Home-coming

*I shall go back to a place I know—
Hilltop, elm path; and evergreen
In winter laden down with snow;
And red brick buildings in between;
In summer lush, and gold aglow.
This restless wandering to and fro
Must find its peace in a place I know
That gave me the strength on which I lean
And taught my heart what a friend can mean.*

* OUR GUEST EDITOR

This is to express our appreciation to our guest editor for this issue of the Herald, Mrs. W. C. Moon, well known to many Graceland College students as Cleo Hanthorne Moon, Librarian of Graceland College. Mrs. Moon has endeared herself to the students as a poet of the life on the Graceland campus, and has immortalized its charm in a volume, "The Bell Tower's Eye" from which she has permitted us to reprint some verses in this issue, including the very beautiful poem on the cover.

A great deal of the work done in collecting the materials of this issue, and preparing it for publication, was done by Mrs. Moon. To her, therefore, our sincere thanks.

* YOU WILL PROBABLY NOTICE—

There is a difference in the size of the Herald this week. We have returned to the former size of print page that we used until early in the war. The columns are fourteen picas wide, one less than last week, and the pages are not quite as long. There is more white space in the margin, but not quite as much as before the war, because the paper shortage is still acute. "So far as possible"—and our Business Manager puts heavy emphasis on those words—we shall try to have each issue consist of the standard thirty-two pages we generally had. We cannot make a definite promise, since we cannot foretell what the paper situation will be in coming months, nor when it will improve.

Though the margins are large, they are not quite as spacious as before the war. After all, you can't read margins, and we presumed you would rather have more pages with less margin than fewer pages and more margin. It is one of those inescapable compromises.

Actually, we are well pleased, from an editorial viewpoint, with the appearance of our new pages. And we hope you will like them too.

* COVER CUT

Some of you have kindly praised the new hand-lettered cut on our cover. The artist, Brother Stele Bryant, made several drawings, slimming the strokes of the letters to the desired size. We like the results very well.

* SHORT CUTS. All the short cuts I have ever let foolish friends talk me into taking have turned out to be longer in the end, rougher, more costly, and less satisfactory in results than the original and established way I had intended to go.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

The Future of Graceland College

Greater Graceland

For some years we used a phrase, "Greater Graceland," that expressed our hope of what Graceland College would someday be. Like all phrases, that one may have lost some of its novelty, and other phrases have had to replace it. But to those who were students there many years ago, it is a satisfaction now to think that the "Greater Graceland" of which we dreamed is realized to a large extent today, and will be realized to an even larger extent in the future.

It is a tribute to the vitality of the college that it is possible for us to have a fine representative issue like this, so filled with forward-looking and hopeful statements and ideas from the alumni and other friends and church leaders.

A Focal Point

Perhaps this thought has not occurred to you. We present it for what it is worth. Graceland is the focal point of our love for the young people of the church. There are many things that parents and friends can do for children and young people. But there are also some very important things we cannot do individually. When it comes to the right kind of higher education, we need help to accomplish our desires for the young. No other college or university can or will do the particular services for our young people that we want done. No other institution is interested in performing those services as we understand them. Graceland and Graceland alone is capable, qualified, and anxious to do those things. Graceland was established by people who loved and cared for church young people. Graceland is maintained, supported, and operated by devoted persons who love church young people.

There comes a time when you, personally, however much you may love your son or daughter, can make no more significant contribution to his or her intellectual and spiritual development. But you know that Graceland is prepared to carry on that work as you would like to have it carried on. Graceland becomes, then the focal point of your love, not only for your own children, but for all the young people.

Better Home-comings

This issue concerns the recent Fiftieth Anniversary Home-coming at Graceland College, with extracts from the addresses delivered for the Alumni School. There was a time when a home-coming on the campus consisted principally of a football game, a banquet, a wiener roast, and much talk and visiting with old friends. That was a lot of fun, but ——. In recent times it has been felt that some greater values should be put into the meeting, so that when the alumni went home they would have some real experiences and ideas as well as the happy memories of good times.

How fine the results have been may be judged from the quality of the summaries of addresses contained in this issue. We can expect more of this kind of planning of home-comings there in the future. They give the people attending something more than "A good time was had by all."

The college authorities, the officers of the Graceland Alumni Association, and visiting church officials have all done excellent work.

New Year's Resolutions

I shall try to understand the world, and cultivate good will toward all men; but it is apparent that I shall not be able to have my own way, nor to see my hopes for humanity realized. Therefore, when I have done what I can for others, I will leave the matter with God, and try to make something out of my own life.

There was a time when I hoped that all who knew me would be my friends; but it has become clear to me that I am not good enough for so great a blessing. There are some very good people who will never like me; I am sorry for this, but I am not wise enough to help it. Therefore, I am resolved to be as kind as I know how to as many people as I can reach. For my mistakes I will pray for forgiveness, knowing that I cannot thereby hope to escape the lash of punishment.

Such as the world is—with its wars and rumors of wars, its atomic bombs, and all the terrors known and unknown that are yet to be revealed to us—I do not expect too much of it. Yet I find it impossible to spend all my time in fear. God has somehow preserved the race in times of great danger; and the dangers through which He has led his people have been many and terrible. So, in spite of all the gloomy predictions of the prophets of despair, I am resolved to trust Him, and to believe that He and He alone can and will save His people.

Most of the people I know are persons of good will. They are so kindhearted that they desire good for me rather than ill, as I in turn desire good for them. The percentage of friends is so very great, the proportion of enemies so very small, that I cannot help being grateful, hopeful, and happy as I look forward to the New Year.

Graceland College

The end of the first fifty years and the beginning of a second half century is being observed in a series of events at Graceland College this year. The occasion calls for celebration, in the minds of the college leaders, but it calls in even more unmistakable terms for a re-evaluation of the efforts of the pioneers and the leaders of the first half century of the institution, and a time for serious thought to mapping the course ahead for the chief educational organization of the church.

At the college during November, the Home-coming events marked the high point in the year-long observance of Graceland's Semi-Centennial. A brief noting of other 50th-year events is shown of the following calendar:

September 17, 7:45 P. M., Coliseum, Community Anniversary Program (Commemorating the opening of Graceland College, September 17, 1895).

October 1-20, Local and regional alumni dinners planned countrywide with campus speakers furnished when possible.

October 21, Alumni efforts co-ordinated with local church pastors in church-wide College Day services.

November 9-11, Home-coming on the campus with colloquium on "The Church Philosophy of Education" (Commemorating the laying of the cornerstone of the Administration Building, November 12, 1895).

January, Anniversary issue of the Saints' Herald.

January, Radio broadcasts in commemoration of Anniversary.

February, Religious Emphasis Week at Graceland.

March, Issuance of new "History of Graceland," by R. A. Cheville.

April, Anniversary program and display at General Conference.

May, Commencement, closing the anniversary observance.

Fiftieth Anniversary Home-coming

was the three-day colloquium on "The Church's Philosophy of Education." It brought together for a series of formal conversations the leaders of the church and the college for a mutual interchange of ideas intended to formulate a constructive, integrated philosophy that would be objectified and centered at Graceland College but that would be even more far-reaching in its conception. It was the first occasion for such a conclave.

The Alumni School as a feature of the Graceland Home-coming was an innovation of 1942. The success of the 1945 class series is largely attributable to the three years of training on the part of the homecomers. Devised as an expedient of the war years when transportation was difficult and therefore not to be attempted inadvisedly, the Alumni School was a patriotic innovation. The educational conference developed as a necessity to meet the changing needs of our clientele. The sociability and entertainment features of the homecomings were not lost entirely, even though there was no football game for the focus. There yet remained the offerings of the College Players, the alumni dinner or luncheon, the informal get-togethers, and the hearty handshakes and backslaps and the inevitable friendly greetings all around.

Church and college leaders who have profited by the supporting interchange of ideas in these schools feel that the newer type home-coming is all gain and no loss. This year's colloquium is an event in college and church history.

How does your voice sound to others? If you cup your ears with both hands, pressing the ears forward slightly, and speak, you'll have a pretty good idea. And you will be surprised how different your words sound. Radio performers often test themselves this way just before a program.—Louise Paine Benjamin.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

BROTHER WILLIAM PATTERSON sends a news clipping and a brief note telling of an honor that has come to a fine church couple, Brother and Sister Lea Lamons of Vinita, Oklahoma. He says, "Brother Lea Lamons is a member of the reunion committee, the oldest member. They are fine people who maintain the good name of the church in Vinita."

The clipping follows:

Word has been received from the American Broadcasting company that Mr. and Mrs. Lea Lamons have been chosen the "Good Neighbor of the Day" for November 23 on the Tom Breneman's "Breakfast in Hollywood" radio program.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamons will be sent an Arm-Roy orchid, dispatched from Cedrics in Hollywood via air express immediately following the broadcast on that day.

The Vinita couple was selected for this nationwide tribute from a recommendation sent into the program by Mrs. H. C. Morgan, of Vinita, pertaining to their picnic grounds open to the public.

"Breakfast in Hollywood," a popular morning program, awards some person or persons an orchid each day for their service to others. Mr. and Mrs. Lamons will be eligible to win the $1,000 Victory Bond award in the contest of all the daily winners for this year. Nationally known personalities will comprise the board of judges of "America's No. 1 Good Neighbor" and the winner will be named at an award ceremony in the early part of 1946.

The letter sent to Tom Breneman from Mrs. Morgan is as follows:

"I wish to nominate Mr. and Mrs. Lea Lamons, 330 South Adair street, Vinita, Okla., for your good neighbor orchid. Sixteen years ago, at the suggestion of their young daughter, they purchased some lots adjoining their home and turned them into a picnic grounds. The daughter died after that, and the small park has been maintained in her honor ever since.

"There is an outdoor oven and picnic tables, as well as a volley ball court and croquet court, completely equipped. The grounds are kept in perfect order, and lights and water are furnished. Any well-behaved group is welcome to party there any night at no expense.

"Don't you think they are truly good neighbors to furnish such a lovely little spot for good clean recreation? Few of us really think of the 'other fellow' as does this couple.

Colloquium Speeches From the 1945 Home-coming Alumni School at Graceland College Nov. 9-11

Complying with the request of the committee for the Alumni School, the speakers for the three-day colloquium on "The Church's Philosophy of Education" prepared their speeches in advance and read them from manuscript. Only extracts from the speeches are given in this issue of the "Saints' Herald." Those who would like to read the complete speeches will have opportunity later to secure a pamphlet, now in preparation, containing the entire series.

Apologies are due the speakers for the drastic omissions from their manuscripts in this printing. These digests intend to give only some salient points to acquaint "Herald" readers with the nature and trend of the colloquium thinking, and whet their curiosity, it is hoped, for further reading on each of the subjects involved. The best source, in each case, will be the speaker's complete speech. Watch for announcement of the publication of the pamphlet.

Why a Philosophy of Education Now?

By President A. R. Gilbert

(Opening address of Graceland Alumni School, November 8, 1945)

WITH MANY PEOPLE, "philosophy" is a bad word. It implies a deep and incomprehensible, nebulous something or other which is the exclusive possession of sages and seers.

It is my contention that every person and every organization of persons embrace a philosophy, even though they may not be aware of it.

Practically speaking, a philosophy is that pattern or organization of principles accepted by a person or an organization of persons as a basis for formulating purposes, judging values, directing and integrating behavior, and evaluating results.

Whether a person will cheat or be honest, harm or help, thwart or cooperate in any particular instance, depends to a large degree upon the philosophies involved. It is His philosophy which has made Jesus the great character and the great power of all time.

IF GRACELAND has a philosophy, why all the fuss about one now? In the first place, philosophies are evolved by people. They are not ready-made entities showered on us from on high. Moreover, it is possible to "decide" upon or formulate a philosophy, within limits, and put it to immediate use. We might, for example, agree that we would revert to the primitive and ultra-simple in our living, and by applying this principle alter drastically and immediately certain aspects of our living.

We must therefore constantly check our philosophy to insure that it is wisely conceived.

What could be more appropriate than to pause during the commemoration of Graceland's fiftieth anniversary in order to check her philosophy and make observations regarding characteristics which should be considered in its formulation. Such a course is especially appropriate in view of the rapid transition taking place now in our socio-economic life.

THROUGH SETTING Graceland's philosophy, we set her course, mark her aspirations and concerns, set the spotlight and the shadows of her endeavors, and determine the settings in which she will find her joys and her sorrows.

During this first half century, we have learned to avoid some philosophic pitfalls.

We have learned to beware of the piecemeal or patchwork method of policy-making. Our philosophy must possess organic unity—must fit together in such a manner as to make a functional whole.

OUR PHILOSOPHY must consider and be appropriate to our resources in personnel and material. It would be a mistake to "ape" this or that institution which has gained prominence in the eyes of people, irrespective of the fitness of such an imitation to our unique situation. We should, on the other hand, be sensitive to good suggestions.

We have learned that there is often a difference between "bigness" and "goodness."

We have learned that we cannot do all things and be all things. It is necessary to choose and to discard resolutely.

We should, we believe, capitalize our strengths and avoid programs which tax our weaknesses.

The Role of Graceland College in the New Age of the Church

By Bishop G. L. DeLapp

(Extracts from the speech at Graceland Homecoming, November 10, 1945)

(Bishop DeLapp speaks first of the various aspects of the ministry of the church to the individual, and then of the ways in which individuals can contribute toward attaining certain collective objectives. We break into his speech, then, with part three.—Editor.)

THE TASK OF THE CHURCH

1. It is the task of the church to stimulate or motivate its individual members to the attainment of individual and community growth in social, economic and cultural fields.

2. To provide the leadership necessary to give such stimulation.

3. To develop a program which will give all an overview of the work of the church and its relationship to the individual, including the setting up of institutional objectives.

4. To teach that the fundamentals of the gospel apply to all ages, recognizing that human behavior has been much the same in all generations; likewise, that the principles on which eternal life is to be built are applicable to all generations.

5. To teach that the continued progress of civilization may require a change in techniques, methods,

We should, we believe, avoid a "head in the sand" policy which denies a relationship with the world at large. It is, however, our privilege to declare and shape the nature of our national and international influence.

I commend to you a co-operative effort to shape for Graceland a wise philosophy of education and trust that it may ever be used as a profound resource in setting up and accomplishing her tasks.

educational procedures, and choice of facilities used.

In the light of the foregoing, it can readily be seen that the role that the college is to play in the attainment of the church objectives is not only an important one, but that the church can best make progress by utilization to the fullest extent possible of that institution to implement its educational progress; for education is basic to the attainment of the goals and objectives of the church. . . .

CHURCH INSTITUTIONS AT THE CROSSROADS

Our present situation is again that of transition. . . . In the light of all this (change), there needs to be a re-examination of our policies in church administration and in respect to our education institution, as well.

As we view the work of the church, it seems obvious that the approaches we are to make to missionary work must be quite different from those we have used in the past. New materials in the educational field—radio and visual education—promise much for us if we can develop an efficiency in their use.

The importance of training our personnel becomes apparent. The facilities available are of value only to the extent that we acquire techniques and good methods in their application. In the training of men and women, the following considerations are most important: that those selected should have a breadth of understanding and a knowledge of the problems of human society; they should have special skills in home and community-building; a knowledge of the Bible and the standard books of the church; as well as in, intimate acquaintance with the history of our people and the goals of our people and the church. These are essential. A knowledge of the problems involved in vocational guidance and the requirements of various trades and occupations qualify and expand one's ministry. . . .

As we view the future, we need to weigh carefully the progress made by Graceland College since the time of its establishment in 1895. This is the Fiftieth Anniversary of its founding. In that time, many hundreds of people have attended and have been graduated. Many of these graduates have made outstanding contributions to the spiritual and educational work of the church. The influence of the faculty and the general church officers has, without question, manifested itself in the lives of these graduates, and the service given to the church has more than compensated for the efforts and investment made in the institution. . . .

OUR PHYSICAL RESOURCES have accumulated until they approximate an investment of over $600,000, exclusive of the Endowment Fund of over $240,000. Our faculty has been consistently maintained on a high professional standard, and through the years we have been able to stabilize both our financial status and our accredited standing. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to pay tribute to those faculty members of Graceland College who have sacrificed and stayed with the institution during periods of adversity; and also to compliment them for the consistent efforts put forth to attain educational degrees which have resulted in broader recognition for our institution.

The problem facing us at this time is that of continued utilization of our institution, in relation to both the faculty and the physical equipment, to further the program of the church. Without question, the college lends itself admirably as a unifying agent to bring together students from all places where the church is active; here they come under the influence of the faculty and of General Church officers.

How Much Education?

Extracts from a speech by Dr. R. A. Cheville

SUMMARIZING OUR GOALS: . . .

Graceland College should serve as an institution to teach individuals their responsibilities in all fields; that is, in the church, and in the economic and social fields of life's activity, in providing stimuli to make contributions to improve labor relations and to community life as a whole; thus helping to create a more abundant life for all men.

The college, then, should serve not only as an educational institution, but should give dynamic motivation to the individual, that there might be unleashed mental and spiritual forces to be applied to the establishment of Zion; and, further, that this motivation may find expression in a practical way through setting up facilities to train men and women. . . .

The college should serve specifically to assist the individual to find his place in the zionic program of the church. . . . Graceland College should not only reflect the influence of the church, but the goals and the objectives of the church should become predominant in the thinking of faculty members and of those who attend Graceland College. Efficiency and competency in the various fields of life's activity are, in, and of themselves, not adequate, for one's activities should be related to the activities of others, to the end that there shall be a blending of mutual interests which shall finally find expression in the building of the kingdom of God.

A good philosophy of life can help you through any hard experience. The greatest disappointment, the most serious loss, as well as the common run of smaller afflictions, can be met with a good thought. Thus you will find your best protection against all kinds of calamity in the realm of the mind rather than in physical nature.

ON THE QUESTION of "How Much Education?" here are four fundamentals:

1. There is a quantitative aspect to education, so we can speak of "How Much?"

2. There is a recognition of different kinds and qualities of education. A consideration of how much education involves study of "What Kind?"

3. There are differences of capacity, native, and cultivated.

4. There is a continuing, and may we say, progressing aspect of education.

There is a correlation between cultural development and length of time necessary for the formal education that enables the person to mature to take an effective role in his social group. We assume, of course, that formal education is a part of a total process of education. In other words, as a people develop in richness of culture, they require more and more of their immature members. . . .

As society becomes more complex, two things happen. (1) A special institution is set up, simplified and graded, to introduce this candidate for social membership into the regular flow of life. We call this a school. The presumption is that it puts the candidate next to life, both as it is and as it may become. Sometimes, however, the school loses touch with society, and those who attend are divorced from the general flow of life. . . . (2) The period of education is extended as the social complexity increases. Society not only offers more; it requires more. There are times we may long for the primeval life of earlier centuries, but somehow the clock will not turn back, and we have to learn to live in a social order of ever-increasing complexity. This rule of extension of education with growing intricacy and richness of culture applies to church as well as to state and industry. . . .

Can we go on indefinitely adding to our quantitative educational requirements? . . . First of all, we need a thorough overhauling of our educational offerings and requirements. It is easy for society to grow by accretions. We may keep adding without subtracting. Progress requires that we lop off as well as take on.

Second, we shall revise our conception of education as essentially preparation for life at some future day. Life must always have intent into the future. There is a difference, however, between living now and into the future and enduring the present with expectation of real life yet to begin—at forty or some other age. . . . When education is viewed as lifelong and each age of life glorious in its own right, we do not inquire how much we have to have and how soon we can get through. Rather we ask how much shall I experience now in order that I may live naturally in this age and have basic equipment for continued development as long as I live.

Third, there is need for reprogramming education with reference to marriage and family life. If we are to assume the continuing nature of education and the extending of its scope, we are forced to see that we cannot postpone marriage until all education is finished. We shall have to give attention to possible marriage while schooling continues and to social subsidies in so far as there are implications of social benefits from advanced education of a young adult.

HOW MUCH GENERAL LEARNING?

First, enough (general learning) to give a generalized overview to tie learning with some integration. Second, enough common background to enable us to speak the same language.

Education for the Gathering

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

(Extracts from the speech before the Alumni School, Graceland College)

(In the first few minutes of his address, E. J. Gleazer, Jr., discussed the need for and the history of the "gathering" idea in our church, and the history of experiments outside our church in building experimental ideal communities. He leads then to the sociological and economic need for communities built upon bases of congeniality and common interests and values. That is where we pick up his speech here.—Editor.)

WE CANNOT WITHDRAW to frontiers—we were not separate during the depression, nor during the war; the world's fashions touch us and are revealed in our hats, dresses, suits. Nor could this church perform its mission to the world if it were able to withdraw. We belong in the midst of the people, but our ideals, attitudes, motives, values, ways of dealing must be distinctively Christlike. And therein lies the great problem. The world is not the same place it was 100 years ago, but significantly the need for some body of people to reveal a way of right social relationship was never more apparent than it is today. And the stage seems to be set for the demonstration of such an order.

CAN THERE BE EDUCATION FOR THE GATHERING?

At one time, even in this church, education was considered as the alpha of which the omega was religion. It was considered that to become educated was to rely solely upon the powers of man with a consequent disdain for things spiritual. And yet a reading of the word of God does not reveal grounds for such an attitude. The processes through which and by which this world was created clearly emphasize the way of gradualism. The process of revelation is "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, there a little" as man is able to increasingly comprehend.

In section 102 of the Doctrine and Covenants, a revelation given after disaster had seemed to strike the gatherers, this instruction was given, "wait a little season . . . that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands." We appear to be getting away from the belief that in some instantaneous magical way men and women will become so much better in character, so much more considerate, so much more righteous that the condition we describe as zionic will have come. Yes, we can, and must have education for the gathering!

WHAT KIND OF EDUCATION?

Education for the gathering as far as Graceland College is concerned seems to fall into two categories—education for those directing the gathering, and education for gatherers. Basic needs, however, will be the same. I shall attempt to set up several major disciplines essential to successful gathering.

FIRST, we need to know something about the nature of man. Why do people act as they do? What motivates them? What are the laws and processes of human development? The error made most frequently by Utopian planners was an incorrect view of human nature. No plan will work that fails to take into consideration the physical and mental make-up of man. A great deal of our behavior can be analyzed in biological terms. We must, first of all, see man as a physical being with blood coursing through his veins—possessing drives, tissue needs, a necessity for chemical balance within the body, certain glandular reactions to stimulation, etc. It is true that human behavior is almost infinitely plastic but for the shaping of that behavior is essential a true picture of man's nature.

THE SECOND requirement of education for the gathering is a knowledge of the physical and social environment confronting people. . . . The plans of gathering must conform to the given or potential conditions of the environment. No plan that seeks to progress beyond the stage of fantasy can disregard the social, economic, and political system in which it is realized. . . . To the sciences of anthropology and sociology we must turn to secure insight into men's existence as a social being. . . .

The gathering, to be successful, will have its beginning in the simpler forms of social organization. If I may descend from principles long enough to name a course of study, let me suggest Rural Sociology as being helpful. Our beginnings in social construction will be rooted in the soil, for an understanding of rural social organization is prerequisite to study of more complex social structure. A study of social organization will assist us to avoid the fallacy of seeing Zion as a state, unchangeable, social entity, but we will see zionic communities as forever in the process of becoming—always moving toward social perfection.

A THIRD requirement of education for the gathering is a knowledge of the goal to be achieved. Probably on no other issue of concern in the church could so many varying definitions be given than of what Zion is or is to be. A clarification of this goal of social righteousness would probably not give credits transferable to other institutions of higher education, but such courses as Contemporary Social Movements, Social Reform, Psychology of Social Movements, History of Social Movements, etc., set up certain principles which function as a frame of reference for zionic conceptions and credits from such courses are transferable. A co-operative study is needed now in the church to clarify our zionic goals and to set up methods or means to reach those goals. This study is desperately needed in the light of changing world conditions. . . . That goal must be made clear to the members of the church if they are to co-operate with the leaders of the church. . . .

Given a knowledge of the people affected—knowledge of the goal—a leadership capable of making the goal clear and capable of understanding the people and developing methods—a people alert, ready for adaptation, flexible, and impelled by deep religious conviction—and any kind of society can be built—and all of the given factors are not necessary before progress can be made.

SUMMATION POINTS

Education alone will not do the job, for education is rooted in the present culture. The building of Zion goes beyond the norms and values of the present culture, therefore there is necessary a basic sense of commission from Diety. Gradualism gives us our job, but the Apocalyptic (God's part in the work) conception of Zion-building gives us our hope.

They Who Build

They who build on Graceland's hill
Need pray direction for their will.
They must lay foundations down
Fifty years beneath the ground.
And the towers must from the sod
Mount a million dreams to God.
Walls so flexible be planned
That the strain of growth will stand.
Growing minds will scatter light
Far beyond the breadth and height.
Entrance doors must be so wide
That no learner be denied.
Windows opened out on skies
Where expanse for dreaming lies.
And the walls that separate Inner love from outer hate
Must for future Graceland house
Beauty in luxuriant boughs.
They build to incubate a kind
That mirrors the eternal mind.
They who build on Graceland sod
Lay their wood and stone to God.

What Education for Professional and Vocational Effectiveness?

By Earl T. Higdon

(Extracts from a speech at the Graceland Homecoming)

SOME FUNDAMENTAL ASSUMPTIONS TO BE KEPT IN MIND

WHILE IT MAY NOT be crystal clear as to what the place of Graceland is in the total task of the church, still one is impressed with the idea that the college is tied inseparably to the church and its task. This must be kept in mind because it has a bearing upon the kind, quality, and nature of educational service to be rendered by the college in the future.

As a college, Graceland must of necessity co-operate with other like institutions in order to co-ordinate the educational service rendered to her clients. This must necessarily mean that the college will continue to harmonize its educational offerings to its students with those of other colleges where the students expect to receive advanced training. This relationship with other colleges will call for a certain amount of standardization which in turn may bring a certain amount of restraint, but on the other hand it will also demand a minimum standard of performance.

Finally, any institution which accepts its stewardship of service conscientiously will assume a policy, bearing, and attitude of progressiveness. In order to meet the needs of individuals and groups in society under constantly changing conditions, educational processes must constantly be re-examined and improved. This we assume Graceland will continue to do.

WHAT IS EFFECTIVENESS IN VOCATIONAL LIFE?

What is an effective workman? Is it the ability of a secretary to transcribe a large number of words per minute? Is it the ability of a carpenter to cut and fit a joint with finesse? Is it the ability of a doctor to make a correct diagnosis? Is it a salesman writing a large order? Yes, perhaps these, plus some added quality of personality. That is the quality that makes the difference between efficiency and effectiveness. Effectiveness is efficiency plus. It is efficiency with the added emphasis upon the actual production of an effect. It is the mechanical skill plus the touch of human judgment in fulfilling a purpose.

Education in this light must of course start with some directive statement as to the desired ends of education. It is here that Graceland must come under the influence and direction of leaders who hold a sound comprehensive philosophy and can direct its application to the formulation of appropriate programs of learning experiences. This must be done if Graceland's students are going to be conditioned for effective vocational life. . . .

WHAT EDUCATION FOR VOCATIONAL EFFECTIVENESS?

It appears to the speaker that a workman cannot be effective even in his vocation if he is qualified only in the special skills belonging to his vocation. In this world of atomic energy, with a wider range of the flow of ideas, political, economic, religious, cultural, etc., that in the future an effective employee or any craftsman with public relations shall have to have the breadth of viewpoint and understanding acquired through some liberal arts education.

In the field of educational training for the professions (medicine, law, engineering, journalism, for example), there is a trend toward a more general education as a basis for specialized work.

In the training of such individuals, Graceland must co-ordinate her offerings with the requirements of other institutions of advanced learning as well as the requirements set by certain state examining or accrediting boards. Even here however some liberty is allowed in the spiritual or social interpretations of the movements of the day. This is the point of opportunity for the church through the college to enlist the interest, loyalty, enthusiasm, and understanding by Graceland students of the social and religious goals of the church. If a student should leave Graceland to go forth to work in a profession or other vocation and not carry with him a sense of social and divine stewardship, then in that measure Graceland has failed.

WHAT IS THE PLACE OF THE JUNIOR COLLEGE IN VOCATIONAL TRAINING?

During the past decade there has been a rapid trend on the part of junior colleges toward the offering of terminal courses. These are courses designed to fit students for some vocation who do not expect to spend more than one or two years in college. . . .

This trend is apt to continue as more and more of the general citizenry become college conscious and have the opportunity to attend. It would be our earnest hope that as Graceland may participate in this development, the educational service offered will not drop to the level of a trade school with the teaching of the manual skills alone. Even in trying to meet the educational needs of our citizenry today, we must keep in mind that "Man does not live by bread alone." . . .

SUMMARY

Instead of swinging toward extreme terminal vocational education

My Three Decades at Graceland

*Interview with President Emeritus G. N. Briggs
November 7, 1945*

(This public interview was conducted at the Coliseum in Lamoni, as the first session of the Semi-Centennial Home-coming. The questioners were Edmund Gleazer, Jr., and William S. Gould.)

Has thirty years brought about quite a change to Graceland College? How is Graceland different now from what it was thirty years ago when you came here?

I HAVE HAD CONTACT with the college now for forty-eight years. Brother Gunsolley preceded me by two years. I came here as superintendent of schools in Lamoni, just after graduating from the university. The college had been in session two years then. That year I was asked to substitute for a teacher on the college staff who was sick. We were having a vacation in the Lamoni schools and the college wasn't, so they asked me to substitute, which I did for two weeks.

My first contacts were made forty years ago. I remained as superintendent of schools for four years, then left, and for several years had little acquaintance. I speak then of the thirty years since my joining the staff.

What changes have come about during these thirty years? When the college was opened fifty years ago, it was a four year liberal arts classical institution with mathematics, foreign language, history, and so forth. It had one sophomore and eight freshmen—nine college students and everyone of them from Lamoni. Nine additional students entered the preparatory department and twenty-two entered the commercial department, making a total of forty students during the first year. Of that forty, six were counted in which the manual and mental skills only are cultivated, there must be an accompaniment of an infusion of a philosophical and religious outlook which will contribute to the enrichment of life as well as toward vocational effectiveness. These objectives call for a constant study and re-examination of educational effectiveness at Graceland with the idea that the educational processes are being stepped up. This is paramount if Graceland is to fulfill her calling in the stewardship of educational service.

twice, being one more than one department, so there is a net total of thirty-four students, and of those only five were nonresident students. When I came in 1915 there were three sophomores and twelve freshmen in college, a total of fifteen. About eighty other students were in the preparatory department or the academy as we called it, and in the commercial and studios. Most of them were from Iowa and very few from outside of Lamoni. Graceland was regarded as a Lamoni institution. The academy itself was discontinued fifteen years ago. There was one permanent building when I came—now there are four. There was an investment of $100,000—now we have about three-fourths of a million. There was a faculty of ten in 1915—a faculty of twenty-five now. At that time we had no financial resources assured us in the way of income.

Wasn't the college sort of a high school with a few college students?

During the first twenty years only eight college students were graduated. During the latter part of that twenty-year period, there were practically no students in the college—at least none in the upper two years; so, under the supervision of McDowell, Burgess, and Gunsolley, they discontinued the four year college and organized a junior college. Yes, most students were in the academy.

It must not be overlooked, however, that Graceland College rendered a most efficient service during its first 20 years to a large group of men and women who have made a fine contribution to the church.

What were the main problems Graceland faced to become a college instead of an academy?

In the first place, the church wasn't ready to organize or maintain a college. There was a large element of opposition among the old-timers. The first year I was here, I went to general conference and learned a great deal. For instance, I asked for the establishment of a Chair of Religious Education. I wanted $1,500 to establish a Chair of Religious Education and a brother said, "In our town we can buy a good chair for $10.00. It's extravagant of the college to pay $1,500 for a chair." Another brother, when we were building our first building, visited the campus and thought that we ought not to build a building because Zion would be redeemed before we could finish it. The church wasn't ready to conduct a college of high grade in those early days. It took a great many days and years to get the church to the point where it was ready to maintain a college.

Graceland was not accredited in 1915 when I came. Then a college could not hope to be maintained unless it was on an accredited list. While I was in Washington for ten years, the Federal Government attempted to accredit colleges. The colleges themselves objected to it. The opposition on the part of colleges and universities was such that the Federal Government left accreditation up to regional organization. There are now five regional organizations of which the North Central Association, serving twenty states in this territory, is the largest. These regional organizations are voluntary, not connected with the government in any way. They set up standards and visited colleges and universities over the country to see if they met the standards. Graceland had to equip herself for official accreditation.

When were we accredited by the North Central Association?

The question of accrediting was quite a difficult one. When I came here in 1915 as I have indicated, there was practically no college in the sense of a four-year institution. The junior college had just been organized. There were three sophomores and twelve freshmen. We weren't going to have very many until we could get on such a basis that the students who wanted to come here could get work that would be acceptable elsewhere. Students had to go on to other institutions on an individual basis.

The principal thing I was interested in during the early years I was here was to get the college on an accredited basis. The North Central Association would not accredit an institution which wasn't accredited by its own state, so it was necessary to be accredited by Iowa. When I applied for admission to the Intercollegiate Standing Committee they said, "We have read something about a junior college, but we know nothing about it officially." The result was that they didn't consider our application. We were about the only junior college in this state. No other college had applied for admission. Missouri was ahead of Iowa in the junior college movement, and I applied to the accrediting committee of Missouri which had accepted for a number of years junior colleges admission for accreditation. Since we had a number of students from Missouri and were only three miles from the Missouri line I applied to them for accreditation. They sent a committee of five to inspect and visit us. They looked us over very carefully in every department, library, financial resources, faculty, and so forth, returned to Missouri, made the report, and we were accredited immediately.

The grapevine telegraph was in working order, and we let it carry the information to the University of Iowa that we had been accredited by the State of Missouri. Within a week, we had a telegram from Mr. Dorcas, the registrar of the University of Iowa, who was chairman of the committee, saying he would like to visit the college. We sent him a cordial invitation to come. He looked us over, reported that we qualified and put us on the accredited list.

Then the North Central Association had a rule that the college couldn't be accredited until the academy was approved. We had an academy at that time, larger than the college. It was necessary to get the academy on the accredited list. It took about three years to build up our faculty, laboratory, library, and necessary financial support to apply for accreditation of the academy. Meanwhile we were developing the college faculty, library, laboratory, et cetera. I visited the North Central Association for about four years to find out how things were handled there. I applied for accreditation of the academy and college at the same time but arranged it so that the application for the academy would be considered first. The academy was accredited fully, so the next day our college accreditation came up before the commission. They had two commissions in the North Central Association, one on secondary schools and one on colleges. The commission on secondary schools accredited us one day and application for accreditation came up before the other the next day. The first question they asked me was, "Is the academy accredited?" I very kindly advised them that it was fully accredited. We were accredited in 1920. That is twenty-five years ago.

One of the things that the committee held against us was that we did not have a continuity of service on the part of a great many of our faculty members. We had about four who were stable. The records show that Brother Gunsolley, of course, has been a stabilizing influence all these fifty years. Brother McDowell had been connected with the college a great many years, also Brother Hopkins and Sister Royce. Outside of our church people, we had a turnover which made it impossible to have a continuity of service and stabilization. During the first twenty years we had, up to the time I came, five college presidents and eight acting presidents. Of five presidents, three were members of the church. Of the eight acting presidents, three were members. In one year from June to September of the following year we had four acting presidents, one from June to September, another from September to January, another from January to June, and another from June to September. That was a little worse than the faculty, but it wasn't permanent enough to justify any accrediting association in feeling that we could be recognized as a stable college.

We have had a good many very fine nonchurch people on our staff; we have some now making outstanding contributions, but over a period of years our experience has been that unless we developed a faculty of church people who are concerned with the interest of the college over a period of years, we couldn't expect permanency. The salaries in those days weren't very large and many of the faculty people couldn't save enough to go on and get advanced degrees, so very early in my experience we set up a faculty loan fund which was used to enable members of our staff to go to summer schools or to take a year off and prepare themselves for returning to the college as members of the faculty. They could repay the loans by service or in money. The result was that we have developed a faculty of the very finest stability and continuity of service. Many of them have been with the college now a quarter of a century and have developed an institution of very high order.

Have there been some rather outstanding interesting personalities that you have worked with in the college?

When I came here as superintendent of schools I knew the leaders of the church because Lamoni was the church headquarters. Joseph Smith, Marietta Walker, E. L. Kelley, founders of the college, all lived here. My contacts with them were of the very finest kind. When I returned to the college in 1915 after being gone for about fifteen years in government service, I found them all gone. The headquarters had been removed, and soon afterwards the publishing house was to go, making the college the only institution of the church remaining. During this past thirty years

The Portrait of President Briggs

By Mrs. W. C. Moon

(Presentation speech given at the Alumni Homecoming Banquet, November 10, 1945, by Mrs. W. C. Moon, chairman of the portrait committee.)

"I AM SURE WE ALL recognize" that in the thirty years just finished President Briggs has laid up for Graceland College a store of assets. He has done much to accomplish all that Marietta Walker hoped for the institution, all that Joseph Smith hoped for it, all that E. L. Kelley hoped, or J. A. Gunsolley or J. A. Garver or Myron McConley or F. M. McDowell, or hundreds of others who have dreamed dreams for Graceland's first half century.

His contribution is sure, and secure. He stabilized the faculty, he established the college with accrediting agencies and with colleges and universities of the country. He infused into the growing institution his personality, and that personality will continue into the next fifty years as an abiding wisdom, shrewdness, tenacity.

IT SEEMED THAT A PORTRAIT of the man that would catch and perpetuate that personality would be a fitting tribute to President Briggs, and was almost a spiritual necessity for the institution.

We give you, then, the portrait of President Emeritus George Nathaniel Briggs. (Unveiling of the portrait.) And we give you President Briggs himself. (President Briggs stands for recognition. All stand.)

It has been over a period of two years that plans have been going forward for the production of this portrait. The first need was to locate an artist who could conceive and transfer to canvas in line and color the story and the spirit of President Briggs. Dale Ballantyne helped us to locate such a person. She was Mrs. L. A. West (Jean Dayton West), a practiced portrait artist taking courses at the University of Iowa while her doctor husband was serving the American forces overseas.

As we watched her work, we knew that we had chosen well. President Briggs was a little worried as the work progressed as to whether or not the picture looked like him. The test came on the day when the picture was finished. President Briggs' family came out to see it. His little granddaughter took one look, and said, "Why, that's Grandpa!"

THEN WE HAD to find the funds necessary for such an undertaking. That proved easy. The bulk of the amount was given by two graduating classes, 1944 and 1945. Another group contributing was the northern California alumni chapter. Other donors were individuals, chiefly men who were associated with President Briggs in his early years at Graceland. So we were able to assure President Briggs when he inquired that no one was burdened or coerced to provide the funds.

The committee who worked with me to bring this project to its completion were: A. Neal Deaver and Mrs. Ruth Roberts of the college; Dr. Voas Meredith of the University of Iowa; and Dr. Lonzo Jones of the Warrensburg, Missouri, State Teachers' College, now with the American University in Europe. There are some others who helped. Among them, I should like to mention Mr. Evan Walden.

The men who unveiled the portrait are the vice presidents of the two contributing classes: Theron Bergman of the class of 1944, and Tom Mortimore of the class of 1945.

And the person who submitted with a mixture of joy and distress to the long sittings for the portrait was President Briggs himself.

When I asked Dr. Jones what I should say on this occasion, he mentioned that to him a very significant thing about President Briggs was the influence for good that he had had on so many lives. He also mentioned that President Briggs had demonstrated what he once told Lonzo that 100 students in a small college were just as important as 100 students in a large one.

I think that when we are looking for the elusive facts of President Briggs' success we should not overlook that point—his belief in the small college. And I think we should remember, also, the fact that he believed that this college and this community were fit environment for his own children.

President Gilbert, it gives me great pleasure, on the part of the committee for this portrait, on the part of the donors to this project, and on the part of the many people here tonight who share with us the belief in the efficacy of this portraiture, to present this portrait of President Briggs to Graceland College.

Prayer for Time

Half a century—like a day
To proffer learning's brimming cup
To eager hands, and watch away
The thirst that tips the measure up.
Half a century—like an hour
To weave into a hungry loom
Bright figures symbolizing power,
And stable cords, and beauty's bloom.
Half a century—time too brief
To build a Zion kingdom in.
Dear Lord, forgive, and grant us leave
To half a century once again.

—Cleo M. Hanthorne.

An easy way to get rid of moths or other insects that have been bothering you is to close the house up on a hot day and then start the heating plant. If you can get the temperature to over 120—and it's surprising how easy it is—the chances are that you will be rid of the pests.—Godfrey Ernst in House and Garden.

What Education for World Evangelism?

By F. Henry Edwards

WORLD EVANGELISM means the extension of the Christian way of living, and therefore of the kingdom frontiers, in every direction as rapidly and as widely as they may be extended, while yet maintaining and developing the stability and coherence of the area already won for Christ. This does not necessarily mean the extension of the American way of living, or even of the Anglo-Saxon way of living, but of the kingdom way of living, World evangelism is concerned with things of the spirit, with love and mercy and compassion and justice and truth, and with honesty and sobriety and charity and chastity and reason; as these may be incorporated into and manifested through the cultures of mankind all over the world. It is not concerned with customs and procedures and traditions, except as these influence and are influenced by the word and the way of love which we proclaim. World evangelism proceeds on the premise that what is important in a convert is not a change in his manner of eating or of speaking or of dressing but in his attitude toward God and toward his neighbor and toward his own destiny. . . .

World evangelism does not mean "foreign missions." In the sight of God and of the world evangelist, there are no foreign missions. There are only missions to persons who are aliens from the commonwealth of the kingdom. . . .

In the light of the nature of Christianity and of the meanings of world evangelism, it is apparent that world evangelism involves the development of a service attitude toward every part of our one world. It does not require that our immediate field of action shall be extensive or far-flung; but it does require that what is done anywhere shall be done in the light of our common humanity and therefore of our common need of redemption. . . .

In these present difficult days, we are prone to become too nearly exclusively interested in the attempts of publicists and statesmen to build a better world order. Truly the work of such internationalists is important. But the shape of the world to come is likely to be much more significantly influenced in schools and laboratories than it is in chancelleries and council chambers. Speaking generally, educators and scientists have much wider horizons than do politicians. Men who love their fellow men have keener insight into the contribution to world co-operation which these fellow men might make than do those who merely rule over mankind. . . .

We need world evangelism to win men to new and eternally valid loyalties; loyalties to Christ and to the kingdom. Only through such evangelism, practiced here and elsewhere as we have strength and opportunity, can our common Father deliver the minds and hearts of men from hatred and fear, encouraging them to claim all the goods and opportunities with which our age is being blessed, and building a consistent moral universe where men are free and responsible and co-operative. . . .

In such a comprehensive program of evangelism, education is an indispensable junior partner. We need education for the enlargement of soul to which it ministers where sought in the right spirit. Education involves stern disciplines of mind and heart, patient search for underlying principles, eager regard for truth wherever it is found, frank facing of facts and an equally frank disregard for imposing trivialities, all of which are of the very essence of the spirit of Christianity. We need education for our own development as evangelists with a world outlook. . . .

World evangelism, and particularly world evangelism after the Latter Day Saint pattern, is an adventure in world transformation through discovering Christian leadership possibilities in millions of seemingly average people. We do not hope or intend to impose our own leadership on others of our own race or of any race. We only hope and expect to awaken men to their own possibilities, and then to share the results of their growth under God. . . .

Christianity is revolutionary, and our studies will convince us that, like all genuine revolutions, it is capable of disclosing immense reservoirs of human power which would otherwise have no opportunity of effective expression.

One is encouraged to answer letters promptly by having a convenient place in which to write, with a proper assortment of materials at hand. There are leisure moments before breakfast sometimes, or after dinner, when if everything is within reach it is little trouble to write a letter. Putting it off until one has time for a long letter is the cause of prolonged lapses. If I have a book on the table near which I sit or lie stretched out upon a couch when I am resting, I am sure to reach for it and before I know it I am well under way. In a few days the book is finished and I am ready for another. In the same way I write letters. It is pitiful to think that a few words scribbled three or four times a year might save many a friendship which perishes listlessly from lack of nourishment.—Thomas Arkle Clark, When You Write a Letter.

Bread, beauty, and brotherhood are the three great needs of man. We shall create a new social order in which everyone who renders honest service shall have these things.—Edwin Markham.

I have had contacts with citizens of Lamoni, with members of the leading quorums of the churches, with the faculty members, built up acquaintanceships of very high quality which has been of great assistance to me. Brother Garver, Board of Trustees member for a third of a century, has been a stabilizing influence through all of these years. Brother Gunsolley, connected for half a century, has been another of the stabilizing influences. He has served as president, treasurer, business manager, principal of the commercial department, member of the board of trustees, member of the faculty, janitor of the college, and I don't know of any position that he hasn't occupied at the college. Brother McDowell, Brother Hopkins, Sister Royce, and others have been a source of very great good during my thirty years of experience.

Is it true that you were asked to come to Graceland several years before you did?

Yes. When I came here in 1897, graduating from the university, I had been appointed as an inspector of high schools in May of my senior year and had been sent to the southwest corner of the state. Among the schools I was to visit was Lamoni. I planned my itinerary so I could spend a week end in Lamoni as I had never been here. My father wrote that he hoped I would meet Bishop Kelley who was a classmate of his. When I met Bishop Kelley, then serving as chairman of the local school board, he said there was a vacancy in the superintendency of Lamoni, and suggested that they might look with some favor upon an application from me for superintendency. Although I had intended to enter the school of law that fall I thought it might be good experience for me and that I might be able to make a little contribution. I wanted to know about Lamoni because I hadn't lived in a church community as a boy. So I told Bishop Kelley I would be glad to have my name considered. When I went back to the university, after visiting other schools, I received a letter from the secretary of the board saying that I had been elected for the superintendency in Lamoni. I came down in the fall of that year—1897.

In 1900 the college Board asked me if I would look with favor upon accepting the position as president of the college. I canvassed the matter in my own mind and with my friends and asked to be excused from accepting the presidency of the college largely for two reasons: first, the church wasn't ready to conduct a college at that time, and second, I was too young in age and experience. I explained my position to the college board and they excused me. I remained in Lamoni another year, then entered the government service. I didn't believe at that time that I could render service to the college in the way that I felt ought to be rendered. I went into government service for fifteen years and then returned as president in 1915.

Why did you choose to come to Graceland as President?

In 1900, as I indicated, I felt that I ought to be excused from accepting leadership of the institution for the reasons I mentioned. After fifteen years I had acquired experience that I felt would enable me to make a contribution which I couldn't have made fifteen years before that. I had been in government service for ten years, in the Orient, and had a large part in the development of the educational forces in the Philippines, from a teacher of English through various positions as Deputy Division Superintendent and Superintendent of the Insular Trade School in Manila, and president of the Normal School in Manila, six years in Washington in charge of 1,000 Filipino students and appointment from 75 to 125 teachers every year to go to the Philippines which required me to visit colleges and universities over the United States. I made trips from Washington to both coasts about two or three times every year, visiting colleges and universities of the country, and I felt I had experience to justify me in believing I could make a contribution. I was sitting one day in a meeting of the National Education Association in Philadelphia—the City of Brotherly Love—a congregation of about 10,000 people I suppose. I had gone over from Washington that morning, and I arrived in Philadelphia just as the session was opening. I had seen no one I knew, hadn't visited Lamoni for a great many years, had had no church association in Washington, for sometime had seen no church people. I was out of touch with the church and the college but as I sat there that morning in that assembly of 10,000 people I had a spiritual experience the like of which I had never had before. I had been made oblivious of the 10,000 people who were surrounding me as I sat there. I don't think I was asleep, but I didn't seem to realize that there was anybody else there. I was advised that I was soon to be called upon to make a decision relative to some contribution to the church and that that contribution might well enough be in Graceland College. I couldn't have accepted an appointment at that time because I was in charge of work here in the United States Bureau of Insular Affairs in Washington which no one else in the country could carry on because it required experience in the Philippines and someone would need to have been called back from Manila to take my place. I dismissed the possibility at that time. A year later my work had been changed to the Bureau of Education, and I had been sent to San Francisco to take charge of an exhibit there at the Panama Pacific Exposition. I was sitting one night at our Little Brown Church in the hills of San Francisco, when I noted a stranger in the audience, a stranger to the congregation but not a stranger to me. He was a member of the Board of Trustees at Graceland College. I knew the time had come when I would be called upon to make my decision. This member of the Board of Trustees visited the exposition, talked with me about the college, and advised that they needed my services. I had been in government service for fifteen years, traveling most of the time in the last several years. I had a family in Washington, a wife and four children. From the personal standpoint, I visioned returning to Lamoni with the keenest degree of pleasure. I knew Lamoni people, knew the environment here, and I told this brother that if in the judgment of the college authorities I could function here in a way which would justify them in bringing me back to Lamoni, I would return with the greatest degree of pleasure. I returned in the fall of 1915.

I have realized my ambition in so far as my family is concerned—eight children: three born in Manila, one in Washington, and four in Lamoni. All of them have gone through the public schools here and the college, have gone on to other institutions of learning. I have realized my hopes and ambitions in so far as my family is concerned. So far as the church is concerned I feel the church has been in a position during these years to develop an institution here such as we had visioned in 1900 when I asked to be excused from accepting.

What is your outlook for the future of the college? Do you have dreams still to be fulfilled?

I asked to be released a year ago for the same reasons that I asked to be excused in 1900, on account of age—a different age however—I was too young then, and now I'm too old. I see now the church ready and willing to maintain a college. The work of Graceland, then, must move forward. Then, too, we have been catapulted into a world situation that is a race between survival and complete destruction. The times call for assertion of the philosophy that they who live by the sword shall perish by the sword. Colleges have a grave responsibility in shaping the course of coming years. I have sensed the need for vigorous leadership in the college. So in 1944 I asked to be released from administrative duty. The past year has demonstrated the wisdom of my decision. I think that the college has never made a larger development in any one year. I have been most happy in the assignment extended me. I look forward confidently with expectation of a wonderful development in the next fifty years of Graceland.

How Much Education?

guage. In a democratic society, resting on social interaction with all its diversity of interests, persons, problems, and strains, we must have some common fund of experience. . . .

IMPLICATIONS FOR THE CHURCH:

1. As the church cultural level rises, the expectancies and requirements for education will enlarge. This has been happening in our church fellowship in the past fifty years.

2. As the church's program becomes increasingly complex, the need for expended education both in fundational and generalization and in specialization will increase.

3. The church has need of discovering individual differences, even in religious education, and through counseling service and adjustments in its program, directing persons into areas for which each is best fitted.

4. The church will do well to guide, stimulate, and assist members of promise in educational pursuits that will bring returns in the functional program of the church.

5. It is essential that the church provide offerings in adult education peculiar to its program and stimulate its members to take advantage of means of adult development in the larger society.

QUESTIONS BEFORE THE COLLEGE:

Questions of the nature and amount of education are facing the college. It is imperative that the college and her parent institution, the church, think through a functioning philosophy of education with particular consideration of the nature of society in which it is to operate. Here are basic questions:

1. Shall the college emphasize a general education for all students?

2. Shall the college offer alongside general education, vocational, and pre-professional and specialized departmental curriculums?

3. Shall the college set up minimal requirements for entrance, in mental capacities, previous academic achievements, and pattern of application to work?

4. Shall the church offer at Graceland or in other co-ordinated institutions of higher education training in fields pertinent to the church?

5. How is our program of education conditioned by the capacities of our membership? Do we have a pattern of capacities?

6. Shall the college do evangelistic work among the membership of the church to elevate our educational expectancies?

7. Is there need of reorganizing our curriculum for developing effective citizenship in the contemporary social order? In the church? If so, how shall we proceed?

As we go into such a study we have need to remember that questions concerning amount of education involve consideration of the kind of education, the nature of persons, and the ongoing needs of society and of the church; that we ask not only How much? but also What kind? For how long? and What will it take?

The cost of a thing is always more than the money you pay. Always include in the price what your purchase does to you after you get it home and take it.

The Barking Dog

This happened to me. So I know it can be done. There was a dog that barked loudly in a yard right behind mine in a great city. To say that this was annoying is an understatement. It was like pitiless iron grinding on a screaming nerve; and though I and several neighbors sent letters of protest to the owner of the animal, and though we complained to the Board of Health, no action was taken.

Finally, I made up my mind that I would not hear the annoying sound. I would concentrate so hard on my writing and my reading that I would be able figuratively to close my eyes.

At first, of course, it did not work. I made up my mind that I was too self-conscious about the matter; that I expected to hear, and so did hear.

By degrees I was able to concentrate with more power; and late one afternoon I suddenly realized that I had gone on with my work though the dog barked continuously. It was as though I had worn mufflers to shut out all sounds. I simply wasn't conscious of any noisy intrusion. And now, only occasionally am I mindful of the animal's presence so close to my window.

I had said to myself that I would imagine complete silence. Was it a little miracle that had happened to me? I don't think so. I think my will power saved me from my previous nervous state. But for the sake of my still complaining neighbors, I shouldn't like to tell the owner of the dog that it no longer troubles me! —David North.

Lincoln, once hearing a man speak abusively of another, advised him to put all his invective into a letter. The letter was written, and read to Lincoln, who commended it for its severity. The writer was pleased, and asked him, "How would you advise me to send it?"

"Send it?" said Lincoln. "Oh, I wouldn't send it. I sometimes write a letter like that, and it does me good, but I never send it."

Graceland College Alumni Association

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr. International President

A YOUNG MAN once boasted that he could "hitchhike" from San Francisco to New York and find lodging every night with a Graceland friend. He even intimated that there were parts of the country where Gracelanders were so plentiful as to be depended upon by the traveler for three meals during the day as well as a bed at night. No one acquainted with the records of the Graceland Alumni association will dispute his assertion, for there are now living 3,990 persons who call the college on the hill "Alma Mater."

For many years in the early history of the church educational institution, there were few college graduates. Most of the enrollees were in the Academy, but as time went on higher academic standards brought the status of a Junior College, and with this growing dignity of higher learning, there began to develop a sense of need for an alumni organization.

DURING the General Conference of 1930, a large group of enthusiastic alumni met at the Auditorium in Independence and took definite action, looking toward the establishment of a permanent association. A committee was chosen to draft articles of organization and suggest a program of activities, these plans to be reported back to the general alumni group during the next General Conference period.

N. Ray Carmichael, Business Manager of Graceland College at that time, was a leading figure in the movement. Under his supervision the college had already gone to considerable expense in accumulating data concerning ex-students. A card index containing approximately two thousand names had been set up, and diligent efforts had been made to keep in touch with ex-Gracelanders by sending them the school paper several times each year.

The committee selected in 1930 consisted of Dr. Charles F. Grabske, Leonard Lea, N. R. Carmichael, George Mesley, and Cyril Wight. At a meeting of Graceland Alumni held April 9, 1932, this committee made its report. Articles of Organization were adopted, and officers of the newly formed association were elected. Dr. Charles F. Grabske was elected president, with Mrs. Edith Lewis as vice-president, and E. E. Closson secretary-treasurer.

The Association included among its objectives the encouraging of students to attend Graceland, the obtaining of scholarships, gifts, and endowments for the college, and the general development of a favorable public attitude toward Graceland, while at the same time uniting alumni in loyalty toward the institution.

To affect the objectives adopted, it was agreed to provide for consultation with high school graduates who were prospective students, and to give support and encouragement to the annual College Day program.

Homecoming with opportunity for class reunions became a high point in the alumni calendar.

BEGINNING IN 1934, the alumni association adopted as an annual project the raising of funds for gifts to the college. Much of the cost of landscaping in the years 1934-35 was met by alumni gifts. The project for 1936 was books for the library. In 1937 it was decided to sign up as many graduates as possible as lifetime members of the association at ten dollars as membership fee. With the dedication of the new football field in 1935, the need for bleachers was recognized, so the alumni association made this the project in 1938 and provided additional bleachers in 1942.

Familiar landmarks to visitors to Lamoni are the signboards south and east of Lamoni on Highway 69. "Where Maine meets California in College Life" is the slogan which greets the tourist. The signs were the 1939 alumni gift. President G. N. Briggs celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as president of the college in 1940 and received office furnishings, which were to be his personal property, as an anniversary present from the association.

Expressive of growing housing needs, was the presentation in 1941 of funds with which is to be purchased reception room furniture for a men's dormitory. The years bring about changes, and Graceland needed a room which could be used as a studio by radio classes—much of the radio equipment was given by the association in 1943.

Evidence that the college had gone to war was seen in the projects for 1944-45. A small newspaper, full of information about servicemen who were Gracelanders, was mailed several times a year to men and women in the armed forces. They'll probably never forget the "Duffle Bag" Tower. It was read around the world—on ships, in planes, by men in foxholes, and in training centers. The alumni association met the cost of the publication. Added to that project in 1945 was the providing of funds toward expense of Graceland's Fiftieth Anniversary Celebration. Alumni also played a large part in the church-wide move to raise $25,000.00 to go toward purchase of furnishings for the new dormitory.

And at the 1945 homecoming, the custom continued with several hundred Gracelanders, many of them still in uniform, pledging themselves to another gift for the college, this time a Hammond organ.

GRACELAND'S BORDERS are no longer marked by Maine and California. Her sons and daughters are to be found in England, Australia, Hawaii, Germany, practically every state in the Union, Canada, Mexico, wherever service to humanity may call. Each year the college which has so affected the development of the church grows stronger as its foundation of interested and active alumni becomes broader. Homecoming celebrations have also changed in character as there has been added to festivities opportunity for serious consideration and study of Graceland's unfolding role of educational ministry. Alumni participation and interest is not to be measured only in financial terms. How much brighter appears the scene of Graceland's second fifty years as she advances into the future with thousands of loyal, interested friends standing to her support with that "Graceland spirit, never dead."

Imagination

Imaginative power is the characteristic secret of the supremely successful career. Lincoln was a great statesman because he had a clear vision of what the American Union could and should mean. The eminence of industrial and business leaders has been due to their imaginative vision which revealed to them new possibilities, new programs, new modes of organization and action. Newton, Einstein and Darwin have set the patterns of human thinking because from the stuff of their minds they wove a new texture of ideas and interpretations.—James L. Mursell.

Graceland's Unusual Home-coming

Notes From the Memo Books of A. N. Deaver and Office Staff

"There have been many good Graceland Home-coming, but none just like 1945." That was the statement of one homecomer at Graceland this year, and it probably reflected the feelings of the rest of the four hundred who returned to "The Hill" for an interesting and unusual four days. As the four days got under way, everyone of the four hundred visitors became concerned with the more serious problems of Graceland's future.

THREE DECADES AT GRACELAND

"My Three Decades at Graceland" proved an enlightening topic for all those who listened to President Briggs as he carried Graceland down through thirty years of his leadership experience at the institution. As he followed through his calendar of years, many of his closest friends were reminded of exciting happenings during those earlier days. President Briggs' clear-minded review of this interesting period of Graceland's history afforded an excellent setting for the rest of the homecoming.

MAIN FEATURE

Even though the home-coming had its lighter moments as usual, the principal feature of this fiftieth anniversary home-coming resolved itself into a symposium around the question: "What Shall Be Graceland's Philosophy of Education?" Perhaps there has been no time in Graceland's history when a program of such solemnity could have been carried out with a finer spirit of cooperation and participation than during this year while we are still appreciative of the blessings which peace can bring to us. This over-all feeling of heart-felt courage in studying together the needs and future possibilities of our college became universal with the first setting, and many were the "after-hour" chats which followed the stimulating presentations of the day.

GILBERT, McDOWELL

On Thursday two good presentations were given: A. R. Gilbert, Acting President of the college spoke on "Why Do We Need an Educational Philosophy Now?" and Dr. Floyd M. McDowell, director of religious education for the church and vice chairman of Graceland's Board of Trustees, gave us many stimulating thoughts on the question: "When Is Education Religious?" The findings of those two speakers were further analyzed by Mrs. Olive Mortimore and G. A. Platz.

The opening session on Friday brought the question: "How Much Education?" Dr. Voas Meredith, of the University of Iowa Staff, had prepared to lead in the analysis of the subject, but became ill at the last moment and Dr. Roy A. Chevillie substituted. Further discussions were carried out by Harry Lorange, Lamon's superintendent of schools, and E. E. Closson of the college staff. The second presentation of the morning was given by Bishop Earl T. Higdon on "What Education Is Needed for Vocational and Professional Effectiveness?" Discussants were A. R. Gilbert and Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

The two final presentations on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning were made by Bishop Henry Livingston and E. J. Gleazer, Jr. Discussants on their subjects were Apostle F. H. Edwards, Bishop Earl T. Higdon, Herbert Lively, and A. Neal Deaver.

LIGHTER MOMENTS

All alumni school class sessions were held in the college gymnasium, and all were well attended. In between classes were frequently heard those sentimental "squeals" of young and not so young past college co-eds as they got the first glance of some friend whom they had not seen for some time. Yes, it was a real occasion for old friends to get together again, and the home-coming program was not without some of those lighter moments even though we were told that we would have to wait for Home-coming 1946 for our much-hoped-for football thrill. On Friday evening two showings of "Our Town" were staged by the College Players for students and visitors in the local Coliseum auditorium. It was a good place to get that first glance of the friend who arrived for the latter part of the home-coming program. Following the play, many old social club and "chat" groups got together for an evening of "old times" such as has not been possible during the war years. And then there came along the expected "fun" program on Saturday afternoon, when W. S. Gould unraveled his several stories and exhibitions of "Graceland's Sports Down Through the Years." No one questioned the authenticity of John Garver's thread-worn football sweater of the many seasons past, and some of the antics of early football games and the stories which were told seemed somehow to amuse all over again. These lighter moments and laughs were much enjoyed, and that Saturday afternoon football theme gave us a real build-up for the real game we may expect at home-coming time in '46.

HOME-COMING DINNER

The high light of sociability came for homecomers when students and visitors assembled on the playing floor of the gymnasium for the home-coming dinner on Saturday evening. It was a gala occasion. Tables that were originally set for 500 were expanded to accommodate the final crowd of 682. The scene was spectacular. The program of the evening centered around the theme "These Have Been Builders," and once again we relived the lives of Marietta Walker, J. A. Gunsolley, and G. N. Briggs. A fitting and touching finale was the unveiling of the recently completed portrait of George Nathaniel Briggs. The portrait in its massive frame measuring four feet by five feet was placed on display in the college chapel during Sunday so that friends could view the work at close range.

A FITTING CLIMAX

Sunday morning came along entirely too quickly, but with it came two closing sessions which impressed all who listened. The early morning devotions were conducted by Edwin Browne, Director of Publicity at the University of Kansas. He was assisted by his able wife, Joy Harder Browne. Following the devotions came the final class session when Apostle F. H. Edwards explored the question: "What Education Is Needed for World Evangelism?"

At eleven o'clock G. L. DeLapp gave the climaxing address of the home-coming in a fitting and masterful presentation of the subject: "What Is Graceland's Role in the New Age of the Church?"

After all was said and done, two or three things were certain—it was good to see old friends again and to see so many Gracelanders back from the service of our country. Perhaps the most outstanding feature of the home-coming evidenced itself in the intense interest which all gave to the activities of the alumni school and to the study of the future of Graceland. The event was as wonderful as it was unusual.

Funerals

I hate funerals, and would not attend my own if it could be avoided, but it is well for every man to stop once in a while to think of what sort of a collection of mourners he is training for his final event.—Robert T. Morris, Fifty Years a Surgeon.

Installment Sleeping

To the millions of sleepless people in America I give my 25 years of experiment with sleeping and waking hours, culminating in a complete victory over slumber. Formerly, no matter what time I went to bed, it was a certainty that I would wake up within three or four hours. One night, happening to look at myself, I was shocked by my personal appearance and decided to shave. This woke me completely and put me in a normal state of mind, whereupon I went back to bed and immediately fell asleep. For the next three nights I hung pictures, putted the bookcase, and read for three hours each night.

Thus I came upon the great discovery. In six months I so readjusted my sleeping that six perfect hours of slumber out of 24 was quite sufficient. My repose is so complete that for 20 years I have not experienced anything approaching a sustained dream. I have three hours of perfect repose after I go to bed. Then I get up and work. And mark the benediction of three golden hours in the middle of the night. The crash of traffic has ceased. The household is quiescent. No callers, no telephones, no arguments. In these three hours I pursue my labors, achieving at times results that would be quite impossible at any other time.

With the sandman's approach I stop work and return to bed. I am in a receptive state of mind to approach the second phase of slumber, and within five minutes, regardless of what I have been reading or writing, I am in my last sleep, which lasts for three more hours. It is an established fact that the first sleep into which the sleeper falls is the most profound. For this reason there is more rehabilitation in two short sleeps than in one long one. By breaking my sleep into two parts, each being complete and 100 per cent efficient, I get twice as much benefit as the sleeper who sleeps seven, eight or nine hours without interruption.—Robert H. Davis, Over My Left Shoulder.

The New Year and the Women of the Church

By Pauline Arnson

The goals of the women of the church should be quite familiar to the membership, for they are fundamental to the progress of the church as a whole. Yet constantly new members are being added, young women are becoming adults, and need to be taught and informed so that they can join the legion of good and conscientious women who are attempting to reach these objectives. Let us recall to mind the most important one which catches up and includes all the lesser goals—the establishment of zionic homes and families.

The meaning of this is clear to Latter Day Saint members. So that all may understand and to clarify: zionic means all that is best in the way of the physical home as well as the development of the spiritual lives of the family. We think of a home that is adequate in size for the number in the family, artistic in arrangement and decoration, clean inside and out, but more than this, with a friendly Christian warmth, indicating the type of people who reside there. We think of a home which is built on love and dedicated to the Heavenly Father in its beginning, whose occupants are striving to build in their lives a firm foundation and knowledge of the teachings of the church, that they may be capable of passing this philosophy down to their children.

This great task is worthy of the best that is within the women of the church and should challenge them to constant endeavor. It will require prayerful and wise application of effort to accomplish such, and in order to do so and not become discouraged in the enormity of the task, these objectives must be broken down into small divisions and some one particular phase of the task be undertaken each year, with a firm resolution that at the end of the year some real progress will have been made. It is an easy thing to have good aims but more difficult to direct toward the aim with intent to hit or reach it.

The general women's department is interested first in the development of the women and then in the department of the branch. Hence for an objective for the new year, it has chosen this theme: "Having the courage for our religious convictions." We would recommend that a serious study of the gospel be made to find the beautiful truths of our distinct philosophy that we may have a renewed fervor and give thanks to our Heavenly Father that he has allowed us to have a part in his great work on earth. It follows that before we can have good homes, there must be good people, strongly convinced that the gospel was restored by divine instrumentality, for it is this conviction that will bring about ultimately the distinct type of family we are trying to build.

So this coming year, the members in the family might decide to have as their goal the purchase of the church books for each one in the family. Ownership creates interest. If the Herald does not visit the home regularly, order it and find the many good things it contains for all ages. Then the women's department of the branch might choose to establish a church library, containing those books and pamphlets which will help all to enjoy good and helpful literature even though they are unable financially to have books for their own homes. Then by the end of next year, part of the general goal of being mentally and spiritually alert would be in the process of being realized.

Appropriate for this season are the words of Jesus to His disciples: "Be of good cheer; Here am I; Be not afraid." They should stimulate us to more courageous acts in his service and give us assurance that he is with us in all things and will help us accomplish the righteous desires of our hearts.

Needlecraft Booth for General Conference

1. Letters are being received from our women throughout the church, asking what they can do for Needlecraft for 1946 Conference. We thank you all for remembering us. We do need your help. We have some projects coming up in which we know you will be interested.

2. We are having our Needlecraft booth at Conference as usual.

3. We will welcome your donations of tea towels, aprons, luncheon sets, pillowslips, scarves, layette articles. Finished quilts will be acceptable. We have a number of quilt tops on hand and not enough help to finish them.

4. As we endeavor to win the peace, the call is coming for more missionaries, and we hope to help in this endeavor.

5. All parcels should be mailed to the President, Mrs. B. C. Sarratt, 1305 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri.

MILDRED C. CALLIN,

Secretary-Treas. for Needlecraft

Walter Winchell tells the story of George M. Cohan and the irritating young movie executive. Cohan, unhappy in Hollywood and chafing under the run-around treatment he was getting from self-designated big shots, had just been informed that the young executive couldn't see him for another three hours.

"I see," said Mr. Cohan, who never kept anybody waiting in his life. "And what do you happen to do around here?"

"I happen," was the uppity reply, "to be his assistant."

"Well," sarcasm'd Cohan, "go back and tell him 'never mind'—and now that makes you a messenger boy."

Safeguarding Revelation

By Evan A. Fry

THE NEWSPAPERS and the general public have shown great interest last year to a family which abandoned or gave away most of its earthly possessions, and set forth by automobile to the wilds of the Rio Grande valley in Texas. Several things have served to heighten this public interest. First, a curiosity as to where they got the gasoline; second, a concern for the small children of the family who seemed to have no assurance of adequate food and clothing, or any protection from mosquitoes; third, a curiosity over the draft status of one member of the expedition; and fourth and most important, a natural interest in the fact that the basis for these strange actions, including the abandonment of all shoes on the banks of a Texas stream, was a purported revelation received by a fourteen-year-old boy, who claims that God gave him commands and instructions for making the trip.

Although this family did not belong to the denomination which I represent, their actions interested us, because they have gotten themselves into a very strange and in some respects a ludicrous situation by a blind and unreasonable adherence to a principle which is true and reasonable and workable, when used with proper intelligence and safeguards. One of our very firm beliefs as a church is now and has always been that God is now able to speak to men in warning, rebuke, instruction, or commendation, and that he actually does so speak. We believe that the church should be governed by the voice of God, rather than by the voice of man—not the ancient echo of a voice that once spoke to Moses or Abraham or the Apostle Paul, but a voice that speaks today, to men of our time, with commandments and counsel designed to meet and solve modern problems in specific and practical ways.

In a former effort we told the story of Dr. Criswell of Dallas, Texas, who accepted a Baptist pulpit in that city as a result of a dream in which the former pastor, Dr. Truett, appeared to him and informed him that he should undertake that work. In his late book, The Christ of the American Road, E. Stanley Jones tells of the assurance of what he calls an "inner voice" which miraculously led him half way around a war-upset world, from India to Chicago, and placed him at his destination within five minutes of the appointed time—in spite of canceled steamboat sailings, airplane priorities, and crowded trains. Revelation is becoming somewhat more common, and a great deal more popular these days.

But 125 years ago a fourteen-year-old New York farm boy made himself very unpopular indeed by announcing to the world that God had spoken to him in answer to a definite question which he had propounded. From that day forward, Joseph Smith was ridiculed and persecuted by men who denied the possibility of modern revelation, until he finally died a martyr's death in June, 1844. The religious leaders of that day declared that God had said his final word and retired into the heavens to speak no more. Today more and more of our ablest religious leaders are taking the position proclaimed by Joseph Smith 125 years ago—that God still can and will and does speak to man.

PEOPLE TODAY are not nearly so much concerned with the question of whether God can and does speak. They have rather grown to take that for granted. They pray that God will speak through their minister when he stands in the pulpit as God's representative. They pray that God will inspire and direct the men who direct our nation, and our armies, and our navies—and the only way he can direct them is by some form of modern, present-day revelation, call it by whatever name you will. What we are concerned about today, is that when we grant the possibility of revelation, we seem to throw down the bars to every ambitious leader, to every crackpot, to every ignorant and well-meaning but dangerous zealot. If we believe sincerely in the possibility of modern revelation, we may still have our faith shaken and our reason insulted by some of the so-called revelations which we are asked to receive from self-appointed prophets and leaders. Are there no safeguards, no tests, by which we may evaluate that which purports to be revelation, and keep ourselves from being deceived and misled? There are, if we will pay heed to them.

The rule and the practice of this church is that no major move be made as a church organization without the instruction, or at least the sanction, of revelation. But think what a frightful administrative mess we should be in at once, if anyone of our 130,000 members had a right to present a document, claiming to be the word of the Lord in commandment to the church? There would be disunity and confusion, even anarchy in the church, as the zealots and the crackpots and the publicity seekers sought to establish themselves as leaders by saying—perhaps in all sincerity and full belief in their mission—"Thus saith the Lord." The law of the church therefore makes it quite plain that only one man—the President and Prophet of the church, is entitled to receive revelation which is binding upon the church as new law. The church is expressly commanded "not to receive the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments binding upon the church." We believe that God speaks to the church only through the head of the church, though of course he may speak to individuals under any circumstances as he wills

In keeping with this rule, it is the established law and custom of this church that a lesser officer may not direct a higher officer, even by revelation. The tail must not be allowed to wag the dog. If just anyone in the church could receive revelation binding upon the whole church, there would be nothing to prohibit any obscure member, whether in good standing or not, from promulgating a document purporting to be a revelation, in which he gave instruction to his pastor, his district president, or even the ruling quorums and the general conference of the church. The law of the church is plain in this respect: "Thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church." Members are not to dictate to the ministry, who are sent forth "not to be taught, but to teach." There is nothing to prohibit any member from receiving intelligence from God such as is suited to the solution of his private problems, but he has no right to receive revelations from God as a representative of the CHURCH unless he has been called and ordained to that office and function in the church. This principle carries down through district and congregational organization. The man entitled by law to receive God's instructions for the administration of a district or a congregation, is the man properly called and ordained and set apart to be the administrative head of that subdivision of the church.

Stated thus baldly and incompletely, this system looks like a grand set-up for a complete dictatorship in the hands of one man, who by invoking his divine right to speak exclusively for Deity could deceive and exploit endlessly the people who believe in him as a prophet or a spiritual leader. But there are abundant safeguards against that sort of thing, also provided in our church law. In case of malfeasance in office, transgression, or similar cause, any man in administrative authority in this church can be tried in church courts and removed from office, no matter how many revelations he may receive, directing that he should remain in. Or if the people lose confidence in him, they or their representatives may simply fail or refuse to sustain him at the next conference or business meeting, where a part of the agenda is always a motion to sustain the administrative leader, whether he be local pastor, district president, or president of the whole church.

THERE ARE STILL two more safeguards against revelation—two more tests which must be passed before it can become binding upon the church. Providing that it has been received by the one in proper authority, the second safeguard is that it must be in keeping with the already existing body of church law and doctrine. To use a perfectly obvious example, if the prophet and head of this church should come to us at next general conference and present a revelation instructing all church members to steal whatever they wanted, to lie to cover up their crime, and to kill all the enemies who opposed such criminal activity, such a document would not get to first base. Why? Because it violates long-established and accepted principles of law which are recorded in the Bible, and repeated in the Book of Mormon and in the modern revelations of Joseph Smith contained in our book of Doctrine and Covenants. When Brigham Young presented a document to his church in Utah, purporting to be a revelation commanding them to practice polygamy, his people failed to use this test, or they never would have adopted polygamy; for the law of the Bible, and of the Book of Mormon, and of the church in the days of Joseph Smith was a law of monogamy—one man, one wife. No revelation is a true revelation which makes God reverse his position, or which cancels a long-established and universally accepted moral law. Revelation must agree with what is already recognized to be revelation, or it is spurious. We test modern revelation carefully and prayerfully by this test.

Our next safeguard against fraudulent or spurious revelation is the safeguard of common consent. Although the members of the church have no right to receive revelation for the church, they do have the right to say whether that which is received through the proper channels shall be accepted as revelation binding upon the church. Whenever a pastor, a district president, or the president of the church receives what he believes to be divine instruction on any phase of church doctrine or administration, he must first present that document to the people for their sanction. Though the people cannot initiate such action, they do have the inviolable right to accept what they believe to be true, or to reject whatever they believe to be false. You may be very sure that any administrative officer considers with great care any instruction which he presents to the people in the name of God, for it will have to bear their scrutiny, and the scrutiny of all the ministerial bodies or quorums of the church, before it can become church law.

In their examination of these official documents, the people use the same tests which they apply (or should apply at least) to any revelation of God's will which comes to them personally, as individuals. How can I know when God is speaking to me? How can you know when he is speaking to you? Any wisdom which comes of God brings with it light and intelligence. It carries with it a warm spiritual glow, which is more than mere emotionalism or fanatical zeal. It appeals to the reason, to the intelligence, to the understanding. It fills a definite need, or comes in answer to a specific problem. It is harmonious with God's nature, and with his previously revealed word and law. It is given with proper respect for the personality and the free moral will and agency of the one receiving it—without violence, or disorderly, or unseemly conduct. Its validity is proved out and made manifest when we move out in

The Cure for the Calamity

By J. A. Koehler

IN THIS AGE OF scientific-mindedness, no enlightened person tries to get rid permanently of an effect without trying to remove the cause. The cure for the calamity which has come upon the inhabitants of the earth consists in uprooting the cause, it was for malarial fever. In the circumstances of peoples some special treatment may be necessary. But the escape route from calamity is, at bottom, the natural or regular righteousness and goodness of human living together.

The essence of the calamity is not the wartime scarcity of sugar and gasoline. It is not the destruction of property. It is not what happens outside; it is what happens within us. It is the fear of want. It is the feel of insecurity. It is the destruction of freedom. It is the sense of injustice. It is the mental torture, the human suffering, that arises from the wrong and bad ways in which peoples misconduct the business of human living together.

THE IMMEDIATE CAUSE of the calamity is the character of our industrial and governmental (or economic) institutions which set us obedience to the instruction given.

Yes, God can and does speak to men today, leading them, instructing them, ordering the affairs of his church. But revelation, whether it be official—for the whole church—or individual and private, needs to be subjected to the safeguards which God himself has provided in the law, that we may not be deceived by cunning or unscrupulous or foolish men, and that we may not be blown to and fro by every wind of doctrine from men who in cunning craftiness lie in wait to deceive.

at each other's throats. But since the laws, institutions, and customs of free peoples are but implementations of their wills, the remote cause is our states or tempers of our minds. It is as Paul said: "In the last days perilous times shall come [because]; men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous . . . , unholy . . . , traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."

The Restoration prophet stated the case in these words: "They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness (which is the righteousness of human living together, or of self-governance), but every man walketh in his own way and after the image of his own god."

As individuals, comparatively few persons are devoted to the task of re-ordering human relations aright as in the sight of God. Only a few seek the righteousness of the Kingdom (which is communal righteousness) because they love righteousness and hate iniquity; because they love God and neighbor. The pressure groups, even within the very framework of our government, are out each to get what it can when it can for itself. And that "hook or crook" "free for all," that "house divided against itself" situation, is the cause of the calamity which has come upon the inhabitants of the earth.

THE CURE is indicated in one of the psalms of David: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forevermore."

To the prophets, "to dwell together in unity" does not mean what it means to ambitious politicians who plan greater concentrations of power in their hands, or who plan larger and larger political controls. It does not mean imperial "union." Instead, it means, as the Restoration prophet put it, "every man seeking the interest of his neighbor" through the honoring of human rights and the fulfillment of human duties—the right of each individual to real moral freedom and the right of each community to govern its own internal affairs in its own way. It means, as Isaiah said, to order government with judgment and to establish it with justice. It means, as some of our philosophers say, to promote true community. It means to guarantee the rights of both peoples and persons through the right ordering of human relations.

THE MODERN VOICE of prophecy and the unprophetic voices of both religious and secular leaders of the day prescribe quite different cures for the calamity.

The unprophetic secular voices call for more invention, more technology, more industry, more business, more employment, and more regulation of the existing evils. They call for the preservation of the way of life that is the very cause of the calamity.

The unprophetic religious voices call for more Bible reading, more church-going, more religious activities, more charity, more civic mindedness, and more consciousness of God—whatever that means.

But they do not call upon their people to "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion," which is communal righteousness. They do not call upon their peoples to accomplish their "warfare." They do not call for "the mountain of the Lord's house." They do not call for adventure in civil-mode Kingdom-building by the peoples whose calling it is to build that Kingdom. They do not call for the enterprise that will make men conscious of God. They do not call for the removal of either the remote or the immediate cause of the calamity. Whatever their intentions may be, they do not seek to "save" society, they only seek to ameliorate it.

The truly scientific voice at one time was somewhat prophetic. It foresaw the improvement of the outward circumstances of man through its own advancement. The outward circumstances of our forefathers were horrible. Even the inward circumstances of man in the Dark Ages were very bad. No question about it, the improvement of both these circumstances was conditioned in more invention, production of goods, etc.

BUT IS the want of economic power the cause of human suffering in our day? Why we talk about our over-production today. Our problem is to find purchasers of the goods of the producers. What is the sense, then, in the unprophetic prediction of a better world through mechanical invention, expansion of industry, unemployment insurance, and all the rest? What does all that have to do with eradicating the cause of the calamity?

It is true that in removing the cause of the calamity peoples must be concerned with employment and other things. But they must be concerned in an altogether different way from what big business and finance and politics are. The calamity curing people must be concerned with the rightness of human relations in industry and in government. For it is not the want of technological goodness that is the cause of human suffering, it is the want of social righteousness. The cure is to be found not in relations of cams, pistons, and triggers, but in moral relations (which are social relations), in the ethics of economic self-governance.

The unprophetic secular voices would nurture the cause of the calamity. Only the prophetic religious voice would remove it. "Their wise men" even take pride in the scheme of things that destroys us.

THERE ARE TWO phases to the cure of the calamity. The one is represented in the proclamation: "Say nothing but repentance to this generation," and the other in the proclamation that "A great and marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men," together with the commandment to "seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." The first proclamation respects the spirit of the people, and the second respects the medium through which the good spirit must find its expression. The first respects the state or temper of the mind, and the second its implementation. The first respects the will to do the will of God, and the second respects "the union," the social union, the economic union, the industrial and political union, according to which the people must unite themselves if they are to do that will. Both respect something quite different from the present state of affairs or way of life.

Following this group of talks I intend to make a representation of The Social Philosophy of Restoration. In that group of talks I shall try to do what I cannot do in this talk. I shall represent the social union which is to arise from the spirit of social unity, which is the theme of modern prophecy. And in that representation, I believe you will see that the modern voice of prophecy reveals the cure of the calamity.

The proclamations of Restoration respect property organization, finance, distribution, units of government, and everything else that is requisite to salvation in the Kingdom of God. They are the proclamations of ancient prophecy made in terms of modern times. Restoration prophecy is city building, it is Zion redeeming, it is government establishing, it is Kingdom coming prophecy.

What it all adds up to is that there is truly a modern, as well as an ancient, voice of prophecy, "unto which ye do well that ye take heed," for what it proclaims and anticipates is truly the cure of the calamity.

If you feel weak, remember that God has strength to spare. Ask him for as much as you need, and you will find it.

My Sincere Desire for the New Year

It is my earnest desire that I shall have neither joy nor sorrow, success nor failure by incurring a debt to others greater than I can pay. I would give value received for all I draw of the Bank of Life.

I would have a few friends who know me for what I am and who love me in spite of what I am. In turn for such friendship, I give my pledge to foster in myself what I ask of others.

I want some work to do which has such value that without it the day in which I live, and all the days to follow, would feel poorer were I to fail and richer if I succeed, and I want to do my work without taxing the purse, sympathy, or patience of others beyond the value I give.

I desire to cultivate such courage of mind and heart that I shall not be afraid to travel where there is no blazed trail, and I shall not hesitate to sacrifice, when by sacrifice I can make contributions to others.

I court such growth in grace as shall enable me to understand those who rejoice or weep or suffer, and to enter into the secret place with them as though their joys or tears or suffering were my own. I would enter into their joy and success without covetousness, into their tears with such understanding silence as speaks of eloquence surpassing words, and into their suffering with such sympathy as will give rise to courage and Wings of Hope.

I would have a deeper appreciation of nature in all her moods and aspects, and a profounder respect for man as he seeks to labor together with God for the highest good of humanity.

I would cultivate a sense of humor, for without it I have discovered life is likely to become so serious a business that it will be unlivable.

I would learn to patiently endure little folk with the full knowledge that if they will but set their hearts to do the will of God, they will have all eternity in which to grow, and if they will not set their hearts to know God, time will soon release me from the annoyance of their littleness.

I would have a little leisure in which to do nothing. To keep the bow tightly strung all the time is, I have learned, to finally rob it of its spring and power. Too, I must have time to cultivate the fine art of meditation. God has His best chance at me when I am full of * * * * HUSH. Finally, I would have patience to wait for the best things and the wisdom to know them when they come.

News OF THE CHURCHES

“The Messiah” Given at the Auditorium

THE twenty-ninth annual rendition of Handel's The Messiah was presented to a crowd of 4,000 listeners in the Auditorium at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, December 16, by the Messiah Choir. The chorus was accompanied by the Independence Little Symphony, with Bethel Davis at the organ, George Miller at the piano, and Franklyn Weddle conducting.

It was the first performance to be accompanied by the Little Symphony exclusively, with organ and piano being used only for the passages written into the orchestral score. The orchestra reflected great credit, not only upon the musicianship of its members, but upon the achievement of Mr. Weddle in welding them into a functioning unit in little more than a year's time. None of the players are professionals; many of them are still quite young; and although their performance was not professional in the highest sense of the word, it was both musically and technically adequate even in the most intricate passages.

The chorus gave what was probably the best performance of its career, reflecting the careful work done by Mr. Weddle in weekly rehearsals beginning last October. The feminine soloists were new to Independence audiences; Mrs. Elizabeth Wilkinson Vaughn, soprano, is from Kansas City, Kansas; Miss Evaline Hartley, contralto, is a member of the Kansas City University faculty. Samuel Gillham, bass, and Garland Tickemyer, tenor, both quite familiar to Independence music lovers, gave creditable performances. Each of the 231 musicians participating in the concert deserve honorable mentioning, but of course neither time nor space will permit.

The Messiah was repeated on a special broadcast given over KMBC and the Columbia network Sunday, December 23, at 10:15 P. M., Central Standard Time. Garland Tickemyer and Samuel Gillham again sang the tenor and bass solos, respectively. Mrs. Elizabeth Wilkinson Vauhn, was the soprano; and Annajeane Brown of New York was the contralto soloist. Accompaniment was furnished by a forty-piece orchestra of professional musicians from Kansas City. The broadcast, which originated in the Stone Church, was closed to the public.

Independence, Missouri

East Independence Church

Pastor, Ivan Clothier

Elder Raymond Smith was the speaker on November 4; his subject was, "Without Faith It Is Impossible to Please God."

On November 11, Cecil Walker, assistant pastor of Liberty Street Church, occupied the pulpit at eleven o'clock. Preceding the sermon, Medella Bickle sang "Jerusalem," accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Alpha Bickle. Elder Van Talcott spoke in the evening. A song fest, under the direction of Doris Clements, with Mrs. Van Talcott at the piano, opened the evening activities.

Pastor Ivan Clothier was the speaker on November 18. His text was, "Prepare Ye the Way of the Lord and Make His Pathways Straight." Paul Clements sang "My Jesus I Love Thee," as a solo. The Clematis Chorus gave a musical program at the eight o'clock service.

Elder Blair McClain was in charge of the League services given on the evening of November 25. A solo, "I Am a Pilgrim," was sung by Medella Bickle accompanied by Mrs. Van Talcott. Preceding this service, Roy Albert, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hilliard, was blessed by Elders Frank Minton and Harry Friend.

The December 2 Communion service was in charge of Pastor Ivan Clothier. Special music was contributed by Robert and Clifford Carver, violinist and cellist, with Mrs. Virleen Carver, pianist. Elder Harry Friend gave the Communion talk. T. W. Thatcher was the speaker at the evening service.

Elder William LaGrece delivered the eleven o'clock sermon on December 9, and W. E. Wakeman spoke in the evening. The League service, held at 7 P. M., was in charge of Naomi Gaulter. Elsie Sutterfield and Don Stack related some of their experiences in the service.

The young women met at the home of Elizabeth Stack for a noon luncheon on November 5. After the business meeting and devotional, Esther Friend reviewed Invitation to Live by Lloyd C. Douglas. On November 8 the women's department had a covered dish luncheon at Rena Friend's house. A business meeting was held in the afternoon, after which Mrs. Van Talcott led the devotional and Madge Thatcher conducted the lesson study. The two groups met together on November 29 for a special musical program. Several violin solos were played by Robert Carver; Jennie Butler and Katherine Friend, Blue Springs, sang a duet; a string trio composed of Clifford, Robert and Virleen Carver, played a number of classical selections. Readings were given by Doris Clements; Elsie Sutterfield sang several solos; Mrs. Jay McCormick, city-wide woman's supervisor, and Mrs. John Darling, editor of the Women's Magazine, gave brief talks. Tea was served at the end of the program.

Those recently discharged from military service are: Ivan Wagener, William Crabb, David Wagener, David Friend, Fred Gaulter, Virgil Coffman, Donald Stark and Elsie Sutterfield. Ellis Thatcher and Herman Jennings attended church while on leave.

Enoch Hill Church

Pastor, Lawrence E. Martin

Saints from various parts of the country are coming to Independence and joining the Enoch Hill congregation. Recent additions to the roll have been Mr. and Mrs. Herman Fultz, Flint, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. David Young, Battle Creek, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. Cassidy, Brooklyn, New York; and A. T. Whipple, New London, Connecticut. With so many newcomers, the need of a larger church is very evident.

The women's department, with the opening of a new year of work, is meeting each first and third Thursday of the month. Two classes are in progress; one meets at 10:30 in the morning and is sponsored by the Daughters of Zion; the other meets in the afternoon to study Elbert Smith's Restoration with Nellie Bowen as teacher. A covered dish luncheon is held once a month; the December luncheon was also a Christmas party.

Other class activities include the fellowship meeting on December 6 of the class taught by Elder Walter Chapman, and the Christmas party held December 20 at the home of Mrs. Agnes Hartman for the Dorcas class. There was a program by class members and an exchange of gifts.

On December 2, Ernest Nelson Griffin, infant son of George and Helen Griffin, was blessed by his great-uncle, Arthur Welch, and Pastor Lawrence Martin.

Donna Logan, Saginaw, Michigan, was baptized at 1 P. M., December 23, by her uncle, James W. Davis.

Recent speakers who have occupied the pulpit have been C. W. Clark, Glaude Smith, Arlon Chapman, L. J. Randall, J. W. Davis, Herbert Barto, A. T. Whipple, Frank Mintun, and L. E. Martin.—Nellie Bowen, reporter.

London, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

The seventy-year-old London Branch celebrated the twenty-ninth anniversary of the present building on November 18 and 19. Apostle J. F. Garver, guest speaker, contributed much to the success of the special services. Apostle Garver spoke to a capacity house at both morning and evening services on Sunday. He also spoke to the Leaguers at their meeting on Sunday and at the anniversary program on Monday night. Former pastors of the London branch who took part in the anniversary activities were: W. I. Fligg, J. E. MacGregor, J. F. Winegarden, and F. H. Gray. Both Evangelist Fligg and Elder MacGregor served as branch presidents approximately seven-teen years. Besides assisting in the anniversary services, Brother Fligg, who is of the order of Patriarchs, preached Wednesday night, November 21, and both morning and evening of Sunday, November 25.

The men's fellowship club has reorganized with Frank Gray as president.

Pastor Sheehy was the guest speaker at Acme-Vigilante Clubs of the Y. M. C. A. on November 12. He is also conducting the assembly at the Ealing School on Wednesdays.

The Las Amigas Club sponsored a children's recital on November 27. Guest artists were Joyce Westgate and Margaret Bradford. Other children participating in the program were: Elaine Risler, Ann Moore, Glen Renecker, Patricia Allen, Joyce Irwin, Shirley Reynolds, Donna Hodgson, Marie Hardey, Marie Njeim, Marilyn Alford, Crawford Johnson and the girls' chorus.

Major Robert Conron was awarded the D. S. O. Lorne F. White, discharged from the army, is working in London pending arrangements for further education. Carl Geddes, R. C. N., has been transferred to the armament depot at Dartmouth. He was privileged to see Queen Elizabeth recently. David Sheehy, U. S. Navy, visited London during the anniversary services. This was the first time since February, 1942, that David and Almer had seen each other. Ron Neal had an audition and received an appointment to the Toronto Symphony Orchestra just one week after his return from England. Colin Hindley, home from Italy and other theaters of war, has received his discharge and is now working in London.

Dallas, Texas

Pastor, Clyde Hastings

At the beginning of the new church year, Pastor Clyde Hastings used for his text "Be Strong and of Good Courage." His able presentation of the challenge encouraged the Saints and inspired them to strive for greater accomplishments. The branch motto, "Let Us Arise and Build," has been selected.

A new class for young married people is being organized. Chevillé's Bible in Everyday Living has been selected for the course of study; Priest Henry E. Williams is to be the teacher.

Mrs. Chattie Everett is teaching a Sunday evening class on "How to Teach in the Church School."

A series of vesper services are being conducted by music director Merle Hallenberger. Songs, instrumental numbers, readings, and reviews of hymn writers have been the outstanding features of these services. The choir, under the direction of Brother Hallenberger, will present a Christmas cantata at 8 P. M., December 23.

One of the most enjoyable and instructive services of the year was Apostle Charles Hield's illustrated lecture on Central America. Several families of Saints from Fort Worth came to listen to Brother Hield. Other inspiring sermons have been delivered by Clyde Hastings, R. F. Moore, H. E. Davenport, W. F. Page and Henry E. Williams.

Jackie Johnson, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Johnson, was blessed by Elders W. F. Page and R. F. Moore.

Richard Lewis and Frederick McAlester, servicemen, have returned from the South Pacific. The branch welcomes Barbara Brollair, Kansas City, and Virginia Sikes, Marlin, Texas, who are making their home in Dallas now.

On October 30, the young people met at the Maxwell home for a chili supper and farewell party for Lillian Maxwell, president of the Dallas Zion's League. Lillian left soon afterward for Austin to attend the University of Texas. After the party a short business meeting was held, and it was decided that a "ten-dollar-per-plate" dinner would be given to supplement the building fund.

During the month of November the young people undertook the task of cleaning the church for its regular weekly meetings. Every Tuesday evening found Leaguers armed with brooms and dust cloths assembling at the church to put it in order before they held their meeting. Some repair work was also done by the boys under the able supervision of Henry Williams.

On November 27, a weiner roast was held at White Rock Lake. Boyd M. Brolliar PM 2/c, home on leave, was a welcome visitor at this gathering. His experiences in a naval hospital in New Caledonia were related to an appreciative audience after the roast.

The Leaguers have completed a course of study, "Know Your Church," taught by Evelyn Logan, and are now ready for another project. In order that more young people may attend reunion next summer, a campaign for selling Christmas cards to raise money is being sponsored by the League.

—Chattie Everett, reporter.

Mishawaka, Indiana

Pastor, Forest Myers

The annual business meeting was held September 12; Forest Myers was retained as pastor. Seventy H. I. Velt of Independence showed slides on Nauvoo and Erie Beach reunion the following night. On the way to their new home in Ava, Missouri, Elder and Mrs. Carl Freeman stopped at Mishawaka for a visit; Brother Freeman gave an interesting talk before he left.

A series of slides sermons have been presented by Elder Forest E. Myers on "The Apostasy," "I Will Build My Church," and "Whence Came the Red Man." Weekly prayer services are well attended, and a good spirit is always present.

The women's department, under the leadership of Lydia Myers, sponsored a church birthday party. Tables were set for the four seasons and a speaker presided over each table; a prize was given for the best speech.

On Friday, November 16, a Thanksgiving supper was given in the church basement. The following Sunday morning a special prayer meeting was held at the eleven o'clock hour under the direction of Irene Granger. Loretta Wilson was in charge of the musical service which followed.

—N. J. M., reporter.

Attleboro, Massachusetts

Pastor, Ralph L. Power

On Saturday, September 14, the church school picnic was held at Slater Park, Pawtucket, Rhode Island. In spite of heavy showers, several automobiles arrived at the park at the appointed time. About seventy Saints enjoyed the afternoon spent in playing games, and the fun and fellowship culminated in a weiner roast.

The Laurel Club (women's department) opened its fall activities on September 22, with a garden party at Pleasant Knoll, Plainville, Massachusetts. The hostesses were Ethel Coombs, and Helen Coombs. New officers were installed by Florence Sinclair district women's leader. She used the flower installation ceremony, compiled by Mrs. Charles C. Peterson of Kansas City.

Sunday, September 23, the pastor took for his subject, "The Church at School." A chart of the church school organization provided a very effective object lesson.

September 30 was observed as promotion day, starting with a special program for the church school at 10:30 A. M., and continuing through the morning worship service. The children's division, under the leadership of Mrs. Ruth Bradshaw, supervisor, sang several songs; and a poem, "The Child," was read by Lois Bradshaw. Mildred Vance, representing the young people, read an article, "Youth Can Help the Church," after which Catherine and Dorothy Moore sang a duet, "Our Best." Mrs. Elizabeth Churchill, representing the adults, gave a short talk, "What the Church School Has Meant to Me," and church school director, Ralph Spinney delivered the closing message. He then presented the promotion and attendance awards and distributed teaching material to the teachers of various classes.

After a brief class organization period the church at school became the church at worship. An anthem, "Daily Guidance," sung by the choir, preceded a splendid sermon by Pastor Ralph Power. He then delivered a charge to the officers and teachers of the branch, who stood and pledged their acceptance in unison. The charge to the parents and members of the congregation followed. This part of the service was adopted from the International Journal of Religious Education.

October 4, the Laurel Club met at the home of Mrs. Elsie Wood. Mrs. Ralph Hardy of Lexington was guest speaker. Her topic was "The Contemporary House," and various methods of planning and furnishing and decorating of rooms were presented. Samples of wallpaper and drapes lent color and a high point of interest to her talk.

October 7, a baptism preceded the Communion service, and all were happy to see John H. Danat, husband of Leona Churchill Danat, unite with the family of God. Brother Danat recently received his discharge after six years service in the Navy, where he attained the rank of Chief Petty Officer. Elder Earle Bradshaw delivered the evening sermon; his theme was "Our Christian Heritage."

October 10, the midweek fellowship service was omitted so that district missionary Albert Scherer might have the privilege of speaking.

Pastor Ralph Power gave the eleven o'clock sermon the following Sunday, and the Laurel Club had charge of the evening vesper service. John Danat received his confirmation and Deborah Lee, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold S. Cash, Jr., was blessed.

October 21 was observed as Grace-land Day; a special offering was taken at both the morning and evening services for the scholarship fund. Elder Sanford Fisher of Somerville spoke in the morning and a vesper service planned by the League was presented in the evening. A poem, "They Who Build," by Cleo Hanthorne Moon, provided a very fitting call to worship. Mildred Vance sang "Graceland," and Elsie Garlick of Providence, district director of religious education, was guest speaker. Colored movies were shown of the campus, the staff and students. Edna Chesworth and Lois Van Hoesen were among those shown; both are from Attleboro. The pictures were taken by Miriam and Ruth Chesworth while they were visiting in the west last year. Catherine and Dorothy Moore sang "Oh, Hear Ye Him," written by Dr. Cheville, at the close of the service.

The annual harvest supper was served October 25 in the church vestry. On October 27 the League sponsored a Hallowe'en party; young and old alike enjoyed the fun.

A fine spirit prevailed at the Communion service November 4. Lt. Orlin Crownover, his wife, Maurine, and daughter, Orlene, were welcome visitors. Brother Crownover assisted with the emblems and delivered the evening sermon.

The men of the branch held a supper meeting at the church November 5. Plans for organizing a men's club were made and officers were elected.

Elder Albert Scherer again spoke on Wednesday evening, his sermon taking place of the usual fellowship hour.

Sunday, November 11, district president Reed Holmes gave an illustrated lecture entitled "Green Feathers and a Serpent." Colored slides were shown of scenes in Central America; these pictures were taken by a church-sponsored research party.

The evening service, November 18, was a Bible night vesper. At the pastor's invitation, all those attending brought their Bibles, and the program consisted of responsive readings. A three-minute talk, "What the Bible Has Meant to Me," was given by Herbert Moore, Jr., and Elizabeth Churchill presented an excellent discourse on the same subject. A roll call brought out the fact that Lawrence Power had the oldest Bible in the group; the date of printing was 1803. Mrs. Laura Quirk brought a Bible that had been in her family for four generations. Other comparisons of size and print were also made. Sister Power showed colored slides depicting the story of the prodigal son, with Pastor Ralph Power as commentator. At the close of the service, Myra Heap was asked to come forward. Assisted by her brother, George, she smilingly obliged and was presented four books written in Braille, a gift of the Laurel Club, Mary E. Rogers Class, the choir, and Zion's League. One volume contained the gospel according to Matthew and Mark; another, Luke and John; a volume of Psalms; and the fourth, favorite passages from the Bible. Sister Heap thanked her contributors, and they all gathered around her as she read a few sentences from each book.

On Thursday morning a number of Saints assembled at eight-thirty for a special fellowship service in spite of the unfavorable weather. Many prayers and testimonies of gratitude were offered by those present. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Barney found two causes to rejoice: their infant daughter, Winona Lenore, the first girl in a family of seven, was blessed; and Herbert, the oldest son, received his discharge from the army air corps. Herbert served as a gunner and flew many missions over German-held territory. WAVE Lois Heap has been promoted to Ship's Cook 3/c, and Lois Van Hoesen, also of the WAVES and a former Grace-lander, has been made pharmacist's Mate 3/c. Kenneth Baldwin, recently transferred from regular naval service to the Sea Bees, was a visitor at church while home on leave.

Fairview, Montana

Pastor, W. R. Hillman

The Fairview Branch has enjoyed a consistent attendance and interesting features during the summer and fall.

A successful district conference was held here in June with Evangelist J. F. Curtis as guest speaker. The last Sunday in July will be remembered as a happy day when Mrs. Leta Wyatt, the mother of one of our young members, Marjorie Wyatt, and Mrs. W. E. Nash, of Mitchell, South Dakota, were baptized by Priest Chester L. Hillman. Brother Hillman baptized Marjorie, who was then his church school pupil, a few years ago, and had helped to interest Mrs. Nash, an aunt, in the gospel. A basket lunch was served after the baptisms; confirmation, sacrament, prayer and testimony services were held in the afternoon.

Later, Apostle D. T. Williams visited Fairview, preaching one evening. His sermon was a great source of instruction and encouragement. District President V. W. Ditton took Apostle Williams to Culbertson to call on the B. W. Finnicum family, then on to Glasgow where he preached two evenings to an appreciative audience of scattered Saints.

On Graceland College day several visitors from the Dunn Center branch, North Dakota, attended. The pastor, Judge Lester Anderson, his wife and son, and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Stacker and son were among those visiting. Brother Anderson, a graduate of Graceland, gave the morning sermon. Other visitors included Gene DeBarthe, R. N., of the Independence Sanitarium, and Alice Thomas also of Independence.

Miss DeBarthe and Mrs. Chester Hillman, both Graceland graduates, gave a short talk, as did Sister Lena Cundiff Brown who was graduated from another Christian college. Services were again held in the afternoon.

The following Sunday William DeBarthe BM2/c was a visitor at church. He is the brother of Mrs. Chester Hillman.

Richard Ditton and Melvin Jones have received discharges from the service. Kermit Jones has his discharge also but is located elsewhere. Glen Reynolds has visited his parents, wife and children since his return from Europe and expects to be discharged soon. Herman Addicott, another veteran, and wife are living in Williston, North Dakota.

Only one of ten on the service flag was injured. Glen Reynolds received minor leg injuries while advancing into Germany. Robert Cundiff, Thomas and Boyd Finnicum and James Wyatt will be returned to the states soon. Robert Ditton is still on an island in the South Pacific.

The first Sunday afternoon of each month is scheduled as the regular meeting of the woman's department and the priesthood. Since the members are scattered and some must come from long distances, this seems to be the best arrangement. The women have a study class.

Mrs. Clifton Sparks of Bremerton branch was a visitor this fall.

Pastor and Sister Hillman expect to leave soon to spend several weeks in Oklahoma and northwestern Arkansas; they will be in Independence for General Conference.

Brother Arnold Jorgensen is at home after spending several days in a hospital, being treated for frozen feet. He feels that he received a real blessing through the administration of Elders V. W. Ditton and W. R. Hillman.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Pastor, Milton D. Broadfoot

A candle light service was held at the church the evening of September 30. Nine students of the church school received certificates of promotion.

Officers have been elected, and will assume their duties in promoting the kingdom building work here the first of the church year. Elder Milton D. Broadfoot was elected pastor.

October 27 and 28 the church was a place of intensive activity, for the young people of the district were gathered there for a youth rally. The convention was well attended and was under the capable leadership of Margie Mussell; Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker.

Graceland College Day was remembered in the branch with appropriate services. Margie Mussell, Graceland alumnus, gave an impressive talk during the church school hour, using for her theme, "The Graceland Spirit." Elder Robert Brigham of Madison, Wisconsin, was the guest speaker at the eleven o'clock hour.

On November 11, the sacrament of baptism was conducted in the lower auditorium when Ruthanne Zulauf and Catherine Miller, who are junior church students, made their covenant with Christ. The service was beautifully impressive.

On November 30, a baked ham dinner, Christmas bazaar and bake sale were sponsored by the women's department. This activity proved to be a success both socially and financially.

While many good workers have moved away from this group, others have been added and some returned and the work moves forward. Many of the Milwaukee boys who were in the armed services have received discharges. The Saints are thankful that there were no casualties among them. Those still in service are Joe Thamke, who is in Japan; Don Pratt, stationed in the Philippine Islands; Dell Hunt, on Guam; Duane Couey, in the South Pacific; and Russell Dreyer, who is in England.

Speakers so far this church year have been Elders Hunt, Mussell, Broadfoot and Ford, and Priest Marlin Moe, of the local group. District president O. G. Kimball and Apostle F. Henry Edwards were visiting ministers.

Prayer services are held on Sunday evenings. These meetings have been uplifting and strengthening to all who attend. The Zion's League meets every Monday evening at the church. The women meet at the church every other Thursday evening. They have a fine program outlined for the year and have enjoyed some excellent activities so far.

San Jose, California

Pastor, Lewis H. Adams

The branch held its annual meeting for election of officers on Friday evening, November 16; in spite of rain, a large group came out to meet Apostle John W. Rushton, who conducted the meeting.

All officers for the church and of the church school were re-elected.

Written reports were received from the officers department heads, committees and every member of the priesthood, covering the work of the past year. Apostle Rushton commended the branch on the splendid showing.

Plans were approved for immediate improvements to be made to the school rooms so that classes can be handled more efficiently.

The building committee has been very active and reported a considerable sum collected for the new building fund.

Some earnest workers were lost through transfer, but with the return of some of the servicemen new life and activity should be added to the group.

Everett, Washington

Pastor, George R. Brundage

The communion service of December 2 was in charge of Pastor George Brundage. Roy Sterns, formerly a master sergeant in North Africa and Italy, now discharged, was welcomed back into the branch. The Saints are thankful and happy that so many of the servicemen are returning.

Elder Brundage and his associates have selected and purchased lots in a favorable location, 25th and Rucker Avenue, as a site for a new church home.

The Thanksgiving program, planned by Neva Willett, director of music, was presented November 18. Fern Gage played a piano prelude. The adult choir sang two beautiful anthems, "I Will Extol Thee" and "Lead Me All the Way" with Merle Foster singing the tenor solo. Mrs. James Blanchard read a selection, "Peace"; Mrs. Robert Hill played a piano solo, "Meditation" and Miss Ortha Kelley sang a Dutch Thanksgiving hymn. The junior choir, directed by Mrs. Merle Foster, sang two numbers, "A Harvest Home" and "We Thank Thee Lord"; Joanna Johnson was accompanist. A junior instrumental trio composed of Joanna Johnson, piano, John Gilberts, saxophone, and Dick Gilberts, clarinet, played "Gregorian Chant" and "Hymn of Praise." Elder Carl F. Oliver climaxed the program with a sermonette in which he reviewed the bounteous blessings of the past and pointed the way to a glorious future.

Robert Arnold Gage, Jr., was baptized and confirmed November 18 by Elder Elliott Gilberts. Bobbie is the son of Fern Gage, formerly of Spring Branch, Independence, Missouri. The weather was cold, wet and windy as a small group of Saints gathered at Silver Lake to witness the happy occasion when this eight-year-old made his entrance into the kingdom. Thoralf Bjorland lead the service at the lake side. At the confirmation service the same evening Bobbie and his mother sang a duet, "In the Garden" and a boy's chorus sang, "I Think When I Read That Sweet Story of Old." Bobbie's grandmother, Mrs. Bessie Van Dyke of Bennington Heights branch, Kansas City, Missouri, was present for the service.

Graceland College Day was observed October 22. District president Alma Johnson and Bishop Monte Lasater visited the branch on this day. Bishop Lasater spoke to the adult class of the church school and led a discussion on "Stewardships and the Gathering." Elder Johnson occupied the eleven o'clock hour, using as his theme "He Who Would Be Great in the Kingdom, Let Him Be the Servant of All." Elliott Gilberts was ordained an elder by Alma Johnson, Monte Lasater and Carl Oliver at this service. A generous amount was received for the college fund. Bishop Lasater spoke at the evening service.

Edith Davis, church school director, has held two meetings for teachers and officers of the church school recently. Harold Johnson is teaching the young people's class, using the quarterly, Comparative Religions, by Chris Hartshorn, this class has attracted several nonmembers.

Two leadership training classes are now in progress. For the study period in the women's club, Mrs. Merle Foster is teaching The Branch of Today and Tomorrow, by Dr. Roy Cheville; and Elliott Gilberts is teaching the same material in the adult class of the church school.

The Christmas program is being planned and will be in charge of Agnes Johnson and Thelma Roberts.

Oakland City, Indiana

District president, Chester Metcalf, of New Albany, spent the Thanksgiving holidays with Saints in the Francisco-Oakland City mission. Mr. and Mrs. Adron Lytle of Hazelton invited the group to their home for Thanksgiving day, and services were held there in the evening. About forty members and friends were present. Services were held again on Friday and Saturday nights and all day Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bruce, Oakland City.

The Saints are very grateful to Brother Metcalf for making these meetings possible.

—Beulah Mae Bruce, reporter.

Bemidji, Minnesota

Pastor, George Day

The Saints are now meeting at the home of Jennie Noel Jones. Several visiting ministers have delivered sermons recently. Elder Samuel Case, Duluth, district president Wesley Elvin, Minneapolis, Elder E. E. Jennings, president of Far West Stake, and his counselor, Elder Bowman, Cameron, have been among those to speak.

Sister Mamie O'Neal of Frazee talked at a combined meeting of the Bemidji and Bagley Saints. Other visitors have been Earl Petire, U. S. Army, Ralph Petire, Vivian and Carrol Fiedler, Little Fork, and A. M. Rife, Thief River Falls. Brother Rife is now at his daughter's home and is reported to be quite ill.

Denver, Colorado

Pastor, Herbert M. Scott

On the eve of Halloween the Zion's League held a carnival at the church. The group made $50.00, which will be used for the organ fund. Ed Fishburn showed movies as a part of the evening's entertainment. The typical booths were in evidence, and delicious food was served.

The women's department is collecting paper from the members of the branch to help make money for the organ fund. Five dollars has already been made by this means. The group held its monthly meeting November 1. After the usual covered dish luncheon, an excellent program was presented.

A newcomer's party, sponsored by the women's department, was held at the church. The new members who have recently moved to Denver branch were welcomed by an initiation conducted by Mrs. W. W. Hield, president of the group. Those initiated were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Coram, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Katy and daughters, Mrs. Zuelsdorf, Mrs. Alfred Humes, LaNell Ralph, Bernice Bonham, Miss Bowman, Cpl. Ray Cain, Cpl. Jim Thorson, and two nonmembers, Mr. and Mrs. Speery.

Speakers for the month were High Priest E. J. Williams, Priest John Conklin, and Pastor Herbert Scott. Apostle D. T. Williams preached both Sunday morning and evening on November 18.

The Coronet Club held its annual election of officers on November 15. The officers elected will be installed at the January meeting.

The Knit Wit Club is working diligently to build up the organ fund. Eight of the members registered for a quiz program and three won prizes of twenty-five, ten, and five dollars. The money, of course, was applied to the fund.

The following boys from the Denver branch have been discharged from military service: Arthur Radcliff, Francis Cruickshank, Howard Sheehy, Jack West, William Birkholts, Bill Radcliff, Eddie Anderson, Tom Spillman, Cliff Hughes, Leland Haslee, Willard Randol, Loyal Christensen, Ben Fleet, Jr., Glen Bruno, Raymond Roark and R. F. Hall.

The music club held its monthly meeting on Thursday evening, November 29. A member of Denver Public Library staff made a talk on music. Jane Coram and Leone Farout were hostesses for the evening.

The youth conference was held in Denver branch the last Sunday in November. Portraits of famous women of the church played by several of the Denver women was the feature of the evening service on Sunday night at the conference.

Millersburg, Illinois

Pastor, Clifford Wakeland

October 14 was home-coming day for Millersburg Saints. District President L. W. Stiegel and Elder J. C. Stiegel, both of Moline, were present. The day began with a prayer service at 9:30 A. M.; President Stiegel was in charge, assisted by Elder Lee Allen of Muscatine branch. A women's sextet from Joy sang at the eleven o'clock service. A basket dinner was served at noon. At 2 P. M. a short business session was held; Brother L. W. Stiegel gave a talk on the advantages of having a permanent reunion ground. Mrs. Charlie Grlton of Muscatine sang "Come, Sweet Comforter" preceding John Stiegel's sermon at two-thirty.

Elder J. O. Dutton, Galva, Illinois, held a week's series of meetings at Millersburg last summer. Although this is a small branch, notable progress is being made. Three new members have been added to the group: Billy Knox, Naomi Wakeland, and Deana Mae Wakeland; all three were baptized by Elder J. C. Stiegel. A number of improvements have been made on the church building and grounds the past year too.

—Mrs. Clifford Wakeland, reporter.

Leichhardt, Australia

The Mesley's Farewell

Apostle and Mrs. C. G. Mesley, mission president and women's leader, and Deacon Gordon Mesley, on the eve of their departure for America, were the guests at a farewell party held at Leichhardt. The party was arranged by the acting mission president, H. Peisker, and bishop's agent, D. A. Alberts. Elder Peisker, A. S. Frater, P. H. Henricks, and Nance Parkes, representing the mission, department of religious education, the young people and women respectively, paid tributes to the departing guests for their seven years of service in the mission and bid them God speed. A beautiful autograph book from the mission was presented to Apostle Mesley by Brother Peisker. It contained autographs and messages from church members in every branch in Australia. The cover, constructed of inlaid wood, featured a map of Australia; this work of art was produced by Patriarch C. A. Dickinson and J. Dickinson in their factory. A fan of one pound notes decorated the first page of the book. Sister Mesley received a floral tribute from the women. Balmain branch ladies choir, Elsa and Joyce Taylor, and Gordon Mesley enriched this memorable gathering with vocal and instrumental selections.

The following Sunday afternoon a farewell Communion service was arranged by Elder Peisker; assisting him were high priests E. Kelsey, S. Jacka, C. H. Davies, and W. J. Swain. At the evening service Apostle Mesley preached what may be his final sermon in Australia. In his remarks he charged the 1,200 members of the southern district of New South Wales to be missionary-minded and rise above destructive trivialities. He visioned present needs being met in the future with three-unit church buildings, an expanded religious educational program requiring a full time director, and a church college. High Priest D. Alberts assisted. The choir sang two numbers, "The Holy City" and "Pilgrim of the Night." Elsa Davies, vocalist, sang "A Parting Prayer."

Sperry, Oklahoma

Pastor, W. P. Rumsey

The annual election of church officers was held September 16; W. P. Rumsey was retained as pastor and Joe Faulk was elected church school supervisor.

Elders Glen Johnson and Warren Chelline held a two weeks' series of meetings in October which were well supported in spite of disagreeable weather. Six were baptized and many others became interested in the work as a result of these meetings.

The young people have reorganized and are now under the able leadership of Brother and Sister Howard. The junior group is centering its attention on learning to sing, and to read the Bible.

The women's department elected new officers in October with Ona Rumsey as president. This group has busied itself with quilting and making doughnuts. December 6 a doughnut-chili supper and bazaar were sponsored by the women.

Numerous repairs were made on the Sperry church this summer and others will be made as soon as labor and material become more plentiful.

High lights of recent months were the district conference held in Tulsa November 17 and 18, and Apostle Charles Hield's illustrated lectures on Central America.

The young people are making commendable progress in their musical endeavors under the direction of Jessie Howard. Many are taking vocal lessons and learning to direct, while others are organizing choral groups and studying piano.

Sperry Saints are especially thankful that their pastor, W. P. Rumsey, has been restored to health and is able to continue his work.

—Bertha Watkins, reporter.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

Pastor, A. N. Barnes

Pastor A. N. Barnes presided over the November Communion service assisted by J. L. Barlow and Hildred Thomas. A special number, "I Can Trust," was sung by the choir; Dorothy Williams, alto, sang the solo part.

Dick Williams, recently returned from overseas duty, has received his discharge.

A "prisoner of war" program was presented at the school November 7; it was sponsored by the churches of Escatawpa. Sister Pearl Allen, women's leader, was chairman, and Pastor Barnes offered the invocation. The guests were boys from East Jackson County, Mississippi.

Mrs. A. N. Barnes and Mrs. Albert Brentz were hostesses at the November women's luncheon. Irene Williams and Mable Davis sang several songs, and Dick Williams entertained the group with his electric guitar. The women's department sponsored a chicken-gumbo supper in November.

On November 25, the Zion's League presented a Thanksgiving play. Special music was provided by the choir, and Margaret Ann and Mary Jo Davis. Daniel McQueen was the speaker.

—Mildred Thomas, reporter.

The Slash, Manitoulin Island Ontario

Pastor, Harvey Sagle

The Saints held their annual business meeting on September 27 with Pastor Harvey Sagle in charge. The election brought very few changes of officers, with Brother Sagle remaining as leader of the branch and Deacon William McCulligh as church school director.

The Leaguers, with the help of their sponsor, Stewart Blue, gave a Halloween party October 31, and held their first prayer service of the year on November 16. Priest W. Leeson was in charge of the meeting.

The annual fowl supper, held October 12, was a real success; proceeds for the evening totaled $124.75.

The only visiting minister to speak on the Island during the year was Seventy George Njeim. His sermons were inspiring and greatly appreciated.

Pastor Sagle, who has been ill much of the past year, is now on the road to recovery. He is very grateful to those friends who have written him; their letters of comfort and consolation have meant a great deal to him during his illness and the death of his son, Earnest, who was killed in service.

—Mary McCulligh, reporter.

Bremerton, Washington

Pastor, A. W. Lundeen

The following district officers visited the Bremerton branch on November 4: Alma Johnson, district president; A. C. Martin, district evangelist; and Ken Shaeffer, district supervisor of religious education. Lester L. Bryant was ordained a deacon at the morning service by A. C. Martin and Alma Johnson. Brother Johnson acted as spokesman for the ordination. Earlita Rhoades, former district leader of Zion's League, also visited the branch on November 4.

A. C. Martin's brief preordination talk on November 4, proving the fallacy of leaving out, and the necessity of leaving in, all the priesthood as set in the church by Christ, was not only powerful and excellently presented, but absolutely irrefutable.

Ken Shaeffer spoke in the afternoon to the branch church school teachers. Some suggested points for improvement were:

1. Create a school atmosphere.
2. Private classrooms.
3. Qualified teachers and substitute teachers.
4. Remembrance cards for the sick and absent.
5. Paid advertisement in local paper.
6. Church school director should not teach class.
7. Be doers as well as expounders of the word.
8. More concentration and less confusion in the church school classes.

Alma Johnson counseled with the priesthood in the afternoon of November 4. He said that the priesthood is the framework of the church, if it fails the church fails. He advised the priesthood to study God's creation; to study human beings and how they react, and he said that the responsibility of teaching rests upon the priesthood. Both Brother Johnson and Brother Schaeffer stressed the good life as a form of teaching the gospel as well as academic instruction.

Alma Johnson also delivered the sermon in the evening of November 4. His text was "Ministering to Latter Day Saints." Some familiar expressions were:

"The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the strong. The gospel is to be preached by the simple to the simple. God speaks to men in all ages."

Visitors to the Bremerton branch on November 11, included Elder Ray Sowers, young people's supervisor from Tacoma, Washington, and Eral Denton, U. S. Navy, Beardstown, Illinois. Visitors at the branch on November 18 were Earl King, U. S. Navy, Galesburg, Illinois, and Miss Betty Evans of Port Orchard, Washington.

The Bremerton Zion's League was host to the Seattle and Tacoma Leagues at a mixer on November 10 and 11. There were thirty-seven present. Saturday evening was spent in recreation; a party was held in the church basement at which games, refreshments, and "each other" were the main attractions. Sunday morning an early morning prayer meeting was held, followed by a brief business meeting centering around the League's program for the year. Lunch was served at 12 o'clock at the church, and the afternoon was spent at the home of branch young people's supervisor, Vera Westgren.

Pastor A. W. Lundeen, in his eleven o'clock sermon on November 18, said that ten years ago the Bremerton schools were teaching the children that there was no God. Today these same schools are telling the children there is a God. Time, it is said, relieves the foolish from their sorrow, but wisdom relieves the wise.

—Lester L. Bryant, reporter.

McGregor, Michigan

Pastor, Alma Campbell

Elder Theil Bush, pastor of Flint, Michigan, preached at the eleven o'clock service on September 15. His sermon was an outstandingly fine one and was greatly appreciated. Others to occupy the pulpit in the past few months have been: Elder Earl Deem, Sandusky; Brother Gilbert Booth, and Elder Henry Shaeffer, Independence, Missouri. Elder Shaeffer was a particularly welcome visitor; his many years of service in McGregor have not been forgotten.

A business meeting for the election of officers was held in September and Elder Alma Campbell was retained as pastor. John Smith was chosen as librarian and each family was asked to donate enough money to purchase one new book. These books will be presented and dedicated at Christmas.

A confirmation service was held September 22. Wyman Rich, who was baptized at the close of the Cash reunion, was confirmed by Elders John Booth and Trayton Rich. Preceding the sermon by Elder Booth, Jean Smith sang "Living for Jesus"; Iris Boltzer and Marian Campbell also sang a duet.

On October 19 Elder Booth presented an illustrated lecture, "The History of Our Church," after which refreshments were served in the church basement to those attending.

The young people held a Hallowe'en party October 31, which was supervised by their leader, Herbert McFarlane.

The women are meeting twice a month with their new leader, Mamie Booth. They have a study as well as a social hour.

—Marian Campbell, reporter.

Longview-Kelso, Washington

Pastor, Milton Becker

The Longview-Kelso branch met in September for its annual election of officers. Milton Becker was sustained as pastor. The Saints are making final plans for a church building, for which there has long been a crying need.

Many servicemen are returning to civilian life. Joseph Whiting and Emmet Masser have both received their discharges. Willard Becker was a recent visitor; he has been discharged from the air force and is now resuming his studies at Iowa State College. A gold star hangs in the window of Mr. and Mrs. Whiting, Longview; their son, Sgt. Robert K. Whiting, was killed April 16 in Germany while serving with the 93rd armored division.

Apostle McConley was a welcome guest speaker in September. He related some of his experiences in visiting with servicemen while in Hawaii. He and Mrs. McConley were hosts to several boys from the Longview-Kelso congregation.

—Marjorie Whiting, reporter.

Low Banks, Ontario

Pastor Clarence MacDonald

Home-coming services were held September 23 at the church. District President Bavington and Elders Walson, Fligg, Shafer and Dayton were present. The first service of the day was a prayer meeting at which Elder Bavington presided. Brother Dayton gave the home-coming sermon, assisted by Elder Shafer. Following the service, a chicken dinner was served by the women's department.

Several members of the Low Banks congregation attended the conference held in Toronto. Elder John Shields was a guest speaker after the conference; his many friends were happy to hear him, as he was the first missionary to Low Banks and is responsible for having organized the branch.

—Mrs. H. J. Mena, reporter.

BULLETIN BOARD

London District Conference

The London district conference will be held January 20 at London, Ontario. The conference will have two purposes: the election of delegates for general conference, and the consideration of a recommendation from President Smith and Apostle Gleazer that the London district join the Chatham district in a general church reunion at Erie Beach. Apostle E. J. Gleazer will be present.

Des Moines District Gathering

The Saints of Des Moines district will hold their annual financial observance day at Des Moines, January 13. President Frederick M. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp are to be present as special speakers. Daily schedule will include a 9:30 prayer meeting, financial service at 10:45, a sermon by Bishop DeLapp at 2:30, a forum meeting at 6:30, and a sermon by President Smith at 7:30. Basket lunches will be served for both the noon and evening meals.

The priesthood of the district will hold a banquet on Saturday evening, January 12; the ladies are also invited. President Smith and Bishop De Lapp will be present for the banquet. Cost per plate is eighty-five cents; reservations may be made with Stephen Robinson not later than January 9.

Those desiring inventory statement blanks may send their request to:

Stephen Robinson
Bishop, Des Moines District
1206 Southern Surety Building
Des Moines 9, Iowa

Southern Wisconsin Youth Rally

On October 27 and 28, the young people of southern Wisconsin met in Milwaukee for a youth rally; their theme was "Headlines for Living." A banquet was held on the evening of October 27, with Edmund Ford acting as toastmaster and Marabeth Ford as song leader. The introductory speech, "Advancing with Christ Through Clean Living," was given by Edith Griswold; district president O. G. Kimball developed it by speaking on, "Advancing Through Trust in God," and Apostle F. Henry Edwards gave the final talk, "Advancing Through Meeting Christ's Challenge."

At 8:30 A. M., Sunday morning, the young people assembled for a youth fellowship service which was conducted by Apostle Edwards and President Kimball. Following this service, a church school worship was held with "Accepting Limitations" as the theme. Marjorie Mussell, district young people's leader, was in charge; at the end of the hour, Cyril Moffett led an interesting and instructive discussion on essential Christian characteristics.

Apostle Edwards delivered the morning sermon, urging the young people to accept Christ's challenge and "lay hold on eternal life." Lois Carpenter's solo, "The Comforter," added much to the beauty of the service.

The closing feature of the rally was an open forum conducted Sunday afternoon by Brother Edwards. All those attending were enthusiastic about the results of the two-day meeting. Much of the success of the rally was due to the gracious hospitality of the Milwaukee branch.

Our Departed Ones

ANWAY.—George, died December 12, at Independence, Missouri, as a result of complications caused by a cerebral hemorrhage. He was born October 29, 1897, in Akron, Iowa, and moved to Lamoni when he was fourteen. He was a graduate of the class of 1917 and entered Graceland College the same year. He was a soldier in the first World War, and after the armistice, returned to Lamoni to finish his education. On July 24, 1920, he was married to Marjorie Gunsolley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley of Lamoni. To this union was born one daughter, Carol Lee, who, with her mother, is left to mourn his passing.

George Anway joined the Reorganized Church as a child and remained a devoted member until his death. He was recently elected president of the Independence Men's Club, and has always been a leader in the field of music.

Besides his wife and daughter, those surviving are his mother, Mrs. Catherine Peters, Independence; one sister, Mrs. Leila Burgess, Santa Monica, California; four brothers, Paul E. and Joseph H., both of Independence; Harold W., of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and Mark E., of Lamoni, Iowa. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church Saturday afternoon in charge of R. V. Hopkins. Prayer was offered by Blair McClain, pastor of the Southside church. The sermon was delivered by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, and burial was at Mound Grove cemetery.

JOY.—Charles W., was born December 26, 1876, at Altoona, Iowa, and died November 5. He was married to Gertrude Harris in 1923 and then moved to Rich Hill, Missouri, where he lived the rest of his life. On September 15, 1928, he joined the Reorganized Church; for many years he gave his services to the Saints of Rich Hill as church custodian.

He is survived by his wife, two step-daughters: Helen Paulsreed, St. Paul, Minnesota, and Glatha Stavos, Minneapolis, Minnesota; a brother, J. F. Joy, Independence, Kansas; a nephew, Charles H. Joy of the navy; and a niece, Mrs. Blanche Morris, Rich Hill. He also leaves four grandchildren and four great grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elders Joseph F. Ruchaber and John Deller. Interment was at Mound Grove cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

BURT.—Margaret Estes, was born near Laingsburg, Michigan, April 11, 1870. She married George W. Burt, and in December 1906, they moved to Beaverton, Michigan, where Mr. Burt preceded her in death. In 1894, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member throughout her life.

She is survived by six children: Thomas J., Spring Lake, Michigan; Ernest N., Onaway, Michigan; Mrs. E. Crich, Ferndale, Michigan; George E., Fort Wayne, Indiana; Mrs. A. W. Fauver, Fort Wayne, Indiana; and Floyd, Beaverton. She also leaves three sisters: Mrs. Cora Harris, Perry, Michigan; Mrs. James Carr, Lansing, Michigan; and Mrs. Adeline Cornell, Flint, Michigan; three brothers: Andrew and Henry Estes, Perry, Michigan; and Bert Estes, Ferndale, Michigan; twelve grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

BARNETT.—Etta L., daughter of Daniel Dull and Mary Jane Miller, was born near Eddyville, Iowa, September 6, 1862, and passed away December 14 in Independence. She was married to John T. Barnett on October 9, 1879; to this union thirteen children were born. Her husband and one daughter, Gladys, preceded her in death. She and her companion were baptized into the Reorganized Church on December 4, 1892, by Mark H. Forscutt. All of her children were also baptized into the church.

She leaves seven daughters: Ettie Jane Barnett, Nettie Mary Barnett, Mrs. Vinne Higdon and Mrs. Ina Brown, all of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Myrtle Martin, Collins, Missouri; Mrs. Elsie Wombles, Kit Carson, Colorado; and Mrs. Grace Cooper, Princeton, Kansas; five sons: Orville T., Dike, Iowa; James F., Colony, Kansas; Harry C., Lamoni, Iowa; J. Leslie, Leon, Iowa; and Lacey L., Los Angeles, California. One brother, Harry C. Miller, Colfax, Iowa; thirty-five grandchildren, nine of whom have served in the armed forces; forty-six great grandchildren; and two great, great grandchildren, also survive.

Funeral services were held in the H. W. Stahl Chapel in Independence. Elders Glaude Smith and Evan Fry were in charge.

FISH.—Ethel Lemyra, was born August 12, 1881, and departed this life November 24, 1945 at Lakeside Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri. She joined the Reorganized Church in 1912.

LETTERS

Letter of Appreciation

I would like Sister Heller to know how I have been helped by her letter which appeared in the October 27 Herald. I read it over and over, finding new inspiration each time I read it. Nonmember friends have read it too and said that they enjoyed it.

I am a shut-in; much of the time I am away from home and church friends. Sometimes I feel that I am slowly drifting away from God too. It was at a time like this that I received the Herald containing Sister Heller's letter. It filled me with new faith, new courage and the desire to keep praying and trying.

I hope we shall have many more such letters; they are a good substitute for the prayer meeting we can't attend.

A Review of Far West Reunion

The following was given at a branch review of the reunion, and sent to the Herald by Loyd Adams, pastor of the Cameron church, with special permission of the author.

Reunion was a wonderful experience, but putting into words the general and lasting impression it had on me is a bit difficult.

Like many others, I found it hard to shut the door to the busy world and center all my thoughts on the program God had for us. Though I camped and shared in all the activities, I felt numb, to a degree, to the richness of our blessings. I'm sure it was my own personal lack of preparation that kept me from appreciating our reunion to the fullest extent.

Far West, I believe, has the largest reunion in the vicinity of the stakes and Zion. The rendezvous we've held with God have indeed hallowed that shady grove. Quite fittingly, while the spirit of peace was reigning so abundantly there, Almighty God deemed it wise that the second World War should come to a close. Truly we could not have met under more inspiring circumstances.

Perhaps it's just that I am getting older, nevertheless, this has been the first year that I've been satisfied to give up young people's prayer meeting for a combined service of youth and adults. Maybe it was selfishness that brought us together; it seemed both age groups felt they'd miss something if they held separate meetings. All the prayer services were rich sources of inspiration.

The Zion's League classes that I attended on "Love, Courtship, and Marriage" were very inspiring, too. I'm sure they will be a help to me in shaping my standards of conduct, in controlling my emotions, and in choosing my friends. When I realized what a small percentage of our youth were privileged to attend such classes, I was sorry for them and felt that this, in part, was the reason for so few consecrated homes. Though our leaders did not begin with "Thus saith the Spirit," we were able to recognize the great wisdom that was manifest in their teaching. Our interest was so entirely bound up in what the speakers were sharing with us that we actually begged them not to worry about the time they spent after the lunch bell rang. We rather forgot our appetites for physical food, so great was our hunger to know more about living profitable lives.

Here I would like to say a bit about the routine at the "cookshack." There seemed to be work for all and hardships for none . . . and plenty of good food. I think the idea of letting the respective branches have the responsibility on particular days is a fine one.

The fellowship enjoyed by the campers is a by-product of reunions that comes close to measuring up to the benefits derived from the formal services. It's little things like sharing an icebox with five other families, lending a tin cup for your neighbor's guest, and performing humble services for a fellow camper that teach one how rich life can be when he shares.

Recreation and handcraft kept minds and bodies active in the afternoons. Many hours were spent in exchanging experiences, telling the latest news of mutual friends and visiting with other campers.

Evening always climaxed the day for me, and I'm sure it did for everyone else. At the close of day, Apostle Oakman would pour the wisdom of the ages into our minds and challenge us with his keen vision of the future. It was good to listen to one with such a broad understanding of life. He seemed conscious of our ambitious desires and pointed out several specific activities that would lead us to an enlarged vision and make for definite progress in our stake. He stressed that we should give a definite amount of time to study; that we should remember to keep the Sabbath holy; that our family and secret prayer and worship should be enlarged; and that more careful regard should be given to obedience to the law as outlined in the scriptures. Apostle Oakman said that we would not be able to comprehend the blessings in store for us unless we gave heed to the small things that we were admonished to do.

If the spirit of prophecy burns within us and keeps us crying for spiritual food, we can have a pentecost in our individual branches each time we meet in God's house. We must not relax our efforts between now and next reunion; rather we should keep building on the experiences we've already been permitted to have.

The song fests and campfire services sealed each perfect day and sent us off to bed with plans for another day in which to learn more of God. Truly, it was the Spirit of God that burned within our hearts and melted them into a singleness of purpose. Reunion days without the campfire services would have been a seam without a knot. Those blest moments gave our minds the chance to digest and assimilate the many experiences of each day and pack them away with previously learned knowledge. The sacredness in our parting was proof that God had touched our lives.

Yes, there are these things and many more that I shall not forget about Far West Reunion 1945. Camping is a real zion experience, for though the bed may be a bit harder than usual, and sleeping hours fewer, the joy of being a part of something bigger than yourself makes you awake with an exuberant desire to be up and singing, and bedtime finds you still so full of energy that life seems much too short to waste any time sleeping. It was truly a wonderful experience.

I want Life

And all that God breathed into the word
When He created the universe.

To know happiness, tears, joy, despair,
And the quivering half-notes between.
To know dawn, mid-day, and sunset years,
And a singing farewell.

I want Life

And all that God breathed into the word
When He created the universe.

"Your Church Bookstore"

* YOUNG PEOPLE will be interested in the first page of notes under the heading, "Zion's League Exchange," appearing in this issue. The Independence League is making a friendly effort to trade thoughts, ideas, and letters with church young people in the congregations everywhere. This is the first note of a return of the theme, "Accent on Youth," which we missed so much during the war. As we look over our list of contributors, we observe that many of them had their start in writing and church work as young people, and now have become leaders.

* NEVER treat your hopes lightly, nor dismiss your ambitions without a trial. It is probable that you have the stuff of which success can be made. But remember that what you have is raw material. Success is something that only you can make for yourself.

* MANY A LEADER began by timidly accepting a job he was sure he couldn't do. Nobody was as surprised as he when it was found that he could. Nobody less surprised than the person of faith who asked him.

* CAPITAL AND LABOR

Some wit on the "Washington Star" says, "Capital is the money some other duffer has. Labor is the struggle to separate him from it." In older times, capital called in the government to help prevent the separation. Nowadays, labor calls in the government to help expedite it.

* AFTER THOUGHT

Arriving too late for publication in our Christmas issue is a poem reflecting a young person's reaction to the world's celebration of Christmas this year. It is by Biloine Whiting, daughter of Evangelist Ray Whiting. She is now a student at Graceland College.

Two thousand years with the Babe in the manger,
Millions of churches shouting with Cain,
Anthems bombarding the shut gates of heaven,
And Christmas trees thriving on blood of the slain.
Two thousand years, and Christ yet an infant,
Smothered with blankets of craft and deceit,
Mankind is dooming itself to destruction,
But still keeps its Saviour helpless, asleep.

* KIND WORDS

Our loveliest and most gracious customer wrote an appreciative message on her Christmas card. "Dear People," she began. Who wouldn't be thrilled to be addressed like that?

"Dear People: We just have to say thanks for all the help we have received from you. The "Herald" gets better all the time, as well as the other materials and books. Thanks for the service you render. We are hoping 1946 will hold only health and happiness for you and all, and that next year finds more advancement still and a larger circle of friends the world over.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

Concerning Holiday Greetings

So many Christmas cards and letters of greeting came to Sister Smith and me that we cannot acknowledge them individually. We take this way to thank all those who so kindly remembered us. Cards and letters came from many parts of the United States and Canada and from overseas. Among the latter was a card from Austria from our young friend John W. Wight—Jack Wight, as we have always known him, grandson of an older friend of years gone by, Apostle John W. Wight.

I always marvel at the great variety of Christmas and New Year cards received—among so many—seldom two alike. There were also a number of personally designed cards; for example, one showing an interior view of the home of Brother and Sister C. Ed Miller. Those two worthies (very worthy) are shown side by side with a tall grandfather clock, and the card bears these words, "Greetings from Three Old Timers." May all three of these old-timers continue with us for many years—and keep good hours. Unlike the old clock, Brother Miller cannot be tied down to one spot very long at one time.

Emperor Hirohito had a strange, a very strange holiday greeting for his people. He told them bluntly that he is no God—a fact that seemed obvious enough to all but the Japanese. He admonished them to abandon the ancient myths that their emperor is a god and that they are a very superior people.

It was a timely message to ponder at the opening of a new year. When McArthur fled from the Philippines at the command of the President, to escape the Japanese invaders, he left the grim promise, "I shall return." He more than kept that promise. When this sometimes melodramatic soldier made promises he usually did keep them. Now having overthrown a pseudo god he may have made way for Christianity to come into Japan—but it must come borne by Christian men, themselves free from every form of racial prejudice and themselves having no superior race complexes. The "superior races" of yesterday are prostrate in the ruins of their own empires. The children of "superior races" of ten centuries ago live miserably among the ruins of past grandeur. The "superior races" of today will perish also, excepting they learn to walk in the paths of peace and good will and justice toward all men. Long ago a carpenter, no doubt accustomed to making measurements in his trade, coming to his spiritual ministry, made service the measurement of man.

After all the centuries, at the Christmas season and at the turn of the year, his message is still vital news to the world. Certainly no less so is it to the church. While we cheer on the "Big Three" and all conscientious spokesmen from all nations that seek peace; shall not we all as members of the Church of Jesus Christ, from the chief quorums to the teachers and deacons, and from the humblest to the best known of the membership, strive much more diligently than heretofore to live together and work together in the ways of peace.

"Be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you."—II Corinthians 13:11.

Elbert A. Smith.

A Few Small Thoughts

The rush and excitement of the holiday season are over, and we are traveling the long, quiet stretches of January. There was the pleasure of Christmas giving and entertainment, the power and glory of The Messiah, the noisy, pagan celebration of New Year's eve. And now, peace and quiet. We can all stand a lot of that. Besides, we are still trying to relieve minds and nerves of the long strain of the war. We descend to the bread-and-butter level of daily life. The mind cautiously avoids such heavy subjects as the atomic bomb, international tensions, and world reconstruction. Later, when human forces awaken again, we can deal with greater things. Right now, people like to select a few small thoughts to work on.

Report to a Lady

This is a report to a lady. It is a report on a stray dog in which, one bitterly cold December day, she was gracious enough to take an interest. She came to our office, somewhat agitated, and informed us that there was a dog, dying of starvation on the post-office steps. Would we call the police and ask them to remove it? Right away? And make it emphatic please?

Troubled thoughts—phone the police?—but they don't always take the civilian viewpoint on such affairs—they say things like, "Is it your dog? . . . Have you told the postmaster? . . . He didn't call us. . . . What did you do to the dog?" Why call them, anyway? It would be easier to—well, let's go see the dog first. (Continued on page 11.)

"Children of the Covenant"

Another book comes from a "Mormon" writer, Richard Scowcroft. It is fiction, and based on home life conditions among the Mormons in Utah. The undersigned found it rather tedious and tiresome reading.

Obviously the author desires to register "growing pains" of the younger Mormon generation, a discontent with the restraints of the simon pure or sacrosanct. The Christian Century, November 28, 1945, says, among other things:

The novel will not be popular among the Latter Day Saints. It does not attack their faith and it reports no scandals, but it depicts a crude and provincial culture and a religious system struggling with tragic importance against the infiltration of alien influence. While young Burton is the pivotal figure, the dominating character is his mother—only she failed to dominate Burton. She is the one most unswervingly faithful to the Mormon tradition. She goes down with colors flying, but she goes down. It must not be understood that Mr. Scowcroft was writing a tract either for or against Mormonism. His theme is more personal; it is the case of a youth intellectually naive, his faith in his inherited religion unshaken because unquestioned, but resenting both its restrictive mores and its failure to maintain its former prestige in the face of the "gentile" invasion.

Writer Scowcroft's theory is suggested in the very opening paragraphs, where he says:

Mormon sons knew that they were different from other men's sons, different and better. Not only did they have salvation within their grasp, but they could run and not be weary, they could walk and not faint. The prophet Joseph had told them, not as command but as a word of wisdom, that it were better to turn their backs on the stimulants coffee and tea and alcohol; that tobacco was to be used only to heal sick cattle; and that any excess in food or drink was not wise. Joseph's Word of Wisdom had been transformed, by a people set apart, into a command which would further set them apart. Alcohol became poison; tobacco was glorified into one of the chiefest of evils. And so the Mormon sons neither smoked nor drank. Instead of tea, they

Food Shortages in Germany

OUR READERS doubtless have seen comments in regard to the food situation in Germany, the secular press frequently saying that food was not so scarce in Germany as in other countries because of the consistency with which the German Army had depleted food stuffs in countries where they were, so that the opinion has gathered force that food was more plentiful in Germany than other places, which may be true. But the following paragraph clipped from the London Spectator for October 12 gives pause for thought, in which paragraph it is suggested that the enforced migration of Germans from Poland and Czechoslovakia has thrown strain on food supplies in British and American areas which may prove as serious as hunger in other places.

