydia, was born October 18, 1877, in London, England, and died March 27, 1946, in Sebastopol, California. She was married to Joseph Flood in 1904, who preceded her in death in June, 1927. On September 20, 1927, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church.

She is survived by a son, William C. Flood of Oakland, California; and a daughter, Mrs. Romla Hinton of Bloomfield, California. Funeral services were held from the Eggen-Porter Mortuary in Santa Rosa; the body was then taken to the Chapel of the Chimes for cremation. The ashes were buried in the Mount Grove Cemetery in Oakland.

MILES.—John Delta, son of John and Elizabeth Miles, was born February 24, 1871, at New Marion, Indiana, and passed away July 24, 1946. On September 20, 1896, he was married to Minnie Ford; eight children were born to this union, one dying in infancy. On October 19, 1902, he united with the Reorganized Church, and remained a faithful member throughout his life. He is survived by his five sons, two daughters, and six grandchildren.

SMITH.—Helen Raschke, died July 6 at Cleveland, Ohio, at the age of seventy-five. She moved, with her husband, Theodore Smith, from St. Joseph, Missouri, to Cleveland fifty-three years ago. On May 31, 1891, she became a member of the Reorganized Church, remaining faithful to its teachings throughout her long and devoted life. She was one of the charter members in the organization of the branch at Cleveland. Her five children, all of whom survive her, are also members of the church.

DAVIS.—William E., seven-week-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Al Davis of Independence, Missouri, passed away July 21 at the Independence Sanitarium. He is survived by his parents; a brother, James Davis, of the home; a sister Athene Davis of St. Louis, Missouri; and his paternal grandmother, Mrs. R. C. Davis of Independence. Services were held Tuesday, July 23, at the Stahl Funeral Home, Apostle Arthur Oakman officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WEBB.—Harley, was born in Des Moines, Iowa, on March 26, 1923, and drowned while swimming in Green Lake near Rock Island, Illinois, on June 9, 1946. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on July 9, 1939. He is survived by his parents and four sisters. Elder Clyde McDonald was in charge of the funeral service.

GRAY.—Charles Walker, Perkins, Oklahoma, died July 15, following a long illness. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1900, and was ordained a priest in 1912. Although isolated, he was always anxious to assist traveling missionaries, and to council with any who were willing to listen to the gospel story. He was an industrious farmer, and took a deep interest in community life.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Ralph J., of Perkins, and Cecil of Idaho; two daughters: Mrs. A. A. Fallin of Mulhall, Oklahoma, and Mrs. T. T. Dillard of Sullivan City, Texas; three brothers, and three sisters. Elder Harry Elwell and the Reverend Demmering of the Methodist Church conducted the funeral services. Burial was in Perkins cemetery.

McKEOWN.—George, Jr., was born October 5, 1923, at Honey Creek, Iowa, and was drowned in Lake Manawa near Council Bluffs, Iowa, on July 18. On August 14, 1932, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, and was ordained to the office of deacon on his eighteenth birthday. On November 2, 1941, he was married to Mable Angeroth at Papillion, Nebraska; two daughters, Joan and Barbara, were born to this union. Mrs. McKeown's brother, Lester Angeroth, was drowned at the same time.

Besides his wife and daughters, he is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George McKeown of Honey Creek; a brother, William; and a sister, Mrs. Marvin Parker, both of Council Bluffs. Double funeral services were held for the two men at the Woodring Funeral Home in Council Bluffs, Elders V. D. Ruch and M. A. Smith officiating. Interment was in the Hazel Dell cemetery.

ANGEROTH.—Lester LaVerne, was born August 22, 1927, at Hazel Dell, Iowa, and was drowned in Lake Manawa near Council Bluffs, Iowa, on July 18 with his brother-in-law, George McKeown. Lester was graduated from the Abraham Lincoln High School in Council Bluffs in 1945. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, having been baptized on June 25, 1939.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Angeroth of Hazel Dell; two brothers: Walter of Council Bluffs, and Charles of the home; and two sisters: Mrs. Mable McKeown of Council Bluffs, and Mrs. John Bozoky of Bakersville, California. A double funeral was held for him and his brother-in-law on July 21 at the Woodring Funeral Home in Council Bluffs, Elders V. D. Ruch and M. A. Smith were in charge. Burial was in the Hazel Dell cemetery.

T/Sgt. Willard A. Campbell

T/Sgt. Willard Campbell, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Campbell, Independence, Missouri, was born in Olivia, Minnesota, on July 2, 1924. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1930. He was reported missing in action on July 24, 1944, following a bombing mission over Marseilles, France. His plane received a direct hit; three members of the crew are known to have survived, but the rest are still listed as missing. The government has made a presumptive finding of death.

Sgt. Campbell is survived by his parents and three brothers: Richard, Robert, and James, all of whom served on foreign soil during the war.

F/O Charles Appleby

Flight Officer Charles Appleby was born July 17, 1924; the exact date of his death has not been determined, but he was lost in a bombing mission over Kuishu in July, 1945. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Appleby of Davenport, Iowa; a brother, LaVern; and a sister, Virginia.

Sgt. Keith Kelly Keown

Sgt. Keith K. Keown, an aerial engineer on a C-47 transport plane, was reported missing on September 25, 1944, following a flight to Naazab, New Guinea. On April 3, 1946, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benson Keown of Des Moines, Iowa, were notified by the War Department that he had been pronounced "presumably dead."

Sergeant Keown was born on December 12, 1922, at Des Moines, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of eight. He was graduated from East High School in June 1941, and was inducted into the service on January 19, 1943. He received his basic training at Miami Beach, Florida, taking further training at Austin, Texas; Ft. Benning, Georgia; and Ft. Wayne, Indiana, before going overseas. He was stationed at Hollandia, New Guinea, at the time of the fatal mission.

Besides his parents, he is survived by a sister, Norma Jean, of the home.

Alton E. Hodges

Alton E. Hodges, of the 161st Infantry, was killed in action on June 11, 1945. He had been overseas only a short while, joining his company on Luzon in the thick of the fight for Balete Pass. He was struck by a Jap hand grenade in a night attack while ministering to a fallen comrade. He has been posthumously awarded the Purple Heart and Combat Infantry Badge.

Alton was born near Pipe Creek, Texas, on April 10, 1919, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in July, 1931. His love and respect for the church, and his exemplary life won the admiration of all who knew him.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Myrtle Hodges, and four small children of Llano, Texas; his mother, Mrs. Carrie Hodges of San Marcos; a brother, Errol Hodges of Llano; two sisters: Mrs. C. E. O'Bryant of San Marcos, and Mrs. R. D. Jarrell of Leesville, Louisiana.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

P. S.

* BROTHER E. P. DARNELL visited the office again, with more "Tales of My Grandson." It is hard to be sure—E. P. being a modest man—whether he gets all those clever sayings from his grandson, or whether the grandson gets them from him. Anyway, he brought this one in: There was a Zion's League meeting at the house, and mother wanted to put sonny to bed. Considerable diplomacy was required, but mother won out. Not, however, without difficulties. Patiently, sonny was disentangled from his clothes; after a struggle, he was inserted in his nighties. It took persuasion to get him down on his knees, and he had to be prompted through a reluctant prayer. At the end he appended a line of his own: "And You'd better help me try to stay in this old bed!"

Retreat

By Ruby Le Neve Henson

Alone . . .
I: alone! whose head dipped in melancholy.
But now alone . . .
Yet not alone in these thick woods.
For my companions: swooping deer, spotted fawns,
Chortling chipmunks,
Swaying, singing pines,
Busy birds ever hiding,
Screaming crickets,
Pompous frogs,
Changing colored lake
Tapping at the shore,
Calls of fishermen,
Whirring hum of a motorboat.

At last alone!
Alone where time ends.
Only the birds waking the sun
And the crickets calling the night.
And I can walk slowly—
Not run.
I need not cry because Things are not done,
For there is time enough
To do my sleeping,
My listening,
My watching.

Alone . . .
Where God can whisper
Not shout.
Where my heart can relax
Not break.
Where my mind slowly thinks
Not jumps.

Oh, God, grant us moments
Alone
To find if our souls are worth Talking to Alone.

* A FRIENDLY GREETING

It's golden cups of happiness,
It's silver cups of joy;
Clear ringing of a bell at dusk
When stillness finds employ.

It's mind arrayed in loving thoughts
With heart's most perfect blend,
It's all of peace and grace and life—
True greeting of a friend.

The Valley of Hope

It All Depends

President Israel A. Smith used a memorable phrase in a recent address at the ground-breaking ceremonies for the church that is to be built for our Crysler Street Mission in Beverly Hills, adjacent to Independence. In speaking of the future of this congregation and its church, he voiced the attitude of the people by saying, "We dwell in the valley of hope." This statement is a beginning point for fruitful meditation.

The whole church dwells in a valley of hope. Around us, like mountain peaks, problems and opportunities arise. We expect to climb some of them, and some we expect to let alone. We shall build highways up to the lofty passes, and from those distant elevations, we shall look far into the future. This is our hope.

It is not the valley, but our faith, that gives us hope. For we know that what may be the valley of captivity and despair to some is the valley of hope to others. Everything depends upon our attitude toward the mountains, and what we expect to do about them. We could be complacent, and accept the valley as a prison. We could be weak, and regard it as a haven of refuge. Or we can be strong and take it as a challenge.

Questions and Answers

Sometimes a church member is confronted with questions from an investigating friend, from an estranged brother, or from one who is honestly seeking an answer. They are like this: "What does this church do for its people that no other church will do? What chance have you to build the kingdom of God more than they have? Is it possible that you will really do anything about your plan for practical social action?"

Those who have spent all their lives in the fellowship and doctrine of the church are so likely to accept it without question that they are startled when challenged, and do not have glib answers ready. One finds it as difficult to question his church as to question the fidelity of his family. So he is temporarily at a loss when required to explain. But after thought, explanations come.

Remember what Jesus said when some of the disciples "walked no more with him." He turned to the twelve and said, "Will ye also go away." And Peter replied, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

It is so with the church. It has the words of eternal life. It has a plan. It offers a hope. Other churches accept the world, with its social and economic systems as they are. They hold up Christian principles as palliatives for the inequities and injustices of our present system, but they do not look forward to any change of system.

Our church is different, in this respect at least. It regards many of the sufferings of humanity as an outgrowth of the system under which we live and work. That system, in the view of our people, should be changed. Individuals may differ on what the extent of the changes should be, but most of our people expect some changes. And we expect those changes to result in increased welfare, harmony, and happiness among the people. The difference is, as President Smith put it, that "We dwell in the valley of hope." A hope, some may object, is not a very substantial thing. But, we answer, it is better than nothing at all. In fact, a hope nurtured by the right people may be the most powerful force in the world.

They Had Hope

We have the conviction that hope is one of the most potent forces in the world. Our experience has taught us this. The church staggered under a terrible burden of debt. There were no material resources, our people were in the midst of a depression. All we had was a hope—a hope that the members would remain faithful and do their duty. We struggled for years against overwhelming difficulties. And finally the hope came true. Many a church congregation began life with nothing but a rented hall—a hall that it shared with the Saturday night dance, the Tuesday evening lodge meeting, and the summer circus posters. It was promoted to a basement where, in humility and hope it struggled for years. Then it arose and built a fine structure in which the people found dignity, beauty, and service. That has happened here in Independence and elsewhere; examples could be named by the dozens.

The principal assets of the people were not found in material things; their resources were hope, faith, work, and a vision of the future. They dwelt in the valley of hope, and they surveyed the mountainous problems all around them. They did not despair. Those people have given to us our finest lesson. With their example, can we be content to do worse than they did?

Those who obey the ordinances that conduct them into this church enter into a community of hope. It is a fellowship of those who look forward to better things. We have not been diligent as we should have been. We have failed at many points. But we have kept hope alive for the time when those with skill of hand, and power of mind, and completeness of dedication shall arrive to begin the fulfillment of the dream. Our hope is the kingdom of God.

The Passing of the Pioneers

There is a fineness as well as a ruggedness about the pioneer spirit, and fortunate is the movement initiated and promulgated under its propulsion.

Such was the spirit attending the Restoration of these last days, and the Reorganization; and we speak with especial reference to the Reorganization, having known personally, officially, and intimately, many of its early elders and families under appointment and not under the appointment of the church.

Quickened again is our appreciation of what has been in this regard, by the passing to his well-earned reward of Elder Thomas A. Hougas at his home in Warrensburg, Missouri, July 24. The Hougas family came to the restored church in an early day in the person of Goodman Hougas, who was actively engaged in its interests as a contemporary of the Martyrs. His son Daniel, father of the late Thomas A., was an elder and a pioneer in the early Reorganization in western Iowa, and the devoted and respected president of the Fremont District—a man of integrity and of devotion to the cause. And Thomas himself was an aggressive member of the ministry and pioneer in new methods and expansion of the Sunday school as its general superintendent for many years, at the turn of the century and thereafter.

The writer came in contact with this people in western Iowa in 1895, when there were yet among them stalwarts of the Reorganization, local ministers as well as men under appointment of the church, whose virility of spirit and in services rendered raised up branches and carried on the work from its beginning in that area.

These early ministers and their wives and children were pioneers in a two-way endeavor—in laying claim to and opening up a new country, and joining with and extending a new cause. For the rigors of such undertakings there were required a ruggedness of personality and a sustained endeavor possible of and resident only in pioneers, and growing as it went along in the work that engaged it.

It was under this spirit of the pioneers, the writer as a young man had the Latter Day Gospel carried to him in western Iowa, and was ordained and set to work as a minister of the church. For this experience and set to his soul, he has been and continues to be grateful.

Nor has the pioneer spirit been lost to the church. Though one does not observe it as universally as in former years, it now and again is found in some minister, or group, or Saint, virile and aggressive in work of the church as in days ago. And it may be had among us as of yore.

And pioneering in plenty there is yet to be done: in territory to be occupied, but as yet worked only in part; in territory awaiting occupation; in strengthening our institutions, and adding others as yet only in mind; in the real work of the gathering, and the establishment of stewardships; and in the building of a ministry and sainthood adequate to the challenge of the times and purposes of the church.

Indeed, the church stands at the door of what may be a new day, calling for the spirit of the pioneers in service adequate to the demands of the church and its people, and performed in a manner that shall be to the glory of God, who has redeemed it, and sent it forth in his stead for the redemption of many.

Mormons in Iowa

The Creston News Advertiser (Iowa) recently carried an account of the monument to Mormon pioneers at Mt. Pisgah, Union County, Iowa. Mormons on their trek across Iowa in 1846 established a temporary depot there. Many of them died, and the monument was erected in the cemetery where they were buried.

We quote from the account:

The Mormon trek across Iowa, one of the most interesting and colorful bits of early Iowa history, began after the founder of the church, Joseph Smith, was killed in a Carthage, Illinois, jail. Brigham Young assumed the presidency of the church, and his followers, driven from Illinois by the prejudice of the other residents, set forth to find a place where they could establish their church without hindrance. Others of the original Mormon church remained behind, supporting the family of the church founder for the leadership. This group spread through Iowa and Missouri and started many settlements which continue to this day, but none were in Union County. The Pisgah settlement quickly died out as the Mormon families left.

To most persons a sense of obligation is insupportable; beware upon whom you inflict it.—Ambrose Bierce.

It Is Foolish to Doubt the Future

If you read history you must have noted that those who have doubted the future have always made asses of themselves. Take some examples. We do not know the name of the person who assembled them, but we'll share them with you now:

In 1801, Wilberforce declared: "I dare not marry, the future is so unsettled."

In 1806, William Pitt said: "There is scarcely anything longer but ruins and despair."

In 1848, Lord Shaftesbury said: "Nothing can save the British Empire from shipwreck."

In 1849, Disraeli declared: "In industry, commerce, and agriculture there is no hope."

In 1852, the dying Wellington declared: "Thank God I shall be spared from seeing the consummation of ruin that is going on about us."

No man will ever be a big executive who feels that he must, either openly or under cover, follow up every order he gives and see that it is done—not will he ever develop a capable assistant.—J. L. Mahin.

Keeping the Sabbath

By T. W. Bath

A NEW AILMENT has been discovered upon already overburdened humanity. Its name is Sunday Sickness, which seems peculiar to church-goers and church members. Observers tell us that the disease is becoming painfully prevalent and is alarmingly infectious. Unless checked it is always fatal in the end—to the soul.

Because this disease is present in our community as one of the symptoms of a general breakdown of morals, one is led to attempt to review the situation and make some suggestions. A frequent question asked any minister is "How Shall I Keep Sunday?" Perhaps an examination of the nature of the Lord's Day and its observance will help.

Many today are sinning against the spiritual values for which Sunday stands because they fail to use the day in the interests of the higher life. The spiritual employment of the day has been a rock behind which the weak, the driven, and the weary have found shelter.

The Dutch people have this title "God's Dyke" for the day. Dykes have kept these people safe from the raging sea and they apply the figure to the waves of secularism that would engulf them with as serious consequences should the sea dykes give way.

WE HAVE LOST the art of thinking. We do not know how to be still and quiet and set our thoughts in order. On the busy rushing days of the week, it is difficult to be quiet and to set our mental houses in order. Why not then use part of the Lord's Day to do that very thing? In the quiet of the day, the relief from labor, the calmness of our communities, let us learn to be still. Some years ago a French statesman spent a week end in New York. On Saturday he was amused with the people rushing to the stores carrying about their articles of purchase. He enjoyed a night's rest and woke up in the morning, startled by the stillness. He looked out and saw very few people about. In concern, he went to his host and asked if some great man had died, or some calamity befallen the community. His amused host replied that it was Sunday, and tried to explain what the day meant. A short while later they observed the people again thronging the streets, this time making their way to the churches in answer to the chimes and the bells ringing out on the morning air. The Frenchman cried, "This is marvelous, France must have this." And later when speaking of the strength of America, he remarked, "America is great and strong because the spirit of the Pilgrim Fathers has so permeated the people that as a whole they take one day in seven to stop, think and worship."

Ponder the fact that this example of observing the day impressed a visitor to our land. What do those around us, those who do not profess to be Christian think when we defile the day and act as if it no longer existed as part of our faith?

What do you think of the beggar who asked a good ruler in his town for some money? The kind old man found seven pieces of money in his pocket. He laid them in his hand and gave the beggar six pieces and slipped one piece back into his pocket. The ungrateful wretch grabbed the man by the throat and demanded the seventh also. Every last one of you would condemn without hesitation the unthankful man. Yet will you do the same thing with regard to the days God has given us? Do you honestly want to give God a chance to make of you what in your holiest moments you resolve to be? If so, will you not let a proper and wholesome keeping of the Lord's Day help you so to become?

HERE ARE TWO ATTITUDES of mind toward the day of rest and worship. The Prophet Amos 8: 5, "When will the new moon be gone that we may sell corn? and the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit?"

The landlords of the time of Amos begrudged the one day of rest from labor and wanted to know impatiently when the Sabbath would be past so that they could plant wheat. This day to them was only an irksome interference with their making a gain.

The other attitude is set forth in the words of Isaiah: "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord."

This is the object God had in giving us the Sabbath, and it is possible for everyone to make the Sabbath a delight.

In his warfare in this world, the Christian believer has three great allies, the Church, the Bible, and the Sabbath. The oldest of the three is the Sabbath. Without the Sabbath the Bible would soon cease to be studied or proclaimed, and without the Sabbath the church would soon perish.

THE SABBATH is a divine institution. It was made for man, but not by man. Our whole attitude towards the Sabbath depends on what our idea of it is, and whence it came. Neither the Church, nor the State, nor any far-seeing and wise philanthropist, or social benefactor gave the world the Sabbath; but GOD, our Creator.

The Sabbath has a natural basis, and is adapted to man's physical and moral nature. But if the world had had to wait for man to discover from nature the law of a day of rest, humanity had never been blessed with it.

The Sabbath appears again in the Commandments and requires us to keep it holy. We can never conceive of a time when the other nine commandments would not be binding upon mankind—thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal . . . No revelation from God has ever repealed the fourth commandment either—"Remember the Sabbath and keep it holy." The Sabbath by God, but for man, for man's whole being, his body and his soul. How true it is that the Sabbath was made for man, for man's benefit. Man's body requires it. Even inanimate matter seems to be subject to the law of the Sabbath. In one of the steel mills of Pittsburgh, small bells were being manufactured out of ingots of fine steel which had been run through the rolls many times. The process was then quickly completed. But when the bells were tested they gave forth no sound. The expert who was called in said that the running of the steel through the presses had caused intense activity of the molecules of steel without giving these molecules time to rest. It was this which rendered the bells dull and toneless. The steel was given a chance to rest, and then the product was perfect.

AMERICA needs the rest of Sunday, probably more than any other nation, because of the rush and strain of our life. Statistics show that, although the average length of life in the first quarter of this century has been increased by about ten years, this is due to the great decrease in infant mortality and young people; whereas, there has been an actual increase in the deaths of middle-aged people. The Sabbath was made for man, and the violation of it exacts its toll of disease and death. The Sabbath was made for man, but not for man as an animal only, as a body, but for man with his mind and his spirit. How much better is a man than a sheep. As constant unremitting toil injures the body, so constant application to the seen and the material stunts the growth of the soul. God's laws were not given in vain. He knows what man needs.

In one of his papers an outstanding editor says that "If keeping the seventh day were only a human institution it would be the best method that could have been thought of for the polishing and civilizing of mankind." Because the Sabbath is so important and vital and central in the divine plan for mankind, the severest penalties were pronounced upon those who violated this law, for they were injuring not only themselves but mankind. So important was observance of this day that even the beasts of burden were to rest and any violation of the Sabbath requirements (such as gathering sticks for a fire) was punishable by death.

We remember best events which are associated with great anniversaries (Christmas, Thanksgiving, Armistice Day, V-J Day, etc.) or with great ritual (coronation, inauguration ceremony, etc.)

Our Heavenly Father has utilized this principle down the ages. He has asked his people to observe certain memorials in order to maintain the vitality of their spiritual life. Thus the Jews were required to keep the feast of the Passover to commemorate the passing over of the children of Israel when God smote the first-born of the Egyptians; the feast of Pentecost, of the feast of harvest, the first fruits of their labor; the feast of Tabernacle or of ingathering, commemorating the sojourning of the children of Israel in the wilderness and the ingathering of all the fruits of the year; and one of the greatest of these memorials was the Sabbaths.

The seventh day in every week and the seventh month in every year, and every seventh year were all consecrated to the Lord. Even the land, inasmuch as it was the Lord's, was to keep a Sabbath for him (Leviticus 25: 2). In this year the self-sown produce of the land was to be left for the poor and the beasts of the field; and the fruit of the unpruned vineyard and olive yard was not to be harvested, but to be left to its owner, his family and servants, the stranger sojourning with him, his cattle, and the wild beasts.

A release of debt owed by Israelite to Israelite, was also to be made. The year was intended to be not simply a year of leisure, but also a year of religious exercises and instruction. The day brought to mind the great work of creation and later in history it was associated in their minds with the great work of deliverance. God had done a great work for Israel, delivered them from slavery and brought them through the Red Sea and led them into the land promised to their fathers. The purpose of the Sabbath was to recall these things vividly to mind and thereby to impress on the Jews the importance of serving God and keeping his commandments. The purpose of the Sabbath was to bring men to God, reminding them of the great things he had done for them and for their fathers.

THE SABBATH is the glorious main-spring of the moral government of God. As a Christian and as a Saint, how shall I keep Sunday?

Christian people of their own volition must observe the day for their spiritual welfare and for the sake of the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. The best authority on how and the best example here is the Lord of the Sabbath himself. What did Jesus do on the Sabbath? In the first place, he went to church. He commenced his public ministry in the synagogue at Nazareth on the Sabbath day. "As his custom was," says St. Luke, "he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day." On this day, too, our Lord had social contact with his friends. He accepted the invitation of a Pharisee to dine at his house on the Sabbath. And what took place in the hours in the homes of those friends? He made use of the occasion for the loftiest conversation and spiritual teaching.

On the Sabbath, too, our Lord worked a number of his great miracles, healing the sick, and thus destroying the absurd contention that it was unlawful to do good on that day. The rest of the day from the labors of life gives opportunities for doing good, for visiting the sick, and for teaching his word.

AFTER Christ's work, death and resurrection, his followers gathered to worship on the first day of the week (Acts 20:7), celebrating his resurrection. The four Gospels direct our attention to the observance of the Lord's Day, the first day of every week. The most important hour of the week is when God comes and stands, and calls to us as we are assembled together on Sunday. It is then that we renew our spiritual power, the final bulwark against temptation.

Revelation 1:10 states "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Christ is the head of the church, God has ordained this institution in the world. He has called his ministers to speak for him. Here he seeks to reveal his word and will. Here man comes into such closeness with God that through this closeness his soul is revived and fortified against moral and spiritual disaster, here man can do his part towards promoting the interest of God's kingdom in the world: attendance on Sunday should be as essential, as much a part of the routine of home life as the weekly work, or evening meal. The most expensive article of furniture is the empty pew in the church.

It is a strange thing to see Christian people lend themselves to the program of non-Christian and aliens in our country who endeavor to heap disgrace on the Sabbath laws and upon the godly makers of America who gave them to us. The Pilgrim Fathers, according to the old hymn, left England for "freedom to worship God." But freedom to have a day of rest and worship was one of the chief motives of their migration. King James had decreed that Sunday was a day of sports, and issued his Sports Book. The Pilgrim

Fathers desired to build up their families, and their civilization upon another basis. Hence they came to America. From the very beginning, in all the colonies, Sunday was a part of the law of the colonies. There is no doubt either that their observance of this day made a mighty contribution to the moral and spiritual well-being of the nation, as well as to its material and economic prosperity. Sunday gave the people a chance to know the Bible, the Fountain whence have flowed the noblest streams of influence in the religion, education, and politics of the nation.

TODAY selfish business interests are everywhere attacking such laws as now guard the Lord's Day. They have been aided in their campaign by a disregard for the day on the part of the rest of the population, the Christian portion as well. More and more Sunday has become a day in which real estate is viewed, automobiles exhibited, sports are entered into and social entertainments held.

Our Heavenly Father, in this present dispensation, has called our attention to the importance of Sunday as a day of rest and prayer (Read Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, 4 and 119: 7).

We are therefore advised by the testimony of three dispensations, the first, in the Mosaic dispensation, the seventh day was to be Holy; second, after Christ's resurrection, the first day of the week, Holy; third, God's word to this generation, in the "dispensation of the fullness of time" the instruction of the early ages is re-emphasized, and those who wish to observe the law of Christ will set apart Sunday, the day commemorating the resurrection of Jesus, as a day different from the other days, a day dedicated to worship and to rest, a day not spent in idleness but in spiritual recreation, that the forces of righteousness may have their rightful place in our lives.

God still promises to bless and honor those who honor his day.

The most valuable windows in the world are said to be the windows of the great Marshall Field Company in Chicago. The curtains for years came down on Saturday night and stayed down until Monday morning. In a full-page advertisement in the Chicago Tribune, Marshall Field & Co. inserted the following statement, entitled THE THINGS UNSEEN.

At the end of their first week in business the owners of a little shop lowered the curtains of their windows and went home. On each succeeding Saturday night the curtains were pulled down and kept down until Monday morning. As the little shop grew the suggestion came from many sources that the curtains should stay up. "The windows are beautiful," people said, "let us walk by and look."

The owners had an old-fashioned background. They had been taught in childhood that six days are enough for the things that are seen. The first day of the week, they said, is for the things unseen—rest, and worship, and family life, and freedom from thoughts of business.

Seventy-five years have passed. The store has grown until its windows are said to be more valuable than any windows in the world. But the example of the founders remains, and on all Sundays the shades are down.

Is this old-fashioned custom good in days when so many old-fashioned customs are being crowded out? We like to think so. We like the idea that on the first day of the week the church and the home should come first. Strong churches and strong homes build strong cities and a strong nation. All the great works of business—service and courtesy and kindness and truth—have their inspiration in religion. And prosperity is only permanent where there is reverence, and mutual trust and faith.

One of the best ways to find God is to worship him and seek him on his Holy Day. The soul of man beholds constantly the things of this world. It will do him good, if on one day of the week he pulls down the blinds on the things visible and material, and looks for a little at the things which are unseen and eternal.

The Restoration

18. Young Joseph Rebuilds the Church

OUR LAST CHAPTER told of the coming of "Young Joseph" to his father's place as head of the church, as the culmination of a series of spiritual experiences which he believed had brought him to that hour when he faced the conference on April 6, 1860, and stated that if the same Spirit that had prompted his coming should prompt his reception, he was with them.

Seldom has a mortal man been confronted by a more difficult or exacting task than lay ahead of young Joseph Smith. During the interval from 1844, when his father had been killed, and 1860, when he was called to his father's place, the name of Latter Day Saint had become a mockery and a byword throughout the civilized world. Utah was in the spotlight of public attention, because of the proclamation of polygamy there, the attendant evils of its practice, and the open defiance of the citizens of Utah to the laws by which the Federal Government attempted to stamp it out. Brigham Young stood in the public eye as the embodiment of "Mormonism." It was to be the task of "Young Joseph" to demonstrate to the world that the church in Utah was not representative of Latter Day Saintism, and there was at least one group—although in 1860 they numbered only about 500—who would have to be judged by a different standard.

When Joseph returned to Nauvoo, some of the citizens of that now deserted village circulated a petition asking him to use his influence to have the Saints return and rebuild the city. Outside in the county, and especially in Carthage where his father had met his death, resolutions were passed to the effect that Mormons were still unwelcome in the county, and warning Joseph that he would not be allowed to preach or to pray. But friends were more numerous and enemies more temperate than they had been in 1844. One of the circuit judges privately advised Joseph that if he received a letter demanding that he leave the county, he should present it to the grand jury for appropriate action. Undismayed by threats or vituperative editorials in some of the more rabid newspapers, young Joseph Smith preached and prayed in Nauvoo, in all parts of Hancock and adjoining counties, and across the river in Iowa, without molestation. A few families of Saints returned to Nauvoo, and a branch of the church was established there, but it did not survive the removal of Joseph and his family to Plano, Illinois, in 1865.

DURING the early days of the Reorganization, there were gathered into the church many of the men whose names figure prominently in the later history of the church. Some had been connected with the original church in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr; others were new converts. Josiah Ells came to the church from the group which had followed Sidney Rigdon to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, after the break-up of 1844, and became one of the first apostles. John H. Lake, surprised by the arrival of a Saints' Herald in his home, suddenly became horrifiedly aware that his wife—with whom he had never discussed religion—was a "Mormon." He spent six months in special study designed to show her how wrong she was so that the stigma of shame could be removed from his family, at the end of which time he joined his wife's church and also became one of the apostles a short time later.

Charles Derry had first heard of the gospel at the age of nineteen, in his native England, where he served as missionary for seven years. Following the death of the Martyrs, and unsettled leadership in England, he was counseled to emigrate to Utah. On the way, his wife died, leaving him with two children, aged 4 and 2 years, but he continued to Utah. In 1859, being greatly dissatisfied with what he found in the West, he left Utah, and with a heavy heart started back to the States. In Nebraska he met his brother and his mother, who were on their way to the West, and dissuaded them from continuing the journey. He became a blacksmith, and renouncing all religion, tried to call himself an infidel, but could not find peace of mind in that philosophy. On February 20, 1861, there fell into his hands a copy of the Saints' Herald, which made his heart beat high with the old hope he had known in England. Penniless, and with a sack of cookies for lunch, he walked sixty miles through February slush and snow, crossed the Missouri River on dangerously soft ice at Omaha, and went on ten miles further into Iowa to find two missionaries—E. C. Briggs and W. W. Blair, who could tell him of the coming of Young Joseph. Two weeks after he had left home, he was baptized, and ordained an elder at the time of his confirmation. Immediately he returned with his newfound brethren to bring his family back to Iowa in a wagon. And one month from the time he had left home, he was in the mission field preaching, his family established in a new log house in western Iowa. Of his later mission to England we shall have more to say presently.

A new convert to the church was James W. Gillen, a young redheaded Irishman whose father had died when the boy was only six months old, and whose mother had likewise passed on before the son reached his tenth birthday. He had earned his own living since the age of 12, as nail maker, foundry worker, paper maker, schoolteacher, and railroad man. He was baptized December 3, 1861, and soon was preaching as an elder, and later as an apostle.

John Leeka had joined the church in 1840, had started to Utah in the exodus of 1846, but turned back into western Iowa, and entered into business. When the Civil War broke out, he remembered Joseph Smith's prophecy of the rebellion, delivered back in Nauvoo in the early days. He heard that a neighbor had a copy of it in a paper. The paper was the Saints' Herald, and with it as the neighbor handed it to him were several other papers and tracts. Soon after, Charles Derry baptized him and his wife.

IN JULY of 1861, Joseph issued his first general epistle to the church and to the world. He counseled that none should put his trust in the arm of flesh, but in Christ and his gospel. He called upon the scattered Saints to arise, throw off the shackles of false doctrine and sin, and unite to restore the church to its original purity and power. He called upon the inhabitants of the earth to repent, and as his father had so often done, warned of the judgments which were to come. It was a sober and a tolerant document of moderation, which had its effect among many of the groups of people who had scattered after the death of his father in 1844.

The fall conference of 1862 was an especially memorable one. Several members of the Lyman Wight colony from Texas were present, and were united with the church, some by baptism, and some on the strength of their original baptism in the early church. David H. Smith, younger son of Joseph Smith, was also present. This conference appointed Charles Derry on a mission to England. The story of his work there is a fascinating tale which we have not time to discuss here, rich with experiences of God's providence and leading among people who had once been his friends and church brethren, but who now, because of their allegiance to the church in Utah, regarded him as an apostate and a dangerous character. He worked alone for nearly six months before two companions arrived to share the burden with him, and to push on into Wales and Scotland with the gospel and the story of the Reorganization of the church.

The spring conference of 1863 appointed E. C. Briggs and C. G. McIntosh on a mission to Utah, Nevada, and California. They made the trip of 1,100 miles to Salt Lake City with a spring wagon and a team of mules, having a tedious but pleasant journey. Because of the war, and the unsettled and rebellious conditions in Utah, they were required to take an oath of allegiance to the United States as they passed through Fort Bridger. Tuesday, August 11, 1863, they had their long-looked-for interview with Brigham Young, who told them that he would warn his people not to open their homes or their churches to them for preaching. He deprecated the efforts of Young Joseph, saying that he was under the domination of his mother, who was a wicked, wicked woman. The missionaries spent their time in house-to-house canvassing, under great difficulties, for members of the Utah church were excommunicated for even admitting them to their homes. But a few listened, and accepted the claims of Young Joseph. One convert, George P. Dykes, was ordained and sent on to California to preach, and when Briggs followed him in October, 1864, he found 375 church members waiting for him, as the result of Dykes' preaching. Many of these were from the colony of Sam Brannan, who had brought a shipload of Saints from New York, around the tip of South America, expecting to meet the colony which was traveling overland from Nauvoo. When they discovered that Brigham Young had decided to stop in Utah, this group mostly stuck to California, and were among the very earliest pioneers of San Francisco, organizing the first flour mill, the first periodical, and the first school there. So the mission to the West bore fruit, even though few in Utah would listen, and those who did almost invariably left the state soon after rejecting the church of Brigham Young, and joining with the Reorganization.

The mission to Utah of course brought to a head the question of what should be the attitude of these who followed the leadership of Young Joseph towards the dominant church in Utah, and particularly towards their doctrine of polygamy. Even before the days when young Joseph had stepped into his father's place, the elders of the church had been instructed to contend against this doctrine. As the missionaries of the Reorganization went out and proclaimed themselves as Latter Day Saints, they constantly had to live down the stigma which polygamy had brought to that name in Utah. Young Joseph and the elders of the Reorganization took the attitude that the origin of polygamy was of secondary importance; that regardless of where it came from or who brought it into the church, it was wrong and abominable in the sight of God. They took the lead in legislative and judicial attempts to stamp it out, thereby establishing slowly the realization that there was one group of Latter Day Saints which believed in strict monogamous morality and civic righteousness. They maintained open minds, and claimed the right to investigate all evidence, continuing to believe that Joseph Smith was innocent of any complicity in polygamy until that theory could be disproved. They approached these people in Utah who had belonged to the old church in a spirit of kindness and brotherly love, trying to show them the error of some of the innovations they had espoused; but they would not condone or compromise with this doctrine, against which they had been commanded to contend.

Others continued to be added to the rapidly growing church, both new converts and reclaimed or lost members of the old church. Several of the Cutlerite colony united with the Reorganization, and missionaries were sent to the Lyman Wight colony in Texas, as soon as the close of the war between the States made that possible. Missions were opened up in the southeastern States, in Switzerland, in Scandinavia, and in Canada. Two missionaries were sent to Australia, but because their boat sprang a serious leak, were forced to put in at the Society Islands for repairs, where they found a thriving group of Saints who had been organized years before under the ministry of Addison Pratt, and almost forgotten in the stress of trouble at Nauvoo.

In 1860, when Young Joseph came to conference at Amboy, Illinois, the church numbered less than 500 souls. In eight years time it had grown to a membership of ten thousand, including members reclaimed from all the scattered fragments which had broken away from the church at the death of its founder in 1844.

The conference of 1866 authorized the printing of the Inspired Version of the Bible, manuscript for which had been carefully preserved by Emma Smith ever since her husband's death. Money was not plentiful, and it was late in 1867 before the first 500 bound copies were ready to leave the printers.

Under the leadership of Young Joseph, the church began to formulate a policy and a program of tithing, to complete and organize the various quorums of the church, to establish precedents in matters of doctrine, in the form of ritual and ceremony, to publish tracts and books for missionary use. Headquarters for the church were established in Plano, Illinois, to which place Joseph Smith and his family moved in 1866. A little church of native stone was dedicated there on November 15, 1868. On May 1, 1869, another long-awaited project was completed, and the first issue of the Saints' Herald to be printed on the church's own power press was mailed to the subscribers. A paper was also established for the children of the church, under the editorship of Marietta Walker.

So the church which had endured the persecution of its enemies, the loss of its leader, and the odium brought upon it by those who used its name and its leader's prestige to proclaim the repulsive doctrine of polygamy, embarked upon the long, uphill climb under a new leader, who was to establish the name of Latter Day Saint again as an honorable designation among men, and re-establish as a financially and spiritually solvent and going concern, the church which had had an inauspicious but brilliant beginning under the leadership of his father. The doctrine, faith, and practice of the Reorganized Church were the same as in the original—and have been twice declared so by courts of competent jurisdiction. The blessings of spiritual power likewise were gratifyingly renewed, so that any missionary of those days could tell literally hundreds of personal experiences in which God's power was manifested in miraculous ways of healing, direction, guidance, and material and financial blessing.

Let's Talk About the Weather

Those who despise the weather as a conversational opening, seem to me to be ignorant of the reason why human beings wish to talk. Very few join in a conversation in the hope of learning anything new. Conversation should be a sympathetic buzz. That is why the weather is so useful a subject. It brings people at once to an experience which is generally shared and enables them, as it were, to buzz on the same note. Having achieved this harmony, they advance by miraculous stages to other sympathies and, as note succeeds note, a pleasant and varied little melody of conversation is made, as satisfying to the ear and mind as the music of a humming top. The discovery of new notes of sympathy is the secret of all good conversation.—Robert Lynd, The Money Box.

The Scouts Have a Field Day

By Willis W. Kearney

IN OUR TOWN, as in many others as well, there are several Boy Scout troops. The plan seems to be to group boys of similar ages together as much as possible. Beginner scouts are advanced as they grow older. The result is that the various scoutmasters have become used to handling boys within certain age limits.

In that way, the old Scoutmaster had "graduated" many junior and senior class boys from his troop. They would go into business or employment. You may remember that one of his troops, when called upon, went right into the Army together and served with credit in the southwest Pacific during the great war.

The old Scoutmaster had thought then to give up the work, believing that perhaps some younger man would do better. However, the demand for his services was so great that he found he could not retire as easily as he had thought. The demand was not only among the parents of the boys, but also among the boys themselves. As the boys expressed it, they felt they were being cheated out of something if they could not finish their scout life in his troop. So the old Scoutmaster kept on with the work and now had one of the largest and best troops of boys with whom he had ever worked.

Perhaps one thing that made him so well liked by everybody concerned was that he tried to enter into the lives of the boys in such a way as to make a lasting impression for good. The things that interested them, each one individually, also interested him, and the boys soon found that they got something from this interest of his that they never had thought of before.

The pleasant fall weather which had been experienced for a week or two had given the boys the idea of having a field day before the weather got too bad, so such a day was planned for a week from Saturday.

"The June Bugs are planning their field day for that Saturday, too," spoke up one of the boys. "I hope they won't follow us around all day."

"It is not so long since you were a June Bug yourself," said another boy. "I always thought they were a nice bunch of kids. What have you got against them all at once?"

"Oh, I haven't anything against them. They are nice boys, of course, but I am in a different troop now."

"So you think that makes a difference?" asked the old Scoutmaster.

"Yes, sir," said the boy. "We all have been looking forward for years to being in your troop."

"I'm flattered," said the old Scoutmaster. "However, I hope you boys will not be greatly put out by the news I have to tell you. I received a call from the hospital yesterday and found that the master of the June Bugs is very sick and will not be able to look after his boys for a month or so. He has asked me to take over his boys along with mine until he is able to take them off my hands. That means," and the boys noticed a growing ring of steel in his voice, "having the June Bugs at our meetings each meeting night until then; also they will be our guests at the field day doings. If you have any grouch to make, now is the time to make it, for after tonight I don't want to hear a grouch out of any of you. Is that clear?"

"It sure is," shouted a boy. "Hurrah for Pop, and three cheers for the June Bugs!"

"Is that the sentiment of all of you? Those in favor stand up."

Every boy in the room stood up.

IN SUCH MANNER, then, was made the union of the June Bugs (so called because they were organized in June) with the old Scoutmaster's troop. The two troops combined made quite a crowd, but with one troop on one side of the room and the other opposite, they kept reasonably good order. Each side remained quiet while the others went through their exercises, but when it came to singing, they all joined in, as group singing had always been a feature of the old Scoutmaster's meetings.

At the first combined meeting of the two troops, the old Scoutmaster said, "I think it would be a good idea to adopt a special song for our field day song and practice it as much as time permits, so as to sing it well on field day."

The boys liked the idea, but had no choice of song, so the Scoutmaster picked up a songbook from those at hand, and suggested Isaac Watt's song (No. 170 in the book) beginning, "Joy to the world," as the most appropriate field day song he knew.

Most of the boys had heard it in church, so it was adopted and practice began at once, with one of the older boys at the organ and another leading.

One boy had an accordion which he had become quite expert in using, and there was a violin and a guitar in the old Scoutmaster's troop. The practice went on until quite late in the evening. The youngsters of the visiting troop soon caught the spirit of the song and joined with as much enthusiasm as any. Several of the parents had dropped in and expressed much pleasure at the singing.

ON FIELD DAY, the boys all met at the hall dressed in their uniforms. Before starting, the old Scoutmaster suggested that they stop at the hospital to see the master of the June Bugs, and they agreed.

Arriving there, they were admitted and entered in regular marching order, the June Bugs first, since it was their scoutmaster they were visiting.

Mr. Schwensen, Scoutmaster of the June Bugs, noticed that his boys all had hymnbooks like those the other troop had, also that several musical instruments were in the party. He smiled up at the old Scoutmaster.

"I suppose these signs mean music?"

One of his own boys quickly said, "We've got a field day song."

"You have?" said Mr. Schwensen. Then, turning to the old Scoutmaster, "Oh, how I'd like to hear it. My Scandinavian blood cries aloud for it, but I expect the noise would be out of place here."

"We have no serious cases in this ward," said the doctor, "and they all want to hear the singing, so unlimber and let them have it."

Accordion, violin, and guitar were quickly brought out, and in a very short time they were ready and broke into song:

"Joy to the world! The Lord will come,
And earth receive her King;
Let every heart prepare him room,
And saints and angels sing,
And saints and angels sing,
And saints, And saints and angels sing."

The boys went all through with the song, and after the first words, the doctor and nurses joined in with them. The doctor's deep bass voice rolled out, and the clear soprano of a nurse was very noticeable.

Afterwards, the instruments were quickly put away and the boys were ready to march out, but before they left the doctor shook hands with them, saying, "I have sung the bass part of that song many times, but never thought of it as a field day song for Boy Scout troops, but I'll admit it would be hard to find a better one. And thank you for coming in."

IT WAS A BUNCH of happy boys who took up the march for the bit of woodland where they were to have their picnic. After arriving there, some of the boys were busy cutting bits of dry wood for the preparation of the meal, and some took the water pails to the spring for plenty of good drinking water. Various games were soon under way, and then at last the two cooks called, "Come and get it before we throw it out!"

Each boy was given a couple of "hot dogs" with plenty of bread and butter to go with them. And, of course, like any bunch of boys, the outstanding feature of their dinner was talk.

At last the old Scoutmaster caught fragments of a remark by one of the boys which interested him.

"Will you please tell that over again, Johnny? I didn't get all of it."

"I was just telling them, sir, about a challenge our school basketball team received lately from a club in a near-by town. They seemed to have a big opinion of themselves and told what they would do to us when we met."

"And did your captain reply in kind?" asked the master.

"Well, not exactly, sir. He didn't say what we would do to them in return. He advised the other club to wait until after the game to boast about it. A bit more original, was it, sir?"

"Original, you say? Hardly that, I think. But it was rather more gentlemanly, anyhow."

"Why," said the boy, "have you ever heard such a reply before?"

"Perhaps not heard it, but I read, just a few days ago, about a case in which a similar reply was made. But to me, the most interesting thing about it was the fact that it all happened, 1,062 years before Christ.

The boy gave a whistle of astonishment and said, "That was a long time ago, sir."

"Yes, a little over 3,000 years ago from now. Do you boys want to hear about it?"

"Yes, sir, if you please," came from so many as to make it practically unanimous. So the old Scoutmaster took from his pocket a book bearing unmistakable signs of much use.

"The Bible, sir?" asked the boy.

"Yes," said the Scoutmaster, "we will find it in the Old Testament part of the Bible, I Kings 20: 10, 11. And Benhadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me. And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

"Well, that is rather similar, sir, for being said so long ago," said the boy.

"Yes, very similar. They both mean to wait until you have done something before boasting about it, which is good advice, certainly."

"It is strange," said the boy, "to read such modern-sounding advice that was given so long ago."

"Yes, it is strange to us now to read something that might have been said just the other day, to judge by the sound of it," said the old Scoutmaster. "There are several such cases in the Bible."

"Does it have anything to say about complaints, I wonder?"

"Such as what?" asked the Scoutmaster.

"Well, one day I heard a teacher at school say she didn't want such and such a boy in a play they were getting up 'because he was always kicking about something.' Can you match that one?"

"Yes, I think so. Let us read I Samuel 2: 27-29, 'And there came a man of God unto Eli, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Did I plainly appear unto the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt in Pharaoh's house? And did I choose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest; to offer upon mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me? and did I give unto the house of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Israel? Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and mine offering which I have commanded in my habitation; and honorest thy sons above me, to make yourselves fat with the chiefest of all the offerings of Israel my people?'"

"I don't see what they had to kick about," said a boy.

"But apparently there was plenty of kicking done," said the old Scoutmaster.

"Like the boy I heard the teacher telling about," said the boy. "It seems that about Eli might have happened last week instead of, how long ago was it?"

"One thousand one hundred sixty-five years before Christ," said the old Scoutmaster.

"Well, now, I didn't know that the Bible was such an interesting book. I have a nice Bible that Mom got me last Christmas, but I haven't read much in it to date. I think I'll just remedy that pronto," said the boy.

"An excellent idea, that," said the old Scoutmaster.

"Dad was right," said a boy. "He told me I could expect, when I got into your troop, to learn something I never thought of before."

"Here comes Johnny, and will you look at the posies he's got. He would rather pick flowers than eat, after he'd had his dinner," said a boy derisively.

"Johnny is a lad after my own heart in that respect," said the old Scoutmaster. "Come over here, Johnny, and let me see your flowers."

The boy who had expected to be teased about them, hurried over and held them up to be admired. "I picked them for Mom. She likes them so well, and we have so few."

"I see you have some fine lilies," said the old Scoutmaster. "The Bible tells about the greatest Scoutmaster that ever lived. He was fond of flowers, too. I think, Johnny, that you would have enjoyed being with him on some of his walks. In Matthew 6: 28, 29, we read about him and what he thought of flowers. He said: 'Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.' I think of this saying when I see a nice display of flowers. Do you know his name, Johnny?"

"Mom says it was Jesus said that, but I didn't know he was a scoutmaster, sir."

"He was not, as we understand the word today, but he was a wonderful teacher. Get acquainted with him, Johnny."

Food and Drink

Hermann Suderman, the noted German playwright and novelist, began his career by writing novels for newspapers. On one occasion, after completing a story in his native village in East Prussia, he started for Berlin with the manuscript in his pocket. At Insterburg, where he had to change trains, he ran into some friends and went with them on a spree. After a night full of songs and alcohol, he woke up the next day in Berlin to discover that his manuscript was gone. Since he had not enough money to live in Berlin, he decided to return to his native village. He had to spend the night at Insterburg. Heartbroken, he started a round of the inns, trying to drown his sorrows. His drinks gave him an appetite, so he dropped into a delicatessen and asked for a herring, which was brought out wrapped in paper. While he was eating he noticed that something was written on the back of the paper. He looked closer—and found it was a page of his lost manuscript.

"Give me all the wrapping paper you've got!" he cried, and they brought him his novel. Only a few pages were missing. The novel thus strangely recovered was Frau Sorge, the book that made him famous.—Lothrop Stoddard, Luck, Your Silent Partner.

God Is Your Father

By Hazel Napier

IF YOU are sick, afflicted, bereaved, or, for any other reason, in need of the care of your Heavenly Father, this article is for you.

While I was lying in the hospital four months ago, unable to speak above a whisper, almost totally blind, and expecting at any time to hear of the death of my newborn baby girl, I thought of you and made the promise that if I lived I would do all I could to help alleviate suffering and bring comfort to those who must bear anguish and pain.

It may help if I first relate my experience in the hospital. When I regained consciousness, four hours after my baby's birth, I remembered hearing the doctor say that the child could not possibly live, and knew that I, too, was close to death. When my husband came in, I was too weak to lift my head or talk to him. Later I heard the patient, who shared the room with me, tell her company that I was not expected to live. This confirmed my previous knowledge concerning the seriousness of my condition.

Naturally my thoughts turned to the church, to my many beautiful experiences and my patriarchal blessing, in which I was told, "Through testing, thou shalt reveal thy faith, and thy determination to serve God. Fail not when dark days are upon thee, and he will sustain thee."

Fail not! What could I do in this helpless condition? Again my thoughts turned to my blessing and another sentence stood out like a flash of light: "For thine encouragement I am led to give thee the assurance that thou art a child of God." Here, then, was the answer to my question. I could learn to say, "Not my will, but Thine, be done," and say it with confidence, putting my hand trustingly in his, for I was his child; he was my father. Even as I wanted what was best for my baby, whether it was life or death, he also wanted the best for me.

Knowing I could come in contact with God through the elders, I requested that my pastor, Elder Joseph Breshears, be called and asked to administer to me. I cannot recall all of our conversation, but I remember telling him that whether my baby lived or died, her name was Faith, and that, in their petitions at prayer service, I wanted the Saints to ask for God's will to be done with my infant daughter and me.

Under the influence of a hypo, I went to sleep, awaking about eleven o'clock. Instantly my thoughts went to my baby, and again I prayed that God's will would be done with her. While I was praying, a wonderful thing happened. The sweetest, most beautiful spirit I had ever experienced, filled my entire being. For the first time since my doctor had told me, a month before, that my baby might die, I was at peace and strangely happy. Though I saw nothing, I had the distinct impression that angels were near. No doubt they were, for at that very time my baby's spirit was taken back to God who gave it. When the nun came in to tell me that my baby had just died, I was so filled with the Spirit that I felt no pain or sorrow. That was to come later. Without this experience I could not have survived the shock of her passing.

God's sustaining Spirit was still with me when I was told that my blindness was permanent. Though I could see to get around, I knew I could never read again. I thought of how my work in the church would be hindered, and it was almost more than I could bear. How could I continue my studying and writing for the Herald? Again I found an answer in the assurance given in my blessing that I was a child of God.

Through his loving kindness, he had permitted me to live. (My doctor said it was a miracle.) A like miracle could take place in my eyes if it were His will. If not, he would help me in my efforts to learn to read and write again. He would not fail me; he would not leave me alone, for I was his child.

Why have I related this? Because you, too, are a child of God who knows how to give good gifts to his children. After tribulations come blessings—either in this life or the life beyond. Every tear shed now will be a shimmering pearl in the hereafter.

Out of a troubled, perplexed heart you may ask, "But why must I have trials?" There are some who advance the theory that all suffering is the result of sin in the life of the individual. If this is the philosophy of someone you love, it will add to your sorrow, but need not discourage you.

If you are striving to serve God with all your might, you can rest assured he will not make you suffer heartaches and trouble because of some little mistake you may have made, or because some, small thing in your life needs correction.

"Then why," you may ask, "does God permit his children to suffer?" We can go to the Bible for the answer. There was Job, the righteous man, whose faith was put to the test. There was Paul, who because of the abundance of his revelation, was given a thorn in the flesh to keep him from becoming exalted above measure. There was the man born blind so that the works of God could be made manifest in him.

You may find yourself in one of these categories. Like Job, you may be so nearly perfect that God permits you to be tested. We know that Job was an upright man, for God described him as such to Satan. The tempter might have answered something like this: "No wonder he is so good, he has had no trouble. He has everything—a lovely family, health, and riches. Let these things be taken from him, and he will lose his faith and no longer be of service." God, who knew the final outcome, gave Satan permission to do to Job as he willed, except he could not take his life. Accordingly, Satan proceeded to bring upon Job the three great troubles: poverty, physical affliction, and loss of loved ones. If you are suffering from these trials, perhaps God and Satan are having a little talk about you, and God is letting you take the test as he did Job.

Or like Paul, perhaps you are so in tune with God and so capable of receiving great spiritual blessings that you must have an affliction in order to maintain your humility. If you feel this is so, do not worry, but rise above your handicap, making it a steppingstone to higher things.

I am reminded of a quotation from the Herald: "How simple it would be for the humble little oyster to give up and die when the sharp sand that so often works its way into his shell begins to annoy him. But does he? No. Since he has no hands or other means of removing the cause of irritation, he seeks to bring about victory by making the most of the sand. And so quietly the oyster turns the sand into a pearl and thereby solves his own problem, and greatly increases his own worth."

No one is exempt from hardships, sorrow, and handicaps. In every life some irritant causes annoyance and discouragement. We are each required to carry a cross which varies in size and structure with the individual. Regardless of the obstacle that is ours, we can overcome it if we will form the victory habit. We must learn to make the sand of handicap into a pearl of beauty, which, along with other things, will increase our worth. By humbling us, our afflictions will lift us up and bring us even closer to God.

Like the man born blind, you may be caused to suffer in order to bring about some divine purpose. Let us briefly review the story. A disciple asked, "Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?"

and Jesus answered, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."—John 9: 2. Through suffering one can learn to love and sympathize, and thus become an example for others. Your faith and patience in suffering may be the key that unlocks the gate of celestial glory for someone else.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, one of the kindest, most sympathetic persons I ever met, was such a man. Of him, Apostle Paul M. Hanson said, "He was a man who, through suffering and various experiences that in the providence of God had been permitted to come into his life, was placed in close touch with the throbbing heart of humanity." Your suffering may do the same thing for you.

Only through experience can our hearts be tuned to beat with the hearts of our fellow men, many of whom are burdened with the cares of life and need our help, our sympathy, and our understanding.

Christ, who came in contact with all kinds of human misery, who lived with the poor, healed the sick, and suffered agonies on the cross, is very close to the suffering ones who seek him. Thus, they can say with glad hearts, "God is so good to me." Those are the words I say to myself when I go to the door, or walk in the yard and garden on sunny days. Seen with my darkened vision, the sunlight is more beautiful than ever before; it is softer, glowing like pale, pure gold on the green of every growing thing. Seeing it, I am inspired to live for God.

If your days are darkened by trouble of any kind, you too, are in a position to behold the sunshine of God's love, which, shining upon the growing beauty of your life, will produce a wondrous picture that may give you hope and the inspiration to help others who stand in need. Lift up your head and rejoice. Be happy in the knowledge that no matter how dark the days are, God's love will keep you safe and eventually bring you into his everlasting light.

Peace in the Home

By Bessie Taylor

The home is recognized as being the oldest and most vital institution of the human race. It is where the flow of human relationships begins. One is born into this world an individual, but immediately he begins making contacts with others. Because of the nature and delicacy of babyhood, it is necessary to be loved and provided for by others, so the family was ordained and instituted from the beginning.

Home and family life are necessary to the individual from babyhood to old age. It is the base from which all other human relationships are extended.

Just as we look at an individual and note his personality and character, so we look at the next unit greater than he and note the home. Our homes do have personality and character, and one of the most important attributes is "peace in the home."

Peace in the home is a condition just the same as it is a condition in the individual mind. It is achieved in the same manner. It begins with the parents and is transferred to the children. It depends upon righteousness for its growth and development. It immediately takes flight when sin enters. The two cannot live together, for peace is the gift of God and always withdraws in the presence of sin.

Keeping peace in the home is a daily chore—any hour or minute it may escape. As an example, we read in church history that Joseph Smith and his wife, Emma, had a "difference" one morning. After breakfast Joseph attempted to proceed with the translating of the Book of Mormon; he found it impossible to concentrate. After a period of restlessness he went and sought Emma to make amends. Then he returned and found his mind cleared so that he was able to continue his work.

We are all looking forward to the redemption of Zion. We know our homes must be celestialized the same as our individual selves. The test of our individual righteousness is reflected in the home. Every word we speak, every act we do, has its influence on the character-making of our home. When we say or do anything to break the peace in our home, we are sinning not only against ourselves, but our whole society.

Whatever the conditions are in the outside world, there must be peace in the home before that home can function as the great moral and spiritual force which God intended it to be in our lives.

A test and challenge we all should try is to practice peace in the home for one whole day. Let no unkind word or deed mar it. Then extend these peaceful days into weeks, months and years. This is one of the important keys to "growing old gracefully."

Our homes must be able to stand this test before God can accept them as standards for kingdom-building.

To provide a safety island along the center of a highway near Trenton, New Jersey, 14½-foot-wide slabs of concrete were moved 12 feet to one side for eight miles. This was done 14 slabs at a time, or a surface approximately 500 feet by 14½, by the use of hose—a feat believed to be without precedent. First, the asphalt joint was cut out along the length of the slabs, leaving a crack about half an inch wide. Into this crack was inserted flattened three-inch hose. Air under pressure was then forced in, and this moved the entire 500-foot length of roadway approximately two inches.

The separation between the slabs was then wide enough to accommodate a special six-inch hose, the use of which moved the roadway three inches more. After each inflation and deflation, blocking was placed behind the hose and the process repeated. Every cycle of this operation consumed somewhat less than five minutes, and moved a strip of concrete weighing approximately 840,000 pounds.—Scientific American.

LETTERS

Trials of a New Member

I have read many letters from the Saints, and have received much encouragement from them. I am writing this testimony with the hope it may help others.

My mother died when I was fourteen, leaving my father and nine other children besides myself. At the time, we were all members of the Church of England. I went to work for a Latter Day Saint family several years later, and married one of the girls. When we were first married, we went to her church one Sunday and to mine the next. After a month we began going to the Latter Day Saint services two Sundays to every one Sunday at the Church of England. Finally a voice spoke to me and said that I should be baptized, and I knew that the Reorganized Church was truly the work of God.

When my father heard of my baptism, he said, "Hazen, you joined the Latter Day Saint Church and I shall have nothing more to do with you." I was surprised and shocked, but only answered, "All right, Father, but let me know if you ever need my help." I was quite disappointed as I had just bought a farm and was expecting to use some of my father's machinery in working it. A neighbor loaned me his horse, and one of the Saints provided farming equipment, so I was able to plant my crops. The feed I had stored in my father's barn, however, was not there when I went for it, so it was difficult to manage that first year. My wife made $3.00 a week washing, which money we used to buy groceries. One morning as I walked to barn after a sleepless night, I thought I could no longer stand it. I looked up at a piece of rope hanging in the barn, and decided that was the way out, but just then my mind turned to prayer. After praying, I hitched up my horses and went to the field; in about half an hour a neighbor came with his tractor and offered to help. The crops were good, and the following year my neighbor again helped me. Now, two-and-a-half years later, everything seems to be going well, and I feel that I have been greatly blessed. God has been with me through my trials and temptations, and I am truly thankful. My prayers are for all the Saints.

Example of Inspired Preaching

I greatly appreciated the articles in last week's Herald by Robert Miller and J. D. Anderson. I believe it is our duty to make a complete study of the records of God's word, fasting and praying that we may be able to fully understand the truth. I would rather hear a minister deliver a ten-minute talk that is born of the spirit of truth, than to listen to him "read" for an hour. I know an elder who, when requested to speak on short notice, prayed for divine inspiration. He gave his sermon, and at the close of it he noticed that many in the congregation were weeping. Eight of those in attendance were baptized.

We can always rely on the promises of Jesus. When speaking my prayer is that I may be granted the power to tell my listeners the way to obtain eternal life. That prayer has always been granted.

Reflections of an Early Member

Time passes quickly. Fifty-four years ago I attended my first reunion at Plainville, Massachusetts; there I met and prayed with M. F. Gowell, U. W. Greene, Ed and Myron Fisher. The following year I worshiped with Brother Joseph, W. W. Blair, M. T. Short, and Alexander Smith. I have not kept a diary, so only the more impressive incidents remain fixed in my mind.

I remember Alexander's telling how he was asked by his brother, Joseph, to represent him at a conference. It was Saturday, and Alexander had a carpentering job he wished to finish so that he might earn money to buy food for his family. When he hesitated, Joseph said, "You will have to decide quickly in order to catch the train," and Alexander agreed to go. He hurried home and Lizzie, his wife, helped him to get ready. As he left, she asked, "What shall I do, Alexander?" and he replied, "The Lord will care for you." When he returned home, Lizzie greeted him with a smile and said, "Soon after you left, a sister called and talked with me a few minutes. Then, as she arose to go, she said, 'Sister Smith, I feel impressed to leave this with you,' and placed a ten dollar gold piece in my hand." It was the exact amount Alexander would have made by working, had he not gone to the reunion. I shall never forget how he looked as he related this experience.

I, too, can bear testimonies of God's love. I have witnessed divine healing in my home; I have seen Satan rebuked in the name of Christ; I have been aided in finding employment when I was without work and heartsick. My greatest desire is that we may make our lives conform with Christ's teachings, and that we may be found ready to receive him when he comes.

A Field for Missionary Endeavor

I was especially impressed by Brother Leonard Lea's recent editorial, "Working for Zion." He writes, "We need a return of the missionary spirit among the people, the desire of the volunteer, as well as the full-time appointee to serve." I trust we shall recapture the old missionary spirit, so that the isolated Saints and those worshipping in small groups may receive the ministry which they so very much need.

Our pastor and nine other members have moved away, leaving fewer than that number to carry on. We continue to meet in the Y. M. C. A. building each week, and are hopeful that, in spite of our limited membership, the work here in Salina may yet progress.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Stone Church

Pastor, Garland E. Tickemyer

Using material collected by the Pioneer Society and the historian's office, three members of the congregation are writing a history of Stone Church. This will include special events honoring officers who have given long periods of service and programs of special events, as well as a report on the activities of the group. Evan Fry, radio director, has returned to his home in Independence and expects to be able to resume at least part of his radio responsibilities in the near future. Approximately 200 campers registered for the Zion's reunion held at Gardner's Lake; many others were week-end attendees. Over 175 people participated in the mid-week prayer service held on the church lawn Wednesday evening, July 31. By vote of the congregation, the meetings will continue to be held out of doors. Servicemen returning to Stone Church are Russell Brownrigg, Richard Cochran, and Finis Easter.

Coldwater, Michigan

Pastor, Edgar Peer

Lt. John Faurat and Pastor Edgar Peer were in charge of the March Communion service; following the serving of the emblems, Lt. Faurat related some of his experiences while stationed in India. Seventy Harold I. Velt held a series of meetings from March 24 to 28. Since then he has been appointed to another district. An Easter program was presented by the children under the direction of Helen Smith; Reverend Potter was the guest speaker. On May 5, Mr. Rock of the Gideon Association, spoke, following the Communion service, on the Gideon's work in distributing Bibles throughout the country. District President Forrest Meyers gave an illustrated lecture on the Book of Mormon on May 19. Mrs. Lydia Meyers conducted a special meeting for the women in the afternoon, and members of the Zion's League met with their district leader, Brother Bennett, to plan a youth rally. The rally was held on the week end of June 22, 23, with Dr. Roy Cheville in charge. Many from other districts were present. A women's institute was recently held at Mishawka; several from the local congregation attended. Servicemen returning to Coldwater are Jesse Dexter, Marshall Criswell, and Norman Bailey. A shower was given for the Criswells on April 25.

Dallas, Texas

Pastor, Clyde F. Hastings

The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting held July 28: Clyde Hastings, pastor; R. C. A. Green, church school director; Warren Wilson, Zion's League leader; Mrs. R. C. A. Green, women's leader; Merle Hallenberger, director of music; Boyd Brolliar, treasurer; Mrs. Elaine Henderson, secretary; Mrs. Verna Livingston, librarian; Mrs. W. E. Everett, correspondent; H. E. Davenport, auditor; and George Logan, custodian. Following the business session, Clyde Hastings was ordained to the office of elder by Elders W. F. Page and H. E. Davenport. —Chattie Everett, reporter.

Berkeley, California

Pastor, Alma Andrews

Dr. Charles Grabske, general church physician, was the speaker on June 30. Other visiting ministers have been High Priest Jerry Runkle of Graceland College, and Apostles John Rushton and D. T. Williams. The Hawaiian delegation, led by Missionary Howard Miller, presented a program on the evening of June 9. The San Francisco Saints joined with the East Bay group in a Fourth of July picnic; approximately two hundred attended. Two new classes have been organized; a men's training and leadership class is held twice each month, and a 6 o'clock discussion is conducted by Jerry Runkle on Sunday evening. Four young children, Thomas Harshman, Lynne Ralston, Virginia Payne, and Susan Cox, were blessed recently. Five new members were baptized on July 28; they are Irene Cox, Sondra Campbell, Thelma Gibson, Dorothy Cole, and Francis Dobson. Sister Dobson is ninety-two years old.

Gulf States Reunion

The annual Gulf States reunion was held at the southern reunion grounds in Brewton, Alabama, July 12-22. Apostle and Mrs. McConley, Seventy M. L. Draper, Elder and Mrs. A. O. Crownover, and Bishop Walter Johnson were in charge of reunion activities. Brother Draper directed the morning prayer services; Bishop Johnson conducted classes on stewardship; Elder Crownover was in charge of the young people's work, and Mrs. Crownover led the evensong. Apostle McConley's sermons and Mrs. McConley's classes for women were inspiring features of the week. Assisting in the junior division were Mrs. Marble Curry, Irma Tillman, Mrs. Marguerite Porter, and Mrs. Addilean Booker. At the business meeting, M. L. Draper was sustained as district president, with A. D. McCall, Franklin Steiner, and A. O. Crownover as counselors. Other officers elected were Lyle Flynn, secretary and publicity agent; Bruce Jones, treasurer; Raymond Booker, church school director; Henry Porter, Zion's League leader; Mrs. Ruth Draper, music director; Mrs. Lula Jernigan, women's leader; and L. G. Tipton, nonresident pastor. Twelve persons were baptized, and several ordinations were approved.

Monetville, Ontario

J. R. Vincent of Windsor held a series of meetings beginning July 10; although this was the peak of the busy season for the farmers, attendance steadily increased throughout the series. Brother Vincent used charts to illustrate his sermons. Five children were baptized on July 20, and confirmed the following day. A special Communion service was held after the confirmation. Kenneth Crabbe of Scotland, Ontario, was the speaker on July 24; District President Percy Farrow and Seventy Harold Velt were present the following week to minister to the Saints.

—Viola Mercer, reporter.

Sperry, Oklahoma

A study class, the Zion Builders' League, has been organized by the older young people. Each week some question pertaining to doctrinal or Biblical subjects is discussed by the group. Worship services are also a part of the weekly routine of activities.

PRE-SCHOOL KINDERGARTEN. — The members of Norwood branch at Adelaide organized a kindergarten for pre-school children on June 22. The mayor and a number of civic authorities were present on the occasion to pronounce the official opening. This project is the result of the vision and enthusiasm of Pat Rixon, Grace Turner, and Rita Hamilton, who have qualified themselves as kindergarten teachers.

PORT KEMBLA BRANCH ORGANIZED.

—On May 19 the Port Kembla group was organized into a branch by District President A. A. Poole, assisted by other New South Wales officers. Those elected to serve in the group are: Elder F. Hellmund, pastor; Elder S. Mansell, church school director; Priest A. Mansell, director of home visiting; Grace Mansell, women's leader and historian; and J. Thompson, Zion's League leader.

High Priest Alan Frater has been appointed a full time minister by action of the General Conference. Brother Frater is the son of a Presbyterian missionary who gave forty years of his life in ministering to the natives of New Hebrides. He was educated in Melbourne, and is a graduate of Melbourne Teachers' College. From 1927 to 1941 he was a teacher in the Victorian Education Department. Following his baptism in 1932, he was ordained a priest in 1933, and an elder in 1936. He has served in Eureka branch as church school director and historian, and in 1940-41 was in charge of the Victoria district. He was then transferred to Sydney, where he became managing editor of the Standard. He was ordained a high priest in 1943. His new appointment will enable him to extend his ministry into the field of religious education.

Seventy Hermann Peisker, in the absence of an apostle, has been placed in charge of the Australian mission. He was born in Victoria, but his parents, who were Salvation Army officers, took him to Brisbane when he was only a few months old. It was here that Mr. and Mrs. Peisker accepted the gospel, and Hermann was baptized at the age of twelve. Two years later he was ordained a deacon, and in July, 1914, he was called to the office of elder. Apostle Gomer Griffiths appointed him a full-time missionary in the same year, and in 1924 he was ordained a Seventy. He has labored in every mainland state in Australia and New Zealand. His wife is the former Florence Loving; they have four children.

District activities in June included a priesthood conference and youth convention; both were held in Melbourne.

Marlin, Texas

Pastor, J. R. Allen

Missionary J. Charles May, assisted by Elder William Haden, held a series of meetings in June; two children, Charlotte Brown and Elaine Sikes, were baptized at the close of the series. Elder J. R. Allen and several members of the congregation attended the conference held in Austin. Mrs. Zella Standifer of Austin conducted a two-weeks' Bible school in July; she was assisted by Mrs. Frank Spicer and Mrs. Raymond Brown. A program and display of handwork was the closing feature of the school. Mrs. Standifer also taught a Book of Mormon class for adults in the evening during the two weeks she was in Marlin. At a business session held August 11, Calvin Swanner and Frank Spicer were appointed to maintain the church building and lawn.

Helen Maxine Reed and Roy Melville Lovell were united in marriage at London, Ontario, on July 20. Pastor A. W. Sheehy performed the ceremony.

Cookson-Garfield

Lorraine Garfield, daughter of Lincoln B. and the late Salome Garfield, and William Edward Cookson, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cookson, both of Brockton, Massachusetts, were united in marriage on July 21 at the Reorganized Church in Brockton. Harold Garfield, brother of the bride, performed the ceremony.

Black-Brabbs

Florence Brabbs of Hamilton, Ontario, and Charles Black of Windsor, Ontario, were married July 29 in Hamilton. Elder E. Kennedy was the officiating minister.

Births

A son, Franklin James, was born to Frank and Florence Cameron of London, Ontario, on June 23.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Preston Willing of Irvington, Virginia, announce the birth of a son, John Michael, born July 18. Mrs. Willing was formerly Joni Laird of Portland, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Lotz of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, David Hobart, born April 3, at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Lotz was formerly Ruth Hobart.

Our Departed Ones

WARD.—Thomas, was born April 9, 1870, at Hebburn, England, and passed away August 1, 1946, in Long Beach, California. He came to America in 1882, receiving his naturalization papers in 1891. On September 25, 1892, he was married to Caroline Cooper; four children were born to this union. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1887, and was ordained a priest in 1919. He was an active worker in the church until illness overtook him.

He is survived by his wife; three sons: Herbert R. Gilbert B., and Ernest L., all of Long Beach; a daughter, Jennie Hurch of Rich Hill, Missouri; a brother, Charles Ward of Bandon, Oregon; eleven grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Apostle John Rushton and Elder William Teagarden were in charge of the funeral. Interment was in the Sunnyside Memorial Park.

McALESTER.—Hallie Lloyd, was born December 2, 1895, at Martin, Texas, and died April 13, 1946, at Dallas, Texas. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when fifteen years old. He is survived by two brothers: Fred and Allen; and three sisters: Mrs. Lillie Ebel, Mrs. Rose Huey, and Mrs. Sallie Dunham. Elders H. E. Davenport and Clyde F. Hastings were in charge of the funeral.

CAMPBELL.—Martha Francis, daughter of William and Louisa Mawhinery, was born December 12, 1874, in Lebanon, Missouri, and died August 5, 1946, at her home in Cross Timbers, Missouri, after a brief illness. On November 21, 1889, she was married to Hugh Campbell. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on March 2, 1913, remaining faithful to its teachings throughout her life; she was active in church work as long as her health permitted. She was a good wife and neighbor; having no children of her own, she served as a mother to others, and will be greatly missed in her home and community.

She is survived by her companion; two sisters: Ora Mawhinery of the home, and Mrs. Mary Hurseman of Sweet Springs, Missouri; and two brothers: Steven Mawhinery of Cross Timbers, and George Mawhinery of Preston, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the Oak Grove Church, Elder Roy L. Tilden officiating, assisted by Rufus Galbraith. Interment was in the Oak Grove cemetery.

RODEFER.—Inez Wallace (Noyes), was born September 17, 1896, at Burns, Wisconsin, and died July 18, 1946, at Tomah, Wisconsin. She was married to Edward Rodefer on November 6, 1919; five children were born to this marriage, two of whom preceded her in death. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 20, 1911.

Left to mourn are her husband; one daughter, Mrs. Florence Forrest; two sons: La Verne and Lyle; two sisters: Mrs. Blanche Bitzer and Mrs. Carrie Fitch; four brothers: Clifford, Lester, Harry, and Samuel Noyes; and one grandchild. Services were held at the White Funeral Home, Seventy E. Y. Hunker officiating. Burial was in Oak Grove Cemetery in Tomah.

SHERMAN.—Leonard O., son of P. A. and Maude Gould Sherman, was born January 1, 1910, in Independence, Missouri, and died in an airplane crash on July 6, 1946, in Kansas City, Missouri. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on July 7, 1918, by his father. On November 24, 1932, he was married to Charlotte Alberti; to this union five children were born: Leonard Dale, Judith Jo, Sharon Lee, Daniel Winfield, and Ruth Marie.

Besides his wife and children, he leaves his parents; a sister, Joy Harris; and five brothers: Ronald, Kenneth, Robert, Willard, and Everett. Funeral services were held in the Stone Church in Independence, Evangelist Ray Whiting officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HULSE.—Mary Dove, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lowe, was born February 17, 1879, in Nebraska. (Date of death not given.) In 1881 she moved to Vernon County, Missouri, spending her entire life in that community. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1892, and was ever faithful to its teachings. In 1907, she was married to Warren J. Hulse; three children were born to this union: a son, Randall, now of Pontiac, Michigan; and two daughters: Mrs. Chella Smith of El Dorado Springs, Missouri, and Mrs. Novella Thompson of Honolulu, T. H. Funeral services were held at the Christian church in El Dorado Springs, Elder John W. Noyes officiating. Interment was in the Mt. Pleasant Cemetery.

MOFFAT.—John W., was born in Kent County, Ontario, in 1880, and died February 2, 1946, in Colchester, Ontario, while visiting a friend. He was a member of the Reorganized Church for many years. During World War I, he served with the Hamilton Tiger Battalion.

He is survived by his wife, Ellen, of Windsor, Ontario; a daughter, Mrs. James Bradley, Port Huron, Ontario; two sisters: Mrs. James Hystop, Windsor, and Mrs. John Grice, Port Huron; and six brothers: William, Des Moines, Iowa; Harry, Washington; Alexander and Archie, Windsor; Roy, New Orleans, Louisiana; and Reginald, Hamilton. Funeral services were held at the James Sutton Funeral Home, Elder James Pycock officiating. Burial was in the Windsor Grove Cemetery.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Announcements

To Canadian Customers

Since the beginning of the period when there was 11 per cent difference in the value of currency between the United States and Canada, the Herald Publishing House has borne the cost of that exchange on all Canadian orders. As our Canadian customers are no doubt aware, the value of currency in our two countries was equalized as of July 6, 1946.

Since this equalization, we wish now to call to your attention that all orders reaching us from Canada post-marked after that date will be treated the same as an order coming to us from the United States. If cash is enclosed, the amount should equal the stated price of the merchandise. If a charge order, we will bill the customer at the American rate.

* THANKS TO EVAN FRY

In this week's "Herald" we present the last of a series of articles written for broadcast by our Radio Director, Evan A. Fry. This series was based on church history, and has attracted considerable interest.

We are sorry to inform our readers that this is the last of the articles on hand by Brother Fry, except a few dealing with special occasions in the Christian calendar, which will appear in future issues. His illness, extending over several months, has halted the intensive career of work and production that he carried on so long. We shall miss these articles, and hope to have his name back in our columns when he is back at work again.

On this occasion, let us thank Brother Fry for all he has done. His articles have reached the hearts of the people, in print, as well as on the air. They can always be understood, and they have something good in them.

Our publication of Brother Fry's sermons began in the issue of July 13, 1940, and continued from that date with but few interruptions, which were due to shortage of space. This is a service of full six years. They furnished the core of our missionary section, "The Evangelist," which began in the July 20 issue that year. They have given us a supply of fine tract material for future use.

Evan is recovering, and we have hope that he will be fully restored to health. We look forward to the day when his rugged strength, his genial smile, his friendly manner to all, and his resourceful contributions will be back in the service of the church.

NEW FEATURE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Beginning with the next issue of the "Saints' Herald," a new feature, devoted strictly to articles of interest to Latter Day Saint youth, will be inaugurated. The writers will, in most cases, be members of the younger generation, and the entire section will be keyed to their interests. Not only will the material used have a different tone, but the "look" (technically, the layout) will be new and youthful, too. We've named it "New Horizons"—a title which, we believe, conveys the idea of progress toward a future goal. Owing to the paper shortage and the necessity of economizing space, the section will be only two pages long for the present. As soon as more paper is available, the space allotment will be increased. We sincerely hope you'll like this addition to the "Herald," and we'll welcome suggestions for its improvement.

EDITORIAL

A Matter of Integrity

THE SPEAKER at a recent Sunday evening Campus service in Independence, is said to have observed that the church in order to achieve its purpose, must chart its course with intelligence, and pursue it in integrity.

This fadges with the observations of another, quoted in the Herald a while back, who insinuated that in some of its reactions the church or certain of its devotees may have been visionary rather than practical in response to the challenge of the Restoration Movement and times in which we live; and not too faithful in implementing the truth with a view to its application in the life of this people.

Competency in the work of the kingdom of God is a matter of understanding, of qualification with which to serve effectually, and of faithfulness, or integrity by which to serve in righteousness. And integrity is at the base of the pyramid.

Integrity, furthermore, involves more than a surface appearance of reliability. It runs to the very depth of life, to the determining of its quality, of its fitness, and of its trustworthiness in performance.

Integrity is a matter of innate decency, of wholeness as well as of wholesomeness of life, of integration of life for its highest attainment and fullest expression.

It is a matter of clear vision, of broad understanding, and of appreciation of the better things of life.

It is a matter of self-discipline, of self-command, of self-development, and of self-devotion, as determined by the code of Christian ethics and the call to serve.

It is a matter of constancy in sustained ministry in carrying on under tasks and assignments in the interests of one and of all.

It is a matter of sacredness of covenant, of contract, of agreement, or of commitment, and of loyalty to one's associates, employer, profession, community, church, family, and to one's own better selfhood.

Integrity carries a sense of obligation to oneself: Whatever life has or has not made available to one, or whatever his church, or state, or fellows have or have not done for him, responsibility for one's own life rests squarely upon his own shoulders, and for its direction, development, and devotion to the common good.

Integrity is a matter of quality of life, of diligence in preparation, and of competency and faithfulness in performance, in response to the call to serve.

Integrity, then, is a must in our work as a people. It is a matter of the heart. And that "The Lord requireth the heart," is a truth basic to kingdom-building.

Now That the Country Churches Are Gone

It is not many years since general periodicals, as well as the religious publications, were noting with alarm the disappearance of the country church. At that time numerous country chapels were empty for lack of pastors and congregations, some falling down to ruin through neglect, some burned down, and some being sold for secular uses. Young folk were moving to the cities for employment, people of all ages were taking less interest in religion, or went to town for it in their new cars.

Occasionally, one still sees the white spire of some rural church on a distant hill, a symbol of the ancient message to humanity, or passes some neat chapel at a crossroads, that will be surrounded on a Sunday morning by the cars of neighbors who have come together for an hour of rest and worship. But such scenes are relatively few, and only serve to make sharper the contrast with those vast areas from which houses of worship, once so common, have unhappily disappeared.

Nor are the little towns along the highway much better, in this respect, than the country. In so many of them, the most prominent structures are the bulbous-topped water tower, like an inverted turnip, and the grain elevator, whose architectural beauty has yet to be verified. A third structure, not so tall, but spread upon a broad foundation, is the school. Too many towns have neither spire nor tower to proclaim the presence of a church.

What is the effect upon the people of America? For a nation whose moral foundations were built upon the Bible by ancestors who took time from clearing homes in the wilderness and defending them against Indians, this is a sad step downward and backward, indicative of a slackness and indifference for which our country is already paying a costly toll in higher divorce rates, increasing numbers of orphans from broken homes, declining moral standards, and consequent suffering.

The traveler passes thousands of rich farms, with good homes, buildings, fences, and fat stock upon them. Where could these people worship, even if they wished to do so? Where could the children go to Sunday school, if they had a chance? It is quite obvious that if so many as one tenth of the American people should decide on any single Sunday to attend church and take their families, millions of them could not reach a church at all; and if they did they would not be able to get in.

Perhaps the churches are partly to blame, but it seems only just to say that a great measure of the responsibility rests upon the people themselves. Their parents and grandparents, moving into these same communities and districts, looked about and said, "We must have a church. Where would be a good place to put it?" And when it was built, they sent for a minister. Now ministers and churches come and go, but their children never know of it.

It is very clear to those who study such matters that, if the United States is to return to ways of life that are better in moral and spiritual respects, there must be an increase in the number of churches, both in the country and in the city, and an increase in the number of people attending them. We must have parents to provide the churches, to take their children there and not simply send them.

Our people are suffering greatly, in ways they do not understand, for the lack of the religious foundations they have allowed to perish. The good times cannot come again until people return to God. The saying of Jesus that "Man shall not live by bread alone" could easily have been translated, "Man cannot live by bread alone." Too many who have tried it have attained only a miserable existence, in which they have found neither faith nor happiness. "For this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true and living God."

George Albert Smith

Is George Albert Smith, president of the Mormon Church at Salt Lake City, a descendant of Joseph Smith the Prophet?

ANSWER: No; he is a grandson of George A. Smith who was a cousin of the Prophet, and who was one of the first pioneer company to reach Salt Lake on July 24, 1847.

Chetek Reunion Canceled

Due to the presence of poliomyelitis in the Wisconsin-Minnesota district, the Chetek reunion, scheduled to begin August 26, is being canceled. All public gatherings in this area are banned by the Board of Health.

Across the Desk

THIS MORNING we received three reports from widely separated parts of the country. The first was from Brother Oakman and stated that Elder James Daugherty had baptized seventeen excellent people at Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin. The next letter was from Elder Herbert Scott, our pastor at Denver, and he said that Brother Whiting had baptized nine people at the close of a recent series of meetings, and that others are now nearly ready. Brother Scott continues, "All of these but one were adults. Several families were united. In one case we baptized a man and his wife. The entire series was a splendid experience for all of us." The third letter came from Elder Alma C. Andrews of Berkeley, California. Brother Andrews reports, "We recently baptized two ladies and a man, and this brings to five the number baptized since Children's Day. A few others are about ready."

There is a distinct upturn in missionary interest throughout the church, and many of the brethren of the local ministry are accepting responsibility for the local branches through local missionary endeavor. This is in line with the missionary policy of the Quorum of Twelve which calls for the strengthening of every branch that lacks the membership necessary for effective community witness and service.

THOSE WHO have been interested in the Sanitarium Nursing Library Book Bank will be pleased to read the following paragraph taken from a recent letter from Miss Nelle Morgan, Director of Nurses:

The Red Cross Gray Ladies Unit has done a very fine thing. At one of their recent meetings they voted to give $5.00 in memory of Mrs. Edith Wetherill, one of the Gray Ladies, who passed away in January, 1946. They also voted that each Gray Lady should become a donor for our book bank, and their deposits are beginning to come in.

Library of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis for Disposal

The library of the late Apostle Clyde F. Ellis is being offered for sale. Sister Ellis finds it necessary, for a number of reasons, to dispose of the books. Even the oldest of the sets are in remarkably fine condition, much better than is usually found. Brother Ellis took fine care of them, as all who knew him would expect. Some of them are so old that they are of antiquarian value. A partial list follows:

Exposition of the Old and New Testaments, with Bible text, by Matthew Henry. This was published in London, no date of printing; the original preface is dated 1706. 9 volumes. Cloth. A famous standard set, valuable in the history of Bible criticism.

Dictionary of the Bible, by Hastings. 5 volumes, cloth. Copyright 1898; printed 1903. Good condition. This work is still one of the most frequently used references in the field. This full text is not to be confused with modern one-volume condensations.

Travels, by Humboldt. No date. Of interest to all students of American antiquity. Paper in good condition, binding slightly loose.

Lectures and Essays, by Robert G. Ingersoll. The famous nineteenth century agnostic who created a great stir with his lectures and attacks on the Bible, published this work. Out of print now, it has been desired by students of religious history.

The Evening and the Morning Star. A bound volume of this early publication of the church. The first few issues are reprints. Of value to students of church history.

The Works of William Paley. Full leather, somewhat worn condition. A famous philosopher's discussions of morals, politics, natural history, and other matters of interest to the student of religion. This work was published in 1823.

Encyclopedia Americana. This set belongs to the 1903-05 period. 16 volumes in half leather. Very good condition.

Comprehensive Commentary, by Henry, Scott, and Doddridge. Edited by Reverend William Jenks. 1870. Most volumes in fair condition, with only one of the bindings broken.

Library of Original Sources. 10 volumes. Half-leather and cloth. 1901. Excellent condition. Contains selections from the eminent literature of all ages, from the ancient and classic to the nineteenth century, with commentary and analysis.

Scott's Bible. Full Bible text, with exegesis. 6 volumes. 1864. Good condition. Full leather binding.

Smith's Bible Dictionary. 4 volumes. Copyright 1868. Printed 1877. Excellent condition, with fairly recent full leather binding. Not to be confused with condensed one-volume editions.

A number of other books are included in the library, but not listed here. Those who are interested should write to Mrs. C. F. Ellis, 726 North River Blvd., Independence, Missouri. Local people may phone Independence 3283.

The Price of Liberty

PART I.

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," etc.—Constitution of the United States.

As Latter Day Saints, we are committed to the theory that America is a choice land¹, and that God raised up wise men to found the United States.² One of the great principles of our government is the separation of church and state; but notwithstanding we are one hundred seventy years old, it seems "eternal vigilance" is still the "price of liberty." Real patriotism consists in resisting encroachments on the rights of the people.

History warrants the belief that bigots are the first to cry "bigotry." Americans are witnessing a controversy, not yet engaging the whole public mind, which presents for our consideration very important principles. The main question presented is, "Shall the United States, or the President personally, maintain a political or otherwise representative at the Vatican?"

Under the very large powers given the President, Mr. Roosevelt in 1939 appointed Mr. Myron C. Taylor a special envoy to the pope. He is still at the Vatican. This, of course, has been opposed by Protestants, ministers and laymen, and since the cessation of hostilities, private and public objections to its continuance are growing in number and temper.

The most vigorous protests have been made since President Truman reappointed Mr. Taylor as personal ambassador. Protestant church leaders recently called on the President and urged him to sever all diplomatic relations with the pope, their resolution terming the assignment of Mr. Taylor as unauthorized and unconstitutional, "without the consent and approval of Congress and in violation of the act of the thirty-ninth Congress, 1867, forbidding any further appropriation of money (hereby or otherwise) for the support of an American legation at Rome."³

Since the question does not involve the religious doctrines of the Catholic Church, we can consider it without fear of being charged with making an attack on that church as a religious body.

This protest, lodged with the President on June 5, brought immediate repercussions from leading Catholics in this country, and on June 12, Francis Spellman, recently made a cardinal, speaking at Fordham University, said the demand of the Protestants might represent "the anti-Catholicism of unhooded klansmen sowing seeds of disunion within our treasured nation."

Leading Protestant ministers at once challenged Cardinal Spellman's statement, and the editor of The Christian Century, issue of June 26, replied to Cardinal Spellman in strong terms:

Cardinal Spellman, speaking at Fordham University commencement . . . said sending an ambassador to the Vatican was just like sending one to the court of St. James, where the King of England is also the head of the church. The eminent prelate falsifies the known facts. The Protestant ministers to whom he refers are not klansmen or the spokesmen for klansmen, hooded or unhooded, and he knows it. His breach of the commandment about bearing false witness against one's neighbor is a private matter between the cardinal and his God. The matter of public interest is that the top Roman Catholic prelate in America here sets a pattern for his ecclesiastical inferiors. It is a declaration of war. In substance he says: Whoever opposes any program or desire of the Roman Catholic Church is a bigot and a klansman. "Bigot" is a boomerang term which only bigots throw. The cardinal makes himself the clan's most effective recruiting sergeant when he leaves no choice between klansmanship and complacency toward whatever special favors the Roman Catholic Church pleases to claim for itself in America. The alternative is as false as the rest of his words. The men whom he stigmatizes abhor both with equal fervor. The cardinal has no reason to apply the opprobrious epithet except his determination to smear whosoever criticizes his pet achievement. His analogy between the Vatican embassy and diplomatic representation at the British court is false in fact. Mr. Taylor's mission, as President Roosevelt said, is "to the pope as head of the Roman Catholic Church." And his toy state which has never received diplomatic recognition is incidental and irrelevant; the ambassador to the British court is sent to the civil head of a powerful empire who happens, by an accident of history, to be technically the head of a church, in which capacity he wields no authority either abroad or at home. The cardinal knows the exact terms of our Vatican embassy. He knows it is not a mission to a civil state but to the pope as pope. The very first published comment on it was a loud paean of joy, telephoned by Archbishop Spellman to his New York chancery from Washington where, by the luckiest coincidence, he just happened to be on the very day when President Roosevelt announced the appointment. The Vatican embassy is the fruit of his labors. No wonder the prospect of frustration by President Truman's promise to the Protestant delegation to discontinue it by the time the peace treaties are signed, if not earlier, arouses the cardinal's anger.

The Scottish Rite News Bulletin of June 5, 1946, also replied to the statement of the cardinal, reflecting the attitude of Masonry on the subject, from which we quote:

REAPPOINTMENT STIRS WRATH

Perhaps one of the most vigorously though quietly opposed policies of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt and of his successor, President Harry S. Truman, has had to do with the appointment of Papal Count Myron Taylor as personal ambassador of the President to the Vatican. . . .

The Roman Catholic hierarchy and the Vatican have become sensitive to the rising tide of opposition in this country against maintaining diplomatic relations with a Church-State, and articles and editorials in defense of such action are frequently slipped into small-town and county rural newspapers, as well as into the press of cities of 100,000 or less population. An example of this kind was the editorial which appeared in the Sunday, May 5, issue of the News-Press of St. Joseph, Mo., a city of about 80,000 people.

The subject of the editorial was "Ambassador to Vatican" and it was pleaded that we all be "realistic," but the writer added the reductio ad absurdum argument, though evidently not meaning to do so, that we send an Ambassador to Great Britain, that the English King is head of the Anglican Church, so why not send an Ambassador to the Vatican? Well, in the first place, the King of England does not exercise political power, and the pope does. In the second place, the King of England is not carrying on a nation-wide campaign to vilify and destroy our free, tax-supported public schools, and the Vatican, through its 103 bishops who constitute the American Roman Catholic hierarchy are leaving no stone unturned to do just that. The King of England is not trying to have the canonical law of the Church of England (Episcopal) written into the federal, state, and municipal law of the United States. . . . The King of England does not tell the American people that the Protestant Episcopal Church is the one and only true religion, that all other religions are false, and, therefore, their members will be denied the right to propagate their faith; but the American Roman Catholic hierarchy does not hesitate to affirm that it has the one and only true religion and that all other religions are false, and that when and if the Vatican ever gets the power to do so, or the American Roman Catholic hierarchy ever gets the power to do so, Protestantism will be crushed. . . .

America has been made great for many reasons, but not the least of them was its insisting on the complete separation of state and church. To have a representative at the Vatican is to give the Roman Catholic Church official recognition in the U. S. A. If each of the 256 Protestant denominations set up puppet states and then sent ambassadors to Washington, confusion would result. . . .

One only has to glance at countries dominated by the Vatican to see what disaster has followed the rule of priestcraft. President Truman is a Baptist, a church committed from the earliest days of America to freedom of thought and worship, and his admirers in the Protestant fold are indeed hard put to it to condone his re-appointment of Papal Count Taylor. . . .

President Truman, a 33rd degree Mason, says that upon conclusion of the peace treaties, which are now under consideration at Paris, Mr. Taylor will be recalled.

Is Christianity a Losing Cause?

By John W. Rushton

Of the Quorum of Twelve

SO OFTEN we are reminded in one way or another of the apparent decline of Christianity as an effective philosophy of life, and of the impotency of the church to cope with the complexity of problems which challenge modern civilization, that we take it for granted this is so. For instance, we have been told recently of the heavy losses in membership sustained by some of the Protestant denominations especially, running in tens of thousands, and have felt the shock. We are familiar, too, with the large gap existing between the registered membership and the actual numbers representing the average attendance at the services and who maintain their loyalty to the cause in practical and financial ways. The statistics pertaining to our own church so far as we have been able to analyze them, seem to support this gloomy conclusion.

There is much to discourage the minister and pastor who sincerely and in consecration devotes himself to the major tasks of evangelization and nurturing the flock. The fruitless effort of Sisyphus seems to be easy in comparison, when viewed in the light of the history of the first half of the present century. One of the cardinal emphases of the latter-day evangel is the promise of the Master found in the Gospel of St. Matthew 24: 14, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world and then shall the end come." The powers of evil, and the organized forces of the human society organized apart from God, were to fail before the proclamation of the good word about God preached by the disciples of Christ. Often it is asked, "Where is the evidence of this promise being fulfilled?"

Consequently, it is with gratitude

we read the review of a work of seven volumes written by Professor K. S. Latourette, by Canon Roger Lloyd appearing in the London Spectator of June 28. The title of this work is The History of the Expansion of Christianity and is published by Eyre and Spottiswood of London.*

Of this work Canon Lloyd writes: "It is possibly the greatest examination of its theme in the history of Christendom." And, "In the last volume covering the years 1914 to 1945 every statement is documented, and can be checked by any reader who thinks he claims too much. The final judgment is that, although in these years the Christian religion has lost some ground in Europe, its gains over the world far outweigh these losses; that in Europe the losses are fewer than is commonly supposed, and, that Christianity far from disappearing, in 1944 was a more potent factor in the total world scene than it had been in 1914."

Canon Lloyd comments:

This statement will surprize some people, among them many Christians, and stagger others; but anyone can go back and look at Latourette's last volume and check the evidence for it. He has made it perfectly easy to do that. It is the sort of statement which is certain to set anyone thinking who reads it, and a preliminary reflection which recalls to memory just a few of the widely known facts of the present and immediate past makes one say that perhaps it is not after all quite so surprizing as it sounds. Everybody knows something of the heroic record of Christian missions in China in the last ten years, and of the surprize of many an Australian soldier fighting in New Guinea and the Melanesian Islands at finding most of the natives were Christians in fact and in deed as well as in name. Everybody knows how the Christian churches in Germany were the only institutions to offer any serious resistance to the Nazis, and most people could quote Einstein's generous testimony to the fact. It is well known too, that the Christians and the Communists were the backbone of every resistance movement; and to-day it is a Catholic M. R. P. party in France, and another in Belgium, which can justly claim to be among the most powerful forces of those lands. . . .

Accepting Latourette's claim for the purposes of argument, one finds it more profitable to ask what are the primary reasons for the great Christian advance in the stormy world of the last thirty years. The present mania for salvation through an increasingly complicated ecclesiastical bureaucracy has had little to do with it. Most of the lands where the advance is most striking have been those in which invasion or famine shattered most of the organization which existed. . . . Latourette's story brings out clearly three seminal reasons for the Christian advance. In the first place it has been during these thirty years of world war that the churches, especially the Anglican and Roman Churches, have begun to reap the fruits of what might be called their new missionary policy which was formulated about 1910. By this policy the native churches founded all over the world by the missionary pioneers of the nineteenth century were as quickly as possible to be trained to become genuinely native or indigenous, with their own forms of government and traditions, and, above all, their own native episcopate and priesthood. They were not to be in any way westernized, but were to become as fully independent of Rome or Canterbury as are, say, the churches in Canada. This policy is not yet completely implemented, but it has gone very far; and its great success is shown by the fact that the most striking Christian advances of all have been in those very lands, India and China, which were, and are, the most determined of all to cut themselves free from every kind of western tutelage. But in neither country has there been the least effort to produce a new and nationalistic church out of communion with the parent churches of the west. This happened in Japan, but not in China or India. The second reason for the Christian advance in our times is clear when we remember that the greatest number of new members of the churches has come from those classes who are most completely disinherited and demented. The growth in numbers of Christians has been most striking of all among the low-caste Hindus, the "Untouchables," among American Negroes, and among all sorts and conditions of Chinese, all of whom have been reduced by long years of war almost to a common level of social disinheritance and strain. The fact is that the record of the worldwide church during the last thirty years in the matter of really meaning business by the great Christian proclamation of the equal value of every human soul and the absolute sacredness of every personality has, on the whole, been very good. The churches may fail, and no doubt have failed, their Master in many ways, but not on the whole, in that way: and a church which really struggles to implement the great principle of the sacredness of personality will always make ground rather than lose it. But over and over again in such times as we have lived through the only way of implementing it has been simply to suffer with and for the people whose sacred personalities were being blasphemed against, and usually without any clear idea of how the sharing in the suffering was going to counteract the blasphemy. The church's record of creative suffering in the last thirty years has been very nearly unblemished. Wherever we look—in China with the Japanese swarming all over it, in London during the blitzes, in Norway and Holland, in Melanesia, in Germany itself—when the test came, and when the choice was clearly seen to be "Suffer or forsake your charge and deny your faith," the choice was for suffering. This was the third fundamental reason for the great Christian advance in our own time. It is just what we should expect, for it is a matter of demonstrable historic fact that the early church conquered the Roman Empire very largely by what it had to say about suffering, and by the quality of its own suffering. Very few people really want Christianity to decline and perish, but very many think that this is happening. All the evidence points the other way. It is one piece of generally unperceived good news; and when properly valued, without complacency or boasting and with the admission "We are unprofitable servants," it is of sufficient moment to do more than counterbalance the world's present weight of gloom.

IT IS VERY significant that among the three factors herein catalogued, emphasis is put so heavily upon suffering and sacrifice which have contributed to the victory of the Christian cause. This harmonizes with the experiences of our own

The Sunset

The sunset is an Indian tonight.
 He spreads his gaudy colored blanket wide,
 With tawny orange shades and streaked red
 And melted golden yellows boldly dyed.
 His twinkling sunlit arrows sharply pierce
 A cloud, and look to be a stitch of gold.
 His face, a brave young warrior's, full of life,
 And strength and glorious youth—yet strangely old.
 For his firm, moccasined, soft tread
 Has worn an ancient path from day to day.
 Into the horizon of time unknown
 He walks each eve, alone, and fades away.

church during the very brief span which makes our history. Generally speaking, it has become axiomatic: "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Jesus insisted repeatedly that "unless we would take up our cross and follow him, we could not be with him." "There can be no crown without the cross." Instead of resenting pain and suffering as cancellations of God's implied pledge to secure us against such experiences, we have learned that through such experiences sublimation and refinement of character result. Mr. Churchill said during the dark days of Britain's agony that the future would say of those people "This was their shining hour." It is the faith to endure when everything seems lost, that brings us the victory. In the absence of strain we become flaccid and weary. The finest testimonies we have of the reality of God's presence were developed during the days when we suffered for "His Name's sake." And today, when the shadows lengthen and we revive our courage in reminiscence, our testimony of God's never-failing goodness renews our youth and our imagination soars with the wings of eagles.

Too many of us are seeking easy ways of service and trying to secure big returns on small investments. Sins are not remitted without the "shedding of blood."

We are grateful not only for the witness of Latourette's history, but for the analysis which gives to us a concrete prescription in the simple terms of experience which the ages have confirmed:

1. The pedagogical principle, that those who would teach effectively must indentify themselves with the life of the ones whom they teach and interpret the unknown in the terms what is known.

2. Willingness to leave the Mount of Transfiguration and go down to the level of the sweating, toiling masses who are struggling to lift themselves up to a higher and nobler way of living. The application of the principle of the atonement which as interpreted by St. Paul was the abandonment of His divine estate and identifying himself with the sinner in order that the sinner could be indentified with Him in God.

3. Then what the apostle speaks of as the "mystery of suffering in which we must share." This is sacramental suffering in which we become the "burden-bearers" for God's sake to humanity. Something like what Dr. George Matheson visioned when he wrote after being stricken with blindness and losing the one upon whom his love was set:

My God, I have thanked thee many times for my roses;
 Teach me the value of my thorn,
 Shew me that I have climbed to thee by the path of pain.
 Shew me that my tears have made my rainbow.
 In Christ's name.

The Restoration

By Evan A. Fry

19. Gathering, Growth, and Progress

AFTER the coming of "Young Joseph" to the church in 1860, the growth of the church was slow but steady. With a nucleus of only about 150, and a total membership of not more than five hundred, and with the added handicap of the polygamous church in the West bearing a similar name, the church under young Joseph Smith found that every inch of progress had to be fought for; every convert had to be won by patient toil and effort; every member of the old church was wary and uncertain, and had to be assured that he would not again be deceived by a false or ambitious leader. Under the new and eminently sane, moderate, and able leadership of "Young Joseph," the church forged ahead, establishing missions in Utah and California to the west, in Canada to the north, in Texas and southeastern States, and in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and the New England States. Foreign missionaries were sent to England, Wales, and Scotland; to Switzerland, Scandinavia, Australia, and the Society Islands, and within approximately ten years the little group which at its beginning had been so handicapped numerically and financially had grown to over ten thousand membership.

Among their first projects were the establishing of the official church organ, The True Latter Day Saints' Herald, which at first was a monthly, and later became bi-monthly, and then a weekly; the purchase of a steam printing press; the establishing of a children's paper called Zion's Hope; the filling and organizing of the important quorums of priesthood in the church; and the clarification and teaching of the law of tithing, so that the finances of the church might be upon a more stable basis.

Almost from the very day of organization, it was the ideal and the practice of the members of this church to gather in communities, and to look forward to the time when they could so perfect their own lives and their social and economic relationships with each other and the surrounding world, that they might have an ideal community—a Utopia, which they called Zion. The settlement at Kirtland was designed not as the center place, but as a "stake" or an ancillary community which was to contribute to the community that was yet to be. The state of Missouri, and specifically Independence, were designated through divine revelation to Joseph Smith as the site for the principal gathering of the Saints. The troubles in Missouri in 1833 and the expulsion of the Saints from Jackson County, ended that dream. They tried again at Far West in the northern part of the state; but their efforts were again brought to nought through Governor Boggs' "extermination order." They tried again, with greater success, in the founding of Nauvoo, from which they again had to flee in 1846 after the death of their leader in 1844.