The evil that was done by the enforced migration of millions of Germans from Poland and Czechoslovakia cannot be undone, but quick and drastic measures will be necessary if its consequences in starvation, demoralization, and spreading disease are to stop short of a European disaster. In a meeting at the Conway Hall last Monday it was urged that in the first place further expulsions from Poland and Czechoslovakia must cease, and secondly that a common policy must be worked out to provide for the housing and feeding in the British and American zones of the refugees now wandering homeless in the Russian zone. In regard to the second point, it has in fact been decided to organize a mass-migration of 2,000,000 German refugees into the British zone, beginning this month, and of a similar number into the American zone. This transfer of starving and disease-ridden people will be a formidable task, and will call for the provision of more food in the British and American zones. It must be accomplished if a breakdown on a colossal scale is to be avoided. Sir Arthur Salter maintains that the task of finding and transporting the food is not impossible if other countries co-operate to the full with Great Britain. But a resolution adopted at the Conway Hall, proposing the voluntary surrender of coupons by persons in this country, is a gesture rather than a solution of the problem, and if carried out on a large scale would merely add this country to those that are suffering from malnutrition. This is a matter which demands and can only be dealt with by Governmental organization.

sipped hot water with a little milk and sugar.

The Word of Wisdom, in his opinion, is not of the dignity of the decalogue, in which he is rather sustained by the language of the revelation.

I. A. Smith.

FROM BROTHER DANIEL T. WILLIAMS
We have received copy of letter which Brother Harry S. Fry, who is acting as pastor to isolated Saints of the Portland District, is sending to various people to whom he is trying to minister.

He comments on the conditions of the world existing at the close of the year and gives thanks to our Heavenly Father that things are as well as they are in our own country.

He mentions the message of the Lord to Jared's brother when he spoke of land that is chosen above all the lands of the earth. Brother Fry feels sure that some day our Zion will be in this land. He heartily wishes that the people all over the earth can catch the significance of the angelic voices as they sang, "Glory to God in the highest." He expresses thanks that the guns of battle are silent and prays that God may richly bless his people and keep them safely under his Almighty arm.

He closes his letter by saying:

And the message of the Christ-child shall be to you and to all people, and that God shall wipe away all tears and there shall be no more sorrow and suffering. These are my thoughts, wishes and prayer for you, each of you, this Christmas season.

Clothing Needed By Members in Norway

RECENTLY the Bishopric wrote to A. W. Lundstrom, their representative in Norway regarding the matter of clothing.

Brother Lundstrom had contacted the various brethren in Norway in regard to the clothing needed and as a result he sent to the Presiding Bishopric a list of our people there who are in need of clothing, giving the type of clothing needed and the sizes. This list is rather too extensive to publish but those who have desired to send clothing to our needy ones in Norway had better contact the Presiding Bishop so as to learn something of the sizes and kind of clothing needed.

The letter from Brother Lundstrom includes garments such as white collars, underwear, dresses, stockings, aprons, knitting material, capes, woolen golf jackets, rain coats, shoes, handkerchiefs, socks, working clothes, trousers, sweaters, cloth for making garments, rubbers for ladies, working shirts, slippers, overalls, children's underwear of various kinds, rubber boots, slickers.

We are quite sure that the Saints of Norway, as well as Brother Lundstrom, will be very grateful for clothing which is sent.

Let Nothing Separate You

A sermon delivered Sunday morning, December 9, at the Liberty Street Church, Independence, Missouri.

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

MANY TIMES it has been brought to our attention that men under appointment, who are devoting their entire time to the work of the church seem to be regarded with more respect than those who serve us as pastors and district presidents, who are not under full-time appointment. We believe this to be a mistake. It seems that when the Lord brought this work forth and provided for our ministerial organization as we have it, he intended there should be a great many men in business and in the affairs of labor, called to the ministry, equal in calling, so far as their priesthood is concerned, but not required to devote their entire time to the preaching of the Word and the administration of the ordinances.

You will notice that I made a distinction there; I did it on purpose. If we properly understand the covenant we made with the Master in the waters of baptism, we are all called to devote our entire time to the building of the Kingdom; therefore, the Almighty has made it clear that those of us who engage in the affairs of labor or business or the various professions, who thus engage with an eye single to the glory of God, are equal in his sight. In fact, in the presence of some of my brethren who have been under full-time appointment, and still are, I am going to risk saying that, as far as I am concerned, I feel just a little more obligated to the men of business and labor who support themselves and their families, and yet consecrate a portion of their time to ministering to congregations and districts. Without them, I do not know just what we would do, as a church.

THE SUBJECT we would like to consider this morning has been stimulated by the reading of section 122 of the Doctrine and Covenants. I invite your attention to the sixteenth and seventeenth verses.

And now I say unto you mine elders, apostles and high priests of my church, Continue ye in the ministry unto which you have been called; and if ye can not fully agree on all the points of the law, be patient and be not contentious; so far as you can agree work together without heat, confusion, or malice. Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege, and shall be blessed of me.

Yea, verily, thus saith the Lord, unto the elders of the church; Continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end. Amen.

I wish to use as a subject this morning, the following (it is rather lengthy):

Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called.

I am sure the history of this revelation is known to most of you. It was given by the late Joseph Smith, and there are those present with us this morning who served during the time of his presidency, and know something of the love manifested in the administrations of this just man. You may recall that he served this church as its Prophet for fifty years. He was not only respected by the church, but I think one of the highest tributes that could be paid any man was paid to him by the editorial in the Journal-Post in 1914 when he passed away. The editorial writer called attention to the fact that this man's life revealed his religion, and this church was honored because of his life.

When this revelation was given, there were a number of questions in the minds of the ministry (and I believe rightfully so) as to their respective duties and responsibilities. There was some confusion in their attempt to determine their respective callings and their responsibilities one to another. It seemed that considerable heat had been generated. In the opening passages of this revelation you will find recorded just what the Lord thought of this situation. Joseph Smith states:

I was, on the fifteenth day of the fourth month, of the year 1894, in fasting and prayer before the Lord, and being commanded of the Spirit, I arose from my praying and wrote:

Thus saith the Spirit unto the elders and the church:

My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.

It is the duty of the twelve to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof, as is directed in the scriptures which ye have received. They are called and set apart to this duty; and are to travel and preach, under the direction and counsel of the presidency.

I do not believe that the Almighty was concerned too much over the fact that these servants had not yet learned fully their duties. Neither do I believe that the majority of these men were ambitious for office or for power. For anyone who takes his calling seriously wants to know what is expected from him, what are his responsibilities, what are his rights, how far shall he be justified in going to exercise under these rights. Responsibility has to rest some place, and if ministers were not concerned in exercising their various responsibilities, the chances are they would not be concerned in the work whereunto they have been called.

But it does seem that what displeased the Lord was the feeling engendered. His servants had been harsh one with the other; they were permitting their differences to separate them from each other and from the work whereunto they had been called. Now that condition would certainly concern God and the hosts of heaven. If you will remember the prayer that Jesus prayed just prior to taking his departure from his disciples, permitting himself to be taken a prisoner by the soldiers of Rome, the entire burden of that prayer was to the effect that his followers might be one, as He and the Father were one. He suggested there that in this unity there would be made manifest the power of his Messiahship. For it is the business of the Father and the Son to unify the sons and daughters of men. Jesus prayed that they might be one, "even as we are one, that the world might know that thou hast sent me."

It is a very serious condition indeed that the followers of the Lord, Jesus Christ, should ever permit themselves to be separated, one from the other, or from the work unto which they have been called; and while it is very important each of us should know the place where God intends us to occupy, while there shall come times in branches and districts, and possibly the general organization, where individuals may attempt to occupy in the place of another, where the responsibility of quorums may conflict, or at least where their authority may extend beyond one quorum into another—while all this might transpire and cause some confusion, yet in spite of this, the Lord admonished through his servant, the Prophet, that we should not permit such conditions to separate us from each other and from the work whereunto we have been called.

You may have noticed in my reading this morning, that the solution was offered by God in the sixteenth verse, wherein he said:

Continue ye in the ministry unto which you have been called; and if ye cannot fully agree on all the points of the law, be patient and be not contentious; so far as you can agree work together without heat, confusion, or malice.

That is the answer, and if we would accept that counsel, we would grow into a unity of understanding regarding the law and a full appreciation of our relationships as quorums and as individual ministers.

I WANT to make a wider application of this text this morning. I think I have already cited to you that which might be considered important enough to bring division, for I have observed strong men in this church on various sides of a controversy in this very room. I was present when we had quite a division on the part of the seventies on the revelation of 1922. I believe that even though these men differed in their approach to that document (and they discussed the law not only concerning the coming forth of a revelation, but they also discussed at that time the rights and privileges of certain leading quorums) I would like to say that with few exceptions, if any, these men were honest in their attempt to arrive at the rightful conclusion of the matter before them. I know of no law anywhere that suggests that this people should ever do away with the freedom of speech and the right to discuss the various matters that must of necessity come before us in conferences, whether they be local or general. But the Lord would have us discuss in such a manner as becometh Saints.

I have witnessed during the last ten years at least a growth upon the part of the brethren of the various quorums, and matters are now discussed without heat and without harshness; for as long as we are on this side of perfection, our understanding will not be perfect, and it will be necessary for us to attempt to reach agreements through the medium of discussion. That discussion should be the type that becometh the saints of the most high God.

In the wider application of the text, "Let nothing separate you from each other," . . . note there is no exception, "Let nothing separate you from each other and from the work whereunto you have been called." I would like to mention the fact that individuals in the body of Christ have permitted other things to separate them, other than the rights and prerogatives of various quorums. For instance, sin still continues to separate the children of God, possibly more than anything else. We must take this into account when we attempt to analyze the cost of a specific sin. It is not only what that sin does to the individual that matters—and that costs plenty—but in destroying the usefulness of the individual, it separates that individual from the brethren and from the work whereunto he has been called. That is a tremendous loss, and sometimes we overlook that loss as members of the body of Christ. That is why we should be concerned in helping the members of the church to overcome sin.

Individual sin, as it has been called, may be regarded as such in the action of that individual, but what it does to that individual in separating him from his brethren and from the work whereunto he has been called is social in nature and it costs the church, even as it costs the individual. Therefore, we can truthfully say in this regard one cannot sin unto himself alone. We should add to the price of our sinning this separation from the church.

INDIVIDUALS SAY from time to time, "In this church are all my friends; where else can I go?" I call to mind (and I have not attempted to seek for illustrations this morning) a number of persons who have permitted their sinning to separate them from the church and the work unto which they have been called; and these individuals are paying the price today, in living apart from the people they have loved and respected so much. This separation from my church and from my friends must be added to the cost of any sin.

But there are other costs of separation, and what I say can be applied to a congregation and to the church as a whole. I want to mention the ambition for office. I think we have made some improvement in this regard during the years, but there are some people who are still so ambitious to occupy office that they permit this ambition to separate them from the body and from the work unto which they have been called.

I have already mentioned the fact that one who is not concerned in his functioning is not worthy of an office, but I would like to make a distinction between a concern merely for office and a concern to magnify one's ability to discharge the duties and responsibilities of the office whereunto he has been called. We should take our calling seriously, but as Paul admonished the church so many years ago, we should use our calling to accomplish the purpose of the almighty God; but striving for honor for the sake of honor is just like striving for happiness for the sake of happiness, which will never realize the end that we have in view.

Jealousy. I am becoming old enough now where, if I cannot observe weakness and mistakes in my own life, I can at least observe weakness and mistakes in others. There are still instances of jealousy in the body of Christ; and jealousy, like cancer, will destroy its victim. When I mention "victim," I have in mind the individual who is jealous. Maybe I don't understand myself; maybe a few of us really do, but I could never see any place for jealousy within the body of Christ. If this be one body, as we have been admonished, then any success that can come to one of the brethren comes to me, for I am a member of that body. My brother's success becomes my success, and there is so much demand, so much room for activity within the body of Christ that no one is crowded out. Why should we be jealous of someone else's success?

IN THIS REGARD the church has made progress during the last twenty-five years, and for that I am very grateful this morning. But there are still individuals who could be useful in this church if they would not allow jealousy to separate them from each other and from the work whereunto they have been called; and jealousy, like sin, separates us from the body of Christ and destroys our ability to be of service.

HERE IS SOMETHING which you might think is simple. When I think of what Gomer Griffiths used to term "the little sins," I always remember a sermon he preached wherein he emphasized the danger and damage of little sins. I am going to mention misunderstandings. These may not be compared with sin or jealousy in some respects, but yet if you and I could know today from some kind of balance sheet how many people have been separated from each other and from the work whereunto they have been called, through misunderstandings, we would be amazed—we would be horrified to think of the cost of misunderstandings. It is so easy to be misunderstood; it is so easy to misunderstand.

I want to give you one illustration: A number of years ago there was a brother staying in this town who had been attending Conference. He lost a fifty dollar bill. His wife was of the opinion that he went up town to some store and exchanged the $50.00 bill, thinking it was $5.00. I rather think she was right. But in the home where he was staying the people were concerned because of the possibility that it might have been misplaced in their home. I was asked to go to the Sanitarium with this brother to administer to one of our good brothers now of the Seventy. He is one of the finest men I know. Jokingly I said to him (you might think it a poor way to prepare for an administration) but perhaps it was to take his mind off his own situation, "George, do you happen to have this man's fifty dollar bill?" He said something I have forgotten because it was just a passing statement. Almost four years ago I was riding on a train in Canada and this man came down the aisle, sat down along side of me and said: "Brother Gleazer, I have something on my mind. I want to tell you I was very much concerned when you were appointed to this field and I realized I would be responsible to you as a Seventy in your territory. For years I have felt I did not have any standing with you." I couldn't understand what he was talking about. He went on, "Something happened a few years ago that helped me. When I was called to the office of Seventy the President had you ordain me. You were about the last man I would have had participate in that ordination. In that prayer you mentioned some things I knew were divine. You asked blessings on my physical condition that you knew little or nothing about. That prayer was answered. That helped, but I still feel you and I should have an understanding."

I said, "What is the matter?" He said, "Don't you remember accusing me of being a thief?"

I said, "What?"

He said, "You accused me of being a thief." I couldn't even recall the situation. He had to bring it to my attention. Serious as the situation was, I had to laugh. I tried to explain to him. He is not a man of my own nationality and reasons differently than we reason. I tried to point out that if I had been suspicious of his honesty I would not have approached him as I did and he would not have had my confidence in his ministry. That did something to his ministry. He is one of the best men I have in my territory today but he could have permitted that misunderstanding to destroy his ministry.

Do you have any misunderstandings in your congregation? If you do, why not clear them up? They might separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called. A great deal of our trouble grows out of misunderstandings. The advice, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath," might also be applied, "Let not the sun go down upon your misunderstanding." Let's try it. The Lord has said, "Let nothing separate us from each other and from the work whereunto you have been called." Should misunderstandings be permitted to separate us from each other?

Things not necessarily bad in themselves may separate us from each other and the work whereunto we have been called. Things not necessarily bad in themselves. For example, I have known where men in our church—and you will notice I said "men"; I want you to notice the plural; most of us think in the terms of "man")—men in our church have become so interested and so active in other organizations they have actually permitted themselves to be separated from each other and from the work whereunto they have been called.

I was about to take that issue up on one occasion with a member sometime ago, but somehow I said to myself, "Who am I to bring this matter to his attention? Am I devoting my entire time to the work?" Furthermore, it must not be thought that when one is active in some other organization that he has necessarily lost sight of his interest in the church, for the very activity in which he is engaged elsewhere may be carried on with a purpose in mind of advancing the interest of the church; but there have been individuals who have been carried away by outside concerns and the church has suffered in the loss of their time and their support.

I will give you another illustration. I didn't have to pay for this one either. It really happened to me. When I was a young missionary building up the work in one of our new branches, I was trying to teach our people that they should appreciate the work of others, should have fellowship with those not of our faith, that if we were going to make converts we had to make friends. I pointed out that if one were grounded in our faith we would not have to advise him not to listen to this or that, for, if grounded in the faith, he would be able to discriminate and listen to and accept truth wherever he heard truth. One man did not like that counsel. He was quite narrow. He was upset at the time anyway. He was our organist. The next Sunday night when we were preparing to conduct our service there was no organist. I was the president of the branch and no one had told me we were going to be without an organist. We were building up a good nonmember interest in that congregation. And there was no one to play. I was upset. The following Tuesday I met this brother. He expected I would meet him and was prepared for me. With a smile on his face he reminded me that he merely took my advice and went to the Methodist church that night. I suggested to him that I still believed that men could go to other churches occasionally but they should not leave their post of duty without making provision for someone to take their place.

We must exercise our responsibilities as citizens, and in exercising them there are duties that we find it necessary to perform in other organizations, but we should keep in mind the counsel of almighty God and before engaging in these respective duties or responsibilities elsewhere we should determine within our own soul as to whether or not the carrying out of such assignments is going to separate us from each other or from the work whereunto we have been called.

HERE IS ANOTHER condition that has brought in the past separation on the part of members where the intention was good: For years our leaders have encouraged especially our young men and our young women to prepare themselves for greater service and I think the voice of the Spirit has given counsel in that regard, that in order for this work to accomplish the purpose God had in mind when it was instituted that this people should become leaders in every activity of life and hence the necessity for preparation. I have known of individuals of this church who came out of coal mines, who came from factories and work shops, who came from farms, and many at great sacrifice came to Graceland or other institutions, and who went on to higher institutions of learning; but some of these individuals, I am sorry to say, have permitted these activities, in which they engaged originally with the sole purpose of preparing themselves for greater service in the body of Christ, to separate them from each other and the work whereunto they have been called. My heart goes out to these people today, for of necessity they must have been disappointed. They cannot find elsewhere the satisfaction that was theirs as members of the body of Christ.

Thank God I speak today of the exceptions, for many individuals have gone out and made preparation and have returned to us with their ministry enriched and with an efficiency that causes them not only to be respected within the body or the church but by the people of their community. We want to be careful that in our efforts to prepare ourselves for greater service we do not withdraw from the body or church. The advice given so many years ago applies here as elsewhere: we must not separate ourselves from the body by neglecting to attend the services of the body. You cannot withdraw from the church and continue to live spiritually. So while we are preparing in the various institutions of the land, let us see to it we are still in touch with the body that brought us into spiritual life and shall continue to give us spiritual sustenance. Otherwise, if we separate ourselves from this source of life in our preparation we shall learn to think less of the church and more of ourselves. It is indeed sad to any of your leaders when they see individuals, whose sole purpose in making greater preparation in the colleges of the land was to be of service to the body, lose their faith and withdraw from this institution.

PERHAPS I shouldn't touch on the following means of separation but I am going to anyhow, and that is marriage. Did you notice I whispered that? Marriage—"Let nothing separate you from each other or from the work whereunto you have been called." It has been advocated over and over again in this church that we marry in the faith. Marrying in the faith means more than marrying some one who is a member of our church. Marrying in the faith means that we should observe the ordinance of marriage as performed by the church. You are not observing the ordinance of marriage when you are joined in marriage by a magistrate or a judge, although legally married. This is a civil service, not an ordinance. God never authorized any judge or magistrate to function at the altar. Sometimes we Latter Day Saints withdraw from the sacraments and go outside the church to have our marriages performed. But nevertheless it is also true that when we marry one who is not a member of this church there is always the possibility that we may find this new relationship interfering with our membership in this church. I say there is a possibility, for I know this—and many of you can recall that some of our finest members were nonmembers when they were married to members of our church, but they are excellent Latter Day Saints today. It is altogether likely that some of these people I have in mind would have accepted this church before their marriage if they had known anything about it. So I am not suggesting to you this morning—to those of you who have not yet made your covenant of marriage—that you must without exception marry a member of this church, but I am suggesting to you that you had better count the cost, you better be sure that this marriage is not going to "separate you from each other or the work whereunto you have been called"; for when you made that covenant with God in the waters of baptism you made it unconditionally, that what you were then and what you hoped to be would be given entirely without reserve to the bringing to pass of the Kingdom of God on the earth.

The statement made by Paul, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," might have a wider significance than some of us may think. It is possible for some people to be enrolled in this church and still be unbelievers, so when contemplating marriage with someone in this church, give a care to proving the faith of this person you are taking for a companion for life.

Some will think this is a strange doctrine; some may say, "Does anything matter but the fact that you are in love?" Yes, a thousand times, yes: What really matters is what this marriage is going to do to your relationship to God. And if you want a successful marriage, so far as you are concerned you had better give some thought as to whether this marriage is going to interfere with your relationship to God, for a marriage that does not interfere with that relationship is one that is bound to be a successful marriage.

I called to the attention of the young people in California (I wanted to wake them up) that I wouldn't marry a woman that wasn't in love with someone else more than she was with me. They woke up all right. They looked at me in amazement. They wondered what had happened to Brother Gleazer. Then their expressions changed. They put up their hands and said, "You mean in love with God." That is it exactly. You find a young man or woman more in love with God than with you, and I will guarantee you will have a successful marriage.

This admonition, "Let nothing separate you from each other or the work whereunto you are called" is of sufficient importance that we should commence to re-evaluate it again.

What did God have in mind over one hundred years ago when he sent his Son again into the world? We talk about the ministry of angels. Have you forgotten God sent his Son to the world one hundred years ago to bring this church forth for a specific purpose? And that purpose was for a manifestation of the kingdom relationships on this earth.

As we observe today how nations are being turned and overturned, how the wisdom of man will not suffice, and council after council of wise men of the earth has ended in confusion, what must happen before we Latter Day Saints become aware of the importance of the work whereunto you and I have been called? That work was so important to God that he gave his only begotten Son. That work was so important to Jesus Christ that he offered all he had and died as few men have died that that work might live. That work was so important that some of the finest people who ever lived have given themselves literally for the success of the work. It seems to me that for some reason we Latter Day Saints in too many places have lost the consciousness of the importance of this Latter Day Work, in a world that needs the manifestation of the righteousness of God more than anything else at the present time.

Have you noticed each time I have read the statement "Let nothing separate you from each other," I have also continued, "or from the work whereunto we have been called"? I wonder if you realize that just as surely as we permit anything to separate us from each other, we separate ourselves from the work. My brethren of the ministry in this congregation have no doubt had experiences like I have had where individuals have assured us, "While I am upset and disturbed and while I don't like the decision the pastor made, nothing is going to separate me from the church. I love the church as much as I ever did." They may think they do but it is absolutely impossible to permit yourself to be

Do We Lack Glamour?

By Katherine Keck Bear

A message for all girls and women on the intellectual and spiritual bases of true charm. Men and boys can learn from it, too, if they will.

WHEN I WAS TEN I wanted a pair of red stockings. It was the style then. Along with them, for the fashion-conscious, went red-topped high shoes, with a red tassel bobbing in front. I didn't think too much about it, because I knew they weren't for me, but if I had asked for them, and by some marvelous act of providence, had come into possession, there would have been no limit to the joy in my soul every single morning I wore them and my starry eyes to school.

There were girls in the school who had red shoes and stockings. But they weren't starry-eyed. This gave me considerable material for thought then. And still does. I've known a few wealthy people since, and some very poor, and there seems to be a direct, inverse proportion between the amount of possessions and the happiness of the possessor. Of course, barring actual need.

separated from the brethren and continue in the work. When we separate ourselves from each other we automatically separate ourselves from the work whereunto we have been called. Can you consider any greater calamity to take place in the life of any man or woman who has taken the name of Christ, who has taken his name in baptism, than to permit himself to be separated from the source of light and truth? Can there be any greater darkness?

May God help us to appreciate the admonition given by his servant in this statement, "Let nothing separate you from each other or from the work whereunto you have been called."

THE LATEST THING in the way of material glitter that has come to my attention is the service of a certain finishing school, the faculty of which institution will positively guarantee (for a price) to turn out any girl you send them, completely poised and full of glamour. Ready to marry any rich man who asks for her.

The thought is impressive unless you've happened to run into a few of these rubber-stamp personality girls. For conversation, you would choose a crack-pot or a bore, before this artificial smeared-on grace. The crack-pot always is amusing, and you can play tag with a bore. But in a thousand years you can't get at anything in the mind of a woman who is busy with rules of proper behavior.

OUR CHURCH GIRLS have a broad principle for glamour. Love your neighbor as yourself. If you truly do love your neighbor, there are a lot of "rules" that would never have to be printed for you. "Always rise to greet a guest." Who would sit, if she was glad to see her friend? "Introduce the gentleman to the lady—the younger lady to the elder." How else, if you feel a genuine respect for a woman, or old people? "Listen to others—do not try to enforce your opinions." Who wants to talk anyway, when there is an opportunity to learn another's viewpoint?

There is the theory that you must "sell yourself." Usually by talking or acting. The idea being to hold the center of the stage. Along with the stage-holders in any gathering is the quiet, refined girl, interesting if only for the reason that you don't know her background.

Nobody ever faked self-assurance. The only assurance a sky-scraper has, is in the piling driven down into rock before there was any building. And the only real self-assurance any woman can feel in meeting others, is her knowledge beforehand that no prejudice or lack of sympathy exists in her heart. If none exists, none can show, and the whole chapter of text on "How to be Gracious Without Appearing to Patronize" can be forgotten. A sentence does it: "Love Thy Neighbor." This, church children learn from the time they enter cradle classes, and all their life in the church.

Overcoming timidity is the greatest factor in developing "poise." The best equipment for fighting this human weakness, is an understanding of its source. In the final analysis, timidity is an over-developed sense of one's own importance. I won't take the space to prove it, but it's so. Everybody makes mistakes and is awkward at times. Their salvation lies in treating these incidents as inconsequential, and forgetting them. With this attitude, it is possible to laugh them off and save embarrassment to everybody. But you have to start sometime, or you'll be an old lady, still acting like a twelve-year-old.

A LOT OF GLAMOUR training centers about training the body. You hold your shoulders back. You flex your muscles and move with rhythm. You express relaxation by letting your arms hang straight at your sides. You "place yourself" in a chair or auto, instead of "dropping." You don't "clutch" things, or lean against them. Any interested mother has taught her girl all these things before she is thirteen. And the book-balancing routine is good fun for any party. It beats peanut rolling or potato racing.

A pleasant voice is a necessary asset to personality. Say the experts. And no one can deny it. A girl in high school sings with glee clubs, in the choir at church. Listens and discriminates when others speak. Sooner or later, her teasing big brother, or a pal at school will advise her of any lack she may have in this direction. It won't be any easier to take if injected hypodermically by a tactful advisor at college. You just don't have a nice voice. All right, spend something on culture and take six months' voice lessons. Earn the money for it cleaning your neighbor's house or shopping for her.

Every item of mere etiquette could be boiled down to a matter of having consideration for other folks' feelings, and properly expressing your thoughtfulness for them. Girls and their mothers in the church are getting the training they need for glamour—if they make use of it—in the church association. You are criticized by fellow-members. Don't sulk. You're getting experience free that others are paying college professors to give them. Your friend is sick and needs you to pinch-hit as hostess at her party. You love her more than you do your own bashfulness, so you step into her place and come out with valuable experience. A baby is fretting in church. You feel sorry for the tired mother and take baby out for her—even if you have to break your back to carry it a block away, where crying-sounds can't be heard inside. Sometime you're going to have to learn, anyway.

I never had any red stockings. And the girls who had them didn't appreciate them. When glamour is bought at $2,000 a semester, it sparkles—a good deal like a tin can in the distance. When you buy it by learning to live with others, it comes harder and lasts longer.

Choose your letter paper as you choose your clothes, collecting various colors and styles for various moods and occasions. Then, when you are lonely and want someone to talk to, when a friend is sick or has special good luck or celebrates a birthday or an anniversary, you pick out just the right paper, and make a letter thoroughly individual and pleasant to look at and read.—Marjorie Barstow Greenbie, The Arts of Leisure.

He is an old acquaintance. Abandoned by some faithless master to shift for himself in the alleys and garbage cans about the square. An inoffensive citizen with a kindly eye. He has tried in vain to acquire one human friend. And now he is dying of hunger on the post-office steps. When we arrive, he is giving languid attention to a demented flea that is trying to draw sustenance from his thin frame. Poor as his life is, he looks unready to resign it. He does not plan to die. Who should decree death for him?

Bread and meat placed before him produce a strange effect. He cannot believe that any human being would feed him. He has so lost faith in the holiday crowd, carrying home rich cargoes from the markets, that he thinks this food must be for some more favored creature. He cringes, whimpers in pain, creeps away. It is a terrible thing to see the cruelty and heartlessness of your kind reflected in the eyes of a dumb, suffering beast. Only when he is left alone does he return and eat. He can survive another day, and hope for better fortunes.

Lady, the dog that you would have sent, with good intentions, to his death, still lives and enjoys the meager portion that life affords him, probably thankful in his own canine way to the power that is responsible for his presence here. . . . There is a difference between calling the police and bringing food.

Report to a People

Sentimental? Foolish? Perhaps.

In Europe and Japan there are people dying of cold and hunger, just as that dog was dying. They are dying with the conviction that nobody loves them, and that nobody cares. They die amid the cold ruins of their homes, in the alleys, and on the steps of public buildings. They die while over here we complain that turkey is expensive, and that we will take a leg of lamb or a goose instead. They die in the snow, or on bare stones, with only rags to cover shivering limbs. They die, with well-fed occupation troops marching by, turning their heads, because they have not enough at hand for the hungry millions.

This winter when these poor people are dying, some persons will wish to call the police. It is vulgar to fall down and die in public! Revolting to the refined senses! There should be a law against it. Death should be concealed in places like Buchenwald, Lidice, and Dachau.

And if there should be some who would rather bring food to the doomed ones, than to call the police? . . . The Department of State does not give permission, we are informed, for us to send clothing or supplies to former enemy countries.

It is a pitiful thing for this world when nations forget the meaning of mercy, and people dying lose faith in their fellow man, unable to believe, like that poor dog, that any person would feed or clothe them.

Perhaps the leaders have good reasons for what they do. Perhaps. But they have not made those reasons known to us. We are far away. We cannot know. But someday they shall have to answer questions on what they have done. They shall have to answer to humanity. They shall have to answer to God.

Nothing can so poignantly evoke the flavor of the receding past as some remembered tune, some melody that has caught up and woven into its own unconscious fabric the very color and fragrance of a day gone by.—Alexander Woollcott, While Rome Burns.

The Works of God

By Herman Albert Chelline

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

IN ADDITION to the ethical and spiritual values contained in the Bible, this wonderful book contains literary and dramatic values such as can be found in no other book. In particular, the portion devoted to the story of Jesus presents the world's greatest drama, from his birth at Bethlehem to his death on Calvary.

Practically every recorded incident of his life has dramatic elements. Turn, for example, to the sixth chapter of the gospel according to John.

It seems that the Master's principal concern in his ministry was to establish his work, to build his kingdom, and to train his disciples so that they might continue the work after he should leave them. But the demands of the multitudes were so great that it was difficult for him to meet with his disciples alone, and undisturbed by the crowds which followed him.

In the chapter to which we refer, he crossed the sea, and went up into a mountain to be alone with his disciples. But still the people followed him. Concerned for their physical needs, he asked, "Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?" Then followed the miraculous event, the feeding of the multitude, from five loaves and two fishes.

What drama in this incident! Can you not picture the small boy, starting out on what, to him, was a picnic? And what is a picnic, without a lunch? With no lunch, it's no picnic. With understandable foresight he made sure of his lunch—five loaves and two fishes. Note also, the record says they were "small" fishes.

How little did that lad realize the part he was to play and the contribution he was to make to a mighty drama! And what a lesson here for you and me. Perhaps we haven't much to offer. I know very well that if five thousand hungry people came to my home right now, we should have to send them away hungry. I haven't much to offer as a contribution. But neither did the lad have much to offer.

Jesus took the small offering, and when he had blessed it, it became a great offering. The Master took what he had at hand, and used it to perform a great miracle.

As the story unfolds, the disciples started back across the sea, Jesus remaining behind. When the weary and worn disciples were in difficulty because of adverse winds, he approached them, walking on the water. As he approached the ship, they, not recognizing him, were afraid. The record says they were troubled, saying, "It is a spirit." How often do we shrink from that which would be helpful to us, fearing that which we do not understand, or which we do not see clearly.

We have been prone to criticize Peter, because his faith failed him and he started to sink, as he attempted to walk on the water. But does it ever occur to you that of all those men in the boat, Peter was the only one who had the courage to even make the attempt to reach Jesus by going out to meet him?

Again, let's take a lesson from Peter. Are we depriving ourselves of blessings because we lack the courage and the initiative to start out to meet Jesus—to meet him half way?

On the following day, the multitude again caught up with Jesus. He very frankly told them why they sought him. "Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled." Then, speaking of the works of God, he elicited from them the following question: "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" (John 6: 28) It rather like Goodspeed's translation of this passage: "What must we do to carry out God's work?" Indeed, what?

That is a question which has frequently been asked, with slight variations, and under varied circumstances. Consider the rich young ruler, who desired eternal life. He received an answer, but not the kind of answer that he desired. So he turned away sorrowing.

Consider the men who heard the preaching of the gospel on the day of Pentecost. Stirred by the message, they cried out, "What shall we do?"

Consider Pilate, and his question, "What shall I do then, with Jesus which is called Christ?" Pilate's name has been perpetuated as a symbol of vacillation and unwillingness to act according to the dictates of his judgment and of his conscience.

Suppose we turn the question upon ourselves. What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?

Dr. Halford Luccock, in his book In the Minister's Workshop, tells of a student preacher going into a church to preach, and finding on the pulpit a neat little sign which read, "What are you trying to do to these people?" As Latter Day Saint ministers we may well ask the question: What is our aim; what are we trying to accomplish as we stand in the pulpits of the land to preach, or as we go about our work of the ministry? Do our aims coincide with the objectives outlined in the fourth chapter of the Ephesian letter?

In his book The Christ of the American Road, Dr. E. Stanley Jones says, "There are two great streams of human longings which have run through human history: a longing for a new order and a longing for a leader. . . . The 'ought-to-be' stands over against the 'is' and disturbs it and calls it."

When we are thus disturbed, we may try to rationalize ourselves out of "doing," may try to declare a truce between the "is" and the "ought-to-be." But down deep we know that victory can come only through an "all out" effort. Otherwise we, too, shall turn away sorrowing. Herein lies a challenge to us, individually, and to our branch, to our district and to our entire church. "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" or "What must we do to carry out God's work?"

Just what is meant by the "Works of God"? The spectacular? Surely there was nothing spectacular in a small boy carrying five loaves and two small fishes. But he gave them to the Master, for him to use. Perhaps you don't have five loaves and two small fishes. But you have some other possession—some capacity, faculty or quality that could be consecrated. Does the phrase "works of God" convey the idea of bread without effort, as it did to the people whom Jesus fed that day? They looked back to their ancestors who had received manna in the wilderness, and longed for that experience, or some similar sort of social security which would be guaranteed to them without too much thought or effort on their part.

This whole Restoration movement—this Latter Day work—may be said to be based upon a threefold requirement as preached by the angel who flew through the midst of heaven bearing the everlasting gospel (Revelation 14: 6, 7):

1. Fear God
2. Give glory to him
3. Worship him.

The message of the Restoration is a call to worship. Such worship, to be acceptable, carries into every phase of human activities, and only to the extent that a recognition of our relationship to Divinity permeates every sphere of our activity, can we fully accept the challenge of an answer to the question "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?"

Our Children Need Help

By Lloyd E. Cleveland

An appeal for a training program in the home, by a father and experienced church worker.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY during the war was one of our biggest home front problems. It is still one of our biggest problems. Every thinking parent in America is concerned about the great upsurge in crime among teen age youngsters. Some of the most outstanding leaders of the country have called upon the parents of our nation to wage a relentless war against the causes of this problem. Numerous articles have been written about the condition itself, few about the cure. This article is not written from any expert point of view. It is rather the result of an effort to think through some of the problems from the standpoint of zionist-minded parents who wish to rear their children with a thorough foundation in gospel principles, and see them take their place in church work without wasted years and regrets.

We are commanded to rear our children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Have we ever taken time out to digest the full meaning of this phrase? We often hear that "The boys and girls of today are the men and women of tomorrow." What kind of men and women? In my limited experience and observation, there are few parents indeed who have any comprehensive plan for educating their children in the home. The pattern is usually hit or miss, with little time for trying to understand the child's problems or help it solve them.

"The nurture and admonition of the Lord" will include much more than insistence upon attending church services. It means setting the example in all things. It means that we parents cannot pass the buck to the public schools and the church school for the poor training many of our youngsters are getting. The type and degree of training which a child receives in the home will determine its capacity to adjust properly to school and church training. No amount of teacher-discipline can completely overcome a bad home environment, except in unusual cases.

WHAT KIND OF parents are we? Most of us will fall normally into three main classes. First and probably most numerous are those who love their children to an extreme. Any thought of discipline is repugnant to them. Children in such homes are excessively pampered, rarely allowed to think for themselves, seldom learn self-reliance. When faced by the cold realities of life in later years these children are unable to adjust properly, and become social problems. Overly-indulgent parents usually become indignant if told that their blind love is ruining the child's chance for a happy, normal life.

The second class consists of those who strive for a realistic approach to parenthood. In these parents good common sense is the measuring tape. Their love extends beyond the momentary pleasure of making life a grand fairyland for their offspring, to the building of permanent qualities of character and breeding. Self-expression is permitted but is channeled into useful and creative patterns. While their minds are plastic and learning experiences are easily assimilated, Johnny and Mary can be taught life—and this without depriving them of any of childhood's happy hours.

Fortunately, the third class of parents is the smallest in point of number. This group comprises those parents who care little or nothing for their children. Such parents are too indifferent and selfish to take the time and trouble to give them proper care and teaching. These homes may be upset by violent quarrels often ending in divorce court. It is from this environment that a large per cent of our criminals come. Indifferent, self-centered parents are a woeful headache to the entire community.

OF GRAVE CONCERN to every Latter Day Saint family is the problem of retaining young people who are lost by the church in large numbers every year. Indifference to this situation is intolerable in an organization which exists for the saving of souls. We must be careful not to misplace our zeal in proselyting among nonmembers while our own family suffers from lack of spiritual guidance. This is not an imaginary problem. I have met personally a number of sorrowful parents who wondered why their children lacked interest in church work. Some of these undoubtedly had valid reasons for their complaints, if they used all the ability within their grasp to teach and instruct. On the other hand, many of these parents have failed to develop any constructive and sincere program of training which will carry over into adult church life.

Where many of us fall down in our teaching methods is in our failure to begin soon enough. It is often true that we permit our children to be baptized upon reaching the eight year minimum without the proper instruction and preparation being given them. Then, instead of planning a familiarization course which will appeal to youthful reasoning we literally "toss the book" at them with the admonition to "study to show thyself approved." This advice is good, but the method is inadequate to produce the kind of results we want. Children learn not only by study but by asking questions and most of all by observation. How many are so thoroughly sold on the church's program that some of their determination and enthusiasm

Your grandmother and anyone else is right when they tell you about the evils of strong drink, no matter how cleverly it is covered up by "red soda pop." It will dull the senses and ruin the brain, besides eating out the lining of the stomach and destroying the delicate tissue of the kidneys. The eyes, too, will suffer, and if liquor is taken freely the nose will become bloated and red.

Certainly, the so-called moderns will call anyone "old-fashioned." Let them. Learn to say proudly, "I never indulge." Remember, success in life depends upon the integrity of the individual. And anyone who plays with strong drink will not only ruin his health and life, but will discover, when it is too late, that, he has no character left.

Certainly, "the joint" where they sell it is often on the same street as the church, and it takes a real person to pass by and shun it.

In the years prior to and during World War I, discipline was a part of a serviceman's training, and this was also true in a real home. If the soldier disobeyed orders, he was severely disciplined and made to do what was right; and so was an unruly child in the home. But the best person is the self-disciplined individual.

The real father, mother, or grandparent is the one who teaches the child to tell right from wrong; not because there is no temptation or opportunity to do wrong, but because of the evil connected with it.

The real person is the one who will not lie, cheat, steal, drink strong drink, or do any type of wrong; because it is wrong, in spite of all of the evil influences.

will bubble over into the lives of their children?

ONLY IN A general way can any plan be laid out for all parents to follow. Individual differences in children and parents alike create a need for imagination and insight regarding problems in every home environment. A visiting priesthood can be of immeasurable assistance in helping to establish the right educational program for every family.

Just as a suggestion, why not borrow some of the better ideas from our public educational systems and use them in some phases of our home training? For an example, educators base their programs on units of work done by the student. So many units of each type of learning are required for graduation. This with appropriate awards, could be used in studying church principles and beliefs, church history, and all standard books and periodicals. Special awards for church school and Zion's League work might be given. Such a program would have to be closely supervised to give the proper spiritual balance and to prevent it from being burdensome or stuffy. If such a program is not considered suitable, perhaps it will stimulate thinking toward another plan which will fit your needs.

The theme song of one of our popular radio programs begins with the words "we must be vigilant." Most of us are alert to those elements of our environment which are likely to deprive us and future generations of our cherished freedom. We can see the need for a better social order to give security and happiness to the world's downtrodden millions. Yet, somehow, we forget we have the only answer to these questions in our grasp. And while we slumber the Pied Pipers in the world around us lead our children away unnoticed. Shall we accept the challenge? It is later than you think!

Bridgemen working on the new San Francisco Bay bridge were faced with an unexpected situation when the rising sun drew the tops of the bridge towers almost two inches east each morning. As the sun moved in its course, the towers reeled with it. Only two inches, but if you were trying to hammer the head of a four-inch rivet flush and there were two inches between your beam and your tower, you would have to do something. On the Bay bridge they had to wait until night-fall, after the sun had quit having fun with the bridge, to fit some of the cross-beams.—Frank J. Taylor in Collier's.

ZION'S LEAGUE EXCHANGE

Dear Zion's Leaguers:

Recently, at our city-wide Zion's League council meeting, the suggestion was made and approved for the creation of a circulation department for the young people of the church. This department would entail the exchange of news, activities, friendly letters, and ideas for various types of service which would be of interest to youth.

Thinking it might be possible to get a page or so in the Herald, we went to see the Managing Editor, and found him quite willing to help us on the project.

Our next step is collecting material to make up this column. That's where you come in. We'd like to have complete accounts of all your League activities. Or, if you have any problems you would like help on, let us know via letter and we'll see what we can do toward solving them. Suggestions would be appreciated, too.

This column is designed to bring the young people of the church, regardless of where they live, closer to each other.

Any news, articles, or announcements may be sent to me.

Sincerely,
Dorothy Eastwood
1243 South Main
Independence, Missouri.

One of the most important activities of the city-wide Zion's League in recent months was the one-act play contest held November 26, 27, and 29 in the little theater at Stone Church. Seven plays were presented on these three nights; they ranged from farce to heavy drama.

Monday evening Salvage, a very appealing drama, was given by the Leaguers of Second Church. This play was written by Dorothy Wilson and directed by Georgia Snow. The cast included L'Nora Cross, Thelma Coon, and Stanley Curtis.

The other play presented on November 26 was Not Tonight, a comedy directed by Mrs. Arthur Welch. Those participating were Betty Katzman, Ray Brackenbury, Cleo Williams, Kenneth Stobaugh, and Barbara McFarlane. The Englewood League was responsible for this production.

Tuesday evening, three plays were given. The first, a drama, Light to Glory, was directed by Helen and Athelia Mengel. The cast, composed of Gudgell Park Leaguers, included Bill Mengel, Rose Bowers, Kenneth McLaughlin, and Ruth Atkins.

Liberty Street presented the second play which was a comedy, Who Gets the Car Tonight? directed by Mrs. Mable Holsworth. The character parts were taken by Cebert Young, Anna Smart, Billy Harrison, Helen Holsworth, and Jack Litsworth.

The third play to be given November 27 was the contribution of Stone Church. It was entitled Four Hundred Nights, and was directed by John Pritchard.

Walnut Park and Spring Branch churches presented their plays on Thursday, November 29. The first, a religious drama directed by John Wade, was called The Answered Prayer. Parts were taken by Francis Needham, Frances Oeser, Joy Netter, Audrey and Lloyd Hurshman.

The final presentation, Elmer, was directed by Raymond Fisher. The cast included Robert Ganson, Ruth Ward, Vlora Jacobsen, Rosemary Curtis, Frances Zwingle, Florence Essig, Dorothy Jennings, Howard Harrington, and Dwain Miller.

Judges Darlene Van Biber and Lois Jean Williams selected Four Hundred Nights, the play given by Stone Church, as winner of the first prize. Englewood and Second Church tied for second place honors, and Liberty Street was voted third best.

The award, a plaque, was presented to John Pritchard, director of the winning play. The cast of this production included Howard Downs, Oliver Houston, Cleo Cudworth, Betty Pritchard, Wilma Highly, Maxine Pritchard, Nadine Ellis and Bob Coe.

Margaret Reiff and Kenneth Birchett were general managers for the plays. Georgia Snow was in charge of the tickets; Kay Hawkins was chairman of the house committee; and Van Eastwood was chief stage technician.

During past years there has been a growing need for an organization of the various Leagues in Independence. In 1944 the city-wide Zion's League council was established to take care of this need, and it has been able to solve many problems. It includes a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer; these officers work with a council composed of the various presidents and young peoples leaders from all the congregations. This council meets twice a month to plan city-wide activities.

The 1945-46 officers are Dwain Miller, president; Vlora Jacobsen, vice-president; Marcina Gold, secretary; and Georgia Snow, treasurer. The first activity planned by this group was the annual retreat held at Lake Donaphin the first of August. In October they sponsored a Hallowe'en party given at the Auditorium, and in November the one-act play contest. A gift and consecration service was held at Walnut Park church on Sunday evening, January 6.

Alien Appeals to Youth

[Editor's Note: Not long ago Lynn Perkins had the following article in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph and U. S. Representative Robert F. Rich of Pennsylvania reprinted it in the Congressional Record Appendix.]

I BELIEVE in America, and I believe in the system of free enterprise which has built this country into the mightiest enterprise of freedom which the world has ever known.

There is certainly nothing newsworthy in my believing this. Millions of people have the same belief. The only unusual fact, in my case, is that I believe it and also happen to be young.

That combination is quite a rarity today.

The truth is that youth has lost its belief in free enterprise. Few are actually opposed—but few are in support. During the last twenty years the growing generation has been submitted to a constant barrage of propaganda which has discredited capitalism and private enterprise.

Even the huge mass-appeal mediums, whose very life depends upon capitalism, have taken part in laughing at private business.

Magazines, newspapers, movies, comic strips, the radio and most other mass-appeal mediums have, in a roundabout way, promoted the ridicule of private business and the businessman. Success has been consistently sneered at as bourgeois.

The same subtle sneers have been sandwiched into the teachings in schools. The net result is that the vast majority of youth is either neutral or in opposition to capitalism. Capitalism has to the minority become a monster—and to the majority a ridiculous fat man with the money bags.

Synchronized with this planned ridicule of private enterprise has been a wide-spread but little-seen machinery which has tirelessly worked in the promotion of socialism. It is known as liberalism to those who cannot or will not see it too clearly. To those who have wanted a more naked name, it is known bluntly as communism.

Communism has marched behind the banners of the progressives.

Talk to any young person of any intelligence and will, 99 times out of 100, get the reaction that some more or less vague sort of socialism is progressive—that capitalism is reactionary.

Few are in favor of communism.

The Function and Field of Religion

By J. A. Koehler

This is the fifth in a group of addresses given over Radio Station KMBC on the subject, "The Modern Voice of Prophecy."

ANYTHING THAT has a proper place in the life of man is to a purpose. That purpose is either to supply a need or to satisfy a want. We do not trouble ourselves to do anything except to preserve or gain something that we regard as good or to prevent or escape something that we regard as bad. You would not have a care to be religious if you did not believe that religion is advantageous or profitable, if you did not believe that the function of religion is to enrich life.

The word "function" is not in the Bible. But the idea of function is there. When Isaiah asked, "Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?" he said that religion has a function. When he asked, "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me?" he said that religion has a function.

WHAT THAT FUNCTION is, was revealed in a hundred proclamations. It is revealed in the promise, "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments:" "the land shall yield her increase"; "I will give you peace in the land," and ye shall "dwell in safety." That means—does it not?—that the function of religion is to enrich the life of man in the garden of God.

"Blessed is the man," said the psalmist, "whose delight is in the law of the Lord," in the keeping of whose commandments "there is great reward." "For whatsoever he doeth it shall prosper." And that means—does it not?—that the function of religion is to enrich the life of man in the garden of God.

Tithing is a religious institution. So when Malachi said "Bring you all the tithes into the storehouse . . . and I will pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it," he said that the function of religion is to enrich the life of man in the garden of God.

That is the function of religion. What is its field, its sphere of action? Is it possible that it could not be the affairs that condition the well-being and happiness of man? Surely, if we believe in the principle of causation, or the relation of cause and effect, if we believe that the universe is governed by law, we must believe that the field of religion is the field of action through which alone the life of man may be sustained and promoted.

WHAT ARE the affairs that sustain and promote life? They are the vital affairs, of course. And those vital affairs are primarily economic affairs. It is inconceivable that human life should be sustained and promoted, enriched, except through the conduct, primarily, of industry and government. Are not these affairs then, primarily, the field of religion? Surely.

Of course, industry and government are not the only life-enriching affairs. But they are the basic life-enriching affairs. How could the Sabbath serve to promote the abundant life if the people conducted their economic affairs in violation of the law of God? Can a religious people be right on Sunday the while it is wrong on Monday? Not if Jesus and the prophets knew what they were talking about.

THE TRUTH IS, that is the purpose of the Sabbath: to assure that throughout the week the vital affairs of peoples shall be conducted aright as in the sight of God. To assure that what is done in economic life in particular shall enrich human life. The Sabbath is that we may "Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow," and so to "eat the good of the land."

That is the ancient voice of prophecy. That is the genius that was buried beneath the superstitions of medieval times, and which has come to life again, at long last.

Many persons may be still alive (you may be one of them, as I am) who do not need to go back to the Dark Ages to see evidences that the ancient voice of prophecy, with its garden life-enriching message for ever so long was not the guiding genius in the conduct of vital affairs.

Some of my deepest early impressions of religious affairs are that the business of the church was dominated by big business, industry, politics, and finance—by church men who said that religion has no rightful place in the conduct of vital affairs.

As for the ministry, the pulpit, it was inhospitable, almost hostile, to the idea that the function of religion is to enrich the life of man in the garden of God through the conformation of the system of economic institutions to the will of God.

There are few religions that do not build with an eye to the condition of man in the future life. But they build in quite different ways. Neither prophetic Judaism nor Messianic Christianity hopes to attain to a fortunate future condition of man except through the right conduct of the affairs of the present; except, as the Restoration prophet put it, through "using the things of this world in the manner designed of God."

THE CHARACTERISTIC of Moses and Samuel and Isaiah and Jesus is their concern for the right conduct of economic affairs in particular as means of enriching human life in the garden of God; and so to insure that the estate of man in the next life will be joyous.

That conviction has been recovered. And in that recovery there is assurance that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy. The proclamation of Restoration—which to Latter Day Saints is the modern voice of prophecy—is “If ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded and required of you.”

There can be no doubt as to what those commandments and requirements are. They are that economic life must be grounded in principles of justice, equity, and mercy. The function of Restoration religion is to enrich the life of man in the garden of God. And the field of that religion is the whole circle of affairs that have to do with the promotion of human well-being and happiness.

The voice of Restoration says that “If Zion will do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself, and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible.”

That voice says that “You are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties (of the community), for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God (which means the men of the church who form the community; not ‘the church’ in its common acceptance) that every man may improve upon his talent (his capacity for doing things which enrich the life of man), that every man may gain other talents (or things which promote human well-being) . . . every man seeking the interest of his neighbor (every man seeking to enrich human life), and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.”

There is much more than that to the message of Restoration. But that should be sufficient to reveal the conviction of the genius of Restoration, which is that the function of religion is to enrich the life of man in the garden of God. And, since human life cannot be enriched without conducting economic affairs in accordance with the will of

I Believe in the Sunday School

By J. Edgar Hoover

Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

This extract of an article that appeared in the Christian Herald for December, 1945, is used by permission of the Editors of that publication.

“There is no substitute for religion and the Sunday school!

“By the same token, there is no synthetic replacement for a decent home life. Our high crime rate, particularly among juveniles, is directly traceable to a break-down in moral fiber—to the disintegration of home and family life. Religion and home life are supplementary. Each strengthens the other. It is seldom that a solid and wholesome home life can be found in the absence of religious inspiration. And the filaments of religion and family life burn brightest and most effectually when children have attended the Sunday school. . . .

“In the United States criminals force us to spend each year more than four and two-thirds as much on them as we spend on all forms of education, both public and private. We spend for their detection, arrest, conviction and punishment nearly thirty times as much money as the combined budgets of all church and religious organizations in the country. Each year that crime continues, it will cost every man, woman and child in the United States approximately $110. That’s too much! . . .

“Each of these laws is an outgrowth of one of the world’s ten basic laws—of the Ten Commandments which are taught, or should be taught, in every Sunday school. I have never seen a true adherent of God, that the vital affairs of this life, together with the Sabbath, or the life-enriching functions which complement and supplement vital affairs, are the proper field of religion.

Is not this recovery of the convictions of ancient prophecy an assurance that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy?

these Commandments stand at the bar of a criminal court!

“A few months ago, three youngsters—two aged thirteen and one aged fourteen—were arrested for the theft of eight automobiles. All three were given sentences by the court. We discovered that lack of religion had played a most important part in the tragedy. These boys came from homes in which there was no religion, no family prayers, no acknowledgment of God, no emphasis upon that Commandment which tells youth, ‘Thou shalt not steal!’ . . .

“A few years back, a vicious murderer still in his twenties threatened Special Agents of the FBI. As a gang leader he was responsible for several deaths, and now he planned to kidnap certain key FBI men. When the showdown came in New Orleans, the criminal meekly surrendered. I wish his lesson could be taught in every Sunday school. I wish our youngsters could understand that this man-without-God was brave only on the surface, and brave only when he knew he was safe. Force was the only authority he respected. He lacked the sustaining power of religion, and when his personal assurance was gone there remained only the shattered hulk of a man.

“The Sunday school can help here as no other institution can, for the Sunday school offers a moral, ethical and spiritual way of life that is of unsurpassed value in our times. It is true and sound. In fitting our young folks for the future, in guaranteeing the permanency of democratic principles, there is no more potent or vital force in our nation. The Sunday School can become our guarantee for tomorrow!”

Courage Pays Dividends

By Evelyn Burgess

I THINK THAT courage must have been a commonplace in the lives of Latter Day Saint women from the beginning. I'm going to tell you after awhile why I think it natural that Latter Day Saint women should be courageous and why I think it has always paid them dividends.

Of course, Emma Smith—well, we usually think of her first, don't we?—her courage was a by-word. We talk about the nurses on Bataan. Emma Smith was literally chased over 1,000 miles across the country, as the crow flies, only they didn't go as the crow flies. Sometimes she woke up at night and heard the men in the next room talking about what they were going to do when they caught up with "those Mormons." Sometimes these men even came in with lights, looked over the occupants and decided they weren't the people they were looking for. Then she was left to get back over 200 miles (again as the crow flies) with her children. She had literally been turned out of her own home. That story is probably familiar to you.

Only one tribute to Emma is on record from Joseph's pen. When Joseph was in hiding before he gave himself up for the last time, Emma stole out of the Mansion House, took a carriage in the opposite direction from his hiding place, sent it back to Nauvoo and went to meet her husband in secret. This is what he said about that meeting:

With what unspeakable delight, and what transports of joy swelled my bosom, when I took by the hand, on that night, my beloved Emma—she that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart. Many were the revibrations of my mind when I contemplated for a moment the many scenes we had been called to pass through, the fatigues and the toils, the sorrows and sufferings, and the joys and consolations, from time to time, which had strewed our paths and crowned our board. Oh what a commingling of thought filled my mind for the moment, again she is here, even in the seventh trouble—undaunted, firm, and unwavering—unchangeable, affectionate Emma.—Church History, Volume I, page 120.

Did you know that after Joseph's death, Brigham Young threatened to burn down the roof over her head if she refused to go to Utah with him, and to bring her children? Yes, we talk about the nurses on Bataan and the war widows of today. Surely Emma was no stranger to these modern women when she cried out, "Joseph, my husband, have they taken you from me at last." That phrase "at last" is significant, it seems to me. It shows that she had expected this fruition for a long time, yet she insisted that they both stay in Nauvoo and face the music. Who shall say that her calm faith in the future of the church was not justified?

Well, you may say, women like that were a dime a dozen in the early church. They were pioneers. We expect pioneers to be courageous. That's right. There were women like Thankful Pratt who contracted tuberculosis trying to make connections with her husband, and always just missing him; she sent him off on a mission to England when they had just found each other again and at a time when they were burdened with debt. Well, their debts were paid, and she lived to bear him a child.

There was Phoebe Rigdon who followed her husband from one prosperous congregation to another, watched him give up each one when his conscience called him elsewhere, saw him (after forty) lose a great many pounds, nursed him when he was out of his head for days after the mob had dragged him headfirst over the frozen ground. Yet she didn't urge him to leave the church. She stuck with him and she stuck with the church.

No, there wasn't any war going on then (just the kind of thing that made Hitler say, "The Americans should talk about the way we treat the Jews. Look at the way Missouri treated the Mormons.") Women bore children on the frozen ground when there was not even so much as a tent to protect them sometimes. They forded streams; they left their homes behind them time and again. They were refugees all their lives. Finally Henry Clay even suggested that the whole church should be moved across the Rocky Mountains. Well, they were still courageous enough—some of them—to move again, to the arid Salt Lake Valley. Brigham Young took a lot of credit for making the desert blossom like the rose.

He could make any spot blossom with people like that. They had only to be led to the place, and they would do the rest as a matter of course. My great grandfather traded eighty acres of rich Iowa farm land for a pony to ride out to Utah on. My great grandmother told him she would go with him if he wanted to go but that she would not live to see Utah because she was expecting a child. They say my great grandfather snorted, "Sarah, if that's the way it is, we won't go." She didn't mind the wilderness. She once caught a wolf in a trap and finished him off single-handed, and she earned the respect of a party of Indians in war paint, so that the brave who was going to kill when she wouldn't give him a roast turkey said, "Brave squaw," and left her alone.

Well, we hear about those women, and we say, "Times have changed; women are softer today." Are they? I know a woman in Independence, just approaching middle age who knew she had a very slim chance of pulling through an operation without which she would leave two growing sons and a daughter who was still in the primary grades. She and her husband calmly discussed the situation. When she went to the hospital, she tried to leave a home that would be easy for him to run without her if she didn't come back. She organized her household with that end in view. She was ready for whatever might come. In the hospital she called for administration. The elders came. When they left, X rays showed that the largest of the stones in her gall bladder had disappeared completely. What had been a life and death matter became simple.

Don't you think that took just as much courage as crossing the ice to Quincy with two children at your skirts and a third on the way? Don't you think her courage was as much justified as Emma's or Thankful's? or my great grandmother's?

I had a letter from Sister Oakman, written in England during the war. She said when the bombs fell she wanted to be one of two places, either out of doors where she could watch the fun or in bed where she could go back to sleep and sleep comfortably when the "all clear" sounded.

She feels with so many native-born Englishmen that, when the time comes, she will go, and not before or afterwards. Some call it fate, others call it God.

It makes me think of what my father told me when we first began to hear these prophecies of dire things to come upon the earth: I asked him what he thought about them. He would smile and say, "Well, maybe those terrible things are going to happen. But there's no point in worrying about it. If they don't happen, you will have had all that worrying for nothing. If they do, you'll have plenty of time to start worrying, if worrying will do you any good." That's the kind of modern courage I've encountered in a great many young women I've talked to in the church whose husbands were sent overseas into the front lines. "I'll have plenty of time to weep when I know beyond a shadow of a doubt he isn't coming back."

Is that any less courageous than Emma or Thankful or my great-grandmother?

It seems to me that real courage is born of a long-time view. I saw that courage is worth-while because without it we would all be unhappy, inefficient neurotics. There are people, you know, who can't cross the street because they're afraid they might be struck by an automobile on the way across. Whatever the reason for this fear, like the fear of elevators and of crowds, it practically incapacitates people who might otherwise be making a brilliant contribution to society. Emma was courageous, yet her husband was murdered. But her courage was still worth-while. Because she didn't lose her head in the emergency, we have the Inspired Version, and we had the benefit of her son's leadership—her long-time view still worked out. She might have saved her husband's life by running away with him. But he would have died eventually and she could not have seen his ministry come to fruition in her son if she had lost faith in the church and in the long-time view. Taking this long-time view does something to your life. It makes it meaningful and beautiful whatever happens. That's what courage does for you. So I'm awfully glad our church women are still blessed with "courage and with faith," aren't you?

Because of heat engendered by the chemical action in concrete mixtures, the 6,000,000-ton Boulder Dam would take a hundred years to cool if left to itself. To hasten the process, more than 500 miles of tubing has been built into the structure, through which ice water circulates from a plant capable of turning out 1000 tons of ice every day.—Bruce Bliven in The New Republic.

So You Think It's Uncertain, Do You?

"The future is so uncertain," you complain. What future have you ever known that wasn't? It is that very uncertainty that makes life so interesting. Suppose you golfers knew in advance what scores you were to get on every hole? Suppose you fishermen knew the size and kind and number of the fish you were to bring home? Suppose—but why keep on supposing?

You know that if our futures were revealed to us in detail, if we knew in advance what is to happen to us, life would lose its savor. The fun is in expectation.

That we are living in a world of change is admitted. But we always have lived in that world. Businesses have come and gone. Men have succeeded and failed. Men have died. Hunger and thirst and disease and injustice and brutality have always challenged the creative genius of men.

And men have won, too. The average age at which men died in the days when Rome was powerful was 24. Now it is 62 or thereabouts.

Who knows, possibly in time men may conquer the disease of war.

There will always be a fight for a better future. What the world needs now is more men of faith—hopeful men, expectant men, confident men.

We need more men who hang on to fundamentals. What, for example? This: That people will continue to need food, clothing, shelter, education, entertainment and countless gadgets from automobiles to toothpicks. That truth is inescapable.

Who is going to supply those things? You? Why not?

Think in terms of unlimited resources and unlimited needs. Fit yourself in between those two extremes. There's a place for you. You have work to do that you alone can do. How you'll do it, where you'll do it—do they matter?

What offers your a challenge is the very uncertainties of the future—uncertainties of detail only. There are no uncertainties so far as the needs of millions of people go. Your job is to pick out the needs you can fill and be prepared to fill them. You'll always get what belongs to you. To get what you desire, prepare to receive it.

Accept uncertainty as a friendly, tantalizing leader. Travel forward with faith.—Thomas Dreier.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

Discovering Highways of Abundant Living A Plan of Action for Zion's League

By Mary B. Hill

DURING THE PAST thirteen years it has been my experience to be a member of three churches, having found the truth only six years ago. During that time, I was actively associated with several young people's groups, both in a local and district capacity, and noticed that one particular plan seemed to be the most successful. I advocated this in our own League here in Hamilton, Ontario, but not until this year have we actually tried it, modified greatly to suit the local conditions. So far, it has been most successful with all our young people attending our meetings regularly. Eight visitors were present at our last meeting, which was not an "out of the ordinary" meeting.

The system is called the "commission" plan, with the League divided into four groups, or commissions: "Service," "Fellowship," "Missionary" (evangelistic), and "Devotional."

The League is, of course, headed by a president and vice-president, and has a regular secretary and treasurer, and social committee. Each group has its "commission leader," and each commission (or group as we call it) is responsible for one evening's program every month. The "service" group may be responsible for the first meeting in each month, the "fellowship" for the second, etc. The social committee, in conjunction with the "fellowship" leader, is responsible for the fifth night of any month and for special events such as Hallowe'en, etc.

The cabinet of the League, consisting of the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, social committee and the four group leaders, meet at the beginning of the year, under the supervision of the young people's supervisor, and plan the calendar for the year. Immediately, then, each of the four groups have separate meetings to outline programs as far in advance as they wish. Thus the service commission may meet and decide upon what they would like to present as the program for their evenings; for example, until Christmas. It is clearly understood that each group must keep at least a month in advance in program planning. This gives time for well arranged, unharrassed evenings.

To stimulate interest and foster missionary-mindedness (which has been sadly lacking in our League) points have been arranged. Points are given for attendance, visitors, new members, and daily devotions, and also for having used every member of the group in a particular program. This last item was added because so many of the League members formerly refused to participate when asked. So far, we have not had a refusal; in fact, the group leaders won't take "no" for an answer. At the close of the year, the winning group is feted in some way by the losing groups. All rivalry has been friendly and taken in good spirit. Lest it seem that it is essential to have points for the successful operation of this system, we hasten to add that it is not necessary.

The group leaders are responsible for calling monthly committee meetings and seeing that the plans are carried out, with rehearsals if necessary. The group leader looks after absentees, analyzes and assists in solving problems of the group, explores all possibilities of new members or visitors in the group, and participates in all cabinet meetings of the League.

In the monthly group committee meetings, all members of the group attend. Anyone may contribute suggestions. If current program materials are running in the Herald or elsewhere in our church literature, these are studied and adapted for use in the particular field of that group. Where talks are decided upon for a meeting, the persons who are to give them are selected, along with the assignment of the subjects, etc. In fact, the whole program, from the opening to the closing hymn, is carefully planned.

During the meeting (the regular League meeting) the president takes charge of the opening hymn, prayer, Scripture reading, the offering, roll call, announcements, and business. The meeting is then turned over to the group leader for the remaining time. Any solos, musical numbers, etc., arranged by the group come in this part of the program.

In our branch, with only eleven members, four groups were impossible. In order to make less work for the two groups, which we decided to use, the young people's supervisor and president decided to collaborate and look after the remaining two evenings a month. Our groups are "Service-Devotional" and "Fellowship-Missionary."

There was practically no League last year, so the programs under the title "Adventures in Latter Day Saintism" were not used. However, we have endeavored to use much of this material this year. For years I have collected program materials adaptable for young people's work, from which we draw.

I like the "commission system" because:

I have noticed, especially during these war years, that unless a young people's leader was devoting full time to this work, he was harrassed with the responsibility of a meeting every week. Moreover, few young people's leaders, especially in smaller branches, have had any specific training in this work. They frequently lack ideas and usually have a zeal without knowledge—often minus the zeal, too, eventually.

Ordinarily, the young people as a whole have no direct responsibility in their meetings, and consequently have less interest. Few leaders could give every member of his League a substantial part in the League program once a month. The group leader's centralized interest is a better check on absenteeism, and potential members.

With less meetings to prepare for, each leader and his group can take time to put real quality into their meetings; the "favorites" do not do everything. Very often the reserved member has proved to have amazing talent.

On the whole, this system has proved to be:

1. A good method of producing leaders in young people's organizations.
2. A stimulus to interest and enthusiasm.
3. Attractive to new members and visitors.
4. A method of discovering talents, and for varying meetings. (Many members have excellent ideas when allowed to share them with others.)
5. A good method of raising the standard of the meetings.

The following calendar presents this year's activities. You will note that the programs for the different evenings are all stated well in advance in the majority of cases; also, that nearly all the meetings announce a definite program. We tentatively planned our programs for the entire year; two groups have made minute plans through December 31.

Oct. 12. New set-up outlined.
 Oct. 19. Installation—Candle-lighting.
 Oct. 25. Branch social—Women's department social.
 Nov. 2. Hallowe'en party—Basement.
 Nov. 9. Service—"Musical Life of Christ."
 Nov. 16. Young People's supervisor—Forum on "Should there be one church or many?"
 Nov. 23. Missionary: Play—"Rise of the Reorganization."
 Nov. 30. Recreation—Basement.
 Dec. 7. Service: Playlet "Baptism."
 Dec. 14. Missionary: Four ten-minute talks on Missions.
 Dec. 21. Candlelight worship service. Distribution of gifts (not over 25 cents).
 Dec. 31. Party and Watchnight.
 Jan. 11. Service: Play—"Is Sincerity Enough?"
 Jan. 18. Bible quiz.
 Jan. 25. Missionary: Two talks: Charles Derry's Life; Work in Australia.
 Feb. 1. Service: Four talks, "How we got our hymns."
 Feb. 8. Prayer Service—imitative camp fire, with group sitting around.
 Feb. 15. Missionary: Playlet—"Building Kirtland Temple" (Herald, Feb. 24, 1945).
 Feb. 22. Recreation.
 March 1. Service: "Tithing Night"—Aim: Every member paying tithing.
 March 8. Inter-group debate.
 March 15. Missionary: Two talks: Life of William Marks; Life of Edmund Kelley.
 March 22. Young people's supervisor—Forum.
 March 29. Social.
 April 5. Service: "Easter Service in Poetry and Song" (Herald, March 28, 1942).
 April 12. Prayer Service.
 April 19. Missionary: Playlet—"The Church is Organized" (Vision, 1930).
 April 26. Debate, final.
 May 3. Service: Playlet and Program.
 May 10. Book of Mormon Night, by Young People's supervisor: National Geographic pictures of Ancient America shown by pictograph.
 May 17. Missionary: "The Light Burns On" (Herald, December 12, 1942).
 May 24. Past meeting quiz (or recreation).
 May 31. Open-night sponsored by Zion's League. (Branch participates with League.)
 June 7. Combination group service (End of contest).
 June 14. Prayer Service (Outdoors).
 June 21. Sponsored by losing commission. Remarks:—Changes, Notations, etc.

1. Service commission will present one of their best League meetings some Sunday night after the new year, adapted as a Sunday night service.

2. Missionary commission will present their best play on May 31, open to Branch.

3. Recreation consists of table tennis, several dart and ringer games, one crokinole board and Chinese checkers (as much variety as possible in a limited space). No eats on recreation nights, only on regular social evenings.

Each member of the Zion's League was given a calendar.

On November 9, the "Musical Life of Christ" was a meeting in the form of a radio broadcast. A splendid imitation microphone, an "On the Air" sign, with a light was set up by the boys of the service commission.

Since our League has so many non-members attending, the groups are anxious that we include doctrine, so the forum on November 16 considered the teachings of our church, and the "service" nights of December 7 and January 11 will do likewise.

I have noticed some particular values which I believe may be credited to the plan. It helps to meet the needs of youth; i. e., sense of "belonging," sharing, encouraging, being resourceful, providing action, stimulating group loyalty (few will deliberately "let down" their particular group), and providing challenge.

This plan needs to be carefully outlined and wisely developed. As you will agree, this, like any other system used, has its pitfalls. One is the very problem it attempts to eliminate, clannishness. There is great danger, if the group leaders do the choosing of their groups, each leader will choose his or her particular friends, with the League's ending by being divided instead of united. If the organization does not tend toward "cliques" then it is satisfactory to have the groups chosen by the leaders. However, if it does, the group should be selected by some other means, perhaps by a responsible person, probably the pastor or young people's supervisor. I have made it a point to have the members of the same family on different sides, and boy friends and girl friends on different sides. In fact that has been the rule, rather than the exception. Usually the young people find it interesting to compare notes and to work in competition. Sometimes the race to gain a mutual friend to one side or the other is particularly stimulating.

The group leaders have to be chosen carefully. As in any office, the danger is that the popular members will be chosen by the group; and it is not desirable if they are not good sports, and truly consecrated to the work. In other words, there, too, the pastor and young people's supervisor and Zion's League president must decide whether the group leaders should be appointed or elected.

It is a standing rule that the groups must be entirely changed each year, and if possible over a period of four years, that each member will have served on each commission. The president is not included in any group, but receives the reports of the group leaders and generally supervises the four groups. In a small League where the work is not too great, the vice-president is often the leader of a group.

In many smaller organizations where it seems advisable to divide the League into only three groups, the cabinet, consisting of the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, pianist, and social committee can form another group and double up in the work, as all of them, with the exception of the president, will be already in another group. This has been done with success. Groups should have a minimum of four or five members. If we have a play and do not have enough members, we "borrow" from the other groups.

The church should decide what phases of the work come under each commission. For instance:

Missionary:

Study of church history, evangelizing, tracing, church literature, lives of past and present church officials, etc.

Devotion:

Study of the three books, and promoting church attendance, daily meditation (family altar), community projects and welfare, etc.

Stewardship:

Developing talents and vocational guidance; understanding and obeying the financial law, appreciating and understanding the marriage contract and responsibility in family and social relationships; promoting Graceland, the church study courses, etc.

Fellowship:

Participating in constructive social activities, conferences and retreats; supporting worthwhile phases of social service and community efforts; appreciating those phases of missions which deal with the brotherhood of man; and studying and practicing the pattern of zionist living.

You will notice I mentioned "daily devotion." In my experience with young people in the past, I have found that if young people do not get the habit of daily meditation in their adolescent years, very few are ever going to develop it later. But youth does not like to study the Bible, I have found, with nothing to help them. Just reading "a chapter a day" has very little appeal. There are several daily meditation books available that are extremely good, being interesting, helpful, and to some extent instructive. Three of these are The Upper Room, The Secret Place, and the Quiet Time. We are using The Upper Room. My only regret is that our church does not have a comparable publication. Perhaps our church will print a daily devotion booklet some day, based on our three books. I feel that it is a definite need, especially for young people.

Realizing that something new very often is undertaken enthusiastically and then dropped, I would be foolish to advocate this system on just our past seven or eight weeks' activity in this branch. However, seeing this carried on for years in local and district young people's organizations of all sizes, with outstanding success, gives me confidence in it. In one group which formerly lost most of its young people to active church leadership, seventy-five per cent at least are now active leaders. Most of these young people say it was the result of their training under this system which stimulated them with a desire to serve.

MUSICAL LIFE OF CHRIST

Kieth: Ladies and Gentlemen:—We are pleased to bring to you this evening our talented group of radio artists. These young people are well known for the excellent quality of their programs. We hope to be able to bring you something of value this evening. We wish to portray something of the life of Christ, His service, devotion and sacrifice.

Grace: In Luke 2: 2-15 we read the account of the birth of Christ.

Kieth: We would be glad if at this time you would join with us seated just where you are, in hymn number 137.

When Jesus was still a baby, according to Jewish custom he was taken to be blessed by a priest of God named Simeon, recorded in

Grace: Reads hymn No. 140 as a poem.

Kieth: Jesus grew into boyhood in the little town of Nazareth, and when 10 years of age was taken up to Jerusalem on a visit with his parents. That visit was quite an unusual one, as you will see from the following:

Kieth: (reads) Luke 2: 46-52.

Pat: Solo: No. 264.

Kieth: No more is told of the life of Christ from the years 10 to 30. That period was one of preparation, and prayer and communication with his Father in heaven.

When he was 30 years of age he was ready to begin his ministry, and according to the wishes of his Father, came to John the Baptist in the wilderness to be baptised by immersion in the River Jordan.

Grace: Matthew 3: 13-17.

Pat & Betty: Duet No. 362 Saints' Hymnal.

Kieth: The first miracle of his ministry took place at Cana in Galilee.

Betty: John 2: 1-11.

Kieth: Christ was very fond of children and one instance is recorded in His ministry where the children were brought to Him for His blessing and we notice here He laid His hands on them and asked His Father's blessings—nowhere in the scriptures do we find an infant being baptized by either immersion or sprinkling.

Pat: Piano solo, 335 (one verse).

Kieth: Jesus performed many miracles during his short ministry. Too many to tell about here this evening. However, one of his outstanding ones is told by Mark in his Gospel.

Grace: Mark 8: 22-25.

Kieth: The ministry of Christ was so successful for the three years that he was able to carry on, that great opposition arose from the leaders of the Jewish religious sects. So much so that he was eventually arrested and brought before the Governor Pontius Pilate. Although Pilate could find no fault in Him he was forced to convict Him and He was led away to be crucified.

Betty: Matthew 27: 22-28.

Kieth: Let us sing softly No. 162, seated right where we are.

Kieth: However Christ, unlike the rest of mankind, did not remain in the grave, and on the third day He arose from the dead.

Don: Mark 16: 1-7.

Pat: Poem, the words of the hymn 166.

Kieth: The last incident, and a very important one for us is recorded in Acts 1: 9-11, where Jesus ascended into heaven. Here if we listen close to the scripture we will notice that He is coming again to Zion where He will reign with his saints.

Grace: Acts 1: 9-11.

Kieth: Before we leave you, let us all bow our heads in prayer to ask God's blessing on our program here this evening.

Kieth: Prayer.

Kieth: We have had great pleasure in being able to bring our artists to you this evening, and now will sign off till the next time we are privileged to be with you. This is station H. O. Z. L. signing off.

But because they no longer believe in free enterprise, millions of young people are potential pushovers for the planner and promoters of alien ideology.

However, alien or not, this ideology has offered ideals and something to believe in. Because it has talked loudly and widely of improving the lot of the common man it has drawn to itself those millions of young people who naturally yearn for a forward-looking ideal.

Communism—and the socialisms and liberalisms which it uses as a smoke screen—talks so well of the wonderful things which it does for people; it has talked so much that liberals and progressives never think to ask for any proof. Doped with 25 years of devious propaganda the younger generation believes in a vague sort of way that socialism and planning will automatically bring about the prosperous conditions which communism has talked about . . . and which capitalism has brought about all around them, without their realizing it.

All the Communist writings from Marx and Engels to Harold Laski and Earl Browder have not a single fact or figure to show that communism has done anything to make life more interesting, more comfortable, or more amusing.

Communists talk of dialectic materialism and their whole ideology is based on material things. But all their writings and all their words are not one-thousandth as impressive as a single page torn from the classified telephone directory of any town in the United States.

For there, in black and white, are goods and services which stagger the imagination.

Unless capitalism can regain the faith of young America, it will inevitably be defeated by totalitarian socialism. All the strength and power and wonder of free enterprise will avail it nothing if it has lost the belief of thinking Americans under the age of 30.

How fantastic it seems that the American commies could take over the country. And how fantastic it seemed, 12 years ago, that a funny little man with a tooth-brush mustache could take over Europe.

Capitalism has got to stop laughing at itself, has got to stop apologizing.

Using its whole giant machinery of persuasion, capitalism must sell the truth to the nation's youth.

Capitalism must create an ideology to tell its story and its purpose—an ideology as attractive and progressive as socialism seems.

Youth must be shown that through its own lack of faith in a free way of life it stands in peril of living in a rationed world.

Amusingly and dramatically, free enterprise must tell its story to the young people of America—tell it in all the mass-appeal mediums of which it is master.

Capitalism must create an ideology to tell the truth about itself; a young and vigorous ideology managed, planned, and promoted by young men who are master mechanics in the vast apparatus of opinion and amusement.

Capitalism has the voice. It has only to find the words.

High maintenance costs of asphalt and tar roads 10 years ago sent W. K. Beckham of the South Carolina State Highway Department in search of a material which would prevent surface breaks and reduce edge failures through erosion. Under his direction, 200 feet of experimental road was built with strips of coarse cotton fabric laid over the earth base. The fabric was saturated with hot asphalt and allowed to harden. Then another coat of asphalt and sand was laid on. After two years of traffic under all weather conditions, the road was tested. It was in as good condition as when it was laid. The cotton fabric had prevented surface cracking by thwarting the upward pressure of the road base, and likewise prevented water from seeping down into the base from the top.—The Literary Digest.

Worship Suggestions for February

By Alma Louise Utz

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "FOOTPRINTS ON THE SANDS OF TIME"

(These suggestions are offered with a view to helping all whose duty it is to arrange worship services during February. No attempt has been made to plan a detailed service for any one age, but rather to offer thoughts and source materials for leaders to rearrange, enlarge upon, and grade according to the age of the group to be served.)

FEBRUARY 3, 1946

"FOOTPRINTS OF GODLY LIVES"

Instrumental Prelude: "Look for the Beautiful," Saints' Hymnal, 209.

Call to Worship:

'Tis not the sermons that we preach,
'Tis not the prayers we say,
Nor yet the lessons that we teach,
That help us other souls to reach
And cheer upon the way.

Not these alone that tell most clear
Which way our heart winds blow;
'Tis not the words our neighbors hear,
But like a trumpet far and near Ourselves our actions show.

How like a book our lives are spread,
And all who run may read;
Our bravest words may fall back dead,
Our lives by simplest souls are read—
They are our truest creed.

—Max Hill.

Hymn: "Take My Life, and Let it Be," Saints' Hymnal, 307.

Prayer Thoughts: Our Heavenly Father, today we humbly place our lives before Thee, asking thy blessings upon us as we move forward in the work of thy church. It is our desire to indeed make our lives our truest creed, and we pray for thy guidance and direction that we may never offer less than our best in thy service.

Hymn: "Be with Me, Lord, Where'er I Go," Saints' Hymnal, 305.

Reading: One of the finest tributes paid a Christian citizen was that given in the Kansas City Journal for December 12, 1914, at the time of the death of the late Joseph Smith:

"He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived; as such he died; and as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith. His followers themselves can have no legacy of remembrances more honorable than this appraisal of the people among whom he lived and labored so many years.

"Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his own creed, tolerant of those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character."

Hymn: "Onward to Zion," Saints' Hymnal, 436.

Benediction.

FEBRUARY 10, 1946

"FOOTPRINTS OF TRUTH"

Prelude: "I Would Be True," Saints' Hymnal, 294.

Call to Worship:

A church can't be measured by creed or by faith,
Or by books that men write of her love.
A true test comes in the lives of her men,
As they strive to serve God above.
There are times that they fail, but who would expect

No failure, unless it be heaven.
Yet one or two men, with lives consecrated
May be to the whole, the leaven.

A church is only as strong as its weakest link,

And it's probable that link is I,
But men before me have made the grade,
And I know I shall if I try.

I'll take their lives as a standard today,

I'll note their virtues and gains,

And then my church will never fail,

As long as a good life remains.

—Norma Anne Kirkendall.

Hymn: "I'm Pressing on the Upward Way," Saints' Hymnal, 241.

Prayer Thoughts:

Dear God, We thank thee for the guide posts to that higher ground which thou hast set up before us. As we strive to build thy kingdom, we pray that we may always walk close to thee, never doubting, but determined that thy will be done.

Suggested Hymns:

"Soldiers of Christ, Arise," 217.

"Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," 218.

"Fight the Good Fight with All Thy Might," 208.

Scriptural Readings:

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Philippians 4:13.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing."—John 15: 5.

"Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore, lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."—James 1: 19-22.

Challenge Poem:

THE CALL

In days long gone God spake unto our sires,
"Courage! Launch out! A new world build for me!"

Then to the deep they set their ships and sailed,

And came to land and prayed that here might be

A realm from pride and despotism free,

A place for peace, the home of liberty.

Lo in these days, to all good men and true,
God speaks again—"Launch out upon the deep

And win for me a world of righteousness!"

Can we, free men, at such an hour still sleep?

Oh God of Freedom, stir us in our night,
That we set forth for justice, truth, and right!
—Thomas Clark.

Hymn:

"THY WILL BE DONE:"

(Tune: "Onward Christian Soldiers")

Onward, Saints, together hear our battle cry
Asking God's direction, as we bravely try
To unfurl the banner of the Lord, our God;
Following in the pathway that the Christ has trod.

We are all determined as we march along,
In our souls reecho strains of Zion's song.
Thy will be done! Father, now we join the song

With the words once uttered by thy Holy Son,

Singing not in sadness, but with hearts ablaze!

Now we raise our voices in the Father's praise.

Onward, maching upward! Forward we must go!

With our thoughts united, Sing! Thy will be done!
—Alma Louise Utz.

FEBRUARY 17, 1946

"FOOTPRINTS OF HEROES"

Prelude: "Marching with the Heroes," Saints' Hymnal, 229.

Call to Worship:

"I sought for a man to stand in the gap,"
God's word

Still rings on the air today, and his search goes on

As earnestly as when he first was heard Stating his need in the earth's far early dawn;

"I sought for a man among men that would make The hedge, and stand in the gap before me in the land."

And then he uttered the four brief words that break
 The heart: "And I found none." None that would stand. . . .
 O men, surely among us can be found One man today in the world's dark, desperate hour;
 A man to stand firm-footed upon the ground, And meet the forces of evil with God's power;
 To end the search that began when time began,
 And God in his need cried out: "I sought for a man."
 —Grace Noll Crowell.

Hymn: "God Send Us Men Whose Aim 'Twill Be," Saints' Hymnal, 223.

Prayer Thought:

"O God of ages, help us . . . such citizens to be . . . that children's children here may sing . . . the song of liberty."

Hymn: "My Country 'Tis of Thee," 423.

Scripture Readings:

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance."
 —Psalm 14: 34.

"If thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, . . . the Lord thy God will set thee high above all nations of the earth."—Deuteronomy 28: 1.

Ether 1: 29-35.

Solo: "God Bless America," or "O God, Beneath Thy Guiding Hand," 422.

Reading:

We are proud to be Americans. May we live that America may be proud of us. People of many nations look to America as the land of freedom and opportunity. God designated it as such to our Nephite fathers of Book of Mormon times. But he did not promise liberty and justice as a perpetual gift to those who should live on the promised land. It is a condition that must be attained and retained by the constant effort and loyalty of its citizens. Liberty of speech, freedom of worship, and equality for all did not "just happen." They were purchased for us by those who have gone before, who have lived bravely and died nobly that we might enjoy these blessings.

We observe the birthdays of two great American patriots this month—George Washington, the hero of the earliest chapter in the history of American liberty, and Abraham Lincoln, that tall, awkward homespun humanitarian who brought the ship of state safely through those dark and cloudy days when the nation stood divided, brother against brother, father against son. We cannot all hold the same high place in the heart of America as did these heroes of days past, but

Lives of great men all remind us
 We can make our lives sublime,
 And departing, leave behind us
 Footprints in the sands of time.

Footprints, that perhaps another,
 Sailing o'er life's solemn main
 A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
 Seeing, shall take heart again.
 —Longfellow.

Hymn: "The Star-Spangled Banner," 419, or "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory," 421.

Prayer:

"Lord, while for all mankind we pray,
 Of every clime and coast, Oh, hear us for our native land, The land we love the most. Unite us in the sacred love Of knowledge, truth and thee, And let our hills and valleys shout the songs of Liberty."

"FOOTSTEPS OF PERSEVERANCE"

Prelude: "Trying to Walk in the Steps of the Savior," Zion's Praises, 100.

Call to Worship:

Lord, let me work with Thee each day,
 Guard well my thoughts, direct my way,
 Sustained and cheered from day to day;
 In word and deed, Lord, make me clean.
 I then can walk in Thine own way,
 Sustained and cheered from day to day;
 Let me Thy servant wholly be
 To bless mankind and make them free.
 —Selected.

Suggested Hymns from which to choose:

"Savior, Like A Shepherd Lead Us," 263.

"Be With Me, Lord, Where'er I Go," 305.

"He Leadeth Me," 264.

Scripture Readings:

"And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandment is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk, even as he walked."—I John 2: 3-6.

" . . . if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."—I John 1: 7.

"Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—John 8: 12.

Vocal Duet: "The Sands Have Been Washed from the Footprints," (Rode-heaver's Special Solos and Duets.)

Meditation Reading:

O Lord, 'tis such a little thing to ask,
 And yet it means so much to me;
 I fear to meet the newborn day
 Unless I walk with Thee.

I want to feel my hand in Thine
 Thou leading where I cannot see;
 I want to know Thy way is mine;
 I cannot, lest Thou walk with me.

Thy presence, Lord, through all this day,
 From dawning seen 'till silent night,
 Is needed, as the air, the food,
 Sustaining, guiding as a light.

The choice I needs must make,
 When mine so false would be;
 Help me the straightened way to take,
 Thy way, and walk with Thee.
 —"K" Stevenson Shaffer.

Hymn: "The Old, Old Path," 260.

Benediction.

How I Ascertain the Will of God

1. I seek at the beginning to get my heart into such a state that it has no will of its own in regard to a given matter.

Nine tenths of the trouble with people is just here. Nine tenths of the difficulties are overcome when our hearts are ready to do the Lord's will, whatever it may be. When one is truly in this state, it is usually but a little way to the knowledge of what His will is.

2. Having done this, I do not leave the result to feeling or simple impression. If I do so, I make myself liable to great delusions.

3. I seek the will of the Spirit of God through, or in connection with, the Word of God.

The Spirit and the Word must be combined. If I look to the Spirit alone without the Word, I lay myself open to great delusions also. If the Holy Ghost guides us at all, He will do it according to the Scriptures and never contrary to them.

4. Next I take into account providential circumstances. These often plainly indicate God's will in connection with his Word and Spirit.

5. I ask God in prayer to reveal his will to me aright.

6. Thus, through prayer to God, the study of the Word, and reflection, I come to a deliberate judgment according to the best of my ability and knowledge, and if my mind is thus at peace, and continues so after two or three more petitions, I proceed accordingly.

In trivial matters, and in transactions involving most important issues, I have found this method always effective.—George Muller.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Knobnoster, Missouri

Pastor, R. E. Burgess

Holden Stake

Lexington, Missouri

Pastor, Luther Payne

The Saints at Lexington are happy to report the redecorating of the upper auditorium, and the renovation of the lower auditorium. Church school classes are now meeting regularly on Sundays.

On August 28, a surprise party was held at the home of Pastor Luther Payne in honor of Sister Emma Payne's birthday. The evening was spent in visiting and listening to music provided by those attending. Doris Brock and Robert Lacey were the chief musicians, playing several selections on the violin and piano. A song fest preceded the presentation of gifts and serving of refreshments; several of the thirty guests were out-of-town visitors.

Neatha Johnson's class of junior age boys presented the Lexington congregation with an American flag several weeks ago. A collection for the purchasing of the flag was taken regularly on Sundays until the necessary amount had been received. Clifford Long, Holden Stake religious education director, gave a short talk on the history of the flag at the presentation service. Leyman Luther Johnson and Bobby Paris played piano solos, and the class pledged their allegiance to the flag. At the close of the service, the congregation sang, "America" and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The annual business meeting was held September 11; Ward Hougas, stake president, Bishop T. A. Beck, and High Priest Roy Weldon were present. Luther Payne was elected pastor for the coming year.

Judge Frank Cottrell has bought a 240-acre farm near Lexington and will soon be a worshiper with the Saints here.

Since the reunion, the women have organized and now meet once a week for study. Mary Brock has been selected as teacher.

A farewell party was held for Doris Brock who left September 12 to attend Graceland. She was given a present by the women's department. Doris will be greatly missed as she has been pianist for the Lexington congregation.

Stake president Ward Hougas was the speaker Sunday, October 1; his sermon was an inspiring one and it was genuinely appreciated by both the Lexington and Richmond Saints who were present.

October 3 the women's department met at the home of Sister G. Beard for a covered dish luncheon. Several women from the Richmond congregation were present, and a very pleasant day resulted. After the luncheon, a study period was held, after which Emma Payne led a devotional.

October 14 the Saints of Lexington dispensed with their services to attend the Holden Stake conference.

Thanksgiving services were held November 21. Those attending thanked God for peace and the right to worship as they wished without fear of being molested. After the meeting, a dinner was held in the lower auditorium.

Recent speakers in Lexington have been Ward Hougas, Roy Weldon, Clifford Long, T. A. Beck, and Robert Hawley.

—Anna Howe, reporter.

Holden, Missouri

Pastor, Robert Dillon

Visiting speakers at Holden during October and November were Elder C. J. Long, Bishop T. A. Beck, Elder E. P. Darnell, Stake president Ward A. Hougas, and radio director Evan A. Fry.

A new teachers training class has been organized by Mrs. B. S. Lambkin which meets on Wednesday nights at the close of prayer service. Metta Anderson is the present instructor.

Proceeds from the booth sponsored by Holden branch at the local fair in October made a nice addition to the building fund. Work on the basement is progressing, although much still remains to be done.

Holden was well represented at the stake conference held at Warrensburg in October. The choir, directed by Metta Anderson, sang a special number for the afternoon service on October 14.

An impressive children's promotion service was held in October under the direction of Mrs. W. K. Gard. Daniel Day and Harold Ulshafer received their certificates of promotion from the junior department.

The Saints joined with other worshipers at the Methodist church in Holden for a union service held Thanksgiving morning. Their thanks, as many others throughout the nation, were for a world at peace.

On Sunday evening, November 25, the Zion's League sponsored Evan Fry as their guest speaker. The church was filled with members and townspeople who had become acquainted with Brother Fry through his morning radio sermons.

Bad weather was no obstacle for the Knobnoster Saints when the Holden Stake conference was being held in Warrensburg, October 12, 13, and 14. Outstanding events of the conference were the sermons by Bishop DeLapp and Evan Fry, the Zion's League party, and the ordination of two young men from the local congregation. Fred Price was ordained to the office of priest, and Bob Brendel to the office of deacon.

Guest speakers of the past two months have been Ward Hougas, Nelson Gard, Clair Weldon and T. A. Beck. Their encouraging sermons were greatly appreciated.

Showers were given Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Holland, and Mr. and Mrs. Vinton Bugbee in October. Both were held in the church basement where games could be played and refreshments served.

Ghosts and goblins assembled at the church October 30 for a party in the basement. Lavona Gard, Ada Mae and Shirley Rogers were awarded prizes for the best costumes, and Lorene Mauzey for being the hardest to recognize. Cider and doughnuts were served as refreshments.

The League is working to improve, enlarge and create more interest in its activities. The group attended the show, "Sign of the Cross," on November 6, and on November 18, the Leaguers were in charge of the candle-lighting service held at the church. They attended a Jewish worship held at the Sedalia air base chapel on Friday, November 16. In return, Lt. Passman, who is in charge of all Hebrew services conducted at the chapel, spoke at Knobnoster on November 18; his topic was, "The Brotherhood of Man Against the Atomic Bomb."

Thanksgiving night found the entire congregation assembled in the church basement around tables laden with turkey and the usual accompanying delicacies. After the meal, they adjourned to the upper auditorium for an amateur radio program given over station XLNT-WHRS (Excellent-Welcoming Home Returning Servicemen). Elder John Nutt acted as master of ceremonies, with Fred Price as announcer. The program was dedicated to the boys who had just returned from the service. Three more have recently received their discharges: William Norman, Wayne Burgess and Robert Price.

Clifford Long was present at the Communion service in December. He called a meeting of all teachers and officers in the church school to discuss ideas and ways of improving classes and creating more interest in the church school.

—Evelyn Burgess, reporter.

Marshall, Missouri

Pastor, H. G. Thayer

Walter Smith and family of Buckner were welcome visitors November 10. Brother Smith delivered the sermon at the eleven o'clock hour.

Cottage prayer services are being held regularly and are proving most successful.

The service November 21 (branch night) was in charge of the women's department; Sister Merle Richardson directed the program in which the Blue Bird girls took part. A Bible quiz and refreshments finished the evening's entertainment.

A covered dish supper was held at the home of Dolly Dishman on November 29; twenty-one Zion's Leaguers were present.

Recent additions to the Marshall congregation are Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Norman and their family.

—Bernice Tyree, reporter.

Grandview, Missouri

Pastor, Lester Bronson

The Grandview Saints, under the direction of their new officers, are making remarkable progress and increasing their membership.

Visiting speakers in the past month have been Elders Vere Turney, Harrisonville; C. J. Long, Independence; Clifford Wilcox, Independence; and Charles Pooler, Peculiar.

New members of the Grandview congregation are Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Witzke of Oakland, California, and Mr. and Mrs. Grover Harp of Kansas City. Both families have purchased homes in Grandview.

Out-of-town Saints who have been giving their assistance are Mr. and Mrs. Paul Kelly, Peculiar; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Morical and children, Kansas City; and Mrs. Richard Langford, Independence. Mrs. Morical is director of music, and Mrs. Langford, pianist. Lt. Phillip Padberg of Independence has been assisting as organist.

Bishop T. A. Beck called a meeting of the financial committee November 8 to plan a schedule of work for repairing the church.

The annual union Thanksgiving service was held at the Latter Day Saint church this year; Reverend Carl Hickman, pastor of the Methodist church, gave the sermon.

—Agnes Cockefair, reporter.

Sedalia, Missouri

Pastor, A. A. Weaver

A profit of $51.39 was made at a Hallowe'en carnival held October 25 in the church basement. This money is to be used for repairing the basement. Several guests from Warrensburg and Marshall were present for the occasion.

November 22 (branch night) Ward Hougas showed colored slides as a part of the evening's entertainment. Later a fish supper was held in the basement.

Guest speakers the past month have been Nelson Gard and T. A. Beck of Warrensburg, and Brother Mauzey of Knobnoster.

Pastor A. A. Weaver was in charge of the Communion service for December. A special number, "Break Thou the Bread of Life," was sung by Ora Hansen and LeVera Griggs, Ethel Pugh accompanying.

—Elsie Wiggins, reporter.

Tulare, California

Pastor, James Damron

Dedication services for the Tulare church were held November 25. The opening feature was a call to worship, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it," followed by a hymn, "For the Beauty of the Earth." Herman Davis of Sacramento gave the invocation, after which the congregation recited the Lord's Prayer. The girl's chorus, composed of Mary Ellen and Alice Snively, Marlene and Jeanne Powell, Maxine Martin, Shirley Schilta, Doris Damron and Louise Renaud, sang the prayer response and an anthem, "Bless This House." After the scripture lesson and hymn, "God of Our Fathers," the ceremony of dedication began by Pastor James Damron presenting the deed and keys to Bishop Burdick of Sacramento, who represented the presiding bishopric. Bishop Burdick accepted the keys and then handed them to Deacon Walter Damron. At the close of the ceremony, Hazel Damron sang "Open the Gates of the Temple." John Rushton gave the dedicatory prayer and the sermon, and Bishop Burdick, the benediction. Several Saints from Dinuba and Bakersfield attended the service. A basket luncheon was served at noon.

—Leila Renaud, reporter.

Independence, Missouri

Stone Church

Pastor, Garland E. Tickemeyer

Bishop G. L. DeLapp Speaker

At the morning worship hour, Sunday, December 16, Bishop DeLapp addressed the Stone Church congregation. He dealt with some of the specific problems facing the church in the current world crisis. Emphasis was given to the necessity of the church's making a contribution to the world finding solutions for some of those problems.

107 Baptisms in 1945

A baptismal service was held at 2 o'clock in the lower auditorium, December 16, and five more members were added to the Stone Church congregation.

White Masque Players in Community Gift

The White Masque players presented their annual Christmas gift to the community at the Stone Church, December 19. This year's entertainment was a musical pageant, "Unto Us," written by Eveline Burgess and directed by Helen Brackenbury. The pageant pointed toward the problems of 1945.

Year's Work of the Independence Mother's Club

The Independence Mother's Club held its regular monthly luncheon at the home of Mrs. L. F. P. Curry. This club sponsors the nursery for the Independence Sanitarium and its annual report showed that it has furnished 2,315 garments for the babies in 1945. About 950 of these articles have been donated by friends from other states; many cash donations have also been received. This year the club has purchased an incubator and two heated bassinets. Over 700 babies have been cared for in the nursery so far this year. Mrs. June Short was elected president for the coming year.

Lieutenant Commander Don Smith Home

Lieutenant Commander Don Smith, son of President and Mrs. Israel A. Smith, is home on a terminal leave of ninety-one days. This is his fifth year in service. He was at Pearl Harbor at the beginning of the war, and was then sent to Norfolk, Virginia, where he taught navigation.

Liberty Street Church

Pastor, Howard C. Timm

Kevin Michael, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Arthur Dell, was blessed December 9, by R. V. Hopkins and Amos T. Higdon. Mrs. Dell will be remembered as the former Ethel McLees.

To show appreciation for help received when purchasing and remodeling their place of worship, the Liberty Street Mission entertained members of the Liberty Street congregation with a fellowship banquet Tuesday evening, December 11. Talks were given by Cecil Walker, Leon Look, Howard Timm and Clair Green; Bobby Sparks and Kenneth Green sang a duet; the women's chorus rendered a special number also. A song fest was enjoyed by all present.

An excellent volunteer program furnished entertainment for Liberty Street's family night, December 21.

Christmas was observed in the various services December 23. At the church school worship Dorothy Phillips sang, "O Holy Night," and "Away In a Manger" was sung by the kindergarten class. The theme talk was by Wynne Jones.

The 11 o'clock hour was devoted to a special program including a Bible reading, "The Birth of Christ," by Oliver Houston, Jr., and Christmas carols and anthems by the choir. The sermonette was by Pastor Timm.

At the same hour, in the lower auditorium, the juniors presented a play, "The Lost Christmas Recipe," under the direction of Miss Ruth Zion. The Girls' Choir, directed by Mrs. Frances Tuttle, rendered the musical part of the play.

A large crowd was present at the Zion's League service, December 17. Myron Zerr of Gudgell Park gave a splendid talk on the financial law. On December 23 the League went Christmas caroling. They enjoyed a party at the home of their directors December 1; on Saturday night, December 22, they sponsored the picture, "Beyond Tomorrow," which was shown in the church basement by Joseph Frick.

The Zion's League was in charge of the evening service December 30. John Darling delivered the sermon entitled, "Youth's Place in the World Today." As a special number the girls' trio, composed of Kathryn Thompson, Frances Marie Tuttle and Helen Holsworth, sang "You Must Open the Door." The invocation and benediction were by Fred Tignor.

—Ethel Hart, reporter.

Kirtland, Ohio

Pastor, John W. Banks

Kirtland Saints honored their oldest member, Lemuel Curry, on his ninetyeth birthday, November 1. The celebration, arranged by the women's department, was a covered dish supper followed by a short program and the presentation of gifts by Mabel Thomas, women's department leader. Tributes were paid Brother Curry by his two sons; Earl gave an interesting word picture of his father's life, and John composed an original poem about his father, Joseph Biggs and Edward Bailey gave brief talks and William Householder sang several old favorites of Brother Curry. Over a hundred friends were present.

Tuesday evening, November 13, found the auditorium with its twelve tables beautifully decorated in keeping with the months of the year. One hundred ninety people assembled to enjoy the branch birthday party. Proceeds from the party were used to augment the organ fund. A five minute program from each table provided entertainment for the evening. Outstanding contributions came from the performers at the June table, who staged a mock wedding, and those representing August with a small scale model of the Temple and appropriate landscaping with miniature tents scattered around as a reminder that August is reunion month. Captains for the tables were Oakley Isenburg, Tommy Thomas, John Banks, Arnold Ourth, William Rimes, Arthur Burt, Gerald Davidson, Arthur Sheppard, Lawrence Whitcomb, Robert Allen, Paul Booker and Clyde Ebeling.

Wednesday, November 21, Kirtland Saints were invited to join with members of the South Kirtland church for an evening of worship commemorating the 325th anniversary of the signing of the Mayflower Compact. Preceding the sermon by Reverend Hall, Pastor John Banks read the Compact and eight members of the choir, under the direction of Clyde Ebeling, provided special music.

Bright sunlight broke through the clouds on Sunday, November 18, filling the temple with radiance and creating a beautiful setting for the Thanksgiving sermon by Pastor John W. Banks. At the eleven o'clock service Elizabeth Manross, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvan Manross, was blessed by Elders Albert Wouters and Arnold Ourth.

A series of Sunday evening sermons have been given by Elder Casimer Nikel of Cleveland. His discourses have dealt largely with the apostasy and restoration. An unusually large and appreciative audience has attended these meetings.

Wednesday evening prayer services, under the direction of Pastor Banks assisted by Arthur Sheppard and I. E. Thomas, have also been well attended.

—Elizabeth Thomas, reporter.

Lamoni Stake

Oland Congregation

Pastor, Roy Kopp

On November 18 a group of Saints from Lamoni came to spend the day with Oland congregation. A basket dinner was held at noon; during this hour, a photographer, representing the Successful Farming magazine, took many pictures, some of which will appear in the February issue of that publication. A story of the church will accompany the pictures. Several Oland Saints went to Lamoni on a return visit the following Sunday.

On December 23 a Christmas program was held at the church. After the group joined in caroling, the choir sang an anthem, and the young people presented a play. At the close of the play, Roy Kopp sang a solo, and Santa Claus distributed gifts and treats.

This activity was well attended despite the unfavorable weather.

—Vera Blair, reporter.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Pastor, A. N. Atkinson

A children's program was scheduled for Sunday morning, December 23, but could not be held because so many were ill. A few, however, came and sang Christmas carols during the church school hour and were given treats afterward. In the evening, a Christmas service of story and song was carried out under the direction of Dorothy Fusselman. The story of a great adventure by a lad on the outskirts of Jerusalem and his thrilling adventures as he joined the caravans journeying to Bethlehem to be taxed, was read by Dorothy. The story was interspersed with solos, duets, and choruses. The singers were surrounded with lighted candles and Christmas decorations. Edith Fusselman played an organ prelude of Christmas music, and accompanied the singers.

The pastor and his wife were presented a gift at the close of the entertainment; Mrs. J. E. Bishop made the presentation speech. —The Nauvoo Independent.

President Caroled by Independence Messiah Chorus

Soon after his arrival at the little White House, President Truman was serenaded by about fifty of the Independence Messiah chorus singers. Irby Mundy lent his truck for the occasion; it served as a portable conductor's stand and platform for the piano. Evan Fry was at the keyboard, and Franklin Weddle, of course, directed. After several carols, the singers decided to do the "Hallelujah Chorus" in hopes the President would come outside the house. When this failed to bring results, someone suggested they sing, "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," saying, "That'll bring him out!" and after the first few notes the front door of the White House opened and a smiling President Truman walked down the steps. He greeted Director Weddle on the walk, while Margaret stood on the porch listening to the carols. Pictures of the carolers appeared in both the Kansas City Times and Independence Examiner.

Spokane, Washington

District President, H. E. Constance

The Spokane district annual conference was held in the Spokane church, October 27 and 28. Apostle D. T. Williams and Missionary E. A. Ledsworth ministered greatly to the saints through the class work and preaching services. "Come, Let Us Build" was the expression of thought which continued throughout the two days' services.

The conference started with registration Saturday morning; many saints from out of town, were on time for this and the first general class. The Zion's League group met for several class periods at which Brother Ledsworth was the speaker. Apostle Williams conducted several general class discussions. Sister L. Claire Chapman, Pasco, Washington, lectured to the women on "Personalizing the Home," while Apostle Williams conducted a priesthood class. The Marietta Circle of Spokane served luncheon at noon.

During the afternoon session Apostle Williams and Elder Ledsworth jointly directed the class discussion, emphasizing the need of missionary preparation within the organized groups looking forward to greater missionary endeavor in the future. A men's leadership class was directed by Margaret Gibson of Coeur d'Alene,

Idaho, with discussion following the theme, "Build Ye More Stately Mansions."

In order to raise funds for their 1946 Zion's League retreat, the young people sponsored a banquet Saturday evening which was served to ninety guests. "What Will Your Harvest Be?" was the theme of this occasion; Elder Ledsworth acted as toastmaster and Stanley Johnson of Spokane was in charge of a varied program of music and dramatics. Apostle Williams closed the day's activities with words of counsel and wisdom to those assembled.

"The City of God Is Waiting for Me" proved an inspirational theme for an outstanding devotional service held Sunday morning; district president, H. E. Constance was in charge. Gladys Fout, district church school leader, was in charge of a beautiful worship service during church school. Apostle Williams delivered an inspiring and long-to-be-remembered sermon at the 11:00 o'clock hour. A basket dinner was served by the Spokane hostesses at noon.

A business session was held in the afternoon, at which time officers were elected to serve the coming year.

The conference closed with a 6:00 o'clock vesper service; a short play was presented; the vesper challenge was given by Elder Ledsworth.

A mid-winter conference and institute was planned to be held February 21 to 24. Dr. Floyd McDowell and Apostle D. T. Williams will be present.

During the past year the new system of contacting nonresident saints through the nonresident supervisor has brought very satisfying results in the Spokane district. A number of such saints have filed inventories, made financial offerings to district funds and contacted district officers in numerous ways as a result of this correspondence. A church school has been started in Clark Fork, Idaho, where a number of families meet together to study.

In Pullman, Washington, a group of scattered Saints meet every other Sunday; the district presidency provides ministry, and in recent months Evangelist J. F. Curtis has baptized eight adults and children from that vicinity.

A Zion's League rally, the first since the war, brought over fifty young people together to worship for a two-day period in June. The ministry of Missionary E. A. Ledsworth added much to the outstanding success of this gathering.

Another League retreat, a three-day pioneering venture for Spokane District, was held in August. Nearly forty young people met on beautiful Coeur d'Alene Lake where they camped out to worship and play together. District president H. E. Constance and his associate, Stanley Fout, were in charge of this new experiment which proved so successful that the young people are eagerly planning a bigger and better retreat for the coming year. Elder Philip Moore and his wife attended, adding much to the success of this occasion through their ministry in class work, play periods, and musical leadership. As a result of this endeavor, six nonmember young people expressed their desire for baptism, some of which have already been solemnized.

—Marguerite Constance, reporter.

Buffalo, New York

Pastor, Walter O. Simpson

The following officers have been elected to serve throughout the coming church year: Walter O. Simpson, pastor; John R. Kennedy, councilor; Paul H. Braman, councilor and branch secretary; Edith Braman, assistant secretary and reporter; David Morris, treasurer; Grace Schaefer, assistant treasurer; Maurine Whitehead, director of music; Robert L. Harris, church school director and book steward; P. L. Weegar, director of recreation and expression; Florence Kennedy, director of the women's department and Zion's League supervisor.

—Walter Simpson, reporter.

Nowata, Oklahoma

Pastor, O. A. Duncan

With the return of its servicemen, Nowata branch is finding new life and activity. District president, William Patterson came twice during the year to speak and minister to the Saints. Other out-of-town speakers have been George Wright, J. B. Smalley, and James Langley. A church school social was held at the home of O. A. Duncan; twenty-two attended. A short program provided entertainment for the evening, after which refreshments were served. This is to be a regular monthly feature from now on.

At the annual business meeting the following officers were elected for the coming year: O. A. Duncan, pastor; Berl Caldren, church school director; Mrs. W. T. Hayworth, women's leader and branch secretary; Paulene Burton, church school secretary; and Effie Lumm, director of music.

—Effie Lumm, reporter.

Graceland College Notes

The Graceland College department of music presented in formal recital several voice and piano students on Sunday afternoon, December 9. A group of three Beethoven sonatas were played commemorating the 175th anniversary of the composer. Selections by Dohnanyi, Mendelssohn, Romberg, and various other composers were included in the program. Gracelanders taking part in the recital were June Andrew, Helen Epling, Bonnbelle Nelson, Virginia Ayers, Helen Norwood, Betty Russell, Odessa Barlow, Lorna Howard, Guinn Binns, Don Jones and Betty Sears.

On Sunday evening, December 16, the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society presented its Christmas program. A capacity audience enjoyed choral numbers by Handel and Mendelssohn, and vocal solos by students Lorna Howard, Don Jones, and Betty Sears. Herbert Lively and Henry Anderson, instructors at Graceland, were featured singers also. Prelude music was played by the college string ensemble; they used selections from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne Suite" and Yon's "Gesu Bambino." The Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society is conducted by Henry Anderson.

Butler, Missouri

Pastor, Wilbur W. Smith

A combined Communion and confirmation service was held November 4. Elizabeth Irene Sutton and John Wesley Strange were confirmed by Elders Ralph Murdock, Charles Sutton and Wilbur Smith. Colonel Dean Gaugh gave a short talk on conversion; Bertha Rogers and Charles Burch sang, "My Jesus I Love Thee." At the evening service, Mary O'Neal of Rich Hill sang, "I'm Sure I Shall Not Pass Again This Way."

The exchange of speakers has brought the following to the Butler pulpit recently: Frank Mills, Joseph Ruchaber and John Deller, all of Rich Hill.

The music department, under the direction of Bertha Rogers, is doing some commendable work. Sister Rogers was soloist at the Butler Music Club Christmas program. Both the junior and adult choir provided special music for the Thanksgiving service.

The young people are lending their talents to make church projects successful. Many returning servicemen are also taking an active part in church functions.

The women's department held a bazaar and rummage sale November 30 and December 1 which netted $150. These proceeds will be applied to the building fund. Stella Smith is serving as department leader.

—Alta Dutton, reporter.

Rich Hill, Missouri

Pastor, Arlie D. Allen

Under the able leadership of Elder Arlie D. Allen the Rich Hill branch is going forward and becoming more alert to responsibility. Activities of the church include a meeting of the priesthood every first Sunday of the month, and a weekly meeting on Monday nights at which members of the priesthood are assigned some family to visit during the evening. Associate pastor, John D. Deller, is in charge of this work. Wednesday evening prayer services are held regularly, and are always well attended. Neva Anderson is doing a commendable job as church school supervisor; there are classes for all ages. Mary LeNeve has assumed leadership of the children's department and has organized classes for four different age groups. Every Sunday, except Communion, junior church is held during the eleven o'clock hour. Under the supervision of Henry LeNeve, the Zions League meets both morning and evening on Sundays for classwork. Thursday nights they meet at the church for recreation.

The women's department is supervised by Ola Allen and her two associates, Gertrude Joy and Mrs. George Stuart. They meet twice each month for classwork and quilting. They are studying Roy Cheville's "Studies in the Zion Home and Family." Money which is raised through projects sponsored by the women is being used for branch expenses and the building fund.

October 28, the eleven o'clock hour was devoted to Graceland Day. With Elder Arlie Allen in charge, the following Gracelanders spoke: Lt. J. C. Ruchaber, Mrs. Clark Hursh, Donna McAlister, and Elder F. W. Mills. Each told how Graceland had helped him in church work and in solving every day problems.

The League sponsored a Halloween party the night of October 29. Everyone, regardless of age, was invited and all had a pleasant time. Donna McAlister was in charge of the games; refreshments were served at the close of the party.

Recent guest speakers have been Elders C. W. Sutton and Wilber Smith, both of Butler.

Those from Rich Hill attending the district priesthood institute November 16, 17 and 18 were: Elders Arlie Allen and John Deller, Priest Arlo LeNeve, and Deacons Everett Anderson and Henry LeNeve. Each expressed the feeling that his time had been well spent.

Several new members have moved to Rich Hill in the past few months. Among those purchasing homes are Mr. and Mrs. Parson of Johnson City, and Mary Chapman, formerly of Joplin.

Preceding the prayer service held November 21, the children had a Thanksgiving party in the church annex. After their party, they marched into the service singing "Jesus, A Friend to Trust," and occupied the front row of seats. At the close of the invocation they sang "We Thank Thee, Heavenly Father."

On November 28 and 29, the men met at the church to enlarge and repair the basement so that it would house the new furnace when it arrives. They also graveled the drive in front of the church. While the men were working, the ladies met to quilt and make rugs for the bazaar.

On the evening of November 30, the branch Thanksgiving dinner was held in the church annex under the supervision of the women's department. Everyone came with well-filled baskets. After dinner Mary O'Neal and Donna McAlister took charge of the entertainment which consisted of a song fest and games.

Recent visitors have been Elder and Mrs. Wilber Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Smith, Butler; Lucy Conyers and Edith Brotherton, Independence; Mr. and Mrs. Evans Roberts, Taperville; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Cresterson, Ava; and Mr. and Mrs. Ed Tienna, California.

Eastern Colorado District Conference

The Eastern Colorado District Conference will convene on January 26 and 27 at Denver, Colorado, Speer Boulevard at Logan. Apostle D. T. Williams and Dr. Floyd Mr. McDowell will be present. All district officers are asked to report in writing to the conference. The priesthood will also be asked to report labors performed between July 1, 1945, and January 1, 1946. The election of General Conference delegates will be held. The first service is scheduled for 9:15 A. M., Saturday, January 26.

—Arthur E. Stoff, district president.

Southern New England District Conference

The Saints of Southern New England district spent a profitable day November 25, 1945, when they assembled from all branches of the district for a one-day conference at Providence, Rhode Island.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Apostle John Garver were present. Their presence and messages were greatly appreciated. Bishop DeLapp was the speaker at the 11 A. M. service and again at 2:45 in the afternoon. He spoke on the conference theme, "Bring Forth Zion."

A prayer service, which began at 9:30 A. M., was the first service of the day. It challenged all with the theme "Seek to Bring Forth and Establish the Cause of Zion."

Dinner was served to those attending the conference by the Zion's League and Marietta Club of the Providence branch.

At 1:30 in the afternoon, the pastors, women's group leaders, and the Graceland alumni chapter met in various parts of the church to discuss problems and plan events for the coming months.

Music for the conference was provided by soloists and the Providence choir. At the 11:00 A. M. service, a solo, "Trust in Him," was sung by Mrs. Charles Cockcroft, and an anthem was presented by the Providence choir. Mrs. Everett York was at the organ and Mrs. James Milligan was at the piano.

In the afternoon a duet, "Something for Thee," was sung by Mrs. Charles Cockcroft and Mrs. Gerald Tift, and the Providence choir presented an anthem, "Sun of My Soul." Mrs. Earl Bond was at the organ and Mrs. James Milligan was at the piano.

Although the attendance at the conference was not large, a very fine spirit of devotion and fellowship was enjoyed. Everyone present was encouraged, challenged by the task before him, and gladdened by the opportunity to assist in the cause of the kingdom.

Rock Island District Conference

The annual Rock Island district conference was held on October 28, 1945, at the Scottish Rite Cathedral in Moline, Illinois, with approximately 500 in attendance. For the first time, the conference experienced holding its services in a building that was adequate to take care of its many special activities, particularly the services for the children. Leaders for the children's services were Winifred Stiegel, Florence Cady, W. D. Scott, H. R. Cady, and C. M. Beil. The children were very happy that they were given a special place on the conference program.

Young people's activities were also stressed with the young people contributing enthusiastically in the prayer service, choir and dinner serving. They also held a special meeting to formulate their program for the coming year. Leadership for young people's activities was well supplied by Lillian Williams and V. J. Witte. New projects were planned, including an institute in January, and a financial program to raise funds for a young people's lodge on the reunion grounds.

The contribution of the music director, Avis Tyree, was excellent. Weeks before, the branch choirs were given the music to be used at the conference. With only a limited time for final group rehearsal after the individual choir practices, it was inspiring to hear these numbers rendered by such a large group. The leadership being manifested assures the district of an improved program in days to come. In the evening service at the Moline church, the Moline branch musicians presented a musical of exceptional quality.

The special feature of the conference was the presence of President L. F. P. Curry. In his usual manner he ably presented to the conference the major goals and policies of the church, emphasizing that individual righteousness is the foundation of all progress in the work of the church. It was refreshing to hear his assurance that if the Saints strive lawfully, sound growth is bound to result. Brother Curry addressed the conference at the 11:00 hour, spoke briefly in the afternoon, and gave an inspiring address in the evening service. It was his first visit to the district.

The proposal of the reunion grounds committee, of which Clarence M. Beil is chairman, was of special interest. His committee urges the purchase of a reunion ground site just as soon as sufficient funds are on hand. He has stated many times that the district sustained a definite loss when reunions were canceled, and the time has come when we should purchase grounds of our own if sustained progress of the work of the church is to be secured.

The quality of spiritual life and missionary work was stressed in the morning prayer service. The thoughts of the prayers and testimonies centered on the theme, "Only as we move out to save others, can we save ourselves." The prayer service was active and well attended.

At the annual business meeting in the afternoon the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: District president, L. W. Stiegel; counselors, H. R. Cady, F. C. Bevan and D. M. Cassidy; treasurer and bishop's agent, John C. Stiegel; secretary, non-resident secretary, and publicity agent, Ruth Shippy; director of music, Avis Tyree; church school director, E. R. Williams; director of women, Florence Cady; supervisor of young people, Lillian Williams; historian, Gladys Hegwood; auditor, O. E. Lindsay; director of children's work and teacher training, Winifred Stiegel; Herald correspondent, Lora Sackfield. The district reunion committee, which is composed of all the branch presidents and district officers, was sustained. Nineteen delegates were elected for the 1946 General Conference.

The young people, at their meeting, elected Lucille Sheppard, president; Marie Bevan, vice-president; and Lillian Dorsett, secretary-treasurer.

One of the high points of the conference was the serving of 450 meals in record time by the Moline branch women's department under the capable leadership of Ruth Shippy.

North Central Nebraska District Conference

The north central Nebraska district conference was held at Clearwater, Nebraska, October 27 and 28.

Services began with a round-table discussion at 2:30 P. M. on Saturday, October 27. Elder R. M. Russell, of Omaha, was in charge; he also spoke in the evening and again on Sunday.

Officers elected for the coming year were: Jay Butler, president; Elsie Ballyntine, secretary and treasurer; Zada Payne, musical director; Lule Butler, women's department leader; Jay Butler, bishop's agent; and Pearl Moore, publicity agent. Delegates to the general conference were also elected.

—Mrs. O. V. Moore, reporter.

Nebraska-Iowa Youth Convention

Dr. Roy A. Cheville of Lamoni, Iowa, will be the spiritual director and teacher.

The registration fee is $1.10 per person; this includes the banquet at 7:30 Friday night, entitles the purchaser to a swim in the Y. M. C. A. pool, and recreation in the gym Saturday at 3:30 P. M.

Those wishing to stay in homes of Saints, contact V. D. Ruch, 217 Tenth Avenue, Council Bluffs, Iowa, or Lester I. Hunt, 207 South Locust, Glenwood, Iowa.

—Lester I. Hunt, reporter.

Southern New England District Youth Convention

Young people, between the ages of twelve and thirty, are invited to attend the youth convention being held January 18, 19, and 20, at Sewall Street, Somerville, Massachusetts. A registration fee of $2.50 will cover the cost of recreation and meals, including the special dinner to be held at Longfellow's Wayside Inn. Reservations must be made with Reed M. Holmes, 56 Felesway West, Somerville 45, Massachusetts, before January 15.

Northeastern Illinois District Conference

The annual business conference of the Northeastern Illinois district was held in Aurora, Illinois, on October 21, 1945.

The opening service at 9:30 A. M. was a priesthood prelude of prayer and meditation, with the district president in charge.

The first general service of the conference, one of prayer and devotion, started at 9:45 with District President J. A. Jaques and Counselors Lloyd L. Hadley and Marion M. Blakely in charge. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was associated with the district presidency in this service. The theme for the day, "Faith Moves Forward," was introduced by Brother Jaques and was emphasized through the use of prayer, testimony, and song. This service was characterized by the Spirit of the Master and was a fitting beginning for the rest of the day's activities.

The next service was held at 10:15, at which time Elder Lloyd L. Hadley, district director of religious education, introduced Apostle Edwards, who gave a review of the chapter entitled "Faith and Freedom" from his book, God Our Help. Apostle Edwards told of the circumstances surrounding the writing of the book. This proved very interesting and gave a deeper meaning to the thoughts expressed, which centered around the question, "Can man be free?" The reasons for loss or lack of freedom were elaborated upon and the statement was made that "Freedom is the absence of restraint plus all of those things which go into character and personality; the contribution which one is able to make in this modern world is limited by the amount of freedom one has."

A vocal solo was rendered at this service by Hester Comly of Plano. She was accompanied by Mrs. Bernice Blakely, also of Plano.

At the 10:15 period the children moved to the lower auditorium, where services had been arranged for them by Mrs. Ione Sanderson and Ethel Malcor of Aurora. The first part of the program was dedicated to church history. Roberta Gregory, Aurora, and Ilah Nelson, Plano, told stories, after which the children were separated into age groups and a class was held for each group. Lorna Jo Milligan of Plano sang a solo, "The Sweet Story." A play was presented in which the children participated. This service was carefully planned and executed. The attentiveness and co-operation of the children made the program a very successful one.

Lillian Hadley, assistant director of religious education and district supervisor of the children's division, was present at this service. Mrs. Hadley has continuously encouraged the development of leaders in the junior church. During the past year Roberta Gregory and Ilah Nelson of the Plano branch; Arnold J. Settles, Ethel Malcor, Ione Sanderson, and Everett Parcell of the Aurora branch; and Cora Anderson of the mission branch, have put on outstanding junior church programs at the various district meetings.

A worship service followed at 10:15 with District President J. A. Jaques presiding. Apostle Edwards was the speaker. At this service Brother Edwards again brought the message of the challenge of faith in God.

Lorna Jo Milligan of the American Conservatory of Music, Chicago, sang a solo at this service. She was accompanied by Ethel Malcor.

At 1:30 a music appreciation hour was held in which the district orchestra participated under the direction of Elder Russell Rogers of Elgin. Special music was furnished by Lorna Jo Milligan, vocalist, accompanied by Mrs. Malcor; Roy Settles, cornetist, accompanied by Betty White, both of Aurora; and Margaret Jameson, pianist, of the mission branch. Lillian Hadley, River Forest, gave the stories of seven hymns written by W. W. Phelps and the events which led to the writing of these hymns.

The department of religious education of this district under the leadership of Elder Lloyd L. Hadley, director, and Lillian Hadley, assistant director, made a splendid showing in connection with the work accomplished throughout the district during the year 1945.

The following persons received course cards covering leadership training courses which they completed:

Charles Homuth, De Kalb, seven courses; Roberta Gregory, Plano, and Ruth Hermanson, Belvidere, two courses each; Ruby Krubert, Anna Lovell, Marie Lovell, and Ben Lovell, Belvidere; Mary Jean Blish, De Kalb; Earl Rogers, Beatrice Rogers, Bernice Rogers, Arvilla Pement, Wayne Banta, and Phyllis Banta, Deselm; and Ilah Nelson, Plano, each completed one course.

Certificates of progress were awarded to Roberta Gregory, Charles Homuth, Ruth Hermanson, Ruby Krubert, Anna Lovell, Marie Lovell, and Ben Lovell.

Of the seven branches and two missions in the northeastern Illinois district, five branches and one mission received the religious education award for 1945; they were: Aurora, De Kalb, Deselm, Mission, Plano, and Elgin.

A business meeting followed the award service. New officers elected were as follows: Elder Dwight Davis of Elgin, district president; counselors: Elder Marion M. Blakely, Plano, and A. J. Settles, Aurora; Roberta Gregory, director of religious education; and Ilah Nelson supervisor of the children's department.

The following officers were re-elected: Marion M. Blakely, supervisor of Zion's League; Beulah Homuth, supervisor of department of women; Mary Jean Blish, secretary; C. C. Simpson, treasurer; Dr. Russell Rogers, director of music; A. O. Skinner, bishop's agent; Vida Rogers, publicity agent; A. J. Settles, book steward; and Cleo Settles, church historian.

Delegates to the coming General Conference were chosen.

A sincere vote of thanks was extended the retiring district president, J. A. Jaques, and Elder and Mrs. Lloyd L. Hadley, directors of the department of religious education, for their work in the past. Apostle Edwards spoke very highly of the splendid contribution made to the northeastern Illinois district by these people.

The Plano quartet, composed of Ilah Nelson, Hester Comly, Marion M. Blakely, and Richard Wildermuth, rendered a number at this time. They were accompanied by Bernice Blakely.

Mrs. Cleo Settles, of Aurora, served as pianist for the conference.

The last service of the day, a vesper service, consisted of group singing and talks by Elders J. A. Jaques and Dwight Davis.

—Vida Rogers, reporter.

Pfc. Dean Davis McGuire

Pfc. Dean Davis McGuire of the 36th Signal Company was killed in a motor accident on a muddy road thirteen miles out of Geilingen, Germany, August 19, 1945. He and another soldier were on a regimental messenger run in a jeep, which turned over pinning Dean underneath. He died on the way to a hospital.

Pfc. McGuire was a quiet, cheerful, competent man, well-liked by his fellow servicemen. He was given a Christian memorial service and was buried in a U. S. military cemetery at St. Avold, France.

Dean was born in Rich Hill, Missouri, March 19, 1923. He was a graduate of the Rich Hill High School, class of '41, and entered the service in January 1943. He was sent overseas in October of the same year and served with the 890th Signal Corps. Prior to his induction, Dean was an employee of the Western Auto Store in Rich Hill.

Lt. Kenneth Newkirk

Lt. Kenneth Newkirk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Newkirk of Los Angeles, has been officially declared dead by the war department. He had been listed as "missing in action" since December 31, 1944, when his plane crashed in the Elb River in Germany.

Lieutenant Newkirk was born in Independence, July 17, 1923. Eight years later he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by his grandfather, Roy E. Newkirk.

He is survived by his wife, Ann; his parents; one sister, Mrs. William Griffin, all of Los Angeles; and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Newkirk of Santa Barbara, California.

Pfc. Wellington E. Brown

Pfc. Wellington E. Brown made the supreme sacrifice for his country June 1, 1944. The war department has posthumously awarded him the Bronze Star, Silver Star, and Purple Heart medals. He was an active worker in the Clio, Michigan, church and served as a leader in League activities.

A Day in the Sanitarium

How many times in life the thing we accept reluctantly to do, turns out so much better than anticipated! Going into a hospital even for a minor operation would hardly be expected to hold any particular appeal for one who had been there only twenty-four hours, years previously, and that for tonsillectomy; but here are some of the experiences of a mere twenty-six hours in the Independence Sanitarium. Not having anticipated seeing more than a few nurses altogether, I have since regretted that I did not count the number, for it is surprising how much attention one there receives.

A nurse long known to us showed me to my room. The next one, after a few questions told me that I baptized her one day when I baptized fifteen in Longview, Washington, about 1932. Another, from British Columbia, Canada, reminded me of a joke I had with her when she was about five years old, about her talking in her sleep while camped near us at Silver Lake Reunion, Washington. Another reminded me of her visit to our home with a young man in whom she had been interested, and who had stayed with me at times in the Mission House, Hawaii.

I soon learned, too, of evident good missionary work quietly progressing, which caused my soul to swell with gratitude to God for these good people whoever they were, who were not failing to tell the good news of the gospel, for at least two nurses revealed that they were not members of our church, but that they were favorably impressed by what they had been told and by the associations they had had.

A practical male nurse who prepared me for the operation of the next morning talked to me about the church. He was a member of another church but was deeply impressed by his investigations and the services of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Some good soul had lent him The Book of Mormon, The Story of the Church and Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans. He could see no reason he said, why Jesus should not have visited Ancient America. He expressed disappointment, and so did I, that we were to have but two visits in the Sanitarium, but he assured me we would be meeting again at the Stone Church, for he intended to follow through.

A further deep impression struck me. I had just exchanged greetings with Bishop A. B. Phillips of "Question and Answer" fame, and was shaving about 6:30 A. M., when sweet strains of vocal music floated to us. It was the chorus of nurses in morning devotion, singing to the Hawaiian melody Aloha Oe, "Unto God who knows our every weakness, with faith we lift our hearts in prayer." What a precious institution! A Sanitarium where medical skill and up-to-date scientific mechanical appliances are associated with the spiritual forces of heaven towards the healing of both body and soul!

As I was wheeled into the operating room, one of the nurses who was assisting there, after telling who she was, answered my queries about her folks who were well known to us through associations in church work in Seattle years ago. Occasionally she would ask, "Is it hurting?" while the doctors worked at the job. My thoughts ran like this: "What assurance one has here! One is not only in the hands of good doctors, but doctors who are men of prayer and devotion. Here is Dr. Grabske, assistant church physician and a high priest in the church. A man of God devoted to the doing of all the good he can in service. Here is Dr. Link, an elder in the church, and of such spiritual caliber that I have somehow always felt the impression that he would go anywhere the church would ask of him according to the need, as a good steward for the Master, should such sacrifice be required of him."

The operation over and back in my room, another nurse reminded me that she was sister to a man who had spent much time with me at the church and Mission House in Makiki, Hawaii.

These were a few of many happy contacts and brief visits that caused me to ponder: "One comes reluctantly into the Sanitarium but finds through past labors and associations many happy experiences he would not have missed for anything. Some day when time comes for one to pass from this sphere, one may pass somewhat reluctantly to the unknown, but what a blessed experience will be there, as one by one acquaintances are renewed and new contacts made through incidents of service long forgotten."

But there, perchance, will not be the disappointment of having to leave so soon after getting there.

* IMMORTALITY

Everything good in us yearns to believe in the survival of the friends we have known and loved, those who have helped in the shared task, and contributed generously.

On a recent day, the editor was reading again a manuscript upon which he had worked some months ago, under quite different circumstances. Then the author was living, trying hard to make her frail strength accomplish all the tasks she had set for herself before the inevitable time when she should be able to work no more.

There were many problems, literary and other kinds, and sometimes she was restless and discouraged under them, but she persevered and did her best as long as she lived.

Reading her manuscripts a second time brought a feeling of contact with eternity. Here was the information she had labored years to gather, left as her legacy to the people of the church. It was imperfect, she knew. Here were her letters, earnestly written. Could one really be dead, and her work still so very much alive? She had sat in this very office so many times, talking about these things, her integrity honestly facing the questions and problems in her mind, examining them with us.

Life is so easy to believe in, because we see it every day. But death? It is incredible. Especially when we see the works of those who have departed.

* PLEASE GIVE US THE FACTS

An account of a wedding came in. It told all about the lovely bride and her splendid family. It told all about her costume down to the last pretty frill on the dress. It told about the bridesmaids, and the flowers. It told about the wedding cake and the candles and the presents, and all the delicious and perishable things that were eaten by the guests. The story contained everything, in fact, but the name of the bridegroom. Nothing about him or his family. Maybe it was a proxy wedding, with the bridegroom overseas, or in jail. But even so, can you have a wedding without a bridegroom somewhere, no matter how far away? We wrote for further information, but received no answer. The writer must have been a relative of the bride, and an enemy of the bridegroom.

We received an obituary in which the date of death was not given; perhaps the departed one didn't die at all, but just faded out of the picture gradually. We have had other obituaries of people who, apparently, were never born.

We receive announcements of meetings with no mention of dates, places of meetings, or persons in charge, and with no address where we can write for further information.

It is the responsibility of those who send these things to make them complete. For your own sake, please look over your work before you mail it, and see that everything is included that should be.

* IF YOU try to do everything requested of you, there will not be time for you to do anything well. A part of the wisdom of life is to know what to decline, as well as what to accept.

* THE BLACKEST HOUR of an editor's life is not when he doubts whether his editorial is any good, but when he knows positively that it isn't.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

A Time to Heal

Ecclesiastes 3

There was an ancient Preacher of considerable fame who said, "To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven: . . . A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up."

The late war, unhappily, was a time to kill and to break down. We didn't enjoy it, but it had to be done if we were to save our homes, freedom for the common men and women of the earth who did not want to be supermen and dictators, and some vestiges of honor and human dignity—the differences between civilization and the life of hunted beasts. Perilous as it was, that time was not the most important part of our experience.

The important time is now—"a time to heal . . . and a time to build up."

This is more than a mouthful of words, or a phrase that slides smoothly off the pen.

Last year, business men, housewives, school children—nearly everybody—labored to gather many tons of clothing in every city for the people of Europe. It was brought to a central place, sorted and packed, all by volunteer labor, and shipped away. Few persons who gave it will ever know where the pieces they sent are being used; but they will have satisfaction in knowing that every garment was desperately needed and will be used as long as the last threads hold together.

This year the call goes out again. The need is greater. We are now the only source of help for more impoverished people than we were then. What little they had last year is thinner this year, or worn beyond usefulness. Our stock of used clothing is smaller, and we, too, find it harder to buy the things we need. But still we must give what we can to help others whose condition is severe. Probably the drive is already being organized and operating in your community.

A considerable effort is being made to reach and help members of the church in various countries who are in want of clothing. You who have relatives over there will not need to be reminded; you are doing everything you can now. But the others may need a reminder. Won't you please think of the need of the people? Their reserves and protection are so low; their need is so great.

This is the time to heal, the time to build up.

Jobs of Mending

The workbaskets of the nations are filled with jobs to be done, most of them marked, "Urgent! Please Expedite!" There are the hungry to be fed, the cold to be clothed, the homeless to be housed, the sick to be given medicine and care, and all the normal supplies of goods to be set going again.

No matter how skilled a workman he was before the war, the man who is sick, without a home, deprived of tools, and worried about everything, cannot work, and has nothing to trade. He must be helped and set up in business again, so that he can send us the things we want, and then when he gets the money, he can buy what we have to sell. As soon as he can, he will be a good producer and a good customer again. This is true of millions of people abroad. Americans can't have a prosperous world until it is also prosperous for our neighbors in other countries. There is no chance for us to be continuously rich while others remain poor. Our last depression came to us after it had struck other countries.

Our mending jobs, moreover, go far beyond the physical affairs. There have been so many friendly contacts and relationships, so many fine understandings and agreements lost in the war years. The products of patience, kindness, and helpfulness, a result of years of labor and co-operation—much was lost. These things must be restored. They are the foundation of the missionary work that is the object of our church and most other churches.

Homework

There are jobs of mending for us here at home too. The readjustments in human relationships necessary to produce guns and supplies for the war caused many hardships and difficulties. The problems were met, and they were not easily solved. Now that we are reconvert-ing to peace, the readjustments are just as hard, and perhaps harder. The motive of patriotism is not nearly so strong now to get men to work together. It might be said, without a bit of exaggeration, that the whole life of our country is having to be reorganized once more.

We hear and read a great amount of conflicting propaganda from the camps of both labor and capital. The hardest thing to find is the truth in any given situation. Every source of information that is giving out has reasons for wanting its story believed, for influencing the public attitude, and through it both legislation and administrative action.

It may not be out of order to point out that strikes themselves are a contributing cause of inflation. There is still a great amount of money and buying power in reserve. It will not last long if people do not work, but it is creating a problem now. Scant supplies of manufactured goods are reaching the markets. What good will the wage

DR. C. F. YOUNG of Lamoure, North Dakota, recently wrote to me, and from his letter I am quoting that which I am sure will be read with interest by many:

Dear Brother: The end of 1945 finds us still in N. D., with some things done, and many more left undone. I believe it is a true statement to say that all of us do what is possible about the church, considering the fact that this is a busy old world in which to make a living. It would be nice to just have one thing to do at a time instead of six.

We haven't increased our membership numerically, but believe there are more members who have caught a faint idea as to Zion. Was glad to read the article in the Herald the other day as to the necessity of doing something about building the kingdom. Seems we have talked enough, or don't we really believe a place is to materialize? You do, I know, but where are the numbers necessary to implement such an undertaking?

The only real excuse for writing this letter is to wish you a wonderful New Year. May some of your dreams, or shall we say visions, be fulfilled. May it inspire you to know that North Dakota Saints respect you, even more, they love you as their God-given leader.

A LETTER from F. O. Davies, making report as Mission President, has been received, and after giving a report on delegates to conference, he speaks of the difficulty in getting a passport to visit Holland as he hoped to do before Christmas, but he still hopes to get in there in January. Among other things Brother Davies writes:

On the whole things are moving steadily and there is a good spirit prevailing generally throughout the Mission. The soldiers are being demobilized and finding their way back to home and church in most cases, which is certainly helpful.

I have not yet, through soldiers, been able to contact anyone in Germany and with military control, it seems hopeless to get there for some time. Letters are not possible from here to there, and thus I cannot arrange for anyone to come to the Dutch border when I go. Still we will keep on trying and hope the way will be opened.

BROTHER GEORGE NJEIM recently wrote a letter of Christmas cheer and good wishes, and he comments on conditions in a way which I think will be of interest to our readers. I quote as follows:

Dear Brother Smith: We are glad to greet you at this Yuletide season with a message of peace. At least we have a semblance of peace in the world. I must admit that as a stranger to western customs I feel awkward at Christmas season. The feverish activities that rob us of strength and money don't seem to stem out of a life that is much like the life of the One whose birth we commemorate. The lives of the average Christian people in Syria are not different from the lives of the average Christian people here. If there is any difference it would be in the fact that we do not possess enough money to show how disjointed our lives are. But as I send this greeting I send it as one whose darkness has vanished away before the light that comes from above. To me Christ is not a pre-Christian myth, and the story of his birth is not an Oriental fable. As his angels announced peace on earth in former days, so are his angels announcing calamities in these the latter days. Now the battlefields and the thousand discordant relationships re-echo that voice.

Words alone, Brother Smith, can never express my appreciation for this Christ and for what he has done for me. I say "this Christ" because he is different from the Christs that the traditions of different racial, religious, and political groups have made. In this atomic age I find love, peace, and security in him. He obligates me and in his service I meet suffering and loneliness, but he also does not leave me forsaken or in despair. His love and peace are like a fruit tree. Its reward for our hard toil and labor is not its fruit only, but its protective shade as well. So my joy is not only in the knowledge that he is giving us, but I also "rejoice in the protection of his grace."

BROTHER F. H. CUNNINGHAM, who has been in charge of the activities of the San Diego branch, recently wrote a letter and after extending greetings of the season on behalf of himself and wife, he comments in regard to activities in San Diego as affecting young men. His comments, I am sure, will be of interest to our readers. He writes:

We have been trying the past two years to keep before us the ultimate goals of the church, and have not been unmindful of the immediate tasks necessary to attain them. We have been greatly encouraged by the help and splendid co-operation of the many young men who have visited this city the last few years in the service of their country. And it is because of them that I am writing you at this time. They have not only been through months and years of discipline and strenuous training but they have had their energies and activities planned for them. In other words, they are accustomed to looking to their superior officers for leadership. And as we visit and work with these fellows and win their confidence, we find that that is just what they now expect from the church. So many of them have told me that they want to work in the church, and they hope the church will find a place for them to do something. Many of the younger ones have expressed the desire to finish their schooling as soon as they are out of the service with a view to serving the church.

It does seem to me that if we can recruit and indoctrinate this army of young men and give them the proper supervision, the church will no longer suffer for lack of trained personnel. And that is the big problem here and in most other places where I have been.

In reply to this letter of Brother Cunningham's, after commenting on his service with respect to the local work there and as touching upon his statements regarding men returning from the service, I wrote him as follows:

I have met only a few of these men who have returned but the several who have come into my office to discuss their situations seem quite able to make their own decisions and carry on their own activities. If we can convince them that the program of the church is definite and to reach our goals we will need their active help and support, I am sure in a large percentage of the cases we will have that co-operation granted most cheerfully. There is much to be done in the church, and we certainly ought to be able to find place for all of them to work. Many of them will be going to college, and I have found pleasure in talking with these who have their eyes directed toward college activities and degrees. This will increase their capacity and will make them more useful to us.

ELDER H. J. SIMONS wrote us from Flint recently, and from his letter we extract some things which will be of interest to our readers:

As this Christmas season approaches, we are especially thankful for the degree of peace which has manifested itself in parts of the world at least. Many of our men and women from this branch have, and are, returning from the various war theaters throughout the world. This Christmas is to be an occasion of great rejoicing in many of the homes of our branch, as well as many other branches. We rejoice in that not one of the men or women from the Flint branch found it necessary to give his life on the battlefield.

The main thing which is going to dull and dampen the true spirit of Christmas for many of our people here is the strike situation, and the resulting unemployment. Some of our people are already feeling quite severely the effect of a loss of regular income. Some of our people, as well as many other people, neglected to heed the frequently repeated admonition to lay away even financial reserves for a more urgently needed season. When a motor industry strike hits this city, it certainly causes hardship in many homes.

In times like these one certainly yearns for a realization, literally, of the coming kingdom. If the people of the church could only be made to appreciate and realize every day, and every month, all the time, the need for Christ's kingdom, the kingdom of peace, as they realize it, many of them in these times of stress as are being experienced here in Flint today, I think the coming of the great Prince of Peace would not be far distant.

IN A LETTER from Brother Roy Weldon, recently returned from California for the holidays, after writing concerning some matters of mutual and reciprocal interest, he says:

As the church irrevocably moves toward the great and momentous opportunities, responsibilities, and crises of the future, I am wishing for you not only the support of the Divine but the support of every earnest hearted soul in the church.

I join Brother Weldon in hoping that we are moving irrevocably toward great and momentous opportunities, and I trust we will be able to fully discharge our responsibilities to God and humanity.

OUR TASK

By Ernest E. Crownover

AS A CHURCH we consider that we have the responsibility of evangelizing the world and establishing Zion. In this we are correct, and we must address ourselves to the task with intelligent response to inspiration, and with the courage to remain faithful to our duty although the odds appear to be against us. Actually appearances are deceiving, and if God be on our side, the odds are tremendously with us.

Let us see what we are called to perform: What is the meaning of the term "evangelize the world" and what will we have to do to "establish Zion"? Webster says to evangelize means to "Instruct in the gospel; to convert to Christianity." If as a church we are to evangelize the world, our task is to instruct all men in the gospel, and to convert all to Christianity who are capable of belief. When we consider this assignment in the light of the fact that Mohammedans, Brahmins, Buddhists, and others outnumber all Christian peoples two to one, we are somewhat arrested in optimism. And if we reflect that Jesus rejected the religions of his day and declared salvation to be obtainable only in and through his gospel, and that the gospel was restored because the creeds were in error, we must re-examine the position of the various churches of today.

IT IS WELL for us to survey our position that we may discover the true nature of our task. There are several obstacles we must overcome. The first is that the vast majority of people are not challenged by our common need of conversion, and of citizenship within a perfected society. The unconcern and indifference toward God's effort to perfect and save men as individuals within a social order is no doubt largely due to a lack of apprehension and awareness. Many who are sternly concerned are misapplying their energies through lack of a correct grasp of the nature of the goal, and are unfamiliar with the fact that God has effected through Jesus the organizational agency to perform the work entailed.

The author considers the obstacles to our progress, and the assets we possess for carrying on the work of the church through the year 1946 and beyond. He issues a call to faith, preparation, and action.

A second obstacle is worldly competition for man's material and spiritual resources. Designing men and men without particular design place manifold pressures upon all people to expend life's hours and treasures upon the things of this world. The influences toward intelligent application of ourselves to the enrichment of society are actually more powerful and are perfectly calculated to enlist our participation, the difficulty is that we have permitted our life-appetites to become more or less perverted.

A third obstacle is denominational competition. This arises from a lack of inspiration. The truth is available to all; not all are equally responsive to that spirit which leads to all truth. Hence we find people who are together in belief in Christ, separated into sects according to the keenness or the dullness of their spiritual perceptions and the relative opportunities appearing in the guise of favorable or unfavorable conditions controlling their lives.

A fourth great barrier is within the church itself. I refer to the lack of administrative supervision and coordination of our functions. This weakness has not been conspicuously apparent in the higher councils of the church, for these quorums have for the most part been uniform in providing effective leadership. I would designate our greatest weakness at the levels of district, branch, and group officers. These are usually untrained, and their time and energies must perforce be expended first upon the necessity of earning a livelihood, and only secondarily upon their church duties. I wish, in passing, to suggest that this dual responsibility need not be a hindrance—it may actually be turned into an asset. The training they lack, may be obtained if their desire for it is sufficiently impelling.

WE HAVE ASSETS far outweighing our liabilities. First, we have the Restored Gospel. It is our chart and compass and our source of power—more than sufficient for any possible need. For the gospel is designed to go forth not in word only, but implemented with powers which the forces of evil shall be able to withstand not once in all history. We have not yet learned altogether how to control and apply this power. But we are learning.

Second, priesthood authority is again with men. The ordinances, blessings, and gifts of the gospel are again conveyed to those who meet the conditions for their reception. Authorized men stand in God's stead to instruct and lead the church in obedient observation of God's will. The Holy Spirit may be received. It is capable of causing our lives to shine with divine light. We have the prophetic office functioning, giving interpretation and application of God's law. This makes possible the establishment of society upon a basis of stewardships, which is precedent to a final endowment of gifts and powers from heaven.

CONSIDERING THE obstacles and assets affecting our course, what should be the nature of our procedure from this day? Undoubtedly first of all it is essential that we fully sense the gravity and difficulty of our task. Despite the fact that we work with God, we shall be tried by most adverse circumstances. The expenditure of great effort will be required in evangelizing the world and establishing Zion. Starry-eyed preachers who declare that "Jesus did it all" or who maintain that we can sit back and watch God regenerate the heart of mankind, waiting for him to bring us a new heart and a purified soul, are but awaiting a sad reckoning with fact. And on that day their lamps will be found empty.

Once seriously realizing the enormousness of our undertaking, we are immediately constrained to inform ourselves of all factors pertinent to gaining success in our engagement. We must seek learning in the best schools and in the church. Knowledge is not power, but dynamic knowledge must be associated with the power we require.

Another thing we must do is train ourselves to fit into a properly organized and functioning group moving in the direction we must go. To us, that means that we must fit ourselves without friction into our congregation and make a positive contribution to progress. Further, we must assist our smaller unit to fit successfully into co-ordinated effort with the general church. An important factor controlling our ability to contribute to advancement toward our goal, is the amount of respect we hold for our officers. When an army commander in combat is able to use his forces as a co-ordinated unit he can capture his military objective. He has at his direction every man, and every man's total warring resources. Our church members must give like respect to their leaders. I suggest the reading of Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14.

When we have gained more complete knowledge of our task, broadened our training, and are willing to put forth sustained effort, we will be in position to hasten our work to completion. Let us challenge ourselves with the fact that our venture is most essential and that, although difficult, we must not be hesitant. The call to participate obligates every man to respond, and we may be sure there shall be just recompense.

A True Fast

ABOUT THE year 790 B. C. in the reign of Jeroboam II, king of the House of Israel (the northern kingdom), the Lord spoke thus, concerning his people, to the prophet Hosea: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me. Seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children" (Hosea 4: 6).

Today, as in that day, the Lord has cause for complaint that his people are not interested in the sincere attitude of Communion and worship, and therefore our unchangeable God urges all mankind, as well as his people, to "Be still and know that I am God" (Psalm 46: 10). Although what we believe is of tremendous importance, many fail to keep coming to the light because of their belief that certain ideas or theories they entertain must of necessity be just and true. For this reason the Psalmist was inspired to write, "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Proverbs 23: 7). By this statement we infer that our various attitudes, ideas, and misconceptions may so seriously blind us and affect our life goals that we may easily exemplify the truth of the statement which says, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Proverbs 16: 25).

EVERY DEVOUT CHRISTIAN should be aware that we have the law and the testimony which should guide us in our attempted relations with God and constitute the rule and guide of our daily faith and practice. Yet many people, thinking to worship God, let the procedure of their fast days, for instance, be governed by the definition of fasting as it is found in Webster's dictionary. The definition reads thus: "To abstain from food either from necessity or as a religious obligation. Religious mortification by abstinence." The Apostle Paul, with prophetic insight, foreseeing that people would pay more heed to such traditions as just quoted, wrote under divine inspiration to his fellow minister, Timothy, thus: "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine . . . and they shall turn away their ears from the truth and [that truth] shall be turned unto fables." To illustrate, in addition to very erroneous ideas of what constitutes a true fast we refer to various traditional ideas of what constitutes authoritative valid baptism, including baptism so-called of infants, Christ's second coming, the way of redemption and salvation, and stewardship in all its phases.

Mankind, following the line of least resistance, as is his nature, is prone to cling to tradition rather than the true testimony and to be confused as to the true source of information governing his proper attitude and conduct in religious worship. We find our cue, therefore, in referring to the scriptures that the prophet Isaiah (a contemporary of Hosea) has left us this statement of sound advice: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord" (Isaiah 1: 18).

Let us turn "to the law and to the testimony; and if they [the so-called teachers of religious conduct] speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isaiah 8: 20). In the light of the foregoing, we inquire, where is the true testimony to be found? Are we justified in considering that a dictionary is the proper source of information concerning our religious philosophy and doctrine? What is the testimony Isaiah refers to? John the Beloved clarifies this point and makes it quite certain that all mankind will be judged according to "things which were written in the books" (Revelation 20: 12).

The Apostle Paul described quite clearly what would be found written in "the books" and what the testimony is in his second letter to Timothy when the apostle, shortly before his martyrdom wrote thus: "All scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (II Timothy 3: 16, 17. Inspired Version).

With this information to guide us, we find that Isaiah (760-680 B. C.) proclaimed by many theologians as the greatest of Hebrew prophets, expressed under divine inspiration what is a counterfeit fast and a true one. Referring to the fifty-eighth chapter of his book, we find him in the third verse recording the complaint of the people in their counterfeit fast when they say to God: "Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul [religious mortification] and thou takest no knowledge?" We find Isaiah then stating the Lord's answer to his people who engage in so-called fasting and apparently delight in approaching to God: "Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure and exact all your labors. Behold, ye fast for strife and debate and to smite with the fist of wickedness."

Since this attitude of the people (saints) in that day displeased God, let us consider how we may best approach and please our faithful Creator. How in short may we best glorify God? Isaiah, the faithful spokesman of the Lord, in the fifth verse asks this question of the people: "Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast and an acceptable day to the Lord?" Therefore, keeping these statements in mind, does a true fast consist of affliction of the soul? Is it bodily castigation, mutilation, mortification, or abstinence from food? Could it be that the real "glory of God is intelligence," not an empty stomach or bodily punishment through abstinence from food? The Lord has caused to be recorded in Holy Writ some instructions we need to observe, "for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." In the tenth verse of the forty-sixth Psalm we are instructed to "be still and know that I am God." The prophet Isaiah assures us in the first verse of the fifty-ninth chapter of his book that "the Lord's ear is not heavy that it cannot hear." To make this point conclusive, using evidence gleaned from the testimony, we find John the Beloved has recorded this statement of the Christ: "they who hear shall live" (John 5: 25).

Does not all this testimony suggest to you that a real fast involves "being still" and steadfastly engaging in an attempt to commune with God, for we cannot rush into his presence. Is not fasting giving the Lord an opportunity to be our counselor that we might become thoroughly instructed in righteousness through the awakening of our comprehension or intelligence? Could not fasting also involve what Matthew records Jesus as saying: "But go ye and learn what this meaneth; I will have mercy and not sacrifice" (Matthew 9: 14).

Then in the light of this statement of our Lord let us again turn to Isaiah and examine what he states a true fast consists of. We find he records in the sixth verse of the fifty-eighth chapter this statement of our Lord: "Is not this the fast I have chosen? To loose the bonds of wickedness." Isaiah is addressing individuals as well as groups of people, and is simply saying that a true fast involves a concentrated effort to repent of dead works. He proceeds and further states that a fast is "to undo the heavy burdens" resulting from the toil, stress, and strain of a week of labor. In other words, there is involved genuine preparation for and observance of a day of physical rest. Further it is "to let the oppressed go free and that ye break every yoke." That is, by fasting we seek to release our souls from the bondage of sin or dead works which so easily beset us. For this reason the Lord in latter day revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3) tells us that a perfect fast is that we place ourselves in such a position that in "singleness of heart" we can engage in "rejoicing and prayer." This that our joy may be full at our growing intelligence and release from our various heavy yokes and burdens. To obtain this condition of spiritual exaltation or reward there is involved a careful honoring of "my holy day," or the Christian sabbath. When we truly honor each sabbath day as it comes, we find the Lord makes these promises to us: "Then shall thy light [intelligence] break forth as the morning and thine health shall spring forth speedily, and thy righteousness shall go before thee." Note here that three very marvelous blessings shall accrue to those who engage in true fasting, namely: understanding, health (both spiritual and physical), and the accompanying virtue, righteousness. Do you feel this condition can be attained by mere abstinence from food or "affliction of the soul"? How few try "to be still and know that I am God."

Finally, we are assured that if we follow all this counsel and prepare through true fasting to be a help to those who are afflicted, hungry, and heavy laden, we shall call and the Lord shall answer and he shall say, "Here I am" (Isaiah 58: 9). The promise goes on to say, "And the Lord shall guide thee continually and satisfy thy soul in drought and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden . . . whose waters fail not." Confirming this, the Apostle Paul states (Romans 8: 6) that to be "spiritually minded is life and peace," or "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Romans 14: 17).

Quarterlies Wanted

Below we are showing a list of quarterlies which are greatly needed. If any of our readers have any of these volumes and is willing to sell them, please write to the Herald Publishing House, Editor of Church School Literature, stating the issues that you have and the price. Do not mail them to us until you receive instructions so as to avoid duplication.

Your help in making available this important material will be greatly appreciated by us and will have permanent value for the whole church.

Hymn Writing Contest

Desiring to increase the number of original Reorganized Latter Day Saint hymns for church use, the Independence Music Club sponsored an Original Hymn Writing Contest, which began June 1, 1945.

RULES

There will be no restrictions in the type of hymn. There is a special need, however, for hymns in the following categories:

- Palm Sunday (Lenten)
- Thanksgiving
- Baptismal
- Confirmations
- Blessing of Children
- Communion
- Ordinations

Other hymns distinctive of our church philosophy.

More than one hymn may be entered by the same person, but these compositions must be under ONE nom-de-plume.

Contestants are to use a nom-de-plume in signing their manuscripts; also to send their real name, together with their nom-de-plume in a separate sealed envelope.

Words and music will be judged independently. Only one prize for each will be awarded the same contestant.

A competent committee will judge the manuscripts and choose the winners. Their decision will be final.

Entries, original words and music, complete, must be received by the club not later than April 1, 1946.

PRIZES

1st Prize	$100.00
2nd Prize	50.00

No manuscripts will be returned unless accompanied by self-addressed and stamped envelope. Mail to Independence Music Club, Ruth Lewis Holman, Cor. Sec., 501 North Pleasant Street, Independence, Missouri.

An eminent New England almanac maker, while extremely busy one day, was interrupted by his young printer's devil.

"Mr. Thomas, you've left out the prediction for July 13th," he complained. "What'll I put in?"

"Tarnation, young man, can't you see I'm busy! Put in what you please, but get out!"

When the almanac came out, these startling words appeared opposite July 13: "Rain, hail and snow." You can imagine the old fellow's language when he saw that. But on July 13th, according to records, it actually did rain, hail and snow! The next year this almanac out-sold all its competitors.—Dr. A. S. Rosenbach.

The Art of Getting Decisions

By Eugene A. Theys

ONE OF THE greatest evangelistic puzzles of our missionary efforts today is how to influence people toward making their decisions to come into the church after they have been converted to this work. Many of the best friends of our church are thoroughly convinced of the authenticity of this doctrine; yet for many unknown reasons they remain outside the church. This problem has confronted the missionary forces of the church of Christ from its very beginning. The experiences of some of our general church officers are included in this article.

Let us give our attention to the missionary series itself. The purpose of a series of meetings is to win people to Christ and to secure their help in winning others. No organization can hope to exist long in any community unless people are moved to come into the church and to help carry the work forward. As missionaries we go into communities to assist the members in winning people to our belief. The immediate object of winning people to our church is to persuade them to ask for baptism. It is toward this end that the missionary plans the climax of his efforts.

THE SERIES APPROACH

At an early date in the series, the missionary should have available a prospect list. This list should include only the names of people who have manifested a keen interest in the work prior to that series of meetings. You may want to make two lists, one called "prospects" and another called "suspects." Often there are names appearing on either list that should be changed from one to the other. The prospect list should be studied carefully throughout the meetings. The best use of this list is to talk with as many people who really know the person on it and learn all one can about them. Ascertain their likes and dislikes, how often they have attended church, if any members of the family belong to the church, and whether those who belong to the church have used good judgment in talking of the church to the nonmembers in the family. Find out all you can about individuals, and if they have shown enough interest to study any of the church books. Have they ever participated in any social or religious activities? The more you know about each prospect, the more sure you can be that your approach will not fall short of its objective.

Learn to know prospects by names as well as faces. This helps you to pick them out in the audience while you are preaching. Try to make a mental note as to where each person is seated in the audience from night to night. It might be well for you to ask yourself these questions after the service each evening: Was the prospect sitting next to his wife, or was he sitting with some of the other nonmembers in the back seats? The seating arrangement of your prospects is just as natural as it is for a member to find his regular place to sit from one time to the next. One missionary reports that from the mental notes he made from one evening to the next as to where the prospects sat in the audience that there was one man and a woman who always made it a point to find a seat in the rear of the house. These two prospects had some of their family who belonged to the church. As the meetings continued, both individuals found their places near the front of the church. The names of these two people had for some unknown reason been omitted from the prospect list. If this missionary had not been on the alert to this little detail he might have lost an opportunity to contact these individuals. From the interest manifested by these people, the missionary went into their homes and after several visits obtained their decisions for baptism. Signs of interest can often be detected by the missionary as he studies the faces of each individual prospect during his evening discourse.

The prospect list also affords the missionary, as well as the priesthood and the members, a prayer project. A good plan to follow is to make a list of names available to the ministry, call the priesthood together several times during the series of meetings, either before or after service, and make these names a subject of prayer with God, asking him for light and understanding concerning the right approach to be made, or the things that should be said when talking with these people. One missionary had a list of thirty-one prospects on such an occasion, and after a prayer with the brethren one evening, he announced that there were eighteen people on his list that should be ready for baptism when the series closed. After much persisting in prayer and contacting the various prospects, he closed that series of meetings by baptizing eighteen very fine people into the church. The ministry that this missionary gave and the experience that the pastor and the other ministry received during these meetings were carried over into the total movement of that congregation. Even the laity can receive a testimony of prayer and of the whole Restoration Movement if they can be encouraged to participate in prayer.

HOME-VISITING

Another good method to be taken into consideration is home-visiting. This can never be overdone but can most certainly be neglected. One of the best approaches in visiting is to call on the members first, and this should be done in the early part of the first week. Allow yourself enough time to visit in each home of the members; impress upon them their need of this service, and solicit their prayers for the success of these meetings. The visit in these homes should not be long but to the point. State as early as possible in your visit why you called and your reason for needing help.

One approach to be made on such a call as this is to say, "Brother and Sister Jones, my reason for coming to your home is to get acquainted with you and your family and to tell you how happy I am in meeting such people of this faith. Our meetings are going to continue for two weeks, and during this time we are going to discuss subjects that are very pertinent to our message. One of the ways that you can help us in their series is by bringing your family and friends out to the services to hear these subjects." You may even mention that there are several names on your prospect list that the pastor and some of their friends have given to you in the hope that they can be brought into the church by these meetings. If the family shows some concern over any of their friends, you may even put them on one of your lists and ask them to work with you by seeing that this family attends church and that you get to meet them. After you have stated the purpose of your visit, you may ask for a word of prayer if you feel led to ask for it. Remember! that in this "brief prayer" you can say even some things that you dare not approach them on as far as their personal responsibilities are concerned. Make your exit as soon as possible after the prayer has been given to afford the significance of your prayer and visit to move this family. Try to limit your visit to not more than twenty or thirty minutes.

VISITING THE PROSPECTS

When you feel that you have called on all the "member families," you should start your visiting among your prospects. Always make it a point to say a few words to each one of the prospects as they come in or go out of the church each evening. The real secret to a missionary's success among the prospects is a friendly interest in people. The more contacts that you have with the prospect, the easier it will be for you to get down to business when you talk about a decision for baptism. It is better that you make at least two or three calls on the prospective member before you approach him for a decision. In some few instances you may be able to make the final approach on the first call but this isn't often. Your first call should be a social visit; get the prospect to talk about himself and learn all you can from firsthand information. The more you know about the prospects, the more sure you will be when you make an approach for their decisions.

Always remember that you have your chance to talk at the evening service, and they may have something important to say also. Remember this, you will never be able to get your point across in visiting with a prospect or anyone else if you try to dominate the conversation at the time they want to express their ideas. Wait until they get everything "off their chest" and have exhausted themselves before you press your points for the decision. This may take you a long time, but if you will wait until your prospects have said all that they have to say, you will find that it pays big dividends. You will never get anyone to listen as long as they are trying to get a word in; they are thinking about what they want to say, and your whole approach has been lost. Don't waste your decision approaches. Save them until you can drive your points home and have them listen to you. This method requires personal discipline, but it will pay any missionary or member big dividends to follow this advice. There is an old adage, "a still tongue makes a wise head." There is a limit to every man's intelligence as well as his conversation.

THE DECISION APPROACH

There are as many approaches to be made in getting a decision as there are people, yet the underlying principles in each approach is rather much the same. Following are a few approaches that have proved quite successful in getting decisions. Let us discuss the case of Mrs. A. Her husband was a member, yet they were both inactive in church work. She had expressed in conversation that they had felt something lacking in their home life ever since they had been married. They attended church very seldom, yet found plenty of time to attend shows and dances, etc. She had read a number of the church books and was willing to say that this was the true church of Jesus Christ. An early visit to this home during the series brought them out each evening.

The decision was reached by the following statement in the presence of the husband: "The feeling that you have been missing something in your life and the comfort and satisfaction that you have enjoyed these past two weeks show plainly what you are in need of, and that is the church and the Spirit of God to direct your life. Jesus promised us the very thing that you need, and you will find it in the promise that he made his disciples when he said, 'Behold, I will not leave you comfortless, I will send you another comforter, the Holy Ghost, that will guide you into all truth.' If you are willing to put your belief in his church into action by clean living and in humble obedience, you will find this comforter working in your life from day to day. Your home and your companion are in need of a Christlike way of life. As you come into the kingdom, you will find peace and satisfaction through service. It will not be easy to find this comforter unless you are willing to put yourself to the test by serving him. Each time that you return from church, after having given the best within you, you are sure to find that which you have been looking for. When you have shared this gospel with someone else you will know what it means to me at this time to share it with you. I don't see how anyone can refuse to do God's will; he asks so little of us and gives so much in return that the smallest thing we can possibly give is our life in service to his cause and kingdom."

Then at the close of this discussion the missionary said, "On Sunday there are several planning to unite with the church so that they may find this same peace and happiness that we have just spoken of, and I hope that you will make the necessary preparation and that you will be ready to come into the church with us." If the proper setting has been laid, you may ask to offer a word of prayer. Be sure to remember the prospect in the prayer that is about to be offered, but be as brief as you possibly can. Ask that God may grant him or her courage to take this step and that his guiding comforter may be found in his life as he travels along the straight and narrow way. Immediately after the prayer, plan to make your exit, but before doing so take the prospect by the hand as it was done in this case and say, "Do you think that you can get yourself ready for baptism on Sunday?" I do not believe that he will refuse if you approach this point in sincerity and humbleness. During your conversation with the prospect, you should speak slowly and distinctly, keeping your voice well modulated at all times. As you give the closing prayer do not turn your back to the prospect, but be sure that you are facing him enough so that he can hear what you are praying about. Your whole conversation should bear evidence of a kindly spirit and not one in which you are berating him for not having accepted the gospel. This is the real test of your whole ministry to him during your series, and the need is to get him to feel this whole thing as you do. Be ready at the close to bring some personal testimony of this work to help this person along in making his decision. Do not go into a lot of detail in giving your experience, but give the high lights of this testimony. Many a personal testimony has lost its real meaning by giving too many little details that do not have a bearing on your experience. This testimony should be given if possible before your decision prayer.

Here is another case to be studied. This man was seventy-four years of age, and his companion had passed away about a year before. He was very lonely, and for the first time in several years he was able to attend church regularly. He had always believed in the church, but somehow or another he had never joined. His chief concern was, is it too late now to come into the church? He wanted to be able to join his wife on the other side, yet he felt he should do his duty to God while he was here on earth. This conversation took place in front of the prospect's home. The following approach was made to this man's problem: "In your loneliness God has most certainly been concerned about you and your needs. Now you have come to a place in your life when you feel you are all alone. Since this series of meetings has begun, you have been finding some of the loneliness leaving you. Perhaps there are several reasons for this; one may be that the fellowship of the Saints has given you that warmth and understanding in this great hour of your life; then too, they know that what you and every other man needs in his hour of loneliness is God and the church. You mentioned in conversation that your wife was a good woman, but she had never permitted herself to come in contact with this gospel. You also said that you wanted to be with her someday on the other side. We believe as you know that those who have not been permitted to hear this gospel will have the opportunity some day in the hereafter, but your time has come to accept this work now, the Lord is presenting you this chance to enter the kingdom on earth. Perhaps you will have the opportunity to enjoy the fellowship with your wife that you long for, but according to my understanding it will not be on the same plane as it was on earth. Jesus mentioned something concerning this in his ministry on earth when he stated, 'For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven.' You can see that our relationships will be exalted above those of this mortal state. The greatest disappointment that can come to anyone is to have an opportunity to accept this gospel and refuse it. If you will make the proper adjustments in your life during the remaining days of this series, you will truly learn what you have been missing throughout your lifetime."

After this conversation the missionary suggested that they step inside the house for a few minutes to have a word of prayer. Upon entering the house, the missionary told of several experiences that he and others had had in prayer, and then the prospect and missionary bowed. During the prayer the missionary called upon the Lord to bless this man, to comfort him in his hour of loneliness, and to enlighten him in the opportunity that has come to him in uniting with God's church and kingdom. At the close of this prayer, the missionary extended his hand and expressed his desire to see this brother make his decision to be baptized on Sunday. Before the missionary left, the old gentleman gave his name for baptism.

The third case was one of a man who had grown up in the church and had married a member of the church. His wife was a woman who talked all the time that a missionary was in the home and could tell you all the reasons why her husband didn't belong to the church and why he should. After having made several calls in this home and being unable to make much progress, the missionary arranged that this good sister should be outdoors at work while the husband and he visited. This was the problem of this prospect. He admitted that he believed in the church, and that God had blessed him several times through administration, but he just couldn't get himself to the place where he desired to unite with the church.

The approach to this problem was as follows: "God has been good to you in times when you have called on him; he has heard your prayers. He has always come to your rescue, whenever he thought you stood in need. You have been blessed with good health and a fine family. All during the years of your life God has been in need of your help. He has called many times, but because you have been too concerned with your own problems, you have failed to heed his call, 'Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest.' This is the kind of friend that God is, and that is the kind of friend he wants to make of you. Some men have stood outside of the door of the kingdom for many years and have never entered, and this is your problem today. God doesn't need to give you a sign, for you are intelligent enough to know his will. What you must do is to put your trust in God and follow him. You have been a good man all your life, but you must begin now to be good for something and that is to serve God in his church and kingdom on earth. You have been waiting on God to move you, and God has been waiting on you to make the next move."

At the close of this discussion a brief prayer was offered on bent knees, asking God to touch the heart of this man once again as he had done in the past, so this brother would have sufficient courage to "Launch out into the deep" and that he would find joy in serving in the kingdom of God. This man gave his decision that afternoon, and after the missionary left this home, the prospect went out and called on two of his friends who had also been keeping themselves out of the church, and they also gave their names for baptism that evening after the service. This man had been moved to action by this decision conversation, and he started to work as soon as he gave his name for baptism. This should be the aim of every missionary minded person who moves out and challenges people to this gospel message, and go out and warn others that they too may assist us in this work!

CONCLUSION

Make all your member visits early in the series. Study your prospects continuously, and know each one by name and face. Give each prospect an opportunity to do most of the talking. Take plenty of time when you visit them, do not rush these calls. Give them the benefit of the doubt when discussing their problem. When making your decision approach, get them thinking in positive terms and not negatively. Keep them feeling that the church of God is a place where they can grow and find happiness. Speak slowly and distinctly when getting your prospect thinking about his decision. Close your decision talk with prayer whenever possible, and when you offer this prayer, be sure that the prospect can hear what you are saying. Never try to approach a prospect in the company of too many people. The fewer you have in his presence the surer you are of coming out with a decision. Observe the mannerisms of your prospects beforehand and try to judge what approach would be the best in each case; this is where the gift of discernment can be of real value to every missionary. Try to give some testimony that you have had that fits your prospect needs.

LEARN SERVICE BY SERVING

By Ensign Lois Maxine Constance, U.S.N.R.

A FEW YEARS AGO I attended a youth conference in which we attempted to set up some guides to carry us through the war period—principles which acknowledged the war but refused to let it become the ruling factor in our lives. The primary purpose was still that of building the kingdom of God.

We established these four points:

1. War is an interlude only—both for God and man. The divine laws are still continuing in effect.
2. Standards and ideals in harmony with the purposes of God are to be maintained at all costs.
3. Realism is required about the problems and crises involved—face them courageously and with long-term planning.
4. Resources are still available—People are interested in the kingdom, a wealth of information is ours if we but care to utilize it and—most important of all—God is still ready to aid us.

These were the principles which were chosen as fit standards to guide us through an uneasy and trying period, yet they seem to apply as well today as when they were formulated.

WE HEAR MUCH today about the problems of reconversion. The church was not unaffected by the war, and it, too, has its reconversion problems. Similarly, each individual has his own adjustments to make now that we are returning to the ways and intents of peace. We say that war was thrust upon us—but the peace will be of our own making. What better plan of peace can we have than to set up the kingdom of God?

Yes, war was an interlude. God had to wait for us again while we turned our attention to wartime problems. The universe still carried on in its well-ordered course. God did not change it nor did he forget his purpose in us. We still have a little time in which to accomplish those purposes. War was the first act of a drama. The second act may be dull and wearisome at times, but it is most important and will require much thought and planning, for upon its enactment depends the establishment of the kingdom—the climax of our drama.

A message especially helpful to young people, and good for readers of all ages, is this article by a young member who has kept a hand in the work of the church while serving her country during its wartime and post-war efforts.

The project ahead of us calls for the best that we have. Now is our real opportunity to achieve the standards and ideals taught and lived by Jesus Christ. We can direct our attention to constructing rather than just maintaining. Heretofore, we have been conducting a holding action, and have had time to build up reserves. Let us now put those reserves into action so that we may not only preach Zion but practice it. We have seen all too vividly what can happen to people who forget God, and it is up to us as individuals and as a church to see that it does not happen again. Let us look more deeply into our own lives and root out anything which might interfere with God's purposes in us.

TODAY IS ALSO the time to be realistic about the problems and crises which we face. They aren't too different from the ones we have already met and conquered. By employing the same courage and displaying the same faith, we will be enabled to overcome the obstacles that lie before us. There is one thing we might change—instead of long-term planning let's speed up our efforts and concentrate on accomplishing the task in short order, not forgetting that we must be thorough and careful in the execution of each step, for the foundation must be solid. As we devoted ourselves wholeheartedly to winning the war, so let us quickly convert and divert this energy to the more constructive job of establishing Zion. Luke 17: 21 says, "Behold, the kingdom of God is within you." If we but set our hearts and energies toward this purpose we should soon, by earnest, devoted labor reach our goal.

This brings us to our fourth principle—that resources are at hand and ready to be used. We have a goal, we have a plan, and we have the resources—our people, the opportunities open to us in this our country, and our God.

The task calls for increased devotion from each age group—we, the youth, are still depending on our elders for guidance and direction. We need them and the benefit of their experience. We are the understudies, and it is our desire to learn the parts of those who travel ahead of us then go on ever upward to higher roles, building firmly upon that which has already been set up for us.

TO YOUTH THE instruction would seem to be this: "Know thyself; and knowing thyself, do something about it." Let's find our capabilities and convert them to working abilities for the church. Seek diligently to understand God and his purposes. Prepare for service in the church by serving the church. Do the best you can in the field which you choose as your specialty, for only as one qualifies is his work effective. It has been said that there is no excuse for amateur work being bad. Rather, one who realizes he is an amateur should be trying so hard to establish himself as a professional that each job he does is the best of which he is capable at that stage of his training. This perfection for which we are striving cannot be attained under the direction of our own wisdom. We must surrender our will to our

I Want My Son to Marry in the Church

(Unless he can find a better companion elsewhere)

By Margaret Sperry

FIRST OF ALL, I want my son to be very strong in the faith. I want him to have many personal testimonies of God's love long before he reaches marriageable age. If such is the case, I think I can count on his making the choice of a mate a matter of earnest prayer—and be willing to abide by whatever light he may receive.

There have been marriages between church members that failed. On the other hand, whole families have been converted when a son or daughter married into the church.

I am very thankful for section 111 of the Doctrine and Covenants. It has undoubtedly saved many from making disastrous marriages—not just by preventing them from marrying outside the church, but by causing them to think seriously and prayerfully upon such a step. Sometimes their common sense will come to their rescue, and they will see that the person in question is worldly and shallow. However, the Father in heaven and go forward with him. The start may be small, but we must begin to serve, and the time to begin is now. A plant starts from a tiny seed, but does it refuse to partake of that which is set before it and utilize it for growth? Rather, it would seem that the seed realizes its potentialities and struggles to attain them. You know the ruth of the axiom—"we learn to do by doing"; so also we learn to serve by serving, not waiting until we attain perfection, but attaining perfection as we serve.

The opportunities are at hand, the goal is ever before us, and God is at our right hand as we proceed up the heights to the kingdom of God. 1635 R Street N. W. Washington 9, D. C.

state of the emotions at such a time usually makes necessary more than common sense and logic. There is need of fasting and prayer, and a strength of character which will follow through. And this is the responsibility of the parents—a responsibility which begins at the cradle. Parental tears or threatenings, when a child has reached his majority, may prevent an unwanted union only to throw the son or daughter into the arms of an even less desirable person.

There was one family in which three out of five children married nonmembers. Within a few years, all of the nonmember mates were baptized. The faith in this family is not spectacular, but it runs deep.

I hope my son will not associate closely with any girls—members or nonmembers—who are shallow of mind or weak in character. This does not mean that I expect perfection in his friends, but I would be glad if he would prefer to associate with those who have enough depth to be capable of some time attaining perfection. There are, unfortunately, persons of weak character who seem not to have been much improved by baptism. A well-bred nonmember would be a more wise choice, I believe.

The Bible tells us that the gospel of Christ is to come first in the life of each of us. This does not give a man an excuse to neglect his family. Instead, by his strength in the work, his family should be lifted up. Certainly he will be more likely to convert a nonmember wife if his interest in the church is unquenchable than he is if he drifts along with her. His parents may blame the wife for his nonactivity, but this may be unfair to her.

One of our ministers was heard to say that "a person is weak in the faith—if he is weak in the faith!"

That faith is weak can scarcely be proved by one act, especially if the act is marriage—for there are so many long-range developments which should be taken into consideration.

Some women have married clean, intelligent nonmembers who have later been baptized and ordained, serving the church long and well. Somewhere in their choice of a companion, they must have sought and found God.

It is my belief that God will not only help us make a decision regarding choice of a mate, but he will even direct us to the right person! I know of more than one instance in which a man and woman have been brought together in some way which seems even more peculiar than that which we would call "a coincidence." And this might happen much more often were we willing to place our lives unreservedly in God's hands.

I want my son to marry in the church. But the choice of a companion will be his to make. My contribution has already begun, in the molding of his character. He's still quite young. Surely, if my husband and I are deeply devoted to both him and the church, we will not wait until he is twenty-one and then wring our hands in anguish because he shows signs of being "weak in the faith." Our efforts may not be good enough. He will have his own agency and, in addition to our training, inherited qualities over which we have no control. We'll accept what the future brings, of course. But we won't wait passively for that future.

How to get a 14-story building out of the way of a widened street was a problem that recently confronted Los Angeles engineers. One possible solution was to tear down the face of the structure and erect a new face five feet back, but this plan was discarded as too expensive. Instead, workmen removed a five-foot section from the middle of the building. The front part, intact and heavily braced, was then slid back to close the gap. Riding along a track of railroad rails and steel rollers, the building completed the journey without mishap.—Popular Sci-

What Education Is

By G. W. White

SULPHURETED hydrogen blackens lead acetate on a filter-paper; the angle of incidence equals the angle of reflection:  $3=1\frac{1}{2} \text{ gt}^2$ , and the equation may be proved by means of a device known as Fletcher's trolley. To most men and women these scientific truths, which are truly representative of elementary science as viewed in retrospect, are of no practical value either in the pursuance of their trade, profession or vocation, or in the crises of everyday life. A knowledge of the principles of electricity and magnetism is not essential for the replacement of a burnt-out fuse, and an expert chemist or biologist is likely to be as helpless in dealing with a refractory wireless set as a classic or historian. The practice of medicine, admittedly, demands a long and arduous technical training, but the medical student is called upon to learn in the early part of it much that has no direct bearing on the preservation of health or the treatment of disease. And yet it is commonly assumed that the value of a scientific education is primarily utilitarian. The case of mathematics is similar; and as for languages, our first visit to France is apt to shatter any belief that we may have in the utilitarian value of French as taught in English schools. All Frenchmen (and still more all Frenchwomen) seem to speak with incredible rapidity, and the atmosphere of hotels and railway stations is not conducive to conversation about the gardner's pig.

The utilitarian value of science, of mathematics and of French, in short, is much less than is commonly supposed, and it is hardly necessary to consider the remaining subjects of the curriculum at present obtaining in secondary schools. It is obvious that games are of no commercial value except to the would-be professional; one may grow turnips or manufacture biscuits without knowing a single historical fact; and "What is the use of Latin?" is a question, as every school-boy knows, expecting the answer "No." If the object of the existing curriculum is to impart useful information, it is singularly ill-adapted for the purpose. We must admit that uneducated men are able to hold their own in trade and commerce, and that, when all is said and done, the best place to learn the processes of cotton manufacture is in a cotton mill, the intricacies of the retail grocery trade behind the bacon counter, and so on.

So far from raising the school-leaving age, we ought to lower it and revert to a system of child-apprenticeship.

But what a prospect in an age when, we are told, pounds, shillings, and pence have ceased to have any meaning, and where there is a clear prospect of increased leisure for all. "Is not the life more than meat," and must we train men to make good use only of their business hours? Even their business hours are likely to be more profitable if they understand in some measure the vagaries of human nature, which remain a more or less constant factor in a changing world. Do we choose our doctors or appoint our works managers solely for their technical skill, or do we think also of their ability to handle their patients or their workpeople tactfully and sympathetically? Personal experience, certainly is the most thorough teacher; but, like most people who are really thorough, he is slow, and we can learn a great deal of human nature at secondhand from literature, from history and from philosophy, especially from the literature, history and philosophy of those nations which have lived most ardently, thought most keenly and felt most deeply.

Man's duty to others is not confined to his business hours. There is his family life and there is his life as a citizen, both of his own country and of the world. Education does not, as is often supposed, begin when a child goes to school; it begins in the cradle, and a child's first years are among its most important. We cannot, as Plato suggested, remove children in their infancy from their parents' care; even if we disregard the parents' point of view, it is apparent that one of the infants' greatest needs is the personal affection and understanding which no official education could give. But we could, and should, educate all boys and girls in their last years at school in the duties of parenthood instead of leaving to untrained minds and unskilled hands the most important tasks that a nation can ask its citizens to perform. Again, we boast that we are a democracy, and yet only from time to time is public opinion sufficiently educated to influence for good affairs of state. Is not universal adult suffrage without universal education in the duties of citizenship a mockery and an absurdity, and does not the success of Nazi methods make it clear that such education can be effective?

It makes it clear also that efficiency is not enough. If the task of education is to fit the individual for the service of humanity, may it not also be described as a guiding of the soul back to God? By God we do not necessarily mean the personal Deity of Christianity, but simply that unseen power, to which all men of good will, whatever their creed, acknowledge allegiance in their hearts; that power in which inheres moral, intellectual, and aesthetic goodness. The activities proper to the soul, willing, thinking, feeling, and imagination, can be correctly performed only by a soul that has been developed by exercise. Do we expect the baby to walk without constant practice or the young athlete to clear five and a half feet without arduous training? The soul likewise must be taught to will the good, to think the true, and to understand and create the beautiful. All these activities to some extent may be taught in the classroom; but the first is best learned by example and in service to a community, and it is just in the opportunities it affords of this that a boarding school has certain advantages over a day school. The playing fields also help to foster the more manly virtues, besides assisting in making the body a faithful and efficient servant of the mind; but the character-forming aspect of games is generally exaggerated. The second is best taught by mathematics, by a language which has an essentially logical structure and which demands precision in rendering abstract ideas, and by historical research, though emphatically not by the mere absorption of historical generalizations at secondhand. The third demands the understanding presentation (to the adolescent mind) of what is best in all the fine arts, a presentation which must be first and foremost absolutely sincere; secondly, patient and tolerant while remaining definite; and thirdly, capable of transmitting enthusiasm. In all, the personality of the teacher is of paramount importance.

These three forms of education are not alternatives, and must be supplemented by a thorough training of the body. All are necessary if the harmony of the soul, without which it cannot know peace and happiness or realize its full power, is to be established and preserved. Our love of wisdom and beauty must not teach us effeminacy or extravagance; we must cultivate self-control without producing the evils of repression; courage must go hand in hand with meekness; width must not be sacrificed to depth nor depth to width; certainty must not

The Kingdom Is the Community

By J. A. Koehler

IN THE MAIN, the religious ideas of the present were handed down from the past. To many people, religious traditions become venerable as they become old. The more ancient the religious voice, the more authoritative it is; the less it is questioned. Critical as the modern religious mind may be, it still accepts ideas from unprophetic rather than prophetic sources as if their truth is unquestionable.

The Dark Ages apostasy, from one point of view, was a rejection of the genius of prophecy. Still, some of our ideas respecting the identity of the Kingdom were shaped, to a considerable degree, during those ages; during the ages when the ideas of the genius of true prophecy were perverted almost beyond recognition. And, except in comparatively few instances, those perversions of unprophetic priests still put their stamp on our religious beliefs.

Perhaps the most basic and universal conviction of the prophets (if we except the idea of the sovereignty of the will of the Almighty) is that the Kingdom is the community. Or, conversely, that the community, when it is conformed to the will of God, is the Kingdom.

"Community" is one of the words not used in the Bible, that we use to express religious ideas. But the concept of the community is there. The word "city," for instance, as used by the prophets, means what we mean sometimes by the term "the community." The word "mountain," too, is used as connoting the organized community. That is the sense in which those two words are used in the forty-eighth Psalm:

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion . . . the city of the great King."

The historic setting or background of that Psalm is the Israelitish adventure in civil government, or in community. You should know that story. God revealed his will to Moses in the form of a civil code. That code is the blueprint of a community. It was in the building of that community that Israel established or sought to establish the Kingdom.

THAT KINGDOM, that community, is sometimes referred to as Zion, the place where God dwells, the city in which his will is done. And that can mean only that the Kingdom is the community.

But after the apostolic church fell into unchristian hands, or during the time that its affairs were dominated by unprophetic priests the Kingdom came to mean sometimes the church, sometimes the individual members of the church. The assumption was, as it still is in some instances, that when the individual is a member of the church he is in the Kingdom. And in some instances it is affirmed that the individual is in the Kingdom-church or no church, Kingdom-community or no Kingdom-community.

I have said many times that the Kingdom may be conceived as existing in three modes: the personal mode, the ecclesiastical mode, and the civil mode. The truth out of which that three-fold Kingdom idea arose seems to be that God's Kingdom is where His will is done intentionally. If that is the idea, the three-mode Kingdom concept may be wholesome.

At any rate the unprophetic voices of Christendom, both modern and medieval, have abandoned the prophetic concept of the Kingdom regarded as the community. The Kingdom-building business as conceived by the prophets is not in the thinking of many of the Churches of Christendom, for they neither say nor do anything about it. They do not even intend to do anything.

THE VERY FIRST commandment of God recorded in the Bible respects the affairs of all "peoples," or of all organized communities. That commandment is "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion . . ." I call attention to that over and over again because it is basic and because almost no one has much use for it; because it is infinitely more important than some of the things that are dinned in our ears by unprophetic voices from everlasting to everlasting.

Matrimony, industry, and government are affairs of peoples. If the will of God in these relations is implemented at all, it is necessarily in a community. We cannot think of the government, of matrimony, and industry except as a manifestation of organized social life. If the most comprehensive of all the proclamations of Bible religion is true, to do God's will is to conduct aright the business of the Community. The Kingdom is the community.

LATTER DAY SAINTS believe in the arrival anew, or in the return of, the genius of true prophecy. They believe that there is truly a modern voice of prophecy. And the grounds of that belief is that the ancient message of prophecy, which is manifestly true, is being proclaimed anew. The substance of the message of the voice of Restoration is that God's will must be done in earthly relations. It is that the Kingdom is the community conformed to the will of God; or, conversely, that the Kingdom is the community.

As in ancient times, so in modern times, the community which is (or which is to be) the Kingdom is referred to as Zion. The voice of Restoration says that "the Kingdom of Zion is in very deed the Kingdom of our God and of his Christ"—that is, Zion will be the Kingdom when there is a Zion. It identifies the Kingdom with the community.

Of course, I cannot speak for all Latter Day Saints personally, or individually. I represent "Restoration" only as I know it. If the land-purchasing plans, the gathering of the elect to the places appointed, the economic code of Restoration, its plan to organize the people so that the principles of the storehouse, of stewardships, of equality of economic opportunity, of individual inheritance through social function, of equitable distribution and all, will be implemented, I represent it. But if the message of Restoration is not a Kingdom - community - building message, it means nothing at all. Nothing can be made out of that message but that the Kingdom is the community.

FURTHERMORE, the voice of Restoration says that personal salvation, moral perfection, the fulfillment of personality, is conditioned in personal participation in that business. That is the meaning of the proclamation: "For if ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, ye must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you." And there can be no question about what those commandments and requirements are. They respect the duty "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." They respect the building of "the city" in which the will of God is supreme.

In a later group of talks I hope to give the rational grounds for that contention. All we have time to say now is that personal salvation may be achieved only through devotion to the Zion-redeeming task, because that devotion conditions moral perfection. The essence of Zion is the exercise of the moral will through which alone the full development of the moral nature may be achieved. Effectual devotion to the affairs of the Kingdom-community, "Zion," is the very essence of the saving process.

Peoples are composed of persons. The responsibility for the right conduct of the business of peoples is the responsibility of persons. To attend to that business, to build the kingdom, persons must come together to form communities. As Restoration states the matter, they must be "united according to the union required by the law of the celestial Kingdom." They must "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." They must build "the city." They must govern their own economic affairs in accordance with the will of God. They must build the Kingdom-community.

As the ancient voice of prophecy said, so says the voice of Restoration: to establish the Kingdom-community is the warfare of "My people." This identity of the ancient and modern conviction, that the Kingdom is the community, is the principal grounds of the Latter Day Saint contention that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy.

Ponderings

By Mrs. C. B. Freeman

There was need of help in the work of the church school. They had asked her to accept the task. She pondered over in her mind whether she should do it. It would take effort, and was she able to accomplish it? Would the extra stress cause physical impairment? Then there came floating through her mind the hymn, "I gave my life for thee, what hast thou given for me?" Such a flood of memories passed through her soul. What had she given? And if she had not really given of herself, would she be able to share with Him who gave so much?

She thought of the Apostle Paul. He gave until his life was demanded. She saw Moses weeping, and giving for the people of God. She saw men and women in our day willing to give that men and women might be taught the way of life.

It is not to the easy way of life the gospel calls, but God is concerned with the lost. It is for us to "lift, and love, and live." So, bitter as the way may seem sometimes, still, working with the Master, fitting ourselves to be workers together with him, brings the fullness of life.

THE WILL OF GOD

By Orin R. Wilcox

"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven."

THE COMING KINGDOM is delayed by the will of man, not by the intentional will of God. No doubt God knows just when man's will shall become congruent to his will to such a degree that Christ Jesus may find residence here below. No man knows when.

The world rushes on toward the climax of civilization. The gold age is near. The age of peace is dawning. Even though the will of God is not being done in many ways today, through the eye of faith we look forward to the time when his will shall be done in all things.

Paul said, "I know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him." In this day of turmoil, sorrow, and distress, it is good to see through the mists and darkness to the tree of life and to behold the ultimate triumph of all things pure and true.

LESLIE A. WEATHERHEAD, in his book, The Will of God, divides his theme into three parts: the intentional will of God, the circumstantial will of God, and the ultimate will of God. All things that are not in harmony with God's intentional will have been brought about by disobedience.

Often we hear a mourner say over a departed loved one, "It was God's will," when nothing could be more untrue. Nothing of suffering, sadness, or pain has ever been the intentional will of God. They might be God's circumstantial will.

This age is marked by a ghastly epidemic of juvenile delinquency. The rising generation could redeem Zion if they could learn obedience, but can parents teach obedience when they themselves do not obey?

IT MAY BE that God's will resorts to a cataclysmic catastrophe to teach man. Such was his method of teaching nineteen hundred years ago on this continent, and it was quite effective. The signs of the times in which we live would indicate that modern man must be taught in the same way.

It no doubt was the intentional will of God as well as his ultimate will that "the kingdoms of this world should be the kingdoms of our God and his Christ." Man in the exercise of his free agency has willed it otherwise. The result has been confusion, Babylon. Wars and rumors of war, which become signs of the second advent as they become increasingly constant and universal.

It is God's will that governments shall be regulated by righteous and just men always. The Babylon of yesterday and today expose the lamentable fact that God's will has been set aside by man in league with the satanic power. God does not approve of selfishness and greed. Contention and strife are of the devil. War is Satan's way.

God, seeing man's fallen state, did will to redeem man from the awful condition into which he had fallen, so he gave his Son that man might live again. But the will of God in every age has had to find expression in terms of man's development. The Law of Moses was not an expression of God's original or intentional will for the government of men. It was as much of the divine will as the children of Israel were prepared to obey.

IT IS NOT so today in the work of God's restoration. Many have long wondered at the delay in the building of Zion. Many have become restless and impatient. Many have wandered away and are lost.

We need to read again Lehi's vision as recorded in the second chapter of Nephi. How well it portrays the church of our day.

It is not possible for God to work out his ultimate will today with the material at hand. We believe that together we are making progress. God still waits for men.

God's ultimate will finds expression through love. He who follows the dictates of love will live above the law. The celestial law will unfold to his understanding. But most men still put their trust in riches. "The love of money is the root of all evil."

Some are so foolish as to think that independence comes through the accumulation of possessions. The most independent among men had no place to lay his head. He alone is rich who has given his all. He alone is at peace. "What you keep to yourself, you lose; what you give away, you keep forever," says Axel Munthe.

How many Saints could pass the test which Mark Twain gave to the "Nineteen Incorruptables of Hadleyburg," or resist the $30,000 bequest?

FEW ARE READY for the endowment. Most Saints would hesitate to join an order such as the Order of Enoch. Few are worthy.

An oath, a contract, or a covenant is always a serious thing to consider. There are some covenants the breaking of which may bring such condemnation that the offender would curse the day of his birth. It is easy for an individual to obtain knowledge in solitude; but to build character, man must learn to be accountable to God and every member of the group or order. "It is easier to tell twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teachings."

All things must be done in order. Promiscuous charity will not redeem Zion unless you can conceive of a people all of whom loved their neighbor more than self. Then love would find a way—the will of God.

Every man is a steward and will be held accountable to God. It is true that many of us have little of this world's goods. Even a dreamer should give an account to the bishop, though he own but the clothes on his back. It would do a dreamer good to come to earth. It would give him a chance to be scoffed at, to be criticized. How else can wants and needs be determined?

A friend is a boon at all times, but a critic is a tonic to the soul—if one can take it. Many one-talented Saints may become a great force in the redemption of Zion. God pity those who take the course of the unwise steward, and do not lay all things before the bishop.

When men learn to live the will of God, they will find the more abundant life. "Their ways are way of pleasantness, and all their paths are peace." The world in love could be transformed now. Enemies would be friends tomorrow; conservatives would be progressives, pessimists, optimists, politicians, statesmen; and cynics would be Saints. Most of us need to pray the prayer of the Chinese Christian: "Lord, reform the world, beginning with me."

Our age finds millions milling about the world looking in fear for what tomorrow may bring. "Cowards die many times before their deaths," Shakespeare wrote.

"Perfect love casteth out all fear." Perfect love is the will of God. He who has not learned to love his fellow man will never love God. He will never learn to live. "Fear not that thy life shall come to an end, but rather fear that it shall never have a beginning," said Cardinal Newman.

Many do not comply with the will of God because of family ties. Every man's duty is first to God and his church. All earthly ties are secondary. We are told in modern revelation that Zion cannot be redeemed except by obeying the celestial law. (Doctrine and Covenants 106). We can begin by giving an account of what we hold in trust. "The rich, the learned, the wise, and the noble" have long been called to the task. Few have answered the call. How many of the rest of us poor sinners can truthfully say,

The Temple at Nauvoo Was Never Completed

BY C. J. HUNT

The first witness is Brigham Young. He made the following statement in February, 1853: "Suffice it to say to this congregation [in Salt Lake City, Utah], that we shall attempt to build a temple to the name of our God. This has been attempted several times, but we have never yet had the privilege of completing and enjoying one. Perhaps we may in this place [Salt Lake City] but if in the providence of God, we should not it is all the same, . . ." Journal of Discourses, Volume 1, February 14, 1853, page 277.

At another time Brigham Young said: "But what of the temple in Nauvoo?" . . . It was "so far completed," . . . that many received a small portion of their endowment, but we know of no one who received it in its fullness."—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, Volume 2, pages 31, 32.

And on January 1, 1877, twenty-four years later, in the newly erected temple at St. George, Utah, he also said: "We built one in Nauvoo [Illinois]. I could pick out several before me now that were there when it was built, and know just how much was finished and what was done. It is true we left brethren there with instructions to finish it, and they got it nearly completed before it was burned, but the Saints did not enjoy it."—Journal of Discourses, Volume 18, pages 303, 304.

Then after a few months Brigham Young expressed himself again in a sermon as follows: "I have been spending the winter in Saint George [Utah]. Our temple there is finished, which is the first completed temple built to the name of the Most High, in which the ordinances for the living and the dead can be performed, since the one built by Solomon in the land of Jerusalem, that we have any knowledge of."—Journal of Discourses, Volume 19, page 220.

OTHER EVIDENCES

In a "Statement Covering Work and Experiences at Nauvoo 1906-1911" Bishop Mark H. Siegfried, formerly of the Presiding Bishopric, states that mention has been made at times of Brother James Gifford who lived at Mormon Springs, about six miles north of Nauvoo, near the Mississippi River. "This old brother was a very fine, genteel character. In our number of visits with him, we discussed his lifetime spent in Nauvoo and vicinity. On one occasion we discussed the condition of the Temple at the time the Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, left Nauvoo. I asked him if the [Nauvoo] Temple was finished in 1846 when they left. His answer was quick and to the point: 'No, it was not finished in 1846, nor was it ever finished. My work bench as a carpenter stood in one of the rooms of the Temple when it was burned in 1848. I recently had an argument with two Utah Mormon elders here in my home. They contended that the Temple had been finished. I told them I knew better because as I have stated to you, the interior of the building was not complete and my work bench burned as stated.'"

"Jesus, I my cross have taken, all to leave and follow thee"?

Someone has said that the final test of a gentleman is his respect for those who can be of no possible service to him. What is the conclusion of the matter? What is the test of a Saint?

ADDITIONAL TESTIMONY

Regarding the Nauvoo [Illinois] Temple, the late President Joseph Smith said as published in his memoirs (See Saints' Herald, page 178, February 5, 1935) that, "In spite of assertions to the contrary I wish to state emphatically that the Temple was never finished." . . . There were only two rooms in the building that could be said to have anywhere near approached completion." On page 207, February 12, 1935, Herald, he further states, "Whenever assertions are made that the Nauvoo Temple was finished, at any time, such statements are made by persons who are not acquainted with the facts."

The late President Joseph Smith was about twelve years old when his father Joseph Smith the Seer was murdered at Carthage, Illinois, June 27, 1844. Young Joseph lived at Nauvoo a number of years after his father's death and states that he visited the Temple frequently before it was destroyed by fire in 1848, hence was familiar with the rooms in the entire building.

The above is conclusive evidence that the contention of the Reorganized Church is right. The Nauvoo Temple was never completed.

THE BOOK OF ACTS

By O. J. Tary

OF ALL THE books in the Bible, The Acts of the Apostles stands out unique—in a class by itself. That it is a valuable contribution to the scriptures all will admit, yet an improper evaluation of the book is sure to result in misunderstanding and confusion.

There are people who believe that the Bible as we have it is a direct gift from God to man, and in that belief are apt to place equal emphasis on every statement appearing in it.

The Bible as we have it is the written work of many authors, each of which makes his contribution, colored by the events of which he wrote and the objective to be obtained. A proper appraisal of all the books written produces harmony in the unfoldment of divine law and the plan of salvation. But this can only be obtained by "rightly dividing the word of truth," giving to each statement its true value and correct interpretation as determined by the context with which it is associated, and the authority by which it was spoken or written.

GOD COMMANDED MOSES to write, and in his writing we have the words of the Lord given with an authority than which there is none higher.

John the Revelator was commanded to write a special message to each of the seven churches in Asia, and to include in his writing much valuable information for the people in all the world, especially all who were or desired to be followers of Christ.

When John wrote the fourth book of the New Testament, there is no claim that he wrote by command of the Lord, but he recorded many sayings of Jesus that revealed the will and law of God and are the unimpeachable authority on the subjects presented.

In addition to the precepts and commands of Jesus, like Matthew, Mark, and Luke, John's Gospel contains much historical matter that is of value because of the light it throws on the events associated with or related to the advent of Christ and the establishment of his church.

But in the study of the scripture we must learn to distinguish between that which is presented by prophetic inspiration or a "Thus saith the Lord," and that which has only a historical value.

As an apostle, John wrote with apostolic authority three general epistles—one to the church, one addressed to "The elect lady and her children," and one to his friend by name of Gaius. These short epistles would correctly represent the church by that authority Jesus gave to the apostles who were set in the first official position in the church.

IN WHAT WAY does the Book of Acts differ from the other books? The author, Luke, was not in an official position to speak with authority to the church, and he made no claim to do so, neither did he address the church in writing. Luke was a physician by profession, a Greek by birth, and a devout disciple of Jesus. It is claimed that he was an evangelist, but we have no account of his doing evangelistic work except as the loyal companion of Paul in the latter's missionary tours.

In the opening statement of the Acts, he says: "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began to do and teach." This makes it quite clear that he was writing to his highly esteemed friend by name of Theophilus, and that he wrote as a historian, setting forth a clear account of the things of which he had been a witness.

With this understanding we can intelligently apply his written words, giving historical value to that part that chronicles the events coming under his observation in connection with the activities of the apostles. In recording the Acts of the Apostles, it was quite natural for him to quote from their official teaching, and those quotations; official apostolic teaching must necessarily be considered binding on the church, and it is easy to distinguish between them and that part of the book that simply records what the apostles did.

Throughout the book, Luke gives clarity to the apostles' words as the official representatives of the church, but never presents himself as an authority on doctrine or practice.

Only in this book written by Luke do we get the important church history made in Jerusalem on that memorable occasion attended by the great spiritual endowment that resulted in the conversion of three thousand persons, but it is of more importance that in that same chapter we have the authoritative words of Peter, setting forth the gospel law unto all who desire to be saved.

IF, AS CLAIMED by some, the church was organized at that time, it suggests the important question, Why did Luke fail to mention so important a transaction in his record?

Just when the church began to function as an organized body is not as important as to understand how or by what authority it functioned, and what factors were brought together as component parts of the church.

In the matter of settling personal grievances between members of the church, Jesus advised the complaining party to take one or two witnesses with him to the offender, then said: "And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church" (Matthew 18: 17). It does not seem reasonable that Jesus would have given that counsel "Tell it unto the church"—if the church was not already organized. But that is a diversion from my theme.

The first five chapters of the Acts concentrate on the important work of the Apostles Peter and John, who by virtue of their official rank were in the forefront in carrying out the commission of Jesus to take the gospel into all the world.

Chapters seven and eight associate ancient Israelite history with current church activities.

The violent persecution of the church that led to the martyrdom of Stephen was in some measure due to the part played by Saul of Tarsus, in the active part he took in persecuting the followers of Christ.

The remarkable change wrought by Saul's conversion, that transformed a violent opponent of the church to one of its most loyal and staunch defenders, is interestingly set forth in chapter nine.

Then in the next three chapters is given the account of the gospel being taken to the Gentiles at the home of Cornelius, which was only one of the numerous items recorded, in which the Apostle Peter played the leading role.

THE APOSTLE PAUL first appears in Luke's Book of Acts, as Saul of Tarsus, but after his conversion was always called Paul.

From a bitter enemy of the church to a high-ranking place among the apostles, was an achievement by Paul, unequaled by any other man.

So important a matter as Paul's call and ordination to the apostleship would seem to justify more space in the record than was given to it. In fact his ordination is not named in the Acts, but in chapter thirteen is an account of Paul and Barnabas being called to a special work. The Holy Ghost being the agency through which the call came. Their ordination is obviously implied in this statement of verse three, "And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." The next verse says they were sent forth by the Holy Ghost. Perhaps this would be considered lacking as evidence that they were ordained to the office of apostles, but Luke's statement in verse 14, chapter 14, speaks of "the apostles, Barnabas and Paul."

From that time on the author of the Book of Acts gives only brief mention to other apostles, but makes

Paul the central figure of his record through fourteen chapters.

Those chapters are largely made up by a recital of Paul's active missionary work, and many interesting incidents associated with it. All of that is edifying and gives greater clarity to Paul's official utterances when quoted by Luke.

It is very important in studying the Book of Acts to rightly divide the text, giving to Paul's words the authority of an apostle, but avoiding attaching any such authority to that part of the text that is historical, or that simply refers to an incident, which of itself is not important.

Chapter twenty of the Acts is composed entirely of a graphic account of Paul's labors in the localities he visited. The persons composing his company and the incidents occurring are secondary in importance to the one theme running through the chapter.

ALL BINDING COMMITMENTS to the church must come in a direct manner. They must also come through one authorized to speak for the church. When Paul summoned the elders of the church from Ephesus and gave them the following, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood" (verse 28), he set forth a responsibility resting on those men that is equally applicable to the elders of the church at all times and places. That admonition was binding because it was given by the authority of a duly accredited official of the church.

But the incident mentioned in verse seven of chapter twenty is simply Luke's words in giving the attending circumstances of Paul's preaching.

Let us carefully consider the statement as it reads, "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight."

The first day of the week, because of Jesus' resurrection on that day, was the most appropriate time for the disciples of Christ to come together for divine services, including the sacramental service of the Lord's Supper, but in this writing by Luke there is no semblance of an established law, or even a church approved custom that required the disciples of Christ to observe the sacrament on the first day of every week and on no other days.

It is incredible that such a custom would be established in the church without any definite statement by Jesus or anyone of his chosen apostles whose prerogative it was to teach the law of the church.

LET US SEE what the Scriptures give us on the matter of the Lord's Supper. Mark and John do not mention it in their Gospels. Matthew gives us very brief statements of Jesus as he administered the bread and wine. After giving the bread to his disciples, he said: "Take, eat; this is my body." And of the cup he said: "Drink ye all of it. For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." He gave no instruction to his followers as to time and frequency of observance. Luke repeats in substance the words of Jesus as given by Matthew, with the added statement, "This do in remembrance of me."

The only definite instruction relative to the Lord's Supper becoming an established custom in the church is given by Paul in the eleventh chapter of First Corinthians, which Paul says he received of the Lord, "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come."

The only logical conclusion that can be reached on this subject is that Jesus required his disciples to observe this sacrament to commemorate his death till he come, and that neither by command nor implication did he require them to observe it on any particular day or occasion. His words, "This do in remembrance of me," and "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." Of the cup he said: "This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me."

Since Jesus required that the sacrament should be observed in remembrance of him, and gave no instruction as to when or how often it should be observed, except the phrase, "As often" or "As oft as ye drink it," it would be a serious reflection on his failure to use his ample opportunities to make known to his followers what he required of them, if they were to receive that information in such an uncertain devotional course as the incident mentioned by Luke as he gave a pen picture of Paul's missionary work.

Had Luke been speaking to the church to have the disciples know they were required to observe the Lord's Supper the first day of every week, he would have been more explicit and not so ambiguous. He does not even state that the disciples came together to observe the Lord's Supper, but says they came together to break bread, but does not mention wine or the cup. Their coming together afforded Paul a good opportunity to preach a farewell sermon to them, and he continued his discourse until midnight. Then after he "had broken bread and eaten," he continued his talk till break of day when he departed. He was well informed relative to the observance of the Lord's Supper, and it is unreasonable to believe that he failed at this opportune time to make known an important requirement of the church, on which no one in authority had previously spoken.

Paul knew he would not be permitted to make another visit to saints among whom he was then laboring, and in his farewell talk he said: "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." That proves conclusively that all the counsel of God relative to the observance of the Lord's Supper, Paul wrote in his first epistle to the Corinthians, chapter eleven, beginning at verse 23.

Until the Lord reveals more definite information, it is left to the discretion of the church to observe the service at such times as may best serve to commemorate the violent death of Christ.

The Book of Acts stands alone from the other books of the New Testament. It portrays the church in action and gives much of historical value, as unfolded by the practical interpretation of the gospel by the apostles in their missionary work, in keeping with their given mission to carry the gospel to all the world.

breed intolerance nor tolerance lack of principle and indifference; fitness of the body must not cause atrophy of the spirit. Without balance "our steadfast purpose trembles like as the compass in a binnacle," and we cannot keep steadily on our course towards the good. And balance is most easily maintained through the study and practice of philosophy, which is the crown or coping stone without which no education is really complete.

For men, as Plato taught, are like prisoners in a cave, so tied and bound that they cannot see anything but the smooth rock face in front of them. Behind them is a great fire burning and between them and the fire a road along which objects are carried to and fro, so that their shadows are cast on the wall of the cave. To the prisoners these shadows are real, for they have never seen anything else, and if they are released and shown the things on the road, they cannot at first understand that they are more real than the shadows. When at length they are persuaded of this, and led up the steep slope of the cave to the world above, they are at first dazzled by the bright light of the sun, and it is some time before they can look directly at the trees and flowers and still longer before then can bear to raise their eyes to the sun itself, which typifies the Good. Such is the process of education properly conceived. Have we, in planning our national policy, truly pondered these things and endeavored to keep our own eyes fixed on the sun? Or are we in danger of gaining the whole world and losing our own souls?

boosts do when there is little to buy? Black markets and other evils will return, in spite of price controls. If this nation wishes to achieve welfare, it must begin to produce soon and get down to business. Otherwise, money will be worth very little. People think that it is more money they need. What is needed is goods in the market so that there will be something to buy, prices can go down, and money will again be worth something in terms of usable goods.

He Sawed Wood

By A. R. Wells

Once there were seven sawyers and each had a cord of wood to saw.

Said the first sawyer: "This wood is green, and the saw sticks in it. I will go away and wait until it gets dry." He did so.

Said the second sawyer: "This saw is dull, and I can never saw a cord of wood with it. I will tell the master to have it sharpened, and then I will saw the wood for him." He did so.

Said the third sawyer: "This wood is knotty and will be very hard to saw. I will ask the master to change it for straight wood, which I will gladly saw for him." He did so.

Said the fourth sawyer: "This wood is hickory which is twice as hard to saw as oak. I will ask the master to swap it for a cord of oak, and then I will saw for him." He did so.

Said the fifth sawyer: "It is very hot today. I will wait till it gets cooler." He did so.

Said the sixth sawyer: "I have a headache and will wait until I feel well. He did so.

The seventh sawyer had green wood and knotty wood, and it was hickory. He also had a dull saw and a headache. The day was hot for him, too. But he sharpened the saw and set it, so that it flew through the knotty hickory and did not stick at all. The exercise drove away his headache, and the perspiration cooled him.

A Diamond Jubilee

Celebrated by Mr. and Mrs.
John T. Scott

Sunday afternoon, December 16, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Chase, Inglewood, California, a reception was held in honor of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Scott, who celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding. Mrs. Chase is a granddaughter of the Scotts. Brother Scott was born at Scottsville, Indiana; Sister Scott, whose maiden name was Leora Miller, was born at Greenville, Indiana.

Their marriage was solemnized at Greenville, December 13, 1885. This town has a place in the history of the church, as it was here Joseph Smith was poisoned, and Brother Whitney suffered a broken leg, as they journeyed from Independence, Missouri, where they had dedicated the temple lot, to Kirtland, Ohio.

The bride and bridegroom made their home at New Albany, Indiana, from 1885 to 1900, when they moved to Valparaiso, in the northern part of the state of Indiana. Brother Scott was engaged in the grocery and meat business there. In 1912 he was appointed postmaster under the administration of the late Woodrow Wilson, and served in that office for the two terms of President Wilson's incumbency, and on into the Harding administration. This took in the whole period of World War I.

Brother and Sister Scott moved to California in 1923, and located in Glendale. Their home now is at 429 Osage Avenue, Inglewood, California. To them were born five children; the oldest died in infancy. Their two daughters, Mrs. T. F. McGuire, and Mrs. R. T. French both live in California. One son, Earl G., passed away following an automobile accident; the other, Harold K., died as a result of an operation in Chicago, Illinois. After the death of Earl, Brother and Sister Scott adopted his son, who now resides in Clearwater, Florida. Another grandson, Harold T. French, is a lieutenant of the U. S. Army Air Force, and is stationed at Mitsugi Air Field, Tokyo, Japan.

Many congratulatory messages and floral tributes typified the affection and esteem in which these good people were held, and came from places as distant as Tokyo, Japan, and India. For many years the Scotts have been faithful and consistent members of the church; Brother Scott is an elder. Their membership now is in the Central church, Los Angeles, California, and none are more faithful in their discharge of duty than they. Brother Scott is still able and willing to function as a minister. It is always a pleasure to see these dear old people taking part in the worship and other activities of the church. The passing years, of course, have taken their toll, but the fine characters of these good friends have been enriched and refined in gentleness, courtesy, and hospitality. Indeed, the inestimable worth of such people to any community represents the treasures which John Ruskin describes as the real wealth of a nation.

As many responded to the invitation to join in the auspicious occasion, we could not but reflect on the present-day attitude toward marriage and what it means as the holiest of all human relationships; and the gross vulgarization and cheapening of this sacred intimacy in the light-hearted manner and irreverent way in which too often the religious aspect of the covenant is either ignored altogether, or caricatured. How differently these friends entered into life's greatest of all adventures, and for sixty years have maintained their loyalty to their sacramental vows.

If our civilization is to survive, and the dream of the kingdom of God is to be realized, it will be because home and family life will be founded upon the sacrament of the marriage vows. Among the tragic casualties of the war, we are most concerned with the depreciation of this primary human relationship, and feel that the example which is emphasized in this tribute is worthy of special note.

In it we see what marriage can be, and think of Paul's admonition "That a man love his wife as Christ also loves the church and gave himself for it"—not for a day, or a year, but always!

May God continue his blessings to our brother and sister whose lives have been fused into oneness through all the changing circumstances of life, in which shadows as well as light, sorrow as well as joy, loss as well as gain, have all contributed their part to make the whole.

—Apostle John W. Rushton.

Correspondence

Miss Emma Drury, a church member of Avoca, Nebraska, age twenty-seven, is located at a distance from the church and its privileges, and feels isolated. She would be glad to hear from members.

Albert Carmichael conducted a series of meetings November 11 to 21. One service was held in Windsor in the Pentacostal church building, one in Bloomfield in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hinton; two in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Hinton in Santa Rosa, and the remaining services were held in the church in Santa Rosa. Brother Carmichael's messages were inspiring and encouraging. His example of devotion and consecration was a challenge to all. The appreciation of the Saints for the message he gave increased with each succeeding service.

Thanksgiving morning a group of Saints gathered together in the church auditorium to give thanks and praise to their Heavenly Father for all the blessings he had so freely given.

During this service the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Hinton of Vallejo was blessed by his grandfather, Elder E. B. Hinton.

The annual business meeting and election of officers was held Sunday afternoon, November 11. Apostle John W. Rushton and District President Lawrence MacDonald were in charge. Those elected were: pastor, Herbert Hinton; director of religious education, Mrs. Etta Holst; director of Zion's League, Mrs. Wilma Hauschnecht; director of music, Mrs. Frieda Budworth; director of the women's department, Mrs. Etta Walker; secretary, Mrs. Hazel Lloyd; treasurer, Ira Merrick; auditor and bishop's solicitor, Herbert Walker; historian, Mrs. Romla Hinton; librarian, James Marshall; publicity agent, Mrs. Romla Hinton.

Berdina Johnson and Etta Holst are supervising the junior church group. The response given them by the children indicate they are doing a splendid piece of work. Both have Sunday morning classes to teach, but through the spirit of co-operation and willingness, they are able to meet the demands made upon them.

The Saints were happy to welcome back to their group Mr. and Mrs. Ira Merrick who have just returned from spending several months in the east. Brother Merrick is the only deacon in the Santa Rosa congregation and his services have been greatly missed.

The Zion's League meets every Friday night under the direction of Wilma Hauschnecht.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, Joseph Breshears

On the evening of December 2 an all-Negro group, Pitts Chapel junior choir, sang several selections preceding Elder Glen Yeoman's sermon. Elder John Dowker was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service on December 9, and Priest James Kemp gave the evening message. Other speakers in December were Pastor Breshears and Eder Starks.

A Christmas cantata, Roger's The Holy Advent, was given the evening of December 23 by the choir. Clifford Browne conducted the cantata; Hattie Bishop was pianist. Solo parts were sung by Ruth Akridge, Helen Kemp, Opal Smith, Lorene Browne, Bennie Simmons, and James Kemp, Jr. Marion Bishop, home on vacation from Graceland, played a violin solo.

Half an hour of carol singing by the junior choir, under the direction of Adena Browne, preceded the cantata. A white gift offering was taken to be used in missionary work.

Pastor and Mrs. Breshears were presented a reproduction of Sallman's "Head of Christ" as a token of appreciation for their untiring devotion during the year. Clifford Browne, representing the congregation, made the presentation speech.

On Christmas eve the junior church school presented a program in the form of a play entitled, "What Christmas Means." This was followed by a party in the lower auditorium where gifts were exchanged and a Christmas treat was distributed.

On the morning of December 23 the children celebrated Christ's birthday in a beautiful service held in the junior department. Thirty-nine pieces of candle-topped birthday cake were distributed to the children, who marched by a white cake bearing a large lighted candle symbolizing Christ's love for them. They pledged themselves to make Christ's wish, that they love one another, come true. After blowing out their candles, they sang "Happy Birthday to Jesus."

The junior division continues to have an unusual record of attendance, reporting three and four classes with perfect attendance each Sunday. Guest speakers in the junior department for December were Elder J. B. Ansley, Joseph Breshears, Priest Clifford Browne, and Deacon Merlin Hutsell.

Weekly prayer services have been under the leadership of various members of the priesthood. During January and February, cottage meetings will be held in each of the four sections of the city, rather than the usual congregational meeting in the church. Another change in schedule is the moving ahead of the evening service to six o'clock, to be followed immediately by choir rehearsal at seven. This should prove advantageous to parents with small children and those handicapped by transportation problems.

Recent junior League activities have included a Bible quiz, a worship service, a lesson on junior stewardship, and a talk by the pastor. Senior League programs have consisted of a Bible quiz, group working of a Biblical crossword puzzle, a worship service, Christmas caroling, and a chili supper. Girls of the League meet every Tuesday evening in the homes of various members for sewing.

The women's department held a successful rummage sale in December. They also made stage curtains for the main auditorium, sacked the Christmas treats, prepared the Christmas cheer baskets, and held a Christmas party.

Elder Francis Bishop has been appointed director of missionary activity in the Springfield area. A group of Saints is now meeting at Republic, Missouri. Brother Bishop has preached several times at Plano, and arrangements are being made for a series of meetings to be held there in the near future. Every fourth Sunday he preaches at Lockwood. His other assignments this month have included services at Joplin, Webb City, Medoc, and Carthage.

Betty Ellen Markley was baptized by James Kemp, Jr., on the morning of December 10. She was confirmed by Elders Wilson and Breshears.

Servicemen from the Springfield congregation to be discharged recently are Johnny Bair, Merle Bird, Nephi Leighton, and Francis Mink.

New Year's Eve, Pastor and Mrs. Breshears held open house for the Saints. A large number attended, enjoying the fellowship and midnight service of dedication.

Hibbard, Indiana

Pastor, L. L. Bennett

Elder Forrest Myers, district president, and Mrs. Myers, district women's leader, were guests at the family night meeting and dinner held in November. This activity is sponsored monthly by the women's department under the leadership of Margaret Kersey.

Speakers to occupy the pulpit recently have been George Semour, A. O. Kersey, L. L. Bennett, and Forrest Myers. Elder Semour officiated at the blessing of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Heplick's infant son.

The Hibbard Saints extend their sympathy to Mary Crum who recently lost her husband, and to Brother and Sister Greenwalt who lost a son.

Glenna Reed, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Reed, is home from Graceland for the holidays.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Columbus Branch

Pastor, Donald V. Lents

The December Communion service was in charge of the pastor and a large crowd was in attendance. The evening sermon was by Elder A. H. Nieman.

On December 9 H. J. Hoffman was the morning speaker. At this service the baby daughter of Virginia and Robert Duemmel was blessed; Elders R. E. Madden and J. E. Matthews officiated. Sister Duemmel was formerly Virginia Moler.

For the prayer service December 12, the pastor read the Christmas story from the Bible and showed Kodachrome slides of the story of the nativity.

The following evening the department of women met for their business session and Christmas party at the home of Dorothy Miller. Following the business meeting, the Zion's League presented the Christmas story in song, and slides shown by Helen Lents; a lovely musical effect was added by the triple whistling of Martha Swanson. Refreshments were served following the program.

Elder R. E. Madden was the speaker the morning of December 16, and in the evening Elder C. H. Hamilton, pastor of the Third branch, spoke.

The church school held its Christmas party the night of December 21; the children presented songs, dialogues, and a play, The Christmas Spirit. Santa Claus arrived to remember the kiddies.

The Zion's League had a party the same evening at the home of Clifford and Thelma Mottashed. Games and contests were enjoyed.

The pastor brought the Christmas message the morning of December 23, and at five in the afternoon a vesper service was presented by the choir; Hazel Gribben was in charge.

The pastor again spoke on the morning of December 30; Gerald Swanson was the evening speaker for the Zion's League.

The church school had special programs each Sunday during the month. On December 23 Lucinda Madden presented the Christmas story by flannel-graph.

The junior church, under the direction of Norma Anne Kirkendall, has been having special activities too. One Sunday they were presented a recorded Christmas program by Fibber and Molly of radio fame. They are carrying on a contest for several weeks in which they can win points for attendance, participation, and other activities. In December they used the theme "For the beauty of the earth," in which they found many things God does for people that they cannot do for themselves.

Chicago District

First Chicago Branch

Pastor, Lyman Jones

The theme, "Indelible Memories of Gratitude," was carried out in the November 4 Communion service. Pastor Lyman Jones presided over the meeting, and the choir, under the direction of Elder D. M. Wiesen, sang an anthem. Sunday evening the League sponsored a waffle supper and cleared $36.50. Guests were Lieutenant and Mrs. Jack Conway of Evanston, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mal-larus, and Mr. Roy Jones of Kansas City, Missouri.

Four alumni and others from the First Chicago branch attended the annual home-coming at Graceland.

Jack Edstrom, still in the service, was a welcome visitor on November 4. He expected to be sent to an embarkation center, and from there to Germany, at the end of his furlough. Lieutenant and Mrs. Crossen are now worshipping with the Saints of First Chicago church. Mrs. Crossen and daughter, Kathryn, came from Kirtland, Ohio.

The midweek cottage meetings and Wednesday evening prayer services held in November were well attended.

The women's department held a rummage sale with the Maywood mission November 16. $148.00 was added to the building fund as a result of this project. The Ssenippah Guild met at the home of Emerine Gunderson, the North Side Circle at Violette Jones and Ruth Wiggins, and the Friendship Guild at Belle Simmons and Rose Skinner, during the month of November.

Jerry Martin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Van Alstin, and Carl Erich, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rathmann, were blessed by Elders Lyman Jones and J. W. Pettersson on November 25. Ruby Henson and Sally Anderson sang a duet at this service.

A Thanksgiving worship service was held at the church on Thursday evening, November 22. Elder Lyman Jones was in charge. Ruby Henson gave a reading from "A Bell for Adano," and J. W. Pettersson offered the Thanksgiving prayer.

Speakers for the month were Elders

D. M. Wiesen, Lt. Luther Trowyer, and David Dowker. Brother Dowker, a former missionary to Chicago, came from Detroit, Michigan, to speak.

—Velva Castins, reporter.

West Pullman Branch

Pastor, Stephen Lester, Jr.

Officers elected to serve during the coming church year are: pastor, Stephen Lester, Jr.; counselor, Kenneth Lusha; treasurer, Lynton Lusha; secretary, Richard Keir; women's department leader, Edna Lester; director of music, LaVon Lusha; publicity agent and book steward, Clinton Dickens.

Speakers at the Sunday morning services during the month of November were district president Joseph Baldwin, Pastor Stephen Lester, Jr., and Clinton Dickens.

On the evening of November 18 a spaghetti supper was enjoyed by the members of the branch and a number of nonmember friends. This event was held to raise funds for the purchasing of some much needed equipment for the children's department. Ruth Dickens, who is in charge of the church school, managed the supper. She was assisted by the women of the branch and the boys and girls, who sold tickets. The project cleared $33.00.

Branch workers have been co-operating with the workers of other churches in the community to further the cause of Christ and to promote good will. Pearl Rosser of the International Union of Religious Education held a five-session seminar at the Stewart Ridge Community church. Elder Kenneth Lusha and Hattie Bell gave the worship service on two evenings, and the women's department served refreshments one evening.

Four members of the branch priesthood attended a dinner held for the district priesthood at Central church. The food was prepared and served by the district department of women officers and the women's leaders of each branch in the Chicago district. After the dinner an excellent lecture was given by Elder H. T. McCaig of the First Chicago branch.

—Clinton Dickens, reporter.

Sabetha, Kansas

Pastor, E. L. White

Newly ordained Priest Marvin White and Deacon Arthur Clark delivered sermons on November 4 and 18.

Since the present meeting place is being sold, a special assembly was called November 11 to decide on a new place. Another upstairs hall has been found available and the Saints will soon be meeting there.

Howard Brunner, stationed temporarily at Fort Riley, has been a frequent visitor at church.

On Sunday, November 18, Brother Moffat, of St. Joseph, Missouri, was the guest speaker.

A Thanksgiving program was held November 25. Larry Hastings, a student at Graceland, gave the feature talk.

Twenty-four visitors from the Dawson branch attended services at Sabetha December 2. On December 23, a Christmas program was presented under the direction of Mrs. Andrew Mincher. Brother Twombly, of Fanning, was the speaker on December 30.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch

Pastor, F. E. Jett

Several servicemen who have been active workers while stationed near San Antonio are leaving the congregation to return to their homes. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wellington and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rock are among those whose services are being missed.

A branch paper is being edited by Joe and Florence Berry. Each member of the congregation, whether at home or overseas, receives a copy every month.

A chicken dinner, sponsored by the League, was held November 10 to raise money needed for the improvements on the basement and other church conveniences. Each member bought a ticket or donated food for the occasion; a profit of $107.00 was netted from the project.

At the Armistice Day program in November, Edward Webb, Archie Gatrost, and Linden Wheeler related some of their overseas experiences during the war. Those attending remembered with heavy hearts the one serviceman from their congregation who did not return; A. D. Kuykendall was killed in a jeep accident last October.

Before his departure, Arthur Rock presented colored slides on the ancient ruins in Mexico. December 2, Apostle Charles R. Hield spoke at the evening service and again on the following Wednesday evening.

A Christmas pageant was presented by Florence Berry with the co-operation of the choir directed by Emma Jackson. After the service, the singers went to the homes of several Saints and friends to sing Christmas carols.

H. E. Winegar gave the New Year sermon Sunday, December 30.

—Maurine Webb, reporter.

Herald Office Employees' Party

Sixty-five employees and guests of the Herald office enjoyed a Christmas party held the evening of December 28 at the Eagles' Hall. Since a caterer was not available, the women prepared the dinner. Group singing and program features were the order of the evening. Kenneth Graham, business manager, made a brief address and gave the employees presents and a boxed fruit cake for each family represented.

Stone Church

Pastor, Garland E. Tickemyer

Apostle F. Henry Edwards Speaks

On Sunday, December 23, Apostle F. Henry Edwards occupied the Stone Church pulpit. His text was "And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us." The garlands of evergreen and flowers decorating the pulpit were furnished by the Men's Club.

Cantanina Chorus in Midnight Concert

The Cantanina Chorus presented a candlelight service between eleven and twelve o'clock on Christmas Eve. The chorus was assisted by Garland Tickemyer, tenor; Shirley Feiser, soprano; Virginia Bath, Louise Wrigley, and Katherine Wheaton, trio; and Lois Jean Williams, reader. Mrs. Irene Wolfe was at the piano, and Mrs. Thelma Hershey at the celeste. The girls, in white robes, held lighted candles as they came down the aisles singing "O Come All Ye Faithful." For the recessional, "Silent Night" was sung. Leonard Lea offered the invocation and benediction. Mrs. Kathryn Westwood was the director.

Final Sermon of Year

Pastor Garland Tickemyer delivered the last sermon in 1945, using for his text, "The Vanishing Year." He reviewed the achievements of the Stone Church congregation during the past twelve months, and gave a preview of what should be done in the future. Some of the outstanding accomplishments he mentioned were: the raising of average attendance to 1,191 at morning worship services, and 546 at evening services; the 107 baptisms recorded in 1945; the celebration of President Harry Truman's homecoming in the Auditorium. Pastor Tickemyer also pointed out that of the 525 Stone Church members called into service, only fourteen made the supreme sacrifice. The building fund has reached the $35,000 mark, and contributions for the past year were approximately $10,000.

Goals for 1946 are the installation of a new organ, increasing the seating capacity to accommodate the ever-growing membership, continuation of missionary endeavors, construction of a new church school building, provision of an 8:15 preaching service on Sunday mornings, and the strengthening of district organizations.

Alexander Klein Speaks

Alexander Klein, recently ordained to the office of priest, gave his first sermon on Sunday evening, December 30. His subject was "World Brotherhood Through Christianity."

Stone Church News Sheet

The half-page mimeographed sheet introduced to the Stone Church congregation January 11, 1942, has evolved into a six-page folder containing official announcements of all meetings, news, advanced notices of other activities of the congregation, and the pastor's notes. The news page will be of special interest to shut-ins and others deprived of church attendance.

Overflow at Communion Service

The first Communion service held at Stone Church in 1946 had an overflowing attendance of 1,556. Presidents F. M. Smith and L. F. P. Curry were in charge, assisted by Seventy H. I. Velt.

Zion-Wide Prayer Service Grows

One hundred thirty-five people attended the Zion-wide prayer service held at 2:30 P. M. on January 6. Twenty testimonies were borne, and ten prayers offered. Elder Ray Whiting presented the theme of the meeting, "A Profitable Home."

Apostle G. G. Lewis Speaks

Apostle George G. Lewis was the speaker at the evening service on January 6. His topic for discourse was "What Would Jesus Do?" The Stone Church choir provided special music.

Pulpit Flowers

The beautiful vase of gladioli placed in front of the pulpit on January 6 by Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Campbell were in memory of Mrs. Campbell's parents, the Charles Koehlers, who were beloved members of the Stone Church congregation. —Grace L. Krahl, reporter.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are earnestly requested for Clyde Gilbert, Windsor, Ontario. He is suffering from a serious malady that robs him of his health and prevents his holding a steady job. He is a priest, is married, and has one child. He has faith that united prayer will heal him.

Leeds, England

Pastor, John Kaylor

To celebrate the occasion of the organization of the church in Leeds sixty years ago, October 20 and 21 were set apart for a special anniversary program. This opened on Saturday afternoon with a tea party; a large number of Saints and visitors from Manchester, Farnworth, Birmingham, London, and Clay Cross attended. The sociability that emanated from this common feast was continued later in the evening with songs, recitations, readings, and the recounting of humorous stories for which expressions of appreciation were given to the artists. Those who made contributions to the program were Mrs. Ivy Thompson and her two daughters from Huddersfield; Mrs. M. Stephen and her daughter, Jean, from Manchester; Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Dyson, Arnold and Joyce Taylor, and Mr. T. Taylor.

Elder S. Hope, district president, presided over the Sunday morning service. Patriarch John Worth presented the sermon in which he reminded those in attendance of the past with its many pleasing memories of the faithfulness of the Saints, and of the possibilities of the future. He said that if the Leeds branch had done nothing more, it had made a worthy contribution to the church by having brought forth one of the most loved Apostles, John W. Rushton.

Another service was held in the afternoon at which a historical survey of the branch was given. Those who had had long association with the work in Leeds also gave testimonies.

St. Louis, Missouri

Pastor, Frank McDonald

Despite the inclement weather, the women's department held a very successful Christmas party at the church on December 13. A luncheon was served by the members of Myrtle Lloyd's group, followed by a program consisting of carol singing, readings, and special musical numbers under the direction of Irene Wehrli.

The young adult group met at the church for a chili supper and Christmas party on December 17. An exchange of gifts marked the climax of the evening's activities.

A Christmas play was presented in the main auditorium of the church on December 23. A short program of Christmas songs, violin selections by Richard Radford, and vocal solos by Mathel Archibald and Rosaleene Courmerilh was also given. After the play, everyone assembled downstairs where the youngsters met Santa and were given gifts and candy. The gifts were donated by Elder Robert Lloyd, Sr. Pastor and Mrs. McDonald were presented a gift of money by the members of St. Louis branch.

The Saints extend their sympathy to Mrs. Edward Minshall whose husband died December 30.

Servicemen who have recently received discharges are James Myers, Duane Miller, Percy Salters, and Robert Lloyd, Jr. —Opal Nelson, reporter.

Southeastern Illinois District

Marion, Illinois

Pastor, E. W. McKinney

Seventy John R. Grice will begin a series of meetings starting January 13 and continuing for two weeks. This series is for both members and nonmembers. Everyone is invited to take advantage of this ministry.

Flora, Illinois

Pastor, Edward Colvin

District President Eugene A. Theys and Elder Loyd Adams of McKenzie, Alabama, will hold services in Flora for three evenings beginning January 13. All are invited to attend these special meetings and introduce their friends to the district missionaries. The work in Flora is growing, and the Saints are looking forward to the time when they shall be able to build their own church.

Centralia, Illinois

Pastor, Charles H. Wesner

Elders Eugene Theys and Loyd Adams will conduct special services for three evenings. The dates have been set for January 16, 17, and 18. This is to afford the Saints of Centralia a chance to meet Elder Adams, their newly appointed missionary, and to continue the friendship of Brother Theys.

Mount Vernon, Illinois

Pastor, Rufus Rockett

The Saints at Mount Vernon are planning a rally day for January 20. All members and former members of Mount Vernon are requested to be present for these special services. Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Elder Loyd Adams, missionary to southeastern Illinois, and District President Eugene A. Theys will be present for the day's activities. The program will begin at 10 A. M. Elder Adams is to give the address at that time. Apostle Edwards will deliver the 11 o'clock sermon. A basket dinner will be served in the basement of the church at noon. At 2 P. M. a service of blessing children will be held, followed by an address from Apostle Edwards. District President Eugene Theys is to be the speaker at the evening service.

Priesthood Institute

Once again the priesthood of the central Illinois, St. Louis, and southeastern Illinois districts will meet at Centralia for an institute to be held under the supervision of Apostle F. Henry Edwards. It is hoped Apostle Arthur Oakman will also be present. The date for this meeting has been set for February 20.

Indianapolis, Indiana

Pastor, Lloyd Cleveland

The Indianapolis branch has just completed a very successful year and is starting out the new year with much enthusiasm and determination to make it even better than the one past. At the yearly branch business meeting several changes were made in the roster of officers. Lloyd Cleveland, one of the younger men of the branch, was chosen as pastor. He succeeds Arthur Gage who served in this capacity for seventeen years and is now fulfilling another calling. Heber Humphrey was elected church school director; Gordon Rhodes, young people's supervisor; Mae Rhodes, women's departmental supervisor; William Davis, treasurer; Rebecca Nolan, secretary; Edith Davis, chorister; and Dorothy Swift, pianist.

October 19, 20, and 21, the southern Indiana district workers institute was held at Indianapolis. Allen Breckenridge, district missionary, and Alma Louise Utz of Brynville, Indiana, conducted the classwork. A splendid representation from Louisville, Kentucky; New Albany, Washington, and Evansville, Indiana, were present. The opening feature of the institute was a banquet sponsored by the women's department on Friday evening, October 19. The subject discussed at the institute was "Evangelism and the Teaching Methods," by Floyd McDowell.

The young people of the branch are again manifesting keen interest in their activities under the leadership of Gordon Rhodes. Brother Rhodes, recently baptized, has become an enthusiastic worker. He and his companion, the former Mae Paswater of Detroit, are doing a commendable work with the youth in their effort to revive the Zion's League.

November 4 to 11 Patriarch Ray Whiting held a series of meetings. He retold the gospel story in his masterly way, challenging the Saints to share with others and adjust their lives to the business of achieving the task before them.

Sunday, November 11, Arthur W. Gage, Sr., was ordained to the Order of Evangelists under the hands of Apostle Charles R. Hield and Patriarch Ray Whiting. Brother Gage had previously been ordained a high priest at the southern Indiana district reunion held August 26. The church was filled to capacity at this impressive service, many coming from other parts of the district. Both Apostle Hield and Patriarch Ray Whiting delivered appropriate messages for the occasion.

Beginning December 2 District Missionary Allen Breckenridge, conducted a two weeks series of meetings. Services were held Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings at the church, and in private homes on the alternating nights. These home services consisted of slides and lectures.

Two new members have recently been added to the Indianapolis branch. These are Anita June Sloan of Camby, Indiana, and Harvard Brittain of Cave-In Rock, Illinois.

Lockwood, Missouri

Pastor, Edward Heide

The Lockwood Saints are happy to be able to obtain a lease on a church building; it is located one block west of Main street. Attendance is steadily increasing, and five church school classes have been organized. A series of meetings is scheduled to be held in the near future. Recent visitors have been Elder and Mrs. A. M. Hogan of Carthage, and Frances Bishop of Springfield.

Port Huron, Michigan

Pastor, J. A. Pray

The Flint-Port Huron district conference was held November 4 at Port Huron. There was a large attendance for every service of the day. Soloists Donna Webster, James Greene, and Richard Whitford provided special music for the occasion. The conference business meeting was held at the church at two in the afternoon. Apostle E. J. Gleazer addressed the congregation at 11 o'clock, and Elder H. Simons, pastor of the Flint, Michigan, branch, gave the evening sermon.

A welcome visitor at the conference was Pvt. Oliver Ginoza from the Waiiki branch in Hawaii. He was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Wyman. Over two years ago, when Private Ginoza became a close friend of Sgt. Eugene Wyman, Jr., he promised to visit the Wymans if it were ever his privilege to do so. The opportunity came at the same time as the district conference, when a furlough was granted to him. Private Ginoza will be sent to Japan as an interpreter for the army when his furlough is over.

The Leaguers are holding a contest in order to obtain new members. Gene Grahl and Lloyd Slaght are captains of the teams.

On November 14 Mrs. Helen Pray spoke concerning her experiences when entering the church; on the following Tuesday, Elder Jack Pray gave the sermon.

A taffy pull was held December 11 at the home of Delores Breckon. Lt. Col. Garvey Grice lectured and showed colored slides which he took while overseas and in the States. The following week a Christmas party was held at the church. Vida Grice supervised the program, and Maxine Paton was in charge of the lunch. After the evening service on December 23, the Leaguers sang carols before the homes of sick members of the branch.

At the November meeting of the men's club, Frank Secory, Chicago Cub outfielder, spoke about his world series experiences. The boys of the branch soft ball team were guests at this meeting. A movie by the Bell Telephone Company was presented at the December meeting. Suppers for these meetings were served by the women's department.

On November 17, the women held their annual one-day rummage sale in a local store, clearing $85.00, and on November 29 they served a chicken supper for the public. Florence Davis was in charge of the dining room, and Edna King, the kitchen.

The young matrons held their Christmas party at the Gratiot Memorial Home where twelve elderly ladies make their home. A program, in charge of Helen Pray, was given. Leila Muir, dressed as Santa Claus, presented a gift to each member of the home.

Gladys McKay, prominent member of the young matron's group, left the branch in November for Oregon. She was presented a farewell gift before her departure.

At recent meetings the young matrons have enjoyed a talk by Helen Pray, an instrumental duet by Lloyd Slaght and Bill Agnew, a lesson in quick-cooked meals by Eleanor Smith, a piano recital by Matthew Cawthorn, and a recitation by Gladys McKay.

On December 16 Lloyd Warner, pastor of the junior group, was assisted by Gerald Youngs who recently returned from the South Pacific and Japan. Brother Youngs spoke to the children concerning the Christmas days he had spent while in the service.

Books and money have been donated to the junior library which was originated by Adah Webb.

The Blue Bird girls, under the direction of Helen Bankson, presented a Thanksgiving program at the 11 o'clock service November 18; Elder Joseph Muir gave the sermon. Elder Carl Muir spoke at the evening service.

In November the boy scouts initiated Thomas and Bert O'Harrow, Bill Agnew, and Rudy Manguski into the order of the King Bee. Their leader, Russell Loeiding, also gave the group training in how to conduct a boy scout court.

On December 9, three children, Douglas Schram, Mary Lee Youngs, and Dennis Mugridge were blessed. Donna Webster sang a solo, and Elder Tennyson Summers presented the sermon. On December 23 another child, Janet Frizzell, was blessed.

The fellowship class held a Christmas party at the church on December 11. Marie Agnew and Lillian Gibson were in charge.

The Saints are happy to have J. I. Grice as pianist again; he has just returned from Germany. His brother, William Grice, recently returned from the South Pacific, is a frequent vocal soloist.

Ethel Slaght and Leila Muir directed the Christmas program given at the church December 14. Along with a number of short selections, a play, Trimming the Christmas Tree, was presented. Every class in the junior church school had some part in the program. Santa Claus visited the children and gave each a box of candy and nuts.

At the 11 o'clock service December 23,

Elder Ernest Ledsworth spoke on "The Meaning of Christmas." At the conclusion of this service, Elder Joseph Muir presented an envelope of money to Pastor and Mrs. J. A. Pray as a Christmas gift from the branch.

The Christmas cantata, under the direction of Richard Whitford, was given on the evening of December 23. The adult choir presented Nolte's King all Glorious. The five soloists were Olive Welch, Ruth Grahl, Laila Thompson, James Greene, and Richard Whitford. Others who sang selected parts were Esther Brown, Verna and Vida Grice. Margaret Emlaw was at the piano.

Owendale, Michigan

Pastor, S. B. Parker

New officers for the Owendale branch were elected September 13. They assumed their official duties on October 7 at the Communion service conducted by Elders Ezra Abbe and Silas Parker.

The choir, under the direction of Beatrice Sternberg, has resumed regular practices. Elmer Andrews was elected president of this group of fifteen singers.

Elder Frank Shuefelt of Detroit was guest speaker October 14. He spoke on "Science and Religion." Florence Shuefelt sang a solo, "What a Happy People We Will Be," at the same service. Priest Jay Dickinson gave the evening sermon.

Harry Walker was in charge of the morning prayer meeting held October 21. The following Sunday Pastor Silas Parker was the speaker.

The Saints have been meeting at the church for prayer services on Thursday evening, however, it has been decided that future meetings will be held in individual homes until spring.

The women's department, under the leadership of Elma Severn, has sponsored several ice-cream socials recently. The annual harvest home supper was held Friday night, November 9; the money cleared from this activity and others to be held in the future will be used to purchase new books for the library. The women meet each Wednesday for quilting and a study hour; they are basing their studies on articles taken from the Herald.

Harry Walker was the speaker on November 25, and Elder Henry Schaeffer of Independence occupied the pulpit on Tuesday evening, December 18.

Elder Frank Shuefelt was again guest speaker on December 23. His morning sermon was on "The Great Joy," and in the evening, he showed slide pictures of the early life of Christ. The choir sang several Christmas carols at the service; nearly 200 people attended.

The children's department and choir gave a Christmas program December 24. The church was filled to capacity.

Plans are being made to start a study course in leadership training the first of the year. This class will be taught by Elder John Rogers; twelve people already have signed up for it.

Servicemen who have received their discharges are Cpl. Arthur Green and Wesley Parker.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Westfall have left the Owendale congregation and moved to Pontiac, Michigan. Three other families have been added however. Mr. and Mrs. William Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Murray DeFrain of Sandusky, and Mr. and Mrs. Orville Kivel of Detroit are now attending services at Owendale.

—Myrtle Jarvis, reporter.

Sinking Spring, Ohio

Highland Branch

Pastor, Carol Rhoads

Attendance at Highland church is improving since the end of the war. Servicemen and war workers are returning to their places in the congregation.

Sunday, December 2, a special dinner and program was given in honor of all returned servicemen. Elder Virgil Billings was the speaker; he ably expressed the appreciation everyone present felt for the sacrifices these men made during the war years. Elder Billings also conducted a short series of meetings in which he showed educational pictures.

Officers elected for the coming year are as follows: pastor, Carol Rhoads; associate pastor, Charles M. Garman; secretary-treasurer, Nina Crum; statistician, Blanche Garman; publicity agent, Velma Rhoads; librarian, Opal Woods; church school superintendent, Eugene Crum; church school secretary-treasurer and pianist, Arnetta Woods.

The Willing Workers of the women's department meet regularly the first Tuesday of each month under the leadership of Anna Deardoff. The December meeting was held at the church with a potluck dinner and program in keeping with the Christmas season.

Highland Saints were saddened by the passing of Thomas Rhoads, a loyal worker in the branch for over fifty years. —Velma Rhoads, reporter.

Our Departed Ones

GREENE.—Cora E., daughter of Alice and John Greenwood, was born May 13, 1871, near Thurman, Iowa, and died December 13, at the home of her daughter in Essex, Iowa. She was one of a large family; her twin brother left home to go into business in Omaha when a young man, and was never seen again. All but one of her nine half brothers and sisters have passed away. For sixteen years she taught school in various Iowa communities, and then married John Franklin Greene of Tabor, Iowa. Three children were born to this union. Early in life she joined the Methodist church, but was baptized into the Reorganized Church, October 24, 1897.

Her companion and one son, Norman Gould, preceded her in death. Left to mourn are John Franklin, Randolph; Maurine Cottew, Essex; and six grandchildren.

YORK.—Paula, passed away at the home of her sister in Redwood City, California, November 21. Funeral services were held in Chico, California, with Pastor Orval Schall of San Francisco officiating.

YOUNG.—Nellie R., was born in Ethel, Ontario, April 3, 1882, the daughter of Ebenezer and Nellie Tompkins. She departed this life November 26, 1945. On February 14, 1901, she married Chauncey I. Young; to this union was born one daughter, Velma, now deceased. Mrs. Young joined the Reorganized Church December 28, 1901, and remained a devoted member until her death. She was unusually talented and will be greatly missed. For the past several years she was an active member of the Glover branch, Bentley, Michigan.

Services were held November 28 at the church in Bentley, Elder B. H. Doty officiating. Burial was in Spring Hill Cemetery, St. Clair County, Michigan.

SHAW.—Richard James, passed away November 25, at the Royal Alexandra Hospital in Edmonton, Alberta. He was born December 8, 1872, at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and was united with the church July 31, 1904. On June 18, 1905, he was ordained to the office of teacher and remained faithful to his calling throughout his life.

He leaves to mourn his passing, three sons: James Earl, Spokane; Richard Albert, Millet, Wesley George, Millet; and five daughters, Mrs. V. Pearce, Edmonton; Mrs. E. Drefva, Millet; Mrs. V. Ratcliffe, St. Albert; Mrs. A. Pearson, Falun, Alberta; and Mrs. I. Looker Bilby, Alberta. A son, Ira Shaw, was killed in action, October 23, 1943. Funeral services were held November 29 at the United Church, Millet, Elder William Osler of Edmonton officiating.

LAWSON.—Joseph, born March 4, 1858, at Oats, Missouri, died December 20 at Independence, Missouri. He was a resident of Franklay, Missouri, for forty years. On July 1, 1878, he was married to Margaret Douglas, Centerville, Missouri, and in 1931 both were baptized into the Reorganized Church. Eleven children, four boys and seven girls, were born to the Lawsons. His wife, a son, and four daughters preceded Mr. Lawson in death.

Left to mourn are three daughters: Mrs. Minnie Maples, Farmington; Mrs. Rose De-grant, St. Louis; and Mrs. Mary Parks, Independence; three sons: Louis and Joseph of Franklay, and Henry of Independence. Also surviving are seventeen grandchildren and seventeen great grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Franklay, E. E. Parks officiating. Interment in Franklay cemetery.

DUEMLER.—Harriet Virginia, was born July 10, 1879, in Greene County, Missouri, and passed away December 10 at Springfield, Missouri. She was the daughter of Judge Oscar Smith and Sarah Childress Smith, pioneers. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1902, and was the devoted wife and helper of A. W. Duemler, pastor of the Springfield church until his death in 1937.

Surviving are one sister, Mrs. J. B. Cox; two brothers, Robert Smith and Paul Duemler; two nieces, Frances Duemler and Mrs. W. J. Breshears; two nephews, Capt. A. B. and Paul Evan Curtis; and many other distant relatives and friends. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized church in Springfield with Elder Francis Bishop and J. B. Anslay in charge. Burial was in Green-lawn cemetery.

WILDFORD.—Mary Alice, daughter of Benjamin and Julia Clark, was born November 10, 1860, near Hartford, Iowa, and died December 2 at Des Moines. On December 16, 1877, she was married to Joseph Hamer; to this union five children were born. Mr. Hamer and three of the children preceded her in death. On February 8, 1911, she was united in marriage to David Wildford, now deceased. She was a devoted member of the Reorganized Church, and a good neighbor, loved by all who knew her.

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. George Brundley, Des Moines; a son, Willis Hamer, Minneapolis; a brother, B. H. Clark, Des Moines; nine grandchildren, thirteen great grandchildren, and one great, great grandchild. Elder Henry Castings gave the funeral sermon, assisted by Clyde McDonald.

LAHUE.—Eldon Craig, was born May 21, 1918, in Crawford County, Indiana. He passed away December 11 at the home of his father in New Albany, Indiana. On October 4, 1940, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and was a member of the Byrville branch. His mother, Bessie Lahue, and one brother, Lloyd, preceded him in death.

Surviving him are his father, Frank Lahue, a step-mother, Gladys, one brother, Herschel, four half-brothers: Franklin, Melvin, Bobby Jean and Earl Deen; and one step-brother, Samuel. Funeral services were held at Leavenworth, Indiana, at the Presbyterian church. Elder Chester Metcalf and Priest William Maymon were in charge. Burial was at Leavenworth, Indiana.

BINKLEY.—Jacob William, eldest son of Peter and Anna Binkley, was born November 29, 1873, in Allen County, Ohio, and died December 10, 1945. He was married to Ida Belle Hauenstein in 1900; to this union seven boys and three girls were born. One son, Elmer, and two daughters, Cora Faye and Hazel, preceded him in death. In November 1890, he became a member of the Reorganized Church, and was a regular attendant as long as his health permitted him to be. The past few years he made his home with his son, Richard, where he was bedfast for the last sixteen months. Although he suffered greatly, he never lost faith in God.

Surviving him are his wife, Ida; one daughter, Iva Jones, Wolcottville, Indiana; and six sons: Ray, Lima, Ohio; Joseph, Lansing, Michigan; George, Flint, Indiana; Carl, Fremont, Indiana; Richard and Clair, Nevada Mills. He also leaves thirty-five grandchildren and nine great grandchildren; two brothers: John, Lafayette, Ohio; and Edward, Fremont, Ohio; two sisters: Lottie Hartman and Bertha McLaughlin, Lima, Ohio; and many friends. The funeral was held at Clear Lake with S. M. Nichols and George Cassel in charge.

TOLES.—Catherine, died November 13 at the home of her son, Adelbert Toles, Enniskillen, Ontario. She was born seventy-five years ago and spent most of her young life in Uttoxeter. Later she moved with her family to Petrolia where she was married to Thomas Edmund Toles; she was a member of the Petrolia congregation for many years.

Left to mourn are three sons: Mantlow, Inkster, Michigan; Adelbert, Enniskillen; and Henry, Aylmer; one daughter, Mrs. Harry Crisp, Hamilton; and three sisters: Mrs. L. Hone, Toronto; Mrs. A. Harstell, Brantford; and Mrs. C. Ridge, Detroit, Michigan. Services were held at the Richmond funeral home, conducted by Elders S. Phillips of Sarnia, and A. W. Freer, Petrolia. Interment was in Hillsdale Cemetery.

VOLTMANN.—Edith, born in Surrey County, England, October 10, 1871, died October 28 at the home of her daughter in Buffalo, New York. She was a devoted member of the Buffalo branch, and a mother whose faith, love, and zeal will long be an inspiration to her family and friends.

She leaves to mourn her passing four sons: Herbert, Max, Franklin, and Delwin; three daughters: Mrs. Cecilia Bohn, Mrs. Bertha Schuyer, and Mrs. Alice McCabe; seventeen grandchildren, and a host of friends. Services were in charge of Elders P. L. Neeger, W. O. Simpson and George H. Schaefer. Interment at Pine Hill Cemetery.

GREENE.—Edith M., was born in England, April 12, 1884, and died December 11, 1945, in Aultman Hospital, Canton, Ohio, after six months' illness. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on March 30, 1907. She came to America with her husband, Harry A. Greene, now deceased, in 1911, and lived in Columbus, Ohio, before moving to Canton.

Surviving are two sons, Clifford A. of Akron, Ohio, and Frank W. of Canton; one daughter, Edna M. Rohrer, with whom she made her home in Canton; and three grandchildren. Services were held at the Arnold Funeral Home in Canton, with Elder E. G. Hammond of Akron officiating.

WEIR.—Robert Samuel, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Weir, passed away November 19. He had been ill only three days, suffering from pneumonia. He was born October 10, 1945, and was five weeks old at the time of his death. Besides his parents, the infant is survived by two brothers, William Wallace and Parmley Weir; his paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Lindsey; and his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Allen Webb, all of Marion, Illinois. Elder Eugene A. Theys of Mount Vernon, Illinois, officiated, assisted by Pastor Edgar W. McKinley.

EDWARDS.—William J., was born October 31, 1864, at Bald Knob, Arkansas, and died at his home there on November 22. He was married to Miss Nellie Peebles September 13, 1893, and united with the Reorganized Church in 1895. Mr. Edwards, a deacon, was a lover of music; he gave vocal lessons when a young man, was selected branch chorister, and wrote several beautiful hymns before his death. He and Mrs. Edwards celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in September, 1943.

He leaves to mourn his wife, four sons: Roy T., Fayetteville; Dale H., Bald Knob; Pfc. Curtis, still serving in the army; and Cpl. Carl, stationed in Germany; two daughters: Mrs. Hazel Mayhan, Little Rock; and Mrs. G. A. Mosley, Fort Worth, Texas; eleven grandchildren, and one great grandchild. A son, Claud, died when he was five years old.

Funeral services were held in the Reorganized church, with Pastor T. W. Emde officiating. The songs were sung by a men's chorus. All the stores in Bald Knob closed during the funeral hour.

YOUNG.—Robert L., son of Robert and Marguerite Young, was born December 28, 1865, in Fayette County, Iowa, and died December 12, 1945, at the home of his brother, William Young, Lockwood, Missouri. Nine years ago he was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and was a faithful member the remainder of his life.

He is survived by two brothers: William of Lockwood, and Arthur of Bakersfield, California; three sisters: Mrs. J. Meek, Wichita, Kansas; Mrs. Alta Potts, Waterloo, Iowa; and Mrs. Ella Warren, Oelwein, Iowa. Another brother and sister preceded him in death.

GLENN.—Ethel, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse McPeck, died December 24 at Gerald, Indiana, after a long illness. She was born in 1892, and joined the Reorganized Church in 1910. She was a faithful member until her death.

Left to mourn are her husband, John, and seven children: Mrs. Mabel Gaither, Dexter, Indiana; Mrs. Juanita Persinger, Cannelton, Indiana; Mrs. Lillian Miller, Gerald, Indiana; Harry, Tell City, Indiana; Earl, Dayton, Ohio; Dorothy and Jesse, Gerald, Indiana. A daughter, Mrs. Mayme Harding, preceded her in death earlier this year. Funeral services were held at the church in Derby, Indiana; Elder Chester Metcalf officiated. Burial was at Derby.

HESS.—Elizabeth H., daughter of Frances and Jacob Moon, was born November 5, 1868. In 1889 she was married to C. D. Hess, now deceased. To this union three children were born: two daughters, Dorothy and Meldia, died in childhood. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 12, 1899, and was a devoted member until her death.

Left to mourn are two grandchildren, Mrs. Arlene Traster and Ivan Royce; a brother, James Moon; and many friends. Frank Fry, pastor of the Des Moines church, and the Reverend Collyer were in charge of funeral services held at Milo, Iowa.

ODOM.—Kenneth Wayne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Odom, was born September 14, 1944, and died of pneumonia at Cushing Memorial Hospital in Leavenworth, Kansas, December 1. He is survived by his parents; two sisters: Donna Jean and Phyllis June; a brother, William; his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Vernon, Stewartsville, Missouri; and his paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Odom, McKenzie, Alabama. Funeral services were conducted by Elders E. E. Crownover and Blair Jensen. Burial was in the Mount Muncie cemetery.

METCALFE.—William George, son of John and Jane Metcalfe, was born in Ontario, Canada, on March 29, 1864, and passed away at the home of his niece, Mrs. Luther Snell, Melancthon Township, Ontario, on December 10. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 16, 1888, and was united in marriage to Julia Snell, who preceded him in death, in April, 1891.

He had no children, but is survived by three sisters: Mrs. T. Long of Collingwood, Ontario; Mrs. John Hambleton, Richmond Hill, Ontario; and Mrs. Willis, Winnipeg, Manitoba. The funeral service was held in Gamble's Funeral Home, Shelburne, Ontario. Elder H. A. Dayton of Ridgeway officiated. Burial was in Spring Valley cemetery, Horning's Mills.

Lt. Kelly Williams

Memorial services were held at Escatawpa, Mississippi, December 30, for Lt. Kelly Williams who lost his life in Germany, December 31, 1944. Lieutenant Kelly was twenty-one years old, the pilot of a B-17 bomber. He was a graduate of Moss Point High School, and attended Graceland one year before entering the service.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Williams; a sister, Margie Williams; and one brother, Rudolph, who has recently been discharged from the Navy. Franklin Steiner and Raymond Booker of Mobile, Alabama, were in charge of the services.

Cpl. DeWayne Wasson

DeWayne Elroy Wasson was born at Janesville, Wisconsin, April 3, 1919, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wasson. He was graduated from the local grade and high schools and enlisted in the national guard, August, 1939. In November, 1940, he went with his unit to Fort Knox, and eleven months later sailed for the Philippines. He was seriously wounded in January, 1942, during the fighting on Bataan, but reported for duty after two months hospitalization. With his comrades, he was taken prisoner by the Japanese and died during the Bataan death march July 9, 1942. He received the Purple Heart and, after his death, his parents were awarded his Presidential Citation.

DeWayne was active in the work of the church at Janesville and Beloit. He is survived by his parents, and numerous relatives and friends. A memorial service was conducted at Janesville, Sunday, December 30, by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

To Our Customers:

The shortage of leather and paper has forced us to discontinue taking any orders on flexible and limp bindings of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon. At the present the Doctrine and Covenants is entirely out of print and we are waiting until after the next General Conference to reprint. The Book of Mormon is still available in the cloth binding in both the large and small size type.

Until further notice please order no more Doctrine and Covenants.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

P. S.

* BREATHING ROOM

The Editors are enjoying the greater freedom and opportunity for work in the regular succession of thirty-two page issues of our publication. We had not realized how cramped we were until the restrictions were taken off.

Now we can use some fine articles that have been on hand much, much longer than they should. We can resume some of the useful church services and aids to different departments of the church work. We feel pleasure in the fact that it is possible for us to be more useful and of greater service again.

We hope that our readers and contributors will enjoy the situation too. Now everybody will have more opportunity to do his best, and will enjoy working.

OFFICIAL

Accommodations at General Conference

The Housing Committee requests that all visitors to Independence during the General Conference who can make private arrangements for rooms do so as early as possible. This will assist the Housing Committee and will avoid much correspondence. Those who desire the Housing Committee to make arrangements for rooms should mail their letters to the Housing Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The following details are required:

1. Number in party.
2. Rooms required.
3. Day of arrival.
4. Length of stay in Independence.
5. If alone, whether willing to share a room.
6. Whether a delegate to the conference.

Due to extreme housing congestion which has increased with the end of the war, conditions in Independence are such that providing rooms for visitors to the conference will be very difficult. As a consequence, it will be necessary to favor delegates.

As a word of caution, may we suggest that persons arriving for conference without reservations for sleeping accommodations will find it difficult to secure rooms in or near Independence.

GENERAL CONFERENCE HOUSING COMMITTEE.

* GIVE SOME ATTENTION to your voice, your laugh, your manner in the company of your friends. Undoubtedly, you wish to be kind, gracious, accomplished, friendly. But how do you sound and look to others? Let someone make a phonograph record of your voice when you are off guard, letting yourself go. The effects you create will surprise you. And the chances are, you won't like yourself!

* THE PERSON who enters your office and begins with, "Well, what do you know?" assumes that you don't know much, and that it will not take you long to tell it. He also advertises the fact that he proposes to occupy his time, which is worth little, and yours, which is precious.

Considerations Behind the Strikes

The Need for Justice

In much of the comment about the strikes that are sweeping the nation, the general public has been mostly concerned with its own inconveniences and discomforts. We have not been informed of the facts. We know little of the actual wage situations which have caused the workers to go out on strike. We know less about the conditions under which strike votes have been called. We know nothing of the conditions of the homes, families, children, food and clothing, the opportunity for those people to live. And, on the other hand, we have very little reliable information about the conditions that the employer faces.

The whole situation would be better if the public had complete, dependable information about the causes and conditions of the strikes. Each side in the struggle has demanded that the other side open its books and records; and both sides refuse to do it. President Truman's idea of a fact-finding board seems good, if the fact-finders are impartial.

To know what is just, the public needs to be informed. It needs the facts from an impartial source. So far that information seems inaccessible. What we get is propaganda.

The general public would do well to quit feeling sorry for itself, and think of the welfare of so large a part of the population.

Two Different Countries

We live in two different countries, both of them creations of publicity and propaganda. Compare the daily newspaper with the labor publications, and you will see the difference. One country consists of capital, department stores, and public supplies, with no regard to those who produce all this material for our use. The other consists of the little homes of the workers, their problems, wants, and needs. Workers get an entirely different viewpoint from that of the general public because they are on the inside, and are conditioned by their own press and propaganda.

But the public does not get to hear the voice of labor at all, unless labor buys costly space in the newspapers and time on the radio. Even if we cannot have impartial reports of the facts, we could give a fair opportunity for both sides to be heard.

Sometime, perhaps, some great newspaper will see the light, and will vastly increase its circulation and the public confidence in it, by trying a simple and effective plan. Throughout the course of any strike, it will give equal space in daily issues of the paper, up to a page each, in which official spokesmen of capital and labor could place their problems before the public. In other pages, the viewpoint of the editors could be represented. Now, all we get is the viewpoint of the editors. They may be prejudiced, misinformed, or working under the invisible pressure of owners or capital. If a paper would really let capital and labor tell their own story, it would be worthy of public support and would receive it.

The Place of the Church

What place has a church, or the whole Christian movement, in the wave of strikes that is now sweeping the country, crippling industry, preventing reconversion, and threatening our national security in the face of dangerous world conditions?

This is not a situation that churches have created. But they will certainly be expected to help clean up the mess created by other powers and groups. When suffering and distress become intense, some people are sure to demand, rather truculently, "Why don't the churches do something about this? Why didn't they prevent it?" These people will forget that the churches were not consulted nor asked for advice. People do not ask for advice when they are making trouble; it is only when it becomes too much to bear that they ask for aid.

The causes of strikes are out of the hands of the Christian forces of the nations. But the consequences will certainly be a part of their responsibility.

What is the work of the church in this situation?

Labor Legislation

It is the work of the church to exercise a peaceful and moderating influence in this as in other situations, to call for fair dealing, to ask excited men to think instead of being governed by their feelings, fears, and hates.

Pressure groups will try to get Congress to pass legislation to prevent strikes. If this country is swept along a road of repressive legislation, it can only result in violence, and we shall wind up with fascism. That does not mean that we should not have some controls; but when controls are enacted, they should apply fairly to both sides of the struggle.

For years, we have been told that labor unions are under the control of racketeers, and that the rank and file of members have little or nothing to say about what is done. In some cases at least, we have ascertained that this is not true. It was demanded that labor unions should be forced to open their books so

I RECENTLY RECEIVED a Christmas card from the Fort Worth branch, Texas. It expressed the usual wishes for Christmas, and on the inside page there is a cut of the building that is used by the branch at Fort Worth as their church home. Below the picture is the following verse:

We don't have a big cathedral
Where folks can come to pray,
But we have a sincere feeling
When someone comes our way.
We've been thinking about you lately,
But then that's nothing new,
We're always wishing A HAPPY CHRISTMAS
For someone just like you.

The Fort Worth Branch.

A FEW DAYS AGO one of our brethren from the West Coast sat across the desk from me, discussing many of the problems of mutual and reciprocal interest pertaining to the church and, among other things, he suggested that there had recently come under his observation cases where families in the church had had for disposal collections of books which they had accumulated over some years past. He suggested that where members of the church did have such libraries to sell or dispose of, it would be a fine thing if they would send a list of the books to the church authorities, giving them opportunity to make selection from such libraries of books that would be of general interest historically or otherwise, and particularly along the lines of church endeavor.

His suggestion contains much of merit, and I should be pleased to have the Saints keep this in mind when planning disposal of their private libraries.

A Church Was Sold

THERE has recently come to my desk a published folder entitled The Belfry Players. This is a group which has been organized somewhere in Wisconsin. And it seems that in order to have a permanent place in which to put on their plays they purchased a church, and it seems this church was at one time owned by us. On one page of this little paper devoted to the interest of The Belfry Players there is an article on the history of the little church building now used by them. I quote from this as follows:

The Belfry Players claim that they own the only Mormon Church that has been converted into a little theater. Moreover, it is said that this church was a branch of the only true Mormon church, call the Re-organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Founded at Beloit, Wisconsin, 1852, by Mormon refugees from Nauvoo, Illinois, twice this church has been declared by United States' Courts to be the only true legal successor of the original church founded by Joseph Smith.

The group that settled in the beautiful farming country between Lake Geneva and Delevan Lake were much opposed to polygamy, according to their descendants. For many years the little band of refugees conducted services in their own homes when they could not journey to the main church in Beloit. Henry Southwick was their spiritual leader and, on a corner of his land, in 1886, when the colony had grown to 100 members, they built the little white church. It is located on the Williams Bay-Elkhorn road near DeLap's corners, named for one of the earliest Nauvoo refugees, Anthony DeLap, farmer and blacksmith. His children and grandchildren still live in the old DeLap farmhouse, built about 1848, now much enlarged and modernized. Several other Mormon families also live close by within sound of the old bell that still swings in the belfry. Because the number of "Saints" in the neighborhood had dwindled to a small number, the church was disbanded in 1932 and title to the property turned over to the mother church in Independence, Missouri, from whom the Players purchased the property in 1937.

BROTHER D. J. WILLIAMS, President of the Southwest Kansas District, in reporting for the month of December, introduces his report in language which I am pleased to present to our readers. He says:

After an absence from the district for a month while undergoing some physical correction in the Sanitarium, I returned home with better prospects of a more satisfying recovery. This brings pleasure in the thought of further helpful activity.

With the changing year we have become more fully conscious of both our errors of the past, as also our possibilities of the year before us. Whatever the first may have been, we hope to be worthy of divine forgiveness. As to the latter, we trust our efforts will merit the blessings of God and thereby prove advantageous to the work he has so wonderfully intrusted to our care.

When considering the disappointments of the year we leave behind, there is some satisfaction in the belief that no serious stain is left to bring reproach upon the church to hinder its onward progress. We regret however that our service has not produced greater glory to the cause of Christ. But we look with much confidence to the year ahead.

I RECENTLY received a letter from Brother John James Graven of Schiedam, Holland, one from whom we had not heard previously for some time. His letter is brief but contains news that will be of much interest to our readers. He writes:

My dear Brother Smith: I wish that you may receive this letter in good health. I am very thankful that the dreadful war is over. I lost my wife and my eldest son. They died from hunger and exhaustion. My wife was 75 years old and my son John 51 years old. My son Peter was five years from home and my son William was sent to Germany through that Nazi regime; but now we are free, only we are short on food and clothes. I am very glad that we can now again send our letters all over the world everywhere. So I wish you by this letter a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year and the best wishes for your birthday on the 21st of January. If you will, give the best regards from me to Brother J. F. Curtis and Brother Paul M. Hanson. Receive the regards from all my family and myself, your friend and brother in the gospel bonds.

Yours truly,
John James Graven,
17 Rozenburgerstreet, Schiedam, The Netherlands.

IN A LETTER, one of our regular appointees extends the season's greetings and best wishes, and adds a note which I herewith pass on to our readers. He says:

As the family and I extend our best wishes and Christmas greetings it is with the prayer that you may find joy in health, in companionship of friends and the Spirit of God, and in the achievement by the church of definite advancement in establishing the cause of Zion.

John C. Bennett Appraised by John C. Sharp

JOHN C. SHARP was editor of the Warsaw Signal and the Message, successor to the Signal. He was a deadly enemy of Joseph Smith and used all his influence to drive the Saints out of Nauvoo and Illinois. He was one of the men charged with and tried for the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

It is interesting to note what Sharp said about John C. Bennett after Bennett published his book against the church. It appears that early in 1843, Bennett came back into the neighborhood to lecture against "Mormonism," and later spoke at Springfield.

In an editorial in the Warsaw Message for January 28, 1843, Sharp said of Bennett:

General Bennett was at Springfield, on his way to St. Louis, where he intends to deliver a course of lectures on Mormonism. He also expects to procure a renewal of the indictments against the Prophet.

If we are to believe this man's own statements of himself, he must be one of the most consummate knaves in the universe.

Yet, pseudo historians quote Bennett's book against the church and Joseph Smith, and people generally believe what this arch-conspirator and traitor wrote.

O Thou of Little Faith!

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation.—Romans 1:16.

Abraham "staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief."—Romans 4:20.

A PREVIOUS ARTICLE in the issue of August 11, 1945, sought to examine the gospel as taught by Jesus. This examination seemed to indicate that we have yet to receive or experience the gospel in the way it has in some comparatively rare instances been received. In those instances when such experiencing of the gospel has taken place, it has proved to be literally "the power of God unto salvation," and the establishing of zionic conditions has come as an inevitable consequence. Is this what we want in our day? Emphatically, yes!

We now attempt to discover the conditions which must be established in our day or in any age for the complete reception or experiencing of the gospel. In the previous article, referred to above, the claim was made that most, if not all of us, have not yet experienced the baptism of "fire and the Holy Ghost" which in many scriptures, of which Matthew 5:4 is typical, has been promised so clearly to followers of Jesus the Christ.

That same scripture holds the answer to the question, "What must we do to receive the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost?" They who believe . . . shall be visited with fire and the Holy Ghost!

MOST OF US have found it pretty easy to drift into a supposition that we do believe. Let us see what light the scriptures can throw on the subject.

Matthew 17:15-21 is too long to quote. Read it carefully and note what moved Jesus to say, "O faithless and perverse generation." Jesus then cured a case of epilepsy which his disciples had been impotent to cure. When asked why they had failed He told them, "Because of your unbelief!" Members of the priesthood should put themselves in place of these disciples: What would have happened if the epileptic had been brought to you?

We make no mistake in supposing we should apply this to ourselves, for Jesus did not pretend that he was expected to do greater works than his disciples. Notice the infinite humility of the Son of God: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do" (John 14:12).

God "worketh by power according to the faith of the children of men" (Moroni 10:7). Moroni then gives a classic exposition of the gifts and power of God and concludes: "If the day cometh that the power and gifts of God [which he has just enumerated] shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief" (Moroni 10:18-20).

Moroni (7:37-43) again tells us that if the visitation of angels, the power of the Holy Ghost, and the working of miracles have ceased it is because of unbelief, that faith has ceased, also, and we are as though there had been no redemption made. Thus we have scorned and rejected the life and ministry and atonement of Jesus.

Mormon (4:81-83) tells us "The reasons why he [God] ceaseth to do miracles among the children of men, is because that they dwindle in unbelief." Are we dwindling in unbelief? When did you, or anyone in your branch, experience your last visitation by an angel? How soon do you expect to have such an experience in the future? Have you expected such? Should you? And 3 Nephi 3:56-61 recounts, concerning a certain servant of God, "they were angry with him, even because he had greater power than they, for it were not possible that they could disbelieve his words, for so great was his faith on the Lord Jesus Christ, that angels did minister unto him daily; . . . he did cast out devils and unclean spirits; and even his brother did he raise from the dead . . . and he did also do many more miracles." Notice that he did not just see an angel once but they came to him daily to counsel, teach, minister to him. He did not do one miracle or several during his lifetime but many miracles did he perform. And all this because so great was his faith. When was your last miracle? When do you expect to participate in one? Aren't we surrounded by human need wherever we turn? Have we met the need of humanity? Are we dwindling in unbelief? "Why could not we heal him?" "Because of your unbelief!"

WE HAVE SOMETIMES attempted to bolster our belief by reciting some comparatively few testimonies of healings, but notice how these fail as an indication of strong belief: "He [Jesus] could do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk and healed them. And he marvelled because of their unbelief" (Mark 6:5, 6). Notice that they could have sincerely testified concerning those few healings, yet it does not evidence strong faith, for he marvelled because of their unbelief, and all he could do for them was to heal a few sick folks. Does this describe us and our branches today?

There are many other incidents that identify unbelief. Peter attempted to walk on the water to meet Jesus (would you?), and even though temporarily successful, he wavered and began to sink. Did Jesus say, "Blessings on you; you did pretty well"? No, he said, "O thou of little faith" (Matthew 14:31).

At another time as they were crossing the sea and a great storm arose, waves washed into the boat, and it seemed they were doomed. Jesus was asleep, and they awoke him, saying, "Lord, save us; else we perish." And he said to them, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith" (Matthew 8:24-28).

IF WE HAVE ANY imagination, we should be able to visualize something of the reality of these last-mentioned incidents and consider what our reaction would have been. Would Jesus have said to us, "O thou of little faith"?

I believe that any member of this church who will allot two or three hours to uninterrupted study and meditation will agree that we seem to be justly indicted as people of little faith. Read the Book of Nephi, chapters 5 to 9, verse 35 which recounts the personal ministry of Jesus on this continent following the most violently destructive storm our planet has ever known. Read how he healed all the sick. This would be equivalent to emptying our hospitals of their last patient. Read of his beautiful prayers for the people, of the ministry of angels, of the baptism by the Holy Ghost and by (visible) fire (9:15), and then read, "So great faith have I never seen among the Jews; wherefore I could not show them so great miracles, because of their unbelief." How would he explain that he has not shown us so great miracles? Because of our unbelief!

It seems evident that the brand of unbelief is attached to us, the people of the Restoration Movement, just as it has in many times now passed, been attached to God's people.

These have been examples of unbelief. They show us the seriously terrible consequences of unbelief; they show us a religion that is sterile and disciples that are incapable of coping with the physical and social phenomena of their day. How much less shall we cope with the multiplied scope and complexities of these phenomena in our day? How much, for example, did we prevent or alter the course of the war? Honestly, has our influence been even a shadow of what should be expected from the living church of the Most High God?

ON THE POSITIVE side of the account there are wonderful examples of how a full and overflowing faith has in times past resulted in placing infinite, cosmic, Divine Power in the hands of God's people. They were irresistible! If we return to the first scripture, Matthew 17:15-21, Jesus said that through faith they could move mountains; and "nothing shall be impossible unto you."

Read Genesis 7:15-17, "So great was the faith of Enoch . . . the earth trembled, and the mountains fled, even according to his command."

Ether 5:30 tells us that an extraordinary man, the brother of Jared, said unto the mountain Zerin, "Remove," and it was removed.

Part of the records from which the Book of Mormon was translated remained sealed, denied to us until a future day. Some of us anticipate receiving those records. All such should turn diligent attention to Ether 1:98-115 and especially verses 100-101. We are told that to this very great man, the brother of Jared, God revealed great things; no man has ever received greater revelations. They will be revealed to us when, if ever, we shall exercise faith even as the brother of Jared did. Read, in the same chapter, verses 69-92, for some appreciation of the quality of his faith, that we must match in order to receive such revelations.

We have mentioned the mighty power of Enoch. Turn to Genesis 14: 30, 31 (Inspired Version) and note this promise of power sufficient to control matter and men. If this is not sufficient to challenge us, then we must have no imagination.

There is food for thought in Romans 4:20 concerning Abraham, "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith . . . being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform." Have we not attempted to "interpret" the promises of God, in order to make them fit our mediocre experiences?

Men of the priesthood, it seems, should consider the promises just mentioned in Genesis 14, "Every one being ordained after this order and calling [Melchisedec] should have power, by faith, to break mountains, to divide the seas, to dry up waters, to turn them out of their course; to put at defiance the armies of nations, to divide the earth, to break every band, to stand in the presence of God; to do all things according to his will, according to his command, subdue principalities and powers; and this by the will of the Son of God which was from before the foundation of the world. And men having this faith, coming up unto this order of God, were translated and taken up into heaven." Do we expect to attain that power?

When will this be? How shall we become such a people? We shall consider further the teachings of the Scriptures in this matter.

Keeping Old Letters

Time was when to keep copies of one's letters had the look of vanity. It was as if one expected them to be published for posterity. But now the carbon seems a kind of courtesy and gives dignity and continuity even to intimate correspondence. A college girl to whom this suggestion was made said, "Oh, but I could not bear to keep copies of my letters. They would look so foolish afterwards." Better is the attitude of a gay young girl of thirteen who read with shrieks of laughter the file of her scrawls to her father which he had kept since she was four years old. "What a nut I was!" she kept saying, and when she had finished, she had a new comprehension of herself as a continuing and developing person.—Marjorie Barstow Greenbie, The Arts of Leisure.

Abe Lincoln's Son

Tad Lincoln, by T. Morris Longstreth. Westminster, 260 pages. Price, $2.50.

A typical Longstreth book, Tad Lincoln is easy to read and delightfully entertaining. It begins with the day the Lincolns move to the White House which, Tad immediately discovers, is the perfect place to play "hide-and-go-seek." All through the story he shocks Washington society with his rascally antics and endears himself to the many lovable, eccentric characters that become a part of the White House during Lincoln's administration. The concluding chapter deals with the President's death and Tad's reaction to it.

Adolescents and Lincoln admirers will enjoy this story of the President's youngest and most mischievous son. It is a fascinating history of Washington during the Civil War years; a tender biography of Lincoln, the father, and an inspiring account of his understanding and love for people, even those who were his enemies.

Strength and Comfort

When Life Gets Hard, by James Gordon Gilkey, MacMillan, 1945. 138 pages. Price, $1.50.

Those who have lost loved ones in the war, those who have found adjustment to a new and different way of life difficult, those who are asking if it is really worth-while after all will appreciate this timely book written by a minister who has been asked all the "why's" and produced an answer.

When Life Gets Hard is written in a simple, practical manner; the sentences are addressed directly to the reader, and illustrations are used extensively. It is recommendable to one of a faith since it deals with emotional, rather than theological problems. It is a book everyone will find encouraging, whether he is needing immediate help or not.

Novel of Southern Life

The River Road, by Frances Parkinson Keyes. Julian Messner, 1945. 747 pages. Price, $3.

This is a story of a famous Louisiana estate and the people who lived in and near it. It is strictly "deep South," replete with servants, cane fields, and romantic feuds. Its best features are its vivid descriptions, interesting characters, and well-developed plot. The story begins soon after the First World War, and ends with World War II. Miss Keyes, author of All That Glitters and Also the Hills, is a frank and realistic writer, but does not lacquer her work with best-seller sensualism.

For Church Musicians

In Every Corner Sing, by Joseph W. Clokey; published by Morehouse-Gorham Company, New York, 1945, 50c.

It has been some time since I have had come to my desk a book which has so completely answered the needs of the church musician. Mr. Clokey, from his wealth of experience, has brought together in this small volume the advice, observations, and philosophy of a church musician in a very exceptional way. In my opinion, this little book is a must for pastor, choir leader, and chorister, not to mention its real value to the layman who sits in the pews. Every sentence is full of meat; the author has left out every word that does not directly deal with his subject, so that even though the volume is small, it lacks nothing in weight. He has written it in a language that is perfectly understandable to the amateur and layman as well as to the professional musician. I recommend it most highly to all who are interested in music and the worship of God.

that the entire public could know what they were doing. Now, however, when labor demands that some corporations open their books, the answer is an absolute refusal.

If it is good for labor to open its books, it should be good for corporations to do the same thing. If any legal compulsion is applied on one side, it should also be applied on the other. Any legislation should be equitable.

Strikes are economic war. They occur because we are lacking in organizations and institutions to promote justice. They testify that there is something so lacking in our ways of conducting our national life that we cannot settle our affairs without force and violence. As military warfare is the curse of international relations, so are strikes the curse of domestic affairs. But strikes cannot be outlawed by mere repressive legislation any more than wars can. Behind every strike, as behind every war, there are problems to be solved that must be met intelligently and fairly to produce justice.

Our Work Among the Indians

By Hubert Case

FOR SOME FIVE YEARS after going to Oklahoma, in 1900, I drove across the Indian reservations, especially those in West Oklahoma. Seeing those people reminded me of the story of the Book of Mormon which told of their coming to this country, their rise to power and wealth; also to a very high skill in the arts and sciences; of building great cities, as well as the stories of their prophets and seers among them when they became a united people, and when for two hundred years there was no poor among them. Then when they became lifted up in pride and had class rule, they began to be divided in unbelief and were scattered as wandering tribes.

Many times, the story of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery preaching among them, near Topeka, Kansas, as the Lord directed them, reminded me of the work that is to be done among them; also the promises in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants that in the last days they should again turn to the Lord, and a knowledge of their fathers. So, while living at Kingfisher, Oklahoma, I became well acquainted with Richard Davis, a well-educated Cheyenne Indian, who invited me to go with him to visit his brother, the head chief of five thousand Cheyennes. His name was Bull Bear. We went and visited him for about three hours, whereupon the old chief invited me to preach to his people. He called a large crowd of them to his place. The meeting was a very unusual one. They were as interested as any people I have ever preached to. I told them I could take their Indian traditions, like so many threads, and trace them back to the days when they had prophets and seers among them, and they were a united and a happy people. I also showed them the Book of Mormon, which the Lord gave to their fathers, and told them it gave the whole story of their coming out from Jerusalem, 600 B. C. and that they are Israelites. The whole story pleased them greatly, so they made another appointment for me and many more were there.

This great interest ran through several years, as I preached to them at least once a month when I would be home from preaching to the white people, as that was my mission. One very interesting phase of my story was the blessing of their babies and administering to their sick. These were great factors in bringing them into the church, but greatest of all was the story of the Comforter, following baptism, which made a great appeal to them.

Simultaneously with my work among the Cheyennes, another missionary started work among the Pawnees, at Pawnee, Oklahoma, the same tribe that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery preached to near Topeka, Kansas, in 1831. These Indians were delighted to hear the Angel's Message again, and to know of the story of the Book of Mormon. This other missionary lived at Ripley at that time, where Brother Tom Berry lived, who was quite a wealthy man. He persuaded Brother Berry to make a great feast and call the whole tribe together every time he preached to them. The Cheyennes heard of the feast that the missionary was giving and asked me to do the same thing for the Cheyennes. I told them my work was to feed them spiritual food and they should feed their guests, and all the leaders agreed I was right, so they troubled me no more on that line. I baptized 150 Cheyennes, but the other missionary never baptized one Pawnee. They came for the "loaves and fishes"—a feast.

DURING MY WORK near Kingfisher and Calumet, I heard of a big Indian meeting at Clinton, Oklahoma. Brother Ed. Dillon went with me to that meeting. Indeed it was a great meeting. Four tribes were present and as I spoke four interpreters talked to their several tribes, the Kiowas, Comanches, Cheyennes, and Arapahoes. At this meeting we baptized two fine leaders who had attended my meetings at Kingfisher—Ernest Watson and John Turtle. Both were Cheyennes, and some twenty other Indians at that point, which started a fine group at the little town of Bessie, Oklahoma.

Brother J. F. Curtis had told us a vision he had seen sometime previous to that meeting at the Clinton Reunion, wherein he saw the big camp of Indians as a beautiful grove of the finest trees he had ever seen, and he was made to know it was that tribe of Indians, near the town of Clinton, where they were then in camp.

Another great meeting was held northwest of Calumet where thirteen tribes were represented by their leaders, in the greatest council meeting I had ever seen. Brother Dick Sanders was with me at this meeting. They asked me to offer a prayer and then to preach, which I did. The Spirit was poured out in great measure. The Indians responded unanimously by their usual grunt of approval. After the meeting was dismissed, they shook hands with me and invited me to come to their respective tribes and preach to their people. Brother A. H. Christensen was with me at Christmas time in some large gatherings, also at Watonga Indian Fair, where five thousand Indians were camped. We had our district tent on the fair grounds and preached to many of them, making many friends.

During the time we were working with the Cheyennes, we also started the work among the Otoes, where we baptized 160, also among the Iowas, where we baptized sixty, and among the Kaws, where we baptized thirty-two. During the time of this work I had a real taste of the endowment of the Spirit. The Lord opened a heavenly vision to my understanding, lasting some forty minutes. I was in the Spirit and enabled to see and understand the gospel as never before in my life.

MY WORK WITH the Indians was mostly from house to house, teaching and explaining the story of Jesus and his message; telling them the story of his visit to America, as related in the Book of Mormon. They love to have missionaries come to their homes, administer to their sick, and bless their children.