Circumstances in the intervening years had altered cases. Under changed conditions, the Saints felt that they were under no direct command to gather together in a body again, but the old longing, the old ideal, the old hope were there. The Saints of 1860 and following had learned a lot by experience. They had the mistakes of others to guide them in charting their own course. Their new leader cautioned them to move slowly, carefully, cautiously, with all things prepared before them as their church law directed. Brigham Young and his followers had established a new center in Utah, but those who refused that leadership still clung to a promise given by the Lord the month following their expulsion from Jackson County in November of 1833. The promise was as follows: "Let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion . . .; be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain [i. e. that remain faithful] and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy, to build up the waste places of Zion. . . . And behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed."

So the church people were still seeking for a place where they could gather quietly and establish a small community, which some day they hoped to use as a center for the settlement of the land of their hope—Jackson County. The members of the church were predominantly agricultural; therefore they wanted farm lands. They were mostly in moderate circumstance, and hence were interested not so much in buying high priced, well improved lands, as in buying relatively new and unimproved land, and making their own improvements. To facilitate this project of colonization, a committee on location was appointed, and instructed to inspect a number of possible sites, and decide upon the one best suited. The United Order of Enoch was also organized to give financial assistance to those who were desirous of joining this project.

There was not sufficient room at Plano, Illinois, where the church publishing house was maintained, and where Joseph Smith maintained his home and his official headquarters. As soon as word got around that the church was looking for a new and more commodious community in which to settle, the Plano Mirror deplored the imminent loss of so many good citizens in its editorial columns. The residents of Nauvoo sent Joseph Smith a petition to which was appended a double column of signatures three and a half yards long, cordially inviting the church to return to Nauvoo, the city from which it had been driven in 1846. Even Col. Thomas C. Sharpe, Carthage editor and fiery anti-Mormon in the early days, and once accused and tried for complicity in the death of the elder Joseph Smith, declared that he was no longer nervous about the possibility of having the Saints in the neighboring town of Nauvoo. Other invitations came from Chicago, Stewartsville, Saint Joseph, Council Bluffs, and several other places which were not even considered.

THE REMOVAL committee finally settled upon a parcel of land in Decatur County, in southwestern Iowa, where there was plenty of open country of excellent quality for farming. The first land was bought in 1870 or '71, and even before the townsite had been laid out, Joseph Smith and other church officials had visited the purchase in 1875, and reported that there were 150 church members in the vicinity, and a committee appointed to build a chapel for worship. He remarked on the fact that the community had neither justice of the peace nor constable, and that there had not been a single arrest or lawsuit during the five years since the original purchase of the land. With the coming of the railroad in 1879, a townsite was laid out, and named Lamoni.

Again in 1877, Joseph Smith made an extended tour by horse and buggy of the territory lying between Decatur County and Independence, and wrote enthusiastically and appreciatively of what he saw, detailing the farming conditions, the best crops, the price of land, etc., in the Saints' Herald of which he was editor.

Joseph Smith and his family left Plano, Illinois, for the new town of Lamoni on October 7, 1881, and the last number of the Herald to be printed there was dated one week later. A large building, better and more extensive equipment, and new fixtures awaited the publishing house in the new location.

Prejudice against the Latter Day Saints was rapidly disappearing, though there was still a tendency to confuse the Reorganized Church with polygamy and the doctrines of Utah. Alexander H. Smith, brother of Young Joseph and also a son of the Martyr, preached at a district conference held at Far West—the town from which he and his mother had been driven in the winter of 1838-9. In 1881 Joseph Smith preached in the Carthage Courthouse, in the very room where his father had been arraigned before being taken to the jail where he met his death. Even the old enemy of the church, Colonel Sharpe, though he would not attend, commented favorably on this effort.

In 1884, the Brick Church was built in Lamoni—the largest chapel yet to be built by the Reorganization, and by the year 1887, Lamoni reported a population of 400. Several smaller settlements of church people were begun in the territory between Lamoni and Independence, looking towards the day when Independence should again be the center place. Lamoni later became the home of Graceland College, (the cornerstone for which was laid in 1895) and of a home for aged Saints, and a home for orphans. Graceland College celebrated its 50th anniversary this year.

HERE IN Independence, the Saints were also returning, a family at a time, to find that much of the old animosity had died down. The people of Jackson County had recently been through a Civil War, in which they suffered under "Order Number Eleven" the same sort of eviction, injustice, and hardship which they had inflicted on the Saints in the fall of 1833. Slavery was no longer an issue. There were some threats against these early families, but they did not represent the feelings of majority of the community. Joseph Smith visited Independence in 1877, and found a few families of Saints gathered here, among whom was the family of John W. Brackenbury, who as a boy had camped under the willows of the river bank on that cold November night of 1833, as his parents were driven from the county. The first meetings of this little group were held in the courthouse. In 1873 a branch was organized, which later met in a hall in the Chrisman-Sawyer bank building. By 1878, there were 35 members, and it was resolved to build a chapel of their own. Such a building was begun on East Lexington, at the intersection of Pearl. The building was dedicated July 1, 1884, when the branch rolls showed a membership of 350. By 1887 the branch numbered 480, and the building had long since proved inadequate. Another building committee was accordingly appointed, and on April 6, 1888, the cornerstone of the Stone Church was laid. Today there are more than seven thousand Latter Day Saints in Independence, and nearly three thousand more in the two Kansas Cities, divided into twenty-odd congregations, most of them with their own church buildings. The Stone Church today confronts the same old problem of lack of space—with a seating capacity of less than 1,200, and a membership of 2,700.

Other accomplishments of these years of growth and progress, were the establishment of the Independence Sanitarium, which was open in December of 1909 free from debt, and which only recently has moved into a new building. The Sunday school movement was started in the church, and steps taken to provide lesson material in the form of quarterlies and textbooks. A new monthly magazine for young people, called Autumn Leaves, was begun. The women of the church organized for special activities. More and more of the activities of the church began to center in Independence. The leader of the church moved here in his declining years, and the publishing house followed not many years after. The prophecy was fulfilled; those that remained faithful had returned, they and their children, to build up the waste places of Zion.

YOUNG JOSEPH gradually surrendered the burden of presiding over the church to his son, Frederick Madison Smith, and on December 10, 1914, passed to his reward at the age of eighty-two years. He left written instructions for his funeral, which in themselves are not important, save as they indicate the manner of man he was. He dictated that he should have the same kind of casket as was used for those who died in the church's home for aged; that there should be no new clothes bought; and that instead of buying flowers, his friends should place what they would have spent on flowers in an urn at his feet, from whence it was distributed to the poor.

An oft-repeated but highly significant and beautiful tribute was paid him in the editorial columns of the Kansas City Journal, which we quote: "He was the Prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived; as such he died; and as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith. His followers themselves can have no legacy of remembrance more honorable than this appraisal of the people among whom he lived and labored so many years. Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his own creed, tolerant of those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character."

CHALLENGES

RECENTLY I spent some time wandering through the museum which houses the laboratory of the late Doctor George Washington Carver. The institute and town of Tuskegee may be justly proud of this famous man. One of the things which impressed me most was that Dr. Carver was a man of many interests, a person of most versatile accomplishments. Not only did he raise the lowly peanut to new and deserved importance; but he also evidenced deep interest in the properties of soil and clay, paint pigments, effective treatment of infantile paralysis victims, use of fibers, preservation and canning of foods, crop rotation, mineral collections, and all types of chemical analysis. He also was quite proficient in oil painting, hand-coloring of china, and needlework.

This was a man who spent his life proving that the things which most people thought absolutely useless could be employed in some productive manner. This was a man who loved humanity and disdained personal riches. Dr. Carver was a Negro, but beloved by every race. His is a life full worthy of emulation.

Last week I found it necessary to look up a phone number of a church and hunted for it in the Classified Section of the phone directory. Imagine my surprise to notice that "cigarettes" followed "churches" in the listing. That evening the fact was brought to my attention more forcibly that many churches condone smoking and allow it within their buildings. I gave a talk at a "family-night" gathering at a local Protestant church and had a coughing seizure during my lecture due to the blue air and smoke fumes. The young minister was quite attentive to my needs during the dinner, including offering me a cigarette.

It is tragic that churches seemingly must stoop to include the worldly things in order to attract the world to its doors. Somehow I cannot feel that any church should countenance in any degree any activities which are harmful to its members' physical (or mental, or spiritual) bodies. Medical science has proved the harm of nicotine and the allied dangers, yet men and women continue to indulge in the practice. No person would purposely throw a lighted match into a can of gasoline, yet they do not hesitate to continue a universal dirty and wasteful habit, which is dangerous as well.

A recent best seller describes the reactions of a community which mistook a display of aurora borealis for the evidence of the end of the world. Each character behaved in a different way, for each had a different past upon his mind. And I read on, and thought, "Just what would I do if I knew tonight was my last night on earth?" First, I'd go to my telephone, I believe, and call several people since it would be impossible to visit them. My first call would be to one I had wounded in spirit and had never admitted my fault. Next a call to one I really loved but had never expressed that feeling. Possibly my next call would be to a debtor to cancel a debt, or to a benefactor to repeat my thanks.

It certainly would be a wonderful thing if there could be such a day of reckoning before the final day, in order that human beings might come to a realization that those things which they had considered important were really very minor when viewed in the light of a coming new world.

Difficulties Encountered in Our Teaching Work: How to Overcome Them

By Ellsworth G. Gilbert

Notes in my diary (on a trip to Mexico):

May 11—Cleanliness is a matter of conditioning. In these Tennessee shacks there is no standard against which to judge themselves. Even in this nation of plenty there is isolation, purposeful. We drive through and say, "Thank goodness, we don't live there," and then go blissfully on our way, smug and self-satisfied, if not egotistical.

May 12—Sharecropper Arkansas, every field subdivided and a shack at the hub of each plot. One can judge the pride and affluence of each plantation owner by the looks of the workers' huts. But I seriously question whether these people would live better, or whether if they lived anywhere else they would degenerate to standards as low as these.

May 13—The farther I travel, the more I realize the untruth of the statement "all men are created equal," in wealth, opportunity, physical prowess, nationality, or ambition. Environment is such a large factor. If I had been born in a hut of Mexican parents—where would I be today? And am I any happier in my present condition than I would have been in that?

May 14—Today has been hot, although the sun has made only spasmodic appearances. The glimpses of mountains came this afternoon, and I heard Mother humming, "My God, how wonderful thou art," and I echoed her sentiment.

May 26—A dinner at the Lido, $1.20 American money, but . . . it is a swanky place. The appetizer for each person was a plate with a slice of baked ham, slice of cheese, slice of sausage, slice of bologna, radishes, and a serving of potato salad. Next, a large bowl of turkey consommé. Then a large plate of ravioli in a good sauce with a mild cheese. Then the main course—huge slices of roast turkey, white and dark meat, dressing, and a baked potato. Add the usual rolls and butter, this time in a rosebud mold. Then a large dish of vanilla ice

(This article was written as a theme for the leadership training course New Trails for the Christian Teacher. We feel it worthy of space in the Saints' Herald, and hope that it may stimulate many to consider the problems cited.—Thelona D. Stevens, Director of Leadership Training.)

I AM NOT A TEACHER in the church school. My work consists of trying to fill the office of church school director. Hence, I am going to approach this topic from the standpoint of the superintendent or director, and raise some of the problems that might not come within the scope of the teacher of a class.

1. Absenteeism. There is nothing that is more disconcerting to a class than to have a teacher that is not regular in attendance. Even though the class might be a good one, it is bound to suffer under the guidance of a person that is absent too many times during the school year. I realize that there are times when one cannot help being absent—and those are to be expected—but those instances will be rare in the life of a dependable teacher.

The director should try to show the teachers in their workers' conferences early in the year that every teacher is expected to be in his place if it is at all possible. Instill in them a loyalty to the church school, by action and deed on the part of the director. You can't expect teachers to be loyal if the head of the school doesn't exemplify that quality. The subject can be brought before the school in the way of reporting to the school on the attendance of its teachers and words of commendation for the good attendance of its corps of teachers.

2. The Teacher Without Training: Usually in every school there is at least one teacher who has had no previous training as to teaching in the church school. This is stating the case mildly, I am sure. Experience has shown that cream and a glass of milk. Quite a meal . . . Tragedy, for a very few feet away on the street stood beggars who supposedly beg for their bread, and here I was discarding nourishment far beyond their dreams. My conscience really pricked, and once more I meditated upon the inequality of man.

very few of our teachers have had previous experience, or training for the work at hand.

It ought to be apparent that this is an unfortunate circumstance without any words upon the subject to tell why. As to the cure, I should think that there is a responsibility upon the part of the superintendent in pointing the way to the teacher. It might be that the teacher could be helped by being guided into the use of the correct books, magazines, periodicals, etc. In addition to this, the possibilities of enrolling in some work in the religious education department of the church should be pointed out to the teacher. If no classes are held in the local school, there is always extension work available. I think that it is the superintendent's job to sell that extension work opportunity to the teacher. One shouldn't expect the teacher to find out about it and go ahead without some assistance from the local person in charge of the church school.

3. The Teacher Who Doesn't Want to Train for the Work. As far as I am concerned, here is a problem that doesn't have very many angles. First the director should try to help the teacher change his ideals in respect to the job of teaching. If this cannot be done by education and prayer, then there is only one cure for this problem—get rid of the teacher. Certainly one who is so lazy that he cannot put forth any effort in behalf of the "other fellow" is not one fit for the business of teaching, and certainly is not a fit candidate for Zion.

4. The Late Teacher. Since the teacher is trying to help scholars establish ideals and modify their behavior so that they come in closer contact with God, then anything that does not contribute to those factors is detracting from the aims and objectives of the church school. The younger children will be quick to note every little thing in connection with a teacher—dress, manner of speaking, kindness, loyalty, and devotion to the cause of which he or she is working. Being late is certainly against the things that have been taught to them in their life at the public school and at home. A late teacher is sure to have a devastating effect upon the members of the class.

You could well expect to see the class come in late after a teacher had set the example a few times.

Here again is work for the church school director. If the teacher has a telephone, it might be used in an effort to interest the teacher in the importance of being on time. Of course, the teacher has not yet caught the correct perspective, and it will be necessary to bring this before him before there is much change. Be explicit in explaining the seriousness of the work of the church school and of the opportunities that the teacher has in guiding the lives of the students by proper example. Being late is usually a habit. A bad habit can be broken more easily by substituting a good habit in place of the bad one.

5. The Lack of Parental Interest: This is a very serious difficulty. In the earlier home, one that was considered a religious home, religion was part of the duties taken on and administered. The family worship, Sunday readings of the Bible, saying grace at the table, memorizing Bible verses—these were a part of the work of the home. Times have changed and so has the church family. Many parents have handed over to the public school the task of educating the child, and have given the church the task of training the child spiritually—not just partially, but entirely. This will not work. No program of a religious nature will work which does not have the cooperation of the home. There is no possibility of giving all the responsibility for religious instruction and impression over to the church.

It will not work because the religious impressions of the child should begin before the church can take him. Prayer at bedtime must, of necessity, be instituted in the home. The talk, the story hour, and grace at meals are all things that must be taught in the home. Some of them may be taught in the church school, but the actual learning must be action on the part of the scholar, and this would have to be in the home.

The home is the laboratory for the working out, making real, and putting into practice the teaching of the church school. Here the lessons can be exemplified in the love and care and kindness of the members of the family. Here the instruction in obedience, in helpfulness, truthfulness, and honor can find application—providing the home is in sympathetic contact with the church school and is doing its share in carrying out the joint program of the child's religious training.

I think the best cure for this is for a regular course to be given in the church school dealing with the subject, "How the Home May Co-operate With the Church School." It is as important for the parents to receive this training as it is for the teachers to receive training.

Some of the things taught in such a course should be: something of the religion of childhood; the way to begin religious impressions on the child; how to teach the child to pray; the first ideas to be given about God; how to lead to right observance of the Sabbath, etc.

Now the church must assume some obligation here. It must supply for the home consumption, an abundance of concrete materials in the way of Bible and other religious stories, songs, prayers, pictures, and whatever else can be used to help in the training of the child.

6. Lack of a Program for Training Teachers. No system of church schools is complete that does not definitely provide for the teachers of religion. Some writers suggest that church school teachers should be paid salaries. They state that because of their volunteer system there can be no rigid requirements set up to insure the receiving of teachers who have met a certain standard. That is true, but I would not suggest that teachers be paid. We ought to have instilled within us, long before we are of the age to teach, that there is a certain obligation we have of exemplifying Christ to the world—not for dollars and cents—but for the sake of the world. The sense of duty, devotion, and opportunity must be appealed to in each teacher to insure as full a preparation and growth as may be possible.

Every church school, where it is at all possible, should have provision for the above in a regular class in Leadership Training as sponsored by the Religious Department of the church. These classes may be organized to be held during the regular church school hour in a large school; and in the smaller school it would probably work out better to use some evening, or other time than the church school hour.

These classes, by all means, should find every teacher of the church school enrolled. How can others be expected to be interested in a cause if the present faculty ignore instruction? Their presence will inspire courage in others to begin, and will give the membership of the school the idea that their teachers are striving to become equipped in service for their sake.

Last. The help the church schools receive from the Religious Education Department of the church has been hampered due to the lack of funds and backing by the church itself.

This is treading on dangerous ground, for me, but I think the church school as an evangelical agency has been overlooked, or should I say underestimated, by those who could help it to become one of the very best supplemental helps in reaching the objectives of the church.

As an example: What struggle has our Department of Religious Education had to exist and to try to function in the lives of "church schools"?

If we were more proficient in the training of our church school members, we would have a corps of workers that could be on the job to help in a missionary effort. Instead, the visiting missionary has to spend most of his time in contacting the "lagging members."

Betts, in the New Program of Religious Education, says, "Religious education will create an intelligent and loyal congregation for the preacher; even where reclamatory evangelism proves necessary it will in some degree have prepared the soil for the reception of the message of the evangelist and for the action of divine grace in the heart; it will broaden the sympathies and increase the intelligence of our people with reference to missionary needs; it will supply the motives which will insure the proper use of the powers developed through general education; it will train and educate a reading public for religious material published by the church. The purpose of religious education is, therefore, not to supplant or overtop other activities of the church, but to lay firm and strong foundations on which they all may build. This it can do and will do if given a chance."

Blessed Through Administration

I am thankful for the blessings bestowed by our Heavenly Father. In October, 1945, I suffered a stroke and was unable to do my housework or attend church. After receiving administration, however, I was greatly relieved. This spring, I had a second stroke and was confined to my bed; the doctor said that I would probably never be able to walk again, but I called for the elders and received another blessing through administration. God has been kind to me, and I want to devote the remainder of my life to his service. I am grateful, also, to the Saints who remembered me in their prayers during my illness. May God bless each of you.

Request for Prayers

I am writing to request the prayers of my brothers and sisters in the church. Eight years ago my mother passed away, and just last week we laid my father to rest beside her. During that time I have undergone three operations, and still suffer intensely. Please pray that God will strengthen me so that I may be able to bear such trials as come my way.

Introduction by Nellie Blackmore

Brother W. I. Meador, manager of a company that services ships, meets a great many of the officers of the ships from foreign lands. One officer whom he became acquainted with was W. Zeeman, Chief Engineer of the "M. S. Klipfontein," a Dutch ship.

In conversation he was told of the awful conditions that exist in Holland.

Brother Meador asked Mr. Zeeman if clothing could be obtained, could he, Mr. Zeeman, take it back to his people. He assured Brother Meador that he could.

Immediately Brother Meador contacted Brother Blackmore, his pastor. A call was made for help for devastated Holland. This was done on Sunday, January 13, 1946.

The congregation at Lennox was asked to help by their pastor, Herbert Blakeman. The following Sunday the Saints from Central and Lennox brought used clothing and shoes to their churches.

The following week, Sisters Mary Miller, Kate Clark, and Martha Jennings worked four days sorting and packing the things that were brought. In all there were 39 large cartons taken by Brother Meador to the ship to be taken direct to Holland.

Mr. Zeeman and the whole crew were so pleased to take this love offering back to their stricken people. Before sailing he wrote a letter of thanks for the great help that had been given the widows of men lost during the war.

Many letters of thanks have been written by receivers of the clothing and shoes. In these letters we get little glimpses of the terrible conditions through which they have passed. One widow, and the letters have all been from widows, tells of how they had no food at one time, and the English planes passed overhead and dropped food to them. They climbed on their roofs to get the parcels.

These letters are being answered by various Saints, individually or in groups, who have adopted these families and who plan to keep contact with them.

The evening group of the Department of Women, and other individuals, have sent packages of staple foods to them.

We hope to continue the friendships made, that both the giver and the receiver may be benefited.

[NOTE: We believe it best and most effective to preserve the spelling and literary style of the letters as written by their authors. —EDITORS.]

Dear Pastor.

Before we leave Your country, I wish to thank you and the members of Your Church, for all You and they have done, by sending such a big amount of clothing, shoes and all the other very, very useful things for my country folks.

As it very luckily happened, I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Meador, one of the members of your church and we came to speaking on the subject, of the circumstances of how the Netherlands people is living at the present time. From my side not with the least intention of asking for compassion with the bereaved Dutch population, However Mr. Meador felt, that our people was in need and this was sufficient for him to tell you all about it. The result was really overwhelming! I know, the American people is always ready to gif theyr help where it is needed, but this was realy more than one could dream of. I am sorry, I can't express all I feel, and so tell you and your community my gratefulness for all you have done for my people. I wish you could see the faces of those children, women and men, when they receive the nice usefull thins you have given them. You think perhaps of the clothes, blankets and shoes etc who have been used before, once or twice. "I wonder iff they will enjoy it." But let me tell you, everything is new as it has never been new before! I speak of experience. I have seen the distribution of used shoes from American citizen, amongst a group of our railway men. They have never been more proud in all theyr lives of a brand new pair of shoes wich they ever have buyed before. That is what I did read on theyr faces. You can not imagine how gratefull they were.

As far as I come in contact with the receivers of your gifts, I will tell them how everything happened. And be ascertained that

I translate theyr feelings by now, to say "Tank your all, thanks a lott, and may God bless you!"

Yours very truly

Dear Sir:

This week we got an announcement to try on cloths for me and also for my son. My son got a raincoat, some undercloths and shoes. I myself received a dress and shoes. I am a seaman's widow, my husband dies in the war, and it all came so very handy in our need. My son was 14 years old when my husband dies in the war. Now he is 18 and it takes a lot of clothing which is very scarce here for the time.

But thru your kind gifts we are lucky to get somethings. I send you our most hearty thanks. We will have a long pleasure from them and can and will still think of your kindness that you gave us.

With lots of gratitude of myself and my sone george.

Dear Pastor!

Thanks a lot for the cloths you send to holland. You don't know, how glad we are to get them.

We lost our Daddy in the war. So he couldn't bring us, so as a lot of other sailors did for their families.

But we know, the people in the States are so good for us and sent us what we can't buy. Dear Pastor, I don't know how I must tell you, how glad and happy you've made a little dutch family. God bless you and your dear folks who was so kind and good to us. My Mom works hard and let us learn what we want. She has five daughters, and it's very hard to get something for us.

Dear Pastor, I'll close my letter and if we go Sunday to the Church, we'll pray for you and your folks and thanks our dear Lord who helps us in those hard time to live without my daddy. Dear Pastor, we thank you still a 1000 times,

Yours sincerely

Dear Sir:

Through the kind intermediary of Mr. Zeemna, Officer of the "Bloemfontein," reached us the clothes, shoes, etc. that you have gathered for the widows of the sailors, who died during the war.

We were astonished, when we saw them. And thankfull, that people, who live such a long distance have had the friendliness to think and to act for them.

During nearly a year we were trying hard to do something for them, but it was impossible to get any further. Textile is and was not available in our robbed nation. And the first who have to suffer through that, are the widows and orphans.

So you can understand, how great our gladness was, when we received the news, that the "Bloemfontein" brought 39 sacs of clothing. And directly we set ourselves to the task of distributing them.

How cheerfull a sight it was to see all the happy faces of those who did not receive any-thing of this kind for years.

Again, we want to thank you very, very much, on their behalf too, for these gifts. And I pray you, to thank also those, who gave these clothes. Their benevolence we will not forget. Respectfully

Yours sincerely — J. Wristers

Pastor John Blackmore.

Today I received a packet of clothes for myself and for my son a pair of shoes in which I found your name ticket.

So I hast myself to write you a little letter for to give you thanks for your gift, it fits him very good.

Also the other people of your town I give thanks for their gift and all the woman in Holland say so, who received something.

I am very glad with these things—for myself I received a cloak—a cloak costume for in Holland is nothing to buy in the shops which empty through the Gestphalian.

But we shall hope that everything will be as formerly to buy, as soon as possible.

I am a war-widow, for my husband dies for his country on the see in 1944. I heard this when the war was over in May 1946. It was a very great disappointment for me, for I was waiting for him during 6 years.

My son is a boy of 21 years old. During the war he was send to Germany through the Gestphalian, but last year he came back happy.

Mr. Pastor Blackmore I hope you can read my letter, and forgive the mistakes for I don't write these language for a long time.

At the end of this letter I can't forbear to thank you again for the gift and I remain

Yours truly,
A. de Wit de Gajt.

Amsterdam2, Juni 1946

Dear Congregation:

In name of all the seamen's widows I give you my heartfelt thanks for the cloths given to the seamen on board of M. S. Klipperfontein. I have given them to the women and were they happy, because the need of textiles is still so great and the men not coming back, it was like a plaster on a great wound, that these women (or wives) were not able to forget.

I myself am a widow of the merchant's ship and knows what that means. If it is not too bold and if there are more clothes etc for the widows of the merchant marines and if you would send them then we will distribute them with great care and gratitude.

Will you be so kind and give our thanks to all who were so kind.

The work cloths I have kept and will send these to Walcheren (Leeland) that suffered so much and where these cloths will be mech appreciated. These men work on the dykes (the germans wrecked these in their retreat). They are hard workers and use the cloths up very quick. I will probably receive a letter from the burgomaster, a personal letter of thanks.

We all send our hearfelt greetings and once more our hearfelt thanks. Greetings from Holland to America.

Dear Mr. Blackmore,

We thank you and the people of your church very very much for the clothes, which we received. We are very glad with it.

I hope that you can read this letter Mr. Blackmore, for it is 8 years ago, that I learned English in school.

We are with 3 persons My mother, my sister Ada Leonora (she is 16 years old) and me. I am 22 years old and I'm working on a office. We have lost our Daddy in the war. He was at the Netherlands Merchant Navy and dies two months before our liberation. He went away 26 July 1939 and has never come back to us. That's very dificult, but we believe it the will of our Lord. Mr. Blackmore I end with many thanks and heartiest greetings.

At the Edge of the Garden

By Mabel A. Hill

How many times when we are called to wait at the edge of the Garden of Gethsemane are we found asleep? This was brought to me very forcibly a few days ago when a junior church school supervisor was waiting at the bedside of her companion to see which way the wheel of fate was going to turn. Those who should have filled her place (the church school director and the junior pastor), were asleep at the edge of the garden. The hour of service was drawing near. No preparation had been made. The pastor was forced to take up the reins and place them in the hands of a junior teacher at the last minute.

Can we not wait one hour, or two hours, or even three hours if necessary, with a brother or sister who is in the Garden of Gethsemane? Can we not arise, take up their cross and carry it forward until they are again able to bear it? How long are we going to stay asleep? And if by some chance someone awakens us, will our reply be, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Some may say why make such a fuss over such little things, those children are still alive. Yes, physically they perhaps are, but when such incidents happen time and again, what becomes of their spiritual life? Why are our leaders losing rest because our young people are being lost to the church? Is it any wonder?

When will we as adults learn to accept our responsibility and carry it as well as we like to carry the name of the job we hold? How long will we as adults continue to hide our light of example under the bushel of indifference and then wonder why the membership doesn't beat a path to our church doors.

Awake, ye Saints of God, awake! And gird your armor on, lest ye be found asleep when the Bridegroom cometh.

The Autobiography of

ELBERT A. SMITH

On Memory's Beam

THE WRITINGS of Elbert A. Smith
I have always found a ready welcome among the thousands of people who know him so well. There is a quality in his work that cannot be imitated—a combination of wisdom, spiritual insight, tolerance, kindness, good humor and human understanding.

ON MEMORY'S BEAM is a book that helps us to see, not only Brother Elbert's life, but a period in the development of the church, through his eyes, and with his kindness and comprehension. It appeared first in serial form in the church publication, the SAINTS' HERALD. It is presented in book form, not only because many wish to read it again and to have it in their libraries, but also because young people are growing up and new members are joining the church who will not have access to the periodical. This book will take it splace in the permanent literature of the church. It has been edited and has received some revisions and additions by the author.

Southern California District

Nearly 400 members of the southern California district attended the daily sessions of the reunion held August 3-9 at Pacific Palisades; attendance at the Sunday services was double that amount. District President Louis J. Ostertag, Apostle John Rushton, Dr. Floyd McDowell, Bishop C. A. Skinner, Seventy George Njeim, and Mrs. Myron McConley were in charge of the week's activities. Assisting these general church representatives were Peter Whalley, John Blackmore, Fred Cool, Herbert Blakeman, Hunter Ferguson, Glen Holmes, and Lewis Scott. At the close of the Communion service on Sunday afternoon, two young men, LaVern and William Webb of Lennox, were approved for ordination to the office of priest. In the evening the combined choirs of the district presented The Holy City, under the direction of Luella Wight; Velma Engle was the pianist, and Frances Austin, the organist. Young people's activities were supervised by Dr. McDowell; in addition to classwork, this group conducted early morning prayer services and a vesper hour. A nursery, in charge of Mrs. L. J. Ostertag, was provided for the very young children so that the mothers could be free to attend all services. Classes in religion and handcraft were held for the older children.

Pastor, F. J. Boyd

On Sunday, July 28, Evangelist John W. Worth of London, England, was the speaker. Brother Worth also gave a number of patriarchal blessings during his stay. A religious education institute will be held in London, September 13-15, with Dr. F. M. McDowell and John Darling of the Department of Religious Education in charge. The branch business meeting will be held on September 4.

Columbus, Kansas

The 1946 reunion of the Spring River and Rich Hill districts, which closed Sunday afternoon, August 4, was the largest ever held at Columbus. Over 120 tents filled the large county fair ground pavilion. Four hundred fifty-nine people registered, including visitors from Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and California. Forty-seven members of the priesthood registered. The largest attendance was at the ordination and Communion services, when 519 were present.

Apostle A. A. Oakman and Paul M. Hanson were in attendance. Franklyn S. Weddle, director of music for the general church, conducted a class on "The Christian Gospel in the Beautiful," Mrs. Arthur Oakman led daily discussions in "Creative Teaching," and Arthur Rock had charge of the young people's activities. Mrs. T. W. Bath supervised the women's work, and Mrs. Lois Shipley instructed the children.

An encouraging feature of the reunion was the large and enthusiastic group of young people in attendance. Under the direction of District President William Patterson, they were organized for continued work in their respective branches and districts.

At a special business session on Saturday, a new reunion association was set up by members of the Spring River and Rich Hill districts. The Columbus reunion, up to this time, has been sponsored by the Spring River district. Seven men were selected to form the new committee, and empowered to raise money and improve the grounds in co-operation with the leading ministers of the church. The new site, a forty-acre plot, is situated south of Joplin, Missouri.

On Sunday, three children were baptized at an early morning service, and at 9 o'clock, six ordinations were effected. Myron Cadwell was ordained an elder, and Clyde McKee, David Sheppard, Elbert Coldren, Clifford and William Miller were ordained to the office of priest. This service was followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, after which Apostle Hanson addressed the group. The final sermon was by District President William Patterson.

Madison, Wisconsin

Pastor, Floyd Griswold

A branch picnic was held July 21; following the dinner, a program was presented, and Elder Milton Broadfoot of Milwaukee spoke. District President Ormond Kimball was in charge of the annual business meeting held August 7. Those elected to serve the coming year are Floyd Griswold, pastor; Carl Wirth, church school director; Leda Colbert, adult supervisor and book steward; Dean Ferris, young people's supervisor; Ester Brigham, primary supervisor; Leah Miller, women's leader; Lois Carpenter, music director; Margaret Bender, clerk; Clara Sweeney, solicitor; Edith Griswold, librarian; Darlene Lafferty, publicity agent; and Orville Dahlem, financial agent and church custodian.

—Leda Colbert, reporter.

Niagara Falls, New York

Pastor, Clifford Spilbury

Special services were held July 13 and 14 honoring the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the branch in Niagara Falls. 118 people attended the banquet on Saturday evening; representatives from Pennsylvania, Ontario, Missouri, and neighboring cities in New York were present. Seated at the speaker's table were all the remaining charter members of the group; each was introduced by Pastor Clifford Spilbury. President I. A. Smith was the guest speaker, and Miss Bethel Davis, organist from Independence who is studying at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, was the accompanist for the musical part of the program. Sunday's activities began with a prayer meeting conducted by Elder George Landes, a former pastor of the Niagara Falls congregation. District President P. L. Weegar led the church school discussion, and President Smith delivered the 11 o'clock address, which was broadcast over the local radio station, WHLD. At noon, the Zion's League served dinner in the lower auditorium. Elder Frank Mesle of Sherrill, first pastor of the branch, was the afternoon speaker. The day closed with a vesper service at 4 p.m.

Bremerton, Washington

For the year beginning June 1, 1945, and ending May 31, 1946, Francis Aldrich, book steward, sold $583.61 worth of books, making a profit of $29.18. John Sparks, Dale Campbell, and Delbert Jenkins were baptized and confirmed on Sunday, June 2. Apostles D. T. Williams and C. R. Hield visited the branch on June 4; Brother Hield delivered the evening sermon. Lester Bryant addressed the young people of the Christian Church on June 16. Commencement exercises for the vacation Bible school were held Sunday, June 23. Ten members of the Zion's League participated in the district pre-reunion mixer held at the Boy Scout lodge June 28 to 30. On July 14 the League began holding semi-monthly study periods. Brief lesson assignments are made, and three-minute papers are prepared and read in class. At present, they are studying Elbert Smith's tract, Differences That Persist.

—Lester Bryant, reporter.

Windsor, Ontario

Eight new members have been added to the congregation through baptism. Carol Mifflin, Margaret and Orville Swatman, Neal Beemer, Donna and Douglas Newman were baptized on Sunday, June 16. Barbara and Douglas Beemer were baptized the preceding Friday.

Births

A daughter, Delores Sue, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Virgil E. Bradshaw of Marshfield, Missouri, on August 5. Mrs. Bradshaw is the former Evelyn Rust.

Mr. and Mrs. Urban F. Black announce the birth of a son, Kenneth Urban, born August 13 at Chester Hospital, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Elder and Mrs. Virgil Billings of Gaylord, Michigan, announce the birth of a son, John Neal, born August 14. Mrs. Billings was formerly Helen Hoisington.

Our Departed Ones

McGEE.—Cathern, was born at Pisgah, Iowa, on July 28, 1874, and passed away at the Jennie Edmondson Hospital in Council Bluffs on August 12, 1946, following a stroke. Her home was in Emerson, Iowa. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in her early youth. Her husband, Charles McGee, preceded her in death in 1917.

She is survived by two sons: Earl and Merl, both of Henderson, Iowa; two daughters: Mrs. Nora Smith, Henderson; and Mrs. Alta Moore, Muskegon, Michigan; two sisters: Mrs. Caroline Richardson, Jerome, Idaho; and

(This space for Address Label.)

Mrs. Lennie Clark, Pisgah, Iowa; five brothers: William and Orvie Fredenburg of Yakima, Washington; Jesse Fredenburg, Little Sioux, Iowa; Oscar and Harvey Fredenburg, Pisgah; and thirteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Christian Church in Henderson, with Elder V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs in charge. Interment was in the Farm Creek Cemetery.

HANNAH.—Charles, was born at Smith's Falls, Ontario, on May 1, 1875, and died, after a long and painful illness, at his home in Hamilton, Ontario, on August 4, 1946. As a child, he moved with his parents to River-view, where he united with the Reorganized Church. He lived for a while in Erin, then moved to Hamilton, where he served as pastor of the branch for a number of years. He was an enthusiastic supporter of every movement to advance the cause of his religion, until ill health forced him to retire.

It was through his efforts that the Hamilton church was built.

Surviving are his wife, Elizabeth, and a son, Ellis. Elders James Pycok and James Wilson were in charge of the funeral service.

DAIKENS.—George William, was born at Chatham, Ontario, in 1875, and passed away February 23, 1946, in Roseland, where for the past twenty years he had made his home. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church many years ago, remaining faithful throughout his life.

He is survived by his wife, Daisy; a daughter, Mrs. George Clifford, Detroit, Michigan; a son, George, of Windsor, Ontario; a sister, Mrs. Frances Meyers, of California; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Morris Funeral Home in Windsor; Elder James Pycok was in charge. Interment was in the Victoria Memorial Cemetery.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

"NEW HORIZONS"—your own department — is presented brand - new, spicy, thoughtful, zesty, in this issue for the first time. We are giving it the best position in the paper—the center double-spread of pages. And, to paraphrase Lincoln, it is "of the Young People, by the Young People, and for the Young People."

NEW HORIZONS! Who is directing this department? Step up and get acquainted and say, "Pleestameecha." . . . Harold Sandy, Ex-GI, European Theatre of the War, idea man, layout expert, and holder of the veto power for squeiching bum starts. . . Naomi Russell, essayist, poet, editor. . . . These are the main staff. Assisting with enthusiasm and interest are Ruth Midgorden, graduate in journalism from Iowa State College, and a recent addition to our editorial staff. . . Mabel Holman, artist, sympathizer, understander, originator of the phrase, "I've got an idea," and sister to everybody who needs a sister. These folks are right here helping to make it a success, and we expect help from dozens and hundreds of you young people Out There.

NEW HORIZONS! Read it, please. Then write us. Will you?

* NOTE TO WRITERS. For a considerable time now the shortage of paper and the 16-page size of our publication has greatly reduced our opportunity to use the articles our friends have sent us, and articles of merit have had to wait all too long for appearance. Now, in order to anticipate the time when more space is available, we must try to be ready with supplies of articles to fill the pages.

Writers often ask for suggestions. Articles can be in any one of a great many fields related to the church work: doctrine, biography, church history, philosophy, personal problems, church work, branch problems, religious education or secular education and child-training.

The requirements of modern readers is placing an increasing emphasis on good quality. The most important part of an article is its content—its thought, purpose, and the reliability of its information.

Literary style is an important item. Fancy writing is not demanded and is often objectionable. But the article should be clearly written and easily understood by the reader.

As to length, we can use anything from short sketches and fillers to articles of two thousand words in length. Whenever possible, manuscripts should be typed, double-spaced, one side of paper only. Inexpensive paper is as good as any. Crowded writing leaves no room for editorial corrections.

Our writers work on a volunteer basis, as many workers in other departments of church activity do. No budget to pay for articles is available. The friendly good will and devotion of our writing friends make it possible to carry on this important part of the church work. We deeply appreciate their contributions.—The Editors.

Report From Presiding Bishopric

From our experience in temporalities since 1931, it is natural that we should, like sailors after a storm, scan the horizon from time to time to see what portentous signs there may be. The late President Smith was ever alert to our financial trends, and no one took greater satisfaction than he did in the liquidation of our debts and the establishment of reserves. He and Bishop DeLapp have labored closely during and since those trying years to get and keep our finances on an "even keel."

In 1944 President Smith pleaded for consistent efforts to "maintain or increase" our income and suggested there would be some necessary and large expenditures. He also believed our income would "probably" be reduced after a "cessation of armed conflict."

When the Presiding Bishopric made report of income for the first six months of 1945, he hailed with pleasure a "distinct improvement of income over the same period" in 1944, "despite the fear of some" to the contrary. Hostilities had not yet ceased.

Now, after the war has been over for a year, we find that our income, instead of being less than for the same period in 1945, shows an increase of more than fifteen thousand dollars. We congratulate the members for their fidelity to the cause, and recommend that they give careful thought to the report which will be found in this issue of the Herald. We are assured all will be encouraged to feel our missionary forces can "be expanded as rapidly as we are able to select and train men for pastoral and missionary responsibility."

Most encouraging reports come to us from all fields of labor, showing the work is unquestionably onward, and we join the Bishopric in the hope that we may come through the year with a record comparable with and even better than that of 1945.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Israel A. Smith

In Appreciation of Services Rendered

Bishops M. C. Fisher and E. L. Traver

Making way for an appointment in succession, a recent Herald carried an official announcement of the retirement of E. L. Traver as Bishop of Maine District, and M. C. Fisher as Bishop of the Southern New England District, in which it was observed such formal and indirect statement was hardly adequate in consideration of the long and faithful services of these men in connection with the work of the Bishopric of the church. With this we are in agreement, and come now on behalf of the church to express appreciation for the good ministry of these our brothers in arms, for so long a time made available to the church.

Elder Fisher was ordained a Bishop in 1908 and has served in this office in both the Maine and the Southern New England Districts. Elder Traver was ordained a Bishop in 1927 and has served as Bishop of Maine and concurrently acted for a considerable period as president of the Boston branch and of Southern New England District.

Both have given much time and effort taken from their business and families in order to render this helpful service to the cause and its people. Many Saints therefore, as well as the church, are appreciative of their ministry. Nor is there any reward beyond this, the heartfelt gratitude of those to whom one has been helpful, together with one's own consciousness of faithfulness in service to others.

Ordinarily the Herald would have referred separately to the work of Bishop Fisher and to that of Bishop Traver. Their retirement at the same time, however, and the years and intimacy in which and during which they have worked together in the same office and area suggested that they be included in the one expression of appreciation.

And if a personal reference be allowed, may it be observed it seems fitting that one who has so long and favorably known these men, and worked with them, and been the recipient of their fine hospitality as well as their helpful ministry as has the writer should have it given him to bespeak the gratitude of the church for the services of our Brothers Traver and Fisher, and to express for them best wishes in their every undertaking and association.

Across the Desk

A VERY PLEASANT INCIDENT occurred during the Lamoni reunion when Miss Ann Dewsnpup, daughter of Ernest Ritson Dewsnpup, drove into Lamoni in a battered jeep and announced that she had come to see the place of her birth, and the college over whose destinies her father presided in 1898 to 1899, and 1903 to 1905. Brother E. J. Gleazer, Jr., and some of the other church officials received Miss Dewsnpup, listened to her story, and thoroughly enjoyed taking her over the Campus and suggesting pictures which might be of interest to her father and mother, who now live in England and expect to celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary soon after Miss Dewsnpup's return to England next June.

Miss Dewsnpup served for several years in the British Air Force, but since she was an American citizen by right of her birth in Lamoni, she transferred to the American Army in Europe about two years ago. It was as an American citizen that she bought her bullet marked jeep in Paris and secured its transfer to this country, and she certainly showed true American spirit in driving alone from the West Coast to Lamoni, and thence to Denver.

It was pleasant, indeed, to have this contact with Dr. Dewsnpup who did so much for the college forty years ago.

The hope that facism and communism would "cancel out" each other seems misplaced. One well-known writer says: "It is a mistake to describe facism as the contrary or enemy of communism. The contrary of slapping a man on the right cheek is not slapping him on the left cheek, but not to slap him at all. Both facism and communism are slaps in the face of democracy." They are enemies of democracy, not of each other. The church must throw its power on the side of democracy.

OFFICIAL

Financial Report of First Six Months of 1946

We are submitting herewith a comparative statement of income for the first six months of this year and of 1945, exclusive of Oblation and Surplus:

	1945	1946
January	$135,276.21	$138,536.68
February	87,937.38	103,871.57
March	79,385.85	84,168.66
April	77,682.80	64,578.17
May	68,052.08	65,575.97
June	69,171.83	75,909.22
Total	$517,506.15	$532,640.27

This shows a net increase for this period of $15,134.12.

In view of the industrial unrest resulting from strikes and slowing up of production and the decrease of employment during some of the months of this period, this is a most encouraging report. We wish to express our appreciation to those who have made such a fine showing possible, and at the same time to give thanks to the General Church officers and district and branch representatives who have participated in the work which has brought such excellent results.

The months of April and May were the only two months in which there was a decrease of income in 1946 as compared with 1945. It has been our experience that in practically every General Conference year the income for these months is reduced or has a tendency to decrease. However, it is our opinion that the benefits received from General Conference show up in increased income in subsequent months.

The General Conference of 1946 approved the expenditure of funds for building purposes for Grace-land College, the Auditorium, and the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Due to unfavorable conditions and a lack of building materials, the administrative officers of the church have postponed action in respect to these building projects until conditions are more favorable.

In the meantime, it is important that we keep before us our needs and try to make provision during this time of reasonably good income to raise the funds that will be necessary to complete these building projects.

The $200,000 appropriated for the Auditorium is scarcely adequate under present conditions for roofing the dome of the Auditorium with copper, doing the stonework around the walls supporting the dome and putting permanent roof on the flat deck of the building. Other funds will be needed to do some of the work on the interior which is highly desirable. As it is the policy of the church to do such work on a cash-in-hand basis, the accumulation of funds is necessary to assure completion of this project in due time.

It is also important that we keep in mind that the missionary work of the church must be given consideration above everything else. We have now reached a point where our missionary force can be expanded as rapidly as we are able to select and train men for pastoral and missionary responsibility. Our financial policy has placed us upon a sound foundation, and we should be able to support a reasonably large ministerial personnel in the years which are ahead of us. Reserves adequate for the present have been provided for and a continuation of the policy of setting aside funds for ministerial reserves as men are appointed and as they labor from year to year will assure us of financial strength in the future. Therefore, it is highly essential that we continue to teach the financial law, encourage our members everywhere to file their financial statements, pay their tithing and give offerings according to their ability.

We believe it is possible to continue through the balance of this year to equal the favorable results of 1945; with the united help and support of all, we should move forward more rapidly toward the goals of the church. As we do so, let us continue to give thanks to God for the many blessings we have received, and seek divine guidance for our present and future endeavors.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
G. L. DeLapp,
H. L. Livingston,
W. N. Johnson.

Kearney, Missouri, Anniversary

The undersigned had believed that he had made a record for use in these columns of a delightful sojourn he made to Kearney, Missouri, on Sunday, May 19, at the request of President Emery E. Jennings of the Far West Stake.

On that day the Saints there celebrated the first anniversary of the organization of the branch. When it was organized in 1945 there were about twenty-five members and this membership had increased until, as I recollect, the enrollment was more than twice the original number. I occupied at the eleven o'clock service but on account of home conditions was not able to stay for the other activities of the day; but did participate in a very fine repast supplied by the good women of the branch. The branch is under the leadership of Elder Guy C. Adams, and the leader among the women is Sister R. L. Fulk. The branch has made a splendid record, and judging by the enthusiasm in evidence at the first anniversary it will continue to grow in numbers and spiritual strength.

Pastor Niemöller, now resident in Switzerland, is quoted as saying in substance, that he is looking for "some form of Christian socialism that will not in practice produce a police or totalitarian state, that will be a vigorous protection of the individual's democratic rights." The difficulty seems to be in most European countries there is neither democracy nor individual rights. Niemöller, like some other Christians formerly thought Russia would be helpful; but now has abandoned the idea.

American altruism during the excitement of the war is suffering a sharp decline.

THE PRICE OF LIBERTY

PART 2.

"We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied."—Doctrine and Covenants 112: 9.

The question of the legality of maintaining a representative at the Vatican has been a grievous one, and it has been before the American people on numerous occasions. Opposition forces believed it was definitely settled in 1867, but it has been revived by the appointment of Mr. Myron C. Taylor. From a strict construction of the Constitution, it has never been legal. Whether it is or has been advisable from the standpoint of politics or commercialism is debatable and highly controversial.

The following is a brief history of the matter up to 1929:

An article on Cardinal Spellman appeared in the January 28, 1946, issue of Life magazine. This prelate, who has been a close friend of Pope Pius XII, was also a trusted advisor of the late President Roosevelt, and has probably played a more important part in American political life in recent years than any other churchman in this generation. He undoubtedly as the spokesman for the pope, advised President Roosevelt that Mr. Myron C. Taylor would be very acceptable as a personal representative at Rome.

This article states "during and before the Civil War, the United States had maintained a minister at the Papal Court. But in 1870 all papal territory was seized by Victor Emmanuel II to complete the unification of modern Italy." The loss of temporal power of the pope should certainly have terminated all diplomatic relations between this country and the Vatican. There are few parallels to the abrupt severance of relations with the Vatican in 1867. Within two months after James Lewis, a Scottish missionary for the Prebyterian Church living in Rome, had been notified that he had been placed in "the power of the Inquisition, both for arrest and imprisonment," the Congress of the United States passed a law containing the following provision: "no money hereby or otherwise appropriated shall be paid for the support of an American legation at Rome from and after the 30th day of June, 1867."

President Polk, in 1847, on the plea of "commercial interests," said in his message to Congress that it was expedient for us to have diplomatic representation at the Papal Court. The pope at that time was actually temporal sovereign of what was called the "Papal States," embracing a considerable portion of Italy. Trade between this country and these "States" was on the increase. The first step was the appointment of Jacob L. Martin in 1848 as charge d' affaires. James Buchanan, afterward President, then Secretary of State, issued instructions to Mr. Martin, in which we find the following:

There is one consideration which you ought always to keep in view in your intercourse with the papal authorities. Most, if not all the governments which have diplomatic representatives, are connected with the pope as the head of the Catholic Church. In this respect the United States occupies an entirely different position. . . . Our direct relations with the Papal States can only be of a commercial character.

International law preserves to any foreign minister while living in the country to which he has been assigned "the privilege of religious worship in his own private chapel, according to the peculiar forms of his national faith, although it may not be generally tolerated by the laws of the State where he resides." Under this provision, the American Minister arranged for services to be held in his residence, and in 1859 Minister Stockton gave his approval to the organization of the Grace Church, which used the liturgy of the Protestant Episcopalian. The owner of the palace wherein he was domiciled refused to allow the American minister to continue to occupy the premises unless these Protestant services were discontinued. They were thus compelled to find other quarters outside the walls of the City, and this incident was the basis for the drastic action taken by Congress in 1867.

There had always been strong opposition in Congress to any Legation at Rome. In 1860 the House of Representatives refused to appropriate money. The climax came on January 29, 1867, when again the Congress was considering the appropriation of funds for this consular service.

Thaddeus Stevens introduced the following amendment:

Whereas it is beneath the dignity and contrary to justice that this nation should be represented at any Court or Government which prohibits free worship by American citizens within its jurisdiction of the Christian religion; and whereas the Roman Government has lately ordered the American churches to be removed outside of the city and prohibited the free exercise by them of the Christian religion therein: Therefore, no money hereby appropriated shall be paid for the support of the United States legation at Rome or for the future expenses of such legation.

This precipitated a heated controversy, and during the discussion of the measure, Representative Willam E. Dodge read a letter he had just received from a Reverend Dr. Prime, who wrote while visiting in Rome as follows:

"ROME, JANUARY 4, 1867

"For six years and more the Scotch Presbyterians have had a station here. Indeed they have two: one the Free Church, the other the Church of Scotland. The chaplains have held service every Sabbath in their own apartments with a few of their countrymen, rarely more than thirty or forty being present: No sign or notice is allowed to be put up on the house to designate it as a place of worship. The stranger finds it advertised at his hotel, and coming to the number, prowls up the dark, stone stairways to some very upper chamber; and there, as secretly as the early Christians in the catacombs of Rome or in the dens and caves of the earth, he finds a few likeminded who pray and hear the Word. These services disturb no one and the authorities do not disturb them. They affect to ignore their existence altogether. On Saturday, December 29th, 1866, the chaplains of these two missions were served with the following warning . . . :

"British Consulate at Rome
Dec. 29, 1866.

"Sir:

"It is my official duty to inform you that Monsignore Randi, Governor of Rome, has just communicated with me that you are holding illegal religious meetings in your house, which you must know are prohibited by the Roman law, and that you have thus placed yourself in the power of the Inquisition, both for arrest and imprisonment. But as the Monsignore permits me to give you this notice I would seriously advise that you at once put an end to these innovations, and that you visit Monsignore Randi at Monte Citorio and assure him that you will never again repeat these illegal acts. I hope in this way you may possibly suspend your exile which is now hanging over you.

"I am, sir, your most obedient servant,
"Joseph Severn, British Consul."

"To Rev. James Lewis."

It was this letter from Dr. Prime that swayed the members of the House of Representatives. No official information was then available from the State Department, throwing light upon the status of the congregation which for years had worshiped in the private chapel of the American Minister. Therefore, the preamble to Mr. Stevens' amendment was voted down, and the following clause was inserted in the bill: "No money hereby or otherwise appropriated shall be paid for the support of the American legation at Rome from and after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred sixty seven." The vote was 82 for, 18 against. This denial of government funds was approved by the Senate without debate, and on February 28, 1867, less than two months after the governor of Rome had commissioned the British Consul to notify the Scotch Presbyterian missionary that he was "in the power of

The Eternal Affairs of Man By J. A. Koehler

Number One in a Series on "The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

SHORTLY before the coming of Jesus, there arose in the firmament of humanity what is perhaps the greatest aggregation of philosophical stars that ever existed in so short a time within so limited an area. Some of those philosophers were called Epicureans. In the opinion of St. Paul, the disciples of Epicurus were a superstitious lot. But even superstitious people may have ideas about the good life.

Jesus may not be rated as a great social philosopher by some men who think they are the only realists. But philosopher or not, he pitted his teachings against the philosophy of the Epicurians, when he said, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for the body, what ye shall put on;" and stated that meat and drink are not the essence of the good life. You may read part of that story in the sixth chapter of Matthew.

The Epicureans were pleasure lovers. In the opinion of Jesus they loved pleasure more than the really good; that is to say, they had mistaken ideas of the good. It is true, they said some pleasures are better than others. They even went so far as to say that some excessive good pleasures may be bad. The principal pleasure of the Epicureans seems to have been well-prepared, dainty foods. To feast on delicacies was almost the essence of the good life, provided one did not eat beyond reason, and get a bad spell of indigestion or gout.

Psychology says that pleasures exist only in the mind. But you will not miss the mark far if you say that the philosophy of the Epicureans concerned the pleasures of the body. And if Epicureanism is philosophy, then, without question, Jesus was a philosopher.

But let's go on with our story. The statement, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat," (unless we regard it as little more than a negation of "Epicurean" philosophy) is opposed to what Moses declared the Almighty said, and even to other things that Jesus himself stated. For Moses said, as representing the mind of God, that man should have a care about what he is to eat. That is the meaning of "subdue the earth," and "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" all the days of thy life, and much more to the same effect.

Moreover, unless Jesus intended merely to oppose a "feed trough" concept of life with a philosophy of "human" values, he was opposed to the facts of life. One of those facts is that unless man sows, he may not reap. Unless man is willing to "sweat" that he may live, he cannot live. And facts have a way of out-arguing everything else. They are irresistibly convincing.

We make more fuss about industry—I mean about economic affairs in general—than we do about all other affairs put together. And we are sure that we shall always find it necessary to have a care about the supply of food and clothing and the other things we want, until we return to the dust from which the body came. We are sure that industry is one of the eternal affairs of man.

We know too that matrimony and government and culture are eternal affairs of man. Since that is true, the life of man must be more than "meat," and the body more than raiment. Human life is a quest for happiness. But happiness is not identical with banquets. It is not identical with literature and music and recreation. We may even have "religion" and still be unhappy. For true happiness is a feel of worthiness. It is a feel that accompanies the consciousness of having cultivated our capacities, and of having used our means and opportunities to the advancement of worthy purposes or the promotion of worthy objects.

If you are truly human, you cannot have a feeling of worthiness while you feast through "devouring widows' houses," or through the mortgage-foreclosure route, for instance. No real human being can be happy while he is party to affairs that impoverish the lives of others. To be truly happy a person must love righteousness and hate iniquity. He must have both sentiments and convictions about the conduct of the eternal affairs of man. He must have a philosophy of life.

A philosophy of life cannot come out of a vacuum. It may arise only out of experience of the world in which we live, and particularly of the eternal affairs of man. So that even a religious philosophy—if it is truly a rational explanation of the life of the soul—must be a philosophy of everyday life or the eternal affairs of man.

If we first add matrimony and government to industry, and then add to that sum the cultural affairs of peoples—education, worship, and everything else which man must do to fit himself for the proper conduct of his primary affairs—the sum total is the eternal affairs of man. And we would say that the eternal affairs are the activities man must promote properly to sustain life, to preserve health, to enlighten the mind, to improve the morals, to quicken the spirit. For that repertoire of functions is the very essence of the truly good life. And we would say an explanation of that life is a philosophy.

It should not be necessary to argue that the good life must be lived in society, I mean in civil society—the all-inclusive society, not merely the family or the church, but the society which is composed of all the specific modes of association. Nor should it be necessary to argue that civil society must be just, as well as orderly and efficient, if it is to be the essence of the good life. It should not be necessary to argue that if religion would attain its objects, it must concern itself with the proper conduct of the eternal affairs of man.

It is necessary, however, to argue that it is quite as essential for religious peoples to master the eternal affairs of man—the affairs of industry, matrimony, and government—if they are to attain the objects of true religion, as it is for any people to master those affairs if they are to promote their peace, prosperity, and happiness. I say it is necessary to argue that, for this is a crucial question on which even the members of our own church do not see eye to eye. It is either that, or it is a case of not caring enough about a true social philosophy to pay the price of possessing ourselves of it. In which case, philosophy is an annoyance.

The high point in this group of talks on "The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet" is, we believe, the truth that was in the mind of Jesus when he said: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," or to establish his righteousness—which is the righteousness of civil society—and "all of these things shall be added unto you." All these things which all feeding trough philosophers seek first, with no thought of promoting the "righteousness" of the "kingdom."

The all-inclusive fact of society is that it is "peoples" giving direction and control to affairs that promote common interests. In other words the all-inclusive practical fact of human society is government. Kingdom righteousness is government—government that is ordered with judgment, as Isaiah said, and established with justice. And when we say that, we say kingdom righteousness is an implementation of a true social philosophy.

Fascism, naziism, socialism, communism, democracy—almost any theory of industry and government, even the American way, is called a social philosophy. Whether they are philosophies in the true sense or not, all are concerned with the eternal affairs of man. All say, in effect, that the fate of man is shaped by the manner in which these affairs are conducted.

That is what the genius of prophecy has said from its beginning. Moses said it. Jesus said it. The modern prophet said it. And while the philosophic concepts of secular leaders may be as far apart as the east is from the west, or the north pole from the south, Moses and Jesus and the modern prophet are in perfect accord.

Even today, secular philosophies may treat of economic affairs principally as they affect the life of the body. They may be loaded with Epicurean elements, for we too are pleasure-seekers. The primary concerns of most philosophies may be meat and drink, but religious philosophies—principally those of Jesus and the modern prophet—treat of the eternal affairs of man as activities that are requisite to the perfection of his moral and spiritual nature. In the opinion of these two prophets, the right conduct of the eternal affairs of man is the principal or primary means of attaining the objects of true religion. In truth, the pressure of the wants out of which these affairs arise is God's invitation to science and the practical arts, or to practical activity. And the conflicts and disappointments, the crises and all, that arise from the manner in which these eternal affairs are misconducted are God's invitation to seek to conduct those affairs aright. They are nature's invitation to seek the true philosophy of social life, that it may be implemented in the eternal affairs of man.

If the devil cannot beat you in prayer, he cannot beat you anywhere.—Paul Rader.

The Price of Liberty

the Inquisition both for arrest and imprisonment," a law had been enacted by the Congress of the United States that closed the American Legation in Rome. One writer states:

This action, louder than words, declared that if nationals, whether they were English, Scotch, or Americans, sojourning in Rome were molested by papal authorities on account of their beliefs, and deprived of the enjoyment of the modes of worship their consciences dictated, the Government of the United States would and did condemn such a course by the legislative act that terminated diplomatic relations with the Papal States.

It appears that this letter from Dr. Prime was the deciding factor, and while no official information was available from the State Department, the Congress proceeded to act, and included the clause to which reference has already been made, providing that no money "hereby or otherwise appropriated should be paid for the further support of the Legation at Rome."

The Senate concurred without debate, and on February 28, 1867, less than sixty days after the Governor of Rome had commissioned the British Consul to notify the Scottish Presbyterian Minister that he was "in the power of the Inquisition both for arrest and imprisonment," the law had been enacted that closed forever the operation of the American Legation to the Vatican.

From a Young Saint

I enjoy reading the letters others have written, telling of their experiences in coming to know God. I am fifteen years old, and have been a member of the Reorganized Church since March, 1942. For a short while I taught the primary class at church school, and now I am serving as branch librarian. I am thankful that I am a member of Christ's church; I hope that I can prove my gratitude through service.

If there are any young people who would like to correspond with me, I shall be glad to hear from them.

New Shoes to March to Zion

By RUTH MIDGORDEN

TO some, "New Horizons" will sound as shopworn as "there's nothing new under the sun." It seems like the same old gaff, the urge of someone to challenge someone else to do big things. And that smacks of piano-thumping revivalism, especially to pessimists viewing the possibilities of atomic destruction.

Perhaps most of the church's young people will think immediately of Zion. Some will groan with hopelessness and disparagement. We've been marching to Zion so long that our shoe soles have worn out. Maybe it's time to find another pair of sturdy boots and "look down the road a piece" to get our perspective again.

All organizations which exist any length of time have goals. We've been told that before. A college honorary may be established to "promote friendship among the members, stimulate professional attitudes, and render service to the school." The goal of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of

RUTH MIDGORDEN

Latter Day Saints is to preach the gospel and to establish Zion, the big step toward the eventual building of the kingdom of God. We've heard that before, many times.

"Preaching the gospel" and "building Zion" have degenerated into little more than two often-repeated phrases for many of us. That attitude is obvious because Zion isn't established. We're to be compared with the earnest and emphatic brother who told his congregation, "This is the church of God, because it is the church of God." All of these phrases have become imbedded in our thinking from the time we started to Sunday school. Few of us know the full significance of those building stones and do too little to find out. That is complacency. Some of us have caught a glimpse of the vastness and richness of the Zion movement. But some from that group have sensed, too, the problems. They have decided to let someone else trail-blaze.

If we have joined the church, we have covenanted to do our best to "preach the gospel" and "establish Zion." That covenant is a living lie that mocks too many of us. Preaching the gospel means showing people the truths Christ spoke. The establishment of Zion is a great task in developing a spiritual, social, and economic way of life clean enough and whole enough to qualify for kingdom-building.

Unfortunately, most people cannot be convinced of the "self-evident" truths when their well-meaning teachers speak in one way and act another. The basis for harmonious living and Zion-building rests upon the truth of statements like these: "To thine own self be true" and "thou must be true thyself, if thou the truth wouldst teach."

No one need be ashamed of Zion, nor of the "preposterous" idea that a group of people, if they are spiritually elevated, can build such a God-given system of living. Into this Zion, of which we've spoken so often, are incorporated the dreams of the world's consecrated men and women—ideas of world brotherhood, racial equality, health, care of needy people, initiative for the more talented, a spiritual bond welded by a love of God and of people. Is there an ideal or a plan more worthy of support?

* * *

Yet many of us joke about Zion and the gathering Saints. We point about us and pick out faults of individuals and of the church. Few of us are willing to bear the strenuous spiritual exercise and the condemning results of being honest with ourselves.

We could ask ourselves questions like these: How long am I going to be satisfied to be a Latter Day Saint in name, one of the "chosen people"? What is my attitude toward Negroes, Jews, Catholics, Japanese—do I really believe all men are of one blood and are brothers? What does equality mean? How does it feel to be truly humble? Do I realize the overwhelming force that love of God brings? Have I experienced the things possible by faith?

* * *

The early church failed to redeem Zion because it lacked "sufficient men of spiritual quality. The same lack will be fatal to Zion's endeavor in any age."* Is Zion "the human dream, which will never be realized," as a prominent Boston minister told a group of students last winter? We don't believe so, we EMPHATICALLY do not think that, or we wouldn't belong to this church.

There are laws governing the building of the kingdom of God. There are laws governing the ways people live. There are commandments from God in all of the Three Books of the church, pointing the way unmistakably. And still we continue to negate by our actions and words the truths we profess.

Each person must answer for his own hypocrisy; ignorance of the law here as elsewhere is no excuse.

Young people get a little sick of hearing, "You are tomorrows' leaders; prepare today." They develop a crusty layer that hardens the surface but doesn't necessarily stiffen the spine. It's an undisputed fact, from the standpoints of history and just plain genealogy, that today's young people ARE tomorrow's leaders. It's a fate we can't escape. Does this ideal of Zion mean enough to us that we can face ourselves objectively and analyze our shortcomings? And after that is done, can we accomplish the even more painful task of abolishing those shortcomings, often so enjoyable, at the price we may need to pay?

*F. Henry Edwards, Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants.

The Trouble-Shooter

What to Do . . .

If You Can't Go to College!

SO THE GIs have quit standing in chow lines and P. X. queues, and are now standing in line at the college and university doors. And you are so far down the line that you know they're going to put up the bars and say, "Sorry, no more room" before you get there. Now, what to do about it. Take a look at the following:

1. Don't give up. There are always discouragements in the way of a person who wants to accomplish anything, particularly in education. Those who weaken and quit trying, and give up their hopes, accept an inferior chance in life. You've got this chance at an education coming to you. It is the best chance of getting it with government aid that you will ever have. Stay in there, keep your application on file and alive at a number of schools, and your chance will come somewhere.

2. Get a job that will serve as a practical background for the work you eventually hope to do. If you're planning to major in business administration, get a job in an office where you can find out what makes things tick. If your aim is a degree in architecture, get a job with the local contractor. Start at the bottom and work your way up through sand, cement, and white pine to the textbook. You'll learn what it takes to build a house before you read about it. If you're interested in people and hope to do social work or help the neurotics straighten out their complexes, get a job where you can meet the mill and throng—sell hats, shoes, or ice cream: see the human picture firsthand.

3. Do preliminary work in your spare time. Take an extension course from the college or university which you plan to attend; it will familiarize you with the work you are to have later on, and the credits are as good as if you were attending classes.

4. If no jobs or correspondence courses are available in your chosen field, make as much money as you can. You'll need it when you get the long-awaited invitation to enroll.

5. There will be more room at the schools in a few months, or in another year. All the fellows are going now because it is the popular thing to do, and Uncle Sam is helping out with a little cash. But before long some Ex's will discover that there is study and work at college, and will drop out. A few more will find they do not have the mental capacity for higher education. Some will marry and have children and need more income than Uncle is furnishing. They will drop out and go to work. Then there will be more room, and that is where you come in.

Questions for this column are welcome; as many as space permits will be used.

CHALLENGES

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

AS I EAT MY lunch daily in a cafeteria, I am in the habit of watching my fellow diners and trying to figure out personalities. It is not only fun but provides much character material for future writing of articles or sketches. Recently a woman has been seating herself near me, and I have been much interested. Her tray is always loaded with miscellaneous dishes of food, usually an odd assortment with several desserts. These dishes she spreads around the table in haphazard arrangement and proceeds to the business of eating. Her right hand moves as rapidly as possible on its movement from plate to mouth, and as it makes its trips, the left hand alternates with a slice of bread. A bite of dessert, then salad, bread, meat, dessert, a quick gulp of water—never a movement lost. The chewing process seems to be forgotten and the food merely swallowed as rapidly as possible. I am fascinated by the whole procedure. But this is not all, for as she eats she talks to herself. I have come to the conclusion that she is repeating a rote prayer with that meal. Yet those words of prayer are so mixed up with the slovenly eating habits that I am relatively confident that both physical and mental indigestion are the only real results.

Many of us face life in exactly this same manner. We have available in the great cafeteria of living such a variety of things that we rush to do something of everything. We grab onto a good solid habit but put with it the frivolities of uncertain pleasures. We stuff our minds full of irrelevant and inconsequential facts and hesitate only long enough to take up a new scheme. Then along with this we try to carry on a rote religion which we can fit in with all these other activities. Is it any wonder that muddled thinking and inadequate moral concepts are resultant?

T. and I climbed up the narrow and twisting stairways to the top of Kirtland Temple. I have been up there many times and always admire the view. Yet this day as I emerged from the final trap door I knew this was different. The deep blue of the sky with its abundant fleecy clouds was distinct from the azure of Lake Erie visible to the north. The whole atmosphere was so clear and calm that the world seemed to have halted in an attitude of peace. A brisk breeze carried the odor of pine and a pungent smell of burning wood. Glancing downward at the trees made them seem a soft green carpet for the entire area, for even the highway was hidden underneath overhanging boughs. Each house was nestled cosily amid the green. From the west we looked down upon the now slate roof of the Temple, interrupted by the gabled windows. Here, hidden from the general view, lies the real proof that loving hands builded this structure. Each of these gables is decorated with the Greco design, similar to that reflected in the lower auditoriums. Where straight beams could have served, beauty was not forgotten.

This is the test of true religion, whether it be real and potent to an individual. There are many people whose outward acts reflect a desire for the title of Christian. Yet it may be perceived that at the core of the character the real meaning of Christ's gospel has not yet been absorbed. The building seems adequate and beautiful, but in the soul where man cannot look so easily, the structure is rough and bare.

The newspapers are crammed full of advertisements and articles concerning housing for veterans. The situation remains critical, and the main cause of this problem seems to be the real shortage and high price of building materials. Almost any building which has a floor and a roof has been converted into a dwelling house for one or more families. I'm wondering why some smart young man has not started his home of adobe and thatch. The word adobe describes a type of brick fashioned by hand from mud and then dried in the hot sun. The roof of a dwelling thus built is covered with palm leaves and a comfortable house is the result. This type of home is common in the Latin American countries, and adobe houses have been found which are hundreds of years old.

The real value of an adobe house is that only the materials at hand are used, and only hand labor and natural resources are employed. No experience, expensive, or hard-to-get items are necessary. A human life is much like a home. The luxuries of life are not essential to produce a successful and well-rounded life. Too many people feel that membership in a club, a high-priced automobile, the best available clothing, weekly attendance at a theater, and numerous other things are essentials for living. What they need is a little adobe building and a realization that true happiness comes not in the possession, but in the experience gained in acquiring those possessions.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hasler of Primrose Hill, Chelmsford, England, lived to be over 105 years old. On that birthday she made the statement to her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren that her age was largely due to hard work and a contented mind. One may wonder now how a person gains that contentment. Those children have recently gone through the horrors of war and even now are experiencing the rigors of postwar food poverty. They are quite familiar with hard work, but I'm wondering if they are content with life as it comes.

Contentment is an elusive quality of mind which few people possess. Often those who have most of the world's possessions are the least content. Neither wealth, education, nor family esteem will assure contentment. True contentment is not necessarily complete submission to all events as they come. The really contented individual needs not necessarily approve of all things in their present condition. I believe that a person is content only in his personal satisfaction of work well done.

Recently a good friend gave me a gift—some excellent French perfume with the alluring name of "Passion." You need read the news ads only rarely to see "Danger," "My Sin," "Taboo," and "Temptress." These names and their accompanying odors are designed to make the simple soul feel adventurous. A drop of the exquisite perfume placed in exactly the right place makes the quiet girl a veritable siren—or so the advertisements say.

There are many things today which sell only because of their blatant advertising or their pictorial presentation. Their actual value is negligible, and their real influence on a person's life is unnoticeable to any great degree. One must learn to look beyond the name or the advertising to see the real worth. Not every person who claims to be a Christian lives a Christlike life.

Reunion time is here again, and at these reunions people gain new ideas and added enthusiasm. The common remark is, "I want to take this back to my home branch." After one reunion last year, I attended a prayer service in one of those home branches. One sister stood to give her testimony concerning her visit to the reunion and especially one particular sermon. She said, "I can't remember what he said, but it surely was good." Well, at least she was honest, but her presence at reunion was valueless to her home branch.

Now I wonder, every time I hear someone say he is going to take something with him, whether that message will actually ever arrive or be lost in the individual's mind.

The highest church in the world, measured by altitude, is a Seventh Day Adventist Church located at Puno Laqueque in the Andes. Its altitude is over 16,000 feet. Yes, this is the highest church in the world but very few people know of its existence.

Here we are with an even greater claim, the one church, but to most of the world we are as unknown as this highest church. Sometimes we get smug in our own importance and use this leaven to brew and boil in our own stew, rather than use it to leaven the whole world. If we were busy converting our friends and warning our neighbors by word and deed, there would be no time or inclination for the pettiness with which individual branches and lives are polluted. "An idle mind is the Devil's workshop" is true in congregations as well as one person.

God's Blueprint

Dear Editor:

I am sending you the testimony of Brother James Leighton. He attends Central Church in Detroit, and for many years was caretaker of the building and grounds. He had long suffered a throat condition that grew steadily worse, and the doctors warned him he would choke to death unless the cause could be removed. He finally consented to the operation, but it involved the removal of his larynx. When he was able to testify orally, he was always the first to speak, and his testimonies were ever an inspiration. He now takes part in the services by having his written testimony read by the one in charge. I am forwarding this, the first testimony he wrote after his confinement, to you in hope that its appearance in the "Herald" may help someone else.

Elder E. E. Smith,

2955 Belvidere
Detroit, 14, Michigan

My Dear Brothers and Sisters,

Being unable to talk, I take this means of expressing my thanks to you for your kindly interest, your remembrances, and—above all—your earnest prayers to our Heavenly Father during my illness. Those prayers were heard and answered.

The day after the second operation had been performed, a friend came to see the doctor while he was treating my throat. (I later learned that he was the superintendent of a college for surgeons.) While discussing my case, the doctor said to his friend, "You know, Doctor, up to the very last minute I could not decide what course to take in this operation. I had considered several possibilities, but had little faith in any of them. I knew I had to make up my mind quickly, because this man was nearly unconscious. It was not, however, until after he had been given the ether that the answer came. I said to those standing by to assist me, 'I have it!' for it seemed that a blueprint had been opened up before me, and I followed the lines as they appeared, with the results you now see." His friend answered, "I must congratulate you, Doctor Hammond. It was an operation that I should not have liked to tackle." Could I have spoken, I would have said, "Doctor, that which you refer to as a blueprint, was the hand of God guiding your hand, and the voice of God telling you how to perform the operation," for I am convinced that what happened was a direct answer to your faith and prayers.

I have even more for which to be grateful. Although x-ray and examinations had revealed my heart to be in a weakened condition, it never missed a beat throughout the operation. Several times since my doctor has remarked, "It was the most remarkable experience of my practice." During the first operation they were unable to administer any kind of anesthetic, but strapped me to the table and placed a wooden gag in my mouth. I heard and felt everything that happened, but could not see because I was blindfolded. I think the most welcome words I have ever heard were the doctor's when he said, "That's all, take him to his room." Six days later, after receiving several blood transfusions, I was strong enough to take the ether without any ill effects.

Again I wish to say that I firmly believe that without your prayers I should not be here today. When I entered the hospital the doctor's verdict was, "I'll give him twenty-four hours to live." I ask your continued prayers that I may yet be able to talk. May God bless and reward you.

Brother Leighton.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK

Suggested Sermons Outlines

By Joseph Breshears

These outlines are by no means complete but have been prepared as an aid to stimulate thought. They should be enlarged and adapted to fit the needs of pastors and priesthood members as they are directed by the Spirit. Those using them should first seek to make them their own.

GOD'S WORD FOR TODAY

I. THE WORLD IS IN NEED OF THE WORD OF GOD.

A. "The field is white to harvest" (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 2).

B. The failures of the wisdom of man to cure the world's ills.

C. Prophetic insight as pertaining to this day and its conditions.

Isaiah 24: 1-23, The judgements of God upon the earth.

Malachi 3: 7.

D. The time element
Doctrine and Covenants 6: 2, "Reap while the day lasts."

Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5, "Now it is called today."

Doctrine and Covenants 33: 1, Time soon at hand for second coming of Lord.

II. THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST HAS WHAT THE WORLD NEEDS.

A. The fullness of the gospel.

B. The authority to teach THE WORD.

C. The WORD is powerful

1. "Quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword."

2. "The power of God unto salvation" (Romans 1: 16).

III. OUR NEED FOR PREPARATION — "Give heed to my word."

A. Approved workmen needed (II Timothy 2: 15).

B. Doctrine and Covenants 10: 10, "Seek to obtain my word."

Doctrine and Covenants 83: 14, "Treasure up in your minds, the words of life."

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36, "Seek learning by study, also by faith."

C. Academic training a requirement of the world today. We of the church must be a light unto the world (Matthew 5: 16).

D. The world needs religious education. We must be a light unto the world.

E. What the Department of Religious Education has to offer to help fill our needs

1. Courses of study as outlined in Bulletin 102.

2. Literature prepared to fit the needs of every age group. (Gospel quarterlies, Guide-Lines, etc.)

"The child Jesus tarried behind, and Joseph and his mother knew it not."—Luke 2: 43.

1. Religious education is indispensable in the program of the church.

2. Many times we inadvertently leave the child behind in our program of religious education. The child Jesus tarried behind as the adults proceeded toward their destination.

I. SPIRITUAL AND MENTAL NEGLECT OF CHILDHOOD IS WORSE THAN PHYSICAL NEGLECT.

A. Examples taken from juvenile court records, daily newspapers, etc., concerning neglect of children.

B. Parental responsibility

Proverbs 22: 6.

Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13.

Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

C. The place of the home in the branch program

1. The spirit of the home.

2. Basic family ideals necessary for kingdom-building.

a. A desire to put the kingdom first.

b. A desire to work in harmony with God through study and application.

c. To seek divine guidance through prayer and fasting.

3. The kingdom suffers because of parental neglect. Children are allowed to "just grow up"

a. Ancient Hebrew fathers diligently taught their children.

b. Same need exists today.

D. The branch program and the child
1. The child is often forgotten in the work of the branch.

a. The undesirable location for classes assigned to children.

b. Qualified teachers assigned to adults. Children get what is left.

c. Inadequate and obsolete materials, equipment, etc., good enough for children.

2. The child is often "left behind" because of adult program.

II. THE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION PROGRAM OF THE CHURCH FOSTERS SPIRITUAL AND MENTAL DEVELOPMENT.

A. The branch and the home work together under plan provided.

B. Adequate, up-to-date materials furnished by the best minds of the church.

C. Leadership Training courses provided to qualify parents and teachers. (See Bulletin 102.)

D. Guide-Lines to Leadership offered to assist officers and leaders in providing progressive branch educational features.

Suggested Worship Themes and Topics

By Leola LaLone Sheppard

Theme: GOD'S WORD FOR CHURCHES

"They helped everyone his neighbor; and everyone said to his brother, Be of good courage."—Isaiah 41: 6.

When we speak of the church, we are speaking of people. We are the church. Whenever God has given instruction to the church, he was talking to people. As a church we are as one body in Christ.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 34, 35.

Oh, brother man fold to thy heart thy brother

Where pity dwells the peace of God is there,

To worship rightly is to love each other. Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

He who would climb highest, let him climb as a seeker of God, using the church as a foundation for his climb.

God still talks to us as individuals. Any help or encouragement that comes to us individually should make us better church members. God has a work for the church to do. The church can make the worth of souls great in the sight of God. Each member is important; each task to be done, though small, is important.

One day an artist who was working on a difficult design for a stained-glass window of a great church went for a walk. While he was gone, an old woman came and cleaned his studio. On his return, the artist missed a tiny piece of blue glass. He asked the woman if she had seen it. "A tiny piece of blue glass? I remember it. It was so small I swept it away. What could you do with so small a piece?"

When the tiny piece of glass had been recovered, the artist took it in his hand, mounted the ladder, and placed it skillfully. To the woman he said, "Now look, for it is the most important part of the design." It was the clear blue eye of the Savior.

There is need of the tiniest candle
As well as the glowing sun;
The humblest deed is ennobled
When it is worthily done.
You may never be called to brighten
The darkest regions afar;
So fill for the day your mission
By shining, just where you are.

The strength, the growth, the effectiveness of the church depends upon the personal and spiritual devotion of its members.

"Thy Church, O God"

Thy church, O God, to us is great,
It claims our love, our very best;
Why should we longer stand and wait,
Or falter in our worthy quest?
When here we have a way to show
Our deepest love in deeds well done,
And thereby cause mankind to know
That we have learned of Christ, thy Son.

God's Word for Families

"And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him."—Genesis 2: 18.

God instituted family life. Family life in a godly home is a bit of heaven on earth. Domestic love and the love of God interblend and reinforce each other. If we can find God in marriage, we will find a vital force that saves the home.

The foundation for success and happiness in marriage is laid in understanding, patience, fairness, co-operation, and, of course, love. Love for God and each other.

A family usually includes children. Parenthood is co-operation with God in the great purpose of making humanity godlike. We share with him in the crowning work of creating lives and souls.

There are many things members of the family must do together to become godlike and a Zion-building unit. They must learn that there is one right way, and that is God's way. They should pray together, play together, work together. God should be a welcome guest in each home. He will come where he is invited if the invitation is sincere.

Hymn for a Household

Lord Christ, beneath thy starry dome
We light this flickering lamp of home,
And where bewildering shadows throng,
Uplift our prayer and evensong.
Dost thou, with heaven in thy ken,
Still seek a dwelling place with men,
Wandering the world in ceaseless quest?
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

Lord Christ, the bird his nest has found
The fox is sheltered in his ground,
But dost thou still this dark earth tread
And have no place to lay thy head?
Shepherd of mortals, here behold
A little flock, a wayside fold
That wait thy presence to be blest;
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

—Daniel Henderson.

Family and home are something so closely related that they are inseparable. A home is like a garden where the family grows.

A garden is a place that needs a lot of tender care.

You can't ignore it in the spring and have summer flowers there.

A garden is a lot of work in springtime, summer, fall.

But, oh, the satisfaction just to watch a garden grow,

To see sweet blossoms swaying in the winds that gently blow.

A garden in early morning with petals wet with dew,

Or on a sunny afternoon, bright in every hue.

Or perhaps at even, when the mind has time to roam,

It's the sweetest garden of them all that I compare with home.

A home is a place that needs a lot of tender care,

You can't ignore it ever and still find love growing there,

You have to make home sunny by the things you say and do,

And the way you look and the way you laugh, so others laugh with you.

It doesn't make much difference if the home is large or small

There'll be plenty of work the year around, plenty of work for all.

But, oh, the satisfaction of helping our family grow

Into people of love and beauty, by choosing the seed we sow.

Seeds of love and kindness, tolerance, faith, and bliss,

Where the weeds of hurt and anger can often be pulled with a kiss.

In morning, noon, or evening, when is the home the best?

It's hard to say. The evening, when there's time to think and rest?

But is there ever a time, wherever you may roam,

That you aren't mighty thankful there's a place that you call home?

My home is a garden, and it needs a lot of care,

But it's worth our every effort to see love blooming there,

And if we keep on working through all kinds of weather,

A harvest of happiness into our homes we'll gather.

If you'd like the kind of garden where lovely virtues grow

You're the gardener. Make it so.

Faith in Zion

By R. G. Ayres

Faith is the fundamental principle on which all material, intellectual, and spiritual progress is made. Faith is believing God and making our actions conform therewith. Faith will not allow us to be too much concerned about things as a whole that are in opposition or derogatory to what God has said—and he has said that Zion will be redeemed, if not by us, then by another people.

It seems to me that Zion is a place and a condition to love and enjoy, not a place to go to rectify our present attitudes and leave our present responsibilities to others. Yes, there are a number of people craving for Zion as they understand it, but I am not sure that in our present condition we would be able to endure it, but in our patience possess we our souls.

On the General Church officers rests a great load of responsibility—they have their blue times and disappointments as well as we. Let's not make their work less comfortable by our complaining. If we love our fellow men, we will want to help them. Jesus said, "It is better to give than to receive."

If we still have faith, we will put our all in today and let the morrow take care of itself. Just as soon as we begin to lose faith, we become selfish and critical, and we lose faith when we fail to do our part and trust God with the results. Jesus has said, "Every man must stand or fall by himself alone and not for another," and this ought to bring home to us, first, our own personal responsibility, and then, the value of friendly co-operation.

Patience is one of our best virtues, but it is very little practiced. Patience is sustained endurance of what is unpleasant, without petulance. It is a gift to some, but it can be acquired with a little practice and self-control.

I have been isolated from the church for over twenty-six years, and during this time I have suffered considerably with physical ailments, diseases, and accidents, and all without the kindly aid of friendly administration of the elders, but I have come through it all nearly 100 per cent, thank the Lord. Too, I have never entertained a thought of what I was going to get out of the church, or what the church is going to do for me.

The church is only an instrument in the hand of God, trying to sell us the gospel and Jesus Christ and bring about a condition that will welcome Christ back on earth. There are some of us who would like to play around with the salesman, thinking to be entertained; but after all, it is not the salesman who entertains as a rule in civil life, but the firm that he represents.

I, too, have my blue spells and discouragements, but with God's help I try to make them my servants and not my master. Were it not for making this subject too lengthy, I would tell you how God has sustained me in my daily work when I thought the particular jobs were impossible; how he answered my prayer at one time in five minutes when the words of the prayer would seem to some people that I was tempting the Lord. If we thoroughly understood and appreciated the atonement, we would have the word "Father" on our lips a great deal of the time, even though we do not feel worthy to be called "Son."

Milton, N. Y.

Compensation

It would be impossible to pay personal commendation to each person who gave of his or her time to make the Blue Water reunion one of the outstanding religious experiences of the year, but the corporate testimony of all who helped was that the effort put forth was more than repaid by the manifold blessings received. The feeling which prevailed among the worshipers at the close of reunion was one of renewed determination to take back to their respective branches the spirit of the forward movement. Even as they left, they discussed plans for their return next year to this holy spot, made even more sacred during the week by the touch of the hand of God.—From a report on the Blue Water Reunion.

Lass-I-Tude and Loung-I-Tude

By Grace L. Krahl

Latitude and longitude, as we know, are methods of measuring angular distances on the surface of the earth.

Lass-i-tude and loung-i-tude are more familiar to us, for we use them oftener—in fact, frequently. While they are methodless and purposeless, they are still of importance, for, in the light of the gospel they are determiners of human destiny.

In the parable of Jesus concerning the ten virgins who were bidden to the marriage supper, five were unprepared for entrance upon the great occasion, for upon their late arrival "the door was shut."

We conjecture the lesson Jesus would teach in this narrative is that preparation for the final bidding to this nuptial feast is a continuous life process, since we do not know the day nor the hour when the son of man will come. Delay and procrastination are disastrous; they consume precious time and offer nothing that is helpful, useful, or valuable, and bring only regret.

Recently I heard of a sister who said that at (a certain) time, particularizing to her listener, she would take up church work. Evidently she was thinking about it, which is a good beginning, but I am reminded of the mother who said to her son:

"John, have you thought of the canary?"

"Yes."

"Have you fed him?"

"No."

"Have you given him water?"

"No."

"Then what have you done?"

"Thought about him."

A really good thinker can scarcely keep being a self-examiner. Such a one finds how irrevocable is time when gone, and that it was only lent to be used in God's service, (which is a broad field) thereby preparing him to some day stand in his Master's presence.

"Every man's task," said Emerson, "is his life preserver."

To leave the world a little better because we have lived, ought to be our common goal, but too often it is a belated one. Repose is hardly compatible with the Latter Day work, nor does passivity characterize a defender of the faith.

The Laodicean soliloquy is an example of lack of continuity and vision, of halfheartedness, and finally retirement into complacency: "I am rich and increased with goods and have need of nothing." None of us would like to have the rebuke that followed this self-satisfied expression applied to us (Revelation 3: 16).

I once visited a good sister who had spent many years of her life in the business world and had acquired financial independence; during the course of our conversation she said, with deepest emotion, "I feel I have sustained a great loss spiritually." Failing strength had resulted in a protracted illness, and she went on to say, "I had time to think." Now, with recovery in prospect, she felt she would like to do something more for the church than she had done in her past life, but she added, "I do not know where to begin or what to do." I offered some suggestions and I'm sure, with her humble attitude, she will find avenues of service that will gladden her heart in the years to come.

It is important to be on the right track, but we will get run over if we sit there.

My Rule for Christian Living

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman had this which he called, "My rule for Christian living": "The rule that governs my life is this: Anything that dims my vision of Christ, or takes away my taste for Bible study, or cramps my prayer life, or makes Christian work difficult, is wrong for me, and I must, as a Christian, turn away from it." This simple rule may help you find a safe road for your feet along life's road.—The Watchman-Examiner.

Stone Church

Pastor, Garland Tickemyer

Franklyn Weddle, director of music, was admitted to the Independence Sanitarium on August 10 with a circulatory ailment similar to the one suffered by Evan Fry. During Brother Weddle's illness, Louise Hills Lewis is conducting the Stone Church choir. Director Paul Craig has not yet returned from his vacation in the West. The officers of the Stone Church Savings Credit Union report substantial increases in deposits and a number of well-placed loans; meetings are held each Tuesday evening at the Women's Center. Pastor G. E. Tickemyer delivered his farewell sermon to the Stone Church congregation on August 25. During his pastorate in Independence, he performed 100 marriage ceremonies, assisted in ninety ordinations, and officiated at 600 baptisms. He left Monday morning, August 26, for Los Angeles, California, where he will serve as a general church appointee.

Farewell to Tickemyers

A Zion-wide farewell party in honor of Pastor and Mrs. G. E. Tickemyer was held Thursday evening, August 22, on the Stone Church lawn. Several hundred people were present, representing all the congregations in Independence.

Pastor Tickemyer has served the Stone Church congregation for the past eight and a half years and, with Elder Glaude Smith, has been an assistant to the First Presidency. Elder Smith was master of ceremonies. The program included musical selections by string and vocal trios, and talks by Elder Amos Higdon, associate pastor of Stone Church for the past two years, and President Israel A. Smith. Brother and Sister Tickemyer were then called to the front and Elder Smith presented them a check as a parting token of appreciation from the Saints in Independence. Members of the city-wide women's department acted as hostesses and served refreshments at the close of the evening.

The Tickemyers left Monday morning, August 26, for their new field of service in Los Angeles, California.

Lockwood, Missouri

Pastor, Ed Heide

District President William Patterson was present to conduct the annual business meeting. Officers elected for the coming year were Ed Heide, pastor; C. Galloway, church school director and secretary; Enoch Coose, treasurer; Bessie Searcy, director of music, solicitor, and historian; Charles Arnce, publicity agent; and Lottie Young, women's leader. Elder Patterson addressed the congregation following the business session.

Chicago, Illinois

First Chicago Congregation

Pastor, Lyman Jones

The theme for the month, "Protective Measures," was carried out in the July Communion service; Pastor Lyman Jones presided, with H. T. McCaig giving the sacramental address. Other speakers for the month have been Joseph Baldwin, D. M. Wiesen, and Frank Shank. Prayer and testimony services are held at the church each Wednesday evening. The study class met at the homes of Erich Rathmann and Earl Wiggins in July. The annual picnic of the Friendship Guild was held at Berwyn City Park; district officers Joseph Baldwin and Kenneth Lusha and their families were present. An officer's and teachers' meeting was held July 30 at the home of Lyman Jones; plans for the coming year were completed. Harry Goldstein, recently released from military service, worshiped with the Saints on Sunday, July 28.

Lexington, Michigan

The fourth reunion held on the Blue Water reunion grounds at Lexington by the combined Flint-Port Huron and Detroit-Windsor districts was in session from July 27 to August 4. Over six hundred people camped the entire week. Twelve hundred adults and two hundred children were present on the closing Sunday.

Those in charge of the reunion were Apostles E. J. Gleazer and D. Blair Jensen; District Presidents L. O. Brockway and Blair McClain, Evangelist George H. Booth; Missionaries Harry Simons, Jack Pray, Carl Muir, James Pycock, and Warren Chelline, and the local ministers.

Elder Glen Hardy, supervisor of the junior department, and his corps of workers led the children of the camp through new experiences in worship. The choral group, under the direction of Elder Richard Gault, enriched the services with fine musical contributions; a concert was given on Saturday evening. Organized afternoon recreation presented opportunity for physical exercise, and the campfire and evensong activities provided a variety of entertainment that was enjoyed by all age groups. Ralph Braidwood was manager of the commissary.

The theme of the reunion, "We Go Forward With God," reached a literal fulfillment as the church, through various of its members, was assured of continued growth in the areas to which the spirit of work and unity would be taken.

Pontiac, Michigan

Pastor, Randall Hulse

The junior division of the church school provided an Easter program at the morning worship hour on April 21, both children and teachers taking part. Two babies were blessed: Claudia Jean Cook and John Jess, Jr. In the evening, the Zion's League sponsored a candle-light Communion service with Elder Richard Wood of Royal Oak, Michigan, as guest speaker. High lights of the General Conference were reported to the branch on April 28, by three local delegates: Myrtle Berndt, Otto Berndt, and Alfred Streling. The Mother's Day program was presented by the League; a play, "This Is My Mother," was given. District Missionary Supervisor J. J. Ledsworth was guest speaker on Sunday morning, May 26. Prebaptismal classes, under the supervision of Alfred Streling, church school director, began May 19 and continued each Sunday through June 23. "The Church and Her Sacraments" was the theme of the Children's Day program given by the junior department on June 30. Joann Streling and Archie McLarty were baptized. Earlier baptisms were Joann Hempstead Horton and Marion Heath. Verna Schaar Gustavus and the Seraphic Singers of Detroit gave a concert the evening of June 23. The annual church school picnic was held at Cass Lake on June 29. Members of the women's department meet twice monthly; they have served several suppers and wedding receptions recently.

Attends Park of Pines Reunion

While on my way to northern Michigan, I had the pleasure of meeting with the Saints at the Park of the Pines reunion. I can't recall another gathering in which so many rich spiritual experiences were enjoyed by those attending. Brother J. J. Ledsworth spoke in tongues, and the Spirit of God was present throughout the week. I plan to attend as many of the future reunions as I possibly can.

A daughter, Dale Ann, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hermanson, Jr., at the Independence Sanitarium on August 21. Mrs. Hermanson was formerly Shirley Nelson.

Our Departed Ones

DAVIS.—Jemima, daughter of John J. and Salena Jones, was born March 11, 1875, at Knightsville, Indiana, and passed away August 5, 1946, at Bevier, Missouri, following a long illness. She united with the Reorganized Church in early childhood, remaining loyal to her covenant until death. On April 29, 1905, she was married to Benjamin Davis; two sons were born to this union.

She is survived by her husband and sons; a sister, Mrs. Alvin Bloodgood, and a brother, Alma Jones, both of Kansas City, Kansas. Services were conducted at the Edwards Funeral Home in Bevier on August 7. Elder F. T. Mussell of Des Moines, Iowa, officiating. Burial was in the Oakwood Cemetery.

ANTHONY.—Joanna, was born October 11, 1879, near Troutville, Pennsylvania, and died at the home of her niece, Mrs. Donald Maze, in Cleveland, Ohio, on May 13, 1946. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 11, 1908, and remained a faithful and devoted worker throughout her life. For many years she managed a dressmaking shop in Cleveland. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. Funeral services were held in Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, Elder Casimir Nikel officiating. Interment was in the Greenwood Cemetery.

HOFFMAN.—Dora, was born in Marne, Iowa, on March 27, 1867, and passed away July 6, 1946, at the Independence Sanitarium. She and her husband, Jay Hoffman, joined the Reorganized Church over fifty years ago and were charter members of the Armstrong branch in Kansas City, Kansas. Mr. Hoffman preceded her in death in 1927, after which she made her home with her children.

Left to mourn are four daughters: Mrs. Grace Apple, Leoti, Kansas; Mrs. Chelsea Logan, Canada; Mrs. Ruth Bruch, Cherryvale, Kansas; and Mrs. Fern Miller, Hickman Mills, Missouri; two sons: Charles of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Warren of Morehead, Kansas; a brother, Samuel Allen, Spokane, Washington; eighteen grandchildren, and nineteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Fourth Kansas City Church, with Pastor Lloyd Siebert in charge and Elder J. O. Worden giving the sermon. She was laid to rest in the Leoti cemetery beside her husband.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Judging the Fruit

C. H. Spurgeon used to tell this story:

An American said to a friend, "I wish you would come down to my garden and taste my apples." He asked him about a dozen times, but the friend did not come, and at last the fruit grower said, "I suppose you think my apples are good for nothing, so you won't come and try them."

"Well, to tell the truth," said his friend, "I have tasted them. As I went along the road I picked one up that fell over the wall, and I never tasted anything so sour in my life. I do not particularly want any more of your fruit."

"Oh," replied the owner of the garden, "I thought it must be so. These apples around the outside are for the special benefit of the boys. I went fifty miles to select the sourest sorts to plant all around the orchard so the boys might give them up as not worth-while stealing. But if you will come inside, you will find that we grow a very different quality there, sweet as honey."

Those who judge the church by its worst members (the hangers-on around the edge), those most like the world make the same mistake.

* THE STORY OF YOUR CHURCH WANTED

It has been suggested that a good series of features for publication would be a pictorial and literary representation of the branches of the church. We would like to have such material, which would be of interest and have general historical value. Such a feature should include the following:

1. A good picture of the church, with due regard for shrubs, trees, and other factors that enhance beauty. It should not have cars nor any people in front of the building. This should be of a good quality to make a cover picture.

2. Pictures of the pastor and other church officers or prominent persons featured in the articles. Snapshots can sometimes be used if light, composition, and background are good, but unless very good they are generally not satisfactory. Studio portraits are much better.

3. A brief summary of branch beginnings and history. This should be interesting, not just a chronicle of dates and events. Length, 1,000 to 1,200 words.

4. An article about the life of the branch today, the services, special events, activities, and other matters. Length, 1,000 to 2,000 words. Should be typewritten, and of as good literary quality as possible.

No army can withstand the strength of an idea whose time has come.—Victor Hugo.

Ideas are like beards: men do not have them until they grow up.—Voltaire.

An idea, to be suggestive, must come to the individual with the force of a revelation.—William James.

* Somebody asked Uncle Joe why he carries so many pens and pencils in his pocket. "I am a poor man," he said. "I cannot afford very good ones—certainly none of these new modern streamlined, atomic models with ball-bearing points, chromium plate, and platinum fixtures. The price of one of them would pay an American grocery bill for two weeks, keep a Chinaman alive for a year, or stabilize the currency of a Balkan monarchy. So I carry these cheap models. Sometimes one or more of them is working, sometimes none. Anyway, it's fun to try them out each morning to see which one is operating for that day."

* POPULAR MAGAZINE asks the question, "A 65-cent dollar?" . . . Well, sir, that would help. Where we buy, it's only worth about fifty cents now.

The Appointee Institute

Independence has the pleasure these days of seeing a considerable number of its younger missionaries, pastors, and workers under general church appointment here at headquarters for the Appointee Institute, which began August 28 and continues through September 14. This educational gathering has been arranged and is being conducted by members of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, with assistance from other church officers and workers.

It is a source of great satisfaction to meet with these fine younger men, to observe the excellent program of study and discussion in which they are sharing, and to see the quality of their response and conversation. That the church has been able to call to its service such a quality of men is a tribute to its strength and vitality. It is to be hoped that the years immediately ahead may see their numbers greatly augmented.

Each day's program is full. It begins in the morning with a worship service, and continues with class lectures and discussions throughout the day. In late afternoon there is a period of physical exercise and recreation, mostly on the volleyball courts in the basement of the Auditorium. Evenings are devoted to demonstrations and discussions of methods of visual education, as applied to missionary work. Lectures cover doctrine, homiletics, administrative principles, worship, music, visual aids, and related subjects. Meals are provided for the men at the Auditorium by the Laurel Club, and rooms are found in the homes of church members.

The Appointee Institute is but one of many fine new projects initiated and conducted under the direction of the First Presidency, an evidence of the effectiveness and energy of the administration in pushing forward the work of the church.

Veteran's Viewpoint

In this issue we are presenting an article by a young church member, a returned veteran of the late war, which some readers may find somewhat strong. "The Challenge" embodies the feelings, reactions, and hopes of a young member who is really expecting something of the church. In a sense he is writing only for himself, but in another sense, what he has to say is representative of his generation—the war generation. Probably other veterans will wish to add some comment to what is here presented; some may even have some different ideas; if so, they will be welcomed.

We who are growing on toward middle age and older now, can remember our own youth. We spent quite a lot of time trying to get older people to listen to our ideas. They did not always pay much attention, but probably we received as much attention as we deserved. At any rate, our whole experience was in seeking to be heard.

Now a new generation is here, with new ideas and a few criticisms. Now we need to learn to listen. In our time, we were the future of the church, but that time is past. The future is represented in these new young people. It will be hard for us to listen and learn in this unaccustomed way, but we must try to do it. We should be respectful of the young, because some day they will be our leaders, possibly even our bosses, thinking in the industrial sense. They may even be our teachers. Certainly they will be our successors. You may think it is a great art to learn to speak; but in your mature years you know that it is a greater art to learn to listen.

So we present this article to our readers and say, "Listen! Here is the future, speaking to us. We may not agree with the thought, but we should give it an audience."

From the days of our own youth we have modified and changed. We have dropped many of our sharper viewpoints and radical ideas. Our criticisms have been softened. We explain the blunting edge of our perceptions with a euphemism—charity. We are too comfortable in a world that is in many respects evil. Our sin is complacency and contentment. Pope described this sin:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Only in those who are old, satisfied, and tired are consciences "seared as with a hot iron." God keeps conscience alive in the minds and hearts of the young.

Another thing we should all remember. It is necessary to be kind and patient with the young as they try out their powers. Wise horsemen, when they first put a harness upon a colt and a bit in his mouth, drive with a loose rein, until he becomes accustomed to working in harness and in a team with other horses. Fine horses are developed that way.

Great individuals are developed only in freedom exercised within reasonable limits. There must be freedom, and there must be reasonable limits. In any contact between two generations, both generations should be able to learn something.

We welcome young contributors to share in the work we are carrying on for the church. Their energy and inspiration are needed. Those who have been through the trial of war are more mature than their years.

L. J. L.

WALLS

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

MANY OLD Biblical cities were surrounded by walls which served as a protection against enemy invasion. Yet these walls were not foolproof, for cities were conquered and changed hands often in spite of those fortifications. Probably the greatest war farce of all times was the Great Wall of China, which did nothing to daunt the barbaric Siberian hordes. World War II saw the Maginot line and its counterpart in other localities. But armored force was not deterred a trifle, let alone stopped by concrete and steel. In an age of air power, no wall can be effective in even a small degree.

Walls may serve either of two purposes, to shut someone out or to keep someone in. Great estates are often walled about because the dwellers do not wish vagrants, tourists, or unwelcome guests to intrude upon their privacy. It is a long-honored custom in Spanish countries to build a wall around the home, creating an inside garden which they call a patio. Often these jardines are exquisite gems of color, but few people ever see them except the family behind that wall.

Sometimes a person essays to build an imaginary wall about himself as a protection against the "cold, cruel world." This wall of reserve and self-imposed loneliness may serve as a partial buffer against heartaches and petty annoyances, but the world no longer runs for the benefit of anyone individual, but rather for the good of society as a whole. Thus an artificial wall of reticence serves only to isolate the individual, keep his good traits unavailable to others, and cuts him off from the advantages of the association with people like himself in interests and ambitions.

LIKEWISE, a branch may wall itself about. It may impoverish its members and endanger their spirituality by cutting them from the main body. I've heard individuals make the assertion, "We don't need general church, for we are a sovereign body." They start out by not taking publications, supporting missionaries, or paying tithing; and they degenerate to the condition where these things are most needed. "We don't need general church stepping in and telling us what to do. We can make our own decisions." And that attitude implies that the tail wants to wag the dog.

"And we don't see why we have to bring in Brother X to preach to us, when our own Brother Y is just as good a speaker." Brother Y is a good man, well-intentioned, but he works in one spot month after month and is not privileged to gain the broader experience of the visiting man.

The financial wall may become stifling. A branch may be rich and prosperous, maintaining an excellent house of worship; but it may make little or no monetary contributions to the forwarding of the church in other localities. It is as though they verbally state, "The only souls worth saving are our own."

There are dozens of families who never attend conferences or reunions even though they live within walking distance of the meeting place. There are hundreds of families who have no subscription to the official organ of the church, The Saints Herald. They are building a wall of church isolation about themselves.

LAST WEEK I was talking to a lady who has belonged to our church for fifty years. (I have no fear of insulting her, for she doesn't see copies of this paper.) She asked about the health of my paternal grandparents, both of whom have been dead for several years. Their death was chronicled in our papers and in several memorial services, held in her own town, but she had known of neither. Maybe this is a very facetious thought, but I'm wondering how long a period of time will pass after Gabriel blows his horn until someone says, "Why didn't they tell me Gabriel was in town."

Our church has no place for hermit branches or individuals. It's trite but true, "We're all for one, and one for all."