The Indian agent, Mr. George Hoyo, and his good wife, told me the Indians loved me, and that I had done more with them than any man who had ever worked with them, and urged me to work with the Poncas and Tonkawas, for he said, "Your Indians are far and away ahead of the others, and I am a competent judge of such for I am impartial and want to see them civilized and keep the law."

During two summers I worked in Nebraska. Brother W. T. Shakespear of Lamoni and I had tent meetings among the Omahas. Others also had preached to them and about sixty had been baptized. Several years later, when I was appointed to Nebraska, I was holding meetings in Nebraska City, and staying in the home of Brother H. A. Higgins, when I had a dream of standing at the corner of a great field of the most perfect ripe corn I ever saw. The field was large and the corn a golden color, very ripe. As I beheld this field I said in my mind, "I wonder why they don't harvest this field?" when a messenger stood by me and said: "Why don't you? it's your field." Whereupon four full loads from out in the field started towards me and were brought to me. The driver said, "This is yours," and gave them to me. Then, as I looked over the field, many loads came to me, all full loads, and they were mine. This was a thrill to me, and more so when a few weeks later I began a series of meetings at the corner of the Omaha Reservation at Decatur, Nebraska, preaching to the white people for three weeks. The last Sunday of the series, four full loads of Indians came and gave their names for baptism. I told the folks my dream and said, "Here is the beginning of its fulfillment. The field of ripe grain is the whole Omaha tribe, and these first four loads (full families), gave their names for baptism." The next night we began meeting one night in a home of Indians, then the next night in another home, and continued that until we had baptized fifty-one. At this juncture I wrote to Brother P. R. Burton, then at Walthill, Nebraska, who had an appointment to begin among the Sioux in South Dakota, that he better cancel that appointment and come and assist me, which he did, and for three months the two of us held cottage meetings from house to house. After both of us would speak at night, then some Indian would arise and speak and give his name for baptism, and his whole family would do the same, until we would baptize from fifteen to twenty-five each Sunday. Whole families came together into the church until we had four hundred and sixty. I have never seen such interest. All these Indians had heard many sermons from the time old Brother Richard Mann started the work, walking from house to house over the reservation. So now they were ripe for the gospel, as the field was represented to me in the dream.

Our work continued among the tribes above named until we had five organized groups, and tried to man the situation for real teaching and developing them in church work. We had built three churches, one among the Omahas by Brother Creel, one among the Otoes by Brother Dillon, and one among the Cheyennes.

THEN, OF A SUDDEN, those in charge of missionary work stopped the Indian work, and I was sent to Michigan for seven years. Brother S. A. Burgess gave a prophecy to me when the Indian work was going the very best that strong men would stop the work but for me not to be discouraged, as God would watch over that work, and in time it would revive and increase.

Among the fine spiritual experiences among the Indians was the Red Rock reunion. Gomer T. Griffiths, J. W. Wight, and R. V. Hopkins were all in attendance at this reunion. On one occasion Brother Griffiths spoke by the Spirit to an Indian who had come to the service, not thinking to be impressed by it. The Indian was Jack Koshiway. He shed tears, being touched by the Spirit, and was soon baptized with twenty-seven others of the Otoe tribe. Many said afterwards that it was the most spiritual reunion they had ever attended. This was the annual reunion of Central Oklahoma, but many Indians were in attendance. The head chief of the tribe, Hoke Dent, and his wife were baptized. Chief Dent died at the age of 105 years. He was a good man. His wife died recently at the age of ninety-nine. Ralph Dent, their son, is now head chief. He is a member and a priest.

After fifteen years of waiting, I have seen an attempt made again to push the work among the Indians, as the Book of Mormon said it should be done, and the Indian people will "blossom as the rose," and "come in and help to build the Zion of God." Brother Loving is now among them, and pleading for help.

Why Anthropology?

By Donald A. Rightmyer

PEOPLE, UNLESS they have unusual characteristics, hold very little interest in the minds of most individuals. This has held true as far back as history has been recorded, and it is even more so today. Expounding on this statement, I might ask the reader, "What attracts your attention most when you take a trip to another country?" I imagine you look at the peculiarities in the various buildings, cities, and scenery, but at this point you tell yourself, "These are the most interesting things; what more is there to see?"

This is all very true, but stop for a moment and think about it. Doesn't it take some form of motivation to build cities, buildings, and civilization? Certainly it does, and the form of motivation responsible is man.

Why, then, is the mind of man so diverse that he does these many different things? The answer to this question comes in three parts. First, man's immediate environment causes him to seek a form of shelter which will serve him for comfort and protection against the weather. This is not always true, however, as may be seen in the Tierra Del Fuegian region, an antarctic climate, where the shelter consists of a simple brush lean-to at best. Second, historical conditions such as wars, migrations, and evolutionary forms of civilization tend to add to man's knowledge and ability to engage in many types of activity. Third, the time element is an important factor in any kind of structural progress. If you come from an area where your economic welfare depends entirely on hunting or fishing, there isn't much time left to devote to activities other than supplying your livelihood. If you come from an agricultural area, as many of the American Indians do, there is usually time after the harvest to build and support a more complex economic, political, and religious community structure.

HAVING BRIEFLY DEFINED the situation leading to man's cultural divergences, let us turn now to the aborigines of Latin America who hold a unique place in the minds of Latter Day Saints. The ethnological knowledge of these peoples is limited because most foreigners have been more interested in converting them to Christianity than in finding out the origins of their beliefs.

What we know of them has been uncovered largely in the last few years, with the exception of various historical records including The Lacedones, Popol Vuh, Chilam Balam, and a few others written during the Spanish conquests. From these records and others written since that time, it is a known fact that very little change has taken place in the cultures of Latin America in the last 400 years. The only exception is the entrance of European elements which have modified the cultures rather than changing them. Therefore we can be relatively certain that with more archaeological uncoverings and other research, more cultural knowledge of these Indians will be brought to light.

In supplying information of this type, a great deal of work must be done. A little is being accomplished by some of the interested institutions of our country, but the trained personnel in the field of anthropology is very limited. Many questions are arising daily from the work which has been done, and answers are being found after long hours of research. Frequently former theories and concepts must be changed to coincide with the findings, which often bear out and uphold the Book of Mormon. I should like at this time to invite those who are interested to take up this study. It may well be that suggestions here and there from each of you may go a long way in helping solve some of the riddles confronting the investigators in this field today.

Listed below are some general headings and subheadings which may serve you as a guide in looking for material to read and study:

1. Geography. This is a vital study because it helps prepare you for future investigation. It will acquaint you with the climate, vegetation, elevation, and other environmental conditions that tend to affect the inhabitants of a country.

2. Ethnology. The study of the cultural traits of living peoples, and its companion, ethnography, which treats of cultural traits of one particular people.

3. Archaeology. This is a study of the ruins of man's handiwork, his implements, and his aesthetic achievements; it is essential in analyzing ethnological evidence.

4. Linguistics. The importance of this subject is evident because it deals with man's speech habits; it is essential in attempting to find a central point of origin from which the various languages developed. There are about seventy-seven different aboriginal linguistic stocks in Latin America today, with a number of dialects for each stock.

5. Physical Anthropology. This is the study of the sizes, characteristics, and peculiarities in the shape of man's physical structure. It may be of interest to note that in the American aborigines, the extremes of physique are to be found in every way. The tallest and shortest of individuals; the straightest to the curliest hair, and the lightest and darkest of skin color are a few examples.

Summarizing, I have condensed much information in a few short paragraphs. Much can be said pro and con, but my earnest desire is to inspire others to take up where the scientists have become puzzled and bewildered at the complexity of civilizations now extinct, yet alive to those who seek adventure in their remains.

*The author is a student of anthropology at the University of New Mexico.

"Let us be thankful that we pray to a God who can discern the prayer within the prayer, and after gives the substance of our petitions in the very act of refusing their form."—Maclaren.

When I was a child I could not understand why every person to whom the elders administered did not immediately become well. Why was it when I needed, or thought I needed something very much, that God did not instantaneously hear my prayer and provide the needed thing? Such is the simple faith of a child, and thus many people continue to believe. Then when, for a long period of time, their prayers are not answered, they lose their faith in God and their belief in the effectualness of prayer. More of us should be as the little girl whose prayer did not bring what she wanted, and who replied, when asked if her prayer had been answered, "Yes, God said, 'No.'"

Many of us fail to realize what we ask God to do. When we ask for the return of a loved one, we ask him to carry a ship or plane across the world. When we ask for safekeeping of a boy in war, we ask God to deflect all bullets, remove all booby traps, and reform all enemies who may approach. These things are certainly within God's power, but how much greater would be the prayer for peace, that men's hearts may be so moved that all of our men may come home, that all of our loved ones may be safe. Prayers for the common good of God's people are always answered, and if the prayer for the individual fits into this greater prayer pattern, one knows this his prayer, too, will be answered.

I was talking to an artist who specializes in portrait work. I remarked that it probably was much easier to paint the portrait of a beautiful girl than of an ugly girl. His answer warmed my heart. He said, "There is no such thing as an ugly person. There are only people who have either regular or irregular features. Those whose facial contour is regular and even are called beautiful. If the person who has an irregular feature could replace it with one of symmetry, that person would be beautiful. Thus it is that plastic surgeons live—by removing irregularities." And he is right. You've seen the girl whose buck teeth or lump on her nose have been removed, and suddenly you realize that she's quite pretty. She always has been pretty, but the irregularity kept you from noticing it.

This same thing is really what is meant when people say, "There's some good in everyone." How much nicer it would be to think that all people are fundamentally good, and that after certain irregularities are removed from their lives, they may be perfect. Thus instead of starting at the bottom and building a zionistic life, we rather remove from our lives the irregular actions which make us different.

The bookstores are full of volumes purported to be versions of the Bible—modern versions, American versions, and easy versions. These versions differ in facility of reading, in use of common nomenclature, and often in basic meaning.

We've all had the experience of hearing a familiar passage of scripture applied in many different ways. The poor "prodigal son" has been interpreted so many different ways that one wonders what the original idea really was.

Modern religionists must be careful, in their broad interpretations, to create versions and not perversions. Thinking people must be able to recognize each.

A short time ago on a crowded bus a Negro man hit the back of my head with his elbow, causing me to break my glasses against a metal rod. He said nothing, and as usual I was unceremoniously discharged at my regular stop. Of course acquaintances always notice absence of glasses, and I was quite surprised at the furor my story caused.

"The dirty old niggers . . . always causing trouble . . . ought to be sent back to Africa . . . going to be a race war . . . etc. . . etc." I found myself saying this: "Now listen, my glasses were broken by a careless and inconsiderate workman. It happened that he was Negro. But he was one Negro only, not the whole race. I ride that same bus daily with many Negro workers at the government depot, yet this has only happened once. To counteract this occurrence are the many times Negro gentlemen have offered me a seat on that same bus when my arms were loaded. White men continued to sit. This type of racial intolerance makes me tired—a good man is a good man, no matter what his race. And, a rascal is as likely to have white skin as any other color. Let him who is perfect cast the first stone, no matter what the color."

Government clerks who work for middle Army echelons often find it hard to keep straight the use of the words "desire" and "request." You may desire from someone under your own jurisdiction, but you must request from someone on your own level or above. Army channels are strict upon the use of these words, and may letters, otherwise correct, must be retyped before mailing.

By now this procedure is almost second nature for me, and as I dictate the correct word just automatically comes. Somehow, this grading by amount of authority rankles with me. I certainly am glad that our society no longer makes a difference between you, thee, me, and thou.

The Kingdom By the Will of Man

By J. A. Koehler

THE MEANING of "the Kingdom" in this talk is a divinely constituted community or system of social institutions. The Kingdom comprises the vital affairs of the people, conformed intentionally to the will of God. It is man doing the will of God in the relations that enrich human life, thereby glorifying Him. The mystical kingdoms of the unprophetic voices, modern as well as medieval, are not the subject of this discourse.

The characteristic of the prophets is their engrossing concern for the right conduct of the business of human living together. Always, they proclaimed the responsibility of the people for the manner in which the affairs of the community are governed. They said that it is the duty of man to honor God, in the conduct of economic life in particular, by doing his will. To do that is to achieve the Kingdom. And that means that the Kingdom of God will come by the will of man.

I DO NOT SAY that the willing of God has nothing to do with coming of the Kingdom. All I say is that the Kingdom will come when man wills effectively that it shall come, or when man wills to do God's will.

There are many unprophetic voices in the church today who see no necessary relation between the willing of the people and the coming of the Kingdom. One school of prophecy interpreters publishes to the world the idea that the Kingdom will come even if the builders of that Kingdom do not intend that it shall come; that the business of the Kingdom is in God's hand; and that He will use whom he will to build it. The aim of that propagandism, apparently, is to win English-speaking peoples in particular to the idea that the effective willing of God is the efficient cause of Kingdom coming.

THERE IS NOT a little disparity of ideas about the coming of God's Kingdom. There may be a number of things which explain the general idea that the business of the Kingdom is in the hands of God. One is the loose language in which prophetic ideas of the Kingdom are recorded in the Bible. Another is the piecemeal or fragmentary ways in which people read the Bible. There is much grabbing of obscure, ambiguous, cryptical passages in the Bible on which to base Kingdom-coming beliefs.

The wish of both the writers and readers of the Bible to magnify God, together with the priestly habit of belittling man, may have much to do with Kingdom-coming beliefs.

The length of the journey to the Kingdom may have something to do with it. But the principal explanation—the fact from which we seek to hide ourselves—is our own bungling of the business of peoples, our Kingdom-building delinquency, our indisposition to accept our Kingdom-building responsibility. Since we fall short of the willing by which the Kingdom must come, we invent excuses to hide ourselves from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne of judgment. And we do it by trying to shift man's responsibility for the coming of the Kingdom to the shoulders of God.

It is difficult to understand how men, who say they believe in the agency of man, in the freedom of the moral will, can say at the same time that the responsibility for grounding the business of the community in the principles of the morally right is the responsibility of God. The field of morality, or of "righteousness," is human society.

If, then, man is a free moral agent, is not the responsibility of conforming human society to the principles of the morally right man's responsibility? Must not the righteousness of the Kingdom be established through the free moral willing of man?

There may be much in the Bible, bearing on this question, that is misleading. Nevertheless, the "story" of the Bible, the "history" of religion as it is recorded there, the testimony of its prophets, taken as a whole, is such as to leave no excuse for anyone who has capacity for scholarly pursuits or priestly offices, to say that the Kingdom shall come, not by the will of man, but by the will of God.

THE RECORD of the dealings of the prophets with their peoples leaves no excuse for such erroneous beliefs. The careers of Moses and Samuel in particular, under whose leadership the business of the Kingdom was first promoted, testify in ways that can have no doubtful meaning, that the Kingdom must come by the will of man.

The particulars cannot be recited in a ten minute radio talk. We can give, however, one instance of what we mean. When Samuel wished to do the will of God in the conduct of the affairs of the community, when he wished to perpetuate the type of leadership instituted by Moses, the people said No, we will have a king. And the substance of the record is that God said to Samuel, If the people will have a king, a king it shall be. For it is the people who must make the decisions that shape the business of government. "Hearken to the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee"—thee, the representative of the will of God. Does not that mean that the Kingdom of God will come by the will of man?

What is the testimony of Jesus respecting the coming of the Kingdom? It is the testimony of the voice of prophecy from beginning to end. He taught that it is through man's willing that the Kingdom shall come. He sought always to engender in man the spirit out of which alone the Kingdom of God can arise. And that means that the Kingdom of God will come by the will of man.

THE CONTENTION of Latter Day Saintism is that this is the day of Kingdom coming. If the genius of Latter Day Saintism is the modern voice of prophecy, will it not reaffirm the testimony of the ancient voice? Will it not maintain that the Kingdom will come by the will of man? It will. And it does.

The gist of the testimony of what Latter Day Saints believe to be the modern voice of prophecy is this: "Were it not for the transgressions of my people . . . they might have been redeemed even now." In the language of Restoration, that means that the Kingdom might have come even now. "But, behold they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands . . . and [as a consequence] are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial Kingdom." The genius of Restoration sought to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion—which is the Kingdom. But the people would not. They would not "organize my Kingdom upon the promised land." As it was in the case of Jesus, so it is in the case of the modern prophet, I would, but "ye would not." And because "ye" would not, the Kingdom did not come. The Kingdom must come by the will of man.

That is ancient prophecy in all its vigor. It is prophecy that excuses no delinquency by trying to shift to God the responsibilities of man. It is prophecy that faces the facts in their nakedness, and seeks no excuse for the moral-willing-failure of the people.

THERE HAS ARRIVED again the genius that, without robbing the Almighty of his prerogative, ascribes the highest importance to the moral willing of man. That genius maintains the right of God to right of way in the conduct of the affairs of man. At the same time it holds that the responsibility of giving God his right of way is the responsibility of man.

That genius holds that there is but one way to do all things to the glory of God, and that is by implementing his will willingly, intentionally, devoutly, in the family of social institutions. It holds that the Kingdom of God must come by the will of man. It maintains that God has revealed his will, through the doing of which the Kingdom shall come. And it says that the next move is up to man.

Of all the peoples of Christendom today, Latter Day Saints should have, in the message of Restoration, the greatest assurance that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy.

"Talmuds of the Jews" a Forgery

Recently, a book titled Talmuds of the Jews, written by Reverend W. D. Mahan of Boonville, Missouri, in the year 1884 and published for the author by Perrin and Smith, Publishers and Job Printers, 210 Olive Street, Saint Louis, Missouri, was highly recommended to me as containing authentic accounts of the trial and crucifixion of Jesus written by the Jews. My suspicions were aroused by the remarkable claims of this book and I wrote to the Library of Congress asking them to advise me regarding its authenticity. The following reply might be of interest to the Herald readers:

"In reply to your inquiry of October 28th, please be advised that the so-called 'archæological writings of the Sanhedrin and Talmuds of the Jews' contained in W. D. Mahan's book of that title (Saint Louis 1884) are well-known forgeries. No such documents exist either in Constantinople or at the Vatican; and the statements made about the Talmud are completely inaccurate and based on gross ignorance.

"Yours very truly,

Culture in the Home

By Mrs. B. F. Moats

Paul in II Timothy 2:15 says, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

A cultured person is a controlled, courteous, person—one who is considerate of others, one who knows and appreciates the best in education, art, music, and religion, and one who has so assimilated this knowledge as a part of himself until it is natural, spontaneous, and unstudied. Culture is the result of people working co-operatively together. Out of this co-operation comes civilization. As a perfect June day is to the year, so is culture to the person; and it is also almost as rare.

Boettiger in Your Child Meets the World says: "The first principle of democracy is that individuals are valuable for themselves and for what they contribute to the commonweal." We accept the child as he is because he is himself; in doing this we give him a sense of security, of inner peace and strength, which will enable him to accept people who are different from himself. Tolerance for others grows in part from the acceptance of oneself. We need so to teach our children in the home that they will be able to make the wise decisions when away from the home, to sift the bad from the good, and to accept only what is noble and fine.

There is the story of the small boy walking with his father; they passed a Protestant church, then a Catholic church, then a Jewish synagogue. The father explained how there were people who met together in each of these places because of the things they believed about the world, about themselves, and about other people. Suddenly the small boy grasped his father's hand and asked earnestly, "Daddy, what do you believe? I want to believe what you believe."

There is a prestige of parenthood that is enjoyed by no other social group except under pressure. We need to make the proper use of this confidence and prestige and we cannot begin to instill habits of culture and good usage too early.

In many native tribes, they have recognized that the family may misuse its dominance over the child, so they have placed a time limit after which the child becomes a tribe member. There is much ceremony in these rites.

In this day of changing mores, there is even greater need than formerly to retain what has proved best of cultural value during the past ages.

The difference between democracy and the totalitarian way of life is fundamentally one of responsibility. In a totalitarian state, people are told what to do and how to think. In a democracy, they are expected, within the social framework or mores, to think and act for themselves. Again Boettiger says, "We do not, as some people seem to think, merely fit children into an existing world. We give them the tools with which to understand it, to be sure; but we also give them an ability that is more than understanding—an ability to change it—to shape it toward their own ends."

We have an able ally in nature if we use it in teaching culture. We must not be only exploiters of nature, we need to feel a partnership with nature, and thus we can reach the deep reservoirs in humanity, which as truly as reservoirs which supply water, can help keep us sweet and clean, we need to remember the words of the old prophet, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." There is great strength in nature, a great peace and joy can come by working in and with the soil. Nature's emphasis is upon change, upon the continuous "becoming," but with an underlying unity; a frame of reference to its cycle of birth, growth, and birth again takes place.

The child's emotional response to beauty begins to develop long before he goes to school. Teach him to enjoy the glory of the sunset and the sunrise, the cloud formations, and all the beauties of nature.

We like what we are used to, so we must strive to become habituated and accustomed to all the best things culturally.

All living is one of adjustment, of constant change. The family's support of culture is based upon the necessity of using the group reserves in the human effort to survive. Society is a human attempt to extend the processes of adjustment; working together for the good of the whole, this develops group attitudes that provide a better security than if the individual received no discipline. Society gives men superior opportunities but at a loss of some individual freedoms.

Thomas & Znaniecki in The Polish Peasant in Europe and America warns us that the "disintegration of family life and culture is likely to show itself most of all within the home where the child and parent find themselves emotionally separated by an alien influence."

Cultural material is presented to the child as a matter of routine along with the other teachings and activities of the household. For example, food and the "word of wisdom." Certain groups ban certain foods, while other foods if eaten are supposed to have magical effects. This takes in the whole realm of magic, black and white, taboos, etc. Impressions gained in childhood become life habits, so let us try to develop the best habits.

"The family can be thought of as an organization operating between the individual and the outside community life," says Graves in Family and Its Social Functions. Culture needs to be so taught that it becomes an intangible part of the individual's life. To be effective to the child, it must be such an active force in the parent's life that it is completely natural.

Loyalty to the home influences and teachings can cause great emotional conflicts as the child makes "out-of-the-home" contacts, unless great care is used in our teaching. Who of us hasn't wished for a second time to correct some mistaken teaching? Oh, if we could only have the wisdom of later experience, when we teach our children at an early age.

The family, like other institutions, is as a cultural organization, a product of the slow accumulations of behavior, patterns, and applications of mores that have clustered about domestic interaction. This accretion of customs, folkways, and mores appears in other social institutions, but in none do they have such great, constant cultural determining significance as in the family.

The cultural processes consist essentially of imitating or learning from a model transmitted by symbols and education from each generation to the next. They are cultural, customary, institutional, and artificial in the broad sense, rather than the natural. We must learn them; we are not born with them, but we do have the capacity to acquire them.

Folsom in The Family and Democratic Society says "Human nature is not only what is born in each individual, but also habits which individuals inevitably and universally acquire from group living."

Individual culture may be compared with music. Just as one individual differs from another, so musical instruments differ in make, tone, and construction, even among the same class; yet a lovely composition when played by a master hand will always be beautiful. So a cultured person will always appear to good advantage and will always appreciate the best.

The aim of education or culture is merely the development of good taste in knowledge and good form in conduct of one who likes the right things and is courteous. I am reminded of the young girl who climbed out of a friend's car after a drive home, without so much as a backward glance of appreciation. True, the child's mother expressed her appreciation in, "Thank you." But our children need to remember that "courtesy is a key that can unlock many doors." Lin Yutang in The Importance of Living, page 362, says, "The Chinese generally distinguish between a man's scholarship, conduct, and taste of discernment." With taste comes charm. To have taste and discernment requires a capacity for thinking things through to the bottom, an independence of judgment and an unwillingness to be bulldozed by any form of humbug, social, political, literary, artistic or academic. Confucius said, "Thinking without learning makes one flighty, and learning without thinking is distaste."

Anatole France said that "knowledge is an adventure of the soul." So let us enlarge our souls, teach our children to do so, and make many pleasant adventures in all best things secular as well as spiritual.

We can teach culture with books. Annis Duff in her Bequest of Wings quotes Emily Dickinson:

He ate and drank the precious words,
His spirit grew robust,
He knew no more that he was poor,
Or that his frame was dust.
He danced along the dingy ways,
And this bequest of Wings
Was but a book. What liberty
A loosened spirit brings!

We become better parents through the use of books. We grow together in sharing the fun with them.

We should use all of ourselves in the education and enjoyment of our children and it is a full-time career. We need to accept more completely the responsibility and privilege of this creative task, for it pays rich dividends in a cultural way.

We can make good use of the public library in our quest for culture, to get the right book for the right age, personality, and occasion.

Horace Seudder in Childhood in Literature and Art says, "I think the solution of the problem that vexes us will be found not so much in the writing of good books for children, as in the wise choice of those parts of the world's literature which contain an appeal to the child's nature and understanding. It is not the books written expressly for children, so much, as it is the books written out of the minds that have not lost contact with their childhood, that will form the body of literature which will be classic for the young."

In School Arts we find that in departments of school subject matter, probably the arts, play an important role as a preventative and curative agency. The article lists these four among the important personality needs:

1. The need for affection and acceptance by other people,
2. The need for success or adequacy,
3. The need for beauty, new experiences, and fun,
4. The need for discipline or control.

Opportunities for fulfilling all these needs come through art. By building right emotional attitudes in the individual, art finds its chief function in the school and then goes on to give several case histories of this.

Katherine Fullerton Gerould in What Then Is Culture? says "To be cultured is to have a natural instinct for fineness in whatever intellectual field or plastic form, and to appreciate fineness of quality wherever it appears. Culture depends upon the quality and attitude of the mind not wholly on the content. Culture after having been acquired must be used."

Of all the arts, music gives greatest opportunity for active sharing by family or neighborly groups: in chamber music, trios, string quartets, choirs, community singing, etc.

Woodrow Wilson said, "The man who disparages music as a luxury and nonessential is doing the nation an injury. There is no better way to express patriotism than through music."

We have made progress as a church culturally. We are becoming more conscious of the need of more beauty and dignity in our church worship and buildings. There are still cultural peaks to climb, and if we are to survive, we must learn to grow culturally and to transmit it to our youth.

As Arthur Hugh Clough says:

"In front the sun climbs slow, how slowly!
But Westward, look, the land is bright."

"There is no place for egotism in a cultured person; he must be a well-rounded adjustable person, with quiet manners, no pretension, true courtesy in a courtly manner," says Ralph Waldo Emerson in Conduct of Life. "Culture redresses man's balance, puts him among his equals and superiors, reviews the delicious sense of sympathy and warns him of the dangers of solitude and repulsion. Culture cannot begin too early."

We must "study to show ourselves approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

In Christ we find the perfect example of culture, in kindness, love, sympathy, consideration, and courtesy. Let us follow where he has led.

How Does Revelation Come?

By Evan A. Fry

"The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."—I Corinthians 12: 7.

SUPPOSE THAT you were flying over an unexplored jungle in South America or Africa, and suddenly your plane should be forced down in a spot where white men had never before been. And suppose that you should find there a sightless people, who had long ago lost all use of their eyes. Not within the memory of the oldest living person was there any slightest recollection of what it was like to see. There were a few scattered traditions that once their ancestors had been able to see, but that had been so long ago that nobody was quite sure about it. These people had learned to get along with the sense of touch, with hearing, with many ingenious devices which enabled them to do their work, to move about freely, and to exist in total darkness.

Now, supposing that you had discovered such a tribe of people. You came to them as a seeing person. You would try to tell them of how men see in other parts of the world. You would try to describe some of the things that make the gift of sight a blessing and a joy. But they would have been without sight for so long that there would be no vocabulary of sight in their language. Just what language could you use, just what words could you use in your own language, to convey to a person who has never seen, the full significance and meaning of light, of shadow, of darkness, of color, of perspective? And think of the still more insuperable difficulties you would encounter if you tried to tell these incredulous people how sight could be aided by such things as the microscope, the telescope, and the spectroscope. Think of how difficult it would be to explain moving pictures or television! How would you explain the use of X rays, or ultra-violet rays, or the changes in color which take place when an object is seen under infra-red rays? How could you convince a people who had never seen, that all these things were not merely wild dreams concocted by a crazy man?

WE ARE VERY LARGELY a race of spiritually blind people who for centuries have been prone to deny the very existence of spiritual light, or inspiration, or revelation. We have a tradition that God revealed himself once upon a time in the long ago, and that prophets and other inspired men wrote down that inspiration, which ultimately found its way into the collection of writings found in our Scriptures. As the culmination of all revelation, says this tradition, God sent his Son into the world, to reveal by his life and teachings the nature of his Father in heaven. But when that Son returned to heaven, and the canon of scripture was closed by the decree of a council of men who were only human, God turned out the light, and there has been no revelation since. So many people have accepted that tradition, and have refused to believe even the possibility of spiritual light and inspiration and revelation, that we have almost completely lost the vocabulary to describe such experience. Consequently when the few people who still can see spiritual light come to the benighted souls who dwell in darkness, it is an almost impossible task to tell them in words which are convincing and understandable, what spiritual light is, and how it may be seen and understood by men. Just as a race of people who have always been blind might deny the existence of light or the possibility of sight, so does the world today in its blindness deny the existence of spiritual light, or the possibility of spiritual sight by way of revelation.

One of the distinguishing features of this church has always been a belief in continuous and continuing revelation—a belief that God still speaks, not alone to individuals by way of personal counsel and guidance and instruction, but to his church. And when through his prophet he speaks to the church, that word is worthy of being included in our modern canon of scriptures, and regarded as law binding upon the church. Recently we dealt with safeguarding revelation. We stressed the fact that if revelation is to be binding upon the church, it must meet certain tests—must pass certain safeguards. First, it must come through one in authority over the church, or over that portion of it which is concerned in the revelation. Second, it must agree with other revelations which have been given—both in ancient and in modern time, for God does not change his mind or contradict himself. And third, it must have the approval of the people, who test it in the light of reason, wisdom, intelligence, and consistency, and by common consent vote whether or not to receive it as the voice of God. We also stressed that in the case of private revelation, intended solely for the use of individuals, these same tests of reason, wisdom, intelligence, and consistency should be applied.

THIS TIME we should like to consider with you for a few moments the question, "How does revelation come?" There can be no single and exclusive and final answer to that question. It comes in as many different ways as there are different personalities in the world, each capable of being reached in a manner slightly different from all his fellows. There are as many varied manifestations of divine or spiritual light as there are of visible or natural light—and by the way, we see only one part in 63 of the physical light which surrounds us all the time, even in darkness.

God can reveal himself, his laws, his truths, in countless ways. The Spirit of God is given to every man to profit withal. Another modern scripture says the same thing in different words: "The Spirit of God enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world." One of the tragedies of human existence is that so few men, when they are enlightened by that Spirit, recognize it for what it is, or have the spiritual capacity to see and use it. They ignore it, or worse, they spurn it and grieve it. And then they find themselves in complete spiritual darkness, for God has said also, "My Spirit will not always strive with man."

Let us examine some of the methods by which revelation of truth may come to men. Though there are countless methods, they fall into several fairly well-defined categories. One of the most spectacular means of revelation is the open vision, such as Isaiah had when he saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, or such as Peter had when he saw a sheet let down from heaven full of all manner of beasts and creeping things. Another common method is the spiritual dream. Note that I have said spiritual dream, for most dreams are from other causes altogether, and have nothing to do with revelation. Examples of such spiritual dreams are numerous in the Bible. We all know the story of Pharaoh's dream, which Joseph interpreted, and which was the means of saving the nation from famine. We all know Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great image, which was interpreted by Daniel. Most of us are familiar with Paul's dream in which a man appeared to him with the plea, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." When experienced under proper conditions, and carefully tested and examined by the methods we have already pointed out, visions and dreams are acceptable and important methods of receiving revelation.

Light or revelation may come to men through the gift of tongues or the gift of prophecy, in which God temporarily, and with the consent of the individual used, takes partial control of that individual's mind and quickens it so that the mouth-piece can speak vocally to others.

Here again we need always to apply the test of reason and intelligence, and to guard against hysteria and emotionalism, lest we be led into accepting as divine revelation either some purely innocuous and foolish bit of emotionalism, or some much more dangerous deception and trickery that will lead us astray.

But the most common forms of revelation are by no means so spectacular as these we have previously mentioned. Most commonly, revelation consists simply of a quickening or a stimulation of the intellect—an augmentation and extension of perfectly natural and normal human powers, so that men are enabled to arrive at truth more rapidly than they otherwise would, and to be much more certain of the truth once they have even dimly seen it. A great many of the people who believe in revelation in some form or other, think of it as a gratuitous "pouring in" to an empty and a passive vessel. That is very rarely the way in which revelation comes. The mind and the intellect of the recipient of revelation must function according to natural law. Then, and only then, the spirit of light and truth can give help, and contribute to the process of revelation.

THERE ARE FOUR ways by which we may know God's will and his laws: first, by having them told to us by someone else; second, by making search and exploration and study and experiment ourselves; third, by insight, or as some would call it, a "hunch," which suggests a new method or a new direction for our search; and fourth, by proving our conclusions and making our inferences. This is the method used by the scientist to discover new truth. There is no reason why it should not also be used by the prophet in his search for new truth, or for new interpretations of old truth. First we take the knowledge of the past—which has been proved true by the experience of the past. Starting from there, we begin to search, to explore, to study, to reason, using our own natural and normal mental processes which God has given us. Then, as we move out ourselves to the best of our ability and capacity, there comes a flash of insight—a "hunch" suggesting some new method of approach or some overlooked field of research, or some ignored fact. Following up the suggestions of this insight, we make further use of our mental powers, both conscious and subconscious, to draw our inferences and conclusions which have grown out of the first three steps of our process, and then to clarify and verify them. When we have finished, the result satisfies the reason, because it has been arrived at by reasonable means. It satisfies the emotions, because it has solved a problem or discovered new truth, and such an experience is always emotionally satisfying. But more than that, such an experience is spiritually satisfying if it has brought forth new spiritual light, or disclosed new spiritual truth. As modern scripture phrases it, "your bosoms shall burn within you," and by this spiritual quickening and satisfaction we are assured of the validity of the revelation which has come to us.

Such revelation—or in fact all revelation—is only for those who place themselves in a position to receive it—for those who will work for it. It is potentially available to everyone, for the Spirit of God is given to every man to profit withal, and God giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, when they come asking for wisdom. The Spirit of God enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world. God will reveal himself in some measure and to some degree, to anyone who will pay the price and make the preparation for that revelation.

It is tragic that more men and women do not seek and find, when all are entitled to receive. And it is also tragic that so often those who do receive inspiration and revelation, in science, in art, in music, in literature, or along such easily discernible lines, do not carry over those processes of revelation into

Don't Ask Me!--

"Why Don't You Get Married?"

Anonymous

This essay is affectionately dedicated to the pests who keep asking me the above question.

SOMETIMES just for the sake of unburdening myself, I would like to answer truthfully the above question when it is flung at me, as it frequently is, namely: My Number One ambition in life is to become a good stenographer. To this end I have acquired more schooling than the average person has, on the theory that the best preparation I can make is still not good enough. No matter how much I ever learn in the way of theory, or how much practical experience I acquire, I will never feel that I am adequately prepared for the task I face. To this end then, I continue to work faithfully at the job of mastering my shortcomings as a stenographer and a Saint. I have never intended to get married until I have accomplished my purpose as a stenographer, for unless a person keeps working in this field, he loses his skill no matter how experienced he has become, just as a pianist loses ground if he neglects to practice. Furthermore, I shall never get married until I am convinced that such a step is in the direction of divine wisdom. My blessing admonishes me "to be very careful of the one you associate with in this journey of life, the moral and spiritual field of life. So we often find the man who is suited by gift and temperament accomplished in the revelation of God through art or literature or music or science, but utterly ignorant of him or of his revelation in the fields of morality. A well-balanced life is necessary to the men who seek revelation, and a well-balanced man or woman seeks revelation in all fields of experience, testing the validity of each, and blending all into a well-rounded and complete whole. May we be always alert and diligent to discover and to search out the new revelation which God is waiting to give us, and prompt to obey that new truth when it is revealed.

for by doing so, your influence for good will extend far and wide." I have taken that admonition very seriously, and have concluded that an unwise choice—to someone who is not spiritually minded, for example—would mean that all the effort I have put out so far would be mostly wasted.

But, as matters stand, I am stuck with a story I cannot tell. Anytime I really want to get laughed at, all I need to say is, "I am more interested in working." Just as if anybody believes that. It may not be natural, but it is true. That does not keep me from suffering from varying kinds of frustration at times.

Sometimes when I wash my face in the morning (and will someone please explain why people look worst in the morning?) I notice old wrinkles getting deeper, and new ones coming in. Then when I comb my hair, I see new white hairs sprinkling what used to be well colored. Then I realize again that I am rapidly approaching that age when I will be too old to have any children, and I take no comfort in the thought. And I remember that unless the purposes of the church are accomplished, nobody is going to be able to bring up his children in peace unless someone (several someones) is willing to pay that price of bringing about the purposes of the church, that from us the world may have the light it so desperately needs. Then I wonder again, as I have so many times before, "Just how great a price are you willing to pay to help the church get the light and direction from God that it needs?" Many times, for more reasons than I want to go into now, I have cried aloud in my mind, "Lord, go get someone else. The price is too great!" Then I remember that Jesus said, "The cup that my father giveth me, shall I not partake of it?"

SO, STRUGGLING with bitterness because of pursuing a road that never seems to arrive anywhere, I also struggle into some clothes so I can go to the office and help the government with its never-ending paper work.

"Why don't you get married?" Brother, I know all the wisecracks. These comments are to be spoken with airy cheerfulness: "Oh, I am just slow getting around!" "I haven't seen anyone worthy of my numerous charms." "All the other girls seem to beat my time." "I don't trust men." A married neighbor likes to heckle me—no offense intended—so I just heckle him back. One time I told him, "Because nobody will have me." You should have seen his face. That really floored him.

After all, what are you supposed to say? You can't tell people it isn't any of their business—no matter what your motives may be. Lots of girls don't really know. They may tell you that they are "Waiting for the right man to come along." It is sometimes quite obvious that they feel under no obligation to develop their personalities and talents that they might become good wives and mothers. Consequently being single looks (to some people) like a reflection on your personality.

TO BE indifferent to one's personal appearance, for example, is just as much an evidence of lack of proper social adjustment as an excessive interest. Some girls just never learned how to talk to men, at least the eligibles. Other girls are genuinely interested in their careers; they go to school a while, and then work at any number of careers they find worth-while and satisfying. Then as the years pass away, they discover that most of the desirable men are married already. So they are stuck. Statistics are against them for one thing, particularly if they are Saints and want to marry in the church. You can be sure of one thing: any girl, past twenty-three or twenty-four, no matter what kind of a front she puts up, is sensitive about not being married.

ONE TIME I read an article someone wrote in which he said that no normal person's life is complete unless he is happily married. The article said something about women sometimes feeling the need of protection and care that they can get only in marriage. Or at least that is the way a friend interpreted it. She nearly blew a fuse. She said she didn't need any man to look out after her. She could take care of herself; she was quite able to earn her own living. She went on for some time in that vein, and I could see that she feels belligerently independent as far as men are concerned—any man. That is a poisonous frame of mind. I almost laughed. I wanted to say, "Listen, lady, as one frustrated old maid to another, you don't fool me a minute. That author was not talking about money but psychic security. That feeling of dependence is not financial, but mental. A real woman does not care if she can earn more than her husband, or that maybe two or more are living on an income intended for one, as long as she respects him and can look up to him as being her superior in some respects."

NOT BEING married, or being unhappily married, are not the only experiences in life that frustrate people. The attitude a lot of people seem to take when they ask me why I don't get married is that I couldn't possibly be happy single, on the one hand, or that being married, life would be all peace and bliss. The divorce rate is 1 to 3. That I might be getting a lot of satisfaction out of life the way I find it now is just beyond their imagination. But it is true. Most of the time I do not feel hilariously cheerful, but for one month following after another in a measure of peace and happiness, I have never been any better off in my life than I am right now. These people fail to realize that although God instituted marriage and says, "He who forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God," that does not mean that God approves of all marriages nor that all people should get married. They forget that in spite of the fact that God has told us to establish homes for various good reasons, that heaven, which is traditionally considered a place of bliss beyond our understanding, is also a place where there is no marriage. It is not "The One Thing" that makes us happy or miserable. If we can expect to find satisfaction and peace in the things we do, it will only be because we obey the laws God has given us.

Sure, I have found peace and happiness without marriage, but it is not always so. In this life we have those cravings of the flesh that people in heaven don't have because they don't need them. And believe me, sometimes I could cheerfully do without them. Mother told me years ago that God gave people strong sex desires because he wanted to be sure that people had the desire to establish homes. A lot of people throughout the history of the world would never take on the responsibility of having children and taking care of them if they were not strongly urged to do so. Of course it is still deeply imbedded in the mores that women should not have those desires, or at least admit it, but speaking as the voice of experience, sometimes those compelling urges are so powerful that I grit my teeth and pray that God may calm that inward storm that I might have peace. Then in a moment like that, imagine my feelings when some lame brain asks me as though airing an original thought that had never occurred to me, "Why don't you get married!" I feel like tying a chair around his neck and saying, "Listen, dope, I have some of the most powerful motives in the world. If I choose not to get married, is that your business?" But I smile sweetly and say, "I guess I don't use the right kind of nail polish!"

SEVERAL months ago I went to a banquet, and it was a mistake—I mean my attendance. I was having one of those lonely spells on general principles. Several general church officials discussed very ably the topic: "Problems of the Zionite Home." I told a neighbor that I felt like getting up after all the speeches were over about home decoration, hospitality in the home, problems of rearing children, etc., etc., and making a speech of my own about "Problems of the Zionite Homeless." Try living in a room or apartment or home where you have no choice in home decoration because you are not "The Lady of the House." You can't have guests in one room for obvious reasons, and you just don't have company in a small apartment.—But why go on?

Several years ago . . . wanted to marry me, and the thought just practically made my hair stand on end. He finally insisted on knowing why and I told him. I was working at the time, and he made fun of me for not making more money with all my education. That is a sample of his tact and insight. So I told him that all my adult life I had been moving and changing jobs, and I was tired of it, not being a rolling stone at heart. I told him he lived that way, and I didn't think being with him would be any improvement. I wasn't hunting a rolling stone, but an anchor. He promised he would change, and I said, "Not at your age, brother. You are asking me to take too big a risk. Maybe at twenty you would, but not at forty." He said, "I feel so aimless." So I answered, "You are. That is why I don't want you. I might look aimless, but I have some clearly defined objectives in mind, and you wouldn't be any help." He used to propose to . . . and me alternately.

MY BOSS has a lot of good qualities, but his sense of humor is distinctly crude in a great many ways. Several months ago he got to needling me about not being married. I don't know why people think that is a subject of jokes. Anyway there are a couple of bachelors in their forties in my department, and he thought it would be s-o-o-o-o w-o-o-o-o-nderful if I would get fixed up with one of them. Do you think he mentioned it once and dropped the subject? No! He mentioned it every time he came near me, so that I used to get tense whenever I saw him. He would stand up in the middle of our crowded office and tell me I didn't know what I was missing out of life, etc. Just let me point out their eccentricities, and he would laugh it off. The fact that they would also be within hearing also made no difference to him. He would seize the opportunity to ask them why they didn't marry me.

Finally he figured out why I wasn't getting anywhere. It was because I don't wear hats—which I usually don't. Too many dopey looking hats on the market. The subject was just an obsession with him or a while. I have a girl friend who sits close to me who really has good taste in hats and wears them with an air. So he finally heckled her—in a loud booming voice—about why didn't I get her to go with me to get one. Then somebody would fall for me. The mere fact that she is noticeably older than I am and also not married didn't phase him. I certainly got more opportunity to learn the so-called feminine virtues of patience and long-suffering. I got so nervous I could hardly stand myself. Of all the painful, humiliating experiences! I told him one day that he had picked on a subject I am sensitive about. He just looked pious and said if I got married, people would quit teasing me. I decided to quit speaking to him, but try to quit speaking to someone you work for! I could have gone to the man we both work for and told him to get my boss to leave me alone. I could have stopped it in a minute — and started a feud. He is quick-tempered and slow to forgive; then life really would have been rugged. He didn't realize that he was using the relative immunity of his position as a minor executive to put over his cruel humor on me.

I didn't want to quit my job because I like to too well. So I prayed about it instead, that somehow the Lord would help me handle the situation. He did. Suddenly without any warning, my boss just dropped the subject. He just announced one day that he had given me up as a bad job. Now he doesn't say anything for maybe a whole week at a time. In which case, I just calmly say, "This is where I came in," and walk out. So everything is under control. And I get a reputation—badly deserved—of never getting mad. (Continued on page 22.)

ZION'S LEAGUE EXCHANGE

A Page for Young People and Their Leaders

WALNUT PARK

THE WALNUT PARK Zion's League presented a worship service for their congregation Sunday evening, December 30. Their theme was "Behold, the field is white and ready to harvest."

Annabelle Prell began the service by playing soft violin music while candles flickered in the darkened church. The opening hymn "Onward to Zion" was followed by a scripture reading from section 12 of the Doctrine and Covenants; Ralph Remington was the reader. Following this, a trio composed of Naomi Moorman, Elois Randell, and Allene Lucas, sang "Lead on, O King Eternal." Betty Thomas read the poem, "Gradatim," by Holland, to a musical background, preceding a clarinet solo by Ammon Roberson.

The message of the evening was brought by Vance Eastwood, young people's leader at Walnut Park. He said, "The church is like a seed—small in the beginning, but slowly growing despite the storms and drought. Now it is a white field, ready for harvesting. The church, with a new year free of the torments of war, should thrust in its sickle and reap the harvest."

At the close of the service, the trio sang "Just as I Am," and Pastor Glaude Smith offered the benediction. Soft music was used as a postlude to continue the feeling of reverence gained in the service.

There has been a noticeable dearth of older young people at the League meetings. The cause for this has not been thoroughly analyzed. Perhaps it is because no one has been able to find a subject for classwork that would hold the interest of the varying age groups. Walnut Park has faced this problem for some time and has never been able to find a happy solution. Suggestions from other Leagues who may have solved a similar problem would be appreciated.

ENGLEWOOD

Saturday night, December 22, the Welch garage was turned into a hobo hall by the Englewood Leaguers. At 7:30 an interesting assortment of tramps began to gather, and by 8 o'clock a motly company had assembled. The prevailing style seemed to be patches, overalls, shirts of every cut and design, and—more patches.

The party got off to a hilarious start with a brain teaser involving two strings crossed and tied to the wrists of a couple of "hobos." Games and the Virginia reel climaxed the evening's entertainment.

Betty Katzman, Martha Brewer, and Katherine Bopra were in charge of the games; Sister Welch headed the refreshment committee.

Carolers dressed in boots, mittens, scarves, anything and everything to keep them warm, made a round of visits after church on the evening of December 23. They sang for the McNamaras, Sister Bopra, the Wakemans, Sister Clow, and at Rest Haven. Violet Stobaugh led the singing, and two trumpeters from Stone Church furnished every other number.

The four carloads of Leaguers again congregated at the Welch garage after they finished caroling. Doughnuts, cocoa, and chili were served as "warmer-uppers" to the singers.

Arthur Welch is the young people's leader at Englewood.

LIBERTY STREET

The Liberty Street League enjoyed a pleasant evening at the home of Dorothy DeTray, Sunday evening after church. Songs were sung, refreshments served, and a "good time was had by all."

SUGGESTIONS:

Several weeks ago two Independence Leagues planned a program together. One particularly successful feature of the evening was a quiz made up of bombastic proverbs. These proved so interesting that they're being passed on so others may use them.

1. Individuals abiding in a domicile of transparent substance should not carelessly project geological specimens.

2. Do not utter loud or passionate vocal expressions because of the accidental overturning of a receptacle containing a whitish, nutritive fluid.

3. Where there is sufficient positive volition, a successful conclusion may usually be expected.

4. It is not advantageous to place the sum total of your barnyard collections in the same wicker receptacle.

5. A superfluity of culinary experts has a tendency to disarrange the preparation of the beef extract.

6. Never calculate the possible number of your juvenile poultry until the usual period of incubation has been fully accomplished.

7. Cast a stroke at the propitious moment when the metallic substance is of the right temperature.

8. Each mass of vapory collection suspended in the firmament has an interior decoration of metallic hue.

9. Kindred flying creatures of the ethereal kingdom come into association gregariously.

10. A short vocal utterance directed toward the individual possessing a high degree of wisdom meets adequately all the needs of the occasion.

11. Those who possess but little intellect often project themselves into situations where the winged likenesses of men hesitate to perambulate.

12. He who locks himself into the arms of Morpheus promptly at eventide, and starts the day before it is officially announced by the rising sun, excels in physical fitness, increases his economic assets, and celebrates with remarkable efficiency.

13. The feathered, egg-laying, vertebrate animal which is among the first, invariably comes into possession of a small, legless, crawling animal.

14. A hard mass which progresses by turning over and over, does not successfully collect particles of delicate plant life.

15. Unwonted egotism prophesies the speedy effect of the forces of gravity.

16. A vessel under optical supervision never reaches a temperature of 212° F.

17. A canine which gives vent to his sentiments by a series of vocal efforts, rarely finds use for his bicuspid.

18. A small polished steel instrument used at the psychological moments is tantamount to the saving of three times three.

19. Accelerated execution often produces faulty results.

20. One feathered creature imprisoned in the digits is equal to at least twice that many at large.

The interpretation to these plus many other entertainment suggestions may be found in Eugene Closson's Game Book on sale at the Herald Publishing House.

This Way In

On entering a room where there are people, in the interests of poise, smoothness and convenience you should hesitate in the doorway for a moment. It gives you time to see who is there, where they are, and to locate your hostess. If you should burst into the room with a continuous movement, you would have to stop anyway a few steps further in and pirouette in the middle of the floor to get your bearings. Everyone would look up at you as you lunged about for something or somebody to light on and conversation would be momentarily paralyzed. — Margery Wilson, Charm (Stokes).

God's Great Covenants to Israel

By A. Longfellow

AT THE very outset of this subject, I feel like drawing our attention to the significant words of Hymn 416:

We limit not the truth of God
To our poor reach of mind
By notions of our day and sect,
Crude, partial and confined.
No, let a new and better hope
Within our hearts be stirred,
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from his word.

The following verses add further impetus to the thought; there is indeed a great need for us to open our minds and eyes to the wonders of God's word.

Perhaps my over forty years of activity in the ministry have been "crude and partial and confined"; perhaps my religious education has been sadly neglected, for I confess to you that until more recent years I lived in blissful ignorance that there were such covenants contained in the word of God. I had been concerned in the welfare and salvation of individual souls, encouraging their growth and development into the Christ image.

This is as it should be; in fact, we are not concerned enough along this line, but individual salvation, personal goodness, and Christlike living do not embrace the whole purpose or intent of our Heavenly Father.

To best illustrate the thought, let me suppose I wish to go—say to Denver. I go to someone and inquire, "How may I get to Denver, Colorado?" The answer would be, "Go to the union depot; purchase your ticket; retire to the waiting hall until your train is called."

I prepare; I obey all instructions and wait for the call. I have done all I can do. Am I now in Denver? No, I have just begun. The railway system must now operate—must carry out the whole of that intricate and often stupendous task of traversing those intervening miles. It, the railroad system, must enable me to complete my journey and deliver me at my destination.

Without the system, my desire to reach Denver would remain an unfulfilled dream.

Let me ask one more question: "Did the Denver railroad system suddenly spring into existence the moment I prepared to use it? Will it vanish when it has served just me?" Of course not. Long years of pioneering, labor, and engineering have developed that system for the benefit of all who need it.

Now we can apply our illustration. Our personal application of the principles of the gospel is the journey to the depot and the purchasing of the ticket. The covenants of God to Israel are the system, the program by which the infinite God will accomplish his purposes with mankind.

God's great plan had been formulated "before the foundation of the earth." His purposes cannot be frustrated nor brought to nought.

God's active regenerating program was first revealed in his call to Abraham, and on seven separate occasions, along with two later given to his son, Isaac, and still two others given to his grandson, Jacob (Israel). God made the unconditional Abrahamic covenant, an all-embracing covenant reaching down to the last days: "The creation of a great nation," "God will bless it," "He will make its name great," "Thou shalt be a blessing," "I will bless them that bless thee, curse them that curse thee," "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," "Possess gates of enemies."

The second covenant is, for want of a better name, called the Mosaic covenant. God was the giver, although Moses was the channel of conveyance. It was conditional upon the acceptance and obedience of Israel, which had from the one man Abraham multiplied into a vast host in Egypt and had been "called out," to use the words of God in Exodus 19:4, "And how I bare you on eagles wings, and brought you unto myself." Then follows the terms of the contract, on condition of compliance, "A peculiar treasure unto me above all people." "A kingdom of priests." "A holy nation."

With it came a threefold bestowal of what we loosely call the Law. Human frailty quickly called for another covenant, often connected as one and the same with the Mosaic, yet containing a wonderful unfolding, displaying the brighter "afterwards," after Israel's transgression. It is called the Palestine covenant.

To begin to obtain a conception of this covenant of God to Israel, you must read all of chapters 28, 29, and 30 of the Book of Deuteronomy. We briefly summarize it thus:

Dispersion for disobedience
Future repentance of Israel while still in dispersion Return to the Lord
Restoration of the land
National conversion
Judgment of Israel's oppressors
National prosperity

We could fill a book with all the references we should read in this regard.

The fourth great unconditional covenant is declared in II Samuel, seventh chapter, also Psalm 89, "the Davidic covenant." It provides a "Davidic house that is posterity, family." "A throne"—that is, royal authority. "A kingdom"—that is, a sphere of rule. All of them in perpetuity forever."

These four great covenants had been made to Israel while they were still in the land, before they had been "rent" or separated into the two opposing houses.

Dispersion of both these houses later followed as the result of their sins, but that inspiring prophet, Jeremiah, with unshaken faith in his God, boldly pronounces the new covenant, unconditional, not subject to deflection or rescinding by any frail human acts. Chapters 30, 31, 32, and 33, portray in glowing words and with inspiring grandeur the forthcoming of Israel from its period of punishments into the favor of God.

The 31st chapter, verses 31 to 34, conveys the glad message. This is also elaborated on by the writer of Hebrews in the eighth chapter. One commentator, speaking of it says: "The new covenant, better than the Mosaic covenant, not morally, but efficaciously," and my dictionary says that means "able to produce the results intended." This covenant involves the redeeming works of the Christ.

When we have taken the time to consider these five covenants with even a few of the many scriptures which affirm their divine authority (for no man can yet begin to grasp the immensity of God's mind and will) we experience a sense of sacred awe at the nearer approach to his divine mind and presence, an added reverence for God and his works, and a strong assurance of the fulfillment of his word. "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good work" (II Timothy 3: 15-17).

Would that we too, might experience as did those disciples journeying toward Emmaus, the instruction mentioned in Luke 24: 27, 44, and 45, so that our hearts might burn within us as he talks with us by the way, and while he opens to us the scriptures.

Eating is an Art, not an Industry. But there are many faults in table manners that make the eater appear more like a machine than a lady or gentleman. My grandmother had a horror of what she called Loading. A piece of meat is stabbed with the fork, then with the knife a little potato is added to the load, a little turnip, and the whole neatly smoothed over and hoisted to the mouth like a hodful of plaster going up a ladder.—Gelett Burgess.

THIS is not an unusual story. My girl friends who have married relatively late tell the same kind of stories. So if working girls are beligerently independent, it is not to be wondered at.

For instance: I came to work the other day with a new suit on. One of the men complimented me on it, and I thanked him kindly and told him I had made it myself. He chuckled as if at a huge joke and said, "It is strange that anybody who sews as well as you do doesn't get married." I just grinned at him and observed that I didn't see any relation between sewing and marriage. (After all, lots of women have made good wives and mothers and couldn't sew a stitch.)

SO I am getting along all right—that is, instead of feeling desperate about how good a stenographer I am, I'm just plain discouraged. I keep going because I don't dare quit. And that's why I am in no hurry to get married. But just try telling that to anybody!

I attend group prayer meetings quite frequently because I have a lot of friends in that group. Several months ago a man (bachelor) in his forties started attending that group, and after looking me over, announced to several of my friends that he would like to meet me—object matrimony. So several people came to me and told me about it. I told them I wasn't interested, although they thought that would be so-o-o-o lo-o-o-o-vely. I had met him and as far as I was concerned, he didn't look any too bright. A few of them weren't discouraged at all by my lack of interest, and finally I got pretty mad about it, especially when he called me up for a date at a place where he couldn't possibly have known where I was unless someone had taken pains to try to get us together. I went to Sister . . . and asked her to come to my rescue and squelch a few people. Squelching people is something she is good at. I don't mean she is spiteful; she is not. But when she feels the cause is worthy, and the opportunity is right, she will say what she thinks.

Shortly after, this character, started going with a young girl who was deserted by her husband and left with two very small children. She isn't divorced and doesn't intend to get married—too disillusioned, she told me. But that doesn't keep her and . . . from running around together. So did

I laugh at my friends in the group. They thought I had passed snap judgment on him saying he wasn't bright. They had assured me he has a good character and reputation both. Hehehe. He must have. There is something wrong with his attitude toward marriage if he chases around with a married woman.

THAT SETTLED it except for one old woman, who has been fairly panting for me to get hitched up with him. Every time she sees me, which is fairly frequently, she reminds me of how I turned down a good man. The incident that inspired this outburst happened just a week ago. Prayer meeting was breaking up, and I came by and shook hands with her. She looked at me in great sadness, and made some observation about I was alone. (You are supposed to say "alone" all quivery). Personally I hadn't noticed it. The place was really quite crowded, Arthur Oakman having been there. Then she made that cruel remark: "Why don't you get married? You turned down a good man." And she looked at me with watery blue eyes, quite reproachfully, as if to say that she had done her best for me, I had made by bed, now I could lie in it, etc. I was just furious. I told her that if she was referring to . . . I hoped she realized he is running around with a married woman. So we swapped a few insults and I hurried off before I said any more. Brother, so help me, prayer meeting or not—and that is where I usually see her, if she mentions it again, I am going to look her in the eye and tell her to keep her hands off my private affairs.

"Why don't you get married?" Brother, those are fighting words!

Cleveland, Ohio

Pastor, Casimir Nikel

The new year is being stressed by the Cleveland branch as a time for personal missionary endeavor, and plans are being made for special missionary services. It is hoped that this will be the means of reaching the goal set by the pastor of thirty baptisms for the year.

A very worth-while project has been introduced in the branch by the publication of a monthly news bulletin, "The Informer." This is sponsored by the pastor. The leader of each department makes a report of the work done during the month; these reports, together with the pastor's notes, are compiled to form a very attractive bulletin, which is mailed to each member of the branch. All the work of publication is done with the aid of Zion's League. They meet one night each month to mimeograph, assemble, fold and mail "The Informer."

Recent speakers have been Charles Brockway, Akron, Ohio; R. O. Flanders, Detroit, Michigan; Arnold Ourth, Kirtland, Ohio; and Bishop J. F. Wildermuth, Cleveland, and Pastor Casimir Nikel.

The first Sunday of each month members of the priesthood meet under the direction of the pastor. Each receives a visiting assignment for the month to follow and a period in classwork is spent. A report from the last meeting indicates interest and growing attendance. Materials dealing with subjects such as procedure and dignity of church ordinances, presiding direction, preaching—its quality, purpose and method—and administrative and parliamentary procedures are given consideration in the classwork by the priesthood.

The West Side Mission is expanding rapidly. A women's department has been organized with Arada Berry as its leader. The mission has a complete church school organization. Attendance is beginning to rival the mother congregation on the east side, and it is possible that a new branch will be organized.

The annual business meeting held on September 16 was in charge of Apostle G. G. Lewis. A dedication service for the newly-elected officers was held September 30 under the direction of District President J. F. Wildermuth.

A program of worship preceding class work has been made available to the children in the church school.

On October 7, in conjunction with other churches throughout the nation, a world-wide Communion service was held. It was well attended, ninety-two persons at the East Side church and half that number at the mission.

The Graceland jubilee service on October 21 was a success. An offering from the branch, including the West Side mission, amounted to $175.

Friday, October 26, a Halloween party was held in the lower auditorium; the west side mission had its Halloween party and chili supper on November 1. September 18 Mrs. Arada Berry was given a card shower on her 80th birthday.

The women's department is gratified with the result of the turkey dinner and bazaar they sponsored on November 9. Two hundred people were served dinner, and many others attended the bazaar. It was the largest social gathering in the history of the branch.

A Christmas party was given to the women of the branch on December 6. A delicious dinner was served and gifts exchanged. Each woman drew a "secret sister" for the new year.

The Zion's League, under the direction of Burton McArthur, has taken on new life. It meets each Thursday evening for classwork and recreation. Attendance has doubled within the last two months. The Leaguers have assumed the responsibility of improving baptism facilities as one of their projects. They are anticipating a high degree of interest to result from a district young people's convention to be held February 17. On December 7 a swimming party was enjoyed in the pool at Fenn College.

The branch has lost a number of its most faithful and hard to be replaced members during the past few months. Among these are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hanna and son Frank, Jr., who are now in Monterey, California; Mr. and Mrs. Walter McQueen and family, now in Lamoni, Iowa; and Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Werner, Independence, Missouri.

Saint Charles, Missouri

Pastor, F. F. O'Bryan

Missionary John R. Grice held a two-weeks' series of meetings recently. George Swanson and Clara Lee Sackman were baptized shortly after this series by Pastor O'Bryan.

Three servicemen, Bernie Hunter, Raymond Coose, and Robert Spears, have received their discharges.

The tithes and offerings for 1945 exceeded those of the past two years by $114.70. Although small in number, the women's department has accomplished much in the last year also, adding $500 to the building fund. Part of the time at each weekly meeting is devoted to study and prayer.

Robert Larry, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Spears, was blessed December 9 by Elders F. F. O'Bryan and David Lehman.

Yakima, Washington

Pastor, Paul A. Anderson

Apostle D. T. Williams was guest speaker on October 25. Bishop Monte Lasater, accompanied by district president Alvin Johnson officiated at the ordination of Charles Worthington, a member of the Yakima congregation, on October 27. Bishop Lasater addressed both the junior and adult classes during the church school hour. Brother Johnson delivered the 11 o'clock address. A pot luck luncheon was served in the church basement at noon. The ordination service held at 2:15 was one of solemnity and beauty. Visitors from Roslyn, Selah, and Seattle were present for the service.

A Halloween party was held October 30 at the home of Blanche Holstrom. Although it was originally intended for the youngsters, it became a party for all ages before the evening ended.

Elder H. A. Twilligear, associate pastor of the Ranier Valley branch, and K. H. Shaeffer, director of religious education at Seattle, were welcome visitors on December 2. Elder Twilligear spoke at the church school service, and Brother Shaeffer was the speaker at a meeting held in the afternoon. Dr. Ben Van Eaton, recently returned from Hawaii, donated an elk he had shot for a dinner held in the basement at noon.

A rummage sale was held on December 7 and 8 by the women's department. Articles left over after the sale were given to the Belgium relief society.

Activities for the Christmas holidays were limited because of illness. A tree, reaching from the floor to the ceiling of the church stood beside the altar at the December 23 service. Special Christmas music was provided by the musical director.

Sacramento, California

Pastor, Myron R. Schall

The Communion service October 7 was well attended and a spirit of quiet reverence prevailed. Following the invocation, the congregation repeated the Lord's Prayer, and united in singing "The Doxology." The pastor explained the meaning and purpose of the oblation, and Communion thoughts were presented by Bishop E. C. Burdick. A duet, "Draw Me Closer," was sung by Edna and Myrtle Burdick.

Evangelist Albert Carmichael visited this branch in October and spoke on the morning and evening of October 14, the evening of October 21, and at several special meetings.

Graceland College Day was observed on October 21, with Bishop E. F. Burdick as the morning speaker. The choir sang the Graceland Alma Mater Hymn, and another Graceland hymn was sung as a solo by Marjorie Damitz. A prayer for Graceland was offered by Evangelist Carmichael. A special collection was taken to be divided between the scholarship fund and the fund for furnishing the men's new dormitory. An entertainment by the young people of Stockton and Sacramento branches on the evening of October 19 netted $60.00 for the dormitory furnishings. The visitors gave a variety show, and the local group repeated the operetta, Cynthia's Strategy. Celia May Schall and Helen Epling of Sacramento are attending Graceland this year.

The eleven o'clock service on October 28 opened with the reading of the words: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth." This, with a fitting anthem by the choir, and the singing of "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," formed a setting for the address given by the pastor on the Inspired Translation of the Bible.

A Halloween party was held at the church on the evening of October 31. The midweek prayer service was held the following evening.

Elder William Kempel, for many years a southern California district officer, now of Loomis, California, spoke at the Communion service on November 4. A solo, "The Lord's Prayer," was sung by Virginia Winsor. Elder Kempel again spoke in the evening.

The annual branch business meeting, held on November 8, was preceded by a dinner at 6:45 P. M. Officers for the ensuing year were elected, Elder Myron Schall being retained as pastor. Apostle

John W. Rushton was present at this meeting.

The Armistice Day service, November 11, opened with the call to worship: "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty." Elder Heman Davis spoke on "Peace." The evening speaker was Apostle John W. Rushton. Pastor Schall gave the sermon on November 18.

A Thanksgiving service was held the evening of November 21. The program featured a candlelighting service by nine men of the priesthood, with the pastor as leader. The theme was thanksgiving and appreciation for the lives and work of Jesus, Peter, Nephi, the Pilgrims, Abraham Lincoln, Joseph the Martyr, the last President Joseph Smith, and President Frederick M. Smith. Appropriate music and an attractive arrangement of seasonal fruits and flowers, with effective lighting, added to the beauty of the service. The Thanksgiving theme was continued in the services the following Sunday, November 25, when Evangelist W. H. Dawson spoke on "Thankfulness," enumerating many things for which one should give thanks to God, whose "mercy endureth forever." Elder William Kempel occupied in the evening.

Elder Frank Greer of Davis, California, gave the scripture reading and Communion message on December 2, and Myron Schall, the pastoral message. Donald James Beckett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Beckett of Colfax, California, was blessed by his grandfather, Elder W. T. Beckett, assisted by Evangelist W. H. Dawson. Preceding this ordinance, Marjorie Damitz sang "This Child We Dedicate." After the serving of the emblems, Mrs. Damitz sang another solo.

The morning speaker December 9 was Elder Laurence MacDonald, whose subject was: "Praying We Work." At the 11 o'clock service December 16 Elder William Kempel spoke from the text: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God."

On the morning of December 23 the choir, ably directed by Edna Burdick, with Ella Dawson and Phillipa Gann accompanying, gave a fine rendition of the cantata, The Rose of Christmas, by Van Denman Thompson. The soloists were: Virginia Winsor, Marjorie Damitz, Laurence MacDonald, and Leroy Burdick. The subject of the pastor's Christmas message was "The Song of the Angels." In the evening a play entitled: Peace I Give Unto You, was presented under the direction of Mabelle Nephew, assisted by Jewel Dawson. Following this service, choir members visited the homes of shut-ins, singing Christmas carols.

Sacramento Saints are happy to welcome home its returning servicemen. Those recently discharged are Robert Nephew, John Gann, Keillor Winsor and Eddie Epling. Clarence Harmon, husband of the former Olive Ensley of Sacramento, arrived home in time to welcome a little daughter, born December 4.

A number of social events occurred during the past month. On December 8 the Zion's League held a winter carnival that provided an evening of fun and added a substantial amount to the League treasury. The regular monthly dinner was held at 6:45 P. M. on December 14, and on December 21 a Christmas party was enjoyed by young and old. The children gave a short program, followed by moving pictures, a visit from Santa Claus with a treat for the youngsters, and the serving of refreshments. At the close of the evening service on December 23, a reception was held in honor of Pastor and Mrs. Schall, the occasion being their wedding anniversary. They were presented with a small token of appreciation on behalf of members of the branch, in recognition of their devoted service. The year closed with a watch party at the church on December 31, which consisted of devotional and recreational activities.

—Lena Swaney, reporter.

Webb City, Missouri

Pastor, James Jones

The Webb City branch celebrated the Christmas season joyfully for the degree of peace that has returned to the earth. Fifteen of the thirty-three boys on the honor roll have been discharged from military service.

On Sunday night, December 23, the children's department and the young people gave a Christmas program. A visit from Santa was the climaxing event of the evening. Leaguers went to the homes of shut-ins and sang carols.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Waldren and son, Norman, from California spent the Christmas holidays with Mrs. Waldren's mother, Sister Bradford. Their many friends in the district remember the years of good work they did in the Webb City branch and wish them continued success in their new home.

A vigorous program for raising money to remodel and redecorate the church is under way. A fried chicken supper was held along with a Christmas bazaar, and the results were very gratifying. The women's department is continuing its part of the project by furnishing the church kitchen.

Under the leadership of Pastor James Jones and the inspiration of other members of the priesthood, Webb City Saints are anticipating new accomplishments in their work in 1946.

—Dorothy Wolf, reporter.

Phoenix, Arizona

Pastor, Paul W. Bear

Many sincere expressions of desire and determination to help in making the coming year a success were voiced at the New Year's prayer meeting.

Several servicemen have again taken their places in the congregation during the past two months. Donald, Basil, and Lester Higginbotham, Frank Houston, George Frasca, and Manley Stayton, Jr., all of the Army, have received their discharges. The service flag still bears twelve stars of those who have not yet returned, fortunately, none of them are gold.

Eddie Green, a marine, John Senter, Jr., of the Army, and Barnard McSherry of the Navy have been home on leave. Wayne Ohlsen, recently inducted into the Marine corps, was given a farewell party by the Zion's League.

Apostle John W. Rushton spent three days at Phoenix in December, during which time he delivered four sermons, or "lessons" as he preferred to call them. Seventy David Larmour traveled with Apostle Rushton, visiting Phoenix and other branches over the state. Brother Hartman, pastor at Tucson, was a guest speaker in November.

Local priesthood to occupy the pulpit have been Paul Bear, Keiso Tsuji, Harry Sheffer, E. B. Robertson, Manley Stayton, Jr., John Senter, Jr., and Donald Higginbotham. Attendance has been seriously reduced because of the flu epidemic, but is nearing normal again.

The Christmas season was marked by appropriate worship services before church school, and by the presentation of the cantata, Prince of Peace, by the choir; Shirley Williams was the director. The only adornment of the church was a tall, lighted tree. Each child received a treat, and the junior church held a party in the annex. The Zion's League shared their Christmas spirit with the neighborhood shut-ins by caroling on Christmas Eve; Gloria McLees served refreshments to the carolers.

The campaign to increase the building fund is being continued. The women's department takes top honors for the fall season for its successful social evening and bazaar on December 7. In nine weeks the twenty-three registered members of the group made and contributed enough articles suitable for Christmas gifts to net over $75.00 for the fund. Preceding the sale a covered lunch supper was served. Gift exchanges among "secret sisters" added extra fun to the Christmas season.

Three families, the George Frascas, the Frank Houstons, and the Seymour Stevens, have moved to other States. Taking their places are several new members; they are: Mr. and Mrs. William Allen from the Englewood congregation in Independence; Mr. and Mrs. Robert R. Melvin and Catherine Gee from Michigan; Albert Ingle from Blue Rapids, Kansas; Frances Dusan from Jefferson City, Missouri; Pauline Wilson and Peggy Cook from Independence.

Two Gracelanders, Elva Barrington and Leonard Speer, were home for the holidays. They quickly found their old places in the League and were busy the whole time. During the next semester two more young men, Donald and Basil Higginbotham, will represent Phoenix at Graceland.

As the junior church nears its second anniversary of successful work under the able direction of Keiso Tsuji, the children are preparing a birthday celebration for the entertainment of the whole branch. Brother Tsuji has faithfully kept this group going with the help of Katherine Bear and Lelia McLees. Frequently other members help in the children's program, but child participation is used as much as possible to develop leadership qualities.

The Zion's League continues its good work of visiting absent members on Sunday afternoons. The Leaguers have done much to help returning servicemen feel at home also.

—Shirl W. Sheffer, reporter.

Detroit, Michigan

Highland Park Congregation

Pastor, C. T. Heaviland

An all-day meeting and Christmas party were held at the Highland Park church on December 15, beginning at 11 o'clock with a fellowship service. Elder J. E. Lancaster was in charge of the service, with City-Pastor D. O. Chesworth offering the prayer. Each of the thirty-four Orioles and leaders present participated in the service.

Monitor Alice Wellman led the girls in a half-hour of group singing, accompanied by Virginia Forbes, after which a luncheon of chicken a la king, ice cream, and cookies, was served in the lower auditorium.

Gladys Alexander acted as mistress of ceremonies for the impromptu program which followed. A great deal of talent was displayed in readings, songs, and skits. Monitor Maxine Johnson then assisted with the games. The day was brought to a close with the distribution of gifts by Monitor Evelyn Hosler. Sister Wellman gave the benediction.

The semi-annual Detroit branch business meeting has been scheduled for Thursday, February 7. It will be held at 8 P. M. at the Highland Park church.

Among items of business to be considered at this meeting will be the treasurer's report and recommendations for the priesthood.

The semi-annual Detroit-Windsor district business meeting will be held at Central Church on Sunday, February 24.

January 13 the first of the fifty-fifth anniversary services will be held in Central Church. Speakers for the occasion are to be Elders B. E. Brown, K. H. Green, and D. E. Dowker. The second service of this series will be at East Side Church on February 10.

—Detroit Branch Bulletin.

Skiatook, Oklahoma

Pastor, J. J. Davis

The Skiatook branch has outlined a definite program for much-needed repairs and improvements to be made on the church building. New seats have been ordered, and new flooring will be laid at the time the seats are installed. The entrance to the church is being worked on at the present; new steps are being built and the foyer enlarged.

The women's department, under the leadership of Bertha Vickrey, is actively engaged in the work of the church. It is doing much to help finance the repairs by serving dinners to the Skiatook Chamber of Commerce each week. The women have selected Elbert Smith's Restoration: A Study in Prophecy as their course of study for the coming year.

Seventy Glenn Johnson of Tulsa and Warren Chelline of Providence held a two weeks' series of meetings in October and November. Good attendance prevailed throughout the series in spite of inclement weather. Three new members were baptized November 4.

Many of the Skiatook Saints attended Dr. Floyd McDowell's institute held at Tulsa in December.

—Violet Davis, reporter.

Hearne, Texas

Pastor, C. M. Mitchell

The remodeling of the church building continues. Funds for this project have been raised by the women's department and donations from the members.

A Christmas program was given Sunday evening, December 23, under the direction of Leola Belcher and church school teachers Ella Hill, Addie Broadus, and Pauline Nunley.

Malcolm Gough is back after several months' service overseas. During his absence, he kept in touch with the branch by letter. —Aline Dotson, reporter.

Independence, Missouri

Eden Heights Congregation

Pastor, John Taylor

Pastor John Taylor was in charge of the January 6 Communion service; he was assisted by Elders Ammon Badder and D. R. Snively. Benjamin Bean spoke in the evening, basing his discourse on the theme, "God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

With the influenza epidemic on the wane, attendance is gradually increasing. Each Sunday finds some new face in the congregation, and it is doubted that the church will accommodate the growing attendance if it continues.

James W. Davis was the speaker on Sunday morning, January 13. He reviewed some of the scenes and experiences of the early church, emphasizing the fact that God is unchangeable. Brother Davis was once a missionary to Australia. Elder Alfred Keebler delivered the evening sermon, with Amos Higdon in charge and Henry Sheffer offering the prayer.

The League meets each Sunday at 6 P. M. Plans are being made for a spring concert which will be given March 31. The League will be responsible for the Easter service also.

—Mrs. E. E. Moorman, reporter.

Second Church

Pastor, W. Blair McClain

At the 11 o'clock hour on December 16 a quartet sang two special numbers, "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful" and "Silvery Star," preceding Apostle Charles R. Hield's Christmas sermon. At the evening hour, congregation singing of carols was directed by Clayton Wolfe, with Mrs. Wolfe at the organ and Carol Lee Anway at the piano. A special number was given by the Sarratt sisters. Fred A. Fry delivered the sermon, choosing for his subject, "The Pearl of Great Price."

A Christmas program was presented at the church school hour on December 23. This consisted of several numbers by the primary and beginner's department, and a pageant, "At the Well of the Star," by the junior high department. They were assisted by the junior choir directed by Mary Edmunds.

At the 11 o'clock hour Evangelist Elbert A. Smith spoke on "Witnesses for Christ." Special music was provided by the Cantanina Chorus, directed by Mrs. J. T. Westwood. The evening service was composed of special music and a varied program. The Zion's League presented a pantomime with L'Nora Cross as the reader.

On December 30 at the morning hour, Elder E. J. West was the speaker; his subject was "Angelic Ministration." A quartet sang "Draw Thou My Soul, O Christ." At this service little Stephen Hilliard Henson was blessed by Elders E. J. West and Fred A. Fry. Elder Charles Edmunds gave the sermon at the evening hour, speaking on "The Workings of the Spirit of God."

The Communion talk on January 6 was given by E. J. West; Blair McClain gave the pastoral address. A quartet furnished the special music. Arthur Collins delivered the evening sermon; Mr. and Mrs. James McEldery sang a duet.

—Mrs. Guy M. Mintun, reporter.

Englewood Congregation

Pastor, W. E. Wakeman

Pastor W. E. Wakeman was in charge of the December Communion service. Special music was provided by a quartet composed of Fern Wisdom, Nola Fewell, Maxine Thompson, and Virginia Butterworth. Brother Wakeman was the speaker at the evening service, choosing "A True Fast" as the theme for his sermon. Wallace Fike sang "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say."

Elder Thomas Richardson conducted the Wednesday evening prayer service. On Thursday, December 6, the women met at 1:30 in the afternoon for a Christmas party.

On Sunday morning, December 9, President L. F. P. Curry gave the sermon. The Englewood choir, directed by Viola Stobough, sang "I Will Thank Thee, O Lord." Elder Charles J. Hunt spoke in the evening on "Zion and the Garden of Eden." Gladomine Wilcox was the soloist.

The midweek prayer service was led by Elder V. R. McKay. The women's department met at noon on December 13 for a luncheon; a devotional, study period, and business meeting followed the luncheon.

President Israel A. Smith gave the 11 o'clock address on December 16; the choir sang "Fairest Lord Jesus." Elder George Fowler spoke at the junior church service. J. Charles May was the evening speaker; a duet, "Silvery Star," was sung by V. Bopra and B. McFarlane.

Elder V. R. McKay again officiated at the Wednesday evening prayer service. Bea McNamara gave a reading at the Thursday meeting of the women's club.

Bishop W. N. Johnson gave the morning sermon on December 23. Special musical numbers included a solo by Dana Wendelberg, and two anthems by the choir.

A program by the juniors and intermediates was presented at the evening service. Tableaus of the Christmas story, readings, and an accordion solo were features of the program, after which Santa distributed treats to the young members of the congregation.

W. E. Wakeman was in charge of the prayer service on Wednesday evening, and gave a short sermonette on Sunday morning, December 30. This was preceded by a cantata, Carols for Christmas, given by the women's choir with Maxine Thompson directing.

Visitors from military service for the month of December were Ens. Robert Wakeman, Cpl. Earl Petrie, Cpl. Paul Johnson, and Eugene Wilcox, F 1/C.

—R. A. Riepen, reporter.

Decatur, Nebraska

Pastor, Bernard Case

At the annual business meeting October 4, the following officers were elected: Elder Bernard Case, president; Elder Mark Wilson, financial agent and church school director; Evelyn Miller, secretary; Cordie Williams, young people's leader; Eunice Robinson, music director.

In the women's department Lois Halstead was retained as president; and Evelyn Miller as vice-president; Lucina Butts was elected secretary-treasurer, and Lyda Lewis was elected teacher of the class. The Enduring Word, by Salyards, is being used as a class study.

At the annual food sale, bazaar, and supper $256.00 were cleared. On December 9 the district officers, Brother and Sister Livingston, Cecile Stark, Brother and Sister Ruffcorn, and Sister Alderton of Omaha visited Decatur and spent the day at institute work. A basket lunch was served in the basement of the church at noon. At two in the afternoon Sister Livingston spoke on the importance of good music at all services. Immediately following her talk, Sister Stark conducted a model worship service in which she demonstrated the beauty and helpfulness of continuity of thought in such a service.

Bern Case, a younger brother of Hubert and Oscar Case, has lived in Decatur for forty-five years. For the last twenty years he has been in charge of the Indian mission. Since Brother Loving has been placed in charge of the mission, the Cases have been attending services here.

Frank Case has been acting deacon during the past forty-five years. He has spent much time and effort in caring for the church building and ground. He deserves much credit for his faithfulness.

The young people meet each Thursday for a Zion's League service, after which the choir practices until 10 o'clock. They also hold an early morning prayer service every other Sunday morning at the church.

December 23 was a cold, stormy day, but forty were present for the Christmas service. After the church school hour, a short program was given and Amos Lamson delivered the Christmas message. Treats of candy, nuts, and apples were given to all present. In the afternoon Julia Case carried treats to the aged and shut-in Saints.

—Lucina Butts, reporter.

Rock Island, Illinois

Pastor, F. C. Bevan

The junior and senior women's departments held a bake sale and bazaar on December 15. Other social activities for the month included a meeting of the Tri-City men's club on December 11, a young people's Christmas party on December 18, the senior women's Christmas party on December 21, a children's party on December 22, and a New Year's Eve watch party for the young people held in the lower auditorium of the church.

The teacher's training class, under the leadership of Winnifred Stiegel, meets regularly at 6:15 on Sunday evenings at the church. This year's class has an unusually large enrollment.

Sixty fathers and sons were present at the banquet sponsored by the Tri-City men's club at the Moline church. Charles Shippy was toastmaster, and F. C. Bevan led the group singing. The program consisted of a vocal trio by Lucille and Louise Sheppard and Muriel Lennox, a reading by Marie Bevan, and talks by Myron LaPointe and Don Harvey. Herman Williams showed movies of Florida, and the ladies of Moline branch served dinner.

Tom Biel was the speaker at the evening service on Sunday, January 6. He served as chaplain's aide at Cape May, New Jersey, prior to his discharge from the Navy. He and Mrs. Biel are to leave soon for the University of Chicago.

Richard Sackfield received his discharge from the Navy December 21. Robert Spingler has been discharged from the Army Air Corps and is planning to attend school in Chicago.

Jean and Warren Hinkle will be students at Graceland the second semester.

Pastor F. C. Bevan was called to Ottumwa, Iowa, December 15, by the sudden death of his brother-in-law, Albert Davis. His son, Richard, of Camp Lee, Virginia, also attended the funeral.

—Lorna Sackfield, reporter.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Pastor, Roy Skinner

Apostle Charles R. Hield spoke twice to the Davidson Saints in November. Assisted by the pastor, he presented slides which he had taken of the historical ruins in Yucatan earlier in the year.

Elder John Schrund of Hallas, Oklahoma, was the guest speaker on December 2. Irby Mundy was another welcome visitor recently.

Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe officiated at the baptism of Jemices Renfroe on Sunday, December 16. He was also the speaker at the December 23 service, assisted by his son, Pfc. James Renfroe.

William Qualls, who served nearly four years in the armed forces, has received his discharge and is again taking his place in the Davidson congregation.

A Christmas party was held at the home of Mrs. G. R. Ridings by the women's department. After the program, gifts were distributed and refreshments served.

The Davidson Saints exceeded their Christmas offering goal set for 1945.

—Mrs. Alice Skinner, reporter.

Pittsburg, Kansas

Pastor, T. W. Bath

Guest speakers in the past two months have been, Elder James Daugherty, Elder J. D. Anderson, District President William Patterson, Patriarch E. A. Smith, and Apostle A. A. Oakman. The ministry of these men is much appreciated.

The Young Matrons entertained their husbands at a Thanksgiving dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Pearson. Elder J. D. Anderson was the speaker and Neletha Pulley guest soloist.

The Christmas season opened with the presentation of a Christmas cantata by the ladies' chorus. The church was beautifully decorated and the Christmas theme was expressed throughout the month. The children presented their program Sunday morning, December 23, and the choir, under the direction of Bonita Pearson, was in charge of the evening service. It consisted of St. Luke's Christmas story, carols and anthems by the choir, and a Christmas story by Leola Sheppard. The branch presented the pastor and his family a gift in appreciation of their loyal and faithful service. Many of the group went to the pastor's home after the service for a social hour and refreshments.

A fitting close to the holidays was the candlelight prayer service held December 26, under the leadership of Brother Bath. Many were inspired to bring gifts of love and service to Christ in the coming year.

Mr. and Mrs. David Sheppard entertained Young Matrons and their husbands at the annual Christmas party.

Sue Fisher, a student at the Independence Sanitarium, spent the holidays in Pittsburg. Velma Bath and Helen Norwood were home from Graceland; both helped in presenting the musical programs of the Christmas season.

Ellsworth Weaver has been discharged from the Army. He and his wife are visiting in Pittsburg.

—Leola Sheppard, reporter.

Australia

New Zealand Mission Changes

Elder A. R. Gunning, with his wife and baby, has arrived in Auckland, New Zealand, from New South Wales, to assume his duties as missionary-in-charge.

Elder Floyd Potter, who was formerly in charge of New Zealand mission and Auckland branch, is now laboring in Adelaide, South Australia. Adelaide branch in attendances and activities through this appointment, and the return of families long absent because of war services, is moving forward. Sister Potter, accompanied by her little daughter, flew back to Australia by plane to be with her mother, Sister Moxham, who was seriously ill for some time. Sister Potter had to undergo surgical and hospital treatment also, but has now fully recovered.

Elder and Sister Sorensen and baby, who have been held up in New Zealand for nearly a year waiting for permission to enter Tahiti, their new field, have at last received the necessary authority, and expect to join the Butterworths at Papecti as soon as berths on a boat can be obtained. The Sorensens have spent a portion of the interim learning to speak French, an official necessity for those desiring to reside in Tahiti. Elder Sorensen has also been temporarily in charge of Auckland branch and New Zealand mission since Elder Potter's transfer to Australia.

Boston Branch News

Pastor, Reed M. Holmes

Boston branch was well represented at the southern New England district conference held in Providence, Rhode Island, November 25. Services were held in the home church for those unable to attend conference. Eugene Carter was in charge of church school, assisted by Dorothy Fisher at the organ. Urban F. Black was the speaker during morning worship. His subject was "Our Belief In Jesus Christ."

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp was the speaker at the church on Monday evening, November 26. He brought a message of encouragement and confidence as he reviewed the financial condition of the church. Bishop DeLapp was accompanied by Apostle John F. Garver. Both church officials met with the study group at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Myron C. Fisher, Jr., on November 30 for a question and answer period.

The Communion service, on December 2 opened with the call to worship, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." The invocation was given by Sanford L. Fisher. The pastor presented the Communion talk. A duet by Marjorie Carter Billings and Ruth Alice Briggs was sung during the period of meditation.

The Monday Club met at the home of Kathryn Armeson on December 3 for a home demonstration. This group also met Monday evening, December 17, for their annual Christmas "mystery friend" party at the home of Kay Fisher.

The leaders met at the church Wednesday, December 5, for a luncheon, remaining to attend the prayer service in a body. The theme for the prayer service was "My Baptism." A budget committee meeting followed the prayer service.

Elder Ralph L. Power, pastor of Attleboro branch, was the guest speaker December 9. His sermon was built around the topic, "God's Love." He was assisted by Albert L. Fisher. In the evening "The Christmas Story in Pictures" was presented.

A joint women's meeting was held at the church Friday evening, December 14. The program centered in "The Family Around the Tree." Bertha Rumery gave a devotional reading. Kathryn Armeson spoke on "The Historical and Religious Value of the Creche," with a display of figures and mangers used in homes. A children's tableau of the Creche was presented with Dawn Porter as Mary, George Cardinal as Joseph, and Ronald and Kent Armeson as the shepherds.

Other children taking part were Michael Briggs, Ruth Beverage, and Doris Jean Davis, the latter two singing a duet, "Beautiful Thoughts for Christmas." A reading was given by Ruth Baker. Following this meeting the group met in the lower auditorium for a bridal shower for Celia Black. Refreshments were served by hostesses Geraldine Porter, Beatrice York, and Alta Cardinal. The men of the branch met for a bowling party at the Bowladrome on the Concord Turnpike.

Sunday morning, December 16, a special service of church ordinances was held. The service opened with the congregation singing "Fairest Lord Jesus," with the invocation by Ralph M. Hardy. The children's choir then sang while Dean Brown Carter, infant son of Eugene and Mildred Carter was brought forward to be blessed by Bishop M. C. Fisher and Pastor Reed H. Holmes. The scripture reading was given by Elder Albert Scherer who has been laboring in the district. The baptismal address was given by John W. Foster. The charge to the candidates was given by the pastor and the following went into the waters of baptism: Earl and Beatrice Wright of Brockton Branch, baptized by Elder Scherer; Muriel Cardinal and Grace Clark of Boston Branch, baptized by Elder Holmes. The beautiful service closed with the singing of "The Old, Old Path." In the evening, portions of "The Other Wise Man" were read by the pastor with music by the choir. Urban Black assisted in this service.

A Christmas worship service was combined with a confirmation service on December 23. Following the confirmation talk by Sanford L. Fisher, Muriel Cardinal and Grace Clark were confirmed by the pastor and Elder Fisher. The choir sang two numbers from The Messiah during this service. The pastor's Christmas sermon topic was "God With Us." Benediction was by Bishop M. C. Fisher.

The children's division of the church school, under the direction of Kay Fisher, served a Christmas breakfast consisting of foods from many lands. The children had been studying the Christmas customs of other peoples. In the evening the choir carried out the same theme in a vesper service. The singers entered with the processional, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," followed by the children who participated in a candlelighting ceremony. Reader for the service was Agnes Fisher. Readings were also given by Dorothy Fisher and Harry Frost. The Christmas tree program which followed featured a children's tableau of "The Creche." Gifts and candy were distributed to the children. The Zion's League met for a dinner at the home of Ralph and Audrey Hardy in Lexington, remaining to hear the Independence Messiah Choir over CBS.

Miss Ruth York, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. V. Everett York, who is teaching languages at the State University of Iowa, was home for the holidays. She assisted musically in the Christmas services, and joined the group of carol singers on Christmas Eve.

Hamilton, Ontario

Pastor, F. J. Boyd

The women's department was host to seventy-six members of the local congregation and their friends in the lower auditorium of the church on the evening of October 26. The excellently prepared supper of chicken, and the accompanying dainties were enthusiastically received by the diners. The appropriate decoration of the room with crepe paper and fall leaves added to the feeling of congeniality.

After supper the group assembled in the main auditorium where a song fest was conducted by Mrs. L. Hill while preparations were being made for the concert.

E. M. Kennedy acted as master of ceremonies for the concert, which consisted of vocal, instrumental and dramatic numbers, and a one-act play. The play, entitled "Your Other Self," directed by Mrs. Stevenson of the Hamilton Players' Guild, humorously depicted the alleged constant struggle between one's better self and human self. Olwen Williams sang "My Hero," "Will You Remember?," "Bless This House," and "Smilin' Through." Aubrey Kennedy sang "Sylvia," "Ash Grove," and "Santa Lucia."

The instrumental contributions of the evening were by Jean McAdam; she played "The Two Larks" and "Waltz in E. Flat."

Eileen Snure of the dramatic department performed one scene from The Romantic Age, and did an Irish scene as an encore. The last contribution of the evening was a scene from A Doll's House, with Mrs. L. Hill as dramatist.

On Tuesday evening, December 4, the women's department sponsored a concert and bazaar. The address of welcome was given by Elder Frank Boyd, who acted as chairman for the evening. The musical portion of the program began with Austin Essery's two solos, "Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses" and "The Gay Highway." Mrs. Justinson sang four numbers: "Come To the Fair," "The Desert Song," "Lay My Head Beneath a Rose," and "The Lilac Tree." Vera Ellington played several violin solos, including "Largo" and a Christmas medley.

A four-act play entitled "The Two Christmas Boxes" was given under the capable direction of Mrs. L. Hill. This play depicted the humorous situation that arose when two boxes, one for a missionary family, the other for wealthy relatives, became mixed.

After singing "God Save the King," all retired to the lower auditorium where the articles of handicraft were displayed for sale, and a light lunch was served at a nominal charge.

—A. W. Kennedy, reporter.

On Sunday, December 23, the annual white gift service was observed, and the Christmas offering quota raised. Santa visited the church school and distributed presents to the junior division.

Lorraine Gilma, infant daughter of Thelma and Gilbert Ferris, was blessed by Elders Essery and Pratt. This was on the twenty-fourth anniversary of the blessing of the baby's mother.

A Communion service was held on the morning of Sunday, January 6; E. M. Kennedy was the evening speaker.

The Toronto district young people's convention has been announced for May 27 and 28. The young people and church school departments are combining their efforts to make this convention of more practical value to the district.

Gary, Indiana

Pastor, D. H. Smith

On November 1 the branch council met at the Darter home to outline objectives for the coming year and discuss missionary services.

A Communion service was held November 4 with Pastor D. H. Smith in charge. Elder R. W. Smith was the evening speaker.

On November 11, Elder A. H. Tomlinson delivered the morning sermon, and Elder T. Cochran spoke in the evening.

Kenneth Lusha of the district presidency was the guest speaker at the 11 o'clock service on November 18. Pastor D. H. Smith gave the evening message. The theme for the day was "Our Heritage Through Gratitude."

An all-day meeting was held November 25; all district officers were present. A prayer service with young people's leader Paul Frisby in charge was held at 9 A. M. Sister H. K. Bell, director of religious education, presided over the church school hour at 9:45. At the 11 o'clock service, District President J. E. Baldwin was the speaker. A pot luck luncheon was served at noon. Meetings were resumed at 2:30 in the afternoon, with Elder Baldwin presiding over the round table discussion of branch problems. Sister Lusha, women's leader for the district, was the speaker at a meeting by the women at 4 o'clock.

On November 27 the women met at the home of Alma Darter for their regular monthly meeting. Hazel Smith gave several Thanksgiving poems, and each member present read an appropriate scripture. All gave Thanksgiving testimonials, after which Sister Smith told a story about a little boy who learned that it was better to give than to receive.

London, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

The newly organized church cub pack, under the leadership of Mary Drew and Harold Skinner, meet at the church each Friday evening at 6:45. This was organized especially for boys eight, nine, ten, and eleven years of age.

From the bishop's agent's solicitor, William Riser, comes the report that tithing for London branch in 1945 totaled $5,589.87, an increase of $353.25 over 1944.

Lorne and Mildred White and daughter, Gail, will leave for Lamoni, Iowa, on January 21, where Lorne is to enroll as a special student at the college under the auspices of the D. V. A. This will be a two-year stay for the Whites.

Fred Shearer and Josephine Skelton spent the Christmas holidays in London. Both are students at Graceland.

Dr. Wallace Shute has been promoted from the rank of captain to major, and has been made a consultant to the director of medical services. This is the first such appointment ever made in the Canadian army.

Flight Officer Dan Sheridan spent the Christmas holidays at home; he has been flying over the British Isles and Europe for the past several months.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John Franklin Wolfe, 4020 Brooklyn Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary by holding open house at their home on December 30. One hundred twenty-five guests called to congratulate them. Their day was filled with telephone messages, cards, telegrams, and floral tributes also. Several out-of-town guests were present. Soloists during the receiving hours were Pauline Arnson, Marguerite Johnson Blaine, Clayton Wolfe, and Evan Fry.

The Wolfes' three children are Mrs. Earl Short, of the home; Mr. Raleigh Wolfe, recently discharged after five years with the army signal corps, also of the home; and Clayton Wolfe, 1118 West Walnut, Independence, Missouri.

Brother Wolfe has been bedfast following a stroke in February, 1943, but was able to enjoy the friends who called to cheer him.

San Bernadino, California

Pastor, Hunter C. Ferguson

The San Bernardino Saints are entertaining the Zion's League of southern California on January 25, 26, and 27, and are beginning a series of Friday night services in Yucaipa, home town of Elder Will Murray.

In observance of the Christmas season, a cantata was given under the direction of Edith Green and Mary Brinkerhoff on the evening of December 23. It was given again in Riverside on December 30. Featured singers were Genevieve Dexter, Essie Miller, and Fred Savage. Barbara Savage was pianist. Elder Charles Fry gave the sermon.

Brother Fry was presented a new standard model typewriter by the branch for Christmas. He served as pastor at San Bernardino until Elder Hunter C. Ferguson succeeded him in November.

A Christmas program was given on December 21 by the children's department under Mary Brinkerhoff's direction. Gale William's ability as a pianist was especially encouraging to those who have been concerned about the scarcity of pianists in the branch.

Elder Harold Wixom was the speaker on the morning of December 23. Discharged from the Army in December, Brother Wixom, with his family, returned to Stockton where he will resume his veterinarian practice.

The Saints are looking forward to the time when the leadership of the branch will be stimulated by returning servicemen. The young people will sorely miss the leadership of Sarah Van Fleet, who has enrolled for the spring semester at Graceland.

Regular attendance of all League members at prayer meetings and Sunday evening services mitigates the disappointment of having only a small group at those services. The Leaguers also comprise much of the choir. Edgar Miller is young people's supervisor, and Aileen Ward is League president.

Recent speakers have been Elders Hunter Ferguson, G. I. Hansen, and George Wixom.

—Wilson Ritchie, reporter.

Bremerton, Washington

Pastor, A. W. Lundeen

The Leaguers were hosts to their mothers at a dinner given in the church basement on Saturday evening, December 8. Bill Bryant wrote a timely poem for the occasion.

Gerald Bartlett Parks and Jon Eric Glover were blessed at the December 9 service by Pastor A. W. Lundeen and Elder Paul Duvic. Jon is a grandson of the pastor. Priest Dale Anway gave the evening sermon.

A conference for church school workers was held at the home of Mary Mascher on December 13.

Mrs. Ruth Bogard was baptized by Pastor Lundeen on Sunday morning, December 16. She is the daughter of the late Mrs. Lisen Larson who was one of the first people to become a member of the Bremerton branch.

A Christmas play written by the pastor and directed by Ethel Bryant was presented Sunday evening, December 23. The play contrasted a wealthy and a poor home, depicting emphatically that both homes were unhappy because neither of them were living according to Christ's teachings. A brief vesper service was held Monday evening, December 24.

—Lester L. Bryant, reporter.

Tucson, Arizona

Pastor, August Hartman

The Tucson branch business meeting was held December 8. Officers elected for the coming year were August Hartman, pastor; Heber Colvin, associated pastor; Mrs. A. J. Carney, treasurer; Alice Constance, director of music; Mrs. Russell Wood, publicity agent; Mrs. Mabile Maher, auditor; Earl Bootman and Russell Wood, trustees. The following were sustained: Clara McDole, secretary; Mrs. Girsell Taylor, church school director; Mrs. John Hill, leader of the women's department; and August Hartman, trustee. Apostle John Rushton was in charge of the meeting.

Seventy David Larmour was a recent speaker. His sermon was on the return of the Jews to the Holy Land; he used slides to illustrate the progress being made.

Church school interest is increasing; there are now six regular classes with an average attendance of forty-seven. Prayer services are also being well-attended; many young people participate in these meetings.

The women's department meets once a month for classwork. It was responsible for adding $357.00 to the building fund in 1945.

Leaguers meet each week for study, fellowship, and recreation. Kent Wood has been elected president; Geraldine Bergen, vice-president; and Heber Colvin, secretary-treasurer.

The Christmas program was sponsored by the music department with Alice Constance in charge. It included special music by the choir; Geraldine Bergen was soloist. A reading, "The Other Wise Man," was given by Miss Constance, and David Larmour delivered the Christmas sermon.

Recent visiting ministers have been Apostle John Rushton, Paul Bear, Keiso Tsuji, Harry Sheffer, A. O. Corley, Anando Kramer, A. A. Colvin, and Don Higginbotham.

Returning servicemen who have attended church recently are Joe Taylor, Warden Ruth, Leonard Hartman, Harry Bliss, and Arthur Mills.

Three families have been added to the Tucson congregation; these are Mr. and Mrs. Jack West of California, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Corley of Long Beach, and Mr. and Mrs. Ward Beckstead of Kansas City.

Because Tucson is a health center, many Saints spend the winter here. Pastor August Hartman, 246 South 4th Avenue, would appreciate their contacting him. His telephone number is 7709-W.

—Mrs. Russell Wood, reporter.

She is survived by her husband and son, three sisters: Mrs. Oscar Rippe, Mansfield, Missouri; Mrs. R. N. Aunich, Marion, Kansas; and Audrea Deaver of the home; two brothers: Eli Deaver, St. Joseph, Missouri; and Albert Deaver, Webb City, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted by Elder C. B. Freeman. Interment was at Mansfield, Missouri.

ECHTERNACHT.—Hatty E., daughter of George H. and Mary B. Light, was born at New Boston, Iowa, March 11, 1873, and passed away at her home in Independence, Missouri, on January 10. She was united in marriage to Frank J. Echternacht on October 11, 1899, at Shelton, Nebraska. To this union were born two children: a son, Harold, of Kansas City, Kansas; and a daughter, Mrs. Dan Kasmerchek, of the home. Sister Echternacht was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 3, 1894, and remained ever faithful to the covenant she made at that time. She was a true and loyal Christian, a devoted companion and mother, and a good neighbor. She was always happy to render service to others in spite of the handicap of many years of great physical suffering.

Beside her son and daughter, she leaves to mourn two grandsons, Kenneth Lee and John Elwood Echternacht; and one sister, Mrs. Fred Brueningsten, Hastings, Nebraska. Funeral services were held at the George C. Carson Chapel, January 14. Garland E. Tickertroyer was in charge of the service, assisted by Mark H. Siegfried. Burial was in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

* READ THE FINE PRINT

How many of you writers, news correspondents, and contributors have read the fine print in the column at the left side of this page? Probably you haven't.

We were talking about that column recently. "But nobody reads it!" a member of the staff objected. "Yes," was the reply, "but it gives us some rules to refer to when people don't understand."

This brings up an important point. Fine print has various uses. It takes little space. It can even hide information that you ought to know.

When you sign a contract of any kind, for insurance or installments, or anything else, do you read the fine print at the bottom of the page? No? Well, then, you are normal. And unwise. Because all your trouble, if you have any with that contract, will be found in the fine print. That's why they print it small. They know you won't take the trouble to read it. The salesman looks honest, and probably is, so you trust him. But he didn't have any more to do with writing it than you did. Chances are he hasn't read it either.

If you are going to skip any reading matter in the contract you sign, skip the big stuff: the greetings, the testimonials, the glory and hallelujah, the "Whereas" that begins with a gold embossed initial letter, and is printed in imperial red. It doesn't mean anything. Ignore the fancy border, and the big seal with the motto in Latin. They don't mean anything either. The stuff that would keep you from signing, if you understood it, and that will make you pay in blood, sweat, and tears, is all in the fine print.

Our fine print column has no such sinister meaning. But, like other fine print, it is important. You could almost make an aphorism: The finer the print, the more important it is that you should understand it.

* IF YOU ARE IN DOUBT about whether to take an action that will affect somebody else, ask yourself, "How would I like to have HIM do this to ME? If you wouldn't, don't do it."

* LOOK AT YOUR SMILE in the mirror. Is it full and generous? Or is it tight and stingy, like a stretched bow-string, turned slightly down at the corners? No smile ever comes out right that isn't an honest reflection of the state of your soul. To improve your smile, change your feelings.

* IT IS A FINE THING TO BE HELPFUL, but make sure that your help is given to those who are doing good, not evil. The Devil has too many volunteers, God too few.

* NOBODY takes only a man's time in an office. It is the company's time, because the company is paying for it.

* LETTER TO A RADIO ADVERTISER

Dear Sirs: For years I used your Pollywolly-doodle Shaving Cream and considered it excellent. Then one day I heard your new commercial on a radio program. It made me sick of the stuff, and so I changed to buying from your leading competitor. I don't like his product nearly as well, but his radio commercials don't get on my nerves. When your announcer sings, hums, shouts, croons and brays "Pollywollydoodle" thirty times in a one-minute commercial, I nearly go nuts too. As soon as you return to sanity and get a better commercial, I shall be glad to resume using Pollywolly-doodle Shaving Cream.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLann:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

On Faithfulness in Marriage

Tragedy in Divorce

Some heartbreaking things come to an editor's office. When people reach their last extremity, when there is no human source to which they can turn, when even their own prayers seem insufficient for their need, they turn to the church where they have always found strength, sympathy, and understanding. It is natural that they should do so in time of trouble, and they have a right to expect such help as the church can give. If the church is to do anything for its members, the most important time is when they are in trouble so great that they cannot help themselves.

A letter came to the office a few days ago. A letter asking for prayers. An unsigned letter. It was written by a wife whose husband is asking for a divorce. He wants to leave her and their children. She still loves him, and does not want their home to be broken up nor her children left fatherless. She knows how hard it will be to care for them alone. Certainly all members who have faith will respond to this mother's call. Great things have been accomplished by prayer. And when it cannot help us to avoid some great sorrow, it can help us to bear up and go through the trial.

Here is something that is no mere piece of statistics. It is human suffering and sorrow at firsthand, stark, naked, and terrible.

A Few Words to the Man

If it were possible to reach him, we would like to address some words to that man, and to many others who are in his position. In these days there are too many of them, even in the church.

Sir, when you were both much younger, you made a covenant with this woman that you both expected to keep. You did expect to keep it, unless you made it cynically and with a lying tongue. That covenant was made, not with her alone, but with society and with God. Now you want to break it. If you break it without just cause, you will stand guilty in your own mind, condemned before your fellow citizens and before God. Love is the oldest of all loyalties, marriage is the oldest and most important of all contracts, and home is the oldest of all states of mortal existence. You plan to destroy all three of them.

Sir, you have taken the years of this woman's youth and beauty, and now you propose to leave her when her best opportunities for life are gone. Had she known your true character, she might have married some man of honor, or have turned to business or professional life. She has given you her best—companionship, love, daily ministry to your needs; she brought beauty into your life that no man possesses by himself; and if the spiritual and intellectual powers that she brought to the marriage mean so little to you, she at least gave you that physical joy and pleasure which the least civilized of men expect. All these things which she had were her capital for life, and she has expended them upon you. If you leave her now, you cannot restore any of those things to her. If you leave her, you are not only a renegade, you are a thief. You have stolen the best part of her life, and left her only the poorest.

Sir, the beasts of the field beget their young without love, and depart for fresh pastures. Paternity means nothing to them but a moment's sensation, forgotten for the next tuft of grass. Sires do not know their children. Swine may trample heedlessly upon their offspring. Reptiles deposit their eggs and crawl sluggishly away, leaving them to the conditions of nature. The lower orders of animal intelligence are like this. But even the anthropoid apes—the gorillas, for example—live in families, are faithful to their companions, and protect their young. Sometimes, unfortunately, there are atavistic members of the human race who, though they appear in the forms of men, have the minds of cattle, or swine, or snakes.

And what are you leaving for, Sir? Some painted siren who sees in you only an opportunity to exploit your lust and live without work? Be assured that she who causes you to break faith with your family will break faith with you. When sickness and misfortune befall you, as they do all men at some time, she will not remain at your side. Put away this evil temptation, and put this wanton woman out of your life while there is yet time.

You are at mid-channel, Sir—the dangerous time of every life. Folly and temptation strike you at their worst now. You will never find happiness—as so many who have tried it testify—in seeking a new illicit love. Your paramour is only another woman, and you will probably find her inferior to your wife when you are better acquainted with her.

You are thinking only of yourself. Have you thought what divorce will do to your children? Have you thought what it will be in future years when you are aged and weak, and need help, to think that your own children remember you only with contempt and hatred? Have you ever looked intently into the eyes of a divorced child and seen the irreparable hurt that shows there? There is nothing worse in this world for children, as for a

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

I HAVE JUST RECEIVED by mail a letter from Ann Arbor, Michigan, containing the printed announcement sent out by Mr. and Mrs. John Everett Keller of the marriage of their daughter Clara Lee, Lt. (j.g.) in the Naval Reserve of the United States, to Roy Stonger Budd, also Lieutenant of the Naval Reserve of the United States, the marriage having taken place on the 23rd day of December.

Brother Budd is known, of course, to many of the Saints of Independence, and I am sure all of them will join me in wishing the newly formed family richness of happiness and prosperity.

IN A CHRISTMAS CARD coming from Brother and Sister Alldredge of Berkeley, California, there is an expression of concern over the general conditions prevailing, which I am passing on to our readers who I am sure will read the expressions with interest:

Dear Brother Smith: It occurs to me there is no mistaking this fact, that we are at the crossroads. The ways beyond lead to either a prosperous future, a secure state in economy, or a gradual decendency into a chaotic disorder in which it is highly possible to become pawns of a complete regimentation. The success we may see in either will be controlled by the status of our decisions in matters pertaining to state or nation during the next few years.

The road we choose to follow, the bridge we decide to cross, will designate the value, or quality, of our zionic ideals of the future.

Greatly do we hope, and sincerely do we pray that in the rendering of your decisions, in the solution of your problems, you may be guided into those avenues of thought and action which lead only to "Peace on earth, good will to men."

No, the war isn't over, and by far the greatest problems lie ahead—yet unsolved.

May God's blessing rest with you and his Spirit be the motivating force within you in the disposition of the responsibilities which lie before you.

Season's best wishes.

SOME TWO YEARS or so ago a distressing message was received from Ft. Smith, Arkansas, from the family of Sister C. C. Sherwood, who was very ill and desired to have prayers and administration. In response to my suggestion and call, Brother Amos Higdon went to Ft. Smith and contacted the people and administered to Sister Sherwood. A distinct blessing was received by Sister Sherwood, and a year ago I received from Brother C. C. Sherwood a letter stating that he had been saving his pennies over the year, and sent these to me, which amounted to quite a little sum, for me to place where I thought it would do the most good. I sent it to the Bishop and it went into the general fund.

Again comes a letter from Brother and Sister Sherwood from Ft. Smith, Ark., saying in saving their pennies as they did last year has resulted in permitting them to send about $9.00 for me to place with the Bishopric where I thought it would do the most good.

I have sent this to the Bishop, suggesting it be placed in an endowment fund for the Sanitarium.

I am quoting from Brother Sherwood's letter that which I am sure will be of interest to our readers:

Dear Brother Smith: You will find inclosed a sum of money. These as I have told you before are the pennies I have saved in the last year. I have been saving my pennies since 1939 and send them to the church. Never spend one that comes in my possession. You may wonder why I do this. I will here try to tell you. I am 72 years old; my wife is 45 years, and we have three daughters all married. I am a Spanish War veteran, not working. My pension is all I have coming in. So you see our situation. I'm sending you this money to place in church funds where you think it will do the most good. We have never forgotten the time when we called on you, and you sent Brother Higdon to administer to my wife. We are getting along fine. Think of us in your prayers as we have no teacher, except the Herald, which we appreciate so much.

SISTER JESSIE M. BAILEY of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, along with her Christmas card of cheerful greetings, sends a letter in which she expresses her appreciation of the articles in the Herald and tells of the good these have done her. She feels that shadows of portentous events are being cast before them, and speaks thankfully of the blessings she has received. She writes:

The prayers I have asked for at Independence in times past were answered. My youngest daughter was healed and has come into the church. We are having snow and very cold weather at present. The best of wishes for you and yours through 1946.

I HAVE JUST RECEIVED a letter from Carl F. Wheeler, Jr., a young man who was in the armed forces and found necessity for hospitalization. He wrote from the Birmingham General Hospital at Van Nuys, California, telling of how remarkably he had been blessed through administration and how he had enjoyed the association of the Saints in that part of the country. He was in touch with Brother Rushton and others of the ministry. He closes his letter by saying, "As I look at the church today, it seems to me that if there were some way to challenge greater participation on the part of young men we could realize a great gain and I have wondered if there is any definite program set forth in the matter."

In reply to Brother Carl's query, I told him that I had thought much of the matter and had definitely felt that no finer appeal could be made to these young men returning from the armed forces than to express to them our need for their participation in helping us to establish Zion; for I feel sure that an appreciation of the ideals of our social philosophy would make a strong appeal to our people and elicit a very fine cooperation from them.

BROTHER R. L. BOOKER writes from Mobile, telling of the long years he has striven to discharge the responsibilities of pastor in that branch, and he seems to find pleasure in realizing that progress is being made in his expectation to soon see some of the things accomplished toward which they have been working. He feels that the Saints are responding as never before and that there is present an earnest desire to participate in the work of the branch. He reports that 25 out of 70 who were with the armed forces of the country have returned, and he found inspiration in seeing them in the congregation. He says:

The war brought to a halt the development in the branch of many of our young men, but we are hoping to see them take up where they left off. Other youth are in the process of development, and we feel that Mobile is not going to have the worries of priesthood in the future as it has had in the past.

ON THE 12TH AND 13TH of January I was with Brother Livingston at Des Moines when the Des Moines District had its Inventory or so-called Financial Day, when the Saints of the district were stimulated to file their inventories. A goodly response was had, and both Brother Frank A. Fry, president of the district and the Des Moines branch, and Bishop Stephen Robinson feel this financial-day observance is effective for good.

It has occurred to me that other districts might do the same and think it probable that many of them are.

I was pleased to note by the last number of the Lamoni Stake Record that "Stake Inventory Day" had been announced and a cut was made of the tithing statement which constitutes a part of the inventory filing. I feel sure that such a day will be highly successful in Lamoni Stake.

AGAIN we have report from Brother A. J. N. Muir of Port Huron, Michigan, in regard to the financial affairs of his district. He reports that every branch in the district is "over the top" so far as its quota is concerned. And he states the quota for the district has been exceeded by over $7,000.00, and that the year has been a prosperous one for the district, he having been able to send over $30,000.00 to the Presiding Bishopric.

E. L. Kelley

A biographical sketch of Bishop E. L. Kelley, prepared in connection with the Fiftieth Anniversary celebration of Graceland College, 1945.

By the Lambda Delta Sigma Society

EDMUND L. KELLEY was born near Vienna, Illinois, November 17, 1844. He passed the early years of childhood in the place of his birth, moving with his family at the age of ten to western Iowa, locating in Mills County. As his name indicates, he was of Irish origin, his great-grandparents having emigrated to America in 1773. His father, Richard Yancey Kelley, was an elder in the original church organized by Joseph Smith.

After the death of the Prophet, he, like many others, was at a loss to know with which of the several groups claiming to be the true church he should affiliate. He was very desirous of associating with the right one. Following a number of years of doubt and examination, he came to know of the Reorganization through the ministry of Elders E. C. Briggs and W. W. Blair and united with the church.

The young son, Edmund, was greatly influenced by the decision of his father, as were four of his brothers. He united with the church and, recognizing his need for further preparation if he were to make any large contribution, entered the University of Iowa and later attended college in New York. After serving as principal of a boys' school in Pennsylvania, he returned to the west where he taught school in Illinois and Iowa. During the winter of 1870, while engaged in teaching in Illinois, he had a vision which made a great impression on him. He relates it thus:

"In the vision the Savior was shown to be making what appeared to be the last of a long and devoted effort to reclaim the world from evil, and the statement was made, 'He is traveling the circuit of the earth for the last time.' While intently looking upon the scene I was asked to follow, and promised to do so."<sup>1</sup>

ACTING ON this promise, he attended the April, 1870, general conference and was appointed to a mission in Michigan under Elder E. C. Briggs who had been instrumental in presenting the Reorganization to the Kelley family some years earlier.

After serving in that field during 1871 and 1872, he was moved upon to ask for temporary release so that he might continue his education at the University of Iowa. He entered the law school of the university from which he graduated in 1873. He opened a law office at Greenwood, the county seat of Mills County, Iowa. In connection with his law practice, he served the church as minister in that part of the state. He was a man of such high reputation and character that he was elected as county superintendent of schools, but continued in his ministry for the church.

During his practice of law in western Iowa, he was much concerned in connection with reports and rumors touching upon some of the church leaders. In October, 1878, he had a spiritual experience when, as he related, he was brought into the presence of the Creator and Judge of All and was instructed as follows, "Men should be judged by their public acts and not by their private lives. If I were to pass upon men according to their merits, you nor no other man would stand before me. The revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants I gave to my servant, Joseph Smith."<sup>2</sup>

Two days later in a conference with Jason W. Briggs, President of the Quorum of Twelve, he was entirely satisfied with the course of the church leaders and was confirmed as to the correctness of the revelations given to govern the church. These revelations served him as a guide during his active church administration in determining proper procedure in the many difficult situations which he faced during his long years of general church work.

IN 1881, he was a member of a committee to present to the Congress of the United States the claims of the Reorganized Church, touching the innovation of polygamy by those claiming to be Latter Day Saints. At the session of the Conference of 1882, he was appointed as a counselor to George A. Blakeslee, presiding bishop of the church. He served in this capacity until the death of Bishop Blakeslee in 1890, when he was called to the position of presiding bishop of the church, where he occupied until 1916.

As presiding bishop of the church during a long period of time, he was called upon to serve the church in many different capacities, as counselor to the President of the Church, as chairman of the Board of Publication, as a member of the Board of Directors and also of the Board of Trustees, and as treasurer of Graceland College. He traveled and preached extensively in all parts of the United States and Canada. In 1801, he was sent on a special mission to the British Isles, at which time he also visited France and Italy.

Thomas Jefferson wished to be remembered for three things: as author of the Declaration of Independence, of the statute of Virginia for Religious Liberty, and as the Father of the University of Virginia. If Bishop Kelley had been asked for what he wanted to be remembered, he would without question, have included his large contribution in the organization and growth of Graceland College.

EARLY IN THE proposal for the establishing of a college in Lamoni, he was active in the promotion and drew up the articles of incorporation. When this movement did not develop, he eagerly led the group urging the opening of a college by the church. He was thus very closely identified with the college from the very beginning.

During Bishop Kelley's participation in the activities of the college, the student body was made up largely of those enrolled in the preparatory, commercial, and studio courses. His frequent addresses before the student assembly always emphasized the large contribution those students would be called upon to make in building up and developing the educational consciousness of the church membership. As we look back through the years and think of the hundreds of men and women from all parts of the country who attended the college during those early years and know of their large share in all the quorums of the church and among the general mem-

For a number of years before the college was authorized by action of the general conference, he was found among its chief advocates. Through his long years of service and in looking forward to the future of the church progress, he visioned the part an educated ministry and an educated membership would be called upon to play in the onward march of the church. He recognized the part our own college might well be expected to have in such a program, and was a strong supporter of the movement for the establishment of Graceland. He was elected by the general conference to be a member of both the Board of Trustees and the Board of Directors, one body to be responsible for the raising of the funds and the construction of the first college building, the other to concern itself with the academic interests of the college. When the two boards were consolidated, Bishop Kelley served as a member of the Board of Trustees where he continued for several years, and an additional three years as college treasurer.

HIS SERVICE on the college board extended through many of the most critical years experienced by the college. Like many small denominational institutions, Graceland had much financial distress. Countless times it seemed that the doors would not open for another year, and even after opening it the college could hardly continue for lack of support; but under the fine guidance of Bishop Kelley and with the fullest co-operation of other church leaders, the college continued to minister to the educational needs of hundreds of young men and women through the years. At last, after many financial struggles for existence, her darkest days came at the last general conference held at Kirtland, Ohio. It was in April, 1904, that a resolution was introduced favoring the discontinuance of the college at the close of that college year.<sup>3</sup>

After two days' debate in the conference, the resolution was voted upon by a yea and nay vote, districts being represented in the vote by the delegates in attendance and the ex officio members by one vote each. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 851 for and 826 against, a majority of twenty-five votes out of a total of 1,677 votes. On the following day, the Quorum of Twelve through the secretary presented a report, "favoring the continuance of Graceland College just as soon as the original debt, and the entire deficit incident to running expenses has been paid."<sup>4</sup>

In the conference vote all three members of the First Presidency and all three members of the Presiding Bishopric voted against the closing of the college. The presiding bishop, E. L. Kelley, took a leading part in the general conference discussion, and in the discussion and final action of the Board of Trustees in May, following the Kirtland conference. After full investigation and discussion of the legal, moral, and educational aspects of the situation, the College Board of Trustees on May 12, 1904, resolved "that we immediately proceed with the work of procuring and electing members of the faculty, the distribution of catalogues, and the performing of such other duties as are prescribed by the articles of incorporation to continue the college in session."<sup>5</sup>

BISHOP KELLEY was most influential and enthusiastic in the proposal to continue the college, and through his good offices as bishop, assisted by the First Presidency, under the guidance of President Joseph Smith, the college passed through this difficult financial crisis.

At the next General Conference held in April, 1905, a report on the actions taken since the 1904 conference was made, and the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric recommended that the college should continue.<sup>6</sup>

After discussion the recommendations were adopted. Bishop Kelley reported on the actions taken by him and his associates during the year relative to college finances and the program prepared for the future.

In addition to the remarkable service rendered by Bishop Kelley in the interests of the college, one of his sons served as a member of the Board of Trustees and three of his children, one son and two daughters, made large contributions to the college by service on the faculty. His wife was the first president of the Patroness Society of the college, where she continued with most excellent service for many years, rendering aid of high value during some of the most critical early years of Graceland.

The name of Kelley will go down the corridor of time in the history of Graceland with high honor and great renown.

"We live in deeds, not years." Not many live in both as fully as did Edmund L. Kelley. The multitude of people, not only at Graceland College, but throughout the church who were influenced by his righteous and active life will continue through the years to enjoy the keenest delight and the fondest memory and to return the largest dividends in the kingdom of God on earth because Edmund L. Kelley lived a long and fruitful life.

Bad Habits of the Audience

Dr. Leopold Stokowski, former conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, once angered and amused a whole nation of music-lovers by an object lesson in manners which he gave his Philadelphia supporters.

The last concert of the season was scheduled to begin at the usual time,

Christmas in Austria

John G. Wight

(With American forces at Enns, Austria)

HE WAS a small, blond Aryan, and his chin barely reached the top of the bountifully laden table. His blue eyes were filled with awe, and his plate was filled with America's traditional Yule meal—turkey, dressing, cranberry sauce, English peas, butter, rolls. Valiantly he strove to keep up with the eating pace set by the companions who sat on either side of him—two hearty American infantrymen—and in this he succeeded, even though he occasionally had to discard his fork to gain a little more speed with his fingers. Never before, he thought, had there been such a meal. And never before, thought his companions, had so much of so many things been consumed by one so small.

At last he laid down his fork and surreptitiously wiped his hands on his pants. After surveying the still plentiful supply of food before him, he reached the conclusion that he was physically unable to eat another bite. He was, therefore, chagrined when his plate was whisked away and another was placed before him—this one piled high with apple pie, ice cream, and chocolate cake. He hesitated for a split second, then manfully picked up his fork. The occasion was the Christmas dinner of a company of infantrymen, who had as their guests some of the children from the village.

Thus I saw that even the ravages of a war of hatred could not erase the innate generosity and love of the average GI for the unfortunate. I'm sure that a good many of the children who were there had not had such a meal for years, and I doubt that some of the younger ones had ever had such a repast. In addition to that, almost every child in the village came in for the benefits of the candy and gum donated by the GIs from their PX rations.

So, I'm reassured. The hate of a few months ago has turned to a love. It is a stern love for those who had part in the war, but it is a tender love for the little ones. God grant that we shall have no cause to change that love as these little ones grow older.

but those attendees who took the trouble to arrive before the appointed hour were surprised to note that evidently no preparations had been made for the concert. Only two or three ushers were at their posts, the stage was dark and bare, and the scheduled time for the concert had come and gone before a janitor crossed the platform and noisily began to bring in the music stands.

At 9 o'clock two performers seated themselves on the stage and began to play the first bars of the opening selection, and from time to time other musicians strolled in, took their places and joined in the chorus. Much stumbling, coughing and rattling of instruments marked the entrance of each man, and almost half an hour went by before the full orchestra was assembled and ready to perform in the accustomed manner.

The middle section of the concert proceeded without undue disturbance, but the concluding number on the program was simply a reversal of the first. Musicians stopped playing from time to time, noisily folded their instruments and banged and stumbled their way off the stage. Dr. Stokowski alone remained to face the verbal brickbats of an outraged audience. But although indignation ran high, there were no vacant seats at the first concert of the new season, and the attendees were not only noticeably prompt in arriving, but unusually hesitant about leaving before the last note had been sounded.—Robert Barlow.

Fasting—Who? How? Why?

By Thelona D. Stevens

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50: 5.

MUCH HAS BEEN written and said about prayer, but not so much about fasting. Yet, the two terms are almost inseparable in the scriptures. God's people have always been commanded to fast and pray, because God knows that through this means changes can be wrought in the hearts of men which enable his Spirit to work in and through them, to the bringing about of his purposes.

WHO SHOULD FAST?

When God gives a law or a commandment to his people, it is to all members of the body. In the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants there are repeated commandments having to do with fasting and prayer. Perhaps the spirit of all these may be caught up in this one: "Also I give unto you a commandment, that you shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth."<sup>1</sup>

These commandments have never been countermanded. They apply to us all, with the exception of those who are ill or incapacitated. Both the late Joseph Smith and our present prophet have been specific on this point. The following is quoted from the Saints' Herald: "Children, nursing mothers, and members in feeble health are not expected to abstain from food . . . if to do so is likely to create distress."<sup>2</sup> Refraining from necessary nourishment under such circumstances would be unwise, and fasting under those conditions probably would not even be acceptable to God, for he has commanded us to use wisdom in all things.

DANIEL'S FAST

Since many of the thoughts expressed in this article are drawn from the story of Daniel's fast, these excerpts from Daniel 10:2-14, with interpolations, are suggested:

"In those days I Daniel was mourning [fasting] three full weeks. I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled." (Daniel says he was mourning, which is interpreted to mean fasting, since he himself explains that he was fasting.)

Note, this does not say that he did not eat anything, but shows that he refrained from luxuries during this particular fast. There are some fasts which are total—in which neither food nor water are taken, but when Daniel was fasting he evidently did not refrain from all nourishment.

Then Daniel was rewarded for this effort: "Then I lifted up mine eyes . . . and behold a certain man . . . and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire. . . . And I Daniel alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves. Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision." (Those who did not fast and make the effort did not receive the reward that Daniel received.)

"I heard the voice of his words . . . O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee. . . . Fear not, Daniel; for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand" (notice the purpose of his fast—to understand) "and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words" (because Daniel had inquired of God). "But the prince of the kingdom of Persia [the prince of evil, or Satan] withstood me one and twenty days;" (the exact period Daniel had set for his fast) "but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes"

[the Doctrine and Covenants explains that Michael was Adam<sup>3</sup>] "came to me; and now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days." Then follows the vision to which Daniel was entitled and which he received because of his fasting and prayer.

HOW SHALL ONE FAST?

There are many kinds of fasts, as well as many reasons for wanting to fast. The reason prompting the fast, as well as the length of time the fast is to be observed, and the circumstances surrounding the individual all have bearing on how the fast should be conducted. Sometimes a fast may be total abstinence from all food and water (to be done with wisdom); sometimes the fast may be from food but not water; sometimes the fast may be from just certain foods. Daniel ate "no pleasant bread, neither flesh nor wine" but this does not say that he fasted from all foods, such as cereals, vegetables, fruits, etc., and water.

The Doctrine and Covenants bears out the thought that one kind of fasting may include food eaten judiciously: "And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily, this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer."<sup>4</sup>

Again, fasting is not necessarily limited to food, as the fast may be from certain types of reading, radio programs, or other entertainment, self-adornment, etc. Sometimes it is impossible for a person to refrain from food without causing comment and even ridicule by other members of the family or associates. An individual whose family does not share his beliefs might excite ridicule or even antagonism by refusing to go to the table with the family. He may still fast by eating, but refusing some foods, say the desserts. Or, he may choose to fast from something other than food for a time. Fasting is something so sacred between the individual and God that it should be done without exciting comment by unsympathetic observers.

Jesus' instruction was: "Moreover, when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. . . . But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."<sup>5</sup> In this quotation notice that he said, "when thou fastest, anoint thy head." This commandment in connection with fasting was not new to the Israelites. Countless passages in the scriptures refer to this practice, such as the beautiful 23rd Psalm, "thou anointest my head with oil." This obviously was oil consecrated to holy purposes. In contrast, one notes that Daniel did not anoint himself during his three weeks of fasting. He doubtless refrained from the use of perfumed oils, such as is suggested in Amos' reference to those who "anoint themselves with the chief ointment."<sup>6</sup>

Paul suggests another type of fasting. His advice is directed to husband and wife: "Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer."<sup>7</sup>

Just how we fast, what we fast from, is not the most important thing, but rather the attitude that we bear in our hearts—the attitude of willingness to be obedient to the divine command.

SOME BENEFITS FROM FASTING

Aside from the desire to be obedient to the commands of God to fast, there are a number of reasons for the practice of this principle.

First, it works in accordance with the laws of nature. When one wants to cleanse his body, he refrains from food. An overworked physical structure needs time to rest instead of being forced to do more work by taking in more food. Fasting, then, helps the physical body to rest.

One who wishes to draw close to God in meditation and prayer cannot hope to do so if his body is groggy with food. In order for the mind to function, a goodly supply of blood must be rushed to the brain. It is impossible for the body to spare much blood to the brain, if the stomach must use most of the supply.

Again referring to the Doctrine and Covenants,<sup>8</sup> we see the Lord does not want us to break the law he has given concerning the keeping of the Sabbath day holy by preparing and eating big meals on this sacred day. Preparing unnecessarily elaborate meals is not only breaking the law which requires us to keep the day holy, but by eating too much food, we cause the mechanism of our bodies to overwork, causing our very bodies to break the Sabbath day. A definite promise goes with the keeping of this commandment: "that thy joy may be full. Verily, this is fasting and prayer . . . rejoicing and prayer."<sup>8</sup>

Fervent desire to offer special thanksgiving to God, then, would cause righteous souls to desire to fast, perhaps not from all foods, but at least from more than the body needs for sustenance, not to be overloaded and dull, but free from the bondage of too much food, that there may be "rejoicing and prayer." There is nothing said about doing this just occasionally. The commandment is that this shall be done on "the Lord's day." It should be the practice on the Sabbath day.

Fasting, then from a purely physical standpoint brings its own rewards spiritually.

OTHER REASONS FOR FASTING

"It was in offering sacrifices that Abel the first martyr, obtained knowledge that he was accepted of God. And from the days of righteous Abel to the present time, the knowledge that men have that they are accepted in the sight of God is obtained by offering sacrifices. And in the last days, before the Lord comes, he is to gather together his saints who have made a covenant with him in sacrifice. Psalm 50: 3-5,

'Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.'

"Those, then, who make the sacrifice, will have the testimony that their course is pleasing in the sight of God; and those who have this testimony will have faith to lay hold on eternal life, and will be enabled, through faith, to endure unto the end, and receive the crown that is laid up for them that love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. But those who do not make the sacrifice can not enjoy this faith, because men are dependent upon this sacrifice in order to obtain this faith; therefore, they cannot lay hold upon eternal life, because the revelations of God do not guarantee unto them the authority so to do, and without this guarantee faith cannot exist."<sup>9</sup>

Faith grows through fasting, or sacrifice, and prayer. A trial successfully met increases one's faith. Through fasting and prayer, trials may be overcome, but without this means of help, the trials may overcome us. Fasting in itself may be a trial. When we say "no" to the appetite, we are making a choice between the food that feeds the physical man and the food that feeds the spiritual man. Unwillingness to fast, then, may be an indication that we, like the Israelites of old, prefer the "flesh pots." When we rock along in a rut, making no special effort to serve God, we are not growing spiritually, but when we do exert ourselves in special effort to approach God and serve him, we become special targets of Satan.

Witness Satan's attacks on Christ when he fasted. When we are especially trying, we are especially tried. Perhaps we have been one who in discouragement has said, "The harder I try, the more things go wrong." Satan would have us become discouraged and give up the effort. Paul's words are encouraging, though, for he points out that God "will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."<sup>10</sup>

Closely associated with the development of faith is the impelling urge to gain knowledge and the understanding of the mysteries of God. Notice in the story of Daniel that he had set his "heart to understand." He wanted to know certain things so much that he was willing to exert extra effort to learn them. This extra effort on his part called forth extra effort on the part of Satan, for he tried to stop the angel whom God sent to reveal the things which Daniel had prayed to know. Notice the explanation which the angel gave: "From the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand . . . thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days." Then Michael was sent to the rescue of the angel from the Satanic forces, in order that he might continue his mission to Daniel. Notice, too, that the struggle between the angel and Satan lasted the exact number of days that Daniel had set for his fast. Then came the blessing. Ether wrote: "Wherefore, dispute not because ye see not, for ye receive no witness until after the trial of your faith."<sup>11</sup> Daniel did not see the struggle that took place between the angel and his assailant. His faith had to carry him through the three weeks of trial, but after he successfully withstood the trial, he was rewarded.

Daniel's trial ended with the period of fast, but not all blessings immediately follow the fast. Perhaps the time of trial may be extended long beyond the period spent in fasting. Sometimes, of course, God does immediately answer our prayers, but at other times we must wait, sometimes years for fulfillment. We may not know his reasons for withholding the answer from our vision, but "dispute not because ye see not."<sup>11</sup> In his own time and way God will answer the prayers, when the trial is past. We may be quite certain that blessings will not come unless we ardently seek them through the means God has set. Had Daniel not sought this enlightenment, he would not have received this vision and understanding.

Fasting develops admirably the attribute of humility. David the psalmist, knew this, and said, "I humbled my soul with fasting." The occasion was one in which "false witnesses . . . rewarded me evil for good." His response was to humble himself in fasting and prayer. No desire to retaliate was evidenced by David, but rather through humility, he records, "I behaved myself as though he had been my friend or brother."<sup>12</sup>

Another reason for fasting and prayer is the welfare of others. Alma records: "the children of God were commanded that they should gather themselves together oft, and join in fasting and mighty prayer, in behalf of the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God."<sup>13</sup> In fact, in the story of Daniel we note that his was not a selfish purpose in desiring knowledge. He was concerned about the things that would befall the people "in the latter days."

PURIFICATION THROUGH FASTING AND PRAYER

Yet another aspect of fasting has to do with repentance. Notice the beginning of the account of Daniel's fast: "I Daniel was mourning." Mourning means grieving. Could he have been grieving over his own sins? Perhaps. Repentant for his own misdeeds, and asking forgiveness and strength not to repeat his sins. The twelfth verse bears out this thought, for the angel referred to the time when Daniel set to "chasten thyself before thy God." In order to chasten himself, Daniel was willing to undergo self-discipline, which would of necessity include not only refraining from unnecessary food, but also would express sorrow over his failures, his imperfections, with a desire to be clean before God, for Daniel doubtless knew full well that his prayers could not be answered until he was in the right condition before God. He was willing to make a sacrifice in order to bring this about.

Often we quote the words of Jesus, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you,"<sup>14</sup> without considering the conditions, namely: "if ye are purified and cleansed from all sin, ye shall ask whatsoever you will in the name of Jesus, and it shall be done."<sup>15</sup> We have the promise that if we ask on this basis, we shall even be guided in knowing what to pray for: "it shall be given you what you should ask"<sup>16</sup> and "he that asketh in spirit shall receive in spirit."<sup>17</sup> We are given to know that God cannot dwell in unholy temples, and before we can receive God's spirit to the degree that our prayers are directed by his Spirit, we must truly repent of all our sins and be clean in his sight. Then we have this further promise and warning: "whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you, that is expedient for you; and if ye ask for anything that is not expedient for you, it shall turn unto your condemnation."<sup>18</sup>

In addition to the great promise of eternal life, obedience to the commandments of God brings us here and now great blessings, as the scriptures show:

"And he never doth vary from that which he hath said; therefore, if ye do keep his commandments, he doth bless you, and prosper you . . . he doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you, for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you. . . ."<sup>19</sup>

"I the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."<sup>20</sup>

The Rise of the Business of the Kingdom

By J. A. Koehler

IT WAS MANY centuries ago that the genius of prophecy first endeavored to bring forth and establish the business of the Kingdom. I speak, of course, of the civil-mode Kingdom. Notwithstanding the groping, the halting, the regressions and all, of the Israelitish people, in that adventure notable headway was made. It was a forward leap toward the Kingdom which is to come.

That surge in the march of civilization is regarded by some as a prophecy of the manner in which the business of the Kingdom will be inaugurated again. One of these days, say the prophets, there will be another forward leap, another outright adventure in rightly constituted economic society.

THE UNPROPHETIC voices of religion, thus far, have succeeded in forestalling that development. They have harped eternally about personal un-righteousness, but not in manner to prepare men personally for the business of the Kingdom. They have only screened their own Kingdom-building incompetence by underrating the capacities of their people. And under the spell of that delusion the day of outright adventure in rightly constituted economic society has been postponed.

It may be that the whole body as composed, the church regarded as a unit, is incompetent to adventure in community building. But there are persons within the church who are fit; there are enough fit persons to form a nucleus within the church for the purpose of adventuring outright in the business of the Kingdom.

The Kingdom may be established only through some Kingdom-building agency. The church either as constituted or as it is to be re-constituted is that agency. In 1834 our church was unprepared to fulfill that mission. It may still be unprepared. But the Latter Day Saint Church is so constituted that any part of it, on occasion, may perform the functions of the parent body. And unless prophecy is a delusion, somewhere, somehow the church will fulfill its offices as a Kingdom-business-inaugurating agency.

THE PROPHET Daniel said that the Kingdom shall arise in the last days through a process of enclavement—as “a stone cut out of the mountain.” The Restoration prophet developed that idea, saying that that nucleus will be composed selectively of “the elect,” or “those who hear His voice and harden not their hearts.”

The first people that undertook to establish the business of the Kingdom, the Hebrew people, also was formed selectively, by a process of isolation. And when we recall these facts and place them by the side of St. John’s summons to “Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and receive not of her plagues,” and compare the proclamations of the Restoration with these facts, we have assurance that there really is a modern voice of prophecy.

IT SEEMS impossible that the business of the Kingdom shall arise again precisely as it did in the days of Moses. For there is no people so ready to undertake to re-establish that business under its common religious impulsion and prophetic leadership. No existing nation is composed for the Kingdom building business, much less is it constituted for that business. When that business arises again it will be through an adventure of a people formed through a very different combination of circumstances.

The march of civilization, which has not been without interruption, has been slow and blundering. And so has the march of “My people” toward their religious goal: the Kingdom. It is true that, in modern times only, science and technology have made rapid strides. They have transformed life in its material aspects almost over night. As respects the outer circumstances of man, under the forces of science and invention, civilization has literally surged forward.

Science was able to give civilization such a push forward because it was able to perform even though peoples as such were unable to master its truths. It could perform because it could demonstrate on its own. It could perform because peoples are not resistant to physical changes as they are to social or moral changes.

LET US SUPPOSE a religious people as independent in its work as science is; a people with the vision of the Kingdom; a people not resistant to social changes, but determined to achieve the social changes that will set their own house in order; a people with a religious passion to order aright as in the sight of God their human relations, particularly their economic relations. Could not that people make a forward leap toward the goal of true religion? Could it not transform its own area of civilization almost over night? Could not the business of the Kingdom arise quickly again, as in the days of Moses, through its endeavors?

Moreover, if such a social nucleus were formed within society, perhaps within the church, and the business of the Kingdom inaugurated, would not that enterprise set the priests of religion right in their ideas of personal improvement? in their work of religious education? Would it not reveal the personal improvement that must be made to fit men for the business of the Kingdom? Would it not be the answer to the baffling problem of interesting men personally in the tasks that fit persons for places in the Kingdom-mode of society? the task of building men who will promote the Kingdom of God?

In the case of heterogeneous, visionless peoples generally, whose thoughts about the conduct of vital affairs have always been muddled, the coming of the Kingdom has always been halting. It may always be painfully slow. Even in the case of "the elect," or in the case of "My people," the formation of the "chick" within the "shell" cannot take place in a day. The hatching of the "chick" must be preceded by a period of incubation. But may not the emergence of the "chick" from the "shell" be a matter of only a few "hours"?

LATTER DAY SAINTS have been thinking about the business of the Kingdom for more than a century. Its "chick" has had time to form within its "shell." Let us suppose the time has not been misspent. Is it not reasonable to suppose that within a few years that "chick" could burst its "shell" to take its place in the governments or peoples of the world, not fully developed, but having power within itself to grow and develop to maturity? Is it not reasonable to suppose that it may make its appearance as a self-governing body—self-governing as respects its own internal economic affairs—within a very short period of time?

Of course for "the elect" that appearance is painfully slow. But for the unprophetic, visionless, unadventurous peoples of the world, will not the rise of the business of the Kingdom have the aspect of a sudden change, a surge, in human affairs, having the aspect of a phenomenal social development?

THERE WAS A complete and abrupt break with Egypt when Israel set up its own mode of government in Canaan. Instead of a slow, piecemeal, ineffectual remodeling of an old building, Israel built a new social structure, in a very short time, from the ground up.

There are unprophetic voices which would take the hovels of Babylon and seek to make them enduring through the slow, the painful, the costly, and even the ineffectual processes of social reform. Those voices hold that that is the only manner in which the prophecy of the coming Kingdom can have its fulfillment.

But that is not the voice of Restoration. Restoration would form the nucleus of the new society as a new family is formed. It would bring together the persons who have both the spirit and the understanding of the business to be established. It would inaugurate the business of the Kingdom through outright adventure by a selectively formed social group. And under the force of that example of rightly constituted society it would win all nations—slowly, perhaps, but much more quickly than civilization has ever marched forward—to the Kingdom way of governing the economic affairs of peoples. And in the proclamations of that genius, Latter Day Saints recognize the modern voice of prophecy.

Cumorah's Message

A Villanelle

By J. T. Curry

A voice from Cumorah's hill
To the Gentile and the Jew—
"O, come, learn your Master's will!"

Calling softly, calling still,
"Come, with Him your pledge renew"—
A voice from Cumorah's hill!

From His fountains drink your fill,
Hear Him pleading now with you—
"O, come, learn your Master's will!"

Truth is flowing from that rill,
Living water, message true,
A voice from Cumorah's hill!

May that voice in you instill
Love to heed, repent, to do—
"O, come, learn your Master's will!"

Turn to Him, pause not until You with Him for pardon sue;
A voice from Cumorah's hill,
"O, come, learn your Master's will!"

Up-to-Date Idolatry

By Evan A. Fry

"Ye cannot serve God and mammon."
—Matthew 6: 24.

SOME CYNIC or atheist has made the observation that man has created God in his own image, rather than vice versa. And although that statement does not tell all of the truth, it is quite an accurate depiction of what has been going on since man first considered it to be his duty or to his advantage to worship some deity with a power higher than his own. The deities of any people are a reflection of that people. If you want to know what kind of people the Greeks, the Romans, the Babylonians, the Japanese, or the Nazi Germans are, study their gods, and you will find in those gods the extension and the idealization of all the qualities which the people find satisfying and worth-while. If you want to know what kind of people the ancient Israelites were, or if you want to know the people of England, or America, or China, or Africa, or Tibet, or Russia, find out what kind of god they worship, and you will find those same qualities, those same ethics, those same moralities in miniature in the lives of the people who worship.

The old-time gods—those we call "pagan" in an attempt to prove to ourselves that we have outgrown them—have long since been discarded. No one now worships Baal, or Mars, or Venus, or Bacchus, or Poseidon—at least not under those names. But the spirit of those pagan gods lives on, and the spirit of their worshipers lives on. Wherever you find a man who does not want to worship God—the one true and living God—as he really is, but who prefers to worship a more convenient god of his own creation, there you will find idolatry.

WHAT ARE some of the qualities of men, which found reflection in their pagan gods? The gods of idolatry were selfish, peevish, whimsical, capricious, cruel, lustful, belligerent, mercenary, vengeful, provincial, partial, and inclined to play favorites in their dealings with men. Men who wanted to be selfish without being hindered or feeling any qualms of conscience, created out of their imaginations a god who was selfish, whose aid could be invoked for the satisfaction of purely selfish ends. Then men worshiped their own god. Men who were themselves peevish and irascible, and who did not want to be bothered about changing themselves, invented a god who was likewise peevish and irascible, and worshiped him, attempting to appease him when he became peevish as they might have expected men to try to appease them when they got peevish.

Men who were cruel, and who had no desire to be otherwise, made their gods in their own image—and they were cruel gods who demanded blood and human sacrifice. Then their creators and worshipers were free to be cruel in the name of their religion, and to offer sacrifices of blood and cruelty and torture to their god. Men of lust created gods of lust, and made lust and orgiastic immorality their religion, so that they could make their sins their method of worship. Men who wanted to rob their neighbors invented gods who were cunning and clever at theft, gods who cared nothing about the neighbors, gods who could be counted upon to support and help them in their crimes of theft. Then again, their sins became their methods of worship of the gods they had created. Men who expected to be bribed for behaving themselves, or for doing their duty, or showing their favor, created gods who were mercenary and who could be bought, and then worshiped them by buying them.

Men who were unforgiving and vengeful created and worshiped a god of wrath and vengeance, so that they could continue to be unforgiving and vengeful. Because men wanted special privilege and preferential treatment, even at the expense of other good men, they created and worshiped gods who were partial, and who if properly worshiped and bribed would maintain that special privilege.

THE HISTORY OF Israel is one long struggle against idolatry. In the very beginning of the race, it was declared that Jehovah was one God, and the command was given that there should be no other gods before him. The desire of the Israelites for other gods was not simply a desire to be like their neighbors, or a desire for variety. If it had been, their offenses would not have been so serious. But every time when they went away after other gods, it was for quite a different reason. The laws of Jehovah were absolute and exacting. He demanded a total obedience to them. He punished sin, under the Mosaic Law, very sternly. Whenever the people began to feel that they were not being allowed any freedom or latitude to do as they pleased, whenever they felt the desire for some sin or pastime which was forbidden by the law of Jehovah, they simply shopped around a few moments until they found a god who would permit that sin, and still accept of their worship. Then, before they knew it, they were in idolatry—not because they didn't know better, but because they preferred to follow their own way rather than walk in the restricted ways of God.

Of course, with the exception of some of the prophets, who really caught a vision of God, and an understanding of his nature, the Old Testament concept of Jehovah is immature, incomplete, childish. Jesus came to show us what his Father really is, declaring, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." He came to complete and to mature the old concept of Jehovah, and thereby to show the people of earth how foolish it was to follow after and serve other gods.

JESUS CAME showing us a God of love, who desired evil towards none of his children, but who was willing to give them their choice. He taught us of a God who is absolute and infinite and eternal in power—who is the Creator and Ruler of the universe, actively at work in and through and among the things he has created. This God revealed through Christ is jealous for his laws only because they are the laws that rule the universe—because departure from them invariably and inevitably brings suffering, which God does not want to see inflicted on any of his children. Christ revealed a God who is not peevish, or pettily vengeful and vindictive when affronts are offered to himself, but a God who cannot and will not tolerate evil inflicted upon any of his children, through the failure of other children to obey his laws.

Christ revealed to us an impartial God—one who is the Father of all men—who loves all alike regardless of race or location or degree—who is unwilling that some should prosper while others perish, or that some should make slaves of others or live by the sweat of their brows. Christ revealed to us an unchangeable God, whose code of morality is absolute, whose teachings to men are unchangeable, whose laws are eternal, whose laws and requirements are inescapable. He is a God who cannot be changed by bribes, by prayers, by sacrifices, by charms and incantations, or by the mediation of specially preferred men—a God who has one code and one standard for all.

IN SPITE OF the fact that we have abandoned the old pagan gods, (at least until the Nazis resurrected the old mythology of their race,) still idolatry is very popular today, and very widespread in the world. Man is still making God in his own image, rather than trying to make himself conform to God's image.

They still prefer their own less bothersome, easier ways, rather than the inflexible and more difficult ways of God. They seek not the Lord to establish His righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, after the image of his own god. We are still just about as prone to idolatry as were any of the old Israelites, from the time of Moses on down.

Let us name a few idols, and see whether we are not forced to plead guilty to a worship of them. Man desires conquest, power, dominion over his fellow men. He sets up his idol, worships that idol, and prays to it for strength in conquest. He may call his idol "God," but it is made of the substance of the world, and after man's own image. Man desires prosperity and wealth, primarily for its own sake. He sets up a god of wealth and of prosperity, and agrees to share with him if he will bless him with prosperity. He worships this god, but it is a god of the world, the substance of an idol which shall wax old and perish.

Man desires a life of ease, of advantage, of luxury. Whether he gets it at the expense of the toilers of earth, he cares not. He sets up a god of ease and luxury and special privilege, a god who regards ease and luxury and advantage as the best obtainable things in life. He worships that god with time, with talent, with life itself, and prays to the god of his own creation for the satisfaction of his heart's desire. He cannot pray to the one true God for such fulfillment, for He is impartial and loves all men alike, so he creates a god in his own image, and bows down and worships it.

Man desires occasionally to sin a little—to deviate from the very rigorous code of conduct which Jehovah has laid down. A God who cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance is a bit too stiff for most of us. We want one who will let us vary from the absolute a little, at least once in a while. So we create another god in the likeness which we desire, a god who will wink at sin, or who will take a little extra money or, a few extra prayers and forget it; and we worship him. Man desires salvation—but to obtain it on God's terms is a bit of a bore, and a great deal of trouble. We think that we could improve on some of the doctrines and ordinances which he has laid down as requirements for salvation. We don't see why God didn't fix it so that we could be saved in our sins, rather than from them; and then we could go right on enjoying our sins indefinitely. So we set up the kind of god who will do things to suit us, and give our allegiance to him.

Man hates his enemies, and wants vengeance on them. God says love your enemies, and do good to them that hate you. That's too much trouble, so man sets up a god of vengeance and of hatred, worships him, and seeks his aid in overcoming his enemies.

JOSEPH SMITH warned the world in November, 1831, against modern, up-to-date idolatry, which has adopted some new guises, but remains essentially the same as idolatry has always been. He warned that every man was "walking in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall." He called the world to repentance, as it has been called to repentance so often in the past, warning, as God has so often warned, that idols formed of the substance of this world, have no power, and can only perish, carrying their worshipers to destruction with them.

We are followers, slaves, and prisoners, of the master whom we obey, and of the gods we worship. Let us examine ourselves with care, lest perchance we have created new gods in our own image, and have fallen to worshipping them, even while calling upon the name of Jehovah. We cannot serve God and mammon, for God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, and he will tolerate no divided allegiance. The idols and the idolaters of earth, who have depended upon gods made with human thoughts and human hands, will perish from the earth. Current history, even during the past two weeks, has recorded the downfall of many of them, and more will follow. When God comes down in judgment on the world, may we be found true worshipers of the one true and only God, and not idolaters, walking in our own way, after the image of our own gods.

WINTER TREES

By Katherine M. Goodwin

TO THOSE who look but do not see, the full meaning of life is a closed book.

The inner faculty of perception is a soul-quality whose chief implement, imagination, is called forth to visualize, to assemble, and to make choice of those elements to truth and beauty which lie behind the moving panorama of life so often hidden from the common wayfarer.

Our power of interpretation, which our wise ones have recently told us is a part of the gift of prophecy, is not given to the careless or the unthinking. "We would see Jesus," said some; but did they see him? They did not, not the soul of him.

So it is in other departments of life. In my back yard there stands a tree; a hoary old patriarch, late in his "leafing," Mosaic in stature, sternly immune to the buffeting storm, claiming as a leader's right a bowing servitude from the lesser growth around him.

Hundreds of tiny twigs, bare of green, etching a lacy pattern against the colorful vista of the evening sky, where the setting sun forms a background of golden glory.

Even with dull grey clouds behind it, this tree is a thing of beauty. Its silence is vocal, solemn, serene, fulfilling the measure of its creation. It bears its message to the spirit of the beholder; "The Deeps of God Calling to the Deeps in Man."

One can understand something of the pagan spirit that worshiped sun and moon and stars. Perhaps he was more deeply stirred than we know.

But we, with these promised gifts of vision and interpretation, whose chief implement, imagination, is called forth to visualize, to assemble, and to make choice of those elements that complete the picture, we should be able to see beyond beauty, and detect the hidden truths, even in this one symbol of Divinity—a growing tree.

VISTA

What came ye out for to see?

A wind-blown reed or a stalwart tree?

What, then, do you see

The hidden germ; the law of the growing tree

(The law of eternity)

Or only a tree?

What came ye out for? To see

The defiance, the anger,

Or the pain 'neath the anger in me;

The clay or the god in futurity,

Whose course toward divinity

Is equal with thee?

What, in this maelstrom of Life

Do you see?

Fasting—Who? How? Why?

WE MAY ASK OURSELVES

Have we sufficient reason to exercise the principle of fasting along with prayer—

Do we desire to truly serve God and keep his commandments?

Do we desire spiritual development above physical nourishment?

Do we appreciate God's offer of eternal life enough to go to him with an offering of sacrifice in order to lay hold upon that offer?

Do we so ardently desire knowledge of God's mysteries that we are willing to deny ourselves some passing pleasure for some enduring blessings?

Are we sufficiently humble?

Do we love our fellow men enough to make some sacrifice of offerings for their souls to be saved?

Have we such anxiety concerning our appearance in the sight of God that we daily repent and seek the cleansing power of Christ to work in our lives?

If we want all these things enough, we will be willing to "fast and pray without ceasing" for them. We will not only fast frequently from "certain things" but will on many occasions offer "total" fasts to God.

Sidelights on the Great

A lawyer friend of mine in Indianapolis one day decided he would visit the James Whitcomb Riley shrine at Greenfield, 20 miles east. Stopping for a bite of lunch in a fly-by-night greasy-spoon restaurant, he asked the waiter-proprietor to direct him to the old Riley homestead. The aforesaid w.p. had never heard of it, but advised consulting the thin little telephone directory hung beside the ring-with-a-crank instrument on the wall. Entering solemnly into the jest, my friend did so. Not finding the name listed, of course, he reported same to the man.

"I ain't surprised," said the boss of the shop. "Them Irish moves around a lot."—Strickland Gillilan.

A Voice From the Past Defends Him

Arranged by Israel Smith

IN 1867 Mrs. C. V. Waite, wife of Hon. Charles B. Waite, who was a Federal judge in the Territory of Utah, published a book entitled, "The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, An Authentic History of Brigham Young." Mrs. Waite was a competent witness and testified to the unhappiness caused by polygamy. She also dealt with it historically.

On page 247 she began some "observations on the nature of this pretended revelation," and devoted ten pages to a discussion of its validity. Her treatment is worthy of preserving in the columns of the Herald.

In a former chapter, the so-called Revelation on Celestial Marriage has been given, and it was there shown that polygamy was an innovation upon the Mormon religion.

I desire now to call the attention of the women of Utah to a few observations on the nature of this pretended revelation, and the circumstances under which it was given to the world.

1. It was, even if given as assumed, kept secret for nine years. Polygamy was privately practiced by the leaders of the church for several years, during which time, according to Brigham's admission, it was not "preached* by the Elders," and was therefore studiously concealed from new converts. Indeed, not only was it "not preached," but it was strongly denounced during the same period.

On the first of February, 1844, the following notice appeared in the Times and Seasons, the church organ, published at Nauvoo. (Volume V, page 423.)

*Young's statement was that it had not been "practiced" by the elders. See Millennial Star (supplement), January, 1853.

"NOTICE

"As we have lately been credibly informed, that an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, by the name of Hiram Brown, has been preaching Polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the County of Lapeer, and State of Michigan:

"This is to notify him and the church in general, that he has been cut off from the church for his iniquity; and he is further notified to appear at the Special Conference, on the 6th of April next, to make answer to these charges.

"Joseph Smith,
"Hyrum Smith,
"Presidents of the Church."

This was seven months after the time when, according to Brigham Young and his associates, the Revelation concerning Celestial Marriage had been given to Smith. But here both Joseph and Hyrum Smith call polygamy a "false and corrupt doctrine." Can any true follower of Smith, or believer in his divine mission, believe for a moment, in the face of this declaration, that Smith had received any revelation on the 12th of July, 1843, sanctioning polygamy?

Again, six weeks later, Hyrum Smith wrote as follows:

"Nauvoo, March 15, 1844

"To the Brethren of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, living on China Creek, in Hancock County, Greeting:

"Whereas, Brother Richard Hewett has called on me to-day, to know my views concerning some doctrines that are preached in your place, and states to me that some of your Elders say, that a man having a certain priesthood, may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here; I say unto you, that that man teaches false doctrine, for there is no such doctrine taught here, neither is there any such thing practiced here; and any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine, is culpable, and will stand a chance to be brought before the High Council, and lose his license and membership also; therefore he had better beware what he is about."

"Times and Seasons, Volume V, page 474."

Polygamy was condemned at the General Conferences of the European churches, in England, during the year 1846, and subsequently.

In July, 1845, Parley P. Pratt, in the Millennial Star, published at Liverpool, had denounced the "Spiritual-Wife doctrine of J. C. Bennett"—which was one of the earliest manifestations of polygamy in the church,—as a "doctrine of devils" and of "seducing spirits," using this language: "It is but another name for whoredom, wicked and unlawful connection, and every kind of confusion, corruption, and abomination." (Volume VI, page 22.)

In May, 1848, Orson Spencer, then editor of the Star, used the following language:

"In all ages of the church truth has been turned into a lie, and the grace of God converted into lasciviousness, by men who have sought to make 'a gain' of godliness, and feed their lusts on the credulity of righteous and unsuspecting. . . . Next to the long-hackneyed and bugaboo whisperings of polygism, is another abomination that sometimes shows its serpentine crests, which we shall call sexual resurrectionism. . . . The doctrines of corrupt spirits are always in close affinity with each other, whether they consist in spiritual wife-ism, sexual resurrection, gross lasciviousness, or the unavoidable separation of husbands and wives, or the communism of property." (Millennial Star, Volume X, page 137.)

In July, 1850, at a discussion held at Boulogne, France, John Taylor, a well-known Mormon Apostle, when charged with the belief and practice of this doctrine, said:—"We are accused here of polygamy, and actions most indelicate, obscene, and disgusting, such that none but a corrupt and depraved heart could have contrived. These things are too outrageous to admit of belief. Therefore, leaving the sisters of the 'White Veil,' the 'Black Veil,' and all the other veils, with those gentlemen to dispose of, together with their authors, as they think best, I shall content myself by reading our views of chastity and marriage, from a work published by us, containing some of the articles of our faith." (Taylor's Discussion at Boulogne, page 8.) He then read from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the article on marriage, already quoted from.

Here we have the following facts:—

In 1830 the Mormon Church organized, and the Book of Mormon was published, in which polygamy is strongly condemned.

In 1831, the same doctrine condemned, in a revelation to Joseph Smith, which was afterward published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

In July, 1843, the revelation in favor of polygamy, said to have been given to Joseph Smith.

In February, 1844, polygamy publicly denounced by Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

In March, 1844, the same practice again denounced by Hyrum Smith.

In June, 1844, the death of Smith.

In 1845, the publication of the article on Marriage, in the Appendix to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, in which polygamy is called a "crime," and is again strongly condemned and repudiated. The same year the Spiritual-Wife doctrine of J. C. Bennett, denounced by P. P. Pratt in England.

In 1846, polygamy condemned at the Conferences of the European Mormon churches in England.

In 1848, "polygism" and "sexual resurrectionism" severely denounced in the Millennial Star, published in Liverpool.

In 1850, polygamy denounced and repudiated by Apostle John Taylor in France.

And yet, in the face of all these facts, in 1852, we have the same doctrine publicly given to the church, accompanied by the announcement, that it had been believed and practised by the church for many years.

Now, it will not be pretended by anyone, that polygamy was any part of the Mormon religion previous to 1843.

Take, then, the period from 1843 to 1852. How was it during those nine years? Which shall be taken as evidence of what was the teaching of the Mormon religion, on that subject, during that time? The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Notices published by Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the declarations of Pratt and Spencer, the action of the churches in England, and the assertions of Taylor in France, or the announcement made in Great Salt Lake City in 1852? Are we not, at least, as much authorized to take the former as the latter?

If the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the writings of Joseph and Hyrum, the continued and persistent declarations of the Mormon leaders, and the action of the Mormon churches be taken, then polygamy was no part of Mormonism up to 1852. And if not previous to that time, it was not afterward, for Young did not pretend to give it at that time as a new revelation, but rested the doctrine entirely on the revelation said to have been given to Joseph in 1843.

2. A singular feature of this revelation is, that in it God is made expressly to contradict what he is represented as having said in the Book of Mormon.

According to the Book of Mormon, as already quoted, God said the polygamy and concubinage of David and Solomon were abominable before him. The following is the language: "Behold David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord."

This was the testimony of the Almighty, as to the manner in which he viewed the conduct of David and Solomon, up to July, 1843, when he is represented in this revelation as indorsing those very acts which, in the Book of Mormon, he had so strongly condemned.

3. Again: This revelation classes Isaac and Moses with Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon, as polygamists; when in fact neither Isaac nor Moses ever practiced polygamy. How could the All-wise Being make such a mistake?

The most remarkable circumstance connected with this revelation remains to be considered, —It was in direct contradiction to the laws of the land.

At that time, July 12, 1843, Smith resided at Nauvoo, Illinois, and was, of course, together with all the other inhabitants of that city, amenable to the laws of Illinois.

The following statute was then in force in that State, the same having been passed February 12, 1833:—

"Sec. 121. Bigamy consists in the having of two wives or two husbands at one and the same time, knowing that the former husband or wife is still alive. If any person or persons within this State, being married, or who shall hereafter marry, do at any time marry any person or persons, the former husband or wife being alive, the person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding two years." (The remainder of this section relates to evidence, and prescribes certain exemptions.)

"Sec. 122. If any man or woman, being unmarried, shall knowingly marry the husband or wife of another, such man or woman shall, on conviction, be fined not more than five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not more than one year." (Illinois Laws of 1833, page 198. See also Gales' Revised Statutes of 1839, page 220, and Revised Statutes of 1845, page 173, the same law having been re-enacted in 1845.)

In the face of this law, which was then in full force, the revelation to Smith declares: "If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified." (Revelation, Sec. 24.) Thus justifying the violation of both sections of the law. People may well hesitate, before believing in the authenticity of such a revelation.

Here again, God is made to contradict himself; for not only in the Christian but in the Mormon Bible, He is represented as enjoining upon His disciples to obey the laws and civil authorities. The Book of Mormon abounds in such teachings. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants is to the same effect:—

"We believe that every man should be honored in his station; rulers and magistrates as such being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror." (Doctrine and Covenants, page 332.)

Here, again, I may quote from Mr. Orson Pratt, whose writings have been freely used, as of high authority in "the church."

"Would it be right for the Latter Day Saints to marry a plurality of wives in any of the States or Territories, or nations, where such practices are prohibited by the laws of man? We answer, No; it would not be right; for we are commanded to be subject to the powers that be." (The Seer, Volume 1, page 111.)

Since, then, it was not right to violate the laws of the land, then in force in Illinois on this subject, how cause God to give a revelation sanctioning such a violation of the State law: And that too, without making, in the revelation, the least allusion to the law which was to be so grossly violated?

Again: Who was authorized to keep this revelation secret, no secrecy being enjoined in the revelation itself?

But enough concerning this extraordinary document. It seems strange, indeed, that any reasonable man or woman can look upon this so-called revelation, announced under such suspicious circumstances, and involved in so many contradictions, as a sufficient authority or excuse for the establishment of a custom which would overturn our most cherished social institutions, and throw us at once back thousands of years in civilization.

The conclusion would not be changed if it were admitted that the doctrine of celestial marriage is a part of the Mormon religion; for that has nothing to do with polygamy. On the contrary, this doctrine is expressly founded upon the relation between Adam and Eve before the fall. The following is the language:

"The first marriage we have on record is that of our first parents. . . . Here was a marriage in which the Lord in person officiated—a marriage between two immortal beings. . . . He joined them in one, as one flesh, to be indissolubly united, while eternal ages should roll on, or God himself endure. . . . Did death tear asunder husband and wife, divorce that which God had joined together as 'one flesh,' immortal and eternal in its nature? The atonement of Christ will repair the breach, will restore the immortal Eve to the immortal Adam, will join them again as one flesh, never more to be separated, and will again let the lawful husband enjoy the society of his lawful wife. . . .

"Therefore, if the children have been married for eternity, as well as for time, by the authority of God, the same as their first parents were, they will, with them, raise up, after the resurrection, an endless posterity of immortal beings. . . . But those who do not, in this life, enter into the eternal covenant of marriage, after the pattern set by the first immortal pair, can never obey the first great command." (The Seer, Volume I, pages 43-47.)

The foregoing extracts convey a very intelligible idea of this doctrine; and from them it will be seen it is founded entirely upon the relation between Adam and Eve. Those who would enjoy the blessings of celestial marriage, must, "in this life, enter into the eternal covenant of marriage, after the pattern set by the first immortal pair." What was that pattern? Adam and Eve were monogamists. Adam lived with the wife of his youth, and had no other, for nine hundred and thirty years, and according to Pratt, he is to live with the same woman, in the same capacity, throughout all the ages of eternity. Surely he must be very astute who can discover in this "pattern" any sanction for polygamy.

I might enlarge, indefinitely, upon the arguments against polygamy. I might go into the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, and show that it had been, in many ways, condemned by the Almighty. That not only had Adam been limited to one wife at the creation, but when the world was destroyed by a flood, one wife only to each man was taken into the ark; that God blessed Abraham's posterity through the issue of his first and lawful wife, and in order to do that, worked a miracle upon Sarah; thus sanctioning monogamy in the strongest manner possible. I might refer to the warning of Malachi: "Take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously with the wife of his youth." I might refer to the fact the Lamech, the first polygamist, was a murderer; and that the most prominent polygamists of old were men guilty of heinous crimes. And turning from the Old Testament to the New, I might quote the words of Paul, "To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband;" and the words of Christ, "From the beginning of creation, God made them male and female. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh."

But I choose to pass over all these things, and for my present purpose rest the moral character of this practice upon the assertion, already quoted from the Book of Mormon, that the polygamy and concubinage of David and Solomon were abominable before God.

No Mormon can gainsay this testimony.

In conclusion, to review what has been said. I have endeavored to show that polygamy is unreasonable, and contrary to the plain provisions and teachings of Nature; that it tends to degrade woman, and to confuse and break up the family relation, thus weakening the attachment to home and country. Other evils consequent upon this system have been pointed out. The arguments by which it is supported have been examined, and have been shown to be weak or invalid.

A word further as to the case of Abraham and Sarah. Did God sanction the polygamy of Abraham?

"Now Sarai, Abram's wife, bare him no children; and she had a handmaid, an Egyptian, whose name was Hagar. And Sarai said unto Abram, Behold, now the Lord hath restrained me from bearing; I pray thee go in unto my maid; it may be that I may obtain children by her." From this it appears that Sarah, and not God, was the author of Abraham's polygamy. She had lost all hope of having children herself, and was willing to adopt those of her handmaid. Hagar being her slave, she intended to own her children. She soon, however, perceived her fatal error. Hagar wished to assume the rights and privileges of a wife. This Sarah would not listen to for a moment.

Hagar despised her mistress, and Sarah appealed to Abraham. Abraham said, "Behold thy maid is in thy hand, do unto her as it pleaseth thee." "And Sarah dealt hardly with her, and she fled from her face." Isaac was born. The son of Hagar was seen mocking, and Sarah desired Abraham to cast him out. "And the thing was grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his son. And God said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight, because of the lad, and because of thy bond-woman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice; for in Isaac shall thy seed be called."

Again: "God tempted Abraham, saying, Take now thy son, thine only son, Isaac," etc. And again: "Thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son." For this reason God blessed Abraham, and said, "In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, or the sands on the sea-shore;" but, "in Isaac shall thy seed be called."

God thus plainly and unequivocally condemned Abrahamic polygamy, refused to recognize Ishmael as a legitimate son, and disinherited him. He thence went forth, as a cast-out bastard, whose "hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him."

Sisters in Israel! You are told that Sarah is the mother and pattern for all women. She is held up as a bright example of conjugal loyalty and faith for females—wives and mothers—of all ages. Follow, then, her example. If through a mistaken faith and false doctrines, you have been induced to give mistresses to your husbands, turn them from you; purify your homes, as Sarah did, and the same God who blessed her will bless you, and multiply your children.

Sisters in Israel! If you have been led astray by wicked and designing men, and have been caught in their snares, arise, and by the help of the Lord your God, break the bonds of wickedness, and go forth and purify yourselves by fasting and prayer; and the God who blessed Hagar in the wilderness will bless you, and show you a fountain, even the blood of Christ, which will cleanse you from all sin.

May God guide and direct the afflicted women of Utah, and speedily deliver them from their thralldom.

The practical working of polygamy is what might be expected from a system the fundamental principles of which are in direct opposition to the laws of God and man.

Mrs. Waite closed her book with a chapter of "conclusions," some of which are of interest:

Young's talent is all of a practical character—his shrewdness is ever ready to extricate him from any difficulty or emergency. As a financial and political leader, he is far superior to Joseph Smith. As a religious leader, he is much his inferior. Smith was brave; Young is cowardly. Smith was enthusiastic and impetuous, while Young is cool and calculating.

He is lamentably deficient in moral sense. No falsehood staggers him, no blasphemy shocks him. Why, then, should he hesitate at the perpetration of any crime which will conduce to the accomplishment of his life-purpose. Even the traveler Burton, his admirer and panegyrist, thus frankly expresses his doubts as to this phase of his character: "I cannot pronounce about his scrupulousness; all the world over, the sincerest religious belief, and the practice of devotion, are sometimes compatible not only with the most disorderly life, but with the most terrible crimes; for mankind mostly believes that 'Il est avec le ciel des accommodements!" He has been called hypocrite, swindler, forger, murderer. No one looks it less." This is, perhaps, true; but therein lies his hypocrisy.

We have already shown that polygamy originated in the passions and lusts of himself and followers, and was afterward reduced to a system and promulgated as part of the Mormon religion. So with other phases of the system. The Celestial Kingdom, the Grand Archee, the Prophet, the Seer, the Revelator—all tend to self and self-aggrandizement. Everything must yield and become subservient to the purposes of his unholy ambition. Principles, conscience, the moral sense, Christianity, the divine brotherhood of man, human liberty and republican institutions, the sacred associations of the home-fireside and of the family altar, all the thrilling sentiment and ennobling effect of love, the purity and fidelity of the marriage relation, all the rights of property and life, all the relations of man to God—yea, God himself, with all the machinery of Heaven and the spiritual world, including angels, spirits, and demons—are brought under contribution to this one man, and made to revolve about him—a confused constellation of chaotic elements from the mental and moral world. Neither social nor political restraint does he recognize. Setting himself above all law, human and divine, he becomes a law to himself and his deluded followers.

Among the agencies already at work to accomplish this desirable end, and to redeem Utah from her enthralment, may be mentioned the discovery of mines or precious metals, and the large influx of miners—the preaching not only of a pure Mormon faith, under the auspices of Joseph Smith, Jr.*

So There's a Man in Your Life!

By Nomie

—That's wonderful! If he's an ex-serviceman, you've more than a fifty-fifty chance of becoming his wife in the near future. It doesn't matter much if you were his childhood sweetheart, or if you met him at a "welcome home" party last week, because GI Joe has been dreaming about you from Tunisia to Tokyo and saying to himself "When this is over and I get back, I'm going to have a home! I'm going to have a house instead of a pup tent, and a bed instead of a cot, and I'm going to have hot biscuits every morning for breakfast!" If you invite him over for dinner, and he sees that you look well in a ruffled apron, the man is yours.

Weddings and honeymoons are fun, but it doesn't necessarily have to stop there. Despite the "wife frantic" and "husband disgusted" letters in Dorothy Dix' column, yours can be one of the happiest marriages in the country if you want to make it that.

Of course it helps to know a fellow's pet peeves and prejudices before you marry him, but if there wasn't time for such a quiz in your whirlwind courtship, make it a point to find out as soon as you've shaken the rice from your hair.

Begin your day right by waking him the way he prefers to be awakened. Maybe the Army has resigned him to getting up without any argument when the alarm goes off, but chances are he'll want to do a little "sleeping in" to make up for the past four years when he couldn't get by with it. First try calling him in a very sweet tone of voice at three minute intervals until you're sure this method isn't going to work, then kiss him on the forehead, turn the covers back, and gently pull him out feet first.

Have his shaving equipment and clothes laid out for him in the bathroom, and hide the morning paper until he has finished his breakfast. Always give your husband a compliment on his good looks and sweet disposition while you're beaming at him across the breakfast table. This will nourish his ego, aid his digestion, and serve as competition for any other feminine flattery he may receive during the day.

Don't, as any good book of charm will tell you, neglect your own appearance, even if it means getting up half an hour earlier to glamorize yourself. Be as well groomed as the women he'll see at work and on the bus.

Evenings may present a problem . . . especially if you work too. Make your meals attractive, center the menu around his favorite foods and get it on the table as soon as possible. He may be one of the rare species of husbands that will volunteer to help; more likely he will sink in the nearest chair and become obscure behind the evening paper. Somewhere between the editorial and sport page, he will voice a plea for you to hurry . . . that he's slowly starving! Don't, however, be surprised or unhappy if he has to finish reading several columns of something or other after you announce that dinner is waiting; he's not being mean . . . just masculine.

Ask him about his work—if it were pleasant or hectic, and be glad or sympathetic as the occasion demands. Tell him the bright spots of your day, and then tell him that the best part of it is—being with him.

If it was a good meal, he will be sleepy immediately after he finishes his dessert, so you tell him to take a nap while you clean up the dishes.

The next few hours are what really determine whether or not yours is the happy marriage. If he likes to go out, and you're yearning for a nice quiet evening at home, it's painful but wise to don your best dress, a dash of "Chantilly," and smilingly say, "I'd love to go see the Millers!" After all, it's bet-

Zion's League Activities in South Australia

By Isobel Speed

Note: This letter and picture were not meant for publication, and same as correspondence from the writer to her friend in America, Virginia Lee Chandler of Manson, Washington. The letter was sent by Virginia's mother, Mrs. J. M. Chandler, who wrote: "Enclosed is the letter a young Australian sister wrote to my daughter. It's so full of Zion's League and young people's affairs, she thought it would be very interesting to have it put in the Herald so our Zion's League members here could see what is being done there. I am sure this young sister won't mind having it published." . . . Wynne and Barbara are not otherwise identified, except as friends of Isobel. They make a pretty trio. The poem is something that just happened in the office, inspired by the picture.—Editors.

Isobel, Wynne, and Barbara

Dear Virginia

It has been some time since I received your welcome letter of August 1 . . . only fourteen days before V. P. Day. I must apologize for having neglected to reply to you, but so many things are happening all the time that usually letters are left. I was glad to hear that your brother had been home on leave, and hope that he'll soon be home to stay. It's good to know that we've really won the war at last, and the boys will soon all be home.

Zion's League and other church activities are progressing in Adelaide. I read with interest the account you wrote of your July 29 services. I hope your League goes on singing the Alma Mater and climbing to the tops of hills just as our League is doing. We have many activities here; what with schoolwork and church work, life is crammed full.

Between October 19 and 28 we held a "youth week." The two Leagues—the junior and senior—combined and were split into two houses. The Burtons, with blue and white for their colors were captained by Roma Jones, and the Wandells, with red and blue, chose me for their captain. The names, Burton and Wandell, were chosen because they were the first missionaries ever to come to Australia. On Friday night, October 19, we held a hobby and flower show. Parents and friends were invited. Prizes were not allotted for hobbies as they were for flowers. The flower show was divided into several groups; we won third place.

We held a parent-Leaguer tea on Saturday, after which we took a boat trip to New Zealand. Oh, it wasn't really a trip . . . we merely waved the magic wand and changed the hall into a ship, the "Gospel Messenger," the stage into a Maori home, our missionary, Floyd Potter, into a Maori chieftain, and five other girls and I were his daughters. We gave a program, singing Maori songs, playing Maori games, and telling Maori stories until everyone knew all about the Maoris.

The next morning we arose at dawn to hike up in the hills for an early morning prayer service. It was a lovely meeting.

HERE in the picture you will see Three young friends, meant for poetry—

Barbara, Wynne, and Isobel.

Have they a secret they won't tell—
Of how, in spite of storm and stress,
To keep unspoiled life's happiness?
Your hearts seem light as tarantara,
Isobel, Wynne, and Barbara.
Thanks to you for looking in,
Barbara, Isobel, and Wynne!

On the following week end we sponsored a literary program. There was a debate, impromptu speeches, and formally prepared speeches. The "Burtons" beat us hands down, but still we had an excellent evening. On Sunday we had a worship service with the theme "This Is My Task." That night we concluded our youth week with Brother Floyd Potter's sermon on youth.

I hope I haven't bored you with all this—I thought you might be interested as you said in your letter that you would be going to a youth conference.

I must close now, wishing you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, and may God bless you.

Your friend,
Isobel.

Worship Suggestions for March

By Thelona D. Stevens

(These thoughts are suggestive only and in every case should be adapted to the local needs, according to the various age groups which may use them. Make use of only the materials which may stimulate the spirit of worship, enlarging upon or simplifying them according to the need.)

Theme for the Month:

THE CALL FOR GENERAL CONFERENCE PREPARATION

Theme Appreciation:

Since this is the month prior to another great general conference, it is fitting that our worship should be centered on preparation for this important event. The call to "Prayer," to "Come," to "Learn," to "Go," and to "Teach," applies to all, whether it be possible to attend the conference in person, or only in spirit. God will bless the church commensurate with the desires and longings of his people. He can meet us only as we prepare to meet him.

"THE CALL TO PRAYER"

Prelude: "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art," Saints' Hymnal, 133.

Call to Worship:

O thou who hearest every heartfelt prayer,
With thy rich grace, Lord, all our hearts prepare;

Thou art our life, thou art our love and light,
O let this Sabbath hour with thee be bright.

Hymns from which selections may be made for congregational singing:

- "I Need Thee Every Hour," 314.
- "O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go," 285.
- "One Hour With Jesus," 325.
- "More Love to Thee, O Christ," 284.
- "One Sweet Hour With Jesus Every Day," 318.
- "Did You Think to Pray?" 327.
- "Let Us Pray for One Another," 311.

Scripture Readings:

"Watch and pray ye, that ye enter not into temptation."—Matthew 26: 41.

"I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting."—I Timothy 2: 8.

"Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed."—3 Nephi 8: 52.

"Humble yourselves and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him in your fields . . . over your flocks . . . in your houses . . ."—Alma 16: 219.

"Thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart, yea, before the world as well as in secret; in public as well as in private."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4.

"Evening and morning, and at noon will I pray and cry aloud; and he shall hear my voice."—Psalm 55: 17.

Prayer Thought: (This thought does not take the place of a prayer, but is suggested as the central theme of the prayer.)

As the quorum of the church meet during this period of preparation for the conference, may they be especially blessed and directed in the affairs of God's kingdom on earth. May we, too, make special preparation for that great gathering of God's people through fasting and prayer, diligently seeking to purify our lives in order that our prayers may avail much.

Meditation and Picture Appreciation:

As we study the attitude of our Savior in prayer to the Father, we are reminded that Jesus' perfect example is our own to follow.

All those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there,
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who cannot say:
"Not mine, but thine;" who only pray:
"Let this cup pass," and cannot see
The purpose of Gethsemane.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Dear Lord, upon my knees I ask
For strength to do each given task;
For graciousness of heart and mind
To be not only just, but kind;
For hope that sees through blinding tears
The mystery beyond the years;
For faith that ever stronger grows
Like his, in spite of anguished woes;
For courage that will make me sing
No matter what the harsh days bring.
For these things, Lord, I ask. Amen.
—Edgar Daniel Kramer.

The steel that has suffered most is the best steel. It has been in the furnace again and again; it has been on the anvil; it has been tight in the jaws of the vise; it has felt the teeth of the rasp; it has been ground by emery; it has been heated and hammered and filed until it does not know itself, and it comes out a splendid knife.

If we only realized it, what we think of as misfortunes are often God's best blessings, for they are the influences which mold us and give us durability and power.

"In the silences I make in the midst of the turmoil of life I have appointments with God. From these silences I come forth refreshed, and with a renewed sense of power. I hear a voice in the silences, and become increasingly aware that it is the voice of God."—David Brainerd.

AMERICA'S NEED

"We do not need more national development; we need more spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power; we need more spiritual power. We do not need more knowledge; we need more character. We do not need more law; we need more religion. We do not need more of the things that are seen; we need more of the things that are unseen."—Calvin Coolidge.

The Lord has told us how his purposes will be fulfilled in us:

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zechariah 4: 6.

Let us bow our heads in a moment of silent, fervent prayer that God's might and power be exerted for his kingdom at the coming conference, as a means of helping us to build Zion.

Solo Selections:

"Beautiful Garden of Prayer," (Sheet Music).

"The Lord's Prayer," Saints' Hymnal, 315.

March 10, 1946

"THE CALL TO COME"

Prelude:

"Come, O Come, Sweet Comforter," or "Come, Gracious Spirit," 194.

Call to Worship:

The voice of God is calling
Its summons unto men;
As once he spoke in Zion,
So now he speaks again.

"Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness . . . and love God with all your might, mind and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you."—Moroni 10: 29.

Hymns from which selections may be made for congregational singing:

- "Come Ye Apart," 108.
- "Come Ye Yourselves Apart and Rest a While," 112.
- "Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly," 258.
- "Come Unto Me, Ye Weary," 329.
- "Come Ye That Love the Lord," 5.
- "Come, Tell the Story of His Love," 286.
- "Come, Let Us Anew Our Journey Pursue," 433.

"Admonition," by Joseph Luff.

Responsive Readings: (By two individuals)

The Call: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden,

The Promise: "And I will give you rest.

The Call: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me:

The Promise: "And ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Matthew 12: 28, 29.

The Call: "Incline your ear, and come unto me:

The Promise: "And I will make an everlasting covenant with you."—Isaiah 55: 3.

The Call: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 40.

The Promise: "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."—John 6: 47.

The Call: "Labour not for meat which perisheth, but for the meat which endureth."—John 6: 27.

The Promise: "He that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst."—John 6: 35.

The Call: "No man can come unto me, except he doeth the will of my Father.

The Promise: "He who receiveth the testimony, and doeth the will of Him who sent me, I will raise up in the resurrection of the just."—John 6: 44, Inspired Version.

The Call: "Whosoever will come, may come, and partake of the waters of life freely: And whosoever will not come, the same is not compelled to come;

The Promise: ". . . in the last day it shall be restored unto him, according to his deeds."—Alma 19: 110.

The Call:

"Love ye me and love all people—
Love as I have loved you;
This your calling—this my purpose—
Thus be my disciples true.

The Promise:

"Then in this exalted station
Your companion I will be:
Every promise of my scriptures
Will be verified in thee.

The Call:

"Take ye, then, my hand extended—
Let me lead you where I will;

The Promise:

"Peace and safety, light and glory,
Crown the crest of Zion's hill.

The Call:

"Up ye then, to the high places
I have bid you occupy!

The Warning:

"Peril waits upon the heedless!
Grace upon the souls who trv."
—Admonition.

The Call is to all: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Congregational pledge:

O Lord and Master of us all,
Whate'er our name or sign
We own thy sway, we hear thy call,
We test our lives by Thine.
—Whittier.

Lord of our lives,
We come to thee this hour
To dedicate our all
To the unfinished task
Which is before us.
—Etelka White.

Closing Hymn:

"Oh, come to my heart, Lord Jesus,
There is room in my heart for thee."
—Saints' Hymnal, 154.

March 17

"THE CALL TO LEARN"

Worship Center: The Three Standard Books, arranged with candles.

Prelude: "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel," 121.

Call to Worship:

"Come—Learn!"
So said my Lord to me!
And long I tarried in his school
That I his truth might see."
—Ernest Bourner Allen.

Hymns from which selections may be made for congregational singing:

"Teach Me What Thou Wouldst Have Me Do," 305.

"Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly," 258.

"Take Time to Be Holy," 322.

"My Redeemer and My Lord," 158.

"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," 213.

Scripture Readings:

"Learn to do well."—Isaiah 1: 17.

"Teach me thy way, O Lord."—Psalm 27: 11.

"Instruct me how to carry out thy law, and I will keep it with all my heart."—Psalm 119: 34, Moffatt Translation.

"Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants, 85: 36.

"Study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

"... hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom."—Job 33: 33.

Sermonette Thoughts:

No one would care to ride in an automobile that had no steering wheel. Just so in our lives we need a "steering" purpose. An automobile is of no use unless the driver can make it go in the direction he chooses. We are of no use to God who made us, unless we go in the direction he would have us go. The auto is subject to the driver; each individual can steer his life in the path he chooses, but God is happy when we choose to make ourselves subject to him. Just as there are roads and signposts to direct drivers of cars, so there are roads and signposts to help us steer our lives. These are in God's word. God does not force them on us, but as we try, we learn. Minds, like parachutes, function only when they are open.

The preparation Frederick M. Smith made to fit himself for his work—The Story of the Church.

Meditations:

(To be read by some good reader, while soft music is played.)

Oh, Master Teacher,
We have come to learn of thee,
And lo, you have Challenged every inch of us
To higher, loftier, nobler ideals.
—Etelka White.

Father, teach us day by day
How to serve in some new way:
May our actions ever be Done in reverence, Lord, to thee.
—L. V. A.

"By looking to Jesus, like him thou shalt be; Thy friends in thy conduct his likeness shall see."

Wisdom is the ability to use knowledge so as to meet successfully the emergencies of life. Men may acquire knowledge, but wisdom is a gift direct from God. God, grant us wisdom to see Jesus as he is revealed to us in thy Word, and by thy Spirit.

We would see Jesus, Mary's Son most holy,
Light of the village life from day to day; While birds and flowers and sky above are preaching
The Christ of God, the Life, the Truth, the Way.

We would see Jesus on the mountain teaching
With all the people gathered round;
While birds and flowers and sky above are preaching
The blessedness which simple trust has found.
Saints' Hymnal, 155.

My dear Redeemer and my Lord,
I read my duty n thy word;
But in thy life the law appears
Drawn out in living characters.

Be thou my pattern, make me bear
More of thy gracious image here;
Then God, the Judge, shall own my name
Among the followers of the Lamb.
Saints' Hymnal, 158.

Closing Hymn:

"Savior, Teach Me Day by Day," 338.

March 21

"THE CALL TO GO"

Prelude:

"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations,"
Saints' Hymnal, 397.

Call to Worship:

Go labor on, spend and be spent,
Thy joy to do the Father's will;
It is the way the Master went,
Should not the servant tread it still?
—C. K. Ober.

Hymns from which selections may be made for congregational singing:

"A Charge to Keep I Have," 201.

"Send Forth the Sowers," 390.

"The Whole Wide World for Jesus," 391.

"Lead On, O King Eternal," 181.

"Send Me Forth," 214.

"I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," 292.

Scripture Readings:

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16: 15.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations."—Matthew 28: 19.

"Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"—Luke 2: 49.

Consecration of Offerings:

Our Father, we are happy to join with thousands of others of our faith in bringing to the altar our gifts. May our giving symbolize our desire to help carry thy word into all lands and to all people. Consecrate these gifts to the spreading of thy kingdom, we pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

Inspirational Readings:

GOD'S WILL: THE PLACE OF SAFETY

"Is it safe to work among the lepers?" was asked Sam Higginbottom of India, whose missionary service has been so blessed to the outcasts whom Christ asked us to remember and heal. "Yes," was the answer, "it is safer to work among the lepers, if it's my job, than to work anywhere else."

The Son of Man goes forth today,
The rights of man to win;
With steadfast heart he leads the way
To bring the kingdom in.
He sees his brothers in distress,
With sorrow, want, and pain—
He goes to bear, their wrongs redress—
Who follows in his train?

To millions yet enslaved by greed,
Whose hopes are broken—dead—
He goes to meet their every need—
He bears the living bread;
He sees the toll oppression takes
Of body, soul, and brain.
A slumbering world his challenge wakes—
Who follows in his train?

Who always hear and truly heed
The cries of want and pain;
Who bind and heal the wounds that bleed,
Nor dream of sordid gain;
Who rightly guide the steps of youth;
Who make the rough ways plain;
Who always stand for right and truth—
They follow in his train.
—Elbert W. Wells.

A famous psychologist points out that the first step toward success is to have a chief aim, or a mark toward which to work. When a man has a mark to work toward, there is a sparkle in his eye and zest in his step. He knows where he is going and he is on his way. His mind is inspired by an ideal. His energy is focused on a goal.

Paul said, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 3: 14.

Onward I go, O Lord;
On Zion's way;
Ready to meet the call,
Of each new day.
New frontiers beckon me,
Known but to thee;
And as I go, I'll pray,
"Lord, lead thou me."
—C. H. S.

Prayer Thought:

(This thought does not take the place of a prayer, but is suggested as the central theme of the prayer.)

We earnestly pray:
That thou wilt keep us steadfast to our vision . . .

That thou wilt forgive our past neglect and unpreparedness for a holy task,

That thou wilt bless the work of our hearts, heads, and hands,

That we may go forth in thy name and win souls for thee.

Re-consecration:

O God, who worketh hitherto, working in all we see,

Fain would we be and bear to do, as best it pleases thee.

Our skill of hand, our strength of limb, are not our own, but thine.

We link them with the work of him who made all life divine.

Where'er thou sendest we will go, nor any question ask,

And what thou biddest we will do, whatever be the task.

—Unknown.

Closing Hymn:

"I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," 292, or "I Gave My Life for Thee," 330.

March 28

"THE CALL TO TEACH"

Prelude:

"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee, Saints' Hymnal, 213.

Call to Worship:

Oh, teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

—Saints' Hymnal, 215.

Hymns from which selections may be made for congregational singing:

"Thou Must Be True Thyself," 300.

"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," 213.

"Lord, Speak to Me, That I May Speak," 215.

"A Charge to Keep I Have," 201.

Scripture Readings:

"And I give unto you a commandment, that you teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom, teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you . . . teach one another words of wisdom . . . learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, 36, 38.

Challenging Thought:

The late President Roosevelt said, shortly before his death: "I wish we might have in this country a general revival of religion."

Governor Thomas E. Dewey writes: "There never was a time when it was more necessary that children be instructed and strengthened in the faith of their fathers." And Clare Booth Luce says, "As in the medieval dark ages, Christianity is again the hope of the world."

Here is a task we all can do something about. We can begin with ourselves; we can continue with our children, and then we can reach out to our neighbors and to our neighbors' children. It is a never-ending chain—but the first link must be forged in our own hearts.

I have to live with myself, and so
I would be fit for myself to know.
I want to be able as days go by
Always to look myself straight in the eye;
I don't want to stand in the setting sun
And hate myself for the things I've done.
—Selected.

A father and his small son walked along a road together. Approaching a very muddy place, the father took the lead, taking long steps. Having crossed the muddy strip, the little boy said proudly, "See, Daddy, I stepped in every one of your footsteps."

Two little ears can hear a lot,
So think before you say
The smallest thing you wouldn't want
To hear again some day.

Two little eyes can see a lot,
And everything you do
By some small someone, some day will Most surely be done, too.

Tonight the little lad that waits
To climb upon your knee,
The man you used to be.
Naomi Schwensen.

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have."
—Abraham Lincoln.

Petition:

O Great Maker of this thy great sun,
Give me the strength this one day's race to run.

Fill me with light, fill me with sun-like strength,

Fill me with joy to rob the day of length;
Light from within, light that will outward shine;

Strength to make strong some weaker heart than mine.

Joy to make glad each soul that feels its touch;
Great Father of the sun, I ask this much.

—James Weldon Johnson.

Pledge:

O Lord of life, to thee we kneel;
Maker of men, our purpose seal!
We will, for honor of Thy name,
Pass on the torch, pass on the flame.
—Allen E. Cross.

So There's a Man In Your Life!

ter to be bored in someone else's house, than to have your husband bored at home. If the situation is reversed and you're wanting to visit the relatives, while he much prefers to retire early . . . well, it's better for you to go to sleep at home, than to have him fall asleep at Aunt Mary's.

If your husband suddenly develops an ailment, don't fail to recognize its seriousness and give him all due attention. If it's a cold, a toothache, or a catch in his back, administer all the first aid and sympathy you can muster up. Don't get upset if he groans . . . it's only an expression of appreciation for your treatment, and a request for continued application.

Strive to keep your husband happy at all times—it will pay off for both of you. No problem is ever so grievous that you can't find something about it worth a good laugh. Nothing does as much to make the wheels of matrimony run smoothly as laughter. Once you get in the habit of seeing the funny side of your "trials and tribulations," it isn't likely you'll ever let them get you down.

In addition to all these virtues, there is the climaxing requisite for any wife . . . common sense. Don't think your marrying the man will reform him. If he was a temperamental and eccentric bachelor, you can count on his being the same kind of husband. If he liked wine, women, and song before the ceremony, he'll not be changing his tastes greatly afterwards. Regardless of his shortcomings, you can always think of a dozen other things he could do that would make you more unhappy, and in view of the fact that he does have a lot of admirable qualities, and you love him very much . . . you're a pretty lucky woman after all.

Every personal experience puts us in tune with those who have had similar experiences. "I had no idea that so many men had broken their arms until I suffered a broken arm," said a friend. Whatever pains and aches and accidents and troubles we may have, others have also had them. James Boswell wrote: "It is not easy to make allowance for sensations in others, which we ourselves have not had at the time. We must all have experienced how very differently we are affected by the complaints of our neighbors, when we are well and when we are ill. In full health, we can scarcely believe they suffered much; so faint is the image of pain upon our imagination: when softened by sickness, we readily sympathize with the sufferings of others."

Quarterlies for Church School

Ordering Your Quarterlies—Some Quarterlies Wanted

By C. B. Hartshorn

We believe that the church school workers wish to co-operate with their publishing house and will do so when they understand conditions. Therefore, we are appealing through the Herald for a better understanding of one of the serious problems confronting the publishers in meeting the needs of the church for lesson materials.

ORDERING AND USING

We shall present the situation as it effects the junior department to illustrate the condition of which we speak. In the catalogue of supplies for church school the current quarterly is called Course A, "Finding God Through Ancient Peoples." In the larger schools, where classes are formed on age grade levels, the ten-year-olds, or second-year juniors, would use Course B, "Choosing to Live as Jesus Lived"; while the eleven-year-olds, or third-year juniors, would use Course C, "Telling the Gospel Story." A very small quantity of Course B and Course C should therefore supply the schools for this year's use, if this plan were followed. Actually the orders coming in call for about as many Course B as Course A, and this is exhausting our supply.

What makes our problem even more difficult is that both Course B and Course C are to be replaced by new ones within the next year or two. Therefore, it is undesirable to reprint these quarterlies now to take care of a few schools. Unless 3,000 or more copies are printed at each issue, the Herald Publishing House cannot afford to sell the quarterlies at the advertised prices.

QUARTERLIES NEEDED

We are anticipating the need of 400 additional copies of the third quarter, Course B, (Q-323) "Jesus' Friends Carry On." This quarterly has been in use two years, and many copies may be found in a usable condition which will meet the needs of the schools that would otherwise be denied the opportunity of continuing this course. We are, therefore, appealing to church school leaders, junior department superintendents, and teachers to collect all of these quarterlies they can find and send them to us. You will be allowed the full value, 20c, which will be credited, if you have an account, or sent to you in cash. Your co-operation in this emergency will be greatly appreciated. Please mail those you can spare at once to Herald Publishing House, Adjustment Department.

We hope you will try to get in step with the course cycle throughout all the grades as soon as possible. Remember the A course is current for the year ending September, 1946. Don't forget the proverb about "the early bird . . ."

wife, than to be rejected. If you leave your family, you will know someday, too, what it is to be rejected.

To the Wife

Never give up the just claim you have to this man's life and companionship until he makes the last step of desertion. Never turn him over to this other woman, who has no right to him. This is an outrage in which you are not obliged to agree. You and your children have rights that cannot be abrogated by any passing desire. Do not make it easy for him. Keep him from this sin as long as you can.

Remember, too, that there may be reasons for this defection. Perhaps you have loved the children too much, and him too little. Perhaps you have some faults that can be overcome, once you learn what they are. The old foundations of your home life were not secure enough—you would not be facing this situation if they were. Find what is wrong, and build new and stronger foundations. It is not too late. Listless companionship, inattention, lack of love, can destroy a home. Face your life honestly and try to make it better. Pray about this too, as well as for his return.

Faithfulness

There are many fine qualities in people, but they are all canceled if a person is not faithful to his trust. There are many faults, too, but they can be corrected if a person tries first to be true to his word and his contract. There is nothing in life more important than faithfulness.

L. L.

Notice to Reporters

A newly-elected reporter recently wrote for rules on writing news articles. Here they are—perhaps you'd like to read them too:

1. Church news should be headed with the name (city and state) of the branch, and the name of the pastor.

2. It should be written in third person; do not use "I" and "we." Avoid personal comment and editorialism.

3. An article every two months is a good average. It should include speakers, special musical numbers, social events, League activities, plays and entertainments, baptisms, blessings, and any other events worthy of publicity. Engagements, weddings, and obituaries will be printed in the Bulletin Board section of the "Herald." Lists of visitors, other than guest speakers or returning servicemen, will not be used.

4. Lengthy repetitions of what the minister said in his sermon cannot be printed because of the limited amount of space.

5. News should be typed (double-space) if possible, or written in ink. In hand writing, and especially in spelling names, watch the "a's," "o's," "u's," and "n's"; they are easily misinterpreted.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Chatham, Ontario

Pastor, H. A. Engle

A very impressive junior League candlelight service was held Friday evening, December 14. Christmas carols were sung and after the hymn, "Walk in the Light," the opening prayer was offered by John Bowman. During the singing of another hymn, the lights were gradually turned out and following the scripture reading by Virginia Clements, the story of "The Sacred Flame" was told by Mildred Hodgson; she concluded with the poem, "There Was a King in Nazareth." With a quiet musical background by Audrey Steinhoff, each Leaguer lighted, from a large, central candle, his own white candle, symbolic of the light of Christ. The hymn, "Take My Life and Let It Be" was sung, after which John Bowman gave a brief sermonette. The service concluded with the singing of "Just as I Am," and a benediction.

A special ordination service was held Sunday evening, December 16. Three young men were ordained; Harold Neal to the office of elder, John Bowman and Paul Wood to the office of priest. Elder V. E. Pritchard outlined the responsibility that is attached to holding the priesthood and Elder J. F. Kelly spoke to the three to be ordained, pointing out the importance of the step they were taking. After each young man was ordained, he took his place with the local priesthood on the rostrum. They were charged by Elder H. A. Engle, as he said that they must all know the necessity of a unity of purpose in the work that has been set forth by God. Following a few minutes of silent meditation, "The Lord Is My Shepherd" was sung by William Clarke. As general church representative and pastor, Elder Engle welcomed these three young men into the fellowship of the priesthood of God, after which those of the local priesthood offered their hands in welcome.

The annual branch Christmas entertainment was held Thursday night, December 20. There was truly a "white Christmas" atmosphere as the eyes of the juniors shone in anticipation of Saint Nick's visit. Christmas carols were sung and the program by the juniors was varied and interesting. The Christmas tree ablaze with lights was heavily laden, and each child received a bag of fruit, nuts and candy.

This year a special gift was made to the Saints in Norway, Sweden, and Holland. The gifts consisted of warm clothing, nonperishable foodstuffs, and money to cover the cost of shipping. Three large boxes were packed and on Sunday, December 23, at 11 o'clock, the church school met with the junior church as they presented their special Christmas worship service. The story, "Why the Chimes Rang," was told by Helen Kelly, assisted by a girl's choir composed of Betty Rapley, Mizpah Wood, Vivian Gibson, Darlene Clarke, and Ila Aitken, with Audrey Steinhoff at the piano. Those taking part in the nativity setting were George Birkby, Bernice Cudney, David Aitken, J. D. Wood, Dick Moor, J. D. Hodgson, Maurice Cudney, and Lyle Gibson. Church school director, Elder J. F. Kelly, then gave a few remarks on the spirit of giving which is made so manifest at the Christmas season and called upon three juniors, Dick Wood, Jimmy Hodgson, and Dorothy Baker, to each bring his gift to the altar, symbolizing the gift being made to Norway, Sweden and Holland. Thanks are extended to the Chatham Saints for their splendid co-operation in this fine, unselfish spirit of giving.

At 7 o'clock a Christmas worship service arranged by the pastor was presented in drama and song. The choral members were directed by Elder Harold Neal, with solo parts taken by William Clarke, Doris Brown, Helen Kelly, and Gladys Ferguson. The drama was in charge of Mildred Hodgson; those taking part in the beautiful nativity story as told by the soldier, Paul Wood, to a 1945 unsettled and confused world, were Virginia Clements, Gordon Pritchard, Kay Cushman, Clarence Moor, George Birkby, Bill Rapley, J. D. Wood, Les Smith, Bud Wood, Ed Talbot, Wilburt Canniff, Betty Rapley, Darlene Clarke, and Vivian Gibson.

On January 1 at 4 P. M. the strains of "The Old, Old Path" once again ushered in a half-hour broadcast over station CFCO. This New Year's program from the church was the first to be broadcast in several years, and the response to it was quite favorable. Pastor Harry Engle gave a New Year message, and the choir sang several numbers. Soloists were Elder Harold Neal and Gladys Ferguson. Marnie Neal was at the organ, and Elder Vern Pritchard was the announcer.

At the 11 A. M. service on Sunday, January 6, Peggy Diana Gayle, baby daughter of James William and Alice Roten was blessed by her great great-uncle, Elder R. H. Jones, who was assisted by the pastor.

Elder Albert Scherer preached at the 7 o'clock service, using as his text, "Hold fast to that which is good." At this service the choir, under the direction of Elder Harold Neal, presented the anthem, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought."

On Tuesday evening, January 8, choir members gathered at the home of Helen and James Kelly for a farewell party for Harold and Marnie Neal. A carved, walnut table was presented to them as a small tribute of thanks for the fine work they had done while in Chatham branch. Elder Neal's work in the musical field has been felt not only in Chatham branch, but throughout the district. He was responsible for many music festivals, special concerts, classes and services. Marnie Neal did a splendid job at the piano and organ; her talents were evident not only in the musical department, but also in the junior church, as under her supervision this department grew.

Chatham branch has been represented at the universal week of prayer services. The choir was in attendance on Wednesday, January 9, and Elder Harry Engle assisted at the service on Friday, January 11.

Portsmouth, Virginia

Pastor, E. W. Lewis

New Year's Eve was celebrated with a watch party and a farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Kearny who are returning to their home in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Servicemen who have received discharges recently are Ralph Turner, Alfred Ford, and William J. Davies, Jr. Many servicemen stationed in Virginia became a part of the Portsmouth congregation during the war years. Most of these men and their families have left, but two very ardent workers still remain; these are Paul Stoff, who is serving as young people's leader, and Lyle Steede, who has often been granted special leave so that he might be able to attend services in his own church.

The young women of the branch are doing commendable work in the musical department. Mary Ann Dillon is responsible for the success of many entertainments; her character sketches are always the high light of a program.

Possibilities for a new church building are being given serious consideration.

—William J. Davies, reporter.

Flint, Michigan

Pastor, Harry J. Simons

October 21 was Rally Day for the Flint branch; the previous week was celebrated as visitation week. Each home was visited with excellent results; there was a large increase in attendance.

The Zion's League Halloween party was a decided success. The forty-nine that attended wore masks and costumes. They had a treasure hunt and visited several homes, finally arriving at the Newall Street church where the party was concluded with games and lunch.

Visiting speakers at the Flint churches during the past few weeks have been Elders Chesworth and John Booth, who attended the religious education conference; each delivered a very inspiring sermon to the two congregations. Elders Muir and Ledsworth of Port Huron, Elder Davis of Pontiac, Elder Shufelt of Detroit, and Elder Brockway of Ann Arbor were also guest speakers.

There have been two very impressive baptismal services held in the Flint branch recently. On November 11 Betty Palmer was baptized by Pastor H. J. Simons and confirmed by Elders Slater and Youngs. On December 9 Harland Reed was baptized by Associate Pastor A. Slater and later confirmed by Elders Simons and Slater.

In November the Central women's group served an excellent chicken supper which was well attended. Proceeds of $78 were turned over to the building fund.

About 125 members and friends assembled at the Newall Street church for a service at 9:45 on Thanksgiving morning. In a beautiful service of song and praise, Millet's The Angelus served as an appropriate worship center.

The women's department, with Muriel DuRose as leader, held its annual bazaar on Friday, December 7. Each of the four groups sponsored a booth. Each had a good supply of fancywork, aprons, and baby clothes for sale, as well as baked goods. They were assisted by the Variety Club, Tuesday Club, and boy scouts. Ice cream and cake was available all day, a lunch was served at noon and a dinner in the evening. Proceeds of $453.00 were turned over to the building fund.

At the 11 o'clock service on Sunday, December 9, nine babies were blessed. They were Patricia and Michael Hutson, Jane Bacon, Keith and Kaye Ketzler, Peggy Sutherland, Donna and Carol Baker, and Darlene Joy Bon. Elders officiating were G. Stickley, W. Kapnick, A. DuRose, H. Simons, A. Slater, and C. Youngs. On the preceding Sunday, Elders Kapnick and Slater officiated in the blessing of Robert Earl Dennis and Eunice Kaye Corkins.

On the evening of December 30, the two local congregations united to hear District President L. O. Brockway preach the final sermon of the old year. Elders Stickley and Simons officiated in blessing baby Michael Anderson. Max Anderson, the father, was home on furlough for Christmas.

J. J. Ledsworth, district missionary supervisor, and Pastor H. J. Simons have been visiting among church members in near-by communities. As a result of this work, a mission will be opened in Fenton on January 13 in the home of Priest W. J. Bennetts.

Several servicemen have been discharged. Plans are being made for a branch-wide "welcome home" banquet in January.

Branch financial observance day will be held January 20. All are invited to file their inventories and annual financial statements. The district bishop's agent, J. N. Muir, is to participate in the day's activities. With payment of over $7,700.00 tithing in 1945, both congregations in the branch exceeded their quota.

Betty Sears and Onalee Surbrooks, who are attending Graceland College, and Mary Lou Denman, in training at the Sanitarium, were home for the holidays.

Fresno, California

Pastor, E. E. Workman

The Zion's League went to General Grant's National Park for a picnic lunch and tobogganing in the snow Thanksgiving Day.

Evangelist Albert Carmichael preached to the Fresno Saints at the morning and evening services on November 25 and 28. He also gave the sermon on December 2.

On the afternoon of Sunday, December 2, the women's department held a meeting for the election of officers for the coming year.

Sunday morning, December 23, at the 11 o'clock hour, the children's department presented a Christmas program for the branch; the Zion's League gave a play in the evening.

Elder David Elliot, pastor of the Mosto, California, branch, spoke at the evening service on December 30. He was formerly a member of the Fresno congregation.

The Zion's League sponsored a pot luck supper for the branch on New Year's Eve.

Several servicemen have returned from overseas and are again contributing to the work of the church. Among those who have returned are Joseph Kraschel, Archie Fugate, Lewis Roberts, Edward Kaiser, Vincent Contresano, and Clarence Kniveton.

—Joseph Fugate, reporter.

Dallas, Texas

Pastor, Clyde F. Hastings

The children's department presented the Christmas story in song and recitation on December 23. At 11 o'clock, Pastor Clyde F. Hastings gave the Christmas sermon, using for his text, "Christ the Savior Unto the Shepherds." The choir sang carols.

Under the direction of Merle Hallenberger, the choir presented Wessel's cantata, Noel. The soloists were Constance Borders, Elaine Henderson, Merle Hallenberger, and Elizabeth Maxwell. The trio was composed of Mamie Dallas, Clyde Hastings, and Martha Marsh. Alma Estes was the pianist.

A branch Christmas party was sponsored by the League. A tree loaded with gifts and treats was the outstanding attraction; games and stunts served to enliven the evening.

Speakers for the month of December were W. F. Page, H. E. Davenport, R. F. Moore, Clyde Hastings, and H. E. Williams.

Verna Livingston, leader of the women's department, reports that nearly $200 was cleared from the rummage sale and Christmas bazaar. The women meet twice each month for a devotional. They have selected "Christian Graces" for their theme. The yearbook is made up so that each woman will know the meeting place, hostess, and one in charge of the devotional. Each member has an appointed date to talk on a particular Christian grace. Mrs. A. Busch and Mrs. Forest Wilson, who with their families are leaving the state, were given a handkerchief shower before they left. These two women had served the branch as secretary and treasurer.

Wayne Everett has returned after twenty-seven months in the Pacific theater.

Lillian Maxwell, who is attending the University of Texas, was home for the holidays.

Stone Church

Pastor, G. E. Tickemyer

Apostle D. T. Williams Speaks

Apostle D. T. Williams presented his sermon on "The Atomic Age" to a capacity congregation of 1,088 on January 13 at the 11 o'clock service. Pastor G. E. Tickemyer presided, with C. W. Clark assisting.

Blue Bird Award Service

Eighty-eight of the 125 girls participating in the Blue Bird award service held Sunday evening, January 13, received a total of 100 awards. Elder John Darling delivered the address, assisted by Pastors G. E. Tickemyer and Glaude A. Smith.

Zion-Wide Prayer Services

Evangelist Ray Whiting is in charge of the Zion-wide prayer services held each Sunday afternoon at 2:30 P. M.

A New Choir

The first meeting of the newly organized Stone Church youth choir was held Thursday afternoon, January 17. This choir made up largely of high school students, will sing regularly at the 8:15 A. M. preaching service to be inaugurated on the second Sunday in February.

Memorial Flowers

The white gladioli placed before the pulpit January 13 by Ina Hattey were in memory of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Hattey.

F. M. McDowell In Sanitarium

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell underwent a major operation at the Independence Sanitarium on January 10. He is reported doing well.

Parent's Club

The Stone Church parent's club held its monthly meeting Monday night, January 14, at Bartholomew Hall. Mrs. Ralph Harder, the president, presided.

John Darling of the Department of Religious Education was the speaker. He presented some advanced views in church and home relationship and emphasized some unused suggestions presented in the past. He stressed the need of organized visitors which would systematically tie up church school and home relationships for more complete cooperation and understanding. The dedication of a new home, grace at meals, regular church attendance, worship in the home, prayer and fasting for the success of these objectives were some of the points Brother Darling discussed in his address. In closing, questions were invited. Refreshments were served by the social committee of the evening.

Independence Music Club

Artists of the Independence Music Club gave a program at their meeting on January 9. Participants were Mrs. Earl Short, pianist; Mrs. E. C. Harrington, soprano, with Mrs. Clayton Wolfe as accompanist; Mrs. John R. Green and Mrs. Paul N. Craig, piano-duo; Mrs. George Miller, soloist, accompanied by Pearl Roemer Kelley; Mrs. Frank Prell, violinist, with Mrs. George Gee as accompanist; and Mrs. L. F. P. Curry, soprano, with Mrs. Vera Thomason accompanying. Garland Tickemyer discussed "Famous Conductors."

Lilly Belle Allen is president of the club. Mrs. James Gault was hostess of the evening, assisted by Mrs. James McCoy, Mrs. Myron McConley, and Mrs. Ross Moore.

An Extraordinary Record

Women workers are challenged by the accomplishments of Mrs. W. J. Hartley, friendly visitor in district 8. Her report shows that in the past ten months she made 508 visits; in seventy-three cases she took food to the sick. She sent fifty-five cards to the sick; spent fifty-eight hours of service in homes; and sent flowers to seventeen persons.

Walnut Park Church

Pastor, Glaude A. Smith

On Sunday, November 4, at the Communion service, the address was given by Elder A. Blakeslee Smith. Connie Marie Kester, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forest Kester, and Tommie Lynne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Campbell, were blessed. At 6 o'clock, in a service planned by the Daughters of Zion, Dr. G. Leonard Harrington, widely known psychiatrist, gave his second lecture, "The Adolescent Age." At 7:30 P. M. a city-wide Oriole girls' award service was held, with a reception following in the lower auditorium.

On November 11 Pastor Glaude A. Smith delivered the 11 o'clock message on "Emphasizing Spiritual Values." Elder R. D. Weaver preached in the evening, using "Twisted Concepts and Crooked Places" as his sermon topic.

The Walnut Park women's department held a luncheon and bazaar on Thursday, November 15, at the church. Short talks were given by Mrs. Clair Green, Mrs. John Darling, Mrs. A. C. Black, and Mrs. J. T. McCormick. Mrs.

Paul Wheeler sang a vocal solo. The combined efforts of the eight Walnut Park groups lightened the load of preparing the luncheon, and the fellowship of working together was enjoyed by everyone. About 100 were present.

Apostle M. A. McConley chose "The Path Ahead" as the subject for his message at the 11 o'clock hour on Sunday, November 18. In the evening, "Thanksgiving" was Pastor Glaude A. Smith's sermon topic.

A Thanksgiving Day service was held at 10 A. M. on Thursday, November 22. A quartet, composed of Delta and Arlon Chapman and Beatrice and Bernard Butterworth, sang hymns of Thanksgiving preceding the service. C. G. Closson gave a short talk on "Our National Thanksgiving Day," followed by an anthem by the quartet. Apostle Arthur Oakman gave a spiritual talk, using "Thanksgiving in 1945" as his subject. Brief responses of thankfulness from the congregation were then given. Brother Oakman called for a few moments of silence in memory of those who gave their lives during the war, after which he offered prayer. The meeting was characterized by serious and sobering thought as well as gratefulness to God for all his blessings.

On November 25, Elder Chris B. Hartshorn preached at the 11 o'clock hour. Pastor Glaude A. Smith was the speaker in the evening. The Walnut Park orchestra entertained for a half hour preceding the preaching service.

—Mardell Redfield, reporter.

East Independence Church

Pastor, Ivan Clothier

The women's department met December 13 at the home of Sister Hale, their supervisor, for a covered dish luncheon. Pauline Arnson, general church supervisor, was a guest soloist and speaker. Sister Raymond Smith was in charge of the devotional; Lelia Clothier gave a reading. The young women met on December 3 at the home of Charlotte Wagener for a luncheon. Ruby Case had charge of the devotional, and Vida Heide talked on Christmas customs and recipes. The annual women's Christmas party was held on the evening of December 20 at Virleen Carver's home; games, carols, and a short program preceded the devotional. Madge Thatcher read the Christmas story from the Bible; Elsie Sutterfield and Madella Bickle sang solos, and Eunice Eastes offered the benediction.

A Christmas play entitled The Christmas Quest was given at 6 P. M., December 23 in place of the regular evening service at 8. Mrs. Virleen Carver was the director.

Apostle M. A. McConley was the 11 o'clock speaker on December 30; he chose as his topic, "Our Greatest Need." A gift of appreciation was presented to Pastor and Mrs. Ivan Clothier by T. W. Thatcher for the service they had given the past year.

Other speakers during the month of December were Ray Whiting, Harry Friend, and Chris B. Hartshorn.

—Naomi Gaulter, reporter.

Spring Branch Church

Pastor, Richard Lambert

The Spring Branch membership now totals 472, including several members of the priesthood. Servicemen who have recently been discharged and are now an active part of the congregation are Kenneth Ward, Bill Fuqua, Laurence Jones, Gordin Andes, Duane Miller, and Arvine Spaulding. Newton Ward was permitted to attend services while home on a week-end pass from Ft. Riley. Robert Shedd has returned to Camp Swift, Texas, after a twenty-one day furlough.

Elder J. S. Andes was the speaker on Sunday morning, January 13. Mrs. Mary Keene gave an illustrated lecture at the evening service; she is planning to organize a teacher's training class in the near future. Miss Maxine Harshman, soprano, sang "The Holy City" before Mrs. Keene's lecture.

The Zion's League sponsored a swimming party at the Hotel Continental on Tuesday evening, January 15.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hopper and daughter, Mae, left January 8 for their new home in Yuba City, California. They are missed by their friends at Spring Branch.

—Alice Beebe, reporter.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

Pastor, A. N. Barnes

The infant sons of Mrs. H. C. Miller and Mrs. Hermer Frederic were blessed by J. L. Barlow and A. N. Barnes on December 9.

Two discharged servicemen, Rudolph Williams and Carl Gill, are again taking their places in the congregation.

Virginia McQueen and Margie Barnes arrived home from Graceland in time for the Zion's League Christmas party. Each member brought a gift for exchanging; after a series of games, the evening's festivities were completed with the serving of refreshments.

Sunday, December 23, a Christmas program was presented by the young people and children. It consisted of recitations and two plays, "What Christmas Means," and "Bells of Bethlehem." Candy and fruit were distributed to all present.

—Mildred Thomas, reporter.

Fargo, North Dakota

Pastor, C. R. Rotzien

"Seek the More Abundant Life" was the theme for rally day; over one hundred Saints attended the various meetings. The morning activities consisted of classwork, a prayer service, and preaching by District President C. F. Young of La Moure. A community dinner, sponsored by the women's department, was served in the church basement. In the afternoon a panel discussion was conducted by C. F. Young, C. R. Rotzien, and Archie Peterson. "Study to Show Thyself Approved" was the theme of the evening vesper service conducted by the young people. Elder L. O. Wildermuth of Plano, Illinois, was unable to be present for rally day, but visited Fargo branch later, delivering an inspiring sermon.

Leonard Loberg, Iva Weidling, and Irene Rotzien have been selected as delegates to general conference from Fargo.

A service for the installation of church school officers was held with Pastor Rotzien in charge. The period of meditation and soft music preceded Mrs. J. E. Hennemann's solo, "Hear the Voice of Jesus Calling."

Mrs. J. F. Rotzien, children's supervisor, entertained the children at her home on Halloween. A prayer service was held at the church on Thanksgiving morning with C. R. Rotzien and Karl Schiebold in charge. A Christmas program was presented by the church school on Sunday evening, December 23; it consisted of songs, readings, and an instrumental solo by Margaret Schiebold. A tree and treats were enjoyed by the children after the program.

Pastor Rotzien officiated at the blessing of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Vogelsang's infant son, Keith Alan.

Ethel Durboraw, who teaches kindergarten at the Moorhead State Teacher's College, conducts a class in the workshop for pre-school children at the leadership education conference which is held in Fargo each month at the Presbyterian church; all denominations are invited to attend.

Servicemen who have recently returned are Robert Hennemann, Willis and Harold Freeman, and Obert Nelson. Glenn Weidling is expected home soon from Germany, and Cy Bielfeldt is receiving his discharge from the Navy at Milwaukee.

The Saints gave a house warming for Mr. and Mrs. Carl Schiebold at their new home recently. The evening was spent in singing, visiting, and playing games. A gift was presented to the Schiebolds by the group at the end of the evening.

Subjects used by Elder C. R. Rotzien on a recent broadcast over WDAY, Fargo, were "The Meek Shall Inherit the Earth" and "If Ye Continue in My Word." The next broadcast is scheduled for March 24 at 8:45 C.S.T.

The department of women, under the leadership of Lillian Schoeler, meets twice a month for classwork and social activities. The young people, with Sister Arlie Peterson as supervisor, also meet twice a month. They are now planning a sleighing party.

—Irene Rotzien, reporter.

Marlin, Texas

Pastor, J. R. Allen

Members of the Marlin branch are working to complete their new church building by summer.

The January 6 services consisted of church school at 10 o'clock, a sermon by Elder J. R. Allen at 11, a Communion service at 2 P. M. and a business meeting. Officers for the coming year are J. R. Allen, pastor; F. B. Allen and A. B. Dunham, associates; Edna Reneau, secretary-treasurer; John Allen and Calvin Suanner, teachers; Mrs. Frank Spicer, correspondent; Mrs. George Caddell, choir director; Sidney Bryant, assistant director; and Mrs. A. W. Waller, pianist.

Pfc. William Spicer has returned to his home in Marlin after thirty-one months service in the Pacific.

Tony Frank, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Tony Milazzo, was blessed January 6 by Elder J. R. Allen.

—Mrs. Frank Spicer, reporter.

Maryland Heights, Missouri

Pastor, J. E. Nicholson, Jr.

Attendance at the Maryland Heights branch has more than doubled in the past year. Prayer services are again being held each week in the homes of Saints. The women's department meets every other Thursday for lunch and study, and to plan improvements for the church building. With the return of several servicemen, the young people are again organizing. The entire congregation is anticipating an active and progressive year in 1946.

—Mrs. C. W. Ruckman, reporter.

Joplin, Missouri

Pastor, J. D. Anderson

September and October were busy months for the Joplin Saints. September was largely devoted to planning the new church year activities under the leadership of Pastor J. D. Anderson. October saw each department set in motion under the direction of its new leaders.

The Zion's League, with Albert Cobb as supervisor, holds regular meetings every Sunday evening. The first meeting was held October 7. The theme was presented by Brother Cobb, with Danny Cochran and John Leslie giving supplementary talks. A challenge was given the young people by Pastor J. D. Anderson. These meetings have been planned to be both recreational and expressional.

The young adult group has a very important part also in as much as it has pledged its help and co-operation in any way the younger group might need. Many attended the Halloween party given by the Carthage young people on October 30.

The women's department held its first fall meeting in the lower auditorium on October 11 in the form of a banquet. Mrs. T. W. Bath, district women's leader, was guest speaker. Her talk included a brief history of the women's department, a description of the work, God's help in the accomplishing of that work, and the need for greater devotion to the work. Alma Smith is leader in the Joplin branch. The meeting on October 25 was held in the home of Mrs. J. D. Anderson. Mary Cochran reviewed Barton's The Man Nobody Knows. The women have pledged $100 toward building a dining hall on the new reunion grounds; one project has already netted $60.

Pearl Cobb is doing a splendid work in the children's department; Ted Linder is serving as junior pastor.

Men from the branch who have been in the armed services are beginning to return; so far no gold stars are on the flag. Don Guinee, who was ordained shortly before entering the service, has returned. Jared Carter is back also and doing a fine work as assistant scoutmaster.

Wednesday evening prayer services are well attended and carry with them a fine spirit. Saints in Joplin have come to look forward to these meetings. Pastor Anderson is spending much time in thought and prayer to make the services a success.

The fiftieth anniversary of Graceland was observed Saturday night, October 20, in the form of a banquet. Acting President A. R. Gilbert was guest speaker. Others to tell of their experiences while attending Graceland were Brother Hogan of Carthage, May Jones of Webb City, William Patterson of Independence, and Mary Cochran of Joplin.

Pauline Jones, assisted by Marna Anderson, is doing a fine job as music supervisor, especially with the girls' octet. Members of the octet are Lorene Carrow, Maxine Leslie, Marna Anderson, Alma Swan, Almeda Sullivan, Mary Karlstrom, May Gray, and Eldoralyn Dunaway. These girls gave their fall music festival October 22. They have been asked to sing at several meetings throughout the city. At a Sunday morning service they presented Pastor J. D. Anderson with the three standard books, leather-bound, to be used in the pulpit.

Central Congregation

Pastor, John Blackmore

On November 18 Mary Joy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Smithers, was blessed.

Saints of the Central congregation met on Thanksgiving morning to give thanks and testify of God's goodness to them during the year.

A box social was sponsored by the young people on the evening of November 24; it was greatly enjoyed by all who attended.

On Sunday, December 2, twenty-one members of the priesthood council gathered to discuss plans for the branch business meeting held December 12, after which Pastor John Blackmore conducted a class in Bible study.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald H. Palmer were baptized on December 9. Brother Palmer is a returned serviceman who promised on the battlefield that he would unite with the church on his return to the States.

As the year closed, the Saints of Central branch experienced a renewal of the spirit in the various services. During church school these outpourings were felt in the deliverance of the messages "Finding God," by W. I. Meador, and "Giving Our Best," by W. M. Powers. Still further inspiring messages were given in the following services by Elder R. H. Knowlton, Bishop David Carmichael, and Pastor John Blackmore. All through the month of December the choir sang music apropos to the Christmas season.

A program was given by the children on the morning of December 23. Gloria Bauer, Linda Spooner, Hazel Louis, Gwen Bergoon, and Marilyn Benton gave recitations; Barry Waylett played a violin solo. The tiny tots and adults shared in giving the white gift offering. The Christmas service was followed by Marilyn Benton's solo, "Jesu Bambino," and an anthem by the choir. Apostle John Rushton gave the address.

A play was presented at the evening service, after which a party was given for the children in the recreational hall with Santa distributing treats.

During the year Izzetta Sletto and Edith Eaton rearranged and tabulated the church library so that it is now ready for use. The young people and women's Thursday class have contributed publications by the church so that all may have an opportunity to read them.

The adult recreational club continues to meet on the first Tuesday of each month for games and refreshments.

Sunday evening services are open forum discussions on "Modern Developments and the Church."

Mable Crane recently met with a serious accident, resulting in a broken collar bone and dislocated knee cap. The Saints were happy to see her at church three weeks later, a living testimony of God's healing power through administration.

Grand Rapids, Michigan

Pastor, Homer E. Harvey

Grand Rapids and several neighboring branches attended the formal banquet given August 28 at Galewood mission.

The branch business meeting was held September 11. Homer E. Harvey was again elected pastor with Henry London and Walter Ryder as assistants. A. F. Shotwell was elected visiting pastor, and Malcom Dodds, young people's leader.

One hundred thirty-five young people attended the Halloween party held at Townsend Park. It was voted one of the season's outstanding social events.

Joyce Ann, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Steinke, and Nancy Lorraine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Evan, were blessed November 4.

The Orioles sponsored a chili supper on the evening of November 6. On November 13 the adult class, taught by Elder Fred Kuhn, held its annual class supper. Elder Harry Simons of Flint, Michigan, and the Reverend H. M. Houser of East Congregational church were the guest speakers.

A Christmas program was presented by the church school on December 21, and the choir gave a Christmas musicale on December 23.

A New Year's Eve party was sponsored by the League.

Three Grand Rapids servicemen have received their discharges; they are Malcolm Dodds, Ted Mockerman, and Holdone Harvey.

Kirtland Temple

Pastor, John W. Banks

Proceeds of $350 were taken in at the annual bazaar and supper sponsored by the women's department; the money was donated to the organ fund. Two hundred eighty guests were served.

Preceding the morning service on December 9, Julia Belle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Webbe, was blessed by Elders John Banks and Joseph Biggs. Linda Faith, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Lucas, was also blessed, Elders Webbe and Banks officiating. The choir, under the direction of Clyde Ebeling, sang Brahms' "Holy Child" with Mrs. Wade Lyman as soloist.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon Frances Cie Chanski was baptized by Pastor John Banks in the Cleveland font. Elder Casimir Nickel, pastor of the Cleveland branch, spoke on the significance of baptism; a trio composed of Mrs. Arthur Burt, Mrs. James Moore, and Mrs. Wade Lyman, sang. Virginia Warner played a violin solo, and Elder Biggs gave the invocation and benediction. The confirmation service was held in the evening with Elders Biggs and Banks officiating; Pastor Banks also gave the address. Music for the service included a violin offertory and solo by Virginia Warner and a selection by the Temple choir.

Evangelist Richard Baldwin spent the week preceding Christmas with the Kirtland Saints; he spoke at both the morning and evening services on December 16, and lead the Zion's League fellowship service. He also met with the group for the Wednesday evening prayer meeting. Donald Lents, city pastor from Columbus, was a visitor on December 16, offering the invocation and benediction at the morning service. Lorna Howard, home from Graceland for the holidays, sang "O Holy Night," and the Temple choir sang "Holy Child."

The children's division of the church school gave their annual Christmas program under the direction of Au Vergne Proper and Mary Gale. They presented the story, "Why the Chimes Rang." Mrs. Oakley Isenburg's narration was interspersed with carols by the children's choir, directed by Sandra Davies, and scripture readings by Lynn Ourth. Characters were portrayed by Freddie Burt, Johnny Ourth, Lois Webster, Lee Ourth, Bobby Fulton, and Richard McNabb. Gail Isenburg sang "Ring, Bells, Ring," with all the little folk ringing bells and joining in on the chorus. Recitations were given by Gail Isenburg, David Soldner, Renny Thomas and Johnny Jelenik. Sandra and Billy Davies sang solos.

Elder Fred Kunz, pastor at Burlington, Iowa, was guest speaker in the Temple pulpit on Sunday morning, December 30. Pastor Casimir Nickel came from Cleveland to speak in the evening.

The following servicemen have received discharges recently: Dort Jacobs, Elbert Sheppard, Richard Bachhuber, Blake Liston, Carroll Fenner, Wade Lyman, Francis Call, Glenn Pignolet, George Benien, and Chester Lanning.

—Elizabeth Thomas, reporter.

Traverse City, Michigan

Pastor, Harry L. Doty

The annual election of officers was held September 4. Harry L. Doty was sustained as pastor, and Doty Price was elected church school director.

Elder and Mrs. B. H. Doty of the central Michigan district were present December 30. Elder Doty delivered an inspirational message at the evening service.

Lt. Marjorie Dick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Dick, has been discharged from the armed services. Pfc. Richard Wellman has also received his discharge from the Army.

Teachers' training classes are held each Sunday evening at six. The instructor of the course is Pastor Harry Doty.

For the past few Sunday evenings, discussions have been held on the needs of the branch, and ways and means to supply those needs.

Thirty ladies attended the "mystery sister" Christmas party held in the church basement. A delightful evening was enjoyed, and new names for 1946 were drawn.

Norma Wellman and Helen Bunson have returned to Graceland after spending the holidays at home.

The women's department is steadily growing. Vera Doty was sustained as president. Several guest speakers have given talks regarding the Michigan children's aid society and girl scout work recently.

The church school held its annual Christmas program on Sunday evening, December 23. Members from the Union Street school presented a play entitled The Great Guest Came.

—Kathryn Price, reporter.

Paris, Tennessee

Pastor, C. B. Gallimore

The church property in Paris has been completely paid for. The Saints have worked diligently and contributed generously to eradicate this debt, and are now ready to begin decorating and beautifying the building.

A series of old Jerusalem gospel sermons was given recently by Edward Dickson.

The women's department sponsors a social evening once a month, serving a dinner in honor of all who have birthdays that month.

The Zion's League, although recently organized, is planning an active program for the new year. It was responsible for the Christmas entertainment which included a program, tree, and gift exchange.

Four servicemen from the Paris congregation have received their discharges; they are Jesse Lee Hicks, Joe Fitch, Curtis and Owen Weston.

—Mrs. B. F. Ross, reporter.

Springfield, Illinois

Pastor, J. A. Williams

The women's department in Springfield has been very active; through its efforts the building fund has been increased by a substantial amount. Several are nonmembers, yet they have been willing to extend a helping hand in adding to the fund. Two of these ladies, Mrs. John Finns and Mrs. Charles White, have given dinners in their homes; another, Dorothy Page, assisted Sister Washburn in serving a chili supper. On December 18 they met for a Christmas party and chicken dinner at Florence Williams' home.

A district conference was held in Springfield on November 11 at the Lanphier High School. John R. Darling of Independence was the guest speaker.

John Grice stopped at Springfield on his way home for the holidays and spoke on the evening of December 18 at the France home.

The church school Christmas program was given on Sunday morning, December 21. This was followed by a Christmas sermon delivered by Fred McKane.

Orville M. Hooten of Springfield, Ohio, gave the sermon on January 13.

Adam Shuppara fell recently and is suffering from torn ligaments in one arm. Several other members are ill, or just recovering from the flu.

—Ethel Potter, reporter.

Santa Barbara, California

Pastor N. T. Chapman

The Saints at Santa Barbara are anticipating a happy and successful year in 1946. Many of the families who left during the war are returning. Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Lant, Leonard Younger and family, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Stuart, Roy Curtis and family, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Heth, and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Newkirk are again in the congregation.

The loss of Thelma Downey, who has moved to Oxnard, California, will be felt keenly, as she served as pianist in the Santa Barbara church since 1931.

The Christmas program under the direction of Margaret Booth was an inspiration to all. The children presented the Christmas story as a special feature.

All are grieved over the death of Lt. Kenneth Newkirk; his is the only gold star on the service flag.

—Ethel Heth, reporter.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Pastor, B. A. Howard

Oklahoma City Saints began the New Year by participating in the Communion service January 6. At this service two children, Joe Edward Puckett and Patricia Ann Drake, were blessed under the hands of Elders B. A. Howard and Loyd Harding.

A series of missionary meetings was conducted in November by Seventy Glen Johnson and Elder Warren Chel-line. These services were well attended by both members and nonmembers.

Oklahoma City branch was well represented at the annual district conference which was held in Tulsa on November 17 and 18. B. A. Howard was elected district president.

The annual Thanksgiving dinner was served in the lower auditorium of the church. The women's department was responsible for the delicious meal which was served.

On the first Sunday of each month the young people conduct an 8 o'clock prayer meeting. The League is sponsoring numerous activities and anticipating better attendance since the return of the servicemen.

An impressive service was held at the baptism of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Puckett who were recently united with the church.

Apostle Charles R. Hield, Seventy Z. Z. Renfro, Elders O. A. MacDowell, and Arthur Dixon have been recent visiting speakers at Oklahoma City.

BULLETIN BOARD

A Sister in Need of Prayer

From an unidentified writer comes a request for the prayers of the Saints in her time of trial. Part of her letter is quoted below; it is self-explanatory.

"The greatest grief I have ever known has come to me; I feel that I cannot bear it alone and must have God's help.

"My husband wants a divorce; I know divorce is wrong. God has always heard and answered my prayers in the past and I believe He will this time. Will the Saints please pray for me that, if it is God's will, my husband will return to me and the children, and if it isn't His will, that He will grant me the strength and courage to face the future alone."

Our Departed Ones

SMITH.—Mary Melissa, was born at Amboy, Michigan, August 19, 1868, the daughter of George and Rosella McLean, and died at Cadillac, Michigan, December 26. When a child she moved with her parents to South Boardman, Michigan, where she spent most of her life. It was here that she and Harmon Smith were united in marriage on December 26, 1886; three children were born to this union, two of them preceding their mother in death. In July, 1892, she became a member of the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful member for fifty-four years.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. Glade Sanford, with whom she made her home for the past six years. Services were held at the Flynn Funeral Home, Cadillac, Michigan, with Elder B. H. Doty officiating. Burial was at South Boardman, Michigan.

WHITE.—Vivian Marie, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alba Smith, was born December 21, 1920, and died January 8 in Alliance, Ohio, after a three-day illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 31, 1929, and became the bride of Sgt. Donald F. White, still in service, on April 26, 1942.

Besides her husband and parents, she leaves to mourn one brother, S/Sgt. Robert E. Smith stationed in Munich, Germany, and her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Smith of Alliance, Ohio. Services were held in the Myers Funeral Home with Elder E. Guy Hammond of Akron officiating. Interment was in the Alliance city cemetery.

HARDIN.—Oswell, was born June 22, 1884, at Cridersville, Ohio, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Burden. At the age of seven his mother passed away, and he was then adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Hardin, Uniopolis, Ohio. On December 31, 1904, he was united in marriage to Nora Bartley. In 1912 he moved to St. Marys, Ohio, where for thirty-two years he was an employee of the Auglaize Box Company. Early in the summer of 1945, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. He answered the call of death November 28, 1945.

He leaves to mourn his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Freda Cable, Sidney Ohio, and Mary Jo Hardin of the home; two sons: Adrain and O. J., both of St. Marys. One daughter, Cecil, preceded him in death. He also leaves eighteen grandchildren and one sister, Mrs. John Whitehead of St. Marys. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Virgil J. Billings assisted by Elder Robert Galusha. Burial was in the Rosehill Cemetery near Uniopolis, Ohio.

HOLDREN.—Alzada Diantha, was born December 15, 1865, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Springer, Hocking County, Ohio, and died in her country home near St. Marys, Ohio, on October 2, 1945. On February 20, 1886, she was married to Thomas J. Holdren; to this union were born twelve children. One daughter, Mrs. Jessie Bigelow, preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in January, 1921, which church became a living symbol in her life.

Besides her husband, she leaves to mourn seven sons: Dewey, St. Marys, Ohio; Guy, Lima, Ohio; Willis, New Bremen, Ohio; John, Toledo, Ohio; Boyd, Rockford, Michigan; Floyd, Sylvania; and Elmer, St. Marys; four daughters: Lucy Galusha, St. Marys; Mrs. Minnie Bessire, Lima, Ohio; Mrs. Zelma Wolfe, Celina, Ohio; and Mrs. Ruth Boeckman, Dayton, Ohio; two brothers: B. ### Accommodations at General Conference

The Housing Committee requests that all visitors to Independence during the General Conference who can make private arrangements for rooms do so as early as possible. This will assist the Housing Committee and will avoid much correspondence. Those who desire the Housing Committee to make arrangements for rooms should mail their letters to the Housing Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The following details are required:

1. Number in party.
2. Rooms required.
3. Day of arrival.
4. Length of stay in Independence.
5. If alone, whether willing to share a room.
6. Whether a delegate to the conference.

Due to extreme housing congestion which has increased with the end of the war, conditions in Independence are such that providing rooms for visitors to the conference will be very difficult. As a consequence, it will be necessary to favor delegates.

As a word of caution, may we suggest that persons arriving for conference without reservations for sleeping accommodations will find it difficult to secure rooms in or near Independence.

Concerning Keokuk

I was glad to read in the Herald for December 29, a letter from Keokuk, Iowa, since it is the town of my birth and early childhood. I was glad, too, to learn that the branch has been revived; when I moved away it was almost dissolved.

Keokuk was named after an Indian chief. One Fourth of July stands out in my memory, when this chief made a speech on Main Street. Even as a child I was impressed with his quiet, self-possessed manner; he was in no way concerned about the large crowd.

In the second volume of Church History, page 542, there is an account of his visit with tribe to Nauvoo. Joseph talked to them and told them about the Book of Mormon. Keokuk replied he had a Book of Mormon which Joseph had given him some years before. "I believe you are a great and good man," he said, "I look rough, but I, too, am a son of the Great Spirit."

Later they feasted on the green, and then gave an exhibition of their dancing.

In Switzler's History of Missouri we find this: "When the country was first discovered and long after, here and there a solitary individual was found who claimed to be a prophet and to have descended from a long, priestly line—a race superior to the Indians, by whom their forefathers had been conquered."

During the travels of William Pidgeon, who spent several years in the regions of the upper Mississippi, he met among the red men a stranger of dignified and venerable appearance who had no fixed abiding place, but wandered from tribe to tribe, and was always welcome. He claimed to have descended from a long line of prophets, of which he was the last. The Indians called him the mockingbird because he could speak five different languages fluently.

From a Returned Prisoner of War

I would like my friends, especially those in Canada, to know that I have returned to Glasgow after my release from a Japanese prison camp. I am still in the army, but expect to receive a discharge soon as this is my tenth year in service.

I was married on November 17 after my return to Scotland. My zeal to further the work of the church is as fervent as ever; I trust that in my own small way I shall be able to extend the kingdom of God. While a prisoner, I was able to interest several other internees in our doctrine. I hope to someday see them become members of the church.

Detroit Servicemen Return

Arthur G. Dahring has returned from two years' service in the Pacific theater and is again making his home in Detroit.

Joseph R. Salonimer, after ten months in New Guinea and the Philippines, has returned to Detroit. He was an active member of the musical department at Central church prior to his induction.

When You Feel the Impulse, Pray!

While you are going about your daily duties, did you ever have a sudden urge to pray about something or for someone? Perhaps you have, but said to yourself, "I'll just wait a few minutes until I have finished what I am doing, then I can concentrate better." Then what happens? The urge is past and we either do not say the prayer or else do it in a half-hearted spirit, forgetting the uppermost thought that had been in our mind.

Surely these feelings are for a purpose if we heed the small voice that whispers, and someone may lose a blessing or need help, as was my experience a short time ago. I am here relating it with the hope that it may be helpful to others.

One day as I was dressing in preparation to go out shopping, I had a sudden feeling to pray for a sister who lives several miles away, but has not attended church in several years. For five years she has had the burden of caring for her completely paralyzed mother. My thoughts for her had been that she be given physical health, patience, and mental stability until God saw fit to take her mother. Then it seemed I forgot about this prayer until the following Sunday in church when some of her relatives were there, and told me of a particularly trying time this sister had had on a certain day. Immediately I remembered my prayer for her and figured it back to the same day. They did not mention the time of day, but later I remembered it was at two o'clock.

That same Sunday evening my husband and I went to call on this sister, and without our inquiring, she told us of the experiences of that particular day. I did not intend to mention anything about my prayer for her, feeling glad if she had received any benefit, which it seemed she had. Then she said that she noticed it was two o'clock in the afternoon, and that she had almost ended her distress by taking her mother's medicine. After hearing of this mental unbalance I felt impelled to tell her my experience. It seemed to give her courage and also my husband was much uplifted, as he had not previously known of it.

This incident has convinced me that we should pray when we feel the urge, no matter what we are doing, as much good may be accomplished.

Some True Experiences

I should like to relate a few of my experiences to the readers of this column; perhaps they will serve as an inspiration and testimony to those who read them.

I have been healed of all bodily ailments, and overcome many worldly habits that I formed as a young man. I believe my life to have been spared at least six times through God's divine protection. Once I was saved from being crushed to death, and another time from being drowned in an icy lake. I have been spoken to and told what God expected of me, and I have also been chastised for not following his commandments. I trust I shall live so that such chastisement will not be necessary again.

My hope is that all the Saints will be alert to their calling, so that they may receive abundant blessings for their good works.

Atomic Age

THE stricter immediacy of life's end
Defined by scientific men
Gird us to greater kindness.
We must search our heart
To discipline the acts of mercy to an art.

We must probe terrors urgently,
Dare all the graces of divinity
To find the core of earthborn flesh,
Knowing an unpremeditated day
Could snuff all beauteous life away.

This is no narrow fear, but general death
Revives the scent and taste of human breath,
Marshals all comrades in the poise of life.
I must be frugal of this new-dimensioned day,
Be kind, and for the wisdom to be kind must pray.

—Cleo M. Hawthorne.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

* CONCERNING ROBERT MILLER

"Robert Miller" is a name that has been honored by some fine men—we don't know how many. There are at least two in the church. If three could be found, they might start a Robert Miller Association. It would be a worthy thing to do, for the name is a synonym for service.

Brother Robert J. Miller, whose article appears in this issue, has been contributing to our columns for some time. He is one of our members belonging to the First Columbus, Ohio, congregation. Friends that we know are generous in their praise of him as a fine man, a consecrated church worker and officer, and an able thinker. His articles reveal and confirm those qualities. But Brother Miller is modest, and even some church members in his own city do not even know that he writes.

Brother Robert C. Miller of Independence has also given honor to the name. For more than twenty-five years he has served the Stone Church congregation as an able and consecrated organist. Everybody thinks a lot of "Bob" Miller here.

Out of this, however, a misunderstanding has arisen. People often say, "I didn't know Bob Miller writes!" We answer, "That's right—I mean, that's wrong. He doesn't write. If he does, he has never mentioned it!"

Two good men bear an honorable name, but you can identify them by their middle initials. Now we wonder, are there any other Robert Millers in the church?

* LETTERS

People like to hear from the witnesses of God's love and mercy better than from those who merely argue or explain. The witness has a particular honor. That is why readers like to see good letters in our publication. By the way have you written your testimony for the benefit of others? There is a discouraged reader somewhere in the world who needs the help that you can give.

* YOUR FRIEND who greets you with the question, "How are you?" means that he hopes you are well, but that if you are not, you will wisely refrain from telling him all about it.

* A tax, once imposed, is rarely removed. A bad habit, once formed, is difficult to break. A debt incurred is hard to liquidate. A friendship broken is hard to mend.

* Keep a sharp pencil, but be careful what you write with it.

* Some people can't keep money because there is a hole in their pocket. And the biggest, most wasteful, extravagant hole is at the top.

* When you forget to pray is the time you need it most.

* The greatest waste in the world is the empty pew. It is warmed, cleaned, and lighted whether the member is there or not. The minister preaches to it, the musicians sing to it. But everything is lost if the family is not there to profit by it.

Forest Paths

By Joseph Schenck

We by many forest paths
Search for clearness, truth, and light;
Winding dim through tangled mats,
Try to reach the summit's heights;

Many trodden, beaten low,
Lost unknowing in ravines
Cease to seek the zenith glow;
Lose the rising paths serene.

Seek intensely now the trail
Pressing on with lore and might,
Always striving, let us scale
Paths of lasting peace and light!

U. N. O.

Danger and Opportunity

Our world is confronted with a drastic choice. On the one side is the United Nations Organization; on the other, the atomic bomb. This may be over-simplifying the situation, but it is a statement that anybody can understand, and it is a symbol of the present state of world affairs. Beneath all the complications, it is as plain as this: We can join in the full support of the U. N. O., or we can expect somebody to drop atomic bombs on us. We can choose either danger or opportunity. We cannot have both. We cannot sit still and wait. We cannot defer the choice, or the choice will be made for us. If we do not choose the U. N. O., and work for it faithfully, the atomic bomb will provide our fate.

The U. N. O. is not perfect—far from it. It gives too much power to the great permanent members of the Security Council. It does nothing to limit the uncontrolled national sovereignty from which the evils of the modern world have sprung. It does not go so far as to establish a real world government, which men are demanding as the only adequate answer to the atomic bomb. It makes no adequate provisions for the ultimate freedom and self-government of the subject peoples of the world; those that were mandated under the League of Nations, those that were held by military power, and those that are to be governed under the trusteeship system will have no voice, no representation in the U. N. O. These are faults that can and should be remedied. The U. N. O. has faults, but it is a step in the right direction.

Toward a Christian World Order

Is the U. N. O. a step in the direction of a Christian world order? Time will tell. If the U. N. O. succeeds, it will do so because the nations have co-operated in an invincible determination to that end. If it fails, it will do so because the nations have not been willing to work together.

A generation ago the world had another opportunity to provide for world peace and security. There was nothing wrong with the League of Nations that could not have been corrected. But governments preferred to continue making secret treaties, playing the balance of power and politics, and striving for selfish advantages. Out of it all they reaped the Second World War instead of peace.

Once again we have an opportunity. Perhaps we will be wiser now than we were then. But not all people are wise—not all nations have common sense—and those who understand will have to be very strong, steady, and unselfish. A little selfishness can do great harm in the affairs of nations. A Christian world order must be really Christian to work at all.

Iran, a Test

Small nations provide the tests by which great nations rise and fall. In the First World War it was Serbia that provided the test that wrecked the great Austro-Hungarian Empire, and brought defeat to its ally, Germany. In the Second World War, it was Czechoslovakia that provided the test, and revealed to the world Hitler's true character and purpose, when he took the first step in his program to build an empire of non-German peoples, based on force and terror. And it was in another small country, Poland, where he started the war that led to his country's ruin. It is very dangerous for large countries to pick on small ones.

Now another test of great historical significance is being staged. In the meetings of the United Nations Organization at London, a small backward country, Iran, complains of the occupation of some of its northern territory by Russian troops. Iran protested to the U. N. O. and demanded the right to have its grievances considered. Nobody supposed that such a little nation could be heard against one of the powerful members of the Security Council. But it could be heard, and was heard. Russia requested more time for further negotiations so that the two countries might settle their differences, as provided by the U. N. O. Charter.

The "negotiations" may need to be watched. When Polish representatives of the London Polish Government-in-Exile went to Russia to "negotiate" they disappeared, and have not been heard from since. Hitler had a technique for "negotiating" with heads of small states, and he used brutal terror on Chancellor Schusnigg of Austria. Let us hope this will be different.

Iran provides a test. It is a poor and backward country, not very important, except for the presence of oil lands which the great nations of the world covet with bitter earnestness. If Iran can obtain justice and get the Russian soldiers to go home, it will be a great victory for the U. N. O. If Iran cannot get justice, this will be the first point at which the U. N. O. fails, and will probably suffer other failures until it goes to pieces. How important, then, that justice should be done in this case. The fate of U. N. O. may be decided in Iran, just as the fate of the League of Nations was decided in Manchuria, Ethiopia, and Albania.

Self-Serving Records

Editors Herald:

We have so many instances where the Utah Mormons have premised their claims on doubtful and disputed documents and utterances, we cannot but note some of them in passing.

The Mormons for some years have sought to emphasize what they allege to have been a prophetic statement by Joseph Smith, to the effect that the church would go to the Rocky Mountains. We have never believed that such was in his mind. If it was, why did he advise his wife Emma to take their children to Quincy or to Kirtland, Ohio, as evidenced by a letter written on the eve of his death?

That there was no intention on the part of the church leaders at Nauvoo after Joseph's death to leave, is well supported by numerous published statements of Brigham Young and others, including John Taylor, Parley Pratt, Orson Pratt, Woodruff, and others, beginning as early as October 6, 1844, and continuing up until a few weeks before the westward journey was begun. Undoubtedly, the decision to leave the United States came as a result of trouble known as the "Mormon War" which followed the death of Joseph Smith by several months.

Events early in 1846 indicate conclusively that the Saints under Brigham Young were going to leave—not for the Rocky Mountains, but for California or Oregon, territory outside the United States.

A member now calls our attention to a Mormon official publication by B. H. Roberts, one time historian at Salt Lake City. It was issued by the Deseret News, and gives a history of the "Mormon Battalion," soldiers recruited for duty in the Mexican War. This brother states:

Admissions made in the book appear to disprove the Utah church contention that its move to Utah was in obedience to an alleged plan of Joseph Smith made at Nauvoo, which Roberts alleged in his work on Succession (p. 102) in 1894, or 25 years before the above work was issued.

In the work under examination Roberts presents the statement that Jesse C. Little was appointed by Mormon authorities to secure aid of the United States Government through President Polk to migrate to California, claiming that twelve to fifteen thousand had already left Nauvoo for California, and that forty thousand in British Isles, etc., and many thousands in various states had determined to go. This representation made by Little to Polk was signed as agent of the church, and the subsequent statement of Brigham Young himself about "emigrating the Saints to the western coast" confirms the authority of the plan (see pp. 9, 10, 18). If this is a sincere presentation of the facts as then understood, it proves the earlier statement of Roberts to be false.

Incidental to the above, the fifty-five or more thousands of members alleged in the representation to Polk disagrees glaringly with the statement of the Utah church historian to Heman C. Smith in 1896 that at the death of Joseph Smith the numerical strength of the church was about '26,000 to 27,000 souls.' (see Ch. Hist. 3:25.)"

We have been interested in noting how Utah could find evidence after the fact to prove the fact.

Conference Housing

"We have a hundred applications for rooms now," says Bishop J. S. Kelley, director of the General Conference Housing Committee, "and it is probable there will be many more before April. Some of the applicants are asking for such luxuries as twin beds, private baths, and locations near the Auditorium. As much as we would like to be able to meet these specifications, we think that it is necessary to tell prospective visitors that the luxuries are not available here. Those who want them should try the Kansas City hotels. Conditions are still so crowded in Independence that we shall be fortunate to get rooming space of any kind."

The transportation system is much better than it was at the last General Conference, as Bishop Kelley observes, and as anyone may verify. There are more bus lines to different parts of the city and to the Inter-city District, and buses are not so badly crowded as they were. Schedules are also better. Rooming at a distance, which many will have to accept, will be inconvenient but not impossible.

During the war many extra people crowded into the city to work in near-by war industries. Homes that used to have plenty of extra rooms for conference visitors have been divided into apartments. After the war, we thought the extra people would return to their homes; but it seems that nobody has left at all. Then young men began coming home from the armed forces abroad and new families were looking for homes and apartments. We are more crowded than at any time during the war. Nevertheless, we expect to make every effort, with the co-operation of the people, to find as many places for visitors as may be needed. Applications should be sent early.

The Time of the Conference

It may be appropriate now to raise a question about the time for the meeting of the General Conference. Members who attend may wish to do some thinking about it, and several factors should be considered.

From the viewpoint of the comfort and convenience of visitors, April is neither the best nor the worst time of the year. We often have snow, sleet, or rain. Cold weather adds to discomfort and causes colds and other illnesses. Some month in the summer would probably be better.

From the viewpoint of tradition, April 6, the anniversary of the founding of the church, is a favorite time. The value of it is largely a matter of sentiment. During the first fifty years of the Reorganization, there were generally two conferences a year, one in April and one in the fall. So, even in the times when the traditions of the church were being formed, it was accepted that the meetings could be held at other times of the year.

From the viewpoint of the annual program, a General Conference in the summer would interfere with the reunion season, and would not allow officials a sufficient interval between to make plans to get necessary rest, etc.

No matter what we do, there will be inconveniences and difficulties. Whenever a change is made some people object. It all seems a matter of balancing our likes and dislikes, learning what the people want, and seeing what is possible from an official viewpoint. It would be very interesting to hear what people who attend conference, or wish they could, think about it.

Hallowed Be Thy Name

By Robert J. Miller

THE CONGREGATION bowed in humble reverence to God when they asked him to pray. His fame had preceded him to this religious gathering, for he was a man well known for his good deeds and honorable way of life. He was not of the ministry, neither was he active in religious work under ecclesiastical direction; but nevertheless, he had the confidence and respect of ministry and laity alike.

He had no words to offer except those taught to him by the Master, "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Give us this day, our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever, Amen." (Matthew 6:10-15).

In the deep silence of that vaulted room, the power of his words seemed to be magnified a thousandfold—because he prayed from the depths of an honest heart, and said no word he did not pray. Each word was weighed, and the inflection given carried its meaning with the passion of sincere desire. Time was not, nor other earthly thing—just man facing his God apart from all existence.

With deliberate meditation he proceeded in his communion with God, and wrapped each word with all the love and devotion of his soul. By the pure desire of his heart to be at one with God, he seemed to have reached up even unto the Father, and there in space 'twixt heaven and earth to have merged his soul with God.

In that moment heaven descended unto earth, and the Spirit of God pervaded the room, visiting each heart with the presence of the Father and the Son. For all seemed to have had their minds opened to understanding, and in rapport to have drawn nearer to God with a will to love and obey.

With pleasure God had deigned to hear and acknowledge their plea, for thus reasoned the man as he prayed: "Our Father"—for thou art surely the Father of us all. Thou hast created us by the power of thy word, and with the patient love of a good parent hast thou borne our afflictions and been merciful unto us. With wisdom hast thou planned our salvation. Thy work has been, and is, to bring to pass immortality and the eternal life of man.

"Which art in heaven." Thou couldst dwell in no other place, for thou art Holy, and no evil can bear thy presence. To thee we humbly lift our voice.

"Hallowed by thy name." We consecrate thy name unto ourselves, dear God, and reverently enshrine it within our hearts. We will not desecrate it by profane use; neither will we profane it by deliberate disobedience to thy law.

"Thy kingdom come." It is our earnest hope and desire that thy kingdom shall be established; and so we readily agree to it and lend it our meager support. We do this, O God, because we know it is right—that only thus can there be peace upon earth and among men. For in thy kingdom thy word prevails. Thy word is law. Thy law is perfect, and in perfection we have hope of eternal life.

"Thy will be done on earth,"—and because we want it so we will be obedient unto thy will. We give thee our allegiance, our love, our all.

Robert J. Miller has been known for some time to the readers of the "Herald" as the author of some of our finest and most thoughtful articles. For the first time, we have a picture of him to present. He was baptized in 1934, ordained a priest in 1937. He served with the American forces in France and Germany in the First World War, was wounded and gassed, and released from the Army in 1919. He is married, has a fine wife and son. We find in his work a quality of spiritual insight for which we are grateful. Brother Miller is a member of the First Columbus, Ohio, congregation.—Editors.

"As it is done in heaven." In heaven, Father, we know thy word is perfectly obeyed, thy name honored and revered. As it is there so we would have it here. As thy word is obeyed consistently and forever in heaven, so we agree to treat it here. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.

"Give us this day, our daily bread." All things are thine, and we look to thee for our simple needs today, that we may continue to live as thou hast ordained we should for a season; that we may have strength of mind and body to do thy will and overcome the evil.

"And forgive us our trespasses." We are so very human, and the desires of the flesh so very close to us; often we fail thee and must needs ask thy mercy and forgiveness. But we ask this honorably and fairly. We ask it only under the condition that thou forgive us "As we forgive those who trespass against us." It is thus that Jesus taught us to show mercy and love for our fellow men.

"And suffer us not to be led into temptation." We ask thy help here, for we are so often tempted, not recognizing it as temptation. We often err in our judgments; and sometimes we become greedy, lustful, selfish, vain, and jealous of others. Yes Father, we are often tempted, and being in the flesh we sometimes fail, so we look unto thee for guidance and protection. Should we be found in evil ways, we plead that thou wilt "Deliver us from evil."

Lord, God of Hosts, hear our supplication, and continue in mercy towards us. We hallow thy name in our hearts, and give thee our love and allegiance. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever." In the name of Christ we come.

For a moment the silence was complete. Then in a low, clear voice the supplicant humbly and reverently said, "Amen."

As the ripples spread when a pebble is dropped into a quiet pool, so spread a wave of "Amen's" throughout the audience as the worshipers gave their sanction to his words.

God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best.—Robert Collyer.

A Question on Baptism

Shall My Children Be Baptized When They Become Eight Years of Age?

By A. D. Blair

Pastor of Creston, Iowa, Branch

IN MY EXPERIENCE as pastor of a group of Saints, I have found several parents who objected to the baptism of their children at the age of eight years. Although they had been taught in special classes at church school and had expressed themselves as ready for baptism, the parents still insisted on the children "waiting until they knew what they were doing." Consequently some of them have married and have families of their own and are still "waiting until they know what they are doing."

It seems to do no good for one to refer them to Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4, wherein we find that the parents are to teach their children (1) to understand the doctrine of repentance, (2) faith in Christ the Son of the living God, (3) baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, (4) to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord and (5) that they shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands, or the sin be upon the head of the parents.

We read in the eighty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants commonly called the "Word of Wisdom" that it was given "not by commandment or constraint" but for a principle, with promise. Section 68: 4 is given as a "law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or any of her stakes which are organized." We find in the reading of section 90 of the Doctrine and Covenants that F. G. Williams was under condemnation for neglecting the teaching of his children. We today have even a greater opportunity to teach. Before I was eight my parents taught me repentance, baptism, uprightness, and tried to instill in me a faith in God and Christ and the Holy Spirit. I couldn't comprehend the latter, but when Elder James Baker of the Quorum of Seventy laid his hands upon my head, I felt the power of the Holy Spirit go from his hands through my whole body and then I understood what my parents had prayed that I might understand about the Holy Spirit of God.

My good wife and I have tried to teach our two boys according to the pattern set forth in section 68: 4 of the Doctrine and Covenants. One son is eleven and the other is sixteen and it is good to hear them testify of having received the Holy Ghost. Alma, the eldest, is a priest after the order of Aaron and takes his place naturally in the work of God as I think we should all of us do at any age. Proper teaching will bring proper results.

Mental Blanks

If you are hard at work, and your mind goes blank for a moment, don't give it a thought. Your mind isn't slipping; it's resting, according to Prof. Arthur G. Bills, who recently determined, in experiments conducted at the University of Chicago, that everyone has this "mental blank" trouble.

A laborer can work his muscles steadily, but eventually exhaustion forces him to rest. A mental worker, on the other hand, can work hour after hour without exhaustion because his mind rests itself. In a normal adult who is not physically fatigued, enforced rest periods, during which no amount of effort will carry on the train of thought, occur three to five times a minute. They are usually brief—a second or less. A tired person, however, may "block" for two or three seconds and as often as eight or ten times a minute. In this fashion the brain steals cat naps averaging about one-sixth of its working time, or an hour and twenty minutes in an eight-hour working day.—The Literary Digest.

"As Having Authority" By Lorne F. White

INTRODUCTION

ONE OF THE paramount needs, on the part of its membership, is the adequate recognition of the place of authority in the function of the church. It is apparent to all observers that such ignorance of and indifference to this authority has led to gross confusion in the Christian world. On every hand we see evidences of fervor without light, which condition might be interpreted as fanaticism. Also we have ample opportunity to observe the tendency to divorce reason from love and thus obtain sheer radicalism; and, what is equally evident, we have a very marked trend toward liberalism which is nothing but the brain without the heart. Of course there are many contributing factors which may have a bearing upon the creation of this condition; still it can be safely stated that the failure to give the authority of the church its rightful position in our thinking and in the resulting activity, stands high in the list.

In any discussion of church authority, however, it becomes necessary for us to clarify just what is embraced in such authority. This becomes necessary not only for the purpose of general knowledge, but also to offset the possibility of misconception. In stressing the need for the recognition of this authority, we do not wish to imply or urge a blind obedience to the dictatorship that has often emerged from promiscuous exercise of legal church authority, regardless of its demands. We are committed to obedience to such authority just so long as it points to the betterment of mankind, the nurturing of the spirit, the promulgation of the gospel and the regulation of the divine instrument ordained of God for that purpose. To do less than that is to usurp powers belonging only to God. In our disobedience of the true church, we actually disobey God, and by doing so set up a spurious authority with which to justify our future activities.

Man must have a motive for all activity, regardless of the worthiness or unworthiness of that motive. It is the function of the church authority to attempt to ensure that such motivation is that of the caliber compatible with the demands of true discipleship. Authority involves responsibility, responsibility involves duty. Because it is apparently human nature to shun responsibility and duty, authority is viewed with suspicion, even hostility. Of course this is understandable, due to the fact that many of the most despicable episodes in human history had their inception and derived their inspiration from the misuse of religious authority.

WE MAY ASSUME the authority of the church to be divided into two distinct sections, moral authority and legal authority. At this time it is well to add that far from being self-contained, such phases of authority compliment each other in that moral authority cannot exist without a degree of legal authority, and legal authority rests upon a basis of moral authority. There is in man something which absolutely demands a measure of social order, some deep-rooted convictions on conduct, the extension of which, dictates in an elementary form the regulations of such order. Such convictions have been implanted in man by God, to be worked upon in the development of his life. This moral awareness is not something artificially engendered. It is within the nature of man and responding to the moral authority of the church, gives effect to the legal authority necessary to its social and administrative function.

One of the less obvious functions of the moral authority of the church is caught up in the high duty of interpreting the doctrine of Christ in life. The church has been wonderfully blessed in that its message has been enriched by the diversified presentations of its doctrine from the pens of the ancient and modern writers. It is true that the doctrine of Jesus Christ is unchangeable; however, a prism-like quality of the gospel gave such writers the opportunity to express their interpretations or observations in the light of their personal experience. Thus we are made the richer by this diversity. Paul dwelt on doctrine, faith, Christian propaganda, thought, and wisdom; Peter on Christian trials, hope, power, and action; James on Christian practice, works, virtue, and faithfulness; John on Christian experience, mysticism, prophecy, emotion, and holiness. A thorough study of the writings of these and other early apostles, both in the primitive church, the Nephite church and the Restored church, will reward us with a deeper appreciation of the gospel. By such a study we live with these men their experience with God and his Son. And happy is the man that can profit by the experience of others. His is a way of growth in Christ.

AUTHORITY IN DOCTRINE

THE AUTHORITY of the church is displayed in its doctrine. What we believe may be assumed to be part of our moral authority. We might add that an overwhelming number of the modern Christian sects do not believe in a clear-cut authoritative doctrine. Their teachings are mere generalities, devoid of all authority save the dead letter of certain catch phrases and isolated texts which seem to support their particular interpretation. The reason why such churchmen condemn the doctrine of Christ is found in the fact that this doctrine places such a censor upon their thoughts and actions that the discipline thus imposed infringes upon their concept of what they are pleased to call "religious liberty" to such an extent as to move them to adopt a purely idealistic interpretation of the gospel.

"Away with the gospel creed, down with Christian practices!" they cry, much the same way as did that hate-crazed mob on that Friday morning when they cried, "Away with him, crucify him!" And every departure we see manifested from the holy concept of the church almost causes the thinking Latter Day Saint to hear the feeble cries of the Master as those cruel spikes bit into his rending flesh. They who deny the doctrine of Christ are crucifying the Savior anew.

Many who are today advocating the elimination of doctrine from the teachings of Christ are in a definite sense setting up a doctrine of their own, and adding to the general confusion. No man, regardless of his religious persuasion, can avoid the formulation of a doctrine. He develops a theology even in his protest against the demands of the doctrine which he opposes. He must set up a counter system of thought. He must present his claim. Such a position cannot remain purely negative, and the moment an affirmation is made the whole structure is open to attack. Much of the opposition manifested against the doctrine and theology of the church springs from ignorance rather than knowledge. Doctrine leads straight to practice. Knowledge of the truth is a means to an end, for to make men good, rather than to teach them truth, must always remain the great and final purpose of the doctrine of Christ. Theology is merely the attempt of the church to do for the facts of revelation what every scientist attempts to do for the facts of nature.

Thus the Christian world is heard crying on every hand, "Away with the theology and doctrine." In their clamoring is displayed the inevitable weakness of humanity who, seeking to cut adrift from the authority of things, fail to supply an alternative even remotely adequate to the situation. For when asked what they suggest by way of replacement, the invariable answer is, "Give us life, we do not want doctrine; all we need is Christian morality. Don't trouble us with theology, give us the Sermon on the Mount." The demand is not without its aspects of reason. In a measure it is merely a revolt against vain and empty orthodoxy which in the past served only to diminish the word of God and increase the creeds. Still there is no justification for us to assume that an ethical sermon occupied the forefront of the teachings of Christ in comparison to the metaphysical creed of the later centuries. It is not our intention to minimize the beauty and efficacy of the Sermon on the Mount, however, wisdom and reason force us to urge that the Beatitudes are not the total of Christ's teachings, but rather a means to the end that, if observed, might more readily prepare us for the deeper things of the gospel.

It might also be observed that if men were as anxious to obey its precepts as they are to applaud them, how much more would be the contribution of that "sermon" to the strength and vitality of the Christian world. It is not enough to merely accept the "sermon." It is actually only a starting point. Accept it and you must necessarily accept much more. It is not the end, but the means. Nowhere in the "sermon," if we study it, are we given to believe that it constitutes God's first and last word to man. Ethics and morals alone are not necessarily religious, but true religion is essentially ethical and moral. Therefore it is dangerous ground upon which we tread in attempting to divorce morality from doctrine. In the Sermon on the Mount, Christ sets before us the glorious height to which we should aspire in our Christian endeavor and through his doctrine, we are provided with the steps whereby we may climb to that exalted position. It is the glory and the tragedy of the human heart that it must dream and strive for an ideal. But without the dynamics of the doctrine of Christ, the aspirations and exultations of the human heart would remain forever unfulfilled.

Do not become identified with this clamor against theology. Especially is this warning directed to the youth. It is admitted that many theologians are theology's worse enemy. Nevertheless, as long as men believe in God, they will continue to create theology, which is after all merely our attempt to catalogue, in an orderly fashion, the truths of divine revelation. It is true that many have cried in pardonable impatience, "Away with theology, give us life," without leaving one hint as to what they term as actually the essence of life in religion. They cannot tell us because they do not know. We are not justified in advocating the destruction of something vital to man unless we are prepared to replace it with something better.

When men demand that we dispense with doctrine and dwell on the Sermon on the Mount, they display their complete ignorance of the true essence of that sermon. It is saturated with doctrine. The whole structure and content of that sermon implies a complete doctrinal basis. When the exponents of this portion of the scripture seek to imply that it consists only of beautiful and simple moral ideas, we are forced to conclude that they have never carefully studied this object of their ardent support. This is a vivid example of the current trend to exalt one portion of Christian thought to the exclusion of other more disturbing features. When religion is warm, vital, and urgent, it does not demand the unusual or the comfortable in life to sustain it. It is when it becomes cold and less binding that it reaches out for formulas and "comfortable" methods. However, we find very little in the "sermon" to support those who would reduce the doctrine of Christ to relatively few moral and ethical precepts.

LET US VIEW, by way of example, the Lord's Prayer. This is perhaps the most widely known portion of the sermon. It is saturated with the doctrine, if not definitely stated, as least unmistakably implied. "After this manner pray ye: Our Father." . . . Here we have the implied doctrine of the Fatherhood of God. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." Here is presented the doctrine of the literal establishment of the kingdom of God on earth. "Give us this day our daily bread" . . . again we have the doctrine of divine Providence. "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." Here is added the doctrine of sin and forgiveness. Thus we might go on, calling attention to the doctrinal content displayed in this moral and ethical masterpiece of Christian literature, wrongly set up as an example of Christian thought detached from doctrine.

Fortunately the church, listening to the voice of its moral authority, has been spared this internal disputation upon the place of the doctrine of Christ in Christian living. However the average member is not interested in theology. He reserves his reasoning for mundane problems. His religion only comforts him in proportion to the extent that he does not have to think about it. This may seem to be a very harsh indictment, nevertheless it is true and very indictative of a trend insofar as our religious philosophy is concerned.

ON THE OTHER hand we cannot ignore the moral and ethical aspects of the gospel. The purpose of the church is to make men good. And the moral content of the gospel is admirably suited to be utilized in this purpose, after men have been led to Christ through his doctrine, his church and his spirit. Too often one who preaches or teaches moral or ethical values is accused of "not preaching the gospel" I speak of our church. On the whole, however, the church has maintained a healthy balance in this respect and has insisted upon the doctrinal aspects of the gospel being accented and given effect through the moral setting into which they have been placed in the mind and purposes of God. Moderated, as it is, by divine revelation, our theology has never become stagnant or stereotyped. It has evolved from a study and application of scripture already given as clarified through revelation. Although the church speaks with power and assurance of the doctrinal verities of the gospel of Christ, still she must continue to stress the moral and ethical precepts of the word of God.

Any discussion of the moral authority of the church as distinguished from its legal function would be incomplete without consideration of the place and authority of the spiritual gifts in the church. As in the days of the Corinthian church, we still have members who persistently insist upon misinterpreting the authority and function of such gifts. To many within the church, their religious experience insofar as the "gifts" are concerned, assume the proportion of merely a series of so-called intuitions which have developed into obsessions. Lacking the controlling force of reason and the discernment of true spiritual guidance, their experiences assume the proportions of extravagant and fantastic emotional overindulgences. As such they destroy the intelligent receptivity of divine guidance. Mental abuse is common cause of much of our religious confusion, so far as its supernatural qualities are concerned.

Of course it stems from the conscious and unconscious revolt of the religiously inclined, but poorly disciplined minds, against the arid futility of the traditional worship. It was a natural outcome of man's emancipation from the tyranny of the vain orthodoxy of established forms. Politically, economically, and religiously man has passed through a long series of revolts with varied degrees of success and failure. It is merely an indication of the eternal struggle of man toward a better environment, and if controlled bodes well for the future.

Man in his dual nature mani-ests continual spiritual and physical needs. There is a continual search on the part of the soul for God. It is true that such a search may be unknown and unacknowledged, due to man's inability to understand the yearnings of his own soul, still the search goes on.

God Has a Job For You!

By Stele A. Bryant

God has a job for each to do,
There's much work to be done;
That each soul may be won for Christ
He needs us everyone.

We all have our small niche to fill
In God's great scheme of things;
Contentment, satisfaction, hope,
These things a job done brings.

Some do their part, and some put off
The task that they should do.
Now ask yourself what you have done,
Can this be said of you?

So don't put off until tomorrow
What you should do today,
Procrastination is the thief
Of time, or so they say.

And yesterday's forever gone
It never will return
We can't bring back the time that's past
Though we may wish and yearn.

And if this doesn't prove the point,
There's just this much to say:
You know tomorrow never comes,
It always is today!

Victorian children were taught by wise governesses never to begin a letter with the personal pronoun I. If a present were to be acknowledged, the children did not begin with such a phrase as "I was delighted to receive," but with either You or Your. The advice was sound, because each of us is more interested in himself than in his correspondent. Consequently when a letter begins with the word I, its recipient receives a minute chill, whereas when a letter begins with You or Your, the recipient is correspondingly exalted.—The Nineteenth Century and After.

ZION'S LEAGUE EXCHANGE

A Page for Young People and Their Leaders

PRAYER SERVICE

Sunday morning, January 27, nearly fifty Leaguers weathered the zero temperature to attend an early morning prayer service held at Gudgell Park. Ralph Smith was in charge of the service, assisted by Ronald Sherman. The theme was "The Need of Youth to Choose and Stick to Its Choice." Many beautiful thoughts were expressed in prayer and testimony.

RECREATION CENTER

The evening of January 21 found thirty of the Walnut Park Leaguers assembled in the annex building of the church for the opening of their recreation center. Here one night each month the young people get together to talk, sing, play darts, table tennis, monopoly, chess, checkers, dominos, and other games.

BASKETBALL LEAGUE

The Y. M. C. A. and the ministerial alliance in Independence have organized a six-team basketball league. The boys play on Thursday nights at the Bristol school gym in inter-city.

On Thursday evening, January 24, people from the various churches joined to cheer their teams to victory. The First Methodist won over the First Baptist; the First Christian over the First Presbyterian, and the Zion's Leaguers over the Saints.

The Leaguers and the Saints are groups of boys gathered from different branches of the church in Independence. Winton Wilcox coaches the Saints, and Bill Tignor the Leaguers.

Stimulated by the example set by the boys, the girls are organizing a basketball league to prove that they too are first-class athletes.

GIFT AND CONSECRATION SERVICE

"Keep my commandments and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." Called to worship by those words, the Zion's Leaguers of Independence assembled in the Walnut Park Church on January 6 for their annual gift and consecration service. Following the opening hymn, "Rise Up, O Men of God," Bernard Butterworth offered the invocation. A response sung by a quartet from Stone Church set the mood for the service. Howard Downs, who was in charge of the meetings, gave the scripture reading. Ralph Freeman, city-wide youth leader, gave an inspirational talk, after which the presidents of each League placed in a chest the contributions from their church. These consisted of promises of support, financial statements, and tithing. Dwain Miller, city-wide president, made the dedication for that organization. Then individual dedications of time, talent, service, money, and lives were made by the Leaguers. President Frederick M. Smith was present to accept these dedications. The quartet sang "Just As I Am," as a climax to the service, and Glaude Smith, pastor of Walnut Park, offered the benediction.

The setting for the service was an empty chair draped in white with a soft light playing on it to represent Christ. At His feet, draped in red, was a chest. The only other light in the church besides the glow surrounding the chair was candleabra and candles in the windows. A fresh clean touch was added by sprays of evergreen along the altar and on either side of Christ's chair.

After the service the two-hundred young people adjourned to the lower auditorium for hot chocolate and cookies.

YOUTH WEEK

In 1934 the youth of all Protestant churches organized and assumed the name of United Christian Youth Movement. In Independence this movement has its work centered in the youth council. This council, which consists of two representatives from each denomination in the town, sponsors mass meetings and community projects which are to increase the spread and practices of Christianity.

During the week of January 27-February 2, emphasis is being placed on youth and its activities, desires, and problems. This week has been set aside as National Youth Week. In Independence it will be devoted to the young people through participation in their own churches and special assemblies in the schools, culminating in a mass meeting, at 8 P. M. February 3.

The Leaguers at Walnut Park took over the morning service on January 27. The 9:30 worship was directed by Vance Eastwood, young people's leader. A call to worship was given by Betty Thomas, and Warren Haskins offered the invocation. Dorothy Eastwood gave a talk, stressing the importance of co-operation in this youth movement.

At the 11 o'clock service Warren Haskins was in charge, and Ammon Roberson, a returned flier who is taking his place in the League again, presented the sermon, "To Be or Not to Be."

ENGLEWOOD

The first activity of the Englewood Zion's League to help raise the hundred dollars pledged for the new church was a "Corinthian" dinner. The food was donated by the women's department and sold for a nickel a spoonful. The branch gave its full support to the League and a profit of $75 was made.

The Leaguers again assembled in the Welch garage for a January birthday party; guests of honor were Brother Welch, Pat Keeney, Ben Alton, Kathryn Bopra, and Martha Brewer. Sister Welch baked the three-layer birthday cake. The evening was spent in playing games and ended with a taffy pull.

The Business of God's People

By J. A. Koehler

IS THE Bible a mass of contradictions? Or is its language confusing? Or do many people not know how to read it? Or do they not trouble themselves to read it as they could if they would? If these things are not true, how are we to account for the contradictory beliefs that are derived, presumably, from that book? How is it, for instance, that some people believe it is man's business to build the Kingdom while others say that it is the business of God?

The only civil-mode Kingdom-building that was ever done was done by a group that the prophet called "My people": it was done by a religious people under prophetic leadership. The Israelites are the only people of Bible times that did any civil-mode Kingdom-building of which we have any definite knowledge. Surely every Bible student should know that the meaning of the careers and messages of the prophets is that to bring forth and to promote the Kingdom is the business of "My people."

THERE ARE SOME passages in the Bible which, regarded fragmentarily, seem to say that the Kingdom is God's affair, that God will build it. Daniel says, for instance, that "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a Kingdom." Isaiah, too, says that "the government [which is the civil-mode Kingdom] shall be upon His shoulder"—upon the shoulders of the Messiah—to order it and to establish it.

But is that all the testimony respecting the business of the Kingdom? Surely you must know that it is not. And since it is not, why do not all people take into account the rest of the testimony in judging of whose business it is to build the Kingdom? Does not the whole record of God's dealings with man, through Jesus and the prophets, mean that it is the business of the people, of "My people," to establish the Kingdom? Whatever God's part in the business of the Kingdom may be, the composite testimony of the prophets, the story of the Bible taken as a whole, means that the business of the Kingdom is the business of "My people."

Government is the business of "peoples." It is not the business of persons severally. Nor is it the business of persons in a mass. It is the business of persons who are organized for the business of self-governance in vital relations—for civil self-governance; particularly economic self-governance. Government is the business of the persons collectively who compose the community.

Vatican City is a religious community. It was built by a religious people. But the United States of America is not. Nor is the British Commonwealth of Nations, nor any other nation that was formed accidentally through migration, conquest, infiltration, etc. Such peoples are not the peoples of which the prophets speak as "My people." There are not only reasons why such peoples will not make the business of the Kingdom their business, there are also reasons why they cannot successfully inaugurate that business.

ONE OF THE characteristics of "My people" is its willing acceptance, under a distinctive religious impulsion, of a peculiar responsibility for the essential character of civilization. "My people" deliberately takes the lead in the march of civilization; it makes its community, which it builds for that purpose, an intentional implementation of the will of God. And "My people" does that in the hope that its example of rightly constituted economic society will be emulated in time by peoples generally; in the hope that all the governments of this world shall become "kingdoms of our God and of his Christ." "My people" makes the business of the Kingdom its business. For the business of the Kingdom is the business of "My people."

We cannot say with certainty why so many people try to throw that responsibility back on God; why they say, in effect, that God will build his Kingdom whether "His" people accept that responsibility willingly or not. We cannot say why people say that this or that people, which they mention by name, shall be God's people, the builders of his Kingdom, whether they are aware of it or not. But they do either say that or act as if they believed it. And it is not at all improbable that the ineffectiveness of what we call "the Christian spirit" may be chargeable to such beliefs—which may be Christendom's attempt to escape the conviction that the business of the civil-mode Kingdom is the positive business of My people.

THERE IS, however, one religious genius which says that the business of the establishing the civil-mode Kingdom is the business of "My people." That is the genius of Restoration. That genius does not look to secular agencies, it does not look to any people as formed, to "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion"—which it says is in very deed the Kingdom of God. It looks to what Isaiah calls "the Lord's house." It looks to a religious people: the people of the church.

It is to man, not to God, that the genius of Restoration looks to "organize my Kingdom upon the promised land." As the voice of ancient prophecy said, so says the modern voice: it is because "My people" have not accepted their responsibility for the embodiment of God's will in a family of social institutions of their own creation that the business of the Kingdom has not been inaugurated. The willing of God has nothing to do with that failure. The business of the Kingdom, said the genius of Restoration, is to be inaugurated, not through the offices of the British or American commonwealths, nor through the offices of any other secular agency. It is to be founded under theegis and through certain offices of "the Lord's house." And, in the language of Restoration, that means the "church."

IN BIBLE times the identity of "My people" was not in doubt. Only the seed of Abram were regarded as the chosen people. To that people came Jesus for the purpose of engendering the spirit of which the Kingdom is an implementation.

But since that day the fortunes, the situations, the circumstances, of that people have changed greatly. Israel is no longer a people in the sense in which she was then. She is scattered and she is torn. She is harried, and she is butchered. Her house is left unto her desolate. We can only guess at the identity of her progeny. She has no Moses. She does not even have an Isaiah. The prophetic voice does not resound within her tabernacles. Her former religious solidarity, even, no longer exists.

Yes, things have changed, so that now there exists a necessity to form a new chosen people—not of one blood but of one spirit. There exists also a necessity for new religious institutions through which the new chosen people may fulfill its old mission. Moreover, the business of the Kingdom must be re-inaugurated in a different manner from that in which Moses inaugurated it. As a practical enterprise the business of the Kingdom must be begun over again in a different way.

There are ever so many things to do today that did not require to be done in the Israelitish attempt to establish the business of the Kingdom. Even the ethical principles proclaimed by Jesus and the prophets, the principles on which the business of the Kingdom must rest, require to be re-interpreted in terms of pres-

Where Jesus Lived

By Ruby Le Neve Henson

OUR SOCIETY today is made up for the most part of reasonable people. That is to say we have filing cabinets for minds, push buttons for hearts, and time schedules for exercises. But for the moment let us leave our reasonable society of paved streets, tall buildings, and reflecting glass, and go to another, smaller country. We'll find this country on the Mediterranean Sea. And let's visit it in Christ's time.

I can imagine Christ there in that summer country on the sands of the Galilean shore. The sand was probably quite annoying whenever grains of it got in his loose sandals, but then to rest his feet he might logically have removed his sandals to feel the warm, soft sand caressing his feet. I can see him sitting on a patch of green grass, running his fingers over the cool, smooth blades. I can see him watching a palm tree's leaves flirting with the breeze. He probably listened to their soothing chatter with his heart responding with a tightening warmth. He even would have lounged back in the grass and watched the ever-changing clouds shifting against the fair blue, imagining them as all sorts of pictures.

In the cities among the people his throat would tighten in sympathy while watching a mother stunned by her son's death. His body would react to the strain in a cripple's body who was trying to walk in spite of his bonds. Christ's stomach would recoil with repulsion and pity at seeing filth. I can easily imagine that he felt a chilling thrill down his spine in response to a clear-voiced, sweet singing girl. He even grew hot with indignant anger. He was gravely humble in forgiving those who had done wrong. He never fussed about ritualistic details, but was concerned with how one felt down in his heart. Because, you see, he "felt." Yes, Christ had the ability to feel deeply. His senses were sharply sensitive to everything and everyone around him. Nor was he ashamed of his ability to feel, or the sacrament of the Lord's Supper would not have the depth of significance it has for us today.

In our reasonable society, we are ashamed to show feeling. If we do, we show disgust instead of sympathetic understanding when we see someone in grief and offer no helping hand to ease the heavy heart. We are numb to those most weary or infirm on the impersonal street cars. We are dulled to incapacity to feel as if on wings when the autumn wind cleanly blows through our hair. We are blind to the colors glorious that flash before us on every side, and find no fairyland in their reality. Cement, steel, cities, and speed have made us insensitive to small things about us. We feel only on the surface, forgetting to feel way down inside and letting it come out through sparkling eyes, ready smiles, quick, alive bodies, and alert minds. Yet only by developing conscious sensitivity to our environment can we truly feel as deeply, as Christ, and thereby build a kingdom of Christlike people.

The genius of Restoration has given what to many of us is the true answer to every basic question involved in the rise of the business of the Kingdom in the latter days. It has proclaimed the political, the social, the moral, the ethical principles, in which the economy of the Kingdom must be ground. It has stipulated the rights of man. It has revealed the practical plan of social action through which the business of the Kingdom may be re-established in these latter days. It has revealed the proper relation of the ecclesiastical-mode Kingdom to the civil-mode Kingdom. It has made the business of the Kingdom the business of "My people."

This reaffirmation of "all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began" is to not a few of us an assurance that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy.

"GOD AND COUNTRY AWARD" IN SCOUTING

By C. Cecil Talcott

GOD AND COUNTRY AWARD

IT WAS January 19, 1945, that Dr. Paul R. Rannie, Scoutmaster of Troops 223 and 2223 in Independence, Missouri, signed the application for our two sons to register for the "God and Country" award in religion. Both boys were advancing in the ranks of scouting, and when this new award was announced by the Department of Religious Education we encouraged them to register for it, keeping in mind the fact that it would require our assistance and careful guidance in helping them to understand each problem which they would encounter. It would also be necessary for us to see that ways be provided for the boys to earn service hours.

Because of my interest in seeing that these boys were well supervised, I was assigned the duty of directing and helping all the boys of 223 and 2223 in the work of the "God and Country" award. There are twenty-three boys from the Stone Church registered for this award at present. Brother Jay E. Keck, who is keeping the records for Zion-wide registrations and advancements, informed me that registrations have now passed the sixty mark. That is encouraging! Brother Keck has been making personal contacts with the boys and their parents to help promote the interest in this important phase of boys' work and he is keeping detailed records of awards earned by our boys. I am sure that we will be proud of their final achievement records.

MOST OF THE BOYS got off to a slow start because at first no one seemed to be on hand to direct them. At the close of the first month, from the time of registration, they should have applied for the first award, providing they had complied with each of the five requirements. This included, along with regular church school and church attendance, daily devotions and clean personal habits (including abstinence from the use of tobacco and profanity), and the earning of five acceptable hours of service to the church. The first service hours earned by Carlin were in Junior Choir work and were signed for by Lucille Esgar, while Marvin acquired his first hours of service by ushering at the Stone Church. Pastor Tickemyer initialed his okay for the latter.