How to Enjoy the Bible

Dr. Howard W. Pope tells the story of a young lady who read a book, and having completed it remarked that it was the dullest book she had read in many a day. Not long after this experience she met a young man, and in the course of time their friendship ripened into love, and they became engaged. During a visit in the home of his fiancee one evening, she said to him, "I have a book in my library which was written by a man whose name and even initials are precisely the same as yours. Is not that a singular coincidence?"

"I do not think so," he replied.

"Why not, I pray?"

"For the simple reason that I wrote the book."

Dr. Pope concludes the story by remarking that the young lady sat up until the early morning hours to read the book again, and when it was completed it seemed to her the most interesting book she had ever read. It wasn't dull at all. She found it fascinating. The secret? She knew and loved the author!

You will enjoy the greatest of all books, the Bible, God's Word, if you love the Author. "We love him because he first loved us."—Seek.

Shakespeare vs. the Bible

While speaking of the power of God's Word one night in Hyde Park, I heard a man interrupt, crying out, "There are plenty of other books just as good."

"Well," was my reply, "tell us one!"

"Shakespeare!" he returned.

"Now I happen to know," said I, "many men who were won to Christ from drunkenness, gambling, vice, or ungodliness, by just one verse out of the Bible. Can you tell me of one man rescued from the curse of drink through reading a sentence of Shakespeare, or even the whole book?"

"No, sir," he answered more civilly.—High School Christian.

We, the People of the Church, Are Warned

Elbert Dempsey, Jr.,

who evaluates our hope of Zion against the background of our complacency, apathy, and lack of vision, and proposes a new and better effort, in a fearless and vigorous article,

The Challenge!

Are the charges true?
Is the remedy practical?
What will we do about it?

CIVILIZATION is tottering. Nations have fallen and cultures still decay. Over much of the globe, morality and decency have dissolved before the specters of fear, hate, starvation. Even the land of the free and pompous quails before unprecedented crime, immorality, and uncertainty. From all humanity rises a plea for security and a better way of life. Communists, clerics, and democrats squabble for the soul of man. All bring promises, but none bring satisfaction.

Where is the light? Who can show man the way to live in peace and harmony and security? From the hills of Missouri to the ruins of Berlin, millions wait for a savior to present his credentials and claim their allegiance. But they wait in vain.

There is on this globe a group which claims a divine mission to establish, here on earth, a Zion community where all who earnestly seek can find brotherhood and happiness. Most men never heard of this group. Most who have think its main characteristic is an overdose of conceit. If I had not been reared in this group—our church—I would, too.

In the first few years under Joseph Smith, it flourished from nothing to 200,000, built the largest city in Illinois, and conducted large-scale migrations.

TODAY the church is not holding her town in society. The general population and typical religious group is increasing 7 per cent yearly. Her baptisms scarcely equal her deaths. Thirty-five per cent of her people come to church on Sunday. This is a little better than most churches, but certainly not a people about to build the kingdom. Her people are a fine Christian people—better than average—but not kingdom-building quality. Like most local governments and churches, she moved from debt to a generous financial surplus during the lush years following the depression; in fact, her recovery started a little sooner and has come a little farther. Yes, she is a very respectable and normal part of the American scene. But she is not building Zion, she is not building a superior type of people who can participate in Zion, she is not a demonstration to the world that Christ's way of life can and does work. The triumphant grandeur of many fine old Latter Day Saint hymns is an ironic mockery that should hurt in the singing.

The lethargy that racks our church is largely the impotence born of confusion and mental void. Of course some will say we have the light, and if people would just accept it and live by it, that all would be well. This is true, but our calling is to present a message that an honest and intelligent mind cannot resist, a message that will lead men to a better way of life; a message that will reach down into a man's soul and reshape him in its own image. What we offer to the world and to ourselves obviously does not carry this overpowering persuasion and impetus except in rare cases of spiritual intervention.

A ZION-BUILDING gospel will attract, ennoble, and compel men to build Zion. All we have is a Zion-BELIEVING gospel.

We cry that the sinful world and an indifferent membership account for our stagnation. This is a true but fatal apology to our conscience. The sinful world is as righteous and anxious for our ministry as we are ever likely to find it. The indifferent membership will remain indifferent till it is electrified by a greater vision than it now beholds.

We cannot advance by saying we need a more devoted and righteous people. Our job is to find and follow the program, or gospel, that will in fact lead us, and thousands now outside the church, step by step from where we are today to a Zion level of devotion and righteousness. Nor can one do it by simply resolving to be a kingdom-building Latter Day Saint. Such a determination always helps but always becomes snarled in the problems and perplexities of everyday life unless powerfully buttressed by a sense of mission and an enlightened social philosophy such as one sees little of these days.

THREE THINGS are needed if we are ever to be worthy of our calling.

First, we need a clearly defined sense of purpose. This need we meet fairly well. Here lies our greatest strength.

We have a calling to spread the gospel to all the world and to build, in partnership with God, a society of brotherhood, peace, and happiness. This is a challenge to bring out the best in a man. Thousands of our people who have caught the beauty and urgency of this vision are the backbone of our branches wherever you travel. Many outside our church have sensed that here is something too big to resist and have joined the church.

But I am thinking of many more thousands in the church who are not stirred by any clear-cut idea of why our church exists or the greatness of our calling. And I am thinking of thousands outside the church who are victims of misguided missionary activity—people who think our great purpose is to fight other churches or make a boast of our relation to God.

We have a great and inspiring goal. It is a way of life that has inspired the noblest minds of all peoples and ages. Christian, pagan, and atheist have all made contributions to the great Utopian dream. It is our proud purpose to bring this great dream to reality. We must always make this goal the center of our thinking and teaching. It must be constantly emphasized in the minds of all our members and all we contact that our one driving passion is to build better men, in order to build a better society, in order to have a better life and still better men for the happiness and salvation of all.

We are engaged in a great adventure. We are in partnership with God and with the greatest minds of history. I have not the space for it here, but there is a stirring story that, when fully told and constantly driven home, cannot fail to bring added strength and devotion to the strongest.

But the more inspiring the goal, the greater the disillusionment, if there are not the means to attain it.

This brings us to our second need and most bitter failure. Our crying need is for a philosophy indoctrinating the people with a clearly understood sense of social responsibility, one clearly and eloquently presenting the need for and the nature of the Christian virtues. I do not mean a philosophy that says we SHOULD have a sense of social responsibility; I mean one that actually BRINGS us this sense of social responsibility.

We have numerous instructions to follow if we would be Zion-building Christians. Each of us, on many occasions, resolves to obey them. As a people we are failing. Our problem is not to find "the way" to live. That has been revealed to us. Our problem is to find the added strength, understanding, and conviction to actually live that way. It would be simple if this were an outright gift also, but our experience proves it is not as a rule. Yet it is waiting to be grasped.

Through the centuries men have found by experiment, study, and accident, a vast body of truths on every phase of human interest. The pale of darkness is being pushed back on every hand. Less and less of human conduct is left to guesswork or prejudice. The farmer can find from the Department of Agriculture just what strain of corn is best for his locality and purpose: his crops are far superior to what they were. When a smallpox epidemic threatens, doctors no longer smoke the peace pipe with the gods or bleed their patients: they know just what to do and the once great scourge is now eliminated as a serious menace. In the fields of psychology and social problems, similar progress is being made. Psychology did not become a full-fledged science till the end of the first World War. It made a few false starts and fumbled a few ideas for the first ten or fifteen years, but since then has made notable progress in mastering the riddle of human behavior.

Christ said that one day we could do greater things than he had done. We can now see why. His purpose was to plant certain principles of life to guide men. Only a few who heard him believed, and only a few of these had the imagination and enlightenment to interpret these things in terms of the life about them and really understand what he meant. Even these gifted few had doubts till after the miracle of his resurrection.

Today as a result of human experience in many fields, scientists can prove many points concerning honesty, charity, dignity, love, and humility in which Christ, in his time, could only inspire a vague belief. As an example—Jesus had difficulty making even the intelligent and open-minded believe that the well-adjusted poor man would be happier than the pompous rich. The modern specialist can prove it to a dimwit in a few minutes with far less power of persuasion than the Christ possessed.

In a sense this is a tendency to make the principles of Zionism, not a matter of faith or vaguely defined belief, but rather a science of certainty. I submit it as the testimony of history that this is the only hope for ever building Zion.

Last year at General Conference, one had to go no further than the cafeteria line in the basement to find why Zion cannot be built now. Being composed of fine Latter Day Saints, it may have been a little better behaved than some waiting lines, but it was not a Zionism-waiting line. I saw a few devoted old brothers and sisters of modest means who must have made a sacrifice to attend conference—the kind who testify long of the Lord's goodness to them and their devotion to the cause. Their dear old hearts were no doubt breaking that Zion had not been built—but right then they were hungry. They shuffled alongside the line of people ahead mumbling apologetically about being crowded from the rear; and, without any help from the rear, moved right on toward the front. Yes, sir, they had dedicated themselves to Zion in a hundred prayer meetings. You could read it in their faces. But they momentarily wrecked it in a hundred hearts that noon. They didn't need faith in the great goals of the church. Their hearts were steeped in it. What they needed was what we all need.

First, we need to clearly understand what tricky things our minds are. Things we desire, fear, love, or hate pervert our thin thinking. The mind quickly grasps a fact that serves its purpose, but it hesitates and tries to rationalize away one that is unpleasant. The more sincere a man, the less he questions his motives, and the more susceptible he is to this dishonesty and perversion of outlook within his own mind.

This makes it possible for a business man and laborer to study the same material in a dispute and come to opposing conclusions, both with complete sincerity. We are cursed with no end of fervent disputation and glossed-over anti-social action that logical and honest thought would make impossible.

Proof is available to make our people acutely sensitive to the fact that the normal functioning of their own minds often poses a threat to Zionism. And we have proved methods to condition them to sound, impartial logic as the natural approach to life's problems. We can assure our people of a Zionism quality of thinking which is the first step toward Zion. But this first step will never be taken by a ministry whose interest in truths is limited to those in the Three Sacred Books of the church.

From there we go on to other qualities.

Charity, thoughtfulness, friendliness, humility, honesty, and all the other virtues one could name must become habitual to our people before they are capable of Zion. But before these can endure the trials of everyday life and separation from church influence, they must be backed by an array of proof no intelligent man can resist. These virtues must be so thoroughly understood that there can be no doubt about what is meant. No man must be able to gloss over a little sin by telling himself it wasn't really a sin. His teaching must be so thorough that a sin is glaringly revealed at face value. Sin must be made so obviously stupid, and right so obviously beneficial, that there is little room for question as to what will be done.

What distinguishes a fine Zionism man from an inferior one is his depth of understanding of life and his training to live according to that understanding. We can bring ourselves this depth of understanding and training if we will wed the great goals and truths of the church to the vast body of supporting truths and techniques which men have tried and proved through the ages. Then we will not only understand better what we should become—and why—but we will have the tools to assure success.

But a perfect philosophy is useless until heard and believed.

THIS BRINGS us to the third great need of the church. We need a ministry afire with enthusiasm and understanding for this purpose and philosophy of ours, and capable of presenting it effectively.

Enthusiasm will come with the simple fact of a clear and inspiring purpose coupled with a clear, complete, and irresistible philosophy of life to bring it to reality. More fire will be added as this thing begins to stir the lives and the people as our ministers cannot stir them today. Nothing breeds high morale like success.

Of course we need men who can write and speak eloquently and clearly. A man with sincerity and a stirring message is futile if he cannot hold an audience and put it across. An advanced course in speech techniques and organization would revolutionize the effectiveness of many of our ministers. A golden tongue is not a gift; it is a reward.

We must tailor our ministry to meet the nature of the people. Christ did not speak in parables because that was the best method for all times and peoples. He did it because it was the best way to make his untutored hearers grasp his points. In the early days of our church, all America was swept by a wave of religious hysteria. Every sect had huge revivals with as many as 20,000 camping together. People would walk the length of the state to attend, and emotional fervor often approached fanaticism. Our church, along with the rest, reaped a large harvest. It was a poor harvest. They were won because they believed Joseph was the prophet of God, and they had faith in his church, or because they reveled in the grandeur of his program, or because they believed Jesus was the son of God, and they felt his power in the church. When the prophet was taken, they still had faith but not understanding, and the proud church fell into bickering factions. For some years not one of them had the power of God and held to the principles of Joseph.

We cannot reap such a harvest today in any numbers. Modern education makes men more resistant to emotion or an appeal to faith. Our ministers could cry all night that this church has the same priesthood as Christ set up, and they could quote a thousand Biblical passages trying to prove we were foretold by the prophets, and they would never have converted me—and they do not hold my friends.

But if we can convince men our great experiment has a worthwhile place for them, if we can show them the workable plan to achieve this great goal, and if we use logic and language, the modern man of affairs can understand and accept, then—and only then—can we compete with the doctrine of materialism for the minds and hearts of men. Only then can we hope for any sizable harvest. But once we do rise to meet the demanding dictates of winning an educated man's allegiance, we will reap a more enlightened and firmly grounded harvest than Joseph's Saints proved to be.

We must also remember that there are groups within the church which require different approaches. Much progress has been made toward meeting this problem in church literature, although the lack is very marked for the late teen and twenties age group. In sermons the adaptability to most groups is generally worse and in priesthood visits it is criminal.

Our ministry must not only teach but shepherd. We must have a priesthood that is wise in the ways of life, men who can go into a home and render the service of an expert social worker, men who can use both the sage advice of the Scriptures and the discoveries of science in helping people meet their individual problems, men who will keep the teachings of the church before the people in their daily affairs so that those teachings will become a habit. And we shall have such men in our priesthood when we have the vision and philosophy of which we have spoken to challenge them, and if we arm them with extensive practical training so they can be spurred by the taste of success in their ministry.

THESE are the things we need: the goal, the philosophy to prepare for it, and the priesthood to administer it. Now—what can we do today with what we have?

As individuals we can study a few of these things I have mentioned. A score of full articles should be written on the material I am outlining briefly.

Our ministers must direct their thinking and teaching more to the problems of life and less to the problems of theology.

They must spend less time convincing us the Lord delights in honesty and more time showing how it profits us and the kingdom and how to avoid the pitfalls. Our most effective ministers do this.

But these are small beginnings. To wed the vast complex of modern discovery with the great truths of the kingdom is a full-time job for scholars and men of spiritual vision. And to propagate it fully and correctly among the ministry calls for a full-time staff. The need is for a revival of the School of the Prophets and of the elders with advisory staffs in the fields vital to producing kingdom-building personalities.

I perceive the first step is for the church to select several young men of ability, and mature men of experience to train themselves for this thing. As they make progress in their training, call them together to consult, pray, and study further. As they arrive at concrete results, have them prepare literature and courses of study to send out. Call in members of the ministry to study with them for a time. I see this school as a profound study into the problems of life and the ministry. It is needed to bring up the fullness of the gospel, which according to the best definition I know is "all truth."

It is a step only our church can take, for only we have such an incentive. Only we have the revealed gospel to use as a standard to judge the findings of men. Only we have spiritual assistance in our quest.

Of course such a step will never be taken without a revelation. But I have no doubt that such a revelation will and must come. My purpose is to arouse interest and thought on the subject and possibly induce a few to prepare themselves to participate in it. Thus the move can come sooner, and we can be better prepared when it does come.

Why Prejudice Them?

A visitor of Coleridge argued strongly against the religious instruction of the young and declared his own determination not to "prejudice" his children in favor of any form of religion, but to allow them at maturity to choose for themselves.

The answer of Coleridge was pertinent and sound. "Why prejudice a garden in favor of flowers and fruit? Why not let the clods choose for themselves between cockleburrs and strawberries.—Presbyterian Record."

The Presidency of the High Priesthood

By W. E. Wakeman

This article is designed to give help and stability to members who have been troubled by some misunderstandings of the Scripture, and we trust that it will be studied with care for the thought and material it contains. The author has a fine record of pastoral service for the church; as a volunteer worker he has given consecrated leadership. He was until recently pastor of the Englewood congregation, Independence, and will be engaged in evangelistic work in the future.—L. J. L.

"Whatsoever God shall do shall stand forever."

HOLY WRIT is very clear on the fact that there has always been in every age and dispensation a presiding high priest over this greater priesthood, and who also was the president, prophet, seer, and revelator for the church of Jesus Christ.

During the sojourn of the children of Israel in the wilderness and for many centuries later in the promised land of Canaan, we know that the governing Mosaic Law was a shadow, type and symbol of the everlasting gospel in its fullness. This strict schoolmaster, the Mosaic Law, with its covenant, followed the rejection of the gospel through lack of faith and hard heartedness of the children of Israel. So God ordained that it should continue only until the true and better covenant of Christ should again be established on earth. It was, therefore, prophetic in respect to doctrine and ecclesiastical organization of the coming ninth hour Christian dispensation. "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect" (Hebrews 10: 1). If the law had a "shadow of good things to come" could not that refer to ecclesiastical government and the "ancient landmark" type of church rule? We find that the church government during the forty years in the wilderness and for many centuries later under the Mosaic Law was indeed highly centralized and was largely vested in a presidential quorum. We find this statement of the Lord to Moses recorded in Exodus 4: 16: "He [Aaron] shall be thy spokesman unto the people." From this record alone, we know that Moses was designated by the Lord as leader, president, and prophet of the early Mosaic church; also, that Moses had two counselors in this presidency is proved by these quotations from Exodus. We quote, "Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill . . . and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, . . . and his hands were steady" (Exodus 17: 10, 12). While this is a reference to the warfare the Israelites waged with their deadly enemy, the Amalekites, it also very clearly symbolizes the necessity for two counselors who will actively co-operate with the leader of the church. This fact is further proved by this recorded statement of Moses to the children of Israel as he was being summoned into the Mount by the Lord: "Behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them" (Exodus 24: 14). After the death of Moses and removal of the holy priesthood by the Lord, we find he was succeeded by the high priest of the order of Aaron or lesser priesthood which was to be only a shadow and type of the government of the church under the Christian dispensation. (See Exodus 34: 1, 2, Inspired Version; Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4; Hebrews 7: 11, 12.)

With the passing of Moses, who held office in the Melchisedec or holy order of the Son of God, there was a substitution of a lesser priesthood for his high and holy priesthood. The Lord, thereafter, used the high priest or president of the Aaronic order. It is a well-understood fact among all students of the Old Testament that, after Moses, there was established over the 12 tribes of the children of Israel a high or chief priest who was the president of the Levitical priesthood. All the male descendants of Aaron were by divine appointment consecrated to the priesthood, the firstborn of the family, in regular succession, occupying the office of high priest. With this office there was instituted, as a substitute for the Holy priesthood, the Urim and Thummim (meaning light, revelation, and perfection). It was composed of two stones placed in the high priest's breastplate in order to be upon his heart when he went in before the Lord and was the medium through which the divine will was sought and made known. (See Exodus 28:30.) Until the time of David, when there was no divinely appointed judge, this president of the Order of Aaron exercised also the functions of supreme ruler of Israel. We find that even before the end of Moses' career, the Lord made provision for this presidency. (See Leviticus 8: 8.) This shows us that the Mosaic Law made men high priests of the order of Aaron by which perfection could not come and which created a great need that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec and not be called after the order of Aaron (Hebrews 7: 77). As is further explained in this reference, there was created a need of a more excellent ministry which is the mediator of a better covenant which was established from the foundation of the world or in that "early in the morning" Adamic era, upon better promises.

Now we are admonished not to remove "the ancient landmarks," for, as Ecclesiastes 3: 14 relates: "I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever." Of necessity there are presidents or presiding officers growing out of, or appointed of or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in the two priesthoods, namely the Melchisedec and Aaronic. Paul assures us in I Corinthians 14: 33-40: "God is not the author of confusion, . . . let all things be done decently and in order." We find that the unanimous decisions of a quorum of three presidents, who were ordained after the order of Melchisedec and were righteous and holy men, were anciently attended by the greatest blessings. There must be, therefore, of necessity, to avoid confusion, a presiding high priest for this priesthood as well as for the church collectively. Through this presiding officer this greater priesthood (Melchisedec) administers the gospel and holds the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. One of the ancient landmarks was a lineal priesthood conferred upon Aaron and his seed and in this respect was similar to the Melchisedec. (See Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2.) This is emphatic and proves conclusively that the presidency of this priesthood (Aaronic) belongs only by right to the literal descendants of Aaron, and that to the firstborn. In like manner the holy order of the Son of God was confirmed to be handed down from father to son and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed (Ephraimitish division) of the House of Israel to whom the ancient promises were made. God decreed unto Aaron that the priesthood conferred upon him should continue with him and his seed throughout all generations. In like manner did God promise Seth through his father, Adam, that his posterity should be the chosen of the Lord and that they should be preserved unto the end of the earth (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 19.).

With the foregoing in mind, is it reasonable to believe that the Lord would make a better and surer provision for the continuance of the presidency of the lesser priesthood which is but an appendage to the greater, than for this greater priesthood? We think not, and moreover we have the word of the Lord to show that the Lord had made equal provision for the presidency of both the lesser and the greater priesthood. Latter-day revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2) traces this lineal genealogy backward from Moses to Adam 2553 years. This established a precedent from Adam to Noah and God being unchangeable, this holy order would partake of his immutability, except, of course, in case of disqualification through lack of posterity or transgression, in which case the Lord would have the right to choose the next of kin. In Doctrine and Covenants 104: 19 where the lineage of priesthood is revealed, it is quite probable that others besides the persons named held this holy order, but those mentioned by name certainly held the presidency of the priesthood in their times and occupied this position by virtue of law of lineal descent, being handed down from father to son or brother to brother.

The New Testament reveals the fact that Jesus Christ was the president of the church or the presiding high priest of the order of Melchisedec during his earthly ministry and upon his resurrection undoubtedly made provision for this highly centralized presidential quorum. Nowhere in the Scriptures do we find that he was to be the last great high priest. To show the immutability of the gospel plan, we quote Jesus thus: "I appoint unto you a kingdom [church] as my Father hath appointed unto me" (Luke 22: 29). A statement of the Apostle Paul throws light on this appointment which we quote: "God hath set some in the church; first, apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers" (I Corinthians 12: 28; Ephesians 4: 11). During our Lord's ministry we find the apostles returned from their mission fields and reported their labors to him as did also the quorum of seventies.

We find this interesting statement of the church organization recorded by Luke: "Then he [Jesus] called his twelve disciples together, . . . and he sent them to preach the kingdom of God" (Luke 9: 1, 2). You will note that the apostles did not send themselves, but the president or head of the church sent them. Later in Luke 9: 10 we find that "the apostles, when they returned, told [reported to] Jesus all that they had done." Then further to record and testify of how the church was governed and organized, Luke states that "after these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, where he himself would come" (Luke 10: 1). And upon their return from their missions we find this happened, "and the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us" (Luke 10: 7).

We refer to these recorded incidents during Jesus' personal ministry to throw some light on the type of organization he evidently referred to in Luke 22: 29 and to show further proof of the existence, always, of a centralized authority, the presidency.

The Apostle Paul clearly recorded in his writings the existence of a presidential quorum whose residence seemed to be located at Jerusalem, the church headquarters. Persecution later may have caused this headquarters to have been changed to some other city, perhaps Antioch. Statements preserved to us through various New Testament letters assure us that "the ancient landmarks, which thy fathers have set" (Proverbs 22: 28), were not removed. Paul apparently desired to make clear to the saints of his day that there must be a presiding prophet to which others must be subject. We quote Paul thus: "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confusion. . . . Let all things be done decently and in order" (I Corinthians 14: 32, 33, 40). The apostle evidently had this same thought in mind when he dispatched his letter to the saints at Rome, for we find he commands, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers" (Romans 13: 1-6). While the Scriptures seem to be somewhat indefinite and to leave much to be taken for granted, yet when pieced together seem to clearly indicate in the church Christ personally organized the "ancient landmark" of the presiding high priest or president. Paul states that after a certain apostolic missionary tour of three years' duration he returned to Jerusalem and visited with Peter. There he states he also saw James, the Lord's brother, and fourteen years later he went up again to Jerusalem and refers to James, Cephas, and John as pillars. (See Galatians 1: 19; 2: 9.) This clearly indicates that the church was centrally governed by a presidential quorum of three men. The writer of the Book of Acts, said to be Luke, throws considerable light on this trip to Jerusalem after an absence of fourteen years. (See Acts 15: 13, 19.) At this time there was great dissension in the church touching circumcision, and it became necessary for Paul and Barnabas to go up to Jerusalem, the headquarters of the church. Otherwise, why should these apostles travel several hundred miles to Jerusalem for instruction and settlement of this doctrinal question? This is an example of Paul's meaning when he wrote: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers" (Romans 13: 1). Paul and Barnabas stated their case before the joint council, and after they finished, we find recorded (See Acts 15: 13) that James, the Lord's brother, and undoubtedly His successor in the presidency, answered for the church. James concludes his verdict by the words, "wherefore, my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God" (Acts 15: 19). We feel these scriptural citations alone indicate a governing highly centralized council at Jerusalem with a presiding officer over the whole church.

Now let us turn to the Book of Mormon and turn the floodlight on its testimony on this question of presidency in the church of Jesus Christ. In the Book of Mosiah, chapter 9, as the Prophet Abinadi concludes a wonderfully inspired and powerful sermon addressed to the wicked priests of King Noah, he says, "therefore, if ye teach the law of Moses also teach that it is a shadow of those things which are to come: teach them that redemption cometh through Christ the Lord." This sermon so inspired and moved upon Alma, then a young man, one of the wicked priests of King Noah, who taught or practiced the Law of Moses, that he repented. His heart was softened and his mind so illumined that we find he was soon entrusted with authority to baptize in the name of the Lord. We find verse 49 of chapter 9 of this book states that the people baptized were "called the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward." Alma was the head of this newly organized Church of Jesus Christ, for verse 51 states that "he having authority from God, ordained priests." To further confirm this presidency vested in Alma I, we find that chapter 11, verses 17 and 18 of the same book states, "now Alma was their high priest, he being the founder of their church. And it came to pass that none received authority to preach or to teach, except it were by him from God."

The record states that about 91 B.C. Alma I, having grown old, passed his authority to his son, Alma II. We quote: "It came to pass that Alma was appointed to be the first chief judge; he being also the high priest; his father having conferred the office upon him, and had given him the charge concerning all the affairs of the church" (Mosiah 13: 63). From this plain statement what opinion can one form on the question as to whether the Book of Mormon reveals a presidency over the church either Mosaic or of Christ? About six years after Alma II became presiding high priest to the church, we find a reference to the various members of priesthood in the church, namely teachers, priests, and elders lamenting the pride and idolatry of the church. (See Alma 2: 11, 12.) As we read further this same record states this fact to us, "In the commencement of the

Failures and Successes of Man

By J. A. Koehler

Number 2 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

DURING the depression which came in the wake of the first World War, I listened to an animated confab about the labor situation. The bell-wether was saying: "And if the government does not do something about it, we will." In the first abatement of noise, I asked: "What will you do about it?" to which that bell-wether replied, "Oh, we'll do something about it." "That may be true," I said, "but what I would like to know is, just what is that something, and what will you have accomplished through the doing of it? How does that something bear upon your problem?" To that question he did not know the answer, because he had no philosophy of social life.

History abounds in instances of failures of peoples to ameliorate themselves, because all they knew was that they needed to do "something" about it. That is why, even in January, 1946, after all the "somethings" that have been done, we still have our labor problem. The record of attacks on the social-world problem (which is a moral problem, and which religion calls a spiritual problem) the record of our government of industry, is, for the most part, a record of failures—of failures to master the truths of human life.

The record of industrial-world or, to be more inclusive, the record of physical-world successes is good. Science and the practical arts have really gone places and done things within the last century in particular. You know that without having the story retold.

Physical-world successes are at once spiritual successes, in the sense, that is, that they represent the successes of man's endeavors to improve his mind—which is his spirit. They represent man's capacity—which is a mental or spiritual capacity—to make adjustments to his natural environment.

ONE THING of interest, in this discussion, is the fact that in mastering his physical world problems man had to contend with forces which were without; forces which were not only seemingly unfriendly, but which were also illusive. The task of mastering the forces of the physical world was not only arduous, it was also baffling. Nevertheless, in matching his wits against the forces which were outside him, man achieved astounding successes. He has increased his power to produce goods even beyond his requirements.

Another interesting thing is that man's mastery of physical-world forces has made the task of mastering the forces of the social world much more difficult. In truth, in solving the old problem of disease and food and clothing, etc., man has created an almost wholly new social problem. The atomic bomb, for example, has plunged the whole race headlong into a problem of achieving social control through one agency on a global scale. And that, without question, is part of a new social-world problem. We call it the problem of keeping—which means enforcing—the peace.

Of course, as is usually the case when we deal with social questions, we do not speak the truth. For the truth is, as a few racial mentors try to get us to understand, that the social problem consists in ordering human relations aright, or in making human society just, as well as orderly and efficient.

We flatter ourselves that we have been trying to do that ever since there was a social problem. And we flatter ourselves that we have achieved some great successes. We have improved employer-employee, or capital-labor relations.

We have improved our educational institutions. But if that represents a notable success, why do we not have a citizenry that is competent to govern itself? Why must people have rulers to govern them? And why are people still foolish enough to call their rulers "benefactors," as Jesus said, when like Solomon and every other ruler, they continuously increase the burdens of the people, and plunge them into national disasters?

EVERYONE KNOWS that, in contrast with the Dark Ages, and even in comparison with the nineteenth century, the lot of man today, in some particulars, has been greatly improved. Man has achieved some social world successes. But so long as almost every important change in government today is an encroachment on human freedom, so long as the people are pawns in hands that have power to do almost what they will, so long as we are torn with civil strife, so long as crime is one of the principal burdens of the nation, and preparation for warfare a necessity—so long as such conditions exist, it is not a time to boast; it is a time to push on to new successes, compared with which the achievements of the past amount to little more than nothing.

I say that in comparison with the masteries that lie before us, the masteries of the past amount to little, because fundamental social successes, in the very nature of things, are moral successes; or, as religion says, they are spiritual successes. And they are moral successes in marital, industrial, and governmental relations—which are the eternal affairs of all peoples.

THIS IS THE POINT at which we need to take bearings. And when we do, we are convinced that the pyramids of Egypt, the hanging gardens of Babylon, the temple of Solomon, the military roads of the Roman Empire, the modern fighting aircraft, and all such are not social successes; they are moral failures.

We are convinced, too, that the political machinery which our own nation set up in pursuance of its National Recovery Act does not represent a social-world success. It represents instead moral-world or social failures. The activities promoted under that act did not improve the moral fabric of the nation; they did quite the opposite. They did not solve the social problem; they only made it more difficult of solution. For success in dealing with the social problem, consists in achieving, among other things, order and subordination the while freedom is promoted. And by such tests certain of our recent national successes are failures.

The test of moral-world or spiritual-world or social-world successes is man himself. Man was made to "become," as religion puts it, morally, spiritually; he was made for social-world masteries. And, as we shall show in future articles, that success is to be achieved, not by tinkering with particular social affairs, but by grounding the total living-together situation, the community, society regarded as an organism, in the principles of rights and duties of persons and peoples.

WHEN DID a people ever achieve such a success? The nearest approach to a community or nation grounded in the principle of the rights and duties of man, so far as we have any definite knowledge, was made under the leadership of Moses. There is a mere mention of a communal accomplishment by the people of Enoch, which may be the only consummate social-world success to be recorded in history. But of that success we know so little that we cannot use it as a basis of argument.

A commonplace occurrence should serve to illustrate the truth I have just mentioned. Everyone knows about automobiles; and every owner of an automobile would like to achieve success with it. Can he do that merely by putting good inner tubes in bad casings? He cannot. Can he do it by having the best carburetor that can be made? He cannot. Success with automobiles may be achieved only by putting the whole machine in proper working order.

Nor can family life—which is only a part of the total social life of a people—be made a success merely by serving good food on the table. To be a success, kitchen affairs must be timed to fit in with other family affairs. And these family affairs are at the bottom a system of personal or human relations. Therefore, to achieve success in family life the total scheme of relationships must be ordered aright. That is a truth which applies universally. We cannot escape it.

SO, THEN, to achieve real social successes, consummate or notable successes, peoples must concern themselves with the whole scheme of social relationships. They must concern themselves with the problem of human relationships regarded as a system, or as a whole. To achieve enduring or fundamental social successes, peoples must treat society as a social organism; as a social body having parts which perform special functions, all of which are mutually interdependent and all of which are essential to the success of the whole.

How could a people achieve success unless it had a true philosophy of social life? How could it succeed without making its system of social institutions an implementation of that social philosophy? The answer is simple, it could not succeed. It could only fail.

That is the principle on which Moses built. It is the principle on which Jesus built. It is not the principle on which some church men would build, because even they have no real philosophy of social life. But, as we hope to reveal in this group of articles, it is the principle on which the modern prophet would have them build, because he does have a philosophy of human life.

They Did It Themselves

The Woman's Home Companion for May contains one of the most important stories of social reform to emerge in our country in a dozen years. "We Did It Ourselves" by Helena Huntington Smith tells how that turbulent mixture of races in Chicago's "Back of the Stockyards" area threw out the invading professional reformers and undertook their own salvation, then began a cleanup that really touched the lives and went into the homes and the habits of the people.

Here is something natively American, though it grows upon our soil that is inhabited by the children of aliens and immigrants. It is the old American story of self-reliance, the will to "Do it for ourselves" without outside interference, funds, or help.

This is a story good for all of us to read—especially those of us who look in vain for some rich Santa Claus to come along and solve the problems of our homes, neighborhoods, and churches, some fairy godmother to make the path to success easy, and to transform the bed of thorns, which is the common lot in life, into a bed of roses.

When a person goes down on his knees to ask God's help in any situation, he must arise to realize that the rest of the job is up to himself. Salvation is indigenous; it must start in the soil where it is expected to grow; it cannot be transplanted. The greatest help in the world is self-help, and hence the truth of the old saying, "God helps those who help themselves." That is what the people of Chicago's Back of the Yards are doing.

"The Bible is a book in comparison with which all others, in my eyes, are of minor importance, and which in all my perplexities and distresses has never failed to give me light and strength."—R. E. Lee.

WORSHIP SUGGESTIONS FOR OCTOBER

By Katherine H. Wilson

Theme for the Month: "PRAYER"

October 6, 1946

"OUR FATHER, WHICH ART"

Prelude: "Come Ye Apart," Saints' Hymnal, 108.

Call to Worship:

"O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker."—Psalm 95: 6.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 6: 9-16, Inspired Version.

Thoughts on Prayer:

The opening phrase, "Our Father," voices the thought that God is our Father and we are his children. Those who can sincerely begin their prayers as Jesus did, already share in his purpose of communion. "Hallowed be thy name" is an affirmation of reverence and of devotion and a recognition of the nature of Deity—all that is great and good. This contemplation of God's greatness is without purpose unless our awe carries joy in the thought of his coming kingdom—"Thy kingdom come." "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven" is a commitment of loyalty to the purpose of God, the establishment of a heaven on earth. When we first truly desire the will of God to be done in our lives, we can pray in sincerity for his kingdom to come.

A common need for physical sustenance is covered by the plea, "Give us this day our daily bread." It does not say "my" bread, but "our" daily bread, showing a willingness to share with those who have not, that "all may labor together." We have, too, a need for spiritual nourishment, and Jesus has said, "I am the bread of life." In other words, "Give us this day, O Lord, an opportunity to grow spiritually in our daily choices."

The prayer, "And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us" is not a bargaining process, but rather that God "create in us a new spirit," able to forgive and be forgiven. "Suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil." It is not possible for us to escape temptation, but many seem to merely ask God to direct their way of living and then leave it with him to do all the work. True prayer is a way of life; a desire to know and understand the will and intelligence of God and then do something about it.

There are many definitions of prayer, but they fall short unless they convey to us the idea that prayer is doing. When we analyze the prayers of the Bible, we find they are concerned with the building of this new society—Zion, the kingdom of God on earth and "after this manner shall ye pray."

Inspirational Poems:

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire
Uttered or unexpressed;
The nature of a hidden fire,
That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear;
The upward glancing of an eye,
When none but God is near.

Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try;
Prayer, the sublimest strains that reach
The majesty on high.

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air;
His watchword at the gates of death—
He enters heaven by prayer. . . .

O Thou, by whom we come to God,
The life, the truth, the way!
The path of prayer, thyself hast trod:
Lord, teach us how to pray.
—James Montgomery.

There are no rules on how to pray.
Each man has his own special way,
And if he kneels, or if he stands,
Or humbly sits with head in hands,
The good Lord hears and understands.

It isn't where his prayers are said,
In the temple or beside his bed,
Or if his praying's long or brief,
Or filled with joy or born of grief,
The answer comes with his belief.

It isn't if he prays at night,
Or while the sun is shining bright.
It isn't when, or why, or where,
Or who—the Lord is always there
Listening—listening for your prayer.
—Naomi Schwensen.

Prelude: "Come Ye Apart," Saints' Hymnal, 108.

Call to Worship:

"Pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down from heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 65.

Hymn of Response: "Be With Me Lord," Saints' Hymnal, 305.

Scripture Reading: 3 Nephi 8: 14-20; Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4, 6; 30: 4.

Thoughts on Prayer:

How can prayer be defined: Prayer is the effort of man to reach God, to commune with an invisible Being, center of all intelligence, wisdom, truth, beauty, and strength; Creator of all things, Father of all. Language and thought fail when we attempt to describe God. We do know, however, that when a habit of sincere prayer is established, life is noticeably changed for the better. Prayer stamps with its indelible mark our actions and demeanor.

Tranquility and calmness, peace and quietude of spirit mark for its own those whose inner lives are so enriched. And we see ourselves; our selfishness, our pride, our fears, our blunders, and mistakes, and develop thereby a humility able to receive and use the grace and power of God. Emerson has said, "No man ever prayed without learning something." A miracle takes place in the hearts of men and women who have discovered that prayer supplies them with a steady flow of sustaining power in their daily lives.

Inspirational Poems:

He prayeth well, who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast;
He prayeth best, who loveth best
All things both great and small.
For the dear God, who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.
—Samuel Coleridge.

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice

Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?

For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.
—Alfred Tennyson.

Story: PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

A number of ministers were assembled for the discussion of difficult questions. Among others it was asked how the command to "Pray without ceasing" could be complied with, and one of the number was appointed to write an essay to be read at the next meeting.

This being overhead by a maidservant, she exclaimed, "What! a whole month waiting to tell the meaning of the text. It is one of the easiest and best in the Bible!"

"Well, well," said the old minister, "what can you say about it, Mary? How do you understand it? Can you pray all the time when you have so many things to do?"

"Why, yes, sir," said Mary. "The more things I have to do, the more I can pray."

"Let us hear how you do this," said the minister.

"Well," replied the girl, "when I open my eyes in the morning, I pray, 'Lord, open the eyes of my understanding!'; while I am dressing, I pray that I may be clothed with righteousness; when I have washed me, I ask for the washing of regeneration; when I begin to work, I pray that I may have the strength equal to my day; when I kindle the fire, I pray that God's work may revive in my heart; as I begin to sweep out the house, I pray that my heart may be cleansed from all its impurities; when I am preparing and partaking of breakfast, I desire to be fed with the manna and the sincere milk of the Word; as I am busy with the children, I look to God as my Father, and pray for the spirit of adoption, that I may be his child; and so on, all day everything I do furnishes me with a thought of prayer."

"Enough," said the old minister. "These things are revealed to babes and often hid from the wise and prudent. Go on, Mary, pray without ceasing."—Saints' Herald, July 13, 1940.

Picture, "Christ in Gethsemane," by Hofmann.

Picture Appreciation:

A man of prayer and a place of prayer is depicted in this beautiful and well-known picture of Christ. Let us think of the message of the picture, not one merely of grief and sorrow, but one of strength and courage—a decision and a dedication are being made. "I do always the things that please him," and in this thought Jesus was to leave this place, knowing well the price; but lifted up into a glorious strength and power by saying, "nevertheless not my will but thine be done."

It was possible for God to deliver Jesus from the evil designs of wickedness that were to take place a little later, but it was not possible to save his life and at the same time accomplish his purpose of ministry—a demonstration of the power of resurrection and eternal life. God knew that Jesus would be living below his possibilities were he to fail now—God loved him too well to answer his prayer. Let us meditate for a few moments on the application of this truth to us.

Short Period of Silence and Meditation.

Duet or Quartette: "Are Ye Able?"

Thoughts on Prayer:

In prayer we not only contemplate God, we speak to him and he answers us. Prayer is fellowship as well as communion. Prayer seems to be the chain which links not only heaven and earth, but the chain which binds, oh, so closely, the hearts of praying people. Have you ever prayed with anyone, particularly a small group, without feeling nearer than you did before? If prayer does nothing else, it will bind a group together. Prayer is recreation. We come to God in our weakness, to be made strong; in our ignorance, to be made wise; in our sickness, to be made well; in our sorrow, to be comforted; in our sin, to be forgiven; in our pride, to be made humble.

Queries for Class Discussion:

What is prayer?

Will prayer change the course of human events?

What does prayer consist of?

What help do we get from the teachings of Jesus as to the method of prayer?

What are the values of prayer?

What should a person pray for?

How does prayer affect one's outlook on life?

What part did meditation play in the life of Jesus?

What are the rules of prayer?

What actually takes place when one prays?

What can we do to improve our prayer life?

How can we experience God?

Poem Response:

"I, TOO, SHALL GIVE"

Because I have been given much

I, too, shall give;

Because of thy great bounty, Lord,

Each day I live.

I shall divide my gifts from thee
With every brother that I see
Who has need of help from me.

Because I have been sheltered, fed
By thy good care,
I cannot see another's lack
And I not share.

My glowing fire, my loaf of bread,
My roof's shelter overhead,
That he, too, may be comforted.

—Selected.

Thoughts on Prayer:

We derive the most power from prayer when we use it not as a petition but as a supplication that we become more like Him. Today, as never before, prayer is a necessity in the lives of men and nations. The forces of destruction in the world are pressing in upon us, and evil and sin are rampant. The neglected soul of man must be made strong, the gospel preached in all the world. Only as we remember and appreciate the two great commandments to love the Lord God and our neighbors as ourselves, can we hope to establish his kingdom.

Inspirational Poems:

This day I pray God, give me strength anew
To do the task I do not want to do.
To yield obedience, not asking why;
To love and own the truth and scorn the lie.
To look a cold world bravely in the face,
To cheer for those who pass me in the race;
To bear my burdens gaily, unafraid,
To lend a hand to those that need my aid.
To measure what I am by what I give—
God, give me strength that I may rightly live.

Upon the windowsill of heaven
And gaze upon thy Lord;
Then, with the vision in thy heart,
Turn strong to meet the day.

PRAYER

O God, my heart would praise thy works;
So long it has been still.
Now words of gratitude and prayer
My wakened being fill
And tremble in my soul with great Immensity of thought—
Accept my humble, earnest thanks
For lowliness you've wrought.

And let my heart and body drink
Thy great sun's golden rays;
And let me, pausing, quietly think
On all thy mighty ways.
And let my whole self bow in prayer—
Mind, body, soul—and then—
Dear God, with faith and willingness
Let me be born again.

—Irene Robinson.

ninth year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi, Alma delivered up the judgment seat to Nephihah, and confined himself wholly to the high priesthood of the holy order of God" (Melchisedec, Alma 2: 28). Does this indicate a presidency in the church? Alma II's written testimony fully answers this question for we find Alma 3: 3 states: "I, Alma, having been consecrated by my father Alma, to be a high priest over the church of God, he having power and authority from God to do these things." (See also Alma 73: 73 and 4: 1.)

Apparently the office of prophet or president usually carried with it the custodianship of the sacred records. It is very interesting to note this line of descent as the years passed. We find the sacred office of presiding high priest passed from Alma II to his oldest son, Helaman. (Book of Mormon, page 437, verses 31-33.) He was followed by Shiblon, Helaman's brother (page 540, verses 1, 2). Then came Helaman, son of Helaman, Shiblon's nephew (page 541, verse 15). After this we find that Nephi, son of Helaman, moved into this holy office (page 552, verses 33, 34). The record speaks very highly of Nephi and his miracle-working priesthood. In the Book of Helaman 4: 22, we find this testimony that the people did esteem Nephi "as a great prophet, and a man of God, having great power and authority given unto him from God." The Book of Mormon, like the New Testament, does not contain a detailed complete account of what was done in the church. Mormon states it thus: "This book cannot contain even a hundredth part of what was done among so many people" (3 Nephi 2: 92). That is to say we have few of the details concerning "the first church which was established among them after their transgression" (3 Nephi 2: 96).

Upon the visit of Jesus to the Nephites after his resurrection he proceeded personally to organize his church as he had in Palestine. As Paul explains: "God set in the church: first, apostles," and true to this order, Jesus called twelve disciples whom he armed with great authority. It appears that the Lord brought his new covenant and baptized all into this new covenant church. Mormon records (3 Nephi 12: 1) that there "can not be written in this book, even a hundredth part of the things which Jesus did truly teach unto the people." This indicates that the various steps taken by Jesus to organize his new church on this continent are not recorded. Apparently Nephi's apostleship or discipleship was extended into presidency after Jesus finally ascended into heaven. We find he kept the sacred records and passed them on to his son Amos who succeeded him as prophet and president (Book of Mormon, page 683, verse 22). If Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever, would he not designate a leader or prophet to whom he might reveal many things for his church collectively? We believe he did, and that Nephi and his son Amos, followed by his son Amos, were the presidents of the church in this hemisphere in order named. Mormon in his abridgement of the plates wrote this very significant warning: "Wo unto him that shall deny the revelations of the Lord and that shall say, The Lord no longer worketh by revelation, or by prophecy" (3 Nephi 13: 59). We know that Jesus promised he would build his church upon the rock of continued heavenly revelation (Matthew 16: 18) this, to avoid confusion, has always come to the divinely chosen prophet and presiding high priest. Wisely and truly Solomon was permitted to write: "I know that whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever." Let us therefore not remove the ancient landmarks for we might, as Mormon so clearly warns, become like unto the son of perdition (3 Nephi 13: 59, 60).

Two Hundred Lives

A few years before the war, a humble villager in eastern Poland received a Bible from a colporteur who visited his small hamlet. He read it, was converted, and passed the book on to others. Through that one Bible two hundred more became believers. When the colporteur, Michael Billester, revisited the town in the summer of 1940, the group gathered to worship and listen to his preaching. Billester suggested that instead of giving the customary testimonies they all recite verses of Scripture.

Thereupon a man arose and asked, "Perhaps we have misunderstood. Did you mean verses or chapters?"

"Do you mean to say there are people here who can recite chapters of the Bible?" asked Mr. Billester in astonishment.

That was precisely the case. Those villagers had memorized, not only chapters, but whole books of the Bible. Thirteen knew Matthew and Luke and half of Genesis. One had committed all the Psalms to memory. Together, the two hundred knew virtually the entire Bible. Passed around from family to family and

Healed By Heavenly Visitor

I have read many letters in the Herald, and have received much encouragement from them. I now feel that I should add my testimony; perhaps it will help others.

When I came into this work, I prayed earnestly for a spiritual experience; I believed in the divinity of the church, but I wanted a special testimony to supplement my faith. One night my wife took suddenly ill; there were no elders within twenty-seven miles of us, so we prayed for her recovery. Later that night, in vision I saw our bedroom door open, and three men entered the room. I was given to know that one of the three was Moroni. He told me they had come that we might have prayer together, so we knelt and, with Moroni offering the first prayer, we each prayed for my companion; she was healed. I hope others will continue to contribute their testimonies, for they mean much to the Saints.

A Spiritual Experience

Mrs. Ethel Whitten of Maple City, Michigan, writes of an experience she had on August 28. She has been a member of the church since June 27 of this year, but states that prior to her baptism she received many blessings. These, she believes, were the result of her obedience to the gospel while investigating the church and its teachings. After joining, she prayed for the ministration of angels and received a direct answer to her prayer. Sister Whitten relates that she saw an angelic visitor during a vision, and although no message was received, she was greatly comforted by the experience.

Requests Prayers

Mrs. J. H. Toon, Box 191, West Sacramento, California, writes that her sister, Mrs. Zela Grace Perkins, is ill of a nervous breakdown at the Eastern Oklahoma Hospital at Vinita, Oklahoma, and requests prayers for her. Mrs. Toon also desires administration for her sister, if an elder can make the visit.

Western Montana Reunion

The western Montana reunion was held August 4 to 11 at Deer Lodge; the theme for the week was "I See the Need of a Kingdom Builder." Apostle Charles Hield, Seventies Z. Z. Renfro and Joseph Yeager, and Evangelist Ray Whiting were the general church representatives in charge. Classes were held for the priesthood, women's department, and young people; junior church was supervised by Mrs. June Norwood and Betty Norwood. Early morning prayer services were sponsored by the young people; other activities included an afternoon of swimming at Gregson Hot Springs, a picnic, several campfires, and a watermelon feast. Mrs. Ruth Beck was in charge of the outings. The women held a bazaar on Thursday, August 8. Officers elected at Saturday's business meeting are as follows: Harley Lorance, president; Joseph Beck, treasurer; Helen Norwood, secretary; Sister Reese, historian; Wanda Norwood, director of music; Viola Staffonson, women's leader; Lloyd Peterson, director of religious education; and Mrs. Glen Beck, young people's leader. A Communion service was held on Sunday morning, and the reunion closed in the afternoon with a final business session.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

Pastor, A. N. Barnes

Escatawpa was well represented at the Gulf States reunion held in Brewton, Alabama. Attending the youth camp, also held in Brewton, were Ivon Barnes, Sylvia Canfield, Bernice Brentz, Hendricks Brentz, and Bob Barlow. The young people presented a play, The Solid Rock, on August 11; the play was also given in Vancleave. On Sunday, August 25, Marvin Wesley, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Dewey McQuenn, was blessed by Pastor A. N. Barnes and Elder J. L. Barlow. A special musical number by Carolyn Rogers and Audrey Roberts preceded the ordinance. In the afternoon, five persons were baptized: Rosalie Entrekin, Mary Orr, Douglas Goff, Mrs. Wilma Hicks, and Mrs. Lily Parker. Pastor Barnes performed the baptisms; Elders J. L. Barlow, D. W. Sherman, and High Priest Franklin Steiner assisted at the ordination service. Another new member, John Rogers, was baptized at the reunion by Elder A. O. Crownover and confirmed in the home branch. The women's luncheon in August was held at the junior church, with Mrs. Myrtle Liverdais and Mrs. Thelma Byrd as hostesses.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Congregation

Pastor, Donald V. Lents

Vacation Bible School was held from June 24 to July 4, ending with a picnic for both congregations in the city. Helen Lents was in charge of the school. Sixty-three students registered, and forty-three were awarded certificates of perfect attendance. The daily program consisted of worship services, flannelgraph stories, slide pictures, classes in handcraft, and a play period with stories from Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon. Apostle Blair Jensen was present one day to talk to the children. At the close of school, the parents were invited to a program centered around the classwork. In August, a city-wide business meeting was held, at which Marjorie Cross was elected women's leader, and Gerald Swanson, supervisor of the young people. The yearly budget was also approved at this session.

Sherwood, Oregon

Pastor, Robert Chapman

Many of the Sherwood Saints attended the Silver Lake reunion held in Washington. Because of harvesting, evening classes and worship services have been discontinued, but are to be held again in the near future. The women's department has also discontinued its meetings until fall. Priest Vincent Shultz officiated at the baptism of Laird and Stuart Smith; the service was held at the Montivilla branch in Portland on July 21. Election of officers for the coming year will be held soon, after which the winter schedule of classwork and services will begin.

Vancouver, Washington

Pastor, Paul E. Fishel

Many of the local congregation attended Silverlake reunion; four new members were baptized August 18. Recent improvements to the church grounds include leveling the back lawn for a playground for the young people, and landscaping the front to accommodate shrubs and flowers. A retaining wall of concrete has permitted the laying of a street entrance sidewalk to the rear door of the lower auditorium.

The church school is holding a contest, sponsored by the Zion's League, which provides awards for those having the best punctuality and highest attendance records. An increase in the number present at the morning worship service has already been noted. The annual church school picnic was held Friday evening, August 16, at Leverich Park; softball, a skit, and refreshments were features of the event.

District President J. L. Verhei has conducted priesthood meetings in Portland and Vancouver recently. Plans are being made for cottage meetings and more intensive priesthood visiting.

Ruby Fishel, church school director, was in charge of this year's vacation Bible school.

Paris, Tennessee

Pastor, C. B. Gallimore

The Kentucky-Tennessee reunion was held in the Paris city auditorium the week of July 20-28. Apostle Myron McConley, and E. Y. Bumpass, Jerry Fitch, and C. B. Gallimore of the district presidency were in charge, with Elder G. R. Grice, W. C. Haden, and S. E. Dickson assisting. Mrs. B. F. Suttin was responsible for the work of the women's department, and Thelma Mustin supervised the children's activities; John Mustin was in charge of refreshments. Music directors for the reunion were B. F. Sutton, Earry Hicks, and Lottie Westen. Each day began with a prayer service, followed by classes. Average attendance at the evening preaching services was 500. Many former members were present to renew acquaintances; visitors from Nashville, Lexington, and other neighboring branches voted it a highly successful gathering. Two new members were baptized.

It Takes Courage

- To refrain from gossip when others about you delight in it.
- To stand up for an absent person who is being abused.
- To live honestly within your means and not dishonestly on the means of others.
- To be a real man, a true woman, by holding fast to your ideals when it causes you to be looked upon as strange and peculiar.
- To be talked about and yet remain silent when a word would justify you in the eyes of others, but which you cannot speak without injury to another.
- To refuse to do a thing which is wrong, though others do it.
- To dress according to your income and to deny yourself what you cannot afford to buy.
- To live always according to your convictions.—The Trumpeter.

BULLETIN BOARD

Owen Sound District Conference

The annual Owen Sound district conference will be held in the Owen Sound church on September 22, for the election of officers and delegates to the 1947 General Conference. The regular district and reunion business will also be taken care of. The first service, a prayer meeting, is scheduled for 9:30 a.m., and the business session for 2 p.m. Seventy H. I. Velt will be the 11 o'clock speaker.

Chatham District Conference

A district conference will be held at Chatham, Ontario, October 5 and 6. Apostle E. J. Gleazer is to be in attendance. The business session will convene Saturday at 2:30 p.m.

GLADYS FERGUSON,
Chatham District Secretary.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Viola Zeidler of Cameron, Missouri, who is suffering with cancer. She desires, if it is God's will, that she may be healed of this affliction.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul L. Duvic of Port Orchard, Washington, ask the prayers of the Saints for their young son, Jerry, that—if it be God's will—he may be healed of his deafness and grow to a faithful servant of the Master.

Prayers are requested for nine-year-old Shirley Slight, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Slight of Pontiac, Michigan, who is seriously ill in the hospital with bronchial infection, asthma, and rheumatic condition.

Alvin Wadsworth asks the prayers of the Saints for his brother-in-law, W. J. Williams of Ironton, Ohio, who is very ill. Brother Williams is pastor of the Ironton branch, and feels that only God can heal him.

Engagements

Newcom-Trowbridge

Mr. Kenneth Trowbridge of Independence, Missouri, announces the engagement of his daughter, Barbara Kent, to Kenneth Newcom, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Newcom of Lamoni, Iowa. Miss Trowbridge will finish her work at Graceland this year. The wedding will take place the latter part of 1947.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Sollitt of Peterboro, Ontario, announce the birth of a son, Donald William, born August 7 at the Civic Hospital in Peterboro.

A son, David Allen, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Norwood of Corvallis, Oregon, on February 19. Mr. Norwood is a student at Oregon State College.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Ostendorf of Sherwood, Oregon, announce the birth of a daughter, Karen Lucille, born July 18.

Our Departed Ones

GUNSOLLEY.—Anna Elizabeth, daughter of James and Harriett Pearsall, was born in Nockanut, Texas, on February 18, 1871, and passed away at the Independence Sanitarium on August 21, 1946. In 1881 she moved with her family to western Iowa, and on August 14 of that year, she became a member of the Reorganized Church. In 1891, she was married to Julius F. Gunsolley; to this union three children were born. A son, Arthur, preceded her in death on May 15, 1911. She was a lover of music, being taught by her father who was music director in the Northwestern Iowa district for thirty-five years. In her youth, she was a member of the Gallands Grove choir.

She is survived by her husband; two daughters, Mrs. Mabel Leibold and Mrs. Ola D. Savage, all of Independence, Missouri; three brothers: James, George, and Mark, all of Dow City, Iowa; three sisters: Mrs. Zeanette Smith and Mrs. Margaret Hoeffler, both of Dow City, and Mrs. Ellen Justice of Anniston, Alabama. She also leaves six grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home, Elders R. V. Hopkins and Amos T. Higdon officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GEBARD.—Elmer, was born November 8, 1880, at Atwood, Illinois, and passed away at his home near Breckenridge, Michigan, on August 19, 1946, from injuries received in a fall two days before. The greater part of his life was spent near Des Moines, Iowa. On October 18, 1926, he was married to Mary Ferguson; one child was born to this union. Both his wife and child preceded him in death. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1928, and on January 21, 1931, was married to Jennie Baker.

Surviving are his wife; three sisters: Mrs. Hattie Wilson, Van Wert, Iowa; Mrs. Bell Hutchins and Mrs. Lydia Johnson, Des Moines, Iowa; and two brothers, Henry and George, also of Des Moines. Services were held at the Bradley Funeral Home in Midland, Michigan, with Elder Merle Howard officiating. Burial was in Mt. Pleasant Cemetery.

PERKINS.—Grace, daughter of Matthias and Kari Lee, was born January 30, 1898, at Devils Lake, North Dakota, and passed away August 18, 1946, at the Clarkson Hospital in Omaha, Nebraska, following a month's illness.

After being graduated from high school, she entered nurses' training in the Eitel Hospital in Minneapolis, obtaining her degree there. She did private nursing for several years, and on January 14, 1926, was married to Serle O. Perkins. In 1930 they moved to Omaha where she trained to become an X-ray technician; she was a member of the University of Nebraska Hospital staff until 1934. She united with the Reorganized Church in 1922, and continued to be active in the work throughout her life.

She is survived by her husband; two sisters: Mrs. E. F. Palmer and Mrs. Roy Cutler of Devils Lake; and two brothers: Carl Lee of Devils Lake and Joseph Lee of San Jose, California.

RULAND.—Lulu Belle Dewing, was born January 22, 1859, in White Creek, Wisconsin. She was married on October 6, 1875, to Charles French; three children were born to this union. The family settled first near Egan, South Dakota, moving westward by wagon in 1883 to Hulett. It was here that she married Dan Ruland on December 21, 1886; one son was born to this marriage. In 1903, Mrs. Ruland became a member of the Reorganized Church. In 1908 she and her family moved to Alva, where she was appointed postmistress and Mr. Ruland operated a store until 1916. Her husband preceded her in death on April 8, 1945.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Lulu Nielsen and Mrs. Lana Colvin; and two sons: Victor French and Dillon Ruland, all of Alva, Wyoming. She also leaves fourteen grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Community Church in Alva on August 22, Priest Forrest Julius officiating. Interment was in the Alva cemetery.

LAWN.—John Albert, was born November 3, 1864, at Gilroy, California, and passed away at the San Francisco Hospital on July 27, 1946. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for seventy-three years, and a member of the priesthood for forty-seven years. He was pastor of the branch in San Francisco for many years, giving freely of his time, talents, and resources in building the work of his Master. Although physical incapacity restricted him in later years, he continued to minister by the power of God's Spirit to those who visited him.

He is survived by a son, Mr. J. Dudley Lawn of San Francisco; five sisters: Mrs. Alice Gilbert and Mrs. Anne Waters of San Jose; Mrs. Luella Hawley and Mrs. Lottie Snow of Berkeley; and Mrs. Cora Waters of Hollister; a brother, Dr. A. R. Lawn of Florida; and a niece, Edna Frazier, of San Francisco.

New Birth

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

God stuck his finger into the soil,
Made a tiny bloom appear.
He turned his face
From the earth's green space,
And it turned brown and scar.

God smiled at man while at his toil,
And man stood straight and tall.
Man turned his face
From God's great grace
And man thereof did fall.

God turned his gaze once more to earth
And earth returned the glance.
The gentle rain
He sent again;
Such gifts come not by chance.

Then the earth's new birth
Gave man new lease;
He then did grow,
He then did sow,
The seeds of a permanent peace

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

The sun seems brighter in the sky,

All things more sweet, more lovely

Because you care.
And happiness is more complete
With you to share.

* "32"

How long is it since you have seen that many pages in an issue of the "Herald"? Probably you can't remember. The last one was June 15. . . . We couldn't afford to risk your not noticing it. Paper is too precious a commodity to be used without a bit of fanfare. You have read, of course, that some New York papers have had to eliminate display advertising, which is equivalent to tearing up the meal ticket. . . . But our Manager feels under pressure because some of you are unhappy about our small issues. So he thought we could spare enough paper for an occasional 32. Don't neglect to celebrate this one, for it is an Occasion. . . . And you who have been unhappy, please be comforted. As long as we print 16's, the price of your "Herald" may not have to go up. But when we are able to have all 32's again, your subscription will not pay for the paper alone, to say nothing of other costs. A price boost seems to be indicated.

* "STEP-O-GRAMS"

A new column of interest to church school workers is being started in "Stepping Stones" with the issue of September 29. Those wishing to catch current events, announcements for department workers, helps, and timely suggestions should not miss "Step-O-Grams." The column appears on the back page and is written by Chris B. Hartshorn.

* If you wait for plenty of time for the big tasks, you will not finish many of them. But if you will use small spare bits of time in working at these tasks, instead of just resting or waiting, you will be surprised at how much you can accomplish. Your roof can be shingled even if you can put on only one or two in an evening. You can write an article, make a rug, read a good book, or trim your garden in the odd minutes so often wasted in too long reading of a newspaper or listening to the radio.

* ELBERT A. SMITH convalescing. After a stay at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, where he successfully overcame a serious infection, our Presiding Evangelist, Elbert A. Smith, telephoned from his home that he is improving steadily in health. Further time will be required to complete his recovery, but he is on the way. He wishes to express his thanks, through these columns that have so often carried his messages to the people of the church, for the many letters and cards that have been received to cheer and encourage him.

Being and Doing

SO MANY THINGS begin in prayer meetings. That is why they are more important than some people suppose. The alert and earnest seeker will acquire more thoughts and motives to action there than in any other type of meeting.

Our group elder raised this question recently in his opening remarks: "How may we be in a condition to build Zion?" It elicited considerable activity, and brought forth a variety of discussion that made the hour pass quickly.

After the meeting, thoughts lingered. Have you ever noticed, as we have, the strong emphasis that our people put upon "being in a condition" rather than upon a program of works? Probably we should give some further attention to this matter.

The good athlete is careful, through a carefully regulated program of training, diet, sleep, and protection of health, to keep himself "in condition." But the time comes when he must run the race, or put the shot, or do whatever he expects to do, if he is to win. The condition is a means, not an end. If there is no action, there is no victory. The condition alone is useless.

The big muscle men who want every American to be strong and healthy have advertised for half a century—with pictures showing their marvelous biceps lifting weights that would just as well be left on the ground, or bending crowbars that would be more useful if left straight; all this, without adding to the national mentality one thought worth the weight of a feather. What good is a condition if it merely enables a man to compete with the horse and the ox in occupation at which the Lord intended horses and oxen to be superior to men?

Being in condition is admirable; indeed, it is essential. But it is only a preliminary.

THOSE WHO make the condition (faith) pre-eminent, are apt to do their quoting from Paul (Romans 3: 28; 5: 1; Galatians 2: 16; etc.). But those who require works will take their texts from Jesus (Matthew 7: 21, and others). "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

There is no real opposition between faith and works. Faith is the antecedent; works, the culmination. Without faith, you cannot have works. But also, "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead."

You may be able to keep yourself out of hell simply by keeping yourself "in condition." But without works, there will be no Zion, no kingdom of heaven. You may find yourself with no place to go. It would be embarrassing to the soul sent into eternity with a shipping tag upon his collar, and the address incomplete.

PERFECTION, which is the goal of the "saved by faith" contingent, is difficult to attain. Though we have seen many good and admirable people, though we have met many who were wonderfully endowed with Christian graces, we do not know if we have ever met a single person who could be called perfect. For if you look at anybody for a while, his flaws will presently begin to appear.

But we have seen thousands of ordinary, humble, even weak people busy doing good works. If it is almost impossible to join the small circle of the elect who attain perfection, there is no such exclusiveness among the workers. Anybody, no matter how weak, no matter what faults he has to overcome, no matter what failures he has made in the past, can try again. If he has not utterly destroyed the good in himself, it is possible for him to lift his hands and do a few practical chores for God.

THE CHURCH TODAY needs workers. One does not become a worker for God without faith, without some essential preliminaries of righteous living. But people who have faith and will not work are as useless as those that have no faith! This statement does not reflect upon those who are crippled, incapacitated, or under severe affliction. It reflects only upon those members who begin and end their religious program with songs and prayers, leaving the work to others.

Great societies are built upon the exchange of a multitude of skills of specialists. Only in the most primitive of tribes does anybody attempt to do or make everything he needs for himself. Civilization requires co-operation and exchange of products and services. It will be so of Zion, and of the kingdom of heaven.

Every person should have at least one developed, useful talent. The talents you have are not important; the talents you train and use are.

At many a reunion this summer, there have been some good women who cooked or washed dishes for God, some men who cut grass, raised tents, and picked up papers for the same employer. The encampment would have been a failure without these and other essential services. In so serving, these people made a contribution and received a spiritual reward.

What one talent have you developed? What work for Zion can you do?

1947 Conference Music

The anthem list below includes the anthems which the conference choir will use next April. Each of these numbers is appropriate for general use in the local choirs throughout the church, and this department urges that local choristers secure them and use them during the year. Anyone who attends conference and who sings in any local choir will be prepared to sing with us during the conference period, and also the members of the congregation will have become familiar with the anthems and will appreciate them more during the time they hear them at conference.

If your local music dealer cannot supply you, you may write Neil Kjos, 223 West Lake Street, Chicago 6, Illinois, and he will give you a special rate on them.

If there are singers in the church who are isolated from regular choir membership who would like to sing in the conference choir, we urge them to secure this music and learn it at home and join us next conference.

FRANKLYN S. WEDDLE,
Director of Music.

Across the Desk

ELDER LEONARD W. STIEGEL of Moline, Illinois, has long been interested in interpreting the principles of business efficiency into terms applicable to our church needs. He recently sent me a quotation from a business manual which was headed "General Principle for Corporate Development." By substituting the word church for the word company, and a few parallel adjustments, the quotation now reads as follows:

The development of the church toward the efficient conduct of its affairs provides, in part, for a system of specialization and co-ordination. Church leadership is constantly at work, developing specialized organizational units to perform specialized tasks or functions more effectively. These elements or units, in turn, are segregated to perform still more specialized tasks. Uncontrolled, this process of specialization may lead to disaster. Accompanying it, there must be a continuing process of co-ordination, of holding each element or unit in the organizational structure in proper relation and balance in its constant tendency to specialize. The test of survival of a religious organization is not alone the degree of specialization of its parts, but also the extent to which these parts are effectively integrated in performing the total function of the church as a whole.

To the wise leader, the question whether a specialized staff should be established for any function, as also a contemplated change in organizational structure or objective, is not determined so much by the possible improved performance to be desired as by the effect which such specialization or change will have upon the co-ordination, balance, and operational momentum of the organization as a whole. Yet, where co-ordination can be properly effected, an increasing degree of specialization is beneficial as well as needful as an organization becomes larger and more complex.

The verbiage here is a little unfamiliar, but the principle can be studied with profit. F. H. E.

Church in Politics

An interesting kettle is about to boil over: Doctor G. B. Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches (America), and other American Protestants have persuaded an international church conference at Cambridge, England, to inaugurate, under the supervision of the World Council of Churches, an international political lobby. The Christian Beacon charges Doctor Oxnam and some others who are identified with this lobby are "avowed socialists and radical pacifists."

Says the Beacon:

The political influence which the church is endeavoring to exert in the United States, Oxnam says should now be exerted in the international sphere. But he ran into real difficulty with the European theologians, and it is a difficulty. The Protestant church has never believed in such political activity on the part of its clergy and churches. One of the differences between the Roman Catholic setup and the Protestant setup has been just this very matter. Where then does the doctrine of separation of Church and State come in? Furthermore, any Protestant activities along this line of high pressure, and undercover contacts with political leaders will be simply the work of "babes in the wood" compared to the long-time experience of the Roman Catholic authorities. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." Shall we now turn and follow the Roman Catholic line of political activities and influence? If so, why should the Federal Council leaders object to Spellman's activities in Washington, and Rome's favor in the Taylor appointment? Yet, this is where the American delegation actually led the World Council of Churches. . . .

Some months back, the Christian Beacon suggested that perhaps one way in which this matter should be offset would be the establishment of an international Council of Christian Churches which would lift its voice against this political activity and the false road on which the near-communist leaders of Federal Council Protestantism were endeavoring to direct the world. There are churches in England, the main land, Australia, and other countries of the world, we believe, which would be very happy to be a part of a true, orthodox, international Council of Christian Churches, which would lift its voice against this political activity and false leadership offered by the Federal Council—World Council coalition.

We have a strong impression that the main reason for this movement, adroitly "masked" by the reasons stated (plausible as they are), is the tremendous political drive of the Catholic Church now very much in evidence throughout the world.

Christianizing Japan

Claim is made that Japanese are on the threshold of a great spiritual revival. This is asserted by Catholic Bishop Michael J. Ready of Columbus, Ohio, and it is interpreted by some able critics to mean the Catholic Church expects a great expansion among that stricken people.

Bishop Ready is the man who was secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference when that organization accused Protestant Churches with violating the "good neighbor" policy when they sent missionaries into certain of the Latin Americas. It is charged also that American military authorities in Tokyo give practical clearance to Catholic missionaries while "holding up" efforts of Protestant churches to secure admission of their missionaries.

A Japanese Catholic, Dr. Kotaro Tanaka, formerly a Protestant, is now minister of education in the present Japanese cabinet.

It will be interesting to note the progress of the Christian movement in Japan.

Principles of Missionary Policy

By President F. Henry Edwards

Many requests have been received for the publication of the lectures that President Edwards delivered to the General Conference under the auspices of the Quorum of Twelve. They constitute a public presentation of the major sections of the missionary policy adopted by the Quorum early this year. In response to repeated urging, the author has undertaken the very difficult task of recapturing the spirit as well as the content of the lectures; in which, despite his fears to the contrary, he has succeeded well, and has contributed a work of importance to the church.—L. J. L.

THE MEMBERS of the Quorum of Twelve, which is the chief missionary quorum of the church, are also "to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 30). The church will do well to take careful thought of these related facts. The members of the First Presidency are concerned about coordinating the work of all the departments of the church toward the goals of the church. Their function is general and not departmental. The Quorum of Twelve is the senior quorum with specialized spiritual responsibilities. This quorum is primarily concerned with effective missionary testimony. They organize and set in order all the other officers of the church with this end in view. Of course the Apostles have important local responsibilities, but they discharge these responsibilities with one major purpose: the church must be made alert and strong and true in order that the Word of God may go forth to the ends of the earth. In every age the apostolic task has been to bear special witness that Jesus is the Christ and to organize the Saints and to set the officers of the church in their places, in order that this witness may be shared and extended. The Twelve are concerned in the total mobilization of the whole church for effective missionary testimony.

THE SPIRIT OF EVANGELISM

But while the law clearly points out the responsibility of the Twelve for organizing the forces of the church for missionary purposes, the fundamental philosophy of the Scriptures indicates that effective evangelism depends less on organization than on inspiration; less on men than on God. No amount of organization will be adequate except as the church shares the apostolic spirit and passion. Much poorly organized missionary work has been very effective because of the spirit in which it was conducted. Much well-organized missionary work has been ineffective because those engaged in the enterprise lacked the drive and the devotion which are fruits of the missionary passion.

The missionary spirit for which the times call has its rise in the deep places of the soul. It is most richly nurtured in worship. It takes note of the infinite worth of every soul in the sight of God, of the infinite compassion of Divinity, of the infinite possibilities of souls surrendered to God, and of the infinite responsibility of each generation of Saints for the salvation of that generation. Worship such as we here have in mind is not primarily a formal and well-ordered and highly cultured experience. Rather, it is soul-searching, realistic, transforming. Its emphases are on simplicity, honesty, repentance, and dedication. The missionary crusade for which we call, and which is rooted in our individual and corporate experience with Divinity, spells cleansing, revival, and kingdom-building power.

EVANGELISM MUST BE BASED ON SOUND TEACHING

We are not engaged in evangelism for its own sake, or merely to increase our membership. This is so obvious that it at first appears unnecessary to state it. Yet experience indicates that we need to keep the purpose of evangelism clearly in mind as we go about our evangelical task. If we fail to do this, we are soon found lowering our standards and forgetting that the strength of the body of Christ lies in the spiritual quality of its members, not in their numbers. The Lord used Gideon's three hundred true men not his thirty-two thousand nominal soldiers.

We preach Christ and him crucified in the earnest hope that men will be moved to glad surrender to him and to eager enlistment in the cause of his kingdom. Ours is a gospel of salvation, but of salvation through worship and clear vision and sacrifice and pain and service and the glory of an inner assurance which worldly men neither recognize nor understand. All this involves sound teaching on the part of the church about God and man and society against the background of eternity. It involves clear understanding about such fundamental facts as sin and redemption and incarnation and atonement and justification and sanctification and immortality and eternal life.

This demand for sound teaching is rooted in the nature of the situation. Doctrine is concerned with the fundamental relations of men and God and with the promises and obligations and responsibilities which arise out of these relations. Doctrine is faith-thinking. It seeks the true vision of God on which can be based a true vision of the world and of our relation thereto. Such a vision cannot be based on vague guesses, but only on deep and rich experiences born of the Spirit and shared and weighed and understood in the light of the Scriptures. We must know what we believe and why we believe it. This knowledge cannot be rooted in mere argument. Certainly it must have a stronger foundation than glib repetition of favorite texts. It must be centered in joyous understanding and appreciation of the great messages of the Word, progressively reflected in the life of a growing people. We must evangelize because we have something eternally important to say and something eternally important to do.

This does not mean that a prospective convert must be an expert in theology before he can be baptized. The problem with the prospect is moral rather than intellectual. He must be made to recognize himself as a sinner in need of salvation, to experience that searching change of heart and life which we call repentance, to cast himself on the mercy and bounty of God in grateful faith, and to enlist in the work of the kingdom through baptism and experience of the divine indwelling. But our church program of evangelism must be based on an understanding far more searching and extensive than is available to the new disciple. The church and her ministers must know what God is about and therefore what God expects of them and the conditions under which he is able and willing to bless their efforts to serve him.

EVANGELISM MUST BE WISELY ADMINISTERED

The time and place and manner of our testimony are vitally important, second only to the importance of the testimony itself. The Scriptures emphasize this repeatedly. The Master himself refused to let the Jews have their way with him until their doing so would serve his own purpose. Then, when the season of the Passover had come and what was to be done could not be hidden or glossed over, he "set his face steadfastly to go toward Jerusalem." The Jews chose to do what they did, but the Master saw to it that what they did should serve his purpose and not theirs. So, today, our testimony is most effective when it is most timely and best centered, and most wisely adapted to the circumstances surrounding its expression. For the very reason that we are eager to make our resources of money and manpower and experience as fruitful as possible for the work of testimony, it is imperative that we shall build toward economy of operation in time, manpower, finances, and administrative procedures. This applies to the period of initial testimony and also to the period of subsequent organization and administration.

Experience has indicated the importance of the following principles:

Evangelism must be pointed toward kingdom-building.

We must remember that converts are not just individuals but are members of the fellowship of Christ. We must therefore conduct our missionary activities with the kingdom clearly and constantly in mind.

The missionary nature of local situations must not be obscured by the fact of local organization.

When a branch is organized, it is organized for missionary purposes as well as for spiritual growth. Indeed, there is no hope for kingdom growth without missionary testimony. The two go together. Branch organization augments and does not remove missionary opportunities and responsibilities.

Evangelism must appeal to all ages, minister to the whole of life, and use every legitimate instrument.

Evangelism is not merely an adult activity directed to adults by the preaching method. It is a total church activity which should be shared by all the members of the church. It should be directed to all sorts and conditions of men and women and children, and implemented by the use of all the available skills and techniques.

Evangelism must be carried through to stability: planned, organized, housed.

There are thousands of testimonies of the fruit which God has given from seed sown by the wayside. But the days of casual evangelistic agriculture are past. So far as the church as a body is concerned, we are under moral obligation to bring our corporate powers to bear wisely and scientifically and permanently.

Evangelism must marshal and use the zeal and growing skill of the nonappointed ministry, creating its own resources as it goes forward.

Disciples must be won to a growing task in which they expect to share. The church, in its growth, must provide leadership, finances, equipment, testimony, subject only to the general oversight of the appointee ministry.

Evangelism will best operate in small active units in which there is diverse and zealous co-operation.

As a general rule it is better to have three branches of three hundred fifty active members each in one community than to have one branch of a thousand members for the same community.

STRENGTHENING THE MISSIONARY QUORUMS

Despite the major importance of local leadership and testimony in extending the work of the church, the effectiveness of our total missionary program depends in large measure on the number and quality of our ministry in the missionary quorums. It is particularly important that the Quorums of Seventy shall be built up.

Men who are on fire with the testimony of Jesus are to be called from among the elders, according to the spirit of wisdom and revelation, and set apart as special witnesses of the seventy. This call is founded, first of all, in the lives of the men involved. They are called according to the gift of God unto them. These gifts include native ability, plus developed skills, plus the sense of commission and of joy in that commission. The call is manifest in the way that these brethren concern themselves about missionary tasks. It is also to be seen in the willingness of such missionary-minded ministers to make whatever preparation is necessary so as to free themselves for the work of their ministry.

The most obvious way to build up the Quorums of Seventies and the associated missionary elders is to make a special endeavor to recognize and commission the men whom God has already called to this important work. I believe with all my heart that many whom we have not yet recognized as potential seventies are so called. They have the root of the matter in them. Realizing this, I think that I speak for all those who have responsibility in this connection when I say that we are deeply anxious to so live that we ourselves can hear the call which God is sending forth to these brethren.

In this connection let me say, also, that we need to be alert to the call of God to young men who are not yet mature enough to take on themselves the responsibilities of ministry. Here something of the spirit of prophecy is urgently needed; not necessarily to designate these young men but to so understand and love them that we can steer them into channels where their missionary fervor will grow and their missionary skills will be ripened. In order for this to be possible, there is evident need for a church-wide revival of the missionary spirit. This will go with a church-wide revival of scripture study and family prayer and personal and group worship. This spirit will be one of collaboration with the Zionite movement and not of competition with it.

A further means of strengthening the missionary quorums is to increase the effectiveness of every missionary who represents the church. The brethren of the seventy should be strong in testimony and in writing and in administration. They should be able to minister effectively to individuals or to congregations, to the reading public or to the listening public; and they should be able to so organize their work that their own power in testimony is multiplied through bringing able and zealous men into right relations to the total endeavor. Looking forward along these lines, we are determined to see that our appointees and such others as are willing to take special pains to be prepared shall have at hand the tools of their trade; that their missionary purpose shall be made effective through understanding and skill. It is with this in mind that we propose to establish special courses of instruction for new appointees and, later, for all of the appointees and for such members of the local ministry as can be reached.

Important though less spectacular strengthening of the missionary forces will come from the progressive release of men of distinctive missionary caliber from essentially local situations. This calls for the discovery and training of men of genuinely high priestly quality to direct and inspire the work of the standing ministers in their several places. The stronger and more effective the work of the standing ministry, the more readily we can free the missionaries from local responsibilities so as to give their time and attention to the work for which they are primarily called and qualified.

THE SPIRITUAL INVIGORATION OF EXISTING BRANCHES

The primary work of the seventy is to extend the church into new fields. At times this may mean that they are to go to distant fields, but it does not necessarily mean this. The seventies are only to go to far places when the work is stably planted around the center (Doctrine and Covenants 118:1). They should not leave the organized work in any community while it is yet feeble. Rather, they should be eagerly concerned from the very beginning to discover and develop and trust new leaders and should then withdraw from the new branches as these leaders are set in their several places and as they are qualified by ability and experience to be safely intrusted with the local concerns of the church. By this we do not mean that the missionary must be fully and finally assured that new ministers are so mature that no mistakes can now possibly be made. If he adopts this attitude he will always be tied down to branch work. But it is of the very genius of the Latter Day Movement that the brethren of the standing ministry shall grow under responsibility, and that they shall be trusted to grow, and that the eagerness of the missionaries to push out into new fields shall make them rejoice in the development of men and women of capacity who can take over their share of the local load.

Today the call for missionary help is especially strong from two groups of branches. The first of these groups includes the branches which are under par. This means three out of four of the organized branches of the church. Most of these have less than one hundred fifty members. They are subject to all kinds of threats: some lack leadership, others lack church homes, others are the victims of industrial uncertainties, others have stagnated and need revival. Such branches need missionary attention to strengthen and inspire and guide them.

The other group of branches includes those which are above par. These generally have three hundred fifty or four hundred members or more. They tend to think that they have arrived. Many of them are in metropolitan areas and are concerned about building attractive churches with modern facilities. In many of these branches the most urgent need is for some missionary extension. Every branch which is large enough to take care of itself ought to have deliberate plans to propagate itself. One church to a metropolitan area is not enough. There are many such areas in the United States where there are more persons than there are in several of our States. In such areas we should have groups of branches, metropolitan districts through which we are saturating the territory with the message of the gospel, and doing so with assurance and with joy and with power. This does not mean that the development of modern facilities is not to be desired. But such development should extend missionary power and should not absorb it.

BRANCH PROGRAMS

Looking toward the important missionary work which beckons us, the officers concerned are anxious to set up a long-time program for every branch of the church. This program will seek to promote the most vigorous spiritual life that branch can attain. It will include plans for the regular services, for the participation of the departments, and for music and drama and fellowship. Where necessary, it will point toward the erection or purchase or remodeling or extension of the church home. And it will envision the evangelizing of the community. We hope and expect that where these programs are developed, with the widest possible consultation, they will be adopted by the branches concerned and followed through with intelligence and devotion and persistence, despite any changes of local or general administration. While much of the work of devising and administering these programs will be carried forward by the brethren of the standing ministry, as ought to be done, appointees will be available to advise and to assist in the total planning and in missionary series and Children's Day services and other special activities.

It is with such planned growth in mind that we call special attention to the importance of cottage meetings conducted by the local ministry. We hope and expect that appointee ministers will become specialists in this type of endeavor, and that both seventies and high priests under appointment will be able to organize cottage meetings and to instruct the brethren of the nonappointee ministry in the tested techniques of this important type of missionary activity.

Our realization of the strategic missionary importance of the branches and districts which are already established has been a major factor in the assignments which have been made for several years. Looking forward, we expect that where we assign appointees to branches these assignments will carry with them responsibility for church extension in these branches and also in the regions round about. A branch big enough for an appointee is big enough for at least one mission. Others of the brethren will be appointed to groups of branches with the distinct understanding that these branches will be built to the point of stable and fruitful functioning. The idea here is to build strong districts in comparative small areas so as to cut down the financial and manpower costs in administration, and at the same time to increase the missionary power of the church in that area. Then again, we hope to assign missionaries, as they become available, to metropolitan areas, to state capitals, and to such rapidly growing regions as Kansas, Nebraska, the South, and Alaska. Such appointments are necessary for many reasons. We need to draw upon these regions for families who will in time strengthen the work around the Center Place, and we need to establish the church in the regions named so that Saints who move there for economic or other reasons will find the church waiting to welcome them.

NON-RESIDENT SAINTS

About one fifth of the members of the church in the domestic fields, but not in the stakes, have only nominal fellowship with a branch of the church. Many of these Saints are very devoted to the church and are quite faithful in their Saintry duties. But they are so far removed from centers of church activity that they miss many of the values of church membership and lack opportunities for making the contributions of personal service which we need and which would help them to grow. The rate of loss among these non-resident church members is very high. Many of them attempt to satisfy their spiritual hunger in nearby churches. Before long they have established family and social ties without regard to their basic church membership. These ties tend to become stronger and stronger. Loosely held ties with the Reorganization tend to become steadily weaker. Many nonresident children and grandchildren are therefore lost to us. While there are many notable examples of families which have kept the faith through many years of isolation, it is unfortunately true that in a high percentage of cases isolation from church privileges means loss of church membership within a few years.

Because we are deeply concerned in this matter, we are placing responsibility for ministry to the nonresident Saints within districts squarely on the shoulders of the district presidents or their appointees. We are eager to help from headquarters, and have some general helps prepared and available. But the burden of ministry must lie with district officials and those whom they call to their assistance. District secretaries can help very greatly, but it should be kept in mind that the ministry needed is an essentially spiritual ministry.

Whenever possible, personal contact should be established with isolated Saints by men of the Melchisedec priesthood. Conference announcements should be sent to every nonresident family. Regional meetings should be held in suitable weather and in central locations, and special efforts should be made to provide transportation so that these families can participate. In the interim between these gatherings, families should be encouraged to establish home study groups, and church school nuclei should be set up. And, of course, there should be a constant but discriminating emphasis upon the wisdom of moving to centers of larger church population. This does not mean that nonresident Saints should be encouraged to gather directly to the Center Place. Rather, they should be urged to participate in preliminary gatherings where they and their children can receive the privileges of church fellowship. In Texas, for example, our people should be encouraged to live in the areas where they can reach the church. It is not to be expected that we shall have churches in every community of Texas for many years to come.

MISSIONS ABROAD

The principles which have already been discussed apply in the domestic fields and also, with some modifications, in our missions abroad. In the missions abroad our purposes may be summarized as follows:

To fulfill the command to prosecute the missionary work so far and so widely as we may. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.)

To establish stable centers of church activity in many lands.

To provide an important field of church activity for young people of missionary caliber.

To make the culture and natural abilities of many peoples available in the building of Zion.

To promote cosmopolitan interests on the part of the Saints through their participation in the work of these missions.

To draw on the faith and devotion and zeal of those won in distant places for the revival and cleansing and the enrichment of the body.

In order to fulfill the purposes herein outlined, it is important that we shall keep posted as to the current situation in each mission, and that we shall determine from actual observation and experience the minimum help involved if that mission is to become self-sustaining and self-perpetuating in men and in money and in material. This we intend to do. It is necessary that missionary work both at home and abroad shall be administered with faith and skill and expectancy; that we shall set challenging goals and then put ourselves in the way of divine guidance and blessing so that we shall be constantly surpassing the seemingly impossible tasks before us.

It is our desire, and is of the genius of the Restoration Movement, that the work in every mission abroad shall be as fully integrated as possible with that in the domestic fields. There are no foreign missions. As soon as the work is sufficiently organized in any part of the globe for the Saints there to carry their proportionate share of the total load, then they should be fully incorporated into the life of the church, sharing her strength and her joys and her responsibilities. With this in mind it is our purpose to underwrite each mission, so far as we are able, with men and with money, until it achieves the stability and experience and testimony suitable to its maturity and relative independence. As a means to this end, we expect in time to establish supporting missionary groups in centers of foreign-born citizenry in the United States, and to develop here and elsewhere the interest and support and leadership which will make our far-flung missionary endeavors creative and stable.

It is apparent that with our limited resources it would be unwise for us to push expansion into new areas when we are so feebly represented in some of the places in which testimony has already been borne. It is therefore on our hearts to develop the missions abroad which have already been established, and some of which have a maturity which rivals that in domestic fields, and then to use the far missions as bases for still further extension of the work of the church. Thus we look to England for the extension of the work in continental Europe, to Australia for the further extension of the work already planted in New Zealand, to the domestic fields and England and Australia for the evangelization of South Africa, to the United States for planting the work in South America and in Mexico, to Hawaii for bases in Japan and China and the Philippines, and to Tahiti for extensions throughout Polynesia. While this looks far to the future, a beginning has already been made. We are very happy, for example, that Australia is now represented by an appointee to Tahiti.

SUPPORTING MINISTRIES

One of our most urgent needs is for gospel tracts suited to the times and to the conditions under which they have to be used. Some of these should carry a clear doctrinal message supported by Scriptural evidence. Others may not be so clearly doctrinal, but should yet carry deep spiritual messages addressed to the needs and manner of thought of our time. The need for preparing these tracts is so urgent that we feel that if occasion requires we shall be justified in giving this task the right of way over other ministerial activities.

During recent years we have become constantly more alert to the importance of visual aids in missionary work. This is hardly surprising since the elders were in the forefront of this field years ago. Practically all of us can remember the old-time gospel charts which were used to such good effect by some of the traveling ministers. Recent years have seen remarkable strides made in perfecting the mechanics and in developing the techniques of visual instruction. We are deeply concerned that the church shall take advantage of these developments, and we are therefore creating an advisory board on visual aids which will keep the presiding quorums of the church posted as to the advancing possibilities. Just one word of caution is necessary, however. It is easy to become so enthusiastic that we spend a great deal of money without drawing upon the experience of the church. It will be wise for us to guard ourselves against this. It is the hope of the church officials that we can give such leadership through the Board and through the Herald Office that those who are interested will see the wisdom of consulting us before they spend large amounts of money in equipment or slides.

Developments in the radio field have also offered us a means of missionary extension of which we should take every advantage. The church expects to make recordings available for use over local stations. In addition to this, considerable local talent will be in demand for church-sponsored programs in local areas. Let me point out here that on such programs quality is of major importance. We would prefer not to have the church brought before the people rather than to have it connected with something cheap and tawdry and uninspiring. Keep in mind, also, that radio contacts just open doors. They must be followed up by personal contacts if they are to guarantee major results.

SUMMARY

Let us keep well in mind that the missionary task is one of the basic tasks of the whole church, and is to be discharged by all of the church in all of its parts. But missionary work is not merely a duty: it is a great privilege, deriving its inspiration from worship and the guidance of the Spirit of God.

Missionary effectiveness depends less on organization than on inspiration. Nevertheless some organization is vital to effective group missionary work. We can well afford to plan our missionary activities carefully with a view to increasing the effectiveness of our testimony by directing it toward the attainment of accessible objectives. The most immediate of these objectives is the establishment of stable branches where testimony has already been borne, and in doing this we must take special pains to use every member of the church according to his ability; to call to our service all the time-tested methods which our fathers used so effectively; and to add thereto the skills and techniques which belong to our modern age.

Let us dream God's dreams of love for needy men and women of our own land and of every land and, while the inspiration of these dreams is still with us, let us see to it that we devote heart and mind and strength to building toward stable and growing ministry on their

PART THREE.

At the root of this question is the belief of the Catholic Church that the pope should and does in fact exercise temporal control. This may to Catholics be a religious concept, but in this we respectfully dissent. The subject is susceptible of lengthy treatment, but we shall content ourselves with a survey of what is happening in a few countries where the Catholic Church is in control, taken from a report by the Rev. E. Stanley Jones and others in The Christian Century, page 833:

Reverend Jones Says:

Church Paves Way for Dictators

The God mediated through the Roman Catholicism of Latin America has weakened the character of the people. The church has refused to allow them to think or act independently. This has produced a mentality of spiritual and intellectual subservience. Said a Latin American youth, "My church has weakened me."

A Jewish journalist said to me: "The Roman Catholic Church has failed Latin America. They have everything—everything except a moral and spiritual foundation for their democracies." Outside of Uruguay, where there is separation of church and state, there is scarcely a real democracy in Latin America. Dictatorship follows dictatorship in endless procession. Why? Because the church has been a dictatorship. Religion has been imposed authority which people must blindly obey. This idea has been carried over into government—a spiritually subservient people easily became a politically subservient people. Latin Americans put up with dictators because they are used to dictatorship. There is the root of Latin America's failure to be democratic: the church is not democratic. . . .

Not Totally Roman Catholic

The authoritarian religion imposed on Latin America has created more skepticism there than exists in almost any other part of the world. The Latin American mind has had "no resting place between infallibility and infidelity." It cannot take the infallibility, so it reluctantly gives way to infidelity. . . .

It was also revealing to note that in the VE-Day parade which was allowed in Rosario [Argentina] the crowd booed the Roman Catholic Church and cried "Down with clericalism!" as representatives of that church passed. Something was happening: the Roman Catholic Church was being identified with reaction and Fascism and the Evangelical movement was being identified with freedom and democracy. The pope had called Mussolini "the man of Providence" and had backed the Fascist Franco against democratic Spain, and the Roman behalf. As we thus devote ourselves, the whole church will be cleansed and enriched; and we can pray with the full assurance of faith that God will strength our own hands for the task, and that in his good time more laborers will be called to work with us under him.

Church was backing the Fascist regime in Argentina and other parts of Latin America. This was producing a very significant situation: The Evangelical movement had moved from the edges of the national life to the center and had become a national issue. It stood for something that Latin America, deep down, dearly loves—freedom and democracy; and it stood for these two things not from policy but because of its inherent nature. . . .

Three interviews among the many stand out. One was with a socialist professor, a refugee in Montevideo, who had so absorbed my book, Christ and Communism, that he gave a better digest of it to an intellectual group than I could have done: His comment was: "This Christ, related to the needs of men, attracts me."

B. Foster Stockwell, in writing about "Church Freedom" in Argentine, Christian Century, April 18, 1945, said:

In mid-December the Salvation Army in Rio Cuarto, an important provincial town of Argentina, asked for police permission to hold street meetings, as had been their custom. The permission was denied. Shortly afterward the same police authorities verbally prohibited the Church of the Brethren from holding tent-meetings in a near-by town. Protests were made against such restrictions on the freedom of speech and religion.

The dispute was carried to the "interventor" of the province—the acting governor appointed by the federal government in periods of political unrest or peril. On January 8 the acting governor issued a decree reversing the decision of the police authorities, setting definite limits to police power in regulating, limiting, or denying the exercise of individual rights which are guaranteed by the national constitution, and clearly stating the fundamental reasons for his ruling. . . .

Press Defends Freedom

Both the great morning dailies of Buenos Aires, La Nacion and La Prensa, commented editorially on this decree. La Prensa underlined the governor's statement that only Congress has the right to regulate the exercise of such fundamental rights guaranteed by the constitution, and that such regulation must not tend to limit or deny them. . . .

Roman Church Denies Liberty

But it is not the only voice heard in the country these days. On January 25 the cardinal primate, archbishops, and bishops of Argentina published a pastoral letter of about 9,000 words, now reprinted in pamphlet form under the title, The Menace of Protestantism, and being broadcast through the country. The hierarchy warn the faithful against the "audacious diffusion" of "heretical and corrosive opinions, destructive of Catholic doctrine." Truth, they say, is the supreme good of men, and religious truth is to be found only within the Roman Catholic Church. . . .

Condemn Protestant "Disunity"

Protestantism, this pastoral says, grew up out of a criticism of ecclesiastical abuses, but it should have helped to correct them within the unity of the church. . . . The pastoral quotes official Catholic condemnations of this campaign from many parts of the continent. In several of these quotations, Catholicism is presented as the spiritual basis of national unity and Protestant work as an attack upon national unity and sovereignty. . . .

No Right to Convert Catholics

What, then, is the meaning of religious freedom? The bishops find an answer to this question in a statement by the Catholic Archbishop of Westminster (the Tablet, April 8, 1944.) It means "absence of persecution." We are free to worship God not as we like, but as he desires. But "no man can be obliged to embrace truth against his will." Such freedom from persecution, however, and the right of the nonconformists to worship God in their own way, give them no right to seek converts among Catholics. "Every attack on the Catholic unity of our people is an attack on the spiritual and cultural unity of our country," which tends not only to divide us from one another but to separate us from our sister nations. . . .

Claim Full Religious Liberty

The reply [of Protestant Churches] claims the full religious liberty which the pastoral denies to Protestants—not simply "the right to worship God according to one's conscience, but also the right to share one's ideas and experiences with others. . . ." The Roman Catholic hierarchy denies to Protestants the right to preach in countries that are considered Roman Catholic. They forget that it is in Protestant countries that the Roman clergy is treated with greater respect and that it is the citizens of two Protestant countries who at present guard the life of the supreme head of the Roman Church and protect the material riches of Catholicism.

A Modern Parable

I

There was once a man who dwelt in his own house. And there dwelt with him his wife, a son, and a daughter.

One Sabbath morning the man awoke late, and stretched his limbs, for he had enjoyed his sleep.

He arose and called loudly, and summoned the rest of his family and inquired of them: "What shall we do today?"

The son said, "Let us toss a penny, and see."

And the good wife brought forth a penny, which she delivered unto her husband.

And it came to pass that the man inquired of his family, "How shall I call the toss?"

"If it falleth heads," said the wife, "we shall stay at home and rest."

"And if it falleth tails," said the daughter, "we shall go to the club and play golf."

"And if it standeth on edge," shouted the son, "we shall go to church!"

And the whole family did get a great laugh out of that joke.

II

Now it came to pass that a miracle happened, and the penny fell into the deep pile of the oriental rug, where it was held straight upon edge; and the son could by no means prevail when he essayed to blow it down.

"Verily," said the man, "it is the will of the Lord. We will go to church." For he was all of a sudden moved by a strange feeling within him. And he forthwith caused them to be arrayed in their splendor and took them to church.

And when the man and his family were comfortably settled in their place, they looked around and saw a few others there.

"Verily," the man observed, "not all of the pennies did stand on edge this morning."

Now the preacher was much in earnest, and when the man tried to sleep he could not. For the preacher worried out loud about the poor and the sick and afflicted, and pled for money that the church might teach the gospel and help the suffering. But the man slid down in his seat and said, "I am sorry. I cannot give. I have not enough for myself."

III

It was not long afterward that the Lord observed that his servants upon the earth were selfish, and hoarded unto themselves the wealth and blessing that he had given them.

And the Lord was wroth. And he spake and said, "Let there be hard times. Let men lose their treasure. And let the vain and the proud be humbled and brought low."

And so forthwith hard times came upon the whole world. And there was sorrow and lamentation abroad in the land.

The man lost his job, and he knew not where to find another. And his little savings dwindled. And finally his family was threatened with want.

So the man thought of his church. And he remembered that once he had put fifty cents into the collection plate. And he wondered what the church had done with that fifty cents.

He went to the pastor and asked for help. And the pastor said, "Inasmuch as there were many who gave not in their times of abundance, the church cannot give now in their time of need."

And the man sat down sorrowing.

IV

And the pastor came and sat with the man, and they moaned together in their distress.

"O Lord," said the man, "how shall I pull myself out of this hole I'm in?"

"O Lord," said the pastor, "how shall we pull the church out of the hole it is in?"

And while they sat there, a still small voice spake unto them, and said, "Love one another."

And the man and the minister arose with one accord and looked into each other's eyes with a new understanding.

And the minister gave the man hope and courage, and referred him unto one who gave him a job, which made him not wealthy, but gave him the necessities of life and a little more. And the man out of gratitude gave a sum unto the Lord.

And all were very much happier in the end. For the man faithfully took his family to church, while the minister brake unto them the bread of life. And all gave thanks unto the Lord together.

The New Book on Worship

Let Us Worship

By Chris B. Hartshorn

A MANUAL OF HELPS, interpretations, and plans for leaders of worship, ministers, department leaders, parents, and all who assist in worship services or seek to understand the spirit of worship. The book is not limited to any one age group, but may be used with equal benefit in the several departments of church work, for women's groups, organized classes, and family worship. It is appropriate for all general worship situations.

The first six chapters discuss the nature and functions of worship and the philosophy back of it. The other fourteen chapters give suggestions and specific helps on such subjects as: the call to worship, prayer, music, drama, pictures, the offering, planning services, the "worship center," and the use of the Scriptures.

The Function and Record of Science

By J. A. Koehler

Number 3 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

WHEN THE genius of true religion said, "Subdue the earth," it said that man should pursue both the sciences and the practical arts. For, as the experience of man from beginning to end witnesses, without science the earth cannot be subdued, nor can it be subdued without the practical arts. No truth, no systemized knowledge, that has to do with man's conduct of his affairs is worth anything except as man puts it to work. And to put the truths of physical science to work, man must promote the practical arts.

The story of science is part of the story of man. For science is man gaining knowledges and systematizing them. When, therefore, we say that science was tardy, that it was late in arriving, we speak of the cultural lag of man.

In Egypt, many centuries ago, Thales learned something of the science of mathematics. He knew something of the principles of geometry. In the distant past, some men had some very good ideas of the solar system, too. Moreover, there was some dabbling in medicine.

But scientific progress did not amount to much until only a few centuries ago. And in that tardiness of science we have part of the explanation of the failure of religion. For religion is man seeking the welfare of his soul, of his body and spirit; and the life of the soul (which is body and spirit) cannot be enriched without subduing the earth. And since science did not do its part, religion was not a success.

THE FUNCTION OF science is to discover or reveal the keys with which to unlock nature's storehouse of good things. The function of the practical arts, or of industry, is to use the keys to that storehouse aright; or, shall we say, to implement the truths man comes to possess through scientific pursuits. If we are to believe the fathers of "Technocracy," even today industry falls far short of making the best use of these keys. And that is probably true, for wartime industry far outstripped peacetime industry in its uses of these keys.

Part of the record of science is common knowledge. Part is not so well known. The part that is well known includes the electrical gadgets seen in almost every household, the medicine chests, the new textiles, the autos, the airplanes, and ever so many other things. At almost every turn we see the record of scientific achievement.

What is not so commonly known (or if it is known, it is lost sight of in this age of skepticism and criticism of religion) is the bungling of science. Now don't say it was not science that bungled unless you are willing to say that it was not religion that bungled during the Dark Ages, especially. For Thales earned for himself the title, Father of Science. And great as that scientist was "he dropped into quaint absurdities." He was led into one foolish notion after another in his attempts to explain the creation. Don't forget that, you folk who like to ridicule religion's explanation of the creation.

A bad explanation of the creation may not be so bad—not so bad, at any rate, as a bad explanation of disease. Galen, who lived something less than 200 years before Christ, had foolish notions that "held surgery back for a long time and claimed thousands and thousands of victims." Galen, who was the best physician of his day, had a theory for everything. And notwithstanding the contributions of Hippocrates, more than 200 years before Galen's day, he became involved in many errors. It was dangerous to become a wife in Galen's day.

SCIENCE put religion off the track. We do not blame science for that; we only state it as a fact. But, in the thinking of the early church fathers, Aristotle was only a few degrees lower than the Almighty. To doubt Aristotle was to doubt the Almighty. But Aristotle, who was one of the greatest scientists that ever lived, wrote a whole pack of nonsense, and in following his lead, medieval religion got way off the beam.

This must be said of science: it was not disposed to get along without religion until religion tried to get along without it. But when science did try to get along without religion, it made its fatal blunder. Vice and crime and the mass extermination of human beings, for no good reason whatsoever, remind us of that blunder whenever we think of them. To put good powers in bad hands—but you know what Hitler, Hirohito, and company did with those powers. Of course, as religion becomes more kindred spirited, as it becomes more scientific, that situation changes. Both religion and science are learning that neither can get along without the other.

Science believes it has a better record of performance than religion. It should have, firstly, because science may demonstrate regardless of what the people believe. Louis Pasteur demonstrated even when the whole pack of medical wolves of his day were at his throat. Sentiments of peoples have nothing to do with the successes of true scientists.

Secondly, the materials with which science works stay put. They do not have the fickleness of human beings, who are the only materials with which religion can work. There are not a few reasons why science should have made a better record than religion.

Still, the record of scientific performance is spotty—almost as spotty as the record of Bible religion. In astronomy, science slid backward. Pythagoras had some excellent ideas about the earth, true ideas which were discarded by Ptolemy and others who were born afterward. Even Aristotle was far below the thinking of Pythagoras in the field of astronomy. By the fifth century after Christ, all the light of science had vanished, "and darkness settled over all of Europe." Don't forget that when you read of the apostasy of the Christian Church.

A comparison of the records of science and religion reveal one thing that is especially interesting. Science got off to a very bad start, whereas religion got off to a good start (in its proclamations, that is) if the story of the Bible is true; and most of you will say that in its general outlines it is true. In the main, science in its beginning was concerned with things which did not matter so much. Its first notable discoveries were about things that are farthest away—the moon, the sun, the stars. But religion's first proclamations respected the affairs upon the right conduct of which everything depends. You may read religion's first proclamations in chapter one of Genesis. They respect the eternal, the vital, the fate-or-fortune-determining affairs of all peoples, in all ages, throughout all time.

—NAOMI RUSSELL.

Science does not need to guess about much of anything. In truth, in these days, guessing is not science at all, but religion must do a lot of walking by faith instead of sight. Science can observe the things it wishes to know. It can experiment, good heart or bad; and it can see straight no matter how crooked it feels. Still there were times when science, so-called, was as superstitious as true religion, so-called.

We are often told, even today, that we shall achieve better living through chemistry. At least one of the fathers of "Technocracy" scoffs at the idea that chemistry is in any way dependent on philosophy, even, to enrich man's life. As for the need of religion, he thinks that is silly.

THINK ABOUT it. Ask yourself, ask anyone, including Howard Scott, how chemistry can improve the moral will. Ask him how chemistry can engender the only spirit which can assure that man will choose to do the morally right without compulsion. Ask him how chemistry can devote itself to the promotion of highly prized human values without the guiding genius of philosophy and religion. Chemistry may combine oxygen and carbon in life saving relations. But can it order human relations aright? You know it can't. Chemistry can have nothing to do with straightening out the chaos into which society has gotten itself; unless, indeed, it is to make some people afraid to do the evil that their hearts incline them to do.

Physical science is a "bread" affair. Religious, moral, social philosophy is a "word" affair. And look where we will, whether in the lives of the ancients or the moderns, we see only witness of the truth that "man shall not live by bread alone [which means by industry alone] but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

I am a believer in the social philosophy of the modern prophet because I believe it stands the test, both of reason and of experience. It is permeated with scientific exactions. There is no point at which it overlooks anything that is requisite to the enrichment of human life. It is as philosophic as it is practical; and as scientific as it is devout. It is not a mass of fragmentary ideas thrown together without order. It is a system of ethical principles which, applied to the primary affairs of all peoples, assure that instead of poverty there shall be prosperity, and instead of violence there shall be peace throughout the land.

DO NOT CROSS THE LINE

By O. J. Tary

FOR THE PROTECTION of the vast number of travelers on our highways, danger zones are designated by certain lines, over which drivers are warned to not cross. Those who fail to heed the warning, court danger that may bring disaster.

Over the entire area of human activities, law and justice have drawn certain lines, (though not shown in paint) that warn against crossing. Justice, honesty, character, and virtue can be obtained only within the range of certain specific boundary lines.

WITHIN A large urban district, there may be congregations of a dozen or more different denominations. All of them have their boundary lines, separating each from the others, but in some instances they are so dim as to be scarcely discernible.

Crossing those lines from one church to another is not considered to involve any risk by the major part of the membership. They may encounter a little friction, but never a head-on collision.

When Jesus set up his church, the boundary lines were clearly drawn, and its course was definitely charted. It might be impeded by obstacles in its course, but to attempt to by-pass them by leaving the charted course, instead of attempting to clear away the obstacles, made disaster inevitable. This fact is conclusively proved by the apostasy that wrecked the early church. Investigation to discover the cause usually follows a tragic wreck.

If, as believed by most all churches, that the primitive church was wrecked and turned from its charted course, and disappeared in the wilderness, it will be interesting if we can find out the cause.

The highest type of finite intelligence, usually takes the perfect works of infinite wisdom as a criterion for material construction. To protect the rush of travel over our public highways, at many places guardrails have to be installed to keep vehicles on the road.

WHEN THE CHURCH Jesus built set out on its course to encircle the world, it was equipped with competent priesthood personnel to pilot it safely through. The safety devices to prevent the church being wrecked in the many dangerous places along the way, were provided by the law and instructions which the Master gave to the men into whose care he entrusted the church. For the sake of brevity we may sum these up in the words of Jesus as recorded in the closing chapter of Matthew's Gospel: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." So long as Jesus was with and assisted the work of the custodians of the church, it would not deviate from its charted course nor meet with disaster.

But the promise Jesus made to be with his ministry to the end of the world was conditioned on "Teaching them to obey all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Failure to comply with that condition would prevent Jesus from being with the church. Obviously the church was driven into the wilderness, because the men in authority failed to teach what they were commanded to teach. Instead of firmly pressing on against persecution and other obstacles in front of them, they endeavored to by-pass them by steering the church across the forbidden line, and to disaster.

A FEW YEARS AGO, when worldwide depression cast its blighting shadow over all financial activities, it caught our church with a heavy financial liability. Bankruptcy or repudiation of debts appeared as a road to get by what loomed up in the path of the church. We shudder to think what would have happened, if our leaders had ignored the safety lines of honesty and integrity, that had always marked the course of the church. Every member of the church should be thankful to God that we had leaders who had the courage to remove by honest endeavor, that formidable obstacle, and not try a short cut around it.

Removing the barrier that slowed the progress of the church, that required a few years of sacrifice, has paid dividends in presenting to the world a church of greater prestige and spiritual integrity, because it kept on its charted course, and did not cross the safety line.

SEEKING AN intelligent and conservative discussion of this problem, I call attention to a paragraph by Elbert A. Smith in his book, On Memory's Beam, which prompted the writing of this article. I quote the paragraph, in which he says, "I have heard an apostle say that we already have too many of our churches to which a stranger might go repeatedly and listen to the preaching and not know that he had visited a Latter Day Saint Church unless he should happen to notice the sign over the church door. I have heard others lament the fact that too many of our young men are sent out who have an excellent secular education but have never been helped to acquire a thorough knowledge of our own distinctive beliefs. With all their limitations our early missionaries had a common understanding of their message and drove it home and made converts."

To what extent the views expressed in that paragraph are shared by the church in general, I do not know; but coming from reliable sources they should be given due consideration. I think the publication of that paragraph was timely, for it calls attention to what may be termed a red-light or danger signal before the church. If the statement of an apostle (that clearly indicates that many of our preachers are omitting from their sermons the things they were sent to preach) be true, it challenges the necessity of our church existence. If the various churches had been preaching the fullness of the gospel in 1830, the latter-day Restoration would not have taken place.

THERE WAS a divine necessity for a church to preach, not something different from the Bible, but to preach the Bible more fully and with greater clarity than it was being preached; and to strengthen the validity of the Bible, by giving to the world the record of ancient civilizations on the western continent, that were in complete accord with Bible-teaching. As a third witness to those Scriptures, the revelations in Doctrine and Covenants supplement and confirm the former. Preaching those special features of the Restoration was the specific work of those called to the priesthood. It aroused violent opposition, just as did the preaching of Jesus, Paul, and Peter, but the fruitage of that preaching was many thousands of converts, who became able to testify from living experiences of the power of God working with them and confirming the word with signs following, similar to that which followed the preaching of the apostles Jesus commissioned, according to the record in the closing chapter of Mark.

We prefer not to offend any, especially our friendly neighbors of other churches, and wisdom should be exercised not to do so needlessly, but when the Lord calls men to the ministry, their first duty is to preach the truth with love and kindness, yet with firmness.

If, as certain would-be friends have advised, we drop the work of Joseph Smith, the prophet, and the Book of Mormon, we would get the approval of most all the other churches who would consider us with them a branch of the church universal. Such a course would leave no reason for our church to continue, and it would be relegated to oblivion. If the time should come that Latter Day Saint preachers are so fearful of offending people if they preach the distinctive features of the Restoration, the logical thing to do would be to abandon the church, and affiliate with the most popular and best equipped church to be free from opposition.

Let us hope that divine guidance may continue to pilot the church so that it may not cross that line.

EDUCATION IS A valuable asset for the gospel preacher. It is not an indispensable qualification for the ministry, (meaning secular education) and that education alone never guarantees a divine call to the ministry. The attitude of the church toward schools, always fostering them, and the experiences of ministers both ancient and modern, should enable us to reach a clear understanding of this subject.

As to the success of ministers who were deficient in elementary education, it would be unreasonable to take the extreme position, that because God blessed the labors of those men, he will do the same for all others. We must remember that God supplied to those men what they had not been able to secure for themselves. The Lord chooses the material best fitted to accomplish his purpose. One hundred years ago the facilities to acquire education were very crude and scant, compared with the present time. A public speaker then was judged not because of his grammatical construction of sentences, but by the importance of the message delivered. When men delivered the message of the restored gospel in spiritual power, that was the secret of their success. To be successful now, the gospel message must be presented in the same way. Secular education enables the preacher to clothe his message with more pleasing and attractive language, but if our preachers should not be educated in the distinctive features of the Restoration Movement, they cannot hope to be successful.

The Apostle Paul was an educated man, and his education was a great help to him when required to defend himself before kings and rulers; but when preaching to make converts to the gospel, he said: "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."—I Corinthians 2: 4, 5.

The course of the church has been marked by that kind of preaching both in former and latter day, and we cannot afford to cross the line. The church will go forward by keeping within the safety lines.

Not long ago a man lost his leg in a railway accident. He was taken to a hospital where his wounds were dressed. The surgeon said to him, "It is very unfortunate that this should have happened to you." "Oh," said the man, "it might have been worse; I'm so thankful it was the leg with the rheumatism."—A. Bernard Webber.

Visual Aids in the Church

William L. Rogers and
Paul H. Vieth

VISUAL EDUCATION has won a place for itself in the church. The book begins with a brief statement of the history of visual education in the church, followed by chapters on the meaning, the practice, and the method of visual communication. Then the various phases of the church's program and their relation to the application of the visual method are presented. An altogether helpful and comprehensive book and the first of its kind in the visual education field.

Civilian Regiments

During the war we heard much of mass production. We were proud, and justly so, of the amazing output of B-29's which rolled off the assembly line each month. I was thinking of those bombers the other day. If a thousand of them were lined up on a huge field, and a detailed comparison of the group made by expert technicians, I doubt that there would be any significant differences detected among them. The only individuality the B-29's possess is in the creation of the original model. Once the design was determined, no succeeding plane was permitted to deviate from the established pattern.

In America today, it may be that people, like planes, are losing their individuality. A few years ago I visited a packing plant in an Iowa city. I stood on the observation balcony for some time, fascinated by the methodical routine of the workers. I watched one woman for ten minutes to see if she would change position or vary her task. With a small cleaver she would strike almost the identical spot in each slab of meat that passed in front of her. That was her job—eight hours a day, five days a week. She was only one of hundreds in the factory who had similar duties. There were no opportunities for individual creative activity. Seemingly, there was little chance for individual expression in conversation. These workers couldn't stop to talk—the meat moved along.

Add to the millions of such factory workers the countless others whose daily jobs do not challenge them to new ideas—whose tasks require no exercise of ingenuity. The total is an alarming percentage of the working population of America. Without incentive for creative thought, these people lose their individual identity.

The day of individual craftsmanship has gone. Pioneer life demanded that a man and his family be almost wholly self-sufficient. The frontiersman must be a lumberman, farmer, machinist, and cabinetmaker. His wife must be equally skilled in domestic tasks. Neither you nor I want a recurrence of the "good old days," but we should be aware that the scientific devices which have eased our physical labors have tended to bring a corresponding mental laziness. As Whitman says, "I loaf and invite my soul."

Many of us exert our mental powers only as much as is necessary for us to get along comfortably. It's too difficult for us to reach out into new frontiers of thought. We are content to let other people think for us. Whenever we stop thinking for ourselves, we are no longer individuals. Whenever we stop thinking for ourselves, we are, in a sense, "subjects" to those who have ideas to sell. And there are many to dictate our thoughts. The movies, radio programs, political enthusiasts, and even members of our own social groups press their suggestions upon us. The ideas may not be bad—they may not be good. We need to measure both the immediate and permanent effects that would result from living such thoughts. In the words of Emerson, "If we live truly, we shall see truly. It is as easy for the strong man to be strong, as it is for the weak to be weak."

Youth has always been a favorite audience for those advancing new ideas. Maybe it's because the young are less prejudiced and less afraid of new doctrines than their elders. Perhaps it's because most of them are free thinkers who will attempt an evaluation of a theory on its merits only, not upon the social favor or disfavor that attends it. For such qualities of youth, we are grateful, but the wisdom of experience and maturity of judgment must be acquired also. Many voices call to us with false promises. We cannot separate ourselves from these influences that surround us, but we can learn to distinguish the genuine from the degenerate. With God's help we can be mentally independent, free to choose the way we shall go. We can feed our minds with thoughts that shall keep them healthy and growing toward God. We can become individuals.

physical existence of Zion will depend on the slow working out of myriad economic, political, and social changes in the world, which only God can accomplish. We can help, but still we must sometimes "rest in the Lord; wait patiently for him," after we have done all we can do.

The church may temporarily forget you or ignore you, but if you are prepared and consecrated, you cannot be lost from God's all-seeing eye, or excluded from his purposes. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them," rather than according to the momentary whims or needs of the church. There is no type of skill or knowledge or service that cannot make its contribution to the cause of Zion—directly or indirectly—under church appointment, or in independent fields of activity. ". . . to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry, and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work, labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

The Trouble-Shooter

Your Future and the Church

This Week's Question:

I HAVE JUST returned from reunion. The theme of many sincere testimonies was, "I want to help the Lord in any way I can." Such desires are commendable, but unless they are expressed in definite aims, employing the individual abilities of the Saints, God's work will never be accomplished. Young people, too, want to help, but they are asking, "In what specific way can we best serve? In what particular fields does the church most need trained men and women?"—Is there a future for young people in the present Zion plan?

The Answer:

By EVAN A. FRY

CERTAINLY, there is a future for young people in the present Zion plan! The first all-important requirement for Zion is people—people of a superior spiritual, mental, and physical quality. Anything which contributes to the individual or collective development of these necessary spiritual, mental, or physical qualities in people, is a definite and tangible contribution to the cause of Zion. And of course, our first responsibility is personal growth and self-development.

But, you want to know, Along what lines? It is well to desire a definite goal, a definite task, a definite assignment. When young people express the wish that the church should indicate their personal goals, map out their courses of study and their objectives, and then give them a place on the church pay roll when they have finished, that is a different story, however. Would you care to live in a society where any superior authority of church or state could dictate what you should make of your life, what profession you should prepare for, what course of study you should pursue in school? That is not the job of the church, but of the individual. The local and general officers of the church may advise and assist. But the young person who is worth his salt will use his own initiative, his own will. He will make his own choices, chart his own course, pay his own way, and prepare himself for Zion living and service regardless of what the church does or does not do. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.)

The church, being composed of fallible human beings, is often slow, and sometimes mistaken. But all of us who are a part of the church, and who contribute to the sum total of its thinking and its actions, must share the responsibility for its lethargy and its heedlessness, as well as for its successes. As we would wish for mercy and patience for ourselves and our own shortcomings, we should be patient and merciful with others, recognizing that God's purposes are often temporarily frustrated by our own failure to measure up to our responsibilities.

We should remember, too, that the or leadership, or money, or time, or intelligence, or some other gift which God has given to you. There is no field in which trained men and women are not needed. When such men and women are available and willing and consecrated, God and the church will use them to bring Zion one step nearer to reality.

As you look toward a new church school year, are you finding vacancies in your corps of helpers? Perhaps you will lose a teacher among those who go away to college. Possibly one who served through the summer is leaving for a new position away from home. If there has been a forward-looking plan in your branch, the administrators will scan the lists of those who have been preparing themselves for service; they will call on the one who seems the best prepared for the place. If there is no such plan, and none is making definite attempts to be ready to teach, a vacancy may be a serious problem in your branch.

The teacher shortage in our public schools has set us all to thinking of what may be done to attract alert men and women to this profession. Educators are talking of “better living conditions for teachers,” “higher salaries,” “More freedom in personal life” . . . The situation is serious, when up to the very eve of the term, vacancies exist. Gaps are left, or poorly filled, in institutions that rank with the church and the home in importance.

These institutions are usually thought of together: home, church, and school. The home gives the child his first environment. The cradle roll and kindergarten departments furnish a beginning in living and learning with others his own age. Then, while the church and home continue to give their best influence, the school takes over with the more formal education. Democratic homes, freedom of worship, schools for all—these set up a pattern we are proud to call American.

How many of us realize that the teacher shortage is not new? It is not just a result of war. We have always had need for more pupils with “the teacher heart.” For years we have faced a shortage in our church schools. Many today condone the fact that we lack trained teachers. Most of us have seen times when we lacked even untrained teachers!

AS WE TALK of the dearth of teachers, or when I see a class without one, I think of an incident that happened several years ago when I was serving as church school director. One Sunday a class was without a teacher. Aware that we were scouting for one unsuccessfully, two bright-eyed little girls spoke up. “We’ll teach ourselves,” they said.

Alert as they were, I have no doubt they could have done very well with the quarterly material. At least they were still interested.

As our children grow up, what will they think of us as a church, if they remember that we failed to provide them the teachers they needed? Certainly, if we don’t supply them, they will teach themselves some way or other. In such a case, we can only hope that our example at home and at church, will lead them to remain interested and interesting Latter Day Saints.

What is the future of an institution that through poor planning, or poor execution of plans, forces its children to such an offer? When it came to almost that in our public schools, what did we do? A mother filled the vacancy, a retired teacher resumed her post, or two schools combined under one teacher. Children have not been left to teach themselves. Many situations are far from ideal, it is true, but attempts are made to carry on. This same substitution and filling in has taken place for many years in our branches. We are grateful to those who have given of time and talent, and we feel that they will be among the first to benefit as the fine plan for teacher-training gets under way in all our branches. It will eliminate much of the wasted time and energy, much of the blind stumbling. Teachers will know where they are attempting to lead the children, and they will learn how to lead them. What a means of strength it will be when we have increasing numbers of men and women and youth discovering and developing their powers and abilities to teach.

THE MERE ACT of appointing one a teacher does not make him a trained teacher. Two or three years of teaching alone will not do it. Even good intention is not enough unless it leads him to prepare himself. He needs to study people, children, the age he is to teach. He will have use for psychology, methods, the Bible and other church books. An experienced teacher of another church said to me once, “I could go into any church and teach. I would just teach my Bible.” A true teaching of the Bible would be acceptable in our church, but we have the extra witness in our Book of Mormon, and the “Latter Day Light” recorded in our Doctrine and Covenants.

A teacher in our church needs the strength she would gain from them, and from church history. A teacher needs more knowledge than is given in the quarterly she teaches; if this were not so, a child who has successfully finished the second grade reader could be the teacher for the grade that follows him. But knowledge alone is not enough to make a good teacher. Many who have degrees and are useful beyond measure in their own fields, admit their inability to teach. A good teacher has the knack of imparting knowledge by word and through her own action. A pitcher of milk will do little good for the child with poor teeth unless it is poured into his own glass and he may take it in. Margaret Fuller says, "If you have knowledge, let others light their candles by it."

INSPIRATIONAL reading in prose and poetry, communion with nature, and re-creational activities help to give back to the teacher that which he so freely gives his class. It has been stated many times that a public school teacher is not necessarily successful in our church schools. It depends upon how much he is interested in Christ and his part in the character growth of our children.

Those trained and those seeking training need to have a chance to use their talents, if they are to retain their desire to keep growing. A skill that we never have a chance to use gives us little inducement to search for means of greater development. In fact, we may lose members because we fail to use their talents.

Those who are trained for service, but left without a place to serve, may have reason to answer as did, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." The Major said, "You haven't told me your name, little man," and Chad answered, "You ain't axed me." In such cases, other organizations may "ax" them, and they will go where they feel they are needed and can use their accomplishments. Such a loss is deplorable, when, "We need workers" is the constant cry of our church.

The suggestion of observation-practice-teaching could be used to advantage in some church schools. The new teacher may receive benefit from the other's experience; in turn, she may present new ideas, and relieve the other of some of the preparation and activities.

Just as the end in education is never reached, so a teacher's training is never finished. Nothing that progresses comes to an end. Even Zion is a growing and unfolding process. So long as we have minds and wills,

"I Will Draw All Men Unto Me"

Jesus Christ made this statement at a time previous to his death on the Cross, and he also made the same statement after his resurrection.

The Son of God made this statement to his disciples before they were fully converted, and he explained to them that there were other teachings which they were not able to bear at that time. So when he appeared to the Nephites, he made this very important statement: "And my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; and after that I had been lifted up upon the cross, that I might draw all men unto me."—3 Nephi 12: 26.

The temptation might come to us to stop here and not finish what the resurrected Son of God intended to convey to mankind. Let us allow the Savior to continue to speak. "That as I have been lifted up by men, even so should men be lifted up by the Father, to stand before me, to be judged of their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil; And for this cause have I been lifted up; therefore, according to the power of the Father, I will draw all men unto me, that they may be judged according to their works."—3 Nephi 12: 27, 28.

Continuing, Jesus makes Eternal Judgment so clear that a wayfaring man, if he be not a fool, need not err therein: "AND HE THAT ENDURETH NOT UNTO THE END, THE SAME IS HE THAT IS ALSO HEWN DOWN AND CAST INTO THE FIRE, FROM WHENCE THEY CAN NO MORE RETURN, BECAUSE OF THE JUSTICE OF THE FATHER: AND THIS IS THE WORD WHICH HE HATH GIVEN UNTO THE CHILDREN OF MEN."—Book of Mormon, page 674, edition of 1919.

Jesus declared, regarding the foregoing, "THIS IS MY GOSPEL" (verse 34).

Jesus explains in the Doctrine and Covenants that there are men who will never repent, and this class will merit there will be improvements for us to make.

It is well for us to remember, too, that None goes on his way alone.

All that we send into the lives of others,
Comes back into our own.

the "second death" and be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone with the Devil and the angels.

Let us thank God for the Prophet of the Restoration, Joseph Smith the martyr, who through the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants has revealed to us deep things of the gospel, which are not ambiguous, and which are easy to understand.

Jesus explained at Jerusalem why men cannot be saved in the kingdom of God, neither in this world, nor in the world to come, that like Judas, of whom Christ said, that it was better that he had never been born, or rather, it would have been better if he had never been born, for Jesus declared, "MEN LOVE DARKNESS" and refuse to come into the light.

Those of us who have learned the true gospel, let us love the light and not the darkness.

Ever More Trouble

"Alcohol is one of the few causes of illness and death which continues to rise in populous parts of the United States.

"The admission rates of patients suffering from acute and chronic alcoholism was never higher in New York than it has been in the past year.

"The death rates from cirrhosis of the liver, which is closely related to immoderate and long continued use of alcohol, in all but a few cases has been rising steadily since the repeal of prohibition.

"All trades and occupations where alcohol is liberally used and particularly easy of access, show mortality rates several times as high as those where alcohol is little or rarely used.

"Life insurance experience with many millions of lives here and abroad is all to the same effect that those who use alcohol have a shorter life expectancy than abstainers, in proportion to the amount of alcohol they consume.

"A sunstroke is often nothing more nor less than a beer stroke."—Dr. W. A. Evans, former Medical Editor, Chicago Tribune.

INSTALLATION SERVICE

Theme: God's Word for Leaders.

(Note: All Bible references are from Inspired Version, and songs from the Saints' Hymnal.)

Call to Worship:

"And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it that I may remember the everlasting covenant, which I made unto thy father Enoch; that when men should keep all my commandments, Zion should again come on the earth, the city of Enoch which I have caught up unto myself."—Genesis 9: 21.

Hymn:

"God, Send Us Men," No. 223.

Invocation

Appreciation of workers of past year by installing officer.

Hymn:

"Hark! the Voice of Jesus Calling," No. 344.

Call for Workers:

"Behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily, I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves . . . But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

"If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work . . . and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Response:

(To be given by various workers who come forward and form semicircle about candles.)

"Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."—Galatians 6: 9.

"I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people." — Psalm 116: 18.

"Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."—Hebrews 12: 1.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men."—Galatians 6: 10.

Also: Hebrews 12: 28 and Psalm 119: 46.

The Assurance:

"If it so be that the children of men keep the commandments of God, he doth nourish them, and strengthen them, and provide means whereby they can accomplish the thing which he has commanded them."—1 Nephi 5: 59.

"Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

Poem:

Hold high the torch,
You did not light its glow—
'Twas given you by other hands, you know.
'Tis yours to keep it burning bright;
Yours to pass on when you no more need light,
For there are other feet that we must guide:
And other forms go marching by our side:
Their eyes are watching every smile and tear
And efforts which we think are not worthwhile,
Are sometimes just the helps they need,
Actions to which their souls would give most heed
So that in turn they'll hold it high
And say, "I watched someone carry it this way."
If brighter paths should beckon you to choose,
Would you small gain compare with all you'd lose?

Hold high the torch,
You did not light its blow—
'Twas given you by other hands, you know.
I think it started down its pathway bright,
The day the Master said, "Let there be light."
And he, once said, who hung on calvary's tree—
"Ye are the light of the world. Go—shine—for—me."

All sing:

"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee,"
No. 213.

Candlelighting Ceremony:

A candle in one of the rainbow colors for each worker to be installed and one large white candle will be part of the worship center if this program is used at a church service or part of table centerpiece if at a banquet.

Charge:

Installing officer points out that the greatest light (the tallest white candle) represents Christ and all other torches must be lighted from him. As the blend of rainbow colors is beautiful together, so is the harmony of the various personalities and abilities of the various workers as they work together, striving to "keep all my commandments, that Zion should again come on the earth." At a banquet, all others present might be given birthday candles in rainbow colors to be lighted from the officer's lights representing their duty to carry the light of Christ to others. House lights should be turned off.

Poem:

Let us put by some hour of every day
For holy things—whether it be when dawn
Peers through the window pane, or when noon
Flames, like a burnished topaz, in the vault
Or when the thrush pours in the ear of eve
Its plaintive melody; some little hour
Wherein to hold rapt converse with the soul,
From sordidness and self a sanctuary,
Swept by the winnowings of unseen things,
And touched by the White Light ineffable!
—Clinton Scollard.

All Sing:

"O Jesus, I Have Promised," No. 293, or
"Let Us Brothers," No. 287.

Benediction

PROMOTION DAY SERVICE

Theme: God's Word for Families.

(Note: All Bible references are from Inspired Version, and all songs from Saints' Hymnal.)

Processional:

If a hymn is used for the children to march into the auditorium, use any dignified hymn familiar to both children and adults. Congregation stand.

Suggested Hymns:

"With Happy Voices Singing," No. 37, or
"O Master Workman of the Race," No. 152.

Invocation

Challenge:

I saw tomorrow marching by on little children's feet,
Within their forms and faces read her prophecy complete,
I saw tomorrow look at me from little children's eyes,
And thought how carefully we'd teach if we were wise.
—Burger.

Call to Worship:

"Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were drowned in the depth of the sea."—Matthew 18: 3-5.

Hymn:

"Father, We Thank Thee for the Night,"
No. 38.

Poem:

I am the child,
I am a spark of divinity.
I emerged from the heart of God
To enter your world.
I demand a home
Filled with the atmosphere of the highest,
So that the highest with me
Shall be wooed
Into noble expression.
I am the chief asset
Of the nation, for I am
The future nation
In the making.
Can the acorn
Unfold into the giant oak
Without a home
In the warm soil?
Can the lily
Unfold its fragrant beauty
Without a home in the earth
For its roots?
To express the best that is in me,
You must surround me
With the influence
That will call forth the best.
If you expect the man to be good,
You must surround me with good environment.
If you expect the nation to be great,
You must surround me
With great influences.

Scripture Reading:

"Verily, I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms and put his hands on them, and blessed them."—Mark 10: 13.

Hymn:

"This Child We Dedicate to Thee," No. 365.

Blessing of Babies

Poem:

They are idols of hearts and of households;
They are angels of God in disguise;
His sunlight still sleeps in their tresses,
His glory still gleams in their eyes;
Those truants from home and from heaven
They have made me more manly and mild;
And I know now how Jesus could liken
The kingdom of God to a child.
—Charles M. Dickinson.

Review of work done by children during the year by departments or classes. Song, Scriptures, memory work, and question and answer work by each group will indicate its achievement during the year. All children should participate in this feature although only the ones being promoted will receive promotion certificates. Those promoted will pass to next class upon receiving certificates.

Charge to Parents:

"Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

"And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deuteronomy 6: 6, 7.

Benediction

(Note: If the Promotion Day Service is combined with the Installation Service, the rainbow motif as based on Genesis 9: 21 could be carried out by having children's section roped off by crepe paper streamers in rainbow colors and they might wear badges of these colors. Badges might be a 3-inch initial of the department which he represents cut from construction paper or different colored flowers for each department such as red for juniors, yellow for primary, etc.)

spoke as one having authority because he did the things he asked other people to do. Our church will speak with a power and an authority such as she has never known when we as a people move forward in unity of endeavor toward Zion.

We must preach the gospel of the kingdom. Apostle Hanson has said that "The church of God lives only as the voice of testimony is heard in her midst." The continuing life of the church depends upon our witnessing and winning new members to our way of thinking. Material for the upbuilding of Zion can be gained only through our willingness to keep and to teach others how to keep "the laws of the celestial kingdom."

Jesus had to go up to Jerusalem to face his enemies and to be crucified. The time may well come when this church, our church, the very body of our Lord on earth, may have to face her Jerusalem, her Gethsemane, her Calvary. But let us remember that after Calvary came Easter and the Resurrection of the living Lord, and after Easter came Pentecost. After the period of cleansing, of sifting time, the church will be endowed again with spiritual power, to go forth and gather up the remnants of humanity and to build them into a new way of life, the way of Zion, the kingdom of our God on earth.

The final proof and evidence of the divinity and Messiahship of Jesus were those fruits of the fulfilling of his mission which he himself pointed out to the disciples of John: the physical and spiritual blessings that were realized in the experiences of those in need. Just so, the final proof of the divinity of our church and our Zion, will be the blessings she will bring to the nations.

"For out of death and destruction has our Zion arisen, as a lily amidst decay. From her gates shall go forth, as unto many beams of light, the laws of love and life, turning the place of darkness into light, of death unto life, of desolation into bloom.

"And in her heart shall live, and blossom forth, all attributes of life and love: to issue forth as a healing stream, unto the surrounding desolation; to succor and upraise all humanity, living and dead: to draw them back to the bosom of light and love: to learn the way of life: to develop and go forth again, as apostles and disciples of the new heaven and the new earth, and so shall a new and glorious way of life arise and come forth, from the decay and ruins of the old."—Bruce W. Broadfoot.

"Behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven. And the day shall come, when the nations of the earth shall tremble because of her terrible ones. The Lord hath spoken it. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 8.

What shall be our response to God's word, these "musts," these divine imperatives?

"For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do his good pleasure."

Themes for Prayer Services

By Milton D. Broadfoot

Call to Worship:

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
When each hour some fate is telling—
To be living is sublime.
Rise, O Saints, in all thy vigor,
Stand erect on holy sod;
Turn from aimless indecision,
Rise up in the strength of God!

Worlds are changing, old forms crumbling,
Souls of courage times demand,
Those who see the way as prophets
Lead towards the promised land.
Rise, O Saints, in all thy vision,
Let thy voice be heard abroad,
Speak! Let every nerve and sinew
Count for Zion, count for God.

Scripture Reading:

"For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Philippians 2: 13.

Supplementary Texts:

Doctrine and Covenants 135: 3; 137: last paragraph.

Suggested Hymns (Saints' Hymnal):

"Hark! the Voice of Jesus Calling," 344.
"Take Time to Be Holy," 322.
"Awake! Ye Saints of God, Awake," 204.
"O Zion, Haste, Thy Mission High Fulfilling," 388.
"Teach Us, O Lord, True Brotherhood," 341.
"Onward to Zion, Faithful and Strong," 436.

"We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," 415.

Theme Talk:

In the life and thinking of Jesus, there were certain "musts" that became divine imperatives. He said: "I must be about my Father's business." "I must work the works of him that sent me." "I must preach the gospel of the kingdom." "I must go to Jerusalem."

The restored church is the very body of our Lord on earth, both to will and to do the Father's good pleasure. These divine imperatives that motivated the life of Jesus our Lord, must become the driving forces behind the thinking, life, and action of our church. And in these musts, we may well hear the voice and word of God to his church.

We must be about our Father's business and work the works of him that has sent us. One of the dominant notes in the early revelations given to individuals and the church was the necessity of an active faith and obedience. "Behold, this is your work, to keep the commandments. . . . Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." We are called to live into every phase of our lives those characteristics and attitudes that were in the life of Jesus. We are called to make our contributions toward the upbuilding of Zion by the daily lives that we live, to make the testimony of our lives conform with the testimony of our lips. Someone has said that "An ounce of performance is worth a pound of preaching." Out witnessing will carry a fuller weight of power and authority when we become the word made flesh through our obedience to all the laws of the gospel. Jesus

"O Jesus, I Have Promised," 298.
"O Lord of Light, and Love, and Power," 299.

Theme Talk:

Youth today is at the crossroads. God's word to young people for today may well be: "Choose ye!"

Two postulates should be at the base of our religious thinking and choosing: (1) God, the creator of our universe, is interested in us, his highest creation, and is just as much at work in his world today as in other ages. (2) We live in a universe governed by unchangeable, immutable laws. A child touches a hot stove with his finger and is burned. Physical laws are broken and brought into play: physical results and punishment are immediate. Results from keeping or breaking laws that govern our spiritual growth and lives may at times seem to be slower in coming about, but they are just as certain as the physical.

From the beginning, our Heavenly Father has given to man the agency to choose right or wrong. He has been, and is, a loving, revealing God, pleading with men through his chosen servants. His word through the Prophet Moses is typical: "Behold I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life." It is just as true in the experiences of nations as in that of the individual that, "The wages of sin is death." The wages of sin is death, physically, spiritually, and mentally. As Brother Floyd McDowell has said, "That is not only good religion, but that's supported by the best philosophy, the best psychology, the best biology of the universities of today." That fact is written across the pages of history, written into the wrecked lives of sinful men and women down through the years.

How shall we make our choices? Shall we "go with the crowd"? Should the attitude "Everybody's doing it" govern our choices? There is a saying: "Fifty million Frenchmen can't be wrong." They can be. After the capitulation of France to Germany in the early days of World War II, Marshall Petain addressed the French people and told of their choices that made for national weakness and moral rotteness and corruption within. Shall we choose the easy way? "Rivers choose the course of least resistance: that's why they're crooked."

How shall we choose wisely? We may apply the test of past proved experiences of observable facts in our own range of life, of the enlightenment of individual and collective inspiration, of the revealed word of God, of the advice and example of godly men and women.

What shall our choices be? Sometimes in making a big decision, smaller ones are automatically taken care of. Through the ages men and women have chosen God and have realized the meaning of the more abundant life. One of our church leaders has said: "The way to become chosen of the Lord is for you to choose God and he will choose you." We will choose to cultivate those fundamental virtues and characteristics of the Christlike life. "To be the best that I can be," for our Father's sake, for the church and Zion's sake, for the sake of our loved ones, for our own sake. One young man, in bearing his testimony at the Kirtland reunion a number of years ago, in his zealotness for the cause of Zion, said he was willing to go out and dig ditches if necessary to help redeem Zion. To be the best that we can be within the limits of our potentialities and talents, even if it means being the best ditch-digger.

And the rewards of choosing righteously? One of the compensations of trying to do the things that God asks us to do, is added strength to go on to further achievements and accomplishments of his divine mind and will. For those interested in our church, this means being baptized and enlisting in the cause of Christ. Through our obedience, there comes to us a strength and power not our own, the blessing of the Holy Spirit. Through the medium of his spirit, we may receive direction in the making of decisions, in our choices between greater and lesser good. We may have a sense of well-being, of physical, mental, and spiritual harmony and health within. Youth today reveres personality. Would you stand out among your associates? Then choose the philosophy of Jesus, the most outstanding person men have known. Your personality is the reflection of your outlook on life. Jesus lived a life of service, of outflowing altruism. Development shall come in our living righteously in the lives of others, through the interchange of good personalities. The Dead Sea continues to be barren, dead, because it has no outlets, whereas the Sea of Galilee is a thing of beauty because it does have them. So with our lives. Youth has so many energies within: directioned, they shall lead to powers for good in the lives of many. As steam is directed, as the raging waters of a Niagara Falls are disciplined and energy and action are brought about, so as we choose and discipline the forces within, power to accomplish for Christ shall be our happy experience.

The short life of Jesus of Nazareth changed the course of the world's history. In our Scripture reading, he tells of the parable of the builders, and he demonstrated the truthfulness of his sayings by living them. He stood and triumphed over all the adversities this world and the evil one could hurl at him because his personality was built upon a rock. Would you develop stability of personality and strength to overcome? Then remember the words of Jesus. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock."

In choosing Jesus and his way of life, we became the companions of the spiritual heroes of the ages, of those individuals who have really done things and have left their mark for good. Is this not a high privilege?

"Choose ye this day whom ye shall serve!" This is God's word for youth today; what will our answer be?

Suggested Promotion Day Exercises

By Lois Quick Shipley

Organ Prelude:

"The Lord Is My Shepherd."

Processional of Juniors:

Saints' Hymnal, No. 210.

(Congregation will please stand.)

Rise up, Juniors of God!

Have done with lesser things;

Give heart and soul and mind and strength,
To serve the King of Kings.

Rise up, Juniors of God!

His kingdom tarries long;

Bring in the day of brotherhood
And end the night of wrong.

Rise up, Juniors of God!

The Church for you doth wait,

Her strength unequal to her task;
Rise up, Juniors of God!

Lift high the cross of Christ!

Tread where his feet have trod:

As brothers of the Son of Man,
Rise up, Juniors of God!

Call to Worship:

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof;

The world, and they that dwell therein;

For he hath founded it upon the seas,
And established it upon the floods."

Hymn of Praise:

"Praise Ye the Lord," Saints' Hymnal, No. 27, verses 1, 5.

Invocation by Pastor

Prayer Response: (by the juniors.)

Jesus, friend of little children,

Be a friend to me.

Take my hand and keep me ever

Close, close to thee.—Amen.

Responsive Reading by Juniors:

Leader:

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?

And who shall stand in his holy place?
Juniors:

He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart;

Who hath not lifted up his soul unto sin,
nor sworn deceitfully.

He shall receive a blessing from the Lord,
And righteousness from the God of his salvation.

Leader:

This is the generation of them that seek after him,

That seek thy face, O Jacob.

Juniors:

Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors;
And the King of glory shall come in.

Leader:

Who is the King of Glory?

Juniors:

The Lord strong and mighty,
The Lord mighty in battle.

Leader:

Who is this King of glory?

Juniors:

The Lord of hosts, he is the King of Glory.

Offering:

(Taken by junior boys and offertory sung by juniors.)

Father, bless this little offering

We have brought to you today,

Help us always to remember

To bring gifts to you, we pray.

We are only little children,

Only little things we do,

But we know they make you happy

So they make us happy, too.

Wilt thou daily guide our footsteps,

Keep them in the narrow way?

Guide our thoughts, our deeds, our actions,

Guide us in all we do and say.

Thank you, for the many blessings

We receive from you each day.

Help us always to remember
To say, "Thank you" each time we pray.

Offering Prayer

Five-minute introductory talk by pastor (stating purpose of this service, commenting upon importance of each class of children's division, including the cradle roll).

Presentation of babies to be blessed.

After the blessing of each baby, one verse of No. 365, Saints' Hymnal, will be sung by juniors.

Presentation of nursery class by junior supervisor.

Teacher reviews nursery class.

Song by Class:

"JESUS LOVES ME"

Jesus loves me, this I know,
For the Bible tells me so.
Little ones to him belong,
We are weak, but he is strong.

Yes, Jesus loves me,
Yes, Jesus loves me.
Yes, Jesus loves me,
The Bible tells me so.

Teacher:

Sammy, can you tell us how we can thank God before we eat?

Sammy:

For all we eat,
For all we wear,
For all we have everywhere,
We thank thee, Heavenly Father. Amen.

Teacher:

Alice, can you tell us how you thank God for our food?

Alice:

God is great,
God is good,
And we thank him
For this food. Amen.

Teacher:

Paul, when is God near us?

Paul:

God is near me through the day,
When I work and when I play.
He is near me, too, at night,
When I kneel and pray.

Teacher:

Shirley, will you say the prayer you have learned to say before you go to bed?

Shirley:

Dear Heavenly Father,
Hear thy little children's prayer,
Thank you for your loving care
Through the day.

Now it is time for us to sleep,
We ask thee watch over us to keep
Through the night. Amen.

Teacher:

What kind of children will Jesus love?

Children:

Helpful little children,
Gentle as doves,
Are the very kind
Jesus will love.

Pastor: Have any children of the nursery class completed their work and are they now ready to enter the kindergarten class?

Teacher: I recommend and for promotion to the kindergarten class.

Pastor presents promotion certificates.

Kindergarten teacher receives new class members.

Children's supervisor presents kindergarten pupils.

Teacher reviews kindergarten class.

Song by Class:

"JESUS LOVES ALL THE CHILDREN"

Tune: Tramp, Tramp, Tramp
Jesus loves the little children,
All the children of the world;
Some are black and some are white,
All are precious in his sight,
Jesus love the little children of the world.

Teacher:

Patty, will you tell us how the Israelites lived?

Patty: (Finger play)

Here is one little tent,
(One hand folded cup-shaped palm down)
Here are two little tents,
(other hand same position)
Where the children of Israel slept;
Nearly each sunny day
They would fold them away,
(each hand folded tightly and removed)
Very neatly they always were kept.
Here is one bigger tent,
(hands together, finger-tips touching, palms apart)

Yes, a much bigger tent,
For it serves as a church house for all.
In its door stood the priest
(one thumb folded under, one in tent house door),

Calling, "Come now and feast,
For the Lord has sent food." See it fall!
(fingertips flutter to side).

Teacher:

Sandra, whom should we thank for all the things we enjoy?

Sandra:

God gives us rain and sunshine, too,
And flowers and grass and trees;
The food we eat, the clothes we wear;
Thank him for all of these.

Teacher:

Margaret, will you give us a "Thank-you" prayer?

Margaret:

Father, we thank thee for the sky
That holds the sun so bright,
And for the moon and stars that shine
Upon us through the night. Amen.

Teacher:

Bobby, are we the only people to whom God is good?

Bobby:

I have many little friends
Who live across the sea;
Jesus loves them everyone
As much as he loves me.

Some are black, and some are brown,
And some are yellow, too,
But Jesus loves them everyone,
And I am glad, aren't you?

Pastor: Have any of the kindergarten class completed their work and are they now ready to enter the primary class?

Teacher: I recommend and for promotion to the primary class.

Pastor presents promotion certificates.
Primary teacher receives new class members.
Children's supervisor presents primary pupils.

Teacher reviews primary class.

Song by Class:

"DAYTIME AND NIGHTTIME"

Daytime is the time to play
So we're happy all the day;
We share our dolls and all our toys
With the other girls and boys.

Nighttime is the time for rest
So we get ourselves undressed,

Close our eyes, and say our prayers
To thank God for his loving care.

Trees and flowers are resting, too,
Underneath the sky so blue,
Birds are quiet in their nests,
While everything around them rests.

Teacher:

Gail, whom does Jesus depend on to do his work?

Gail:

Jesus has no hands but our hands
To do his work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in his way.

What if our hands are busy
With other work than his?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?

Teacher:

Gene, how should we take care of our bodies?

Gene:

God gave me my body
To use while I live,
I'll thank him for it
By the care that I give;
The good food I eat,
And the water I drink,
The warm clothes I wear
And the nice thoughts I think.

Teacher:

Richard, what have you found to be a good motto?

Richard:

As you set yourself a task,
And a meddling soul will ask,
"Why take trouble? Do you really think You'll win?"

You may answer with a smile,
"I shall win, for all the while,
I am sticking to my motto—
"Don't give in!"

Teacher:

Karolyn, will you tell us how God made homes for everything he placed on the earth?

Karolyn:

Once upon a time there was a little toad who thought his own home was the best home in the world. Such a funny home it was, too! But God had given it to him, and, of course, it was just the right home for the little toad. Where do you think it was? No, it was not a nest in a tree. It was just a little hollow under a stone, where it was all dark and damp and cool as could be. The little toad liked it so much he thought everybody and everything else in the world must wish for such a home as his. So one day when a robin came flying by, he called to the robin and said, "Please wait a minute, dear robin; I want to ask you something."

So the robin perched overhead on a bough and chirped politely, "Well, sir, what is it?"

Said the little toad:

"Wouldn't you like to live like me,
Under a stone where it's cool as can be?"

But the robin sang:

"It may suit you, but it wouldn't suit me.
I love my nest in the spreading tree,
That's the dear home that God gives me."

Then he flew away. Pretty soon the little toad hopped along near the brook, and he spied a tiny fish swimming in the water, so he asked the fish:

"Wouldn't you like to live like me,
Under a stone where it's cool as can be?"

But the fish said:

"It may suit you, but it wouldn't suit me."

God made the rivers, the lakes, the sea,
Full of clear, bright water for fishes like me."

Then he swam away swiftly. A squirrel came whisking by, and the little toad asked him:

"Wouldn't you like to live like me,
Under a stone where it's cool as can be?"

But the squirrel twinkled his little bright eyes and said:

"It may suit you, but it wouldn't suit me.
I like my nest in the hollow tree;
That's the snug home that God gave me."

Well, the little toad was more and more puzzled, when along came a happy little boy whistling a merry tune. "I'll ask him," said the toad. "He ought to know what home is best." So he called to the boy:

"Wouldn't you like to live like me,
Under a stone where it's cool as can be?"

How the little boy laughed!
"Oh, no," said he, "that might suit you, but it wouldn't suit me.

My father and mother and I, we three,
Have the dearest home in the world, you see;
But mother tells me that God knows best,
For fishes the seas, for the robin his nest,
For the squirrel his home in the hollow tree,
And your stone for you where it's cool as can be."

So the little toad hopped back happily under his stone, where it was damp and dark and cool as could be.

Teacher:

Lawana, how may we be good stewards of our lives?

Lawana:

The gospel of Jesus is kindness,
And meekness, and patience, and love;
The sharing of blessings with others,
And praising our Father above,
Then we, too, may be Gospel Bearers
In every kind deed that we do;
By giving our time and our talents,
And keeping our lives pure and true.

Teacher:

Dicky, what is tithing?

Dicky:

Tithing is one tenth of our increase which belongs to God.

Teacher:

Can you tell us how you figure tithing?

Dicky:

I've learned to put together
The figures on my slate;
The teacher calls it "adding,"
And I like it first rate.

There's one queer thing about it,
Whenever you get ten,
You have to "carry one," she says,
And then begin again.

That's what we do with pennies,
When I have ten, you see,
I "carry one" to Jesus
Who has done so much for me.

Teacher:

Joan, will you tell us what we mean by the first six principles of the gospel?

Joan:

The first step teaches faith in God,
And Jesus Christ his Son.
The next one tells us to repent
Of wrongs we may have done.
Then by baptism we receive Forgiveness of all sin,
And through the laying on of hands
God's Spirit enters in.
The resurrection of the dead
Will make us live once more,
Eternal judgment by our God
Brings us to heaven's door.

Teacher:

Delmon, will you tell us one way in which we can make the world better?

Delmon:

Do you wish the world were better?
Let me tell you what to do;
Set a watch upon your actions,
Keep them always straight and true.
Rid your mind of selfish motives;
Let your thoughts be clean and high.
You can make a little Eden
Of the sphere you occupy.

Teacher:

Ladoris, will you tell us which psalm is the "Shepherd's Psalm" and read it for us?

Ladoris:

Recites 23rd Psalm from memory.

The Autobiography of ELBERT A. SMITH

On Memory's Beam

THE WRITINGS of Elbert A. Smith
I have always found a ready welcome among the thousands of people who know him so well. There is a quality in his work that cannot be imitated—a combination of wisdom, spiritual insight, tolerance, kindness, good humor and human understanding.

ON MEMORY'S BEAM is a book that helps us to see, not only Brother Elbert's life, but a period in the development of the church, through his eyes, and with his kindness and comprehension. It appeared first in serial form in the church publication, the SAINTS'
HERALD. It is presented in book form, not only because many wish to read it again and to have it in their libraries, but also because young people are growing up and new members are joining the church who will not have access to the periodical. This book will take its place in the permanent literature of the church. It has been edited and has received some revisions and additions by the author.

LETTERS

Testimony of Samuel Asch, Sr.

As Narrated to Chris B. Hartshorn

"Even my stock knew the difference after I was baptized, but my wife confided to her neighbors that I had gone crazy," Brother Asch, 80, father of ten living Latter Day Saint children, told us at the recent Liahona Park reunion near Sanford.

A rugged pioneer type who came to Michigan from Bern, Switzerland, fifty-four years ago, he did not find it easy to accept the gospel. He admits he was rough and ready in those frontier days, vigorous of body and speech. He had neither time nor inclination for religion by nature, but God saw in him a soul of infinite worth and felt after him. He realized that one night when a vision came to him in which he saw a neighbor coming to his place with an invitation to attend a church service. He also was shown the town hall in Mungers, Michigan, (near Bay City) and a man preaching there. He saw himself in the meeting but felt out of place because he had difficulty in understanding English and he also was conscious of his baldness. Just then a man rubbed his hand over his head saying, "Don't feel bad. You have hair." Then, Brother Asch said, "I put my hand on my head and could feel hair."

"The next morning," relates Brother Asch, "I went out to do my chores, but instead of going to the barn I walked out to the road in front of my house. My neighbor, Mr. Summerfield, was coming toward me. His first words were an invitation to hear a man preach next Sunday who claimed to represent the church like that which Jesus established in his ministry on earth. I asked him which church, and he said, 'Latter Day Saint.' I had never heard of that church, but since this was like my vision, I said that I would go.

"When I entered the hall the next Sunday afternoon, I saw the man stand up to preach who was shown to me in my vision. I was surprised that every word he spoke was so easy to understand. On Wednesday night I went again to the meeting place. Then a power came over me that I had never experienced. With it came the impression that I should be baptized. Two days later, Elder Carpenter, the minister, came to my farm. About his first words were, 'I am ready to baptize you, Mr. Asch, whenever you demand it.'"

He (Elder Carpenter) had been shown that he was to baptize three persons. Saturday night Brother Asch went to Mr.

Summerfield's place and asked him if he would go with him Sunday morning to be baptized. Mr. Summerfield said, "I want to be baptized, too."

Then he turned to Mrs. Summerfield: "Mother, what do you say if I go with Mr. Asch to be baptized, too?"

"Suit yourself," she told him, "but I can't go because I expect company."

"However," Brother Asch went on, "on Sunday morning when Mr. Summerfield drove up to get me, his wife was with him and ready to be baptized.

"Three days after this I received the spirit in great power. My soul was filled with great joy. The next day I had an open vision which extended up into the heavens. A glorious light shown down upon me."

Brother Asch explained that all evil desires left him. The change in his habits brought some persecution, but it also brought his wife to see the beauty of the gospel. She no longer thought he was crazy. About three months after he joined the church, he had a spiritual dream.

"I found myself hitching up a team and taking my wife to the place where I was baptized. The water was clear. I could see clearly the tracks I left when I was baptized. Then I saw my wife in the water, stepping into those same tracks. When I arose the next morning, she told me she wished to be baptized. I was not the least surprised.

"Ten years after this experience, while I was cultivating sugar beets, a violent storm arose. I sought shelter for my team and myself under an oak tree. Immediately I heard a voice saying, 'Hurry away, for lightning is going to strike.' I drove to the end of the field six rods away. Just then lightning struck the tree, hurling pieces of wood to where I stood, but neither my team nor myself were harmed.

"At the age of nine I started to lose my hair and became bald early in life. A few years after my baptism, my hair began to grow. When I was fifty, I started shaving. While I do not now have heavy, coarse, dark hair, there is hair over my head as I was shown in my vision."

Brother Asch and his family are active, stalwart members of the Central Michigan District. They are held in high esteem by the people of that community, and it was a great pleasure to this narrator to become acquainted with several of them.

A Letter of Gratitude

I wish to thank all the Saints for their response to my recent request for old Heralds. It will be impossible to write to each one individually, as I shall be busy for weeks to come disposing of the magazines. May each be blessed for assisting in this work.

Tribute to Mrs. W. P. Hubble

In the passing of Sister W. P. Hubble on August 14, 1946, the Haileyville branch lost a faithful and valuable member. Her deep love for the Saints and their fine traits, which she was skilled in discovering, blinded her to their faults. If forced to admit that someone had a defect, she could excuse it or find virtues that outweighed the sin.

No sacrifice was too great for the building up of this church or for service to her fellow man. Every day of the week she was church-conscious and missionary-minded, always planning something for the good of the group or some individual. She was also an inspiration to her husband in his priesthood work, and a guide to her children. Her undaunted courage knew no defeat, for prayer solved her every problem. Her great ambition was to be a good teacher in the church—a goal which she attained through spiritual preparation and continued effort.

Such faith as hers is hard to find. It was her faith and calmness that helped her to be reconciled to the illness that preceded her death. She passed away as peacefully as if she had been going on an anticipated trip.

Planner that she was, it was fitting that she arranged every detail of her beautiful funeral service held in the Christian Church in Hartshorne, Oklahoma. There is now a vacant seat at every service, but the influence of this good sister lives on.

Married Fifty Years

Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Sinclair of London, Ontario, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on August 23. "Uncle Tom" and "Aunt Queenie" were married in St. Mary's in 1896; they are the parents of three children—two sons and a daughter—all married. Mr. Sinclair was born in St. Mary's seventy-seven years ago, and has worked at his trade of barbering for sixty-one years. Mrs. Sinclair, the former Queen Holman, was born in St. Thomas.

FOREWORD

Our church doctrine advises us to look for the beautiful and true all about us.

I have included in these lessons some of the ideas and principles which have brought me much satisfaction and enjoyment. It is with the thought that they will bring satisfaction, stimulation, and enrichment to the lives of other women, that I have prepared the lessons.

The lessons are really a homemaking series of appreciations for women. They deal to a large extent with the material objects that women work with, and yet there has been an attempt on my part to help bring beauty, dignity, and order into our relationships with each other, and in the use of our home materials.

Many of us carve, so to speak, in "soap." That is, we use modest, inexpensive materials; but by an appreciation of art principles, we may create orderly beauty and restfulness with whatever materials we use, even as others who live in larger homes and those who use more expensive materials, or even as those artists who carve in "marble."

Some of the lesson materials have grown out of my belief that we should try to appreciate and respect the work and personality of others.

We should, I believe, always carry in our minds an awareness, or God consciousness, in the appreciation of beauty which God has afforded us in nature. With this thought in mind, I have included the lesson, "Art in Nature," that it might help someone to discover, as she passes by, beauty that she had not noticed before.

Of course we are truly interested in ourselves—in how to make ourselves attractive to others—that is, truly attractive, that we may interpret our lives effectively before others and be pleasing also before our Heavenly Father. The lesson, "The Art of Dressing Well," is an interpretation of these ideas.

While I have not said much about God and our doctrines in these lessons, there is an indirect or quiet attempt on my part to portray "our philosophy" at its best culturally, intelligently, and with gladness of spirit. Because of God consciousness, all the tasks are vital living ones which we do "unto God" and therefore, even though we work with material objects, our attitudes are spiritual. Thus, these lessons come to you out of my desire to do a little part to help in a great movement in which we, the women of the church, are all working—in the effort to develop homes "where every eye reflects the altar flame, where each deed is sacramental unto the Holy Name," or in other words, to develop Zion homes.

ALICE BOLON.

Universal Salvation?

The question of universal salvation has been raised in correspondence received at headquarters. President Israel A. Smith recalls that his father, the late President Joseph Smith, had to deal with the same question, and did so in "Questions and Answers" in the Herald of May 9, 1900, page 303. The following is quoted:

What is the teaching of the church in respect to universal salvation?

The church as a body has not passed upon the question of universal salvation. But the consensus of belief of the eldership is to this effect; that the books of the church warrant the belief that through the atonement of Christ all men will be resurrected, he having won the victory of Death, Hell, and the Grave, saving men from the consequences of original sin, and permitting them to answer upon their own responsibility for their own belief, words, and deeds.

The Book of Mormon clearly teaches that all will be resurrected; so does the Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants; but all are not raised to glory, honor, life, and power. Paul teaches the three glories in I Corinthians 15; Jesus in Matthew 25; the Doctrine and Covenants in the vision.

There is the resurrection of the Saints, the honorable men of the earth, the heathen, and the wicked. The universal salvation attaches to the gospel scheme because of the intervention of Christ in man's favor; but does not mean, or imply that all are saved unto the fullness of glory, this remains to those who are obedient to the commands of Jesus.

Jude called it the "common salvation"; and Paul writing of the other calls it the "better resurrection."

"The longer you read the Bible, the more you will like it; it will grow sweeter and sweeter; the more you get into the spirit of it, the more you will get into the spirit of Christ."—Romans.

Zionic Economics

Editorial Note: The author is a church member who has taken a special interest in the subject of vegetarian diet, and has offered this article for publication. The Presidency believe that it will be of interest to readers. To avoid any possibility of misunderstanding, they wish it made clear that this article does not represent an official viewpoint of the church, but rests upon the author's responsibility.

It would be impossible to quote in an article all Scriptures bearing on this subject. It will be noted that those used here are selected to fit a certain viewpoint. In answer to a question, and explaining the omission of texts on the opposite side, the author says, "Zionic Economics" is not an argument or a debate or a reconciliation, but a positive picture. I have purposely selected the source material pertaining to vegetarianism, just as the artist selects a picture from the vast panorama of scenery." Other viewpoints must await later articles for representation.

A Discussion of Vegetarian Diet

By Lora Kem Ross

“WHAT shall we eat, what shall we drink, wherewithall shall we be clothed” in Zion?

We might say, "Take no thought . . . what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet . . . what ye shall put on" and dismiss the whole matter. But if we note what follows this familiar quotation in the Sermon on the Mount we will learn that, here, Jesus was giving a lesson in faith in God's established laws governing temporal life, and not an admonishment to take no practical thought in the selection of what to eat and drink and wear.

"Tell me what thy food is, and I will tell thee what thou art."—Brillat-Savarin.

Since we eat to continue life in the organism, life is the purpose of eating. The life is in the cell. Every living cell is an embodied entity, and the conscious idea that pervades it is its source. If that indwelling, conscious idea is, for a moment, withdrawn, the cell collapses, loses its life like a sieve. So we do not eat cellular matter for matter, but for the life-idea that is its source. It goes without saying that in the ideal food for man, the life-idea, should have completed its span in matter as, say, a peach ripens to a golden yellow on the tree and awaits man's taking and eating. Here we have life meeting life, as link meets link in a chain.

This throws new light upon the food regimen set forth in the beginning: "And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat. And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat."—Genesis 1: 29, 30.

Paraphrasing, briefly, we have: "To everything . . . wherein there is life, I have given life for meat."

God chose for Adam's food, fruit growing on trees "pleasant to the sight," and it was only when Adam failed to live up to God's instructions that he was sent from Eden to eat coarser food: "the herb of the field." It was not to be changed during Adam's lifetime.

Noah was instructed to take into the ark enough for his family and all the living creatures to eat during the flood. "Take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten and thou shalt gather it to thee" (Genesis 6: 21). There was not a carnivorous man, or animal, upon the earth until after the inundation when every kind of vegetation was destroyed, and it is more than probable that those driven by the blind law of hunger to kill, at first, before their bodies became used to it, found flesh a strange, unpalatable food.

When God caused Moses to lead the Israelites from their Egyptian bondage, and began instructing them in the principles of kingdom-building, not flesh, but manna alone was first provided them. "And the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may PROVE them, whether they will walk in my law, or no" (Exodus 16: 4). But the people "fell a lusting," and wept, and murmured, crying, "Our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all besides this manna . . . Who shall give us flesh to eat?" Quails in abundance came, but the gratification brought disease and death to thousands. Yet the restriction to a non-flesh diet was never made permanent, nor did the Israelites reach the spiritual attainments set for them. The Lord "gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul" (Psalm 106: 15).

The dominion over the animals that God gave man, in the beginning, must be construed as a righteous, compassionate dominion, since man was made in the likeness of God, and is expected to be no less than a god to those subject to his laws. May we not conclude then that even the fierce, carnivorous animals today are but emulating man's violated dominion? But even these biologically can return to their natural food, and indeed experiments have been made with some—notably dogs at Yale University by Russell H. Chittenden—whereby it was learned they could easily become herbivorous.

Through the reign of four kings, at least, perhaps also a fifth, Isaiah taught the food standards of the kingdom builders. "And they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit thereof" (Isaiah 65: 21). And in these strong words, pronounced the sacredness of animal life: "He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man" (Isaiah 66: 3). And chapter 11, verses 6-9, depicts the millenium when both man and beast will have returned to their original food and become utterly harmless to each other:

And the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and faling together; and a little child shall lead them.

And the cow and the bear shall feed: their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den.

They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Some of the kings heeded Isaiah's teachings and incorporated them into their economic laws, but others were unwilling, or had not the understanding to obey the prophet, and the history of the Hebrew people under them bears witness to many infirmities and imperfections. Jeremiah, though inordinately saddened by the failure of the House of Israel, nevertheless looks forward to the day when the people would be guided by the loving heart, the pure intuition: "Saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and in their heart will I write it" (Jeremiah 31: 33).

In the first chapter of Daniel is an unparalleled scientific experiment—perfect as could be wanted by any modern nutritionist—in the efficacy of God's original appointment of man's food. Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah are among the children to be fed three years with King Nebuchadnezzar's meat and wine in order "that at the end thereof, they might STAND before the king."

"But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank," and asked for pulse and water instead. Afraid that such a frugal diet might result in ill-health, or loss of strength, and bring the king's wrath down upon him, the servant hesitated.

"Prove they servants . . . ten days with pulse to eat and water to drink," Daniel said. The servant consented and brought the children of Judah pulse and water for the next ten days, at the end of which "their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat." But the inward result of undefilement with meat and wine was great indeed: To these four children accrued "knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams."

When put into the den with the lions, Daniel remained unharmed. "They have not hurt me forasmuch as before him innocence has been found in me."

"Innocence has been found in me!" Isaiah's prophecy come true! Daniel would not harm, or cause to be harmed, any living creature—not even for sustenance for his life—therefore, no living creature would harm Daniel!

Ezekiel said, as to the promises to the faithful in all things, "I will save you from all uncleanness and I will call for the corn and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you. And I will multiply the fruit of the tree and the increase of the field" (Ezekiel 36: 28-30).

"And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: It shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because the waters thereof issue out of the sanctuary: And the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf for medicine" (Ezekiel 47: 12).

"And the leaf for medicine!" Hippocrates, that first great physician, too, said, "Let food be your medicine." Vitamins, those infinitesimal chemical elements so adequate to life and health, were first discovered in and extracted from the green and yellow leaves of vegetation. Need we go to the drugstore for vitamins? No, let us go into our gardens for them. How marvelous was that first food Regimen with which God blessed man!

The food of John, it is said, was the fruit of the locust tree and wild honey.

The Christ child was born in a manger amidst the animals in the service of man. The animals fell down and worshiped him; it was part of his mission to include them in his kingdom. Does it take a very great stretch of the imagination to believe that Jesus, when he rode into Jerusalem upon the young ass, was symbolizing the entry of the animal into his kingdom? Throughout his ministry the members of the animal world figured conspicuously. To his pledged disciples, and to all those able to understand, Jesus brought the whole vision of the creation of God, the knowledge of things that are—the unity in the elemental, mineral, vegetable, animal kingdoms, below mankind; and the angels, archangels, and heavenly hierarchies, above mankind. "Zion shall come up from below," (Life grows upward from form to form) "and down from above." (Form is illumined from the heavens.)

Many today may take it that in such sayings as: "It were better that a millstone should be hanged around your necks than that you should offend any of my little ones"; "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my little ones, ye have done it unto me," Jesus meant only the "little ones" of the human family, or in some instances, perhaps, the uncleaned, but the listening heart intuits that he included the denizens of the lower kingdoms as well. This would hardly be otherwise, since Jesus used broad and sweeping statements and parables to teach "the patterns of things in the heavens," and to instill in his hearers a reverence for all life in all its innumerable modes of manifestation. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your father (Matthew 10: 29). If God so marks the sparrow's fall, must not the agonized cry at the slaughterhouses today be forever sounding in his ears?

Latter-Day Saints are aware that the Bible was originally a much more comprehensive document before the Council of Nicaea, A.D. 325, appointed correctors to "correct" the text of Scripture in the interest of what was considered orthodoxy. In The Gospel of the Holy Twelve, a unique and ancient text of the Bible, preserved from the general corruption by members of the Essene community, and translated from the original gospel by the late Reverend G. J. Ouseley, Jesus protects a lion that men were pursuing with stones and javelins. "But Jesus rebuked them, saying: 'Why hunt ye these creatures of God, which are more noble than you? By the cruelties of many generations, they were made the enemies of man who should have been his friends.'"

Jesus bade men to be considerate of all creatures, and not of his kind alone. "Be ye therefore considerate, be tender, be pitiful, be kind; not to your own kind alone, but to every creature which is within your care; for ye are to them as gods, to whom they look in their needs."

In this text the disciples were forbidden to eat flesh food. "Eat that which is set before you; but of that which is gotten by taking life, touch not, for it is not lawful to you."

The provision in the Word of Wisdom to eat animal and fowl flesh, if at all, is stated: Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter or of cold, or famine. . . . The beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, and all wild animals that run or creep on the earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 2.

They shall plant vineyards and they shall eat the fruit thereof.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 13.

In the prophetic text of the Word of Wisdom is the affirmation: "And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof . . . all grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts to be the staff of life."—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 2.

Sparingly . . . winter . . . cold . . . famine . . . excess of hunger . . . Are not all these emergencies today completely negated? Foods are no longer limited to locality, climate, or season. Progressive methods of planting and tillage provide us with an abundance of grains, fruits, legumes, vegetables, herbs, and nuts and modern methods of transportation—refrigerated trains and trucks—iced receptacles and counters permit our choice the year round of the finest fruits and vegetables God has to offer! We have more than 3,000,000 farms electrified, the total expectancy by 1949 is 4,400,000; we have improved canning methods and deep freezers in every part of the country to conserve our home-grown produce, and that to be had near at hand, for winter and cold and scarcity. Even during the war our markets were generally filled with fruits, vegetables, and nuts from the orchards, fields, and groves of the States having climatic conditions favorable to their culture the year round. Compared to other parts of the world, our country is a veritable Garden of Eden, and yet there is still that "murmur" which at times amounts to clamor for meat. A modern Jeremiah would be as saddened as in antiquity. However, there can be no real, but only a phantom physiological need for meat, and as man puts on the refined "Christ-Body," and its special sense-organs come into activity, he will be set free from the rude ghost of his past.

According to nutritional science, the human body needs sixteen elements, all finding their place in five groups of substances; Water, protein, fat, carbohydrate, and minerals, these finding their place, according to charts issued by the U. S. Government Department of Agriculture, in grains, vegetables, legumes, fruits, and nuts. When these are used daily in proper balance and variety, every cell, nerve, muscle, gland, secretion, and metabolic process will receive proper nourishment for energy, growth, and repair. Did not God use the greatest of wisdom in appointing man's food?

Mazdaznan (Persian), famous occult teacher, says: "I must never cause an infliction, death, or injury to any flesh or blood, be it animal or man. I must not partake of animal flesh, blood or fats during times of prosperity, neither resort to it in case of famine or torture to save myself from starvation; for he who clings to life shall lose it."

In that magnificent poem, The Light by Asia, by Sir Edwin Arnold, giving the life and teachings of Gautama, The Buddha, there appears the following passages:

... Our Lord went on, Teaching how fair
This earth were if all living things be linked
In friendliness, and common use of foods
Bloodless and pure, the golden grain, bright fruits,
Sweet herbs which grow for all, the waters were Sufficient drinks and meats.

Kill not—for Pity's sake—and lest ye slay
The meanest thing upon its upward way.

Aside from the religious reasons for the original food regimen, an increasing number of physicians and dietitians are sponsoring it purely for health reasons, particularly since the animal kingdom is now filled with much disease transferable to humanity.

There was the late Dr. John Harvey Kellogg, who founded the Battle Creek Sanatorium, of Battle Creek, Michigan, who said: "Nature provides us the products of the field, orchard, and garden—human foods par excellence, on which the race was fed during the long years of its primeval development, and the foods which constitute the staple foodstuffs of the great masses of the world's population." There is the venerable Dr. Josiah Oldfield who for years was associated with the Lady Margaret Hospital of Doddington, Kent, England, a fruitarian hospital. The Health Education and Research Council of England is an organization of more than 75 practicing physicians and surgeons and scientists who favor the "Original Food Plan" and who oppose the practice of vivisection as untold cruelty to animals, maintaining that if research workers would put a fraction of the money, time, and effort expended on animal experimentation into other channels—into the various non-medical methods of healing—far superior results would be obtained.

A striking proof of the truth of this statement is found in the wonderful results achieved in infantile paralysis cases by Sister Kenny of Australia. Working alone in the Australian bush, thrown upon her own resources, she developed an efficacious method based upon massage, manipulation of the paralyzed limb. Her results were so extraordinary; she had so large a percentage of cures that the Australian government subsidized her. Yet Sister Kenny did not experiment on a single animal. In all these years that she was working with patients, our research workers were torturing hundreds of monkeys with no results whatsoever.

As we stand upon the threshold of a new beginning, O brothers and sisters of Zion, having come through two world wars that succeeded in ripping the veil from the face of modern civilization and exposing the evil beneath, as we again come to grips with our own questions, problems of the new economics, purchase and use of the land, organization of the storehouse, and the consideration of surplus, let us rise to the very noblest heights of our understanding of the Scriptures and the law in our hearts. Let us exemplify and teach the lesson of love and of compassion to all that live. Let us put behind us, as unlawful to Zion, the huge costly livestock industry with its enslavement and betrayal of God's living creatures who use their organs as faithfully as many human beings use theirs; who show an affection for those who have charge of them far superior to the affection shown by some of the human race. Let us refuse to profit from the products of violence and cruelty. Let us think how demoralizing are the tasks to the men employed in the slaughterhouses. Can boys be trained for a noble manhood by earning money through wringing the necks of chickens? Can a man become a high type of human being who slits the throats of four hundred pigs an hour, or dismembers a large drove of steers?

We see now that genuine progress means that civilization gradually becomes more and more humane. Genuine progress means that we become aware of moral obliquities and proceed to correct them. We shrink from being the cause of cruelty. We prefer beauty to ugliness, peace to war, and friendship to enmity.

Let us go to the gardens and fields and orchards for our food and drink, using our products in their freshest, most vital state. Let us clothe ourselves simply in the products of the plant world and the laboratory. Let us go down every day of our lives upon our bended knees and thank our God for his gracious bounty! Then will our beautiful Christian Doxology, with its summarized teachings of our Christ and Savior, ring true:

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise him all creatures here below,
Praise him above, ye Heavenly Hosts,
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

"I have not been able to find a single and useful institution which has not been founded by either an intensely religious man or by the son of a praying father or a praying mother. I have made this statement before the Chambers of Commerce of all the largest cities of the country, and have asked them to bring forward a case that is an exception to this rule. Thus far, I have not heard of a single one."—Roger Babson.

Independence, Missouri

Gudgell Park Congregation

Pastor, Ralph Smith

Speakers at the 11 o'clock services during the month of August were Elders W. J. Burton, Leon Look, and C. J. Hunt. With the close of campus services, the Sunday evening meetings were resumed on September 8. Missionaries Ernest Ledsworth of Michigan, and Warren Chelline of Rhode Island were evening speakers during their stay in Independence for the priesthood institute. Nine young men from Gudgell Park attended the Aaronic priesthood retreat held at Gardner's Lake on September 7 and 8. At the September 8 business meeting of the women's department, Norine Davis was elected leader, with Eva Neill and Vesta Horne as assistants. Regular meetings will be held, beginning September 19, at Helen Mengel's home; yearbooks are to be made, and a study class in church history will be started with Melba Troyer as teacher. Flora Hallier is the Daughters of Zion representative at Gudgell Park.

London, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

The Erie Beach reunion, sponsored by the Chatham-London districts, was an outstanding success. Hundreds attended the ten-day session, gaining inspiration and getting a taste of Zion's living. The Nativity, a modern philosophical approach to the Christmas story in verse and based on the style of the old mystery plays, will be broadcast over BBC from London, England, on September 22, at 3 p.m., Greenwich time. Dr. Wallace B. Shute of the local congregation is the author. Christopher Wallace, infant son of Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Shute, was blessed on August 25 by Pastor A. W. Sheehy and Dr. E. V. Shute. The annual business meeting of the London branch will be held September 18 at 8 p.m. The seventy-first branch anniversary is to be celebrated November 17.

Hagerman, Idaho

Hagerman branch held an eight-day reunion from August 10 to 18. Apostle C. R. Hield, Evangelist Ray Whiting, and Seventy Phillip Moore were the general church officers in charge. Three new members, Lorenzo Bowmen, Joanne and David Nipper, were baptized at the close of reunion. Harry Dennis and Richard Price were ordained to the office of priest, and Tom Ultican was called to the priesthood; his ordination will take place later. A Speed-O-Print machine has been purchased to make possible the printing of a branch monthly. Silas Condit will be editor-in-chief, and Richard Price managing editor. The paper will cost each family $1.50 per year.

Tabor, Iowa

Pastor, Lester Hunt

Mother's Day was observed with a special service prepared by the young people. Those who attended Graceland College this past year are Frances Birkby, Louise Dunsdon, and Mr. and Mrs. Dean Myers. Norma Birkby, who has been taking nurse's training at the Independence Sanitarium, recently became the bride of Robert Flowers of Lamoni. Seven new members were baptized following the Children's Day program. Five from the local congregation attended Woodbine reunion.

—Morton Birkby, reporter.

Fort Worth, Texas

Pastor, Earl Moore

Members of the women's department, under the supervision of Mrs. Albert Banta, made articles of clothing from material supplied by Mrs. Harvey Spiller and sold them to raise money for the church treasury. A beautiful and impressive memorial service was held June 9 for Captain Joseph Lewis who was killed during the war. Sympathy is extended to the family of Robert T. Loyd who passed away August 6; funeral services were held at the church with Earl Moore and Ammon Andes officiating. Etta Hughes, daughter of Mrs. Ada King, was baptized recently at the country home of Pastor Earl Moore. The League, under the direction of Mrs. Wayne Banta, has provided several Sunday evening worship services during the summer. A picnic, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Ammon Andes and the William Meador family, was given by members of the Fort Worth congregation on September 1. A gift of appreciation was presented to the Andes on this occasion.

—Lucile Crooker, reporter.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

Pastor, A. N. Barnes

A farewell party and gifts were presented by members of the Zion's League to those leaving for college. Margie Williams will be a student at Graceland; Daniel McQueen will attend Perkinson Junior College; John Nyman and Olive Hawley will enter Southern College in Hattiesburg. Margie Barnes and Virginia McQueen are in nurses' training at the Independence Sanitarium. Curtis Barnes has received his discharge from the Navy.

—Mildred Thomas, reporter.

Butler, Missouri

Pastor, Wilbur W. Smith

A dinner and program, sponsored by the women's department, was given in honor of the fathers and sons on Father's Day. The young people conducted a worship service and church school classes in Petentler Woods on June 30. District President William Patterson was present for the afternoon and evening services; at 2 p.m., credit cards were awarded all who had completed study courses. Many of the Butler Saints attended the reunion at Columbus, Kansas, which was held July 27 to August 4.

On August 25 Delbert Smith was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood. Elder Glaude Smith, pastor of Walnut Park Church in Independence, was the evening speaker. The September Communion service was in charge of Pastor Wilbur Smith assisted by Elders Ralph Murdock, Charles Sutton, H. L. Bausell, Neil Dickinson, and Melvin Ingram. The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William Dutton was blessed at this service. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the recently organized orchestra gave its first concert. Elder Leonard Lea of Independence was the speaker at the union service in the evening; this was the last of these special services to be held during the summer season.

Lila Lyle, who has been conducting a class on "How to Teach in the Church School," has returned to Independence where she is a public school teacher.

—Alta Dutton, reporter.

Cash, Michigan

"Consider Your Ways" was the challenge of the seventeenth annual reunion of the eastern Michigan district held at Cash from August 9 to 18. Volunteer workers rewired the grounds and built an addition to the dining hall before the reunion began. Mrs. Harmon Fetting and Mrs. Audrey Murry supervised the kitchen and hall, assisted by a large corps of helpers.

Prayer services, under the direction of District President John Booth, were well attended. Seventies Harold Velt and Percy Farrow were in charge of the classes; Elders Jack Pray and Warren Chelline were the young people's leaders. Lillian Dunlap and her assistants did a commendable job of instructing the children. Preaching services were held each evening with Harold Velt, Percy Farrow, William Fligg, George Booth, Jack Pray, Warren Chelline, and John Booth giving sermons. Mrs. Harold Velt was in charge of the women's activities.

Members of the priesthood met four times during the week for special instruction. The choir, under the direction of Mrs. Frank Shufelt, contributed much to the beauty of the services. Supervised recreation was held each afternoon, and on Thursday evening the local Leaguers sponsored a hayride for the young people of other branches. In every way, the reunion was one of the most successful ever held.

—John Rogers, reporter.

Des Moines, Iowa

The theme of the Des Moines district reunion was "Share Christ's Gospel—Keep His Law." Services were held in the church, with the addition of two tents on the back lawn for children's classes. President F. H. Edwards, Apostle Arthur Oakman, Bishop Walter Johnson, and Evangelist John R. Grice were the general church representatives in attendance. Don Harvey was in charge of recreation; Mrs. V. D. Ruch taught the women's classes; Thelona Stevens taught the church school workers; and Mrs. Charlotte Gould, assisted by local workers, supervised the children's work.

The reunion began Saturday evening, August 10, with a play "Seek Ye First," written and directed by Naomi Cook Alexander. Other young peoples' activities included swimming, baseball, group games, tours of the city, and early morning prayer services. The League sponsored a worship chapel in one of the classrooms.

Much of the success of the reunion was the result of the careful planning done by District President Frank A. Fry and the reunion committee.

—Cora Wildey, reporter.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, Joseph Breshears

Sixty-five of the Springfield Saints spent the entire week at the Columbus, Kansas, reunion, participating in their second annual co-operative project. Thirty others attended part of the time. Joseph Breshears was unanimously sustained as pastor of the group at the recent election; Norman Cox and Glen Yeoman will be his counselors. On August 18, forty young people from Joplin, Medoc, Carthage, and Webb City shared in a day of worship, fellowship, and fun with the Springfield young people as hosts. Average attendance at both junior and senior Zion's League is now twenty-five. Marian Bishop, Bill Bayless, and Richard Jones will attend Graceland College this year. Nancy Carol, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Yeoman, and Donnie Greer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Riebold, were blessed recently.

—Charlcie Yeoman, reporter.

Mobile, Alabama

Pastor, A. Orlin Crownover

The annual business meeting was held on July 31. Officers elected to serve the coming year are: John Hilburn, branch clerk; Hale Miller, treasurer; Aubrey Miller, auditor; John Barlow, Jr., Zion's League supervisor; Elizabeth Greene, women's supervisor; Verna Booker, church school director; Edna Miller, church school supervisor; Melgwin Miller, church school secretary; Henry Porter, junior church pastor; and Freda Miller, junior church supervisor. On August 11, Glen Barlow was ordained a deacon and E. R. McCurly a priest. On Monday evening, August 12, a branch social, co-sponsored by the Utopia Club and Women's Club, was held at the church; Pastor and Mrs. Crownover were presented with a gift to go in their new home. The Zion's League gave a farewell party at the home of Mrs. Clara Paul on August 15 in honor of the members who are going to Graceland this fall.

—Melgwin Miller, reporter.

Denver, Colorado

Pastor, Herbert Scott

Evangelist Ray Whiting conducted a series of meetings from July 14 to 28 on the theme, "The Kingdom of God." Nine new members were baptized on the closing Sunday of this series. Six lots have been purchased for the erection of a new church building which, it is hoped, can be finished by 1950. On Thursday, September 5, Denver Saints were hosts to Apostle D. T. Williams and twenty young Hawaiians enroute to Graceland College.

—Mildred Sheehy, reporter.

WEDDINGS

Martin-Dawson

Virginia Dawson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dawson, and Edwin Martin of Davenport, Iowa, were married August 26 at the Danuba Reorganized Church. Evangelist R. V. Hopkins, uncle of the bride, performed the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are making their home in Davenport.

Stoft-Jones

Dorothy Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Jones, and Paul Stoft, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stoft, both of Denver, Colorado, were united in marriage in the Denver Reorganized Church on July 12. The double-ring ceremony was performed by the groom's father.

Knight-Collins

The marriage of Barbara Collins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Collins, and Clair Knight, son of Mrs. Ellen Knight, both of Ogden, Utah, was solemnized at the Reorganized Church of Ogden on July 31. Elder Arthur E. Stoft officiated.

Peterson-Collins

Bernice Collins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Collins of Ogden, Utah, and John W. Peterson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Peterson of Los Angeles, California, were united in marriage at the Reorganized Church in Ogden on August 19. Elder Joseph Elkins performed the ceremony.

Marshall-Newberry

Betty Jean Newberry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Newberry, and Donald Marshall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Marshall, both of Lamoni, Iowa, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents on September 1. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Elder J. Arthur Lane. The couple will live in Lamoni, where both are employed.

Winegar-Thornton

Mary Lou Thornton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam A. Thornton, and Floyd Winegar, son of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Winegar, of Hagerman, Idaho, were married recently. They will live in Hagerman.

Our Departed Ones

BERRYHILL.—Lora G., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cleo Bayless, was born October 21, 1914, near Terlton, Oklahoma, and passed away August 14, 1946, at the Pryor Hospital. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Left to mourn are her husband; three sons: Leo, Loyd, and David; a daughter, Evelyn, all of Sapulpa, Oklahoma; her parents, and three brothers: Aubrey, Willard, and J. C., of Hannford, California; and her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Bayless of Terlton. Funeral services were held from the Terlton church, Elder W. L. Conner of Tulsa officiating. Interment was in the Terlton cemetery.

SNIVELY.—Charles E., eldest son of Hugh and Ellen Snively, was born December 16, 1874, at Keokuk, Iowa, and passed away at the Decatur County Hospital in Leon, Iowa, on August 12, 1946, from injuries received when he was struck by a train. In September, 1893, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church; he was industrious, kindly, loved and respected by those who knew him. He moved with his family from Keokuk to Lamoni when a boy, spent a number of years in the West, and returned in 1933 to Lamoni where he and his two sisters, Bertha and Myrtle, made their home together. He is also survived by a brother, George. Services were held at the Marsh Funeral Chapel in Lamoni, Elders Jay Barr and J. A. Lane officiating. Interment was in the Rosehill Cemetery.

WALKER.—William Henry, was born July 20, 1866, at St. Aubert, Missouri, and died at the home of his son in Hartsburg, Missouri, on August 31, 1946. His wife, Anna, preceded him in death on December 30, 1943. He is survived by three sons: Milton, Dorsey, and Louie of Hartsburg; and an adopted daughter, Mrs. Nettie Holschlag of St. Louis, Missouri. Funeral services were held in the Mt. Pleasant Church near Hartsburg, Elder A. H. Wintermeyer of Jefferson City, officiating.

Balance Sheet

BY LOUISE SCOTT WRIGLEY

If you can smile when underneath
You don't feel gay at all
If you can hold your head up high
And dare your dreams to fall,
If you can say that kindly word
That you don't really feel
And when your life meets dangerous shoals
Stay on an even keel,—

Then even when you want it to
Youth's mouth just won't turn down.
For you'll find out that people love
A smile and not a frown.
And you'll find too, that when you feel

Depressed and sorta blue
That 'cause you've loved folks all the while,
Now folks are loving you!

* NEW HORIZONS

Young People—Your section continues its exciting way, an energetic crew in their saddles, and guns blazing merrily across the border. This week, by their own request, the sponsors are moving it to the back of the book, where there will be a terrific clearing away in the wilderness of small type and Bulletin Board timber. "We'd like to make our position distinctive," they say, "and we don't want to be buried in the middle. You take the front, and we'll see that it doesn't frazzle out at the end." So, if you want the best first, just start reading at the back, as you do your favorite monthly digest.

This week, Don Higgins, Vet of WW-2, takes the hot-spot light off your heads and turns it upon our future stake in the Orient, in "Our Far Eastern Frontier." In "The Trouble Shooter" three ghost writers, preferring a bomb shelter of anonymity, send up a report on what to do with a testimony in a prayer meeting.

Harold Sandy, who has given a great boost to the planning of New Horizons, goes to Kansas University. He isn't forgetting us. Nomie Russell, editor of the section, will continue to carry main responsibility for contents, but won't let us put her name "up on any signpost."

* GRACELAND COLLEGE DAY announcements and helps have been prepared for our next week's issue. There are some important items for all Graceland friends and alumni, and for all who are interested in the educational program of the church. Please look for them, and see that they are used in your branch.

* OUR COVER PICTURE, taken this summer, was furnished by Nellie E. Johnson of Independence. On a vacation visit, her party was enjoying a boat ride and took this picture with a small camera. The thick walls of the structure indicate the permanence for which the early residents of Nauvoo built. Today we can be thankful for their workmanship and good judgment of architectural values. Just a few steps from the Mansion House, this building is visited by many thousands of tourists during the year, and serves church people in many ways. There is a charm about Nauvoo not found in many places in Midwestern America.

* LEARN something new and useful every day. To learn is to live. Stop learning, and you have to live on the stale mental food of yesterday.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Do We Need a Dictator?

It has Happened to You

It is so common that there is no need to identify it with any special occasion or any particular people.

A group of friends is talking about the difficulties facing our country and its people—labor troubles, scarcities, the price ceilings, and what not. Nobody has a very clear idea what should be done. Then somebody in the crowd, feeling the apparent futility of the situation, says, "What we need is a dictator!"

Probably most of the good people who make that statement speak more in jest than in earnest. They do not mean it. Especially if they would consider all the consequences of dictatorship, they would not mean it.

It is possible that, in some moment of irritation, you also have exclaimed, "We need a dictator!" And yet if a dictator were to try to impose his will upon this country, you would soon join the forces of those fighting for freedom. For one thing, if we had a dictator, neither you nor anybody else could stand on a street corner and tell anybody what we need, without getting permission from the gauleiter of the Party. And how would you like that?

Uncounted Blessings

Perhaps it is a long time since you have counted the advantages of democracy and freedom. On your list it is quite probable that you have included only your discomforts and dissatisfactions.

Examine the situation of the people of any country in modern times, where a dictatorship has been in charge of the government. Do they have more to eat or wear than we do? Can they go where they please? Can they do what they wish? Can they speak their thoughts safely? Reliable information will clearly indicate that the people of the democracies and constitutional governments are far happier and more fortunate than those living under dictatorships.

While we are counting things, let us not forget to include the many advantages and blessings we enjoy.

Why Democracy?

In a dictatorship, one man has all the ideas—the others obey. In a democracy, many minds, many abilities may contribute suggestions and ideas. For this reason a democracy is stronger—it has greater resources than a dictatorship. And the mental resources are by far the most important of all human resources.

In a dictatorship, men must obey the leader, whether he is right or wrong. In a democracy, if the leader is wrong, the people can say so, and he can be deposed. Democracy has the opportunity to change, cleanse, and improve its leadership; dictatorship is often saddled with fanatics, criminals, and incompetents.

As we grow older, we see that no man and no set of men can have all the good ideas. A dictatorship therefore runs into sterility, while a democracy has available an ever new source of plans, opportunities, and inspiration.

Democracy is founded upon a trust of the people—their ultimate good sense, their saving graces. People have faults and sins enough, it is true. But in a democracy they can check each other; in a dictatorship, the faults of the leader are unchecked, except by a knife or a gun.

Patience

Let us have patience—cheerful patience—with the inconveniences of democracy. If in this country we will take the gag out of the mouth of liberty, the chains from her hands, remove artificial restraints that impede her work, it seems likely enough that we can and will have enough of everything we need for everybody who wants it.

Democracy moves more slowly than dictatorship, but it moves with great power. War has proved that. Peace will prove it too. Let us not for some supposed temporary material advantage destroy the birthright won at the cost of so much toil and suffering by our ancestors.

Dictatorship begins by taking away economic liberty. It never ends until it has taken away all the other liberties too—of speech and of the press, or criticism, of conscience, and of religion.

The new system is always an instrument of attack used against an old system, and it always has the advantage. It does not even need to be a new system; if it only appears with a new label and new promises, masses of people are often misled to believe in it and fight for it. The dictatorship is the oldest form of large-scale government known to man, and one of the worst. It came to the world with the barbarian hordes that swept both east and west out of the heart of Asia, from prehistoric times almost to the modern era. Dictatorship destroyed the finest gains of culture and civilization in China, India, and Europe. Now, with new banners, names, and slogans, like a false-faced politician, it appears again to plague the millions of the world. Democracy has lost its glamour, its excitement, its missionary fervor, because it has been with us for some time. Yet it is the best servant we have for the preservation of a free, abundant, and happy life.

THE PRICE OF LIBERTY

PART FOUR.

From what we have presented in Parts 1, 2, and 3, it will be seen that free Americans have the right to question the political intention of the Catholic Church. Indeed, it becomes a civic duty to raise objection whenever it is in evidence that any organization would depart from American ideals and force upon this country a coalition of state and church. Can we observe what has been done in Latin-American countries and in Spain and believe the Catholic Church stands for religious liberty as that has been interpreted in this country?

But we need not base our conclusions on what has been done and is being done — as loudly as that speaks: we have authoritative declaration made by prominent Catholic ecclesiastics that make crystal clear what would happen were that church numerically in control. Catholic Count Kalergi-Coudenove in his recent book, Crusade for Pan-Europe, avers that—

Catholicism is the Fascist form of Christianity. The Catholic hierarchy rests fully and securely on the leadership principle with an infallible Pope in supreme command for a lifetime.

To the bishops of Austria, Pope Pius XI, in welcoming Hitler's invasion, sent instructions and reminded them of the "unchangeable goal" of the Catholic Church. This "unchangeable goal" is the "restoration" of its position as the only legally recognized church in Christendom. Liberal governments must be opposed.

Even Msgr. John A. Ryan in his The State and the Church says:

This unchanging goal of the Catholic Church is the restoration of its status as the only legally recognized church in Christendom. To attain it, liberal democratic constitutions must be continuously opposed and a type of civil government eventually established in all countries that would extend protection only to the Roman Catholic Church. This protection was secured in Spain, for example, after Franco's Fascist rebellion had destroyed the Spanish Republic in 1938. Franco's Concordat with the Vatican, signed on June 6, 1941, reaffirmed the four articles of the Concordat of 1851, the first of which reads: "The Roman Catholic religion, to the exclusion of any other, continues to be the sole religion of the Spanish nation." Even Msgr. John A. Ryan, most liberal of all Catholic churchmen in the United States, is forced to reiterate the fact that if the United States became predominantly Catholic, its Constitution could and would be changed to insure the "political proscription" of all non-Catholic sects.³ The expedient nature of the Catholic Church's attitude toward its status in democratic America is authoritatively summed up in an official textbook of the Law Department of the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., as follows: "The recog-

niton of the Catholic Church's right to function through purely canonical moral persons, established and existing independently of the civil authority, is the ideal arrangement and the plan to which Catholic theology can alone give unqualified assent." Until this claim can be put into effect, it goes on to say: "no better substitute can be presented than the policy which has been worked out by the American people."

³In his book The State and the Church, page 39, and repeated in the revised edition under the title, Catholic Principles of Politics, page 320.

It may not be advisable to pursue this phase of the subject further, and in closing we relate something told by E. Stanley Jones, after his recent journey to Brazil. He says he had an interview with a Catholic Bishop:

The third outstanding interview was with a Roman Catholic bishop who is attempting to launch a reform movement within the church. When asked the principles of his movement, he outlined them as follows: (1) To go back to original Christianity, back beyond A. D. 270, before the councils arose, back to Christ. (2) To break entirely from Rome. (3) To honor the saints and the Virgin but reserve worship for Christ and God alone. (4) To enlist a priesthood made up of ordained laymen who would continue their work as doctors, teachers, and the like, thus keeping close to the people. They should be trained in the Bible. (5) To abolish "auricular confessions"—confess public sins publicly, but private sins to God alone. (6) To have only four sacraments: ordination, baptism, communion, and marriage. (7) To redeem the masses from poverty, ignorance, and superstition. (8) To establish a national Catholic church in Brazil but grant freedom of conscience to all. Did I approve of this program? When I assured him I did, he embraced me. He had spoken to 10,000 people the day before. Evidently the people believe in him. He impressed me as sincere. The Roman hierarchy has not deposed him as a bishop yet but has given him a purely nominal diocese.

In a footnote the editor of The Christian Century says: "This Bishop, most Reverend Don Carlos Duarte da Costa, has since been excommunicated." Some of his "principles" strongly suggest the program of Latter Day Saints.

Those Americans, who challenge the right of the Catholic Church to exercise temporal control, base their complaint on the Declaration of Independence that government acquires their just powers by consent of the governed. The position of the Catholic hierarchy is plain and unequivocal; it was declared in the encyclical Humanism Genus of Pope Leo XIII, in 1886, wherein he condemned Freemasons because they favored the following views:

They teach that all men have the same rights, and are perfectly equal in condition; that every man is naturally free; that no one has a right to command others; that it is tyranny to keep men subject to any other authority than that which emanates from themselves. Hence they hold that the people are sovereign, that those who rule have no authority but by the commission and concession of the people. Thus the origin of all rights and civil duties is in the people or in the State, which is ruled according to the new principle of liberty. They hold that the State must not be united to religion, that there is no reason why one religion ought to be preferred to another, and that all must be held in the same esteem.

This plainly denies any sovereignty in the people.

Pope Gregory in 1946 condemned all civil and religious liberty. Freedom of conscience was called "deleramentum" (insanity), and freedom of thought was "pestilential error."

Fascism, an ideology of government which exalts the state and deprives the individual of all rights to the extent that he may be liquidated for mere opposition, received the blessing of Pop Pius XI on February 13, 1929, when he declared Mussolini had been sent by Providence, "a man free from the prejudices of politicians of the liberal school."

This attitude of the Pope toward Fascism is presented only as a suggestion as to what the Pope had tried to do in recent times in currying favor with the dictator governments.

We are at a complete loss, in the light of what has been presented herein, to believe that the head of the Catholic Church has any real sympathy with democracy as presented in the United States.

The Sure Road to Freedom

By Robert J. Miller

FEW WORDS ARE dearer to the hearts of men and women everywhere than freedom and liberty. Thousands have suffered death in their attempt to gain freedom for themselves and liberty for their loved ones. And many now living would rather die than be held in bondage.

This is understandable to us as citizens of the United States, for we are free men, living in a land that enjoys liberties to an unusual degree. Our nation was conceived because its peoples would not tolerate acts of oppression, or be happy in bondage. And in our Declaration of Independence, and in the Preamble to the Constitution, we set forth in no uncertain terms the reasons for our acts, and the purpose of our government. To quote: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" (from the Declaration of Independence), and, "We the people of the United States in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." Our patriotic songs voice our love of liberty: "My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty"; and in our national anthem, "Land of the free, and home of the brave."

WHILE OURS is a nation blessed with unusual freedom, it cannot possibly cover all freedoms or all liberties, nor does it pretend to do so. There are countless kinds of freedoms, some good—and some bad; and to attempt to guarantee all would be an absolute impossibility. For instance, the government could not legalize murder and allow its citizens the liberty of killing their personal enemies, for that would deprive the victims, who are also citizens, their liberty of life and self-expression. Such a liberty extended to its citizenry would defeat the very purpose of government.

Our government was instituted to insure the liberties necessary for men to exercise the agency God gave them, such as: freedom to seek happiness; freedom from oppressions (by Americans, as well as foreigners); freedom in religious worship and in speech; freedom in the exercise of self-government; and the liberty to plan one's own life and choose his or her own vocations in industrial, commercial, or civic enterprise.

Yes, these freedoms and liberties our nation grants its citizens, and the liberties extended are designed to protect the individual in his personal quest for happiness and fullness of life as he interprets it, as long as that quest does not restrict or hamper the like pursuit by his neighbor.

Incorporated in our law is the right of the individual to: Obey the commandments of God, or break many of them; to shirk responsibility, or accept it (to a great degree); to procrastinate time, or utilize it to its fullest extent; to indulge the vices and weaknesses of humanity, or to shun them; and to hate or love his neighbor. All these liberties and more are given to us as long as we do not encroach upon the rights and liberties of others.

Without doubt the founders of our government were men of great wisdom and inspired of God; for they sought to give a people government compatible with God's purpose in man. In this they succeeded, and the years have proved their work inspired and in harmony with divine will.

IN SPITE OF ALL these liberties—these freedoms, man cannot say he is free. For as long as man is enslaved by fears, hates, greed, bodily lusts, prejudices, superstitions, jealousies, habits, customs, fear of public opinion, bodily ills, and the spiritual anguish that comes from heartbreak or unhappiness from varied causes, he is not entirely free.

Government can go only so far in promoting the well-being of its subjects. It can give them the freedom to choose rightly or wrongly; to order their lives in the main as they would have it; and protect them from many vicious external influences. But government cannot protect people against themselves.

Liberty and freedom are precious words and very dear to our hearts, as they should be, but we are too apt to take them for granted, until we see them slipping from us. Then we become seriously concerned and do something about it.

Life and health are precious words too, and these also we take for granted until our health begins to fail, and we see our life threatened. Then again, we become alarmed, and sometimes we do something about that.

LIFE, HEALTH, freedom and liberty are all tied up together and cannot be divorced if man hopes to achieve anything like a fullness of life.

In this matter of health, we must remember there are two kinds: physical and spiritual; one affects our brief life span on earth, the other affects our eternal life. But in either case our liberty and freedom either have a bearing upon it, or they are affected by it.

We would do well to keep a chart upon our various liberties, as the doctor keeps a chart upon a patient, and study the effects of them upon our lives. Then in a short season of time, we would know which liberties are good for us, and which are not.

Robert G. Ingersoll in his lecture "The Liberty of Man, Woman and Child" reviewed the successes of Napoleon and the terrible cost of his achievement; and then observed that he would rather be the nameless peasant who had his self-respect and the love and adoration of his family and neighbors, than to have been that "imperial impersonation of force and murder known as Napoleon the Great." And he continued, "It is not necessary to be great to be happy. It is not necessary to be rich to be generous. It is not necessary to be powerful to be just. When the world is free, this question will be settled. A new creed will be written. In that creed, there will be but one word, Liberty. . . . Coming from the infinite sea of the future there shall never touch this bank and shoal of time, a richer gift, a rarer blessing, than Liberty."

Mr. Ingersoll, with clear perception, saw clearly the true values, and appreciated the blessings of liberty. But beyond these observations, he had little to offer.

LONG LONG ago, good and wise men perceived all this, and looked forward to a day when man would enjoy true freedom. Yes, and far back beyond that, even to the dawn of creation God looked forward to the day when man would be free, and prepared a way to make it possible.

Definitions of liberty differ, but the godly concept is perfect, and should be the one we embrace and seek to understand.

The way to spiritual and physical health and to true freedom (eternal life), cannot be found in halfway measures, in panaceas, by a mixture of good and bad rules, good and bad behavior. Too long the world has tried this down through the centuries; and the histories of man are full of the testimony of its failure.

From the beginning God has given the cure, not a panacea, for the ills of mankind. He has ever told us the cure is from within, and comes from a sincere and a contrite heart. It is of the Spirit. The Way we know—through Jesus Christ, and obedience to the commandments of God. Christ sums them all up in the two Great Commandments "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind" and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The laws of God are laws of love. The laws of love are the way to liberty and freedom.

We live in a world of good and evil; and the world picture we see today is a composite picture of the world's present human behavior. We are a part of that picture. We help to make it what it is. Our personal behavior will affect the world, just as the behavior of others affects our world. No man can live unto himself alone; none is self-sufficient. We are each our brother's keeper. These simple facts we must recognize, and accept our share of the total responsibility if we hope to see that day come when Zion will be here, when our liberty will be perfect.

Our liberty, and the liberty of others is a social responsibility of all. "This is the love of God." Evil days are coming if mankind does not soon learn its lessons and press into them. In perfect love alone can the answer be found: perfect love for God and his laws; perfect love for ourselves—for we are God's creation; and perfect love for our fellow men—for God created them also.

Paul tells us "Perfect love casteth out all fear." Much evil is born because of fear. There is probably no surer way to freedom than by labors of love out of a noble heart.

She thought, when night had finally ended day,
"Dear Lord, tonight I am too tired to pray,"
And wearily she closed her eyes in sleep,
Slipping far into the shadowed deep.

Up in heaven the dear Lord heard and smiled:
"Today she soothed a little crying child.
She stopped her work to take old Ella Kloop
A fragrant, warming bowl of her good soup.
Her house was orderly, her garden tended,
Her children fed, their clothes all clean and mended.
Her husband, home from work, found happiness,
And quiet peace in her deep gentleness."
The dear Lord smiled again. "Too tired to pray?
Her hands have offered prayers of love all day."

—Jane Coffin.

Such prayers of love will bring us nearer to God and the freedom we seek.

The Function and Record of Religion

By J. A. Koehler

Number 4 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE FUNCTION OR task of religion is to engender and to nurture in man a spirit which will impel him to use his knowledges, skills, opportunities—his resources—in ways that promote the well-being of the soul; which is the body and the spirit regarded as one living being. And that implies that the business of religion is to inspire man to scientific and artistic pursuits, and to reveal the way in which man's knowledges and skills require to be implemented, or put to use, if they are to enrich human life.

True religion, in the opinion of the modern prophet, consists in "using the things of this world in the manner designed of God." Since to use the things of this world in that manner is to order the relations of persons and things aright—or to establish "the government" with "justice" as well as to order it with "judgment"—the function of religion is to make the business of human living together an implementation of a true philosophy of social life. In truth, in the opinion of the modern prophet, that is the very essence of true religion, especially in this age: "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion," the essence of which is an implemented social philosophy.

THE RECORD of Bible religion is an account of how a good philosophy of life has worked in bad hands. It is principally the story of the reactions of persons and peoples to the leaderships of two personages: Moses and Jesus.

I speak more of Moses than of Jesus, for the reason that it is he whose special mission it was to embody a religious philosophy of social life (in a community, of course, or in a civil society, since there is no other means of implementing a social philosophy) whereas the special mission of Jesus was to engender the spirit of that social enterprise—to engender it in the lives of persons, of course.

I have said previously that physical science is engrossed with a world that was ready-made for man when he was created, or when he arrived. On the other hand, religion is engrossed with the shape of things to come in a world—a social world—which man must create for himself. I speak, of course, only of Bible religion.

In other words, physical science is concerned with the workings of forces outside of man, whereas religion is concerned with forces which can work only within. From one point of view, natural science is concerned with the goodness of things, whereas true religion is concerned with the righteousness of human beings. Science is engrossed with the actualities of a world that already exists, whereas religion is engrossed with the possibilities of a world which is to come into being.

THE MODERN PROPHET says that the earth, the world into which man was born, with its plants and animals and minerals and all the rest, was made "for the benefit and use of man"; not only to feed and clothe the body, but "to please the eye, to gladden the heart . . . and to enliven the soul"; and that it is the design of God that man should come to enjoy the good things which come of the earth "in abundance." And the conviction of the genius of true religion, whether it resided in Moses or Jesus or any other great personage—the conviction of the genius of true religion is that the purpose of God may be promoted in man only through the good and the right-ordering of human relations.

This means that the genius of true religion is concerned with the spirit, with the state or temper of the mind, with the actions of the moral will, with the cultivation of man's capacities for both good and right-doing, with man's use of his knowledges and skills, with his reactions to an environment not of his making together with environments of his own creation.

IN JUDGING of the record of religion's performance, remember that, unlike science, it is concerned with forces that cannot be controlled except by man himself. Religion cannot experiment with man, as science may, as with a pen of guinea pigs. There can be no pen of human guinea pigs with which religion may experiment and demonstrate. True religion cannot herd men like cattle into a special kind of social flock.

So, the record of religion is spotty. It is a story of ups and downs. As in the case of science, what religion did not know, it guessed at. Religious ignorance, like the ignorance of infant science, had an answer for everything—just as religious ignorance has today, no odds how far beyond the reach of human understanding the subject may lie. So, the record of religion is marred by dogmas and superstitions and theological speculations and other nonsense. In its absurdities, the record of religion in one age almost matches the record of infant science.

The record of religion, particularly in the Dark Ages, is a demonstration of what happens when either science or religion plays the part of a lone wolf; when either tries to make good without joining hands with the other. The terrible suffering of the world today is a demonstration of what happens when physical science tries to get along without the company of moral science. There is no chance for either religion or science to win the game of life as long as it plays a lone hand. And that is one of the reasons the record of religion is quite as bad as the record of science.

But even with little more than no help from science, religion has done some demonstrating. I have in mind, particularly, the community-building enterprise of Israel under the leadership of Moses and Samuel. The achievements of that people under its religious leadership, everyone should know. No people, in so short a time, with so poor a start, under such unfavorable circumstances, ever attained to such comparatively lofty heights. And that is only a beginning of what religion could have done if its ideas, its philosophy of social life, had been in good hands; if Moses, like Jesus and the modern prophet, had not had a people who "would not."