On December 23 Carlin went with a group of Englewood Zion's League carolers and assisted them by playing his cornet. He and his buddy, David Leonard, had been promised five service hours for the project if they would practice and be ready to go with the group. They really had a grand time, as Carlin remarked later. Brother Welch came for them in his car and brought them home after a chili lunch, late that evening. These five hours were significant because they completed the 150 hours of service to the church which Carlin needed. After having passed requirements to Leonard Lea in November, and to Evan Fry and Bishop Skinner in December, it seemed easy to earn the last five hours. It was a long pull and a steady grind to earn that 100 points and the 150 hours of service to the church.

Brother John R. Darling, of the Department of Religious Education, called me this morning and informed me that Carlin had been in his office and that he was the first boy to complete the requirements for the "God and Country" award in our church. It certainly thrilled me to know that after all the work Carlin had done he was the first to complete his requirements. I know it will take Marvin some weeks to complete his service hours, but he now has his appointments for December 27 to pass all the other remaining requirements. Service hours do not pile up very fast and we must help these boys to find ways and means of earning them in service to the church. It must be work that boys can do and which they will enjoy, and not just something that we might wish to shift on to them.

I have been meeting with the boys of 223 and 2223 on the first Tuesday of each month. We discuss their problems and try to help them meet their requirements. We also point out some of the future requirements which are ahead of them so that they are prepared to meet these requirements on schedule.

PARENTS should learn that it is necessary for them to have a part in helping the boys earn this award. Without their help and encouragement the boy may not accomplish much, while, with their help he will march along surmounting the obstacles that appear as mountains in his path from time to time. The development which takes place in the minds of these boys is supremely important to our church. One Sunday, not long ago, four or five of these young fellows were in our home studying to pass some of the requirements. You should have heard them discussing church history, financial law, and the names of the general and local church personnel. I wondered if sometime some of their names might be among those that would be repeated by future Boy Scouts who shall be working toward this same award.

Parents, it is up to us to return to the old time philosophy of giving our children instruction in the home. We shall have to regiment ourselves as parents in many ways in relation to our church responsibilities. Putting a church school quarterly in the hands of a child will not transfer the knowledge therein to the mind of the child. Registering a Boy Scout for the "God and Country" award will not win the ward for him. However in both these cases an important move has been made. It is then necessary to carry through. If the parent follows through—see that the child studies the lesson each week and is reviewed on it before going to class—we can be sure of success. At least the teacher in our church school will have something to work with. Our boys need encouragement and persuasion in forging ahead in the "God and Country" award work.

I AM PROUD of the work our Stone Church boys are doing in scouting. I expect at least four of the boys to complete the six wards for the "God and Country" award before general conference time next April. We hope many of our boys throughout the church will be ready to receive this award from President F. M. Smith at a special ceremony during general conference. Parents, let's all co-operate in this great work and help prepare our boys for future service in Christ's church. The motive has been provided. If you have previously needed some excuse for teaching them the Law of God, this "God and Country" award work provides it. I must admit that it has helped me very much to do some things for my sons that were previously difficult to accomplish.

One of the most important first things for you to do for your boy is to help him file, with the Presiding Bishopric, his first financial statement. Then see that he is provided with a proper record book for the year, and that he pays his tithing and offerings regularly. This has to be done for the period of at least one year to meet requirement five in the "God and Country" award. Of course, we hope that all who start this accounting will keep it up regularly. That is the purpose of this program—to teach the law and put it into practice in the lives of our sons. I plead with you, my fellow parents, to do these things that we may thus bring about the redemption of Zion for which we have prayed so long and done so little.

One of the finest things that has been promoted for our boys was the holding of the "God and Country" Scout Camporee at Lake Doniphan last October. The boys had the opportunity of getting acquainted with each other and with some of the general church men. Among those whose names are familiar to you and who helped us much were: F. M. McDowell, John R. Darling, Glaude A. Smith, Elvin Luff, Tupper Smith, Apostle McConley, Apostle Lewis, Leonard Lea, Garland E. Tickemyer, Al Stonger, Evan A. Fry, and several others who are con-

The Church and Health

By Evan A. Fry

THE INDEPENDENCE Sanitarium had its beginnings in 1906, when a revelation was presented to the general conference of the church, instructing the church to begin construction of a building to house such an institution. The community and the government have contributed substantially and generously to the expansion of the hospital buildings in late years, because of the rapid influx of wartime population, and the increasing need for more adequate hospital facilities in this community. The government has also contributed generously to the program of training cadet nurses, because of the urgent need of more nurses in the armed services. During this expansion, the church has come to regard this institution as more and more a community project, but in many ways it is still peculiarly a church institution, guided by the ideals and beliefs of the denomination which founded it. A majority of its board members are chosen from among church men, and the policy of the entire staff is that medicine is a handmaiden of religion—a means of salvation for suffering humanity.

Even a casual study of the life and ministry of Christ will reveal that his ministry was twofold—physical and spiritual. He never made a very clear distinction between men's bodies and men's souls. He seems to have operated on the theory that each was incomplete without the other. When physical healing was needed, he supplied that; when it was man's soul or spirit which needed healing, he met that need. He recognized that the physical can affect the spiritual for good or evil; and that the spiritual can likewise affect the physical; that man, though dual in nature, is a unified whole which cannot be separated into two distinct parts. The Christian church in all its branches has always carried on this dual ministry, offering healing for sick souls or sick bodies without attempting to make much of a distinction between the two. I cannot vouch for the truthfulness of this interesting bit of information, but somewhere I have read that although of course not all hospitals are under direct religious or ecclesiastical control, still there is only one non-Christian hospital in all the world—and that is a hospital for sacred cows in India. Of all the great world religions, Christianity seems to be the only one concerned with physical healing and good health.

With the darkness and superstition of the Middle Ages, however, there came about an almost total disregard or ignoring of the spiritual aspects of healing. The church was still interested in saving men's souls by the ritualistic magic of its ordinances, and in a superstitious and ignorant sort of way it also had some degree of belief in miracles of physical healing. Then with the rise of science, and an increased knowledge of human anatomy and physiology, the discovery of germs and aseptic surgery, anaesthetics, new drugs, etc., even the church found itself adopting a purely materialistic view of physical healing, and almost totally neglecting the thing which has been termed—sometimes in derision, and sometimes with reverence—faith-healing. Now the swing is all back the other way, and for all the wonderful materialistic progress we have made in the field of medicine and surgery, we find modern doctors talking in terms of psychiatry and psychosomatic healing. We find some reputable and quite material-minded doctors telling us that fifty per cent or more of humanity's physical ills have a mental or a spiritual, rather than a physical, cause. New religious cults have arisen, making faith-healing the central doctrine of their belief.

THE CHURCH founded in 1830 by Joseph Smith advocated, taught, and practiced faith-healing in a day when almost no one else believed in it. They found scriptural precedent for faith-healing in the miracles of Jesus, in the promise of signs following the believer given in Mark's Gospel, in the inclusion of "gifts of healing" in Paul's list of spiritual gifts in the twelfth chapter of first Corinthians, and in James' instruction, "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." In the early revelations given to the church and to its ministry through the prophet, Joseph Smith, the promise was often repeated, and as frequently fulfilled, "Lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

But these early advocates of faith-healing through the laying on of hands were not fanatical or unbalanced in their concepts of the place and purpose of faith-healing. They recognized that all had not faith to be healed by this method. They recognized furthermore that for some unknown purpose, God withholds healing even from men of great faith. There were times and places where Christ himself could not heal, because of unbelief and lack of faith in those who needed such ministry. Paul suffered a "thorn in the flesh" all his life, without the boon of healing. Some of Paul's advice to Timothy leads us to believe that Timothy was afflicted with chronic stomach trouble of some kind. So, in this early church under Joseph Smith, further instruction was given, that "whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me; and if they live, they shall live unto me." The further counsel was given that if the afflicted one lived, but was not relieved of his affliction, that all should help him to bear his infirmities.

BECAUSE IT IS necessary for every man once to die, we may not always expect God to grant us our requests for healing. But when any sick person receives of the ordinance of healing, the promise is that if he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. This provision is necessary, inasmuch as it is always sin—perhaps in the afflicted person, or perhaps in someone far removed from him—which is responsible for illness and pain. If it is not God's will that the afflicted one should be restored to life and health, the ordinance of anointing and laying on of hands prepares him for death. If God does raise him up, there is an obligation implied in that the person so healed is commanded to "live unto me," that is, to devote his life thence forward to the God who has spared that life for a little season. Because in their very understandable human sympathies, the elders would wish to have every afflicted person healed, they are particularly cautioned in the church law not to prophesy over the sick, or to promise them healing. It is not the elder's power which heals—but God's. It is not the elder's wisdom which directs whether healing should come, or whether death should come, or whether life should continue under affliction. So the elders are counseled to anoint them with oil, to lay on hands and pray for them, and to leave the sick in God's hands for such a blessing as he sees fit to give. Sometimes that blessing is miraculous healing. Sometimes it is a lifting of spiritual or mental clouds or burdens, so that the body can heal itself through the usual processes of nature. Sometimes it is merely a gift of patience to endure affliction.

Sometimes it is only the blessing of peace and assurance as the afflicted one breathes his last and departs this life.

VERY EARLY in the church, only some five months after its organization in April, 1830, Joseph Smith called Thomas B. Marsh to be an apostle, and at the same time to act as physician to the church. Latter Day Saints have never regarded the spiritual and the physical as antagonistic to each other, but rather as complementary and essential to each other. Not only was provision set in the church for healing by the laying on of hands, but the skill of medical men was also recognized as a legitimate and in the best sense of the word, a "spiritual" method of healing. The revelations of Joseph Smith contained numerous bits of advice about physical health. The document known as the "Word of Wisdom" counseled church members against the use of alcoholic drinks and tobacco; advised against the use of "hot drinks" which is usually construed to mean tea and coffee; counseled the people on a proper diet of fruits and grains and vegetables, with a sparing use of meat in hot weather; and promised not only physical strength, health, and endurance, but mental and spiritual alertness of perception to those who would comply. Other revelations counseled temperate habits in the matter of sleep, and pointed out the relationship between a happy and contented mind, a clean conscience, and a peaceful relationship with all men, and good health. God thought it not unseemly to condescend to these quite explicit instructions to make sure that his people might find good health.

With the disruption of church organization in 1844, at the death of Joseph Smith, the office of church physician seems to have fallen into the discard, until in 1906 the son of Joseph Smith who had been

J. A. Gunsolley

A biographical sketch prepared in connection with the Fiftieth Anniversary celebration of Graceland College, 1945

By the Lambda Delta Sigma Society

A LONG AND useful lifetime, characterized by affection and loyalty to family and friends, faith in God, devotion to his church and to Graceland College, steadfast purpose and dogged persistence in the face of discouraging odds, disregard for personal gain in his absorption in the cause of his church and its institutions—this is the example set by J. A. Gunsolley, one of the courageous pioneers in Graceland's beginnings and early growth.

Jeremiah A. Gunsolley was born near Strawberry Point, in Delaware County, Iowa, July 9, 1862. He was one of thirteen children, three of whom died in infancy. The family lived on a farm. Few farmers enjoyed affluence in those pioneer days, and the Gunsolleys followed the usual pattern. Thrifty, industrious, frugal, they lived simply but comfortably according to the standards of the time. Farming was a co-operative endeavor, and all the children shared in the tasks which each day brought. The virtues of thrift, industry, persistence, self-reliance, and a sense of responsibility were learned at an early age. J. A. continued in farm activities, either at home or as a "hired man," until he reached the age of twenty-two. The family made several moves during this time, so he lived for a few years at a time, successively near Glenwood, in Mills County (1867 to 1870 or '71); near Mondamin, Harrison County; and near Defiance, Shelby County.<sup>1</sup>

From the time Jerry was old enough to share actively in field activities, he attended school only in the wintertime. He thus completed the usual country school studies and approximately two years of high school work. Sometime in his later teens, he developed the ambition to become a teacher. Encouraged by the counsel of one of his teachers who recognized his ability, he attended teachers' institute for three weeks, took the examinations, and received a second grade county certificate. Thereafter he taught country school in Harrison County for three winters, continuing farm work between terms. During one of these interims, he went to western Kansas and filed on a homestead of 160 acres, plus a timber claim of eighty acres. With the assistance of two friends who had filed on near-by claims, he erected a rude sod shanty on this land. He then sold his equity in the claims for $360 and used the money to pay college expenses.<sup>2</sup>

He attended Western Normal College and Institute for two years.<sup>3</sup> While there he completed the normal course, took some science work and all of the commercial subjects available. In July, 1888, he was granted the degrees of Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Accountants. He taught one term of country school after completing his college work. In March, 1889, he was called to Lamoni to take charge of the public school. The schoolhouse was a three-room structure at that time located on the site now known as the Tourist Park, on east Main Street. He continued as superintendent of Lamoni schools until May, 1894. In July of that year, he went to Salem, Massachusetts, to take charge of business college. (His family remained in Lamoni.) He remained there only until March, 1895. Graceland College was organized that year, and he became a member of the staff in September.

J. A. Gunsolley, in his middle years.

The college at that time occupied three rooms on the second floor of the France building (now owned and occupied by A. J. Yarrington). For thirty-one years thereafter (until June, 1926,) with the exception of a brief two-year interval,<sup>4</sup> he remained as a member of the Graceland College staff.<sup>5</sup> During this time he served the college faithfully and well in the capacity of instructor, principal of the Commercial School, as acting president for each of two brief periods,<sup>6</sup> as treasurer, and as business manager and treasurer.<sup>7</sup> He taught at different times bookkeeping and accounting, commercial arithmetic, business spelling, commercial law, penmanship, salesmanship, business correspondence and grammar, commercial geography, banking and credits, shorthand and typing.<sup>8</sup>

Mr. Gunsolley was a skilled penman, and during the first forty years of the college history (1895-1935) it was he who engrossed the student's names on the diplomas.<sup>9</sup>

Many of those early years of Graceland's existence were difficult ones for members of the staff. Allowances were small at the best, and sometimes during periods of stress and uncertainty even the small amount was not paid for months at a time. Mr. Gunsolley accepted at one time two lots in the vicinity of the college at a valuation of $200 each, in lieu of unpaid allowance. It was then his intention to build a home on these lots, but after a daughter was crippled by infantile paralysis, he abandoned that plan. The lots were eventually returned to the college at a valuation of approximately $75 each.<sup>10</sup>

For many years the attendance at Graceland College remained small, financial contributions were meager and uncertain, church support was inadequate. At one time the general conference of the church voted to close the institution. The college survived this threat to its existence only because of the faith and vision, the selfless labor and prayerful persistence of a few courageous individuals, one of whom was J. A. Gunsolley.<sup>11</sup> He refused to give up the conviction that Graceland College had a place to fill and that it must survive to become an integral part of the general church plan. The Board of Trustees supported him in this conviction. Widespread appeal for funds brought increased support. The crisis passed. Slowly but surely the institution grew in numbers, in stability, and in influence. The college owes its very existence to the unwavering devotion of the faithful few who refused to acknowledge defeat.

Mr. Gunsolley's unselfish devotion to the college was only a part of his larger service to the Latter Day Saints' church to which he had pledged his allegiance. His connection with the church came only after he had grown to manhood. His parents were sober, industrious, righteous people who attended church at intervals, but were not particularly interested in church activities. Jerry attended church and Sunday school from the time he was a boy, with no particular choice among the Protestant churches which were within reach. Probably his first real participation in religious activities came when, at the age of thirteen, he was chosen secretary of the Sunday school held in the neighborhood schoolhouse. He was faithful even then to the responsibility entrusted to him and kept the records carefully in a memorandum book advertising Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.<sup>12</sup>

When he was sixteen or seventeen years old, chance threw into his hands a copy of the Book of Mormon. This was a worn, dilapidated volume. The cover was gone, and the outside of the book gave no clue as to the nature of its contents. Reading matter was scarce, and the lad was always hungry for something to read. He began the book only because it was reading material; but before the first chapter was concluded, he found it more absorbing than any fiction or fairy tale. He was loath to lay the book aside. On rainy days when farm work was necessarily suspended temporarily, he would slip off to the haymow where he could read undisturbed. Many years later, he wrote, "I know now it was the Spirit of God leading me on and arousing within me the desire to know the truth concerning the people who lived on the western continent originally and the effect of the gospel among them."<sup>14</sup> One day he read of Christ's visit to the people on this continent and the establishment of his church here. Of this experience, he later wrote, "As I read, the Spirit of God came upon me and filled my soul with an overwhelming power of God, for now to me he was the Savior of the world."<sup>15</sup> A few years later (October 7, 1884), Jerry and several other members of the family were baptized into the Latter Day Saint Church.<sup>16</sup> J. A. was active in the church from the first. He served as teacher and as superintendent in the Sunday school, in Shenandoah, Iowa, 1886-1887; and in Lamoni, 1889-1890; as District Sunday School Superintendent of Decatur County District Association, 1890-1892; and as president of Lamoni branch, 1893-1894 and again in 1896. He was ordained a member of the Aaronic priesthood in 1892, an elder in 1896, and a high priest in 1900. He became a patriarch in 1925.<sup>17</sup>

He acted as president of Zion's Religio Literary Society, 1894-1916.

He served as pastor of Lamoni branch for several years, as pastor of the church at Duluth, Minnesota, and for a time of two branches in Cleveland, Ohio.

In the missionary field he was active at different times in North Dakota and Minnesota, in southern states, in Far West Stake, Clinton and Spring River districts, and in Southern New England district.<sup>18</sup>

His contributions to Autumn Leaves and to the Saints' Herald were frequent and varied in theme, but through all of his writings runs a deeply religious strain, implicit faith in God, and a strength of conviction that God works his will through men. Of his own relationship to the church, he says, "I belong to the church. My covenant is to serve God and I can serve him only by serving the church, since God shows forth his works in his church. . . . My time is not my own, my talents are not my own, my property is not my own. All belong to God."<sup>19</sup>

He also served at different times as Secretary of the Board of Publications of the church (1901-1902), as Associate Superintendent of the General Sunday School of the church, as Counselor to the President of Lamoni Stake, as Counselor to the President of the Third Quorum of Priests, as Secretary of the Order of Evangelists, as member of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College (1900-1911).

Mr. Gunsolley has lived since 1892 in the same home in Lamoni (except for brief intervals when he was absent for a few months at a time in the interests of the church). He sold this home in February, 1945, and purchased a five-room cottage in north Lamoni, expecting to take possession of the new home in March. For half a century he has been an honored and constructive member of Lamoni community. He has been a leader in church, in religion, in conference activities, in civil projects, and in educational advancement. For nearly a third of a century he was an active member of the staff of Graceland College. There he was a stabilizing influence; he helped give continuity to the program and primary objectives of the institution.<sup>20</sup> His influence on members of the staff and on the student body was deeply felt. He inspired them by his own sincere and constant devotion to the church and to the college. He strengthened their faith and awakened in many a youth a desire to serve in a good cause. He helped carry the institution through its most discouraging years. He was treasurer from 1911 to 1913, and business manager and treasurer, 1916-1926. Financially these were critical years for the college, and Mr. Gunsolley labored with unflagging zeal to carry the institution through and to establish for it a sound financial basis. Here he made a real contribution to the cause of higher education for the youth of the Latter Day Saint Church. When asked what he considered his greatest contribution to Graceland College, he replied, "Probably dogged stick-to-itiveness during the period of poverty and operational difficulties of the college."<sup>21</sup> He and his family were indifferent to personal gains during these trying years. He plodded on when a less-determined and less-courageous soul would have given up. Steadiness of purpose and firmness of conviction gave stability to his effort. He lived simply with little regard for social status. He was too busy doing what he felt God wanted him to do to be concerned with society's evaluation of him. Graceland College owes to him a debt of gratitude for his unselfish devotion to its welfare. Lamoni community has been enriched immeasurably by his long residence here.

Mr. Gunsolley ceased active participation on the staff of the college in 1926, but he has never lost his interest nor his enthusiasm for the institution. He became Treasurer Emeritus in 1927, and has since given freely of his time and his talents when opportunity offered to further the interests of the institution. After severing connection with the college, he continued in general church work as a patriarch. He was superannuated in 1934, but continues to serve when called upon to do so. He and Mrs. Gunsolley still live in Lamoni (1945), simply, quietly, and serenely, exemplifying in word, deed and richness of personality the "way of life" which is the aim of the organization of Latter Day Saints.

Temptations

The U. N. O. was formed to control nations like Germany, Italy, and Japan. But they are no longer a threat, and will not be for a while to come. Who, then, provides the threat to world peace? The nations in most danger of causing war are the Big Five, the permanent members of the Security Council. They have set themselves up as the guardians of world peace and justice. They have the power, and they have given themselves greater authority in the U. N. O. than is possessed by all other nations put together. That gives them a great responsibility. The peace of the world depends upon them. They cannot commit wrong acts without destroying all confidence in U. N. O.

Russian troops in Iran—American troops in China and the Islands of the Pacific—British troops bolstering a tottering Dutch Empire in Java—these are the temptations, these are the danger spots. If the U. N. O. goes down and the hope of the world for peace is destroyed, we can see that our eventual destruction by atomic bombs may well begin with acts committed in such places as these.

Discovering Highways of Abundant Living

Choosing a Lifework

By Wayne Updike

AT LEAST once in every man's lifetime there comes a desire to know the purpose of his own being. God, being the creator of all, must have had some purpose in view in placing each of us here.

It appears that God's purposes are always related to character. This being true, our work should be chosen with a view to developing ourselves in the divine pattern. When we make a study of the life of the most Godlike person about whom we have any information, we find that in several of his recorded acts and sayings there are clues which indicate his attitude toward his work. Any studious approach to the selection of a lifework should include a study of the life of Christ.

One idea several times repeated in the Gospels is that Jesus submerged his own desires in his interest in doing what his Father wanted him to do. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work" (John 4: 34). We, too, are placed here that we might lose ourselves in the task of working out God's purposes among men.

The selection of a lifework is concerned with studying the various vocations and avocations which, if well done, will bring to pass the complete fulfillment of his divine purpose. The list of factors upon which a job is selected is long and includes, to mention a few: opportunity for advancement, environment, health, geographical location of work, personal aptitudes, finances, and previous training. If we apply the above approach to the generally accepted list of factors used in selecting a lifework we find that it is not just a matter of how much money the job will pay, the kind of environment in which it will place us, or what it will do to our health, but rather we find ourselves facing the question, "What does God think of the various aspects of the job?" Further than that, it brings us to a point where we must decide whether or not we shall make our selection on the basis of our best knowledge of his desires for us.

The world of tomorrow is in need of a generation of people who, during these days immediately ahead, will be willing to make their choices chiefly on the basis of God's purposes for themselves and for mankind. God wishes his people to be successful and is desirous that the wealth of the world be used for the advancement of his purposes.

The generation of young people who are now available for positions should also be guarding their health, not just because they want to remain healthy, but because God can best work through a person who is physically fit. They should choose a vocation where there is an opportunity for advancement, because it is a part of God's plan that all men should continue to work toward perfection rather than to stand in one place. They should be concerned with the environment offered in the prospective vocation, for it is the divine purpose that men should be clean in body and mind. So it continues in the case of every factor which is presented for consideration in making our choice. In every one God has an interest, for he placed us here to do his work.

Whether it be young people just finishing school or returning servicemen seeking their first or a different job, the idea of taking God into their selection of a lifework will do two important things:

1. It will make them want to excel in whatever they are doing. Our creator is interested in good work; thus, the person who does only a halfhearted job does not meet with his approval.

2. It will be a stabilizing factor. If a job is selected after praying for guidance and understanding of God's will in the matter concerning the course of action to be taken, there will be less tendency to shift around from one thing to another, for surely God does not change his mind as often as many people change their work.

The great need is for a world of workers who sense their stewardship over not only their present possessions, but also over their own aptitudes and abilities, and who make their selection on the basis of how best to utilize these potential powers through mankind for God.

What Can We Do?

What Shall We Do?

By Anna Wilkie

IN THE DISCUSSION of what the Zion's League can do to help its members in choosing a vocation, profession, future schooling, or a lifework, each case is an individual problem with varying possibilities and degrees of help, and methods by which we may proceed.

Students in high school and junior high face the vague uncertainty of the possible prerequisites for a future vocation. One might ask, "If I change my mind later, will I have wasted valuable time which I'll have to make up? Is there a course I can take that will prepare me for whatever I may decide to do, and still leave me free and well-informed to choose when I feel ready?"

Those completing high school are faced with the following problems for decision: "Shall I go to work? Shall I attend college? If so, what and how much can I afford? Shall I attend a trade or business school? Or shall I work a while and attend school later?"

If we take these problems to God in prayer, asking for divine guidance in making the choice, we may also come to a more hopeful and intelligent attitude toward life as a whole. We can see, in some measure, what really is ahead of us in the world of work, and judge more rationally and calmly and less from the standpoint of hero-worship, social pressure, or just chance or financial necessity.

Among the methods to these ends, we may cite discussion of our casual acquaintances with the world of work. By this I mean that the members of the group can make a list of the kinds of work with which they are acquainted, measure their relative likes and dislikes for the various ones, discuss the respective value to society, and estimate the remuneration to be expected. Then, if we add to this research available information from the local library, we can attain a wide and greater objective view.

For the needed close touch, we may interview representative men and women from the fields we wish to investigate further. Also, we can organize tours of local industry and obtain some idea of the conditions under which people work, and the skills that are in demand. Our part-time work can be used to help in this, too, if again in our discussion group we share what we have learned concerning business and the world in which we live.

Above all, we must always keep in mind the value of our time and energy in the sight of God. We must take our community problems into consideration and look to a future we invariably pattern by the decisions we make in school and in our everyday living.

 Narrator

NARRATOR: This story is stranger than fiction. It takes place about 1843 when the city of Nauvoo, better known as the "City of the Saints," was rapidly becoming the largest city in the state of Illinois. Missionaries were going out from Nauvoo without "purse or scrip" into every part of the United States, and even into foreign lands.

Visitors also flocked to the city of Nauvoo from every part of the United States and Canada. Joseph Smith entertained them all at the Mansion House which was built to help accommodate those who wanted reliable information about himself and the church.

One visitor who went to Nauvoo was from Montreal, Canada. His name was Samuel Hall. Who was he? What caused him to go to Nauvoo? Let's listen as we hear something about his life before he made his journey to the "City of the Saints."

As our playlet opens, we find Samuel Hall visiting his mother and sister at their home in Montreal, Canada. His sister, Bernadette, is out for an hour or so, and we find Samuel and his mother talking together in the living room.

M. HALL: (In worried tone) Samuel, you seem so restless and uneasy these last few months. What can be the matter with you? Are you not happy since you have become a priest? Is your work too hard?

SAMUEL: (Slowly) Well, mother, I guess I have been acting a bit queer, and more people than you apparently have noticed it (pauses). I just haven't got that peace of mind, that contentment of soul, and the sincerity of heart that a servant of God ought to have—I am beginning to doubt many things.

M. HALL: (With surprise) Doubting many things, Samuel? What do you mean? O Samuel, you always did take things too seriously! After all, you haven't been a priest very long, so you shouldn't expect to do great things all at once. (She arises, and walks to Samuel, putting her hand on his shoulder.) Cheer up, your sister and I will pray to St. Jude. I know this will help.

SAMUEL: (Smiling) To Saint Jude, our patron saint of hopeless cases? Surely you don't think I'm a hopeless case yet, mother, although you and sis go right ahead and pray if you think it will do any good.

M. HALL: (To herself) If I think it will do any . . . why . . . what does he mean? (Walks slowly out of the room, but just before leaving, she turns to Samuel.) Well, Samuel, I heard your sister come in a few minutes ago. I'll go and get supper while she talks to you. She will be better company for you, anyway. If she can't cheer you up, nobody can. (exit) (enter Bernadette)

BERNADETTE: (Cheerfully) Well, most Reverend Father Hall, I happened to hear what mother said to you just now. Saint Jude, my most learned brother, can and will help you I'm sure. Now if you consider yourself hopeless, how do you think I feel? Today I received a letter from Bishop Beetle saying I wouldn't be able to train for a nun for three whole years yet. Now, who should be discouraged?

SAMUEL: (Quickly and with feeling) Bernadette! Don't be a fool!

BERNADETTE: (Amazed) What did you say?

SAMUEL: (Quickly composing himself) Oh . . . it's nothing, sis; it's just that I've been worried somewhat this past few months. Can't seem to satisfy myself that I'm following the right course in life (lowers voice and speaks more seriously). Bernadette, if I tell you something, will you please not tell mother—not yet, anyway?

BERNADETTE: (slowly) Why . . . yes . . . I promise. What is it?

SAMUEL: Well, I am thinking seriously . . . very seriously . . . of giving up my priesthood.

BERNADETTE: (loudly in amazement) You what? Are you mad? You mean that after years of study and expense that you are leaving the Mother Church . . . why . . . why, are you becoming a heretic?

SAMUEL: (high whisper) Not so loud, Bernadette, please—mother will hear.

BERNADETTE: (rises, paying no attention to Samuel and turns to her mother who has just entered) Mother, do you know what he is saying?

M. HALL: (surprised) Why no, what on earth is it? You look as white as a ghost.

BERNADETTE: (excitedly) Why, he says he is . . .

SAMUEL: (breaking in abruptly) Will both of you please sit down? I may as well tell you first as last what is on my mind. (M. Hall and Bernadette sit down.)

SAMUEL: When I was studying to become a priest, I was looking forward to the time when I would occupy in this sacred office—and I was happy. When I was at last pronounced qualified of God and the church to enter the hallowed walls, I looked forward to a long life of usefulness to my fellow man.

M. HALL: (quickly) But, what has happened?

SAMUEL: (continues quietly but confidently) Many things, mother. When I entered in upon my work with the older priests here in Montreal, none could know but God, the terrible and soul-crushing disappointment I was doomed to suffer both by day and by night.

BERNADETTE: (almost in tears) But, you were happy in the seminary when you were a student; why the change now? What has caused your disappointment?

SAMUEL: Well, this might surprise both of you, but the truth of the matter is this: I don't believe with my heart many of the things we teach and practice. There are other things too, of course which are too difficult to explain, but . . .

M. HALL: (Amazed) Why, Samuel, how can you say such things! Have you discussed your problems with the bishop?

SAMUEL: Yes, mother, but he has given me no help at all. Oh, how I have suffered. I've even prayed for death, and time and time again I have asked God if his church had been taken from the earth, because I cannot agree with our beliefs. They do not fit in with what I believe to be true. Something within me tells me they are not true.

M. HALL: (rising quickly, and speaking sternly) Samuel, you must be out of your mind. You must speak to the bishop again. You must not disgrace yourself, your friends, and us, by renouncing your priestly office (begins to break down). Oh, what a pity . . . and I had counted so much on seeing you occupy as a priest in the church!

BERNADETTE: (rises and puts her arm around her mother) Don't take it so hard, mother. He hasn't left us yet. He'll change his mind, I'm sure.

SAMUEL: (sternly, but kindly) No, I haven't left yet, but (pauses) . . . I am not sure what course I will pursue.

(Curtain)

SCENE II

NARRATOR: The days that followed were terrible ones for Samuel Hall. He was not satisfied with his life and accomplishments, and prayed continually to God to help him in his problems, and God, true to his promises answered his prayers, although in a peculiar and remarkable way. One day as Samuel was out walking, a very strange thing happened.

(Enter Samuel, walking slowly, and in a despondent mood.)

SAMUEL: Father Mahoney said today that the gifts of the gospel as enjoyed by the early mother church were not to be had any more. Bah . . . I don't believe it. Is God dead? It's the gift of God's Spirit that we need today. It doesn't make any sense so far as I am concerned: this sprinkling of infants, the holy water, the penances, the candles, the elaborate rituals, the . . . (spies a pamphlet lying on the ground, picks it up). Well, I wonder what this is. Hope it's something that will put me in a better frame of mind (thumbs through the pages as he walks). Yes, it does look interesting; I'll go back to my room and read it.

(Exit Samuel—re-enters a moment later—sits down at a table, and starts to read the pamphlet.)

NARRATOR: Samuel Hall returned to his room and read and reread this pamphlet. It happened to be a paper printed by the Latter Day Saints. Of course, Samuel Hall in his sheltered life had never heard of Joseph Smith. It was all new and strange to him. With bated breath he read of a great apostasy, of the restoration of the gospel at the hands of an angel, with all its gifts and powers. He threw himself upon his knees (Samuel kneels beside his chair) and asked God if it were true (Samuel bows his head upon his hands). On the little pamphlet was the announcement of a conference to be held at Nauvoo, Illinois. Joseph Smith would be there. All lovers of truth were invited to be there and judge for themselves. They were advised to ask God as the Apostle James had recommended. Samuel Hall did pray, and he felt the message to be true (Samuel rises, and stands in an attitude of indecision). The decision which he now faced was a great one, indeed.

(Curtain)

SCENE III

NARRATOR: We now go to the Hall home where we find Samuel talking with his mother and sister.

M. HALL: (quietly) Well, Samuel, have you changed your mind in regard to our religion?

SAMUEL: (firmly) No, I haven't, and that is why I came over to see you today. I am going to New York for a few days, and then on to Nauvoo, Illinois.

BERNADETTE: (quickly) Nauvoo, Illinois? Where on earth is that place, and why are you going?

SAMUEL: It would be useless for me to tell you now, but I will write and explain everything to you after I have been there a few days.

BERNADETTE: And you can't give us even a hint why you are going some place of which we have never heard?

SAMUEL: (firmly) No, I can't (pauses) but . . . when you do hear from me again, you will know definitely whether or not I shall continue to occupy as a priest. If I decide to quit, I will not come back and disgrace you all. You can be assured of that.

M. HALL: (severely, but with some effort) Well, Samuel, after all we've gone through to help you to become what you are today, it would be best for all concerned if you never did come back here. The church does not think much of heretics, you know, and I never thought I'd live to see my son become one (cries).

SAMUEL: (rising) No, mother, our church does not like heretics. They used to burn them at the stake.

BERNADETTE: (rising, M. Hall remains seated) When are you leaving, Samuel?

SAMUEL: Tonight, sis.

BERNADETTE: (sadly) Well, this is a great disappointment to me. I shall pray earnestly to St. Christopher that he may protect you from all harm while you are away.

SAMUEL: (smiling) You had better pray to God. Always pray to God, Bernadette. He is the only one to whom we should pray.

M. HALL: (still weeping) I never thought I'd ever hear my own son say such things.

SAMUEL: Well, I must go now to the seminary and get my things ready (walks over and kisses his mother and Bernadette). Good-bye, mother and sis; you'll be hearing from me soon.

(Curtain)

SCENE IV

NARRATOR: And so, Samuel Hill left Montreal for Nauvoo, Illinois, bidding a mental farewell forever to all the past. In his valise were the few scant pieces of clothing he had obtained; his Bible; his prayer book, and a few dollars in money.

He was not long on his way before he began to hear terrible tales about Joseph Smith. His heart sank within him, but he was determined to go on.

When he reached Nauvoo, the conference was already in session, so he left his valise at a hotel and went to the grove where the meetings were being held. Joseph was the speaker and when he had finished, Samuel Hall made his way to Joseph. Let's listen to their conversation, (enter Joseph and Samuel.)

SAMUEL: Sir, I have heard you to my utter astonishment and delight. Your words to me were as a living stream of life and light. It seemed as if every word came from the bosom of eternity to my inmost soul. Yes, every word to me, and I know you are a prophet of God, and I would like to be baptized.

J. SMITH: (with emotion) This is the Lord's doing. Come with me and I shall baptize you at once, and I also know that immediately after your baptism, you shall be confirmed and ordained an elder. (both exit)

NARRATOR: After the baptism Samuel Hall was confirmed and ordained an elder on the banks of the river. After the ordination, Brother Joseph said: (re-enter Joseph and Samuel)

JOSEPH: Brother Hall, you are now an ordained servant of Jesus Christ, a minister of life to this generation. Go and preach the gospel, and you will be blessed in blessing many.

SAMUEL: (hesitatingly) But, ah, when shall I go?

JOSEPH: Go now.

SAMUEL: Shall I stay until the close of the conference, and then go?

JOSEPH: (kindly, but firmly) No, go now.

SAMUEL: Very well, I will go and get my things at the hotel and start off.

JOSEPH: No, no, go now just as you are. Your things are safe. You will not need them, and you will lack nothing. Go right along down south and tarry not by the way until you preach the gospel. I bless you. Good day. (both exit—opposite sides)

(Curtain)

SCENE V

NARRATOR: And so Samuel Hall, somewhat bewildered, left Joseph. Was man ever in a stranger situation? He put his coat and vest across his arm and started at a brisk walk in a southerly direction, as he had been told to do. Here was a fugitive from the old church, the only church he knew anything about, in a strange country, having heard but a portion of one short sermon; not a cent in his pocket; his clothing still wet from the waters of baptism; going, he knew not where, to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The sun dried his clothes, and as night approached, he put on his coat and vest. About sundown, he approached a crossroads just as a man in a wagon came along the other road and overtook him. He offered him a ride. Let's now listen to the conversation.

(Enter Samuel, followed by driver)

DRIVER: (Eyeing Samuel suspiciously) Your pants look as if you had been in the water, eh?

SAMUEL: Yes, I have. I have been baptized by Joseph Smith for the remission of my sins, and I never felt so well satisfied in my life as I do now.

DRIVER: (surprised) Oh, so you are a Mormon? I never saw one before. What do you think of Joe Smith? How does he look and act? What is he doing? Where are you going? What are you going to do?

SAMUEL: Well, to make it short I was a priest and became dissatisfied with the beliefs and teachings of my church. I prayed to God and he directed me to Nauvoo, and after hearing Joseph preach, I was convinced he was a prophet of God. I was baptized and ordained an elder at once, and I am now out to preach the gospel wherever I can.

DRIVER: (enthusiastically) Well, that sounds mighty interesting, and when we reach the next town, I'll pay your hotel bill if I can hear you preach. (both exit)

NARRATOR: On arrival at the next town, the stranger did as he agreed; hired a hall, and even went through the streets ringing a bell and calling, "Come out, and hear a late priest talk on Mormonism at the Hall . . ."

The meetings lengthened out to a week's stay, then a month, and at the end of that time, Samuel Hall baptized thirty-four persons, and organized a branch of the church. Best of all, he had found peace.

And in this way the gospel spread, and converts poured into Nauvoo.

Thus we see how miraculously God works in the lives of all those who sincerely and earnestly desire to serve him, as we have witnessed in the life of Samuel Hall. (Curtain)

Note: This little playlet is based on facts contained in the Young People's History of the church and the Story of the Church. Imaginary details have been added to furnish connecting links in the story.—L. W. Hill.

Note: Narrator could end with this beautiful poem:

OLD NAUVOO

Give us a faith that leads us on,
Give us a vision true;
Give us the strength to carry on
Like the Saints in old Nauvoo.

Oh, let us climb the sloping mound,
Gaze on the glorious view;
Then let our vision reach beyond,
Like the Saints in old Nauvoo.

Oh, let us live those days again,
Walk where their feet have trod;
Feel a greater love for our fellow men—
A nearness to our God.

Give us a faith that leads us on,
Give us a vision true;
Give us the strength to carry on
Like the Saints in old Nauvoo.
—Lora Puterbaugh.

called to fill his father's place in the Reorganized Church in 1880 gave a revelation, commanding that a sanitarium be built in Independence as a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted. It was purposed that in this institution the sick of the church might be removed from unfavorable influences and environments, so that proper faith could be exercised in behalf of their healing. The spiritual aspect of healing was therefore to have every emphasis. But the physical side was not to be neglected. Joseph Luff, who was already laboring as an Apostle in the church, but who was also a thoroughly qualified doctor of medicine, was named as the head of the proposed institution, that there might be co-operation and co-ordination between the scientific or materialistic approach and the spiritual approach to healing, in an atmosphere conducive to faith.

So the work of healing goes on in our Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, with emphasis still placed on the mental and spiritual aspects of healing, as well as on the physical. The prayer of faith has many times saved the sick in its wards and rooms, after the scientific skill and resources of men had been used to their uttermost. The laying on of hands and the prayer of faith are used not to replace the work of the physician, the surgeon, the nurse, or the laboratory technician or dietitian, but to supplement it, so that every possible aid to good health may be made available under sympathetic surroundings conducive to exercise of faith. Our hospital is equipped with the finest and most modern equipment that money can buy. It is staffed by doctors and nurses and technicians who recognize their responsibilities as stewards over a "gift of healing."

There are many "gifts of healing," some physical, some spiritual. But all are from God, and all may be used by the devout steward to the glory of God. In our church hospital, we try to make use of all the gifts of healing. We recognize that life is a whole; man is a single entity, though he does have a dual nature. It is not enough to heal a man's body, but to leave his soul untouched so that through sin he immediately brings retribution again upon his body. It is not enough to heal a man's spirit and fit him for heaven, but leave his body unfit for earth. This church believes that all the gifts of healing should be used together, as one unified and perfect whole—the spiritual ordinances of the church taking their place with the best of medical and surgical and scientific skill, the best in mechanical and pharmaceutical equipment, the best in nursing, the best in dietetics and laboratory procedure, so that men may find the perfect and whole and all-inclusive health of a sound mind and a sound spirit dwelling in a sound body.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Independence, Missouri

Stone Church

Pastor, G. E. Tickemyer

Blair Jensen Speaks

Elder Blair Jensen, president of the Kansas City stake, was the speaker on Sunday, January 20, at the 11 o'clock service. "Have Faith in God" was the theme of his discourse.

Inspiring Prayer Service

The Zion-wide afternoon prayer service on January 20 was a season of spiritual refreshing for those present. Attendance at this service is steadily increasing. Elder Ray Whiting is in charge of the meetings, with Floyd Deal as assistant. Evangelist R. V. Hopkins set the theme of the service with his talk on "The Mind of Christ."

Leonard Lea Gives Sermon

Elder Leonard Lea discussed the United Nations' Charter at the evening service. It is hoped his sermon will bring about a better understanding of international relationships.

Memorial Flowers

The pulpit flowers on January 20 were provided by Mr. and Mrs. Earl B. Fenn in memory of their son, Pfc. Robert L. Fenn, who died in Germany on January 20, 1945. By request of the parents, this date will be perpetually observed by a floral tribute as long as they live.

Conference Oratorio

The Messiah choir will present Bach's Saint Matthew Passion at general conference. Rehearsals are being held each Monday evening.

Zion Reunion

Dates for the second Zion Reunion to be held at Lake Doniphan have been tentatively set for July 20-28. Reservations may be made now at the pastor's office.

Eighty-Sixth Birthday Observed

Sister James M. Baker was given a dinner at Rest Haven, January 24, in honor of her eighty-sixth birthday, which she celebrated January 14. Mrs. Jessie Higdon Boswell and Mrs. Bertha Thompson were hostesses. Eleven members of District 4 gave a shut-in party for Sister Baker on her birthday; the program consisted of songs and readings.

President F. M. Smith Honored

The Stone Church women's department, as is its custom, held its monthly meeting January 18 in honor of President F. M. Smith's birthday anniversary.

The hymn, "Onward to Zion," opened the meeting with a devotional conducted by Sister Hiram Simmons following. The Lord's Prayer was repeated in unison at the close. Sister Loren Turner played several piano selections, and Pastor Garland Tickemyer gave a talk, "Review and Forecast." Refreshments, including birthday cake, were served.

Laurel Club Honors President Smith

President F. M. Smith was again honored by the Laurel Club at its annual dinner held on January 21. Vocal and instrumental music were features of the program. Bishop C. A. Skinner gave an illustrated sketch of Elder Glaud Rodger's life, with Sister Skinner as narrator. President Smith was presented a gift by the group.

Remodeling of Women's Center

Attention of the women of Zion is focused upon the preparation of the women's center for various activities that are waiting assignment of dates. The building is at present undergoing some changes. Several of the Stone Church district have enthusiastically contributed necessary equipment.

Three Baptisms

Three new members were baptized at the Stone Church on January 20. They are Wilberta Mary Stevenson, Norma Jean Curtis, and Maxine Velma Curtis. Seven new members have been baptized in 1946. —Grace Krahl, reporter.

Liberty Street Church

Pastor, Howard C. Timm

For quite some time Independence has considered the widening of the Van Horn Road, on which the Liberty Street church is located. This step is now felt absolutely essential because of the rapid growth and development of Independence in the past few years, which has brought about increased traffic, placing a heavy burden upon the small business section of the town. If the proposal goes through, Liberty Street will find it necessary to seek another location. It is hoped that a larger and better church can be erected which will be adequate to meet the needs of the congregation.

Three babies were blessed during the month. On January 13, Noel Gene Prather, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Prather, was blessed by Elders Cecil Walker and Wynne Jones; Judith Yvonne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Max Constance, was blessed by Elders Walter Woodward and William LaGrece; James Leroy, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Johnson, was blessed January 20 by Elders William LaGrece and Cecil Walker.

On January 13 the junior department enjoyed something different from their usual 11 o'clock services when four teachers, Lela Bennett, Mason Stobaugh, Clyde Kearns, and Bill Tignor, related their spiritual experiences. These talks were very impressive, and the boys and girls gave undivided attention. It is felt that such a service creates a closer relationship between teacher and pupil. A quiz program and contest was held the following Sunday. The questions were taken from the church school quarterlies.

A variety program was enjoyed family night, January 25. Children, youth and adults participated. The youngest performers on the program were Cynthia and Timmy Frick, and Sharon and Kathleen Mills, ages two and one-half to seven, who sang three songs, acting out the motions. Other numbers were readings by Dickie Helverson, Ernest Stilwell, Jewell Constance, Mrs. McConnell and Lela Bennett; vocal solos by Juanita Helverson and Betty Stilwell; a piano duet by Eva and Lorina Steffins; and a trio composed of Kathryn Thompson, Helen Holsworth, and Frances Marie Tuttle. Joseph Frick showed moving pictures, and refreshments were served.

A special inventory service was held January 27 at 11 o'clock. Preceding the sermon by Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, Irene Cogan sang, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus," and the choir, with Charles F. Church directing, rendered the anthem, "Now Thank We all Our God."

The congregation was glad to welcome a new member through baptism in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. At this time Daniel Prather was baptized by Carl Thompson. Elder Cecil Walker was in charge of the service and gave an interesting testimony of his personal experiences leading up to his baptism. Ray Beem sang, "Ye Must Be Born Again" and "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked."

The Zion's League was in charge of the evening service. Elder Ray Whiting, the speaker, used as the text for his sermon, "Are We Able, Are We Ready?" and Francis Marie Tuttle sang, "Are You Able, Saith The Master?" The invocation and benediction were by William Tignor.

At the recent conference in Zion, two recommendations to the priesthood were presented and approved from the Liberty Street church. Paul Sargent, an active deacon, and Ernest Stilwell are to be ordained to the office of priest. The latter is assistant church school director and very active in other work of the church. —Ethel Hart, reporter

Everett, Washington

Pastor, George Brundage

A welcome-home party for the returned servicemen of Everett branch was held December 12 at Legion Park. The party was planned by Betty Blanchard, Carmen Hill, Ortha Kelley, and Hazel Davis. Honored guests were Roy Stearns who served in the Army in North Africa and Italy; Ted Stearns of the AAF, England; Millerd Utt of the Navy, recently returned from Japan; Merritt Starbuck who saw action in the south Pacific; Clark Christianson who served in France and Germany; Glen Kruger who was with the Army in France; and Jean Goode WAC, recently returned from India.

Agnes Johnson and Thelma Roberts were in charge of the Christmas programs. On the morning of December 23, Edith Davis, church school director, lead the worship services at 10 o'clock after which Luella Foster told the Christmas story, using the flannel-board to illustrate. An organ-piano prelude to the 11 o'clock service was played by Fern Gage and Roy Stearns. Several anthems were sung by the choir under the direction of Neva Willett; Ortha Kelley, Roy Stearns, and Emma Kruger sang solos. Elliott Gilberts played a violin solo. Pastor George Brundage gave the sermonette.

The children presented the evening program which consisted of a pantomime, recitations by members of the primary and kindergarten classes, a play by the juniors, selections by the boy's choir and an instrumental trio, and a pageant depicting the Christmas story. Those taking part in the program were JoAnn Johnson, John Gilberts, Dickie Foster, Jackie Willett, Gary Davis, Margaret Ann Brundage, Robert Bjorland, Terry Roberts, Jerry Johnson, Tommy Foster, Carl Oliver, Robert Gage, Ronald Bjorland, Billy Roberts, Fern Gage, Roy Stearns, Elliott Gilberts, Helen Gilberts, Merle Foster, and Luella Foster. Treats were distributed to the children at the close of the entertainment.

The women's department held a bazaar and food sale in a downtown store in December; the proceeds from this project plus those from the sale of Christmas cards and wrapping totaled $370. This money will be used to purchase a new lot. On January 3 the womens' club met with Emma Kruger for its monthly business meeting and class study of Cheville's Branch of Today and Tomorrow. Luella Foster is teacher; many are taking the class for credit.

On December 19 Neva Willett, music director, gave a party for the choir. Each member brought a guest. Games and songs were enjoyed, gifts exchanged, and a caroling trip climaxed the evening's activities.

On December 9 Thoralf Bjorland spoke on the subject "The Need of Zion." Elliott Gilberts gave a biographical sermon on the life of Abraham on December 16. Roy Davis built his discourse for December 30 around the importance of overcoming negative forces.

A district conference is scheduled for February 15, 16 and 17 at Seattle; Dr. Floyd McDowell is to be the guest speaker. A caravan of cars from Everett is being planned.

Work on the reunion grounds is being done by the men of the branch. Three years have elapsed since the last reunion was held at Silver Lake.

—Mrs. Elliott Gilberts, reporter.

Rich Hill, Missouri

Pastor, Arlie D. Allen

Elder John Deller was in charge of the Communion service December 2, with Elder Birch Whiting giving the Communion address. Pastor Arlie D. Allen spoke at the evening service emphasizing the importance of filing one's inventory and paying tithing. Members of the local priesthood are helping in the services of neighboring branches as well as in their own.

District President William Patterson was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service on December 16.

The Christmas program was canceled because of illness and inclement weather.

On Thursday evening, December 20, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. LeNeve gave a party at their home for the Zion's League. Games, refreshments, and the exchange of gifts were high lights of the evening.

Elder Wilbur Smith of Butler was the guest speaker at the morning service on December 23. Elder E. W. Connell of Ft. Collins, Colorado, gave the evening sermon.

The women's department obtained the use of a downtown store for their bazaar; over $100 was taken in as a result of the project. They also held a covered dish luncheon and all-day meeting before Christmas. At the Christmas party in the afternoon, each told some Christmas experience or read a story, after which gifts were exchanged.

—John Deller, reporter.

Ft. Scott, Kansas

Pastor, Dale Crown

The church at Ft. Scott has been repainted and shrubbery now graces the lot on which it stands. A new gas furnace was also installed recently. Although numerous improvements are being made, funds are being accumulated so that a new church may be erected in the near future.

Officers elected for the coming year are Dale Crown, pastor; Kenneth Buckmaster, church school director and treasurer; Betty Buckmaster, secretary; Hettie Quick, women's leader; Dorothy Haas, Zion's League supervisor; and Mable Martin, children's leader. District officers living in Ft. Scott are C. C. Martin, counselor to the district president; Mable Martin, women's leader; and Rosalie Martin, district Zion's League leader.

On September 16 the young people visited the Mapleton branch. Services for the day began with a prayer service at 9 A. M., under the direction of Lee Quick, Arthur Dennis, James Muodlium, and Dale Crown. Kenneth Buckmaster assisted Joe Rie during the church school hour, and Dale Crown gave the 11 o'clock sermon. A basket dinner was served at noon, followed by a song fest. The Ft. Scott Saints were hosts to members of the Mapleton and Nevada, Missouri, branches on November 18.

Prayer services are held every Wednesday evening. The women's department meets the first and third Thursday afternoon of every month to sew and study the Doctrine and Covenants; Sister Feagins is the teacher. At present the ladies are making quilts and pillowcases for the children's home in Ft. Scott.

—Mrs. Leah Williams, reporter.

Kimball, Ontario

Pastor, Robert Johnston

Although small, Kimball branch is one of the oldest in the Dominion of Canada, having been organized seventy-seven years ago. It now has a regular attendance of between forty and forty-five members, with many nonmembers in the neighborhood also coming to services.

During the summer the following men were ordained: John Harkness, elder; Joel Shaw, priest; Walter Hacket, teacher; and Marvin Harkness, deacon.

At the branch business meeting Elder Harkness was elected pastor; Robert Johnston and Joel Shaw, councilors; Gordon McDonald, church school director; Francis Shaw, women's leader; and Joel Shaw, Zion's League leader. The bishop's solicitor reported that nearly every member in the branch was a tithepayer.

The women's auxiliary served lunches at the local agricultural fair and cleared $178. Part of this money will be used to equip the dining hall at the Erie Beach reunion grounds.

Visiting speakers during the year were Stanley Phillips and Basil Freer of Sarnia, John Shields of Petrolia, Bryan Doty of Traverse City, and Harry Engle, president of Chatham district. —W. H. Kimball, reporter.

Hagerman, Idaho

Several discharged servicemen and their wives are making their homes in and near Hagerman. Mr. and Mrs. Howard C. Winegar have returned from San Francisco, since Mr. Winegar received his discharge from the Navy and are living on the Sam Thornton ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Bob Dickerson are now making their home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dickerson. Mr. and Mrs. Gomer Condit, recently married in Boise, are leaving February 1 for Boston, Massachusetts. Mr. Condit was a Japanese prisoner for four years. S/Sgt. Harry Dennis, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Dennis, is home on a forty-five day furlough after serving fourteen months in China, India, and Ceylon.

—Mary Lou Thornton, reporter.

Santa Barbara, California

Pastor, N. T. Chapman

A dedication service was held at the church on January 6 with a capacity congregation attending. A unique cradle roll service was held which began with Ethel Heth's solo, "That Little Boy of Mine." Certificates were then handed to the mothers, and the children's names attached to a small cradle which now contains forty-four names. Louis Ostertag of Los Angeles and Harry Pederson of Long Beach officiated at the blessings. A Communion service preceded the dedication ceremony. C. J. Lant, one of the charter members, told the history of the branch, and Harry Pederson spoke in behalf of the men who had served as pastors of the church. Apostle John Rushton gave the dedicatory prayer and sermon. Carl Heth, deacon, presented the deed to Bishop David Carmichael of Santa Ana. Saints from Santa Paula, Los Angeles, Santa Ana, Long Beach, Oxnard, and San Luis Obispo were present for the service.

—Ethel Heth, reporter.

Duluth, Minnesota

Pastor, J. Fred Sumption

The Minnesota district fall conference was held at Duluth on September 29 and 30, with members of the Ft. William, Ontario, branch attending. Apostle D. T. Williams, Evangelist Ray Whiting, and Elder J. H. Yager were guest speakers. Elder Yager remained in Duluth the week following conference.

At the annual business meeting, J. Fred Sumption was elected pastor; W. A. Coffman, church school leader; Gladys LaCroix, head of the women's department; Edith Sumption, director of music; and Gwen Davies, young people's leader.

A new class in the church school division has been organized, and plans for another are being made. Weekly prayer services show an increase in attendance also.

The women's department meets twice a month. On October 30 a box social was sponsored by the ways and means committee; money taken in during the evening is to be used to provide a nursery in the church basement where small children may be cared for during services in the main auditorium. A pie chain and gift box are to be sponsored by the department to add extra money to the fund.

A farewell party was held on October 25 for Mr. and Mrs. Robert Zuelsdorf who are leaving for Colorado Springs. Brother Zuelsdorf is the former pastor of Duluth. Another farewell party was given for Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dittmann. Mr. Dittmann has recently returned from twenty-eight months service in the far East. Their new home will be in Freeburg, Illinois.

No gold stars have been added to the Duluth service flag during the war; twenty-seven blue stars remain for men still in the service.

On Wednesday evening, November 21, a special Thanksgiving service was held; this included congregational singing, talks by servicemen, solos and a sermonette by the pastor. At the close of the service, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Tourville were asked to come forward and were presented with a corsage and boutonniere. They were then informed that they were the guests of the group for the remainder of the evening, in honor of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Alfred Davies sang two solos, "Because" and "The Lord's Prayer." A musical reading, "That Old Sweetheart of Mine," was given by Gwen Davies, and a prayer blessing was pronounced by Elder Samuel Case. To strains of the wedding march, the "bride" and "groom" with their friends and neighbors marched to the basement of the church where tables were decorated with pink and silver. The honored guests, with their two daughters, Miss Audrie Tourville and Mrs. Roy Kohlquist, and son Ronnie, were seated at the head of the table on which stood a three-tier wedding cake and tall silver tapers. A toast was given by Adah Carlson, and lunch was served while the group sang songs. Audrie Tourville gave a clever resumé of her father's and mother's courtship and marriage. Pastor J. Fred Sumption gave the presentation talk and a horn of plenty filled with silver dollars was given the Tourvilles for a set of silverware of their choosing.

On Thursday, December 20, the women's department held its annual Christmas party in the basement of the church. Each, who cared to, participated in the program, after which carols were sung and gifts exchanged.

The Christmas sermon was given by the pastor at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning, December 23. A program of songs and recitations was presented by the children in the evening, followed by a pageant, The Birth of a King, given by the young people. After the program, all passed before the altar where each presented his Christmas offering, and then to the basement for caroling around the tree which contained holiday treats. Despite illness, the Christmas activities were well attended.

—Marion Hedenbert, reporter.

Torrington, Wyoming

Pastor, M. M. Bilyue

An all-day meeting was held at the church on November 4. Elder A. E. Stoft was present; assisting him in the Communion service were Pastor M. M. Bilyue and Elder Edward Anderson of Albion, Wyoming. Brother Stoft gave an inspiring sermon at two in the afternoon, and then took charge of the annual business meeting. Elder Bilyue was sustained as pastor; Priest Vandel was re-elected church school director; Alice Babcock, women's group leader; Zelma Senevy, secretary-treasurer; and Ethel Gomez, young people's supervisor and song leader. Mrs. L. A. Mitchell and Mrs. John Vandel were retained as auditors. A committee was elected for the purpose of raising funds to erect a new church building.

The hearts of many Saints and friends were gladdened by the return of Harold Mitchell, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Mitchell, from the European theater.

The women's department held its annual bake sale and bazaar the first of December. Although there were very few to help with the project, $68 was cleared.

The Christmas offering goal was set at $25 at the beginning of 1945; the bishop's agent reports that a total of $41.84 was turned in.

—Mary Croft, reporter.

Chicago, Illinois

First Chicago Branch

Pastor, Lyman Jones

The theme for the month of December was "The Supreme Gift." It was beautifully substantiated by a special Christmas bulletin, on the face of which was portrayed the Christ child.

The Communion service on December 2 was well attended; Pastor Lyman Jones was in charge. A duet was sung by Sally Anderson and Ruby LeNeve Henson. John R. Grice gave the pastoral message.

An institute was held in Chicago for the general church appointees under the direction of Apostles Henry Edwards and Arthur Oakman. Each branch in the district had assigned to it two of the missionaries in attendance for the period December 2-9 for evening and Sunday morning services. John Grice and Victor Witte were assigned to First Chicago. At the end of the week four submitted their names for baptism; they were Hans Behnke, Kay Wiesen, Darrel Clark, and Richard Gunderson. Brother Grice first preached to the Saints in Chicago eighteen years ago.

On Sunday, December 16, Rosetta Matros sang Malotte's "The Lord's Prayer" preceding Elder D. M. Wiesen's sermon, "A Seed is Planted." Elder Joseph Baldwin spoke on December 23, building his discourse on the Christmas story. Gloria Fisher sang Gounod's "Ring Out Wild Bells" at the morning service on December 30; Elder Roy Smith gave the sermon, "Thoughts for the New Year."

Cpl. Eldon Gauthier spent a recent furlough at home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Louis Gauthier. Discharged servicemen who are again taking their places in the congregation are Robert Brown, Stanley Conrow, Paul Deaver, Meredith Dobrey, Robert Edstrom, Jack Heide, George Reeves, Charles Schmidt, Richard Striblen, and Orval Studtman. Another veteran, Will-

Notice to Reporters

A newly-elected reporter recently wrote for rules on writing news articles. Here they are—perhaps you'd like to read them too:

1. Church news should be headed with the name (city and state) of the branch, and the name of the pastor.

2. It should be written in third person; do not use "I" and "we." Avoid personal comment and editorialism.

3. An article every two months is a good average. It should include speakers, special musical numbers, social events, League activities, plays and entertainments, baptisms, blessings, and any other events worthy of publicity. Engagements, weddings, and obituaries will be printed in the Bulletin Board section of the "Herald." Lists of visitors, other than guest speakers or returning servicemen, will not be used.

4. Lengthy repetitions of what the minister said in his sermon cannot be printed because of the limited amount of space.

5. News should be typed (double-space) if possible, or written in ink. In hand writing, and especially in spelling names, watch the "a's," "o's," "u's," and "n's"; they are easily misinterpreted.

—Naomi Russell,
News Editor.

iam Studtman, provided a unique entertainment for the Christmas program with his puppet show.

The North Side Women's Circle met at the home of Mrs. Irene Mee on December 6 and 20. Mrs. Emerine Gunderson was the Christmas party hostess. Mrs. Roland Blair was hostess at a party for the Friendship Guild, and Eleanor Chandler entertained the Ssenippah Guild.

Prayer and testimony services were held at the church three times in December. Class study meetings were at the Lyman Jones and J. Louis Gauthier homes. Leaguers assembled each Friday evening at the church for their special meeting.—Velva Castins, reporter.

Central Branch

Pastor, J. E. Baldwin

Central church had thirty-six men and women in military service. One gold star is on the flag, representing the supreme sacrifice made by George Lilly. Those who have returned are Bob Lester, John Cooper, Charles Healy, Ray Dennis, Stow Symon, Chester Shereiv, Ralph Whiting, Ervin Cook, James Fricka, Bob Burgess, Charles McKay, Kelso Bradbrook, Dorothy Bradbrook, Arthur Rodgers, Frank Glazer, Warren Wahlgren, and Granville Thompson.

Elder Luther Troyer of Joplin, Missouri, recently discharged from the Navy, is worshipping at Central Church and has entered wholeheartedly into the work. He has given some fine sermons and is teaching one of the adult classes at church school. He is a student at the University of Chicago; Mrs. Troyer is with him.

Bob and Opal Brackenbury have also moved to Chicago so that Bob can attend the university. Sister Brackenbury is one of the pianists for the church. Dorothy Mills of Independence, Missouri, another university student, plays the piano for church school and is leader of the Zion's League.

The first League meeting of the new year was spent in outlining a program for 1946. The theme chosen was, "Planning My Life." Each month will be dedicated to learning more about different phases of life, such as finances, education, recreation, vocation, and marriage. The general theme of devotional services will be "Planning My Life With God." In keeping with the program the second meeting in January was "Planning My Finances." Phil Briggs, district young people's leader, spoke on stewardship.

The Christmas program was in charge of Terrell Cochran, director of religious education, and sponsored by Millie Spuehler, junior supervisor, Luella Holt, and Nellie Hower. Elder Frank Shank gave the sermon.

Through the efforts of the church school, four baskets of food were given to needy families whose names were obtained from the Chicago Tribune on Thanksgiving and Christmas. Sarah Batton assumed the responsibility of filling the baskets.

The week of December 2-9 a series of special services were held. Elder J. C. Stuart, pastor of the Kansas City Central Church, was guest speaker. Sermon topics for the week were "What Kind of a God," "In His Name," "This is My Work," "The Goal of Religion," "The Human Responsibility," and "Man's Great Opportunity."

On Sunday, December 9, Central Church celebrated homecoming day. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker. An all-day service was held, beginning with a prayer meeting at 9 A. M. Dinner was served at the church by members of the women's department.

The department of women, under the leadership of Fan Rodger, meets once a month. The December 6 meeting was held at the home of Fay McDonald. The Eight O'Clock Circle met at the home of Dolores Mothersead on December 10.

Mary Nichols was baptized on November 28 at the midweek prayer service. Elder Terrell Cochran officiated at the baptism, and Elders J. J. Oliver and J. E. Baldwin at the confirmation.

Omaha, Nebraska

Pastor, R. Melvin Russell

The Christmas season was ushered in early in December when the Wednesday evening prayer meeting had its theme, "On earth peace, good will toward men." The following day the department of women held its general meeting with Lillian Clark in charge. Emma Steckel contributed some beautiful numbers at the piano, and Mrs. A. H. Flesher presented a number of flannelgraph scenes depicting the Christmas story.

Several members of the church took part in a city-wide rendition of Handel's The Messiah at the city auditorium on the evening of December 18. This chorus of several hundred voices has become well known in the state.

With beaming smiles and poise coveted by many adults, the children presented their annual Christmas program on Friday evening, December 21. The program was arranged by Cecile Stark, director of the children's division of the church school. Favorite Christmas Carols were chosen by the children and were sung during the first part of the program. Most of the evening was devoted to readings, dialogues and drills interspersed with musical numbers. Members of the junior high classes sang an excellent number, and solos were sung by Joanne Hewitt and Eva Mae Rimington. The crowning event, as far as the children were concerned, was the distribution of apples and candy canes.

The services on Sunday, December 23, were an inspiration to all. The church school worship service had as its theme, "Joy in Sharing"; following a solo by Louise Steckel, Cecil Stark told a beautiful Christmas story. A Christmas message was given at the 11 o'clock hour by the pastor and the music providing the inspiration for such a service was furnished by the Zion's League choir, Maurice Coffman, and the Hymn-Singers choir. At this same hour the junior church group sang carols at the near-by Methodist Hospital. The climax of all the Christmas activities came at the candlelight vesper service in the same evening. The Hymn-Singers choir, the Bel Canto girls, and the Zion's League choir presented the Christmas story in scripture and song. The candlelit auditorium with the manger scene for a worship center made a beautiful setting for the service.

All of the women's group had Christmas parties during the month of December. The husbands were also invited to these gatherings.

The annual bazaar and chicken dinner were held the afternoon and evening of December 4 in the lower auditorium. The booths were attractively decorated and needlework, homemade baked goods, and homecanned fruit were on display to be sold. Estimated receipts were over $150.

A holiday tea in honor of church school officers and teachers was given at the home of Alice Curtis, church school director, on Sunday afternoon, December 30.

A boy scout court of honor was held December 31, followed by a watch party for the entire branch.

Miss Nellie Holloway was baptized by her uncle, Elder Leonard Holloway, on December 9. Following the baptism she was confirmed by the pastor and Brother Holloway. Miss Holloway's home is in Dunlap, Iowa, but she is working in Omaha.

An interesting discussion on "Health" was presented at the January meeting of the department of women. The speaker was Mrs. Catherine Gehrman, home nursing director of the Douglas County Chapter of the American Red Cross.

The Men's Club has held two interesting meetings recently. At the December meeting a delicious turkey dinner was served, after which Lieutenant Colonel John B. Rosenzweig gave interesting sketches of his army life. In January the men brought their wives as guests, and were all led in group singing by Lila Livingston. Doctor Merchant introduced the guest speaker, Elder Albert Loving, who gave a talk on the history of New Zealand. The club president, Joe Paterno, resigned because of moving to Council Bluffs, and Fred Johnson was elected to take his place.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack McGinnis will soon leave to make their home on a farm near Marysville, Missouri. Mrs. McGinnis was an active member and will be greatly missed.

Newcomers to Omaha are the J. R. Hills of Peoria, Illinois, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Cook and family, from Denison, Iowa.

Omaha Zion's Leaguers met with the young people of eastern Nebraska and western Iowa at the Council Bluffs church early in January. At one of their regular meetings in Omaha the League was host to the young people of the Church of the Brethren. Their pastor was present and gave a talk on the beliefs of the church he represents.

The Zion's League is furnishing a good portion of the music for Sunday services, having both a quartet and a choir, directed by Cecile Stark. The young people held their early morning devotional services Sunday, January 27, at the home of Ruth Ann Curtis.

Special music was furnished during December and January by Lila Livingston, Elaine Comstock, Zion's League quartet, Susan Baker, Peggy Herrell, Hymn-Singers choir, Bel Canto girls, Zion's League choir, Louise Steckel, Bonita Sands, Maurice Coffman, Alice Mae Riley, Eunice Farber, Marlin Constance, Richard Henderson, Grace Gates, Marilyn Anderson, and Sally Jo Larsen.

Recent speakers have been R. M. Russell, Elder Leonard Holloway, Elder Nels P. Johnson, Dr. H. A. Merchant, Elder Guy Riley, Elder Earl Oehring, Evangelist R. W. Scott, and Priest Esmond Crown.

Church school officers and teachers had a profitable meeting in January when they met to discuss their problems.

A weekly evening class for church ushers is being held at the Omaha University this winter; C. B. Constance and Duane Finch are taking the course. Elder Constance, in charge of the ushers, is now conducting a similar class during the church school hour.

—Eleanor Russell, reporter

Lincoln, Nebraska

Pastor, Francis Schrunk

Lincoln Saints were happy to welcome two former members, Elder and Mrs. John Schrunk of Hollis, Oklahoma, back for a visit. Elder Schrunk, a brother of the pastor, delivered the evening sermon on December 9, and spoke again at 11 o'clock on December 23.

John Timothy, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Baller, was blessed on December 16. Billy Wayne, son of Elder and Mrs. John Schrunk, and Tommy Francis, son of Pastor and Mrs. Francis Schrunk, were blessed on December 23.

The annual Christmas vesper service was held at the church on the evening of December 23. The program consisted of songs by the congregation, vocal solos by Mrs. Clarence Williams and Mrs. Clarence Cheasbro, and a story by Mrs. Warren Baller. A feature of the service was the collection of a white offering. The church was decorated for the occasion and was illuminated with candles. Mrs. Capitola Mechling and Mrs. Ruth Pfammiller were in charge.

—Vinton Wight, reporter.

New Haven, Connecticut

Pastor, Calvin C. Sears

Shirley Crowell, who entered nurses' training at the Independence Sanitarium last fall, was given a fountain pen and gift of money by the New Haven Saints on the eve of her departure.

On September 16, Elder E. M. Brown of Providence, Rhode Island, was the guest speaker on the "Minute Man" program. He gave an address, "Our Work," discoursing on vocations and avocations. A picnic sponsored by the church school was held at Lake Cockaponsett in the afternoon.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 19. Officers elected were Calvin Sears, pastor; Harold Garfield, secretary-treasurer; Leslie Garfield, church school director; Priscilla Crowell, superintendent; Barbara Sears, music director; Anna Munro, women's leader; William Manship, young people's leader; Edward Garfield, publicity agent; Anna Munro and Laura Sears, auditors. These officers were installed on September 30 at a special service. Elder Garfield gave the charge to the priesthood, and Priest Donald Crowell gave the charge to the newly-elected officers. Special music was provided by Priscilla Crowell and Audrey Hebb. The pastoral address was given by Elder Calvin Sears, and a prayer of dedication by Elder Garfield.

On October 7 the first service was held at the new meeting place, Odd Fellow's Temple. Following the morning service, Edgar Griffith was baptized by Pastor Sears in a little stream in North Haven; he was confirmed on October 28 by Elders Sears and Garfield. Elder Scherer delivered the charge to the candidate.

Several families of Saints from New Haven were guests at the Norwalk, Connecticut, rally day services on October 14. They reported an excellent sermon by Elder Squires of Brooklyn and an interesting talk on education by Brother Deaver.

District Missionary Albert Scherer held a week's series of lectures in October.

The Mizpah Circle of the women's department sponsored a Halloween supper at the Menz home.

On November 18 Elder Herman Chel-line was the guest speaker; his sermon on "Sowing" was timely and instructive.

The Christmas program included music by the adult choir, Bible readings, a duet by Elaine Garfield and Marie Crowell, and selections by a trio composed of Barbara Sears, Audrey Hebb, and Priscilla Crowell.

Robert Lawrence, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Engdahl, was blessed on January 13 by Elders Sears and Garfield.

Barbara Sears received her B.S. degree from the New Haven State Teacher's College on January 20, and left January 23 to enter Graceland where she will major in religious education. She was given a farewell party by the group and presented a wallet containing a collection from the Saints.

—Edward Garfield, reporter.

Seneca, Illinois

Mission Branch

The women's department of Mission branch observed guest day on October 17; 115 were present.

October 28 was rally day. Elder and Mrs. Loyd Hadley of River Forest took charge of the church school hour; speakers for the day were Elders Clemens Malcore of Aurora and Jasper Dutton of Galva. A basket dinner was served at noon.

On November 3 the young people sponsored a banquet. For their guests they invited Leaguers from Chicago, Aurora, Plano, Ottawa, and Morris. Paul Frisby of Chicago led the group singing and Joseph Baldwin gave an inspiring address on peace.

Dr. Dwight Davis of Chicago was guest speaker on November 11. The Saints of Mission branch feel fortunate to have had such interesting speakers from other cities recently.

Ten of the seventeen servicemen whose names appear on the honor roll have been discharged. None have been wounded, and no gold stars have been placed on the service flag.

—Mrs. Earl Hayer, reporter.

Victoria, British Columbia

Pastor, Henry Piedt

The Saints of the Victoria mission held their annual business meeting and unanimously sustained Elder Henry Piedt as pastor of the mission; Deacon K. O. Bell as treasurer; Mrs. Philip, bishop's solicitor; and Mrs. Bell, church school director.

Recent guest speakers have been Samuel Clark district president, and Elder Earnest Ledsworth, district missionary.

During the preaching service each Sunday, Mrs. Piedt has volunteered to guide and keep, in a separate classroom, the young children of the group.

At the church school Christmas tree the young people enacted a play which was enjoyed by all. Brother Gurney showed several interesting reels on his moving picture machine. On Christmas Eve the Saints presented the pastor with a beautifully bound Inspired Version of the Bible.

The course just completed by adults and young people in the church school was An Introductory Study of the Book of Mormon. The new course chosen is A Study of Zion's Procedure.

Miss Doreen Bell, violinist, who is attending the University of British Columbia, in Vancouver, and Miss Pearl Philip, who is in her third year of training in Royal Columbian hospital, New Westminster, were home for the holidays.

Sister Beckley, now eighty-six years of age, is in St. Joseph's hospital. Several of the Saints visit her regularly. She still loves to tell of her and Elder Beckley's missionary days in Michigan.

—E. A. Irwin, reporter.

Harrison, Michigan

Pastor, Hobert L. Beavers

Under the able leadership of Elder Hobert L. Beavers, the Harrison branch is going forward and becoming more alert to responsibility. Nearly all branch and church school officers were newly elected at the branch business meeting held September 16. One of the outstanding activities of the church is the cottage prayer meetings in which a good spirit is always present.

The church school has purchased new equipment, and classes for all ages are held each Sunday morning.

The Zion's League is making progress in spite of its limited attendance.

The woman's department holds regular meetings and is showing an increase in interest and attendance. Many quilts have been made in the past few months; these are used as wedding gifts and for any who are in need. This department also sends fruit, flowers, and cards to all shut-ins and ill members in the branch.

November 3 the Saints gathered at the church for a day of work. The men mowed the yard and cut wood for the winter, while the ladies cleaned the entire interior of the church building, and arranged the seats more conveniently.

Brother and Sister Cook from Bay City called on November 4 and gave instructions on how to improve the church school.

A Thanksgiving program sponsored by the entertainment committee was held at the church on the evening of November 18.

November 22 a prayer meeting was held at the home of the "mother" of the branch, Sister Orrie Bailey. Much food for thought was gathered at the meeting. Afterwards the Zion's League served a Thanksgiving supper. The proceeds from the supper went to help them in raising funds to furnish a junior church auditorium, which will be located at Liahona Park in Sanford, Michigan.

The woman's department held a bazaar and bake sale on December 18. The department's goal for this year is to encourage more tithe payers, rear well-educated children, encourage family worship, and raise funds to build an auditorium for the young people at the reunion grounds.

On Sunday evening, December 23, a program was held at the church. After the program each one present was given a large sack containing candy, nuts, popcorn, and apples.

—Dellamae Beavers, reporter.

Madison, Wisconsin

Pastor, Floyd Griswold

The following officers have been elected to serve during the coming church year: Floyd Griswold, pastor; Carl Wirth, church school director; Leda Colbert, adult supervisor; Leah Miller, women's leader; Clara Sweeney, young people's supervisor; Ester Brigham, primary supervisor; Margaret Berder, clerk; Orville Dablem, financial agent; Leda Colbert, publicity agent and book steward; Lois Carpenter, director of music; and Edith Griswold, librarian.

Graceland Day was observed with a program presented by former Graceland students with Ormond Kimball, district president, giving the sermon.

Edith Griswold has taken the responsibility of editing the weekly church programs.

Recent guest speakers have been Frank Mussell and Leroy Hunt of Milwaukee, Harry Wasson of Beloit, and Ormond Kimball, district president.

Church school and branch council meetings are held monthly to outline programs and discuss improvements for the church. The adults of the group hold a social evening once a month at the homes of various members. The young people and adults celebrated New Year's Eve together at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brigham; the party closed with a hymn and prayer. The Thanksgiving service was a vesper hour sponsored by the Zion's League. The League and primary department were responsible for the Christmas program, with Elder Robert Brigham giving the sermon.

Recently returned servicemen are Merlin Miller, Arthur Jeffcott, and Grant Root.

Lyle Shedd, an ex-serviceman from Independence, Missouri, is attending the University of Wisconsin, majoring in agriculture and dairying. He and his wife and young son are living in Madison.

—Leda Colbert, reporter.

Notes from your Publishing House

The war is over, but paper and leather shortages are even more acute than ever. The return of prisoners of war to their homes and wartime ship sinkings have limited our supply of vital materials.

Prisoners of war cut timber in our forests to supply the paper mills. Since the Victory, they have gone home, and pulp is drastically limited.

The policy of the publishing house has been to bring you new books: Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans, Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon, and Restoration, A Study in Prophecy. Early in the war, God Our Help and a new edition of the Story of the Church were published. Consequently, such books as Blue Pencil Notes and God Our Help are temporarily out of print, awaiting an increased supply of paper. Wartime editions of our books have been limited to 3,000 copies; normal editions run from 5,000 to 10,000 copies.

During the latter part of the war, ships were sunk bringing leather into the United States. This is the reason we cannot always supply you with leather bindings in the Saints' Hymnal and the Three Standard Books.

The present edition of the Doctrine and Covenants is out of print. We hope to have paper to reprint by early summer.

BULLETIN BOARD

Port Elgin Reunion

For the benefit of the many who have already made inquiries, and for those who wish to make their reservations well in advance of the Port Elgin reunion, we are submitting the following information:

1. The date has been officially set for June 29 to July 7 inclusive.

2. Those wishing reservations for cabins, cottages, or rooms, should write as soon as possible to Mr. Sidney Smith, Box 255, Port Elgin, Ontario. A small deposit should accompany the reservation.

3. Since we do not own the above-mentioned facilities, we cannot quote prices, but cabins range from ten to twenty dollars a week, rooms from five to ten dollars, and tents will be available at a very reasonable rate.

4. Meals will be eighty-five cents per day for adults, and forty cents for children.

P. E. Farrow.

Southern New England District Conference

The annual southern New England district conference will be held in Boston, Massachusetts, on February 23 and 24. Delegates to general conference and district officers will be elected at the business meeting on Saturday evening, at 7:30. Sunday services will include a prayer meeting at 9:30 A. M., morning worship at 11:15, and an afternoon service at 2:30. Committee and departmental meetings will be held at 1:30 P. M. on Sunday. All services will be in the church at 10 Sewall street, Somerville, Massachusetts; Sunday dinner will be served at the church.

Request for Prayers

Mrs. W. N. Jackson of Jonesboro, Arkansas, requests the prayers of the Saints that she might be healed of a lingering affliction.

Request for Serviceman's Address

Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Brooks of Lamoni, Iowa, are anxious to contact Donald E. Dumas, last heard from in Alaska. His address or any news about him would be appreciated.

Our Departed Ones

McWETHY.—Fred A., was born January 10, 1872, at Kirtland, Ohio, and died January 23 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. George Bright, of Fairplay, Missouri. On April 16, 1893, he was married to Orah Belle Brower. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in February, 1896, and held the office of high priest at the time of his death. For eighteen years he served in the presidency of Holden stake, and was affectionately known among the young people of that group as "Uncle Fred," "Pa," and later as "Grandpa." He was president of the Johnson County farm bureau for nine years, and president of the Kingsville consolidated school district for thirteen years.

Besides his wife and daughter, he is survived by a stepson, Clark Brower of Independence, Missouri; three grandsons; Dr. Clyde Brower, U. S. Navy; Professor Harold Brower, Independence, Missouri; and Ensign Fred Lycan, U. S. Navy; one sister, Mrs. Carrie Hiles of Independence; two nieces; two nephews; and Mrs. Etta Wilson, an orphan reared by the McWethys, of Elk Creek, Missouri. Services, held at the Bethel Church in Fairplay, were conducted by Elders W. S. Macrae of Warrensburg and Francis Bishop of Springfield.

BAILEY.—Ida May, eldest daughter of John and Sarah Vincent, was born in London, Ontario, July 31, 1878, and died January 15 at Pontiac General Hospital, Pontiac, Michigan, after several years illness. She came to Michigan with her parents at the age of eight; in 1897 she was united in marriage to Byard Garbet who died in 1929. Later she was married to George W. Bailey of Harrison, Michigan, who preceded her in death in 1940. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in August, 1916.

Survivors are her four daughters: Pearl Good and Doris Davis of Pontiac; Florence Valley, Saginaw, Michigan; and Minnie McElroy, Indianapolis, Indiana; one son, Leslie Garbet of Flint, Michigan; nine grandchildren and three great grandchildren. Services were held at Gladwin, Michigan, with Elder George White officiating. Interment was in Highland Cemetery, Gladwin.

CLATWORTHY.—Wilfred Roy, was born August 15, 1897, at Sauble Falls, Ontario, and died while attending services on Sunday morning, January 13, at Buffalo, New York. Brother Clatworthy held the office of teacher for many years and was always faithful in the discharge of his duties. He was a well-known resident of Fort Erie, Ontario, where he was an employee of the Horton Steel Works.

Services were held in the Atwood Funeral Home on Tuesday, January 15, with Elders W. O. Simpson and Paul Braman officiating. Another service was held in Chatham at the Needham Funeral Home with Elder Engle in charge. He was laid to rest in Maple Leaf Cemetery, Chatham.

He leaves to mourn, his wife Mabel; two daughters: Mrs. Gordon Knowles and Miss Maurine Clatworthy of Fort Erie; one son, Wilfred, of the Canadian Navy; five brothers: Joseph of Chatham; James, William, and Albert of Sarnia, and Duncan of St. Thomas; two sisters: Mrs. John Carrington of Sarnia, and Mrs. Fred Saunders of Burlingame, California; and two grandchildren.

HILL.—William N., was born October 18, 1876, at Forest City, Minnesota, and died January 20 in Omaha, Nebraska, after a lingering illness. He was a resident of Omaha for sixty years, and was president of the Hill Real Estate Company at the time of his death. In September, 1902, he was united in marriage to Mable Moran; to this union one son, William N. Hill, Jr., was born. Mr. Hill became a member of the Reorganized Church on September 11, 1902, and was called to the office of elder in 1917.

Besides his wife and son, he leaves a grandson, William N. Hill, III, Omaha; a half-brother, Herbert, of Oakland, California; and a host of friends. Services were held at the Crosby-Meyer Funeral Home in Omaha, with Elder V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, Iowa, officiating. Interment was in Laurel Hill Cemetery, Omaha.

RUDDICK.—W. T., was born February 14, 1877, and passed away January 17. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in March, 1915. He was united in marriage to Annie Biggs; to this union three children were born, two of which died in infancy. He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Russell Gillespie, and two grandchildren. He was well known in the Chatham, Ontario, district through his activities at Erie Beach reunions. Robert Brown officiated at the funeral service held at the Reorganized Church in Kimball. Burial was in the Bear Creek Cemetery.

DAVIS.—Albert, was born in Beacon, Mahaska County, Iowa, and died of a heart attack in Ottumwa, Iowa, on December 15. He was united in marriage on September 19, 1915, to Fortune Bevan; to this union two children were born.

He is survived by his wife; a son, William, and a daughter, Mrs. Ruth Rice, both of Ottumwa; two brothers, Frank of Ottumwa, and David of Des Moines; and a grandson, Terry Rice, of Ottumwa. Funeral services were held at the Johnson Chapel with Elder Donald Harvey in charge, assisted by Elder Myron LaPorte. Interment was in the Ottumwa cemetery.

SCHNIEDER.—Frank X., was born July 10, 1880, in Kirchzarten, Germany, and passed away at the Research Hospital in Kansas City, Missouri, on January 18, as the result of an accidental injury received at work. He came to the United States when he was three years old and lived in the vicinity of Kansas City, Kansas, for sixty-two years. He was married to Mary Anna Hoffman on April 23, 1903, and became a member of the Reorganized Church in January, 1930. He was employed as a car inspector for the Burlington Railroad for over thirty-seven years.

He leaves to mourn his passing, his widow; four daughters: Mrs. F. S. Rhodes, Mrs. C. C. Van Boskirk, Mrs. E. H. Gaunce, and Miss Lorena Schneider; one son, Frank Raymond; one brother, Charles; one sister, Mrs. Mary Burris; three grandchildren and one great grandchild, all of Kansas City. Services were held at the Fulton Funeral Home with H. A. Higgins and L. J. Richards officiating; interment was in the Highland Park Cemetery.

GRAY.—Jewell Powell, was born in Harts-horne, Oklahoma, on February 7, 1905, and died November 27. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Powell of Independence, Missouri. At the age of twelve she became a member of the Reorganized Church. On January 12, 1924, she was united in marriage to Clyde B. Gray; to this union three children were born, two of whom preceded her in death in early infancy.

Besides her husband and parents, she leaves to mourn one daughter, Carol Tipton of the home; four brothers: Clifford, Hubert, Ammon, and Francis Powell all of Independence, Missouri; and many friends.

She was a resident of Oklahoma until 1939 when she, with her family moved to Denver City, Texas. She was visiting her parents in Independence when she passed away.

PROUTY.—Dr. Shirley Brooks, was born in Garner Township, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, April 5, 1873, and died, after a brief illness, in the Jennie Edmundsen Hospital in Council Bluffs on December 26. He was united in marriage to Grace E. McKenzie on May 3, 1899. Three daughters were born to this union; one of them, Esther Frances, died in infancy.

Dr. Prouty studied medicine at the Marion Simms College in St. Louis. After obtaining his degree, he practiced in Omaha and served on the faculty at Creighton University teaching anatomy. He became interested in the tax question and, after considerable research, wrote the book Our Tax Evils and Their Remedy, as well as many other works on taxation. For several years he was owner and manager of the French American Art Company. After traveling extensively, he retired in 1918 as a farmer near Council Bluffs. He was president of the Grape Grower's Association.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Walter C. Hansen, Council Bluffs, Iowa; and Mrs. Harry A. Truscott, Lynn, Massachusetts; one brother, Calvin Locke Prouty, Oakland, California, and a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral services were held in the Woodring Funeral Home with Elder V. D. Ruch in charge and the Reverend J. R. Perkins, pastor of the First Congregational church reading the scriptures. Burial was in Walnut Hill Cemetery in Council Bluffs.

WEDDINGS

Holloway-Donald

Crystal Donald, daughter of Mrs. Donald of Des Moines, Iowa, and Robert V. Holloway, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Holloway, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's sister in Des Moines. Elder L. G. Holloway, father of the groom, officiated at the double-ring ceremony. Robert will return to the naval base where he is stationed until he receives his discharge.

Smith-Craven

Margaret Genevieve Craven, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Craven of Braymer, Missouri, and Wayne F. Smith of Decatur, Nebraska, were united in marriage at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, January 1, at the Stone Church in Independence. Elder Emery Jennings of St. Joseph, Missouri, officiated at the double-ring ceremony. The Smiths will make their home in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Maurer-Cetola

Births

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Engdahl announce the birth of a son, Robert Lawrence, born October 21, at New Haven, Connecticut.

LETTERS

The Single Life, and the Goals of the Church

I am wondering if the anonymous author of "Why Don't You Get Married?" would mind if the reactions of a masculine mind were expressed regarding the article. It is only that the author is anonymous that I venture to write, for it is only what the narrative symbolizes that I speak. I would only need to face a mirror if I were to make a personal application.

From the narrative I quote: "Unless the purposes of the church are accomplished, nobody is going to be able to bring up his children in peace." I am presuming The Church to be the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, for no other has the authority to bring about that condition of peace wherein our children might dwell.

The church is composed of people—people in cities, in towns, in countries, and in homes. People are individuals and so the accomplishment of the church begins with the accomplishment of the individual. That accomplishment begins in the cradle; there begins its social relationships. Its contacts with its parents, its playmates, its teachers, the authors of the books it reads, later its employers, and all with whom it comes in contact will be judged for the influence they have had to its soul.

And since the mother is the first to exert her influence, it would seem that the number one ambition of a young girl's life would be to have the best knowledge possible so that not many years will have gone by and she can look to heaven and say, "Father, having been accountable unto thee for the upbringing of these children, through thy divine help I have guided them the best I knew how; now they have reached the age where thou hast said they are accountable unto thee, and they have chosen to enter the waters of baptism and covenant with thee to do thy will. Wilt thou accept them, O Father, and guide us that we can now go forward as co-workers and together with thee we can help to establish the kingdom of peace on earth."

And so it will be by the gathering of the people of such homes that Zion will begin to take shape.

When we go to school we are given textbooks to study, and as we master them, we are given more which bring a higher knowledge in the various subjects. We have three textbooks of our church. Do we know them? Do we know where to look in them for the solution of some problems we have to meet? I doubt if a chef often finds need to refer to his text in the preparation of the foods he cooks. Nor would the stenographer often look to her text for the proper characters she uses to represent the words and phrases of her writings. Is it less important that we should know the "blueprint" of the kingdom?

I do not mean to imply that one should not seek to excel in one's chosen field of endeavor, but rather that in the struggle to attain that goal, we are apt to by-pass the boy or girl, friend or acquaintance, whom, had we but known, we might have inspired to things we little suspected.

So there comes a time when one may have reached that condition of human relationships which modern society has labeled social and business success, only suddenly to find himself at an age facing the loneliness of the future, perhaps regret of the past; disillusioned because there are no angels for companions except perhaps a few who already have been claimed, who joined themselves together in youth, who studied and worshiped and molded their lives, bringing themselves and their children to that high spiritual plane that may be looked upon by others with envious eyes.

As a child, one can remember being promised that if he would perform some few simple duties for a week's time without being told, he might have something which he had long desired. How eagerly and faithfully those tasks were carried out without the slightest doubt that the parents would fulfill their promise. Our Heavenly Father has promised that if we perform the tasks he has asked of us, that if we will seek first the kingdom of God, joy and abundance of living beyond our highest dreams will be ours, not only in this life, but forever and forever. Where are our desires? Do we doubt that promise?

Regardless of the state of mind that our previous religious, social and economic contacts have brought about we can look forward to joy and peace by establishing the right relationship with our Heavenly Father and with our brothers and sisters, and together, by the uplifting influence of one to the other, the purposes of the church will be accomplished.

Distance no doubt precludes the possibility of my ever meeting the author, for which I am thankful lest she confront me with the question, "Why don't you get married?" and—well, that is my secret!

—Anonymous.

Our Peace, Bought With Their Lives

This morning as I arose and looked out of my window to see the day just breaking in the east, I thought, "How wonderful the earth is; how peaceful nature is." Then the thought came to me, "It's here—world peace is here! Perhaps it is only for a short time, but it's worth thanking God for, no matter how brief or long the duration."

Then I began wondering what the reaction would be when Christ came. Perhaps there will be no universal rejoicing; perhaps, instead, there will be "weeping and wailing." The only song of joy will be that of Saints who have lived as He would have them.

I wish more people could sense that the day of lasting peace is not here yet. While we are rejoicing over the temporary peace, I hope we will accept the responsibility which lies before us to tell all those who have not the knowledge of Christ and His message, so that they may hear of it while there is still time.

Our peace has been bought for a price—a price we've all had to pay. Few homes in America were spared; countless mounds of earth on far-off shores tell the grim tale of sacrifices.

Here is an excerpt from a letter my son wrote before he was killed: "Mother, I want you and Dad to know that if I'm called upon to give my life, I'll give it gladly. I say this because I love you, and want you to be able to enjoy the security and peace our nation has always known." He went down fighting, and although our grief has been great, still we are proud to have helped by giving our son.

My heart goes out to others bereaved, for while bells ring out and people shout their gladness, I know that in their minds is an indelible picture of beach heads, jungles, foxholes, and muddy roads. They see their loved ones falling, never to rise again until peace does come to stay. Let us pray and work for the coming of that day.

—Marjorie Whiting.

Grateful

(From a letter to the Business Office.)

I wish to thank you for the beautiful art calendar you sent to me. It will remind me throughout the year of our church and its loyal workers.

The Herald to me is as eagerly welcomed as a letter from home. We shall welcome the time when we can again have the "bundles" of Heralds in our little mission in Burbank. We have so many visitors, and they seem glad to obtain a copy in their traveling about.

Personally I vote for the contributions of Evan Fry as of supreme importance during 1946. I should like to see his Book of Mormon articles in book form.

Best wishes for each one in a grand organization.

A Call for More Letters

As I have noticed the decreasing number of "Letters" in the Saints' Herald, sometimes looking in vain for even one, I have wondered if it is all together because of war conditions or if it is partly lack of reader interest and of contributions. Can it be that people are less interested than formerly in personal testimony?

As for myself, no matter how much I enjoy the rest of the paper, there is a feeling of disappointment and incompleteness when there are no letters. We miss the "human touch," so to speak, and the help and inspiration of personal testimony. Perhaps I value this more because of the semi-isolation in which I am situated. Perhaps it is a habit I acquired back in the time of my investigation of the claims of the church when I was seeking to know the church of God's approval. When bundles and bundles of papers were supplied me by good friends, I hungrily turned first to the letter department to see if anyone's experience might give me some light. These letters, I am sure, met a need at that particular time and had a part in the enlightenment that led to my decision.

As I write today, it is with a deep desire that the telling of a small part of my experience will help someone who is seeking to know God's will to continue to persist in the search for truth. Our Master said, "Seek and ye shall find," and his promises are true. Although the answer may not come at the time nor in the manner we expect, he only waits until such a one is in a condition to best receive; he answers in his way—not ours always—but in a way to dispel all doubt. The knowledge for which I sought so long came by the way of "the still small voice" which was not at all the way I had expected, yet it was convincing, and not once in all these years have I doubted divine guidance at that time.

It was forty years ago today that I was baptized into the church after many months of prayer and investigation. January the nineteenth is a significant date in the historical record of my life because it was upon that date I was inducted into the family of my Lord. It was then I was released from the burden of doubts and fears and uncertainty which I had carried so long. You who have carried a similar load can appreciate the joy of deliverance when the longed-for blessing came.

God has been wonderfully good to me through all the vicissitudes of life, and the church has abundantly met my spiritual needs; when there has been a lack in supply, it has been because of failure on my part and not that of the church.

Addie C. Van Syoc.

Milo, Iowa.

Healed Through Administration

I desire to relate an experience I had beginning October 29, 1945, at which time I was suffering from a cerebral hemorrhage. My right side was partially paralyzed, eyesight affected, pulse extremely slow, and volume poor. I was taken to the hospital. Upon my arrival there, I was found to be in a very critical condition.

During the first few weeks of my illness I appeared to receive very little help. I went into one coma after another. Being unable to take fluids by mouth, I was given a daily intavenous. There was very little hope for my recovery.

I received administration many times, and one day a change came over me. I seemed to be taking a journey, traveling far above the earth, for as I looked down I saw beautiful valleys. I felt rested and peaceful; my spirit was before me. I had gone more than half way on my journey when I was sent back to earth.

When my spirit returned and entered my body, I found that I was healed by the Lord, and began to relate my experience to those in the hospital room. God had answered the prayers of the Saints.

I returned home from the hospital and suffered no complications. I now am able to attend to my household duties and go to church. I thank God for his loving kindness.

Sunday, December 30, a fellowship service was held at the church and I related my experience under the influence of the Spirit. Sister Maude Melnyzer delivered a message verifying my testimony.

I wish to thank all those who sent cards, letters, and flowers to me during my illness. My prayers are for the welfare of God's children.

A Testimony of Healing

On October 25, 1940, I was seriously injured by being crushed—my ribs were all crushed and broken and bowels badly hurt. The doctor didn't think I could survive and would not consider moving me to a hospital.

We called Brother Henry Castings of Des Moines to administer and I began to improve slowly. Four weeks later pneumonia suddenly developed and I was taken to the hospital in Marshalltown. There I was stricken with hiccoughs which continued for six days and nights until I was nearly exhausted.

We called Brother V. G. Lents to administer. I immediately went to sleep, had only one light attack about midnight and had no more trouble with hiccoughs. From then I began to improve and two days later was taken home from the hospital.

Signed, C. M. Richeson,
State Center, Iowa.

I, V. G. Lents, remember the incident referred to by Brother Richeson.

I was called to the hospital about 8 P. M. and found the brother in great distress.

While administering, the brother dropped to sleep and I was informed the next morning that he had rested well through the night except for a short period of hiccoughing and was never bothered afterward.

To God be the praise.

Signed, V. G. Lents, Marshalltown, Iowa.

I was called from Des Moines to administer to Brother Richeson after a corn elevator fell on him and crushed him. He was blessed through administration.

Signed, Henry Castings.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

P. S.

* AN OFFICIAL, when questioned about the amount of drunkenness in the city, replied that it is "about normal." From the viewpoint of statistics, he is probably right. It is no better, no worse, than the average. But from the viewpoints of right human behavior, sociology, medicine, and religion, any drunkenness of whatever degree is abnormal. Alcohol is neither a normal food or drink; the conduct it induces in people, and the effects it has upon their bodies and minds, are not normal.

* THE TURTLE CLUB

A Girl Scout official was telling how she made the decision to begin her unit of the organization, which has since done splendid work under her leadership. At an outing in a park, a Kansas City official asked her why she didn't undertake a separate organization for this area. They were seated on some boulders near a stream. Looking down, she saw a turtle on a rock. He cautiously put his head out until his neck was exposed, and looked

The Department of Music of Graceland College joins the department of music of the general church in a music institute at Graceland College, March 9, 10. The conference will survey fields of music with reference to vocational, cultural and church possibilities. It will be open to resident college students and a limited number of music workers from adjacent regions. Those interested in attending are asked to communicate as soon as possible with Herbert Lively, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, in order to obtain housing accommodations. Anticipated expenditures are: Registration, 50c; room (one night) $1.00; meals (4) at college dining room, $1.70. The staff will include Franklyn S. Weddle, director of music of the church; Evan Fry, radio director of the church; Herbert Lively, Roy Benson, Henry Anderson, of the college faculty. Fields to be discussed are: radio, public school music, music appreciation in branch and home; music program of the local branch; general conference music. A vesper service of music will close the institute.

around. She decided that if the turtle could "stick his neck out" she could.

The turtle is a creature who, if he wants to go anywhere, has to stick his neck out. He is a kind of natural "tank" with a retractable running gear and a disappearing control tower, if you may speak of his physical features in mechanical terms. Please notice that when the turtle pulls in his neck, his legs go in at the same time, and he just stops moving.

This leaves us with the thought that if you want to go anywhere, you will have to stick your neck out. You will meet danger and grief. But you will get somewhere. Be a member of the turtle club. Stick your neck out for the right kind of things.

* "CITY OF NAUVOO"

The "Nauvoo Independent" of Thursday, January 31, carries a picture of the wreck of the ferryboat, "City of Nauvoo" so well known to all who are acquainted there. The boat was smashed by chunks of floating ice and a wind storm, after it had broken loose from its moorings. The remains lie in the mud along the bank on the Illinois shore, south of the city. One more link with a picturesque and romantic past, rich with memory and worn with service, thus makes its departure from the loved old city.

Anticipating General Conference

They Didn't Go Home

One reason for the severe crowding of the cities at present was mentioned in a conversation by a real estate operator. Many families, attracted by high wages, came to the cities from rural areas to work in war industries. The war jobs are gone, but the people do not go home. They have become accustomed to city comforts and luxuries, and are unwilling to give them up for the more rigorous life of the farm. And because of shortages they know they cannot now take the comforts of the city back to the farm with them. The situation reminds one of the time after the First World War, when this phenomena was described in one of the apparently witless, but nevertheless true, ragtime songs; the singer asked, "How ya gonna keep 'em down on the farm, after they've seen Paree?" The answer was that you can't. So the people won't go home, and nobody can make them; and sometimes home isn't there any more, or somebody else is living in it. Here they are until somebody builds more houses to make room for them.

Here in Independence we had comforted ourselves with the thought that after the war the surplus workers would go back to wherever it was they came from, that we would return to prewar normal, would have room to drive on our streets and park on the square, and be able to walk around without being stepped on by strangers. This hope has been disappointed. Nobody has gone home. They are all here. And so many of them are fine people. But meanwhile we are as crowded as Noah's Ark. Some real efforts will be necessary to accommodate the conference, and all who can help should do so.

Stone Church

As we prepare for the General Conference next April, some idea of the circumstances can be obtained from noting the flourishing conditions of the first congregation of the church. During the past year, Stone Church membership has increased from 2,644 to 2,743. On the first Sunday of the month, one Communion service cannot accommodate all who desire to attend, and for more than a year we have had at least one extra service, the one at 8:15 A. M. being rather popular. On the morning of February 3 this service drew more than four hundred people, to say nothing of the crowd at the regular 11 A. M. service. In fact, the Sunday morning preaching services are too crowded, and frequently there are no seats for visitors, or they must be seated in the basement and listen to the program over an electric speaker. To meet the need, a preaching service is also being instituted at 8:15 A. M.

It is reported that when the Stone Church was built in 1888 some people said, "We'll never fill it!" That prophecy was proved false many years ago. Last Sunday evening a good member declared vigorously, "It was never big enough!" Pastor Garland E. Tickemyer rejoices to see the congregation grow, but sometimes he must wonder what to do with all the people.

A Message From England

The congregation was deeply stirred by the splendid message brought the Sunday evening of February 3 by Brother Peter S. Whalley who, with his companion, has just come from England after sixteen years of labor in the mission there. Speaking on "Faith at Work," he illustrated his theme with accounts of his experiences there during the war years, paying tribute to the British people for their faith, courage, and fortitude in their great trials. Calling himself "one of the most bombed pastors in England," he related how bombings and machine gunnings seemed to follow wherever he went. His descriptions of the destruction at Coventry, Birmingham, Exeter, and other places were profoundly moving. He paid tribute to Sister Whalley as "the best fireman of us all" when she fought fire with the district squad and was elected captain for her efforts. He and Sister Whalley have stopped briefly in Independence on their way to San Diego, California, where he is to serve as pastor.

Foreshadowings

As always before a General Conference, there are evidences of both keen interest and grave concern among church people. There are differing philosophies as to what future activities the church should undertake, and those who sponsor these philosophies would like to make converts to their way of thinking. In most cases, these members have the good of the church in mind and desire only to do what is best. But some of the plans and some of the planners are not always wise. Where differences of opinion occur, feeling naturally develops. In some respects, members of the church are like citizens of the country: they are much more worried about who will be the next President of the United States than they are to help the incumbent President to carry through his program successfully. Our duty and our welfare center upon helping the man who is in there now. It is one of our follies that we cannot keep this fact in mind.

The church faces some serious problems. There are decisions to be made, and a course to be charted. The whole future of the church depends upon these decisions.

A Reader Calls for Letters

We wish to add our hearty "Amen!" to the comment of one of the readers of our publication, a man of influence and years of service in the church. He says in part:

Perhaps you have not considered the last issue carried four full columns of "filler" of a very secular nature. In the same issue under the heading of "Letters" we have but one three-inch letter. Don't you believe that at least one page or even all four columns used otherwise, would carry more of value through well-written letters of members and experiences of our missionaries, bearing testimony of Christ and his cause and the divinity of this Latter Day work? I do, and I am sure it would be of more value to our nonmember friends and readers.

The truth of the matter is that we had only that one letter on hand at the time, and we used it. If letters had been available for use, the "fillers" from secular sources would have been unnecessary. But, as our shop foreman says, "You can't print blank space."

LETTERS IN THE WAR

During the war so many people were not only busy but disturbed in their thinking, that many ceased writing letters for publication. We hope that now, with relative peace restored, these writers will resume their helpful contributions. It has been mentioned by various people, too, that our men and women who have returned from foreign service have had many fine experiences, a number of them religious in character, and that these should be written and published in the Herald for the benefit of the readers. We would welcome such letters, and hereby invite those who spent the war at home as well as those who spent it in military service, to write.

LETTERS FROM LOCAL LEADERS AND WORKERS

There are many fine, intelligent, able people among the local workers and leaders in the branches, districts, and stakes. Hearing from these people occasionally, we know what a great contribution they could make to the publication in reaching the lonely, the discouraged, and the isolated ones, to bring them strength and comfort. The truth is that these good people are very busy, some of them overburdened with work, and they have little time to write. But we ask them to consider how valuable their experiences and testimonies would be in print, for converting people to the gospel, for strengthening and sustaining them in the faith. We would like very much to hear from them.

THE PROBLEM OF SPACE

During the latter part of the war, when we had to cut the number of pages in our publication, letters that came were sometimes delayed for lack of space. That was a situation we regretted keenly, but could not help at the time. Now, we have our pages back; how long the paper supply will last we cannot know, but we shall do the best we can with what we can get.

THE PROBLEM OF THE UNUSABLE LETTERS

Our letters confront us with one problem that is always hard to solve: a small number of the letters received are sometimes not of a quality or character suitable for publication. Just as there are testimonies offered in some prayer meetings that a presiding officer has to keep under control, so there are some letters of testimony that are meant well, but not written in wisdom, and sometimes not with a clear perception of the truth or of what really happened. A few writers are not stable in judgment nor wise in observation, and so their letters are not reliable. All we can do is to ask our writers to be prudent, careful, and accurate in what they write. A few letters cannot be used. But most of the letters that have been received are good and helpful. Letters that abound in unpleasant details of disease and operations are not always spiritual in character, and the writers are not always qualified to report accurately on such things. We have to be careful about the publication of prophecies, because the general conference has ordered that no prophecies should be published or circulated unless they have been accepted and approved by the general conference. But we can always use good letters of testimony.

MANY APPRECIATE—MORE SHOULD WRITE

You like to read the letters of experience and testimony. But have you considered your responsibility to write? If you like to be helped, remember that you can help others.

Missionaries used to write many fine letters of their experiences in the field. They gave God the credit for all achievements, and so their letters were in no sense boastful. Modern missionaries are very busy, and also very modest. But they could write of their experiences, giving credit to the divine power, and thus avoid any impression of vanity or vainglory.

Elder Louis Serig Passes

A letter from President L. F. P. Curry brings us the following message:

Mr. Samuel A. Martin of Bridgeport, Ohio, notified us today by telegram that Elder Louis Serig of Wheeling, West Virginia, died Sunday evening, the funeral to take place Wednesday.

Brother Martin no doubt informed us because Brother Serig has been a long-time elder at this point who is known to all of the general church officers, at least those who have been in contact with our church work in the Wheeling area.

Many church people have reason to be grateful for the life and ministry of Brother Serig, and will remember him with affection and mourn his passing as we go. L. L.

Kind Words for Our Books and Authors

The following letter is a copy of one received by our Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith—Editors.

1407 Monroe Avenue
River Forest, Illinois
January 20, 1946

Mr. Elbert A. Smith Auditorium
Independence, Missouri
Dear Bro. Smith:

I was so thrilled in the reading of every chapter of your book Restoration. It is so consecutive and clear. The last chapters are a true climax. I liked the original references and the suggestions for further reading.

I think the publishing house did a magnificent job in making it attractive and easily read. The publisher can make or mar a book.

I was amazed at your extensive files of clippings and readings, the culmination of a lifework.

When I finished reading it, I wanted to write you to hurry and start another book. The same can be said to Brethren Edwards, Cheville, and Hanson. Sister Stevens' book is fine too. Why doesn't Leonard Lea write a book? And there are many more. This church is acquiring some good books for its membership and for others.

Best wishes for your continued contributions to this church. Best wishes to Sister Smith, whom I knew when I lived on Walnut Street, and we met at the little store to shop.

Yours sincerely,
Lillian Hadley.

Their Rightful Heritage

Ways in Which Home and Church May Nurture the Religious Growth of Children—How the Church and Home can Co-operate in Parent Education.

By John R. Darling

HOW FREQUENTLY we hear and glibly repeat: "The church and home must co-operate!" But how often the utterance of this feeling becomes an end in itself! Perhaps we do little about our assertion because, speaking frankly, we do not know what to do nor how to do it. The following scriptural reference is inspirational, but not too helpful: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it" (Proverbs 22: 6). Conspicuous by their absence, at this point, are suggested methods or devices as definite helps. Does this mean that no pattern exists by which we may accomplish a job which the scriptures command us to do? We believe there are means to attainment, for God so commanded, and where obedience is required, obedience is possible even though light may come only through consecrated research and experimentation.

The Christian philosophy of life emphasizes the importance of the home and the responsibilities associated with parenthood. This is both natural and right, and we accept it as fundamental to our way of life. We support this teaching and have without hesitation demonstrated our convictions on the fields of battle when the perpetuation of this concept has been at stake. However, lip service to an ideal, or way of living, or accepted path to eternal goals, or even physical combat intended to support our beliefs will not of itself produce desired results. Effective accomplishment hinges on constructive action. "Faith without works is dead."

It is not enough to say that the church and home are closely associated; their true position is that of an integrated unit functioning in mutual endeavor. They are uniquely interdependent. As separate institutions neither can attain the full realization of its potential power and influence.

Great is the opportunity for comparing relationships between Christian parents and their children, and our comparable relationship with our Heavenly Father. The following illustration may challenge us to seek a greater appreciation of and understanding for and responsibility to both the home and the church. The missionary in India cannot hope to develop an understanding and appreciation of God within the people of that country by likening God to the ideals of "Fatherhood" as we accept them. In the majority of cases our concept of "Father" is one of love, devotion, superior ability to direct, and idealism; however, experiences involving authority, love, and partnership with an earthly father are foreign to the way of life in India. They are just not understood. Thus we immediately recognize that developing an appreciation for the Christian God by these masses of people cannot be by the channel of the "Father" tenet. How foreign this seems when compared with our accepted ideals, beliefs, and purposes! How tragic must be their condition! However, as we view life in our own country today we are troubled by the conditions which confront us. We need to ask ourselves the question: "What co-operative personal efforts are we expending to safeguard the home and church which we profess to hold so dear?"

There is no argument against the church and home working together. We are for it! There is no sound argument against the importance of parent education! We believe in it!

There is no new philosophy with which we as a people are toying which minimizes the importance and duties of the home as basic to the nurture of our children. We would die for this belief! And still, to the public school, the community with its youth organizations, and the church school have been shifted many of the duties which cannot successfully be accomplished outside the home if our way of life is to continue. The church, in many instances, can hope only to supplement the efforts of the home, and the home cannot expect more than this of the church school. Deep are the meanings of the real and vicarious experiences of childhood. Significant are the roots of appreciations and habits that are formed. Significant are the concepts of parenthood. Beyond our comprehension in its moral and spiritual effect is any delegating responsibilities to institutions which are not and never can substitute for the "parent." Our very philosophy of life rests upon an enlarged view of this same concept—the Fatherhood of God. The perpetuation of our accepted beliefs rests upon the active Christian family.

The church and home can and must co-operate in parent education. Great is this responsibility, and truly significant for us is the admonition found in Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4:

... inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living

God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

This section emphasized our wholehearted agreement with the thesis that the church and home must integrate their efforts.

WE NOW ARRIVE at the point when the question "How can this be done?" must arrest our attention. To "know how" is crucial. Upon it depends success or failure of any plan of attack. It is evolving in its very nature, with new suggestions and practices being unearthed as we dig together for means to attain our goals. The following ways that the church can co-operate in parent education are listed as points of departure. Their scope, at present, is limited; but their future development will be curtailed only by a lack of balanced enthusiasm. It is a mutual endeavor, depending on the practice of the best we know.

BASIC FAMILY IDEALS

Of primary importance to accomplishing co-operative endeavor on the part of the home and church in parent education is our attitude toward this need. In fact, a truly constructive attitude may well fall into the classification of a method or device. If we desire with sincerity and depth of feeling to understand the importance, the needs, and possible contributions that we may make to the area of parent education, our efforts, no matter how inadequate, will be helpful. Worthwhile accomplishment is absolutely dependent upon:

1. A desire on our part to place the ideal of "kingdom-building" first in our thinking.

2. A resolve to work in harmony with God's will through study, meditation, and response to divine direction.

3. To approach God for help according to instructions recorded in the scriptures, seeking inspiration through the goal of righteous living as a mutual necessity for ourselves and others.

TRUE FAMILY SPIRIT

The family is a social group of such a nature that it exercises an influence upon its members quite unconsciously. The spirit of the home is indelibly imprinted on its members. Fortunate is that child who finds in his home, understanding, companionship, friendly interest in his achievements, wisdom and sympathy in dealing with his failures, and unswerving loyalty to the principles of Christ. That child's fond memories of home are a happy blending of mother and prayer and Sunday school and stories and daddy. If this home spirit increasingly demonstrates the mind of Jesus, to that extent will the Spirit of the Christ become effective in personal and social life. One of the first necessities of effective home membership and effective church membership is that of realizing the purposes for which each exist.

Family devotions must have a position of relative importance in Latter Day Saint homes. They must maintain a quality of simplicity and sincerity. The prayers offered for the church and its workers, as well as for the home and its needs must be consistent. Every effort should be exerted to avoid conditions which, if allowed to enter or exist, will tend to cancel that which family worship sets out to accomplish. By this we do not mean so much the frequent necessity to shift the time, or to omit temporarily a family worship period for I'm sure we agree, within reasonable limits at least, that the ability to adjust to change is a contributing force rather than a counteracting restraint to effectual growth. If developed wisely, it can become a habit of prime importance. We must therefore accept as desirable the ability to adjust to change as a premise which if accepted at least in a majority of cases will strengthen rather than weaken the ideals of our religious theory and practice. However, we should make an effort to eliminate distracting influences which over a period of time block or eventually make impossible mutual family experiences that are constructively satisfying. In Doctrine and Covenants 87: 6 we find an admonition that is both timely and applicable to situations which we frequently confront:

Let your families be small [associations outside the faith who too frequently today predominate our social life] . . . as pertaining to those who do not belong to your families; that those things that are provided for you, to bring to pass my work, are not taken from you and given to those that are not worthy, and thereby you are hindered in accomplishing those things which I have commanded you.

Disinterested persons, or those who are antagonistic to our faith that are found constantly in our homes can wreck worship and study experiences. We are warned against allowing conditions that interfere with responsibilities that our families must accept.

POINTS OF DEPARTURE

The following suggestions point out activities that are designed to help the church and home plan and act together in developing Christlike character and Christian living:

Consider carefully what the adults of your church would be interested in doing. You can succeed only as you make an appeal to their interest. The many interests represented in any church group suggest a varied program.

Consider also what the adults of your church need in order to make them active, working Christians. This will give a further indication of what should be included in the program.

Provide a balance between study groups, forums, and enterprises in Christian social action. Do not expect everyone to participate in everything which is provided.

Be democratic in procedure. Allow adults to have a voice in planning their own program. However, this does not excuse the leaders from making a start with a few carefully laid plans. The conference table is more desirable as a type of equipment for creative adult groups than are rows of chairs or straight-backed pews.

Do not expect to take the entire adult membership of the church by storm, with one effort. Let the spirit of adults in action spread from person to person.

Let the program provide vital activities for adults to which their own interests will draw them. Avoid using the motive of their loyalty to the church in getting them to enlist. Often temporary groups meeting around a current interest or problem for several weeks of work are more successful than permanent groups. Special care should be given to meeting the need of younger adults who are in a period of transition from the young people's department.

Your method must be such as to secure participation in some cause which challenges the interest of adults. Sharing with others in study, worship, discussion, and action because they themselves find these things worth-while is at the heart of effective work. This is the direct opposite of "putting over" on the group of passive men and women something which someone else has decided they need.

Among the activities which are effective toward the Christian development of adults, the following should be given an important place.

1. Preaching. This is a major factor in the program of every church and is directed largely to the adult constituency. However, preaching cannot stand by itself and be effective. It must be related to other elements in the program. When the sermon is based on human needs, when it seeks to meet those needs by providing valid information and stimulating motives, when it shows people their problems and how they may be met on a Christian level, it is indispensable to the purposes which we have described.

Pastors can be persuaded to listen to what their people know (or do not know) and say about religion and the problems and conditions that adults face, so that preaching may well become "teaching preaching."

The recognition of the fact that adults, youth, and children are different in understanding and that therefore they require separate instruction adapted to their needs, must be firmly established. Sermon illustrations may be used to magnify religion in the family.

Above all, adults should become vocal. The average minister has next to no notion of what is in their minds and hearts.

2. Worship. Services of worship which enable people to come into the presence of God with their life problems and needs and in this divine presence to find a new interpretation of life and a new motive for living are also an indispensable element in the church's program for adults.

3. Christian Action. Whether this be action in the church's own work, action in the church's projects in community services or action in everyday affairs stimulated by the church, this is the point at which personality growth will most effectively be made. The program of work for adults which has been described here is one which will propel Christians actively into the world to do the will of God.

4. Group Work. The smaller group for study and discussion is peculiarly well adapted to adults. It has been called the method of democracy. It gives each person an opportunity to share in the consideration of problems and projects, in arriving at solutions and plans of action, and in carrying such plans into actual practice.

Such a small group is well adapted to study. Most adult Christians are far from well informed concerning the meaning of the content of the scriptures, Christian faith, and belief, and the application of religion to personal and social problems.

The small group is well adapted to discussion and planning for Christian action. It should be emphasized that every effective program of Christian action should be supported by adequate study and investigation so that such action may be intelligent.

The small group is also well adapted to the best sharing of Christian experience. Those who would join together in exploring the meaning of Christ for the life of today will have much to share with one another by way of their own Christian experience. From such sharing groups, individuals may go forth to inspire others with their faith and experience.

Adult classes may meet on a workday night each week for the study of religious problems, doctrines, techniques. Short courses of from six to ten weeks work well. They go better if those who come enroll in advance and contribute something in the way of a fee. Only those interested should be enrolled; attendance needs to be regarded as a privilege for which one must apply and pay. The lecture method will not work, unless each lecture is followed by free discussion. There must be guidance, either from a skilled instructor or from a first-rate book.

THOUGHTS BECOME ACTIONS

1. Plan a program of continuous family visitation. Stress family religion as one of the chief topics of conversation.

2. Organize visitors and teach them how to visit. Send them to visit each family in the interest of religion in the family, stressing activities of interest in the church for each individual member of the home.

3. Arrange for someone to assume responsibility for visiting the new family in the community. At that time, or later, supply this family with a list of people with whom they should become acquainted. They should be urged to call on these families. These families might be notified to expect this call and to follow through if it does not materialize. It should be thoroughly understood on the part of the church that new families will be urged to take this initiative in establishing themselves in the church and community.

4. Plan for one night a week as Family Night in the church, with various programs of fellowship, worship, and recreation in which the family shares as a unit. Incidentally, at this point we would like to call attention to visual aids on Christian family life as a means to stimulate interest in building better homes.

5. When new homes are established or families move into new homes, an effective home dedication service may be conducted.

6. Serve present and prospective church families by providing gift subscriptions to church publications.

7. Train the teachers to visit, and encourage them to stimulate scripture reading at home and church, and also church school attendance.

8. Arrange at the church, at a bookstore, or at a library a display of books and pamphlets as helps for fuller and happier family living.

9. Encourage grace at mealtime in all the church families this year.

10. Plan for parents' co-operation in religious training by establishing short-term study classes for young adults and adults on courses relating to the church, home, and parenthood.

11. Provide each family with a suitable service of home worship on special days, such as Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, Mother's Day, and Father's Day.

12. Develop the cradle roll in your church school. The cradle-roll visitors often become teachers of parents, especially through leaving literature and recommending books. Frequently they become "evangelists," and lead the whole family to Christ and the gospel.

13. Have a day for the blessing of little children. In keeping with this blessing is the appeal to the parents to:

- a. Keep this child in regular attendance when he is old enough to attend church school.
- b. Speak only those things concerning the church that will instill faith in the mind of the child.
- c. Witness for Christ to the child at every convenient opportunity.
- d. Maintain worship in the home.
- e. Live always so that the Spirit of Christ may be seen in action.

14. Keep parents informed about the church school. Letters and telephone conversations may be, under certain conditions, as effective as personal visiting. However, in general, there is no good substitute for personal contacts. Points to stress include:

- a. Appeal to parents to see that their children attend church school as regularly as they do public school.
- b. Frequent need of children for help in preparing their church school study program.
- c. Importance of church school attendance as an example to their children.
- d. Importance in habit formation with children in the giving of offerings.
- e. Avoidance of work, school responsibilities, and social plans that interfere with church school activities. We might well insert at this point the comment that the church can be just as guilty as the public school and community in monopolizing the time of both parents and children which they should spend in the home together. Let us re-evaluate our activities outside of our homes that we shall not be guilty of "much ado about nothing" and which as a thief in the night takes more and more of our time and energy and eventually robs us of our most valuable asset.

f. Responsibility on the part of parents to provide a home with Christian atmosphere—through respect for the personality of each member of the home, through table grace, family worship, religious books, pictures, and music.

15. Urge co-operation with other churches and agencies in the community whose activities and plans are for the purpose of building a better community for all concerned.

16. By means of frequent talent surveys, keep records up to date of all church membership, including as much accurate data as possible on aptitudes, talents, and areas in which each member of the church can fulfill his stewardship.

17. Parents should be considered as educators. Those who have the ability to teach should be enlisted as teachers, assistant teachers and specialists.

18. A most satisfactory means of acquainting parents with the total program of the church school is the systematic personal invitation to observe different phases of the work.

19. Parent-teacher meetings should be scheduled on the church calendar and held at stated intervals during the school year. More intimate meetings should also be planned periodically either on a grade or departmental basis. Here parents and teachers can rethink and define the basic aims of specific groups, discuss plans, observe and review graphic activities in their process, and consider the worship values in junior church, etc.

20. Become familiar with and put into practice the following three principles which offer sound bases for work with parents and teachers:

- a. Study the constituency. Take time to become acquainted with people and win their confidence by offering a well-prepared plan of education founded upon a sound philosophy.
- b. Allow the plan a slow but steady growth, providing adequate, meaningful experiences which will guide adults to grow religiously. A ten- or fifteen-year plan is none

"As Having Authority" By Lorne F. White

Part II

AUTHORITY IN SPIRITUAL GIFTS

IN A DISCUSSION of the spiritual gifts, their place and function in the church, we would need a great deal more time and space than that which is available. However, it is our wish that we might present some views on this important aspect of the moral authority of the church. Spiritual gifts have always been identified as an integral part of the church of Christ and as such carry their own weight of authority. True, they have been abused. However, that abuse does not in any way justify any attempt to minimize their function. If such were the case it would be consistent for us to ban the legitimate use of gasoline because some men, with criminal intent, used the same useful liquid to destroy valuable property. It is regrettable that much of the beauty and significance of the gifts has been lost in the church due to this pardonable fear of thus abusing this apparently miraculous aspect of the church. In fact, this paralysis of fear has robbed us of much of the spiritual impetus which springs from a wise, but nevertheless continued utilization of this function. Although there is nothing miraculous with God, still it follows that the church requires a portion of that which defies human reason in order to lift it above the human level, giving it that quality which distinguishes it from any human institution at the same time guarding against the tendency of man to develop a sensation-seeking complex.

The power of Christ to convey

- c. Choose the best person for each place where adult leadership is required. Guide these people in absorbing a philosophy of religious education, and expose them to the best scholarship in the field.

truth and instruction together with consolation and spiritual elation comes from the sheer mystic outreach of his presence. His authority comes from the sureness that radiates from his every word. His church is also radiating that same assurance through the doctrine and gifts of the gospel.

We have often asked, "Are the gifts of the gospel necessary?" They are necessary to supply a definite need in the spiritual life of man. Because man is a combination of the spiritual and physical impulses, each depending upon and influenced by the other, such spiritual impulses are intensified through physical well-being and influence the physical reactions controlling or regulating the mechanical functions of the body. In this way we find the physical impulses are dependent upon the spiritual nature in its rightful function.

The spiritual gifts, in their various functions, are therefore placed in the church to meet specific needs. In no way are they placed there merely to satisfy the morbid longings of the religious "sign-seekers." Many of the gifts are as imperceptible as a summer dawn, while others transcend the natural and leave the recipients in a condition of wonder and amazement, even in credulity. Regardless of the gift given, or the form of presentation, such gifts are given by God to the church, to meet the ever-present needs of the soul and shall continue to be given just so long as the need exists. Of course the conferring of such gifts is governed by the needs and the receptivity of the church. They are not showered promiscuously upon an unreceptive, unthinking, and unheeding people. Their reception is conditional. If man places himself in subjection to the promptings and directions that such gifts indicate, then and only then will continued presence be assured. It is not the reluctance of God which has robbed us of much of the consolation and power of the spiritual gifts. Paradoxical as it may seem, in the light of our need, we ourselves are responsible for any dearth of such gifts that may be suffered in the church.

How many times I have sat under the influence of the Spirit of God as we met in the Communion service. At those times I have felt the sweet presence of the Holy Spirit. My musings and meditations carried me far beyond the portals of the church into the vastness of the future. Suddenly I would be brought out of my reverie by the words of the officiating elder, "Has everyone been served?" And as I thought on the import of that query, there came to me an urgency to stand to my feet and shout, "No, thousands have not been served. Maybe all who are present have, but think, think of the millions that have no knowledge of Christ and his power to save them from their fate." As I say, this has been my experience many times. And as many times have I resolved to do all in my power to assist in the spreading of the gospel to all who stand in need of its power to save not only the soul but in a measure the body. We may not have the opportunity of taking the gospel to far-away lands, but we have within our grasp many who are in need of the assurance of the gospel message. The question we must ask ourselves may well be, "Has everyone been served in my community, in my neighborhood?" To me this is the authority of the gifts of God to the church, striving in us to will and do his good pleasure.

AUTHORITY IN ORGANIZATION

WHATEVER ELSE it may be, the church is people. As such it must have a social and administrative organization. Having evolved such an organization it promptly developed an ethos of its own, habits of thought, habits of action and rules of morality, and ethics stemming partially from the teachings of the church and from the pressure of current trends. Such was present in the days of Apostle Paul and the primitive church, and it is undeniably present today. The church has built up a tremendous backwash of tradition and habit even in the comparatively short time since the Restoration. This has often clashed with the introduction of progressive changes necessary in the light of modern needs. In politics it is called public opinion — and we acknowledge its controlling force. In the church it is called “common consent.” Such consent, as part of the authority of the church, is an accepted truth, demonstrated not only by the spiritual operation of God, but also by the ordinary workings of human nature. However, we might sound a note of warning. Many times we permit the unfolding of our theology to divert our attention from the fundamental truths, to the practical function of the institution. And often that diversion is salutary. It is beneficial for us to take fundamental principles for granted. But it is also good to occasionally look back to the source of our authority and hope. The church has too often confused the elementary rules of procedure and behavior which must necessarily be imposed, with those spiritual obligations of religious living. If we are not watchful, this zeal for organization will usurp the authority of the gospel and acquire fictitious value as that of the doctrine of Christ. From that very beginning sprang the inevitable but sad development of the legal institutions which are today masquerading as churches of Christ. Even the church in Apostle Paul’s day had such habits and customs, for we find Paul condemning something which was being done at Corinth on the grounds that “we have no such custom neither the church of God.” For this and other less evident reasons we must develop a psychological acuteness to enable us to recognize the extent that common consent influences our present and previous convictions.

The general conference of the church is, in a limited sense, the instrument for ascertaining and registering common consent. It simply gives definite form to convictions to which the church, through the process of revelation and investigation under the guidance of the Spirit of God, has been previously led. As has been said, legal authority has a legitimate function in the church. It curbs rash experiments which often would prove fatal to truth, and it preserves the gains of the past. However, there is always the danger of its becoming tyrannical and intolerably oppressive. Such a danger, however, is reduced to a minimum if the doctrine of Christ is given its full imminence in the function of the church.

The fellowship of the church is meant to be so intimate that the church is considered to be a living body—the body of Christ. It is an organism, and organism needs organization. As does the human body, to which it is likened, build up its organization in growth, so also the church from a humble, insignificant beginning has reached a position of efficiency and power.

It is now over one hundred years since that day when six young men, in obedience to the command of God, set in motion the church of Christ in the latter days. It is not a new church, nor does it teach a new gospel that it presented to a sceptical world. Rather the very church of God and the gospel of the kingdom. This church and the gospel were duly established by God for the salvation of his people. But through their wickedness the church and gospel were not destroyed by them, but removed from them until in God’s due time they were restored to us again in order to fulfill their mission. They are not new things. This is the eternal, ageless church of the living God—proclaiming the eternal ageless gospel of salvation.

In order for us to appreciate the function of church authority, we must be convinced of the true presence of the church of Christ. In many respects the membership of the church is losing its concept of the church as the authoritative church of Christ, and not some fragmentary portion of a hopelessly divided Christianity struggling for existence. To many it has become nothing more than just another denomination, preferred above others, perhaps, but not actually the church of Christ. To such we might say, “If there is no true church of Christ on earth then all this talk of church authority is not worth our mention.”

Until we have been moved upon by the Spirit of God to believe the gospel, and respond to the motive, then the authority of the church and its divine origin will not acquire any practical importance. This authority is not a trivial detail of a sacred narrative which may or may not be accurately recorded. Rather it is a fundamental, eternal fact.

Because ordinary men under God organized the church, I have no patience with those people who attempt to degrade men in order to exalt God. One of the most prominent teachings of Christ is the supreme importance he invariably places upon man. It is true that men have failed many times to justify the supreme trust God has placed in them, still the fact remains, God chose feeble men to reorganize and in a sense perpetuate the church. One of the greatest arguments in support of the place of church authority is the fact that when men have been moved upon by that authority to believe the gospel, they have realized that belief in the gospel strengthens their acceptance of the authority, which in turn is overshadowed by the power of God. When this authority is tested upon its ability to supply the needs of man, we are forced by that authority to spread the gospel. In that spreading we are brought face to face with that aspect of the church in which we find further indication of the true character of the gospel.

RETURNING ONCE more to the question of the legal authority of the church, we are fully aware of the care which must be exercised in any presentation of this subject. We might ask, "What is the purpose of legal authority of the church?" We might glibly reply, "To maintain discipline." However, this does not go very far in answering the question. "What is discipline insofar as the church is concerned?" I think it might be said to be the formation of character by acquisition of the habit of acting or believing as commanded by an authority in which I have complete confidence. No man can be forced to become a member of the church, but to accept membership and then refuse the direction is neither reasonable nor honest. The church cannot come between you and God to hurt you. Certainly it can come between you and God to help you. The work of the church is not of a defensive nature. Its mission is not to keep itself alive in a gainsaying world, but to bring our every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Man needs continual direction. His attainments in the spiritual as well as the physical realm invariably fall short of his intentions. We experience pangs of disillusionment. Experience very rarely justifies or fulfills the early promises held out to us. At times the facts of life become oppressive, distressing, and unbearable, and we are compelled to either escape from them or in some way overcome them by finding a method of robbing them of their power to crush the soul. The purpose of the church, its teachings and authority is to assist, by entreaty, exhortation, and even command to help man to eliminate that inconsistency between the practical application of the gospel and its theoretical beauty as treasured in the good intents of the heart.

MAN'S FAILURE to achieve true discipleship can very often be traced to a sense of confusion, rather than a desire to do evil. Such confusion results from the failure of many of us to realize that faith in and obedience to the church of Christ cannot only give us a realization that God is our Father and that we are his children, but also it indicates clearly the way we should go to achieve the fullest of God's blessings and the power of his directive spirit. We might be quite safe in concluding, therefore, that one of the most obvious functions of church authority, in either its moral or legal aspects, is to lead all men unto Christ. This sacred function cannot be too strongly impressed upon the membership of the church.

We might, at this point, mention two examples of the legal authority of the primitive church. Modern or contemporary examples are quite obvious and are so commonplace as to lose their value in exemplification. On one occasion Christ made a significant promise to Peter, as one of the leaders of the church. "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." "Binding" and "loosing" are common terms of legislative or judicial authority and doubtlessly had reference to the far-reaching effects of the legal authority afforded the church. The same applies to another statement of Christ, "If thy brother sin against thee, go, show him his fault between him and thee alone: if he hear thee, thou has gained thy brother. But if he hear thee not, take with thee one or two more, that at the mouth of two witnesses or three every word may be established. And if he refuse to hear them, tell it to the church, and if he refuse the church also, let him be unto thee as the gentiles and the publican." "Verily I say unto you, what things soever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and what things soever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." Again is indicated the practical nature of the legal authority of the primitive church. Judicial action is definitely involved. This authority extends beyond the spiritual forces of life. It insists that spiritual salvation of man is dependent to a degree, even upon the wise and intelligent use of physical resources, so admirably caught up in the financial law of the church.

As the restored church of Christ we are committed to the theory that the organization of the primitive church was not of a provisional nature, as some would have us believe. It may be safely assumed that the church was forced, through the pressure of the prevalent religions of the day, to conform in appearance, but not in principle or imitation, with the Jewish system of synagogue worship. This accounts for the rather meager references we possess to the actual organization of the church in its administrative function. However, it is natural for the church, particularly in Jerusalem, to retain a distinct flavor of Judaism in its administration.

In the early church we do not observe very far into its organization until we are struck with the moral and legal authority exerted by the apostles. They were prophets and more than prophets. Immediately upon the organization of the church, the apostles became active administrators. Paul, in his epistles, strikes a definite note of administrative authority. As an apostle he exerted unmistakable moral authority. As an apostle he exerted legal authority. He commanded, and men obeyed. But he did not deign to use exhortation or entreaty. He commanded as he entreated in the name of Christ. He was first and last a minister for Christ.

"Mary of Latter Day Israel"

The Life of Mary Howes Rogers

By Gertrude L. Robbins

In the little Cape Cod town of Dennisport, Massachusetts, on September 17, 1861, there was born to Nancy Nichols Howes and Joshua Eldrege Howes a daughter to whom they gave the name of Mary Eva. Little Mary not only had the heritage of being born in a state rich in history, and famed for its scenic beauty, but she had the greater heritage of being born into a family which was numbered among the earliest pioneers of the Church of Jesus Christ, later to become known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Mary's maternal grandmother, Hannah Humphrey, united with the church in 1836, and the land on which the Dennisport chapel was built was a gift from Sister Humphrey.

Mary Eva Howes was baptized in 1877 by Elder Thomas Freeman Eldrege. She taught in the Sunday school until about a year later, when she moved to Providence, Rhode Island. There she continued her work in the Sunday school for a period of eleven years. Her sisters—Helena, Olive, and Jennie—also joined the church.

On January 12, 1888, Mary Howes was united in marriage with John Freeman Rogers at Providence, Rhode Island, the ceremony being performed by Elder William Bradbury. Their romance was a logical one, since John's boyhood home had also been in Dennisport, Massachusetts.

John and Mary Rogers soon established their home in Attleboro, Massachusetts. Here again Mary's talent for teaching was recognized, and for over fifty years she served as a teacher in the Sunday school. Her knowledge of the Bible, the principles of the latter day gospel, and her abiding faith in all she taught, enriched the lives of all who were fortunate enough to be among her pupils. During more than twenty years she was president of the Mary E. Rogers (organized) Class, and in addition to assembling as a class each week in the Sunday school, this group of young women met monthly at the homes of the members. Their activities included study courses, sewing projects, and social times. They were also energetic in earning money for worthy purposes, both religious and civic.

Sister Mary also gave of her time and talents in other branch work, serving for twenty years as branch secretary. She was an active member of the Ladies Aid, which was eventually reorganized as the Women's Department, and a regular and faithful attendant at the church services.

At the time when Brother Richard Bullard was bishop of what was then known as the Massachusetts district, Sister Rogers was appointed by him as solicitor for the Attleboro branch, and was retained by M. C. Fisher when he succeeded Brother Bullard as bishop of what later became known as the southern New England district. Sister Rogers continued in this capacity for thirty-eight years, when she resigned because of ill health. She established an enviable record, not only from a standpoint of faithfulness, but in the efficiency with which she performed the clerical duties pertaining to her office.

Bishop M. C. Fisher says of her: "During her period of service she returned 456 monthly reports; was always on time, and never in all that period (38 years) was there a single mistake of even one cent. She was a model of Christian womanhood; believed in God, and his church. She accepted her assignment of 'solicitor' as a stewardship, and was faithful and wise. There can be no doubt of her reward."

The familiar story of Mary and Martha, the New Testament sisters who dwelt in Bethany, recalls incidents in the life of Sister Mary Rogers. Like Martha, Sister Rogers prided herself in a neat and orderly home. This and her personal neatness were well known by friends and neighbors. A woman of conservative tastes, her attire was always becoming and well-chosen. She was a gracious hostess and an excellent cook. Guests were always given a warm welcome, and many loved to tarry in the Rogers household. It was a number of years after their marriage before Brother John united with the church, but he always welcomed the Saints as heartily as did his good wife, and mingled with them often in church services and activities. Visiting elders and missionaries were often entertained in the Rogers home, and John looked forward to their coming as eagerly as did Mary. Sister Rogers possessed the happy faculty of combining Martha's practical ways with Mary's visionary tendencies, and both she and her husband profited much, spiritually, by their associations with the ministry who represented the latter day gospel.

Sister Mary and Brother John enjoyed many years of happy companionship, and on January 12, 1938, the Attleboro Saints gave them a surprise party in honor of their golden wedding anniversary. Mary was a devoted wife, and although no children were born to their union, she was well worthy of being called a "mother in Israel." Gentle of voice, and mild in manner, her love for the children and young people, and her deep interest in their welfare were manifested by quiet, sincere words of encouragement, at times when they were most needed.

Like Dorcas of old, this handmaiden of the Lord was given to good deeds, and loved to share temporal blessings with others less fortunate. Like Mary, the mother of Jesus, this Mary of "latter day Israel" had great faith and high ideals, and spent her life in the keeping of these ideals. She bore herself with womanly dignity which commanded respect, yet she was ever humble, prayerful, and deeply appreciative of God's blessings.

After completing practically sixty-five consecutive years as a Sunday school teacher, serious illness at last forced her to put aside all of the familiar and loved duties and activities. In the final years of her life she was called upon to pass through dark waters of affliction. On July 10, 1945, in her eighty-fourth year, a loving Father called her home, and her soul must have known peace and joy in laying down the physical body for the spiritual form. While on earth she sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and because of her faith and good works her reward in the kingdom of heaven is sure.

Sister Rogers is survived by her husband, who is at present with his nephew, Elder Arthur Gates, Indianapolis, Indiana; also by three sisters, Mrs. Helena (James) Cook, Mrs. Olive (William) Calvert, and Mrs. Jennie Weeks, and one brother, Irving L. Howes, all of Providence, Rhode Island, as well as several nieces and nephews.

While there is no longer a class in the Attleboro church school functioning as the Mary E. Rogers Organized Class, a majority of the original group still meets monthly, and still remains an active unit, retaining the name of the Mary E. Rogers Class.

The Snow

The snow, falling ever so softly,
Came gently down through the night,
Turning each bush into a mountain
Each tree branch, crystals of white.
It covered birdbaths in my garden
Each looked like a hugh toadstool.
It made the stone bench, a throne seat
Down by the ice-frozen pool.
It fell on black cloth in my window
And what lace medallions I see!
Hexagons, gossamer, and dainty,
All different, as different can be.

The Modern Word of Prophecy Is Sure

By J. A. Koehler

SAINST PETER said: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, unto which ye do well that ye take heed." He said that the ancient word of prophecy is sure. The prophet of Restoration said: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled." He said that the modern voice of prophecy, too, is sure.

So far as the Bible story reveals, Moses is the first real prophet who doubted the sureness of some prophecy. He said: "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord [when a man says "God said"] if the thing follow not, the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him."

Jesus said: "Beware of false prophets." And Peter said there were "false prophets among the people." There were, as there still are, prophetic humbugs, outright deceivers, and insanity borderliners.

BUT THE foregoing language of Moses does not seem to refer to fake prophets. It seems rather to refer to true prophets who, in speaking presumptuously, say things about the truth that are not true. It seems to refer to what prophets add to "the voice of divine inspiration."

A prophet can no more be dispossessed of his soul than you can. A prophet will have ideas about what "God said" as certainly as you have. A prophet will speak his own mind just as you do. And just as you make mistakes when you speak about matters on which you are not an authority, so do prophets. The judgment of even so great a prophet as Moses, on one question, was corrected by his own father-in-law.

One prophet said that it is necessary that some things be necessary. It is necessary, for instance, that man should be under the necessity of mastering the forces of the world in which he lives—particularly the forces at work in economic life—if he is to develop into a full-fledged human being. And it seems especially necessary that men should be under the necessity of judging of the truth of the voice of prophecy—or of what is true in ethical relations—if his moral development is to be completed.

WHEN I contemplate the prophets, I always ask two principal questions: (1) What is the "message" of the prophet? and (2) What is he saying about his message, or in connection with his message, that may not be wholly true?

It is through contemplation of the messages of the prophets that we perceive that there is "a message" of prophecy. On previous occasions, I have said that the message of prophecy is that the Kingdom of God shall come. That, to me, is the sure word of prophecy. That seems as certainly true to me as that civilization shall continue to march on.

If there is a modern word of prophecy which says that the Kingdom shall come, that modern word of prophecy, to me, as it may be to you, is sure. For true prophecy speaks the truth. Its ideas accord with the requirements of the nature and being of man. And surely we must know that the most comprehensive of all truths is that the Kingdom is the all-inclusive requirement of the very nature of man.

I AM PARTICULARLY concerned with the specific word of prophecy which, it seems, is designed to inspire us to do what must be done by us, in this our day, if the Kingdom is to come. I am concerned with the word which is intended to stimulate the church, to invigorate it, to electrify it, to cause it to put everything it has into its proper business, which is "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion," the coming Kingdom of God.