WHEN YOU are judging religion's performance, do not overlook that "How oft would I have gathered you . . . but ye would not." When you view the desolution of modern Israel's house, like ancient Israel's, do not charge that failure to the account of the genius of true religion.

The truths of physical science will work as well in devilish hands as in angelic hands. The truths of moral science will not. Take, for example, the scientific formula for the hatching of chicks. Must a man have a holy spirit to make that work? No. But try to make the social formula of true religion work in dirty hands, and there is quite a different story to tell. In that fact you have the explanation of religion's record of performance.

Monogamy, for example is part of the social formula of the Christian religion. Will it work in unvirtuous as well as virtuous hands? Will it work in quarrelsome as well as in agreeable hands? You know it will not. And that is the reason the present-day record of religion is not so good as the record of present-day science—if, indeed, it really is not as good.

I wish everyone knew what happened in the life of the people of the modern prophet. If they did, they would know what happened in the life of Israel under Moses, and of Judah under Jesus. When the modern prophet said: "Were it not for the transgressions of my people . . . they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands"; when he said that as persons they were "full of all manner of evils," and as a people they would not organize their social life, particularly their economic life, "according to the union required" to promote the business of the kingdom; when the modern prophet said that, he gave the explanation of religion's record of performance, from beginning to end.

A teacher in a denominational college—a doctor of philosophy—once said to me, after I had conversed with him about the social philosophy of the modern prophet, "What I can't understand is how a people can have such a belief as that and do nothing more about it than your people do." Well, I can; and I am not supposed to know half as much about social philosophy as he.

If anyone wants to know why Latter Day Saints don't make a better demonstration of the social philosophy of the modern prophet, let him answer this question: Why does there not exist today one nation—one Christian nation—which does not seek to attain its objects through compulsion rather than love? For the answer to the latter question is the answer to the former.

The trouble with the Christian Church is the same as the trouble with the Christian nation. One, like the other, has geniuses whose philosophies of social life do not carry over to the people. One like the other has "dead flies" in its social ointment. And the resultant smell is not at all pleasant. In defiance of Samuel, the people put a dead horsefly in its social ointment when it said: "Give us a king." You know what that fly did to the ointment of Moses? Then you should know why part of the record of religion smells so bad.

The social philosophy of the genius of true religion has never worked so well because there never was a people that would work it. To this day, throughout Christendom, in our church as in all others, there are men who are determined to make "the wisdom of their wise men," which has perished from beginning to end, a substitute for the true philosophy of social life. That is the reason for religion's record of performance.

Only let a religious house that is not divided against itself once be built; only let one truly Christian people be formed selectively for the specific purpose of honoring the genius of true religion, or of implementing its social philosophy in a city or community of its own building, and we shall have a new record of religious performance.

Like to Improve Yourself?

Don't be Book-Shy, Because It's Fun to Study!

Says Thelona D. Stevens

OFTEN we overlook the actual fun which grows out of doing things together, more especially when attended by the divine influence of God's Spirit. Especially this seems true of studying, for the aspects of the work involved loom big, whereas perhaps too little is said about the actual joy that attends such efforts. King Benjamin tried to tell something of this when he spoke of how God "doth immediately bless you" when keeping his commandments (Mosiah 1:58). God commands us to study. It is so definitely a commandment to learn and to qualify for the work which we are to do that seldom does God speak that he does not include this as part of the admonition. It is also definitely true that individuals or groups who honestly and sincerely give themselves over to delving into the Scriptures, know there is no other joy quite equal to the thrill of enlightenment and understanding that comes. When groups study under the influence of this spirit, the comment is quite typical, "Where did the time go?" and there is usually reluctance to leave the place of study. Some groups have followed an evening of study with a short social period. Sometimes refreshments are served, but this is not always necessary, and indeed sometimes is not even advisable, but the fun of being together in close bonds of study and sociable conversation is a sacred privilege. Ask any member who has once known such joys and then has become isolated from them.

Some few weeks ago Brother

John Rogers, of the Eastern Michigan district, sent us a report of a very splendid accomplishment by two classes who learned something of the fun of studying together. Previously he had registered these two classes, one consisting of twenty-five members (in the southern part of the district) and one of twenty-six members (in the northern part of the district). In due time he sent us the names and grades of those who had completed their work—twelve in the southern part and eighteen in the northern portion of the district had qualified for credit. When making this report, Brother Rogers commented:

Both of these classes finished their work with written suggestions for improving our leadership, enlisting leadership, improving services, etc., in our district . . . making suggestions primarily for small congregations. We intend to compile the best of these in pamphlet form and print a supply of them.

Because the report of Brother Rogers had some unusual aspects, we wrote to him for particulars as to how these two classes had been conducted, and he graciously explained. His letter is quoted almost in full:

The northern part of the district had a class which included three branches—Bay Port, Caseville and Owendale. We held six two-hour meetings. These were combined classes held first in one branch and then in another. Therefore, each branch entertained the class twice.

This same plan was carried out to some extent in the southern part of the district but as more branches were represented and some branches were more centrally located, the meetings were held more in the central part of the area covered. Meetings were held in Cash, McGregor, Sandusky and one meeting in Shabbona. Both classes met once each week, weather permitting.

John Booth drove to the northern part of the district to assist with instruction here and I drove to the southern part of the district to assist there. Brother Booth taught one hour and I taught the other.

The Saints of Shabbona surprised us with a delicious lunch after our class session there and the Caseville Saints also surprised us with a fine lunch and social hour.

No words of mine can express to you the feeling of brotherhood that was evident each time we met. Our people are deeply concerned and this feeling was expressed at every meeting in very definite terms.

We find that by combining our small branches many take work that they would not attempt locally. There is evidence of more enthusiasm when the people unite into larger classes. Perhaps the fact that the instructors are not of their local group helps.

We took an expression in both classes and found the students in favor of doing this kind of studying again next winter. Not only were they willing to study together again, but many said they would attempt to convert others of their branches to this kind of study. So we look forward to larger and better classes next winter.

In addition to the thirty students who received course cards as a result of this effort, three other classes "graduated" approximately thirty students. Since the first of the year, course cards for completed work have been issued for eighty-one units of credit in this district.

We are sincerely hoping that this district renews their efforts with the opening of another church school year the 1st of October, and that many other branches throughout the church will follow their example and learn for themselves that it is fun to study together, and that the blessings of God far surpass the efforts expended.

This is the time of year when classes are being organized. Why not organize for credit study? Won't you let us in the Department of Religious Education help you get started? Just address us at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

News Briefs

Guelph, Ontario

On July 31 the church school held its annual picnic, which this year took the form of a wiener roast. Volleyball, softball, and races were enjoyed by the group; following the recreational period, three gifts were presented to members of the church school. One was given Lloyd Swackhammer and his fiancée, Evelyn Rennie; another was for Mr. and Mrs. Nephi Phillips, who left soon afterwards for Lamoni, Iowa; the third was presented to the Arthur Dunn family, now of Fergus. Elder Dunn served as branch president for two years. Evangelist John Worth of London, England, recently spent a week in Guelph, preaching two sermons during his stay. He was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Hockaday, also from England. Fred Furness of Kansas City, a former member of Guelph Branch, was another recent visitor.

Idaho Reunion

The thirty-third annual reunion of the Idaho district began on August 10 with a banquet sponsored by the Hagerman Zion's League. A brief history of the district was given at the banquet, tracing the growth of the organization from its humble beginning in 1895 to its present status. There are now three branches and three missions, with a total of 480 Saints, and 750 "scattered" members in the district.

Apostle C. R. Hield, Evangelist Ray Whiting, and Seventy Phillip Moore represented the general church. They inspired those in attendance with ideas of kingdom-building, and brought with them the theme for the reunion, "Being Profitable to God."

Free meals were served in the district-owned dining hall; collections paid the expenses of these meals and left an additional $100 for other uses. The district was put on a budget system for the first time in its history; there is to be a turnover of $1,050 in the next year. Plans are being made for the erection of a storage building on the reunion grounds at Hagerman.

The average attendance numbered one hundred, with members from Utah, Arizona, and Nebraska joining the local group. Incoming members stayed in the homes of the Hagerman Saints, and in tents pitched on the reunion ground. Those present enjoyed classwork under the able direction of the visiting ministers; other activities included afternoon recreation, preaching services, and evensong. "Graceland Night" was a special feature held in one evening, with 250 in attendance.

A mimeograph was purchased by a fund appropriated at the business session, and nearly $70 was raised by subscription to start a monthly district paper, the Idaho Herald. The publication is to be used to assist in missionary endeavor and contact the inactive and scattered members. It will be sent to the home of every member in the district.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Gordon Spargo, Denis Gregory, Clifford Denike, and Wayne Keeler were recently baptized and confirmed. Many of the Vancouver Saints attended Silver Lake reunion; Apostle Charles Hield visited the local congregation before going to Silver Lake. The women's department is sponsoring a canning program; fish and vegetables are canned each year for the group. Sister Gertie McMullen and Sister West were honored recently on the celebration of their fifty-fourth and fifty-third baptismal anniversaries. Each was presented a bouquet of flowers, and congratulated on her long period of service to the church.

Eastern Colorado District Reunion

Three hundred members of the eastern Colorado district and Saints from various other branches attended the reunion held at Colorado Springs August 16 to 25. Apostle Charles Hield, Evangelist Ray Whiting, Bishop Steve Robinson, Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe, District President A. E. Stoft, and High Priest Herbert Scott were in charge. The reunion theme, "On Being Profitable to God," was presented in various progressive phases from day to day.

Howard Sheehy led the early morning devotionals, and Apostle Hield presided over the prayer services. Brother Renfroe was the speaker each evening. Classes were conducted for young people, adults, and the women's department.

On Friday afternoon, August 23, a reception was held honoring High Priest and Mrs. Stoft, who are being transferred to Salt Lake City.

Herbert Scott was elected district president at the regular conference business meeting on Saturday; Bert Reynolds and Howard Sheehy will be his counselors. Other officers elected were: Margery Lanphere, secretary; C. E. Graybill, treasurer; George Krahl, bishop's agent; Jeanette Hield, women's leader; Jack Wagoner, young people's leader; W. W. Hield, church school director; Mildred Sheehy, children's supervisor; LaRue Wagoner, librarian; Elsie Harper, director of music; and Malcolm Barrows, nonresident pastor.

Tucson, Arizona

Pastor, August Hartman

The Children's Day program was in charge of Sister Gysel Taylor, church school supervisor. Following the program, Bartlett Wayne, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hield, was blessed by Pastor Hartman, after which Robert Hield was confirmed. Lee Simmons, Jr., was confirmed on June 30; his sister, Marie Lynnette, was blessed at the same service. The men of the branch sponsored the Father's Day service; Heber Colvin was the speaker. High Priest Jerry Runkle of the Graceland faculty spoke on June 17; Mrs. Runkle talked to the group about the work being done in Lamoni, by the women's department. An all-day meeting was held on June 23, with Saints coming from Phoenix and Bisbee. E. R. Davis was in charge of the first service which featured several young speakers; Apostle John W. Rushton addressed the group at 11 o'clock. Special classwork followed the basket lunch at noon, after which a meeting of the reunion committee was held. A junior League was organized July 12 with Bob Hield as leader. A nursery and preschool class, supervised by Katherine Mills and Avonelle Taylor, are held during the 11 o'clock hour, so that parents with small children may be free to attend the main service. The women's department sponsored a watermelon feed on August 9; proceeds went to buy food packages for the Saints in Holland; six boxes of clothing were also sent. Eight members from the local congregation attended the Arizona reunion held at Granite Dells near Prescott. Two of the Leaguers, Lyle Hartman and Kent Wood, are now serving in the Navy.

Iowa and Nebraska Youth Camp

The annual youth camp sponsored by the southwestern Iowa, southern, north-eastern, and central Nebraska districts was held at Camp Sheldon, near Columbus, Nebraska, from August 30 to September 2. Despite the polio scare, 105 young people and their leaders attended. Dr. Roy Cheville of Graceland College was the spiritual leader and teacher. He was not long in winning his way into the hearts of the young people, who gave him the finest co-operation. Assisting Dr. Cheville were Seventy and Mrs. R. E. Davey, V. D. Ruch, Albert Livingston, and Harry Emmerson. The program contained just the right mixture of study and recreation, worship and fun. Having been inspired by the power of God, the young people left camp for their homes with a greater love for each other and a better understanding of their place in the work of the church. Plans are being made for a five-day camp next year.

Central Missouri Stake

Atherton, Missouri

Pastor, Wendell Van Tuyl

Philo Mitchell, Mrs. Dorothy Brosam, Delta and Dwain Mitchell were baptized on May 12. Two other new members, George Graybill and Gloria Snodgrass, united with the church on Children's Day; a program was presented at the morning service, significant of the day. Many of the Atherton Saints attended the Gardner's Lake retreat and the barn rally held at Warrensburg.

—Mrs. R. D. Hughes, reporter.

Pleasant Hill, Missouri

Pastor, V. S. Turney

Three converts were baptized at Lee's Summit on Sunday, June 29, following a series of meetings conducted by Seventy O. W. Okerlind of Independence. Kenneth Sevy has returned to the group after thirty-one months' service in the Marine Corps. Members of the Zion's League are making a volleyball court back of the church. The annual business meeting was held August 28, Stake President Ward Hougas presiding. Officers elected for the coming year are as follows: V. S. Turney, pastor; Leo Willsie and Rex Rowland, counselors; Lydia Swift, church school director; Mrs. J. W. Carlile, adult leader and women's supervisor; Kenneth Sevy, young people's leader; J. W. Carlile, treasurer and solicitor; Pauline Bailey, director of music; and Grace Essex, branch reporter.

—Myrtle Sevy, reporter.

Blue Springs, Missouri

Pastor, J. T. Smith

Speakers during the summer were A. G. Hougas, Joseph Friend, E. P. Darnell, J. T. Smith, Elbert Luff, Cecil Conklin, John Quick, O. W. Okerlind, and D. R. Snively. A group picnic was held on the Fourth of July at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clive Heath; about sixty people attended. Members of the Eden Heights congregation presented the evening service on Sunday, July 7, after which the Zion's League gave a program of music and readings. The young adults were in charge of the July 28 services. On August 21, the annual business meeting was held. The local volleyball team has competed with both the Eden Heights and East Independence groups.

—J. C. Friend, Jr., reporter.

Lee's Summit, Missouri

Pastor, Frank C. Sherwood

Seventy O. W. Okerlind conducted a series of meetings in June on "The Enduring Principles of Christianity." Jerry Yohe and Gloria Shutt were baptized and confirmed on June 23. A priesthood class has been organized to meet on Sunday evenings at 7:15; A. G. Hougas is the teacher. During July and August C. E. Martin, Charles Fry, T. A. Beck, and H. A. Higgins were visiting speakers. Lee's Summit was well represented at the Gardner's Lake reunion; a truck was provided on Sunday to take all who had no other means of transportation. On July 21 the group attended the campus service at Independence. On August 16 the young people met at the home of Pastor and Mrs. Sherwood for a discussion with Leonard Smith and Francis Anderson on the purpose of the young adult movement; a group was organized with Hubert Swain as president; Henry Butler, vice-president; and June Raglan, secretary-treasurer. Zion's League activities have included volleyball, a hayride, skating party, and watermelon feed, also a worship service at the Merton Loveland home and a prayer meeting on Sunday morning, September 1. An electric clock for the church was presented by the League at a branch lawn party in July. The annual business meeting was held August 22.

—Nellie Haas, reporter.

Marshall, Missouri

Pastor, Roe B. Vincent

A group of young adults attended the retreat held at Gardner's Lake in June. Special services were held on Father's and Children's Day. Twenty-five dollars were cleared at a rummage sale sponsored by the women's department in June. The annual branch business meeting was held August 15; Stake President Ward A. Hougas and Bishop T. A. Beck were in charge. A resumé of reunion activities was given by Dolly Dishman, Olive Vincent, and Maxine Banks at the 11 o'clock service on August 18; Violet Vincent gave a talk in the evening. Officers for the coming year were elected at the August women's meeting; the new theme is "I Want to Be a One-Hundred Per Cent Latter Day Saint."

—Bernice Tyree, reporter.

Marlette, Michigan

Pastor, Jesse Shelly

The following officers were elected at the September 6 business session: Jesse Shelly, pastor; Dan Westover, clerk; Fern Crouch, treasurer; Beatrice Volz, women's leader; Bill Brown, church school superintendent; Ella Westover, pianist; Mary Ramsey, director of music; and Esther Lambert, publicity agent. Following the election of officers, other branch business was discussed, including the grading of the church lawn to make a parking place. At present, the cars must be parked on the highway.

—Esther Lambert, reporter.

St. Louis District Conference

The annual conference of the St. Louis district was held September 15. Prayer services for both adults and juniors were conducted at 9:30 a.m., followed by Paul M. Hanson's 11 o'clock address. Junior worship was held in the lower auditorium under the leadership of Charles Johnson, Edward Joy, and Helen Counts. The business meeting convened at 1:30 in the afternoon, and the following district officers were elected for the coming year: Clarence Archibald, district president; Benjamin Clark, director of church schools; Rosaleene Smith, director of music; Eldorado Archibald, secretary; Jessie Hiller, treasurer; Russell Archibald, bishop's agent; Audrey Clark, director of women; Dorothy Joy, assistant director of women; Wayne Smith, young people's leader; and Edward Joy, director of publicity and advertising. The appointment of an auditing committee and counselors was left to the district president. The district budget was placed in the hands of the district presidency and the Apostles in charge. Charles Fletcher was recommended for ordination to the office of elder and William Hamlin to the office of priest; both were approved. Before the conference was adjourned, a vote of thanks was given to all outgoing officers.

—Edward Joy, reporter.

Greenville, Michigan

The Saints of Greenville were organized into a mission at a meeting held September 8, under the direction of District President E. R. Carter. Sigmund Spencer was appointed leader of the mission; other officers elected were Lois Bauman, secretary and treasurer; Norma Petersen, director of music; Beatrice Spencer, young people's leader; Maude Bauman, women's leader; and William Bauman, church school director. The meeting was preceded by a prayer service, in charge of Elder J. Charles Mottashed. He was assisted by Evangelist William Fligg and Elder E. R. Carter. Services are held in the D. B. S. hall, located on the corner of Franklin and Grove Streets. Church school classes are held each Sunday at 10 a.m., followed by a preaching service at 11 o'clock.

Park of the Pines Reunion

The Park of the Pines reunion, held August 9 to 18, was an inspiration to the Saints who were privileged to attend. General church appointees present were Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and Elder John and Almer Sheehy, Harry Simons, Merle Howard, and Ben Hewitt. Recreation and classes were provided for all ages. Almer Sheehy and Merle Howard were in charge of activities for the young people; Harry Simons taught the junior high grades; Mrs. Berle Scott and Mrs. Sylvia McKeage conducted a class for the juniors; Mrs. Ella Nulph and Mrs. Margaret Miller were the primary supervisors; Margaret Laage and Mrs. Lillian Turner taught the kindergarten group. Mrs. Mary Sandell was the general director of children's activities. Classes were held for the women, and a course in leadership training was offered.

A substantial profit was made from the meals served in the dining hall, and will be applied to the reunion fund. The hall proved quite inadequate for serving the many campers, so at the annual business meeting, money was allotted for a new building; plans for the hall will be drawn up by the reunion committee.

John Sheehy led the evensong, giving stories of the hymns and telling experiences that increased the appreciation of those present for the music of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Rigby Leighton of Detroit presented a marionette show one evening. The camp paper, Whispering Pines, was edited by Betty Scott. The annual concert, directed by Louise Evans and John Wiley, was inspiring and beautiful. One evening was observed as college night.

The prayer services were all of a spiritual quality, and on the last Sunday of reunion, the gift of tongues and interpretation was manifest.

Texas Youth Retreat

The Texas youth retreat was held in Bandera on the week end of August 30-September 1. Sixty young people from Austin, Hearne, Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Medina, Marlin, and Bandera attended full time, and 100 were present for Sunday's services. An eight-member committee composed of representatives from the central and southwestern Texas districts worked out the plans for the retreat; the theme selected by the committee was youth-aimed: "You Gotta' Stand for Something, or You'll Fall for Anything."

Registration and the filling out of talent surveys took place on Friday afternoon; a play, "What Difference Does It Make?" was presented in the evening. The cast included young people from various parts of the state.

H. E. Winegar, camp counselor, was in charge of the Saturday morning fellowship service. Classwork was divided into three age groups: twelve to fourteen, fifteen to twenty-four, and twenty-five to thirty, with subjects of special interest to each group being used. The teaching staff was composed of District Presidents Theodore Dorow and J. E. Wilder, C. M. Mitchell, Dr. Preston Wheeler, Linden Wheeler, Mildred Holder, Elbert Wheeler, and H. E. Winegar. Group games and a trip to the museum were features of Saturday afternoon. In the evening, Brother Winegar gave the sermon, and a campfire service ended the day.

Further classwork and a dedicatory service ended the retreat on Sunday. The young people were challenged by their leaders to live lives which stood for something, after which Wayne Jackel responded for the group. The meeting closed with the serving of the emblems.

Meals for the retreat were prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Bob Trowbridge and the women of Bandera branch.

Joplin, Missouri

Pastor, Arthur Rock

The work of Elder Joy Anderson in Joplin was terminated when, on May 26, he was ordained to the office of high priest under the hands of Apostle Arthur Oakman and assigned to the Kansas City Stake. Elder Arthur Rock was sent by the general church to replace him. In connection with the evangelistic program, Brother Rock is conducting a series of radio sermons over KSWM, the local Columbia station, three days a week at 10:30 a.m.

Fifty of the Joplin Saints camped at the district reunion held in Columbus, Kansas, in July. Approximately 175 young people attended from the various groups.

The Joplin young people were hosts to their friends from Carthage, Medoc, Webb City, and Springfield on September 8. The day began with a prayer service, at which the theme, "Jesus Is at the Door," was carried out in an appropriate setting through song and testimony. Pastor Arthur Rock conducted the morning classwork, presenting some of the ideas gained at the Appointees' Institute. Sherman Sheppard gave the 11 o'clock sermon.

Guest speakers for the last two months have been District President William Patterson, Herman Plumb, and William Shanks of Carthage.

—Macil Mink, reporter.

North-Central Nebraska District

Seventy Albert Loving held a series of missionary meetings in Inman early in the summer, going from there to Atkinson and Ainsworth, where he conducted cottage services. He also visited Bonesteel, South Dakota, and Clearwater, Nebraska, in July, baptizing eight new members and blessing one child. Mrs. Loving accompanied him to assist in introducing the gospel to nonmembers.

—Mrs. O. V. Moore.

Northern California Reunion

The Y. W. C. A. conference grounds at Asilomar, Pacific Grove, California, furnished a picturesque setting for the northern California reunion held August 21 to 29. District President Laurence MacDonald and his associates were responsible for preparing the well-organized and effective program.

The day's routine began at 7:45 a.m. with flag-raising and salute, after which Apostle John Rushton led the camp family worship. Classes were taught by Bishop C. A. Skinner, Dr. F. M. McDowell, and Mrs. Myron McConley. Children's activities were supervised by Mrs. Elizabeth Schall and a corps of helpers. Sister Schall was also in charge of the worship chapel, in which she arranged a lighted picture each day with a printed story of the picture available to each visitor. Afternoons were free for recreation, and at 5 p.m. special sessions were held for the priesthood and women's department. A vesper service at 7:30 began the evening's worship, followed by preaching. Mrs. Edna Burdick, district director of music, was responsible for the music at each of these services. The day's activities closed with a campfire or similar feature.

The annual business meeting was held on Saturday afternoon. At the election, all present officers were sustained and Elder Russell Ralston was elected director of young people. On Sunday afternoon, following the Communion, the names of twenty young men were presented for ordination approval.

In addition to the above mentioned leaders, Seventy George Njeim, Evangelist Albert Carmichael, and High Priest Alma Andrews, were also in attendance.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

For Zion's League

Suggestions for the new year based on the considerations of the Youth Assembly of the 1946 General Conference—"How Shall We Do These Things?" by Roy A. Cheville.

Summarized by Dorothy L. Eastwood

The day is this; the time is now;
No better hour was ever here—
Who waits upon the when and how Remains forever in the rear.
Though yesterday were wasted stuff
Your feet may still seek out the way
Tomorrow is not soon enough—
Make this the day.

These few lines of poetry so well express the thoughts in our minds. Tomorrow is not soon enough to do the great task before us. Today is the time.

For emphasis, may we repeat the same thought in a different combination of words: The Zion's League, as a part of our great church, has a great task before it that must be done today—in this age. Not tomorrow—not leaving it for some future age, but to day. To do this task, the League should plan for a Balanced Program.

In the youth assembly at General Conference, Dr. Cheville, assisted by the Gracelanders, brought forth a six-point program to work into the Zion's League To Make It Grow, to Make It Worthwhile, to Make It Do Something in the Lives of Its Members.

LEADERSHIP MUST KEEP AHEAD

The first important step is in creating an administration that looks ahead and leads. It most definitely is not a group of leaders that are always running along about a block behind, striving desperately to catch up, but never quite making it.

In order to have effective administration, it must be a co-operative affair. The officers and members of the cabinet must be willing and desirous of working, thinking, and planning together. This cabinet should plan the program far in advance, organize the personnel to carry out the plans and generate so much "oomph," vitality, enthusiasm, that every League member will catch a spark and thus make a vitally active, exciting, doing Zion's League.

How, then, can we have this thing of effective administration? First, we must have definite co-operation, sharing, planning together; Second, we must have a long-time program worked out; Third, we must organize personnel into working groups, each member doing the job he does best; Fourth, we must generate from our cabinet a spirit of devotion and enthusiasm.

TRUE FELLOWSHIP BUILDS CONFIDENCE

Following administration in effecting a balanced program is fellowship—fellowship that develops a sense of belonging. In order to achieve real fellowship, the League must adopt a plan that gives everyone a sense of belonging. There should be jobs for everyone, so that people are working and sharing in experiences together all the time. That is true fellowship.

The idea of fellowship can be expressed in these ways: unity with diversity, membership through participation, and expansion in the frontiers of brotherhood. To do this, then, there must be a sense of belonging, and everyone should have some job to do, whatever best fits his abilities. The suggestion has been made that a personal record be kept of every member to make known his talents, desires, and general attitude.

STUDY FOR APPROVAL

Very important in the balanced program idea, and something often slighted, is study—Study With a Purpose. We do not want haphazard study—then we never really learn anything which is really basic to life.

We want to get together to discuss, debate, and think things out to their very roots, their very foundations. In our study we must have a program related to Zionic living, we must develop the art of group-thinking and cultivate the inspiration to study life that we may become equipped to help spread the gospel story intelligently and with conviction. To accomplish this, we need practice in democratic discussions, forums, panels, interviews, reports, directed reading, purposeful listening, keen observation, evaluated thinking.

RECREATION IS TO RE-CREATE

No program could be balanced without recreation, and no recreation would be balanced that did not re-create and develop. How can we do this? To develop such a program, plans should be laid ahead of time—careful plans with a purpose in mind. The activities should be planned to relax the group, encourage fellowship, stimulate good health or thinking as an expression of joy, or to develop certain bodily graces which might arise from a good athletic event.

The social activities should be planned with an eye to the differences in individuals. For example, just because the cabinet is inclined toward being athletic, the recreational program should not overemphasize athletics. Recreation should never play on one thing. It should be varied to suit different individuals and to accomplish varied purposes.

WE TOO MUST SHARE

Definitely no program is more necessary to a balanced League than that of social service that blesses both the giver and the receiver. To institute such a program in the League, a survey should be taken to see what fields are open and what things can be done. The group should also link up with whatever social agencies that exist in the field, including working with the branch itself.

Of utmost importance is the learning of the art of giving. This is most necessary if the service is to accomplish its purpose. Many things can be done, such as adopting needy families, visiting shut-ins, cleaning yards for disabled people, caring for and beautifying the church, establishing a library, etc. There are many things that can be discovered to do if the group makes a survey to see what needs to be done.

LET US WORSHIP

And finally, a well-balanced League must have devotionals that develop rapport with God. Worship is basic—it goes through the whole program of fellowship, recreation, administration, study, and social service. Young people need God and, in order to make these other fields successful, God's Spirit must be present.

Worship comes through experience. The young people must desire to reach God; must open their hearts and minds; must pray. Christ will enter with them to the point of a beautiful worship experience.

How can we do all of these things? Pray, fast, study, work, learn, laugh, and live with Christ, for Christ, and as Christ would have us live. The rest will come as a result.

Here's Your Chance

To share your ideas with other young people throughout the church. "New Horizons" is not a "cut and dried" feature; we will welcome articles on any subject that is timely and interesting. They should be three to four pages long, double-spaced, typewritten. A picture and personality sketch of the author should accompany all contributions.

Our Far Eastern Frontier

By DON HIGGINS

We, as a church, can be held partly responsible for the present civil war in China. Recent editorial comment has placed a large part of the blame for the lack of unity in China upon the Christian Church and Christian nations of the world. The explanation is simple. There has been too little missionary activity in the Far East.

The lack of unity in China is, and shall be, costly to us. We need her to be the guardian of the Orient. She has the potentiality of being one of the strongest nations in the world. Her mineral resources are literally untapped. Her waterways, railroad, and road systems are almost completely undeveloped, and she has the largest labor army in the world. Yet China is weak. Even now, she depends upon the United States and Great Britain for food and manufactured products.

In spite of this, we need China more than she needs us. We need to be able to bring our vessels and troops home. We need to use her mineral and raw materials. We need her help in maintaining peace and order in the Far East.

The unifying factor is Christianity. By teaching the Chinese our religion, they will gain our perspective; they will find their goal, and it will be the same as ours. That goal will unite the various parts of China and prepare her to be the nation worthy of the high position she must some day hold.

China is not the only country which suffers from a lack of missionary activity. I was amazed to discover how little Christian endeavor had been made throughout the Orient and islands of the Pacific. The Philippines, the only so-called Christian nation in the Far East, is not—according to our definition of the term—Christian. Most religious denominations have established missions in the islands, but I found not one Reorganized Church in the group. The Mormons had a branch in Manila, and soon after the city was cleared of the enemy in 1945, a Mormon chaplain saw that the church was set in order.

Since the defeat of the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay by Admiral Dewey, the Filipino people have looked to the United States for an example in culture and economic development. However, the Spanish rule left its mark on the Philippines. The Spanish brought Christianity in the form of strict Catholicism. Therefore, the Philippines could not be placed in the category of China and Japan as being non-Christian. Nevertheless, the fact that the Catholic Church did predominate for so long had a great bearing upon the Philippine culture and development. It might be said that Spanish influence held them back as a nation; many ancient beliefs and customs, which were begun by the Spaniards, still remain. Free thinking was discouraged, and only with the invasion of the Japanese in 1942 came real freedom of thought. The Filipino people lived in fear and ignorance, lacking any concept of the future—lacking all knowledge of what the Christian concept embraces. Only now, after being torn by war for three years, do they see the real need for a government and church which can bring civilization to a higher plane. Only now are they shaking off the ashes of antiquity.

Neither the Catholic nor Protestant Churches established in the Philippines before the war could give the natives so much as a dream of a bright future. They began to see that blessing the name of Mother Mary and attending mass every morning, as was their custom, could not insure their security. Christianity had failed to show the way, and

Here Is the Writer . . .

DON HIGGINS

Don Higgins, one of Missouri's native sons, and a resident of Independence, is a graduate of William Chrisman High School. A veteran, he is now trying to gain admittance to some institution of higher learning (preferably the University of Iowa) that offers a course in radio-journalism. Two of the three years he was with the Army were spent in the Pacific theater—hence the dissertation on Oriental conditions. Don is a member of Stone Church congregation, and a leader in young people's work. He is idealistic, ambitious, and—according to those who know him best—the sort of guy who "won't be licked."

Horizons

the church which has the truth had failed altogether. They had never heard of Zion.

While in the Far East, I had the opportunity to meet prominent men of many nations. Typical of their views is that of Dr. Elorodo Conogo, guerrilla physician and sanitation director for the Manila Public Health Department, who said: "We have long looked to America for the answer to a strong world order. Yours is a nation born in freedom and dedicated to the maintenance of freedom. Above all, your freedom in religion has made you strong. Only from such a nation can come the revolutionary ideas necessary to bring lasting peace."

Zion, the revolutionary idea which can and will bring lasting peace, has not yet been presented to the people of the Orient. The Filipinos are hungry for what we have to offer. Now, more than any other time, "the field is ripe and ready for harvest." The Philippines is an excellent place to begin.

The third major power of the Orient, which I wish to mention, is Japan. Little need be said about the conditions in the Nipponese empire. She suffered a great defeat at the hands of the nation which she had copied so closely in her industry for the past two decades. We set the pace for new discoveries and developments, and Japan followed. In her philosophy, however, she shied away from western ideas; few Japanese people even know the meaning of Christianity. The nation is predominately Buddhist and Shintoist. Those who believed that the emperor was God are left without a belief at all; Hirohito admitted to his people that he had no divine calling.

Japan must be re-educated. Christianity must become a part of the Japanese philosophy of life and government before she can become a member of the family of nations again. We cannot dictate what religion she must accept, or what creed she must follow, but it is our duty to introduce the Christian way of life into Japan through education and missionary activity. It is imperative that this be done within the next five years. Only when all the nations of the Far East accept the same views in religion, as well as in government, can we hope to have anything less than civil war and chaos—or another world war. Only at such a time as that will they "speak the same language" and come to any sort of agreement upon their differences.

If Christianity fails to establish a Far Eastern frontier of Christianity, Christianity may find itself doomed to bow to paganism. All of the three major nations of the Orient are potentially strong. That strength can be turned in our favor or against us.

We, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, have the truth. We, alone, have the answer to world union. If we do not present our plan, another will be accepted, and we shall have failed again.

The Trouble-Shooter That Prayer Meeting Bogey

This Week's Question:

I HAVE OFTEN attended prayer service and felt that I should testify as others do, but when it comes to actually speaking before a group, I lose my nerve—and so I never say anything. How can I overcome this complex?

(Editor's Note: We believe this deserves more than a single answer, and have solicited three different views. The writer, in each case, requested that his name not be used.)

* * * * *

I think that "bearing one's testimony" varies with the individual and the general spiritual tone of his mental attitudes of the moment. Always I have been influenced by my degree of preparation. I think we sometimes get the idea that we must audibly participate in a prayer service, when actually our best contribution to that particular meeting may be given silently. Occasionally I have felt that my best testimony was given through joining with the group in a song, or in quiet meditation. To me, preparation beforehand, plus a little mental house cleaning, and the actual concentration on the suggested theme during the service have combined to "put me on my feet."

* * * * *

During the 1945 Lamoni reunion, the men in charge of the prayer services continually told the people to "have no fear of man!" Loss of nerve is a loss of security. We begin to wonder what our neighbor is going to say, whether some of our friends may chat together about the emotion that makes our voices break.

This is a common characteristic of all people. We must seek the approbation of our fellow men; we must be sure we "rate" well with them.

The biggest reason we lose our nerve when we wish to testify during prayer services is not because we fear God but because we fear men—what they will say or think or judge. Therefore, the best remedy seems to be seeking the approval of God and ceasing to worry about our neighbor's thoughts. The same quiet peace, strength, and uplift can be had talking to God or about God in a gathering of church people as it can in the privacy of our own rooms. All we need do—so simple and yet so difficult—is to offer ourselves completely, humbly, to God.

* * * * *

It's always easier to do something when you have a friend near by to lend support—especially in this matter of bearing a testimony. I didn't used to attend prayer service, because I couldn't seem to contribute anything, nor would I allow myself to gain any real benefit from the meeting. While at Graceland, I experienced this same feeling toward Wednesday evening fellowship until I made a close friend who felt much the same way as I did. We got by all right in campus life, but we found we had personal problems that were a little too much for us to handle alone. One Wednesday night we decided to give fellowship a try. We went once, twice, and by the third time we felt as if it were our turn to give something instead of taking each time, so we both got up. The meeting closed, and I knew we had not only won personal battles of our own, but we had also helped each other. From then on we went to fellowship because we wanted to, and we sat together because of the strength it gave us. Try taking a friend—it will do you both good.

Our Departed Ones

McGUIRE.—Mary E., passed away at her home in Mobile, Alabama, on August 29. She is survived by her husband, James T. McGuire; two sons: James T., Jr., and Russell E.; and one grandson, Russell E., Jr., all of Mobile. Funeral services were conducted by Elders R. L. Booker and Franklin Steiner in the Reorganized Church in Mobile. Burial was in the Pine Crest Cemetery.

BENNETT.—Pearl Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Bennett, was born October 9, 1936, at Dahinda, Illinois, and passed away September 9, 1946, after a critical illness. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. O. Dutton of Galva, Illinois. She is survived by her parents, two sisters, and two brothers.

SHIPPY.—George Edwin, son of Joseph and Julia Shippy, was born January 4, 1869, near Blenheim, Ontario, and died July 21, 1945, at his home in the Jordan River district in Saskatchewan, following a long illness. He joined the Reorganized Church when he was twelve years old, and at the time of his death, held the office of elder. He lived an honorable life, and was ever ready to help his fellow men when called to do so. He was married to Sophronia Shippy on October 31, 1894; six children were born to this union, four of whom preceded him in death.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: William Edwin and Joseph Wayne of Jordan River, and a granddaughter, Enid Marie. His funeral was conducted by W. J. Cornish at Arbonfield. Interment was in the Tisdale Cemetery.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Challenge

BY LOUISE SCOTT WRIGLEY

What lies beyond the hill, Youth?
Come, let us climb and see.
Does this road lead to Christ, Youth?
On to Eternity?

Keep thinking as you climb, Youth,
Keep hope alive and strong,
Keep singing as you go, Youth,
Tho' the tortuous trail be long.

For when the summit's gained, Youth,
Then Christ will smile and say
That you climbed well and bravely,
Never faltering all the way!

* DON'T WORRY too much about your condition. You haven't enough time for that. Get out and do something, and your condition will improve. Nobody is ever in good enough condition to do what God calls him to do. But he can never be any better by standing in one spot and straining his mind. Let him find a task and work at it, and the condition begins to improve from that moment.

* NO LIFE can be a vacuum. If you want to drop some bad habits, substitute good ones, and there will be no room for the bad.

* FICTION. Church publications in the future will need help in the field of fiction. We need new books of the type of "The Call at Evening," "In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage," "Joe Pine," and other fine works that everybody has read. People want new ones to read and to lend to friends. Many conversions have been made by the right kind of storybooks. Periodicals also need good short stories. We could make immediate use of one-page stories of high quality (1,000 to 1,200 words).

Writing good fiction is difficult, and requires some native ability and thorough, careful training. It even requires power to survive the disappointment of early failures. The reward is great in the amount of good that can be done.

* FRESH PAINT. A new paint job in the shop presented the usual temptation to sceptics to put their fingers on it to see if it was dry. This always results in telltale fingerprints and smudges on the smooth surface of the paint. Lee Green, a new staff artist here, found an original preventive for Maintenance Engineer Herman Fultz. Upon the traditional "Fresh Paint" warning sign, they left space for a big daub of the paint, with an invitation, "Test Here!" This caught the fingerprints and was thrown away, leaving a clear, clean surface on the paint job.

* WRITERS. May we call your attention to an editorial item on another page of this issue? It is important to us that you should see it, and we hope you may find the time to do so.

* EARNEST A. WEBBE, of Kirtland, Ohio, had published in the "Mentor Monitor" of that state, August 29 issue, page 1, a good article on church history and the "Book of Mormon." This will reach many people of that area who are not correctly informed about the church. The article is entitled "Our Kirtland Latter Day Saint Neighbors." Brother Webbe has done an effective piece of work for the church in this contribution.

* IT IS FUNNY how easily a night-club operator can get twenty dollars from an average American, and with what great difficulty the preacher gets twenty cents from him.

* YOU MAY HAVE NOTICED that it costs a lot more to pay for the Devil's services than it does for the Lord's. Yet foolish people still prefer to trade in the most expensive market.

Let's Face a Few Facts on

Graceland College Day

Sunday, October 20

On this day an appeal for the extraordinary needs of Graceland College should be presented in every one of our churches, and should be considered in every home of our faith. Parents of young people, Graceland Alumni and friends, should see their pastors to make sure that the church program will give opportunity for adequate presentation of the needs of Graceland now and in the future.

You are disappointed, church and college authorities are disappointed, and three hundred church young people are disappointed because there was no room for them at Lamoni this year.

It is time for us to face a few facts. We are not primarily interested in statistics, but we are interested in the people—the individuals—represented by them. Out of the facts emerge a number of considerations that seem worthy and indeed imperative to be taken up.

The Impossible Task

It is very clear that your sons and daughters have asked Graceland College to perform a greater task this year than it is equipped to do. Apparently, you parents and friends are back of their requests. You have had a part in the choice so many have made.

Three hundred church young people turned away for lack of space! How that arouses reflections upon another time when the housing situation was acute, when there was "No Room at the Inn," and Mary gave birth to her Son in a stable.

That has its modern counterpart today, when a veteran shelters his family in a converted pig-brooder at the University of Missouri, according to a newspaper account. It is emphasized when an Independence mother buys a chicken house from a mail-order department store for herself and child.

This situation is not Graceland's fault. It is what happens when nobody can get materials and supplies, when people have not been able to build anything for years, and when the Government turns incredible numbers of ex-service people over to educational institutions.

Everywhere, colleges and universities are facing an impossible task. Graceland College cannot escape the general situation.

Why They Chose Graceland

Why are conditions more crowded at Graceland College, according to its size, than at other institutions? Why have such unprecedented numbers of parents and young people chosen Graceland?

The implied, if not always expressed, answer is plain—Graceland has something, does something for young people, that you value very highly. It is something in which you believe. It is something you have persuaded your young people they need and want. It is something that, having seen its results, they want for themselves.

What Graceland has is not simply related to the impartation of knowledge, the arrangement and distribution of facts. It has to do with purposes, attitudes, philosophy, and a way of life. The curriculum may be in many respects the same, but the effects are different. We are looking for results. Those results make all the difference in the world to us. For fifty years, Graceland College has been producing results in our lives. We believe in these results.

This is why the young people have chosen Graceland.

What Shall We Do?

One thing is apparent to all of us. We cannot permanently accept this situation. We do not submit. Nobody likes it. Something must be done about it.

Looking forward, and anticipating this situation (so far as it could be anticipated), the church officers through the action of General Conference, have outlined a program of action.

On the next page, the First Presidency have approved a statement, based on General Conference action, for the next specific moves in the building program at Graceland. This includes the building of a greatly needed men's dormitory, from funds specially provided, and will be started as soon as supplies of materials are available on any reasonable basis.

Future Needs

This is what could be expected, but it is not enough. There is something for the people of the church to do, and that is to be done on Graceland College Day, October 20.

Provision has also been made for an opportunity to meet other pressing needs. This has been indicated in the editorial approved by the Presidency, and elaborated in the article by Brother R. Edwin Browne of the Graceland College staff. It concerns the raising of funds, through the College Day offering, for the erection of a student center building.

People may wonder what a

Graceland College Day October 20

OCTOBER 20 has been designated officially as Graceland College Day to be observed in our churches throughout the world.

Traditionally, Graceland College Day offerings have been used primarily for the purpose of providing loan scholarships for worthy students. However, in recent times the need for such scholarships has diminished, and other needs have become more apparent. Among these is the need for a men's dormitory. Funds have been allocated by the General Conference for the erection of such a building. Construction will begin as soon as such action seems advisable in relation to problems of securing labor and materials. A student center building will be provided under the plan approved at the last General Conference of the church which authorized the use of funds obtained from the Graceland College Day offering for such purpose.

This year, with the enrollment at the college increased beyond all previous years, and with many desirable and worthy students unable to attend because of crowded facilities, the need for these new structures at the college becomes increasingly evident.

Therefore, with Graceland College Day approaching, the First Presidency takes this opportunity to commend to the church the needs of her college and to recommend strong financial support in offerings received on that day.

To our pastors, the Presidency further suggests that services on Graceland College Day be more strongly keyed than ever before to the needs of our educational institution. Program folders will be available to interested pastors, and special envelopes will be supplied to all groups by the Presiding Bishopric to simplify the process of contributing, and to remind our people of the need. It is recommended that the envelopes be distributed in our churches on the Sunday preceding the college day observance, thereby enabling our people to prepare appropriate contributions at home during the week in anticipation of the services on October 20.

Our pastors are further reminded that the Student Center will be dedicated as a memorial to all the youth of the church who served in the war, and this further emphasizes the appropriateness of more than the usual financial contribution from our members.

A Call to Writers

We have found it good in the past to do something that few other publications have had the boldness to do: to discuss our problems frankly and freely with our readers and contributors. In all times they have responded generously and intelligently. We feel a complete trust in our people now.

There will be an opportunity to use more articles during the remaining months of this year. This is made possible by information from the management that our stock of paper has accumulated an increase, and a few more thirty-two page issues can be published. This will be good news to the readers, as well as to our staff.

To writers, this announcement will mean an appeal for more help. We have numbers of articles on hand, some good, some of modest merit, some needing more work and reconstruction than we can give. Our greatest need is still for high quality leading articles. Each issue of the Herald, we believe, should contain one article of excellent quality that can be read with satisfaction by the highest type of reader. Such articles are difficult to produce, difficult to obtain. They require in the writer a high quality of intelligence and originality, with considerable knowledge of the field in which he is writing. We have many people in the church capable of writing such articles, but being busy with many duties in their work and at home, and often excess modesty, are factors that deter them. We need their help, and we need it very much.

Not all of our readers appreciate these heavier articles. There are many who need something on the more ordinary levels of life—the short articles, the testimonies, news, and other items. So we have a constant need of a wide variety of contribution.

Keep in mind that we are in competition for reader attention with the best magazines of the world. They can pay for articles, and have great supplies; we can't pay, and must get along the best we can. The very important literary work of the church, like most other departments, must depend largely on the sincere, dedicated, able volunteer. Hundreds of good people give their time during every year to make the Herald.

Remember that the writer has a stronger voice than the preacher. A preacher is happy to reach from a hundred to a thousand people at a time. A writer for the Herald reaches about fourteen thousand homes, and possibly forty thousand readers.

The Editor's task is not an easy one. Among thousands of manuscripts received in a year, there is hardly one that does not have some good thought, some inspiration in it. It is hard to set them aside and not use them. But many of them, too, have other qualities that hinder their use: inadequate organization, faulty form, inaccurate information, unacceptable ideas. It is often impossible to disentangle the good from the less good and the bad. Many times we exclaim, "If this writer only had a chance for more training, he could do much good!" Articles are set aside in the hope that some means of revision may occur; sometimes it comes, sometimes not.

We give sincere thanks to all who have helped and sustained our publications. They have tasted of the rich rewards that come to all who serve unselfishly. And we invite others who are qualified to lend assistance in the work to be done.

THE EDITORS.

One day a certain old rich man of a miserly disposition visited a rabbi, who took the rich man by the hand and led him to a window, and told him to look out and tell him what he saw. "I see men, women, and little children," replied the rich man. Again the rabbi took him by the hand and this time led him to a mirror. "What do you see now?" "Now I see myself," the rich man replied. Then the rabbi said, "Behold, in the window there is glass, and in the mirror there is glass. But the glass of the mirror is covered with a little silver and no sooner is silver added than you cease to see others but can see only yourself!"

Who were turned away from Graceland College for lack of room? Read what the church plans to do so that this shall never happen again

By R. Edwin Browne

Director of Public Relations

Graceland College opened its classrooms and its laboratories to 600 students this fall—largest number in the history of the school to seek higher education at the church institution. More than 300 students—many of whom had planned throughout their lifetimes to attend Graceland—were not admitted, owing to the crowded conditions of housing and educational facilities.

This section of this week's Herald is a report to the people of the church on conditions which prevail at the church college, and a primer on how the people of the church may help their college to meet the present emergency.

Need number one is housing. Having foreseen the demand that would be placed on the institution by returning war veterans seeking an education and by other students in keeping with the general trend toward increased interest in higher learning, the church has approved in General Conference the allocation of funds amounting to $250,000.00 for the erection of a men's dormitory on the campus of Graceland College.

Architects' plans for this dormitory have been submitted and are being studied by college officials. Construction will await a more advantageous time from the standpoint of availability of labor and materials.

Need number two is for expanded educational facilities. Since it has been more difficult to predict exact needs of this nature, owing to the change in interest on the part of students during the war, and for other reasons, studies looking toward recommendations for the expansion of the educational plant are now under way at the college, as it enters its first postwar year.

Need number three is for an adequate structure to provide facilities for the everyday needs of students. Such a structure would keep the student on the campus for recreation, would provide space for all-school convocations, chapel services, plays, and recitals, would enable establishment of an adequate bookstore for the distribution of textbooks and other student supplies, would give student organizations a headquarters for self-government, publishing of the student newspaper and yearbook, dinners, club meetings, hobbies, would enable the establishment of an adequate student Post Office sub-station, would provide space for between-meal snacks and refreshments, and in general would provide a place for students to meet each other—to work, to play, and to worship together.

Similar in function to the Student Union building located on many college campuses throughout the nation, this all-student building at Graceland would be versatile enough to meet almost every out-of-classroom student need.

To provide for such a structure, the General Church has authorized the use of funds derived from Graceland College Day for the construction of a Student Center on the Graceland College campus. Present plans call for an expenditure of $60,000.00 to be used for this purpose, that sum to be obtained from Graceland College Day offerings.

It has been deemed fitting by the church that the Student Center be named as a memorial to the youth of the church who fought in the war. It would be a living monument to their service and one which would never die as oncoming generations of students find in their Memorial Center a meeting ground for minds and activities which leads to the establishment of the abundant life and the ways of peace.

The establishment of this Memorial Student Center depends on the contributions obtained from the people of the church on Graceland College Day, October 20.

It is the hope of the church and of the college that with the successful completion of plans enumerated above, some of the most pressing needs in regard to the physical plant at Graceland College will be met. But there are and will be other demands placed upon the college as more and more students desire to continue their educations in the church-supported school. Certainly, neither the church nor the college desires to deny admittance to worthy students.

Therefore, in view of these problems, and particularly in light of the new emphasis on a closer relationship between the church and its institutions, the people of the church are urged to give their support, financial and otherwise, to the needs of the college, to assure its continued success in making available to our young people educational opportunities which may not be duplicated anywhere else in the world.

student center building is and why it is needed. This is a type of building that every college and university is finding highly desirable and a very important part of the student life. It will provide a proper place for a cafeteria, and take it out of the women's dormitory, where it should not be. It will give adequate housing for a store handling student supplies, books, and ordinary necessities. It will serve in many ways for committees, worship, social functions, rest, health, recreation, refreshment, and other needs. It will reduce the necessity for students leaving the campus, particularly in cold weather, when discomfort and illness sometimes result from trips away. It will help to provide upon the campus a more complete meeting of all student needs, for the protection of students, and for economies in their budgets.

The College Day Offering will be used toward this purpose.

Accept the Challenge

This year presents the church people with a challenge. Will we accept it? Will we do something about it? If our past record is an indication of our interest and determination, we will not disappoint our young people this time.

Reader Response to "The Challenge"

The publication of "The Challenge" by Elbert Dempsey, Jr., in the Herald of September 14, has aroused more discussion than any other article we have published in a year. Many readers, young and old, have expressed appreciation. A number cannot agree with some parts of it. A few are frankly critical. The reading public is not often unanimous in its opinions.

An able and vigorous presentation of a viewpoint like "The Challenge," which enters a controversial field, was bound to have its critics. An editor dislikes to have his contributors misunderstood, discouraged, or attacked. When he knows that an article, however good it may be, is likely to bring a storm of trouble booming up over the horizon, it is habitual for him to raise a shield or explanation and defense. Sometimes people dislike the article, sometimes they dislike the defense. If the editorial that was meant to fend off the blows failed in its purpose, it is just one more good intention that went wrong.

Most of the comment was verbal. A few took the trouble to write, and they were favorable. We are printing three below. We may get other articles either in reply to, or defense of the viewpoint of the article.—L. L.

Our young brother, Elbert Dempsey, Jr., can be congratulated and complimented for his straightforward attitude toward the church. His article has caused a lot of comment in this locality; all of it has been to his credit. It has been a long time since any one thing in the Herald has brought so much enthusiasm and encouragement as this young man's thinking. Can we have more of the same from others?

A Herald Reader,
Minneapolis, Minnesota.

I offer a vote of appreciation for extending to us the work of Elbert Dempsey, Jr., and Ruth Midgorden. They truly express the thought of many of us who are young. Their presentation is spirited, but not without thought. I hope that you shall see fit to encourage their efforts.

Capt. John C. Blumenschein,
AAF Station Hospital,
Marsh Field, California.

I wish to congratulate you upon printing the excellent article, "The Challenge," by Elbert Dempsey in a recent issue of the Herald. Not only do I feel most of his criticisms justified, but more important, they are positive criticisms. More articles like his are needed to prevent the church from becoming just another, not too Christian organization.

I only regret that you felt it necessary to temper the article in your editorial comments. I do not wish to be unfair, for it may be that your comments were designed to put some people in a more receptive frame of mind. Still and all, a statement such as "It is necessary to be kind and patient with the young as they try out their powers" smacks of condescension. And, of course, it was a coincidence that the same issue carried Voltaire's quip, "Ideas are like beards: men do not have them until they grow up." I sincerely doubt the latter, but should it be true, it is comforting to recall that in recent years the heaviest beards have usually adorned the faces of young servicemen.

There is no way in which men can do good to others with so little expense and trouble as by kindness in conversation. We should think that kind words would be very common, they are so cheap; but there are many persons who draw on their kindness with more reluctance than on their purses. The habit of using kind words will at length conform our feelings to our language. We shall become kind not only in speech but in our manners and in our hearts.—Elihu Burritt.

Readers of all ages will be stirred by this message to youth

Expanding Our Mental Horizons

By Casimir Nickel

The author is one of our General Conference appointees, now located in Kirtland district. This article is the substance of a message given to the youth convention at Kirtland.

THE THEME for this youth convention is appropriate. "Take Me on the Quest," is a natural expression of young people. Youth does not live in the past, but rather looks toward the future. Youth dreams of the achievements to come, for there are no great accomplishments behind it. A child wants to be a fireman, a lad aspires to become an engineer or explorer, and a young man dreams of a future as a statesman.

The natural disposition of young people is also evident in us as a race of people. From time immemorial, we have been seeking the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. "Shangri-La" has been the dream of humanity as well as a lovely theme for a book. We have hoped for ages that the finding of the Holy Grail would bring happiness, security, and freedom from war.

In the realm of reality, we have been on the quest as zealously as in the realm of fancy and dreams. The cave-man sitting at the entrance of his cliff dwelling peered across the valley and wondered what was on the opposite peak. It was this curiosity that led men across valleys to new ranges and larger horizons, from neighboring mountains, across deserts, and to other new horizons, and finally the seashore—a youthful dream of spanning the ocean on the assumption that the world was round, and a further pushing back of existing horizons. It is such a quest we should pursue—the quest of reality whereby we expand our horizons rather than the quest of fancy with the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

OUR MANY MANSIONS

We must pursue a quest that will not only expand our geographical horizons, but our industrial, social, and cultural horizons as well. It is the realm which has made man more at home in the air than the birds who are the natural inhabitants of our troposphere. Man today is not only able to outfly the bird in altitude by traversing the stratosphere, but he is also able to circumnavigate the globe, which no bird would dream of doing. In the ocean, with submarines, man, outdistances the natural inhabitants of the water. With radar man explores depths which fish do not know exist. Engineering genius has made man master of the swamp by steel spans like the Golden Gate Bridge or the causeways of the Florida Keys.

This realm of which I wish to speak is responsible for streamliners which skirt across the desert; it is also responsible for the tunnels which reduce impassable mountains into punctured molehills. This realm which has pushed back all our horizons should be the quest for us to pursue. It is the realm which will eventually result in the major objective, Zion.

The acme of our many mansions is individual mental development. It is the mind which has created our world of realities. Mental development is not the by-product of other activities, rather the process is in reverse order. The wise man certainly spoke the truth when he said, "as a man thinketh so is he."

Permit me to read the following which illustrates so aptly my thought in this regard:

There is an old legend of the Middle Ages that is very instructive. It seems that a citizen was arrested by one of the Barons and shut up in a dungeon in the castle. He was taken down dark stairs, down, down, by a ferocious looking jailer who carried a great key a foot long. The door of a cell was opened, and he was thrust into a dark hole. The door shut with a bang, and there he was.

He lay in that dark dungeon for twenty years. Each day the jailer would come, the big door would be opened with a great creaking and groaning, a pitcher of water and a loaf of bread would be thrust in and the door closed again.

After twenty years, the prisoner decided that he could not endure it any longer. He wanted to die but he did not want to commit suicide, so he decided that the next day when the jailer came he would attack him. The jailer would then kill him in self-defense, and thus his misery would be at an end. He thought he would examine the door carefully so as to be ready for the morrow, and going over he caught the handle and turned it. To his amazement the door opened, and upon investigation he found that there was no lock upon it and never had been, and that for all those twenty years he had not been locked in, except in his mind.

At any time in that period he could have opened the door if only he had known it. He thought it was locked, but it was not. He groped along the corridor and felt his way upstairs. At the top of the stairs two soldiers were chatting, and they made no attempt to stop him. He crossed the great yard without attracting attention. There was an armed guard on the drawbridge, but they gave him no thought, and he walked out a free man.

That is what I mean in stating that our mind has been the realm from which spring the many mansions in our land of magic. We are free men by the way we think. It has been true in a number of instances that our mental disorder and confusion have contributed to the tribulations of Zion itself. To be sure, "Israel doth not know," therefore Zion languishes and waits. The challenge of our quest is to develop the mind.

HOW SHALL WE THINK?

When a person speaks of mental development, it is assumed at once that education is the thing. We all should train for our chosen professions. We cannot become doctors, teachers, or engineers, without education. To be sure, higher education is almost imperative in this age of learning. To me, however, mental development is not a by-product of education, but rather education is the brain child of the age-long process of mental development.

Our mental development should expand our horizons. Some think that to be educated is to acquire a mass of facts, which is similar to the finding of a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Such an approach does not exploit the full capacity of the mind. Such thinking is rather quantitative instead of qualitative. It is not what we shall think but how we shall think, which should challenge us in our quest.

Interestingly enough, there are evidences in several areas that we are expanding our horizons. In our church, particularly, has this been true. President F. Henry Edwards' statement, during the last General Conference, that administrative work and missionary work are not two independent jobs, but rather they are two sides of the same picture, has been an indication of expanded mental horizons. We have known the facts pertaining to pastoral ministry for a long time. In the Restoration Movement, we have known about the pastoral work for over a century. Christ's statement of the Great Commission has long been recognized as the cardinal declaration of Christian missionary work. The facts of missionary work as well as pastoral work have been known for an indefinite time, it is however this connecting of the two together in such a unique illustration as used by President Edwards that strikes back the old horizons into new positions.

Our Presiding Bishop contributed another illustration of expanded mental horizons. He said that in the gathering it is not only important as to what happens in Zion when a family gathers, but also what happens in the branch from which the Saints move away. This is interesting to me because of the tremendous loss of members during the past year in a large branch I know, but it is more interesting to note that the horizons of the gathering have been expanded to include some 750 branches scattered throughout the wide world, which is in distinct contrast to the earlier approach to the gathering, that of amassing persons in a highly concentrated and already congested area. The facts of the gathering have been with us since the inception of the Restoration, and even before that, but today we find that with expanded horizons, we are able to see these facts as one looking from a new mountain peak. Our horizons have been again pushed back to new positions.

Then again, the reference made to missions by the Apostolic Quorum in their report to the last General Conference, as "missions abroad" instead of "foreign missions" is a striking illustration of some qualitative thinking. It is such a common thing to hear various organizations speak of their "foreign missions" that hardly anyone gives second thought to the implications. It is interesting to note also that these selfsame organizations emphasize the popular theme of "one world or none." We all know that there is only one world. There is no denial of such an obvious fact. The important thing is whether we shall think in global terms or cosmical terms. "Missions abroad" is indicative of expanded horizons. Certainly this is a natural and spontaneous admission that God as father of all mankind is our God, and that his world is our eternal habitation, and that the limited horizons of one valley have expanded until the universe is our dwelling place. We are no more strangers; for in the mind of Christ there is neither black nor white, neither Jew nor Gentile, neither native nor foreigner.

DEVELOPING THE EXPANDING OUTLOOK

To expand our mental horizons, it is necessary to do more than merely acquire facts. Such thinking comes through trial and tribulation. Such thinking calls not only for curious investigation and acquisition of knowledge through study, but it also calls for employment of the laws of worship; such as prayer, self-discipline, and practice of graces and beatitudes which in reality are not bigoted doctrines of religious cranks, but they are as much laws of the universe as the principles of thermodynamics and electronics.

The late Dr. George Matheson who wrote "O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go" (which is hymn No. 285 in our Hymnal) tells of his experience in such a way that it illustrates my thought very well. He said:

Something had happened to me, which was known only to myself, and which caused me the most severe mental suffering. The hymn was the quickest bit of work I ever did in my life. I had the impression rather of having it dictated to me by some inward voice than working it out myself.*

MacInnis, relating the conversation of Lord Kelvin and Principal Lindsay, tells that

He [Lord Kelvin] never reasoned quite up to any one of his great discoveries. He brooded over all the facts which seemed to him relevant to his problem until there came a moment when his mind took a life-or-death leap away out into the unknown. He felt in the very marrow of his being the conviction that the solution lay just there. He was never able to put-in the intervening steppingstones of demonstration between his old position and the new to which his life-and-death spring had brought him. Before publishing his discoveries, he usually got his two friends, Tait and Clark Maxwell, to work out the missing deductions.

This type of thinking which Dr. Matheson and Lord Kelvin had experienced is certainly not in the realm of fancy. It is a reality which all of us can experience. You all know the Restoration belief in the gift of the Holy Ghost. You also know that one of the gifts of the Holy Spirit is wisdom and knowledge. It is commonly accepted now that the slightest particle of inanimate matter, such as the atoms of the floor show evidences of thought processes. Knowing therefore that the universe is shot through with the element of intelligence, and knowing that with our brain capable of transmitting thought, it is not too much to believe that our minds can be developed from inward resources as well as from pouring facts into them. My own experience has taught me that such is the case.

Twelve years ago, long before my academic training had been accomplished; as an inexperienced boy, unlearned in theology and unacquainted with principles of speech preparation or the refinements of public oratory, it fell my lot to preach for one of our largest congregations in the church. To be more specific the membership of this particular branch at that time was in the neighborhood of one thousand members. The situation became doubly difficult, because I was well known in the town, my social standing was that of an insignificant hospital janitor, and it had been well advertised that I would be the preacher. Even tonight the experience stands vividly before me as my viewing of the congregation revealed several snickering nurses from the institution at which I worked. Fear and lack of previous preparation had paralyzed my mind. I was literally perspiring great drops of life. The picture changed very quickly once I began to preach. Suddenly my mind was quickened. The faculty of being able to preach and at the same time observe myself and wonder, not only at the thinking which was outside my ability under normal circumstances but even at the language and ease of gesticulation, had been granted to me. It became clearly evident to me that a strange experience of transcendent thought by the working of God's Spirit was occurring. It was in a daze that I bid over two hundred persons good night at the door, knowing all the while that God had visited them, but from their profuse compliments it was evident they knew it not. They merely saw the boy and marveled at his ability of thought and expression.

At another time while attending the Youth Convention at Lamoni, a similar experience had been granted to me. In a sudden spurt of mind, thoughts had presented themselves which were thoroughly new to me. At the time these thoughts had revealed such a new world to me that it left me stupefied not fully realizing the import of the experience. Several years later while at the university, I found these thoughts in textbooks. They were considered as precious gems. They were the fruits of painstaking research over centuries of human experience. Then there occurred to me the great possibilities if the mind is exploited to its fullest. But such mental development can come only as a result of direct obedience to what are considered by some as bigoted doctrine and religious phantasies. To experience the expansion of our mental horizons, we must submit ourselves to forces greater than we are and to forces outside of ourselves. These forces operate fully when we have first obeyed the principles of Christian behavior; which includes doctrine, prayer, study of religious literature, church attendance, adherence to economic principles of stewardship, and practice of such ideals as indicated in the beatitudes.

Let us summarize. As young people we are on the quest. A myriad of choices present themselves for us to pursue. In our quest, let us not chase rainbows or seek for the holy grail. Let us live in the world of reality and expand our horizons. Let us be free by the way we think and not about what we think. Let us strive for a higher quality of thought. We can do so by keeping in rapport with Deity. Let us strive for that most precious jewel of all which is aptly expressed by the Hebrew sages in the following reading:

Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her. Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honour. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her; and happy is every one that retaineth her. The LORD by wisdom hath founded the earth; by understanding hath he established the heavens. By his knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down the dew. Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. For there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.

BOOKS

Towards Christian Democracy, by Sir Stafford Cripps. The Philosophical Library, N. Y. 1946. 101 pages. $2.

This book is not a message for a year, but to a century—the century that lies between us and A.D. 2050. It was written in the last months of the great military conflict that ended last year; but it was also written in the very middle of the political and economic war that is still being waged with unremitting intensity and ferocity.

The author is president of Great Britain's Board of Trade, but he is also a liberal leader, a statesman, and, in his own field, a philosopher. He will be remembered for having advanced, through his proposals made when he was on a mission representing the Crown, the progress of improved relations between the Empire and the turbulent millions of India. If India still has troubles, they are of her own creation, rather largely.

The book deals with the practical application of Christian principles to the great world problem, which is the task of peoples getting along with themselves and their neighbors. No one—least of all the author—would claim that this condensed little work contains the full solution; but it does point the way. It is another straw in the wind now blowing through the universe, pointing to the end, either of the present world order, or of the human race. We can take our choice.

Sociology of the American Indians, by S. M. Barrett. Burton Publishing Co., 1946. Illustrated. 142 pages. $2.00.

The author of this compact volume was born at an Indian trading post, the son of a white trader. He has spent many years at various trading posts and reservations, much of the time under arrangement with the Federal government. His information has been acquired by firsthand experience. He is the author of ten other published works, which are arranged for use in the schools as texts or supplemental reading. Those who wish to add to their knowledge of the Indians and their ways of life will find this book interesting and useful.

Preaching Without Notes, by Clarence E. Macartney. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 186 pages. $1.75.

A popular preacher and religious writer reveals the secrets of his power and success in this volume. The reader may expect no detailed plan or devices by which to preach effectively without notes. But he will find here the incentives and means for so filling his mind with the contents of a message that when he goes into the pulpit he will not need notes. Many experiences and illustrations are included.

says this mother, because

Children Aren't Amusing

By Katherine Keck Bear

IF YOUR CHILD has a hard time sorting out the truth from a mass of indigestible adult impressions he gets, and as a consequence, makes a funny comment about it, you laugh. If it's funny enough, it's worth $5.00 and will be printed in a magazine for other adults to laugh at.

We see children again and again puzzled, and sometimes tragically hurt, in their effort to get help from an adult on a perplexing problem. Because the basis of their tottering logic is so inadequate, and the logic itself so illogical, they are laughed at and left with the question unanswered, their methods of learning unimproved.

I KNOW A MAN who takes pains not be amused. He answers children with the same courtesy he would give an adult, and after those who laughed are gone, explains that probably they didn't understand what was said. He is an outstanding Junior Church Pastor. His sermonette each Sunday morning is delivered to a quiet audience of around thirty youngsters from the age of twelve, clear down to babies barely able to walk. His language is suited to every age. His ideas are comprehensible to all. The flow of his assured and purposeful reasoning is a pleasure for any visiting adult to hear.

He is an honest man. He never tries to build himself in the presence of others. He never feels the necessity of impressing other adults. He knows the children of the church need him, and he is content to devote himself to them. And out of the association he has with them, brings to his other priesthood duties, the deepest kind of discernment. He knows humanity at its very roots—the little children.

A WOMAN recently was talking about her mother. What she said was this: "Mother taught me in twenty years enough to last a lifetime. Her example at fifty is just as good as it was when she was teaching me to walk. I'm still guiding my decisions by her principles, even though I haven't seen her for years."

It's true that the impressions caught by fresh memories and eager intellects, are impressions that last. The mind and heart of a little child is just as tender as his baby hands, and a minute or two of terror is never forgotten. The day mother laughed at the tragedy of a mud-soaked and shivering kitten. Or when dad chopped off the head of a pet hen. A child is due consideration and an explanation of these things. His feelings are more instinctively noble than your neighbor, and you wouldn't think of being rude to him.

"He's gotta learn reality." It's so. It has to be learned, because there are adults who live real and callous lives, and children have to live among them. So, let's teach them one thing at a time. The kitten can be cleaned up and warmed and fed. The hen will die some day because she's too old and weak to live, so we're putting her to sleep while she still enjoys life. Ten minutes' time to teach reality, at a time when a child is yearning for an explanation, is worth more than a college course in social relationships, after the interest in them is gone.

IF THERE IS TIME to wash his face and comb his hair, there is time to groom his mental processes. If time is short, probably he'd be better in the end with jam on his face, and

Music in the Home

From a talk given to the Women's Class, at Brush Creek, Illinois, Reunion

By Beatrice Deaver Darling

A DEFINITION of music seems cold and lifeless when we consider how music defies descriptive words. We must keep in mind that music is both an art and a science of the rhythmic combination of tones embracing melody and harmony.

No one knows just when primitive man began to sing at his work, but when he began to sing, to twang strings, to blow on pipes, or to beat out rhythms on drums, he felt that music was a very serious and essential thing in life. Naturally, music became a part of his work. It was not something distinct and apart from his existence, but what might be called a kind of spiritual lubrication for his job. We have untold hundreds of work songs which have stimulated the lives of millions of people down through the centuries, oftentimes when man's labor was desperately cruel and oppressive. We are all acquainted with "The Volga Boatman, as an outstanding example.

It would be most interesting to know just when man began to sing. We do know that he began long before there was a need for conducting music, and our first manner of directing music was very crude. In the history of conducting, the story is told of the first leader who responded to the urge within himself, when he sensed the need for directing group singing: As the group was singing this great leader realized how much more beautiful the singing would be if each singer could feel the rhythm in their choral singing. He looked around for something with which to emphasize the pulsating rhythm of the crowd, and finding only a long piece of iron pipe which was several inches longer than he was tall he began to direct their singing by allowing the pipe to fall rhythmically to the ground. Possibly we might not have had the recording of this story had it not ended so tragically, for we are told that one day while the leader was directing, the pipe accidentally hit his big toe, blood poison set in and the poor fellow died. However tragically the end, it is always interesting to know the story of the beginning.

We realize that man is an instrument of music, an instrument with a mind, and possessing a vocal organ with unfathomed potentialities for music. Psychologists tell us that people must have a means of free expression for their emotions—that we should sing; if we can't sing, hum; and if we can't hum, whistle.

Had you ever stopped to think how music affects you? We are all very individualistic in the way in which music affects us, but I like the way Dr. Charles Eliot, the renowned president of Harvard University, explained his reaction to music. He said: "Music has a very peculiar effect upon me. It seems to build something up within me. It gives me faith in life, faith in myself, and faith in the Almighty." Isn't that a beautiful explanation? Plato once said: "The man who has music in his soul will be most in love with the loveliest."

THE VOICE—OUR FOUNDATION

When we think of music in the home do we consider what a part one's speaking voice plays? The voice is the outer expression of the inner self, whether we realize it or not. It is a mirror of all that we are—physically, mentally, and spiritually. A mirror which reflects clearly the real self. Disraeli once said, "There is no index of character so pure as the voice." A person's charm often lies in the quality of his voice. In that case, we have something more to build for—that the best part of us may be reflected in our voice, for we all have a desire to be natural, sincere, and convincing.

Then our voice may represent the first cornerstone to the foundation of our music in the home. Now, let us think together how we may further this building program which we have at hand. I am sure that most of us have experienced visits in noisy homes, where the mother talks rather loudly, and we often find a state of confusion as the result. If we enter a modern kindergarten room there is a very pleasant experience in store for us, for a good kindergarten instructor talks in very subdued tones, teaching the children good work habits with the minimum of confusion. How harmoniously they all work together!

I have always thought what a wonderful thing it would be if there could be classes available for young married couples, that they might learn together the art of building happy homes, and the responsibility which rests upon both the father and mother to see that each day gets off to a happy start. The tasks of the entire day reflect the radiance from a happy home.

If you will allow me, I would like to tell you of a personal instance which explains my point very well. My husband was head of the English department in a high school during an early part of our married life, and we were often entertained at different homes of the faculty members. At a party at the superintendent's home one evening the superintendent paused in the evening's conversation to ask me how I charmed my husband that he always came to school in such a happy mood each morning. I could not help but explain that it was a combination of my husband's happy disposition and my philosophy in life that the least I could do toward the progress of his work was to see that the morning always got off to a happy start.

My thoughts rather automatically turn to the words of a song which our beloved Brother Elbert Smith wrote entitled, "My Wife Always Sings While She Works." The words of the first verse were:

My wife always sings while she works,
Tho' sunny or stormy the day.
And the song that she sings
Brings me courage it seems.
Thank God for a wife who can sing!

We can all appreciate, at least to some extent, what music meant to that home.

Now that we have a foundation for our happy home, we should give careful thought to those things which will promote a richer background for the lives of our children. Most of us have experienced the effects of lullabies upon youngsters. The songs are written from different viewpoints: the melody is very simple and conducive to relaxation, while the story of the song is within the child's sphere of comprehension. Possibly many of you have noticed the reaction of youngsters who have been sung to during their baby days—soon they begin singing or humming little tunes as an accompaniment to their play. After all, what child doesn't love to sing?

This brings us to another point: Have we ever stopped to think what effect the training in our home has upon the homes throughout the neighborhood? This was brought home so forcefully to me when I began giving our son piano lessons. Soon many mothers throughout the neighborhood who knew that I played called to inquire if I would consider giving their children lessons. The spirit of imitation is great in youngsters, and it is at this readiness period that parents should grasp the opportunity to encourage the children in developing such worthy activities. It makes me sad to see some children run and play all day long, for there are always many little things that might be done at intervals throughout the day which will help to enrich their cultural background.

We hear so often about the increasing rate of delinquency, and I have wondered if a more careful guidance and supervision in children's recreational activities would not eliminate a large percentage of this difficulty. If you will notice, I am referring to piano-playing as a recreational activity in this instance, for oftentimes it results in largely just that. We notice that when we, as a family, are preparing to go somewhere, if our young son gets ready first he goes to the piano and serenades us with some of his lovely little numbers until we are ready to go. Think how worth-while such an activity becomes in their lives! The youngsters find themselves well repaid for their efforts, for the methods of teaching piano are very fascinating, and practicing only an hour a day they are soon able to master several little compositions. The progress on the piano is usually quite rapid.

During the early life of the child the mother sings songs which are within his comprehension, for his appreciation. As the child grows she is building a miniature repertoire, adding songs according to the child's growth and understanding. And it is at this stage that we should begin to realize how important it is for us to have good music in the home.

How I wish every child with the least musical inclination could have the opportunity of taking at least two or three years of piano. I said "two or three years" for it usually requires about that period of time for the average child to attain a note-reading efficiency which will satisfy his desires even to sight-read hymns and simple compositions. If only every mother could appreciate the benefits to be derived from those first few years of training! It is during this training period that the child develops the desire to continue with music, and builds a background for greater appreciation of other musical instruments, or he satisfies the parents in the knowledge that his talents lie in other fields. However, let us not question for a moment the value received from this training period. Percy Grainger once said: "If a man plays a bit himself he better appreciates what the musician is trying to do. But just as making music sharpens out wits, so listening to fine music feeds and stimulates our musicianship." Some mothers are not aware of the child's talent until the child is given an opportunity for free expression along some artistic line.

Many mothers ask about the age of the child in considering the time for beginning his musical training. Usually we enroll our youngsters in the kindergarten at the age of five, realizing that the average child reaches what they call a "reading readiness" at five or six years of age. Isn't it just as natural for a youngster to reach a "piano readiness"? However, the range for the years of "piano readiness" is great, depending upon the individual, his background, and his environment. Often the "piano readiness" is noted among six or seven year olds. I started one little fellow at the age of two and one-half years of age (and I heard some of you catch your breath on that one), but may I add that he was a child of real talent, and at the present time is a student at the Chicago Conservatory of Music.

The question was asked just the other day if youngsters should be allowed to take piano lessons from persons who are also vocal teachers. Many high school music teachers are qualified to teach both vocal and instrumental, so why should there be any cut and dried rule against it? We realize that it is very advantageous for the vocalist to be able to play her own accompaniments. Have we forgotten that Galli-Curci was a concert pianist before she began her operatic career?

We have anticipated this training stage for our youngsters, now we might stop to consider what measures we have taken to develop and stimulate their musical inclinations:

1. There are lovely songs written for all ages.

2. Good movies are a great stimulus.

3. Recordings are made, interweaving music with interesting stories for the various ages. And what wonderful recreation this is for the youngsters! Usually, on rainy days there is a large group of neighborhood youngsters grouped around our radio-phonograph listening to Johnny's recordings. This is good for the entire group, for psychologically certain things are taking place:

- a. There is an interest in the story at hand.

- b. They are all experiencing common fellowship.

- c. An appreciation is being developed for the music as an appropriate accompaniment to the story. We must never lose sight of the fact that it is through musical experiences that we develop such an appreciation.

4. In our day and age we are most fortunate in having the opportunity of attending concerts. We want our children to appreciate what the artist (or artists) has to offer, and in order to do this he must have at least a partial understanding of what it is all about. Think of the days, years, and oftentimes the greater portion of a lifetime which the artist practices in order to bring us such enjoyment.

If our youngsters are taught the value of good music I don't believe that we need worry about their taste in the musical line. The late stage of "boogie wogie" worried many mothers. There is a place for that type of music (if we may call it that), and children should understand where and when that place is, and keep it in its place. The part which we have to play in such a picture is to be tolerant concerning these different stages, for these fads and their popularity never last many years, while our lovely classical music lives on.

We build for higher standards in living—why can't we begin to grow in the more cultured aspect, making use of our leisure time? I cannot help but wonder what is happening to the families where there is no concerted planning for evening activities. We talk of family devotions, which are very important; but band in hand with this more serious phase of our living should be plans for family laughter and fun, retaining a close fellowship and respect for each other's interests. One mother said, "But my fourteen-year-old Bobby is not interested in the activities of nine-year-old Judy." In that case, are we falling down in our lessons of respect for others' rights, and individual participation in activities? Surely we must not lose sight of the fact that a great amount of inspiration comes from sharing with others, and having an interest in others, for we realize that our homes of tomorrow are being conditioned for creative living by beauty and harmony, which instinctively calls for concerted action by the entire family.

MUSIC, AN ACCOMPANIMENT TO WORK

I am wondering how many women have found the value of working to music—possibly many of you do work to the accompaniment of your radio. Have you noticed how efficient you can perform certain duties to certain music? I find that I can do my best work to the accompaniment of a concerto. If you have not tried it, do so sometime and see for yourself. Noted scientists have proved that music has been found to have very definite psychological effects:

1. The right sounds can increase or decrease pulse rates.

2. The right sounds may create muscular energy.

3. The right sounds can increase the threshold of sensory perception.

4. The right sounds can increase energy and delay fatigue.

The knowledge that carefully planned music is actually a kind of panacea for fatigue is one of the great discoveries of modern times. We learn of the "Muzak" installations in many of the large industrial establishments, with such carefully planned programs so as not to compel attention from the work at hand, but the music remains as a kind of psychological background. The fatigue curves are easily determined in any industry, and it has been definitely observed that music alleviates these difficult periods for the worker in the morning and afternoon. If music can do this for workers in factories, think of the possibilities for growth and enrichment in our homes. When I think of the opportunities which are open to us and to our young people, I experience a burning desire to see every individual have a chance for his rightful heritage in the fields of music, art, and literature. It is only by taking advantage of our every opportunity that we will be able to raise our cultural standards.

God has been good to us and to our church. We have at the head of the various departments of our church specialized leaders in their respective fields. Leaders to whom we may turn for advice and counsel at any time. We also have, at our fingertips, untold resources of information which are ours for the seeking. "Why sit we idle, dumb?" Let us not forget that we need His guidance in all of our study. We are aware that the more we build for our children, the richer their lives will be, and the more they in turn will be able to offer their children.

Children Aren't Amusing

the time spent in a rocking chair with a loved grown-up, learning that the world is a good place to live. That realities are stern but clean. That friendships are made of communion and not clowning. That any problem, attacked backward, is just another game to play.

There's light, and laughter, and love of fine things in the little children. Their blunderings toward effectual adulthood are engaging. But they have the right to engage love and co-operation from the adults they are using for patterns.

Young People of Friesland, Holland, Send Greetings

Brother L. Steringa, Kollumerzwaag 119, Province of Friesland, Holland, writes a letter of greeting which is co-signed by Jacob Henstra from which we take the following: "We, the young people of the Friesland branch, would like very much to send greetings to the Saints of America and Canada." They also include a photograph of the group of twenty-six, taken apparently in a park or woodland on the occasion of some outdoor gathering. It would be a friendly return for young church groups in the U. S. and Canada to write to them.

"By the Waters of Babylon We Wept"

By a strange quirk of fate, England appears to be "out of character." For centuries, save for a time, England, supposedly modern Ephraim, has always been the friend of the Jews. The world generally has raised its hand against them, but they could always find haven among those who are alleged to be the descendants of the "House of Israel."

But now, the Jews are complaining of the way England is conducting her mandate over Palestine. We quote in its entirety a plea of the Cleveland Zionist Emergency Council in a Cleveland, Ohio, paper, under the heading, "By the Waters of Cyprus We Wept":

Today . . . exactly one year after President Truman asked that 100,000 homeless Jews be admitted to Palestine immediately, an old Bible story is being acted out again.

The Book of Psalms tells how 2,500 years ago refugees who had been driven from Palestine sat by the waters of Babylon and wept, remembering Zion . . .

Today, Jews weep again . . . on the shores of Cyprus. Only this time the oppressor is England, not Babylon. And what of the honor of England?

At least Babylon did not break her pledged word.

ENGLAND HAS.

When granted the mandate for Palestine, England solemnly promised—

"To facilitate Jewish immigration . . .

"To encourage close settlement by Jews on the land.

"To be responsible for conditions as will secure the establishment of the Jewish National Home."

England has broken each of these promises. The illegal deportation of homeless refugees is merely her latest breach of faith.

At least Babylon did not betray her Allies.

ENGLAND HAS.

The Jews of Palestine fought an all-out war against the Axis, helping to beat Rommel back from the gates of the Suez . . .

The Arabs sat on the sidelines while the British lifeline was in mortal danger, waiting to welcome the Nazis if they broke into the Holy Land. The Arab Mufti did not sit on the sidelines . . . He sat with Hitler.

Yet the Jewish allies are now being treated like enemies . . . while the Arabs are being courted.

It is the old story of appeasement . . . a British policy that goes back to Munich.

But oppressors never last.

Babylonian imperialism perished, and the homeless returned to Palestine.

British imperialism will be no more successful . . . no matter how many Nazi tricks England continues to use in Palestine—mass arrests, beatings, concentration camps, suspension of civil rights.

For those homeless ones who weep on Cyprus and throughout Europe . . . they, too, will return to Zion.

The Modern Social Problem in the Making

By J. A. Koehler

Number 5 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE MODERN PROPHET told his people that they must study the history of the past if they are to fit themselves for the task of the present. He said that his people must know the story of the development of social institutions, of the march of civilization, if they are to know what to do to fulfill their special mission.

The reason? It is simply that the evils of the past are the roots of the problem of the present. It is that the moral disease of modern society cannot be cured without destroying those roots. It is the kind of grapes our fathers did eat that set our teeth on edge.

Over and over again, the prophets of the coming kingdom warned their peoples that the choices of today are sure to bear fruit tomorrow.

But "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily"—because the reaping is so remote from the sowing—"therefore, the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." And the preacher was speaking of his own people. The hearts of men of the church as well as men of the world are set, seemingly, to do evil—that is to say, to do that which is not good. It is because both the church and the world did evil in the past that we reap a social problem, a moral problem, a very distinctive problem, in the present. Our ancestors and forefathers sowed the seeds of a moral crisis, and we are doing the reaping.

WHAT DID the ancients do that made a social problem for the moderns? Many things. I shall mention only those which, in the opinion of many, were most fateful.

Firstly, our ancestors were land-grabbers. We too are greedy grabbers of power sites and other things. We play the old games of royalty and empire as certainly as our ancestors did, even though we may use the pen sometimes instead of the sword. We cannot exclude American land-grabbing in treating of the causes of our social problem. I assume that you know the rough outlines of that story.

I do not say that our remote ancestors should not have explored the earth and, when they located them, took possession of the best lands that were to be had. I say only that ancient land-grabbing is one of the roots of our modern social problem.

For when the replenishing of the earth was well under way and one people began to say to another, "Move on, brother; this is where we stop," or "Hands up! for we intend to take what you have," as the emigrants from Europe said to the Indians of America—when land-grabbing took on that tone, it became one of the roots of the modern-world social problem; which (let us not lose sight of the fact) is an ethical problem.

There have been, as there still are, two kinds of land-grabbing; the one by peoples and the other by persons. In ancient times land-grabbing by "peoples" may have been only a small evil. But as time marched on and it became also an individual or a private affair, it took on the proportions of a great evil. For with the turns of human events, powers which only "peoples" have moral right to exercise came to be exercised by individuals. Powers which ought to be exercised only publicly, came to be exercised privately. And that is the second thing that was done yesterday to make the problem of today.

The genius of Bible religion had said in the very beginning of the business of subduing the earth that each man should satisfy his own wants through the labor of his own hands. It said: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." But, thirdly, there were (whatever you choose to call them) those who would reap what other hands had sown; they would eat by the sweat of other men's faces. In truth that is one of royalty's reasons for land-grabbing. In time there came to be many Solomons and Russian axemen, and other categories of overlords, whose appetites for the bread produced by other men's sweat was, as it still is, insatiable. And that overlordship—which has contrived new ways of masking itself—is the fourth evil-doing which gave us the modern-world moral problem.

Fifthly, with the development of trade and commerce, and the mass production made possible by the advancement of science and the practical arts, financial devices were invented for the purpose of increasing the powers of overlords through the amassing of capital, and many other things. As time marched on, and economic life became more and more complex, and people more and more dependent on these financial devices for the attainment of their objects (both their public and private objects), and as the tangle of human relations arising from such causes became almost indissoluble, the moral problem took on its distinctively modern characteristic. With the possible exception of imperial government, financial institutions and monetary practices became the most troublesome elements in the modern social problem.

IN EVALUATING these factors, please take notice of the truth that certain functions which peoples may properly perform may not be performed by persons without disastrous consequences. Nor may functions, which only persons may properly perform, be taken over by peoples without creating a social problem. Remember, too, that when peoples do not conduct their business as they should, there may be good reasons why persons should perform functions which peoples neglect to perform. As peoples conduct affairs, privately operated insurance, for instance, is almost an absolute necessity, notwithstanding it is one of the elements of our social problem.

The next thing which happened to give the social problem the aspect of a moral crisis was the leaguering of government with private finance. Governments, such as we have, need more and more money. Their appetites for revenue, in the form of taxes, etc., are insatiable. There is no way to keep them from growing. Then government shaped itself so that moneyed people would have a stake in the conduct of its affairs, so that there would always be sources of revenue upon which to draw. That should revive our recollections of John Law and Alexander Hamilton, et al.

When government did that, as when it did other things, it institutionalized evils. It wove those evils into the social fabric. And when it did that, as we intimated before, it made the modern social tangle almost indissoluble.

In the early stages of industry, business, finance, and some of the forms of property which work evil to us did not reveal their true character. The evils which they would work in time were not so evident. They could not, at least they did not, do the harm that they do today. They did not have the aspect of such deep undercurrents that they have today. They looked comparatively innocent at the time they were relatively innocuous. Moreover, they could be reckoned with more effectively when the life struggle was more of a man to man affair, when both peoples and persons were on more of an equal footing.

In the days of our ancestors, any David with a sling shot might be a match for any Goliath with a sword. Moreover, when it was necessary to do so, as in feudal times, for instance, a people could withdraw itself into its own social shell until a social cyclone passed by.

But neither peoples nor persons can do that in modern times. Now they must face the storm. And they must do it sometimes under impossible handicaps. Today when a people is faced by a national highwayman like Hitler, it must drive the best bargain it can. Persons must do the same when they meet highwaymen of other characters. And it often happens that, no matter how good the bargain appears to be at the beginning, in the end it is bad. Now that is really a problem, is it not?

In early times, as a general rule, peoples knew who their foes were. They knew, therefore, at what points to make their attacks. The cards were not stacked against them as they are today. They were laid on the table, face up, so that each people had some idea of how it should play its own hand. In those days it was not an open and shut case of "Heads I win. Tails you lose."

But who knows the lay of the political, business, industrial, and financial ground today? Only a few—a very few. For one reason, among others, the scene is undergoing almost daily changes. What is worse, those who do know the lay of the ground best are those to whom that state of affairs is advantageous.

As for the rest of mankind, it makes their heads swim to try to envisage the workings of even the forces which have proper places in economic life; and to envisage the workings of other business and financial and political forces with a view to doing something effectual about them, for the average citizen—is impossible. The social problem is, therefore, a very, very difficult problem. It is baffling.

The genius of true religion, which from the beginning saw the problem in the making, thinks it knows the answer. It thinks its philosophy of social life is the true pattern by which to order human relationships. And it contends that it has the effectual way of applying its social philosophy to the solution of the problem of social life. That social philosophy and that practical plan of social action is the essence of the message of the modern prophet.

The Devil's Best Tool

It was once announced that the Devil was going out of business and would offer all his tools for sale to anyone who would pay his price. On the night of the sale they were all attractively displayed, and a bad-looking lot they were. Malice, hatred, envy, jealousy, sensuality, deceit, and all the other implements of evil were spread out, each marked with its price. Apart from the rest lay a harmless-looking, wedge-shaped tool, much worn and priced higher than any of them.

Someone asked the Devil what it was. "That's discouragement," was the reply. "Well, why do you price it so highly?" "Because," replied the Devil, "it is more useful to me than any of the others. I can pry open and get inside a man's consciousness with that when I could not get near him with any of the others, and when once inside, I can use him whatever way suits me best. It is so much worn because I use it with nearly everybody, as very few people yet know it belongs to me."

It hardly need be added that the Devil's price for discouragement was so high that it was never sold. He still owns it, and is still using it.—Australian Baptist.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

Suggestions for Improving Your Zion's League Program This Year

By Mary B. Hill

Note: The author, an active Zion's League leader at Hamilton, Ontario, has been asked to prepare various materials for supplementary use in connection with the book, "Does It Make Any Difference?" Program helps will appear from time to time in the pages of the "Herald."—The Department of Religious Education.

THERE ARE VERY FEW of us who, when we assume a responsibility, do not want to carry it out to the best of our ability. Considering the great work that is ours as leaders of young people, it is well that we feel that way, as the future of many lives is at stake as well as that of the church. Very often, however, we desire to improve our leadership, and now just at the beginning of a new year in League work would be a good time to take stock. Let us all ask ourselves the question, "Is there any way I can better the League?" Let us carefully evaluate past efforts, note whether attendance, interest, and worth-while programs have been all that could be desired, and, if not, decide to take those steps which are needed.

The following suggestions are made in accordance with the Zion's League Handbook, and have been found to be successful in increasing attendance, interest, and creating better quality programs.

1. The League of sixteen or more members may be divided into four groups, each under a committee chairman. Each group would be in charge of one meeting per month, and the chairman of the group would be in complete charge of the program, arranging rehearsals, etc. A certain definite routine should be established so that each group would know which week they would occupy monthly.

2. (a) Appoint a recreational leader who would look after games and recreation apart from the social chairman who would mainly be in charge of lunches, decorations, etc.

(b) In conjunction with the musical director of the branch, appoint a League musical officer who would co-operate with the committee chairmen in rehearsals of quartets, solos, etc.

(c) Appoint an editor who would look after a monthly news letter or paper and act as League reporter to branch.

(d) All above officers are to be included in the groups and will take their part in programs as part of the group to which they belong. Only the president is exempted from any group participation.

3. Plan your program. Before beginning the year's activities, call the executives together and plan the program for at least three months in advance. Decide definitely which committee will present what program. Then meet monthly in group committee meetings, and each group will then decide exactly what shall be done, and who shall do it. The group will decide this a month in advance of each meeting they present, and outline in detail what shall be done.

4. Have the secretary keep a membership file, in which all members will be listed, their interests, abilities, experience, etc. This will be more valuable in large Leagues where all members are not well acquainted.

5. Although keeping to a theme, meetings should be varied. There is no excuse for deadly monotony in weekly Zion's League meetings. Young people will certainly go where things are more lively. It usually is not advisable to carry on the "Quarterly Lesson Study" type of meeting. Leaders who are resorting to this system, or a weekly round of "socials," should examine their program carefully to effect a well-balanced program.

6. (a) To create activity and interest in the League, other activities may be introduced. The musical officer should explore the musical talent of the League and organize a League choir, orchestra, quartet, etc., and work in harmony with the program committee on all music. Music should be a growing part of the League life.

(b) If the League has a qualified dramatic leader, she should be in charge of the preparation of at least all public presentations of League plays and may co-operate with the program committee on weekly programs involving dramatics. She may also explore for dramatic talent and form a dramatic group in the League, perfecting it for participation in drama festivals, public performances, etc.

(c) The recreation leader may arrange tournaments within the League group and with outside teams in volleyball, basketball, tennis, etc. He should be in charge of all recreation, both on "social" evenings and other occasions. He (or she) should take his business seriously (not be elected for popularity), attending

Y. M. C. A. classes in recreational leadership and developing himself as a specialist in this field.

7. (a) Advertise your meetings on the church bulletin board with posters and use your artists in simple scene-painting for weekly programs where necessary.

(b) Electricians and other technical staff may be used in all drama work. In other words try to use everybody in some phase of League work. A great part of the work of the four committee chairmen will be to explore the talent in each group and set each to work where best fitted.

8. To encourage interest and participation, points may be awarded to each group for attendance, new members, visitors, and number in group participating each evening. Work out your own points according to your own League requirements. Winning group may be rewarded with a banquet, etc.

9. Many Leagues find it hard to get "warmed-up" in their meetings, and the evening is half over before interest is aroused. Leagues could help overcome this by having those who can meet an hour or so early. A regular schedule could be followed, e. g.,

(a) First meeting of month preceded by a supper.

(b) Second meeting of month preceded by a tournament or ordinary game of volleyball, etc.

(c) Third meeting of month preceded by music, singsong, stunts, etc.

(d) Fourth meeting of month preceded by reading of paper.

This should terminate at least ten minutes before the meeting, and soft music would help everyone "settle down" before start of the service. Nonmembers may be introduced in this way and more easily become acquainted with group.

10. Executives should plan and launch projects fairly regularly, but the weekly meeting must not suffer as a consequence. The weekly meeting is the most important, and is the thermometer of youth activities in the branch, and all the thought, energy, and initiative available should be put into these. However, when a project is launched, as many members as possible should participate. A supper, a play, Sunday evening service, musical evening, and many other events may be participated in with the branch.

11. All leaders and members should be constantly on the alert for new and interesting material to be used in League meetings—programs which might be adaptable to our church which you have seen used elsewhere, ideas of other Leagues, ideas picked up at conferences, etc.

Do not throw away program material which is printed in the Herald. These are printed for your help, and if it is not possible to use it at the time, save in a folder for future use.

All leaders should be learning through every channel available to them, ways of better leadership.

Note: Leagues with less than sixteen members may do one of the following:

(a) Have at least four members on each group.

(b) Small League with twelve members may have three groups of four, and cabinet may double for fourth meeting, or the president and young people's supervisor may take that evening.

(c) League with eight members may have two groups, meet only twice monthly, each group operating alternately; or meet weekly, with alternate weeks taken by the president and young people's supervisor.

(d) The fifth evening in a month is a "social" evening.

Although it may be impossible for all Leagues to do all that is suggested above, the group work, planning, and co-operation suggested are within the range of all. Let us remember this, although each League has its own problems which have to be met in their own way, they must be met and solved as satisfactorily as possible to the group.

Let us remember that now is the day of salvation for League groups as well as for ourselves.

Asks Prayers for Friend

Will the Saints please pray for a friend of mine, that she may be comforted in her hour of sorrow. She is in ill health, and recently lost her husband. Also pray that she may accept the gospel and spend the rest of her life in rejoicing and serving God.

MRS. GRACE HENDLEY,

Grateful for Prayers

Elder John Petterson of Chicago, Illinois, is grateful for the prayers of the Saints and the many letters he has received. His health is much improved, but he asks to be remembered in future prayers that he may fully recover.

Marks of Apostasy

The Case for Meat Eating, Based on Scripture

By Blanche Bayless

Editorial Note: In a recent issue we presented the vegetarian viewpoint, and we think it fair to present the other side of the question. This article was not written as an answer to the other in any sense. It was contributed by the writer with no knowledge that other material was being submitted. To avoid any possibility of misunderstanding, it should be understood that this article does not represent an official viewpoint of the church, but rests upon the author's responsibility.—L. J. L.

APOSTASY means the abandonment of principles or the desertion of one's faith. In Christ's church, the teaching must not be contradictory, for God is unchangeable. "He that is sent of God speaketh the word of God," said Jesus, and "rightly dividing the word of truth" (II Timothy 2: 15). Paul, in Galatians 1: 8, 9, says, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed," and in Romans 16: 17, "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." Verse 18 states, "For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple."

Forbidding the use of meat for food was one of the things Paul foresaw as a mark of apostasy. Many church members consider total abstinence from the eating of meat as a proof of virtue. They seem to think if it is pleasing to God to abstain from meat in hot weather, it is more pleasing to abstain the year around.

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared as with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained."—I Timothy 4: 1-6.

To be a good minister, one must preach the things Paul revealed by the spirit of revelation. It is sad but true that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith. It makes no difference who they are, nor where they live, if they give heed to doctrines of devils, they depart from the faith.

People should be careful, for if they give ear to seducing spirits on one truth, they are apt to be led completely astray from all truth.

The teachings of prophets in all ages must be in harmony. In Genesis 18 we read that Abraham entertained three angels, and in verses 5-7, "Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead, and make cakes upon the hearth. And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf, tender and good, and gave it unto a young man, and he hastened to dress it. And he took butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set them before them under the tree; and they did eat."

Verse 1 of Chapter 18 leads us to believe it was warm weather because it states, "And he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day." Also in verse 7, "and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat." It would not be reasonable to stand under a tree to eat except in warm climates.

No doubt on these plains of Mamre there was a shortage of vegetables, and in those days of limited transportation facilities, no shipments could come in. Thus there was a famine of herbs in the land which reminds us of Section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants: "and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine."

The early history of this church tells us that a number of Shakers were baptized, but continued to practice their former doctrine, urging that Christian people should abstain from the use of meat. God had to deal with these people, hence the advice in Section 49: 3 is not only in harmony with the Bible (I Timothy 4: 1-6), but was timely and necessary in 1831. "And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for, behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin; and woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need."

Another revelation is given in Section 59: 4 on how to live and what to eat: "the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul." In paragraph 5, God says, "wherefore trouble me no more concerning this matter."

We have game laws to protect the beasts of the field and fowls of the air from hunters who delight in killing.

Read carefully the statement of Jesus in Mark 7: 15, 16, "Therefore is nothing from without, that entering into a man, can defile him, which is food, but the things which come out of him; those are they that defile the man, that proceedeth forth out of the heart. If any have ears to hear, let him hear." Meat is food, and food does not defile the man.

Referring again to the Word of Wisdom, in some parts of the world it is cold enough to eat meat the year around. It is cold enough to eat it in the winter season almost anywhere. In many localities, it is cold enough in late spring and early fall.

It would be well for us to remember the millenium is not the celestial glory. In Isaiah 65: 25, reference is made to the 1,000 years reign, and we do not know what we shall eat in celestial glory. God gave the Word of Wisdom for a time, and it is a revelation, not a commandment, showing the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days. "Temporal" has to do with time, not eternity; it pertains to the present.

Meat is food, created by God, not to be wasted, but used sparingly and with judgment, and it defiles not the man. To abstain from using meat is a mark of apostasy, or doctrine of devils. "Sparingly" means in small amounts or sparingly, frugally, carefully, economically, and temperately.

The following facts explain themselves: If meat were not eaten by anyone, there would be a tremendous loss of food for human consumption. When a horse becomes old, he is usually slaughtered and the carcass buried or burned. Can you accurately estimate and analyze the economic problems and difficulties which would arise if such a procedure

Anachronisms, Et Cetera

Ever since the martyrdom at Carthage in 1844, there have been occasional reports concerning the men who made up the mob, though at the time of the trial were carried out for the disposal of all farm animals? There would be an enormously increased cost of what might be termed "by-products" of meat-raising. Milk would be much higher in price, because the dairyman derives considerable income from the sale of calves and unprofitable cows for meat. The sheep raiser adds materially to his income from the sale of wool and the sale of his animals for mutton. The price of eggs would be even higher if part of the flock could not be sold for food.

We must have cattle for milk and sheep for wool and, so far, no mechanical means has been devised for producing eggs without poultry.

The use of by-products of the meat industry in medicine is quite important. Diabetics are dependent upon insulin, which is taken from the pancreas of slaughtered animals. Persons with anemia must eat liver to maintain their health. Abnormal thyroid conditions can be treated only by using certain animal extracts and substances. The cost of producing these health aids synthetically would make the treatment too expensive for many sufferers to afford.

Some people argue that they do not eat meat because of the suffering of animals when killed. When Jesus fed the multitude with the loaves and fishes, he knew they were flesh and had been slaughtered by someone. In Luke 24: 40-42, we read that Jesus asked the disciples, "Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and a honey comb. And he took it and did eat before them." Then we read that, after his resurrection (see John 21: 9-13), Jesus broiled fish for the disciples. He may have taken them with his very own hands.

We are told also in Proverbs, "It is not good to eat much honey." Some people serve it the year around, and can fruits in honey instead of using sugar. Do they use too much? What is sparingly and much? I shall be my own judge, and with thanksgiving eat what God has so graciously provided for my use.

This is not an argument for excessive consumption of meat, but meat was created by God, and meat is food. Paul says in Romans 16: 17, "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Come, let us reason together. God is the same, yesterday, today, and forever.

of the murderers there appeared to be a great dearth of evidence; we have always understood there was a gross miscarriage of justice.

Quite a number of years ago one of our elders brought to General Conference and presented to the late president a Colt's revolver which someone had produced and which it was alleged was the very pistol with which Prophet Joseph was killed. It was an interesting and thrilling moment when the weapon was presented during a session of the Conference. Alas for its historicity however, the son of one of our members being conversant with firearms, raised the question, and when an inquiry was forwarded to the Colt Company, with number on the pistol, etc., information came back that the model was made some years after 1844.

We now have another item which we think may be authentic. Sister Paul E. Mader, Mobile, Alabama, was in our offices recently and gave us a newspaper clipping, taken from a Mobile paper about 1928 or 1929, the exact date not known, which is as follows:

AGED MURDER IS BROUGHT TO LIFE
SHELBY, N. C., Feb. 18.—Purported deathbed confession of one of the alleged slayers of Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon church and former presidential candidate in 1844, was revealed to International News Service here today by Dr. H. K. Boyer, pastor of the First Methodist church here.

The minister said that the deathbed confession was made by Corporal Benton, 85, formerly of Illinois, in 1898, at Mount Airy, N. C. Reverend Boyer was pastor of the Central Methodist church at Mount Airy at the time.

The minister said that he had never divulged the deathbed confession until today. "If Benton gave me the names of the other three men who took part in the murder, I do not remember them now," the preacher declared.

The four men, according to the minister, broke into the Carthage, Ill., jail and as the Mormon leader leaped out of a window, riddled his body with bullets.

Corporal Benton was not named as one of the murderers, according to our church history, but he may have been implicated, as the mob consisted of some scores of persons.

An interesting sidelight of this trial was that Oliver H. Browning, Quincy, who had been attorney for Joseph Smith, and to whom Joseph appealed by letter from Carthage jail on the day of his death, appeared at the hearing as one of the several defense council who were quite successful in securing an acquittal. Browning later became prominent politically and was a member of President Grant's cabinet.

Cure-Alls

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

RECENTLY I found a small card in my mailbox, and I curiously read these words:

Reader Adviser—You will find me superior to any other reader you have ever consulted. I do not only tell your troubles to you, but I will help you out of them. I give names, dates, and will tell you actual facts. In fact, I will tell you many things you never dreamed of. It is wise to consult a reader who can give sound and important advice on all affairs of life. Consult this great reader and have your mind put at ease. Whatever may be your hope, fear, or ambition, I can help you. I will lift you out of sorrow and trouble and start you on the path of happiness and prosperity. All readings are private and strictly confidential.

Well, I hope so. Any person who can see all and know all about me that way, certainly better be quiet about it. Well, this sounds good. I have problems; those problems need a solution; I'm earnestly seeking that solution, so I turn the card over and read this:

Without asking any questions, I will tell you just what you want to know about friends, enemies, or rivals. I give never-failing advice upon all matters of life, such as health, courtship, love, marriage, divorce, and business transactions of all kinds. I never fail to reunite the separated, cause speedy and happy marriages. There is no heart so sad or home so dreary that I cannot bring sunshine to. I can remove evil influences and bad luck of all kinds. I will tell you of any or all changes you should or should not make. Good or bad, I will tell you the truth.

That sounds better yet. All of my problems fit into some such a category as one of these. Where is the wizard, where is this person who can control the powers of good and evil? The address was given in a trailer in a very poor and somewhat trashy section of town.

THERE ARE MANY such individuals and organizations and movements in the world today. Each has the solution to all the problems of the world, if their followers just faithfully obey and believe blindly in the power. There have always been panaceas offered for every ill of the world. But I think in most cases that it is like searching for an antidote to a poison, when you didn't need to take the poison in the first place.

The drugstores are full of patent medicines whose claims are spectacular. "One bottle of this marvelous and potent potion, and you'll never have an ache or pain again." Yet, people come back again and again for another bottle, sold not to the medicine and its powers, but to the advertising on the outside of the bottle. We have an antiseptic on our medicine shelves that is quite excellent, and I often recommend it for use for sore muscles, diluted as a throat wash, and a few drops in the bath water does wonders to relax tired bodies. It is several times stronger than carbolic acid and yet does not harm the interior or exterior of the body when used as full strength. I am certain that it has done wonderful things for me, and I fully recommend it. But it's after I get the cold that I have to use the nose-drops, and it's after I've worn a blister on my heel that I want to use an antiseptic. This excellent concoction can never take the place of good health.

DOCTORS AND the general public have been quite astounded recently by the rapid advances in the discovery of the power of certain drugs to cure illnesses formerly thought to be incurable. Radium treatments now eliminate a large percentage of the early cases of malignant cancers and other growths of similar nature. The recently publicized fungus medicine, penicillin, has done wonders to retard infection and cause the most vicious wounds to heal without further growth of bacteria. The many forms of sulfa drugs have become household bywords of efficient and rapid healing. Each of these is a cure for a different thing, and a certain help in the time of illness and disease. Yet, even these wonderful drugs can never take the place of good health.

AFTER the First World War and its period of reconstruction, a group of well-meaning men gathered together to plan a world organization by which the world might be so governed that there would never be war again. Wilson, Clemenceau, and those others really wanted peace, but they were men, and they used men's means to try to create a world order out of chaos. Today in Geneva a huge building stands desolate, a silent monument to one more failure to reform man by a panacea instead of a cure. Nor am I persuaded that all of the conferences which go on today will come to any better end, for the same forces are under consideration again. Once more the leaders feel that force and power of great nations will be the only thing to keep the world from war. The atom bomb might have caused a great struggle to cease for a time, but the world knows only too well that the power of an atomic bomb cannot change man's desire to wage war and to rule others.

Yes, it would be pretty fine if there would come along some person who could "remove evil" from both individual lives and national characters.

There are many approaches to major problems and their solutions. One rather popular organization of today believes that evil does not exist except in the mind of an individual. In this "pink-colored-glasses" approach, they ignore the fact that every day men die, every minute there is someone in this world who is starving from actual lack of food, and that constantly there are people who suffer from all manner of forms of evil. Such an attitude may do much to relieve the anxiety and worry of one person, for I firmly believe that many personal problems are a matter of upset mind, but that attitude of ignoring reality will never cure a nation's ills.

Another rather popular approach to the world's ills is that of the large organization which says, "The world is a vile spot, and man must constantly struggle to lift himself above the morass." I've heard sermons and read articles about this attitude that made this good earth seem a barren wilderness. When one says that all is bad, he has as wrong an attitude as when he says that evil does not exist.

THE ONLY SANE approach to the whole problem of whether civilization is to continue in peace or war is to come to a realization that a great problem exists, but that man has within his own powers (with help of a greater power, God) the cure for the great problem.

A recent book had the startling title, One World or None, and it created quite a stir and following. Yet that's exactly what our church has been saying for years. The real question is not what kind of a world we desire, for we do not have the power to erase the past and begin over again. The real fact lies in the truth that we must accomplish our future in the world we have.

In America we have always had an almost childlike faith in education, and the advancements we have made in a short span of time have been impressive. During the war, men and women imbued with new hopes and new ideas went to every part of the world. They have found that we must deal more intimately with other nations, cultures, and political systems. We must not only understand ourselves, but we must also understand our widely dispersed neighbors with different institutions and ways of life. These better understandings of human nature and human relation, however, will not come from the market places, the factories, the universities, the political parties, the countless isms or sects.

Nor will it come from any one person or any one group. No person or group knows enough about humanity to solve this problem completely.

Harsh? Yes, but true. Nor am I excluding the church from this list. The sooner we see this, the sooner we, as a church, will begin to grow. It is quite true that we hold in our hands the key, but so far only that. Even our church in its present condition, could not solve the world's problem. Yet we have within our power and reach the individual perfection which would lead to final and perfect peace.

SOME WRITER has said that "To build a sound family of nations, we must first build a nation of sound families." To paraphrase, "To build a Christian world, we must build a world of Christians."

Now all these high-sounding phrases and trite statements mean only one thing. Every individual has within his own power the chance so to build his life, along with others of his kind, that the perfect peace could be established. There is no such thing as a cure-all, and my friend who dispenses wise words (at least that is what the advertisement says) from her trailer home, or a million people like her, could do little to establish the perfect world. There is only one way, God's way, as shown by his Son, Jesus Christ, to become perfect and thus live in a perfect world. And when all boiled down to the lowest terms, every deed, every act, every sermon attended, every church school class, every testimony given, is for only one thing: The perfection of the individual, so that perfect individuals may become a perfect whole. "Thy kingdom come on earth, as it is in heaven," but not as a cure-all.

The Shiny Side Out

The small boy had a new belted overcoat, the belt of which was stiffened with a facing of patent leather. When the youngster appeared ready for school, the patent leather was in evidence.

"Why, son, is your belt on right?" asked the father doubtfully. "I think it is intended to go the other way, isn't it?"

"Oh, I like it with the shiny side out!" replied the boy, making his departure promptly to escape further criticism.

"The idea!" exclaimed the mother, entering just in time to catch the sentence and witness the departure. She made a movement toward the door, but her husband detained her.

"Don't," he laughed. "His principle is all right, whatever may be said of the effect on his coat. Turning the shiny side out is the way to put things. It is what the old world needs; long may the boy stick to it."—Kate W. Hamilton.

"A Service Institution"

Young People's Camp Program, 1946

A summary of activities and achievements of the youth camping projects, by the Department of Religious Education

This past season 570 boys and girls participated in the activities of the eight camps held under general church supervision. Of this number of campers, 264 (or almost one half) attended the church owned camp at Gardner Lake, Excelsior Springs, Missouri; and the other 306 campers attended camps in various locations. The chart below summarizes camping activities this past summer:

Camp Location	Name	Date	Campers	Staff	Total
Youth Camps:
Pawnee, Oklahoma	"Yokoma"	June 16-22	32	10	42
Nauvoo, Illinois	"Nauvoo"	June 30-July 7	61	13	74
Nauvoo, Illinois	"Nauvoo"	July 7-14	38	11	49
Excelsior Springs, Mo.	"Yopeca"	July 7-14	68	16	84
Brewton, Alabama	"Liahona"	August 17-25	70	13	83
Columbus, Nebraska		August 30-Sept. 2	105	12	117
Girls' Camps:
Excelsior Springs, Mo.	"Loleachi"	June 18-19	106	31	137
Excelsior Springs, Mo.	"Oececa"	June 20-30	90	21	111
Totals			570	127	697

In addition, various other week-end or similar camps were held in individual branches, and several youth conventions or institutes were held. These, while not being classified as camps, utilized some of the program features of regular camp life.

Pawnee, Oklahoma.

Pawnee, Oklahoma, held its first camp this year. A name was chosen, "Camp Yokoma" (Youth Camp of Oklahoma). F. M. McDowell acted as director. Many rich experiences were enjoyed in the sharing of fellowship and other camp activities. The boys' work project of the camp was the erection of a fifteen-foot rustic signal tower.

All campers reported a fine experience, and look forward to next year's camp.

Nauvoo, Illinois.

To accommodate those desiring to attend, two camps were held at Nauvoo this year, both directed by Roy Cheville. Features included visits to the Iowa State Penitentiary, to a Catholic church, a pilgrimage to Carthage, a fellowship, and a Communion service. Of the latter, we quote from the camp log: "Campers and staff met on the bank of the river around a campfire and altar to participate in the service of the Lord's Supper. Hymns, the firelight, words of love and fellowship, the moonlight on the river, friends, memories of a week spent happily together bound each camp to those around him and to his God." One of the high points of the camp was the ordination of one of the campers to the office of priest.

Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

Many of the Yopeca campers went home reporting this was the "best camp ever." "A Journey with the Church" was the theme of the morning classes, and campers had their choice of participating in drama, music, art, and handcraft, or visual aids portraying this story. F. M. McDowell acted as camp director.

As a work project, the boys and the men of the staff labored hard and diligently to double the length of the beach and the size of the swimming area. Soil was removed from the lake shore, and many loads of gravel and sand were added to the beach. The bottom of the lake in the new area was smoothed, rocks removed, and sand added to make a smooth bottom.

Brewton, Alabama.

The youth camp at Brewton completed its second season. This year the name, "Liahona Youth Camp," was chosen. Lucille Garrett acted as camp director. The usual camping activities were enjoyed. One of the daily classes covered topics of particular interest and need to young people. The international theme was carried out during the week, climaxed by an "International Banquet."

Columbus, Nebraska.

The camp site at Columbus could be obtained only for the Labor Day week end, so the camping period included from the afternoon of Friday, August 30, to the afternoon of Monday, September 2. However, this camp had the largest enrollment of any of the youth camps—105. Brother R. E. Davey directed the camp, assisted by Brethren V. D. Ruch, Roy Cheville, and others. An interesting and worth-while camping experience was enjoyed again this second season, and plans are being made for a week's camp next year.

Blue Bird Girls' Camp, Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

For the first time, the Blue Bird girls had an overnight camp and separate from the Oriole girls. In previous years, the Blue Bird girls were guests of the Oriole girls for an afternoon and evening. One hundred and six girls attended the two days, making this the largest church camp. A full schedule of activities was enjoyed, including swimming, archery, nature, handcraft, games, drama, songs, worship, and campfire.

Oriole Girls' Camp, Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

The Oriole girls completed their eighth season of camping. This year, the camping period was increased to ten days. Ninety girls, under the supervision of Clara Thomas, director, participated in nature study, handcraft, swimming, boating, archery, drama, and other activities. This year's theme was "Nonstop flight toward Christlike lives." One period each morning was devoted to a religion class, "Keeping on the Beam." One of the high points of the camp was the candlelighting fellowship service during which the candles (representing beacon lights to guide others) were set afloat on the lake. Other features included the campfire services each evening, a tree naming ceremony in which ten trees were permanently marked with copper identification plates, and the annual Oececa Patteran service.

I Want to Thank God Before Men

By Wilbur R. Smith

For once in my life I would like to thank God in testimony before men. I thank him privately twice daily at regular times and as often during each day as I feel his hand on me, but this, I believe, is the first time I have even mentioned that to anyone but my wife.

I have one blessing from him, however, so great that I cannot refrain from telling others about it. It was once a secret but others have discovered it and mentioned it. Some have expressed the desire to obtain the same blessing. If I state in my own simple words what this great blessing is and how I came by it, perhaps others will be helped to obtain it.

July 2, 1946, was our "Silver Wedding Anniversary"—my wife and I had been married twenty-five years. Of more importance to both of us, however, it was the twenty-fifth anniversary of a prayer.

To be as brief as I can, we took a trip after we were married. Maggie wanted to visit some of the Civil War battlefields where her father fought, and I wanted to see Washington, D. C., again, Mount Vernon, etc.

In Washington, we took the usual sight-seeing tours to Alexandria, Mount Vernon, Arlington, etc., and then I said there was one more place I wanted to visit—the Temple of the 33rd Southern Jurisdiction Scottish Rite Masonry. We hailed a taxi.

The Scottish Rite building is beautiful and impressive, inside and out. We found no one in the building but some secretary or attendant. We identified ourselves to him and he told us to go through the building at our leisure and stop at his office before leaving. Our own foot-steps were the only sounds as we walked around. The interior with symbolism worked into furniture and furnishings would have its effect on anyone, especially one familiar with that symbolism.

As we looked into the main auditorium or council room, I said to Maggie, "We have been through all of the preliminaries now. We got a license and had a minister marry us in due form, but our married life begins right here and now. You can do what you like, but I am going to have a little talk with God on my knees before that altar."

"I am with you in everything from now on," she answered, and we both knelt before the altar.

I prayed—not aloud; I never did except with my bedroom door closed. If I prayed in prayer meeting, I imagine the small boys would giggle and their elders be shocked, but I remember what I prayed for. I have received all that I asked for, but there were two things that I asked for that I want to mention now. I said to Him, "If such a thing is possible, please let Maggie and me live together without a cross word, and let us and help us have a home where the Spirit of the resurrected Christ will feel like coming in and being with us."

The answer: Twenty-five years without a cross, harsh, unkind word passing between us. We have only one point of contention, we both claim to have the sweetest sweetheart in the world (she is still wrong).

Friends who come into our home think at first that it is a "Front" and that we fight in private. We do not.

The reason for it is that both of my requests were granted. They are reciprocal and interdependent. Christ in our home makes that condition possible. That condition invites Christ.

The place where I prayed was inspiring and prompted me to do it at that particular time but had no weight with God in answering my prayer.

Some need to think of pearly gates, jasper walls, golden pavements, and harps, but I know heaven can be right now, and eternity means to just move across the creek with the "Heaven" or "Zion" which you have created within you—with him.

If I did not want to thank God from the housetop I would be a base ingrate or what is vulgarly called a "heel."

Of course, a couple maintaining that kind of home have to do their part, but if the spirit of the Carpenter is with them he will prompt them day by day. His first lesson is unselfishness. Any couple starting out with the intention of "meeting each other half way" will fail. That 50-50 line becomes the battle line. There can be no "Give and Take." They must both try to do all the giving.

We humbly thank God.

Services in Battle Creek?

A young member in the service, T/5 Thelma S. Perry A-713561, 109 WAC Hospital Co., Percy Jones General Hospital, Battle Creek, Michigan, writes that she sought the address given in the church directory to attend services, but found a "For Sale" sign at the address. If meetings are being held anywhere in the city or vicinity, will our people please write to Miss Perry and invite her? Also please write to us and send the new address so that we can correct the directory.—EDITORS.

Inspired Sermons

I was made very happy as I read, and reread several times, Brother J. D. Anderson's article on creative preaching in the August 3 Herald. Too many times our people go to church and are given a stone when they have asked for bread. I have come away so many times with a gnawing hunger in my soul. Not long ago a friend of mine said she knew her nonmember husband had been bored many times as he sat in our services because those who attempted to deliver the sermon were merely "pulpit-fillers."

This would not be so if our ministers would observe Section 42, paragraph 5, of the Doctrine and Covenants, "and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach." Has pride made men afraid to state the above to the congregation and then be seated? I heard an Apostle say it once, and I honored him for it. It seemed to be given to the presiding officer as to whom he should call upon to replace the Apostle as speaker. The man selected was blessed, and his strength was made equal to his task.

I sincerely believe that if we adhere to the instructions given in the Doctrine and Covenants, we will have more of God's Spirit in our services. Then we won't need to go out and beg people to come to our meetings. Our churches will be filled, and so will the souls of those who attend. MRS. WARREN HILL, Stewartsville, Missouri

J. W. McKnights Wed Fifty-Five Years

Elder J. W. McKnight, pastor of the Galien, Michigan, branch, and Mrs. McKnight, were hosts to eighty guests at an open house held September 7 in observance of their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary. Friends from surrounding towns, Indiana, and Chicago were present for the celebration.

The McKnight home was decorated with baskets of gladioli, and at 7 o'clock in the evening, Elder and Mrs. McKnight reaffirmed their marriage vows in a ceremony that high lighted the celebration. Elder Foster Myers of Mishawaka performed the wedding, with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Swain of Buchanan serving as attendants. "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," and "Bicycle Built for Two" were sung preceding the ceremony. At the close of the evening, an anniversary cake, presented by the Zion's League, and ice cream were served to the guests. The McKnights were given a purse of money and several other gifts.

Pastor, Lyman Jones

The theme for August, "Think on These Things," was carried out in the Communion service; Pastor Lyman Jones presided, with D. M. Wiesen giving the sacramental address. Other speakers for the month were H. T. McCaig and A. O. Skinner. Special music for the services was provided by Donald Mee, Sally Anderson, and Margaret Mason. A musical reading was given by Ruby L. Henson. Savitamae, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nat Muzumdar, was blessed on August 11 by Lyman Jones and D. M. Wiesen. Prayer and testimony meetings are held each Wednesday evening at the church. Apostle Paul M. Hanson recently worshiped with the Saints at one of the midweek services. The study class met, during August, at the homes of Hans Behnke and Velva Castins. The Ssenippah Guild sponsored a picnic on August 3 at Eugene Field Park, and a beach party on August 27 on the shore of Lake Michigan. Harry M. Passman, recently released from military service, will attend the University of Illinois this fall.

Wellsburg, West Virginia

The West Virginia district conference was held in Wellsburg on September 14 and 15. A variety program, presented on Saturday evening by the young people, featured the dramatization of the hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." Sunday's activities included an 8 o'clock priesthood meeting, followed by a social service in charge of R. E. Rodgers, S. A. Martin, and S. M. Zonker; preaching at 11, with special music by the Wellsburg choir; lunch, served by the women's department, at noon; and a 2 o'clock business session. The following officers were elected: R. E. Rodgers, district president; S. A. Martin and S. M. Zonker, counselors; Ottis Forrester, church school director; Blanche Martin, women's leader; John Treiber, young people's leader; Lenora Nixon, chorister; May Griffin, secretary-treasurer, nonresident supervisor and historian; and Leona Hanes, correspondent. The nonresident supervisor is in charge of sending tracts and sermonettes to the isolated Saints. The names of Elmer Freeze and Eugene Chadwell were approved for ordination to the office of teacher; Roy Hanes was approved for ordination to the office of deacon. It was voted that a centrally-located building, in which future conferences could be held, should be obtained, so Saints in either part of the district might attend. Pastor S. M. Zonker was the speaker at 7:30.

Regular council meetings are held for all officers. As a result of this splendid co-operation between leaders, the services have been more interesting and beautiful. Church school attendance is on the increase.

Louis Zonker was recently ordained as an elder by Seventy L. G. Holloway. New members are Beverly and Carl Chadwell, Betty Yoder, Jerry Hanes, and Edward Schupbach. Babies blessed were Gordon Yost and Larry Chadwell.

A branch-sponsored farewell party was given for Betty Yoder, June Zonker, Clarence Lannum, and Roy Hanes, who will attend Graceland this fall. Each honoree was presented a gift at the end of the evening.

St. Louis, Missouri

Pastor, Frank McDonald

Many from the local congregation attended the Brush Creek reunion held in August. On Friday, September 5, the annual business meeting was held for the election of officers to serve the coming year. Gloria Jeane, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Overhauser; Sharon Ruth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Delany; and Donna Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Hatch, were blessed recently. Members of the women's department are studying F. Henry Edward's God Our Help; they will hold the first meeting of their new year in October. Attendance at prayer service has reached 115.

Gary Indiana

Pastor, D. H. Smith

The theme for the month of July was "Peace." Hattie Bell, district director of religious education, and Elder R. W. Smith of the district presidency were guest speakers on July 14. Alma Darter was appointed director of religious education for the local congregation on July 21; David Evans, who formerly held the office, resigned. Elder E. L. Hamilton of Hammond, Indiana, gave the evening sermon. Pastor D. H. Smith and Lamont Mair of Hammond were the speakers on the following Sunday. It was decided at the July women's meeting that two sessions should be held each month instead of one. A new method for raising church funds was approved also.

The theme for August was "The Kingdom of God on Earth." District President J. E. Baldwin was the evening speaker on Sunday, August 4. Elder Terrell Cochran of Chicago spoke the following week. Other speakers for the month were Elder A. H. Tomlinson and Brother Morris of Chicago. Special music was provided by Dorothy Smith, Mary Jo Andrews, Pauline Sanders, Vida Rhodes, and Ruby Angus.

Enfield, England

Pastor, D. A. Oakman

Under the leadership of Pastor D. A. Oakman and his counselor, Elder F. W. Judd, an early-morning priesthood prayer service is held the first Sunday of each month. Mission President F. O. Davies gave the Easter address this year; a Communion service was held in the afternoon, with a separate service for the children. In the evening, a play, Simon, the Cross-Bearer, and a monologue, Mary, the Mother of Jesus, were presented under the direction of Sister V. Worth, director of religious education. An original song by John Judd, Jr., and Sister M. Maloney, was sung by a quartet.

Dover Judd, musical director, arranged a service of sacred music for Sunday evening, May 26. The Forum, now held on Sunday afternoons at 5 o'clock, continues to provide an opportunity for public expression; members of the congregation, as well as the priesthood, are given a chance to participate.

Merle North and Alice Folkes of Enfield will attend Graceland College this fall.

An unexpected and welcome visitor during July was Elder Lawrence Brockway of Ann Arbor, Michigan, who flew from Canada in the short space of twelve hours. In addition to his morning address on July 14, he spoke on the proceedings of General Conference in the evening.

Geoffrey and Brian Judd, sons of Dover Judd, were baptized in July by their father. E. Elmes and Albert Worth have returned from service, and are again joining in the branch activities.

Members of the Zion's League continue to hold interesting and varied programs on Thursday evenings. They assisted in making ready the church building for the mission reunion held recently.

The women's department made a new venture in May by holding a class in the evening, so that those who were unable to come to the usual afternoon meeting might attend. The devotional was presented by Sister Violet Worth, after which refreshments were served. Two plays, given by the senior Oriole girls, and a brief piano recital by Nellie Wicks completed the evening's entertainment.

Brush Creek Reunion

The Brush Creek reunion, held August 9 to 18, had as its theme, "Share Christ's Gospel and Keep the Law." There were approximately four hundred campers in attendance.

The daily program included a 6:45 devotional led by John Darling; breakfast at 7; classwork from 8:45 to 9:30; prayer service from 9:45 to 10:45; a general class, taught by Apostle Paul Hanson, from 11 to 12; "shoes-off" and recreation in the afternoon; song service and preaching in the evening. Blanche Green was in charge of the children's work, with Mrs. Joseph Baldwin, Mrs. Irene Hamilton, Glenna Jackson, and Mrs. John Darling assisting. Pauline Arnson conducted the class for women, which was the largest of all. John Darling and Wayne Updike were the young people's leaders. The men's class, in which everyday problems of pastors and their congregations were discussed, was taught by Joseph Baldwin. Apostle Hanson was the 11 o'clock speaker both Sundays. Wayne Updike gave the evening sermons through the week.

The children presented a play on Friday night, demonstrating the value of the training they had received at reunion.

A substantial reunion fund has been established, and will be used in the building of a dining hall and dormitories for boys and girls.

From A Report on Liahona Youth Camp

It was the last campfire service of the week. At the close of fellowship, each camper was given a lighted candle mounted on a paper plate, which he took to the water's edge and set afloat on the stream. As these candles drifted silently along, the watchers noticed that one flickered dimly, fell over, and went out. A candle burning brightly beside it floated closer and caught on the edge of the plate, carrying it swiftly downstream. The onlookers walked away, realizing, perhaps more than ever before, how important it is for those who are able to help the fallen along the way that leads to God.

Myrtle Point, Oregon

Pastor, J. S. Giberson

The following officers were elected on September 8: J. S. Giberson, pastor; Myrtle McCracken, church school director; Anna Craven, secretary and director of music; Charles McCracken, treasurer; Grace Rylander, auditor; Ruby Giberson, publicity agent and solicitor; Florence Schmidt, women's leader; and O. B. Finch, adult teacher. Elder Giberson was selected by the ministerial association of Coos County to represent the church on the KOOS broadcast every three months.

Four church school picnics were held during the summer; attendance in the children's division is increasing. The women of the branch sponsored a pie social on September 5 at the Legion Hall to raise money for the building fund.

All servicemen from Myrtle Point congregation have returned.

Owendale, Michigan

Pastor, Silas Parker

District President John Booth gave a resumé of General Conference activities on May 7; he also showed moving pictures which he took at the conference. Beatrice Sternberg and Ardis Gemmill were in charge of the Children's Day exercises. Special services were held June 16. The day began with a prayer meeting at 9:30, after which Carl Muir of Port Huron gave the morning address. Following the basket lunch at noon, Elders John Booth and John Rogers conducted a presentation service, awarding certificates of merit to all who had completed the study course in leadership. Saints from Bay Port, Caseville, and Sandusky were present. Peter Severn was baptized on August 8. Two ice-cream socials were sponsored by members of the choir during the summer to raise money for new chairs for the choir loft. Guest speakers have been Myron Carr of Jeddo, Clarence Severn of Detroit, Archie Harder of Bay Port, Audrey Murray of Valley Center, Frank Sheufelt of Detroit, and Adam Hunter of Saginaw.

Victoria, British Columbia

Apostles D. T. Williams and C. R. Hield visited in Victoria recently. Eleven members of the local congregation attended the Silver Lake reunion. A farewell party was given for the Philip and Jamieson families before they moved to Vancouver. Viola Piedt and Mary Jewett have united with the church. Visiting ministers have been District President Clark, and Priests Kirkpatrick, Chester Taylor, Bert Embleton, and Murry Stoughtenburg. Evangelist Curtis will hold a week's series of meeting from September 16 to 21.

—E. E. A. Irwin, reporter.

Owen Sound, Ontario

Mabel Turner and Daisie Houghton were baptized by Evangelist Benson Belrose on June 9. Members of the Zion's League held a lawn social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Turner on July 31. The annual church school picnic on August 15 was shared with the Saints of Port Elgin and Wiarton. The women sponsored a bazaar and garden party at the Benson Belrose home on August 16. The September social activity for the League was a corn roast.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Pastor, Francis Schrunck

The annual business meeting was held Wednesday, September 11. Pastor Francis Schrunck and his associates, C. D. Williams and E. P. Oehring, were elected to serve for another year. H. E. Niehaus and Lawrence Rife were approved for ordination to the office of elder, Wayne Smith to the office of priest, Devere Collins and John Weller to the office of deacon. Church attendance has been augmented by the young Latter Day Saints attending Nebraska University. Recent guest speakers have been Apostle Arthur Oakman, Seventy Roscoe Davey, and Elders Charles Fry and Albert Loving. A vacation Bible school was held in August under the direction of Mrs. Edith Niehaus; approximately forty children attended. Although Lincoln congregation needs a new church home, necessary repair work will be done to the present building to keep it looking attractive. Such fixtures as can be moved to another church are being installed. An improvement and building fund committee has been appointed to handle these matters.

Madison, Wisconsin

The young people held an early morning prayer service at Tenney Park on Sunday, August 25; the theme of the meeting was "Living for Jesus." In the evening, they met at the Miller farm for a corn roast, followed by the regular Zion's League service. The Leaguers honored Donna Miller with a farewell party on September 2; Donna will attend Graceland College this year. Other social events included a bridal shower given for Darlene Lafferty on August 22, and a branch-sponsored surprise party for Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Shedd who are leaving soon for Lamoni, Iowa.

San Leandro, California

Pastor, William Hall

Recent guest speakers at the San Leandro mission have been Elders Dunagan and Russell Ralston of San Francisco, High Priest H. W. Savage and Jerry Runkle of Berkeley, District President Laurence MacDonald and Patriarch W. H. Dawson of Sacramento. The children have just completed a paper drive to raise money. Various members of the congregation are working evenings and pooling their earnings to add to the building fund. The women's department contributed by sponsoring a watermelon feast, at which a free-will offering was taken.

A reception was held recently at the MacDougall home when Mrs. Mark MacDougall arrived from Scotland to join her husband. They were married while Mark was serving with the Canadian forces in England. The gathering also served as a farewell party for Barbara MacDougall, who will attend Graceland this fall.

The women have resumed their weekly study classes, after spending the summer sewing for the bazaar. They are using Thelona Stevens' Bible Studies as their text.

Bayou La Batre, Alabama

Pastor, O. O. Tillman

Elder Henry Hough was the speaker on Sunday, June 9. Elder Franklin Steiner of Mobile was present on June 23 to officiate at the blessing of Hulda Ann, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Nelson, Jr.; he also gave a talk on "What We Should Teach Our Children."

The women sponsored a potluck supper on June 26, clearing approximately $75. Many of the local Saints attended the Gulf States reunion held in Brewton, July 12-21. Donald Tillman was baptized at reunion, and confirmed in the home branch.

Vivian Juanita, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Schmette, was blessed by Pastor O. O. Tillman on September 8. Officers elected at the annual business meeting are Irma Tillman, church school director; Alma Tillman, secretary; Robert Pendarvis, treasurer; and Audrey Tillman, women's leader.

A supper and bazaar will be held October 10 at the pastor's home to raise money for the building fund.

—Leona Tillman, reporter.

LaCrosse, Wisconsin

Pastor, Miles Lenox

The business meeting was held on September 13 at the church. Miles Lenox was appointed pastor by Seventy E. Y. Hunker; other officers were elected by the group. They are: Frank Fitzsimons, church school director; A. H. McCormac, treasurer; Idelle Fitzsimons, church school secretary; Zelphia Anderson, general secretary; Miles Lenox, adult teacher; Esther Ortleb, women's and young people's leader; Jean Golnik, director of music; and Isabel Scafe, reporter. The building committee is the same as last year. Church school is held every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, followed by a worship service at 11. The women's department meets every two weeks.

—Isabel Scafe, reporter.

Marlette, Michigan

The women held their annual business meeting in the church on Thursday, September 19. Officers elected for the coming year are Beatrice Volz, supervisor; Lottie Shelly and Ella Westover, assistant supervisors; Fern Crouch, secretary-treasurer; Esther Lambert, social visitor; Alta Webster, pianist; Evalyne and Ella Westover, social directors; Nina Burmeister and Mary Woods, ways and means committee; Esther Lambert, Rose Messacar, Alta Webster, and Mrs. Cargill, work committee. The young people held a meeting on September 18 to reorganize the Zion's League. Floyd Lambert was selected president, and Mary Ramsy leader, by the pastor. The group elected Lottie Volz, vice-president; and Patty Ramsy, secretary-treasurer. No League activities were held during the war years.

—Esther Lambert, reporter.

Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin

Martha Ann Rush, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Rush of Kansas City, Missouri, and William C. Robinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Randall Robinson of Lamoni, Iowa, were married August 11 at Central Church in Kansas City. Bishop Walter Johnson read the double-ring ceremony. The couple are at home in Mitchellville, Iowa, where Mr. Robinson is a member of the high school faculty.

Anderson-Burwell

Lois Jean Burwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Burwell of Louisville, Kentucky, became the bride of William E. Anderson, son of Mrs. Francis Smiley of Craig, Missouri, on September 1 at Floyd'sburg Duncan Memorial Chapel, the bride's father officiating. At present, the Andersons are making their home in Louisville.

Crownover-McDowell

Maxine McDowell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Floyd McDowell of Independence, Missouri, and Hulin Lee Crownover, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crownover of Richland, Washington, were married September 10 at the Stone Church in Independence. Apostle M. A. McConley performed the double-ring ceremony. Both Mr. and Mrs. Crownover attended Graceland College, and will be students at Missouri University this year.

One World . . . With Christ

By JOHN G. WIGHT

THE MAJOR CONCERN of every thinking individual today has to do with the safety of his situation from future world wars. He reads about contention in the talks and discussions held by the emissaries of the Big Four, or the Big Three, or the Big Five. Which Big One it is depends upon the paper he happens to be reading at the moment.

Of one thing we can be certain. Whichever paper he does read, he gets a diet of disconcerting news on the state of the union, on the state of affairs of the nations. The unrest produced by his reading about the lack of unity among the nations is intensified greatly by the reports about strikes, lack of sufficient housing, curtailed production, and many other items. He sees with his own eyes the empty meat counters, the scarcity of soap, the dearth of new cars. Yes, he sees with his own eyes something of the total situation.

Among these thinking people, there are those who find it easier to moan and groan about everything. They drop their heads in their hands and cry big tears of agony over the mess into which the "other fellow" has got us. They would have us believe that there is no hope, no solution—that we must take what comes. After all, it is only "fate" working. Listen to them, and we die!

The other thinking people sense something of what can be done to prevent such a catastrophe. They see a philosophy of life, a way of government presented by Him who gave his life, not for one small group, but for the world. They envision a world with lasting peace, a world operated according to the plan presented by this Savior of men.

Yes, they see a WORLD, not just one nation nor one small group of people, run that way. Too bad the world hasn't caught that vision yet. But it will someday, for "God so loved the world, that he gave his only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

For a moment, imagine yourself in God's place, looking down upon the earth—at all nations. Do your best to examine the philosophy and government of each nation upon which your imagining eye falls. Then sit back and ponder for a moment. Do you comprehend the fact that in every nation upon which you gazed the people were striving for the thing which, according to their knowledge and understanding, appeared to be the most soul-satisfying thing there is? Did you see them in their daily existence striving for the attribute or the material possession which appeared to them to satisfy the soul? Or did you see a world in which nations were at one with the other? If you saw the latter, your imagination ran away with you into the future.

Let's look at facts now. In every nation, regardless of philosophy, the one universal struggle is that for continuing existence. In France, in England, in Denmark, in Hawaii, in the Philippine Islands, in Australia, in every nation of the world, men work to obtain bread, to shelter themselves, to clothe themselves. The differences between the nations lie in the types of work, the styles of architecture, the modes of dress. And yet, in spite of existing differences, all nations are on the same planet. One earth, but not one world—yet!

Some months ago I was privileged to visit the Saints in Denmark. That visit opened my eyes to a most interesting and intriguing fact. In spite of the differences in language, in national philosophies, in modes of life, there permeated through that visit a spirit of "at oneness" with the other—a spirit of kinship in the family of God that overcame any and all differences. It is this spirit of kinship, this sense of "belonging to" the kingdom of God which is the basis upon which world unity must be builded.

In the science of arithmetic, it is necessary to find a common denominator before one can combine fractions by addition, and before one can separate them by subtraction. Whether it be addition or subtraction it is still the same common denominator for the same group of fractions. Just so in the science of building the kingdom of God. Before the various nations can be added together, before their "at oneness" can be increased, these nations must discover and use the Great Common Denominator, Jesus Christ. Interestingly, the use of the same common denominator subtracts from the total situation those ills, those contentions, those barriers which prevent the building of God's kingdom. Yes, in the science of kingdom-building, the addition of good and the subtraction of bad is possible only when the Great Common Denominator is used.

I can hear someone say, "Oh, yes, it sounds rosy, but how do we go about it?" There is but one answer. Without exception every oak tree which stands massive against the sky had the very tiny beginning of an acorn, and that little acorn, without exception, began as a tiny cell. Just so in building a world peace. No nation will ever have kingdom at-

Just Like a Woman

(Having answered all questions thus far submitted to the Trouble-Shooter, we deviate from the usual problematical feature to bring you a delightful bit of humor. If you like this type of article, let us know and we'll use it more often.—The Editors.)

PITY the poor civilian. He has no "ruptured duck" to open doors for him, no service record, no battle stars. When the veteran wants to buy something, he flashes his discharge papers and is given a priority—well, most of the time. Especially is this true of students.

When I went down to Columbia to enroll in Missouri University, the first question they asked me was, "Are you a veteran?"

Even as I shook my head, their eyes glassed over, and they mumbled something about not admitting many more civilians. It soon developed that if I could find a place to live, I could enroll in the school. That sounded reasonable, I thought, so I presented myself before the director of housing.

"Are you a veteran?" she asked in her best receptionist voice.

"No, I'm not, but—"

"Sorry," she said briskly, "I have no rooms listed for civilian girls. I'm afraid you'll have to find one alone."

How do you like that! Veterans came to M. U. and couldn't find rooms, so the university postponed school for two weeks while they built them some, and right on the campus, too. How's that for drag?

Oh, well, the Chamber of Commerce could help me. "We have an organization in town," said the man behind the desk, "to aid veterans in finding rooms, but since you are a civilian—"

After trying the police station, fire station, Junior Chamber of Commerce, and the Baptist student center, I resorted to addresses given me by passers-by on the street.

"Are you a veteran?" asked the lady in the three-story brownstone house.

"Well," I replied, "I did try on a Wave's jacket once." Even coming that close to having served my country didn't impress her.

On my second day of room-hunting, I resorted to the method made famous by the Fuller Brush man—the house to house canvas, up one street and down another.

"Are you a veteran?" asked the lady of the house.

"No, I'm just nineteen," I answered lamely, trying to look as pathetic as possible. All it got me was an invitation to sit down and rest my feet.

Late that afternoon, when I had lost all hope of a higher education and had about decided to get married instead, a cab driver gave me the address of a house out on the edge of town. With gallons of gas burned behind me, I found the place. From the front it looked like the movie set for a murder mystery. The rambling house (I later found that it was 125 years old) was set back from the road amid gaunt trees and a three-foot stand of weeds. The gate had an authentic squeak when I forced it open. I stated my needs to the thin woman who stood crushing out her cigarette against the doorjam, and then braced myself for the inevitable question. Instead she staggered me by asking if I was a baby-sitter; help must have been as hard to find as houses. Well, I had never minded a baby in my life, but I was desperate, so I agreed to watch babies in return for a room.

Tired but triumphant, I drove home that night feeling as though I had won the Battle of the Bulge singlehanded. In spite of being handicapped by being a civilian, I had found a room in roomless, khaki-crazy Columbia. Now there is only one flaw in the happy ending: I've about decided that I don't like Missouri University after all. I think I'll go to Kansas.

tributes until the people within that nation have those attributes grounded firmly within themselves. The place to start is with the cell unit of civilization—the individual, and that individual need search no further than the admonition of Paul to find the approach to a lasting peace. "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." And in another instance he says, "Though I speak with the tongues of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Paul's further statements in this 13th chapter of First Corinthians serve only to emphasize that charity is the basic attribute that each must have.

One might also refer to Peter's admonition as a sound guide toward building kingdom lives. "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." And need I suggest more than that all nations must come to a fruitful knowledge of Jesus Christ before they can establish a lasting peace?

One World?—Yes, eventually, with Jesus Christ, the Great Common Denominator!

Things Not to Do When Visiting the Sick

By one who has probably done them, but has learned better.

1. Don't go too soon. Most patients will appreciate a visit much more during the period of convalescence, than at the peak of their illness, or immediately following an operation.

2. Don't stay too long. A brief and cheerful two to five minutes is better than a half-hour . . . and easier on the patient.

3. Don't kick or bump the bed, or lean against it, or lay hats, handbags, or parcels on it. It is the patient's domain—small enough at best. Respect it, and have mercy on his nerves.

4. Don't try to entertain the sick with weighty or argumentative discussions about politics, religion, or philosophy, or your current opinions on what is wrong with the church, the nation, and the world.

5. Don't tell lugubrious tales about your Aunt Emma or Cousin Hector, who had exactly the same complaint as the patient, and "didn't make it."

6. Don't say or do anything to undermine the confidence the patient has in his doctor. Doctors are human, and they make mistakes, but it doesn't help a sick man to have them rehearsed.

7. Don't prescribe for the patient—even if your favorite remedy did once snatch somebody from the jaws of death. A good doctor diagnoses a case and prescribes treatment only after careful observation and study of the patient, case history, laboratory tests, X rays, and the factors of heredity, environment, occupation, temperament, etc. For example, there are more than thirty known causes of hoarseness, including cancer of the larynx. The medicine which cured Aunt Miranda's cough back in 1889 might not be effective for cancer.

8. Don't spread wild, inaccurate, unfounded rumors about the patient's condition, which may get back to him to cause unnecessary worry or concern.

9. Especially if the patient is in a hospital, don't expect him to receive you with open arms during the hours customarily devoted to bathing, treatment, eating, or other necessary hospital routine.

10. Don't get sloppy sentimental, or morbidly sympathetic. A sick person is often quite childish in his lack of emotional control, and upsets in emotional equilibrium do him no good.

11. Don't talk too loudly, or laugh boisterously, but remember—it's just as bad to whisper outside the sick-room door.

12. If others are already in the room, don't make the company a crowd.

13. If a sign on the door says, "No visitors," don't take it as a personal insult, and try to crash the gate anyway. In special cases you can usually obtain permission from the supervisor or nurse in charge.

14. Don't stand or sit out of the patient's normal and comfortable range of vision. He may not have strength enough to twist around and look at you.

15. Don't be too nosy about the patient's ailment. It might be embarrassing to him and to you to go into too great detail. If he wants you to know, nothing can stop him from telling you.

16. Before you send fruit, candy, or other edibles, find out whether the patient's diet includes them, and whether hospital rules permit the keeping of foodstuffs in the room.

17. Don't forget that a visit which leaves the patient feeling worse than you found him is hardly a fulfillment of your Christian obligation to visit the sick.

Our Departed Ones

RUCH.—William Charles, oldest son of Jacob and Rebecca Ruch, was born in Renick, Missouri, on April 1, 1860, and passed away at the home of his daughter in Missouri City, Missouri, on September 3, 1946. He was married to Naomi David at Bevier on July 20, 1887; four children were born to this union. Mrs. Ruch preceded her husband in death on January 15, 1937. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, being baptized during the Easter season in 1939 when he was seventy-nine years old. He was also affiliated with the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias fraternal orders for many years.

He is survived by three daughters: Mrs. F. C. Newton of Missouri City; Mrs. J. S. Merrill of Memphis, Tennessee; and Mrs. Lawrence Newlin of Lombard, Illinois; one son: V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, Iowa; a sister: Mrs. Annie Snead Crist of Huntsville, Missouri; a brother, Alfred Ruch of Butte, Montana; and two grandchildren. Services were conducted in the Bevier church by Elder F. T. Mussell.

ULRICH.—Everette L., son of Ephraim and Minnie Ulrich, was born September 11, 1886, at North East, Pennsylvania, and died at his home in Toledo, Ohio, on August 30, 1946, after a long illness. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when he was fourteen years old, and served in the mission field several years.

He is survived by his wife, Olive; three sons: Herbert P., Everette J., and Wayne C. of Toledo; two sisters: Mrs. Meda Morris Swanton, Ohio; and Mrs. Pearl Johnson, Stillwater, Oklahoma; two brothers: Charles R., Jacksonville, Illinois; and Willard J., Pampa, Texas; and four grandchildren. Services were held at the Walter Funeral Home, Elder Walter Wirebaugh officiating. Burial was in the Toledo Memorial Park Cemetery.

McMICKLE.—Mrs. Amelia A., daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Koontz, was born July 26, 1857, and died in Ottumwa, Iowa, on August 21, 1946, at the St. Joseph Hospital. She had been a resident of Ottumwa for the past forty years, and a member of the Reorganized Church since 1921. She was preceded in death by her husband and two daughters.

Surviving are four sons: George of Des Moines; Lawrence of Cedar Rapids; L. R. of Anamosa; and Glen A. of Ottumwa; one daughter, Mrs. I. C. Warner of Des Moines; ten grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren. She also leaves two sisters: Mrs. John Foster of Hedrick, and Mrs. Alvira McMickle of Ottumwa. Services were held at the Lester Jay Funeral Home, Elder Myron LaPointe officiating. Burial was in the Brooks Cemetery near Hedrick.

VON DIECK.—Arthur, was born February 15, 1875, in London, England, and passed away on July 27, 1946, at Gary, Indiana. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on July 14, 1940, and remained faithful to its teachings until his death.

He leaves to mourn three sisters: Mrs. Matilda Wiebers and Mrs. Maude Horne of Chicago, Illinois; and Mrs. John Sibert of Gary, with whom he made his home after the death of his wife. Services were held at the Giesens Funeral Chapel, Elders D. H. Smith and A. H. Tomlinson officiating. Interment was in the Walkerton, Indiana, cemetery.

GLENN.—Richard, son of Adam and Sarah Glenn, was born January 23, 1872, near Derby, Indiana, and passed away September 7, 1946, in Tell City, Indiana. He was married to Julia Harding on December 7, 1898; five children were born to this union. A son, Alma, and a daughter, Ruth, died in infancy. He was a member of the Reorganized Church for many years, remaining ever faithful to its teachings.

Surviving are his wife; two sons: Harding of Evansville, Indiana, and Leslie of Tell City; a daughter, Mrs. Jewelle Fisher, also of Tell City; his stepmother, Mrs. Mary Glenn; a sister, Addie Belle; a half sister, Houston Glenn; three half brothers: Weaver, Alma, and John Glenn; and four grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Finch Funeral Home in Tell City, Elder E. F. Robertson officiating. Interment was in the Harding Cemetery near Gerald, Indiana.

MAPES.—Franklin Alva, son of Frank and Zelpha Mapes, was born November 4, 1904, at Clearwater, Nebraska, and passed away on August 14 in Clearwater. On November 26, 1926, he was united in marriage to Sarah L. Smith; three daughters were born to this union. On August 5, 1946, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, and helped in rebuilding the church home in Clearwater.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters:

Zelpha Mae, Shirley Lou, and Virginia Lee; his father, and stepmother. Funeral services were held in the school auditorium, Seventy Albert Loving officiating.

BEATY.—John William, was born October 17, 1880, in Kentucky, and passed away August 9, 1946, at Portland, Oregon. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church many years ago, and remained a faithful member throughout his life.

He is survived by his four daughters: Ora Freed and Myra Snively of Portland; Minnie of Medford, Oregon; and Gladys of Rawlins, Wyoming; one son, Roy Kinder of Colorado; three sisters: Mrs. Ora Kinder and Mrs. Nannie Yeoman of Missouri, and Mrs. Dora Hawkins of California; one brother, Nelby, of Missouri; and thirteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held August 13 in Portland. He was laid to rest beside his wife, who passed away in 1941.

OUTHOUSE.—Lovina Anettie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Smith, was born November 11, 1877, and died August 9, 1946. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1897. The following year she became the bride of Francis Outhouse; nine children were born to this marriage. Mr. Outhouse and two daughters preceded her in death.

Left to mourn are two sons: Fred P., Southgate, California; and Levi H., Vancouver, Washington; five daughters: Mrs. Ortha Wills, Seattle, Washington; Mrs. Grace Davis, Vancouver, Washington; Mrs. Alice Stiener, Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. Dorothy Mapes, International Falls, Minnesota; and Mrs. Joyce Holm, San Bernardino, California. She also leaves ten grandchildren.

WALKER.—Nada, was born April 3, 1910, at Greenville, Michigan, and passed away September 7, 1946. She was a member of the Reorganized Church for many years, and was one of the leaders in the women's department of Belding branch at the time of her death.

She is survived by a daughter, Emily; her mother, Mrs. Bertie Guild; and two brothers, Robert and Hurley, all of Belding, Michigan. Services were held in the Belding church, with Evangelist William I. Fligg officiating. Burial was in the River Ridge Cemetery.

SELLERS.—Sallie Viola, daughter of Frank and Elizabeth Jones, was born September 3, 1893, near McKenzie, Alabama, and died at her home in McKenzie on the morning of September 14, 1946. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on August 26, 1906, and on February 15, 1913, was married to R. E. Sellers; two children were born to this marriage. For many years she suffered from arthritis, but despite the pain, she remained patient and cheerful, making her life a challenge to those who knew her.

She is survived by her husband; a son, Mahlen Douglas, of McKenzie; a daughter, Mrs. Avis Moore of Georgiana, Alabama; her mother, Mrs. E. A. Jones, and a brother, W. A. Jones, both of McKenzie; two sisters: Mrs. Pearl Brown, Owassa, Alabama, and Mrs. Lois Davis, Andalusia, Alabama. Funeral services were held at Pleasant Hill Church, Elder A. D. McCall officiating. Interment was in the Pleasant Hill Cemetery.

YAHNIG.—Henry Max, was born in Port Huron, Michigan, on November 9, 1879, and died of pneumonia on September 11, 1946, at the Veterans' Hospital in Wadsworth, Kansas. During the Spanish American War he volunteered to serve his country, and was with the Army thirty-three months. In 1910, he married Cora Woodall; one son was born to this marriage. Mrs. Yahnig preceded him in death in 1913. Three years later he was married to Florence Hall; three of the nine children born to this union have passed away. Mr. Yahnig was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1920, remaining a faithful and devoted member for the duration of his life.

He is survived by his wife; five daughters: Mrs. Lillie Sutton, Palmyra, Missouri; Manon Yahnig, Carson City, Nevada; Mrs. Maxine Evans and Clara Yahnig, Independence, Missouri; and Dorothy Yahnig of the home; two sons: Luther, Carson City, Nevada; and David, Stewartville, Missouri; two sisters: Freda Placke, Somerset, Kentucky, and Olga Baese, Allardt, Tennessee; four brothers: Paul and Joseph of Somerset; Bruno and Albert of Allardt, Tennessee. He also leaves three grandchildren. Services were held at the Lyon's Funeral Home, Elder Orman Salisbury officiating. Interment was in the New Stewartville Cemetery.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

* COVER PICTURE features the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the church at Niagara Falls, New York, with President Israel A. Smith in the pulpit. President Smith wrote an account of this event, which was published in our issue of August 17, page 6. A photographer was engaged to make a picture, which came out very well, and identifying many persons prominent in the history of the branch.

* A WRISTWATCH purchased years ago offered, as one of its selling points, a dial with luminous hands and figures, "so you can see the time at night," said the salesman. He must have judged the buyer to be a kind of owl. Anyway, it seemed like a good idea and would make it unnecessary to carry matches. One expected the glow to last a year or two at most.

Today, nineteen years later, those tiny figures still glow in the dark—dimmer than they once did—and the hands can be seen in the positions, indicating time on blackest nights. What potent fuel in those little spots of paint, still burning slowly after all these years! What mysterious power to preserve its radiance so long! It is almost like faith—you can't see what sustains it, but must admit its power.

* SINCE Uncle Joe relinquished some of his molars to the dentist, he is despondent. "My main trouble used to be to get food. Now I also have trouble eating it. My front teeth are always biting off more than my back ones can chew." Much as he used to like them, he has had to give up popcorn and peanut brittle entirely.

* THE CRYSTAL BALL complex has taken possession of so many of the news review magazines as to render them almost useless as a record of events. They are so much more concerned with guessing what will happen in the future than with what has happened in the immediate past that they neglect the facts in favor of predictions. For information as to the facts, one must rely upon newspapers and radio. But radio messages cannot be stored for future reference, and newspapers are too bulky. The weekly magazines could perform a useful service here if they would. But they are so arranged that you cannot find a date connected with events. They so casually flip off the phrase, "last week,"—and what good will that be to the reader who wants to follow things? What we need is a good current history weekly that will throw the crystal ball and all its devotees into the trash basket—that will give dates and places. Such a magazine could be filed and consulted with satisfaction.

* SO MANY OF US can think of many ways to spend money, but of few ways to save or make it. There are thousands of faucets on the waterlines that empty the city reservoir, but only one channel to fill it.

Graceland Attendance

The Student Selection Committee of Graceland College has had a most difficult situation this year. This committee, made up of faculty members, was forced to postpone applications of about three hundred who sought enrollment, notwithstanding the total registration shows over a hundred more than ever before. Naturally, a number of factors were considered, no one of which was controlling, nor, on the other hand, a matter of caprice.

The tremendous surge of ex-servicemen toward institutions of higher education has taxed every college and university in America. In this significant movement, the National Government is the generous benefactor. The cost to the taxpayer will be felt for a generation at least, but the dividends in enriched citizenship will in the end amply repay the general public.

Thus we show our appreciation for the services rendered by these thousands of "GIs." And Graceland has its full quota of returned military heroes.

The Key to the Peace

Russia

It has been said by prominent persons that Russia is the key to the peace. A few notes as to why this is so, and about Russia, may be of interest at this time.

Russian history is rather legendary until the ninth century. The central lands were occupied largely by Slavonic peoples, who had no central government, with Finns to the north, Greeks and Scythians around the Black Sea, Turks to the southeast, Lithuanians to the west, and a few others. Legend tells us that the Vikings—the fighter-warrior-explorers of the time—were adventuring along the rivers of Russia in search of trade and tribute in the ninth century. In 862, the people of Novgorod invited Rurik, a Scandinavian, to help govern them, as they felt incapable of organizing themselves. Rurik's brothers were delegated to rule other parts. Russia was developed as a trade route from the Volkhov River to the north, the Dnieper south to the Black Sea, and to Constantinople. Russia's ruling families were thus of Scandinavian origin. Olga, widow of Igor, was the first woman to rule Russia and was a very capable administrator; she was the first of the family of Rurik to become a Christian, and was baptized at Constantinople in 957. Christianity, however, did not become the dominant religion of Russia until Vladimir I, a grandson of Olga, came to the throne at Kiev; he became a Christian in 989. From that time, Russia was a conservator of the great Byzantine civilization, contributing many of her own qualities to it. This was very important because of the fall of Rome to the barbarians in 476. The Renaissance of culture and learning in the fourteenth century was to find some of its best resources in what the Byzantine traditions had preserved.

Tragedy for Russia and for all Europe came in 1453 when the Turks captured Constantinople, shutting off the flow of trade and communication. The Dardanelles are the great natural outlet of Russia to the world. Since that year, the mordant hand of the Turk has lain across the throat of Russia, and it has been the dream of every Russian ruler to remove it. What Stalin wants is what Russia has always wanted, basically. He has been aggressive enough, it is true, to add some requests of his own.

The British Empire

Because modern empires depend so much upon trade, and because the Mediterranean Sea is the principal route linking Britain with the oriental possessions and sources of supply, the Dardanelles are very important to the British Empire. Should the present Russian government take possession and fortify the Straits, it would be a serious military threat to Britain. While the Russian people are friendly, their government has given the rest of the world a great deal of cause for apprehension and concern. Britain has found it a source of protection to keep the decadent Turkish power in possession of Constantinople, and to resist all Russian efforts to take over.

Russia has plenty of power and resources now. Possession of the Dardanelles would make her stronger. She has 180,000,000 people, now becoming industrialized. Such a power could overcome all other powers in the world. And, indeed, that has always been the frankly announced purpose of Communism, reiterated by the present leadership.

The United States

We, as another of the three great world powers, are also vitally concerned in this situation. When our power is linked with that of the British Empire, we are about equal to the Russian power. Together, we can match the Russian strength, and check any tendency toward domination. If Russia should manage to break British power, the threat to ourselves is obvious.

It is said that the Russian people do not want war, which is unquestionably true, but not important in the situation. They will not be able to decide on war or peace. That will be decided for them by propaganda and other controls. The German people did not want war, and believed to the last they could avoid it while getting what they wanted. This is the common illusion.

The United States also has an interest in Palestine, in Iranian oil, and in prevention of Russian expansion into Mongolia, China, India, and the Near East.

Is Peace Possible?

These are the economic and political problems that block the road to peace. We do not gain much by blaming one nation or another for its interest in the problems. After all, national security and destiny are involved. When their safety is involved, peoples and nations will fight. Pacifism, of the Chinese and Hindu type, offers no solution to these problems. Most pacifism ignores them. The movement toward peace does not seem to be well served by most pacifistic endeavors. Emotional pacifism is impractical and impotent here.

Yet we must recognize that peace is both possible and desirable. It will not be easily attained. A Christian peace is the only kind

Membership Statistics

THE CHURCH STATISTICIAN, Elder C. L. Olson, has addressed to the First Presidency his report of the baptismal increases in the various apostolic fields for the first eight months of 1946, set against the record for the same period in each of the four preceding years. It is very encouraging to note that in four of the seven apostolic fields we have better baptismal records this year than in any of the past five years, in two others we have the second best record in five years, and in the remaining field we have the third best record in five years. The baptismal gains in any area depend on many factors, and a graph of these gains usually shows considerable fluctuation. But it is a matter for congratulation when such uniform increases are reported, and when it is noted that the total gains for the domestic field show an increase of 20.5 per cent over the same period for 1945, and 4.9 per cent over the same period for the second best year since 1940. If every branch will see to it that missionary testimony is kept to the fore in the branch program and in the lives of the Saints, we can make this a banner year for missionary gains.

Many enthusiastic reports concerning the recent Institute held for the younger appointees are now coming to the office from these brethren as they return to their several fields. The Institute was indeed a heartening experience to which everyone who participated brought his distinctive contribution. But it was also a costly affair. One of the major costs was that the men of the ministry who were present at the Institute were not out on the firing line, extending the work. Of course, the Institute should result in more and better baptisms later on. But for the moment there will be a recession, except as those who think that our ministry ought to be trained for their work make a little special effort to carry their share of the missionary load. F. H. E.

Human Life to Perish?

Sir James Jeans, the famous English Astronomer who died within recent days, was the author of The Mysterious Universe which was published in 1930. In a chapter called "The Dying Sun" the significant statement below was made.—Israel A. Smith.

Life of the kind we know can only exist under suitable conditions of light and heat; we only exist ourselves because the earth receives exactly the right amount of radiation from the sun; upset the balance in either direction, of excess or deficit, and life must disappear from the earth. And the essence of the situation is that the balance is very easily upset.

Primitive man, living in the temperate zone of the earth, must have watched the ice-age descending on his homes with something like terror; each year the glaciers came further down into the valleys; each winter the sun seemed less able to provide the warmth needed for life. To him, as to us, the universe must have seemed hostile to life.

We of these later days, living in the narrow temperate zone surrounding our sun and peering into the far future, see an ice-age of a different kind threatening us. Just as Tantalus, standing in a lake so deep that he only just escaped drowning, was yet destined to die of thirst, so it is the tragedy of our race that it is probably destined to die of cold, while the greater part of the substance of the universe still remains too hot for life to obtain a footing. The sun, having no extraneous supply of heat, must necessarily emit ever less and less of its life-giving radiation, and, as it does so, the temperate zone of space, within which alone life can exist, must close in around it. To remain a possible abode of life, our earth would need to move in ever nearer and nearer to the dying sun. Yet science tells us that, so far from its moving inwards, inexorable dynamical laws are even now driving it ever further away from the sun into the outer cold and darkness. And, so far as we can see, they must continue to do so until life is frozen off the earth, unless indeed some celestial collision or cataclysm intervenes to destroy life even earlier by a more speedy death. This prospective fate is not peculiar to our earth; other suns must die like our own, and any life there may be on other planets must meet the same inglorious end.

Across the Desk

FROM ELDER WILLIAM SCHOEPKE, of Hannover, Germany, we have a letter of recent date in which he says:

Please greet all members of the Presidency and above all the Apostle for Europe. Do you the church in America progress? I am leader of the branch at Gross Raeschen, a place which is situated in the Russian occupation realm. Our branch made progress also during the last terrible war. Many souls—around thirty—were baptized in the past five years. I regret that some young brothers who served in the German Army are in prison. Please send news of the last General Conference.

Commotion and Confusion

"All things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:25.

A VOICE FROM THE HEART OF EUROPE

Daily the press and almost hourly the radio brings us reports of commotion and confusion at home and abroad. For various reasons two such reports linger in mind. First, is an extract from a speech made by Winston Churchill at the University of Zurich, Switzerland, rather recently. Churchill has lost none of his talents for vivid and powerful description. Speaking of the present situation in Europe, he said: "I wish to speak to you today about the tragedy of Europe. This noble continent, comprising on the whole the fairest and the most cultivated regions of the earth, enjoying a temperate and equable climate, is the home of all the great parent races of the western world. It is the foundation of Christian faith and Christian ethics. It is the origin of most of the culture, art, philosophy and science, both of ancient and modern times." Against this background of past glory and achievement, Churchill then went on to paint the present picture of "a vast, quivering mass of tormented, hungry, careworn, and bewildered human beings, gazing at the ruins of their cities and scanning the dark horizon for the approach of some new peril, tyranny, or terror."

A VOICE FROM THE "HEART OF AMERICA"

The second item from the press referred to in the beginning of these notes is from the Independence Examiner, September 11, editorial department. The Examiner is published in the region that is often spoken of as the "Heart of America," and in the home town of the President of the United States. The editor, Mr. William Southern, Jr., speaks of himself as a "Kentucky born Democrat." He has come to look at things realistically, without too much regard for party policies. To some degree he may be able to speak authoritatively about the confusion in the heart and mind of America. We quote:

It is no wonder the people of the country are bewildered and wondering what is going to happen next and how.

We go to the market and discover the meat shelves bare. We have the money to put up a new building which is needed and discover that we cannot get the materials and run up against the government at every corner . . . We want somebody to do something and are willing to pay and then have to go out and do it ourselves. We hear about strikes and ultimatums and are amazed to be told that a few men have the power to stop the orderly processes of living. We are held up at the point of a gun and our money taken away, and the public is held up at the point of a gun and told to do this or that or else we will have no public transportation, no ships to carry freight, no railways to operate. We are told to pay whatever is asked and like it. No wonder we are bewildered.

Then, as in Missouri yesterday, the leaders of the Democrats and the Republicans meet in the same building on the same floor and pass what they call political platforms. The Democrats endorse everything which has been done for twelve years at Washington and in Missouri, and the Republicans condemn everything that has been done by the Democrats. . . .

We are unable to give the answer. We go along quite helpless and are not certain what we should or could do about the matter. This paper would like to be able to tell you, but we know very well you would not agree, and we also know that we might be wrong. We are going somewhere, and we do not know where or when.

Meantime the usual activities in the big cities are threatened, ships are at the docks loaded and unloaded, no meat on the shelves, officials asking "please do not do" this to us and shirk a fight. Agreeing to outrageous demands and paying.

Plenty of money everywhere and more being printed every day.

What are we going to do about it? We do not know and it would be useless to tell you if we did.

A VERY SICK WORLD

During or shortly after the First World War, Sir Philip Gibbs said, "The world is very sick, and it may be a sickness unto death." Today the infection, the fever, the delirium, the insanity of two world wars have left the world all but bankrupt physically, spiritually, morally.

A present-time view or a short look ahead might well leave people hopelessly pessimistic, as many are just now. The long-time look ahead brings hope to those who believe in God and Christ, in the gospel, and in the final triumph of righteousness. The world is sick. A prophet one time said, "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there?" A Physician did visit humanity, bringing a health program. He has promised to come again "with healing in his wings."

Those who believe in the Great Physician may themselves escape spiritual confusion and find sanity and a degree of serenity. In the midst of the violence and hate and fear and greed that trouble humanity, abroad and at home, they may work for peace and righteousness. The Great Physician has left some instructions and promise to aid us while we wait for him to come:

"Let not your heart be troubled ye believe in God, believe also in me . . . I will come again . . . I will not leave you comfortless . . . Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you . . . Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."—John 14.

"When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21: 28.

Must It Always Require Adversity

To make us answer the call of duty in Leadership Training?

Thelona D. Stevens

offers the service of the Department of Religious Education to help local congregations meet this perennial problem.

When our nation was forced to enter the recent world-wide conflict, and many of our local and district leaders and workers were called to the colors, it was easy to see that usually there were not other leaders immediately available. All too often it was apparent we would have to "grow" replacements.

In that first year of war, the Department of Religious Education offered what was termed "An Emergency Leadership Training Program." Registrations poured in. The country was at war. The country was taking our leaders and teachers to war. We, at home, had to rally to the cause of the gospel, or there would be catastrophe on the church front! And rally our members did. Hundreds of them took over new duties and enrolled in "emergency" training courses to help them perform these duties creditably. The immediate emergency was met bravely; adjustments were made, and the work carried on, albeit in many instances under difficulties.

IT IS STILL AVAILABLE

The Department of Religious Education followed this "emergency" training with the present more stable LEADERSHIP TRAINING CURRICULUM plan, designed to round out and amplify the training of all those who participate in church activities. As the war continued, hundreds continued to prove their desires to grow in knowledge by their faithful development through study. Our files contain many stories of how this development came through almost superhuman effort, despite the burdensome demands of those war years.

Our files tell stories, too, of some of our young people who, being uprooted from home and church ties, felt keenly their lack of a "firm foundation," and who set about correcting their lack of knowledge through correspondence study. One such was Brother Eldon B. Hart, who kindly wrote something of his experiences in this respect, which was published in the Saints' Herald of June 22, this year. His experiences and reactions prompted the following letter from Brother Jac. M. de Wild, of Rotterdam, Holland:

Dear Friends:

With much interest I read the articles in the Saints' Herald concerning Leadership Training. Being the youngest elder in the Rotterdam branch and for several years the youngest member of the priesthood, I have very often felt that many troubles would never have come if the priesthood had been instructed in a better way. Therefore, my request is to send me study material to become an inspired leader and to open the way for our branch to the green pastures.

Brother Eldon B. Hart wrote that a war was necessary for him to realize what a great and wonderful church this is. I had the same experience when I was forced to labor during two years in Danzig, Germany. There I felt the worth of the church and a great desire came, when the Lord granted it to me to serve more and better than I did before.

But though the church in Holland is the same as in Independence, and other places, there is much difference. We never have priesthood training classes. We never had a reunion or a youth conference. I don't want to write about all we don't have. We have the same gospel, and when the general church is going on in every field of education, we will find plenty of work to do. I'm convinced our boys and girls are willing. All members of the church are willing. We don't look at what we don't have, but are looking at what can be done. We need instruction, and as long as we don't have a (general) church leader among us, we want to train ourselves. May you understand what we are needing and help where possible.

May the church go onward with a fine group of devoted people who are prepared for their life task, is my desire and daily prayer.

Sincerely yours,

JAC. M. DE WILD.

War did impress upon many of our young people the value of the "pearl of great price" which had been so lightly carried by many before that experience, and a number of those so impressed made resolutions that they would do more about it when released from military service. Indeed, some of them while yet in the service (some of them of the priesthood) became keenly aware that the postwar demands would in many respects be greater than those of the war years, so far as the church was concerned, and so utilized available hours for preparation for their part in the church in a world engaged in peaceful pursuits.

ARE WE READY?

We are not at war now. Some have relaxed, but not those with the real vision and mission of this church, for our goal has not been reached, Zion has not yet been built, the peoples of all the earth have not yet heard the story of Jesus. Many longed during the war for a time of peace when the gospel might be taken to far away nations. That time is here. Peoples of the world are hungering for Christ's message, and we could take it—if we were sufficiently well prepared. An unprepared people can't do it. A people uneducated in the history, doctrine, philosophy of this church can't do it. A people uneducated in the Scriptures as contained in the Three Standard Books of the church can't do it. We must know the gospel—through study, application, and personal testimony—before we can effectively pass it on to others.

It is often very revealing to stop and take inventory. Who is carrying on the local work in all its phases? Where do I fit in? Am I doing my best? Am I studying and preparing to do better? Because of my efforts will the church be the better prepared to take the gospel to "all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples"?

HOW SHALL WE RESPOND?

In this choicest of lands, richly favored of God, our opportunities are boundless, chiefly those of the gospel. Our Holland brethren and others in far distant lands, are carrying on bravely with, oh, so much less than we enjoy. But let us remember God has not favored us with these rich blessings without responsibility to him commensurate with our talents and opportunities. He gives us talents and the chances to develop them, not only to work out our own salvation, but to assist him in showing others how to work out their salvation also.

Our experiences during the summer just past have been rich in reunions, youth conferences and camps, priesthood training classes, retreats, institutes, etc. What are we going to do now? Shall we call ourselves finished products, or shall we avail ourselves of yet added

The Character of the MODERN CRISIS

By J. A. Koehler

Number 6 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE YEAR 1946 is not the first time man has had a burden of troubles. When one single epidemic took a toll of nearly 50,000,000 lives, as the Black Death did in the fourteenth century, and nothing could be done about it, man had more than enough trouble on his hands. When famine stalked the peoples of almost every land, and people gave up the fight for existence in despair, man had more than enough trouble. Our forefathers did not need to make trouble for themselves as we do, for troubles not of their own making continually plagued them.

That means that some things which troubled man in the past do not trouble him in the present. When normal women are about to become mothers today, they do not make rendezvous with death. A single season of famine need give us no worry at all. For we are not the victims of blind forces, as were our forefathers. Louis Pasteur, Michael Faraday, James Hargreaves, opportunities for improvement and development for greater service? There opens now to us a new church school year, a new winter season, a new opportunity of study individually, a new chance to interest friends in class study—a new chance to prove to ourselves and to God that we need not be driven by war and adversity to grasp the opportunities which are again ours to be "workmen unashamed."

The Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, awaits your inquiry, problem, or request for direction and helps for mapping out a study program.

and many other geniuses have shown us what to do about it.

BUT paradoxical as it might seem, the more light natural science shed on one category of earthly problems, the more difficult another category of problems became. I speak, of course, of social problems not of social techniques, but of the ethics of human living together.

When we ask why the problem of life in society has become more acute as the power to live has increased, the answer which comes to us from every quarter is: because we are either indisposed or unable to make the moral or ethical adjustments required by the changes that have taken place in economic life as science and the practical arts advanced. Our social world masteries—which are at bottom moral improvements—have not kept pace with our physical world conquests.

In some places, in respect to personal morality, we have lost ground; and for the very reason that, as industrial affairs developed, as peoples, we did not gain moral ground. If you have ever lived in New York City, you should know what I mean.

In truth, the state of personal morality is such that one can hardly be a church man and escape the admonition of its preachers and teachers to "live closer to God" whatever that may mean to different people. Surely it must mean that even religion in the modern world faces a difficult problem. Indeed religion in the modern world seems to be facing its own crisis.

WHAT IS THE CHARACTER of that crisis? If the emergence of the social gospel within the century has meaning, it is a social world, and, specifically, a moral world crisis. For the teacher of religion himself, the teacher of a men's Bible class, for instance, dares not, and he cannot open up, of his own free moral will, the picket line he has helped to form, to let his brother pass through, so that, by his own industry, he may provide his children with bread.

IN Jesus' day a person was really free to give a stranger a "lift" on the highway of life. Are you really free to do that today? Not so long as the stranger may be a gunman who will leave you lying dead in the ditch out of which you would lift him. At almost every turn in the road of life there are highwaymen who are obstacles to "a closer walk with God."

I may be mistaken, but I believe there are many businessmen, as well as politicians and others, whose circumstances make it next to impossible for them to walk "closer to God." In an acquisitive society, in a society where everyone is out to get what you have in your pocketbook, in an every-man-for-himself society, the businessman could not fulfill his duty to his dependents to secure them against times of want, much less could he survive the vicissitudes of business life, if he did not play the game of money-getting. If he paid out for labor as much as he could hope to receive from the sale of its products, one day he would have no money with which to hire labor; not in the kind of society in which we live. And that means, does it not, that in character the modern crisis is distinctively moral?

THERE ARE MANY CIRCUMSTANCES which witness that the crisis of the modern world is moral. The prevalence of marital infidelity, of juvenile delinquency, of idling, of crime, of law evasions, of political graft, of betrayals of relatives and friends, of degrading entertainment, of deceptive advertising, of loneliness and politics and unfair play even in religious circles—a hundred facts bespeak a modern-world moral crisis.

But let us give attention to the moral crisis as distinctively institutional, communal, social. Call it civil, if you wish, for it is certainly a crisis in civil government.

Government is the only means which peoples can employ to promote their peace, their prosperity, and their happiness; it is the only means of preserving public order, of promoting communal efficiency, and of administering economic justice. And to do that, government itself must be orderly, efficient, and just; it must be ethical.

THE MOST BASIC or fundamental of all moral rights which pure government is designed to honor are (1) the right of every people to real freedom to conduct its own internal affairs, each in ways of its own free choosing; and (2) the right of all persons—or should we say the right of all citizens, to possess each his own soul: the right of real personal moral freedom; the right of each individual to be as free as all other individuals (which means to be really free) to put the impress of his personality upon the life of his people; the right of equality of economic opportunity (which is a right to the means of exercising that right); the right to be assured that the common heritages of all shall not fall into the hands or come under the control of some; and the right of each to reap in the full measure of his sowing—call that sowing his industry, thrift, ingenuity, etc., if you wish.

In previous articles I have mentioned the misbehavior of the peoples of the past, which made the moral problem for the peoples of the present. We call that problem a moral crisis for two principal reasons:

(1) Because governments (if they were pure governments, we would say “peoples”) cannot take away from persons even the things which belong to peoples by moral right, but which persons have come to possess by legal right and, for the most part, by honorable means, without being immoral, unethical, or unjust, itself.

(2) Because government (which may never be more highly moral than the people themselves) does not have a moral will to “redeem the land” (as the modern prophet put it), to restore to the people the savings of their social industry, and to honor the common moral rights of all peoples and persons.

In other words, peoples themselves are unfit to make the ethical turns in the highway of life, or to make the moral decisions, that would save them from social disaster, or, as religion puts it, from spiritual death; which means that the moral crisis is distinctively institutional; It is communal; It is governmental.

One of the reasons the moral crisis is distinctively communal is this: the evils in which men from beginning to end have indulged have come to be the warp and woof of the social fabric; they have come to be the essence of our economy; they have come to be institutionalized. And it is a real crisis for one of three reasons of which we should never lose sight: because (1) the people are unable to make the necessary ethical changes in the social constitution, which would involve them in the task of setting themselves free from the domination of their political masters; or, (2) they are unable to hold the moral gains they make from time to time, and are unable to keep a new family of incompetent functionaries from taking the place of the old; or (3) there is no communal moral consensus and, therefore, no moral will to make the necessary ethical changes in the social constitution. All of which adds up to what we have already said, which is that the moral crisis is communal.

It is a real crisis because it is dangerous to attain social objects through force in this stage of physical world progress, yet, at the same time, there seems to be no other way of attaining them.

Every American should know of the labor-displacing effects of technology in our American economy. In our way of life, technology is an immediate cause of wholesale unemployment, because it produces more goods than our way of life will permit the persons who need those goods to purchase. And out of that simple fact arises our recurrent business or industrial crises.

What can we do about it? Well, the conclusion reached by a whole galaxy of brain-trusters, is this: to compensate for the labor-displacing effects of technology in our economy, it is necessary to use labor to make preparation for and to carry on warfare. In that way only—unless we wish to plunge ourselves into even greater evils—can employment for all be provided. If that is true, as it seems to be, do we not face a real moral crisis which is distinctively institutional, communal, governmental?

It seems that peoples had sold their birthrights to persons for messes of pottage, the eating of which is the cause of other troubles.

More than a century ago the modern prophet said what the ancient prophets had said over twenty centuries earlier, which is that the whole family of nations was headed with dead certainty for just such a crisis of human relations, or a crisis of government. What to do about it? To reveal what the modern prophet says to do about it is the purpose of this series of articles.

Faith draws the poison from every grief, takes the sting from every loss, and quenches the fire of every pain; and only faith can do it.—J. G. Holland.

Worship Suggestions for November

By Leola Sheppard

(These worship suggestions were submitted by Sister Leola Sheppard, who volunteered to write them, in spite of the fact that she is hospitalized in Pittsburg, Kansas, suffering from an incurable disease. Doctors tell her that she probably will not live until the first of the year. Yet, she is writing the worship suggestions also for the month of December. The use of her waning strength in doing something for the Master is an example to all.)

Sister Sheppard is in her early twenties, and is the mother of three small children. Those using these services might well offer a prayer in her behalf.)

Theme for the Month: LESSONS IN GRATITUDE

November 3, 1946

Theme: GRATITUDE FOR PIONEERS

Call to Worship:

O God, beneath thy guiding hand,
Our exiled fathers crossed the sea;
And when they crossed the wintry strand,
With prayer and psalm they worshipped thee.

Thou heardest, well pleased, the song, the prayer.

Thy blessing came, and still its power
Shall onward, through all ages, bear
The memory of that sacred hour.

—Leonard Bacon.

Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," Saints Hymnal, 291.

Prayer of Gratitude.

Hymn: "God of Our Fathers," Saints' Hymnal, 426.

Talk:

When we speak of pioneers, especially in the month of November, our minds go to those early pioneers who crossed the waters to come to America, that they might have the religious freedom they desired. Soon, in the history of America, we find other pioneers, those who pushed westward with their families and settled the frontiers, helping America grow. A pioneer is one who goes before and prepares the way. In church history, we have our pioneers. They have things in common with the others. A desire for a better way of life and the faith, the courage, and the perseverance to gain it.

Our people feel pride and gratitude when we think of the early pioneers of the church. (At this point tell the story of someone—or group—who pioneered. The Story of the Church, by Inez Smith Davis, chapters 10-16, is an excellent source from which to choose a story of this character.)

Poem Prayer:

Dear Father, our gratitude goes out
To those many brave pioneers
Who braved the hardships, prepared the way
In our country's earliest years.

For the early saints who led the way;
We follow still the paths they made.
Our heartfelt love and gratitude
On memory's beam are humbly laid.

Dear Father, help us to worthy be
Of the heritage freely given,
That we may greet these pioneers
And proudly mingle up in heaven.
—Leola Sheppard.

Theme: GRATITUDE FOR COUNTRY AND PEACE

Call to Worship:

"Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth. . . . O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker. For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand."

Scripture:

"Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and the fullness thereof."—Deuteronomy 33: 13-16.

Hymn: "For the Beauty of the Earth," Saints' Hymnal, 18.

Prayer:

Let us give thanks that we still know
A free and tranquil sky,
That we have food to last this day
Enough to satisfy.

Let us give thanks that we have yet
Earth's clear serenity,
That we have men who lived and died
For us and liberty.

Let us give thanks that we do live
Where freedom reigns and right,
That children play and sleep unharmed
Throughout the day and night.

Let us give thanks that we may pray
In your way or in mine,
That we may talk to God each day
And know his love divine.

Let us give thanks that we have time
For sun, and stars, and dew,
And know if we have faith in God
Peace surely will shine through.
—Claire E. Britt.

Hymn: "O Beautiful for Spacious Skies," Saints' Hymnal, 418.

Talk:

Americans have always been thankful that they live in America. The Puritans left a comfortable way of life to come to America. They were strangers in a strange land. They had many adjustments to make. They fought disease and starvation. The poorest family in your town enjoys things the Pilgrims never knew. Still they reveled in their freedom, and gave thanks. Down through the years, even during years of war and depression and war again, we have always been glad we lived in America. Each year, during November, we are reminded to give thanks for our many blessings and always we give thanks for our country. This year we also give thanks that our American boys are not fighting. Though many are still away from home, the danger is not great. We look forward to the day when all Americans can return home.

Lord, while for all mankind we pray,
Of every clime and coast,
Oh, hear us for our native land,
The land we love the most.

Oh, guard our shores from every foe;
With peace our borders bless;
With prosperous times our cities crown,
Our fields with plenteousness.

Lord of the nations, thus to thee
Our country we commend.
Be thou her refuge and her trust,
Her everlasting friend.

—John Wreford.

Theme: GRATITUDE FOR OUR OPPORTUNITIES

Call to Worship:

Look to this day
For it is life, the very life of life.
In its brief course lies all the varieties and realities of your existence;
The bliss of growth; the glory of action; the splendor of beauty;
For yesterday is already a dream, and tomorrow is only a vision;
But today well lived, makes every yesterday a vision of hope.

Look well, therefore, to this day!
Such is the salutation of the dawn!

—From the Sanskrit.

Hymn: "Hark! the Voice of Jesus Calling," Saints' Hymnal, 344.

Prayer (for recognition of the opportunities of the day, and for diligence to the cause of Christ.)

Scripture:

"O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at that last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Talk:

They are wrong who say that opportunity knocks but once. Opportunity is all about us. It is our fault alone if we do not do something worth-while each day. The opportunities to do good that we ignore or cast aside are often picked up by another who is thankful for the chance to do what we might have done ourselves.

BEGIN TODAY

Dream not too much of what you'll do tomorrow;
How well you'll work perhaps another year;
Tomorrow's chance you do not need to borrow—
Today's is here.

—Author Unknown.

Inspirational Poems:

This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream—
There spread a cloud of dust along a plain;
And underneath the cloud, or in it raged
A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
Shocked upon swords and shields. A Prince's banner
Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes.
A craven hung along the battle's edge,
And thought, "Had I a sword of keener steel—"

News Briefs

Rich Hill District Conference

The Rich Hill, Missouri, district conference was held September 21 and 22, with District President William Patterson in charge, assisted by Elder John Deller. Apostle Paul M. Hanson represented the general church, and was the speaker at both the Saturday evening and 11 o'clock Sunday services. A fifteen-minute devotional, presented by several violinists from Butler, preceded the Sunday morning classwork. At 9:15 a prayer service was held with Apostle Hanson and Elders William Patterson, John Deller, and C. C. Martin in charge. Lunch was served at noon in the church annex. The Butler Orchestra gave a brief concert in the afternoon, followed by the 2 o'clock business session. After the reports were read and approved, plans were discussed for raising the remaining $1,000 necessary to equip the new reunion grounds. An offering of $118.64 was taken, and the rest will be provided by the individual branches. Delegates to the 1947 General Conference were appointed. The names of Delbert Smith and Robert Simmons were approved for ordination to the office of priest. New officers elected for the coming year are Mildred Ingram, director of religious education; Dale Crown, secretary-treasurer; and Leroy Beckham, young people's leader. An ordination service was held immediately after the adjournment of the business meeting.

Los Angeles, California

Central Los Angeles Congregation

Pastor, Garland E. Tickemyer

It was with genuine regret that Central Los Angeles branch bid good-by to Pastor and Mrs. John Blackmore. The Blackmores had been at Central for over six years, and had won the love and respect of the congregation. Elder Blackmore will be remembered for the beautiful worship service he developed, for the quietness and reverence of the meetings, for the inspiring sermons and stimulating forums which he conducted. Most of all, he will be remembered for his kindness to those in need, to the sick and sorrowing, for his tolerance and good judgment, and his patient understanding toward those who disagreed with him. Sister Blackmore will be remembered as a loyal church worker and devoted wife. To show their gratitude, the members of Central congregation held a reception for the Blackmores before they left. At the close of the program, Cyril Wight read a letter of appreciation from the

Theme: LET US SHOW OUR GRATITUDE

Call to Worship:

GRATITUDE

For sunlit hours and visions clear,
For all remembered faces dear,
For comrades of a single day,
Who sent us stronger on our way,
For friends who shared the year's long road,
And bore with us the common load,
For hours that levied heavy tolls,
But brought us nearer to our goals,
For insights won through toil and tears,
We thank the Keeper of our years.
—Clyde McGee.

Hymn: "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," Saints' Hymnal, 428.

Prayer.

Scripture:

"Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ."—Ether 1: 35.

Talk:

We have talked of gratitude this month. We are grateful for the early pioneers of our land and our church. We are grateful for the country in which we live and the peace we enjoy within its borders. We are grateful for the opportunities our way of life affords us. God expects us to show our gratitude. His promises are dependent upon "if's." "If they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ." When we count our many blessings, we feel a desire to show our gratitude through service, in word and deed.

YOUR MISSION

If you are too weak to journey
Up the mountain steep and high,
You can stand within the valley
While the multitudes go by;
You can chant in happy measure
As they slowly pass along;
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready to command;
If you cannot toward the needy,
Reach an ever open hand;
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep;
You can be a true disciple
Sitting at the Savior's feet.

If you cannot be the watchman
Standing high on Zion's wall,
Pointing out the path to heaven,
Offering life and peace to all;
With your prayers and with your bounties
You can do what heaven demands,
You can be like faithful Aaron,
Holding up the prophet's hands.

Do not, then, stand idly waiting
For some greater work to do;
Fortune is a lazy goddess,
She will never come to you.
Go and toil in any vineyard,
Do not fear to do or dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere.

—G. M. Grannis.

Hymn: "Rise Up, Oh, Men of God," Saints' Hymnal, 210.

STANDARDS FOR A STEWARD

The purpose of this four-page outline is to assist church members to qualify as stewards with the vision and the ability to achieve the great goal of Zion. It sets forth the solid foundations upon which we may develop as stewards.

It is hoped that this tract will be used for individual study, sermon material, and organized class study. The scriptural references are merely suggestive and may be greatly expanded by anyone who is desirous of doing so.

These standards have been prepared prayerfully and studiously over a considerable period of time. They have been given careful consideration in meetings of the Order of Bishops and are published with the approval of the Presiding Bishopric. The price: 10 for 25c; 25 for 60c; 50 for $1; 100 for $1.75.—Herald Publishing House. Advertisement.

congregation, and presented them with a purse of money. When they left for their new home and pastorate in Omaha, Nebraska, a group of Saints were at the train to wish them Godspeed.

A similar group welcomed the new pastor, Garland Tickemyer, his wife, Hazel, and their two sons, when they arrived from Independence, Missouri. A reception will be held for them on the evening of October 1.

Seven young people from Central Los Angeles congregation will attend Grace-land this year; they are Roland and Robert Inlow, Bob Michener, Bob Sheetz, Betty Ballard, Marilyn Benton, and Joanne Gray.

Portland, Oregon

Southeast Portland Branch

Pastor, B. J. Peters

The branch business meeting was held on September 20 under the supervision of District President J. L. Verhei. Elder Ben J. Peters was reinstated as pastor, and Lillian Livingston as church school instructor.

The women of the three Portland churches have been supervising a father and son banquet each month; Southeast Church will entertain the group in October.

Howard Decious has returned to his home in Portland after serving with the armed forces in Japan. Members of the branch were saddened by the loss of two faithful workers, John M. Beaty, who passed away August 9, and Lysle E. Kinni, who died September 8.

Independence, Missouri

East Independence Congregation

Pastor, Wynne Jones

Speakers during August and September were Anthony Black, Victor, Van, and Cecil Talcott, Eugene Theys, Orlin Crownover, Alma Andrews, Wynne Jones, Lyndon Wagener, and Thomas Thatcher, Sr.

On July 12 the League sponsored a party at the Gaulter home. Admission was a penny for each inch around the attendee's waist; $20 was taken in. Another $25 was raised at an ice cream social on the evening of August 27. The proceeds from both projects were applied to the building fund.

The annual business meeting was held August 15 with the following officers being elected for the coming year: Max Thorne, custodian; Victor Talcott, church school director; Naomi Gaulter, young people's leader and publicity agent; Katie Hale, women's leader; Eunice Estes and Ollie Smith, counselors; Vida Heide, Blue Bird supervisor; Virleen Carver, young matron's leader; Elsie Sutterfield, director of music; Rena Friend, historian and librarian; and Doris Clements, secretary. The building committee consists of Bob Moran, Jim Stowell, Lyndon Wagener, Ralph Crabb, Lloyd Pyper, Harry Friend, J. M. Wagener, Frank Minton, Tom Thatcher, Jr., Katie Hale, and Virleen Carver. At a preceding business session, Wynne Jones was appointed pastor to succeed Iven Clothier, who had served for the past two years. Elders T. W. Thatcher and Van Talcott were selected as counselors, and Lyndon Wagener as bishop's agent.

The women's department gave a basket supper on the church lawn for Pastors Clothier and Jones; Alpha Bickle was in charge of the program. The young matrons and older women have planned a full year's work and will make year-books for each group.

Lamoni Stake

Riley Center Mission

Pastor, Albert Haynes

Riley Center Mission was organized a year ago in a rural schoolhouse. Since then, the membership has increased from fifteen to twenty, including two elders and two priests. Not numbered in the present membership are eighteen children of the pre-baptismal age.

Funds to improve and furnish the building have been raised by various methods. One family sold excess garden produce and contributed the money to the church; the men of the group put up hay on shares, which will be sold to help finance the project.

A 4-H club, church-sponsored, and women's department have been organized. Special activities for the children and young people, including a hayride, ice-cream social, Halloween and hard-time parties, have been held.

Missionary Don Harvey conducted a series of missionary meetings last fall, and also visited in the homes of both members and nonmembers. Many of these families have attended church services since.

—Ruth M. Haynes, reporter.

Des Moines, Iowa

A series of priesthood meetings have been conducted recently by District President Frank A. Fry. The high point in this training program was the institute held in Des Moines on September 21 with Apostle Arthur Oakman and Bishop H. L. Livingston conducting classes in the morning and evening. A priesthood prayer service was held September 22; Apostle Oakman gave the 11 o'clock address. The annual business meeting and district conference were held in the afternoon. Elder Frank Fry was re-elected district president, with Elders Ralph Wicker and Harold Cackler as counselors. Twelve men have been ordained in the district during the past year. Missionary services have been held recently by Sev-enties Roscoe Davey and Don Harvey.

Indianapolis, Indiana

Pastor, Lloyd Cleveland

Following the southern Indiana re-union, which was held at Riverdale Park in Mitchell, Indiana, Patriarch F. A. Smith and Elder E. F. Robertson visited Indianapolis branch. Only a few changes were made in the roster of officers this year. Aaron Coonce and Carl Humphrey are now associates to Pastor Lloyd Cleve-land. Charles Nolan is the rural pastor. Marjorie Coonce was chosen women's leader, and Hazel Pace, head of the junior church school. At the district conference held in Byrnsville on September 21 and 22, three Indianapolis men were ordained to the priesthood. They are Aaron Coonce, elder; Lucien Holland, deacon; and Vernus Collins, of Center-ton group, priest. John Thompson, formerly of Evansville, is to be ordained a teacher in the near future.

Indianapolis branch again conducted a concession at the Indiana State Fair and cleared $2,000. Manda Thompson of New Albany and Mrs. Ockley Davis of Fredericksburg assisted in managing the project.

Arthur Gage, Jr., who is in the tuber-cular hospital, is showing a marked im-provement. For those wishing to write him, the address is Sunnyside Sanitarium, Indianapolis, Indiana.

—Rebecca Nolan, reporter.

Hearne, Texas

Pastor, Merrill Mitchell

The church building, which is in the process of being remodeled, is nearing completion. The entrance to the main auditorium is finished, with the excep-tion of placing the two stained-glass win-dows; the church school rooms have yet to be finished inside. A show, sponsored by the Bryan group, was given recently to raise funds; readings and spirituals were an important part of the program, with prizes being awarded for the best per-formances. H. E. Winegar recently con-ducted a series of meetings; on both Sun-days a basket lunch was served. Brother Winegar is from San Antonio.

New

Tourist-Eye View of Mexican Catholicism

By BILOINE WHITING

After visiting the bullfight and Xochimilco, churches are next on the Mexican tourist's itinerary. Some visitors go to worship, others to admire the miles of paintings, but the multitudes go out of pure curiosity. That was our motivating force, I'm afraid, but we hadn't been in Mexico long before we found the church to be one of the most difficult of all south-of-the-border puzzles for our rational northern minds to solve.

Essentially all of the churches were Catholic, yet American Catholics wouldn't recognize some of the ordinances performed in Mexican churches. Nationalism was so strong in religion that one devout Catholic from the United States was forcibly ejected from mass.

Every hamlet, no matter how isolated, has several churches. An extreme example of this is Cholula, a small village of adobe houses and carefully tended fields. Cholula boasts a church for every day of the year and all of them different, with one even approaching cathedral dimensions.

According to the history books, many of the churches were built under compulsion by slave labor, yet, far from being driven to religion, the Mexicans showed a devotion unparalleled in any country. The hold of the church on the Indian is so powerful that he can neither be born, nor die, nor live—now or forevermore—without its sanction and ordinances.

One explanation for this is that the Indians are not a reasonable people; they are spiritual and emotional. Their ancient worship of idols has been neatly shifted to the person of Christ, the Blessed Virgin, and their own local saint. Often the transfer has been made with only a slight change in ceremony. In the heart of the Indian, his own village virgin is best; he tells enormous tales of her prowess and engages in fierce competition with other villages in the beauty of his churches.

Our visits to the churches gave us contradictory pictures that wouldn't come into focus. As, for instance, the beautiful church we visited at Guadalupe—by far the most sacred shrine in Mexico. Guadalupe is to the Mexicans what Mecca is to the Mohammedans or Jerusalem to Jews and Christians. Here in this palace of gold leaf knelt penniless beggars and undernourished children, who rose from their knees to place their last pittance in the rich coffer of the church. Barefooted and gaunt, a whole family came in, haggled with the priest over the price of certain prayers, and sank to their knees before the altar, audibly voicing their supplications to God.

As I watched the Indians in worship, trying self-consciously to hide myself in the shadow of a statue, I felt that in spite of the benevolent tyranny of the church, it still represented the one beautiful thing in the Indian's life. Though he be a beggar in rags, the church is his palace; he is a shareholder in its beauty. In Mexico there are over a million poor souls barely existing in the lowest levels of poverty, yet they, too, can take the Eucharist from a paten of gold.

Among the most famous of all the churches and monasteries that we visited was the Hidden Convent at Puebla. The nuns supposedly had disappeared in 1857, when such orders were abolished by the government. For years the authorities had been suspicious of this house that used an unprecedented amount of groceries, but as the town was almost wholly Catholic, no effective action was ever taken. The secret was discovered May 20, 1934, when a federal investigator from Mexico City visited the house, touched an innocent appearing button on the wall, and a cupboard opened up to reveal a secret passageway and a strict abbess peering through from the other end.

The jig was up right then; the owners of the property were imprisoned, and fifty-six nuns were arrested. However, the local police were a bit slow getting on the job, (the police station was directly across the street) so almost all of the nuns escaped and were secretly harbored in Catholic homes.

Eleven years later, after paying an extra peso for an English-speaking guide, we stepped through the cupboard into the abbess' office, a thick-walled room with one window, a row of religious books, a board for a mattress, a crown of thorns for penitence, and a black habit and rosary hanging just where she left them in her flight. After her room, we passed rows of bleak cells, each a smaller replica of the abbess' room.

At the end of the hall was a blank wall with a crowned virgin on a pedestal. Part of the pedestal lifted away to disclose a dark hole less than three feet square, the only opening into the convent proper. Through this the nuns crawled at

The Trouble-Shooter

Do You Have a Utah Complex?

QUESTION:

Recently I heard one of our people telling a nonmember friend about our church. He gave a fine analysis of our doctrine but ended with a sermon on the evils of Mormonism. It seems to me we would do well to forget the Mormons and turn our attention to Zion-building. Is there any way of "toning down" the sharp tongues of these anti-Brighamites?

ANSWER:

By Dan Sorden

The "friend" referred to above certainly used poor tactics. He also used poor teaching methods and poor psychology. Regarding the Utah Mormon Church, I certainly think that all of our people should be informed concerning the essential differences between it and our own church. But those differences should not be trotted out every time the name Latter Day Saint is mentioned.

If the issue arises, some definite distinctions between the two organizations should be stressed, but only if the issue arises.

The word of the Lord is that we should "contend against no church, save the church of the Devil." Unless we specifically list this one church as the church of the Devil, this command of the Lord would certainly be applicable to us here. And then there is always an advantage in being lenient, in the use of tolerance, in being magnanimous and generous. To criticize another without cause at once identifies us as little, mean, and carping. It also indicates an inferiority complex. It shows that we are not too sure of our own position. Altogether, it is just not the thing to do. Let us be on the side of the gallant and courteous. Let us be constructive. We do not expect to build ourselves by tearing down another.

So, may we suggest that we be quick to defend, but slow to attack.

least twice a day, no matter how old and feeble they became. Our guide led the way, so on hands and knees we followed suit.

Straightening the kinks from our backs, we found ourselves in a long narrow chapel. Along the walls was a bench for each nun, and behind the benches were black wooden crosses with crowns of thorns and knotted rope lashes hanging on them. The lashes were used in flogging one another as they moved on their knees toward the altar of Penitence, carrying the heavy crosses and crowns of thorns pressed cruelly over their brows.

The altar was ornamented with the shriveled heart of Bishop Fernandez Santa Cruz. Under the grisly token was the inscription, "Dear daughters, pray to God for him who gave you his heart." Behind the altar was another secret door admitting us to the sacristy. Beneath the tapestry in the corner was an opening where each nun, in turn, went into a black pit to change her habit, as it was a sin for them to see each other naked. We descended a rickety ladder into the pit, illuminated by a flickering candle that made the pale statues startlingly lifelike.

Descending another ladder, we entered the catacombs where the nuns were ensepulchered. Each tomb was marked with an inscription, for example, No. 28. "Here lies the corpse of Maria Teresia Sn Blas, whose life was found complete after 72 years, having died 21st of March 1756 R.Y.P." Up to the time of its discovery, every nun who had ever entered the convent was buried here.

Every year hundreds of tourists troop through the convent (to the horror of Mexican Catholics) and carry home lurid tales of the abnormalities of the Mexican's religion. Far from being able to draw any conclusions, I can only chronicle what we saw, and pass on the puzzle of the Mexican's religion for someone wiser to solve.

BULLETIN BOARD

Central Nebraska District Conference

The central Nebraska district conference will be held at Inman, Nebraska, on November 2 and 3. Arthur Oakman and Albert Loving are to be in attendance. Services will begin at 3:30 p.m. Saturday, with Apostle Oakman speaking in the evening. Sunday will begin with classwork at 9:30 in the morning, followed by various meetings throughout the day. WEDDINGS

Ledsworth-Timm

LaDora Timm, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Timm of Independence, Missouri, and Seventy Ernest A. Ledsworth, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Ledsworth of Port Huron, Michigan, were married September 13 at the Stone Church in Independence. Evangelist Milo Burnett, grandfather of the bride, read the double-ring ceremony. The couple will make their home in Seattle, Washington, the field to which Mr. Ledsworth was appointed.

White-Johnston

Eleanor Ann Johnston, daughter of Mrs. and the late Reverend Wesley Johnston, and Perry White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil White, both of Owen Sound, Ontario, were united in marriage in the Division Street United Church in Owen Sound. The ceremony was performed by Elder Lorne F. White, brother of the groom, assisted by Reverend Harold Vaughn.

Births

A son, David Anders, was born August 6 to Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Teeters of Portland, Oregon. He was blessed on September 15.

Our Departed Ones

HOBART.—Carl Houston, son of George and Melissa Hobart, was born February 17, 1881, at Oskaloosa, Iowa. As a small child he moved with his parents to Webb City, Missouri, where he passed away on July 4, 1946, as the result of a cerebral hemorrhage. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of seventeen, and was later ordained a priest. He was always active in church work, giving freely of his time, talents, and resources. For over forty years he had been an employee of the Frisco Railroad; during the war, and until his retirement on March 1, he served as an escort on troop and prisoner trains.

He is survived by his wife, Susie V.; three daughters: Neva Trimble of Webb City; Mary Rauh and Ruth Lotz, both of Independence, Missouri; two sons: C. Houston Hobart, Jr., of Seattle, Washington; and Gail D. Hobart of the home; one brother, J. Evan Hobart, Aruba, Dutch West Indies; three sisters: Mrs. Thad Baker, Youngstown, Ohio; Mrs. Gail Wilson and Mrs. Oscar Bessmer, Independence, Missouri; and nine grandchildren. Services were held July 8 at the Hedge-Lewis Funeral Home, Elder James Daugherty officiating, assisted by Elder Arthur Rock. Interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery.

SHIPPY.—Hyrum Emanuel, son of Joseph and Julia Shippy, was born January 21, 1863, near Blenheim, Ontario, and died June 29, 1946, in the Tisdale Hospital after a brief illness. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church when a boy.

He is survived by one son, Edson, of Grand Rapids, Michigan; and a daughter, Mrs. Vivian Brown. Interment was in the Tisdale cemetery.

DROWN.—Cora Bell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin J. Farrow, was born January 12, 1879, at Sidney, Iowa, and died August 22, 1946, near Higginsville, Missouri, at the home of her sister, Mrs. T. M. Cook. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1896, and was a pioneer member of the Brick Church in Independence.

Funeral services were held at the George Carson's Funeral Home in Independence, Elder Perry Hiles officiating. Burial was in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

BRANSON.—John Porter, was born December 25, 1880, at Conway, Arkansas, and died August 15, 1946, at McAlester, Oklahoma. On January 1, 1902, he was married to Mae Cochran; eleven children were born to this union, five of whom preceded him in death.

He is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Pearl Williams, Mrs. Catherine Yaunt, and Mrs. Hellen Hubbard of McAlester; three sons: Tommy of Fanshawe, Garland and Roy of McAlester; one sister, Mrs. Ollie Oliver of Seminole; and two brothers: Bryant and Ed of Fanshawe. He also leaves fifteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Reorganized Church in Fanshawe on August 17. Elders T. E. Fitzwater and B. F. Pollard were the officiating ministers.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

Programs Suggested for Zion's League

Note: This is another in the series of supplementary program helps prepared for use with the book, "Does It Make Any Difference?" The author is Zion's League leader at Hamilton, Ontario.

The following are for use in connection with the first section, "Does It Make Any Difference What Church I Belong To?"

1. Start off the year with presentation of the problem, by presenting the drama, "Does It Make Any Difference?" (pages 85-98). Advertise this among the young people of your branch and their friends, and endeavor to have all available young people present.

In the presentation of this drama, use few properties. In the absence of street scenery, use a few ferns and flowers as a background. Full lighting may be used from the beginning, down to the entrance of the four girls, then a spotlight or center-lighting of some kind would be best till the exit of the four girls on Iris's speech, "What difference does it make?" Lights again are turned up for the finale. Conclude with hymn No. 298, Saints' Hymnal.

2. A visit with non-Christians may be made. Obtain back numbers of National Geographic and Life Magazines, etc., from secondhand bookstores, library, etc. Place these pictures by countries against the wall, and have individuals lecture from these pictures, emphasizing the religious beliefs and how these affect the lives and thinking of the people and nation. Former members of the armed services may help in this. (Countries may be China, Japan, Korea, India, Turkey, Egypt, etc.) Stereopticon slides, if available, would be splendid here.

3. Interview suggested on page 17 may be conducted as a "radio" interview. Have some mechanically minded League members set up an imitation microphone, and an "on-the-air" sign, and conduct your whole program as a radio broadcast, complete with announcer, call letters, etc.

4. Oral reports, page 16, may be conducted by one group acting as a school class with the group leader as "teacher." Have reports made as homework assignments, examination questions, orally, as regular class routine. Some humor may be interjected into this, but must not be allowed to eclipse the purpose of the meeting.

5. Program on beliefs of the church, and the event of their taking place (Joseph's revelation, etc.) may be conducted with one member dressed and acting as grandparent to the rest of the group of young people, reading a scrapbook, passing it around, and commenting on it.

6. Panel discussions, and discussions written in play form may be presented by groups.

7. Stereopticon lecture may be given, showing those phases of church history which have a special bearing on the beliefs of the church (coming forth of the Book of Mormon, etc.).

Note: In using this booklet, let us recognize that it is a compact, present-day, extremely helpful summary of the problems of youth today, arising as a direct result of the young people of the church gathered to consider these questions. In that case it contains material of vital importance and interest to all the youth of the church, and deserves their careful study. Zion's Leagues, if possible, should use this and try to carry out their study of it along the lines suggested.

You will notice that each section has two divisions, marked "Why Not Try This," and "Report of the Youth Conference." When preparing programs from these sections, study carefully the report of the Youth Conference, obtain and study what you can of the bibliography listed under "Why Not Try This?" In addition to the suggestions under this heading, other suggestions and plays, discussions, etc., will appear in the Herald. Decide which types of programs and what ideas will best suit the needs of your group, then plan your programs accordingly.

Those using the "Zion-Building Program" outlined at General Conference may adapt these programs for use in their committees as they may best fit the scope of each group.

Additional questions for discussion and development:

1. What should be the function of a church?

2. Why be a Christian? (as apart from non-Christian.)

3. What is the significance of:

(a) Renaissance to the Reformation?

(b) Present scientific age to the Restoration?

4. Why, since Christianity is the dominant world religion, have we not reached liberty, equality, and fraternity?

5. Does it make any difference if I participate in the services of other churches?

Celebrate Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Mellinger of Layton, Pennsylvania, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on September 22. They were married in Smithton, Pennsylvania, in 1896. Five sons and eight daughters were born to them, ten of whom are still living. All of their children are married.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day, and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Be Easy to Live With

I like brides. I like them so much that I'd enjoy being a fairy godmother privileged to attend every wedding. I'd give each bride a gift—a recipe to make life pleasant and happy for her and her husband, all their days.