I do this not only because the church, the membership regarded collectively, has a way of neglecting "the weightier matters of the law," so long as incidental things seem to go well with it; but also because the church as a whole seems to get "cold feet"; because it seems to become fainthearted. It is not so sure that the word of prophecy which says that Zion shall be redeemed before the coming of the Lord is sure. And, therefore, it is not so resolved to bring forth and to establish that cause.

What about the sureness of "the message" of prophecy? Has the genius of ancient prophecy ever been "off the beam" in its predictions about the business of the Kingdom? Can you find evidence in the events of the centuries, particularly in the developments of the affairs of "my people"—evidence that the word of prophecy ever was not sure? Why, one of the principal anchorages we have of faith in God is the historic witness of the centuries that the word of prophecy is sure.

We talk about the knowledge and the power and the sovereignty and the purposes of God, as if we really had some idea of what we are talking about. We say "the works, and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated." But we conduct the affairs of the church—in so far, that is, as they respect the redemption of Zion—as if the Almighty has found it necessary to call off the whole business because of the interfering "plans of mice and men." The whole Christian church should be ashamed of the record of its religious performance.

THE ANCIENT VOICE of prophecy said over and over again, in one form or another, that His work shall go "before Him." It said that before the end of the ungodly situation into which we have gotten human affairs by our mis-government of industry, there shall be the begining of the godly way of life. "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house [the Zion of Restoration] shall be established." And out of that conviction came the ancient admonition to Zion, the people, to "get ye up into the high mountain"; to ways above the common place things that characterize Christendom; "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."

What the ancient voice of prophecy said over and over again is what the modern voice of prophecy has often said. Hear this word of modern prophecy, ye people who say that that word is sure: "Righteousness and truth shall I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem."

THAT WAS the voice of prophecy in 1830. Two years later that voice said: "The time has come, and is now at hand" to inaugurate the business of the Kingdom; the time to "organize my Kingdom upon the consecrated land;" "to establish the children of Zion." And on the heels of that proclamation, within four years time, the modern voice of prophecy said: "They [the people of Zion] might have been redeemed even now"—more than a century ago. That is the ancient voice of prophecy over again. It is "the word" which we say is sure.

If you wish the modern statement of the prophecy contained in the fortieth chapter of the Book of Isaiah, you may find it in the "Hymn of Admonition," written by our venerable Dr. Joseph Luff. In that hymn he says: "The time is ripe, My work must hasten. Get ye up, then, to your mountain, Zion of this closing day, for the glory of My coming waits to break upon your way." That voice of modern prophecy says, by implication, that before the Lord shall come, His mode of human living together shall be established.

Peter said: "Ye do well that ye take heed" unto that voice of prophecy. The genius of Restoration said, If you do not take heed "the kingdoms of this world shall prevail against you." Even in the vicissitudes of this people, as in all other turns of events in the present and in the past, we have convincing witness that the modern word of prophecy, to which we ought to give heed, and which is the ancient voice of prophecy resounding anew, is sure.

pends upon this, and we all feel it. So much the greater reason, therefore, that no hasty actions, no hasty decisions, should be made.

We have seen many times how the dangers of dissent and trouble have threatened a General Conference. But they have melted away, in recent years, as the conference opened. Trouble and debt brought great danger to the church in times past; they are luxuries we cannot afford now. We must not have them.

Our church has gone through many hard and difficult times. It could not have survived without the help of God. We believe that it has survived because it has a divine mission to fulfill, and that it will continue to survive for the same reason. The church needs peace and unity at its conferences, among the membership and within the leadership. It needs faith.

Let each one of us see that he shall do everything in his power to help the work of the church and to sustain its leaders, and to do nothing to make that work more difficult.

The Editor Says He Likes Monday

I LIKE Monday.
It is the best day of all the week.

TUESDAY is nice, comma
But it is just in-between.

WEDNESDAY is endure-unto-the-end
Forever and ever . . . ellipsis.

AND THURSDAY is don't care; semi-colon. Only you have to keep plugging to get this week's work done this week.

FRIDAY brightens up with a paycheck
And the last exciting rush
Of getting things really done.

SATURDAY is a brown holiday
With chores and errands and shopping for food

And a lot of practical little things
That bring the soaring spirit back to earth with a thud. Period.

SUNDAY has slow beginnings
With no alarm clock
And you return to consciousness
Like a person sleeping late in a Pullman berth

With Life gliding swiftly by his window
Breakfast maybe and funnypapers
Then church
And dinner (parenthesis) eat-too-much and sleep it off
Ho-hums and the radio until late evening
And not much meaning to anything.

BUT MONDAY starts off with a bang!
screamer

The loud alarm bell, pans rattling in the kitchen
Razor stropping, hummed melodies and sloshing water in the bathroom
Put on your harness, get the bit in your teeth
And roar down to the office
Where you hit the ball, and shovel out tons
Of work
Oh, it's great to have a job to do in the world
And strength to do it
To look all men in the eye and know
That you're carrying your part of the load.

I LIKE MONDAY
And the Creator was probably wise
To put just one of them
In every week. Stop.

George Nathaniel Briggs

President Emeritus of Graceland College

A biographical sketch prepared in connection with the Fiftieth Anniversary celebration of Graceland College, 1945.

By the Lambda Delta Sigma Society

George N. Briggs is a sensible man;
He stays at home and looks arter his folks;
He draws his furrer as straight as he can,
And into nobody's tater-patch pokes.

Such in part is the tribute paid by James Russell Lowell in his Bigelow Papers to George Nixon Briggs, rugged pioneer governor of Massachusetts.

The poet today could well pay a similar tribute to George Nathaniel Briggs, President-Emeritus of Graceland College, and a descendant of this sturdy statesman.

IT WAS IN the little village of Tabor, Iowa, and on May 10, 1874, that George took his first peep at this wide, wide world. He is the son of Riley W. and Clara Briggs, and the eldest of three children. In the veins of his maternal as well as his paternal ancestry flowed the fighting blood of New England, for his mother, Clara Greene, was a direct descendant of General Nathaniel Greene of the American Revolution.

The boy was nurtured in an atmosphere of strong religious faith, both his parents and grandparents being stanch leaders in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Thus to his heritage of leadership was added the impelling force of a firm religious conviction.

Riley W. Briggs, upon graduation from the law school of the State University of Iowa, took up the practice of law in Carson, Iowa. His success won for him the election to the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth General Assemblies of Iowa.

It was in Carson, in 1891, that George completed his public and high school training.

A broad basis for the career which was to follow was laid by attendance in three of Iowa's educational institutions. He received the degree of Bachelor of Didactics from the Iowa State Teacher's College at Cedar Falls in 1893 and the degree of Bachelor of Arts from the University of Iowa at Iowa City in 1897. At the latter place he had taken a combination of law at Drake University in Des Moines. Further graduate work led him to the University of Chicago and the University of Minnesota. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1923.

His early ambition to follow the profession of his father, that of the practice of law, was abandoned when at the close of his senior year at the State University of Iowa the State Board of Education appointed him inspector of high schools in the southwestern district of Iowa. While visiting in Lamoni, included in this district, he was persuaded to accept the superintendency of its public schools. This position he held for four years.

THE SECOND PHASE of training which was to prepare Mr. Briggs for the service for which we know him best began on a frontier many thousand miles away.

The Spanish-American War, then recently ended, had placed the Philippine Islands under the protection of the United States. In 1901 William Howard Taft became the first United States Governor-general of those islands. He advocated in-

ONE MAY attract attention by a single daring stroke, but the great canvas of life is made beautiful and worth-while by filling in with details which have cost time and thought and courage and fidelity.

The life canvas of George N. Briggs presents strong colors in broad strokes, for he is one who dreamed boldly and built bravely. It also presents details in colors more quiet, for he toiled patiently and painstakingly, considering no problem too insignificant for his careful attention.

The work of a lifetime cannot be comprehended by a mere tabulation of events or a retelling of deeds well done. It is difficult to catch in words those impulses, emotions, and convictions which have incorporated to make the real man. While accomplishments are the best-known measure of a man's worth, merely cataloging them lacks warmth and color and perspective.

In the following sketch, the real President Briggs, whom Graceland has known and loved so many years, eludes the pen. Numerous and praiseworthy as are his achievements, he is vastly more than their total. Pioneer, father, neighbor, citizen, churchman, friend and counselor, he was and is more than an executive.

creasing self-government for the Filipinos—"the Philippines for the Filipinos." Realizing that ere "The little brown brother" should be capable of assuming self-government he must be trained not only in arts and letters but in ideals, he imported a whole boatload of American schoolteachers to prepare the natives for democracy.

Today the Filipinos are one with us in a gigantic struggle for the preservation of ideals—ideals which they first heard only forty years ago from W. H. Taft's one thousand teachers.

Among those one-thousand teachers, who had been appointed by the various state universities, was our then youthful George N. Briggs. He was one of the five appointed to that service by the State University of Iowa.

True to the pioneering spirit of his forebears, Mr. Briggs established his home in that faraway and primitive land, there to remain for nine years.

At this early age, he was then twenty-seven, he was recognized as possessing ability as an organizer and executive. Promotions followed rapidly. He served as teacher of English, Deputy Division Superintendent of Schools, Division Superintendent of Schools, Superintendent of the Philippine Schools of Arts and Trades in Manila, and finally as Superintendent of the Philippine Normal School in Manila, the highest institution of learning organized by the government to that date.

RETURNING TO Washington, D. C., in 1910, he served as Superintendent of Filipino Students in the United States, with headquarters in Washington, D. C., and special agent of the Philippine Bureau of Education having to do with the appointment of American teachers to the Philippine service. After five years he was given a greater responsibility, being appointed as special agent of U. S. Bureau of Education having to do with the United States educational exhibit for the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco. During 1915 he installed and had charge of the educational exhibit of the United States government at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The exhibit won for him a gold medal of honor.

IT WAS DURING the years in which Mr. Briggs taught in the Lamoni public schools that he made his first acquaintance with Graceland College, and that institution with him. The College Board of Trustees, witnessing his success as superintendent of schools and eager to enlist his services, invited him at that time, in 1900, to become President of Graceland. Believing his age and lack of experience did not justify him in hoping for the development of the college under his administration into the institution he visioned the church demanded, he asked to be excused from accepting.

The story of how Mr. Briggs' attention was again turned toward Graceland can best be told in his own words. At a chapel service shortly after his resignation from the presidency of the college, a panel discussion was being conducted on the relation of the church and the college, and he was asked why he had come to Graceland. "In 1914 as I sat in an assembly of the National Education Association in Philadelphia I was made oblivious of my surrounding and passed through a spiritual experience, during which I was given to understand that my services would soon be called upon in connection with Graceland. I had not visited Lamoni for some time, and as my duties in the government service had required me to live in Washington, D. C., for several years, I had not been in contact with the church as there was no branch in Washington then.

"At the time of this experience it would have been almost impossible to have accepted a call to the college as it would have required the transfer of someone of the educational leaders in the Philippines to come to the United States to supervise the education of some thousand Filipino students in this country and to appoint about one hundred American teachers annually for the Philippine service.

"Within the next few months I was transferred to the position of special agent in the U. S. Bureau of Education and assigned to the preparation of an educational exhibit for the Panama-Pacific Exposition to open in San Francisco the next year.

"While in San Francisco in charge of the exhibit, I attended the branch services in the little brown church nestled in one of the valleys of that great city built like Rome on seven hills.

"One Sunday evening I noticed a stranger in the congregation, a stranger to the San Francisco branch but not to me. It was a member of the board of trustees of Graceland. He remained in the city several days visiting the exposition and discussing with me the needs of the college."

IN LETTERS to the board of trustees and to President Frederick M. Smith, Mr. Briggs expressed his profound conviction that the church was about to enter upon a great period of expansion and very graciously offered to serve in whatever capacity they might suggest. His offer was considered almost providential, and he was at once invited to become the President of Graceland College.

Mr. Briggs came to Graceland fully qualified. Following his ten years of executive experience in the educational institutions of the Philippine Islands, he had spent five years in close contact with the educational institutions throughout the United States. His work of selecting teachers for the Philippine service had developed in him the ability to weigh personal values. His supervision of Filipino students in America had given him an understanding of student problems.

Graceland was passing through a very critical period. Former presidents had served but short terms, as had, likewise, most faculty members. The greater number of the students were enrolled in the preparatory, academy, and commercial departments. The college department offered few courses and attracted few students.

Graceland needed a strong administrator, one who possessed insight into the spiritual needs of a church institution and at the same time had had the practical experience necessary to chart its academic course. This was the challenge accepted by George N. Briggs, when in the fall of 1915 he became Graceland's fourteenth president.

Once again he became a pioneer. This time in the educational circles of the middle west. At that time junior colleges were practically unknown. Today there are many, and Graceland holds the honor of being one of the oldest and largest in the country.

PRESIDENT BRIGG'S task of developing Graceland to this place of recognition was, in the main, along two lines; first, to gather together a faculty who by preparation and consecration to the church could share his vision of Graceland's needs, and second, to secure the financial support necessary to provide a physical plant adequate to the needs. In this undertaking President Briggs displayed a special genius. By keen, yet kindly insight, and by patient and ceaseless effort he has gathered a staff exceeding in preparation and in tenure of office those of similar institutions. He has helped each one to vision a high goal for his department and to harmonize his efforts for the good of all. They have been inspired to serve with service alone the goal.

The college has increased in endowments, buildings, and equipment. The student body has grown steadily, coming from every locality in which the church is known. Here our youth are inspired and strengthened. From here they go forth prepared to fill positions of skill and honor, and to live lives of high endeavor.

Graceland has won full accreditation by the Iowa Intercollegiate Standing Committee, the North Central Association of Colleges and Universities, the Association of American Junior Colleges, and the University of the State of New York.

President Briggs served as secretary of the Association of Iowa College Presidents for sixteen years. He was also a member of the legislative and executive committees of that association. Through the years he had held membership in the American Political Science Association, the National Educational Association, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

That he is known nationally as well as locally is evidenced by the fact that his biographical sketch is included in the following publications:

Who's Who in America

Who's Who in American Education

Biographical Directory of Leaders in Education

Presidents of American Colleges and Universities

ON FEBRUARY 27, 1944, President G. N. Briggs in his annual report to the College Board of Trustees submitted his request to be released from college administrative duties at the end of that school year. Continuing in his own words, "My services as president of the college will have extended over a period of twenty-nine years with the close of the present college year. In May I will have reached the age of seventy years, the period of retirement of educational executives. A younger man should be designated to take over the administrative affairs at the college, to have a share in the planning for the future and the carrying into effect the plans entered upon. The welfare of the college—that has been, and is my chief concern—requires that I ask to be relieved of further administrative responsibility with the close of the present year."

Thus when "full of years and honors" he as graciously bowed himself from the presidential office as he had graciously offered his talents to that position twenty-nine years previous.

The board replied with the following expression: "The Graceland College Board has listened to your annual report of this date with admiration for the service which Graceland College has rendered to the institution which it has served. Your clear analysis of the two epochs through which the college has grown, and your vision for the next era which is already beginning is most illuminating for the continuing policies of the college.

"We receive the report with both gratitude and humility. It recalls to us the magnificence of your leadership and the responsibility which rests upon this board in meeting your request that you be released from the arduous service of leadership to which you have devoted twenty-nine years as president.

"We shall accord to your wishes and anticipate that in the position of President Emeritus the board and the college may have the advantage of your counsel and vision."

President Emeritus Briggs maintains an office in the Administration Building and continues to conduct classes in American history and political science. In daily contact with the institution which his fostering care guided through many a crisis, he is still a vital force in the shaping of its policies.

ZION'S LEAGUE EXCHANGE

GIRLS' BASKETBALL LEAGUE

Because the city-wide council felt that the girls needed a basketball league as much as the boys, Mary Taylor was appointed chairman of a committee to start proceedings toward the organization. She and her committee have started by calling a meeting of interested girls. Some thirty attended, out of which four teams will be formed. The teams will each have a captain who will act as coach. The girls chosen for this job either hold a state "M," women's athletic state letter, or have done extensive work in the field of athletics. The girls will practice once a week at the Auditorium and will play every other week. This is one method by which the council is trying to satisfy the recreational need of Leaguers in Independence. Another is the skating party held the first Monday in each month at the local rink. Here the young people from all the thirteen branches meet and skate for three hours.

EDEN HEIGHTS NEWS

The Zion's League of Eden Heights, which meets every Sunday evening at 6 P. M. at the church, has been studying the Book of Mormon under the direction of Hiram Robinson.

The group has had several parties since the first of the year. The New Year's Eve party was held at the Donald Snively home. Later in the month a farewell party was given for Johnny Williamson, who entered the armed services. He is now stationed in Alabama.

The results of life are incalculable. It is impossible at this time to measure the influence exerted upon Graceland College by the life of George Nathaniel Briggs. Sufficient now to rejoice that in his mellow wisdom he may still design and execute many things for her good—for "the years know much which the days can never know."

The Leaguers miss their leader, Guy Hurshman, who is in the Independence Sanitarium. His assistant, Edith Badder, has taken charge in his absence.

CITY-WIDE MUSIC CONTEST

On the calendar of events for the city-wide Zion's League organization of Independence includes a music contest which is scheduled for the week of February 10-15. This contest was started last year in an effort to encourage the use of musical talent in the League. At that time entries were limited to vocal solos, duets, trios, and quartets, one entry of each per church. However, this year the contest has been thrown open to all fields: instrumental, vocal, orchestral, and choral. The entries will be judged on a national grading scale.

On Friday, February 15, the contest will end with a semi-formal banquet to be held in the Laurel Club dining room. A program, including the best contest numbers, will top the evening's entertainment.

MASS YOUTH MEETING

Sunday evening, February 3, at 9 P. M. some 450 Protestant young people joined in a mass youth meeting at the First Methodist church.

Mrs. Joe Harbin of the Methodist church played the organ. Howard Downs, a member of the Zion's League, was in charge of the service.

A chorus from the First Christian church sang, "I Consecrate Myself to Thee," and a trio from the Presbyterian congregation sang, "Holy, Holy, Holy."

Lt. Col. William A. Sessions, a chaplain in the Army, gave a sermon on the timely topic, "Are You Scared?"

The meeting culminated the week's activities of the young people of Independence in celebration of youth week.

Friday, February 1, the students in junior and senior high schools had special assemblies. At these assemblies the Reverend Albert Farmer, executive secretary of the Missouri state youth council, gave the address.

ZION'S LEAGUE BANQUET—FAR WEST STAKE

"My Blue Heaven" was the theme for the 1945 formal banquet held by the Far West Stake Zion's League in the Venetian room of the Y. W. C. A. in St. Joseph, Missouri, Saturday evening, December 29.

Approximately one hundred Leaguers were present to enjoy the decorative atmosphere of the banquet room and tables, and the delicious food prepared by the kitchen staff of the Y. W. C. A.; mothers from the three St. Joseph branches served. Because some failed to get reservations soon enough, a number of young people were unable to attend. This is the first stake banquet ever to be held; those preceding have been city-wide only. Plans are being made to make these banquets an annual stake affair.

Over the French doors that led to the candlelighted tables were the words "Blue Heaven." Under this archway passed the couples in the grand march to the strains of "Moonlight Becomes You." The three tables, covered with white streamers, were extended away from the speakers' table in rainbow fashion. Silver gilt half moons and stars on standards of blue gilt stars were center pieces for all tables. Blue candles in white holders were arranged the full length of each table. Stars of blue glittered from the ceiling.

A large silver comet on navy blue paper with silver stars pinned in various places and bordered with silver half-moons and stars provided a back drop for the speakers' table. Place cards followed the pattern of the centerpieces; the programs were in dark blue folders sprayed with white paint, and printed with orange moons and tiny silver stars.

Preceding the banquet, Gene Hampton gave the invocation. Dinner consisted of beef tenders, scalloped potatoes, peas and carrots, vegetable salad, clover leaf rolls, and devil's food cake. Music was provided by an automatic phonograph, playing songs suitable to the occasion.

Ray Trotter, president of Far West Stake League acted as toastmaster, welcoming those present and introducing Georgia Mae Trotter, who directed the community singing. She was assisted by Shirley Ruoff. The program was as follows: "Linger Awhile," sextet; Donna Acord, Betty Wieman, Grace Loveall, Twila Ruoff, Marian Penny, and Teola Ruoff; skit, "Strictly Out of This World," Bill Shores; piano solo, "Night and Day," Shirley Ruoff; speech, "Wish on a Star," Teola Ruoff; vocal solo, "Stars in Your Eyes" and "Desert Song," Lillian Miller; "Deep Purple," quartet, Marjorie Powell, Mary Garrison, Susan Garrison and Carol Cawley; speech, "Wishing," Stake President Emery E. Jennings; violin solo, "Liebestraum," Velva Hampton; and "Goodnight, Sweet Dreams," by the sextet. After the last number everyone stood and sang one verse of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," which has become a traditional song to end all League activities throughout the stake.

When a youngster of about seven, John D. Rockefeller, Sr., chanced to wander in upon a traveling medicine show. The spieler in charge was auctioning off a "bright silver dollar" to the highest bidder, but was having little or no success with the cautious onlookers.

"I bid five cents," young Rockefeller's voice suddenly piped up.

"Sold," said the spieler. "Give me your nickel, sonny, and take the dollar."

"Oh, no," replied the youngster, "you take the five cents out of the dollar and give me 95 cents."—Louis Hirsch.

BOOKS

France Before the Storm

Arch of Triumph, by Erich Maria Remarque. Translated from the German by Walter Sorell and Denver Lindley. N. Y., Appleton-Century, 1945. 455 pages. $3.

We believe that special care should be taken in presenting this important new book to the readers of a religious publication. We might, of course, avoid the responsibility of discussing it and so pass the problem on to others; but since nearly every literate person is sure to read of it, hear about it, or see it in the movies, we had just as well take up the task.

A few words, first of all, to the sensitive. This is a book of toughest realism. The language spares nothing because the life it describes spares nothing. Its setting is in the darkest and dirtiest of streets, hotels, bistros, and assorted institutions of the underworld of Paris. Its characters are the poor, the distressed, and the immoral people of the city, infiltrated by refugees from tyranny everywhere in the world, all trying to live, to find happiness, and many of them failing.

Dr. Ravic, the main character, is a German surgeon, a victim of the Gestapo, with a deadly hatred of the Nazi torturer and murderer, Haake. Ravic is in Paris without a passport and denied by the law a license to practice his profession. Nevertheless, he is kept busy in the little hospitals which secretly serve the desperate victims of sin; and because of his great skill, he does "ghost operations" for French physicians, receiving but a small part of the fees they earn. Ravic, who had once loved a young woman and saw her beaten to death in a Nazi concentration camp, learns to love again, sees the woman betray him, hates, and forgives her to try to save her life in vain. He succeeds in killing Haake and makes his escape; but when war comes, he is sent to a concentration camp.

In that atmosphere, it seems that the people have lost the meaning of good and evil; they do not know the wrong of sin, though it blights their lives like a plague. They understand only pain and pleasure, misery and uncertainty, and death. It is a world that has become hell because the people have no moral standards, no spiritual ideals. Nothing remains clean or sacred to them.

And, if we may add the comment here, that is the trouble of the author, and of many of the realistic writers of the present generation. They do not know the meaning of good and evil; they describe life from no background of moral standards, no light of spiritual ideals. The morality of the world is not something that will maintain itself. If writers do not help maintain it, if the people who get all their ideas from the reading of books and the seeing of movies (and never go to church) do not find some moral standards at some point in their life, they will certainly not be able to create these things for themselves. It is for this reason that nations go to pieces and civilizations decay. It seems to us that ruin is a high price to pay for the kind of freedom the modern world appears to want.

The personal drama—the story of Dr. Ravic and his associates—is made greater by the fact that it is presented against a background of the whole situation in Europe, the growing Nazi menace on the horizon, the impending doom of destruction and degradation, the impotence of France to do anything about it save talk. Before the coming terror, life takes on a kind of frantic desperation, the frenzy of creatures who know that the end is near and that for them there is no escape.

Remarque himself was a refugee from the Nazi terror. His early book, All Quiet was banned by Hitler because it was a severe document against war. Remarque is in the United States, and is fulfilling the requirements to become a citizen.

The Indian

By Albert L. Loving

THE SUBJECTS of this story are Latter Day Saint Indians living on the Omaha Reservation at Macy, Nebraska. And for your information I would like to suggest that this reservation, with its over seventeen hundred Indians, is very close to our church headquarters' doorstep, considering the convenience of modern transportation.

On November 13, 1945, I knocked on a door of a Latter Day Saint Indian home, and a pleasant feminine voice answered "Come in." Opening the door, I stepped in and was immediately offered a chair. Resting a while, and relaxed, I turned in serious tone of voice and cheerful countenance to engage the young Indian woman in conversation about herself, her schooling and outlook on life, her ideals for the future, her beliefs and so on. Her answers were readily given in perfect English as she puffed vigorously away at a cigarette.

She had gone through grade school and then on to Haskell Institute in the hope of completing a business course, but when almost at the time of graduation she was unable to finance two hundred and sixty dollars and so quit and abandoned her plan.

She liked the study of science, and while at Haskell along with another girl had seen in a magazine some advertising announcement of three booklets on peyote and together they had bought the books and read them. From these scientific booklets she had learned that peyote is a drug and when taken as her people use it in religious ceremonies produces a form of intoxication.

Vacation time came and she returned to the reservation, brought the books with her and attempted to enlighten her people on the matter. One day her uncle, who is one of the leading men in "The Native American Church," or peyote users, said to her: "I thought you went to school to take a commercial course, now here you are playing with science and talking against my church; get those books out of this house at once." She obeyed and sent the books to a library.

I asked her, "What do you think or believe for yourself?"

She answered, "I believe both science and peyote."

"But," said I, "How can you be a true scientist and at the same time believe in peyote when you know it is a drug and produces when eaten a form of intoxication?"

Answering, she said, "I don't know, but I am afraid not to believe in peyote."

At that point I reached into my brief case and drew out a new Book of Mormon and with the best of procedure possible presented it to her. At the same time, so far as time would permit, I made an effort to give to her the "historical background."

This should also be the fitting place to say a word about our source of supply of copies of the new Book of Mormon. The Friendly Book of Mormon Class of the Stone Church Sunday school at Independence, Missouri, under the leadership of Brother Clifton Resch has a circulating library, and they supply many copies of the book for our Indian brethren. This is a very commendable work, and only the knowledge of the Eternal One at the great Day of Judgment will know how much good is accomplished by their efforts.

Later on in the same day I knocked at the door of a house high up on the hills overlooking the Missouri bottoms and river. Autumn-bared timber, linden, oak, hickory, elm, and underbrush crowded the house back from the steep slope leading down to the river. How I wanted to go off rustling and crawling through the woods into those quiet gorges and sheltered gaps in the hills and talk with someone who knew the how-and-what of this work among the Indians. However, duty comes first, and the occupant of this house was an Indian member of the priesthood who was ordained a teacher years ago. Today he is still a brilliant minded man for an Indian, but one can readily see and discern in him the conflict that has gone on in the souls of most Indians.

He was very sick. Fully dressed, he lay propped up in bed with his boots on. All the right side of his face looked as though he had lost control of the muscles. His right eye was terribly inflamed and looked like a ball of raw meat. I didn't ask the cause but had a strong guess to myself.

I sat at his bedside tired in mind and weary in body. It seemed appropriate to say nothing. Furthermore he seemed to want to talk, and I was glad to be able to catnap while he talked. Something he said brought me to my senses quickly. "No firewood for the night, and little food in the house." Instantly arising, I said, "Where's your ax?" "There," he said. From then on till well into the dark I cut and carried white oak and green hickory poles to the house and chopped them into lengths fit for the long stove to take.

When I finally came in, he said, "Supper's ready. Will you eat with us?" Along with him and wife and little daughter I pulled up a chair and ate a delicious supper of johnny-cake and gravy with large quantities of unsweetened black coffee. It is not the lay of the table or the smell of the food that makes a good meal, but the depth of the appetite of the diner. And the table and food were clean and fresh from the pan and the coffee pot.

After the meal we returned to the bedroom and again our friend took up his perch, clothes, boots, and all in the bed, and as I sat beside him I listened to the story of the struggles of an Indian Latter Day Saint to qualify to represent God to his brethren.

He said, "You know when I was baptized years ago I soon found a desire growing in my heart to be entrusted with the authority to represent God and to teach the gospel to my people. Then one day the white brothers came to me and told me that I was called of God to be ordained a teacher to instruct my people in the ways of Jesus. Then I was ordained, and they told me to quit using tobacco and build a nice house for my family to live in and then when I would have it built never to let any unclean thing come under my roof.

"My first test came when I tried to quit using tobacco. I used to go to a holy place out there on that hill and kneel down before God and roll my cornhusk cigarette and lay it down on the ground and then look up to God and ask him to take it away from me. Then I would get up and go home and leave my tobacco there at that holy place. But pretty soon I would go back and get that cigarette and smoke it."

Then he said, "I thought to myself that I would go to a holy place farther away from home and try so that there would be more effort needed to get the tobacco if I should weaken. There is another holy place on that hill far away, and I went there and tried but it was no use, I'd go back there and get it just the same as I would to the hill nearer home.

"So for four years I struggled to overcome the use of tobacco. But my neighbors and friends seemed like dogs barking at the cattle night and day, and they would say to me, 'Why are you so foolish? God gave tobacco to our fathers to smoke and use as incense in religious ceremonies, and now you try to please God without the use of tobacco.'"

He continued, "I quit trying and continued to use it. Then for ten years I tried to build a nice home for my family to live in. Sometimes I would wake my wife up in the middle of the night and ask her to pray for me and she would say, 'Have you gone mad?' But she did pray for me however." Now he said, "Here I am, not a white man, and no longer do I have any influence with my Indian brothers because I have spoken too plainly to them."

Before stepping out into the darkness of night, I obtained a basin of warm water and made a lotion for his poor eye and anointed his head with oil and laid hands on him with prayer.

I was glad to have a five-mile walk to my cabin, and in the pale light of a young moon with a little mist and rain, the tears ran hot down my face, and I could understand a little of what the Book of Mormon term "Hidden Darkness" signified.

Within the last hour an aged grandmother came to my cabin door and after being admitted explained that she needed diapers and clothes and a baby blanket for her little grandson born three days ago in an empty cabin. In a week or so the mother would be coming out of the agency hospital and they had no clothes for the little Indian. I went rummaging through a bundle of stuff sent up by the Omaha Women's department, and finally found what I thought would fit the baby. Hurriedly she wrapped it up and went out smiling and muttering in Indian we-bla-ha meaning "Thank you." A gospel of words (lip service) doesn't appeal much to people in the condition that these people live in, and those of us who do or may work among them repeatedly come to the place where we see the need of zionic evangelism.

Not all church members and few branches are really capable of doing much in some of these directions, but we are happy to note the increasing attention and interest that is growing in our Indian missionary responsibilities. We cannot reasonably turn a deaf ear to this problem. Neither are we always able to do what our good sense tells us ought to be done. But we are studying the people and their needs and to the best of our ability endeavoring to meet those needs.

So whether it be that we study the Book of Mormon or American archaeology or the Indian people of today we come to the same answer. They and all mankind need the gospel of Jesus Christ and its social program of Zion.

The white people have not made much progress yet with the zionic pattern of life. We believe it will work ultimately among the Indians as well as the whites.

women and children made victims of war. He has seen homes pillaged, looted, ransacked. He has seen lines of hungry people waiting at the garbage pails for what little the soldier might throw out. He has seen his own buddies fall victim to the craving for nicotine, alcohol, and sexual gratification. He himself has had a terrific battle against their lure during the long, idle hours which always follow a successful conquest. Yes, the man or woman who has been through it has seen the real facts of life, and he could not escape its effect upon his thinking. He has awakened to the fact that religion and the things it teaches cannot be only idealistic dreams and hopes. He knows they must meet the daily needs of every individual, and religion's philosophy must be taught truthfully in such a way that the individual can answer his daily problems with it. But, more than that, he has found some of those ways in his own struggle to stay clean morally and spiritually! In any planning of a church program for now and the future, we cannot afford to overlook such a valuable source of help as we have in the returning servicemen and women!

Beyond the planning required for those in the United States, there is the need for growth in our world missionary program. Because these same veterans have had firsthand contact with the various civilizations, they come back as the best source of information for us as to folkways, mores, customs, and actual conditions today in most of the countries of the world. Yes, in many, many ways the returning veteran is, without doubt, one who should have part materially in the planning by those who shall lead us now and in the future.

Let's don't "plan for them!" Let's work with them, and they with us, in planning for everyone!

The Returning Veteran

By Jay Grayson

WE HAVE HEARD a lot of talk about what the folks back home must do to help the returning veteran to adjust to his return to civilian life. Various plans have popped up from all sides. Many of these plans are backed by eminent psychologists and psychiatrists. Without casting disparagement on their good work, I should like to present a few thoughts and ask a few questions. And let me emphasize the fact that my thoughts are concerned specifically with the formulating of our own church program for the next few years.

Just as everywhere else, those of us who are vitally interested in the work of the church have given thought to the place the returning servicemen and women should and will assume in the local and general activities of the church. Most of the plans suggested have had the idea of "absorbing" the veterans in the new programs, which will be formulated very largely by those who have remained at their necessary and wearing jobs during the war. Without the devotion of the "home-front" workers, we could not have met the needs, spiritual and material, of our people, nor could we have "held our own" as we have. Due tribute must be rendered them from all points. But I'm sure that these "home-front" workers would be the first to recognize the limitations that their stay at home has placed upon them in formulating such a program as we shall need now and for the immediate future. That being so, why not invite the returning veteran to assist in that formulation?

My reasons are short, simple, and quite understandable. The intelligent soldier has had more on his mind than just winning the fight in combat. He has been concerned with future needs and ways to meet those needs. (Yet, that is not enough, for it will take the sharing of views and opinions from several of them to get down to the basic things in the problem.) The veteran has seen life realistically. He has seen men killed, homes bombed,

News OF THE CHURCHES

Berkeley, California

Pastor, Alma C. Andrews

The East Bay church observed filing day on January 27. The morning service was in charge of Pastor Alma C. Andrews with Bishop Burdick as speaker. After the sermon there was a processional by the Saints who left their inventories or financial statements at the altar. The theme of all departments of the branch for the month of January was "The Law of Stewardship." The subject was also publicized in the "Monthly Bulletin" resulting in a gratifying increase in the number of filers.

The choir presented Handel's The Messiah on December 23 at 8 p. m. with a chorus of forty voices. Elder Russell Ralston was the conductor. A grand piano was used with the console organ for accompaniment. The women were dressed in white surplices and long black skirts; the men in dark suits with bow ties. The service began in candlelight, with the main lights coming up gradually from a faint glow to full brilliance. It was an impressive and spiritual service.

The Sunday evening services have been changed since January 20. There are now special devotional features, including colored slides of sacred pictures with their interpretation preceding the sermon.

Two new classes have been added to the 6:00 p. m. study hour with Pastor Andrews and Elder William Haden as teachers.

The church school held a watch party on New Year's Eve. The school is growing under the able leadership of Ernest Miller. A theme is selected for every month to be emphasized at each service. For December the theme was "The Light of the World." For January the theme was "The Law of Stewardship."

The Christian Action Group, which is the adult social and service group of the church school, sponsored the Christmas party. At the January 11 meeting officers were elected for the coming year. Homer Gatchett was sustained as president, Theron Walker was elected vice-president, and Elma McKee as secretary. The social and entertainment committee chairmen will be selected at each monthly meeting to take charge of the succeeding month's activities.

Since the committees on war work are no longer needed, a new project is being sponsored. This is a sewing group originated to make aprons and other useful articles to be sold at the next festival. Emily Bruhns was chosen as chairman of this project.

Anna Likens served long and well as chairman of the American Women's Voluntary Service. She, with her little group of sewers, made two laprobes for wounded soldiers every week, as well as personally collecting and delivering clothing for European relief.

The "Monthly Bulletin" which was begun by the Christian Action Group, is now sent to 450 people each month. It has now been taken over officially by the church. A new mimeograph has been purchased which will greatly facilitate the work of the publicity department of the branch.

The various groups of the women's department continue to meet monthly for social activities and study. The lessons are taught by Pastor Andrews.

The branch will hold a family night on February 27 with all departments contributing to the evening's entertainment.

The Zion's League is an active and growing group, meeting twice monthly.

The department of music is sorry to lose Viola Lade and Charlotte Knudsen who resided in Berkeley while their husbands were in the armed forces. Jack Craig of Colorado Springs, who had been stationed at a near-by Navy base, will also be greatly missed. Brother Craig was the director of congregational singing, and tenor soloist in The Messiah.

Leonard Lee Joy, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Joy, was blessed on December 2 by Pastor Alma Andrews and Elder Fred Browning.

Recent speakers have been Bishop Burdick of Sacramento, John Carmichael, Russell Ralston, Herbert A. Lynn, Hinman Savage, and William Haden.

Hamilton, Ontario

Pastor, F. J. Boyd

The women's department sponsored a social evening at the church on Tuesday, January 22. Twenty members congregated to play games and get better acquainted.

The speaker on February 3 at the evening service was Brother L. Hill; Brother H. Gilliam is scheduled to be the speaker on February 10.

The Saints in Hamilton are happy to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Ashley McAnich and daughter of Niagara Falls. Mr. Mc-

Anich was recently appointed manager of the Hamilton branch of the Imperial Life Assurance Company and will reside in Westdale.

In order to secure the desired speaker, the district young people's convention will be changed to June 1 and 2 in Toronto. The Port Elgin Reunion date has been announced as June 29 to July 7.
—The Cultivator.

Vancouver, Washington

Pastor, Paul E. Fishel

A very fine Thanksgiving Day dinner was held at the church. Three large turkeys were consumed by the eighty people who attended. The women's department, under the direction of Roycie Chapman, prepared the dinner and the Zion's League was in charge of the program that followed.

The recently completed lower auditorium was used for this dinner. Much work has been done on it in the last three months. It is also being used for classwork.

A plan has been drawn up by the building committee for work to be done on the church building and grounds. The Zion's League has made plans to use the space behind the church for recreational purposes.

Pastor Fishel has set aside the last Sunday of every month for the Leaguers to use as they see fit. On November 25 they invited as a guest speaker, Elder B. J. Peters, pastor of the South East church of Portland. Brother Peters delivered an inspiring sermon on the Book of Mormon. For the service in December, two priesthood members of the League, Albert Lasley and Samuel Morris gave sermonettes. This was the first time for each of these young men to speak since their ordination into the priesthood.

Under the direction of Mary Chapman the church school department has started a junior church. A regular service is held every Sunday morning with the exception of Communion Sunday when the juniors worship with the rest of the congregation.

A Christmas program was held on Sunday, December 23, at eight o'clock. A large decorated tree stood in one corner of the church. After a program of music and verse under the direction of the dramatics leader, Irene Morris, treats of candy, nuts, and fruit were distributed to the group.

On New Year's Eve the League held a watch party that was climaxed with a midnight show in Portland.

Leaguers continue to share in the activities of the church. They have, as one of their projects, the printing of a program for the Sunday services. Many are attending the district choir in Portland and bringing back helpful musical training. A rally was held at the Vancouver church on Sunday, January 13. The League of Vancouver was joined by the Leagues of Camas and Longview for services during the morning and afternoon. The day started with a young people's prayer service at 8:30, with Elder Harold Carpenter, the young people's leader of Vancouver, in charge. He used as the theme of the service, "Master, teach us to build in our Lives."

At 9:45 the regular church school hour was held with the worship program in charge of the Camas League. At 11 o'clock, District President J. L. Verhi delivered an inspiring sermon to the young people and the adults of the branch. He challenged the Leaguers to do more and greater work. A baked ham dinner was served in the lower auditorium at noon. This was followed by singing and games. The concluding service of the day was a short worship program ending with a talk of dedication by Wanda Fishel. The next League rally will be held in Longview on February 10.

St. Louis, Missouri

Pastor, Frank McDonald

Sympathy is extended to Mrs. Irma Campbell at the death of her father, Elder N. A. Guthrie of Nebo, Illinois, and to Mrs. James Hill whose husband died January 25.

On Sunday, January 13, Henry Eilers, Rita Schmidt, Judith Ann Clark, and Fay Green were baptized by Elder Paul Counts. The confirmation service was held the following Wednesday evening.

Charles Neff has received his discharge from the Navy and is attending Washington University in St. Louis while Mrs. Neff, the former Frances Dillon, finishes the semester as a teacher at Normandy High School. James Lewis has also received his discharge after serving several years in the Pacific theater. Harry Zerbel of Wisconsin, a veteran of World War II, was a recent visitor in St. Louis.

Attendance at prayer services is steadily on the increase; ninety-seven were present at a recent meeting. The women's department meets regularly at the homes of its members.

Refreshments were served by Pastor and Mrs. McDonald following the service on Sunday night, January 27, in celebration of their twenty-ninth wedding anniversary.

—Opal Nelson, reporter.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, Joseph Breshears

"Looking Forward" was the theme of the January Communion service.

Speakers at the worship services during the past month have been Pastor Breshears, who spoke on "Searching the Commandments"; Norman Cox, who gave a discourse on the financial law; Clifford Browne, whose message was on the use of talents; and C. E. Wilson, who talked on the definition of religion. James Kemp gave an illustrated lecture on "Jesus, the Teacher."

Attendance at the midweek prayer service has steadily increased since January 1 when it was decided the meetings should be held in individual homes rather than in the church. The Saints have met at the homes of Estel Starkey, W. J. Breshears, Arthur Starks, John Dowker, J. R. Davis, Twyla Briggs, Tom Shelly, Claude Epps, Helen Yager, Francis Bishop, Lawrence Ninemire, Olga Doran, and Milard Palmer in the past month.

Devotionals at the church have been presented by the children's department, the junior high group, and the young people.

The junior League social feature was a hobo party held at the home of Charles Browne. Regular meetings included a lesson on stewardship, a Bible quiz, a lecture on the terrain and religions of North Africa, and talks by various members of the League on historic men of the church.

An enthusiastic group of senior Leaguers enjoyed a progressive dinner party January 17. Beginning with tomato juice cocktails at the home of their leader, Helen Kemp, they went on to C. E. Wilson's for soup, Bennie Simmons for salad, Pastor Breshears for vegetables, Clifford Browne's for the meat course, and Madge Bayless' for dessert. Other January activities included a chain quiz, Norman Cox's lecture on "A Peculiar People," a music appreciation program under the direction of James Kemp, and a panel discussion by five members of the group on the doctrines of other denominations.

On Sunday evening January 6, the young people presented a worship service. Merlin Hutsell gave the invocation and benediction; Martha Palmer, Verna Bradford, and Billie DeWitt the scripture readings; and Leolla Browne a poem, "The Master's Touch." Solos were sung by James Kemp, Lorene Browne, Madge Bayless, and Bennie Simmons. Victor and Martina Volskay, Johnny Scott, and Helen Kemp played instrumental solos. A trio composed of JoAnn Breshears, Ruth Akridge, and Lorene Browne, sang a selection; a duet was sung by Betty Markley and Janeth Agevine. The entire group sang "Lord, Open Thou Our Eyes," and the full instrumental ensemble played "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

The women's department served a chili supper preceding the business meeting, and followed it with a moving picture, "The Way of Salvation." Other projects for the month included equipping the windows of the choir loft with Venetian blinds, addressing the pastor's monthly letters, and giving a shower for one of their members. The book, You Are What You Eat, is being used in the study course.

In his monthly pastoral letters to members of the branch, Elder Breshears is endeavoring to encourage a unified study of the Book of Mormon through a suggested home reading course, giving references. The January theme was "Faith."

—Charlie Yeoman, reporter.

Mobile, Alabama

Pastor, R. L. Booker

The Saints of Mobile were hosts at the gulf states semi-annual district conference held January 25, 26, and 27. The theme for the conference was "Are Ye Able?"

The League sponsored the opening service on Friday night using "We Seek to Serve" as the theme. Elder M. L. Draper delivered the sermon, after which refreshments were served.

Saturday's activities began with a prayer service at 9 o'clock, followed by Apostle Charles R. Hield's class at 10:15. At 11:15 Apostle M. A. McConley conducted a class. The afternoon was devoted to consultations, committee meetings, and visiting. Apostle Hield presented an illustrated lecture, "Proofs of the Book of Mormon," in the evening.

Another prayer service was held on Sunday morning, after which A. D. McCall conducted a class for young people and adults. Apostle McConley delivered an inspiring message at 11 o'clock. The children held junior church after the morning classes were over; E. E. Miller officiated as their speaker. A priesthood meeting was held at 1:30 in the afternoon, followed by the district business meeting. Apostle McConley was again the speaker in the evening; he showed colored slides taken in Hawaii and lectured on "The Missionary Message of the Church." The conference was adjourned by the singing of "God Be With You."

Servicemen who have recently been discharged and are returning to Mobile branch are George, Raymond, and Clifton Gartman, Thomas Sutton, and Alto Locke.

Holden Stake

Warrensburg, Missouri

Pastor, Ward A. Hougas

November held many fine experiences for the Saints of Warrensburg. Among those who spoke during the month were E. P. Darnell, Ward A. Hougas, W. S. Macrae, N. O. Gard, and Clair Weldon. J. A. Koehler of the Holden stake bishopric delivered the evening sermon on November 11.

Every Saturday during the month of November, food sales were held in the Hursh building. The senior high class sponsored two of these sales, and Brother W. S. Macrae and his corps of willing workers were in charge of the others. An average of $35 a week was cleared and donated to the building fund.

The League held a bake sale on November 17, and a post-Thanksgiving dinner on November 30. This was a three-course meal handled entirely by the Leaguers. One hundred ten guests were served and more than $80 was taken in. Several of the group have enrolled in the night class at the college on "Times and Teachings of the Old Testament."

Ensign Loy Banks was home on leave during the Thanksgiving holidays. Melvin E. Francis of the Coast Guard received his discharge and arrived in Warrensburg on November 20. He and Mrs. Francis are making their home with Pastor and Mrs. Hougas; Melvin is attending Warrensburg State Teacher's College. Clyde Wilson is another returned veteran-student. His wife, Evelyn, is with him. Other discharged servicemen are Everett Jones, Crawford Gard, Bill Meadows and Jack Kroesen.

The women's department, under the direction of Mrs. Ward Hougas, is very active. During November the study club met with Mrs. T. A. Beck and Mrs. Huber Bozarth. On November 15 Elder Leonard Lea of Independence reviewed the book This Man Truman for the club. The Business and Professional Women's Circle has enjoyed some worth-while class sessions recently. These have been on such topics as "Dress and Grooming," "Physical and Mental Health," and "Voice and Expression." The November branch night was in charge of the women's department. Two book reviews were given. Levona Gard reviewed Rabbit Hill for the younger group, and Mrs. Charles York reviewed Papa Was a Preacher for the adults. Games and refreshments were also a part of the evening's entertainment.

December brought several excellent speakers to Warrensburg. Bishop T. A. Beck, Melvin E. Francis, R. W. Hawley, and Pastor Ward Hougas were among those to occupy the pulpit. An all-League service was presented on the night of December 16. The junior department, under the direction of Wilma Green, was responsible for the Christmas program given December 23; it was a pageant entitled "The Story Beautiful."

On Friday, December 21, the branch night meeting was in charge of the church school. A varied program was presented and treats were given to all present.

On Wednesday, December 19, a candlelit nativity scene arranged by James Daugherty was the setting for the prayer service. Pastor Ward A. Hougas was in charge of the meeting.

John Banks, pastor of Kirtland Temple, delivered the evening sermon on December 30. Brother Banks was in Warrensburg visiting his mother, Mrs. Essie Banks, during the holidays.

At 11:15 p. m., December 31, the League sponsored its annual New Year's Eve vesper service, under the direction of Irene Jones and Loretta Bozarth. Inclement weather and illness limited the attendance, but all present appreciated the fine work of the Leaguers.

Kenneth Raveill, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar L. Raveill, spent the holidays with his parents. He is stationed in Mississippi with the Army air corps.

Newcomers to the Warrensburg congregation are the T. A. Rawsons, the Sol Berridges, and Stake Missionary James Daugherty and family. Mr. and Mrs. Olston Nuckles and Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Nuckles of Locust Grove are also attending services at Warrensburg.

The League Christmas party was held at the home of Dorothy Barnhill, League president, on December 28. Ladorna Highland brought along her recordings of Fibber McGee and Molly in "The Night Before Christmas." Gifts were exchanged and festive refreshments served.

Coming attractions are the mid-winter Zion's League rally scheduled for January 19 and 20, the stake conference set tentatively for March 1, and general conference in April. Holden stake is looking forward to taking an active part in conference activities. —Levona Gard, reporter.

Atherton, Missouri

Pastor, Wendell Van Tuyl

Glenard Curtis was in charge of the morning worship service on November 11, and Ammon Beebe gave the sermon. O. W. Okerlind of Independence spoke in the evening.

At the 11 o'clock hour on November 18, Otho Clark delivered the sermon, Bishop J. A. Koehler occupied the pulpit in the evening.

The Zion's League sponsored a banquet on the evening of November 23; approximately eighty people attended. E. P. Darnell of Warrensburg was the after-dinner speaker.

Attendance at church school on November 25 numbered 115. Clifford J. Long was the 11 o'clock speaker, and John R. Darling of Independence gave the evening address.

A. G. Owings spoke on December 2. Stanley Curtis, recently ordained, delivered his first sermon on December 9 at the morning service. L. E. Thompson of Independence gave the 8 o'clock message. Elmer Peer was the speaker on December 16.

D. R. Hughes gave the morning sermon on December 23, and a Christmas program in the form of a candle-lighting service was held in the evening. Each person attending was given a candle to light at the altar as he placed his gift there and rededicated his life.

Otho Clark was again the speaker on December 30 at the morning service, and Ammon Beebe occupied the pulpit in the evening.

The adult division meets each Sunday evening at 6:45 for a discussion period supervised by Florence Hughes, who is in charge of all educational features.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Shedd and family have moved from Hammond, Indiana, to Atherton and are now a part of the congregation.

Those who provided special music for the November and December services were Mildred Moore, Donna Faye Van Tuyl, Nelda Curtis, Beverly Clark, Mrs. Ira Curtis, Mrs. Allan Van Tuyl, Joan Curtis, Betty Clark, Joyce Pearson, and Thelma Hughes.

—Mrs. R. D. Hughes, reporter.

Jefferson City, Missouri

Pastor, A. H. Wintermeyer

Saturday evening, November 10, Ward A. Hougas showed slides of the Zion's League retreat and Holden stake reunion at the pastor's home. He was also the guest speaker at the 11 o'clock service on Sunday.

Elder R. B. Vincent of Sedalia gave the sermon on November 18, emphasizing the importance of the priesthood offices and duties.

Mrs. Charles Keown of Wainswright, Missouri, invited the Jefferson City Saints to her home for a Thanksgiving dinner; seventeen attended. Marvin Wintermeyer, recently discharged from the Army, entertained the group by playing the accordion he brought with him from Germany. The day closed with the singing of hymns.

Bad weather and the lack of a church building prevented the presentation of a Christmas play. Ex-service-men Dubert Keller, Marvin and Laverne Wintermeyer were home for the holidays.

At the close of the church school hour on December 30, a business meeting was called to order by Pastor Wintermeyer. A report on the branch treasury was given by J. F. Brown, and it was decided that $240 of the church school offering should be transferred to the building fund. Pastor Wintermeyer gave a short talk, and Ross Mortimer offered the closing prayer.

—Dorothy Keller, reporter.

Blue Springs, Missouri

Pastor, J. T. Smith

President Frederick M. Smith was present for the dedication service held November 18. A trio composed of Juanita Shroul, Helen and Norma McCarron sang "A Green Cathedral" preceding Bishop G. L. DeLapp's dedication sermon. Milford and Orlando Nace, accompanied by Delta Nace Chapman, played an instrumental selection, after which Bishop T. A. Beck offered the benediction. A basket dinner was served to all present.

At the homecoming service held at 2 P. M. a brass quartet composed of Earnest Campbell, Frank Friend, Wallace Butler, and J. C. Friend, played the two opening hymns. J. T. Smith was in charge of the service and began by extending a special welcome to the pioneer members of the branch, after which Edith Meador sang "The Church By the Side of the Road." Mildred Minton of the East Independence church played several selections on the marimba, and Donald Pyper's octette sang "Lead, Kindly Light" and "I Walked Where Jesus Walked." The choir, under the direction of Sister Joe Friend, sang several anthems preceding the sermon by Ward A. Hougas.

Bishop T. A. Beck was the speaker on November 25, and Vera Smith the soloist. Betty Pritchard of Independence was guest soloist at the December 2 Communion service. Pastor J. T. Smith gave the evening sermon.

E. P. Darnell spoke on December 9; a quartet composed of Aline, Marie, Leon, and George Curtis sang "The Old Rugged Cross" preceding the sermon. Pastor Smith was again the speaker in the evening.

R. V. Hopkins gave the 11 o'clock address on December 16, and J. T. Smith gave the Christmas sermon on December 23. The evening service was devoted to the presentation of a Christmas program.

John Quick gave the final sermon of the year on December 30. Edith Meador and Dorothy Coleman sang "Peace, Perfect Peace" as a duet. Brother Quick led a panel discussion on "Faith" at the evening service.

A New Year's party held at the pastor's home was sponsored by the women's department and Zion's League. The gathering was dismissed with a hymn and prayer.

—J. C. Friend, Jr., reporter.

Lee's Summit, Missouri

Pastor, Frank C. Sherwood

At 2 P. M. on November 11 the Saints of Harrisonville and Pleasant Hill held a baptismal service at the Lee's Summit church; four people were baptized. Bishop T. A. Beck was guest speaker for the day.

On December 2 Orlando Nace with his son, Milford, and daughter, Delta Chapman, presented a short program of string trio selections.

Elder Evan Fry was the speaker on November 18, choosing "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Authority" as his subject. Guest speakers for December were Evangelist Herman Higgins, who spoke on December 9, and James Daugherty, stake missionary, who delivered sermons on December 16 and 30. Others to preach during the month were Merton Loveland, J. E. Sevall, Ernest Brace, Leubin Loveland, Leonard Smith, Fred Swain, and Roy C. Martin.

The young people have been engaged in a variety of activities. On November 6 they had a hay ride and weiner roast at the home of Richard Haas. The evening closed with the group singing hymns around the bonfire, and a prayer by Wayne Kearns who was home on leave from the Navy. On November 16 they sponsored a box supper at the home of Aylor Duncan and cleared $35. On December 28 they attended, as a group, the three basketball games held in the Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City. The League presented a very commendable Christmas program given on the evening of December 23; the young people are also to be complimented on the active part they take in the church school service.

—Nellie Haas, reporter.

Harrisonville, Missouri

Pastor, V. S. Turney

Missionary James Daugherty finished an eight-weeks' series of meetings on November 11; four new members were baptized as a result of his ministry. The baptismal service was held at Lee's Summit; special music for the occasion was provided by Mary Ann Turney, Helen Dvorak, and Mrs. Bailey.

Clifford Long, stake director of religious education, was the morning speaker on November 18. In the afternoon he held a meeting for the departmental leaders. A Thanksgiving program was presented at the evening service.

A party for Gracelanders was held at the Miller home by the Leaguers; it was also a farewell party for the Millers who are leaving the group soon. The young people are now studying the Book of Mormon with Helen Dvorak as teacher.

Bishop and Mrs. J. A. Koehler were present for the November 25 services. The Christmas program had to be canceled because there was no place to hold it. Plans are being made for the purchasing of a church home in Pleasant Hill; arrangements have been made for the use of the Odd Fellow's hall in the meantime.

A watch party was held at the Carlisle home on New Year's Eve.

—Myrtle Sevy, reporter.

Marshall, Missouri

Pastor, H. G. Thayer

Bishop and Mrs. T. A. Beck were present for the evening service on Sunday evening, December 2. James Daugherty was the speaker at both the morning and evening services on December 16. A Christmas program was presented by the children's department on December 23. Fairy Banks, children's supervisor, and Dolly Dishman, young people's leader, were the directors. Although the weather was extremely disagreeable, many came to enjoy the program. Treats were given to each of the children at the close of the entertainment.

—Bernice Tyree, reporter.

Long Beach, California

Pastor, W. A. Teagarden

The closing months of 1945 witnessed a renewal of interest and enthusiasm among members of the Long Beach congregation. The end of the war makes it possible for many young men to return to active church participation, and it is gratifying to note the growth in attendance and interest among the young people.

The annual branch election held in October saw the retention of all officers as of the previous year, with the exception of the following changes: J. P. Davis relinquished his duties as director of religious education to R. E. Niles and is now serving as special missionary assistant to the pastor; Orville James accepted the post of young people's supervisor; and Harry Pederson was elected chorister. In an effort to stimulate interest among the young people, that department has been separated into two divisions, namely: the Zion's League, comprised of junior and high school students, and the young adults, including those of college age and young married people. The response from both groups has been particularly satisfactory, and the new year holds promise of revived activity not only in these groups, but also in the adult division, which is supervised by W. D. Kingsbury, and the children's department with Clyde Rockwell as leader.

As the culmination of an attendance contest, both young people's groups gathered at the Colorado Lagoon clubhouse on the evening of January 18 for a banquet and social hour. The winning teams, captained by Earl Beitler and Jewel Reed, were guests of the losers, headed by Harry Penn and Ramona Taylor. The banquet menu featured steaks for the winners and beans for the hosts. Elder R. C. Leibold, young people's teacher, was special guest of the evening; following his remarks, talented members of the group provided a merry hour's entertainment of readings, skits, and musical numbers. Responsible for the high success of the activity, in which fifty-seven young people participated, were Orville James, Earl Beitler, Harry Penn, Mildred Alley, and their committee members.

The branch Christmas festivities opened Sunday evening, December 16, with the play, "The White Pearl," by Valeria R. Lehman. Directed by Mrs. Natalie Miller, the presentation introduced abundant new talent through the medium of the newly organized drama group. On Sunday evening, December 23, Mrs. Virginia Palmer directed "Christmas at the Inn," by Elva Sturgis Oakman. Both productions were enthusiastically received, predicting a lively year for this talented group of young people.

The children's department provided the entertainment for the annual branch Christmas party on December 21. A program of recitations and music was presented to a large audience; all of the children were personally greeted by Santa Claus, whose pack bore treats for the entire congregation. The choir ended the evening with a musical "Merry Christmas" and "Happy New Year."

All branch organizations appropriately celebrated the holiday season. The Mignonette club of young ladies revealed their secret pals at a party held in the church parlors, and thirty members and their friends enjoyed the evening's various features arranged by President Betty Sheldon and her co-workers. This was followed by a merry evening at which Mr. and Mrs. Norman Turner were hosts in their home to the Mignonettes and their escorts; thirty-seven were present to participate in the social hour and the exchange of gifts. A worship service, program, and visit from Santa Claus were high lights of the Blue Bird band meeting at the home of their leader, Mrs. Dorothy Niles, on December 18. The final group party of the season brought forty-five Naomis and their guests to the church, Thursday, December 21, for the annual secret sister revealment, luncheon program, and gift exchange. To Mrs. Garnet Sames, women's leader, and Mrs. Etta Hiatt, club president, and their committeewomen go the honors for providing the afternoon's entertainment.

Torrential rains brought Christmas Sunday attendance to the lowest in months, but specially arranged programs lent the usual impressive note to the day. Theme for the morning worship service was "The Supreme Gift," and the high point of the hour was a poem-tableau, "The Meditation of Mary." For the eleven o'clock hour, introduced by the choir processional, Adeste Fidelis, Pastor W. A. Teagarden chose as his sermon topic, "The Prince of Peace." A particularly lovely arrangement of "Silent Night" was sung by the choir. Preceding the play in the evening, the choir furnished a half hour of yuletide carols and special numbers.

New members in the congregation are Mr. and Mrs. Curtis E. Petersen, Barbara Jean Johnson, and Robert Everett Niles, Jr., whose baptisms were a memorable event of late November.

Another innovation in the young people's department is the awarding of a plaque, to be hung in the church, to the young person whose individual interest and efforts show the greatest increase over a quarterly period. Norman Turner was the first to have his name inscribed on the plaque, the honor being his for his outstanding work on scenery and electrical fixtures for the Christmas plays.

—Mrs. J. C. Moore, reporter.

Springerton, Illinois

Pastor, Willard Thomas

Springerton branch is starting the new year with increased faith and enthusiasm. Attendance throughout the winter months has been gratifying, however it is expected to grow to reach a new high in 1946.

District President Eugene A. Theys of Mt. Vernon, Illinois, and Elder Lloyd R. Adams of McKenzie, Alabama, were guest speakers in January. Brother Adams, who was recently appointed missionary to the southeastern Illinois district, spoke on the evenings of January 9 and 10.

Several Saints represented Springerton at the Mt. Vernon rally day held January 20. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker for the occasion. A basket dinner was served at noon in the church basement.

Marion Lowry is scheduled to be at Springerton on the second and fourth Sundays of each month beginning February 10. Brother Lowry will be the 11 o'clock speaker on these occasions.

—Elizabeth Wilson, reporter.

Clio, Michigan

Pastor, James McBride

Clio church is proud of its growth and development during the past few months. For the first time in the history of the branch, a complete ministry is serving the congregation; this includes a deacon, a teacher, and several priests and elders. Priesthood meetings, socials, and classes are held regularly to promote unity. Speakers are frequently exchanged with the Flint and Burt branches.

The church has recently purchased a phonograph and recorder, an album of sacred music, and fifty new metal chairs for the lower auditorium which is in the process of being completed. The men of the branch have enlarged the rostrum of the main auditorium, and the women have added an artistic touch by sewing velvet drapes around it. The addition allows more room for the choir, and for dramatic productions.

Prior to November, the Sunday morning services began with church school at ten o'clock. Since then a 9:30 worship service has been added and is proving very successful. All members of the congregation are given a chance to participate in the service.

The Zion's League has been divided into several committees to handle the worship services, social activities, correspondence, publicity, and League finances. Each member has an opportunity to serve on one of the committees for three months and is then transferred to another. In this manner the members, working with the regular League officers, are directly responsible for the success of the organization. The League will participate in a youth's rally to be held in Pontiac, Michigan, starting February 22. The Flint-Port Huron district conference will follow.

Members of the women's department are planning a valentine party for the returned servicemen of the branch.

—J. L. Lannin, reporter.

San Diego, California

Pastor, F. H. Cunningham

On December 30, with Apostle John W. Rushton and District President Louis J. Ostertag, presiding over the business meeting, the members of the San Diego branch elected the following officers: pastor, Falice H. Cunningham; secretary-recorder, Gladys Hawley; treasurer, Ann White; church school director, Elizabeth Troyer; adult supervisor, Ellis Shimel; young people supervisor, Joe Curtis; children's supervisor, Amy Ellis; cradle roll, Shirley Clow; department of women, Hazel Forqueran; music director, Alice Clow; branch reporter, Wilbur Sartwell; Herald representative, Lois Minton; custodian, Ellis Shimel; historian, Gladys Hawley; Bishop's solicitor, Gladys Hawley; finance committee, Stella Thompson, J. V. Thompson, Eugene O'Neil; auditor, Charles Edwards; building committee, Charles Edwards, Ralph Peck, J. V. Thompson, Lee Moore, Lloyd Lang, Wilber Gillen, Edward Webb, and Eugene O'Neil.

The year 1945 brought many Saints to San Diego, especially young people. The majority of these were personnel of the Navy and wives of sailors and Marines. Each Friday night Zion's League activities were held at the church with the average attendance of fifteen or twenty. The young people have elected the following officers to serve them for 1946: Louis Zonker, president; Lois Minton, vice-president; Donna Barker, secretary; and Shirley Clow, treasurer.

The Sunday evening service has been used mostly as a class study period. The first part of the year was devoted to the Book of Mormon, and the last part was spent in the study of The Call at Evening.

A short time before Christmas the women's department held a bazaar in the lower auditorium of the church and made a net profit of $108.00. Chili and pie were served, embroidery work was sold, Christmas gifts were auctioned and a fine social evening was enjoyed by everyone.

The following baptisms were recorded in 1945: Betty Lou Hada, Charlotta Louisa Bunting, Vivian Doris Bruington, Duane Allen Johnson, Dora Adrienne Risinger, and Ruby Mae Overhauser.

On record as having been blessed the past year are these children: Michael Mason O'Day, Carol Lee Weeks, Thomas Timothy Cotter, III, and Janet Rae Cunningham.

Haileyville, Oklahoma

Pastor, W. P. Hubble

After the death of Pastor J. S. White in April, Elders J. S. Meyers of Holdenville and T. E. Fitzwater of Independence assisted in conducting services until November when W. P. Hubble returned from Berkeley, California, and was elected pastor.

Ora Dollins is responsible for the successful work being done in the church school. Midweek prayer services are held regularly and are well attended.

Two Christmas parties were given in the home of Mrs. O. O. Dollins, Jr.; one for the adult group on December 19, and one for the young people on December 21. Ora Dollins and Mary Humphrey were in charge of the entertainments.

Harvey L. Dollins, Jr., is attending college in Stillwater, Oklahoma.

Elder T. E. Fitzwater has given several inspiring sermons while visiting in Haileyville. Priest Fred Hubble was a recent guest speaker also.

—Mrs. W. P. Hubble, reporter.

East Jordan, Michigan

Pastor, Ole Olson

The church school has been organized into grades, with each having a part in the Sunday morning worship program as its respective turn occurs. Themes taken from the Herald are used as guides for the service.

On the second Sunday of each month an all-day meeting is held at the church. Those attending bring their lunches and eat together, remaining for the afternoon and evening services. Guest speakers are usually present for the occasion; recent visiting ministers have been Allen Schreur and Elmer Parks of Gaylord, Roy Newberry of Frederic, and Ernest Burt of Onaway.

The women's department is contributing to the success of the church in both a financial and spiritual way. Bazaars and luncheons are sponsored as projects for raising money. A special birthday party each month is the main social event. A devotional service is held at the beginning of every regular meeting, after which the group studies about woman's place in the home, church, and community.

There is a need for trained leaders and teachers for the young people. A large part of the congregation is composed of junior and senior high school students. A League has been organized and is planning a routine of activities including classwork, programs, worship services, and social get-togethers.

Officers elected for the new church year are: Ole Olson, pastor; Mary McKinnon, church school director; Allison Pinney, supervisor of adults; Sylvia McKeage, young people's supervisor and publicity agent; Beryl Scott, children's supervisor; Thelma McKinnon, leader of the women's department; Gladys McKinnon, secretary and director of music; Goldie Whiteford, pianist; Vern Whiteford, solicitor and treasurer; Suzanne Whiteford, librarian; Lucy King, church decorator; and LeRoy McKeage, janitor.

—Sylvia McKeage, reporter.

Centralia, Washington

Pastor, W. W. Belcher

The new year brought increased enthusiasm and determination to the Saints of Centralia.

Christmas was observed with a program appropriate to the season on December 23.

A large crowd gathered at the church on January 20 to hear Alma Johnson, president of the district, deliver an interesting and inspiring sermon on the work of the church. Lunch was served in the church basement by the women after which Brother Johnson spoke again using a text from the Book of Job.

Pastor W. W. Belcher, who lives in Olympia, was the speaker twice in January. Beginning the first Sunday in February, O. L. Oplet of Shelton will alternate weekly sermons with Pastor Belcher.

The Norris family of Cinibar drive thirty miles each Sunday to attend services.

Request for Prayers

J. R. Allen, pastor of the church in Marlin, Texas, asks the Saints to remember him in their prayers that he may be healed of an affliction which is keeping him from fulfilling his mission in the church.

Columbus, Ohio

Pastor, Charles A. Ferguson

Speakers for the month of January have been City Pastor D. V. Lents, R. J. Miller, A. E. Anderton, C. A. Ferguson, John Gabriel and Casimir Nikel, pastor of the Cleveland branch.

The Zion's League continues to meet for classwork and a play period each Thursday evening. On the evening of January 24 they sponsored a play night at the church. This group has been studying other denominations so as to have a better understanding of their own church. The study class is under the direction of D. V. Lents.

The following servicemen have been given discharges in recent months: Robert and Raymond Owen, Merrill Weate, Alfred Dougherty, Ivan and Edward Patterson, Roy Ash, Durwood Perry, Jesse, Elwood and Charles Chesser, and James Little. Added to those already discharged, this group nearly completes the list of servicemen to return home to First Columbus branch.

For some time the need has been felt for an organized young adult group. January 26 this organization took place under the direction of Pastors Ferguson and Lents. The group will meet twice a month for study and social activities. Their course of study is to be "Overviews of Latter Day Saintism."

The January Communion service was in charge of Pastor Charles Ferguson, assisted by Elder E. C. J. Swanson. Brother Swanson was also the evening speaker.

Thirty-three members were present at the regular meeting of the department of women on the night of January 10. Sister Swanson announced the theme for the month, "Security of Inner Peace." Some projects had been suggested by the pastor, and it was decided that new carpeting would be purchased for the platform and the aisles in the main auditorium. Following the business meeting, Dorothy Wemlinger read "The Violin Sermon," and Vera Hunter conducted a forum, using as a basis Abundant Living by E. Stanley Jones. The hostesses were Garnet Denny and Bertha Hinkle.

Elder R. E. Madden spoke at the morning service on January 13; the pastor gave the evening sermon using "The Romance of Living" as his theme. District President Floyd T. Rockwell of Dayton attended. Brother Rockwell met with the city-wide priesthood class the following evening and spoke during the study period.

C. A. Carey spoke on the morning of January 20, and Pastor Ferguson brought the evening message.

On January 27 Elder Casimir Nikel of Cleveland branch spoke at both the morning and evening services.

On January 25 the Leaguers had a skating party at Rollerland, and later gathered at the pastor's home for games and refreshments. They were planning to give a repeat performance of the play, "Don't Darken My Door," which they gave recently. It will be presented for a local fraternity group.

The church school is gaining in attendance and interest. Brother Jerry Glandon has been providing the programs. The junior church is also growing and has an attendance average of thirty-five members.

A number of teachers and officers are attending the six week course in leadership offered by the Federation of Churches. One class on mental health by Dr. Roy Burkhardt is especially helpful.

—Ethel Kirkendall, reporter.

Nebraska City, Nebraska

Pastor, Floyd W. Hirst

The Nebraska City branch held its annual business meeting in September. Many of last year's officers were re-elected to fill the same position for the new year.

The women's department, which meets twice a month, has been instrumental in raising money for the remodeling of the basement. New rest rooms and a baptismal font have been installed. It is hoped that a new gas furnace may be purchased soon. A rummage sale was held the latter part of November and a holiday bazaar and bake sale the first of December. Both proved very profitable.

The church gained recognition when one of the ladies was elected secretary of the local council of church women, a group composed of members of all churches in the city.

Elder Francis Shrunk of Lincoln was guest speaker on January 13; he presented a very interesting and encouraging sermon.

The young people hold regular meetings and are consistent attendants at other church services. They enjoyed a New Year's Eve watch party at the home of their leader, Mrs. Rees Preston.

A teacher-officer meeting was held January 20; the discussion dealt with the efficiency of methods and importance of following general church programs and suggestions.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Pastor, R. H. Atkinson

Nauvoo branch felt the loss of a number of its helpers when Elder J. E. Vanderwood was confined to the Independence Sanitarium for seven weeks, Elder A. M. Baker returned to Independence, Elder J. C. Page and wife went to California, the August Lee's to Florida, and L. H. Lewis to Norwich, New York, for the winter. However, the Saints were made happy by the addition of the Ralph Tripp family of Fort Madison, who have taken up their residence on the old Walker homestead in Rock Creek Township. A dinner was held in their honor in the church basement one Sunday noon, followed by a program in the upper auditorium in charge of the pastor. Sgt. George Heady, who served three years in the Pacific, was also honored at this time. He gave a short talk on his experiences, after which District President H. D. Smith presented the Tripps and enumerated their many sterling qualities. Their daughter, Fern, who is a valued assistant at the Smith studio in Fort Madison, gave a piano solo, and Harold Smith a vocal solo, accompanied by his wife.

Present for the morning service were Elder and Mrs. David Williams of Wichita, Kansas. Brother Williams gave a fine exposition on "Faith."

Apostle Hanson spent a few days in Nauvoo early in December, preaching two very instructive sermons on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

Elder W. H. Gunn of Fort Madison was the speaker on October 28, using the thought-provoking subject "What Will You Do With the Christ?"

M/Sgt. Myron Wood of Akron, Ohio, who served twenty months in India and China as secretary to the commanding general of the Chinese Combat Command, has been released from service. He and his wife spent several weeks with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Wood. He gave a talk at the Communion service on January 6. At the following Wednesday evening meeting he told of seeing a Saints' Herald lying on a dresser one morning when he passed down the barrack. He traced the owner and found it belonged to Ray Rogers of Butler, Missouri. They had played ball together before knowing they were members of the same church. They enjoyed each other's companionship for a month or more before being separated and then corresponded until the end of the war in China.

Darrell Tripp M 2/c was also present at the Wednesday evening meeting, having been recently discharged from service in the Pacific area. He expressed his pleasure at being present.

Leo Stevenson, Radioman 3/c, who served on the minesweeper "U. S. S. Sentry," has been released and is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stevenson. A welcoming party was held at the home of the pastor for these boys. Myron Wood had expressed a desire for some homemade ice cream so the women donated the materials and a feast of ice cream and cookies was prepared; Myron and John Williams hauled ice from the river and froze the cream.

The entire branch participated in a bridal shower given in the church basement for Joanne Newbold who was united in marriage to Robert Booz by the pastor at an impressive service a short time before. Contests were prepared by Roberta and Elmer Garrett and the tumblers awarded the winners were presented to the bride who received many beautiful and useful gifts. Refreshments were served by the parents of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. John Klingmueller.

Dorothy Fusselman, who teaches in Pekin, Illinois, and her sister, Edith, who is attending Gem City Business College in Quincy, were home for the holidays and assisted in the musical activities of the branch on the evening of December 23. Dorothy directed the Christmas play "A Great Adventure," with Edith as accompanist.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood and wife have returned to Nauvoo and taken up their residence in the old William Marks house. Brother Vanderwood is much improved in health, and all are glad to welcome them back.

The Wednesday evening services have been held in the homes of the members during the winter months; and a fine spirit of unity has prevailed at these services. Cars are being provided to take the group to the Tripp home for the next meeting. The Tripp family drives ten miles every Sunday and Wednesday to attend services.

The reunion committee met January 27 and formulated plans for a reunion to be held at Nauvoo in the summer. It is hoped that it may be held early in July. —Mabel Atkinson, reporter.

Daughter of John F. Henson

Mrs. Luelia Henson Bradford, P. O. box 5, Blainstown, Missouri, a daughter of the pioneer missionary, John F. Henson of Brush Creek, Illinois, writes of her father's experiences in the missionary work and of the experiences of her family. Though isolated from church privileges and advanced in years, the faith she learned in youth is still strong.

Stratford, Ontario

Pastor, Howard Schlotzhauer

The past four months have been active ones for Stratford branch.

September 16-30 Elder Harold I. Velt conducted an instructive missionary series, using colored slides. This visit was appreciated greatly by the Saints of Stratford, Rostock, Mitchell, and St. Marys.

On October 9 the annual business meeting was held. Elder Howard Schlotzhauer was elected president, with Elder Russell Atkins and Priests Walter Eastwood and William Leney, counselors. The church school business meeting followed. Elder Russell Atkins was elected superintendent; Priest David Smith, assistant superintendent; and Blanche Wheatley, junior church supervisor.

The young people enjoyed a chicken dinner on October 15; a business meeting followed. Priest David Smith was chosen president with Bernard Galbraith and R. W. Powell as assistants.

Sister Caro Withrow was sustained as president of the women's department with Pearl MacDermid and Ethel Leney as counselors. A great deal of philanthropic work is being done by this group.

At 2:45 on November 4, an impressive service for the blessing of children was held. James George, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William Leney, was blessed by his uncle, Elder Jasper Phillips; Larry Earl, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Galbraith, was blessed by Elder Howard Schlotzhauer; and Karen Elaine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Drown, was blessed by Elder Russell Atkins. Stella MacDonald sang "Spirit of God" by Neidlinger; Isabel Phillips and David Withrow sang a duet.

On November 17 local services were dispensed with to enable the Saints to attend the anniversary services in London where Apostle John Garver was guest speaker.

On November 25 Dolores Maslen and Harold Churcott were baptized by Elder Howard Schlotzhauer. Daniel A. MacDonald was baptized by Priest William Leney on December 2. A confirmation and communion service followed when those recently baptized were confirmed and given the right hand of fellowship. Priest Robert Withrow sang a solo. Elder Arthur Dunn was guest speaker at the evening service.

On December 19 the Women's Department held its annual Christmas meeting with the husbands as guests. December 20 the children enjoyed a Christmas supper and entertainment.

Elder John Shields was a welcome visitor to Stratford and spoke at the evening services on December 19.

On New Year's Eve the young people held a social evening under the co-operation of Jean Galbraith, assisted by Kay Schlotzhauer and Ila Maslen. Games were played and lunch was served.

—Ethel B. Leney, reporter.

Hammond, Indiana

Pastor, Edward L. Hamilton

Four children were baptized on Sunday, November 18. Ministers officiating at the confirmation were Elders D. H. Smith, Clair Ellis, and Edward Hamilton. The new members are Dorothy Mae De Rolf, Melvin and Ronald Scheive, and Larry Hamilton. At another service, LaMont Clair was ordained to the office of priest.

During the first week of December a general church appointee institute was held in Chicago. During the week Bishop Wayne Updike of Kansas City was the guest of the Hammond branch. He spoke each evening except Saturday. Those who attended were inspired and encouraged by his messages.

At the close of the institute on Sunday, December 9, Apostle Arthur Oakman spoke at the morning service. Many had never seen or heard him before. Elder James Daugherty was also a guest speaker that day. He spoke at a service held in the afternoon, and again at eight in the evening. Dinner was served at the church for all attending.

A Christmas party was held on Friday evening, December 21, at the church. An impromptu program was arranged, the high light of which was a story by Hattie Bell. A large tree, beautifully decorated, made an appropriate setting for the party. Gifts were exchanged and treats were distributed.

The Saints in Hammond have a novel way of exchanging their Christmas cards. A large box in which to put the cards is set in a convenient place; the money which would have been spent for stamps is put in another container. This money is added to the Christmas offering fund, and is usually well over $10. This method has been used the past three years and has proved very satisfactory.

Michael Bruce, infant son of Donald and Jane Clark, was blessed by Elder Clair Ellis on Sunday, December 23. The baby's father is now in service overseas.

Dale Willoughby has received his military discharge. The Saints rejoice with his family in his safe return to civilian life.

—Hattie Hamilton, reporter.

London, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

Raymond Neal has again become the music director of the branch. This appointment was made after the resignation of Dr. D. A. Campbell. Dr. Campbell accepted the position of music director at the last annual business meeting, anticipating Brother Neal's return before the year was over. Sincere thanks are extended to Dr. Campbell for his work in the music department for the past eighteen months.

Mildred Weese resigned as organist on January 27. She has accepted a promotion to personnel supervisor of the St. Catherine's store. Sister Weese has served the branch as organist for the past eight years and has been very dependable.

Gertrude Wilson has been appointed to survey the needs of the branch along the lines of girls' work. She has consulted Blue Bird leaders Helen Mills and Helen King about the project. Dorothy Tomlinson, Nina Stanlich, Marjorie Smith, and Margaret Douglas attended the meeting held for girl workers.

Bishop J. C. Dent and his capable assistants, W. A. Alford and William Risler, presented excellent services of worship and education on Sunday, January 27.

The Leaguers are planning a trip to Toronto on February 9 and 10. They are to attend a hockey game on Saturday night and church on Sunday. Two more servicemen have returned from overseas; they are Walter Riddick and Kenneth Bailey.

Evan Vere, infant son of Evan and Marion Shute, was blessed January 16 by Bishop J. C. Dent and Elder A. W. Sheehy.

On Sunday, January 20, Apostle E. J. Gleazer presided over the district conference and was the guest minister for the day. Apostle Gleazer's activities included a prayer service, priesthood meeting, preaching, and several conferences with leaders. The Delhi, Stratford, and St. Thomas congregations were well represented at the conference. It was decided by a vote at the conference that the London and Chatham districts should join in the promotion of a general church reunion at Erie Beach. This reunion is to be held the first week in August.

On January 14 the house adjacent to the church on the north was purchased. It will be used as an annex for junior church activities. Charles Skelding has accepted the assignment of "annex heating engineer," and John Judkins is to install the heating system.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

Pastor, A. N. Barnes

Elder Brewton Green of Mobile, Alabama, was the guest speaker on January 19. Several members from Escatawpa attended the Gulf States district conference held in Mobile on January 26 and 27. The Zion's League presented a program featuring Elder A. N. Stanke as speaker on the evening of January 27.

Mrs. J. L. Barlow and Mrs. Mary Parker were hostesses to the women's department in January. Twenty-five were present at the luncheon. Elder J. L. Barlow gave a brief talk at the afternoon meeting.

Pastor A. N. Barnes, assisted by J. L. Barlow, Hildred Thomas, C. R. Mizell, and Moroni Sherman, conducted the February Communion service. Special prayers were offered for Horace Sherman who has been ill for some time.

Another serviceman, Leroy Barnes, has returned from overseas duty to take his place in the home congregation. —Mildred Thomas, reporter.

Gary, Indiana

Pastor, D. H. Smith

During the first week of December, the Gary branch was privileged to have Elder J. D. Anderson of Joplin, Missouri, conduct a missionary series. The first service was held Sunday evening, December 2, the theme being "Christ, the Hope of the World." Other services were as follows: December 3, "Christ in Ancient America"; December 4, "America and Her Destiny"; December 5, "The Gospel and Church Restored"; December 6, "The City of God"; December 7, "Ye Must Be Born Again." On Sunday, December 9, Elder Anderson held his last meeting. He spoke both morning and evening; his final message was "Why Tarriest Thou?"

No preaching services were held on December 16 because so many members were absent due to illness.

On December 18 the women's department held its monthly meeting at the home of Thelma Conrad. Hazel Smith, departmental leader, told a Christmas story; carols were sung and gifts exchanged. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

On December 23, Pastor D. H. Smith gave the morning message. At eight o'clock a Christmas program of recitations and songs was presented by the children. Elder Roy Smith of the district presidency gave a short talk.

The theme for the day on December 30 was "Guidance in Sharing." A. O. Skinner, bishop's agent, was the speaker at 11 o'clock, and Elder K. O. Lusha of the district presidency spoke in the evening.—Thelma Conrad, reporter.

Weyburn, Saskatchewan

Mrs. H. D. Leavens sponsored a Zion's League party on January 16 in honor of Delbert Williams, Clarence Warren, and Leonard Jensen, who have recently returned from overseas. Clayton Toovey arrived January 3rd from overseas and is now at Yellow Grass where Mrs. Toovey has been residing.

Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Lefler and family left recently for Wells, British Columbia, where they will make their home. Mr. Lefler returned from overseas a few weeks ago.

Henry Neil accepted a position at Baljiennie, Saskatchewan, February 1. Mrs. Neil and the children will join him at a later date.

—Belva McMann, reporter.

Chaplain Commends U. S. Marine Virgil F. Goodin

A copy of a letter from Chaplain James Butler, USNR, Second Separation Co., MCB, Mare Island, California:

4 January, 1946

Frederick M. Smith, President, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Mr. Smith:

Virgil F. Goodin, USMC, of 2900 Stewart Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas, was recently separated from the service. We have asked him to attend church services at least once in his uniform. The Chaplains of the Marine Corps are proud to serve with such boys as Virgil and we want the churches to share in that pride. Whatever idealism, unselfishness, devotion, these boys bring to the Marine Corps comes from the religious training they receive from their parents and their devoted pastors and teachers.

In a world upset by doubts and disturbances we have always the hope of a better future in these young men who reflect the training of home and church and whose unselfishness and willingness to serve has already been proved in these past war years.

Sincerely,

JAMES M. BUTLER,
Chaplain, USNR.

PAGEANTS AND PLAYS . . .

THE POWER OF THE RESURRECTION

By Gardiner M. Day

Six scenes. Not more than sixteen characters to any one scene, none of whom have speaking parts, reader. A pageant of the Easter story worked out in pantomime, with reader and choir. No scenery, simple lighting and costumes. Price 25c.

WHEN THE SUN WAS RISEN

By James A. Kestle

One act, two scenes. Two men. A conversation, written in blank verse, between Peter and John about events of Jesus' life, crucifixion and resurrection. Price 15c.

THE WAY OF LIFE

By Martha Bayly

One act. 2 men, 3 women and a group of young people. The story of one of the Roman soldiers who cast lots for Jesus' clothes at the foot of the cross and the subsequent effect of the event on his life and that of his two sisters. Play. Price 30c; $3 a dozen.

HIS CROSS

By Ralph P. Claggett

One act, 5 men, 2 women. The story of Obed, the carpenter who made the cross on which Jesus was crucified. May be used for general as well as Easter presentation. Price 30c; $3 a dozen.

THE EASTER PILGRIMS

By Madeleine S. Miller

Three parts. Cast indefinite. The Easter story with historic and modern applications. Music. Price 20c.

THE BROKEN SEAL

By Edward T. Kirkley

This full-length pageant is here offered separately, but it is also included in the "Standard Easter Book No. 2," listed below. It is based on the resurrection story and is divided into five parts and eight scenes. Hymns and Scripture readings are suggested to complete an entire morning or evening program. There are full instructions as to stage settings, lighting and costumes for the twenty-three characters (8 young ladies and 15 young men). 45 minutes. Price 10c each; $1.00 a dozen.

THE ANSWER OF THE CROSS

A PAGEANT FOR EASTER WEEK

By Marie Graham

An Easter pageant which may, or may not, be used in connection with the observance of the communion service.

The action, which is simple, but tremendously effective, is centered around the cross. Seven characters from varied conditions of life bring their troubles to the cross and find in the "seven last words of Christ" an adequate solution. The script and music reveal the intensity of each episode. For this reason the small congregation, where there may not be a profusion of dramatic talent, will find it as suitable as the large church. Price 10c each; $1 a dozen.

THE RISEN LORD

By Walter Russell Bowie

Two scenes, 17 men, 3 women, reader and angel. This pageant of the Easter story is designed to be given in the church itself, the text read by the minister or some appointed person. Price 25c.

THE CHILDREN HEAR ABOUT EASTER

Sixteen children, nine to fourteen years, and one sixteen-year old boy can present this simple drama which is a collection of the New Testament stories dramatized in the manner a group of children playing together and expressing themselves in their own way, would naturally do it. Six rehearsals will be sufficient. Price 35c.

PROGRAMS . . .

EASTER PROGRAM BUILDER NO. 1

This builder contains recitations, exercises, readings, choral and musical readings, playlets and songs which have been carefully classified into 6 sections. Departmental supervisors will welcome this grouping plan. Price 35c.

STANDARD EASTER BOOK NO. 2

Do you want a full-length Easter pageant? Suggestions for Easter music? Recitations? Short playlets, drills, exercises, acrostics? "Standard Easter Book No. 2" has 48 pages of such material including the pageant "The Broken Seal."

It can be used to furnish a complete Easter program this year or as a sourcebook to keep and use through the years. The program committee can find here complete programs worked out and ready to produce, or can build its own program from the materials the book contains. Bound in heavy paper. Price 25c.

STANDARD EASTER BOOK NO. 1

This book is divided into Parts I and II. Part I consists of the 16-page pageant, "The Risen Christ," by M. M. Sturgis, described below.

Part II begins with a beautiful poem, "Sunrise," followed by an Easter acrostic and tableau. Then follows a pageant containing three songs; a poem, "Easter Morning"; a short dialogue, "Easter Lillies"; a playlet, "Why We Believe We Live Forever," and a pageant, "From Darkness to Light." The remaining pages contain poems worthy to be kept in your favorite scrapbook. Paper bound. Price 25c.

THE RISEN CHRIST

By M. M. Sturgis

The characters are taken from the Scriptures and the scene represents Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of Jesus, her sister, the wife of Cleophas, John and other disciples. The women are lamenting the shattering of their hopes. They are solicitous about Mary. Scene two introduces the soldiers, chief priests and others, who begin to doubt the wisdom of what they have done. In scene three the characters continue to lament the death of the Lord, until a lad appears with wonderful news. The Lord had risen! The last scene is one of triumph and joy. Price 8c each; 85c a dozen.

EUREKA EASTER RECITATIONS NO. 4

By Mattie B. Shannon

Program material for kindergartners, primaries, juniors, and junior highs. Pantomimes, plays, songs and special features. Price 25c.

CANTATAS . . .

RADIANT MORNING

For mixed voices, simple yet qualitative music that can be easily worked up by the small or inexperienced group of singers. Has dignity and real beauty. Price 40c.

THE LIVING REDEEMER

This cantata provides for a narrator whose reading supplies the desired continuity. It is not beyond the ability of the average volunteer choir but will require more rehearsal time than others of its type. With song and story this cantata builds upon the dramatic events leading to the crucifixion, concluding with the thrilling choral number, "Immanuel Victorious." Price 40c.

THE FIRST EASTER

An effective instrumental prelude and choral number precedes the story which alternates with vocal selections through the cantata. The reading of the story may be omitted at the option of the director. Price 20c.

THE VICTORIOUS CHRIST

In song and story, this tuneful cantata portrays the occurrences of the resurrection and is not difficult nor lengthy—only 8 vocal numbers in all consisting of solos, duets, quartets, and four-part chorus numbers, yet it conveys a complete Easter message. Price 20c each; $2 a dozen.

IMMANUEL VICTORIOUS

An Easter cantata for women's voices plus a narrator. Beautiful in its simplicity. Price 20c.

CHURCH SCHOOL SERVICES . . .

LIGHT ON THE HILLS

Complete service materials for church school needs, including responsive readings, songs, recitations and acrostics. Price 10c.

WONDERFUL MORNING

An Easter service for the church school, songs, recitations, etc. Price 10c.

EASTER BELLS

Contains original songs, recitations, etc., arranged in a service form for the church school. Price 10c.

GLORIOUS EASTER

Songs, readings, recitations, and exercises for the church school hour. Price 10c.

Eva Rae Van Fossen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Van Fossen of Portland, Oregon, was united in marriage to T/Sgt. David B. Freeland, son of Mr. Gerald E. Freeland of Ft. Myers, Florida, in the Central Eastside church at 3:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon, November 4. Elder J. L. Verhel officiated. A reception was held in the banquet room of the church following the ceremony. After a honeymoon in Florida, the couple will make their home in Atlanta, Georgia, where Sergeant Freeland is stationed.

Woods-Jordison

Florence Mae Jordison and Francis Allen Woods of Berkeley, California, were united in marriage at the East Bay church on January 16. Pastor Alma Andrews officiated at the ceremony.

Umstead-Bushong

Vera Mae Bushong, daughter of Howard Bushong of Youngstown, and Donald Umstead, son of Charles Umstead of Empire, were united in marriage at 8 o'clock on January 23, at the Reorganized Church in Youngstown, Ohio. Elder George E. Franklin performed the ceremony. Mr. Umstead recently returned from twenty-two months service in the CBI theater. After a short honeymoon in Chicago, the young couple will make their home in Youngstown.

Williams-Hewitt

Mabel Hewitt and Robert F. Williams were united in marriage on Saturday, December 8, at Lincoln, Nebraska. Elder Francis T. Schrunck performed the ceremony.

Maricle-Coffman

LaJume Coffman, daughter of Captain and Mrs. J. B. Coffman, and Ensign Wallace Maricle were united in marriage at the church in Lincoln, Nebraska, on December 28. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Pastor R. M. Russell. After a reception in the lower auditorium, the couple left for Los Angeles where the groom is stationed.

Dolvig-Dormsteadter

Betty Jane Dormsteadter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Dormsteadter of St. Louis, Missouri, became the bride of John P. Dolvig, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Dolvig of Cleveland, Ohio, at the church in St. Louis on January 18. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Pastor Frank McDonald. The Dolvigs will make their home in Cleveland.

Bair-McBride

Linda McBride of Freeport, Illinois, and Orval Bair of Springfield, Missouri, were united in marriage December 23 at the home of Francis Bishop in Springfield. Elder Bishop read the ceremony. Mr. Bair recently received his discharge from the armed forces. The couple will make their home in Springfield.

Davis-White

Jewell Dayne White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hern H. White, became the bride of Eugene Franklin Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Davis, on Sunday afternoon, January 13. The wedding was held in the Reorganized Church at Springfield, Missouri; Elder Francis Bishop officiated. A reception was held in the home of the bride's parents. The groom has recently returned from service overseas. The young couple will make their home in Springfield.

Births

A daughter, Donna Raye, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Graham of Omaha, Nebraska, on December 2.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Kavan of Omaha, Nebraska, announce the birth of a daughter, Joyce Elaine, born January 10. Mrs. Kavan was formerly Laura Ruffcorn.

Cpl. and Mrs. William D. Wismer announce the birth of a daughter, Victoria Kay, born December 10 at the Methodist Hospital in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

A son, Marion Lee, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Marion Hancock of Warrensburg, Missouri, on December 14.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Rhodes of Gary, Indiana, announce the birth of a daughter, Barbara Jane, born December 17.

Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Shotwell of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Jacqueline Lorraine, born December 27, at the Decatur County Hospital. Mrs. Shotwell is the former Lorraine Olson; Mr. Shotwell is a student at Graceland.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Colvin announce the birth of a daughter, Joy Kaye, born February 1 at Flora, Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. George Clark Jenkinson announce the birth of a son, Peter George Clark Jenkinson, Jr., born January 22 at Brisbane, Australia. Mrs. Jenkinson expects to come to America in March, and will live in Independence, Missouri.

Our Departed Ones

MATHISON.—J. E. passed away on December 10 at Omaha, Nebraska. Funeral services were conducted in Woodbine, Iowa, with Elder Charles Putnam officiating.

HOLLENBECK.—Elizabeth, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lois Waltz, of Lima, Ohio. (Date of death not given.) She was a resident of Omaha, Nebraska, for fifty-one years, affectionately known to many as "Aunt Lizzie." Funeral services were conducted in the Omaha church by Elder Carl Seif and H. A. Merchant.

WOOD.—Elizabeth, was born in Sanilac County, Michigan, February 22, 1882, the daughter of John and Caroline Umphrey; she died January 26, after several months' illness at Flint, Michigan. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in early childhood and remained a faithful worker throughout her life. On November 27, 1928, she was married to Thomas Wood, who preceded her in death.

She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Martha Demarey of Bentley, Michigan, and many lesser relatives. Services were conducted by Elders Arthur DuRose and Harry Simons at the Algae Gundry Funeral Home in Flint. Interment was in the Sunset Hills Cemetery.

VAN FLEET.—Maude Alyce, daughter of William and Alyce Poole of Colton, California, was born July 8, 1898, and died January 27 at San Antonio Heights, California, after eighteen months' illness. She attended Graceland and the San Bernardino Business college, and on Easter Sunday, April 4, 1920, was united in marriage to Nelson M. Van Fleet of Cucamonga, California. To this union four children were born: Mrs. Jack Ball, Merritt Burton, Mary Jean, and Ronald. Besides her affiliation with the church, she was a member of the Upland Women's Club, a charter member and past president of the Ontario chapter of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, and president of the Upland Republican Women's Club. She was also a capable writer, the author of numerous short stories and poems.

In addition to her husband and children, she is survived by three sisters: Mrs. W. H. Robinson of Wilmington, Mrs. E. A. Goodman of Upland, and Mrs. C. R. Tucker of Baldwin Park; and three brothers: H. E. Poole of Lomita, C. W. Poole of Long Beach, and W. D. Poole of Ventura. Services were conducted in the Draper Parlours with Charles Fry, Louis Ostertag, and John W. Rushton in charge. Interment was in Belle Vue Cemetery.

* OUR FRAGILE WORLD

Some beautiful globes of the world have been lingering in the bookstore for a while. Covetous of such things, the editor "borrowed" a fine model with a glass globe that can be lighted from within so that the names appear clearly on the surface. An associate dropped in and said, "I see you have a toy balloon on your desk!"

There is more truth than we think in the remark. Surely our poor shrunken world is like a toy balloon. Who knows, in these uncertain days, when somebody may decide to puncture it, perhaps with an atomic bomb?

* CONFERENCE DIRECTORS AND SINGERS

Special attention is called to an important article about the music for General Conference, by Franklyn Weddle, Director of Music, in this issue. It is of special importance in training singers who expect to participate in the general musical events of the conference.

* EVAN A. FRY

No doubt you have been missing Brother Fry—from the radio, if you are within listening range of KMBC, and from our pages if you are a reader of his articles. Brother Fry is in the Sanitarium. We thought that it couldn't happen to him, that there was no limit to his energy, that nothing could stop him. A mistake, perhaps, in which he also shared. But it happened. In recent bad weather he fell, suffered an injury to his knee, and, what was more serious, had a clot form that shut off circulation. The operation is over and he is convalescent. . . . They have him in the strangest bed ever devised. It is built on the principle of a child's see-saw, and run by an electric motor. Day and night without ceasing, it tips him from end to end—one moment his feet are up, his head lowered; a minute later he's head up, feet down. The purpose is to use the force of gravity to restore circulation while the veins are healing. He says it doesn't make him seasick and it doesn't prevent sleep, because the motion is slow. But he can't read or write conveniently, so he just lies there, getting a good big rest, which also was needed. And if, during his childhood, he ever suffered frustration and inferiority complexes because he couldn't play on a teeter like other boys, this rocking bed will cure him of it forever.

* YOUR OTHER FRIENDS

Sharing a pleasant double room with Brother Fry was genial R. E. Davey, President of Seventy, an ideal companion for the long hours of hospitalization. He was ready to be dismissed soon. Apostle Paul M. Hanson, occupying a sunny corner room by himself, was also ready to go home shortly. A. B. Phillips was resting easily, and able to sit up for an animated conversation.

* THE AUTOMOBILE

Your car is many things in one. It is transportation, and therefore useful. It is efficiency, for it saves time. It is power, for it enables you to do many more pieces of work. It is entertainment, for it enables you to see distant and beautiful places and friends.

More than that, and few of us realize this—it is a weapon, a very dangerous weapon. You can hit a man with it and injure or kill him, just as you could with a rock, a club, a sword, or a bullet. In the hands of a person who is inexperienced, drunk, or irresponsible, this weaponlike aspect of the car is greatly increased. The laws try to protect us against guns, poison, dangerous industrial machinery, and other things; but unless we try to protect ourselves, the law is ineffective. We must also try to protect ourselves and other people against the car.

* WANDERLUST

A small boy—very small indeed—appeared at a bus station, with a little bag in his chubby hand, quite apparently packed by himself and without his mother's knowledge. The ticket clerk smiled down at him and inquired,

"Where do you want to go, Sonny?"

"Everywhere," he replied quite earnestly.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

A Call for Co-operation

Difficulties and Necessities

In a lecture given in this country last year, Sir Norman Angell spoke at some length on the necessity and the difficulty of international co-operation.<sup>1</sup> The world, he said, must choose between co-operation and ruin; but nations in general are stubbornly unwilling to take even those steps which are most apparently necessary toward international co-operation, and this is one of the first facts that must be taken into consideration when trying to build and make successful any type of international organization.

There you have it—the bare, hard, unpleasant fault of nations is their intense dislike of working together. It is something that goes back to very primitive times. Whatever was strange or different was distrusted by our ancestors, because it was likely to be a threat to their security. Strangers might be spies, the advance agents of invading hosts who would take the land, and murder or enslave the people. Danger often came from abroad. Any foreigner was probably an enemy. Peoples in those days were locally self-sufficient; they had no need of the stranger, nor even of the neighboring tribe.

Our Interdependent World

But it is different today. It has been pointed out that ours has become one world. The nations need each other. Before the war, the people of America used fruits from the tropics, medicine from South America, silver and tin from Mexico, spices from the Indies, both East and West, rubber from Malaya, jade and brass from China, silk from Japan, chemicals and instruments from Germany, fine wool from Australia, beautiful dishes and textiles from England—artistic and useful products, knowledge, and ideas from all the countries of the world. In turn we sent them our machines, supplies, and technical skills. We could get some better things from other nations than we could make for ourselves, and they could get other things from us that were better than they could make for themselves. No one country, no one people can excel in all things. We all need each other. We need them, and they need us. If we are cut off from each other, our lives will be harder, poorer, less comfortable, less secure, less happy, and so will theirs.

Enough for All

If there were very limited supplies of everything, if some would have to starve in order for others to eat, if it were necessary for some to be cold and naked in order for others to be warmed and clothed, all this suspicion, distrust, and mutual dislike could be understood. But that is not the case. Not long ago a distinguished Harvard scientist, Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, wrote a book<sup>2</sup> in which he showed from knowledge which is now available (and not to mention what surely will be discovered in the near future) that there are enough resources in the earth to support the present population of the world in abundance, and to take care of any reasonable increase in our population for hundreds of years to come. The terrible ideas that there is not enough for everybody, that other people have to be killed to make room for any one people, that others have to be starved so that we may eat—these are the ideas of Nazis and fascists—they are ideas that have been preached by some German, French, British, and even American philosophers, “geo-politicians” and militarists. No one race or nation has any monopoly on these bad, false, vicious ideas. There have been good men in all nations who have consistently stood against these ideas, too.

So there are no reasons of security and welfare why we should not co-operate. There are many reasons why we should do so. In fact, if we do not co-operate, our danger will be very great. We might destroy ourselves and each other. All that we have to prevent co-operation is our stubborn, stupid, obstinate fear, suspicion, and unwillingness. Those are hard words, but the facts seem to indicate they are true ones. They will be useful and helpful words, too, if they save us from disaster.

The Religious Aspect

Yet it seems that all these practical considerations are insufficient to bring the world together in unity, peace, and co-operation. Our prejudices are stronger than our intelligence. Our hatred, alas, is stronger than our love. Our suspicion is greater than our trust. The trouble with our world is that nobody is satisfied with what he has, everybody suspects his neighbor of the same evil designs that are in his own heart, and while exchanging gifts and messages of good will with the neighbors, continues to build up the arsenal at home in preparation for future trouble—trouble that one may wish to make as well as the trouble in which defense may be necessary.

What the world needs is not so much a change of situation, as a change of heart and mind. Some of us must preach the gospel of peace as others have preached the gospel of war. We can't, of course, throw down our arms while others keep

Food and Clothing in Norway

I RECENTLY RECEIVED a letter from Brother E. Y. Hunker, which will be of interest to our readers, especially those who have been concerned about helping out our brothers and sisters in Scandinavia.

Brother Hunker's letter is as follows:

Dear Brother Smith: Letters from Norway indicate that some of the bundles sent from some of our groups had reached Norway before January 1. By this time it is likely that most of the individual bundles have got through. Just recently I received a letter from Elder N. O. Nilsen of Kragero and Carl Carlsen of Porsgrunn. You may be interested in an excerpt from each letter, so I shall submit a translation of same herewith.

Elder N. O. Nilsen: "We have had a quiet, peaceful Christmas. Had many visits from my children and grandchildren. [Brother and Sister Nilsen had 9 children; the eldest about 48, the youngest about 37.] All of us have come through the war years quite well, but were considerably pinched many times because of severe rationing of foods. But now it is beginning to ease up, and it is much better again relative to food. We are permitted large rations, and we are getting along nicely. The greatest difficulty is with shoes and clothes. These are beginning to come in the flow of merchandise, and it appears that the stores have large stocks of them but we have not as yet been granted buying cards and will not be allowed to buy until a survey is made to permit a better portioning out to the people."

Elder Carl Carlsen: "Conditions have already greatly improved. We receive very good bread now, and rationing is good on that score. Cookies, Vienna bread, and wheat rolls can now be bought without rationing. Other breads and flour are still rationed, as are all other foods. Butter and sugar are heavily rationed. It is still difficult with shoes and clothing, but according to what I note in the papers, things will be better. Just before Christmas I bought a shirt, the first for five years. There is still a severe shortage on hearty foods, nevertheless there is somewhat to be found for each day. Meat is seldom seen. Lute-fish and fresh fish can be procured, and there has been a little canned luncheon meats.

"I hope that for the sake of some of the Saints here the Bishop can send the bales of clothing he wrote about."

These excerpts will give you some idea as to the slight improvement of situations in Norway.

SISTER DAN C. BABBITT of Grayling, Michigan, writes, telling of the fine articles she has enjoyed in the Herald and other places and expressing the wish that every home might enjoy and follow the admonitions given in the various lessons in the Herald. She thinks the world would not be in such turmoil if this were true. She writes:

Our mission is small but we are striving hard to hold our few together, hoping some day God will see fit to organize us into a branch and send help in our midst. We are so sadly in need of leaders.

J. A. Gillen Passes

On Monday, February 11, former Apostle J. A. Gillen passed away at his home in Independence, following a decline in health some years ago, and a prolonged illness. In his best years Brother Gillen was a speaker of power and did a great work for the church. His spiritual strength and his kindness made him a beloved leader. Many people will remember him with affection and honor his memory. To his family who have so faithfully and tenderly cared for him in the difficult times of his illness, our sympathy is extended.

Advice Sought

The Prophet Joseph Smith, in his first heavenly vision, as related by himself, was told that his name would be had for good and for evil. I have tried to discover wherein if at all this prophecy has been fulfilled. Undoubtedly the first part has been, in that there are many hundreds of thousands who accept him as an inspired prophet, and many more thousands now dead, when living, so accepted him.

Without doubt his claims to divine inspiration and the production of the Book of Mormon stirred the bitter resentment of many religionists the world over, those conservative churchmen who thought his remarkable claims were presumptuous. But the average reasonable person would not, I think, consider his name evil simply because he organized a church allegedly based on New Testament principles.

I am convinced that the Prophet's name has been had "for evil" principally because of the Utah claims about his connection with the doctrine and practice of polygamy. I care not how "sacred" in the estimation of Utah Mormons may be the "eternity of the marriage covenant," as they call it, to the indiscriminating, Joseph Smith, if Mormon claims be true, was immoral, and, in addition, a gross hypocrite.

When such writers as Vardis Fisher and Fawn McKay Brodie, embittered apostates from Latter-day Saintism, look for evidence, they do not have anything undeniably said or done by the Prophet himself during his lifetime. They are compelled to resort to material supplied after his death by Utah, by those who were involved in polygamy and who had a selfish interest to serve. This kind of evidence is not proper, is "incompetent"—certainly not the kind on which to convict one of illegal and criminal practices, bigamy being a felony.

Yes, the "records" which are used to "damn" the prophet are of Utah origin and manufacture. This cannot be glossed over. The writer cannot forget this stern fact.

Now some of our members frown upon any effort to meet such attacks as the books referred to, one of which is in the public mind at this time. They infer that we are placing ourselves on the "defensive." I cannot agree with them on this: Suppose Jesus Christ is attacked by those who try to impeach or to discredit his miraculous birth. Do we place his cause on the defensive because we try to support the New Testament account? We say emphatically, No!

May I invite Herald readers who may have reached a conclusion about this question, to send their ideas to the Herald editors who will appreciate your help in the matter.

I. A. SMITH.

Liberty Jail To Be Restored

President Thomas C. Romney of the central states mission of the Utah church has been in Liberty, Missouri, for the purpose of making plans for the restoration of the old jail. It was here that Joseph Smith and his companions, Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, Caleb Baldwin, and Sidney Rigdon, were so unjustly incarcerated for six months during the winter of 1838-39. The following is a paragraph from History of the Church published at Salt Lake City, and quoted by the editor of Liberty Tribune:

"Liberty jail faces east, and was a scant two hundred yards from the courthouse. It was built of rough dressed limestone of yellowish color. Its dimensions were twenty by twenty-two feet, and the walls were two feet thick. It had two floors, hence two rooms, an upper and a basement, which formed a dungeon. In the east was a heavy door made strong, and of great thickness, by nailing inch oak boards together with iron spikes. In the south side of the upper room there was a small opening, a foot and a half square, with strong iron bars, two inches apart, firmly imbedded in the stones of the wall. It cost the county $600, Solomon Fry being the contractor."

COMMUNION SUNDAY AT GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1938

The General Conference

Its place in church government; composition, functions, procedure.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

RECENTLY I WAS invited to address the fellowship group in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. In view of the near approach of the General Conference, a discussion of various phases of General Conference function seemed in order. The church was well filled and there was a surprising number of young people present. Even though they live in Independence, these young people have had little opportunity to observe the workings of a General Conference at firsthand, and they seemed interested in the discussion. While throughout the church we have many veteran conference goers who need no information on that theme, perhaps there are many others who have had little or no opportunity to attend a General Conference. In any event the Managing Editor of the Herald invited me to make a transcript of my address for publication. As nearly as I can recall what was said, the following transcript covers the main points of the address.

THE PLACE OF THE CONFERENCE IN CHURCH GOVERNMENT

Well-organized governments are equipped to function in legislative, executive, and judicial matters. Early in its history the church was very well organized to take care of those functions. In the executive department, beginning with the First Presidency and including other quorums of general church officers, and in local affairs local administrators; we have the executive arm of the church in general and local functioning. In the judicial realm the Standing High Council is the Supreme Court of the church, and there are other subsidiary courts, the Stake High Council, Bishop's Courts, Elders' Courts, et cetera, in the local field. In legislative matters

By Elbert A. Smith

the General Conference is the highest legislative body in the church and, of course, there are stake and district conferences and branch business meetings in the local field.

To understand the workings of the church it is necessary to remember the lines between these different departments of church work. President Joseph Smith and President Frederick M. Smith both were at pains to point out to the church the line between executive and legislative bodies.

In an address to the priesthood in 1917, President Frederick M. Smith said: "So long as they remain in office, the supreme rights of the executive arm of the church lie in the Presidency. But do not forget to draw the line between the legislative and the administrative or executive arm of the church" (Saints' Herald, April 25, 1917).

The word of caution that we do not forget to draw the line between the legislative and the administration or executive arm of the church should not be lost sight of.

Again, while addressing the General Conference of 1925, President Smith said, "I might say in an attempt further to relieve the disturbed minds of some of my brethren . . . that so far as the Presidency is concerned the words supreme directional control had only reference to the administrative line of work" (Saints' Herald, April 15, 1925).

With this distinction kept in mind, we may point out that General Conference is the supreme legislative body of the church. A General Conference may originate legislation among its delegates from the floor; it may approve, modify, or reject proposed legislation coming from quorums. The General Conference may periodically sustain or reject all general church officers. In fact, at the close of each conference, all general church and departmental officers, institutions, and departments come before the conference for a vote of confidence.

In another way the General Conference is a unique body. In times when it seems necessary to do so, the conference seeks divine revelation from God through the Prophet of the church. When an answer is received and approved by vote of the conference, and by vote of the conference it is so ordered, the revelation becomes a part of our still open canon of scripture and is added to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. There is no other deliberative body that I know anything about that functions that way. And that is a unique distinction in our church. God never closed the canon of scripture; man did that; and in the Restoration Movement from the beginning it was clearly recognized that scripture is still open. Revelation has not ended.

The three books of the church, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, are the constitutional law of the church. General Conference legislation and enactments sometimes are referred to as the By-laws. Conference naturally has a right to rescind or modify such human enactments when it may deem it wise so to do.

COMPOSITION OF THE CONFERENCE

Conference in its deliberative sessions is composed of elected delegates from stakes, districts, and branches in unorganized territory (one delegate to one hundred church members); and ex officio delegates including general church officers and members of the Melchisedec priesthood. The First Presidency usually presides at a General Conference, though that matter, too, is submitted to the vote of the conference; and of course there are secretaries, choristers, ushers, et cetera.

SOME OUTSTANDING CONFERENCES

We may reasonably say that the meeting of organization, April 6, 1830, was a conference. Though limited in numbers it became a deliberative body and passed upon questions submitted by the temporary chairman. It then proceeded to an organization as far as its numbers permitted. There were ordinations and there was a communion or fellowship service, and on that event we base our custom of opening the General Conference on the 6th day of April, though there have been some deviations from that rule.

The fall conference of 1830 is outstanding in history, due to the fact that it launched the first missionary endeavor of the church. Four young missionaries were appointed and took their way, most of the time on foot, through one of the worst winters in our history, from New York State to Independence, Missouri. Thus our first missionary ventures led to Zion, and it may well be that to a considerable degree we shall find Zion through missionary endeavor.

The Conference of 1860 marked a high point in our church history. To this conference came "Young Joseph," was accepted by the church as the successor to his father, and became President of the High Priesthood and Prophet to the Church. (Perhaps few of you here know where Amboy is. Amboy is a town east of Davenport, in Illinois, between Davenport and Chicago.)

The conference of 1915 stands out in our history because at that conference Frederick Madison Smith was approved by the conference as the successor to his father Joseph. President Joseph Smith had died in December of the preceding year after fifty-three years of service as President of the Church. Certainly I have reason to remember that conference because when the time came for the conference to assemble, Brother Frederick M. Smith was very ill with double pneumonia and could not attend. Therefore, it fell upon me as the only other member of the Presidency to preside over the conference, assisted by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, President of the Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. The matter of receiving the successor was not difficult, as the choice had been indicated to us by previous revelation, and the choice was supported by unanimous vote of all delegates and all members present and voting. The ordination of President Smith occurred later, in the month of May. However, there were other matters involved in a proposed reorganization of the financial department of the church that created considerable cleavage in the conference. The matter was referred to a mass meeting of the priesthood and so between conference sessions and the meetings of the priesthood we were pretty much in continuous sessions each day from 9 o'clock in the forenoon until 10 o'clock at night. Just incidentally, speaking of the housing problem, it was always a problem in the little town of Lamoni to house the General Conference, and ours may have been a typical experience. That year Sister Smith and I and the children gave over the first and second floors of our home to conference visitors and we moved into the attic. The attic was unfinished but clean and new and airy and above all, quiet, so we made no real sacrifice.

The conferences of 1922, 1923, and 1925 linger in memory chiefly because of unpleasant situations and divisions which seemed to reach their climax in 1925. Brother Irby Mundy, who is in the audience, was a new convert, and 1925 was his first conference. He lived through it and that may be one reason he is such an excellent member. Perhaps that goes for some others who withstood the storm and took deeper root for their convictions and their faith. Happily, since that date our conferences have been harmonious and peaceful.

The conference of 1930 observed the centennial of church organization and probably registered the largest crowds that we have ever had at a conference. At the Communion service the first Sunday, as you will remember, some of you, there were two successive Communion services, each of them filling the Auditorium to near capacity, estimated at a total of between 13,000 and 14,000 people.

THE SETTING OF THE CONFERENCES

Numerous changes have taken place over the years, and we might note first of all changes in the surroundings of the conference. As a small boy I went to my first General Conference in a covered wagon. The meeting place was in a grove of natural timber, known as Galland's Grove, in Shelby County, Western Iowa. In those days we had two conferences each year. Today we have one every two years. Personally, I am of the feeling that it would profit the church to have an annual conference. In those days the fall conference met in Western Iowa. When the fall conference was discontinued, the world reunions took over in 1883, and from there out the reunion system spread through the world where we have church membership. The conference to which I refer met in a big tent in the woods and the people mostly lived in tents or covered wagons and cooked their meals over wood stoves or campfires. I have been told that one family came all the way from Ohio to one of those conferences, traveling by wagon and leading a cow. You can figure for yourself the daily milage made, paced by a cow and giving her time to graze occasionally. People had time in those days.

Spring conferences have been held in Plano, Kirtland, Lamoni, and Independence, but are now settled in Independence. Two conferences in Independence were held in tents: in 1922 in a tent seating 3,000 people on the present site of the Auditorium, and in 1923 on the Campus.

It is scarcely necessary to comment on the changes in the setup between the time when I went in a covered wagon to a General Conference held in the woods and the situation now when the conference has a permanent place of meeting in the big Auditorium with rooms for quorums and class meetings; and people coming by bus, by train, by automobile, and by aeroplane.

SOME CHANGES IN METHODS OF PROCEDURE

Through the years there have been some changes in procedure about as marked as the changes in the physical setup of the conference. In the old days the opening sessions of conference were taken up with personal oral reports from general church officers and ministers under appointment, some of the reports being quite lengthy. This was a very interesting feature of the conference in those days but with growth in size of the deliberative body that method became too much of a time consumer; and now all such reports are gathered up and summarized in the reports of quorums and departmental heads, and come to the conference floor in printed form, so the chairman may very literally say, "Please give attention to the business in hand."

In those older days much of the legislation originated from the floor, though there were recommendations coming from the Presidency and Twelve on occasion. Matters presented were discussed from the floor with considerable animation and prolonged consideration. There were able and well-posted debaters, well versed in parliamentary practice, quick to take advantage of every possible move to help their cause; motions to adopt, to amend, to refer, to postpone, the previous question, and so on. Also there were numerous irrepresibles who spoke frequently on every possible occasion to every conceivable subject, including incidental motions.

Today much of the legislation is proposed to the conference by quorums or joint councils; or, if it originates on the floor, it is referred to quorums or councils for consideration and report back for final action. This is in line with the experience of most large deliberative bodies that have their standing committees whose function it is to whip legislation into shape to present to the body. We have had some standing committees and occasionally appoint a special committee but since we have quorums and councils whose function it is to acquaint themselves with special problems in church work, mostly reference is had to quorums or joint councils of quorums. Also these councils during the year have given consideration to specific church problems and come into the conference with recommendations which serve as a basis for legislation. Consequently there is less legislation originating on the floor.

Correspondingly there is less debate upon the floor. That may be due to several factors. This is an age of hurry; people want to conserve time. Deliberative bodies are not as deliberative as they once were (perhaps excepting the U. S. Senate). People generally want to get to the point, get action, and have it over. The conference itself would be very impatient with too many long-winded speakers who did not come to the point.

Another thing is the size of the audience. The average delegate thinks twice before he claims the floor, marches up the long aisle in the Auditorium to the rostrum and then speaks through a microphone. Having thought twice, he keeps his seat.

There may be a considerable gain in this method, while on the other hand there may be a loss, if it is carried too far—loss of the initiative and spontaneity that comes from the people taking more part in the discussion. After all, the conference is supposed to be to a considerable extent “the voice of the people.”

OTHER CHANGES IN THE CONFERENCE SETUP

The old-time conference consisted largely of the morning prayer meeting, a forenoon sermon, an afternoon business meeting, and an evening sermon. Today the activities of the conference are much more complex. There is less preaching and more study. The morning prayer meeting holds its place, as it should, as an important meeting in the conference, as also the Sacrament Sunday Communion service. Today at least much of the forenoon is taken up with quorum and classwork, in study, and in lecture. I think this began at the conference of 1914 when President Smith introduced on the program a series of lectures to the priesthood. At first this innovation was not too well received. Today the study courses at the conference engage the interest and activity of a great number of people and the matters taken up in lectures and studies are usually those that have to do with our message and our methods in church work; as for example, the missionary quorums may be studying missionary methods, as the seventies are preparing to do this year. High priests have their problems in pastoral work. The Department of Religious Education, the Department of Women, and of Music, all these have their specific problems which are studied during the conference. Thus to an extent the conference has become the church in school.

GENERAL CONFERENCE HAS NOT LOST ITS RIGHTS

Despite the changes noted, General Conference has not actually surrendered its rights and prerogatives. It remains true that any delegate may claim the floor, if he wills to do so and wishes to do so. Having obtained it, he may introduce resolutions, speak for or against any proposed legislation under discussion, or propose amendments. Not only that, having obtained the floor he may hold it as long as he wishes to do so, providing conference itself has not imposed a time limit, and further if he observes the rules of parliamentary practice and speaks to the question before the house or in its general direction. Under those conditions it would be difficult for anyone to take him from the floor. (He might almost even carry on a filibuster.) If there is a time limit on speeches, it is set by the conference itself. Moreover, any delegate may appeal from decisions of the chair and his appeal may be and sometimes is sustained.

A few years ago a young man stood up in a conference business meeting and said, “Mr. Chairman, may I have the floor?” President Smith recognized him in the usual way and then waited, but nothing happened. Finally President Smith said to the young man, “What was it you wished to say.” He replied, “I have nothing to say, I just wanted to see if I could get the floor.” He demonstrated to his own satisfaction that he could still get the floor.

DRAMATIC MOMENTS IN THE CONFERENCE

General Conference always begins with the singing of the hymn, “Redeemer of Israel, our only delight.” The use of this hymn at the opening service has become traditional. This number was included in our first Hymnal prepared by Emma Smith. It was used, I believe, at the dedication of Kirtland Temple. At the closing session the high point usually is the reading of missionary assignments. I remember what that used to mean to me when I sat on the edge of the chair and waited to hear where I would go for the conference period. After the appointments are read, the appointees and general officers come to the platform and unite in singing, “I’ll go where you want me to go, dear Lord, over mountain, or plain, or sea.” Those who are not sent on missions, including lay members, may join in that hymn, “I’ll go where you want me to go.” It may be the Lord wants us to go to church, to go and teach a class, to go into homes where there is sickness or want, to go and pay our tithing. We, too, may sing, “I’ll go where you want me to go, dear Lord, . . . I’ll say what you want me to say, I’ll be what you want me to be.”

RESPONSIBILITY OF DELEGATES AND MEMBERS

Time was when seating space was limited at General Conference business meetings, and sometimes people wanted to be delegates to be sure of a seat. Today there is plenty of seating room in the Auditorium, and anyway higher considerations should govern in the selection of delegates. They are to be the voice of the church when it comes to voting on important legislative matters. They should be regular in attendance at the various meetings of the conference, especially the business sessions. They should follow the discussions, read the reports, and think and pray that they may vote wisely. They should keep their heads and their tempers.

Finally all members of the church should pray for the coming conference, and all should work for peace and unity. We should not give too much heed to rumors that may be groundless and which are always in circulation about conference time. Let us wait to find out the facts before we talk too much. Finally, we should respect the actions of the conference when it speaks on given subjects. Unless we do so, we fail to respect our own legislative body. The majority's decisions must stand. If unwisely taken, they may be revised or reversed in course of time.

It has been said that the church is a "theocratic democracy." We believe in divine direction from on high, which is theocratic; but God gives us a right to speak for ourselves and exercise our agency, which is democratic. The two should merge. Let us pray and so live that the will of God may be revealed to us from on high and that our will expressed in conference may be in harmony with his will, so that the whole church may be enlightened and blessed and united.

Hearts' Gardens

Places of intense culture

Are the gardens of our hearts,
In quietness secluded
Far from moil of mill and mart.
Where we go to muse and ponder,
While emotions of the soul
Are receiving skillful culture
Under mind's supreme control.

Here we join an inner circle

Of our understanding friends;
And may laugh or weep together
As the spirit's unction tends.
Seeds of love we always plant here
Into Charity will bloom;
While a rainbow's hope disperses
All the clouds of doubt and gloom.

My heart's garden needs no fences

Or walls to make it mine;
The horizons are its borders,
Sun and stars from heaven shine
On the verdant life there growing
Free for all who care to see.
Although friends who tend heart's gardens
Share their culture most with me.

Facing the Future

By Hermann Peisker

From The Standard (Australia), December, 1945.

THE SUDDEN collapse of the position in the second great "World War," and the return to home and civilian life of millions of men and women from the services much earlier than anticipated, has not been favorable to the readjustments which have to be made to restore normal and stable peace time living. The strains and tensions which arise and remain, as the natural consequence of years of war, do not vanish in any magical way as the result of wishful hoping; either by a refusal to recognize and face them or by ignoring them.

There has been a tendency to regard our returning men and women as pathological cases which need to be studied and treated in a special way. It is hardly to be wondered at, if many have felt embarrassed and found it hard to begin adjustments under such a handicap. Our boys and girls are but the natural product of years of separation from home and loved ones and living under conditions of army, air, and navy life, for which man was not intended.

We of the home front are also the victims of years of changes and abnormal conditions which have come unsought in our civilian, national, home, and church life. Neither they nor we can take up life at the point where we parted, nor can we bridge the gap and suddenly dovetail our lives as though there had been no break.

The great and supreme necessity, as we face the future, is the "Spirit of Christ." We need the spirit of faith, so that we can adjust our lives, overcome all obstacles, and in the end return to a well-balanced, happy and normal domestic, social, economic, and spiritual condition of life.

We need courage to face and share our problems, our differences, and the separating and disintegrating forces which are seeking to overthrow and destroy stable personality, integrated home life, and organized Christian fellowship.

We need sympathy and love, so that with mutual tolerance and compassionate understanding, we can face each other and every situation and tension, allowing nothing to discourage us, separate us from each other or the great challenges to service, or to become indifferent to our eternal destiny.

We need ability and capacity to overcome any abnormal or one-sided developments of our personality, and to expand under the influence of the Spirit and "mind of Christ," as we share in Christian fellowship and environment, so that we may be fitted and fortified to assist in the reconstruction of the postwar world.

Both those who return and those who have remained on the home front are facing a new era in a rapidly changing world, for which we are more or less unprepared. Fundamental truths and principles may remain, but the old fabric of social, economic, moral, and religious life is in the melting pot. Unless we face the situation soberly, rather than with indifference, we will either become unstable, indifferent, and maladjusted, or we will completely fail to experience and enjoy the best life has to offer.

The call to ministry and service was never greater than it is today. Many have slipped their moorings and launched out upon uncertain and uncharted courses in life. Many have already made shipwreck of their earlier faith. Multitudes are perplexed as a result of leaving the sheltered life of Christian homes and associations with untested, unapplied, and unchallenged modes of thought and life, to face in real life the reverse of all they were taught to believe and cherish. Can the Church of Jesus Christ and the ministry meet this urgent need? Can we help those who have shed their swaddling clothes and who have not yet been able to assume the garb of mature, adjusted, and stabilized social, moral, and spiritual life?

The fate of the individual, family and home, the group, the nation, the church, and all humanity, as well as the social, economic, physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of the race is at stake today. The immediate future will determine the destiny of the human race for centuries to come.

In the wilderness of confusion, the church, members and ministry, are called and challenged to provide leadership. As "the Light of the World," the Church of Jesus Christ, which God has called "out of the wilderness," must apply with clear vision, the "mind" and "Spirit" of Christ to all problems. It must "bind up the brokenhearted," "give sight to the blind" "make the lame to walk," "release those in prison" and in any other form of bondage, and provide a ministry and environment which will meet the needs of all men today. The church must serve the present generation or lose her destiny.

Inspiration

By Barbara Hunt

On a lost and lonely ridge I stood
And looked with awe, upon a wondrous view
Around me, the deep and everlasting wood Pressed close, as it had been for centuries.

Above me, piled ridge on ridge, higher and higher,
And ever upward, lifted the eternal mountains,
Each rising, reaching, striving to lift nigher
To the ever-arching dome of spreading skies.

Oh soul of mine! bound to the earth,
Take courage from the lifting mountains.
Find yourself, Oh soul of mine, in a new birth
And climbing ever upward, lift yourself to heaven.

This Same Jesus

By Ernest E. Crownover

THE DISCIPLES began their religious experience by worshipping under the leadership of a carpenter turned Savior. We begin by giving allegiance to a King upon whose shoulders has been placed the government of creative law. So powerful was the doctrine that this carpenter brought to men that in a tiny and weak nation, subject for centuries to foreign powers and living under an iron military rule, his gospel—his concept of men's relations with each other and with God—broke all bounds, survived all efforts at destruction and even inward heresy and apostasy to become by all odds the most potent force in human affairs in all history.

To believe in Jesus Christ is not a social convention, it is a compelling necessity. And that soul which has not sensed this fact is as yet unborn, and may well take the name of Nicodemus. Even after we begin to see and hear and believe this Messiah, periods of human weakness will be encountered when we are vexed sorely by loss of contact with that force we have learned to depend upon so entirely. At such times there is not one but shall make some footprints in the sands of the Emmaus road. Forlorn indeed is the lot of that man who does not, with the two disciples, eventually realize that the Savior trod the path at his side.

If no man ventured into the deep reaches of Christ until he knew, no city of God would ever be populated. For we walk by a faith and knowledge as yet imperfect. Jesus and his gospel are perfect, able to save the souls of men. But our knowledge of him, our experiences with him, are immature.

THE LOVE OF JESUS is a great river flowing forever through our days. How is it that any man can be unconscious of such a tremendous tide? As a pilgrim may follow a river to his objective, so may we follow the love of Jesus to our destiny. How careless we are to divert upon meandering tributaries, when the mighty flood of the full stream flows plainly in view! To this day, Jesus is an unexplored entity; like an uncharted land, known only in general outline and major detail. Humanity awaits the quest of the pathfinders to find full access to treasures and resources unbounded and uncounted. Some prophets have seen this Jesus-land and described the laws and procedures to follow if one is to take up citizenship there. But this great land lies fallow, unused—awaiting settlers pioneering in spirit, ready in sacrifice, of abounding courage to dare and to do.

If one would leave the tributaries of life and follow the floodtide, he must follow the chart. Jesus has said "I am the way."<sup>1</sup> He is the full stream of life. Other forces and movements are merely tributary, and if one follows them he shall lose his way. The good shepherd gave his life for all; all must trust their souls to him. After Jesus is accepted as the personal Savior, his organization, which he utilizes to bind men to each other and to God must also be accepted. Christ resolved: "I will build my church."<sup>2</sup> The churches which existed at the mid-time, although they anticipated a Messiah, rejected the Savior and were rejected by him. So he built his own church. This church, he said, was his body, possessing his life.

We may well believe that Christ would organize his church with care and concern. He would set it up and invest it exactly as it should be—nothing wanting, nothing superfluous. He set in his church apostles, prophets and teachers;<sup>3</sup> high priests;<sup>4</sup> elders;<sup>5</sup> seventies;<sup>6</sup> bishops and deacons;<sup>7</sup> evangelists and pastors.<sup>8</sup> And why should he place all these in his church? We quote: "That we . . . may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."<sup>9</sup> And what were the priesthood to finally accomplish? What was their need? "For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."<sup>10</sup> And, since some churches still have some of these officers while others have decided many are superfluous, we may see how long these officers were to minister in Christ's church: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."<sup>11</sup> From this it is probable that the careful and thoughtful reader will decide that Christ's church should be extant today, and that it should have a full complement of officers ministering to the end of unity in salvation. Beware of those churches which have "transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant."<sup>12</sup> God is unchanging; we may assume his Son is like him. No man will be able to foist a counterfeit church upon the bridegroom as being his bride.

Jesus will demand, we may be sure, that "This gospel of the kingdom"<sup>13</sup> be preached at all times, including the last days. No changed ordinances of baptism, conveyance of Holy Ghost, stilled voice of prophetic foresight or interpretation of law will escape his notice or condemnation and rejection. He will receive no bride who has been so immoral as to have consorted with the "Kings of the earth,"<sup>14</sup> or to have lowered her standards to fit into any society below that outlined by her bridegroom. And this returning Jesus, unchanged since going away, will demand the fruition of the high standard of conduct accepted by his followers. No lost talents can be rediscovered. No buried talents will suffice. The force of creative growth requires that his investment in men shall be returned in full maturity.

Jesus vested his followers with a gospel law capable of converting them from flesh and blood into eternal beings, capable of causing the believer to react invariably and rightly to any circumstance. He gave a personal demonstration that this gospel is the answer to the most pressing emergency. He even went beyond the grave to show that the gospel redeems from disaster, that death itself is impotent when arrayed against his powers.

Today is our day of salvation. Tomorrow our probationary period will have ended. The unchanging Jesus requires our answer while we live. And, as he makes always the same demands upon his disciples, he is likewise unchanging in the treasures he grants the obedient: "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God."<sup>15</sup>

A Note to Pastors

From a Separation Company Chaplain

The church has always prided itself on being close to people at times of change and crisis in their lives: at birth, graduation, marriage, and death. Discharge from the service is such a time of crisis in a young person's life, and gives the church a real responsibility and opportunity.

Having served with these Marines who are leaving from this separation center, and talking to them as they go through here, we believe we have a few suggestions which may help you grasp this opportunity:

1. The veteran will be a social person. He is used to living and working in groups, and if his church does not help supply his social needs, he will seek them elsewhere.

2. The veteran will be a man of action. He will be impatient with those who only talk, and do not act. If the church is to keep his loyalty, it must put him to work.

3. While there has been no great religious revival in the service, many men have had real experiences of the things the church talks about—self-sacrifice, loyalty, devotion, responsibility, communion with God. He knows that these things make up the heart of his religion, and will only be repelled by a shallow "Anti—" attitude in the church. A quotation from a Seattle newspaper of 1919 gives the best statement of this:

"... the soldier wants a militant, courageous, forward-looking church that comes into intimate touch with humanity and its problems, certainly an abrupt change from the conventional, devotional, self-contained and conservative ideas that have dominated so many of the great church bodies."

We firmly believe that much of the church's future is tied up with the question of whether it will understand the veteran and go to bat for him. Out of a mass of material we have chosen these four things, worthy of the study of any pastor who wants to do his share:

Two excellent books: Willard Waller, The Veteran Comes Back; Dixon Wechter, When Johnny Comes Marching Home.

The Church and Returning Service Personnel Pamphlets. Available at 10c each from LITERATURE DEPARTMENT Federal Council, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York City. (We especially recommend No. 4, "Welcoming the Wounded," by Harold Wilke.)

Demobilization Bulletins, by J. Gordon Chamberlain, available at 50c per year from, Room 401, 810 Broadway, Nashville 2, Tennessee. These are always up to date and furnish information on the most vital problems from the church's point of view.

JAMES M. BUTLER,
Chaplain, Marine Separation Co.

Man feels himself an infinity above those creatures who stand, zoologically, only one step below him, but every human being looks up to the birds. They suit the fancy of us all. What they feel they can voice, as we try to; they court and nest, they battle with the elements, they are torn by two opposing impulses, a love of home and a passion for far places. Only with birds do we share so much emotion.—Donald Culross Peattie, Singing in the Wilderness.

"As Having Authority" By Lorne F. White

Part III

THERE ARE those who think that something is gained by forcing tiresome persons from the church. It's true that such action is sometimes necessary. But it is a tragedy. It is not ground gained, but rather lost when the church is forced to exert legal authority and divine discernment in the expulsion of a member. Still it is necessary at times to exercise that authority in order to preserve the whole, just as it is necessary to remove a beautiful-appearing tree in order to shield the adjacent growths from the disease it may possess. Such action, of necessity, should come only after all other efforts fail—and then only to preserve the integrity and function of the church—certainly not as a personal punishment to the expelled member. His loss is also the loss of the church, and it is not necessary nor wise to label the action as a disciplinary one, but rather as a regrettable extremity.

AUTHORITY IN PRIESTHOOD

Another aspect of the legal authority of the church is the calling, ordination, and regulation of the priesthood. The gifts of the gospel, through which the divine calls will come, are in their final analysis, functions of the church. Although not limited to members of the priesthood, still for the purpose of safety, their exercise lies under the supervision of the priesthood in its presiding capacity. Although the authority of the priesthood is committed to man by God, and is church-wide in its scope, still through the operation of common consent and the gift of discernment, limitations have been placed upon their administrative function, geographically speaking. In the same way many have been chosen to exercise administrative authority over others who have, under God, the identical priestly authority. This was essential because order and organization are necessary in the function of the church. Her voice is heeded through the miracle of her origin and message. It would be fatal for that voice to be drowned in the clamor of conflicting voices within her ranks. Thus, a limitation has been placed upon the administrative authority of the rank and file of her priesthood in order to ensure efficiency in the overall function of the church.

Very often this apparent surrender of authority has been interpreted as an usurpation of authority on the part of one who has been placed in a superior responsibility. Of course, this is not true and indicates a regrettable condition.

It has been argued that the church has not the authority to place a member of the priesthood under "disciplinary silence." Such a statement is indicative of a general ignorance of the extent of church authority. True, God has called a priest, but the church gives him the commission in ordination. And what it gives it can recall. A call from God is the first requisite of a member of the priesthood, but it is not the last. A call must meet the approval of the church before it can be confirmed through ordination and the priest sent forth to minister in a new responsibility.

It is within the scope of the authority of the church to ensure that its priesthood shall fulfill the function of ministers called of God. If a member of that priesthood does not do what he has been ordained to do, he is a failure. When he has no zeal for souls, no charity for the backslider, no sympathy for the sorrowful, and no tolerance for the contradiction of his own theories, his very existence is blasphemy and his preaching a presumption.

It is for them to work and live as the very ministers of God; to live as Christ lived, teaching people, sharing their joys and sorrows, blessing their infants, baptizing their children, denying themselves to no one, speaking forth the spirit of vision and prophetic insight which is an integral part of the calling. As has been said before, to ensure that the priesthood do function in accordance with the command of God is definitely part of the authority of the church.

"God set in the church." Such is the affirmation of appointment of those chosen to actively function in spiritual and legal authority. This affirmation became a fact when the apostolate was formed as a continuing function. Despite urgings to the contrary, many were added to the twelve including Paul and Barnabas, and they were the rulers of the church administering its spiritual and legal authority to the betterment of man's nature. However, we must remember the church was prior to the apostles because it was a creation of God while the apostles were the instruments used by God to perpetuate his creation.

It is understandable that the legal authority of the church is limited by the very nature of its jurisdiction. Primarily it has power over the spiritual life of its membership. Its authority over physical things is limited to that portion of the physical existence which impinges upon the spiritual nature of man. It is implied in the function of the church that it continually raise a protesting voice against everything which becomes a barrier between man and God.

THE DUTY OF AUTHORITY

We cannot rightfully speak of the rights and authority of the church without speaking of its duty. The church exists in a world of human need. How often we, who form the church, attempt to close our eyes to the need. How often do we cultivate indifference that we may not be sensitive? We become conscious of the needs of others only to become more conscious of self and do as the priest and Levite—"Pass on to the other side," because we think of the cost to us in helping. As a church we often look upon the masses of people today and are apt to turn away in disgust. There are all sorts of people there, good, bad, wise, foolish, strong, and weak. In confusion, tempered with despair, we turn away from it all and become increasingly engrossed in our own affairs. The world around us is so full of people that we really see only a few faces—the rest are mere shadowy masses. However, there can be no mass humanity with the church. Beneath calloused exteriors lie feelings that can only be reached by the power of God. The church must reach those hearts.

The mission of the church and the price of its authority are clear. It is not only to minister to man's spiritual needs but also to his physical needs, in a very real manner. It must extend its authority into all fields of human need. Few lives are without tragedy in any day; today whole races share common tragic destinies. Populations slowly starving to death with ill will and hatred threatening to engulf civilization.

Now that the roar of cannon and the crash of bursting bomb have died away, there are heard on every hand the cries of compassion. All through the horrible episode the cries ascended, scarce heard above the roar of the conflict. There was little that could be done at that time. Now we have an opportunity, in fact a challenge, so urgent that its import should bring us to our knees in prayer for wisdom, strength, and means equal to the task. Not all such cries come from the lips of our allies and our own people. No, some will come from the parched lips and bleeding hearts of those who were not long since our mortal enemies.

We wonder if the church is in the spiritual and physical position to employ its divine authority in the task of saving these people. To go to them with the gospel of love, healing their hate-ridden hearts and their war-ridden bodies. We wonder?

The church cannot abdicate or delegate the responsibilities that its divine origin has thrust upon it. It cannot take shelter behind ramparts of past accomplishments or suppose that a collective pronouncement of high ideals and intentions can by itself and on all occasions take the place of action. Very seldom has the average church member sensed the place of the church in society. It is wrongly assumed that the church has not the right to intrude her voice into the affairs of men and nations. But unless the church is prepared and willing to give attention to the many social and economic problems that are and will be troubling the world, it will fail to give adequate leadership to the membership and others who would otherwise seek its direction. Far too often we are found quarreling about some obscure point of privilege while the world remains a crawling mess.

THE VALUE OF AUTHORITY

It is quite safe to say that no event, or group of events, has had such a far-reaching effect upon religious thought, with the exception to the birth and ministry of Christ, as the restoration of the gospel and the organization of the church. Such a claim is not the glib statement of overzealous members, but, in the light of modern theology and thought, it is the reluctant verdict of men of all faiths. This may not be evident in a mere casual observation, however, as many of the teachings of the church which had been most strongly opposed, are now accepted as truth; this imitation may well be interpreted as assent, reluctant though it may have been at the point of introduction.

No one, not even our own leaders, can estimate the influence the restored church has exerted upon religious thought and interpretation. It is unfortunate that very few, including our own membership, have taken the effort to trace that influence to its source. The church has left behind it an enviable record of devotion and intellectual development. Appearing as it did in a period of history when bigotry and ironclad tradition had fearfully corroded religious thought, it dared to challenge the right of men to interpret the ways of God, and fearlessly asserted the principle of revelation as a continual process in the living church. It has launched forth on a campaign from which there could be no turning back.

In order that we might attempt to determine the secret of such influence, coming as it does from the comparatively small body of people that constitutes its membership, it becomes necessary to understand something of the extent of its authority. The very fact of its existence in the world implies that the church must and does exert a tremendous influence and manifests an all-embracing authority.

There are many in the church who advocate an isolation policy insofar as our relationship with other religious groups is concerned, arguing that as a church we should remain aloof from all other bodies on even a moral basis. If questioned, they base their views upon the necessity of preserving the identity and individuality of the church. Consequently we strongly suspect that much of their concern arises from the inferiority complex from which we have suffered for many years. This apparent zeal for the protection of the faith is too often interpreted in the minds of our observers, and we have them, as a fear of comparison and a sense of inferiority to the deep-rooted traditionally bound "orthodox" churches.

We need not fear for the preservation of the church, the narrowing of its influence, nor the stifling of its authority through any association or comparison with other agencies or religious organizations. Its divine origin, its doctrine, and its authoritative priesthood all combine to give the church a unique and powerful position in a gainsaying world, a position which carries with it a tremendous authority whether we care to recognize it or not. The very position of the church in society demands that it exert its influence and enforce its authority in all matters pertaining to the welfare of man. Much of our difficulty does not arise from the fact that the church has been tried and found wanting. Rather it has been wanted, but seldom tried.

THE END.

theirs, and plan war, but we can take steps that will lead to peace.

Two ideas will help to build the peace. One is the idea of local autonomy. The other is the idea of national responsibility. If we can quit trying to boss each other around, if we can quit trying to rob and take advantage of each other in commerce, if we can be satisfied with equality and mutual welfare, we shall all be happier and more secure.

What we need, above and beyond all the practical considerations, is the voice of authority, a divine imperative, to command us and lead us forward in a new kind of march toward a new kind of civilization—a Christian civilization. "God hath made of one blood all nations"—"All ye are brothers"—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." These are the messages that the world needs. And somebody must carry such messages to the world. It is our privilege to be the bearers of such wonderful messages.

Corrections for a New Printing of the Inspired Version

The Herald Publishing House desired to have, as nearly as possible a perfect piece of work in the publication of the most recent edition of the Inspired Version of the Bible. It was necessary, under existing conditions, to have it printed by an outside publisher. Proofs were read by the publisher's proofreaders, and by a special proofreader employed by the Herald Publishing House.