The gift would be a word of advice—a priceless bit of wisdom that I have gleaned through many years of working with and advising people.

Here, briefly, is what I would say: "Be easy to live with. Be young husband's comfortable, cheerful appreciative mate."

There, Bride, is all the advice you need to be "happy ever after." Given even average intelligence and average health, your marriage will be a complete success if you follow this advice. It simply cannot fail—in those few words is the complete recipe for marital success. But, I adjure you, if you would be happy, leave out not a single ingredient in that recipe.

Follow the formula carefully, and it will matter very little when beauty fades and the ravages of the years overtake you. You will still be one man's adored and best beloved.—Priscilla Wayne.

P. S.

 HINT TO MOM AND DAD

If they are normal, those six hundred copies of Buddy, Jr., and Little Sister, are going to be very busy at Graceland College this year, and may not find time to write as often as you would like. Besides, they may not be very good reporters, and may forget to tell you some rather important pieces of Campus news. The "Graceland Tower" offers you a solution, so that you can check up on the youngsters (who will be asking for checks anyway) and keep in touch. "Graceland Tower" is published every week, and costs $3 a year. Address Don Benton, Business Manager, Graceland Tower, Lamoni, Iowa.

 AMEN!

You have sometimes wondered at hearing some ministers concluding their prayers with the "amen" pronounced "ay-men," and others saying "ah-men." Which is correct? The dictionary gives the preference to "ay-men" for speech, and second place to "ah-men," so both are correct. For singing, however, it is always "ah-men" because this is pronounced as a pure vowel and therefore more easily sung. Long "a" in American speech is not really a pure vowel, but a diphthong, and hard to sing in a sustained tone.

Still, you notice the struggle between choir and pulpit. The minister concludes his pastoral prayer with an "ay-men," and the choir immediately counters with an "ah-men"—sometimes there are as many as three of them, and sometimes seven. This gives the choir not only the last word, but several of them. It takes a hardy minister to stand up against the insistent multiple iteration of so many people. Who will win? We think the choir will, because they can overwhelm the minister with sheer force of numbers. Almost any year now, the dictionary may come out with the preference for "ah-men."

 OFFICE SECRETARY

One man found a good solution of the office secretary problem. When his last one resigned to be married, he tried in vain to find another competent worker. Then he remembered that his wife had been a secretary before he married her. He asked her to help, and she proved to be so satisfactory that they decided to make the arrangement permanent, or at least until conditions improve.

They have found the plan advantageous in many ways. He takes her out to lunch, and there is no scandal. When he tells her he must work late at the office, she knows it is true. But better than all else, when he arrives home in the evening, tired and wanting rest, she is tired too, and very willing to stay home. She does not complain that she has been shut up in the house all day, and that she wants to get out. Going to work makes a wife very contented with her home.

* THE WORLD is very old, but it is all new to those who are young. The baby playing on the floor is another Columbus setting out on voyages of discovery across the rug, and will find a new land on the other side. The puppy frolicking on the lawn neither knows nor cares that millions of predecessors have done the same thing—it is a fresh, original adventure to him.

As we grow older, our eyes and ears grow dull, we live in a constricted world of reverie, and lose the keenness and fun of living. How many of us die years and years before the undertaker gets us!

God's Lieutenants

You may not always be able to recognize them, because there are no uniforms, no gold or silver bars, in the Army of the Lord. But He has his lieutenants, just the same.

In the regular army, the lieutenant is the commissioned officer closest to the ranks. As a representative of authority he is not always loved, sometimes not even liked. People rarely like the person who tells them what to do, even though nothing would be done, and an army could be lost, if he didn't. No matter what general, major, or captain gives the order, he goes on his way; it is the lieutenant who has to remain and see that the order is obeyed.

God's lieutenants cannot give orders. The Army of the Lord is volunteer, and people do not have to obey. But the lieutenant is under obligation to get things done. He cannot push his authority very far; he has a far greater power—love. And if he loves the people and tries to serve them, he can often, with their aid, accomplish wonderful works. He puts himself in places of trouble and danger for their sake.

Not all of God's lieutenants are wise; they are not free from mistakes. Even when they are trying to do their best, they may be misunderstood, or criticized. They may find enemies when they were only looking for friends. Human frailty catches them.

If you are hurt or grieved by something the lieutenants have done, do not leave your post, nor let the Lord's work fall down. Remember that your responsibility is given to you by God himself. Do not quit. The lieutenants are not the most important officers. Christ, your general, is depending on You!

Strange Story of a Very Famous Dog

That was a very interesting story in the Saturday Evening Post: Michael O. Reilly's story, "I Guarded F. D. R.," as told to William J. Slocum, in five parts, ending in the October 5 number. My mind was intrigued by the very closing paragraph of the story: a dog's last farewell to his master who up to a moment before had been President of the United States. Thousands had laughed and many had scoffed at the dog Fala, but this was nothing to laugh about.

It is a strange fellowship that has existed between dog and master down the ages, and the dog has not been the less understanding and loyal of the two. He has been with his master in thousands of savage camps, long ago. In this age he has dwelt in the mansions of the wealthy and even in the White House—more often in cottages and lonely ranch houses—a nuisance to the neighbors, a personality to the family.

No one can fully appreciate this fellowship who has not had a dog for his companion in youth. Not one of those caricatures of dogs that modern breeding has perpetrated: but a real dog, a country dog who has work to do around the place and his own recreations chasing rabbits or killing skunks; an intelligent, dignified, capable dog.

I had such a dog. We were puppies together—at least he was a puppy and I was of the same age, comparatively, in respect to our spans of life. As I grew up into the teen age, he matured and so far as in his power was my inseparable companion. We were companions on many a long ride—that is I rode, and he ran—herding cattle or on other errands. When I took to hunting, he became a very capable bird dog. He would fight for me against any odds. To him I was the most remarkable person in the universe. I could bring heaven down to him with a word or two of praise. I could plunge him into purgatory by censure, and he would get down on his knees and pray for forgiveness of his sins. Remission being granted, he would testify in frantic and noisy ways that he was again "in grace."

This dog was sober and hard working and respectable by day, but he led a double life—perhaps a split personality. At times by night he would wander away on adventures of his own and would come back in the morning weary, dirty, battle-scarred, and repentant. He would swear in dog language never to do the like again, but, like humans, his memory was short. At last from one such adventure he came home with one leg and shoulder hopelessly shattered by gunshot wounds. There were no dog hospitals in those days. We had no chloroform. When blood poisoning was far advanced there seemed only one merciful thing to do. No one else would do it, so I took my dog and my gun and went into a secluded place in a grove of trees. I came back a badly shaken lad.

But back to the story of the President's dog. President Roosevelt was stricken and died suddenly in the "Little White House" at Warm Springs, Georgia, April 12, 1945. His dog Fala had gone with him on many a journey by land and sea and was in the room at the time. The secret servicemen called him "The Informer." No matter how secretly they might conduct a journey, Fala was pretty sure to make a break and advertise to all and sundry that the President was somewhere about. Now the President was going on a journey that his dog could not share with him. The secret serviceman, Reilly, tells about the dog's strange reactions. I have read and heard of many similar incidents, but this is one of the most authentic: to quote from the Saturday Evening Post, October 5, page 60:

From a corner came a sudden and terrifying howl. It was Fala. Forgotten for hours, the Informer had lain there quietly. Now he was barking madly as we all stared at him. Still screaming, the little black Scotty took off in full run, crashed head-on into a screen door and smashed it open. Out he went, running and barking hysterically until he reached the top of a near-by hill. He stiffened his legs and stood there, yowling until he was exhausted. Then he hauled himself quietly back into the house.

Animals are not supposed to reason. By what institution had the President's dog sized up the situation. Do these "lesser" animals have some sixth sense that we know not of, that enabled him to perceive the passing of the spirit of his master, and which impelled him to follow that spirit to some high point there to howl forth his requiem and his farewell as the first of the mourners? Truly did Hamlet say to Horatio:

There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

Graceland College Homecoming

October 25, 26, 27

Graceland College Homecoming this year will break free of the burden and restrictions of the war. Old students and alumni will be cordially welcomed, and assured of the happy times enjoyed in former years, so far as space and supplies make this possible. Newcomers and prospective students will have their welcome on other occasions this year. Homecoming is primarily for the old-timers. But if Son or Daughter, Niece or Nephew can come only at this time, bring them along. Tell them, however, that it will be crowded.

Some Homecomers will be entertained at dormitories. Please bring bedding if you drive; it will be needed. Some rooms can be had in town at reasonable rates. Write to Homecoming Housing Committee.

Tickets for the play, the game, and dinners may be secured after reaching the campus. Two dinners will be served in Zimmermann Hall, one in the Coliseum.

Program: Friday, October 25: 3:30, Alumni Council meet; 8 p.m. play, "The Man Who Came to Dinner," Zimmermann Hall; 10:15 Homecoming social hour, Zimmermann and Briggs Halls.

Saturday: 9:30 Jubilee Assembly, Zimmermann Hall; 11 a.m. Alumni meet; 2:30 Game, Graceland vs. Burlington Jr. College; 6 p.m. Assembly for dinners; 9:30 social groups.

Sunday: 9:30 Gold Star memorial service, Zimmermann Hall; 10:45 Homecoming service, sermon by E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

This is Jubilee Homecoming, the first big reunion since Graceland men and women came out of military service. It will be festive, friendly, and forward-looking.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

By ISRAEL A. SMITH

C. B. Hartshorn

examines the question,

Has AMERICA Gone Pagan?

Based on a series of articles in "The Christian Century" which will appear in book form about January 1. Permission to quote has been granted by the Editors of "The Christian Century."

THE TREASURY still has dollars minted bearing the "In God We Trust" motto. And that motto still is affirmed in our national anthem. Deity receives pious reference in political oratory as in days of old. However, thoughtful men—artisans, statesmen, or churchmen—are seriously worried about the future of Christianity, particularly Protestantism, in America.

My interest in this subject has been deepened by a series of articles which recently appeared in The Christian Century. Charles Clayton Morrison, the editor, writes under the title, "Can Protestantism Win America?" Perhaps few Herald readers will scan the thirteen articles, yet each one is filled with challenging ideas of interest to all of us.

The contest for supremacy in America's battle for souls lies in the struggle being waged by Catholicism, Protestantism, and Secularism. For the moment, the greatest of these three is Secularism. This statement does not overlook the menacing system which has spread its network into every state to influence the public and cultural life of America for Catholicism, Secularism, meaning "of this world" has struck at the foundations of the church by its outright negation, or by its indifference to Christianity.

"On its good side, Secularism expresses itself in many positive forms of ethical activity," declares Dr. Morrison, "in social service and welfare work under a humanitarian motivation that operates in detachment from both Protestant and Catholic church organizations

... It either denies or has no interest in affirming that human life has any meaning beyond the immediate experience of its events."

Three reasons are given for the large gains of Secularism at the expense of the churches:

1. Our secularized system of education
2. Our preoccupation with science
3. Our organized and commercialized entertainment

Latter Day Saints recognize these as formidable foes to which we have lost ground in common with other churches. We also should recognize that in any effective frontal attack we will need the help of powerful allies.

WHERE DOES THE PUBLIC SCHOOL STAND?

In the early days, America's education was a function of the church. Our "founding fathers" realized that government could not safely be entrusted to the hands of the demos, or common people, unless that people be enlightened by an adequate system of education. Similarly, in the sixteenth century the people were taught to read the Bible so that the Reformation would succeed. There came a time when secular America felt the need of a broader educational base than that provided by the church system, and tax supported public schools began. Protestants welcomed relief from this burden, but the Catholics who were more experienced and far-seeing churchmen, kept their parochial schools.

There is nothing in our theory of education which excludes religion from the public school. On the contrary, educational science today says that the curriculum should include experience from every interest and concern of the child. In theory the school is a replica of the common life—science, art, economics, politics, history, literature, even business. Why not religion? This means that every major interest is represented save one, and that is religion. Dr. Morrison points out,

Religion is thus discounted in the eyes of youth. It does not seem to be important. It lacks social and cultural significance. The public school gives back to Protestantism a generation of youth whose minds have been cast in a secularist mold, and the churches under desultory conditions take one hour a week to recast these minds in a religious mold. It cannot be done.

There seem to be only two ways out of this impasse. One is for the public school to open its curriculum to the teaching of religion. The other is for Protestants to withdraw their children from the public schools and put them in schools which will parallel the parochial schools maintained by the Catholics.

The latter course is less desirable and less practical. Parochialism is undemocratic. It smacks of provincialism on the one hand and paternalism on the other. Should a successful attempt be made to establish such schools for all Protestant children, it would bring a sickness to the public school system which might prove fatal to it.

DENOMINATIONAL JEALOUSY

The more desirable course then is to open the schools to the teaching of fully accredited courses in religion. The main difficulty in this plan lies in the fears and jealousies of sectarian groups, rather than in educational or administrative problems. Says Dr. Morrison, Obviously, no one has the right to demand that the schools be used to indoctrinate their pupils in his sectarian beliefs. But this principle applies also to politics and economics and history and many other subjects. Yet the schools do not exclude political science because the community is divided into Republicans, Socialists, Communists, and the rest. Nor does it exclude economics because there are both rugged individualists and New Dealers in the community. If these subjects can be taught without doing violence to partisan prejudices, religion can also be taught without doing violence to the prejudices of Protestants, Catholics, and Jews.

Some may ask about the constitutionality of such a plan. The first amendment simply says, "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." But religion could be taught in an objective way just as art and economics are taught. The pupils of grade school, high school, or at the college level can be taught the facts about religion, and to appreciate its Scripture as literature. No one should undertake this, however, who does not have the same training qualifications for teaching religion which are required for the teaching of art or economics.

Desirable as this may be in overcoming religious illiteracy in our land, nothing will happen unless an awakened America wills it so. Catholicism is not likely to give any aid, nor can we expect anything but opposition from Secularism. To get anything like a united front from non-Catholic Christians and Jews, it must be made clear that there is a distinct difference between teaching religion and teaching sectarian dogmas or indoctrination. A religious vacuum has developed in the present educational system. Into it will pour in steadily increasing volume the chloroform of Secularism, or the darkened waters of Roman Catholic institutionalism. Current history shows little else from which to make our choice.

WORSHIPERS OF SCIENCE

Another of the insidious seducers of the church is the movement within the group of scientists which is intolerant, egotistic, and scornful of religion. Many college textbooks as well as instructors by statement or inference convey the concept that science has freed men's minds from slavery and is the one and only Savior of the world. Dr. Morrison declares,

The messianic imaginings in which science freely indulged have been dimmed by the use to which science has been put in the two world wars. On a scale never known before, these wars were conflicts within science itself. All the vast implementation of the struggle, on both sides, was the contribution of science. Few, if any, scientists were proud of this fact. But after the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, a shudder ran through the whole fraternity of science as it contemplated its own supreme achievement. Scientists suddenly became something else than scientists—they became statesmen and evangelists. Leaving their laboratories, they went out wherever men and women were gathered and preached the ancient gospel of damnation unless men would repent.

It is true that theology has been changed by the impact of scientific facts. The idea of plenary inspiration of the Bible "from cover to cover" has yielded to "every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness."—II Timothy 3:16, American Revised Version. This vindicate the prophet, Joseph Smith, who expressed the same view seventy years earlier in his Inspired Version. Certain ridiculous interpretations from figurative language, such as "the four corners of the earth" and the six days of the first chapter of Genesis, have been set aside. But that does not justify a supercilious attitude on the part of scientists. Religion's claims to man's loyalty never was predicated on such a narrow foundation as infallibility of human interpretation of the Scriptures.

VALUES AND FACTS

Most all spokesmen for religion will agree with Dr. Morrison's statement, Religion moves in the realm of values, as science in the realm of fact. This distinction may be difficult to grasp because facts and values are not separate objects, but inseparable aspects of all objects. We should not think of the realm of values as a super-realm existing by itself above the realm of fact. . . . They are always attached to some object or person or event, that is, to some fact.

Science invaded this field of values in human relations and called it sociology. Peace of mind and integration of personality is of superlative value. The study of how to achieve it, amid the confusion and uncertainties of life, science calls psychology. Yet these specialists are readily apt to admit that religion is their most powerful ally. They appeal to it for help in their cases of extremity. These sciences have profited by experience. Both were treated as stepchildren by the older sciences until they grew up and vindicated their worth. Everything which man touches has the human imprint on it. It is well for science also to be reminded of its humble origin. Dr. Morrison reminds us,

The most fundamental concept in Christian belief is represented by the affirmation that Christianity is a historical religion. That is to say, it affirms that God reveals himself in history. Specifically and definitely he revealed himself in the historical events centering in Jesus of Nazareth—his life, his teaching, his death on a cross, and his resurrection, including also the faith of the first disciples of Jesus who saw in these events the revelation of God's nature and character and of the nature and destiny of man. This is historical fact. Here science and Christian faith intersect.

The supreme value of life is the one true and living God. The revelation of his love and wisdom is the supreme good. The most notable and worthy of human achievements have been motivated from this source. These are historic facts. If the claims of Christianity are ever invalidated, it will not be by the facts of science but by the events of history. When a community emerges in response to a higher order of values that shows its superiority to Christianity, history will announce the verdict. As we search the philosophies of men of science and the world's living religions, we see no challenger in the immediate future. However, Christians should conceive of it as a possibility, though a remote one.

THE INFLUENCE OF COMMERCIALIZED ENTERTAINMENT

Perhaps we have not done justice to either of the subjects discussed, the educational system nor the attitude of science, but space does not permit of more extended presentation. We come now to the third of the major powers alienating potential strength from the fold of Christ.

It shall not be our purpose here to turn backward the clock of social development. There were some sturdy virtues in the process, born of necessity, to create our own entertainment. But glorifying "the good old days" only antagonizes the present without commensurate benefits. Churches, schools, Scouts, and similar groups have been conscious of the values of creative leisure-time activity and are doing a good work. Under the impetus of the leadership which these groups have provided, city playground and recreation commissions have been established over wide areas of the nation to keep youths under wholesome supervision. But this is not enough. The situation is growing worse in spite of them. Social morons, greedy for profits, have undone the good they have begun with an alarming crescendo.

There are those spokesmen who have developed great tolerance toward this commercialized, ready-to-wear entertainment with all of its vulgarity and profanity. They will tell you there is no moral issue involved. With an occasional exception they take it all—from moving picture to comic strip, and from jazz to crime thrillers. Yet there is another side to this picture. "This incessant bombardment of the mind with sensuous stimuli has subtly, but profoundly, changed the quality of the mentality of our generation," declares the Christian Century's editor. This indictment is not directed against the youth alone. The adult mind also has settled back in easy chairs for sensations. It has no desire or intention to indulge in profound reflections. Creative thinking is done only at contract rates. Young and old, we are fast becoming a generation of "escapists," seeking to run away from the realities of life. We want relaxation, change, fun, excitement. Magic words, those!

The purveyors of mass entertainment are put to it to invent new plots and scenes for a public that has already "seen everything." Goaded by this necessity, they inch their way into the sacred areas of morality and religion in search of fresh stimuli for their public. Here two opposite motifs are utilized. One is intended to shock the moral and religious sensibilities with subtle and sophisticated "digs" at the established conventions which express and sustain morality and religion. A public whose taste has been perverted to the point of seeking after shocks for the sheer thrill of being shocked, actually takes this sort of profanation with gusto.

The other motif discussed is that of the religious play in a cheap, distorted glamour and with the context so synthetic and meretricious as to profane the subject.

FROM SUBJECT MATTER TO TECHNIQUE

With consummate skill, Dr. Morrison takes us backstage and points out how the "public mind" works.

"We have been conditioned to like the smart thing, the quick retort, the wisecrack, the cryptic double entendre, and disregard the subject matter in which this cleverness is purveyed to us." In a country which rates "success" in dollars earned, it will be extremely difficult to get a proper balance between content and technique. Radio comedians and masters of ceremony, being great money-getters, set the style in spite of morals, reason, or decency.

In a Weekly Bulletin which passed over my desk today, I noted this revealing quip: "Once in a while Bob tells a smutty story, but when he does, he graciously apologizes for the telling but heartily laughs at the smut." Some men seem to think that all they need is a clever line to get away with anything that pops into their perverted minds without deference to men, women, or children in the audience.

The following paragraph from Dr. Morrison's article is appropos:

However, the active function of the mind has not been altogether suppressed; it has been deflected. Its power to react critically to subject matter has been transferred to an abnormal interest in technique. The way the thing is done and the originality displayed in the doing engage critical attention in compensation for the mind's inability to form a judgment on the thing done. That is to say, subject matter is subordinated to technique. This, of course, is a complete inversion of aesthetic values and moral standards. It also represents cultural decadence. A good subject matter presented with sincerity and simplicity, but with an amateur technique, will be more highly appraised by a healthy-minded society than a bad subject matter presented with technical brilliance and originality. Increasingly, our society has become incapable of reacting in this way.

THE VIRTUE OF HATING

Solomon once said, "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil." There is a degree of manliness (virtue) in hating things indecent. It is unthinkable that one generation should bowl over the conventions and dignities which previous generations have built up for their own preservation and welfare over hundreds of years of experience.

The Catholics have been less tolerant of this trend than have the Protestants. At least their censorship of certain movie films has brought results. But because of their philosophy towards social indulgences and the confessional, if for no other reason, it is unwise to leave the correction of commercialized entertainment to them. It is time the Christians of all faiths stood up to be counted. Whose side are we going to be on in this battle against moral degeneracy?

"THE PROTESTANT TASK"

If we are to take the editor of The Christian Century as an authoritative spokesman for Protestantism, which he is not, the task is to compete with Catholics, the world, and the Devil for the souls of Americans. As of now, we Latter Day Saints are allowed no part in this conflict. The Federal Council of Churches and the International Council of Religious Education are not sure if we are for or against them. The latter group recently inquired if we believed in Christ. While they were reading the words, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ . . ." their minds must have been wandering towards Salt Lake valley, and all they saw was "Mormons."

According to Morrison's admission, "Protestantism has not learned to live in the modern world. It has carried over from the era of Individualism its structures of organization and its simple procedures that seemed appropriate and adequate then, but are so no longer . . . The American mind is now predominantly collectivist in its structure."

He points out that the Protestants number 43,000,000 as compared to the 23,000,000 Roman Catholics in America. This looks big, but talks weak. Protestantism has not a voice but the babel of 256 or more individualistic units called churches. In a conflict for religious supremacy with Catholicism he realizes that "we must all hang together or we will hang separately."

It is possible to bring about a militant group of allies by recruiting on an anti-Catholic platform, but the results would not be worthy. It might survive in body, but it would surely die spiritually. It forgets entirely the real foe, Secularism, which has numerical strength equal to that of Protestants and Catholics combined.

In the face of this realization, Dr. Morrison calls again and again for one, universal church—an ecumenical church he likes to call it—which will have both power and prestige to measure up to its responsibilities. From the place where we sit, as a world organization, we see so few important differences among them that it should be easy for them to proceed in that direction at once. Our own chances of enjoying a continuation of religious liberty would be better under an ecumenical Protestantism than it will be a few years from now if the present trend continues. If we cannot aid them directly, at least we can join the cheering section along the sidelines of the arena.

PROTESTANT MISUSE OF THE BIBLE

The church of Christ existed many years without the authority of the New Testament as the arbiter of differences. John's Gospel, his Epistles, and Revelation were not even written until after A.D. 90. The first New Testament, in the Latin Vulgate, appeared in the fourth century.

When the Reformation took roots, it substituted the authority of the Bible for that of the church as voiced by the pope. Printing with movable type had just been invented, and the common people were taught to read. The Bible was their textbook. In some communities it became the civil law statutes. The direct result of this transition from the authority of the apostles and prophets to that of the Bible was the establishment of many denominations.

Dr. Morrison points out the dangers and results of private interpretations of the Scriptures. Without the pope to speak ex-Cathedra, it was natural that strong men should insist on their views of particular doctrines until they were excommunicated for heresy. The natural response was to take a following into a new denomination. Note this paragraph:

But no apologist for any denomination may throw a stone of criticism at any of these "queer" interpretations. For he, too, lives in a glass house. The list of vagaries and trivialities is not by any means exhausted by what we find on the margins. It runs through the whole body of protestantism and takes in every one of its denominations, even the most respectable. It includes their sectarian creeds, their divergent politics, their conflicting views of ministry, of baptism, and the Lord's Supper. It includes episcopalianism versus presbyterianism versus congregationalism versus quakerism and versus many shadings and modifications of these typical forms of church order and government. These all rest on scriptural authority! They reflect in the most enlightened areas of Protestantism the vitiating and divisive consequences of the unscriptural use of the Scriptures.

Dr. Morrison's remedy for this unhappy situation is use the Word as a witness in which Christ is revealed rather than as a final authority. He quotes Luther's dictum, "I urge [insist upon] Christ, the Lord, who is Lord [rex] also of the Scriptures."

However, as we follow his logic on this transition, our minds remain unconvinced of the practicality of this new emphasis. He is right in his main contention, but how can Christ come to the rescue of religious bodies who deny him any effectual voice? Perhaps all of the churches including our own, have used the literal Word too much as a lame man uses a crutch. Without comprehending the meaning or spirit of the language, all have insisted,

"This is what God said, and this is what he means."

Dr. Morrison thinks we have had enough of slogans. "Not church union, but Christian unity," he brands as weasel words. "Christian unity we already have: all Christians are already one—united in Christ who is the living head of us all."

This paragraph in his final article is significant:

There will always be diversity of opinion, of creed, of practice, of taste, of fellowship affinities in the church of Christ. Such diversities are not evil; they are good; they represent growth, and contribute to the spiritual and theological enrichment of the whole church. The sin of sectarianism is that these diversities have been used to multiply "churches" based upon them, under the illusion that, by walling off their peculiar diversity within a separate and exclusive "church," the particular tenet of such a "church" could be both cherished and propagated.

THE LATTER DAY SAINT ATTITUDE

Sooner or later the clear logic of Dr. Morrison's claims for an ecumenical Protestantism will bear fruitage. It may take a long time, but the beginning has been made. Many of their original emphases on "divisive doctrines" have been thrown into discard. The fundamentalist influence within the denominations, which keeps alive the supernatural element in Christian faith, is losing ground. Perhaps this is in the direction of progress towards their objectives when ultimate values are weighed.

Our church, established on the sure foundation of apostles and prophets, has avoided many of the stumbling blocks of Protestantism. We have facilitated the leadership of Christ through our faith in divine revelation. Our chief apostle, the "prophet, seer and revelator," has functioned for over a century as the channel through which Christ has direct contact with his body, the church. Honesty, however, should cause us to admit that the forces—the flesh, the world, and the Devil—at certain times have prevailed for a season.

The human element through which God must work in all institutions makes them susceptible to ulterior forces. Neither the church nor its leadership has ever claimed infallibility. A consciousness of our own failures, notwithstanding the divine element which has been with us since 1820 to the present, should cause us to avoid any flippant answers to the present perplexities of Christianity. Our vindication will always be found in our results or fruitage.

To the degree that this ecumenical movement succeeds, to that same degree will our own church stand out in isolationism. To accept hands in union at the expense of our Restoration claims is unthinkable. Our root stocks must be examined more carefully than we have ever done before. Those among us who lose faith in the supernatural events of our history will be unable to stand up under the pressure of Protestant unity. Without faith in our historical claims of angelic administration, we become just another of the 256 denominations.

The more tolerant and Christian-minded of the Protestant leaders will be slow to deny us our faith in the peculiar claims of divine favor. They will ask, and should ask, us to show forth the power of the gospel in our lives and corporate experience. Acting under the conviction that there is divine compulsion behind our movement, we are set apart, a peculiar people, with the eyes of the world upon us. We must measure up to the trust which God has imposed in us.

Spiritual Gifts at Reunion

The Northwestern Iowa Reunion, held in the city park at Woodbine, Iowa, August 4 to 11, was an event long to be remembered by those who attended. There were forty-five tents on the grounds, and many visitors occupied room in the town; others drove in each day. The average attendance at the adult classes was 300.

The theme for the reunion was "Winning a Soul for Christ."

Representatives of the general church assisting in the reunion work were Apostle Arthur Oakman, Evangelist John R. Grice, Bishop Lewis Landsberg, and Missionaries Roscoe Davies and V. D. Ruch. Mrs. Ruch had charge of the women's group. Mrs. Walter Weldon and her assistants supervised the children's activities and classes; average attendance was eighty. L. D. Weldon was the young people's leader. Several "young people vs. priesthood" ball games were played. Grace Kellogg and her assistants ably cared for the physical needs of the Saints. Reunion expenses were adequately met by the Sunday offerings. Profits from the dining hall amounted to $678.89.

The prayer services were outstanding for their spirituality. On Monday morning Apostle Oakman suggested that all come fasting and praying to the next service, as the Heavenly Father had a blessing for the Saints, but they were not prepared to receive it, and would not be without much preparation. No breakfasts were served at the dining hall after Monday morning. Each day brought a greater abundance of the spirit in all services. The gifts of prophecy and discernment were manifest frequently. On Saturday morning the tent was filled; soon after the opening of the service the Spirit of God came in great power. The gift of tongues was exercised through Evangelist Grice. Some of the Saints were spoken to individually, and the entire assembly was given counsel. All in attendance were told their sins were forgiven, and they could begin anew with a clean page. Apostle Oakman interpreted two of the prophecies. Seventy Roscoe Davies, seated on the platform with the ministry, observed the vanishing of the top of the tent and a beautiful cloud hovering over the congregation. The Saints were told that angels were in their midst, and, had they made more complete preparation, would have been visible to many. The service lasted two and one-half hours. Under the influence of the spirit, little children arose and testified. As many as eleven were on their feet at once, waiting to bear their testimonies of the goodness of God.

The experience was comparable to the memorable dedication of Kirtland Temple. It was a spiritual feast that will always remain with those who shared in it.

The Age of Social Philosophy

By J. A. Koehler

Number 7 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

SUPPOSE YOUR community were stricken with disease. Suppose also that no one knew what to do about it. Would not someone try to discover a remedy? And if he believed he had succeeded, would he not try to persuade his people to adopt it? And if others believed they had discovered better remedies, would there not be a time of vocal theorizing?

When people are painfully conscious of a need of something, they seek a way to provide it. Man's necessities lead to invention. So the need of cures for diseases a few centuries ago, and the need of food and clothing, led to science and to the advancement of the practical arts.

Previously I said that, in his endeavors to solve his bread-and-butter problem, modern man made a bag full of troubles for himself. He created a need of a new philosophy of social life. That need set the minds of some men a whirling; it stimulated their thought; it gave birth to new ideas of how society should be constituted; it ushered in the age of social philosophy.

Do not overlook that fact, for it is significant. "The Age of Social Philosophy" followed on the heels of "The Age of Science and Invention." It was ushered in almost concurrently with machine production. As soon as those affairs got under way, they made company for themselves; and that company is social philosophy.

BUT BEFORE SCIENCE, there was a mental awakening; and before the mental awakening, there was a great need—a need of religion that could ameliorate man. In other words each forward surge of civilization gave rise to new problems which, sooner or later, led to new human endeavors.

Latter Day Saints in particular may need to be reminded that their religious movement has its roots in a preceding religious awakening. But for the Reformation—which was a demand for religious improvements—there might have been no Restoration, which is the name of our religious movement.

Moreover, because of the present state of affairs of Restoration itself—in the circumstances of its failure to "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion," the new community, the kingdom of God—there is almost sure to be another development, perhaps within the church itself.

Do not lose sight of that fact of a succession of historic events, as when the age of social philosophy followed on the heels of science and invention. For it reveals the truth that developments in human affairs lead to problems which lead to other developments. It explains why we have an age of religious social philosophy, which was preceded by an age of economic doctrines.

THERE IS NO CALL to begin with the physiocrats and to name all the economic doctrines of that generation. If you are a reader in that field, you already know about them.

If you are not, it would do little good to enumerate them in this talk. I need say only enough to indicate the occasion for the arrival of the modern prophet.

If any one of the economic doctrines of the eighteenth century had been the answer to the problem which arose with scientific discovery, invention, and the Industrial Revolution, and if there had been a competent agency of effectual implementation of that doctrine, there would have been no occasion for the appearance of the modern prophet.

But if Mercantilism, the most popular economic theory at the beginning of the eighteenth century, could have been the answer to man's economic problem, nature would have been opposed to itself. It would have been a contradiction. For the essence of Mercantilism is the idea that the way for one nation to enrich itself is to impoverish others. It is the idea that the way to increase its wealth is to exploit neighbors and colonists. And we know positively that any kind of exploitation is a breeder of trouble.

The truth is that Mercantilism like other economic theories, was a money-maker for certain classes of society only. It was, therefore, no contribution whatever to the solution of the modern world problem. It helped only to make that problem more difficult of solution.

The economic theories of the eighteenth century pertained largely to so-called "laws" of rent and population and diminishing returns and such. They treated all peoples somewhat as a dairyman thinks of his cattle, or a poultryman of his flock of chickens. In other words, they were ideas of how dairymen could fill milk cans, and poultrymen egg cases. They were not ways of promoting distinctively human or moral or social values.

Ricardo, for instance, said "the natural price of labor is that price [that amount of money] which is necessary to enable the laborers one with another to subsist and to perpetuate their race without either increase or diminution." Now that is a social philosophy for you, isn't it? Think of it as an answer to a problem that has some of its principal roots in the moral awakening.

My Dream

By Evelyn Austin Williams

A STUDY of the social remedies proposed by the political theorists at the time of the arrival of the modern prophet is most interesting. The confusion of ideas of rights of property and of persons is alarming. Those theorists regarded man, not as religion regards him—as having a soul which cannot be cultivated without cultivating the soil aright—but as little more than an animal whose body it is profitable to feed and keep alive.

But here and there, at the time of the arrival of the modern prophet, were economists who were shifting the emphasis to "human" or spiritual values. Some economists saw that some practical ways of getting good things done were morally bad. They perceived that to get the best out of a workman, it was necessary to treat him somewhat as if he truly had a soul. A few economists were saying proportionately more about personality and less about property.

Some went so far as to say that to promote the welfare of the state it was necessary to promote the welfare of the individual; and, conversely, that to promote the welfare of the individual, we must have a care about the manner of conduct of the affairs of the state.

That doctrine involved the question of how much liberty the individual should have, or, obversely, how much the state should control his life. And that is a vital question to which no economic doctrine, that was put to the test, proved to be the answer.

Do not forget, when you are judging social philosophies, that one "dead fly" may spoil the whole ointment. When a chemist, for illustration, combines too much carbon with too little oxygen—and so produces carbon monoxide instead of carbon dioxide, he makes a life-killer instead of a life-saver. He does something comparable to what some of our

Last night I dreamed that I
Had crossed the great divide,
And you came unto my bier
Heartbrokenly, and cried.

Your every thought I read,
Your grief was sad to see,
Because you were remembering
The mortal part of me.

You did recall my every smile,
My hopes, my plans, my fears,
Not aware, as I, of course,
Futility of mortal tears.

I would that I could place my hand
Upon your grief-bowed head
And tell you of the place I've found Upon this plane—instead

I know, in time, you too will learn
And fully understand
The reason for my happiness
Within this perfect land.

And you will know our earthly flesh
Is a robe that's cast aside
When we have learned the lessons here
And crossed the great divide.

How mortal tears and petty griefs,
All struggle and all strife,
Are but the lessons we must learn
To gain eternal life.

(The above poem was written more than a year before its author died on August 23. Her final illness had not begun. Her message of hope and reassurance will be appreciated by all readers.—Editors.)

twentieth century so-called social philosophers have done.

ONE MORE interesting thing. When the modern prophet arrived, the only authoritative economic pronouncements of the church could be interpreted to mean almost anything. They were full of ambiguities. They were ingenuous or adroit.

But the church had gathered into its bosom a family of children that were as unlike as could be. Their interests were in sharp conflict. So the church had to speak cryptically to keep from alienating the affections of the children who were its principal financial support. Its principal pronouncement is designated a doctrine of "welfare capitalism." Whose welfare? You may be the judge.

Moral enlightenment made great headway under the pressure of the problems that arose with the industrial revolution. The sense of social justice (which is at once a sense of personal justice) became more alive and more discriminating. And in that development is the explanation of the contributions to social theory of such men as Walter Rauschenbush and Harry F. Ward, who are numbered with the more recent religious advocates of social philosophies.

Throughout the last two centuries there was, as there still is in the twentieth century, much of what we may call groping for the true philosophy of social life. But there was much clearing up of ideas too. I especially recommend the reading of Elements of Social Justice by L. T. Hobhouse, to anyone who wishes to make a critical study of the social philosophy of the modern prophet. It is a masterful, philosophical justification of the principle of property involved in that social philosophy.

The intelligentsia of Christendom have been aroused to action by the age of social philosophy. The social gospel, which it has come to advocate within the century, is an outgrowth, in part, of that agitation. To make an intelligible representation of the reaction of the modern prophet to the total situation is the aim of this group of talks.

To believe is to be happy; to doubt is to be wretched. To believe is to be strong. Doubt cramps energy. Belief is power. Only so far as a man believes strongly, mightily, can he act cheerfully, or do anything that is worth doing.—F. W. Robertson.

600 Fairway Village — Comments on life in a university trailerville

By FRED YOUNG

It was Thursday, January 31—just two days before I was to leave for the University of Missouri. We had given up our apartment, and our trailer-home-to-be still wasn't ready. For days the housing officials had promised that we could move in—in plenty of time—but now, only seventy-two hours before entrance examinations were scheduled to be held, no one seemed to know anything about a trailer. Lucy and I sat down in the middle of our packing to talk over the situation. We didn't like the idea of being separated, even for a short while, but there was no alternative. She "went home to mother," and I caught a bus for Columbia.

I arrived in the middle of the afternoon, still with no idea of where I was going to stay, but my morale was pretty high. I smiled as I walked down Ninth Street—here was good old M. U. and I was almost a student. A little thing like a room couldn't stop me! Later in the day I began to wonder.

The student housing office couldn't help me; the hotels and tourist camps were filled; I saw a real estate agent downtown who, in turn, sent me to see other real estate agents. This went on until my feet ached. I finally settled for a bed in a large, unfinished building that was being built by the university as an emergency housing unit.

Thus situated, I turned my attention to studying. Tuesday was the first day of classes. At the end of the week I found my German grade

Meet the Youngs . . .

Fred and Lucy are both graduates of the Independence William Chrisman High School. They were married in March, 1941—two months after Fred was inducted into the Army. He saw three and a half years' service in the Pacific theater as staff sergeant with a corps of engineers. Lucy, in the meantime, was a supervisor in the inspection department of the Lake City Ordnance Plant.

Returning to the States soon after V-J Day, Fred received his discharge on October 17, 1945, and immediately got his name on the list of eligibles at M. U. He had decided to be a concert pianist when, at seventeen, he came home from the state finals with a gold medal, but—men, as well as women, change their minds. Today he's the man behind the typewriter, with all good intentions of becoming a journalist.

too near the "F" margin, so I began spending four and five hours a day "cramming"—and offered numerous prayers in-between times. Eventually the grade went up.

After what seemed like months of waiting (actually eleven days) I was notified that our trailer was ready. I found the nearest phone booth and relayed the glad news to Lucy. She came to my rescue on Friday, February 15—the day all the trailer doors were frozen shut with sleet and had to be "chipped" open. Fairway Village wasn't much to look at then; the trailers were all painted o. d. and stood in an ocean of knee-deep mud, but it was home to us. Lucy went to work on Number 600 immediately and soon had it looking like a palace.

The settlement grew rapidly. By early spring there were eighty trailers and more coming in each day. We held a village meeting to elect a mayor, secretary, treasurer, and council. After drawing up a constitution, we turned our thoughts to making the place more livable. Among other things, we solved the laundry problem. It had been taking the laundries at least two weeks to get the job done, and the cost was more than most of our budgets would allow. Each family was assessed one dollar a month to buy machines, and the university appropriated money for a "washhouse."

Lucy and I worked out a budget that saw us through the first few months on the $90 government allotment provided for veterans. Everything was fine until the Federal Housing Administration raised the rent and made us pay our own fuel bill. Then the price of food began to climb, and we've had to break into our saving account ever since.

Of the hundreds of veterans who enrolled at Missouri University, very few have quit because they couldn't keep up with their studies. Those who slid along before are finding that they can't get away with it any more. Actually, the veterans are raising the scholastic standards of the school. Some are even taking extra courses so they can finish sooner. They have given Fairway

Village a new face too. Shrubbery, flowers, grass, and board walks now surround the trailers. What was originally an eye-sore has been transformed into one of Columbia's beauty spots.

Lucy is making the most of my being in school too. She is attending the cooking classes for veterans' wives, supervised by the Home Economics Department of the University and plans to sign up for sewing classes this fall.

As for social life, the village frequently sponsors picnics during the warm season, and on winter evenings we go to "Night Out" at Reed Hall—the student activity center. Here we play games, make friends, and are entertained by "volunteered" programs. A special service, student-sponsored, is maintained for couples with children; if Mr. and Mrs. want an evening out, a girl from the university will take care of the youngsters for them.

We hadn't been in Columbia long

Girls! If a Missionary Asks YOU the Question . . .

Should You Say "YES"?

When I was a young girl, the last thing in my mind was the thought that I would ever become the wife of a missionary. To lead such a drab, colorless life when there were so many more interesting things to do was beyond reason. Strangely enough, however, while the idea of becoming "Mrs. Missionary"—or even "Mrs." for that matter—was not included in my immediate plans, I found myself slowly but surely falling for one Maurice Draper, a most enthusiastic church worker. He was a member of the priesthood at the time and was later to become one of the Quorum of Seventy. As I became more and more interested in him, my former ideas of the make-peace-with-the-choir role of a missionary's wife began to fade. In fact, I even began thinking it might prove quite a happy experience.

Whatever I may have thought didn't matter much, because I soon had promised to become his wife, even though it meant waiting an indefinite period of time for the all-important wedding day.

Being engaged to a minister naturally turned my thoughts—when I wasn't thinking of him—to the church. I found that there was no time for idleness—no time to sit and wonder, "What shall I do now?" Immediately I began to busy myself with Zion's League work and to attend regularly all church activities. This, I found, was as much a "thrill" as a young person could ever want. Many of the friends with whom I had associated earlier asked me how I entertained myself and what I did to have a good time. I don't know whether or not I ever convinced them that I was happier and busier doing the really worth-while things than I had ever been before, but I was! It seemed that the more I did, the more opportunity there was for service. Fortunately, the way opened for my attendance at Graceland. This, too, was an experience which led to still new paths of church service.

After three long years and eight interminable months of waiting, Maurice and I were married. By this time I was peering into my new role as Mrs. Missionary with eager anticipation of the experiences ahead. Now I look on the intervening years as being all I could have wanted them to be, as a result of the life I chose.

The Lady Said "Yes" . . .

Mrs. Maurice Draper

Ruth Willis spent the early part of her life in Colorado, later moving to San Bernardino, California, where she attended high school. She was graduated in 1938, and she enrolled as a student at Graceland that fall. The following year, she she took a business course at San Bernardino Valley Junior College. It was spring, 1940, when the Draper-Willis wedding took place, and from then on the General Church decided where home was. At present the Drapers—that includes Mr. and Mrs., five-year-old David, four-year-old Eddie, and eight-month-old Janette, are living on the reunion grounds at Brewton, Alabama . . . a very handy place, inasmuch as Father Draper is in charge of the Gulf States district.

Should You Say "Yes"?

Naturally, it hasn't all been rose-colored and lovely . . . but has there ever been a life that was? The long periods of separation, when Maurice was traveling, were not always happy ones; no wife with a perfectly wonderful husband likes living alone. There was plenty to do, however, and loneliness never licks the person who keeps busy.

Then came the children. I haven't had to worry about "time on my hands" since our first son arrived. Now we have three youngsters—and never a dull moment. Many married couples resign from all social activity when they acquire a family. I think this most unfortunate, because they need to have an outside interest to keep homelife from becoming monotonous. We have worked out a system of taking turns in caring for the children so that each of us has some free time.

There are compensations for every sacrifice. Being the wife of a missionary is probably the most satisfying life you could choose; you are constantly aware of the need for service to your church, and the very fact that you have a part in promoting the work brings untold personal satisfaction.

If you're debating whether or not it's worth-while—take my advice and say "Yes" before Mr. Missionary changes his mind. There are plenty of other girls in the field waiting for someone like him to come their way.

before other young Latter Day Saints discovered us and asked us to attend their study class at the Bible College. This group is made up almost entirely of veterans and their wives—a good example of the value ex-GI's are placing on religion. The classes are the most interesting I have ever been privileged to attend.

There are some, probably, who don't think the advantages gained by skipping in order to go to school are worth-while. They may be right, but somehow I believe the sacrifice we are making now will pay for itself in the future. Above all, our service to God and our fellow men will be greater because we've made the effort to get a higher education.

Seattle, Washington

Pastor, C. Houston Hobart

The annual business meeting was held September 25. Officers elected for the coming year are: C. Houston Hobart, pastor; Granville Swenson and Clark Coleman, counselors; Granville Swenson, church school director; Gertrude Clark, women's supervisor; Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Chappell, young people's leaders; Clark Coleman, adult supervisor; Mary Johnson, branch clerk; Russel Anderson, treasurer; Jean Davis, auditor; and Mary Coleman, historian. The junior supervisor and director of music will be elected at a later date.

The women of the branch are making preparations for the annual bazaar to be held November 8. Mrs. Myron McConley was their guest speaker at the September meeting. Members of the Zion's League meet every Thursday night; Shirley Johnson has been elected president. A newcomer to the League is Ross Swift, who was baptized at the Silver Lake reunion. Attendance at the midweek prayer services is increasing.

Kirtland Reunion

Kirtland reunion, as usual, attracted Saints from many sections of the United States and Canada. Under the effective ministry of Apostle Blair Jensen and President John Garver, the week proved inspirational and helpful to all in attendance. Other leaders contributing to the success of the reunion were Don Lents and John Conway, supervisors of all recreational activities; John Banks, in charge of the commissary and general accommodations; Casimir Nikel, pastor of junior church; Kenneth Graham, representative of the Herald Publishing House; Clarence Winship and Carolyn Davidson, directly in charge of all accommodations; Clyde Ebeling, director of music; Merle Guthrie, class instructor; Richard Baldwin, patriarch; Eitelka White, supervisor of children's activities; and Mrs. Enoch Swanson, women's leader. A substantial profit was made from the meals served at reunion; for which credit goes to Hubert Hurroon, the cook.

One of the major postwar improvements made to the grounds was the installation of permanent wiring to provide electricity to all tents; there were ninety-five this year, the largest number of tents ever recorded for a Kirtland reunion. Another innovation which won widespread appreciation was the playing of hymns and sacred music each morning before prayer service, and each evening after the day's activities were over. The music was broadcast from a public address system installed in the Temple tower; T. Evan Thomas was the organist.

The cantata, "Olivet de Calvary," by Maunder was presented by the reunion choir under the direction of Clyde Ebeling. Accompanists were Addie Clough and Grace Ebeling. Amy Axelson, Ruth Lyman, Lorna Howard, William Davies, and Balmer Liston were the soloists.

The reunion theme, "God's Expanding Light For Us," was well developed throughout the week.

Poplar Creek Congregation

Pastor, Brad Henson

A baptismal service was held at Henson Lake on Sunday, September 22; five children, John Atcheson, Jerry Burkett, Doris Slover, Shelby Slover, and Laura Waller, were baptized by Otto Henson and Pastor Brad Henson. They were confirmed by Halleck Millner and Bud Brown. The branch business meeting was held September 22. Brad Henson was sustained as pastor, and Eben Slover was elected church school director. Opal Slover was selected leader of Zion's League.

Improvements to church property include the construction of new steps and a walk. Further improvements will be made in the future.

Lamoni Stake

Oland Congregation

Pastor, Roy Kopp

The Oland homecoming was held Sunday, September 22. A devotional, prepared by Mrs. Bernice Kopp, preceded the church school hour. Several took part in the service, telling of their experiences in the church. At 11 o'clock, Stake President Robert Farnham spoke; Bishop Lewis Landsberg was the afternoon speaker. Special musical numbers were given by the choir and a quartet composed of Kathryn Tabor, Mrs. F. J. Sharp, Roy Kopp, and Ray Blair. Later in the afternoon, funeral services were held at the church for Mrs. Charles Haskins, a former Oland member.

The annual business meeting was held September 28, with Willard Moon in charge. Roy Kopp was sustained as pastor; Mrs. Will Johnson will continue as music director, and Russel Keen as young people's leader. Ray Blair was elected church school superintendent, with Eugene Tabor as his assistant. On Monday evening several members of the group met at the church to mow the lawn, after which they had a picnic supper. Different people have shared this task during the summer, keeping the grounds in shape and enjoying the fellowship of working together.

Liberty Street Church

Pastor, Howard C. Timm

There were 220 present at the Communion service on October 6, the beginning of the new church year. Howard Timm, who has served the Liberty Street congregation for the past two years, has been retained as pastor. The lot at the corner of White Oak and Main Street has been purchased for the new building site. The widening of Van Horn Road is expected to begin soon, and plans are being considered for moving the present building onto the back of the new lot, and a new church will be built later.

Thirty weeks ago the primary and junior departments began a drive to raise money for the new church, setting their goal at $250. A special service was held September 22 at the end of the drive; the collection of pennies and other coins, when counted, totaled $285.11. The children expect to continue raising money for this purpose.

The Zion's League installation service was held at 6 o'clock Sunday evening, September 29. Mary Lou Pratt is the new president; Carl and Mabel Holsworth will continue as leaders in directing the young people's activities.

San Jose, California

Pastor, Lewis H. Adams

Many of the San Jose Saints attended the reunion held at Asilimar, Pacific Grove, in August. On September 1 Albert Carmichael was present to officiate at the ordination of Elbert Guilbert and Lloyd Cline to the office of elder, Harold Cline to the office of priest, and Kenneth Cline to the office of deacon.

—Beulah Cline, reporter.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

Pastor, A. N. Barnes

Officers elected to serve the coming year are A. N. Barnes, pastor; Hildred Thomas, church school director; Dorothy Martin, secretary; J. L. Barlow, treasurer; Irene Williams, women's department leader; Gordon Gibson, young people's leader; Mildred Thomas, children's supervisor and reporter; C. K. Thomas and J. L. Barlow, auditing committee; Ray Williams, custodian; June Sherman, pianist; J. L. Barlow and Bruno Rodgers, building committee; and Freda Rogers, branch clerk. Nineteen new members have been baptized during the past year.

On September 22 the Leaguers were in charge of the evening service. Special numbers were given by the choir; Pastor Barnes was the speaker. The Zion's League social activity for September was a fish fry at the beach. A city-wide fellowship service, including the Baptist, Methodist, and Latter Day Saint congregations, was held at the Methodist Church on September 20. The next service will be at the Reorganized Church on December 31.

Tampa, Florida

Pastor, A. J. Chevalier

The Tampa Saints held their semi-annual business meeting on October 2; reports were made on various activities, and new officers were elected. This ever-growing group extends an invitation to all who visit or live in Tampa to take part in the services held regularly on Sundays at 10 and 11 a.m., and 7 p.m.; prayer service begins at 8 p.m. on Wednesdays. All meetings are held at the Civic Club, Highland and Fern Avenues.

—Mrs. Lois Morgan, reporter.

Coalville, Iowa

Pastor, Harold E. Mann

The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting held September 15: Harold Mann, branch president; Alice Mann, secretary; W. C. Jordison, treasurer; Clarence Jordison, custodian; Mrs. W. C. Jordison, women's supervisor; Anne Anderson, church school director; Frances Fawkes, director of music; Elvin Anderson, young people's director; Donna Brooks, publicity agent; and Dolores Gaffey, church school secretary.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day, and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Anniversary Prayer

Today I thank you, God,
Because you've let me have this happy year
With him.

I do not like to think of all
The empty days that might have been
. . . Had You not willed it so.

You have let me know love
As all I dreamed it would be . . . Tender, sweet, and passionate . . .
I could not ask for more
Except . . . another year,
A lifetime, if I may, in which
To prove my gratitude
To you . . . and him.

—Nomie

 STONE CHURCH

On Sunday, October 13, the congregation of Stone Church was told that the old organ, which has served so many years, would be heard for the last time. It was expected that in the days following workmen would arrive to remove it and install the more modern organ which has been purchased. Knowing the habits of workmen and the character of their promises in these days, we assume an attitude of skeptical patience. Anyway, it is presumed that the old organ will not be used again in public worship at this place.

The old organ has been a trial to the musicians in recent years: to those who had to operate it, and to those who sang to it. But, to the congregation that fills the seats so many times every Sunday, it has been a loved and beautiful voice. They appreciate the sacrifices of those who worked and paid for it. They appreciate the faithful people who have used it all these years. The old voice of the church may show its age, but it bears the affection of the people.

The new voice, we have no doubt, will be enjoyed and appreciated, too. In time our ears will become adjusted to it. When the novelty has worn off, and we know by heart just how it sounds in all registers, we shall love it, too.

Significantly, in this same week, Glaude A. Smith, lately pastor of the Walnut Park Church, will be received as the new pastor of Stone Church. It is a heavy post, and Brother Smith is welcomed with all best wishes and good hopes.

 MYSTIFIED.

Sir Pompous does not know what he has done to deserve it, but is delighted to discover that he is in good favor with Lady Gracious. Temporarily—it may even last for several days—he is a hero of small stature (but nevertheless a hero) at home. For what obscure act of kindness or generosity on his part this has occurred, he does not know. It may even have been quite accidental. Whenever he does anything right, it is almost sure to be accidental. Now he trembles a little, apprehending the inevitable occasion when he will slip back, and things will return to normal. "Being a hero, however small, is delectable," he says. "But years of experience make you certain it cannot last long, and there is some discomfort in it."

 CAPITALIZATION.

You may think that this capitalization business is easy, especially on a typewriter. All you have to do is push the shift key, and strike the letter. But for editors and proofreaders it is much harder. The "Manual of Style" has 48 rules for capitalization alone, many of them with several subdivisions, exceptions, footnotes, and eccentricities. Then we have quite a number of special practices of our own. There are also the border-line cases, in which it would take a Solomon to decide whether they should be "Up" or "down." And after a decision is made, along comes a new case that makes it look wrong. Editors struggle for years with these problems, annoyed and discomfited, and never able to reach satisfactory conclusions. They grow tired, and resign or die, having gained no headway. New editors, fresh, eager, and confident come to take over the struggle. For a while they seem to gain on it. We watch them with envy and hope. Maybe they can succeed where we failed. It is brave of them to try. But this proposition has thrown us so often that we can never be sure of what will happen to others.

EDITORIAL

Joint Council Visions Long-Time Program

The Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric in session at Independence, September 17 to 24 inclusive, was marked by harmony and a forward-looking attitude, with a view to well-laid plans for strengthening of the church towards a fuller and more effectual ministry and administration of its work.

Note was taken of the spirit of fraternity shared among the men of the Council, of the uniformly good reports from the reunions of the past summer, and of the success attending the Appointee Institute, held at Independence, August 27 to September 13; the latter, it was felt, pointing the way to further and perhaps more or less regular like activities in development of men serving in the general ministry of the church.

The attention of the Council was called to the need for planning the whole of the work of the church well in advance; for setting up of immediate and long-time programs for branches, districts, and stakes; for adequate housing of our branches; for the training and supervision of local leaders, and for intrusting them with the work in their given areas, so as to free general church officers for the ministry of teaching, preaching, and personal guidance to the administrative and teaching ministry of the church; for giving departmental work distinctively Latter Day Saint significance, and integrating it with the programs of branch, district, stake, and general church; for the direction, functioning, and growth of our institutions so that they shall show the church in action on a high level of service; for the promotion and administration of local as well as general church finances in such a way as to advance the spiritual purposes of the church; for providing literature and visual aids adequate to the work of the church; for seeking out and ministering to the poor in the spirit of mutual helpfulness; for advancing the gathering by the selective process of wisdom and restraint, so as to benefit those participating, and to retain at points distant from the "Center Place" ministers and Saints whose service is necessary to maintaining and development of such centers as should be maintained; for pursuing the missionary work of the church in domestic fields with devotion and vigor and in harmony with branch, district, and stake programs to be adopted; for strengthening and stabilizing mission work abroad; and for major and continuous concern in the selection, appointment, training, and supervision of ministers who can lead in achieving the foregoing.

Then there was conceived and endorsed programs of ministry for Australasia, Hawaii, and the Society Islands. And plans are under consideration for the European Mission. And for the near future, plans were adopted by the Council for the next inter-conference period beginning with April, 1947, as shall appear later.

In addition to the above, the local responsibility of the Apostles in their various fields was recognized and clarified, and these men go forward in their work with assurances of support on the part of the Presidency, and with a continuance of the fine support that has been given them by the Bishopric.

It is recognized that here are goals requiring a long-time, well-planned and executed endeavor for their attainment. It is, however, regarded as essential that the church see the way in which it should go and plan well ahead each and every part of its program for attainment of the ends perceived as desirable. It was with this in view, the attention of the Council has been called to needs of the church in the fields indicated. And it is to be expected that plans adequate to these interests shall be worked out in detail and put in operation as means and personnel may allow.

Fraternity characterized the sessions of the Council throughout, and the association of the men between the meetings as well. The vision of the occasion bodes well for the cause. And the challenge of interests pressing for attention should stimulate one and all to renewed diligence and a more consistent effort for achievement of the goals of the church.

J. F. GARVER.

Across the Desk

While on my recent visit to Plano, I was approached by an alert youngster, Terry Blakely, son of Brother Marion Blakely, who lives at Plano and who is pastor of the Sandwich Branch, and was handed the following letter. Terry is eight years old and in the fourth grade, and a careful reading of this letter does not indicate that Terry made any mistakes, either in composition, spelling, or punctuation. The letter is given to Herald readers exactly as it was written:

Plano, Ill.

Dear Pres. Smith:—

I was one of the many people to attend this year's conference at Independence. I was truly happy as I sat in the 2nd row of chairs from the front and saw you ordained Pres. of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Three months after conference I was baptized. I wished I had had it done sooner. Then I could have taken communion at conference. I am sending you a picture I drew for you of the auditorium. I hope you like it. I have started 4th grade now and I have a very nice teacher. I guess you are very busy most of the time so I will not make my letter too long. I was very glad to hear you preach today. Sincerely yours,

TERRY BLAKELY.

Whose Freedom?

Catholicism Should Consider

We do not want to say much more about the political notions of the Vatican, but feel our readers ought to know some items sent from Rome recently by Associated Press correspondents: the Catholic Church sees itself entering upon a "dangerous period," and designates the United States as the strongest pillar in the threatened structure of human liberty, while Russia constitutes the chief threat to that structure. The news continues: "Primarily, the church is concerned with freedom of religion, but like the democracies is also concerned with the freedom of thought and speech and the freedom of the press."

One religious periodical adds: "concerned but not in favor, except freedom of Catholic thought, speech, press, and religion," and quotes Leo XIII, as follows: "Men have a right freely and prudently to propagate throughout the state what things soever are true and honorable, but lying opinions should be diligently repressed by public authority. The excesses of unbridled intellect are no less rightly controlled by the authority of the law than are the injuries inflicted by violence upon the weak."

The present pope recently was quoted as saying the freedom of the press does not allow a man to print what is wrong or what "is calculated to undermine and destroy the moral and religious fiber of individuals."

Time, July 22, last, quotes the chief Catholic prelate in Portugal as abolishing "free thought, subordinating the individual to the state." A "bill of rights" there was suppressed, and the secret police made the principal arm of the government.

Your heart will fill up on these good thoughts about

The Home

By B. S. Lambkin

I have never seen in the Herald anything on the home from the angle that I have in mind. I think it is worthy of consideration by people at the age when homemaking affects the children most.

Love is a strange thing, it is not bestowed alone on living things, or on things which can return love, but to a rather large extent upon things, the memory of which stirs our emotions. Who is there that does not love something that belonged to a friend who is absent?

Home should be a place as well as a condition. A place does not become a home in the best sense until many things have happened there over the years: births, birthdays, Christmas trees with their anticipation and surprises, healings under the hands of godly men, priest's visits when the Spirit of the Master was upon us, the family altar, and a thousand other things all tied together by one thing, a place called home. No wonder that people who have had a real home get homesick when away from it.

It seems to me that God intended that home should be a place. All the wild things have a home, a place to which they flee when in danger, a place where they live for a long time. Our idea of the gathering and having an inheritance seems to agree with the idea of a permanent location for the home. The same idea seems to carry over into the millenium: "They shall build houses, and inhabit them." "They shall not build, and another inhabit." "Bring up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," may be most truthfully said of a child who has lived in a good home so long that when he is old and thinks of "the old place," there comes to him such a flood of memories he will be overwhelmed with them.

There is one more thing to consider. Lasting beauty can hardly be imparted to a place we only possess for a short time. Trees are among the finest things God ever made, but God takes years to make a tree, many years to make some of the best ones. One of my earliest memories is of a giant elm, as straight as an arrow and fifty feet at least to the first limb, and moss on the north side. I still think I never saw a more beautiful thing. Landscaping our homes is another thing that takes time; fruit is another. And don't think that a person will ever forget the fruit trees on "the old home place."

It sums up to this: prepare; gather; get your inheritance and stay there. When you are old, you will be glad you did.

The Reverend John Newton one day called to visit a Christian family that had suffered the loss by fire of all they possessed. He found the pious mistress and said, "I give you joy, madam." Surprised, and ready to be offended, she exclaimed: "What! joy that all my property is consumed?" "Oh, no," he answered, "but joy that you have so much property that fire cannot touch."—D. L. Moody.

Stop--Look--Listen!

ARE YOU READY FOR A MISSIONARY SERIES?

By Eugene A. Theys

A LITTLE OVER a hundred years ago the railroads were getting numerous complaints from the citizens of this country, saying that the trains were causing their horses to run away with them. Quite often as the trains would approach a bend in the road where a crossing had been made, a horse and buggy would be passing by; the horse would become frightened and would run away, tearing up the buggy and oft-times killing the occupants. This problem continued to increase until one day an engineer got the idea to put a sign at every crossing to prevent such accidents. This sign was put at every crossing, and read "Stop—Look—Listen!" This brought surprising results.

We need to put up a few signs along the crossroads in our evangelistic efforts which ought to read STOP—LOOK—LISTEN! Too often we find runaways and missionary accidents when we start a series of meetings in our branches. A few good signs may help to prevent some of the runaways and create results which are brought about only by good planning on the part of everyone involved. Quite often the results obtained from a series of meetings are only by the grace of God rather than by the well-planned efforts of the Saints. No missionary effort should be attempted on a half-hearted or ill-planned basis. God does not work this way, so why should we? In these days when we are trying to cut down our operating expense, we should be taking a good look at the high cost of our low increase in membership. In 1945 we hardly baptized enough people to meet our death rate and those who were dropped from the membership of our church. One general church official a few years ago cited a few interesting figures on our previous evangelistic efforts as a church. He said, "it is costing us as a church $1,000.00 for every person that we baptize into the church, and over a certain period of time we have been buying and distributing tracts at the rate of one-hundred members per tract." What a great effort we have put forth as the Church of Christ. This great disparity will remain, unless we do something about it as individual members of this church. It is time that we consider our methods and do something before we ask a missionary to come into our branch to hold a series of missionary meetings. It doesn't cost any more to plan a series of meetings or any other missionary endeavor than to make no preparation at all. Your investments will be greater, and the results will be productive when everyone has seen the need of getting ready for your series. Every missionary and apostle has a right to expect the pastor, priesthood, and membership to do some thinking and planning before any missionary comes into your branch for a two-week series of services. We can hardly expect any results from our labors until we do something. Let us stop some of these "runaways" in our evangelistic efforts. Here are a few suggestions that will help you in getting ready for your series.

THE PASTOR SHOULD HOLD A MEETING WITH THE PRIESTHOOD several weeks before the series begins and discuss with them the general program involved. Suggestions should be made by every man, and considerable thought and prayer should be given. The priesthood should meet at least once or twice a week from here on out to see that everything is in readiness for the series. Special prayers among the men should be offered, and each man should carry this meeting on his heart along with the pastor. They should be made to feel personally responsible for this meeting and not expect the pastor to carry the whole load; neither should the pastor expect to do everything himself. Here is a place where the priesthood can perform a real ministry.

THE PROGRAM SHOULD BE BROUGHT BEFORE THE DEPARTMENT HEADS for refinement after the priesthood has discussed it thoroughly. At this meeting a complete organization should be set up with committees appointed and delegated with responsibility for getting the program under way. These committees should report back to the pastor at least once a week for such meetings as this. Special prayers should be offered by these committee members along with the priesthood. Every department must be functioning to its utmost to see that the plans given to them are carried out both by letter and spirit.

THE FINANCING OF YOUR SERIES SHOULD BE DISCUSSED WELL IN ADVANCE OF YOUR MEETINGS. Some branches even go so far as to raise all the money necessary to meet the expenses of their meetings long before the services begin. Offerings at the services should not be discouraged, but by all means they should never become a part of the major emphasis. All reference to the missionary and his expenses should be excluded from your offertory remarks. No one should be embarrassed even to the one who wants to give his little mite.

MIDWEEK PRAYER SERVICES SHOULD HAVE THE SERIES AS ITS THEME, for unless this meeting receives the prayers and attention of the membership, one cannot hope for any degree of success. Well-chosen themes built around the series are helpful. A good prayer meeting always has an objective to reach, and every series of meetings has its objectives; therefore, the prayer meeting can help to accentuate the series objectives by bringing them to the attention of the Saints at the midweek prayer meetings through the themes presented.

THE SAINTS SHOULD PRAY AND FAST THROUGHOUT THE SERIES. A certain time each day should be set apart by every member, for prayer and fasting should be done whenever possible. In one branch the Saints were seen to come and go to the church every day for prayer. There was someone in the church almost every hour of the day, praying and meditating. Many of the men and women stopped by the church for prayer before starting their day's work. This group was so earnest in this that they saw fifteen of the best citizens of that community baptized at the close of their meetings. They had been praying for these very people. Prayer not only helps the individual but everyone else for whom we pray. If you and your branch really want to win some of the good people in your community, do this very thing that has been tried and found to work in this particular branch. Greater blessings are in store for all of us if only we would pray more often.

EACH DEPARTMENT SHOULD PARTICIPATE IN THE SERIES. Everyone in the branch should be given something to do during your missionary meetings. Quite often the work of a series can be divided among the different departments of the church. One branch held a series of meetings recently and invited all the children in the community who played instruments to bring them each evening; and a half hour before every service, they were allowed to take part. You will be surprised at the response you can get from non-member children and the attendance of their parents at this type of endeavor. Several new members were baptized from this one activity because the Saints had shown an interest in their children. Several new families started attending, as well as their children, thus the old adage holds true, "the way to a mother's heart is through her children." Ushering at all the services is another part where each department can participate in the series—cleaning the church each day is another. A clean church tells a lot of things about the kind of people who worship there.

A NUMBER OF GOOD TRACTS SHOULD BE SECURED. You may want some help in making a selection of these; feel free to write your missionary in advance of these meetings, and he will be happy to suggest a list of excellent tracts for your use along with the subjects he has selected. If tracts are used at the services, they should not be used haphazardly but with considerable thought. The missionary will want to suggest the order in which they should be given out each evening at the door. The tract passed out each evening should be on the sermon just preached unless you are giving a tract on a previous sermon.

An excellent method to use in your house-to-house tracting is to begin at least a month in advance of your series. When using this method of tracting, start in the area around your church, not just here and there around town. We like to convert people who live near the church. Also, we should encourage the Saints to live as close to the church as possible; if they do not want to do this, then it is a pretty good indication that the church is in the wrong neighborhood and should be moved to a better location.

You should start your tracting with a good introductory tract such as, Faith of Our Fathers, by Elbert A. Smith or What Latter Day Saints Believe, by A. B. Phillips. Each tract should be left at each door with a promise to return a week from that date to pick up the tract and to leave another. When you tract in this manner, you are soon able to weed out the disinterested ones and concentrate your time on those who are more apt to follow through in your tracting program. If people know that you are coming back, they are either likely to refuse the tract or read it, thinking you will be asking them about their attitude toward it. A good time to tract is the most convenient time for the majority, unless you divide the neighborhood into sections, and each section has a different day during the week to tract. Keep going back in your tracting each week, and above all keep your promise to return. Your word should be as good as your bond in tracting as anything else that you do. Keep this method of tracting going even after your series of meetings is over. No branch can hope to outgrow its present building unless a concerted effort is put forth in a missionary way and backed up with a good program to assimilate those who are converted.

SECURE A LIST OF SERMONS THE MISSIONARY WILL BE PREACHING during the series of meetings, also get his cut or picture. If possible, have all your publicity in the hands of the public at least a week in advance of your services. Handbills postcards, friendly letters, and invitational folders are a few of the many methods that can be used to excellent advantage. Improved methods in publicity will be forthcoming at our next General Conference in April; in the meantime do all you can to follow the suggestions of your missionary in your publicity drive. The Zion's League will want to take this project upon themselves to see that the materials reaches the public.

AFTER THE PUBLICITY MATERIAL IS PRINTED, organize visiting teams and canvass the community, and give the nonmembers a personal invitation to attend the services as you give them this publicity. After the first week of the series, call back on the community and give them another invitation, and encourage them to attend; this often gets better results than your first visit. The missionary will call on those who have been attending the meetings.

THE NEWSPAPERS SHOULD BE WELL INFORMED. Some newspapers will be glad to print an announcement of your series, and some have even printed a synopsis of each sermon day by day. When such courtesy as this is extended by your newspapers, you should at least run a paid advertisement in their paper. You most certainly should take advantage of the opportunity to keep your weekly activities printed in the column reserved for church news and their activities.

A COMPLETE LIST OF NON-MEMBER PROSPECTS SHOULD BE DEVELOPED with the most favorable ones listed as preferable. Give as much information as possible about each prospect such as attitude, hobbies, occupation, activity in local worship, books that have been read, or tracts that they have received, and the nearest member of their family who belongs to the church. Be sure that you do not confuse the missionary with a list of "suspects" rather than "prospects." It is much easier for him to concentrate his time on the "prospects" than it is to work on everyone that you would like to see come into the church. Your previous efforts are the means of getting your friends ready for the prospect list. Best results from a series is always obtained when you have a good list of prospects prepared. "A prospect is not one until that person has shown enough interest to attend some of the services or at least shows a friendly attitude toward our work. They should be willing to attend the services at least part time, if not all the time and read some of our church literature." "A suspect is anyone that you would like to see a member of the church but has never manifested any interest in the church whatsoever, they could be your best friend or any name taken from the telephone book."

A DECORATION COMMITTEE SHOULD BE APPOINTED. This committee should be responsible for flowers at each service, arranging pictures for devotional services, and keeping the lawn well kept. This committee should see that the church is kept "spic and span" at all times. The church should be unlocked throughout the services as far as it is possible, in order to give everyone free access to worship. Fresh flowers arranged appropriately are conducive to worship.

A RECEPTION COMMITTEE SHOULD BE APPOINTED with both men and women on it. Those who are selected should be people who can meet others easily, and they should be at all the doors both before the service and at the close. This committee should arrive at least a half-hour before the service to greet everyone who attends. The Saints should refrain from getting into "little circles" to visit while some nonmember stands back and feels that we are either clannish or impolite; but the truth is we are sometimes just poor hosts and are driving people away rather than helping them into our church. Thank God these places are few and far between, or are they? People who attend our church should be made welcome, and this can never be overdone unless we are not sincere in our greetings. This committee should secure the name and address of all visitors; this makes it possible for the missionary to call back at their homes. A guest book is an excellent means of securing this information. Quite often the missionary will bring his own guest book to use.

ARRANGE A CONVENIENT PLACE FOR THE MISSIONARY TO STAY. A home should be provided for the missionary somewhere near the church, with freedom to come and go as he chooses. He should have a key to the house if possible, so that he can return at any time during his day's work. The family that keeps the missionary should consider him as one of the family and should not go to a lot of trouble trying to entertain him. A light breakfast is his usual diet due to the fact that his other engagements require heavier eating. The family should keep their regular schedule such as getting up in the mornings, bathroom rushes, meals, and retiring. He will find it easier to fit your schedule rather than for you to reshift yours to fit him, so why try when he doesn't expect it?

URGE EACH MEMBER TO

PERSONALLY CONTACT AND TO INVITE HIS FRIENDS. All members should be urged to bring their friends to the services; this means that you may have to start a half-hour earlier than you usually do, but drop around early enough so that your friends can get ready and go with you. Why not tell them that you are coming by at such and such a time? After you arrive at church with them be sure to sit with them, and see that they meet as many of the members as possible before you leave. Tell them that you will call back for them the next evening, and continue to do this until they express the desire to come in their own car or to help you pick up others to take to church. One member did this type of work recently, and after he had taken one carload of friends to church with his wife, he left and returned with another load. He did this until he had made at least three trips in one evening. This meant that he had to start at least a half-hour to forty-five minutes before services. You cannot expect to do this type of missionary work and start to church ten minutes before the service is expected to begin. When others in this congregation saw that this good brother was making two and three trips to church with his friends, the others got on the job and started doing the same thing, and the results were that this brother saw five of his friends baptized at the close of this series of meetings. This branch had been dead before that, but by the efforts of this man and his wife plus the efforts of the others, the branch was brought to life again, and now it is one of the most active branches in that district. Your branch can have the same experience if you get on the job and use this method. You can do this type of work long after your missionary has gone, try it and see what happens.

SPECIAL MUSIC SHOULD BE ARRANGED FOR EACH SERVICE. Plan your special numbers well in advance of your meetings, and always keep the sermon topics near at hand when you select the specials or even the congregational songs. Do not wait to select the closing hymn after the sermon; this often causes confusion, and visitors stamp your service as being disorganized; this leaves a bad impression. Invite musicians from other churches to take part in your music worship. There are many talented singers and musicians in your community who will be happy to help in your services. Many a talented person has been converted to our message by the fine efforts of our music department.

MAKE ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE MISSIONARY TO CONTACT ALL PREFERABLE NONMEMBERS PERSONALLY. This can best be done through social gatherings, inviting your nonmember friends and missionary to your home for a meal, or some other gathering. Cottage and family meetings are excellent methods in getting the missionary and nonmembers together. Some branches holding meetings have had a social hour after the Friday evening service, and everyone is encouraged to stay; this affords the members an excellent opportunity to introduce their friends to the missionary. A light refreshment is usually served, and a short program is arranged. People like to know your missionary and to learn that he is a regular fellow like anyone else. Many a person has been won by a glass of punch and a few friendly hand shakes. You may even want to invite the missionary and your friend home with you some Sunday for dinner and spend part of the day getting acquainted or talking about the gospel. Never put your friend or even your husband on the spot, if he is a nonmember, by your leading the discussion. Let the missionary take the lead; he has had more experience in this type of approach, and you might make it difficult for him to do much on such a visit. If your presence embarrasses your husband or friend, then find something to do in another room and give them a chance to talk.

Cottage and family meetings are excellent methods of getting our message before the prospects. Only a select few should attend this meeting; the fewer the better. Too often people feel that you are coming to their home to put pressure on them, and if the missionary or one of the priesthood goes along, this problem does not arise.

These suggestions are all made only for the benefit of your group. Perhaps some of these methods will not work in your branch, while others may be a great help. Whatever your situation may be, we urge you to use your best judgment and also your imagination toward stimulating your congregation to a greater missionary fervor. Consult your pastor and priesthood before attempting any of these suggestions; it is also well to plan your series with the aid of your district president and the apostle in your field, but there is one thing that you should do and that is to plan months in advance of your next series, and see the result that it will bring. No series of services in your branch need to go disorganized. Pray over your evangelistic efforts, then STOP—LOOK—LISTEN!

The Church School

Have you ever dreamed of entering a deserted city from which the inhabitants had all mysteriously disappeared, leaving their homes and possessions as they had always been? You walk through the city, tread its silent streets, and unmolested take your choice of the wealth from the empty houses. An interesting dream indeed, but it is also a literal fact. The world is that city; a generation silently passes away, but it leaves the deposit of all it has achieved. The institutions, ideals, and progress are left behind, and a new generation enters into a rich heritage.

We are indebted to previous generations for advanced institutions of learning, for modern factories that supply the luxuries of modern homes, for the marvels of almost instant communication with all parts of the world, for the speed and comfort of transportation. Yet most of all we are indebted to God and holy men of all ages for the Church of Jesus Christ restored in its fullness. For without at least partial adherence to the principles of Christian teaching, the achievements of science would not be possible. The principal functions of the church is its ministry to the spiritual needs of humanity. Since the church early recognized that the spiritual needs of man are inseparably associated with the mental, physical, and temporal requirements, other institutions were sponsored by the church to minister especially to these needs. So certain by-products of the church resulted, the most important of these being the free public school system, hospitals, and charitable organizations.

Another organization of the church is perhaps considered by some as a by-product, but I trust in our church it has come to be recognized as the church at school. The church school offers opportunity for religious research, discussion, and participation not possible to the same degree in other church services. Unless we take advantage of such opportunities to increase our understanding of the divine plan, and to convey such convictions to others, we are not making our rightful contribution to the storehouse of our posterity. For we imperil tomorrow if we neglect the church today. Yet there are countless numbers of parents who send their children to Sunday school, but they are unwilling to share in making it possible.

Business and social affairs often separate parents from children during the week, but on Sunday the entire family can enter into wholesome worship by attending Sunday school and church services, thus cementing religious and family ties. When children attend Sunday school and church with their parents, habits are being formed that will not be easily forsaken when other enticements and the cares of life tend to cause indifference in church attendance. Youth is the most impressionable and formative period of life. Ideas are more easily molded and correct habits more readily developed. In this period the power of sin is weaker, and the appeal of religion stronger than in later life. Furthermore, Sunday school attendance greatly increases the circle of family friendships, thus establishing ties that serve as an anchorage which will remain throughout life, ever keeping faith's hope bright.

If we would be assured of leaving a rich heritage to our posterity, then we must serve the church faithfully today.

The Essence of Kingdom Righteousness

By J. A. Koehler

Number 8 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

MY AIM IS to show that Kingdom righteousness is communal righteousness. It is the people—the whole body of persons who compose the community—governing industry in particular, or the affairs of economic life, in accordance with the will of God. Kingdom righteousness is not merely an individual accomplishment, it is a collective affair. It is group behavior. Kingdom righteousness consists in conforming the laws, institutions, and customs of a people to the moral order of the universe. It consists in ordering the whole body of human relations aright—especially the whole body of economic relations. To establish Kingdom righteousness is to make industry, matrimony, and government, primarily, a willing implementation of a true philosophy of social life. I speak, of course, of the Kingdom of the prophets; not the kingdom of the priests.

My principal witnesses to this truth are Moses, Jesus, and the modern prophet. The testimony of Jesus and the modern prophet is explicit. It is concise. It is intended to establish the truth that Kingdom righteousness is the righteousness of economic society especially; it is to be seen in the economy of the people. But the testimony of Moses is indirect. It is very much spread out. Moses did not make it a point to say what the essence of Kingdom righteousness consists in. In his circumstances, Moses had to be a man of action, not of words. It was not his business to make apologies. His mission was to do what he could to make the life of his people the essence of Kingdom righteousness. So, unless one already knows, he must do a lot of reading to judge of what I say about the testimony of Moses.

IF ONE WILL READ the nineteenth to the twenty-second chapters of Exodus, he should get the Mosaic idea of Kingdom righteousness. For everything Moses did throughout his career, and everything his immediate successors did, as giving character to the life of the Israelitish people, was but a carrying through of the idea and intention revealed in those four chapters.

The story recorded there is this: The Lord, God, said to Moses in the mountain, "If ye will obey my voice . . . ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." That means, as all the prophets testify, that in doing God's will in the relations specified, the Kingdom of Israel shall be the Kingdom of God. It means that the essence of Kingdom righteousness is communal righteousness.

What are the relations specified? Chapter twenty treats almost wholly of the Ten Commandments, only three of which are distinctly economic. But chapters twenty-one and twenty-two get right into the heart of marital and industrial affairs. In the circumstances of Israel—in the circumstances of her journey to the land of Canaan—industrial affairs were principally pastoral. Some processing was done to provide clothing, of course, but economic life in the wilderness was at bottom a matter of tending sheep and herding cattle.

"Now [said the Almighty] these are the judgments which thou [Moses] shalt set before them [the people]": First, judgments respecting marital affairs, and, second, judgments respecting industrial or economic affairs which are to be conducted thus and so. And, as the history of Israel recorded in the Old Testament (I mean the history taken as a whole) witnesses to conduct these primary affairs thus and so willingly, (as Jesus testified) is to establish the righteousness of the Kingdom. That is to say that the righteousness of the Kingdom consists in the right conduct of the affairs of the community—of the people. Kingdom righteousness is communal righteousness.

That does not mean that Kingdom righteousness is not also, or at once, individual or personal. For peoples are persons promoting common interests, or conducting common affairs, as groups. When, therefore, Kingdom righteousness is reduced to its elements, its essence is found to be the righteousness of persons. But the pressing business in the days of Moses was to discipline the group—the people. And, as the history of Israel and the messages of the prophets testify, that continued to be the pressing business for more than a few generations.

THE IMMEDIATE BUSINESS of bringing order out of chaos in the wilderness having been attended to, Moses went on to represent the will of God (in the doing of which his Kingdom is established) in the form of a permanent civil code—a code that was to be of force throughout the generations of Israel in Canaan. Moses wrote the law of the land. And, I repeat because it needs to be said over and over again, to conduct willingly the affairs of the people or community, in accordance with that law, is the very essence of Kingdom righteousness.

The testimony of Jesus on that question, even though it is not voluminous, is quite convincing. The brevity of his testimony respecting the essence of Kingdom righteousness is to be accounted for in two facts: (1) it had become a settled conviction, it was the consensus of Israel, that the righteousness of the Kingdom is the righteousness of the people; and (2) the mission of Jesus was to regenerate persons, or to lay the spiritual foundation on which the business of the Kingdom, in time, may become firmly established. So Jesus talked mostly about personal righteousness.

The principle on which Jesus built was simply this: that to perfect the social situation, personality must be perfected. Whereas Moses built on the principle that to offset the degrading effects of Egyptian slavery on personality, the thing to do in the circumstances was to try to improve the social situation.

But, now, the direct testimony of Jesus. This is it: The gentiles seek to provide the things needed to feed and clothe the body by resort to direct methods—by concentrating on industry, business, and the like. But don't do it that way. Instead "seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness"—or, as the modern prophet translated it, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness"—"and all these things [which may be made available only through the industrial activity of the people] shall be added unto you." In other words, the solution of the economic problem of a people is to be found, not in invention and technology and business and finance, but in the right ordering of communal relations. And that right ordering of communal relations, primarily, is the essence of Kingdom righteousness. That is the manner in which the testimony of Jesus must be interpreted, since we know positively that the goods of life may be provided only through economic endeavor.

THIS IS THE AGE of Kingdom-rebuilding. In the nature of things, therefore, the testimony of the modern prophet respecting the essence of Kingdom righteousness is very definite; it is specific; it is to the point. When he said, "Organize my kingdom upon the promised land," the context of that injunction reveals precisely what he meant. He meant to "organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship." He meant to "appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families," and all. He meant that the organization of the Kingdom is at once "an organization of my people in establishing and regulating the affairs of the storehouse." He meant that to organize the Kingdom is to organize the economic life of the people so as to honor the right of equality of economic opportunity according to talent, and so on. He meant that to establish a mode of economic self-governance grounded in ethical principles is to establish the righteousness of the Kingdom. He meant that to build "the city," to organize the community, so as to make it an implementation of the will of God, is to establish the righteousness of the kingdom. In a word, he meant that the essence of Kingdom righteousness is communal righteousness, and especially economic righteousness.

THE MODERN PROPHET says that "the Kingdom of Zion," which means the Zionite mode of community life, "is in very deed the kingdom of our God and of his Christ." He uses the term "Zion" and "the kingdom" interchangeably. When he speaks of either, he also means the other, for they are one and the same thing.

He brings out the idea of righteousness when he speaks of Zion as of a "cause"—which means a mode of economic life in which human relations are ordered aright. It means a great enterprise grounded in moral considerations. When he speaks of bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion, he means to bring forth and establish the righteousness of the kingdom. When he speaks of "the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom"

he means the principles of social inheritance, stewardships, the socialization (or consecration) of the economic surplus, the principle of local economic autonomy, the principle of economic freedom in the midst of order and subordination. He leaves no room to doubt that he means precisely that. For a Kingdom-building prophet must make himself clearly understood, if his Kingdom-building leadership is to lead.

Almost as explicit are the studies enjoined in preparation for the Kingdom-building business. Those studies include the whole category of social sciences. They embrace every subject that bears upon the right conduct of the business of peoples. They include current events, domestic and foreign affairs, as well as philosophy and science. And in that curriculum is revealed the modern prophet's concept of Kingdom righteousness. It is the righteousness of peoples. It is communal righteousness. It is the righteousness of industry and government.

The conclusions to which those studies lead are the essence of the social philosophy of the modern prophet. When one has mastered that social philosophy, he has apprehended the modern prophet's concept of Kingdom righteousness.

PEACE OF MIND, by Joshua Loth Liebman. Simon & Schuster, 1946. 203 pages. $2.50.

There are many approaches to the solution of the problems involved in our mental life: the various Oriental faiths, Roman Catholicism, science and psychiatry, and Protestantism which has many small differences from one denomination to another. It had not occurred to readers in general perhaps, that there is a Jewish approach. This appears to be it. For though it is not specifically so identified, one cannot fail to recognize in it the inescapable Jewish ideology that has conditioned the author's life and philosophy.

This is a religious solution to the problems of disturbance of mind. Its God, to all practical purposes, is our God. Christ, however, is not there. To the many eminent secular critics who have praised this book, this fact will make no difference. Indeed, it is possible they may not have noticed it. The fact that Jewish authorities and Jewish lives are cited for examples will make this a useful work for the synagogue, and good supplementary reading for those who wish to have the best books on the subject in their libraries.

THE SOCIETY KIT, Volume 4, Edited by Margaret G. Hummel. Westminster Press, 1946. 288 pages. $2.50.

If you are having difficulty planning a fellowship service, or need suggestions for round-table discussions, you will find The Society Kit helpful. It is the fourth in a series of yearly activity outlines for young people, and is designed to cover all holidays and special occasions. One section contains devotionals and plays printed on tear-out pages. There are suggestions for the use of visual aids, tips on how to avoid dull meetings, and year-round party ideas.

While the "Kit" is not specifically designed for Latter Day Saints, it is perhaps the best collection of its kind available.

JOURNAL FROM MY CELL, by Roland de Pury. Harper, 1946. 140 pages. $1.50. Translated from the French by Barrows Mussey, with an introduction by Paul Geren.

The author of this little book was more concerned with his reactions and feelings, his spiritual and psychological conditions, than with detailed descriptions of actual sufferings and privations. He gives enough of the latter, avoiding sordid passages, to maintain an atmosphere of reality. His primary concern is the state of mind of the prisoner, the mental suffering, the struggle against despair.

The literary and spiritual quality of the book is indicated in a fine passage from the Preface:

Certainly the fortunate survivor is often ashamed to be alive, ashamed of his freedom, of the very words he speaks. He feels as if he had stolen it all from those who did not escape, and was profiting by their deaths. At such times he longs only to hold his peace with them. But sometimes the same feeling that drives him to share the silence of those who can no longer speak may compel him to speak for them, to be the voice of the dead and voiceless multitude. He feels as one with them in their silence: his words are not his, but theirs.

EAST RIVER, by Sholem Asch. Putnam's, 1946. 438 pages. $3. Translated by A. H. Gross.

In this book, the author of two great religious books, The Nazarene and The Apostle, turns to a more modern scene, about the beginning of this century, and a nearer location, New York City. His theme is the same as that of another famous writer of his race, Israel Zangwill, who stirred our parents a generation ago with his play, The Melting Pot. Mr. Asch is one, we must gratefully acknowledge, who uses his art to maintain the great traditions and nobility of literature. He gives us realism without tawdriness and without offense.

Better books of this kind are more than fiction. There is a sense in which they convey truth. They are a record, such as the fact-gatherers might never be able to purvey, of a social condition at a certain time in the life of one of our great cities. A hundred years from now, five hundred years from now, historians and students could read this book, and learn more of what our people and our times are like than they could from the history texts.

Let the reader be assured, that the characters in this book have all the qualities of real and living people. The author gives us a good story, which can be enjoyed in the reading.

A GOOD STORY!

The Message

A Christmas Play in Three Acts Based on the Book of Mormon

By Verda E. Bryant

CHARACTERS

Zedra, a crippled child.
Ramah, daughter of a prophet of God.
Abish, Ramah's friend.
Sariah, daughter of a chief judge.
Minon, Sariah's friend.

(Zedra is seated in a chair with a blanket covering her legs. Her chin is resting in the palm of her hand, and she has fallen asleep. Ramah and Abish rush in, awakening Zedra.)

Abish: O Zedra, I wish you had been with us at the market place. A most wonderful thing has happened!

Ramah: A Lamanite, whom they called Samuel, stood upon the wall around the city and said he had a message from God for the people of our land.

Zedra: A message from God! O Ramah! I wish I were like other children and could go down into the market place with you and Abish. If only my legs were strong like yours. Tell me about it, won't you?

Ramah: The guards at the gate wouldn't let him in the city.

Abish: He said God had commanded him to deliver his message, so he talked to the people from the wall.

Zedra: What was his message?

Ramah: He said that in five years the Son of God would be born near Jerusalem.

Abish: And at the time of his coming there would be great lights in the heavens, and the night before he comes there shall be no darkness.

Zedra: No darkness?

Ramah: Samuel said it would be like a day and a night and a day as if it were one long day.

Abish: He said it was to be a sign that the Son of God was about to be born.

Zedra: That would indeed be a wonderful sign.

Abish: He also said there would be a new star in the sky and that whoever believed on the Son of God would have everlasting life.

Ramah: Samuel also said that the people of Zarahemla were wicked and that they must repent and be baptized or they would be destroyed.

(Enter Sariah and Minon.)

Sariah: Ha! You must have been to the market place, too. You surely didn't believe the things that old Lamanite said, did you?

Minon: It was great sport. I don't know when I have had so much fun. Imagine anyone's saying that our great nation would be destroyed!

Ramah: Father says that our nation is declining fast because of the wickedness of the people.

Sariah: What does your father know about it? I know he says he is a prophet of God, but how do we know? Now, my father is a chief judge, and he knows everything. He told me not to pay any attention to Samuel.

Minon: Anyone is silly who believes the things he says.

Abish: Well, my father believed Samuel. He went to find Nephi so he could be baptized.

Sariah: As if baptism could make any difference. Say, Minon, didn't Samuel look surprised when they shot arrows and threw stones at him?

Zedra: Did they hurt him?

Abish: Of course not. Did you notice, Sariah, that none of them struck him?

Ramah: Father says that was because God was protecting him.

Minon: Humph! Guess their aim wasn't so good, or else they just wanted to scare him.

Sariah: I guess they did scare him. He sure jumped down from the wall fast and ran away.

Ramah: Father says he had completed his mission, so he just went back to his own country, knowing he had done what God wanted him to do.

Minon: Let's go, Sariah. We've more important things to do than to worry about someone who may be born in five years away on the other side of the world.

(Exit Sariah and Minon.)

Zedra: Aren't they mean. Tell me more about Samuel and the Son of God who is to be born.

Abish: Samuel said that men would kill the Christ and at the time of his death there would be thunderings and lightnings. There will be storms and earthquakes, and cities shall be destroyed.

Ramah: And there will be darkness upon the land for three whole days!

Zedra: I don't quite understand it all, but I believe the things Samuel said, and I want to be a good girl. But I do wish I were strong as other children are.

Ramah: Father says the prophets of old have said that when the Christ comes he shall heal the sick and cause the lame to walk.

Zedra: I am lame. Maybe he will heal me. I pray that I may be worthy to be blessed by the Son of God when he comes.

ACT 2—Five Years Later.

(Zedra sits in her chair. Ramah and Abish are seated beside her with their heads in their hands in grief.)

Zedra: Don't worry, girls. I'm sure that God will not let this awful thing happen.

Ramah: How can we help but worry. The people get more wicked as time goes by, and now, tonight, our fathers and all those who believed in the words of Samuel the Lamanite are to die—unless the sign shall come.

Abish: It won't be long now, either. If God is going to save all those people, he'll have to do it soon. It is almost time for the sun to set.

(Enter Sariah and Minon.)

Sariah: I kept telling you over and over that your fathers were wrong. My father says it is bad for the nation to have men who believe the words of Samuel going about among the people. I'm sorry, though, that your fathers have to die with the rest.

Ramah: (With feeling) God will protect his people, I know. Our fathers are good men who have always kept the commandments of God.

Minon: I admire your faith, my friend Ramah. But isn't it pretty late to be so sure. Look, the sun is going down.

Abish: But it isn't getting dark. When the sun is that low, dusk begins to fall. See, in the east it is still bright!

Ramah: Abish! Are you sure? Perhaps it is our imagination.

Zedra: No, it isn't! Let's watch.

Sariah: Oh, it'll get dark in a few minutes.

Minon: The sun is completely gone.

Abish: And it isn't at all dark. It is as light as the noonday!

Ramah: Then our fathers and all the others will be released! Come, Abish, let us go find them.

(Exit Abish and Ramah.)

Sariah: I can hardly believe it. Father said it was impossible.

Minon: Do you suppose Samuel the Lamanite was a true prophet of God and that tomorrow the Son of God will be born?

Zedra: I'm sure of it. You have seen the sign. You must believe.

Sariah: I do believe it now.

Minon: And so do I.

(Zedra sits alone in her chair. She is gazing intently toward the sky.)

Zedra: For thirty-six hours we have had no darkness. The sun is going down again, and there will be a new star in the sky tonight to show that the Christ has been born. (Continues to gaze into the heavens.)

Zedra: (Suddenly) There is the new star. (Excitedly arises and walks across stage, staring at the new star, unconscious of the fact she has walked.) The prophecy of Samuel is fulfilled.

(Enter Ramah, Abish, Sariah, and Minon from behind her.)

Sariah: Zedra! How did you get over there?

Abish: You are standing!

Minon: Your legs are strong!

Zedra: (Amazed and looks down at her legs.) Why—I, I can't understand it. I didn't realize I had walked. I saw the new star in the sky, and I wanted to see it better. Have you seen it?

Sariah: Yes, we came to tell you about it. The Christ child has been born.

Minon: I can't understand how you could walk, Zedra. Your legs have always been too weak to hold your weight!

Abish: Ramah, what was it your father said this morning about faith?

Ramah: He said that if we had faith enough we could move mountains. Zedra, your faith has made you well.

Zedra: (Walking around in a circle to try her legs.) I'm so very happy. Now I can play like you and go down to the market place.

Ramah: Let us go now. Everyone throughout the whole land believes in the Son of God because they have seen his sign.

Minon: Everybody is gathering at the market place to sing praises to the Christ.

Zedra: And I sing my praises, too, to the new little Christ child who has come to the earth.

Your Signature

It is an intensely personal thing; so completely under your control that no one else can have it unless you give it. Given wisely, your signature can add greatly to your well being. But, when given carelessly, it can cause distress and greater loss than if you gave a thief full access to your possessions.

It is unfortunate, but sadly true, that many persons sign contracts without reading them, or without possessing a complete knowledge of their terms.

A good precaution: Don't sign a contract unless you understand its terms and conditions.

Remember! Read before you sign, and keep a copy.

You may find help for your problems in

Musings of a Housewife

By Enid Stubbart DeBarthe

HOUSEKEEPING: Sometimes I am tempted to envy the person who truthfully likes to keep house. I like to do occasional thorough cleaning and the decorating. I really like to entertain when I can prepare for it, and I enjoy my home. But I do become irked with the eternal rounds of meals, dishes, sweeping, etc. Had I not discovered that really many other women have a similar feeling of frustration in the endless repetitious part of the work of housekeeping, I would hesitate to confess my aversion.

A friend told me recently how inadequate she felt after another woman piously stated she never had time to read because she found if she really kept house her time was fully consumed. This first was struggling with the problem so many of us face: to what extent must we deny our hungry minds in order to keep our houses which so avidly eat up our time and strength? (Incidentally, this mother is contributing four scholastically and socially outstanding youths to the church.)

This problem is one to which we must each adjust according to our own needs and opportunities. And while we do this adjusting, let us be charitable toward each other. The housewife with an insatiable mind finds housekeeping quite restricting at times. And if she occasionally rebels against the confinement of the range, sink, and scrub pail to indulge in a study fest, be tolerant.

I like to read biographies, and it has been interesting to note that many of the most successful persons had mothers who were not the best housekeepers, who occasionally rebelled to take time for study or hikes with her children, or left most of the fancywork out of her routine in order to read to her children or carry on her own research. Eve Curie used no curtains on her shining windows and no table linens on her smooth table top in order to have more time for her research. Her neighbors thought her negligent, yet thousands blessed her healing radium.

Walter Hines Page, United States Statesman and European Ambassador, remembered the hikes his mother took with him and the visits they had together. The accumulated dishes were washed together after the lovely sunlight was gone. The foundation of comprehensive thinking and rugged health which stood him in such good stead during World War I, was laid by his mother out on the hills in the wind and the sun with a good book.

LEADERSHIP: We so often hear expressions of the need for leaders. Just as often, perhaps, we hear the expressed desire to become leaders. We do need leaders, none can deny. But above all, we need people who understand and sympathize with the problems of their leaders. Our leaders are so overtaxed! Why?

There are several reasons. 1. True leaders are few in number but supplementary leaders are numerous if they would step forward and set their shoulders to the task. 2. Supplementary leaders must desire to help, not from a desire for position or recognition and honor, but from a sympathetic understanding of the goals and vision of the task at hand. (Could you be a pastor or a pastor's wife if you were asked? Would you recognize your limitations? Would you be willing to sacrifice all your strength, all your time, all your resources to the task at hand, or does the glitter of office appeal most?) 3. Leaders are overtaxed because good followers are at a premium.

It is easy to believe we would do so-and-so if we were in someone else's position. Did you ever realize that were you truly qualified you would be doing that job or an equally important task? At least, you would be the kind of follower who took part of the leadership (supplementary as scouting, teaching, etc.) responsibility from that pastor or other leader so he would have time for that which you so glibly think you would do if you were only he. The greater a leader one becomes, the more thorns one finds, the more fragrant and infrequent the rose, and the more alone one becomes.

Be a supplementary leader so our general church and branch leaders will not be so overburdened. One courtesy we could extend is to hold inviolable one evening or one Sunday occasionally when that leader may commune alone with his family and God.

Our leaders give and give until the utmost price in health and even life is given. Unless we are willing to pay as great a price, we have little right to criticize or decry our progress. Be supplementary leaders and thus good followers. Your consecrated, intelligent, co-operative, humble efforts will give impetus to the movement of kingdom-building.

BEAUTIFUL WORDS: Have you ever heard a few words in a sermon, in a testimony, in a divine injunction which seared themselves into your mind to remain a long time? These words given to a small group of kingdom builders (it could have been your group) so impressed me recently:

"When you feel my Spirit, you have love in your midst, one to another. Cultivate that love with tears of sympathy and patience; nourish it with kindly words and cheerful countenances, and it will grow in consuming power until no one of your group will be left behind, but together you will grow until your light will shine as from a hilltop."

A DESIRABLE PORTION: You have heard people express the desire to live always on the mountaintop in the bright sunlight of God's Spirit. While each of us desires a portion of God's Spirit to direct and sustain us each day, note that a "portion" is a pertinent word to be used in our prayers.

It is only human to wonder how it feels to experience the Spirit in prophecy, tongues, and other gifts. Those who have been set afire by the pervading influence of the Holy Spirit as instruments in revealing God's will and truths can testify that such a portion is cleansing, edifying, and sustaining, but that to remain constantly or even very frequently in direct contact with the Holy Spirit would be consuming.

A portion of the Spirit is desirable and is needed for spiritual warmth and vitality as fire is needed for comfort and growth. However, as direct, continued contact with fire consumes the physical body, so also would continued direct contact with the Holy Spirit consume the physical body, though not in the physical sense of cremation.

God provided that a change be wrought in the physical body before it could dwell continually in the direct light of his presence. That is why a portion at a time is all that he gives, according to the need and worthiness of the people and his wisdom. To ask to remain always on the mountaintop would be to ask amiss.

GROWING PAINS: Did you ever notice that some of your greater trials and hardships brought about some needed change in your thinking, attitudes, or conduct? These times of testing are painful while they last, and sometimes it is a long time before we can objectively recognize the growth we made for better or worse. These times of trial, heartache, and testing I call "growing pains."

These growing pains are felt not only personally but in a community, in the church, in the nation, and in the world. Social evils are overthrown in community growing pains. The church had growing pains after the martyrdom and in the period we commonly designate as 1925. We hope this last World War will have been a growing pain that may give birth to world-wide give and take toward a lasting peace. Now we are experiencing a national, perhaps international, growing pain in the form of strikes.

We need to keep calm and clear-headed in order to be able to more actively engage in the business of more abundant living for all after this growing pain also passes. Growing pains are hard to endure, often very costly! Let us hope we can outgrow them, too, and steadily and less painfully grow toward perfection.

"Be With Us, Lord"

Mrs. Kelton Shipley

PERHAPS no other phrase is so oft repeated in our supplications to our Heavenly Father than, "Be with us, Lord." It is right that we should entreat him thusly, for as we journey through life it is apparent that we need divine help and loving guidance to make of it what we should. We need his Holy Spirit to be our constant companion if we are to attain the perfection in character that will designate us as sons and daughters of God. How fortunate are those who decide early in life to ask God for help, and who try sincerely to follow in his paths! How comforting it is to know that he is true to the promise that he will be with us always, "even unto the end of the world."

Too many of us think, however, that with that request, and with that promise, therein ends our responsibility. We want the Lord to be with us, but too often we conduct our lives exactly contrary to the way of righteousness, so that he cannot possibly be with us. Too often we live in a condition far below our capabilities, not riotous at all, but nevertheless, inferior to the way of our Lord. Too often we travel the roads of the world in our daily behavior and expect God to protect us from harm. We spend our time doing the things that deteriorate our character, lower our physical resistance, and paralyze our spiritual powers, rather than those things that build and develop us into better men and women. We associate with people who rob us of all fine thoughts and noble dreams, and who leave us in spiritual poverty with nothing but selfish, lustful, or degenerate ideas to carry on our business of living. Too often we deliberately disobey the laws of the universe, the laws of nature, and the rules of safety, and then call upon God to be with us.

If we want God to be with us, then we must be with him. He cannot walk in unholy places; he cannot dwell in unholy temples. In the Scriptures we find that there are certain conditions to be met before we are eligible for the Holy Spirit. This means that we must obey God's holy commandments and eternal laws. This refers to physical, spiritual, and social laws alike. We follow certain rules of health in order to enjoy greater physical happiness. Likewise, we must follow certain spiritual and social laws if we are to enjoy the balanced life that God has in store for us. We must love God and his Son Jesus Christ sufficiently to put them into our very lives day after day, and week after week. We must love them sufficiently to make us desire with all the fire and zeal in our souls to serve them rather than Mammon. If we love them in this way, we will converse with them often in prayer, we will seek friends of like love, we will travel roads of service in humility and charity. We will fill our time with study and worship and action. We will consecrate our minds to good thoughts, and our lips to good words. Unkindness and bitter criticisms will find no resting place within our hearts. We will not be found in questionable places doing and saying questionable things. We will be busy doing the work of the kingdom. Then we can be assured that God is pleased with us. We can unashamedly pray, "Lord, be with us."

Primitive Wisdom

The Maori divided their men into first class and second or less fit class. The latter group formed the first line of battle and under no circumstances were they allowed to become parents. The Maori observed that bows and arrows were unfair instruments of warfare because the bravest and tallest man might readily be killed by a second class weakling. They, therefore, substituted hand to hand fighting for bows and arrows.—Ira S. Wile in The Challenge of Adolescence (Greenberg).

T W I N S

Now she says, "It's double trouble, but I love it!"

THE HOUSE was quiet. At that early hour it still had a picked-up-and-straightened-before-going-to-bed look. I sat at the neat little table eating my breakfast and planning the day's work, when I heard the first round from upstairs. In a few minutes there was a little singsong chanting in the room above my head. My two-year-old twins were awake and eager to start my day.

I finished my toast and raced upstairs to take up my cherubs before Nature outdid herself. When I opened the door, they were both standing up in their beds throwing the last of the covers out on the floor. Four shining mischievous eyes turned my way, and shrieks and gurgles of glee were their good morning.

Dressing is a game. Put your arm in the sleeve, Jeanne! Now downstairs for shoes and socks. No, no, Jo Ann, don't curl your toes up; put your shoosies on! Crispy curls framing their shining faces, they're in the high chairs, ready for a good substantial breakfast. No, no darling, Don't spill the nice juice. Drink it all-ll-l up! Hunger partly appeased, spoons begin tapping out rhythm, and bodies eventually wriggle through the rest of their breakfast. Use your spoon honey. No, no, don't throw it on the floor! A few hasty gurgles of milk, and they're ready for out of doors. Sweet little smiles thrown back over their shoulders, and they're off to the sand pile.

EVERY FEW MINUTES I take a look to see that they haven't wandered away; and if they have, as is usually the case, I sprint for a corner. We live in the middle house of a short block and those corners draw them like magnets.

Jeanne with her sand pail and Jo Ann with her little red wagon! A wagon load of sand is brought to the freshly hosed porch, and when I look out again neat little pyramids of sand are located here and there about. Sand on the porch chairs, in the farthest corner, and on the door mat, I sweep and sweep some more.

In the house I start my dusting, a quick peek out the window, no babies.

A sprint to the corner. Come home, babies! No, no, Jeanne don't step in the mud puddle. Settling them with their sand pails once more, I go in and finish my dusting. Peek out the window in ten minutes, and I see Jeanne pouring sand on Jo Ann's head, and Jo Ann with water pilfered from the bird bath is pouring it down the front of Jeanne's sunsuit. Both unspeakably happy!

Despairing of ever getting any work done, I glance at the clock. A quarter of twelve! Where has the morning gone! Lunch time for my girls. Frantically I run to rescue the kitten, now the bone of contention between (a) Jeanne, pulling his tail, and (b) Jo Ann with both hands around his head. Needless to say the cat was voicing his disapproval in no uncertain terms. Outcome: Jo Ann gets the kitty, and a handful of sand which Jeanne literally throws in for good measure. I take them, one under each arm, and go back to the house, after shaking what sand I can off and out of them.

Then lunch, with eagle-eyed Mother staying around pretty close to try to keep one thought ahead of her little angels. No, no, Jo Ann, Kitty doesn't want a bite of your cookie!

And so to their naps, with Mother scrambling around to try to accomplish everything in two hours. I get the breakfast and lunch dishes done and the umteen things that belong to babies picked up and put away. I get cleaned up a bit myself and am drifting off into a lovely repose when Bingo! I believe the minute I get relaxed their subconscious minds tell them so, and they're awake to start all over.

Washed and combed again, and dressed in perky little pinafores, they're ready for their afternoon walk. This consists of Jeanne leading the parade about half a block, me in the middle vainly calling, "Come back, Jeanne," or "Come on, Jo Ann," to her sister bringing up the rear a half block behind.

Back from their walk, they play—Jeanne, you mustn't pull the kitty's tail!—while their supper is being prepared. After supper they rather half-heartedly wander out to the sand pile, take off a shoe and fill it with sand. That isn't interesting enough, so they wander over to the swings and try to get kitty to take a swing. Every time they push, the cat jumps out. Not to be daunted, Jeanne decides to put kitty in the little red wagon and all to go for another walk. Result: Mother sprints to the corner again and brings the whole of them back home to be put to bed.

THE HOUSE is quiet—the late hour stillness of a sleeping household. The picked up and straightened-before-going-to-bed orderliness that I appreciate so much. I tiptoe into their room to see about covers. As usual they lie in a heap on the floor. The twins are hunkered down on knees, elbows and chins, fast asleep. Their sweet little faces are rosily flushed, lips pursed gently, and arms hugging old rag dolls up close. The house is quiet, too quiet and almost—almost I wish they were awake again. But that's selfish, they need their sleep and so do I, for tomorrow is another day! I tiptoe out and softly close the door.

Navy Day Sunday

Message of Fleet Admiral Nimitz to Naval Forces

Navy Day, October 27, 1946, will find our Navy on its Sunday routine, with divine worship scheduled where possible. Since its beginning, the Navy has recognized the value and importance of worship. All of us seek more satisfactory and happier ways of living. We want inner values that will sustain us in whatever outward circumstances may befall us. We have seen religion and moral integrity tested in the crucible of war. We know how greatly they have affected the lives of men in years of peace.

Navy Day Sunday will be a natural setting for the recognition and evaluation of the place the religious and moral sides of our lives should have in our thinking. Along with our physical fitness and professional training, we need the inner discipline of religion. We of the Navy are grateful for the prayers and support of the religious leaders and worshipers in our churches and synagogues through the long dark days of World War II. We shall continue to need their prayers. It is my earnest hope that our people will remember us of the naval service in a special way on Navy Day Sunday, and that we may have the support of their prayers as we keep the seas.

THE HIGH PRIESTHOOD

In the Old and New Testament Church

By J. W. A. Bailey

"There are in the church, two priest-hoods, namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priest-hood."—D.C. 104: 1. Or as more clearly stated, "There are two divisions, or grand heads—one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other the Aaronic, or Levitical priesthood."—D.C. 104: 2.

"The office of elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec. The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spir-itual things."—D.C. 3. See B.M. 321: 1.

"An elder has a right to officiate in his stead when the high priest is not present."—D.C. 104: 6.

The Melchisedec priesthood was not only called the holy order of God, but was called the holiest order of God (D.C. 83: 3), which order was without begin-ning of days nor end of life. See Gen-esis 6: 70; 14: 23-33; Hebrews 5: 1-6; 7: 3, I.V.

In the above references, it is plainly stated that the Melchisedec priesthood exercised the same authority in the church in all ages of the world, thus whenever we find this priesthood, we should find the same power and authority being exercised according to the office held in this order, whether it was among the Ancients, the Israelites, or the Nephites.

It is stated that the Melchisedec priest-hood has come down from the begin-ning, while the lesser priesthood was, many years later, conferred upon Aaron and his seed who are of the tribe of Levi, of which tribe the Nephites were not descendants, yet they were ordained to the different offices in this order the same as men are now ordained in the Aaronic priesthood.

The Melchisedec priesthood has and can be conferred upon men of every race and tribe; however, the presidency of this priesthood has come down only through the "chosen line," even from Adam to Joseph the Seer:

See Genesis 48: 5, 20-26; I Chronicles 5: 1, 2; Jeremiah 31: 9; Genesis 50: 31-33, I.V.; B.M. 87: 10-12; 88: 13-29; D.C. 43: 1-3; 84: 3; 107: 18.

The Nephites were descendants of one branch of the "birthright" family, the seed of Joseph, and thus entitled to the Melchisedec priesthood. See I Chronicles 5: 1, 2; B.M. 335: 3; see U. S. Bulletin, Volume 57, pages 11-14.

Though it is stated that the Lord "took Moses out of their midst, and the holy priesthood also"; it certainly does not mean that the Lord took every degree of the Melchisedec priesthood from the earth, and that, until it was restored in the personal ministry of Christ. For there were those like Joshua, Elijah, Elisha, and others up to the days of Malachi who did the work that belongs to the office of the high priesthood (Genesis 14: 26, I.V.), wherein it is stated, that those or-dained after this order and calling should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to turn the waters out of their course, to be translated, etc.

After Moses had conferred part of his honor upon Joshua (Numbers 27: 18-20), he, Joshua, did the things spoken of in Genesis 14: 30.

Elijah was also given this power by which he raised the dead, shut up the heavens, matched the power of the 450 priests of Baal, divided the waters, etc., and was translated.

Elisha also worked miracles, divided the waters, etc.

In D.C. 83, the Lord tells us that the Melchisedec priesthood is to administer in spiritual things, to prepare the people to enter into the rest of God, which rest is the fullness of his glory. This the Nephites did. See B.M. 350: 5; Hebrews 4: 1-6; Exodus 34: 1, 2, I.V.

In D.C. 104: 3, the Lord said: "The office of elder comes under the priesthood of Melchisedec."

About 145 B.C., Alma ordained priests and elders by the laying on of hands. See B.M. 321: 1; 311: 11.

The Nephites not only had elders, but they had high priests of the holy order of the Son of God, but they did not have the presidency of the high priesthood of the chief line of the "birthright" family, which was and is in the Ephraimite di- vision.

Though the Nephites kept the "Law of Moses," which served as a type of the coming of Christ, they also had the gos- pel law. See B.M. 143: 44-50; 161: 16-26; 163: 2, 3; 164: 7; 259: 41.

Alma the first, who was a descendant of Nephi, was called of God to baptize and to organize the church, and he was the high priest over the same. See B.M. 256: 2; 258: 37-53; 270: 172-177; 274: 16-20; 278: 66; 279: 76; 281: 97-101; 282: 113, 114.

Alma the second was also a high priest, being consecrated by his father. See B.M. 297: 63; 310: 4, 5; 313: 1-3.

This priesthood that Alma and others held was the priesthood after the Holy Order of God. See B.M. 318: 73; 329: 30, 31; 348: 63, 64.

This priesthood was after the order of the Son of God. See B.M. 349: 70-73.

There were many ordained high priests after the holy order of God. See B.M. 349: 1.

These high priests were after the order of Melchisedec. See B.M. 350: 7.

The late Joseph Smith made the claim that the Nephites held the Melchisedec priesthood before Christ. See Saints' Her-ald, Volume 37, pages 403-405.

The Nephites under the ministration of this priesthood entered into the "rest of God."—B.M. 349: 69; 350: 4, 5. This rest spoken of is the fullness of God's glory. See D.C. 83: 4.

The children of Israel under the "Lesser Priesthood" did not enter into this rest. See Exodus 34: 1, 2, I.V.; He- brews 4: 1-6.

HIGH PRIESTS AND ELDERS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

The high priesthood from Adam to Moses. See Genesis 6: 70, I.V.; D.C. 83: 2; 104: 18.

Those ordained after this order should have power, by faith to work miracles. See Genesis 14: 27-32.

Moses questioning a number of Aaron-ic priests, said: "Seek ye the high priest-hood also?" See Numbers 16: 10 I.V.

Aaron and Hur were counselors to Moses, thus they were high priests. See Exodus 17: 12; 24: 14; Numbers 16: 1-10, I.V.

The "Twelve" of the Old Testament Church. See Exodus 13: 1-3; Deuteronomy 1: 23; Joshua 3: 12; 4: 1-4.

The "Seventy" of the Old Testament Church. See Numbers 11: 14-17, 24, 25; Exodus 24: 1-9.

Moses put part of his honor upon Joshua. Honor or authority. See Hebrews 5: 4; Numbers 27: 18-23; Deuteronomy 34: 8-10; Hebrews 5: 4.

"Hilkiah the right priest, and the priests of the second order, and the keepers of the door." See II Kings 23: 4.

ELDERS AFTER THE DAYS OF MOSES

Joshua 24: 31; II Kings 6: 32; Ezekiel 6: 14; 8: 1; Joel 1: 14; B.M. 321: 1. This authority continued to the days of Malachi.

THE NEW TESTAMENT HIGH PRIESTS

Hebrews 3: 1—"Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."

D.C. 83: 10—"As I said unto mine apostles, even so I say unto you; for you are mine apostles, even God's high priests." (See Church Organization.)

Hebrews 5: 1—"Every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." (See notes on Sacrifices at I Peter 2.)

CHRIST WAS ORDAINED A HIGH PRIEST.

Hebrews 2: 17; 5: 5, 6, 10.

Hebrews 5: 4—"No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron."

Hebrews 5: 5—"So also Christ glorified not himself to be an high priest."

John 17: 18—Jesus said: "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."

John 17: 22—"And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them."

John 14: 12—Jesus speaking to his apostles, said: "I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

I Peter 2: 5—"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

I Peter 2: 9—"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood."

SACRIFICES

See Psalms 50: 5; 51: 17; B.M. 628: 49; Matthew 5: 23, 24; Romans 12: 1; D.C. 59: 2.

See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical Church History, page 660.

See Article on "Lineal Priesthood."

One point could be more fully explained: There were no high priests after the order of Aaron. Aaron himself was a high priest after the order of Melchisedec. Aaron and his brother-in-law, Hur, were counselors to Moses, thus had to be high priests after the order of Melchisedec. Aaron, like the Presiding Bishop of our day, was the president of the Aaronic priesthood, but not an Aaronic priest himself (D.C. 104: 11).

There were high priests from the days of Moses until the days of Malachi, about 400 B.C. After that time there was a general apostasy. The so-called high priest that claimed to be in authority when John the Baptist and Jesus the Christ appeared among them, were apostates.

Even in our day of the "Latter Day Restoration," we had high priests before we had "a Moses man," one holding the office Moses held, which office the Lord took away when he took Moses out of their midst.

The first high priests (other than Apostles Joseph and Oliver) were ordained in June, 1831, but the high office which Moses held was not restored until January 25, 1832. See Times and Seasons, Volume 5, page 624; Church History, Volume 1, pages 59-63, 192-194; Anderson's Brief History of the Utah Church, pages 31, 47, 52.

There is much more that could be said on this great subject.

In Praise of the Commonplace

Please, God, make my son an ordinary sort of man. Make him, if need be, the most commonplace man that ever lived. That is the prayer I should send up before my son was born. That is the prayer I sent up silently the other afternoon. For I believe in all honesty, and after earning my own living now for fifteen years, that an artisan has more chances of finding happiness than an artist; a bank clerk than a writer of books; a merchant than a movie star.

It is not simply a question of contrasting professions or talent, or the sort of personalities that subconsciously carry their light with them wherever they go. It goes deeper than that. It is the spiritual cost of being different. And in my opinion the cost is too great.—Godfrey Winn in For My Friends (Davies).

Happily, Ever Afterward

Dell was late getting home from work. When she came in, she found Dad sitting at the table—very much alone. He was eating his apple pie dutifully, bite after bite, quite without the usual look of satisfaction that brightens his eyes when he finishes off a meal with apple pie. Mom's plate was across the table—steak, potatoes, gravy, green beans—with only a forkful missing from each. Something had gone wrong.

"Say, what's the matter?" Dell demanded, "Where's Mom?" Dad nodded toward the living room. Dell looked up from her own generous helping of everything (there was nothing wrong with the food) and saw Mom rocking back and forth as resolutely and dutifully as Dad was eating his pie. Common sense kept her from asking why. Dad swallowed the last bite, coughed a little as if it stuck in his throat, and went outside. Mom came to the table and cut a second square from the deserted piece of steak.

That was a mighty quiet Friday evening.

Dad and Dell worked in the garden the next afternoon. They were in the tomato patch when he began talking: "You know, Annie and I have been married forty years now. Things aren't as they used to be, though! She doesn't understand me any more . . . she doesn't kiss me good-by when I go to work, either. A woman sure can change a lot."

Dell said, "Oh," and went on hoeing, because she couldn't think of anything else to say. Dad heaped loose dirt around the thin stems of three more plants, leaned on his hoe, and looked out across the garden. "Maybe I've changed, too," she heard him saying half to himself, and then he looked straight at her and announced, "You know what I'm going to do? I'm going to quit early this evening and take Annie to a movie. Tomorrow we're going to church together or—or I'm not going!"

Late Sunday afternoon Dell came home and found Mom in the rocker again, only this time Dad was sitting right beside her in the leather chair. Mom glanced up and said, "We've been looking through the Bible . . ." and Dad, closing the book gently, finished for her, "This has been the nicest Sunday we've had in a long time . . . really a good day . . . with just Annie and me here at home together."

The Pastor and the Questionnaire

By Randall Hulse

IN the past few years various departments of the church have spent considerable time in sending out questionnaires to all the branches, dealing with various problems. At first I was resentful of some of the questions asked. I thought the general church officers were spending too much time for the little information they would receive. But I found resentment came merely from the real facts of the condition of my own branch being revealed to me. Through these questionnaires, the general church and district officers are trying to obtain factual data and to keep on the alert and learn from our experience everything they can bearing on technique, methods, and branch problems.

Human nature is dynamic, and some rules for gauging human behavior and anticipating human reactions need to be revised. Our continual contact with the individual, or let us say, the consumer, not only throws light on problems, but enables us to determine the boundary lines of public acceptance. It also provides interesting sidelights on psychology.

For example, the company for which I work, recently took the names of 200 people who had previously received questionnaires and answered them. They shuffled up these names and divided them into two stacks of 100 each. To the first 100 they sent a questionnaire and a letter saying: "You've already filled out a questionnaire similar to this, but we are very anxious to get your reactions recorded on this new form. We are enclosing stamped, self-addressed envelope, etc." To the other group of 100 names (same kind of people, mind you) they sent the same questionnaire, but the letter said: "You've already filled out one of our questionnaires so we wouldn't think of asking you to bother with another one—just thought you might like to see this revised edition. We are not even enclosing a return envelope."

They got 21 answers from the first group and 72 from the second group where they were told not to answer. I'm wondering if the general church and district officers have the same kind of results. If so, I'd like to make a few suggestions.

First, that all questionnaires be sent out in duplicate, for most pastors desire to keep copies for future reference. However, this rule will not hold unless the questionnaire is interesting from the standpoint of the individual who gets it. By following that one rule it would have a tendency to increase your questionnaire return by 50 per cent.

The development of a direct mail questionnaire to the pastor is similar to an advertisement or sermon, because it has one common object, getting people you know, to do something that you want them to do and which, generally speaking, they are not particularly interested in doing. The development of an effective questionnaire is still the problem of the church officers. When you mail out a questionnaire, you know within a week whether it was good, whether the pastor noticed it or not, whether it was understood or misinterpreted, and whether it irritated the recipient or pleased him.

Surely questionnaires are an investigation, or an all "get" affair, and must be a guiding principle to the "give" that must follow.

Those who design the questionnaire and those who receive them, must ask these questions:

1. What do we want to find out?
2. Why do we want to find it out?
3. What can we do about it after we find it out?

Some questions are important, others are interesting and may satisfy a healthy curiosity, but either the questionnaire or the answer may fail to be suggestive of any direct course of action. Others are significant as bearing on individuals, or limited groups, but none are absolutely worthless in terms of broad general averages.

Pastors, it is important to weigh carefully and take into consideration all questionnaires sent to you by your church officers. It will clearly reveal whether your branch is growing, increasing in attendance or slowly dying. Often we find our members rebellious against facts and figures because they reveal the true condition of the branch, and members are so disappointed by failures to live up to their expectations or dreams that they refuse to face the facts. Far too many believe that growth and increased attendance can be measured because there was a good crowd and they personally liked the sermon the last time they were at church. But pastors cannot be lulled to sleep by sentiments; they must face facts and take into consideration attendances, programs, and methods for all activities of the branch. These can only be obtained by questionnaires and careful recording of the reaction of our people to various types of services. It is the pastor's duty, not only to prepare people, but to plan programs that will reach the greatest number of people with the gospel of Christ.

It is also important that the designers of the questionnaire pursue such a course as will eliminate many superficial questions, and this is important, not only out of consideration for the pastor's time and effort, but from the standpoint of keeping down expenses. (As a spectacular example of this, I have been told that it costs the U. S. census close to $1,000,000 to include one additional question. I have never had an official confirmation of this; but it illustrates the point.)

While it is not anticipated that the questionnaire research can ever be reduced to an exact scientific method, the church wants to leave no stone unturned in the perfection of method of a technique that will insure maximum accuracy for the money expended. Failure to achieve mathematical exactness, however, does not necessarily vitiate the value of the results. Even though it were possible to get results accurate down to the last decimal place, it is difficult to conceive how the action based on such results could ever be reduced to such hair-splitting fineness.

What are the principal values of questionnaires? The value of the findings will, in many instances, lie not so much in any one isolated figure, as in comparisons of different figures, not only in different activities, but also of the results obtained in different years. This fact further emphasizes the necessity for exercising the greatest care in the initial framing of the questionnaire.

A few ground rules for framing questionnaires may be listed:

1. Design it so carefully that it simply cannot be misunderstood.
2. Employ phraseology that is common usage with all pastors.
3. Observe the principle of "give and get" for the nature of the information is not for mental satisfaction.
4. Questions regarding any series of activities should all be asked in the same way.
5. Every effort should be put forth to guard against anything that will create a bias in the mind of the receiver.
6. The arrangement or continuity of questions should be such as to facilitate the recipient's flow of thought. People have difficulty in shifting their minds back and forth from one thing to another.
7. To get maximum value out of branch findings, it is necessary to ask questions the same year after year. As a corollary to this, spare no pains to get the questions right—right from the start.

The foregoing rules are important guides or checks. Development of a good questionnaire is such a subtle and illusive problem that it can never be reduced to a formula. No set of ground rules can ever eliminate the necessity of testing a principle before it is adopted for extensive use, just as we find it necessary to test a new automobile model on the proving ground before going into production, despite the fact that we have big libraries full of standard reference work on engineering design.

As pastor, I feel that one of the greatest sources of information on congregational attitudes, outside of the statistical data, lies in the study of their viewpoint and remarks, which we encourage in every way. The number of samples, suggestions, praise, criticisms or testimonies, guides us exactly the course of action which can best be synchronized with the findings of a survey. Samples of merely "yes or no" voters, are not always amplified by intelligent comments. But the significance of seeking the people's viewpoint does not rest on the basis of big figures and elaborate statistics. The more important consideration is that this activity serves to restore something akin to the close personal contact and the human relations that existed between the pastor and the congregation in the early days of the Restoration, before the days of large-scale operations in evangelism.

Mass evangelism by radio, along with all its advantages, may have tended to obscure the fundamental necessity of reckoning with the detailed tastes of the individual, but the principle is just as true today as it was back in the early days of the church, when our fathers first began laying the foundation upon which rests our Restoration Movement of today.

It is gratifying to note that during the past few years, research or factfinding in the realm of group activities and attendance, has been pursued more vigorously than ever before. Out of these findings we may go forward with added assurance there are new needs, new methods, new activities, and new groups yet to be born.

Physical things and scientific progress are well ahead of the art of human understanding. This business of better understanding must come by recognizing the member of the branch as the hub about which all our activities revolve and cementing all of our church relations with a more liberal effort of human understanding and liberal measure of devotion.

Yes, questionnaires, compiling a lot of dull statistics—these are only incidents, merely a tool for research, or I might better say, one of the tools for developing a greater measure of human understanding.

LETTERS

Dedication

By Everett S. Shakespeare

We, the people of this great spiritual church, should have a lot to be thankful for—especially for the prayers that we have had answered. I for one am especially thankful to the people who held special prayer meetings for me, and to the individuals who prayed for my safety and for the safety of all the other boys who were held prisoners of war. In return, I know that I have a job to do here in Zion. Most of the people don't fully realize the conditions of this troubled world. We, of this church, are now faced with a great task such as the one Christ was faced with before his Crucifixion. But, do we know what he did? He went before his people, preaching the gospel that he lived and loved.

One night last April I went to a meeting at the Men's Club. The speaker for the evening, one of our elders, gave a talk in which he stated that within the next ten to fifteen years we would be faced with another great war. This war, with the aid of the atomic bomb and the inventions of the other countries, would be greater by far than the last war. Our large cities and fast pace of life would be reverted back to a simpler and less modern village life. If that time ever comes, then we would not have very much time to prepare ourselves for the coming of Christ. So, we can see the work that we are faced with is a very great one—a very urgent one! But, if we pray earnestly as we work, the task at hand will not seem nearly so great.

We have an opportunity to serve daily. We could, as Brother Whiting expressed in one of the prayer meetings during conference, try to bring at least one new member into the church before next conference; bring them into the church not blindly nor by force, but by teaching them our principles, and showing them that this is the true church as we believe, for intelligent members are the ones we need. Some of us think and believe that we are already prepared to do the work, and that we are good enough to do the task set before us. But are we really? Look at yourself in the mirror and ask yourself, "Am I good enough?" You may think you are, but maybe other people do not think so. I don't believe they would, so our job is to help others to prepare themselves and in doing that, we would be blessed in the work of our church. When we can look as Christ looks in his pictures, we have accomplished a great task, and we will be ready for the day that Christ will appear before us. So let us use as a slogan, "Do as Christ did, and live so that others might also live." We, as Reorganized Latter Day Saints, would be a better people, if we would sincerely endeavor to enrich the lives of others. We could set an example before the rest of the world. People in other countries have already heard of us, so let our light shine brighter and cause this darkened world to glow like a warm August day. Our powers are limitless when we are guided by prayer.

I received some wonderful blessings when I was overseas; blessings I can never forget. Throughout my imprisonment I knew that I would return home safely because of the prayers of my many friends at home. During the year and a half that I was held prisoner, I met only one boy who was also a member of our church. We had many soothing talks together. He also was spared, and has now returned home to Independence where he is studying to be a faithful servant of Christ. I know that he will serve well, for he has a courage and determination that will carry him through. I am striving to make this courage and determination a part of my own life, also. I want to dedicate my life to two things. First, to Christ and this, his church, and next to the girl who has helped and encouraged me so very much, and helped me no end in the goals I am striving to reach.

That each of us may dedicate our lives to the worth-while goals which are before us until we are prepared to face our Maker, is my earnest prayer.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

A Candlelighting Installation Service

By Mary B. Hill

This is another in the series of supplementary program helps prepared by the author, who is Zion's League leader at Hamilton, Ontario. For use with the book, "Does It Make Any Difference?"

NOTE: One large candle is lighted at the beginning of the service, and burns all during the service. As many candles as are needed are arranged unlighted semi-circularly around the large candle. During the candlelighting service, as each officer lights his candle, he repeats the words indicated. The leader, all the officers, or the whole assembled group may repeat the response. As each officer steps back into place, the whole group sings a verse of Hymn No. 307. Adjust this service to the needs of your group, and the number of officers to be installed.

Prelude: Largo, Traumeri, or Adoration (part 2, "Holy City"—Gaul).

Call to Worship: Psalm 121: 1, 2.

Hymn: "Oh, Jesus, I Have Promised," Saints' Hymnal, No. 298.

Invocation.

Scripture Reading: Romans 12: 1-5.

Offertory.

Message: The Church of Lighted Lamps.

Late in the afternoon a stranger arrived in a tiny European village hidden among the mountains, far away from the beaten track of tourists. After looking around the quaint rooms she had engaged at the inn, she started out on an inspection tour of the village. She wandered about the narrow, winding streets, until, rounding a curve, she saw stretching before her a beautiful mountain path. Following it, she came to a little chapel which, with its ivy-covered walls and open door, invited her to enter.

She stepped inside and settled down for a quiet moment of meditation in one of the rustic pews. A strange feeling of peace pervaded the place. As she bowed her head in prayer, she thought of the many generations of simple peasant folk who had worshiped there and felt strangely linked with them in fellowship. When she arose to go, she noticed at the back of each pew a strange sort of framework; she also noticed the lack of lamps or lights of any sort in the place.

She returned to the inn and her pleasant room overlooking the village street. The sun set in splendor over the mountains, and the shades of evening began to gather. The people of the village, having completed their day's work, gathered in the square, where the sound of merry laughter was heard. Then, as the twilight began to deepen, the people, singly and in pairs, began to make their way toward the little chapel. At last the mystery of the afternoon was solved, for each person was carrying a lantern.

The stranger, eager to learn more of the customs of the village, hastily followed, moving along the street which led uphill to the little church. As she entered, only the outline of the pews and pulpit could be seen by the dim flicker of light. But the worshipers continued to come. As each person entered and placed his lighted lamp in the rack provided for it at the back of the pew, he bowed his head in reverent prayer. The stranger bowed her head also.

When she raised her head after some moments of meditation and prayer, the lights were stronger and brighter. Now she could see the figure of the Christ carved above the altar, and other figures carved on the simple Communion table. By this time the church was almost filled with worshipers. As the people continued to gather, the light became still brighter, bringing into clearer detail every feature of the chapel, until finally the words inscribed over the archway were revealed: "Ye are the light of the world."

Finally the pastor mounted the pulpit and, by the light cast by the lanterns of the worshipers, read the Scripture for the evening and prayed this prayer: "O Thou who art the light of all lights, shed thy radiance upon us. Grant that we may reflect thy light and love in the world. May we let our light so shine before men that we may glorify thee. For the sake of him who came to be the Light of the world, we pray. Amen."

When the stranger inquired further concerning their strange custom, a legend was told her about "The Church of Lighted Lamps." It was built long ago in the sixteenth century by an old duke who had ten beautiful daughters whom he loved devotedly. When they were children, he took great pleasure in watching them play, and even when they were grown, he would sit in the garden for hours listening to their singing over their needlework, or watching them as they picked armfuls of roses.

Unlike most royal fathers, he was not anxious for them to marry, and it was with great reluctance that he let them go one by one. People used to smile at the commotion he made over each one leaving home, but he would shake his head sadly and say that each one had her place and that the house was lonely in some spot without her.

Each year the daughters gathered around their father's board to partake of the Christmas feast together. The circle had never been broken at this time, until one year a daughter who had married a prince in a far country thought the journey too far and decided not to go home. Knowing how much her father counted on this family gathering, she sent a band of musicians from her court to play for him, thinking to lighten his disappointment. But the duke was inconsolable. The songs of the musicians sounded artificial in comparison with his daughter's singing, for nothing could take her place.

As he grew older, the duke began to wonder what he would leave behind to perpetuate his memory. Finally he decided to build a church so beautiful that men would worship as soon as they entered, because it would draw them to God. He drew the plans and watched the building with great delight.

At last came the great day when all was finished, and the duke took one of his daughters to see it. The simple lines, the graceful beams, the carving, and the stained glass windows were exclaimed over and admired.

"But, father," said the daughter, "where are the lamps to hang?"

"That, my dear," said the duke, "is a pet scheme of mine. There will be no hanging lamps. Each one will carry his own. I have provided small bronze lamps, one for every person in the village up to the number the church will hold." Then, he added slowly, "Some corner of God's house will be dark and lonely, if all his sons and daughters do not come to worship him at the appointed time." And these words were carved in the stone over the doorway.

Four hundred years have elapsed since that time. The bronze lamps have been handed down from father to son and carefully treasured. When the sweet-toned bells of the old church ring, the village people wend their way up the hill, each carrying his own lamp. The church is nearly always filled, for no family wishes its corner to be dark and gloomy.

Solo (or quartette): "Be With Me Lord," Saints' Hymnal, No. 305.

Installation of Officers:

(As each name is called, officers take their places on the platform, facing the rest of the group. Officer in charge stands to one side, partly facing the newly elected officers.)

Leader (to newly elected president):

You have been chosen by your group to lead them in the task of building the kingdom of God. In this place of leadership to which you have been chosen, it will be your privilege to inspire your collaborators with a zeal and enthusiasm for the task ahead. You will strive to direct all those who labor with you in such a manner as to bring about a spirit of cooperation and a high type of efficiency. You will endeavor to lead them into ever-widening fields of service and into nobler achievements.

To all other newly elected officers:

As you accept this phase of leadership to which you have been selected, it becomes your privilege to lead your fellow workers into experiences which will enrich their own lives and forward the Master's cause. Are you willing to "study to show yourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed"? Are you willing to accept the privileges and responsibilities which are yours because of the offices to which you have been elected? Do you pledge yourselves to a faithful discharge of the duties which you have assumed?

Response (by the newly elected officers):

We dedicate ourselves to the faithful performance of our duties.

Candlelighting service:

President: As I light this candle, it brings to my mind the life of Jesus. May the love of Jesus so enter our lives that it will send us forth with a sincere desire to serve him. May we always be true to him, his church, and his principles.

Response: Thy word, O God, is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path. Help us to keep thy commandments.

(Sing first verse of Hymn No. 307, Saints' Hymnal.)

Vice-president: Behold, I kindle the light of humility. A Latter Day Saint is humble and unselfish.

Response: Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

(Second verse of Hymn 307.)

Secretary: Behold, I kindle the light of meekness. A Latter Day Saint is gentle and teachable, desiring nothing for himself, except an opportunity to serve.

Response: Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

(Third verse of Hymn 307.)

Treasurer: Behold, I kindle the light which represents spiritual growth. A Latter Day Saint has a positive hunger for righteousness.

Response: Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

(Fourth verse of Hymn 307.)

First Group Leader: Behold, I kindle the light of mercy.

Second Group Leader: A Latter Day Saint is considerate toward the failures and shortcomings of others.

Response: Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

(Fifth verse of Hymn 307.)

Third Group Leader: Behold, I kindle the light of purity.

Fourth Group Leader: A Latter Day Saint gives supreme loyalty to his church and to all things which are right.

Response: Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

Musical Officer: Behold, I kindle the light of truth.

Recreation Officer: A Latter Day Saint seeks understanding and greater vision of God. He studies all good things of the earth.

Response: Study to show yourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

(The following to be sung to the tune of Hymn 307):

Thus O Lord I come to thee,
May my gift accepted be,
May my will henceforth be thine
And my life no longer mine.

Leader: A Latter Day Saint endures suffering, criticism, and persecution courageously for Christ's sake, and for the sake of his kingdom. As we commit ourselves to the cause of Christ, may his spirit of understanding, devotion and self-sacrifice be central in our lives. Grant that the fires which have been lighted in our hearts this evening burn brightly evermore. I therefore beseech you to walk worthy of the calling wherewith ye were called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love.

Response: We dedicate our time and talents to this work to which we have been called.

Hymn: "A Charge to Keep I Have," Saints' Hymnal, No. 201.

Benediction:

Father, accept the worship we bring,
To everyone thy strength impart,
And shed thy spirit in every heart.

NOTE: The story, and much of the above candlelighting service, have been taken from Worship Programs and Stories For Young People, by Alice A. Bays, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, from whom we have permission to use.

How To Guard Against Infantile Paralysis

This is the time of the year when infantile paralysis is most likely to strike, and when anxious parents can do most to protect their children from the dreaded disease. Measures of prevention, based on latest knowledge of the nature of the disease, are summarized by Dr. Philip M. Stimson in a communication to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Avoid use of water possibly contaminated by sewage, either for drinking, swimming, or washing utensils.

Avoid exhaustion from exertion or chilling; during the incubation period these factors tend to intensify the oncoming disease.

Avoid injury to mucous membranes of the nose and throat, such as that resulting from a tonsil operation.

Treat every minor illness as a possible case of infantile paralysis, particularly if there is fever, headache, and some spasm of the neck, spine, and leg muscles.

Strive for proper sanitary conditions and in particular destroy flies and their breeding places.

Avoid unnecessary physical contacts with other people, wash hands carefully before eating, and don't put unclean objects in the mouth.

Don't prescribe or take drugs or chemicals that are intended to protect against this disease. As yet we know of none that will do this.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Pastor, R. H. Atkinson

The annual election of officers was held on September 3. Elder R. H. Atkinson was sustained as pastor; he chose Elbert Lambert and Arnold Ourth as councilors. Other officers are Madelyn Hartman, church school director; Roberta Garrett, assistant church school director; Joan Klingelmueller, secretary; Sophie Lee, adult supervisor; Arnold Ourth, young people's supervisor; Florence Ourth, children's supervisor; Harold Smith, director of music; Blanche Klingelmueller, clerk; Elmer Garrett, treasurer; Ralph Tripp, financial agent; J. C. Page, librarian and book steward; and Mabel Atkinson, publicity agent. At the Zion's League business meeting, Edith Fusselman was elected president, with Vera Garrett as her assistant. It was voted that one devotional, one recreational, and two study periods should be held each month.

Many visitors came to Nauvoo during the summer and assisted in the services. Numerous sightseers came in chartered busses and spent the week end in the Nauvoo House. Mrs. Lloyd Hadley, a member of the Steinmetz High School faculty in Chicago, recently gave an illustrated lecture on Verda Bryant's Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon, using flannelgraph pictures. Guests from Independence, who came as a group, were served lunch on Saturday evening by the Lucy Mack Circle, after which Mabel Sanford Atkinson gave a review of Joseph's City Beautiful. Elder Arnold Ourth presented a resume' of Nauvoo history on Sunday morning.

Elder and Mrs. Thomas Worth, and their son, James, who spent the summer assisting in the work at Nauvoo, were given a farewell dinner before their departure for Independence.

At the annual grape festival held in September, the Saints were asked to portray Joseph Smith's followers in the pageant, "Nauvoo Through the Years." Thirty-five members participated, enacting the scenes of pioneer days. A replica of Nauvoo Temple was burned each evening during the three-day pageant.

Port Huron, Michigan

Pastor, Jack A. Pray

Sharon Ferguson, Franklin Green, Hazel Bond, Gerald Provost, and Jerry Akins were baptized and confirmed on June 23. A farewell party was given recently for three families: the Warners, Campbells, and Whenhams, who will make their homes in Lamoni. The Carl Muirs will leave soon for Philadelphia. Members of the senior choir sponsored a farewell for Mrs. Ruth Grahl and daughter, Gene; Mrs. Tennyson Summers, a recent bride, was also honored. The Men's Club gave a dinner for the women of the branch at Wagon Wheel Inn on June 28. The church school picnic was held in Marysville Park on July 18. Proceeds from the Zion's League ice-cream social were used to send Leaguers to the Blue Water reunion. The annual picnic and swimming party ended the summer's activities for young people. League members present a candlelight worship service once each month. Many of the Port Huron Saints attended the district reunion. Guest speakers for the month of August were Harold Velt and John Grice.

Fort Scott, Kansas

Pastor, Dale Crown

Officers elected at the Rich Hill District Conference on September 22 were as follows: W. W. Patterson, district president; Mable Martin, women's leader; Mildred Ingram, religious education supervisor; and Bertha Rogers, director of music. The young people contributed much to the morning prayer service and music of the day. Apostle Paul Hanson was the 11 o'clock speaker. The Rich Hill and Spring River districts have combined their efforts in raising money for buying a reunion ground.

The annual Fort Scott business meeting was held September 29 with Dale Crown being sustained as pastor.

During the past year, three new members have been baptized; present membership numbers 120. The department of women recently contributed $30 to the orphan's home; Hettie Quick is the leader.

—Leah Williams, reporter.

Hamilton, Ontario

Pastor, E. M. Kennedy

The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting: E. M. Kennedy, pastor; Ashley McAninch, associate pastor; U. E. Essery, church school director; Mrs. J. Whittington, women's supervisor; Leslie Hill, young people's supervisor; Austin Essery, director of music; Mrs. L. B. Kniffen, secretary; D. L. Culp, treasurer; Cameron Jay, librarian; D. L. Culp and Leslie Hill, finance board; A. W. Kennedy, book steward and publicity agent. It was decided at a recent branch council meeting that the regular Sunday service should be held at 10 a.m., followed by church school at 11. A nursery class will be provided every first Sunday of the month for small children, thus enabling the parents to attend Communion service. A lecture on The Branch of Today and Tomorrow will be given each third Sunday until the book is completed.

—The Cultivator.

Calgary, Ontario

Pastor, A. D. McLeod

Calgary branch held its annual business meeting in the church on October 2. Officers elected for the coming year are A. D. McLeod, pastor; C. O. Diaper, solicitor; Isabella Shaw, secretary; Doris Shaw, treasurer; S. R. Walker, church school director; J. Simpson and F. L. Dickson, auditors; Gale Gibson, reporter; Gladys Cobb, director of music; and Rene Cobb, cradle roll superintendent.

A roast beef supper and movie which preceded the meeting netted twenty dollars for the building fund.

—S. R. Walker, reporter.

Middletown, Ohio

Pastor, Leonard Barker

Leonard W. Barker was elected pastor at the business meeting held September 11; he succeeds his brother, Claude D. Barker, who served in this capacity for approximately ten years. Other officers are Jacob Halb, associate pastor and church school director; Mary Stults, clerk; L. W. Barker, treasurer and bishop's solicitor; Mrs. Edith Sintz, book steward, librarian, and reporter; Wanda Thomas, director of music; Emma Stults, assistant church school director; Naydean Rudicil, secretary; Mrs. Helen Miller, assistant secretary; D. L. Culp, treasurer; Cambooster; and Mrs. Edith Nemcic, young people's supervisor. At an earlier date, Mrs. Dorothy Sander was elected leader of the women's department, with Mrs. Ruth Helsing as assistant; Mrs. Rozella Sixt, secretary; and Emma Stults, treasurer. Delegates to the fall conference, which will be held at Pleasant Valley branch, were also appointed.

Mt. Vernon, Illinois

Pastor, Rufus Rockett

A farewell party for Seventy and Mrs. Eugene Theys was held at the church in May. Brother Theys served as district president the past three years. Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe and Apostle Arthur Oakman were the speakers on June 9. The young people, under the supervision of Helen Cisne, are studying accredited courses on Thursday evenings. They are in charge of the 11 o'clock service every third Sunday of the month. As a special project, they serve public chicken dinners to raise money. The young adults are striving to promote family and individual worship; they are also supporting the church "book of the month" club movement. Chester Cisne is the book steward; $350 worth of books have been purchased. Birthday offerings for the branch are more than double the amount contributed last year. Sixty per cent of the members are tithepayers, and a total of $1,639.05 has been paid. The $300 Christmas offering goal was reached in June. The women's department recently purchased a grand piano and two pulpit chairs for the church, in addition to donating $600 to the fund being raised to install a new gas-heating system. Max Matthews, who has been church school director for the past two years, was given a farewell party on September 5; he is now a student at Graceland. Officers elected at the annual business meeting on September 9 are Rufus Rockett, pastor; Lowell Wilson, church school director; Chester Cisne, book steward and church school secretary; John Rockett, treasurer; Mebba Hertenstein, director of music; Ruby Ellis, publicity agent, clerk and children's supervisor; Eula Lowry, women's supervisor; Helen Cisne, young adult supervisor; and Betty Deselms, Zion's League leader.

—Ruby Ellis, reporter.

W. Walker, junior teacher; Mrs. Homer Sims, primary teacher; Mrs. Frank Spicer, primary teacher; and Mrs. George Caddell, director of music. Speakers for August and September were J. R. Allen, J. G. Allen, Calvin Swanner, and James Nunley. Billie Walker, Dettie Whitloe, Bettie Bryant, James and Gladys Walker, Mrs. Ed Shannon, Mrs. Irene Vervie, Ima Fay and Bonnie Allen were baptized by Pastor J. R. Allen recently.

—Mrs. Frank Spicer, reporter.

Inglewood, California

Lennox Branch

September 29 was Rally Day at Lennox. The children took complete charge of the church school worship service, using as their theme "The Golden Rule." High light of this service was a skit written and directed by Mayme Blakeman and given by the juniors. This was followed by the awarding of promotion certificates and certificates of progress. After a basket lunch at noon, the officers for the coming year were installed. District President Louis J. Ostertag was the speaker at both morning and evening services.

—Harriet Glaze, reporter.

Oilton, Oklahoma

Members of the Oilton-Drumright group have purchased the stucco church in Oilton which formerly belonged to the Christian Scientists. The first meeting in the new church home was held July 14; the seventy-five attendants included visitors from Tulsa, Stillwater, Seminole, Yale, and Terilton. Seventy Glen Johnson and Elder W. J. Sherman were the speakers, assisted by B. F. Pollard, Noah and Ben Wise, Arlie Stevens, and Brother Elwell. A basket dinner was served at noon.

—Mary Slover, reporter.

Apostle McConley Rotary Speaker

Apostle M. A. McConley gave an interesting talk at the October 7 meeting of the Bald Knob, Arkansas, Rotary Club. He related some of his experiences in Hawaii before and during the war. He praised the Hawaiians for their patriotism and loyalty to the United States, and expressed the hope that someday there would be another star, representing the Hawaiian Islands, added to the flag. He said that America's greatest problem today is lawlessness and ungodliness; he suggested higher ideals and better home training as the remedy.

Delta, Colorado

Pastor, Arthur Rose

Attendance at services has increased since poliomyelitis restrictions have been lifted. Meetings are now being held in the Seventh-Day Adventist Church on Sunday mornings; prayer services, Sunday evening classes, and women's meetings are held in private homes. The new church building will be finished as soon as materials are available. Six young people from Delta: Gordon, Joe, and Trudora Harshman, Blen, Bob, and Barbara Rose, are attending Graceland, Charles Kornman, a Graceland graduate, is leader for the young people that are left.

—Mrs. Lura Craven, reporter.

Chicago, Illinois

First Chicago Congregation

Pastor, Lyman Jones

Speakers for the month of September were D. M. Wiesen, B. A. Lenox, Joseph Baldwin, and Luther Troyer. Special music for the services was provided by Margaret Mason, Helen Skinner, Donald Mee, and Paul Deaver; a musical reading was given by Ruby Henson. Elmer Gelhorn was baptized September 25 by Buren Lenox; the confirmation service was held the following week with D. M. Wiesen and A. O. Skinner officiating. The annual business meeting and election of branch officers took place on September 20. A delegation of Saints from First Chicago attended the institute held in Aurora. Kimiyo Yamane from Kalihi Branch in Honolulu is a recent addition to the congregation.

—Velva Castins, reporter.

Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin

Elder Arthur Davenport, who assisted in the August 11 confirmation service, will celebrate his eightieth birthday on January 6. Although handicapped by poor eyesight and partial deafness, he is still an active member and attends services every Sunday. He served the branch as pastor for many years; his son, Phillip Davenport, is the present pastor.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, Joseph Breshears

District President William Patterson visited the branch September 1. Patriarch R. V. Hopkins spent three days visiting with the Saints and giving blessings. The recently-organized Oriole group presented a candlelight service on September 15, at which the girls enumerated the ideals of the Oriole movement. Many of the young people attended the fellowship meeting in Joplin on September 8. The children's division has completed its year's project of learning an alphabet of Bible verses, one each Sunday. The women's department has adopted the "circle plan" for the new year; Edith Cox is chairman of the study group, and Eliza Culp is in charge of the quilts. Thirty of the Springfield Saints recently held a covered-dish luncheon at the home of Emory Marvel in Republic; missionary work in Republic has just been started. Infant Lana Marie Davis of the Republic mission was blessed by R. H. Evans and Francis Bishop. Harry and Eleanor Binkley were baptized on September 1, and Marvin Nickels on September 22.

—Charlcie Yeoman, reporter.

Sacramento, California

Pastor, Myron R. Schall

A meeting of the district bishopric was held in Sacramento on July 27 and 28, to complete plans for the reunion. J. A. Damron of Tulare was the speaker on the morning of July 28. Mrs. Damron sang a solo. On the same dates the local Zion's League entertained young people from San Jose and Tulare branches at a carnival, an early morning prayer meeting, and a lunch. At the church school hour on August 4, George Santos was baptized; he was confirmed at the Communion service. Bruce Richard, infant son of Deacon and Mrs. Reuben Cline, was blessed at this service. A drama entitled "Your Church And Mine" was presented under the direction of Mabelle Nephew at the evening service on August 18. A number of Sacramento Saints attended the district reunion. Seventy George Njeim gave the Communion address on September 1. Robert Colville was ordained to the office of priest at this service. Brother Njeim met with the priesthood in the afternoon, and was the evening speaker.

Annual rally day was observed on September 29. The church school hour was devoted to promotion day exercises, in which each group of the church school was represented. Pastor Myron Schall delivered the eleven o'clock sermon, and the choir, after a vacation of two months, sang two anthems. Roll call was a feature of the dinner served at noon by the women's department. The program included salutes to the national and church flags, the reading of a short history of Sacramento branch, a brief address by District President L. A. MacDonald, and several musical numbers.

The annual branch business meeting and election of officers was held on September 30. Apostle John W. Rushton and Elder Laurence MacDonald presided. Elizabeth Schall was elected church school director, succeeding Hazel Blohm. Mrs. Mary Honeychurch will succeed Mrs. Schall as leader of the women's department. The pastor and all other incumbent officers were sustained.

—Lena Swaney, reporter.

Evergreen, Alabama

Pastor, Raymond M. Sharpe

The annual business meeting was held September 22 with District President M. L. Draper in charge. Officers elected for the coming year are Raymond Sharpe, pastor and Zion's League supervisor; Marvin Snowden, secretary; Mary Johnson, treasurer; J. T. Coleman, church school superintendent; Bertha Johnson, women's supervisor; Katheryn Snowden, director of music; and Melvin Johnson, publicity agent. Pastor Sharpe is teaching a Sunday evening class on The Enduring Word.

—Melvin Johnson, reporter.

Fargo, North Dakota

Pastor, C. R. Rotzien

The Rally Day theme was "Laborers Together With God." The church school presented a dramatization of the church and home working together. Pastor C. R. Rotzien gave an illustrated lecture on the Good Samaritan, and showed colored films of Mexico. Elder C. F. Young was the guest speaker.

The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting: C. R. Rotzien, pastor; Mrs. J. E. Hennermann, church school director; Mrs. J. F. Rotzien, secretary and publicity agent; Karl Schiebold, treasurer and solicitor; Mrs. Willis Freeman, pianist;

Mrs. Arlie Peterson, director of music; Leonard Loberg, Mrs. Lillian Schoeler, and C. R. Rotzien auditing committee; Ray Shackow, Karl Schiebold, and Leonard Loberg, building committee; Mrs. Lillian Schoeler, adult supervisor and women's leader; Mrs. Charles Young, young people's supervisor; Mrs. Irene Rotzien, children's supervisor; and Earl Rotzien, janitor. Mrs. Karl Schiebold was selected to head the flower committee.

—Irene Rotzien, reporter.

Brockton, Massachusetts

Pastor, J. Ernest Megablin

Progress is being made in redecorating the church. The interior has been painted, and the building committee is supervising other necessary repairs. A supper and social are being planned by the women's department to help finance the project. Department leaders elected to serve the coming year are: Arvesta Leonard, president; Florence Leonard, vice-president; Beatrice Wright, secretary; Polly Hoxie, treasurer and supervisor of the work committee. A special service was held September 27, at which time Bishop Donald Chesworth spoke on the necessity of tithing. Other recent guest speakers have been Sanford Fisher and George Sinclair, both of Boston.

—Beatrice Wright, reporter.

Eastern Michigan District Conference

The annual conference of the eastern Michigan district was held September 29 at the new church in Cash, Michigan. The day's activities included a prayer service at 9:30 a.m., followed by Elder Harry Simon's sermon at 11 o'clock, and a business session at 1:30 in the afternoon. Officers elected for the coming year are John Booth, district president; Ardrey Murry and John Rogers counselors; Ruth Rogers, secretary; Harmon Fetting, treasurer; Jennie Booth, women's leader; John Rogers, director of religious education; Eldon Winters, young people's leader; Jean Decker, director of music; Jennie Booth and Maude Wilson, auditing committee; John Booth, John Rogers, Ardrey Murry, and Harmon Fetting, budget committee; Maude Wilson, historian; H. E. C. Muir, bishop's agent; and Nettie Isles, publicity agent. The reunion committee of last year was sustained. Representatives from the eastern Michigan district to the Blue Water reunion were selected. John F. Ross, Oswald Campbell, and William Stolliker were recommended for ordination to the Aaronic priesthood; all were approved.

—Nettie Isles, reporter.

Rock Island, Illinois

Pastor, F. C. Bevan

Elder John Banks, pastor of Kirtland Temple, visited Rock Island after attending priesthood institute in Independence, and was the speaker on September 15. The local young people were week-end hosts to the young people from Clinton, Iowa; Joy, Galesburg, and Kewanee, Illinois, recently. An early morning prayer service was held on Sunday, followed by a picnic at Credit Island. The annual branch business meeting was held September 18; officers elected for the coming year are: F. C. Bevan, president; Laurel Jordan, church school director; Lora Sackfield, secretary; O. E. Lindsay, treasurer; Warren Hinkle, Sr., auditor and adult supervisor; Irwin Gunlock, solicitor; Hope Campbell, women's leader; Martha Mercer, librarian; Lillian Williams, director of music; George Sharrar, young people's supervisor; V. J. Witte, publicity agent; Nellie White, historian; Ellen Blake, book steward; and Dottie Oberling, Herald reporter.

—Dottie Oberling, reporter.

Bloomsburg Pennsylvania

Pastor, Walter H. Lewis

The annual business meeting was held September 15; the following officers were elected: Walter Lewis, pastor; John Shaffer, church school director; Lydia Pealer, secretary; Roy Shaffer, treasurer; Clara Fritz, women's supervisor and publicity agent; Rosabelle Shaffer, young people's supervisor; Beatrice Kelchner, pianist; Alice Clugston, chorister; Harold Fritz, church school secretary and treasurer; Iva Shaffer, secretary-treasurer of the women's department; and H. A. Cunningham, auditor.

The women will continue to study the Doctrine and Covenants during the winter. They were in charge of the Palm Sunday and Father's Day services this year, and sponsored both a mother-daughter and father-son banquet. An all-day meeting was held on May 19, with Elders Leroy Squire and Charles Graham in attendance; many of the Saints from Scranton and Archibald were present. A similar meeting was held again on September 22.

Four new members were baptized on May 22; they are Mrs. H. N. Cunningham, Mrs. William Weiss, Christine Kelchner, and Mrs. Richard Stiver. Daris Fedder, Eleanor Hyde, John Weiss, Dorothy, Doramae, and Bernard Guy united with the church on Easter Sunday. A religious drama was given in the evening.

The young people established a playground back of the church as one of their summer projects. A church-school sponsored Rally Day is to be held on October 20; a committee has been selected to plan the program. Already the Christmas offering goal has been reached. A birthday calendar and church directory is being prepared by the women's department.

—Clara Fritz, reporter.

Santa Rosa, California

Pastor, Herbert E. Hinton

Recent visiting speakers have been Elmer Hartsough of Redwood City and Emery Parks of San Francisco. Seventeen members of the Santa Rosa congregation attended the district reunion at Asilomar. Promotion day services for the church school were held on Sunday morning, September 29. The children themselves presented the program, which included a candlelighting service and the singing of the "Old Rugged Cross." Roger Hinton sang a solo and Etta Holst, church school director, awarded the certificates.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Budworth, both recently returned from the service, are in charge of the boy's club and Blue Bird girls. Club meetings and field trips are scheduled twice monthly for Sunday afternoons. Missionary work is being promoted in Bloomfield in a school age group; these children are permitted to leave during school hours for religious education. Five nonmembers, out of a possible twenty protestants, are attending. The gospel is being presented through songs, flannelgraph stories, and class discussions. The Stepping Stones and Zion's Hope, a Bible picture leaflet, and a church tract which have served as a basis of the day's lesson, are given each child to take home. The tracts are for the parents; thus a foundation is being laid for missionary work with the adults.

In July the social committee sponsored a covered-dish supper and wiener roast at the Budworth home in Sebastopol. The September social event was a gathering at the Mankins home in Windsor, where hymn singing, storytelling, and a wiener roast comprised the evening's entertainment. Members of the women's department are making quilts and fancywork for the bazaar to be held in December.

—Romla Hinton, reporter.

Mapleton, Kansas

Pastor, Lee Quick

An impressive baptismal service was held at 9 o'clock on Sunday, June 9, when six children and three adults united with the church. A Children's Day program was presented in the evening. The vacation Bible school, which ended July 14, had an average daily attendance of fifty-one, with thirty-nine of the students attending every session. It was held in the schoolhouse; the separate rooms and modern equipment were a decided advantage. A review of the work done was given on the last Sunday evening; a number of visitors were present on this occasion.

Several of the Mapleton Saints attended Columbus reunion. District President William Patterson was the 11 o'clock speaker on Sunday, June 16. He was also present for the annual business meeting. Ruby Wellington, junior supervisor, conducted a promotion day exercise on September 29, after which officers elected for the coming year were installed at a candlelighting ceremony. A leadership training class has been organized, and is held each Tuesday evening at the church. The course selected for study is Lydia Wight's The Church School.

—Lila McCollam, reporter.

Wenatchee, Washington

Pastor, W. J. B. Buckingham

The annual business meeting was held September 22; officers elected to serve the coming year are Ken Sheffer, church school supervisor; Frank Basinger, secretary-treasurer; Dean Landon, publicity agent; Ken Sheffer, Zion's League supervisor; Mary Jane Gilstrap, director of music; Alberta Gilstrap, pianist; and Lizzie Crocker, women's supervisor.

On August 26 the Brewster Mission and Wenatchee Saints met at Lake Chelan for a picnic honoring four young people, Robert Buckingham, Dewey Chandler, Virginia Chandler, and Lena Johnson, who were leaving for Graceland. In the afternoon Charles Scott, Dean and Wayne Landon were baptized by J. F. Curtis.

Vancleave, Mississippi

Pastor, A. G. Miller

The following branch officers were elected on September 14: A. G. Miller, pastor; Mrs. H. E. Jennings, church school supervisor and director of music; H. E. Jennings, treasurer; Mrs. J. D. Tillman, secretary; Mrs. Ruby Goff, women's leader and adult supervisor; Mrs. Ray Booker, young people's supervisor; Mrs. L. P. Hawley, children's supervisor; Katherine Tillman, librarian; J. D. Tillman, custodian. The church school promotion day and installation service were held on October 6. Classes assembled in the various rooms for the distribution of quarterlies, and then all members went to the main auditorium for Communion service. The Zion's League group is studying Cheville's The Bible in Every Day Living. Officers and teachers are organizing a class to study leadership training. The women meet twice a month at various homes to quilt and study; they are taking the course, Building a Zion Home Life. The Leaguers have elected new officers; they have divided into two groups with Ruby Goff and Stover Tillman as captains. The League and women's department sponsored a social on September 6, clearing $110.50 to be added to the fund for the installing of a new heating system in the church. The young people of Escatawpa presented a play, "The Solid Rock," as a feature of the evening. Noll Barnes, pastor of Escatawpa Branch, was the speaker on September 29.

—Myrtle Jennings, reporter.

Southern California District Conference

The Southern California District Conference convened in the Central Los Angeles Church on October 4 and 5. The theme was "Christian Discipleship"; Apostle John W. Rushton and District President L. J. Ostertag were in charge. A devotional service and study classes were held Saturday morning; the business meeting was conducted at 2:30 in the afternoon, at which time all district reports were read. Outstanding among the reports given were those of Bishop D. B. Carmichael, which revealed the excellent financial condition of the district, and F. A. Cool, nonresident pastor, who had contacted over two hundred scattered Saints. Many of these isolated members responded by attending the district reunion.

The following officers were sustained:

L. J. Ostertag, president; F. A. Cool and Herbert Blakeman, counselors; D. B. Carmichael, bishop; Arthur Ballard and Hunter Ferguson, counselors; Phyllis Richardson, secretary and recorder; Glen Holmes, director of religious education; Lewis Scott, young people's leader; Madeline Ostertag, women's supervisor; Luella Wight, director of music; Phyllis Carmichael, historian; and Arlie Austin, auditor. The conference accepted the recommendations and provided for the ordination of John Davis to the office of elder; Douglas Clark and Earl Clayton to the office of priest; Clarence Smith and Lewis Ferguson to the office of teacher; Austeen Johnson, Donald Hada, and Harold Fowler to the office of deacon.

Seventy George Njeim was the speaker on Saturday evening. Sunday's services included a priesthood meeting conducted by Apostle Rushton; study classes for all age groups; a women's meeting with Mrs. L. J. Ostertag in charge; and a Communion service. Before the emblems were served, Judith Loraine, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Stevens, was blessed by Elders L. J. Ostertag and Garland Tickemyer.

—Phyllis Carmichael, reporter.

Miami, Florida

Pastor, H. P. Kelly

Attendance is returning to normal now that the summer vacation season is over. Many of the local group attended General Conference and the Gulf States Reunion. Pastor H. P. Kelly and most of the officers elected last year were sustained at the recent business meeting. Weekly staff meetings are to be held for the planning of more effective services. Preparation is also being made to accommodate the anticipated visitors during the winter. The church address is 3901 Northwest 37th Court.

—Paul Zellers, reporter.

Stratford, Ontario

Pastor, Howard Schlatzbauer

Carroll Maslen and Ruth Gleason were baptized on June 2 by Pastor Howard Schlatzbauer. Four children were blessed on June 16: they are Karen Beck, infant daughter of David and Della Smith; Glen, Murray, and Melba, children of Fred and Viola Schlatzbauer. William Archer, William Baine, Russell Atkins, and Howard Schlatzbauer were the officiating ministers. Approximately sixty people attended the church school picnic on June 19. District President Almer Sheehy of London visited Stratford on June 23; William Leney was ordained to the office of elder at this time. Albert Maslen was baptized on July 28 by Elder Leney, and confirmed by Evangelist Benson Belrose of Owen Sound. The women's department sponsored a picnic for the branch on August 31.

London, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

On the week end of September 13-15, the Ontario Religious Education Institute was held in London; fifty-one registered delegates and many visitors were present. The theme was "More Effective Religious Education in Our Typical Branches"; Dr. F. M. McDowell and Elder John Darling of Independence were the institute leaders.

Zion's League officers for the coming season have been elected, and the new council has drawn up and presented to the members a tentative schedule for the year. Three groups, each of which will be responsible for one meeting a month, have been formed and assigned themes. Helena Loot is leader of the fireside group; Charles Tomlinson is in charge of the religious education group; Bill Moore and his assistants will plan the features for education night. The pastor will conduct one service each month; and, when there are five Sundays, the music director, Win McCoy, will be responsible for the program.

Edna Gail, infant daughter of Neal and Minnie McLean, was blessed Sunday, September 29, by Evangelist J. C. MacGregor and A. G. Hodgson. Elder P. E. Farrow, of the Council of Presidents of the Seventies, ministered to the London Saints from September 8 to 15.

Growing Pains

By MABEL HOLMAN

TODAY MANY young people are restless and seem to lack a high-reaching goal. We think we want one thing, and when it is accomplished, the taste it leaves somehow turns sour, so we try another. It, too, fails to satisfy. We wonder if our adventurous appetites have grown abnormal with the war years. But, you say, this restlessness is characteristic of adolescence, and we are YOUNG! And we reply that if we were wholly satisfied with things as they are, there would be no stimulus for growth.

Yet, as church youth, we have always wanted to have our chosen professions fit in with the total church "Zion-building" movement in a logical and profitable manner. I believe we still feel that way.

We need help in making our choices, in choosing a vocation. We need to see the possibilities in the contributing factors of all worthwhile effort toward kingdom-building. We need to see that every bit of profitable work in the church and community can become kingdom-building experience if we seek the true Christian objective.

Then all types of work can challenge us. Sometimes we may even need to see that it is not necessarily the "glamorous" job that puts over a project, but the simpler task in the background that determines successful outcome. This work-a-day world requires some people to act out the supporting roles.

Our age still craves that reassuring sense of belonging to something bigger than we are, of being a definite and contributing part of the total church's plan for progressive action, of doing more than just adequately "filling our niche." We want participation in a movement that provides greater opportunity for service and achievement.

It seems to me that we as church youth, can never be accused of losing high ideals, nor can we be accused of never dreaming nor projecting ourselves into rosy futures. But too frequently we are forced to

Here Is the Writer . .

MABEL HOLMAN

Mabel Holman is one of Washington's most devoted daughters. Born and reared in Seattle, she speaks of "The Sound" and Lake Washington in the same nostalgic tones a native Texan uses when referring to the Long Horn State. Mabel is equally sold on Graceland, however, and frequently goes back to the old campus haunts for a week-end visit. She is a 1943 graduate and was editor of the "Acacia" that year. Since then, she has been employed as advertising and layout woman for the Herald Publishing House. During the summer she represents the "Pub" at reunions. The 1946 season was a bright one in her life because she was assigned to Silver Lake and Colorado Springs.

admit that we cannot foresee the practical means of bringing these ambitions and goals of ours to their fullest realization.

During the war we were united, old and young together, by the one supreme effort to win the victory. All the procedures of our daily living became stereotyped. We were banded together by a goal outside and larger than ourselves. And we responded willingly. Now, as nations, we find ourselves caught in a backlog of international misunderstandings, material shortages, and political controversies. Labor problems meet us at every turn. We feel even less secure when we "screen" this evident confusion for a logical conclusion that will be a decisive factor in safe-guarding the future. Yet throughout all these experiences young people have kept the Christian motive constant.

At one time, not too far back, we heard much about "doing first things first" or taking first steps first. After witnessing a world racked with turmoil and strife, we have become somewhat baffled, and we fear our inability to recognize primary steps in any undertaking. And yet we have returned from the activities of warfare resolved to find a vital plan of action. We are in "dead earnestness" about it. We have seen the "age gap" in the church's manpower due to the severe retrenchment of the tragic thirties, and we are concerned that the church will not be faced with a similar "age gap" in membership because this generation finds it necessary to shop around for challenging opportunities.

As Latter Day Saint young people, we are interested in living our religion every day. This means that we wish to have a "plus quality" in our lives. We know that this quality can neither be tacked on nor used as a surface coating. On this we are agreed. We recognize that these experiences of everyday living must be interwoven with the Christian objective, must be so closely knit together, that out of these enriched experiences the "plus quality" will rise inherently. We see opportunities for service and achievement, for work yet to be done in the fields of radio, journalism, education, community-planning, homemaking, the arts and sciences, and the business world.

We understand that the larger goals of the church must be accomplished through the combined efforts of all age groups. Yet we want and need the feeling of strength within our own ranks. True, this feeling of strength within themselves was the selfish factor that motivated Hitler Youth. It is staggering to think what might have been if the power there had been harnessed to the Christian motive that "all men are brothers," and the people had been taught that community improvement and national advancement should meet the needs of all peoples and not favor any one nation or age group. Young people can work in the problem of the whole without losing their identity as a group through the expression of their own characteristics, just as bright threads in a fabric can be seen, although they are one part of the total pattern.

We seek to express our energies and talents in the forward-moving program of a revitalized church with inspired leadership. We have sufficient numbers to support an accelerated program of activities; to be stimulated through guided experiences in the mediums of radio, drama, music, literature, and all the varied art forms; perhaps to originate and maintain our own publication in which we may realize the full significance of the "freedom of the press"; to enjoy inspirational and recreational experiences with full opportunity for social "give and take"; and "to meet together often" in an expanded program of youth camps, rallies, conferences, and discussion groups.

The challenge of the new day demands that we be realistic. Our support goes to the program that holds promise of satisfaction through active participation and stimulates growth by encouraging initiative. The goals on our NEW HORIZONS must be ever-expanding. As we gain one objective, a new goal should challenge us on the horizon of tomorrow.

Tips for the "Meager-Salaried"

QUESTION:

I am a working girl, making a meager salary. So far, I haven't been able to figure out a satisfactory budget that includes all "needs and just wants" and still leaves money for tithing, recreation, savings, and higher education. Can you suggest a percentage basis budget that will provide for these?

ANSWER:

By Bishop Walter Johnson

It is almost impossible to suggest a budget based on percentages of the total income which is adequate or helpful. Even a family budget, as started on a percentage basis, is used only as a rough guide or index.

May we raise a question covering your salary which you describe as "meager"? Is it really necessary for you to work for a meager salary? Do you have skills or experience which might enable you to make a much better living elsewhere? We realize it is possible that you are working for an organization or in a field of work which does not pay its employees generously. You may even be engaged in a family business in which everyone concerned is receiving a small salary. In such cases, there should be some compensating factors which justify your continuing in your present employment. These may be the permanency of the position, the opportunities for advancement, chances to learn a business or trade, or some other compensating factors.

If you feel that you should continue in your present employment, you should accept the low salary gracefully and give close attention to the budget in order that your dollars do as much as possible for you. I would suggest checking your basic needs carefully with a view to making some adjustments to reduce the cost, if this is possible.

In this you must be careful not to be economical at the expense of health, efficiency, and a wardrobe which is in keeping with your work. You may be able to reduce your necessary living expenses so that you can show a fairly substantial proportion of increase. Perhaps you can live on an expenditure of seventy-five per cent of your income for necessities. Out of the increase, you should pay your tithing and plan your recreational, savings, and educational program.

These are your "just wants," but you will need to watch your miscellaneous tithable expenses carefully as it is easy for all of us to expand our wants until they consume a large portion of our income.

You probably are relying largely on your own efforts to pay for a higher education. This will call for the exercising of a great deal of will power in limiting your expenditures to what may be regarded as essential. It should be helpful to attempt to save a certain amount each month. Make this a reasonable amount, not an impossible one, and then stick to your plan unless it is absolutely necessary to deviate from it. Your wants may have to be cut drastically for the next few years, and your increase used almost entirely for your educational program. If you keep your eye on the worthy goal you have set for yourself, you will find that you can sacrifice many things without being bothered by the temptation to indulge in self-pity.

You probably are using the "Youth Income and Expense Record," published by the church for the use of its young people. Many of our young church members have found it very helpful for record-keeping and budgeting procedure. You undoubtedly realize that there is no easy way of bud-

Our Departed Ones

WILKERSON.—Lema, passed away at her home in Vanleave, Mississippi, on October 1; she was born September 9, 1890. She became a member of the Reorganized Church several years before her death. She is survived by her husband, Mack; three sons, three daughters, two sisters, two brothers, and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Vanleave Church, Pastor A. G. Miller officiating. Burial was in the church cemetery.

FAULDS.—William Siddons, was born August 10, 1864, at Aylmer, Ontario, and passed away at Toronto, Ontario, on September 18, 1946. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1894, ordained a deacon in 1904, and a teacher in 1909. Some of the finest stage settings for church plays were the works of his hands; he was also an active member of the orchestra.

He is survived by his wife, Minnie; a son, William; a daughter, Mrs. Mary McKay, and three grandchildren, all of Toronto. He also leaves a sister, Mary Faulds, of Chicago, Illinois, and a brother, Edward Faulds, of Toronto. Funeral services were held at the McDougall and Brown Funeral Home in Toronto, Elder J. L. Prentice and James A. Wilson officiating. Interment was in the Park Lawn Cemetery.

GATHERIDGE.—Barbara Maxine, a member of the Indianapolis, Indiana, branch, and a resident of Indianapolis for fifteen years, passed away on September 15, 1946, following a long illness. She would have been thirty years old in December. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church, Evangelist Arthur Gage and Elder Charles A. Nolan officiating. She is survived by her husband, Marion Gatheridge; a two-year-old son, Billie; her mother, Mrs. Charles G. Lee; and a sister, Mrs. Yvonne Marshall.

SHIPPY.—William Edwin, son of George and Sophronia Shippy, was born June 12, 1900, in Hersey, Michigan, and died September 5, 1946, at the Prince Albert Sanitarium in Canada. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of nine in Lamoni, Iowa. With his parents, he moved to Saskatchewan as a young man, returning to the States for eleven years, and then going back to the Jordan River district in Canada. He was married to Marjorie Niles on December 8, 1943; one daughter was born to this marriage.

Besides his wife and daughter, Enid Marie, he leaves his mother and one brother, Joseph, all of Jordan River. Funeral services were conducted by Elder W. J. Cornish at the home. Interment was in the Tisdale Cemetery.

LANGS.—M. Annetta, was born in Aurora, Ontario, and died June 18, 1946, in Port Huron, Michigan. Her husband, Morly Langs, preceded her in death in 1923. She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Phillip Teeple; a son, Frederick R.; two sisters: Mrs. Alberta Soerhoff and Mrs. Earl Gardener; two brothers: Frank and Robert Kline; and five grandchildren. Elders J. N. Muir and J. A. Pray officiated at the funeral service.

CARLSON.—W. J., son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Carlson, was born at Gilmore City, Iowa. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1888. For twenty years he worked as an engineer on the Northern Pacific Railroad; during this time he lived in Jamestown, North Dakota. In 1922, he and his family moved to Miami, Florida, where he lived until his death in April, 1946, at Rochester, Minnesota.

He leaves his wife; two sons: Esley and Russell of Miami; three brothers: Arthur and Wil of Montana, and Joseph of Duluth, Minnesota; and three sisters: Mrs. W. O. Eckley of Dickens, Iowa; Mrs. J. B. Snyder of Tacoma, Washington, and Mrs. A. H. Dathe of Barnum, Minnesota. Interment was in the Graceland Memorial Cemetery at Miami, Florida.

ODOM.—William Augustus, was born May 4, 1866, in Milton, Florida, and died September 28, 1946, at his home near McKenzie, Alabama. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church as a boy, and served many years in the Aaronic priesthood. He was a faithful worker, a kind father, and a good neighbor.

He is survived by his wife, Florence; five daughters: Mrs. Pearl and Mrs. Lillie Sellers of Kennett, Missouri; Mrs. Annie Parker and Mrs. Bessie Salter of McKenzie; and Mrs. Lottie Caldwell of Foley, Alabama; five sons: Aubrey and Burton of McKenzie; Frank of Pensacola, Florida; Wayne of Citronelle, Alabama; and Lomax of Nortonville, Kansas; twenty-nine grandchildren, and twenty great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Pleasant Hill Church, Seventy M. L. Draper officiating. Burial was in the church cemetery.

DAHL.—Mattie, was born November 10, 1896, at Carmyle, Illinois, and passed away August 31, 1946, at Southgate, California, where she had resided for twenty-two years. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on April 20, 1913, and was ever faithful to its teachings.

She is survived by her husband, Charles J. Dahl; four daughters: Mrs. Myrtle Olson, Huntington Park, California; Mrs. Thelma Maschke, Santa Barbara, California; Mrs. Florence Brackenberger, North Hollywood, California; and Mrs. Helen Cook, Maywood, California; two sons: Ray and William Swinney, both of Southgate; fifteen grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Central Los Angeles Church, Elder John Blackmore officiating. Interment was in the Inglewood Cemetery.

CLARKE.—Adeline Martha, was born April 28, 1878, in Yorkshire, England, and died August 27, 1946, at Venice, California. She was married to Charles Frederick Clarke on March 16, 1908, in London, with whom she traveled over Europe, England, Canada, and the United States as a professional circus performer. In 1916 they established their home in Madison, Wisconsin, later moving to the west coast. Mrs. Clarke was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1910, and always lived a devoted Christian life.

She leaves to mourn her husband; three daughters: Oletha Eyster, Oakland, California; Adeline Morris and Catherine Burslam, Venice, California; one son, Charles S. Clarke, also of Venice; and three grandchildren. Services were held in Venice by Elder John Blackmore. Interment was in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Glendale, California.

WILLIAMS.—Evelyn Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Arlie Austin, was born February 2, 1910, in Colorado Springs, Colorado, and passed from this life on August 23, 1946, in Los Angeles, California. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on March 3, 1921, and for many years was a soloist for the Central Los Angeles congregation. Over a year ago she was stricken with a fatal disease; during the months of her intense suffering, she was faithfully attended by her parents and sister, Mrs. Thelma Horner. Elder John Blackmore conducted the funeral services; interment was in the Inglewood Cemetery.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent, or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives.

If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day, and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

Plans

By Iva Merrill

I've made so many lovely plans
And you perhaps have made them too—
They varied down to little things,
Such splendid things, I planned to do.

For instance, I would save the dimes
For each and every worth-while drive,
I'd buy more seals at Christmas, and Slip the "Red Cross" an extra five.

I made big plans for the relief,
I'd gladly give both coats and shoes,
Besides some outgrown baby things
That many mothers now could use.

Oh, I was proud of all my plans
For some were almost born of tears,
And then one day they all spoke out,
Just fairly shouted, in my ears!

We are the plans that you have made,
God knows that we are fine and true;
But now he's waiting for the deeds,
The things that you have planned, to do.

Then suddenly I knew that God
Expectantly, had looked them o'er;
Had sadly checked them, one by one,
Just lovely plans—and nothing more.

* SONGS

The Herald Editors are making a collection of songs originated and used by our people: camp songs, young people's songs, special occasion songs, hymns, and all others. If you have found some special songs not given in our "Hymnal" to be of interest or value, please send us a copy of the words. Some indication of the tune used will be good; or, if the tune is a new one, a copy of the music will be appreciated. It is possible that a time will come when these songs can be made available to all of our people, and such a collection will be of value.

* OLD WARS

On a recent day, clearing out some old books, we came across a volume from a set entitled "Roster Iowa Soldiers." This book of 1,222 pages is for what the North quaintly calls "War of the Rebellion," but which we here in the South more accurately call the "War Between the States." Who is being quaint depends on one's viewpoint, of course. And the book is only Volume I, for the first to eighth Regiments Infantry.

By now that war had been formalized and condensed into history, with only the names of the more brilliant leaders recorded and remembered. There is tendency for us to forget the individual men who left homes and families, often causing hardship, who underwent privations, suffered, were killed and wounded or died, or who were discharged either crippled or in fair health.

We must not forget that any war is fought on a personal basis, that the sacrifices and sufferings are personal, the losses are deeply personal. This book lists the names of the "little people"—the ordinary men, who fought and suffered in that war. What was gain for the Union was loss and hardship for them. The triumphs of the nation were won because they gave something for which there was no recompense. We must be mindful of what it costs to fight a war before we allow another one to start.

* LIQUOR

The American people spend only three billion dollars a year on education, but they spend over eight billion on intoxicants, says the American Business Men's Research Foundation. You hear considerable fussing about the taxes, but does anybody consider the terrible waste of our liquor consumption?

* HERALD EMPLOYEES bring their old newspapers to be sold for the employees' entertainment fund, which provides for many pleasant outings during the year. They like to pay for their fun with their own money. Tuesday evening, October 22, brought a high point of good fun and food with a picnic at Slover Park. With the death of OPA (of regrettable memory) it was possible to have plenty of wieners with the buns, cider, and doughnuts. Girls did close harmony in a huddle, while the men performed variously as emcees, directors, and barber shop tenors. When everybody had eaten to capacity, somebody called for the "Shortnin' Bread" song, and seasickness was temporarily threatened, but fortunately avoided. A hefty young man held down one side of a tilting table bench—six little people on the other. He stood up and nearly threw them on the floor, till they asked him to sit down again.

"SIN," says Uncle Joe, "is like old-fashioned Tanglefoot fly paper. A fly can be rescued if he gets into it. Sometimes he is lucky to escape by leaving one leg behind. But generally he isn't much good afterward."

The Unity of the FAITH

Our Kind of Unity

There is a famous passage of pastoral admonition which is often quoted in sermons, beginning, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith."—Ephesians 4: 13.

When we observe how our church is filled with "all kinds and conditions of men," people of all types of faith from the plainest uncritical fundamentalists to the most tangled and uncertain of modernists, as well as the calm rationalists in between, we wonder how this "unity of the faith" can ever be attained. And yet we are thankful that people of so many kinds and states of mind can find a spiritual home and fellowship in our faith—that the universality of God's love is so demonstrated in this organization that it can appeal to the world's multitudes and offer them guidance. There have been few heresy trials in our church, and no witch hunts. Only by the most determined, obstinate, and provocative utterance and conduct can a minister get himself silenced in our church, and members cannot enjoy the doubtful pleasure of being ejected without some serious breach of the moral law. While there is no determined lock-step agreement in our faith, there is a determined tolerance. We may discuss and argue, but we don't ordinarily put people out.

This is our present kind of unity. Is it good enough? Does it meet the needs of the hour?

If we were to ask Jesus these questions, is it not probable that he would reply, "One thing thou lackest"—or even several things?

The Greatness of the Gospel

There have been many testimonies in prayer meetings about how great the gospel is—how far beyond limited human comprehension. We prefer to believe that these testimonies are sincerely and intelligently given, most of them after years of experience both in life and in spiritual matters.

This testimony is confirmed in any practical survey of the present ramifications of our church work—and it would be even more true in the future when we expect developments that we cannot now begin to imagine. Even now, it is not possible for any one man to master all the details of missionary work, pastoral work, the financial law, Zionics economics, doctrine, the Book of Mormon, the Bible, church history, and a lot of other things. Any person could and should know something of all these subjects to meet the simple requirements of being a good member; but he shall have to make extraordinary efforts to be a competent authority in even one of them—let alone two or more.

The Lord's Specialists

This brings us to the place in the church for a particular kind of people—the Lord's specialists. These are the good people who spare no effort to read everything that is published on a given subject of their interest. They become competent authorities in it. Their special subject grows in importance in their minds until it overshadows all other branches of the gospel. It is very true (as some of our friends will surely remind us) that not all of the specialists are competent; some of them have excellent memories and no judgment; they know all the texts and understand none of them; they can quote down to the exact comma and semicolon, and miss the whole spirit and intent of the passage, and of the gospel of which it is a part. But we are not speaking of these. We are speaking of the genuine specialists.

The Lord's specialists are competent people. They have good minds, excellent judgment. They are able to give effective instruction in their fields. They are very much needed. They can and do perform a great and necessary work in the church. You have them in every branch, and they enrich the life of your people.

Yet they do not all arrive at "the unity of the faith." Not all of them understand and appreciate each other. And our church cannot achieve a genuine unity of the faith until the Lord's specialists see their departments in relation to the whole design of the gospel; alas, too many of them see their departments as the whole design of the gospel! This is very unfortunate for them and for us all.

"There's Something in That!"

On how many occasions good people, visiting the office, have exclaimed, concerning an article in another field than their own, "There's nothing in that!" What they should say, more accurately, would be, "I see nothing in that!" It would not be true for them to say, "There's nothing in that for me!" because there is, if they would seek it.

It is an editor's task—and a happy one—to appreciate the contributions of every contributor to every field of thought in the church. It is his job to see the Lord's specialists and their works in relation to the whole design and plan of the gospel. He must see that everyone is admitted and given a chance to make his contribution. To the editor, this is the approach to "the unity of the faith."

Of course it is an entirely honest opinion for one man to say of another's work, "There's nothing in it." Honesty is important, but it is not enough. But in so many cases the statement is not true. We should be able to say, "There's something good in that."

"The unity of the faith" cannot be reached until every man sees his work in due proportion, in relation to every other man's work, and in relation to the whole design and plan of the gospel through the ages. "The unity of the faith" requires understanding, appreciation, tolerance, knowledge. Every person's education should make him an expert, a specialist in some field; but it should also give him an approach to the whole realm of truth; it should be general, as well as specific and particular.

It is entirely possible for us to "come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God," but we shall have to make an effort to do it.

Europe Very Sick

(Permission to quote granted by the Editors of The Christian Century.)

Mr. Paul Hutchinson, an editorial writer for Christian Century, after visiting Europe, expresses much pessimism in a report to that paper (issue of October 16, 1946). He says, Europe is writhing in its death throes. It has been wounded beyond hope of recovery. Its end is at hand.

The physical restoration of its cities can be accomplished, "given an honest chance"; but, he asks, "What will repair the inward damage, the spiritual destruction?"

Note that I do not ask what can, but what will repair these inward ravages. Nothing. Something has happened to Europe's ideas of honor, of morality, of faith, hope, and charity which goes so deep that no restorative power now in evidence will measure up to the task of restoration.

If Editor Hutchinson is correct, it would appear that the United Nations, which depends solely for its success on the good faith and honor of the signatory powers, may hold little promise of permanent security.

Basically, the problem is spiritual. . . . But when it comes to the moral reinvigoration of European life—well, it just isn't happening and the churches give small sign of expecting it to happen.

The fact is that most European church life at this moment is desperately engaged in a struggle for survival. . . . There are few churches there which do not leave the impression of having their backs to the wall.

One does not find the same apprehension of the morrow at the Vatican, but one finds something else which will as effectively keep Roman Catholicism from bringing about the moral revival of Europe. That is the obsession with the Communist threat. I am not denying the reality of this threat to religion or its power in European life. But Europe's moral resurrection requires something more affirmative than simply a determination to fight Communism everywhere it lifts its head. While the whole weight of the church is thrown into the pope's holy war on the Kremlin, the Roman Church is running the great risk of finding itself in a few years fighting with the Russians for the possession of a moral corpse.

He closes his report by saying, "The old Europe will not, cannot recover. It has been destroyed. Most of its people will live, for all the rest of this generation, in misery and fear," and he warns that "if the riches of America are finally exhausted in that struggle, the America we know can hardly survive."

The eastern world is sick—desperately sick. Does it have recuperative power to survive? If self-preservation is the first law of nature, it may yet become our greatest concern.

Bancroft's Native Races

An extra set of the famous work, Bancroft's Native Races, complete in five volumes, bound in half-Morocco, is made available by Mansel T. Williams, 1210 West Waldo, Independence, Missouri. Those interested may write to Brother Williams for further details.

Correction

An error was made in the feature, "Spiritual Gifts at Reunion," which appeared in the October 19 issue. The statement, "Apostle Oakman interpreted two of the prophecies," should read, "Apostle Oakman interpreted two of the tongues."

Note of Appreciation

I wish to thank all who remembered my sister, Zola Grace Perkins, in their prayers. She is still in the State Hospital at Vinita, Oklahoma, but is steadily improving. She has suffered several setbacks, but such is to be expected. Please continue to remember her in your petitions; also pray for my companion, who is not a member of the church.

THE REVELATIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH III

By F. Henry Edwards
Of The First Presidency

Joseph Smith III, the second president of the church, who gave fifty-four years of his life to gathering and strengthening the Reorganization, was born on November 6. At this time of year, we remember with gratitude the great and good man who occupies so important a place in our history. President Edwards here gives us a valuable interpretation of the meaning of the prophetic leadership of "Brother Joseph"

I.

THE FIRST PRESIDENT OF the church initiated a new religious movement, or, rather, a return to the ancient order which had long since been lost. His son regathered the elements of this movement after the Saints had been deceived and disheartened and scattered. The work of these two leaders differed greatly, but since they were both of prophetic quality of heart and mind, the younger Joseph Smith revealed Divinity in his day and time even as his father had done in an earlier day and situation.

If the revelations of Joseph Smith III are studied by paragraphs, it will be found that the task of classifying them exhaustively is an almost impossible one. They do not fit accurately into any rigid groupings. It is nevertheless helpful to note the paragraphs which introduce or conclude the revelations, those which have to do with organization, ministerial duties, and administrative procedure, the specific calls to the priesthood, and the admonitions to the priesthood or to the church at large.

In studying these paragraphs, it is extremely important to have their historical settings well in mind and also to know the interpretations placed on them in later years by President Smith and those closely associated with him. This necessity arises out of the fact that many of the communications were presented to the councils and the conferences in response to specific prayer concerning urgent situations, and the instruction received was put to work almost immediately.

Of the one hundred and fifty-one paragraphs in the inspirational communications of the late President Joseph Smith, seven are introductory paragraphs, seven are concluding paragraphs, twenty-five are of almost exclusively historical interest, and twenty-three others are concerned with naming persons for ordination to the presiding quorums. The remaining one hundred paragraphs have to do with the structure of church organization, the duties of officers, procedure in administering the affairs of the church, and similar matters. This analysis gives an idea of the preoccupation of the Saints with the development of the church structure. The pioneers of the Reorganization built slowly and painfully from small beginnings and were in constant conflict with "foes without and fears within." The "foes without" are not much in evidence in these revelations, but the "fears within" constantly make themselves felt.

Reflection on the fact that five out of six paragraphs in his inspired communications to the church have to do with church organization may give a false impression of the prophetic ministry of Brother Joseph. Certainly President Smith's prophetic leadership covered a much wider range than this. Some of his most truly prophetic work was accomplished in personal contacts with his associates, in his shaping of official procedures and points of view in quorum work, and in his fifty years of service as editor of the Saints' Herald. A careful study of the total ministry of this truly great man will reveal that the documents presented under inspiration, but also under urgent conference necessity, do not embody the full measure of his wise and liberal prophetic leadership.

II.

President Joseph Smith built the strength of the church in the Saints, in the priesthood, and in the quorums. An extended discussion of the inspired counsel received through him and embodied in the Doctrine and Covenants is not possible in the space available, but a brief indication of the major emphases seems to be necessary.

The revelations lay great emphasis on the development of a sense of responsibility. In the first document presented by Brother Joseph as Prophet the Saints were told: "As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment."¹ Twenty years later, direct responsibility for sustaining or refusing to sustain the leading ministers of the church was placed squarely upon the elders, who were then admonished: "Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."² Again, when the sons of some of the leading officers of the church were being reminded of their calling, this inescapable responsibility was indicated in a most searching manner.³

It is apparent from these revelations that responsibility sometimes rests with the quorums rather than with the individual members of these quorums. Note in this connection the wise and kindly approach made to a crucially difficult situation which culminated in 1890. The Twelve and Seventy had taken a firm stand, which subsequent experience has shown to be unwise. This stand was embodied in an epistle which came before the conference for final action in 1890. But the revelation of that year advised that the epistle be left "without approval or disapproval by the conference, as the judgment of the quorum of twelve, until further experience shall have tested the matters therein stated."⁴ It was not long until the Twelve and Seventy both revised their position in the light of their experience and the counsel of Divinity.

There were also occasions when the whole body of the Saints were made clearly responsible in important crises. An example of this occurred at the conference of 1885 when the voice of inspiration indicated: "J. W. Briggs and Z. H. Gurvey are in your hands, to approve or disapprove as wisdom may direct. Be merciful, for to him who is merciful shall mercy be shown."⁵

A further frequently recurring keynote of the revelations is the call to active service. Five years after he came to the leadership of the church, Joseph was warning the Saints that there was "tribulation and anguish" for those who neglected "to lift up their voices" in the cause of the kingdom.⁶ Eight years later, two members of the Quorum of Twelve were released from further responsibility in that quorum because of inactivity, despite the fact that their release left vacancies in the quorum, and at the same time those who remained as members of the Twelve were admonished to "diligently labor in their ministry."

In one of the great phrases of these revelations, the young men who were called into the apostolic ministry in 1873 were admonished to "magnify their calling in honor" before God; and while this particular phrase was not repeated, it cast its influence over all calls to the ministry that came thereafter. Note, for example, the instruction to the Twelve and Seventy to "push" the preaching of the word.

This exhortation to diligence and aggressiveness is echoed in several of the concluding paragraphs of the revelations. Thus the communication of 1873 says: "be ye diligent, wise, and faithful, doing all things with an eye single for the glory of your God, and the good of his people."⁷

As might be expected, there is constant emphasis and re-emphasis upon the importance of fraternity. For example, the members of the Twelve were early reminded of their dependence upon each other in the instruction that if they would labor diligently the time would come when their quorum would be filled.⁸ From this it appears that if the members of the Quorum of Twelve would magnify their calling, men of apostolic promise would be added to their number soon and with safety, but if those already in the quorum failed to measure up to their responsibilities, then other men would have to mature further outside of the quorum before they could be entrusted with quorum responsibilities.

These emphases on the importance of fraternity cannot here be analyzed in detail, but we may note that the ministry were admonished to "sustain each other in peace,"⁹ to "be patient and be not contentious," to "work together without heat, confusion, or malice,"¹⁰ and to "avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion."¹¹ On occasion the brethren were commended that "though there may have been differences of opinion, these differences have been held in unity of purpose."¹² And in another of the concluding paragraphs which we have been receiving, the Lord said to the elders through Joseph: "Continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end."¹³

III.

The revelations under consideration are so constantly addressed to the rights and duties of the Saints that the best that can be done in the brief space available is to summarize these rights and duties. Here is such a summary. The Saints should:

- Be protected against the arbitrary use of power by their leaders.¹⁴
- Be wise and careful in matters committed to them.¹⁵
- Participate in organizations for good in the church.¹⁶
- Be scrupulously careful not to stand in the way of the return of those who have wandered.¹⁷
- Worship together without contention.¹⁸
- Properly support the priesthood in their places.¹⁹

The emphases made concerning the rights and duties of the priesthood may also be summarized. The brethren are to:

- Deport themselves becomingly.²⁰
- Safeguard the welfare of the Saints.²¹
- Be active in their ministry.²²
- Sustain each other in peace.²³
- Take care lest they abuse their right to free speech.²⁴

IV.

As has already been noted, much of the prophetic ministry of President Smith was concerned with promoting the structural stability of the body. Note, for example, the use made of one of his favorite phrases: "It is expedient." This occurs and recurs in the revelations and seems to indicate timeliness, appropriateness, suitability, and wisdom. Thus it was inexpedient that the presiding quorums should be filled²⁵ or that stakes should be organized²⁶ or that the church should be further commanded at that time, but on other occasions instructions were given filling the quorums, providing for the organization of stakes, and adding to the counsel of the Lord received by the church.²⁷

The concern for stable growth which is manifest in the emphasis on timeliness and wisdom²⁸ which we have just noted was also emphasized in the instruction that the Saints were to build conservatively until they had achieved unity of understanding. They were reminded that the Lord will certainly hasten his work "in its time" but that it was well for the elders of the first

quorums to remain in close contact with each other until the work should be firmly planted and this greater unity of understanding obtained.²⁹ The administrative necessity for obtaining unity of understanding was closely related to the equally important necessity of working together in harmony and peace.³⁰

Throughout the revelations the Saints are admonished to respect the officers of the church in their several places as a means of strengthening the organic structure. At a time when the traveling ministry were practically the only ones who were well posted in regard to church affairs, the local elders were reminded to "more fully honor and pay heed to the voice and counsel of the traveling ministry in spiritual things" and to "be not hasty in withdrawing support from them" lest the work should be injured.³¹ At a later date, when there had been some conflict between the members of the presiding quorums regarding their respective duties, the brethren of these quorums were instructed to recognize those upon whom "the burden of the care of the church is laid."³² Members of the Twelve were advised that they must exercise their ministry "under the direction and counsel of the Presidency" with the evident intention this should not restrict the brethren of the apostolic quorum but should enable them to co-ordinate their efforts effectively for the good of the whole. The principle underlying all this is made clear in the revelation of 1901 which says:

If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.³³

The responsibility for mutual respect and co-operation exists among every officer of the church according to his calling, as well as among the Saints in general and the priesthood in general.

But while there is the repeated emphasis on the rights of direction which must be accorded the priesthood, there is also repeated emphasis on the necessity for building strong local organizations. This is in order that any centralization of power which becomes necessary shall be kept in balance by the growth of ministerial strength in the local centers of church activity throughout the world. The advice and instruction of the members of the traveling councils of the church must clearly have great weight, but these very ministers are instructed to organize the work and set it in order, placing the responsibility squarely on the shoulders of the local priesthood, in order that they themselves may be free to push the work into new fields. This principle is fundamental. Every general officer of the church and every stake and district and branch president is under obligation to share his knowledge and skill with those who are capable of this sharing, so that he may transfer his burdens and be free to make contributions which local leaders cannot make. Just because they are localized and have limited time to contribute.³⁴

Foxe's Book of Martyrs

An inquiry at our bookstore recently for a copy of Foxe's Book of Martyrs sent young members of our staff scurrying around to find the latest publishers' catalogues and announcements. "Is it a new book? Have you seen anything about it?" they asked. The questions stirred up something in the dusty recesses of memory about an old English Literature course.

The author, John Foxe, was born in Boston, Lincolnshire, in 1516, during the reign of Henry VIII. Elected a fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1543, he became interested in theological studies and privately accepted the principles of the Reformation. Under suspicion, he was expelled for heresy in 1545. When Henry died in 1547, the period of tolerance ended, and his Catholic daughter, Mary, began a slaughter of Protestants during her short reign. Foxe had to escape the country. He found refuge in Basel, Switzerland, and made a living as copy editor and proofreader for an eminent printer. When Queen Elizabeth, a Protestant, came to the throne of England, Foxe was able to return home, and was sheltered and pensioned by a former pupil, the Duke of Norfolk.

While at Basel, he planned his great book, Acts and Monuments of the Church, which is commonly called Foxe's Book of Martyrs. It was first printed in a single volume in 1563; reprinted in 1632 and 1641 in three-volume editions; and reached its ninth edition in 1684.

American colonial libraries were generally small, especially in earliest days. They usually contained the Bible, naturally first; then Pilgrim's Progress, by John Bunyan. And very often, if there was a third volume, it would be Foxe's Book of Martyrs. These stories of the sufferings of religious people stirred the faith and determination of Protestants to remain free to worship as they pleased.

Those who are interested can be informed that a recent edition of this famous book has been issued by Winston at $2.50.

The Plowman

By Poul S. Nielsen

And Jesus said unto him, No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.—Luke 9: 62.

WHEN MAN was first driven from the presence of God, he, without doubt, did not have much trouble in finding something to eat, but later on when thorn and thistle started in to fill the earth and make his way of finding a living not quite so easy, things were different. Perhaps he thought to himself that it would be far easier to gather the grain or whatsoever he was eating in those faraway days in some small plot where he would rather live than anyplace else. In planting, the seed must be put in the ground; and what would be more natural for him than to take a stick and scratch the ground at his feet, drop the seed, and then wait until nature took its course and another crop was ready? That was the beginning of the plow—an implement that has seen many changes in the centuries since man first used a crooked stick.

The ancient make of plow—that is, the crooked stick—is still in use in the Far East; sometimes the point is covered with a piece of iron, but at best it will only scratch the surface. In old pictures we can see how people used to hitch their oxen to such plows by tying the animals' tails to the implement. In England it was prohibited by law to use animals in such a way.

After the stick plow, there came some rather cumbersome plows drawn by great yokes of oxen. Often those plows required three drivers, and the results were not all that could be desired. A little more than a hundred years ago, however, the steel plow was invented and has been steadily improved right up to our times. The horse plow followed by the tractor drawn plow—or plows, we should say—is now believed as near perfect as man's inventive genius can make them.

BUT NO MATTER what kind of a plow a person is using, if he plows across a field, he must look forward or ahead to the other side of the field to a certain mark at least for his first furrow; that is, if he wants to make it a straight furrow. If he looks back over his shoulder, the horses or the tractor might deviate a little from the imaginary straight line that he has laid out ahead of him across the field, and the result might be a little curved or perhaps a plow that will jump out of the ground. He must then back up and try again and that spot will show as long as the furrows are lying there without harrowing.

If the first furrow is straight, however, all of the later ones will follow this one and be apt to be straight too.

WHEN JESUS made the statement at the head of this article, he no doubt had in mind the thought that if a person had chosen to follow Christ and His teaching, he should not look backward to the life that he used to live before he made that new choice.

If we have put our hand to the plow of the Lord, we should not look back, but only ahead. We should not wish for worldly pleasures, but only try to do that which is right. We should plow our furrow in such a way in life that the seed that is sown in it can grow and multiply. True enough, it might not always be easy, but if we only remember the harvest that shall come at last, it might ease our loads even though we often think that they are almost too heavy.

It is true enough that the spirit is ready, but that the flesh is weak, and we may at times look back or go back to old habits; then is the time for us to remember our calling and strive to look ahead and step forward in that calling, be that as Saint or as an official of the church. Nothing is ever gained by going backwards in our relation with God.

IT CANNOT BE too strongly urged that all of us should look forward. We cannot conceive of anyone's looking back over his or her life to seek Zion in the past. It is ahead of us. The goal is there, and we will never reach it by partaking of worldly pleasures, thinking that it will not harm us. If we want to be like the Saviour and follow him, may we not ask ourselves the questions when in doubt about taking part in worldly pleasures: "What would Christ do? Would he follow me in here just to see a poor picture show in which perhaps man's nature is portrayed in a not very glorious way, or would he go with me inside a saloon to have only one drink? Would he take a cigarette if I offered one to him? You know the answers as well as anyone.

Another thing about this plowing. A novice cannot expect to plow as good a furrow as an old hand at it. But how did the master plowman get to be what he is? He kept looking ahead and trying to improve his plowing all the time. Eventually he was the master of his job. Can we not, little by little, improve our plowing for the Lord and finally plow a straight furrow? A good plowman uses good seed and improved farm practices. A good Christian will constantly try to improve himself. He will not look backward in order to see if his furrow in life is straight. He will keep his eye on the mark far ahead and not swerve from side to side. He will be using the best of tools that the Lord has given for him to use. He will study the Word and other good books. They are his tools. They will improve him. They will give him confidence to go on to fight the fight against the weeds of the world, a workman not ashamed of his calling, whatever it may be.

What Happened to the Business of the Kingdom?

By J. A. Koehler

Number 9 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE ONLY attempt to institute the civil-mode Kingdom, of which we have detailed information, was made under the leadership of Moses. I speak of the endeavor to establish the Israelites in the land of Canaan as a self-governing people. That Israelitish commonwealth was intended to have been the Kingdom of God.

The principal causes of failure to establish that business permanently, and to develop or promote it until it became "the perfection of beauty" in community life, and the principal causes of its final ruination, are not difficult to discover. And of these causes, particularly those which bear upon the theme of this series of articles, I wish now to speak.

FIRSTLY, the slavery of Egypt had unfitted the Israelites for the business of the Kingdom. The generation that was led out of Egypt by Moses had learned nothing of either the art or science of self-governance; and what is worse, they had become a degenerate people, morally, as the Book of Leviticus in particular testifies. The Israelites not only did not appreciate the leadership of Moses, they even rebelled against it. So, forty years of wilderness wandering, with its hardships, was the price Israel had to pay to recover some of the character she lost in Egypt.

But notwithstanding that disciplinary career, the people that Joshua led into Canaan were not greatly better than the people Moses led out of Egypt. Moses said they would be even more rebellious after his death than before. He said "I know that after my death, ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way I have commanded you." And that does not speak well for the people who crossed the Jordan and settled in Canaan.

SECONDLY, Israel did not underlay the business of the Kingdom with a spiritual foundation that would sustain it. She did not hunger and thirst for the righteousness of the Kingdom; she only longed to reap the fruit of that righteousness. And social orchards are not developed by plucking fruit from the trees, but through the processes of cultivation.

THIRDLY, Israel did not love the peoples to whom her adventure in the business of the Kingdom was to have been a blessing. Therefore she was not sold on the idea of "mission." Her impulsion was to arrange her own affairs, so as to give her an advantage of her neighbors. So the "city" she built—the mode of society, that is—did not turn out to be "the light of the world" city. It did not even prove to be Israel's salvation. In time, it became her damnation.

That means that Israel did not accept her peculiar responsibility for the character of civilization. She did not take the lead in the march of civilization. She was neither inventive nor creative. In science and in the practical arts, she even fell behind other peoples. Her society did not become complex so as to make demands upon her for finer and finer moral discriminations in varying life situations. As an ethical leader, therefore, Israel became a failure.

The truth is that, ethically, Israel slid backward. She did not remain true to her covenant. "Ye exact usury, every one of his brother." Israel became a money grabber, an exploiter, an oppressor of the hireling. She became an acquisitive-minded people. And if there were a real business of the Kingdom, it would be ruined shortly by any people that set its heart on money-getting.

Church men of today need only to contemplate their own affairs to see what happened in consequence of that money-mindedness. As church people today try to make novelty and variety a substitute for progression, so Israel tried to make ritual a substitute for righteousness. And that idea didn't work any better then than it does now. In the end it has always proved to be the ruination of the business of God's people—which is the business of the Kingdom.

FOURTHLY, the next Kingdom-undermining force was Israel's determination to make a willful change in the form of her government. When the sons of Samuel, who were the judges in Israel, "turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment," instead of putting other judges in office who were not grafters, the people said, "Give us a king." Was that because everyone in Israel, who was smart enough to be a judge, was money-minded, so that the only probable way of improving a bad social situation was to subvert the government? Who knows?

We should know what government does to peoples when they leave that business to other hands; for servility, exploitation, and oppression "In all around we see." The business of the Kingdom failed because the only party that could have made it a success, which is "the people," turned it over to other hands.

Incidentally, if you wish to know why, in the very nature of things, government is the business of "peoples," I suggest that you read Why Democracy by Jay William Hudson.

FIFTHLY, another cause of Kingdom failure was Israel's vulnerability to the baneful influences of unprophetic priests, concerning whom Hosea said "ye have been a snare" to "my people." Israel had more than enough trouble on her hands, much of which was of her own making. So in her vicissitudes, like sheep that become panicky in every critical situation, she lost her head. And just as people do today, Israel became little more than pawns in the hands of men whose "wisdom of this world" is their characteristic.

There is a truth which neither former-day nor latter-day Israel seems to have apprehended. That truth is that nature intends a season of mothering influences for every child born into this world. It intends that during the mothering season, the child shall receive a good moral impress, or that it shall be started off in life aright; and so to insure that in manhood it will not go astray. Furthermore, nature intends that after that mothering season has come to an end, the man shall be "on his own." He should "paddle his own canoe."

If the turns of events in the history of Jehovah's people are true indexes, then God intends that everyone of his Kingdom-building peoples shall come, for a season, under divinely ordained mothering influences; and God intends it for the same reason that nature intends each child shall come under such influences. To give an instance and to make a long story short, God provided a mothering influence for Israel in the person of Moses, whose task was to put the impress of the prophetic genius upon its personality, and, in turn, upon its communal life. Moses' business was to get Israel started off on the right foot in the business of the Kingdom. And if we may judge by the regularity of intervals following the careers of all great Kingdom-building prophets—of which there have been only a few: intervals during which such mothering agencies did not exist—God intends that having had time and opportunity to receive the impress of such divinely ordained mothering agencies, the people, in the actual conduct of the affairs of civil society, or of their respective communities, shall be on their own. They, too, shall "paddle their own canoes." As conditioning their own moral perfection, they shall take over and, in the light that had shone and which is still reflected from this person and that—perhaps through the medium of the church, they shall conduct in their own right the business of the Kingdom in its civil mode. I say nature's God intends that peoples, who arrive at the age of Kingdom-building maturity, shall accept responsibility for the proper conduct of that business as the only means of becoming what God intends them to become.