In spite of all care, a number of errors are present in this edition. Now that a new printing has become necessary, it is desired to try again for a perfect job of printing.

We are asking our readers to call to our attention any kind of error they may have observed in the book: in spelling, broken type, or wording. No previous version has been free of errors, but if we keep trying we can steadily eliminate them.

The mistakes below have been called to our attention by numbers of people. Please do not bother to write if the errors you have noted are contained in this list. But if you have found others, please write us about them, giving proper reference by book, chapter, verse, and page.

Page 7, paragraph 9—"Blessed be the man" should read, "Blessed be the name."

Page 19, Genesis 6: 4—"sacrifice unto his brother" should read, "sacrifice like unto."

Page 28, Genesis 7: 82—a "y" should be inserted to make the number read "seven hundred and eighty-two years."

Page 705, Psalm 46: 9—"He maketh wars to ease" should read, "He maketh wars to cease."

Page 1092, Matthew 6: 10—should read, "Our Father who art." Verse 29—should read, "for they sow not." Verse 34—"Wherefore" should read, "Therefore."

Page 1104, Matthew 13: 34—"That is" should read, "That it."

Page 1165, Luke 3: 1—a broken letter "h" should be replaced so that the line will read, "high priests."

Page 1339, Ephesians 5: 7—"Be ye therefore" has a word omitted, and should read, "Be not ye."

Page 1355, I Timothy 2: 15—"they shall be saving" should read, "they shall be saved."

Page 1416, Revelation 21: 8—"With fire and grimstone" should read, "with fire and brimstone."

Let's Not Go Adrift

We talked to a Navy man the other day and in the course of our conversation he used the term "go adrift" and it aroused our curiosity. To "go adrift" means to be absent from the ship without leave and after 14 days adrift the person becomes a deserter. If the person misses his ship he is considered adrift until the ship returns or he joins it some way.

We thought of the application to many of us. We from time to time go adrift from our church and its program. Sometimes we remain adrift so long that we surely become deserters, and because of our own selfish desires we find our church ship has gone onward upon its voyage and left us behind. We find it takes a lot of effort to catch up to gain our place on the ship once more. Sometimes we go adrift thinking the ship will not be too far away to catch, but we find it travels faster than we expected.

It seems justifiable to the servicemen today to go adrift that holidays may be spent with loved ones, but the church ship is still engaged in battle where there is no justification; we are still battling evil, selfishness, poverty, ignorance and many other strong enemies.

Our job is to preach the word to every nation (Rev. 14: 6) and that means that everyone in our city through our efforts should be given the choice of accepting or rejecting the Gospel as we know it. This they cannot do unless someone explains it to them that they may understand.

During this year let us never "go adrift" but be always at our station ready to carry on the directions of "The Commander" of the ship.

No mystery is quite like the mystery of a river bend, as no curve is quite so beautiful. When you are a boy on your first river voyage you do not pray for an arrow-like course, you welcome each curve as a fresh revelation of romance. When the river bend has lost its charm, then you may know you are middle-aged, indeed, and fit only for automobiles and a luxurious hotel at night.—Walter Prichard Eaton in Scribner's.

The Conference Program

PLANS of the Department of Religious Education for the 1946 General Conference are rapidly maturing. Under the challenging slogan—"Religious Education Faces a New Day"—there is to be presented an array of daily classes, workshop studies and activities, and an attractive and complete exhibit of materials.

Infused in the total program of the department will be the spirit and objectives of the general church program as set forth by the leading quorums of the church. These leaders have been asked to present to the department the high lights of the church program for the coming two years, and to suggest ways in which religious education can contribute to the total endeavor. We desire to assume full responsibility as religious education workers in carrying our share of the load.

Not only as a point of departure in our thinking, but influencing all considerations throughout the week, therefore, will be the enthusiastic but practical viewpoint: Reasonable expectations in the ongoing church program. The following points to guide the thinking of the department are at present under consideration by the general officers and quorums responsible for these particular areas:

1. Reasonable contribution of religious education to the pastoral program—under consideration of the First Presidency.
2. Reasonable contribution of religious education to the gathering and the financial and stewardship program—under consideration of the Presiding Bishopric.
3. Reasonable contribution of religious education to evangelism—under consideration of the Quorum of Twelve.

4. Reasonable contribution of religious education to the educational program in general—under consideration of A. R. Gilbert, president of Graceland College.

The results of these considerations will be presented in the April issue of Guide-Lines to Leadership which will also carry a detailed overview of the workshop and class programs.

The "workshop course" that will be conducted at 8:30 each morning during the week will review briefly the history, what has happened recently, what is new, and just pure speculation in each of the areas listed. It will be noted that these daily programs are timely and thought-provoking. The questions to be considered are:

- What's next for church schools?
- What's next for Scouts, Orioles, Blue Birds, etc?
- What's next for Zion's League?
- What's next for camping?
- What's next for visual aids?
- What's next for leadership?

How frequently we hear and glibly repeat: "The church and home must co-operate!" But how often this statement becomes an end in itself. Perhaps we do little about our asseverations because, speaking frankly, we do not know what to do nor how to do it. This condition has been taken into consideration in the plans made. Conference classwork under the theme, "The Home and Church Work Together," will stress through the "know-how" aspect.

TOPICS FOR CLASS DISCUSSION

- The Latter Day Saint Home.
- The Church and the Home in Mutual Endeavor.
- Young Adults and Zion's Homes.
- Guiding the Adolescent in the Family.
- Pastoral Program for Safeguarding Marriage and the Family.
- Guiding the Growth of Children.
- Does It Make Any Difference?
- The Church's Part in Adult Education.

At the eleven o'clock hour, the young people of the church and their leaders will meet to consider problems of interest and significance to the Zion's League and its program, under the direction of Elder Roy A. Cheville. The theme chosen is: "How Shall We Do These Things?" More detailed information about this youth program will be forthcoming in the near future.

The Kingdom Before the End

By J. A. Koehler

ONE OF THE danger-zones of Christian religions is the general idea of "the end" of the world which Christendom has blended with the idea of "the second coming" of Jesus. There is a strong tendency to make fanciful interpretations of what Bible writers said about that question. And that tendency is dangerous because it turns the energies of the church away from the task to which it should be devoted.

The Christian twist is not clearly manifest in the writings of the Old Testament. Malachi did say that "the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple"—which does not imply that the temple will be built suddenly. Zechariah said that "the Lord shall come, and all his saints with him." But the thoughts of the great prophets of the coming Kingdom were about "the work" which their peoples should do, "the temple" which they should build, in preparation for the second coming. For, as the Restoration prophet expressed it, the Kingdom must "go forth" if the Kingdom is to "come."

It is not improbable that the tendency to put fanciful interpretations on the proclamations of "the end" and "the coming" arose from the Kingdom-building delinquency of Israel and of Christendom, and the wish to be delivered from the human suffering which that delinquency has caused. For the great prophets who willingly accepted the responsibility of building God's Kingdom on earth did not have the fanciful ideas of "the end" which are so characteristic of Christians in general.

BOTH St. Paul and St. John the Divine, seem to have thought that human affairs were in such a hopeless state that the only way out was for the Almighty to put an end to the whole business. And they seemed to have believed that the Lord Jesus Christ would do that by destroying the world with the brightness and the suddenness and the power of his second "coming." The Christian ideas of "the end" seem to have been derived from that Pauline idea of the destruction to take place "with the brightness of his coming," and that apocalyptic portrayal of "a new heaven and a new earth."

St. Paul, it should be remembered, is not to be counted as a Kingdom-building prophet. Nor is St. John the Divine noted for the profundity of his Kingdom-coming "conception." He is, rather, a "predictor" of Kingdom-coming events, an imparter of Kingdom-building information. And yet the writings of these two men have had most to do with shaping Christendoms ideas about "the end" and "the coming."

THOSE IDEAS are not all the same. They are various. Some are inconsistent with other beliefs of the same religions. Some who say they believe in the agency of man, in the freedom of the moral will, say also that at "the coming," the Lord will take over the business of man—which is the business of establishing the righteousness of God's Kingdom—and make it go as he wishes it to go. They do not say so in precisely those words. But that is the meaning, roughly, of what they say. The truth is that some do not know what they mean.

That is not the ancient voice of prophecy. Nor is it the modern voice. Even Malachi said "I [the Lord] will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." Micah and Isaiah say plainly that the transformation of human society to conform to the will of God shall be made by the wills of peoples, of the nations. And one as the other says—though all do not say it in the same words—that before the coming of the Lord there shall be made straight "in the desert [of our civilization] a highway" for our God; that "his work [shall be done] before him"—before the Lord God shall come. All say that "the end" is to come through man's mastery of his business under God. They could not say otherwise without contradicting the most basic of all religious beliefs, namely, that man is accountable, responsible to God, for his conduct, or that man shapes his own destiny by his own free moral willing.

THE PRAYER of the genius of Restoration, which Latter Day Saints believe to be the modern voice of prophecy, is "May the Kingdom of God go forth, that [or in order that] the Kingdom of heaven may come"; that God may be glorified on earth as in heaven. The modern voice of prophecy confirms the ancient voice.

Ancient prophecy says that the Lord shall "suddenly" come to his temple. The temple of the Lord is his dwelling place. All the prophets say that Zion is God's dwelling place. But they do not say that the temple shall arise suddenly with the Lord's coming. They only say that it shall be built before his coming. They say that the Kingdom shall be established before the end.

This is the way the modern voice of prophecy in interpreting the ancient voice, put it: "Righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle [God's temple], and it shall be called Zion"—Zion shall be built before the end.

There is much testimony to that effect. And what can it mean other than the Kingdom shall come before "the end" shall come? It can only mean that the stage must be set for "the coming" of the Lord through the establishment of the righteousness of his Kingdom.

The modern voice of prophecy expresses the same idea in these words, too: "If you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves [for that place] by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you." And there can be no doubt about it: what he was saying is that before "the end," the Kingdom must come.

THERE ARE NOT a few ways of summing up the message of prophecy. What it all means is that "the end" of the ways of peoples which damn them must come through the beginnings of ways that save them. It means that the end of the bad may be brought to pass only through the beginnings of the good. It means that the way to destroy the ugly ways of peoples is to promote the beautiful. It means that Babylon shall fall as Zion arises. It means that the way to abolish iniquity is to establish righteousness. It means, as the ancient voice of prophecy says, that the crooked ways of peoples must be made straight through the accomplishment of "the warfare" of "My people." It means that God's Kingdom must come before there can be an "end" of our present ungodly ways of conducting the business of peoples—which is the business of self-governance. It means that while "his reward is with him" (it shall be with him at his coming) "his work [is] before him." It means that before the end the Kingdom shall come.

Does that make sense? What reason can there be for expecting that "the Lord shall come" before the stage is set for his coming? How could the Lord come suddenly to a temple, a tabernacle, that had not been builded? How is it possible that the Kingdom of God shall meet the Kingdom of Heaven when it shall come, if the Kingdom of God is not to be builded before "the end"? before "his coming"?

When you add up the testimony of prophecy, both modern and ancient, does it not equal precisely what Jesus said? "And this gospel [which means this 'good news'] of the Kingdom shall be preached [it shall be proclaimed, that is] as a witness [in a convincing manner] to all nations; and then shall the end come."

This is not an academic question. I am interested in this question, as I intimated at the outset, because of its bearings upon the quality of all religious life. I am interested because its wrong beliefs about "the end" and "the coming" that have led to the wrong ways of conducting human affairs that cause so much human misery. I am interested in this question because human life shall never be enriched, because there can be no preparation for eternity, except through willing to do the will of God on earth—which is, simply, devotion to the business of His Kingdom. I am interested because I believe that it is only through true beliefs about "the end" and "the coming" that there can be either an end or a coming. I am interested because I believe the voice of prophecy, both modern and ancient, which says that, to reach the end, there must be a beginning of Kingdom-coming.

Looking On By Wilbur K. Sartwell

For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

—Mark 8: 36, 37.

I barely heard him try to say,
"What's life all about?"
Then suddenly he passed away,
And now he's finding out.

Most men, despite their religious beliefs, do not feel the proximity of God to them on this earth until that fateful time comes when they are nearing death. To some it must surely be a happy time, but to others, undoubtedly, it brings a sad and fearful state of mind.

In most cases the members of their family also feel the power of the divine creator more distinctly. They are always left wondering. The bewilderment of the death, however, whether it be a sudden or a natural and expected one, disappears to the same degree as does the sting of the sorrow of the loss.

When I was a little fellow, I overheard a discussion of the adult Sunday school class, in which the teacher was pointing out from the lesson that a death should be considered a time of rejoicing instead of one of weeping and grieving. It seemed to me, at that time, that this was an impossible point of view, and I didn't see how I would ever be able to look on it in that light even though I knew that some day, I, too, would be a member of that class and would meet this discussion again.

Of course, I can now see this philosophy in its true meaning, as any Christian does. The grief of the loss of a dear one cannot be suppressed by such a philosophy, but it is comforting to have faith that a deceased one's soul is going back to its Creator.

If someone could die, undergo the post-mortem spiritual conversion and then be returned physically to the earth to tell of his experiences, it would solve a lot of questions that thinking men of today are asking.

But that would destroy the purpose of living.

"God and Country" Award Badges Now Ready

The attractive and richly symbolic badge (see cut) is now available to the church to be granted to Boy Scouts who have complied with the requirements of the church for the "God and Country" award.

The first Court of Honor ceremony to be held by our church for the purpose of granting this special award in religion will be held during the coming General Conference some time during the week of April 6 to 14.

We are already assured of a splendid group of candidates. Any pastor, scoutmaster, or parents knowing of Scouts who are anticipating the completion of their requirements and the receiving of this special award at the time of General Conference should notify the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, at once. The name and address of such Scout or Scouts should be included.

Young Adults in Stake Organization

(This outline was received with Far West Stake news, and should be of value to young adult church groups everywhere. Editors.)

Early last year the young adults were organized, and a council of seven members was elected to assume the responsibilities of leadership. For several months the council under the leadership of the Stake Young Adult Supervisor and the Stake Presidency has developed general objectives which catch up and give emphasis to the basic goals for the young adults.

A booklet has been printed and is now available. The general objectives are as follow:

1. A trained and functioning stake council.
2. A trained and functioning corps of local leaders.
3. A missionary program in which special emphasis is given to personal evangelism, baptism of children, and uniting of family circles.
4. Every young adult an active member.
5. Every home to establish the family altar and read our church literature.

The Objectives for Far West Stake

6. A participation in civic affairs and acceptance of community responsibility.
7. A "Home Education Program" in co-operation with the women's and religious education departments.
8. A program to develop more skilled, trained, and consecrated workers and leaders for the various departments in the stake.
9. A growing and ever-expanding concept and appreciation of stewardships and the process of the gathering.
10. A participation in and appreciation for the fine arts and academic education.
11. A program to promote (1) Better farming and business methods; (2) personal thriftiness and industry.
12. A recognition of responsibility to support and participate in the other departments and organizations of the congregation and stake.
13. A growing understanding and practice of rearing, training, and teaching the children of our homes in ethics, morals, sex education, health, management, and beauty.

14. A growing understanding and conviction of God and his purpose for us through prayer, study, and service.

Our People In the News

George Hopkins of Tulsa, Oklahoma

George Hopkins, who serves the church in the office of priest, is Traffic Chief and Assistant Chief of Police in Enid, Oklahoma, a city of 28,000 population in 1940, and considerably augmented since that time. Clippings that are sent to us by friends tell of his fine work in public safety, especially in his work with the children, among whom he seems to be almost as popular as Santa Claus, according to the reports of parents.

Brother Hubert Case, our veteran missionary who has served so long and so well, stopped at the office to pay tribute to Brother Hopkins, and tells us that in addition to his work at the church, Brother Hopkins is a welcomed speaker at all the schools, at the leading churches and civic organizations, and at Phillip's University, which is located in the city. He not only deals with problems of safety, but also gives addresses on temperance and other subjects of importance and interest to the citizens. At the same time he has a great influence for good on the younger generation.

Ina Inez Smith Wright

The recent death of Ina Wright robbed the church in Australia of one of its most picturesque characters. She was the granddaughter of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and daughter of Alexander H. Smith, at one time of the Presidency of the Church and its presiding patriarch. She was a sister to Frederick A. Smith, once a member of the Twelve, and later Presiding Patriarch. President Frederick M. Smith is her cousin.

She did not gain so much of the church limelight as did her sister Vida, who married Heman C. Smith, a former Apostle and Church Historian. She elected to become the bride of an Australian missionary, S. G. Wright, and to spend the remainder of her life in this country. She thus was isolated from her own people, except for an all-too-brief visit to the United States and a short visit from her father in 1902.

As her five sons—Claude K., Leland E., Edgar M., Warran A., and Byron—and her five daughters—Vida Fethers, Mavis Gleeson, Marion Ballard, Gwen Fieldsend, and Glory Glasscock, mourn their great loss, there must be a joyful pride mixed with their sorrow—pride in the brave woman who mothered them.

W. J. Haworth, in The Standard (Australia), for December, 1945. (Adapted.)

From the Saints in Wellsburg, West Virginia

We are looking forward to the new year with enthusiasm. Our possibilities are great, and our desires are good. With God's help our aim is to be co-workers with him in building the kingdom.

A marked degree of the Holy Spirit was present at our Communion service. The elders in charge were O. J. Tary, S. M. Zonker, Willard Allen, R. E. Rodgers, and Otto Melcher, assisted by Priests John Treiber and Paul Lannum. The spirit of testimony contributed to the success of the service. Pastor Zonker presented a challenging sermon at 11 o'clock, reminding us that we have a new, clean record sheet to begin our service to Christ for the coming year. Elder R. E. Rodgers occupied the pulpit in the evening with an inspiring sermon on "Repentance." He stressed the need of both sinners

NOTICE TO REPORTERS

Because of the generous efforts of reporters, the news columns are becoming crowded. Since some reports contain more testimony than news, we are transferring them to the letter department, where there is a shortage. We would like to have them written separately, but we think this means will help solve the problem.

and righteous men to repent.

John Treiber selected as his subject, "God will lift me up, if—" and then proceeded to present in an instructive manner the blessings that are in store for us if we but obey His commands.

The women have decided to meet in the homes of various members in the future. Sister Mary Allen is to present a book review on The Call at Evening. In their various activities, the women have made and sold novelty laundry bags, basket linings, and Christmas cards.

The Zion's League presented a solemn and impressive candlelighting service interspersed with appropriate music. The Leaguers, under the leadership of John Treiber, have many plans and projects for the future.

The Live Wire class met at the home of Otto Melcher, class president. Genevieve Zonker presided, with the assistance of class teacher, Willard Melcher, who had charge of recreation.

A minstrel to be held by the women's department in the near future is being planned by the ways and means committee, Lenora Nixon, Leona Hanes, and Sophie Chadwell.

Elder Otto Melcher, recently discharged from the service, chose as his theme, "Forgiveness," on the Sunday evening of January 20. The Saints were happy to welcome him back . . . a testimony that God does hear and answer prayer. Conrad Criss also received his discharge from the armed forces.

A fitting close to the month of January was the visit of Elder and Sister Winters of Fayette, Pennsylvania. Elder Winters occupied the pulpit at both the morning and evening services, delivering forceful challenges to all within the sound of his voice.

God has abundantly blessed us in our Wednesday evening prayer services with the comforting influence of his Holy Spirit. We have many requests for prayers for the sick, and we desire to be remembered by readers of the Herald that we may keep high the standards and ideals of this marvelous work entrusted to us and continue to be the worthy recipients of his love and blessings. ### Single? What of It?

By Edna Easter

(After reading Anonymous' article, "Why Don't You Get Married?")

In his great plan for life, I don't believe it makes one whit of difference to God or to myself, when I go home after a day's work, whether I go down Lexington to Scott, or by way of Crysler to Twenty-third Street then to Scott. The main idea is that I arrive home without going out of my way. Similarly, as far as my one life is concerned, I don't believe it makes one iota of difference to God or to myself as long as I strive to work out his purposes in my life here, whether I travel Single Highway (we will call it) or decide to go by way of Double-harness Road, just so long as I arrive at his destination for me—the daily performing of the duties assigned to me, plus a Christlike attempt to help others.

I think this world has a place for a few "old maids," and rather than bemoaning my fate, there have been plenty of times I have been humbly thankful I was single as this seemed to offer a better opportunity for giving help where and when it was most desperately needed. I don't feel that I have narrowed my interest nor crawled into a shell. Far from it. I love life—all of it. I love children. Not long ago I was in the middle of the floor so enthusiastically joining with a three-year-old nephew in his imaginative world that his mother said to him as they were getting ready to leave, "Tell Aunt Edna if she is through playing with the toys you will help her put them away before we go!"

Yes, through the years I, too, have been the recipient of many and varied jokes about being an "old maid." In fact, I enjoy them—even add to them sometimes. Right now I have one of those old-maid comic valentines thumb-tacked on the bedroom wall. I may get it framed one of these days and hang it alongside a full color front-cover picture a brother sent me which shows a past-middle-aged dignified aristocratic-appearing woman conducting a flag service at a summer camp for girls!

Second Fiddle

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.—Ecclesiastes 9: 11.

SOME PEOPLE call it "second fiddle," but I call it taking advantage of an opportunity which someone else turned down.

Often I have heard remarks like this: "Of course he couldn't expect to have me agree to do it when he knew that I knew he had already asked someone else." And the person who made that remark thinks himself virtuous because of his independence. The common feeling seems to be that if there is a job to be done and you are not the first one asked to do that job it is a disgrace. It is never a disgrace to give aid because someone else refused to do so.

A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.—Luke 10: 30.

And a certain priest came along, and saw that man. His condition was evident and in itself an appeal for help. The priest was the first one asked to give aid, but he refused. Then came a Levite, and the same mute appeal presented itself. He was the second person asked for aid, and he, too, refused to help. Next came a Samaritan, from a race hated by the Jews. The wounded man was a Jew, but the same appeal was present, and the Samaritan recognized the need. He may have seen the priest and the Levite pass, but he stopped and gave his aid. He played Third Fiddle!

I'VE BEEN ACCUSED of being soft or an easy mark because I've agreed to do something, knowing that other people have been asked before me and that they had refused. Early in my life I learned that a chance to serve was an opportunity whenever it came, even though others did not care to do it. During my last year in high school I participated in a number of musical activities. I knew that a near-by grammar school was soon to have a May-Day program and the principal had asked the high school teacher to supply a pianist for the occasion. I, personally, heard her ask three girls to go, and each in turn refused. I later heard that she had asked several other people, who, likewise, had refused for various reasons to go. In all likelihood I was about the eighth person asked to play for that program. I agreed to do so, and the teacher was visibly relieved of her disagreeable task of finding someone to play. I thought it would be good experience, since I someday wanted to become a music teacher.

This may sound like an Horatio Alger tale, but here's what happened. I went to the grammar school to play for the one program, and wound up (remember I was still a high school student) teaching music three days a week at that school. Upon graduation I had planned to work for a couple of years to finance my way through college, but the principal of that school placed my name before a leading women's club who voted to pay for a scholarship for me for a year's college work. One year led on through four, and during that entire time I taught part time in that school and another one near by. This was such valuable experience that I was given college credit for my work. You see, that's another reason why I'm firmly convinced that there is nothing wrong with playing second fiddle!

THE IMPORTANT THING is that work must be done. Suppose

Sister Smith is much better as a teacher than you are, and everyone knows it. Probably she will be the first one asked. If she refuses, the leader is faced with the necessity of getting the next best. You may be the next best. It is true that she was wanted more than you, but only because she had better trained herself or had some natural talent in that field. Yet, if she refuses, she is of no use. Then, you, the next best, are the best available. You've been asked second, but if you accept the opportunity, you're not actually playing second fiddle, but the most important—you are doing the work which must be done.

It is possible that my illustration is chosen inaptly. It is not the poorest violinists who play the part of the second violin in the symphony. The concertmaster may play much more brilliantly and be in the spotlight more often, yet that symphony would degenerate into an association of soloists if everyone was the concertmaster. Thus the greatest music of the masters would be lost, because some musician was not willing to play accompaniment.

When the President of the United States is elected, the man with whom he runs is often forgotten. The Vice-President has his duties which in the main consists of very unspectacular activities. Yet the case occurs, as it did recently, when the greater light falls. Franklin D. Roosevelt had certain qualities of personality that nobody else has. Even Roosevelt's enemies admitted his ability to orate and to sway men's minds. Yet, Harry S. Truman is now the President, with as great problems as his predecessor had, and thus far as ably handling the men with whom he works. Thus a second fiddler became President of the United States.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower was the commander in chief of the European theater of operations. It was within his power to make all major decisions concerning strategy and implementation. General George S. Patton, Jr., commanded the Seventh Army. The latter general was an able man who made quick decisions and rapid movements. Often he found himself on the opposite side of the fence, politically, from his superior officers. Yet, when a decision came from headquarters, he obeyed. That wasn't playing second fiddle, that was obeying orders.

Hyrum Smith was a noble and true man, yet was far outshone by the magnetic personality of his brother, Joseph. Hyrum did his duty, and died in the attempt to prove that the persecution against the Saints was unfounded. It is Joseph, the Martyr, whom we speak of most, and even in our thinking, Hyrum takes second place. He played second fiddle all of his life, but he played it so well that his influence and faithfulness remain an example for modern-day Saints.

And he [Satan] came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever.—Genesis 3: 2, 3, Inspired Version.

This quotation is probably the greatest example of someone playing second fiddle. The first person to offer his services to redeem mankind was rejected and because of his greed he destroyed himself. It was the second, Jesus Christ, who offered himself that mankind might be saved. He did so in humility and love for his Father, and his sacrifice was accepted. Christ always put his Father before himself. He always played second fiddle.

THEN THERE'S that too-oft repeated tale of the church school superintendent (teacher, pastor, or any other officer) who had held office for many years, serving faithfully and reasonably well. For some reason, however, last September he was not re-elected, and some other person was raised to the original position. Poor Brother Somebody just couldn't take it. Since he isn't first fiddle, he is never seen at church. He just doesn't play any fiddle.

Often when a doctor realizes that he does not possess enough knowledge or skill to save a patient, he calls in another doctor or specialist for consultation. The second doctor summoned does his best to give competent advice and effect a cure. Yes, it's true that he was called in second, after someone else had been asked. But that fact has absolutely no bearing on his behavior, for all he wants is to do the task at hand, bring about the health of the patient.

The whole problem of playing second fiddle is really a very simple one. It is not actually a question of whether you are the first asked to serve, whether others had failed before you, or whether you are the highest in rank. It is rather a fact that there is a job to be done and you have been asked to serve. If you have desire to serve, then serve. When you can come to the attitude that he will give his aid whenever asked, then no longer does it appear that you are a second fiddle, but rather you are always ready to support the first fiddle. In other words bringing it out in a more sacred method, when you want to serve God, you will do it no matter under what condition you were asked. This can be brought into very concrete terms. For instance, there may be an organist, an assistant organist, and other people who play the organ besides yourself. When you are asked to assist at a service there is no need to question why you were asked, whether Sister Jones was asked before you, or if you are the "last straw" there is a chance to serve, so serve.

Many people who realize that they can do nothing unusually well may find themselves continually busy in constructive service because they are willing to be "fill-ins." They also serve who are lowly assistant to the assistants. There is no such thing as second fiddle in God's work. We all work for God!

On Church Planning

Adapted from The Standard (Australia), December, 1945.

Our churches as a whole have two outstanding lacks. One is the lack of a good architectural design. Four walls and a roof of good design, uniform style, and satisfying proportions, cost no more to erect than the same four walls built as the amateur designer or builder or most aggressive leader thought adequate. Some of our buildings have been enlarged in ways never planned by the original builders. These enlargements have changed the former proportions and in many cases have been most inadequately planned architecturally.

All future church building should have the careful and understanding design of a good architect. The original design should provide for future possible expansion.

Latter Day Saints have a distinctive service and message that call for their own particular church design. Particularly lacking in our churches is an adequate narthex ("entrance hall," "foyer," or "porch" are the unecclesiastical terms for this), where our people can gather after services for social fellowship. The importance of this need for a spacious narthex was demonstrated at the last mission conference, when the Astra Theater, with its lovely foyer and mezzanine lounge, so adequately ministered to this need for a place for fellowship.

To this lack of a narthex in our churches we must add the lack of adequate classrooms for our educational program, particularly for the children's division.

The Conference Choir

At conference this year we are attempting to have a regular conference choir to sing at the major services. The music for which is contained in a folio for $1.65 which may be ordered from the Neil Kjos Music Company, 14 West Lake Street, Chicago, Illinois. This is a wholesale price and the folio itself is a gift with the compliments of Mr. Kjos. The music therein contained has all the dignity of simplicity, and yet deep religious fervor, and will be an asset to any choir library. We are urging that local choirs use this music and that every singer who plans to come to conference, learn his or her part so that we may have a fine conference chorus. The following are a few suggestions concerning the music.

The performance of the St. Matthew's Passion for which we are using the conference choir in the Chorales, will be Friday April 12. Rehearsals for the conference choir will be scheduled during the conference program so that adequate preparation may be made for each performance. It is the hope of the music department that this choir may prove to be a very useful aid in the worship services which are to take place at conference, and that each singer will come well prepared so that we may make a real contribution to the spiritual value of the conference.

FRANKLYN WEDDLE,
Musical Director

"TO THEE WE SING"

This piece, up to the rehearsal letter D, should be sung in a free, smooth chanting style. There is no time signature indicated, but the accents should be the natural accent of the words. Breath may be taken as indicated by the commas in the text.

From letter D the time is moderate straight 4/4. Please note the breathing indications at the top of page 5 and the middle of the bottom line.

"GOD THE LORD IS GRACIOUS"

The time signature indicates this is a moderate two beats in a bar with a half note getting a beat. At the beginning it should be sung quietly with reverence. Note the breathing marks.

On the bottom of page 4, the little tenuto lines above the notes indicate that the note should be drawn out full value, emphasizing the words "God the Lord is gracious." On bottom of page 6, use a little quicker tempo and note the accent on page 7. We will omit the Amens on page 8.

"LORD OF HOSTS"

This should be taken in moderate tempo 4 beats to the bar. Note the breathing marks. Instead of repeating the last page only, we will sing it straight through twice, using the second line of words on page 3 the second time through.

"LAMB OF GOD"

Slow two beats to the bar with a half note getting the beat. Should be sung quietly and smoothly. On the bottom of page 40 in the second bar, cross out the ly in the tenor part and write it under the first note of the third bar. On the bottom of page 40, 4th bar, the altos take a breath at the end of the bar.

"NOW LET EVERY TONGUE ADORE THEE"

Quick four beats to the bar. Note the accent in the alto part at the end of the first page, and again at the end of top and bottom lines of page 3.

Verses 1 & 2 should be sung before verse 3 which comes at the bottom of page 3. A nice climax may be worked up on page 4 with a glorious ending "And praise Thy name for evermore."

"LEGEND"

Slow two beats to the bar. Don't breathe until the end of the first phrase after the word see. On page 6 first line, first measure, the sopranos note should be a dotted half note on G instead of D. (like it is in the piano part)

"GRANT US THY HOLY PEACE"

Slow four beats to the bar with emphasis on the words. On the top of page 3, last measure, the tempo should be picked up a little bit faster. On page 4 first line, care should be exercised that there be a melodic and rhythmic freedom between soprano and alto parts. Should end very quietly.

"JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE"

This is another chorale and should be sung with a moderate four beats to the bar. Phrasing and dynamics are very well indicated in this score and we will follow them as they are written.

"HOLY SPIRIT, TRUTH DIVINE"

This is in 4/2 time with a half note getting a beat and four beats to the bar. Note that the meter changes on page 2 in the organ part but not the voice parts, likewise on page 3. On page 3 all the voices, men's and women's, will sing in unison. At the top of page 4, bass and tenor alone on the first bar with soprano and alto entering in the second. Throughout the chorus parts the meter is four beats to the bar.

"A MIGHTY FORTRESS IS OUR GOD"

A fairly quick quarter note beat. You will notice that there is not a regular meter, but that each bar is written according to the accent of the words. This is a very familiar Chorale tune, but you will have to be careful that you get the rhythm correctly. The main thing is to remember that a quarter note or its equivalent gets a beat throughout this Chorale.

"BROTHER JAMES AIR"

Three beats to the bar, moderately slow with a half note getting the beat. The melody and rhythm will seem a little odd at first, but I am sure you will find that this number will grow on you as you know it better. Please note the repeat at the end of page 4, top line. On the bottom of page 4 let the men's voices predominate. On page 6 let the altos and tenors and later the bass "ah" be a more or less neutral sound. Then at the bottom of page 7, a good solid tone throughout the four parts, working up to the forte climax at the end.

"LET HEARTS AWAKEN"

Moderate tempo with the quarter note getting the beat. Each measure may have a different number of beats. Here again remember the quarter note is the unit. This melody will haunt you for a good many days after you sing it.

"JESUS LORD, AND PRECIOUS SAVIOUR"

The quarter note gets the beat with slow four beats to the bar. In this as in most music, the breathing should conform to the text so that phrases or ideas should not be cut up by indiscriminate breathing.

"YE WATCHERS AND YE HOLY ONES"

This number has three beats to the measure and moves with a deliberate beat. The half note getting the beat. The breathing marks in the music should be very carefully observed. It should be sung in a very straightforward and impressive manner. Note the accents in the bass and tenor parts in the first bar at top of page 3. Also note the dependence of the voices on page 3.

For local use where a large choir is available, it would be nice to use the antiphonal chorus suggested by the starred items in the score. If this idea is used, a quartet or double quartet would be sufficient in the balcony or at the rear. If a large choir is not available, I would suggest you use it as a straight anthem.

Care should be used in singing of the *Alleluia*s that they are not run together. Each one should be phrased.

"THE CHORALES" from St. Matthew Passion Music

Sopranos should learn the Chorale theme for number 35. All of the Chorales will be used except No. 38 on page 8, which will be omitted.

Care should be exercised in the singing of these Chorales that phrases are not broken up with breathing. If possible, sing straight through the phrase to the hold. The pace is dignified and moderate in tempo. In every case the quarter note gets the beat. These Chorales are some of the very best of this style of music written by the master of all Chorales, and will give every one who learns them a fine appreciation for this wonderful church style.

Youth Speaks

By Dorothy Eastwood

The feeling of so many older people today seems to be that youth is irresponsible and frivolous. They are inclined to think that the young are not conscious of their responsibilities, their privileges, and their obligations. They say that young people don't realize there is a God, and that they make no effort to build into their lives the things he would want them to.

We are not irresponsible. Our manner may make us appear to be so, but that is the unbeatable Yankee spirit. We love to laugh, to play, and to be happy, but we can take our share of any load. We know our obligations and duties to our country, to our family, our church, ourselves, and our God.

Within us, there is a steadfast spirit, an untiring devotion, and an unquenchable desire to do our part in the furthering of God's work.

We realize that we have in the church the most wonderful gift in all God's creation: The plan of the church—Zion—is our goal. We want to make our personalities zionic. We want to be full of love, kindness, enthusiasm, dependability, temperance, tolerance, yes—full of the beauty of spirit which will challenge those around us to a fuller understanding of the greatness of God's church. We want to rid ourselves of intolerance, vice, envies, jealousies, and all marring characteristics—all the weak links in the chain of zionic personality.

We want to join those going down the long dark corridor of life, to overcome the obstacles in our way, to finally reach the end of that corridor and fling wide the door which leads to God and his kingdom—to let His light flood through us to others struggling down that same long hall.

These are our desires; these are our prayers; these shall be our accomplishments.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Far West Stake

Financial Emphasis

A great deal of emphasis was given to the financial law during the month of January, and the results were outstanding.

On Sunday, January 13, a speaker was assigned to every pulpit in the stake to speak on the subject, "Keeping the Law." Two weeks later, each congregation participated in a special inventory and statement filing service. The Saints responded with a large number of inventories and statements. Ten thousand dollars in tithes and offerings were paid.

Regional Priesthood Meeting

The priesthood from the congregations in the north and west divisions of the stake met at Third Church, St. Joseph, Missouri, on Monday evening, January 28, for fellowship, instruction, and inspiration. Fifty-four men attended from the ten congregations. A dinner was served by the women of Third congregation at 7 o'clock. From 8 to 10 o'clock the men met in the upper auditorium for classwork.

Stake President Emery E. Jennings and Stake Bishop Earl T. Higdon conducted the classes. Regional priesthood meetings for this part of the stake will be held the last Monday evening of each month during the year 1946.

Cameron, Missouri

Pastor, Marvin Fry

Pastor Loyd Adams has been sent into the mission field. On December 26 a farewell party was held for Brother and Sister Adams and their family.

Marvin Fry has been elected to fill the vacancy in the pastorate left by Brother Adams. He has selected Henry Hampton to be his associate, and all the priesthood to be his councilors.

On December 16 at the evening service, the junior department presented a Christmas program. After the program, treats were given to all the children.

Glen Sherman, who was recently discharged from the service, was elected Zion's League supervisor, December 30. At a worship service, each Leaguer took the Zion's League pledge. In the next meeting, each member who had taken the pledge was given a simple initiation. There are now twenty-seven in the League, and six more have taken the pledge.

On New Year's Eve the League had a coasting party. After a couple of hours of coasting, they went inside to eat hot chili, play games, and sing songs until midnight. A short worship service was held as the old year went out and the new year came in.

—Ann Bruch, reporter.

Fanning, Kansas

Pastor, William Twombly

Guest speakers for November and December were Evangelist Milo Burnett and Melvin Bohrer, both of St. Joseph.

The Saints gathered at the church on November 12 for branch night. After a short program, everyone joined in the singing led by Charles Marsh. Contests and games were followed with refreshments.

The women's department met at the home of Mrs. Ida Jeschke on December 22 for their Christmas party. They meet once a month in the various homes for classwork followed by a social hour.

A program was given at the church on Christmas Eve. The children were directed by Helen Jean Twombly. Several numbers were sung by the choir.

Five Zion's Leaguers attended the stake-wide Christmas banquet at the Y. W. C. A. in St. Joseph, Saturday evening, December 29. They reported a good time.

Church attendance has suffered somewhat because of inclement weather and illness. The Saints are looking forward to the time when all can attend regularly again.

Through the efforts of the music director, Mrs. Sam Twombly, special numbers for the morning services have been rendered by various members of the congregation.

—Evelyn Jeschke, reporter.

Atchison, Kansas

Pastor, Gilbert F. Hedrick

There has been considerable progress made toward renovating the church building during the past fifteen months. The foundation has been repaired, an outside entrance has been built to the basement, some pointing up of the brick wall has been done, all the wall paper has been removed from the interior walls, plastering repaired, and walls and ceiling painted in pastel shades; a new roof and new gutters have been put on the building, and the exterior woodwork has been painted white, giving the building an attractive appearance.

There is much work yet to be done. New flooring is to be laid and the basement enlarged and finished.

The Saints have been very liberal and co-operative in raising funds for this work; interest has been centered on the building project, yet the general church has not been forgotten. Tithes and offerings are paid regularly; a special fund was raised for the college, and money donated to equip the Independence Sanitarium.

The women meet regularly twice a month under the leadership of Jennie Branson. They believe in combining study with work, and at present are studying the book, The Enduring Word, by Christiana Salyards. Meetings are held in the different homes during the winter months; recently a change was made from afternoon to evening meetings, thus permitting more ladies to attend.

A successful bazaar and food sale was given by the women's department on December 15. Over $100 was received from this sale. Since materials were scarce, the women proved their ingenuity by making attractive articles such as pillow cases, tea towels, luncheon cloths, and aprons from white and printed feed sacks. These handmade and embroidered articles found a ready sale.

The ladies enjoyed a Christmas party on the evening of December 20 at the home of Mrs. Gilbert Hedrick. After games and refreshments, there was a gift exchange; at this time each lady learned the identity of her secret pal for the past year.

Other recreational events during the past year sponsored by the women were a mother-daughter banquet given at the home of Sister A. B. Kinney in June, a picnic for all the families in July, and a weiner roast in November.

At the Communion service in October two children were blessed; they were Arthur Caselman Ranes, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Ranes, and Ronald Wayne Martin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Martin.

The Saints welcome the addition of two new members, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Armstrong, formerly of Kansas City, to the congregation. They have already proved their stanchness in the faith by their willingness to assist with the work; their services are greatly appreciated.

Elder Ammon Calhoun arrived a few days before Christmas to spend the holiday season with his family. He was the guest speaker at the Sunday morning service, December 23.

The Leaguers, though few in number, have been quite active. Most of them attended the recent rally in St. Joseph, Missouri. They also sponsored donations of food and toys to make up a Christmas basket for a needy family. Their plan met with a generous response from all members of the branch.

The League presented a beautiful candlelight Christmas service under the direction of Anna Raney on Sunday evening, December 23, after which a Christmas offering was received. The children were all remembered with a treat. At the close of the service the pastor, who has served faithfully for fifteen years, was presented a substantial gift by the congregation.

Stewartsville, Missouri

Maple Grove Branch

Pastor, Archie Constance

The Stewartsville and Maple Grove Leagues met at the Maple Grove church at 9 o'clock for a prayer service on November 4. Halloween night they enjoyed a party at the home of Harold Ratcliff. November 15, twenty-eight young people participated in a hay ride.

November 18 the infant son of Major and Mrs. Wardell Hinderks was blessed by his grandfather, Elias Hinderks, assisted by Elder Emery Jennings.

Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe began a ten-day series of meetings at the Stewartsville church, on November 18.

Henry Schwengles, Grandville Robinson, and Larry Piepergerdes were baptized at the First church in St. Joseph, December 2.

December 13 a number of young people attended the Zion's League rally at First church.

Guest speakers at Maple Grove for November and December were David Gamet and Orman Salisbury.

—Mrs. Orville Johnson, reporter.

Stewartsville Branch

Pastor, Gordon Hidy

The Maple Grove and Stewartsville branches joined in a series of missionary meetings from November 18 to December 2 at the Stewartsville church; Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe was the speaker. A baptismal and confirmation service was held December 2. Members of the two groups were happy to add Clifford Keller, Henry Swingles, Grandville Robinson, and Larry Piepergerdes to their memberships.

Guest speakers during November and December have been Charles Marsh, Orman Salisbury, Emery Benjamin, Marvin Fry, and Curtis Vernon.

Thursday evening, December 6, the women entertained their husbands at the home of Pastor and Mrs. Gordon Hidy. The regular monthly meeting was held, followed by special numbers and a Christmas party with gift exchanges.

Saturday afternoon, December 22, a Christmas party was given for the junior department. The children each brought a gift to be placed under the beautifully decorated tree. They all joined in games led by Delia Ratcliff, after which they had ice cream and cake. The treats and presents were then distributed.

Sunday evening, December 23, a Christmas program was given by the children and young people.

Thursday evening, December 27, the Zion's League had a sleighride party. On Friday evening the intermediate class had a party at the home of their teacher, Rose Powell.

The church school is now under the direction of Orrice McCord.

Among those returning from the service are Stanley Faul, Robert Hayes, Robert Powell, Hale C. McCord, Marvin Powell, Clayton Wood, Bill Mauzey, and Tom Vincent. Several plan to enter Graceland at the beginning of the second semester.

The Stewartsville Saints welcome Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Vincent and family to their group.

Hamilton, Missouri

Pastor, Robert Hampton

The former Oakdale Branch, now known as Hamilton Branch, is holding all meetings at Hamilton. The residence that was purchased on the lots in Hamilton has been converted into a meeting place, and attendance is good although sickness and bad roads have kept many away.

The building of a new church at Hamilton will be delayed for some time because of material shortages.

Recent guest speakers at Hamilton have been Paul Sparks and Curtis Cunningham of Chillicothe, Donald Bowman of Cameron, Stake President Emery E. Jennings and Orman Salisbury of St. Joseph.

Arrangements have been made for out-of-town speakers each Sunday evening throughout January and February.

—Virginia Mae Dunlap, reporter.

Richmond, Missouri

Pastor, William G. Ferguson

On Thursday, November 9, the women met at the church for a covered dish luncheon with the ladies of Lexington as guests. The afternoon was spent singing hymns and discussing ways to help build up the branches.

Elder Hampton came to Richmond in October and delivered an inspiring sermon. He said it was his first since returning from overseas.

After a very busy season at Gardner's Lake the Lewis Updikes are able to attend services in Richmond again. Brother Updike preached on November 21 at the evening service.

Sunday morning, November 11, Mrs. Neatha Johnson of Lexington brought her class of young boys to church school.

Pastor W. G. Ferguson has been conducting a Bible quiz on Sunday evenings.

—Ruby Rosewaren, reporter.

Guilford, Missouri

Sunday, October 14, the Guilford Saints observed the twenty-ninth anniversary of the dedication of the church which was built in 1915. A large audience gathered from the surrounding country. This group included members from Sweet Home, Bedison, Ross Grove, Fortescue, Maryville, and Tarkio. Elder E. E. Jennings, President of Far West Stake, was the guest speaker at 11 A. M. and 3 in the afternoon. At 7:45 P. M., Elder Orman Salisbury began a series of services which continued through the following three weeks.

Bertha Nelson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alma Nelson, spent two weeks during the month of September in Guilford and attended services. She is a student at Iowa State University.

Six members of the priesthood of Guilford attended the priesthood rally at Stewartsville, September 16.

The communion service on October 7 was in charge of W. B. Torrance assisted by Arnold Adams and Alma Nelson. An excellent spiritual session was enjoyed by those present.

Sunday, November 4, Bedison branch came as a body and joined with the Guilford group in their communion service. Six of the priesthood of Guilford and seven of the Bedison branch were seated on the rostrum. There were 106 in attendance.

A number of boys have been discharged from the service and have returned home to resume their part in the church work. They are R. P. Anderson, Jr., Theodore Wayne Nelson, Kenneth and Gerald Hoyt, Leonard Beck, Kenneth and Alma Nelson, and Kenneth Morgan.

Open House Held at Pastor's Home in St. Joseph

Pastor and Mrs. Robert S. Farnham held open house at their home on New Year's Day from 4 until 8 P. M. A general invitation was extended to the First Church congregation, friends, and neighbors of the family.

White candles in seven-branch candelabra adorning the fireplace provided the light in the living room which was decorated with evergreen.

The dining-room table was covered with a white hand-embroidered linen cloth. On each side of the centerpiece of evergreen and cyclamen were white tapers in crystal candelabra.

Serving from 4 until 5 were Mrs. Herbert Alexander, Mrs. John Ruoff, Grace Loveall, Marion Penny, Joyce Alexander and Janice Mason.

Between 5 and 6 those serving were Mrs. Joseph Albus, Mrs. Marguerite Batsell, Mrs. Kenneth Piepergerdes, Shirley Ruoff, Jeannie Jackson, Claudia Loveall and Mrs. Jean Michael.

Mrs. C. W. Grandin, Mrs. Melvin Bohrer, Loretta Johnson, Bonnie Imlay, and Mrs. Majorie Ruoff served from 6 until 7.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock Mrs. Ena Ehlers, Mrs. Jewell Hawman, Donna Acord, Twila Ruoff, Betty Weiman and Vernelle Ernst served.

—Gail Farnham, reporter.

Beloit, Wisconsin

Pastor, Harry A. Wasson

Jasper Dutton of Galva, Illinois, was the speaker at both the morning and evening services on November 11, using "Charity" and "Character" as his themes.

Elder E. Y. Hunker held a series of meetings from November 13 to 25. His sermons were illustrated with slides and were greatly enjoyed by all present. Some of his topics were "The Foundation of True Religion," "The Church Christ Built," "The Apostasy," "The Great Restoration," "Whence Came the Red Man," "Life in Ancient America," "Life After Death," and "The Life of Christ."

Elders Joseph Elkins and Frank Hunt have also been recent guest speakers.

A farewell party was held December 23 for the Ralney Wildermuths who left soon afterward for Independence, Missouri. Their excellent work will be missed by all the members of the branch.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Edington have returned to Beloit from Soldier's Grove.

Three young members who served in the armed forces have returned home; they are Edmond Gray, Carl Martin, and Iris Spencer.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards spoke briefly at the 11 o'clock service on December 30. Speaking of the new year, he urged the Saints to remember the words of Christ, "Behold, I make all things new," and to then resolve that they would make their lives acceptable to him.

—Alma May Brookover, reporter.

St. Thomas, Ontario

Pastor, A. W. Sheehy

The Saints are happy to have the family of Elder Duncan Clatworthy added to the St. Thomas congregation. Sister Mildred Clatworthy is supervisor of the operating room in the Memorial Hospital.

Since September 1 the local priesthood has been assisted by Elders Campbell, Hodgson, Bernard, McGregor, Winegarden, Njiem, McBaine, Rankin, Bishop Dent of London, and Elder A. R. Hewitt of Chatham.

Elder Frank Gray was in charge of the memorial service held September 9 for Sapper Lawrence Ford who was killed in Holland on April 7, 1945. Former comrades and members of the Elgin regiment drum and bugle band of which he had been a member attended in a body. Tribute was also paid to Private George Lee, killed March 8, 1945, and Corporal William Freele who died in a Winnipeg hospital. George Bodwin drew a memorial scene for the two fallen brothers, representing each with a cross beneath which was placed a bouquet of red roses. Mrs. Preston Ford sang a solo, and Earnest Hollingshead a buddy of Lawrence's, sounded last post and reveille. Mrs. R. Kew and Mrs. M. Clatworthy were the accompanists.

Elder H. I. Velt held a week's series of meetings in October, illustrating his lectures with lantern slides. A remembrance service was held on November 11.

Elder N. Kelley was in charge of the annual Christmas tree and concert held on December 14. Santa was present to distribute gifts and candy to the children.

Twenty-six young people from the St. Thomas congregation were in the armed forces; most of them have received their discharges. Donald Ford has returned to Stratford, and John Ford is attending Queens University in Kingston.

On January 24 several members met to give the church a thorough cleaning. Edith Stephens supervised the project. A pot luck dinner was served after the cleaning was finished. A new roof has been added to the improvements made on the church building.

On January 30 a social was held in the lower auditorium; the evening was spent in playing games.

—Hazel Ford, reporter.

Independence, Missouri

Stone Church

Pastor, G. E. Tickemyer

Bishop Walter N. Johnson was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service on January 27. His subject was "The Church versus the World."

Zion-wide Prayer Service

The Sunday afternoon Zion-wide prayer service on January 27 was well attended. "Disseminating the Gospel" was the predominant theme of the meeting.

U. N. O. Charter Discussed

A panel discussion on the United Nations Organization Charter was held at the evening service. Those participating in the discussion were President L. F. P. Curry, Pastor G. E. Tickemyer, Bishop J. S. Kelley, Elder Leonard Lea, and Howard Downs.

Stone Church Contributions for 1945

Contributions for 1945 for local use were $32,154.43, general church offerings and tithes were $61,502.08, making a total of $93,626.51.

Conference in Zion

The quarterly conference in Zion was held January 28. The statistical report showed that the Stone Church membership had increased during the past year from 2,644 to 2,743. There are now twelve Reorganized Churches and one mission in Independence. Two missions were organized as congregations last year. Total membership of all the Independence congregations is 8,489.

Nominations of delegates to General Conference were received, and elections will be declared later. The following were approved for ordination: Eric Cook and Russell Rowland to the office of elder; Norman Rimmer, Paul Kelsey, and Albert Claude Black to the office of priest; Montague L. Parker and Floyd H. Miley to the office of deacon.

The Whalleys Return

Elder and Mrs. Peter S. Whalley arrived in New York on January 28 and came directly to Independence. Brother Whalley gave the pastoral address at the February 3 Communion service and delivered an inspiring sermon on "Faith and Works" in the evening. After sixteen years' ministry in England, Elder Whalley has been appointed pastor of the church in San Diego, California.

Evangelist Frederick Smith Honored

Evangelist Frederick A. Smith celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday on Saturday, January 19, with a dinner given him by his children and grandchildren. Fifteen relatives visited him on Sunday afternoon.

Morning Service Inaugurated

The first early morning preaching service, which is to be a regular feature from now on, was held Sunday, February 10, with Elder Leonard Lea presiding. Pastor Garland Tickemyer was the speaker, choosing "Fear" as his subject. Two hundred forty-four people attended the 8:15 service. One thousand twenty-four heard Evangelist Elbert Smith at the 11 o'clock hour.

Afternoon Prayer Service

The Zion-wide prayer service at 2:30 was in charge of Evangelist Ray Whiting assisted by Elders Floyd Deal and Amos Higdon. The theme, "Zion," inspired many prayers and testimonies.

Young Minister Occupies Pulpit

Arthur Rock, one of the youngest ministers in Independence, delivered his first sermon in Stone Church at the evening service on February 10. His subject was "What I Believe."

Stone Church Organ

The installation of the new organ will begin soon. The contract has been signed, the builders are ready, and as soon as arrangements can be made, the workers will begin erecting the instrument. The new organ has thirty-nine ranks of pipes, harp, and chimes, and promises to greatly enhance the musical devotions of the services.

Unspectacular Task Receives Recognition

Sister Thomas McKevitt, who for the past fifteen years has been responsible for the washing of the Communion cups and trays, continues her record of service. Few have known of this modest, unheralded labor of love except those who have assisted her from time to time.

Music Festival

The annual Zion's League music festival will be held February 10-14.
—Grace Krahl, reporter.

Enoch Hill Church

Pastor, Lawrence Martin

With Christmas activities over, the Saints at Enoch Hill are entering the new year's program with enthusiasm. Attendance is steadily growing, with many coming from outlying districts.

A confirmation service was held on December 30. Mervelyn Joyce Beam was confirmed by Elders David Young and Joseph Sandage; Jeanette Young by Elders J. L. Randall and Herman Fultz; and Donna Lee Logan by Elders James Davis and Charles Warren. Following the confirmations, Pastor Lawrence E. Martin welcomed the new members and gave a charge to the congregation.

A record crowd was present at the Communion service on January 6. A quartet composed of Delta and Arlon Chapman, Arlene Martin, and Robert Young sang "In the Hour of Trial," and "Draw Thou My Soul, O Christ." Pastor Martin and his assistants, Gerald Thomas and Arlon Chapman, were in charge of the service. Elder Chapman gave the Communion talk, addressing it principally to members of the junior church who were present for the service. After the passing of the emblems, the remaining time was devoted to prayer and testimony.

Elder Walter Chapman was in charge of the evening service, assisted by Gerald Thomas. The choir, under the direction of Richard Maloney, sang "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked." Helen Griffin was the accompanist. Captain Toomey, accompanied by his wife, sang a solo. Apostle Arthur Oakman was the speaker, basing his discourse on the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah.

Gudgell Park

Pastor, Ralph Smith

Recent Sunday evening services have brought an interesting series of travelogues. On January 20 and 27 C. Ed Miller was the speaker; he presented slides of some of the many places he visited on his recent trip to Central America.

On February 3 a lecture on the customs and peoples of India was given by Wayne Tucker. Brother Tucker served several months with the Army in India before receiving his discharge in January.

During 1944-45 Gudgell Park members spent much of their spare time in making additions and improvements on the church building. A large classroom was built, and a partial basement with a new hot-air heating system was installed. The extra space now available has proved advantageous.

With the beginning of the church school year in October, a junior church was organized. All children from those in the kindergarten classes to the juniors meet in the new room for their own worship service and classes. The increased interest noted in the children makes this an advisable permanent feature in the church school program for the branch.

Several young men have returned from service with the armed forces. Those recently discharged are Virgil McLaughlin, Clarence Martin, Jr., Gilbert Gordon, Robert Sherman, and Wayne Tucker. Willard Sherman is expected home by February 15.

The Leaguers were quite active last year with swimming parties, weiner roasts, and a New Year's Eve watch party; they are looking forward to the city-wide Valentine banquet on February 15. Young people's leader, Joy Harris, is in charge of decorating for the banquet.

—Velma Sherman, reporter.

Distributing Church Books

In a letter to the Presidency, Apostle J. W. Rushton forwards two letters from Brother George A. Abbott, of Arcata, California, who has been placing church books in public libraries, lending church books and making calls on friends and interested parties, speaking on a radio station, and otherwise spreading the gospel message, making himself practically a one-man missionary force operating in outpost territory and reporting back to his supervising officer. It is apparent that Brother Abbott does all this because his heart is in the work, and he likes to do it. He does it in spite of the fact that he has encountered sorrow and misfortune in the loss of his family through death, and in other difficulties—so Brother Rushton informs us in his letter. Following his radio talks, people of various faiths have written to him, giving him new contacts and opportunities. He concludes, "This will give you some idea of how I am occupying the time up here. I only hope good may come from it that the cause of truth may prevail."

Southern California League Convention

Nearly a hundred young people of the southern California district attended a three-day convention in San Bernardino held January 25, 26, and 27.

Lewis E. Scott, district young people's supervisor, Louis J. Ostertag, district president, and Apostle John W. Rushton supervised an active program of worship, study, and recreation.

The convention opened with a banquet Friday evening; Elder George Dexter, associate pastor of the San Bernardino branch and former district young people's supervisor, served as toastmaster. Speakers included Lewis E. Scott, John W. Rushton, Kenneth Briggs, and Louis J. Ostertag.

Saturdays' activities began with a prayer service, morning classes were taught by Apostle John Rushton, Louis Ostertag, and Bishop D. B. Carmichael of Santa Ana.

In the afternoon the young people drove to Lake Gregory near Crestline in the mountains to enjoy a hike followed by a chili supper.

A model Zion's League meeting was demonstrated in the evening, with Kenneth Briggs presiding and Lewis Scott leading the discussion, "Is Universal Military Training Necessary?"

An early prayer meeting, church school worship service, classes, and a sermon on "Love" by Apostle Rushton comprised the Sunday morning schedule. Elder Glen Holmes, district director of religious education, was in charge of the church school service. Brother Ostertag taught a class on "Reverence," while Lewis Scott discussed League organization and administration with the pastors and League presidents and supervisors.

Velma Stuart Engle, district young people's chorister, was in charge of the music. Ann Thomas Scott assisted at the piano. Lorraine McComb of East Los Angeles sang a solo at the church school worship service, and a quartet composed of Wesley Nunamaker and Fred Cool of Pasadena, Orval Pedersen of Long Beach, and Lindal Mark of East Los Angeles sang at the 11 o'clock service.

"By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them" was the theme around which convention thoughts were centered.

The women's department of San Bernardino prepared the meals.

League members from Santa Ana, San Diego, Compton, Central Los Angeles, East Los Angeles, Santa Paula, Pasadena, Lennox, Long Beach, Riverside, and San Bernardino attended.

A vote of thanks was extended to the Saints of San Bernardino for their hospitality, and special thanks were given to the women's department, H. C. Ferguson, Charles Fry, and Edgar Miller who served as hosts.

—Wilson Ritchie, San Bernardino.

Bremerton, Washington

Pastor, A. W. Lundeen

Twenty men gathered at the church on January 1 and shingled the south side of the roof. The north side of the roof has been made ready and will be shingled soon.

A number of the Bremerton Saints attended the district regional meeting which was held at Tacoma, Washington, on January 6. Oscar Case was left in charge of the Bremerton congregation during the absence of the pastor.

Much interest was shown at the branch business meeting held Monday night, January 7. Many suggestions for improvements were presented. It was at this meeting that Oscar Case and family who resided temporarily in Bremerton for several years informed the Bremerton Saints that they were leaving for their home at Richmond, Missouri, on January 13. Brother Case will be remembered as a friendly co-worker and convincing speaker.

A farewell party was given January 8 at the pastor's home in honor of Frank and Virginia Day who are leaving Bremerton soon. The Saints wish them success and happiness in their new location.

On Thursday night, January 10, a conference for church school workers was held at the home of Frances Aldrich.

At the morning service January 13, Revere Brown was baptized by Pastor Lundeen. Confirmation followed immediately with Elders Paul Duvic and A. W. Lundeen officiating.

At the Wednesday evening prayer service held January 16, Jerry Duvic, young son of Elder and Sister Duvic, received administration in which God's discretion and consideration were sought in behalf of the child's physical misfortune. Jerry has been deaf since birth.

The Zion's League met in regular session, Sunday, January 20. Vera Westgren, young people's supervisor, and Ethel Bryant, teacher of the young people, were present at the meeting. Sister Bryant explained to the Leaguers some of the intricacies of filing financial statements.

"The Function of Religion in Life" was the theme of a sermon delivered Sunday evening, January 20, by Elder Paul Duvic.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Anway was blessed Sunday, January 27, by Brother Swenson of Seattle and Pastor Lundeen.

—Lester L. Bryant, reporter.

Jonesport, Maine

Pastor, Chester Gray

During the past year the Saints have endeavored to carry out an evangelistic and educational program in the various departments.

Sunday, November 25, the following young people were baptized by Pastor Chester Gray: Nancy, Mildred, Dorothy, and Glenda Doughty, and Jessie Alley; they were confirmed at the evening service.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp and Apostle John Garver visited the branch November 28. Bishop DeLapp brought the Saints a very encouraging message as he spoke on the financial condition of the church, and the necessity of building on a firm foundation. The visit of these men was greatly appreciated. Another welcome visitor was Missionary Albert Scherer who was in Jonesport for several weeks following the Maine reunion.

A teacher's training class has just completed its first series of studies. The subject of the course was "Evangelism and the Teaching Method," taught by Mrs. Frances Look. Already the branch has profited by these stimulating and helpful studies. The group has started its second series, "The Church School, Its Organization and Administration," with a much larger enrollment.

The annual bazaar of the women's department was held December 7, followed by a New England baked bean and brown bread supper; $200 was netted and turned in to the branch treasury. The department had its annual election of officers and business meeting at the home of Mrs. Celia Woodward on January 22. The following officers were elected for the new year: president, Georgia Wilson; vice president, Sophia Dobbins; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. W. E. Rogers; special committee chairman, Meda Beal, Evelyn Rogers, Beatrice Alley, and Mrs. Myron Wilson. At this meeting a clothing drive was discussed and later sponsored by the group, assisted by women of the community. Approximately 500 pounds of clothing and shoes were brought to the church vestry where they were packed for overseas shipment.

The Blue Birds have been organized with Ila Kelley as leader, assisted by Grace Crocker and Idella Alley. They held their first meeting at Miss Kelley's home on January 31 with an enrollment of seventeen members.

The Christmas holiday activities of the primary department opened with a Christmas tea for the mothers at which the girls served as hostesses. Each mother was presented a corsage of evergreen complimented with red, made by the children. Carols provided music for the occasion.

Virginia Pliskowski and Ruth Manchester directed the Christmas program given for the children on the evening of December 21. Each class of the primary department contributed to the program. A pantomime, "The Light Shone," was presented by a group of juniors. Santa Claus was present to distribute gifts and candy to each child.

On Christmas day baskets of gifts and fruit were taken to the homes of shut-in members. The theme of the month for the school was "Sharing." Throughout December the children brought the gifts and fruit used in the baskets.

On January 6 Virginia Cunningham was baptized by Pastor Chester Gray and confirmed at the evening service by Newman Wilson and Pastor Gray.

January 14 the branch held its annual business session and election of officers at which Elder Chester Gray was sustained as pastor; Orel Noyes, church school director; Virginia Pliskowski, young people's leader; Mrs. W. E. Rogers, clerk; and Grace Crocker, secretary. The four deacons, Richard Davis, Orel Noyes, Lee Dawes and Marshall Kelley, and the pastor will act as budget committee. Virginia Pliskowski assisted by Ruth Manchester is in charge of the work of the primary department of the church school. The report of the treasurer showed $1,000 on hand, which amount will be used to redecorate the upper auditorium of the church, install a new lighting system, and make other necessary improvements.

The choir, under the direction of Geneva Church, has resumed regular practices. A cantata, The Thorn Crowned King, will be given Easter Sunday. —Beatrice Alley, reporter.

Welcome Home Banquet for Flint Servicemen

One hundred six guests attended the "Welcome Home" banquet in the dining hall of the Newell Street church on Thursday evening, February 7. It was held especially for discharged servicemen and their friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Wecker were in charge of the decorating and serving. The staff of waitresses carried out the red, white, and blue color scheme in their uniforms and aprons. Miniature houses with service people ready to occupy provided the centerpiece for each table. The speaker's table had a bouquet of red and white carnations and old glory as its centerpiece.

At the sound of the bugle, the guests marched to the dining hall where an excellent meal had been prepared by the women's department. Allen Pohley led the group in a song fest after dinner. Arthur DuRoss gave the "welcome home" speech, and Harry Simons gave a welcome to the church. Merleen Condon sang several songs, and Lee Faivers gave a reading. A male quartet composed of H. Wecker, P. Bacon, B. Hough, and F. Attwood was next on the program. Gerald Stickley gave the closing remarks. After taps, by R. Shephardson, several hymns were sung and H. J. Simons offered the benediction.

Many renewed old acquaintances, and all were given a hearty welcome back to the church.

—Etta Youngs, reporter.

Calgary, Alberta

Pastor, A. D. McLeod

A drive to raise money for the building fund was launched at a special service on Sunday morning, February 3, during the church school hour. The goal is $6,000; already $2,000 has been set aside for this purpose. Plans have been made to build a semi-basement and install necessary heating and plumbing fixtures. The old building will then be sold and services held in the basement of the new church until such time as the main auditorium can be completed. The need is urgent, as the old building is far from being adequate.

After several months of inactivity, the women's department of Calgary branch has reorganized under the capable leadership of Mrs. Vida Diaper. A full slate of officers has been elected and a challenging agenda planned for the coming year. The first activity will be a St. Patrick's tea; full details are not yet available. Scheduled meetings will be held twice a month and occasional social evenings for the older people of the church are being planned.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hapen are leaving soon for Vancouver. Both were active in church work and leave a host of friends in Calgary.

—Stanley Walker, reporter.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Pastor, V. D. Ruch

The Saints observed Thanksgiving with a special service held Wednesday evening, November 22.

Elder Amos Graybill was the speaker on Sunday morning, November 25. Betty Cramer, a former Gracelander and now a student at Drake University, sang a solo, "The Lord Is Mindful of His Own." Betty is the granddaughter of Mrs. George Beattie.

Homer Doty and Mrs. V. D. Ruch sang a duet at the Communion service on December 2. James Richard, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Currie, was blessed by his grandfather, O. A. Currie, and Pastor V. D. Ruch.

The annual bazaar and chicken dinner sponsored by the women's department was held in Eagle's Hall December 1. Six hundred dollars were cleared on the project. Keen interest is shown in increasing the building fund, and many members of the department are using their talents to aid its growth. Some are doing handwork; others have given luncheons and breakfasts in their homes. Plans are being made for a building fund dinner to be given March 15; tickets will be sold for $5.00 each. A covered dish dinner was held on the evening of December 14; decorations were in charge of the Wa-Ca-Pa group, and the program was prepared by the Nilka group.

On December 16 the young people's choir and the Agenda class presented an impressive program, "The Other Wise Man." Sister Davey was in charge.

The students of Abraham Lincoln High School presented Handel's The Messiah on Wednesday, December 19. Aleta Runkle was the director.

The church school Christmas program, with treats for the children, was held Friday evening, December 21. On Sunday, December 23, at the adult choir presented Hawley's cantata, "The Christ Child," directed by Lela Ranney. Ruth Hale was at the piano, and Emma Spanswick at the organ. Pastor V. D. Ruch spoke in the evening on the topic, "He shall save his people from their sins." The choir sang "Joy to the World," and Wilda Schneider sang "Jesu Bambino."

Several watch parties were held on New Year's Eve; on Sunday evening, December 30, the adult choir, accompanied by Pastor Ruch, went to Carson, Iowa, to participate in a program prepared by Beth Davis.

The annual upper-room candlelight

Communion service was held by the young people on the evening of January 6. Pastor Ruch was in charge. The first Communion service of the year was attended by a record crowd. Linda Eileen, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Olson, was blessed by Elder Amos Graybill and Pastor Ruch. A solo, "God Be Merciful," was sung by Grace Doty with Joyce Radke accompanying.

The district young people's institute with Dr. Roy Cheville as guest speaker and teacher was held January 11-13. Because of the large attendance, the Friday evening banquet was held in the fellowship hall of the First Baptist church. The prayer service on Sunday morning was held in the assembly hall of the Catholic school next to the church.

Elmer Johnson of Underwood spoke January 19 as a representative of the bishopric. "How Beautiful Upon the Mountain" was sung by Josephine Moser.

Apostle Paul Hanson was in charge of the financial observance day program on January 27. Gwen Morse, accompanied by Wanda Hoss, sang "Hold Thou My Hand." Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service. The choir sang an anthem, "Thanks Be to God." A fellowship dinner was held in the lower auditorium, followed by a business meeting at 2 P. M. at which delegates to general conference were elected.

The newly organized class in sight reading and conducting held its first session Sunday afternoon, February 10. Aleta Runkle and Homer Doty were in charge. A number of the adult choir members took part in the city chorus Opus One Revue held recently, and will also be in the operetta which is to be presented in May.

Speakers for the past two months have been Pastor V. D. Ruch, Arthur E. Dempsey, Jr., Charles F. Putnam, Lester Hunt, O. A. Currie, H. P. Larson, Charles O. Cary, and Nelson P. Johnson.

The Saints of Council Bluffs extend their deepest sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. John Kjar at the death of their three-year-old daughter, Diane, and to the families of Alex Vallier and Doctor S. B. Prouty in their loss.

—Emma Spanswick, reporter.

Peace

Let the soul walk in peace
Like an angel, in Paradise, unshod;
Because if thou shalt walk in peace
It is to dwell with God.

Southern Michigan Missionary Meeting

The Saints in southern Michigan held a district pastors and departmental supervisors meeting at Battle Creek on January 27. At 10:45 A. M. Elder J. Charles Mottashed spoke, using "I Call" as his theme; Mattie Willis sang a solo, "Come Ye Blessed." At 11:45 the visitors met at the Hart Hotel for luncheon, returning to the church at 1:45 for a business meeting.

Invocation was offered by Lt. Col. Harvey Grice. District President E. R. Carter called the roll of district officers; all were present except Garnet Smith who was called away on business. Battle Creek, Alto, Belding, Grand Rapids, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Lansing, and Muskegon were represented.

Brother Carter announced the meeting was called for the purpose of stimulating missionary activities throughout the district. A. J. Dexter spoke on the necessity for leadership, J. C. Mottashed on the elements of leadership, and C. W. Dudley on the church school at missionary work. Following Brother Dudley's discourse, Frances Hunter Carlson sang "The Lord's Prayer," and John Hodge discussed missionary work through social activities. Margaret Case talked on the women's department missionary effort in the home and Frances Carlson discussed missionary opportunities through musical activities.

Edward Premoe was introduced by the district president as the newly-appointed pastor for the scattered Saints. Brother Premoe then gave a resumé of his work. E. R. Carter summarized the day's activities and stated that he thought there should be more meetings of a similar nature held in the future. The service closed with the singing of "This God Is the God We Adore," after which Lt. Col. Grice pronounced the benediction.

On December 16 the district officers held an ordination service at Belding, Michigan, at which Ray Ellis was ordained an elder; Leo Teichert and Perry Crankshaw, priests; and John Fiscus, a deacon. Frances Hunter Carlson provided special music for the service.

Northern California District Conference

The northern California district conference convened in Sacramento February 2 and 3, in charge of the district presidency. The meeting opened with a devotional service at 9 A. M., followed by Bishop Edwin Burdick's class study at 10:15, and a sermon by Apostle John W. Rushton at 11:15. Lunch was served in the church.

At 2:30 P. M. the conference began with Apostle Rushton presiding. Routine business was transacted and delegates to General Conference were elected.

The evening meal was served in the church, followed by the pastor's conference session and young people's program. The day drew to a close with a social hour for everyone at 9 P. M.

On Sunday morning a Communion service was held at 9 o'clock, and at 10 the pastors met in conference at the home of Brother Myron Schawl. A general meeting was held in the church in charge of the women's department; the church school met in the lower auditorium. At 11 o'clock Apostle Rushton delivered the sermon and conference was adjourned.

Flint-Port Huron District Conference and Young People's Institute

The spring conference and young people's institute of the Flint-Port Huron district will be held at Pontiac, Michigan, February 22, 23, and 24. Delegates to General Conference will be elected and other business transacted at the business meeting at 2 P. M. Sunday. The other principal meetings are a banquet for young people at 7 P. M. Friday; fellowship and class sessions for young people under the direction of Elder Almer Sheehy beginning at 9:30 A. M. Saturday; sermon by Seventy H. I. Velt at 7 P. M. Saturday; prayer service at 9 A. M. Sunday; and preaching services at 11 A. M. and 2:30 P. M. Sunday. All meetings will be in the church at 28 Front Street, Pontiac; housing for overnight visitors will be provided by Pontiac church members.

L. O. Brockway, District President.

Spring River Conference

A special conference of the Spring River district, at which delegates will be elected to the General Conference, will convene at Joplin, Missouri, Sunday, March 10, at 8:45 A. M.

Apostle A. A. Oakman, minister in charge, will be the guest minister.

Delegates will be chosen at 1:30 P. M.; following this session the combined district choir will rehearse General Conference music.

William Patterson, District President

Southern New England Youth Convention

The young people of the southern New England district held their second annual youth convention at the Somerville, Massachusetts, church on January 19, 20, and 21.

The general theme of the conference was "Youth, Onward to Zion," and those in attendance were given an opportunity to learn firsthand the principles of zionic living through group study, play, and work.

Registration began at 7:30 Friday evening, followed by a social hour and stunt show. A moving picture was shown depicting life in China, after which the young people joined in a song fest.

The following day's activities began with class periods conducted from 10 to 12 o'clock by Albert Scherer and Reed Holmes. Brother Scherer's class was on the background of the Christian church in general, and the goals of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Brother Holmes brought out a working plan of stewardship for young people on time, talents, and possessions.

After lunch was served at the church, the entire group went roller skating. In the evening the young people reassembled in the lower church auditorium for a banquet. Following the banquet, they went to the Somerville Y. M. C. A. which had been rented for the evening. After a few rousing games of volleyball and regulation gymnasium games, a splash party in the swimming pool topped off the evening's fun.

The more serious aspect of the convention was continued Sunday morning at the youth fellowship service held at 8:30. During the regular church school hour the young people's class was taught by Reed Holmes who continued on the subject of stewardship, presenting the general church working plan for Zion.

At the 11 o'clock service Albert Scherer presented factors in the preparation for the material Zion. Special music for the hour was provided by the youth choir.

After the noonday meal, the convention was closed by an afternoon vesper service.

Requests for Prayers

Charles N. Wooden, of Brusett, Montana, writes: "At this writing I am in a bed with the flu. And I am asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints for help and recovery. I will be glad to hear from any of you."

Mr. and Mrs. John Schrunk of Atkinson, Nebraska, wish to be remembered in the prayers of the Saints that they may have their health restored.

Prayers are requested for Bertha Graham of Minot, North Dakota, that she may be blessed with physical strength and spiritual courage. She has been confined to her bed for six weeks in Trinity Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Keown of Des Moines, Iowa, request the prayers of the Saints in behalf of their son, Sgt. Keith Kelly Keown, and the members of his crew which have been listed as missing since September 25, 1944. The plane was lost in flight between Townsville, Australia, and Nodzob, New Guinea.

Millie Lunce of Kennett, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints for a young neighbor who has been bedfast for the past two years. Although he is not a member of the church, he believes he can be cured by united prayer.

A mother in Kansas requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of her family.

Julia Barton of Gatewood, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints that she might be healed of her ailments. She has faith that prayer will heal her.

Engagements

Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Fisher of Birsay, Saskatchewan, announce the engagement of their daughter, Viola Grace, to Frederick Loyd Dickson, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Dickson of Weyburn, Saskatchewan. The wedding will take place in the Calgary church at 7:30 P. M. on February 22.

WEDDINGS

Mr. and Mrs. Dixon L. Kepley of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Patricia Glenda, born November 22, 1945. Mrs. Kepley was formerly Mavis Wells.

Our Departed Ones

NAPIER.—Faith, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jess Napier of Springfield, Missouri, died January 25. Funeral services were conducted by Elder W. J. Breshears of Springfield. Left to mourn are the parents and one brother, Paul.

FLANDERS.—Elmer Eldren, was born October 19, 1882, at Maysville, Missouri, and died January 23, 1946, in Kansas City, Missouri, after several months of illness. He was united in marriage to Georgian Brennan; to this union was born one son, Loyd. Most of his life was spent near Maysville and Cameron.

He is survived by his wife and son; a grandson and granddaughter; three brothers: Charles of Cameron, Harrison of Leavenworth, and Joe of Kansas City; and two sisters: Mrs. Thomas Hollingsworth of Kansas City, and Mrs. Forrest Smith of Rantoul, Kansas. Services were conducted at the Poland Funeral Home in Cameron with Elders Emery E. Jennings and James Bowman in charge. Interment was in the Wood Cemetery near Maysville, Missouri.

DIGGLE.—Carl Entwistle, son of James and Grace Diggle, was born near Neola, Iowa, in 1885, and passed away on Christmas Day at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, after a year of ill health. In 1904 he went to Canada with his parents and homesteaded fifteen miles from Saskatoon. In 1912 he entered the real estate business and then became an employee of the Saskatchewan Mutual Fire Insurance Company; later he was appointed assistant manager of the company. He was united in marriage to Lottie May Clarke at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1912; three children were born to this union. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1915, and was ordained to the office of elder in 1916. From 1918 until the time of his death, he served as bishop's agent for northern Saskatchewan.

He leaves to mourn his wife; a son, W. M. Diggle of the Royal Canadian Air Force; two daughters: Mrs. Hugh McCreadie of Toronto, and Mrs. R. H. Freeland of Calgary; and two sisters: Mrs. W. E. Door of Long Beach, California, and Mrs. J. A. Beckman of Saskatoon. The funeral service was conducted by Elder George Jordan at Saskatoon; interment was in the Highland Cemetery at Hamilton, Missouri.

BEERS.—Evaline, was born in Sanilac County, Michigan, October 11, 1877, the daughter of Elder and Mrs. A. E. Burr. With her parents, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1889; and in 1895 she was united in marriage to Edgars Beers, now deceased. For the past twenty years she was a resident of Flint, Michigan. She died suddenly at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jennie Skinner of Mount Morris. Left to mourn are two other daughters, Mrs. Myrtle Scramlin and Mrs. Verna Kramer of Independence, Missouri; a son, Jesse Beers of Ortonville, Michigan; a brother, Louis Burr of Saginaw, Michigan; two sisters, Mrs. Ethel Chea and Mrs. Jennie Schram of Bay City, Michigan; eight grandchildren, and two great grandchildren.

The funeral service was held at the Newall Street church in Flint, and was conducted by Elders Arthur DuRose and Harry Simons. Interment was in West Branch cemetery.

GERRIE.—Mary Grice, was born at Aldershot, Ontario, on October 1, 1863, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luke Grice, and died January 5 at her home in Harriston, Ontario. On September 5, 1911, she was united in marriage to James Gerrie of Park Head. She united with the Reorganized Church early in life and remained faithful to its teachings until her death.

Those surviving are her husband; four stepchildren: May and John of Harriston, Mrs. J. F. Morriss of Toronto, and Harry of Wingham; and four sisters: Mrs. E. K. Evans, Grand Rapids, Michigan; Mrs. Fred Gregory, Ribstone, Alberta; Mrs. Frank Oliver, Toronto; and Miss Annie Grice, Harriston. The funeral service was conducted at the Gerrie home; Elder J. H. Yager of Wiar-ton officiated. Interment was in the Harriston cemetery.

BATEMAN.—Carl Samuel, was born April 10, 1884, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and passed away January 19 in Independence, Missouri. In September, 1911 he joined the Reorganized Church, and at the time of his death was a member of the Walnut Park congregation in Independence. On September 25, 1912, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Kirkwood who became the mother of his three sons: Leonard Warren, Carl Eugene, and Robert Samuel. The first Mrs. Bateman died in 1923. On May 25, 1924, he was married to Laura Mann; to this union three daughters were born: Laura Eva, Larena Mae, and Viola Margaret, all of the home.

Besides his wife and children he leaves one brother, Arthur Bateman; and five sisters: Mrs. May Looney, Mrs. Martha Ehlers, Mrs. Carrie Bence, Mrs. Mariellen Chase, and Mrs. Victoria Hillard. Funeral services were conducted January 22 at the Speaks Funeral Chapel by Elders Glaude A. Smith and John Wade. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery in Independence.

SMITH.—Florence, died at her home near Manitowaning, Ontario, on Sunday morning, January 27. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church with Elders M. K. Brown and Vernon Charlton in charge. Burial was at the Hilly Grove Cemetery.

She leaves to mourn her husband, Chester M. Smith; two daughters: Muriel and Margaret; and three sons: Mervyn, Harold, and Lawrence. Another son, Grenville, preceded her in death two years ago. Sister Smith is greatly missed not only in her home, but in the church and community as well.

ARCHER.—Rhoda Emaline, was born May 11, 1865, in Allegheny County, North Carolina, and died February 5 at Council Bluffs, Iowa, after six months of illness. She was married twice, both husbands preceding her in death. She became a member of the Reorganized Church on March 15, 1939.

Left to mourn her passing are two sons: Clyde and Walter McLaughlin of Council Bluffs; five daughters: Mrs. Hugo Steppuhn, Mrs. Jennie Huyck, and Mrs. Fred Strother, all of Council Bluffs; Mrs. R. K. Fox of Sydney, Iowa; and Mrs. Arthur Kemster of Los Angeles, California; one brother, Malen Richardson of Pacific Junction, Iowa; twenty-three grandchildren; thirty-five great grandchildren; and one great, great grandchild. Services were held at the Tyler Funeral Home in Council Bluffs with Elder V. D. Ruch in charge. Interment was in the city cemetery at Plattsmouth, Nebraska.

I was originally a member of the German Lutheran church, but was not satisfied with that doctrine. In 1918 I became very ill; when medical science failed to help me, I asked my minister to administer to me as the early Christians did. He said that he did not have the authority to administer, but would pray for me. I was blessed and comforted by his prayers, but continued to look for the church that is the same yesterday, today, and forever. In 1933 I moved to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and was told about the Reorganized Church by a friend. I began attending prayer services and within a month asked for baptism.

On Tolerance

There are many things I'd like to talk about to God's people, but I have chosen this one in particular. When I was young, I hated explaining things. If I had a misunderstanding, I didn't bear hard feelings toward anyone; I felt that the other person did it and so I just let him alone. Once a vision was opened to me in which I saw that I must meet these people in the great beyond; I was asked, "Why don't you make friends?" I always wanted to be a friend to anyone in need of a friend, but there were conditions existing which caused me to feel that I did not want friends. Only one understood—that was the Master; I knew he was my friend. I am happy that he has given me the gift of explaining the gospel. I believe, as he did, that we should do good for evil. I can't remember ever having read that Jesus forgave anyone—he never held anything against anybody.

We are each just one tiny part of the world, yet God is so mindful of us that he says not one hair from our heads will fall unnoticed. He has a specific purpose for each of us. We should use his life as the pattern by which to mold our lives.

The hardest thing I have had to learn to endure is unfair criticism and condemnation of church doctrine by neighbors. If I had shown anger, they would always have been my enemies and I would have shut the door of the kingdom to them. Jesus said, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men to me." If our neighbors and friends cannot see his life portrayed in us, then our religion is vain. I have tried to explain the gospel always in a kind, considerate way.

The other day I called a cab and as it stopped the driver said "Hello" in such a familiar way I looked at him and noticed that he was a brother of a person who had owed me a bill for years. I spoke to him in a friendly voice and asked about his brother's family. He picked up two other passengers going a long way east while I was wanting to go north. I was worried for fear I wouldn't get to work on time, but then I remembered that the driver had gone several blocks out of his way to pick me up.

We are told that the way of the transgressor is hard. We might confine our talk to the church, but we must live in the world although we are not to be of it. When someone injures us and we go out of our way to do them good, it does something to that person; we feel much better for it too. No wonder Jesus said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart." He wept for others, never for himself. So, dear readers, if someone has hurt you, don't pass him by. Smile and say hello; watch for an opportunity to do him a good turn. If you stay away from God's house because of someone else, you are injuring the best and truest friend you ever had. If you stay away because you feel that you cannot dress as others do, it is false pride. We should try to look our best when we come together to worship, but God looks on the heart, not at the clothes. If we work and pray and trust in him, we shall meet him in his house. We must have a love for all our fellow men, or we crucify Jesus anew. His yoke is easy; his burden is light. Have sympathy for those who try to make you believe differently.

Let us continue in the faith; let us learn to live with others. It will not always be a life of gain, but it will pay many rich rewards. If you are isolated, there may someday be a branch where you can live because of your devoted life. Mrs. S. S. Troyer.

Calls for Testimonies

Enclosing a money order for another year's subscription to the Herald, I wish to say I have enjoyed them very much. When I finish reading the copies I take them to the T. B. sanitarium here for the patients to read, and they enjoy them very much.

Why couldn't there be one or two pages devoted to testimonies? They give so much strength to the weaker ones, of whom I am one. Great light has been given me through the Herald, for which I thank God. My wife joined the church recently, so this completes the family circle. Alex Ohlen.

A Report From Evangelist W. H. Barker

Portland, Oregon

Elbert A. Smith,
Independence, Missouri
Dear Brother Smith:

My health has been under par for over a year, but I have been able to make contact with most of the Portland district. The work has progressed very well, considering the troublesome times of war. We now have three branches in Portland. We must try, somehow, to raise the moral and spiritual level of our people. The circumstances of war have affected the faith of many of our young, and I see in the returning ones the need of a strong spiritual revival. Divorce and remarriage is a growing problem here, and I suppose is in most places in the church. There is so much at stake that we feel undone for wisdom when confronted with some of these cases. God grant that we may have light to advise wisely in these serious things, and above all to minister to the homes of our people in such a manner that the root causes may be greatly diminished.

I feel very thankful that my five sons survived this bloody war. Two of them were in some of its worst battles, Guadalcanal, Tarawa, Saipan, and Tinian. Three have been separated from the service recently, and two will have to serve out their enlistment of about a year more.

W. H. BARKER, Evangelist.

P. S.

* THE SPIRIT OF TOLERANCE

We were concluding a small piece of business with a friendly church member.

"Come and visit us sometime," he invited. "We discuss anything at our house!"

There is the liberal, kindly spirit of America: willing to consider anything on its merits, ready to listen to some other person's idea. It may well be that the greatness of America is based upon this as much as upon anything else. The people do not have their minds all made up and closed against all new ideas. It is hard to find many doctrinaire persons who are merely traveling phonograph records of some radical author who saw the world all wrong because he had bad eyesight, or hated humanity because he suffered from stomach ulcers.

"We discuss anything." That is even bigger than an invitation. It is a challenge. An intellectual ideal. More power and long life to such people. It is an invitation worth accepting.

* FUTILITY

From a letter by a woman, describing her life before she was converted: "I . . . just worried to pass the time away." What an effective way to describe it! How many of us are still doing that?

* ALL the good and all the evils of the world begin with the ideas of men and women. It is in our thinking that reform must begin. Throughout its milleniums of labor with the human race, religion has apprehended this truth. And still today, the first task of the church is to reach us on the level of our ideas and improve them.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price $2.25 per year, and $1.15 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada $2.50 per year and $1.30 for six months; other countries, $3.25 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

All checks for subscriptions to church papers, or for books and other materials sold at the Church Bookstore, should be made payable to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Suggestions to writers: Typewritten scripts, double-spaced, are preferred. Keep carbon copies to protect against loss. All articles and letters should be signed by writers. Please avoid use of post cards. News letters should be signed, approved by pastors, and should concern only church activities and workers. We find it necessary to edit most articles, and to condense news. No charge is made for one printing of the usual announcements of church meetings, births, marriages, and deaths; no memorial verse is used. Bulletin Board notices should be in our office at least ten days before date of publication. We cannot accept commercial or personal advertising. Articles for publication are gladly received, but there is no provision to pay for them. Those that relate to church work, doctrine, general cultural and educational subjects, personal development, etc., will be considered on basis of contents and literary merit. Writers should feel free to make independent presentations of their views, but should avoid criticism of the work of other writers appearing in these columns.

Letters: All letters and money for subscriptions and books should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri. Articles and letters for publication should be sent to the same address, and marked "The Editors." Letters for all general church offices should be sent to The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

All checks for the church should be handled according to the following directions received from Bishop G. L. DeLapp:

"Checks or Money Orders for contributions made to the General Church should be issued in the name of the Solicitor, Bishop's Agent or Bishop in the district or stake in which the contributor lives. In each such case, a receipt will be issued by the financial officer receiving the contribution.

"If circumstances or conditions are such that it is more convenient to send contribution direct, Money Orders or checks should be issued in favor of The Presiding Bishopric, and mailed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This includes contributions for tithing, surplus, offering, oblation, Christmas offering, Auditorium, College Day and The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital."

They Say "When?" About Zion

The Unanswered Question

This editorial began with a woman's question. A good church member, now resident in a distant state, had returned to her old home in this city on a visit. She was in the office looking at books, but something else was the burden of her mind and heart. She looked up quickly and said, "Tell me, when are we going to do something about Zion? Will another generation have to fail and die before it is accomplished?"

You, too, have pondered that question. So have I, many a time. It is not easily answered. Perhaps it would be better to say that it is not answered. One would need more than human vision to reply to it.

Considerations

Zion?

Here I had been living for years, a part of all the effort, the thinking, and the progress of our people, and someone asked me why we had done nothing! How do you feel when somebody dismisses all that has been done with a single question?

I have lived in the world, and toiled for its scant rewards. I have been lonely, and isolated from our people. I have lived in places where neither God nor man was respected, and where it was hardly worth-while to live at all. I have lived in some places where conditions were rather good, but I was still isolated from my kind. So I know what the world is as well as anybody does. I thought of all these things very quickly as I tried to form an answer to the question.

Then I thought of the change when I came to Independence. It was like a different world. I am surrounded by friends—hundreds of them. Every day I meet many of them, talk to them, enjoy their fellowship, I go to church, prayer meetings, and work with them. In the cities where I had lived I did not know the people who lived on the next floor of the apartment; nobody cared whether I lived or died. Here in Independence, especially on our street, nobody can be sick without somebody else caring and coming to help. That is the difference: people care, and do something about it. It is the difference between hell and heaven. Nobody can tell me. I know.

Counter Question

So I told her about these things.

Then I asked her, "What do you want, exactly? Can you name it or describe it specifically?"

This sister was attractively dressed; she was not hungry and appeared not to be in any danger of hunger in the future. She was in good health for her age. And she could bear as fine a testimony of God's goodness as anybody in the church. She has certainly been blessed in many ways. I present her case, not as an example, but as a symbol. There are many—both men and women—like her.

I have seen pampered children, not hungry, complaining of their food. I have seen overdressed children, crying about their clothes. In view of all the suffering and want and disease and death in the world, I wonder, what does our Heavenly Father think of us?

What do you think he thinks of us?

What, exactly, do we want?

Economic Considerations

But her question was not empty. My counter question did not satisfy her, nor all my explanation. They did not satisfy me. We have not attained. There is much more to do than we have ever done. This is something to trouble the mind.

We are still, to a great measure, in the world. We are subject to its economic conditions, insecurity, unemployment, want, inequality, with suffering for the poor and the weak. Sporadic and unorganized charity—even the limited social service that we have, and certainly voluntary individual efforts, are insufficient for the needs in many cases.

Nobody likes these things. We, less than others. But other people accept them as conditions from which there has never been any escape, and from which there is likely to be none. Those who go down in a competitive social and economic struggle go down without hope and without mercy. We do not like this. We think it can be avoided.

Phases of Zion

There are the different phases of Zion. One can live in relation to God so that the kingdom of heaven is within him, but he will still be an alien in the world. Or he may live in a zionic type of home, where there is peace, righteousness, happiness, and security, but still as an island in a foreign sea. Or, if there are enough homes of this type, he may even have a neighborhood or a city where conditions predominate that make a very happy kind of social life possible. But the groups will still be at the mercy of pagan economic conditions. Our people look for the development of Christian community life. Their goal is a Christian world. There can be no final security until that is attained. So, there are phases of Zion: the personal, the home, the community, the national, the world. They pro-

Worship

The Trinity and Christian Devotion, by Charles W. Lowry. N. Y., Harper and Brothers, 1946. 162 pages. $1.50.

This is a contribution of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, as well as the Episcopal Church of Britain, to the 1946 Lenten literature. It is a philosophical and doctrinal treatise of considerable merit. The style is heavy and will not appeal to the casual reader.

The author believes that the drift from the doctrinal basis of religion has taken a toll which the experiences of the war have made quite clear. He places the doctrine of Trinity as primary. "The doctrine of the Trinity is the most comprehensive and the most nearly all-inclusive formulation of the truth of Christianity. It is in and of itself a not inadequate summation of the principal teachings of the Christian religion" (page 79).

Dr. Lowry gives considerable space to the statements of the Nicene and Athanasian creeds on the Godhead. The three persons are equal, distinct; yet Unity—one God. Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the book is not its doctrinal contribution, but the fact that it is an attempt to get men interested in doctrine again.

Of more interest to Latter Day Saints will be such quotable statements as these:

Yet the Bible remains, after all is said and done, the greatest miracle of all time. It is in actuality the Word of God, since it is only through its witness, record, and interpretation that we confront and are confronted by the deeds and the speech of the living God.—Page 78.

Meditation is the art of conforming our wills to God by means of deliberate mental concentration and direction of imagination. A good analogy to meditation is the daily practice of the distance runner on the track or across country, as distinct from the more negative aspects of his training, such as abstaining from certain food and drink and avoiding late hours. Meditation is the deliberate, regular, systematic practice of the presence of God through thinking about Him, letting one's imagination dwell upon Him, and recalling all that He has done in creation, redemption, and sanctification.—Page 131.

Worship is to religion what play or recreation is to ordinary living. It is the moment of pause, of rest, of renewal, of the recharging of the currents and energies of the soul. It is recreation in its supreme form.—Page 146.

Change or Perish

Modern Man Is Obsolete, by Norman Cousins. N. Y., Viking Press, 1945. 59 pages. $1.

Through the long course of the ages, there have been vast, cataclysmic changes in climate, geography, and vegetation on the earth. The creatures that were able to change to meet new conditions survived. Those that could not change perished. We can read that history in the rocks.

Atomic energy—first used in the atomic bomb, but ready for many other uses to come—has begun another swift and terrible transformation of our world. The new conditions will be so different, not in a physical way, but in a scientific, political, and economic way, that mankind must adapt itself to meet them or perish. The possession of this form of energy imposes new responsibilities upon us, and if we cannot meet them, we will destroy each other and ourselves. The tragedy of human intelligence is that it has unlocked a power which it seems not intelligent enough to control.

This is the dilemma confronting us. The author believes that we may have the capacities to save ourselves; the question is whether we have the wills to do it, whether we are wise enough to do what is best for us.

This is a small but very stimulating book. It must be read by thoughtful people who can interpret its implications to their fellow citizens, so that a new wisdom shall penetrate all society.

A Philosophy of Citizenship

Citizenship and the New Day, by Paul P. Womer. Abingdon-Cokesbury, N. Y. 1945. 319 pages. $3.

"The Supreme Intelligence, who presides over the affairs of men and nations, has made no promise of immortality for the American Republic," is the beginning sentence of the book, and the author devotes his efforts to help build the kind of citizenship that will strengthen and preserve our country and its government. Basically, this is a presentation of the groundwork of the practical philosophy of citizenship. It is an outgrowth in part of some years of teaching and experimentation at Washburn University.

The book is divided into three parts: (1) The Origin, Functions, and Character of Citizenship; (2) The Idealistic Character of Citizenship; and (3) Education for Citizenship.

This work is for mature and well-educated readers—for the teacher rather than for the student in the classroom, unless he happens to be doing graduate work.

Good Modern Poetry

Over the Sea, the Sky, by Edwin McNeill Poteat. Harper, 70 pages. Price, $1.50.

Those who like poetry for its music will find this small volume of lilting verse a pleasure to read. Those who want a moral in their poetry will find it vividly and ironically woven into the many Bible story interpretations. Those who appreciate variety of style and thought will praise Mr. Poteat's versatility. Over the Sea, the Sky is eloquent, sparkling with a freshness of expression too often sacrificed by poets in their obedience to technical laws. It is modern poetry at its best.

Pearls of Great Price

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls: who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it.—Matthew 13: 45, 46.

JESUS likened the kingdom of God to a "pearl of great price." Once having found this great pearl, you would be willing to sell all of your material possessions to obtain it. Out of this parable has developed a familiar saying, "What are your pearls of great price?" meaning, What are the things you value most?

Once a Roman mother was asked, "Where are your jewels?" Affectionately she placed her arms about her two sons and answered, "These are my jewels; these are my most valued possessions."

The kingdom of God is indeed the pearl of great price, but within this kingdom there are values that also can readily be considered pearls of great price. One of the greatest of these is our youth. Yes, we can profit much by the attitude of that mother and as a church consider our young people as our pearls of great price. These gems can indeed shine and glorify God in the brightness of his kingdom.

In one of the issues of the Herald, A. Neal Deaver wrote a very challenging article on the youth of our church preparing for their places of leadership. We cannot fail to recognize the very important part these young people are playing and will play in the progress of the church. This thought in itself should be a real challenge to members of our groups who are interested in rendering a real service in the building of God's Kingdom. Our young people are willing; they are enthusiastic. Yet they need guidance, direction, and motivation. They need fellowship and experience. Older people who are interested in meeting a real need of the church, can make an excellent contribution in this field of service.

We have heard from time to time our church officials mention the great need for trained leaders. They have tried in many ways to make us aware of this bottleneck in personnel. I have heard many express the desire to see a new supply of blood in the life-stream of the church. Can it be that we are overlooking a rich source of potential power in our youth? What could be a greater vision than to see the leaders of our church recruited from our own ranks? If we want leaders, we must grow them. This is the only answer to the personnel problems we face. The seeds for a real harvest of leaders must be sown, and some earnest labor must be performed with our youth, if we expect to reap an abundant harvest of qualified leaders for our church.

Brother McDowell stated recently the need for appealing to the young members of our church. He seemed quite concerned about the losses among our young people. The great number of youth being lost as far as the church is concerned, should be an awakening sign to us all. Can we afford to allow this waste of potential power? Are we not missing the boat somewhere along the line? I am certain you will agree that the place we have fallen short is in planning for dynamic character building, Christian emphasis, and a church-centered youth program, a program that gives our young folks a chance to enjoy real experiences in living, working, playing, and worshipping together.

The kingdom of God isn't going to be built alone by those who are adults, nor are the youth of today going to build the world of tomorrow. We are architects together. Let us transmit our rich social and religious heritage to our youth that they may equip themselves for the tasks that will be theirs. The greatest investment of time, effort, or money is the investment we make in youth. It will pay the biggest dividends.

The kingdom of God is likened to a little child by the Master. If we, like Christ, can keep the child in our midst, then greater will be our chances of developing those Christian qualities of personality so necessary as pre-requisites for the building of Zion and for entrance into the kingdom of God.

"What are your pearls of great price?" I hope those who are parents, pastors, church school directors, and youth leaders can say as the young mother, "These children are my pearls of great price."

A Tribute to Our President

By Delores Breckon

1946

What makes a person great?

Someone may inquire.

Is it the size of his estate?

Or the wealth he may acquire?

If God were to answer this question

From his heavenly home above,

I believe that he would say

He is great who is full of love.

There are few such men today

For this world is full of sin,

But even with Satan's power

It's a grand world to live in.

If the world were full of people

All great and true and kind

As the President of our church,

Then life would be sublime.

Mere words are vague and empty

Our gratitude to express,

So let us follow his example

Walking in ways of righteousness.

Port Huron, Michigan.

Soil Conservation--Soul Conservation

By Poul S. Nielsen

WHEN the pioneers of America first came to this our beloved country they found great forests and plains with grass in abundance. They came to find gold or riches and the great timbers of our eastern states fell under the ax and—what was far worse—before the fires set by man. The prairies were burned over and the sod turned under to feed an ever-increasing population that was land-hungry but not land-conscious.

For the land left without its protective cover soon started to be running away down the streams and rivers after every little or big rain. The net result was that the hillsides became poorer and that the good bottomland was covered under the topsoil from the not too plentiful topsoil of the hillsides, and much fertility of the land was washed out to sea. Soon gullies were formed and cracks were made where none existed a few short years ago.

Man has in later years tried to undo what his ancestors wasted by reclaiming what is left before it is too late. Now he farms his land on the contour, or with the hillsides, instead of up and down. He has proceeded to build terraces to hold the water so it would not rush down hill too fast, but be kept on the hills where it is needed.

It is a great work that the American farmer of the middle west has before him, but in other countries it has been tried and found good. The people of ancient South America did it and so do the Chinese even to our day.

BUT what has soil conservation to do with soul conservation? To each man has been given a soul. It is his to keep and take care of. True enough, in the Dark Ages, and to a certain extent yet in certain churches, the priesthood of those churches have the idea or perhaps had it that they were the custodians of the souls of those in their charge, some even going so far as to think for their charges, leaving it all to themselves and thereby relieving man of his responsibility. And all of us are surrounded by evil forces that tend to destroy the soul that was given to us by a kind Creator. Like the rain that falls on denuded land, they will tear down his soul and not build it up. But here is where the church enters, not as an autocrat to tell man that he must do this and leave out that in order to preserve his soul. Any priesthood that is too set in its way will never gain any convert to its soul-conservation program any more than a farmer can be persuaded to do contour farming if he is not convinced that it is the right thing to do for his land.

Men are like a flock of sheep, not easy to drive in places where they are not used to going, but ready and willing to follow the shepherd when they hear his reassuring voice. Most men cannot be driven into anything that will preserve their souls, but most of them can be led if the right person leads the way. It is not given to all preachers to gain converts, but a poor preacher indeed is the one who never sows a seed that may sprout in someone's heart.

THE WORD is preached continually in the churches, but is man not like a farmer in his attitude toward soil conservation? He thinks it is a very good thing, and that he is going to do it next year; and so it is with the other subject of this article. Man puts things off to the next day or the next year. We, like the farmer mentioned, lay our plans—perhaps with good intentions—to do what we really think ought to be done; but let the world whisper in our ears, that it is of no use to be in a hurry and that we might as well have another little card game or some such thing and right then and there man forgets his good intention or rather pushes it into the background.

All mankind have an abundance of excuses for not practicing soul conservation. He thinks, "The weather is a little bad, I guess I won't be missed this morning." Yet the weather might not be one bit better some other time; but somehow we manage to go to the city and see a new picture.

Why would it not be better to have a few excuses ready, as some good ones that we really could back up whenever someone wanted us to have a small drink, or perhaps do something that even though the world would not classify its doing as a sin, but still would not be exactly the right thing to do? But somehow, like the farmer that persists in plowing up and down the hill, thereby permitting his land to still be wasted away, man often permits himself to do things that are not in the least to his soul's benefit.

The church of our choice has a great task ahead in teaching its members to so live that they will be examples to their fellow men wherever they live, showing that it pays to practice soul conservation. For have not all of us—at least those of us who are getting up in years—learned that the trend of man is to destroy more than he builds up? Can we not see living examples of this in every community among men, yes, even throughout the nation? We talk of peace when in reality there is no such thing as a true peace. War is over. Yes, on the surface. But are not the nations set against each other as much as ever? Is man not still following in the footsteps of the first murderer when he said, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

A Danish poet wrote a rather long poem about the death of Abel ending with the words, "God is good; the life he gave, he did not leave it helpless. He made a path across the grave that leads into the

The Joy of Living

By Bessie Taylor

REALLY TO LIVE, in the truest sense, is to be so filled with joy in the delight of being alive, that complete harmony is set up in the activities of the mind, emotions, and body. It is the fullness of self-activity and its harmony that brings the thrill of perfect enjoyment.

Anyone who is filled with joy awakens in the morning rejoicing he is alive. He is filled with intense happiness to know another day of opportunity is his. He gets up with a prayer on his lips, inspired with enthusiasm, and looks forward with eagerness to his work. His heart is filled with thankfulness and laughter, and therefore his conversation begets good will, cheerfulness, and gladness. He does his day's work, and without fatigue, he returns home with a ready laughter, seeing the good and the beauty in everyone and everything he meets. If he meets difficulties, he is not cast down, for he never accepts defeat, knowing that in the mental and spiritual realm there can never be failure. His motto is, "Conquer defeat as soon as you can and use it as a steppingstone."

We have all experienced moments of exhilaration, gladness, and joy, and we know these are the moments that make life worth-while. So let us attempt to analyze this great "condition of joy and happiness" to see if we can't have more joy in our lives and find out the conditions that make this life possible. Apparently there are six dominant conditions that must abide in us before we can have complete and everlasting joy.

One of these is "health" perhaps we should say perfect health. Perfect health is ours by divine right. Health depends on three things—what we eat, what we breathe, and what we think. What we eat may again cause trouble in three ways and these three destroyers are, deficiency, congestion, and acidity. Our health is a result of a perfect balance of our spiritual, mental, and physical selves. Health means harmony, and it is the natural condition of all creatures.

Another quality is that of "peace of mind." If we are going to have joy we cannot have worry on our minds.

paradise of God."

We can catch hope in words like that, for after all we must do our bit to conserve our souls, ourselves. And what are you, brother Saint, doing?

Worry is a form of anticipation and forethought. Nature makes us do it. Forethought and anticipation are essential to intelligent living. It is only when our apprehensions are ruled by a nervous anxiety and our imagination becomes distorted by fear, that worry injures us. When reason guides emotion, and deliberation merges with imagination, forethought and anticipation then become the very center of accomplishment. We meet our experiences in either of two ways—one is with confused and defective brooding, the other of calm calculation. We worry because we do not know how to think. In the art of learning how to worry successfully, the central principle is to keep from becoming confused with other people's troubles and retain a faith in the belief that if we do our part, the world will help us out. Too few of us realize how greatly life is affected by our attitude toward it. When our attitudes are constructive, worry becomes calm deliberation and when negative, worry prevails and destroys reason. Discipline and control are the dampers for worry.

"Faith in God" is another state of mind we must retain to have joy. There must be established a harmonious relationship between man and his divine source. When we understand our place in the divine purpose of our creation, and the unity of all life, the unity of all laws, and the unity of all things, we realize our place with God, and a great peace and joy settle down in our soul.

Another stipulation is "good attitude toward our fellow men." Our life could not be complete without others. So we must look for the good in everybody. Emerson says, "Everyone I meet is my superior in some way." How many of you believe that? Well, it is true! Even the most unpromising of people have divine potentialities and within everyone is the Spirit of the divine God and he is our brother.

Another character attribute is "good attitude toward our work." Our work really occupies the greatest amount of our time; in fact, our whole life is adjusted to meet conditions that will facilitate our work. So to have joy we must love our work and find beauty in all that it involves. Laziness is one negative attitude that injures industry. Others are careless preparation, indifference, wanting more out of it than we put into it, and the failure to estimate its true worth, and the tendency to see the obstacles rather than the objective.

Last but not least is "service." Not only do we need others to complete our life but we must serve them. It is the only path to true success. Service is a sacrificial offering God demands of us. If we catch the passion for helping others, a richer life will come back to us. The more we serve, the greater becomes our capacity to serve. A classical example of service is found in the comparison of the Dead Sea and Sea of Galilee. They both contain the same water, yet the Sea of Galilee is one of beauty and of life, it gathers its riches and has an outlet, while the Dead Sea with no life and no beauty only collects.

So we see however far we may look for "joy" it can never be found—we must grow it. "And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy" (Doctrine and Covenants 45:14).

gress from the smallest to the largest.

Organizations, institutions, community, collective and co-operative effort, will all be necessary before we have attained our ideal. Perhaps we should enjoy what we have today, but not enjoy it so much that we are content to rest here. We must always be looking, planning, striving onward.

And let us not underestimate the difficulty and the complexity of the planning and preparation that will be necessary before the greater steps of social and economic organization can be taken. It is something that must be thought about much, discussed and analyzed, carefully planned, thoughtfully executed.

Above all, let us not relent in our effort, nor be discouraged. We must apply the whip to ourselves sometimes, but in judicious measure. We must travel as we are able. We cannot reach the goal with the speed of thought. But we must also be sure that we are moving in the direction of the goal.

Perhaps, some day, we shall have a satisfactory answer to that good woman's question.

Marietta Walker

A biographical sketch prepared in connection with the Fiftieth Anniversary celebration of Graceland College, 1945.

By Cleo M. Hanthorne Moon

For the Lambda Delta Sigma Society

MARIETTA WALKER has been for many years named by commentators as one of the few people most influential in the establishment of a college for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The years reveal that Graceland College is fortunate to have shared in the vision and the vitality of a great woman. Her greatness is characterized, as greatness always is, by a great, constructive passion. Mrs. Walker's passion was the intellectual, social, and spiritual development of the people of the church to which she was bound by the devotion of her parents, and the martyr's blood lost by her brothers in the grim days of old Nauvoo.

In the span of her years, from 1834 to 1930, she demonstrated a full conception of Zion. She was a Zion-builder in specific, practical ways. Zion seems now far closer to reality for thousands of Saints because of the reality of her impressions, and the definite markers with which she dotted the way visioned by Joseph Smith.

The theme of Marietta Walker's church work may be said to have been "Touch every age group with zeal, and Zion will come forth irresistibly." Graceland College is in great measure the implementation of Mrs. Walker's belief that Zion must grow out of the trained and directed energy of devoted young men and women.

The personality of a great person can be buried under mere chronology. But the Marietta Walker chronological table is packed so full and sweeps so wide, geographically and socially, that even in factual recital, it stirs with drama and personal power.

MARIETTA HODGES was born in Ohio, a few miles from the spot where Kirtland Temple was already projected. Her family were following the church in 1834 from their former home in Vermont. When Marietta was five years old, her family were driven from their home, at Far West, Missouri, by the persecutors of the Saints. Two brothers, in their devotion to the church, lost their lives in Nauvoo. The Hodges denied the leadership of Brigham Young, and in 1847, returned east to make their home in Pennsylvania.

Somewhat later, Mrs. Hodges, by that time widowed, went, with one son and her daughter, Marietta, to St. Louis to live with a married daughter. There Marietta was entered in a school for girls, under Mrs. Avis, teacher. She was later called to assist with the teaching there.

In 1859, Marietta Hodges was graduated from Oxford (Ohio) College for Women. Immediately thereafter, she went to San Antonio, Texas, to care for her two nieces, left motherless by the death of her sister. While in Texas, she served as principal of the San Antonio Female College, later known as Westmorland College.

On the eve of the Civil War, she married Robert Falconer, who served in the Confederate Army. In 1862, her husband died while home on a furlough. Mrs. Falconer was left with a little daughter, Lucy.

In 1864, the young widow and her child made their way to Illinois, where Marietta's mother was ill. They had to go by boat to New York City by way of Havana, running the Federal blockade. They arrived in New York City shortly after the assassination of Lincoln.

On reaching her mother in Sandwich, Illinois, she was indignant to find that her mother had united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The memory of the Missouri persecutions, and the mistrust of the leadership of Brigham Young had left scars upon Marietta that were not easily erased. After a while in Illinois, however, she became convinced of the authenticity of the Reorganization. She allied herself to the movement, and devoted the rest of her life to the fulfillment of the high purposes that the Hodges had found in the original church.

While in Sandwich, Marietta Falconer was asked to come to her Alma Mater in Oxford, Ohio, to teach. She refused, though, and stayed in Sandwich, where she believed she was needed by her mother and child. She helped in the Sunday school work there, assisted President Joseph Smith in the publication of the Zion's Hope, the church paper for children which he had begun in the early sixties. She taught piano lessons in her home, to help maintain herself and her child.

In 1869, she was married to Samuel Frye Walker, student, philosopher, writer, and ranchman. The Walkers and little Lucy Falconer went to Nevada to live on Mr. Walker's ranch. In the seven years they lived there, two little girls were born to them, Francis and Lois.

In 1877, the Walkers moved to Lamoni, Iowa, to assist in the efforts of the order of Enoch to build up a church center there. They located on a farm east of Lamoni, now included in the Graceland College lands. They raised large herds of cattle. Mrs. Walker made butter in such quantities and of such quality that she shipped it to a Denver market.

In 1885, the family moved to town. Mr. Walker died soon thereafter. Mrs. Walker gave her time to literary and educational work. She became superintendent of the Sunday school, editor of the Home Column in the Saints' Herald. In 1888, she founded Autumn Leaves, a magazine for young people of the church. She edited Zion's Hope. She superintended the beautifying of the Brick Church grounds, providing "Sunday school rooms" under the shade trees.

In 1895, the Administration Building at Graceland College was erected, and the college opened. It was an embodiment of a dream of Mrs. Walker's. A college trained woman herself, she had felt confident that education for the young people of the church was important to the development to zionic ideals. When she had lived on the farm out east of the present site of the college, she had tossed up in her imagination a college on the violet-clad hill to the west of her. She had been active in interesting influential people in the church college idea. She gave twenty acres of the ground for the original College Addition. Later purchases took over the Walker farm for college land.

Mrs. Walker started the Students' Society for local young people, which later grew into the Zion's Religio-Literary Society. She started the Daughters of Zion for adult women. She started the Woman's Auxiliary for social service. These women's organizations grew into the present women's department.

She encouraged the publishing of Sunday school quarterlies. She provided for the publishing of leaflets for the women of the church. She ran a subscription in her Home Column in the Saints' Herald by which she raised a fund to purchase the Evanelia, the gospel boat used for missionary travel in the South Sea Islands. She started the Christmas offering for missionary work.

In 1909, Mrs. Walker had a house moved onto the lot north of the present Walker Hall, and established herself a residence, Arbor Villa. She engaged in chicken raising there "to provide for her independence in her old age." After that, she lived in the Banta home, which later became the Children's Home, sponsored by the Daughters of Zion. It was later taken over by the church.

She returned to her home on State Street, and lived with Mrs. Ressegue, her niece, and Miss Mary Banta. She devoted herself to reading, making presents for friends, making embroidery and leather gifts for sale, and conversing with friends who called. She kept up a wide correspondence until her sight failed. She became quite deaf. She employed the aid of an ear trumpet. Her advice was sought often by church leaders as long as she lived in Lamoni.

In 1925, Mrs. Ressegue died. At ninety-four, living with Mary Banta, Mrs. Walker still was taking care of her rooms, and cooking her own meals. She wanted to write one more book, but illness and waning sight prevented. In 1929, she edited "The Footprints of One Bonnie Scotch Lassie" for the Autumn Leaves, then Vision. Her family thought the close work on that book was responsible for her almost complete loss of sight.

In 1929, she went to California, to "help care for her daughter's motherless grandchildren." The last book she read was The Christ of the Indian Road, by E. Stanley Jones.

On April 10, 1930, she received birthday greetings from the Centennial Conference, convening at Independence, Missouri. A delegation of fifty young people from Long Beach and Santa Ana came to do her honor, laying flowers in her lap. She spoke her appreciation.

On April 11, she fell quite ill. The following morning, she died. Her body was brought back to Lamoni, Iowa, for burial in Rose Hill Cemetery, beside Mr. Walker. On June 6, of that year, the new Graceland dormitory for women was dedicated. It was named Walker Hall in honor of Marietta Walker. She had been honored years before when Marietta Hall for girls was named for her. That building, erected in 1906, was not a fireproof building.

Some of Mrs. Walker's published writings are: With the Church in an Early Day, The Indian Maiden, Fireside Chats With Our Girls. She edited a book of poems, Afterglow. With Elder H. A. Stebbins she compiled A Compendium of Faith. She wrote and published Bible lessons for children.

"No person," said President Frederick M. Smith, at the Centennial Conference, "has done more for the development of the work of the Reorganization than has Marietta Walker."

"Such has been her life," said F. Henry Edwards in a brief comment concerning her death, in the Zion's Ensign for April 24, 1930, "that her contribution to the gospel still continues and will continue so long as the church moves forward."

Marietta Walker was far ahead of her time in blending public spirit, educational activity, out-of-the-home career, with successful homemaking and child rearing. She was a home-loving woman, and in spite of her interest in public affairs, she never wanted recognition and always kept herself in the background.

Marietta Walker and President G.

N. Briggs of Graceland College expressed publicly a high degree of mutual admiration.

In May, 1923, the students and faculty members of Graceland College accorded to Mrs. Walker by unanimous vote the title "Mother of Graceland." Vida E. Smith, dean of women, read the resolution which had been prepared by a committee, before the students assembled in the chapel. The resolution was later presented to Mrs. Walker by President Briggs, on Mother's Day.

Now, in 1945, however, with a conception of womanhood that is catching up with Mrs. Walker's vision, it seems not inappropriate to say that Mrs. Walker was more than a mother; she was a dynamo. Graceland College drew largely upon her power for the life that set it in motion in the late years of the nineteenth century; and something of her courage, and determination, and devoted activity have characterized the life of the college throughout its fifty years.

On the wall in the library hangs a character study of Marietta Walker, painted by Mrs. Elizabeth Boldenweck, of Winnetka, Illinois. Mrs. Boldenweck did not know Marietta Walker personally, but she listened to the story of the devoted woman and studied her pictures. She has told in the picture a remarkably accurate story. She has painted a composite of the forward-looking Marietta Hodges already with personal and social devotion in the light of her eye and the set of her face, touched already with the fierceness of a great religious frustration; the Marietta Walker of her forties to sixties, a woman of indomitable courage and persistence, impulsive yet active, unremitting patience; and the Marietta Walker that many remember, a woman in her nineties, full of wisdom, forward-looking, a dreamer impatient with dreams, a friend, counselor, and guide. Study the portrait, and you will find there all of Marietta Walker, a personality that will outlive the portrait and the grave.

A Young Woman's Declaration of Faith

Religion in My College Life

By Ruth Midgorden

WHEN Religious Emphasis Week is announced each year, I can't help but regard it with a quizzical feeling. For too many people, Religious Emphasis Week is another "special week"—like Fire Prevention Week or National Safety Week. It's the week to emphasize religion—whatever that word means to each different person—and some people treat it as they do Safety Week: they attend all the rallies and speeches, and make promises, and next week they get fined for speeding or careless driving.

Religion, as well as safety first rules and prevention of fire, cannot be effective if it is relegated to a week's emphasis or even to a Sunday activity. The role of religion in the lives of people concerns itself with growth and development, and so must be a constant part of those lives.

IF I WERE to analyze the role religion plays in my college life, I would say, "it has been—and is—the motivating force in almost everything I have done and expect to do." I say "almost" because I think with shame and regret of the times I have failed to keep step with my ideals and of the times I have knowingly forsaken them.

Perhaps one of the first times this year's seniors began considering their religion seriously was the fall quarter of 1942 when we entered college as freshmen. We were the first class to enroll after the United States went to war against Japan and Germany. At that time, many of us—along with thousands of others—sought the refuge of religion because of the fear that was in our hearts.

But religion, as it adheres closest to my personal concept of God and of Christ rests not upon fear or superstition or ignorance, but upon love, faith, and wisdom.

Through the three-and-a-half years I have attended Iowa State College, I have been trying to unify my life with my philosophy of living. To explain that a little more, my religion for me consists not only of my ideals and purposes, but also of the actual way I act and think and feel.

THERE ARE PEOPLE to whom I have expressed my ideals of world brotherhood and of daily conduct who have "reasoned" with me on several points. "It's fine to have ideals constantly before you," they say, "but you can never live up to them perfectly." More than once I have heard the argument that "history has been this way, and will be always"; that "people are incapable of attaining the ideals they strive for." That attitude to me, at least, admits defeat before the contest even begins.

Because history has repeated itself time and again is no reason it must do so forever; we are not bound to believe that we must continue to have wars, race prejudice, and prosperity for only a few which is supposed to trickle down to the masses. The ideal of world brotherhood and of the establishment of God's kingdom on earth doesn't appear in such thinking.

To me, religion cannot be merely a signpost, pointing to a better way of life. It cannot be just a bundle of ideals and goodly concepts which make a person live a little better each day. It needs to be a vibrant thing, demanding, forceful. It must be positive and practical, entering all phases of a person's life—his business, his relaxation and recreation, as well as his conventional spiritual experiences such as church-going.

Realizing all of these things, I view my religion as an integral part of me in college and out of college. It can no more be dispensed with than an arm or a leg. The God in whom I believe is not just an "all-powerful, immensely rich king" but a Father who loves me and who will laugh with me when I'm happy and console me when I'm sad. My religion is a stabilizing force which serves to balance extreme theories and which pokes holes in weak and unchallenging ideas.

I came to college for several reasons—not alone for a diploma at the end of four years' work, not alone for training, not for association with all the people I have met. I came to college because of my religion. When I was very young, my parents gave me a book in which my mother had written "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." She took the quotation from Second Timothy in the Bible. It has been one of the guiding elements in my formal education and in the learning of the ways of people. And as true study is necessary and as skills are essential, so also are other things important.

THERE IS one final source to whom any person, no matter how discouraged or weary or beaten, may turn when he discovers a need for which the knowledge of books is not enough, the wonders of science do not suffice entirely, the friendship of people cannot answer. There are many Bible quotations about that, too, but one of my favorites is the passage which says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

It is a marvelous promise of aid in abundance to all who will ask earnestly and sincerely. It conveys the idea that if men have faith in the creator who made them and if they seek to do his will, and continually confide in him and trust him, he will guide them and give them increasingly more light and direction.

It is difficult, especially in a technical school, to ask a person to "have faith and believe." We are taught to analyze the problem. We want to see facts and set them down logically. We want to see a workable solution to a problem plainly and actually. Yet constant faith that endures and believing in God are essentials at the beginning and in the middle and at the end of any cycle of religion. They are indispensable, despite all the reasoning and logic, the practical applications of ideals, for there are always questions we cannot answer, problems we cannot solve alone.

I HAVE BEEN told often, as most of you have been told, that I cannot serve God except as I serve those around me. There is an additional warning given to some of us, which we all need to heed, for it is at the core of our troubles with individuals, with nations and with our relationships with our God. That is that we must "refuse to compromise with error and evil and things not right before God."

And the way to serve the people around me, as I saw it when I came to college, was to develop what talent and ability I had been given so that I could use it for that ideal of service held up before us. I try to regard my abilities or talents as a stewardship and not as something of my own making. And if I am to fulfill the trust given me, I must develop my capabilities.

So, without the beliefs in my religion, college life would be empty of meaning, not worth time nor money. But with the challenge and the steady drive of service which must be rendered, the growing acknowledgment of need of greater powers than my own, it is worth more than any measurable quantity of time or of money or of prestige and fame.

LOOKING ON . . .

Patience

By Wilbur K. Sartwell

I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: and hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted.—Revelation 2:2, 3.

When we visualize this vast world—
All its ills and wants and cares;
We who pray must trust the future
And have patience in our prayers.

A man who is born with the ability to have patience is a fortunate one indeed, but very few are born that way. In fact, few men ever develop this important trait to any extent. Those who do are the more successful, or, at least, their success is made with much more ease.

Any movement attempted by a group of people will bring out the true value of patience in individual characters. In the progress and development of such a movement, there are bound to be some who learn and work rapidly, some who learn and work slowly, and a greater number who advance at an average rate. The only possible way that three such types of persons can make a success of their undertaking is for each member to take a patient attitude toward his comrades.

Too many people who have the ambition to advance and the necessary faith in their creed have fallen by the wayside merely because they did not have the patience to follow its developments when the progress was slow.

I stood in the dry-cleaning line the other day for about a half hour, awaiting my turn to submit my soiled uniform. All of us were enlisted men, but every now and

What Are We Giving Our Children?

By Verda E. Bryant

AN INCIDENT OCCURRED in our family the other day which made me stop abruptly to think and to ask myself this question: "What are we giving our children?"

It is commonly accepted that we want for them more than we had: a better home, food, and clothing; the best in education and opportunities. But what of that better spiritual heritage we should be giving them?

A short time ago our eleven year-old daughter was much elated because of a party to be held at the home of her church school teacher. They had planned to meet on a Sunday afternoon to color and cut out some flannelgraph pictures for use in future lessons.

On this particular Sunday, Barbara came home from church pretty excited and very much put out because a couple of girls had said they weren't going to the party.

As we were about to eat our dinner, the mother of Barbara's best friend dropped in to invite her to go with them to the Philharmonic Pop Concert that afternoon. Immediately she wanted to go. She loves music, and it had been well over a year since we had been to a Philharmonic concert.

I might have said in no uncertain terms that she had a previous engagement, but that would have been dictatorship, and she would have gone to the party with a bitter taste in her mouth. I told her that it was up to her whether she did that which she evidently preferred at the moment to do or that which was her duty because of prior engagement.

After some discussion she decided to run down the street and talk it over with her teacher. Together they phoned several girls and learned that for one reason or another most of them were not going to be there, so her teacher suggested that she go to the concert.

After dinner, Barbara and I went up to her room and, taking advantage of the cozy comfort the bed affords, we talked it over.

Would she be happy at the concert knowing that she should be with her class? How would she feel if she'd planned a party and only three or four girls came? Would she be happy at the party knowing her best friend was at the concert and wishing she were there, too?

It wasn't such an important decision to make as it stood alone—isolated from other experiences—but I knew that upon this minor decision might hang the entire future conduct of my child. This was to be a decision—not between right and wrong—but between two good things; to determine which was the better. And this was Barbara's first real decision of this nature.

As we lay on the bed, she was sobbing as she pondered these things and the last several years of our relations together flashed across my mind in a panorama.

WHAT had I given her as a guide on which to base her decision? Was she going to choose to do "duty first after pleasure?" Had I been so busy with my hobby of "Girls' Work"—other mothers' daughters—that I was failing to pass on to my own daughter the will to choose rightly? Had she caught any of the spirit of my own rule to try always to do the thing I had said I would do?

Then I thought of the many times when we had friends in for the evening and how we had sent the children off to bed because they need their sleep, when it might have been better to have let them listen in on our conversation of experiences in the gospel. It occurred to me that we aren't always so sure they need their sleep when we attend a picture show. Had we been depriving them of a knowledge of God's blessings in favor of enough sleep?

And again, when we have had an unusual spiritual experience, have we shared it with our children or selfishly kept it as something to discuss among ourselves and adult friends?

Then through my mind flashed one reason why Zion hasn't been redeemed—why we have been so slow to do this thing God has commanded us to do.

I remembered some of the excuses given by children in my class for not attending church school: "We were up late Saturday night and I was just too tired to get up." "We went on a picnic and I couldn't come." "We were going to have company, and mother couldn't stop to get me ready."

And I thought how shallow were some of the excuses given by adults for laxity in church attendance, which is such a small thing to do toward the building of God's kingdom. So many times it is the same story—the work of kingdom-building comes second to pleasure.

With this sort of influence, how can we expect the adults of tomorrow to ever put first things first?

THEN I RECALLED an incident which occurred the first Sunday I was in Independence. With a group of young adults I was listening to one of the older missionaries recount some of his past miraculous experiences. He told among other incidents of one man who had made arrangements to meet him at a certain time and a certain place to do a work for the Lord. When the time came this man was in bed suffering from pneumonia. Contrary to the advice of his doctor and family, he insisted upon being wrapped in blankets and taken to the appointed place. Upon his arrival this missionary administered to him, and he was immediately healed and was able to complete the task the Lord had for him to do.

During the discussion which followed this talk, someone asked, "Why don't we have such a marvelous display of the miracles of God's blessings today?" It occurred to me that the answer was simple. How many today would leave a sickbed to do that which he knew God wanted him to do?

Where is our faith? our determination to obey God's commands regardless of all else? our desire to put first things first?

Do we need a special spiritual manifestation to know and to recognize God's will—the thing he wants us to do? We are told that if we see a thing that needs to be done, then we should do it because it is God's command that we do that thing which must be done.

MOST OF US in our generation are content to put first things first only when they don't interfere with what we would rather do. I think of the young wife reigning over a lovely well-ordered home who said she would love to work with little girls and would like to be able to do Blue Bird work, but she just couldn't because it would interfere with the routine of her home—her dinner hour might be delayed a few minutes one day a week!

Just what are we passing on to our children? A theory of "we do as we please?" A selfishness of "me first?" A "what difference does it make" attitude? An excuse "Brother So-'n-so does this, why can't I?" An alibi "I'm as good as the next one?"

These thoughts and many more flashed through my mind as I breathed a prayer that my Barbara might choose to do her duty first.

After several minutes' deliberation, she remarked that inasmuch as she couldn't be completely happy doing either she'd just stay home. She needed only to be reminded that this would be refusing to make a decision to realize that she must decide one way or the other. With a fresh burst of tears, she decided to go to her teacher's party.

With eyes washed and dried and hair freshly brushed, Barbara ran down the street and returned a couple hours later with a smile on her face and a light heart. Her teacher had said she had a big lump in her throat until Barbara had come, then the lump disappeared and she felt good all over; and my daughter had a wonderful time at the party. Two weeks later, she and two of her friends attended the next Philharmonic Pop Concert.

This incident in our family life made me more determined than ever to influence my children to always choose first things first and how better can we influence them than through our own strict adherence to the rule.

They are the envied connoisseurs of style

Upon the walk . . . they speak and smile, for just
As they have trained their fingers to the keys
They've trained their lips to smile . . . because they must.

SOME ARE born to aprons trimmed in blue
And fingers that are stained with berry juice;
They tie a baby's shoe and brush long curls
And help to pull the first tooth that comes loose.

Or roller skates, or doll with golden hair. . . .
They speak and smile, because their hearts are glad.

The Church Out of the Wilderness

By J. A. Koehler

“THE CHURCH” is a name which you will not find in the Old Testament. St. Peter said that there was a church in the days of Moses. If he meant that there was a household devoted to the worship of God, he may have spoken the truth. But it is very doubtful that the counterpart of the New Testament church, with its apostles and all, existed in Old Testament times.

Most people think of the church as of an object which may be seen with the eye—as of a sewing machine, for example. A few think of the church as of a “cloth-sewing” operation or activity. They say the church is a system of functions through which the Kingdom is to be established. They have St. Paul’s concept of the church, which is an idea of a living body in which all the parts are “fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part.”

ST. JOHN spoke of the church as of a mothering, a child-bearing, a Kingdom-establishing activity, operation, or system of functions; and of the fleeing of the church into the wilderness as of a forsaking or quitting of the child-rearing or Kingdom-promoting business. Said he: “the woman [which is the symbol of the church] fled into the wilderness,” there to remain for 1260 years.

We think of a wilderness, commonly, as of an uncultivated or barren place, a place in which weeds and other worthless plants have crowded out food-producing vegetation. A wilderness is an unfruitful place having little or no actual utility. But if instead of a “place” we should think of “a state of affairs,” we would come close to what St. John meant when he said that the church went into the wilderness.

Surely the voice of prophecy, or of divine authority, must have meant what really happened. And what really happened is that the church perverted the prophetic idea of the Kingdom and gave up the Kingdom-building ghost. It really did go into a wilderness of theological weeds, a wilderness of deluding and debasing superstitions and practices, which had no child-bearing or Kingdom-building value whatever.

St. Paul had said: “Take heed unto yourselves, and to the flock . . . to feed the Church of God . . . For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.” That is another way of expressing the general idea that the church shall go into the wilderness.

JESUS had said that even in his day the Kingdom of heaven was suffering violence, and that in time “the violent” shall take the Kingdom by force. Whether he referred to the Kingdom of heaven as to the church, or not, we are not sure. But of this we are sure: the messages of St. John to the seven churches in Asia reveal that the business to which the church should have devoted itself was on the way out. The wilderness into which the church went was forming rapidly.

Jude had said that “there are certain men crept in unawares . . . turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.” In Jude’s day the church was on its way into the wilderness. And none can read the story of the Dark Ages understandingly and escape the conclusion that what Jude and St. John and Paul and Jesus said is the truth.

Nor is all of that merely water which has run under the bridge, and which should be forgotten. It is water that is still running, not under the bridge, but under the place where the bridge is to be rebuilt. It is the story of a washout that must be repaired. It is an indication of work to be done in the present. It is a confirmation of the voice of ancient prophecy, which said by implication that the church shall come out of the wilderness, and of the modern voice of prophecy which says it is on the way out.

THE OLD TESTAMENT Hebrew prophets said nothing explicitly about the church going into the wilderness, nor did they say anything explicitly about its coming out. But they did say so implicitly. Their prophecy of the coming Kingdom, of “the mountain of the Lord’s house” to be established “in the last days,” and all, is by implication a prophecy that “in the last days” the church will come out of the wilderness. It will quit its dereliction, return from its abandonment of its mission, and all, and take up anew the task of mothering the man child that was “caught up unto God,” when it went into its wilderness. It will constitute itself the Kingdom-building church it was always intended to be.

One of those prophecies of that coming-out-of-the-wilderness reads in part as follows: “It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established in the top of the mountain . . . and all nations shall flow unto it.” Putting all the things together “which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began”—which is the only sensible way of interpreting prophecy—we find that that means that “in the last days” the church shall come out of the wilderness. It shall become a Kingdom-building church again.

THE AIM in this group of talks, as you may know, is to tell of the assurances that the genius of prophecy has been reborn. If there is today a genius which reaffirms the ancient message of prophecy, and which is at work to fulfill that prophecy, or to re-establish the church in the business of Kingdom-building, surely that genius must be the modern voice of prophecy.

This, in part and in substance, is what the genius of Restoration has said: "These commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants . . . [that they] might have power to lay the foundations of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness [out of the wilderness, that is], the only true and living church upon the whole face of the earth . . ." or, in other words, the only church which at that time, a century ago, was usable in the hands of God for the purpose of re-instituting the business of the civil-mode Kingdom, or of bringing forth and establishing "the cause of Zion."

I have given only the substance of the proclamation of the genius of Restoration as it respects the coming out of the wilderness of the church and of (what is implied in coming out) its resumption of its proper business under God. It is not possible to present the whole story here at this time. But before God, I do not misrepresent facts; I speak the truth.

It seems to me that the church began to make its way out of the wilderness as far back as the days of Martin Luther. It may have been earlier. It is hard to say. I say it "began" to come out. I do not argue that the church has quit its wilderness altogether. Until the business of the Kingdom has been re-established, until Zion has been redeemed, it is not much use to argue that. The facts do their own arguing. And they say that the church still has some distance to go before it shall have left its wilderness behind.

If there is still a modern voice

The Everlasting Gospel

By C. J. Lant

From the very beginning of the church, the march was ever toward the "hills" of Missouri. Church history speaks of the journey westward and is full of the trials that the early day Saints were required to endure. But as they put the fields and valleys behind them, they traveled with considerable pleasure and happiness, mingled with periods of sorrow and grief.

The history of the progress of the pioneers of the church, and their successes, will ever be a monument to their ingenuity, inspiration, and determination. They could not turn back, if they would; their undaunted faith in Providence helped them to meet their problems, when they arose.

Surely these people faced greater problems than many people face today, who think their difficulties cannot be solved. Today is undoubtedly a trying period in the of prophecy it will face that fact. It will recognize the shortcoming as well as the progress of the church. There is a genius which says today that the calling, the mission, the task, the duty, of the church under God is "to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." It is to re-establish the business of the civil-mode Kingdom. At the same time that genius proclaims the Kingdom-building delinquency of the church.

As for the church of the present generation, what message does it bring to you in these radio talks? Does it not bring to you the message of the coming Kingdom?

I believe that, in these talks, I represent the present spirit of this church. And if what I am saying about the prophecy of the coming Kingdom has any meaning whatever, it is that the genius of Restoration still lives in the church. It is that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy.

lives of many who will have to readjust their affairs due to the recent war.

The thing that encouraged the early pioneers in the church was their "hope in the everlasting gospel." They had no doubts as to their future happiness, the great blessings they found in serving God gave them courage to face the future.

Those early members knew nothing of the land of Zion but the reports that reached them from Missouri. For months before leaving their eastern homes in many cases suffering for the wants of everyday life during this period of suffering and travel they built up their hopes and beautiful dreams of life as it would some day be in Zion.

Wherever they were permitted to gather in groups, they built fine homes and developed farms in the fertile valleys, and nestling on the sides of the beautiful hills of Missouri.

Theirs was a new life, a new hope, a new world with new homes, gardens and orchards, etc. What they did with the new land can still be accomplished by the present-day Saints, if we will try to build up the "waste places of Zion."

"Come into the fields," is the admonition.

WHAT is all wisdom save a collection of platitudes? Take 50 of our current proverbial sayings—they are so trite, so threadbare, that we can hardly bring our lips to utter them. Nonetheless, they embody the concentrated experience of the race, and the man who orders his life according to their teaching cannot go far wrong. How easy that seems! But has anyone ever done so? Never. Has any man ever attained inner harmony by pondering the experience of others? Not since the world began. He must pass through the fire.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

DISCOVERING HIGHWAYS OF ABUNDANT LIVING

Goals for Youth---They Need to Find Themselves

By Beulah Greene

THIS IS THE time of year for the youth of the church to begin with a clean slate. It is not enough just to wipe the slate clean; we must put something on it. What? A picture of our life's reflections which will be meaningful and worth-while? Yes, that is what we would be proud of, so let us commence to feel a great responsibility in finding ourselves and put into use the vast resources that lie within us that we might be capable of exemplifying a Christlike character in our church, home, school, and community.

We must take this problem of finding ourselves to God for direction and help. Without God we can do nothing. If we take one step toward God, He will take two steps toward us. We are children of God, infinitely sacred in his sight, and we possess unlimited divine attributes and potentialities. These can be directed and developed up or down: Godward or Satanward. We can be the hope of the world or the peril of the world.

Jesus Christ was profoundly interested in young people and their capacity to grow physically, mentally, spiritually. He fully understands the life situations which confront them. In every experience of life, we have the assurance that God knows about it all, for Jesus has traveled every road before us. Therefore, in order to find ourselves, we must accept Jesus Christ as our exemplar, helper, and guide. Jesus said, "Seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish its righteousness." "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." We should find our capabilities and utilize them in building the kingdom. We have an immortal soul with power of choice, and may we choose to be Christlike and experience the abundant life. If we truly know him, it is very difficult not to serve him.

We should every night call ourselves to an account. What infirmity have I mastered today? What temptation resisted? What virtue acquired? Self-analysis should be cultivated with prayer and faith in finding ourselves. It helps us to develop an acquaintanceship with ourselves and to discern what we may become. We must use our mind, soul, and strength in learning more about ourselves and practice continuous growth. One grows through study, meditation, self-examination, prayer, and doing.

Today youth are being called upon to make important decisions and take responsibilities within the church. They must find themselves that they may without delay begin cultivation of potential abilities in preparation for specific calls to service. I am reminded of the following words of Ibsen: "So to conduct one's life as to realize oneself—this seems to me the highest attainment possible to a human being. It is the task of one and all of us, but most of us bungle it." Let us not be among those who bungle the task of finding ourselves in conducting our life zionward. Realize what your hidden treasures of gifts, talents, and potentialities can do in service to the church, and how much they would contribute to the growth and progress of it.

The Book of Mormon prophet, Amulek, stipulates a good reason for finding ourselves in these words, "For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God: yea, behold, the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors"

(Alma 16: 228). It depends on us what we make of ourselves during this time of probation. It is most essential that we begin to live the life we desire for eternity while we remain in this time of probation. Therefore, we must seek all the days of our life to do God's will and have a higher comprehension of him, our creator. This can be if we seek diligently to find ourselves and our place in life.

Young people need to find themselves. Many of them have found their mental, physical, and spiritual resources and used these as God expects them to. But a certain percentage need to be encouraged to strive earnestly in developing their powers that have been lying dormant within them. No two people have the same strength of body, the same force of mind, the same qualities of heart, but no one knows what great power he can develop in himself until he tries. John Wanamaker said, "You have often seen a great panting locomotive in the railroad station. Strongly built, with intelligence in every bolt and bar that makes it complete, ready to perform a great service for the waiting passengers—yet it is only an inert bulk, until the engineer opens the throttle and sets it in action. In action—that is the only state in which we are worth our salt. We may be ever so strong in body and ever so learned; we may have the character and reliability of Lincoln, but unless we get into action by using our will we will achieve absolutely nothing." Let us remember these words in finding ourselves as we strive to get into action for the church and try to become effective instruments in the zionic operation.

Our job and responsibility is to find ourselves and surrender our very best and all to God and his purposes. In doing this we will truly walk in the light of the glorious gospel, and that light will most assuredly radiate from our hearts as we come to know God and walk in his ways. The evangelist in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress said, "Keep that light in your eye—so shalt thou see the gate; at which when thou knockest, it shall be told thee what thou shalt do." We will know the true significance of these words as we work toward our goal of finding ourselves. This is an important task which needs our wholehearted and prayerful attention.

Over the Counseling Table

By Dr. T. B. Homan

WHAT IS WRONG WITH ME?

"Doctor, will you please tell me what is wrong? I simply do not make friends easily. I like to be with people and I always enjoy their having a good time. But no one ever asks me to go on any special occasions. And when we pair off for some game, I am usually the last to be asked to take part."

The brown eyes looked at me evenly. The girl had a nice-looking face, and was dressed in such a manner that no one would ever hesitate to take her into the very best company. Then what is the trouble and the solution?

Case history brought out that this girl had developed a terrific inferiority complex. This in turn had been brought about by oversupervision by doting parents. They must do everything for her, never putting her into situations that would develop independent thinking. She could not make up her mind on any subject or situation. Picture show, class party, the class play: it was all the same form of indecision. Boys who can think and who admire a thinker soon grew tired of her. Then the usual grapevine route of information did the business and completed the isolation.

To get very far in forming friendships, boys and girls must have a reasonable amount of initiative; must be able to think logically, and to discuss their thoughts in a reasoning manner. In their fun and frolic, they should be their own natural selves. One of the things to be most admired in youth is their ability to adjust themselves to various situations: when the occasion arises, to do some serious thinking, and then again to be able to join wholeheartedly in a lot of mighty good fun. One of the definitions for a broad education is this: to be able to adjust yourself to any situation without lowering your own standards of life and moral conduct.

AM I HOPELESS?

The telephone rings, and the operator tells me that the call is from out of town. A voice from this distant city asks for my identification. After this is given, the question is asked: "Do you help people in the process of rebuilding their personality?" The answer, of course, is in the affirmative. Then this explanation follows: "My daughter, eighteen years of age, is in desperate need of someone to help her change her dispositional traits. Could you come up some day next week and do that for her?" A day—or a week—to completely change the entire habit formation that, possibly, had taken years to formulate!

Now let us look at some of the elements or traits that go to form a so-called disposition. Let's enumerate some of them for our own consideration:

Sense of humor, clear thinking, fairness in the estimation of our abilities, attitude towards personal appearance, loyalty towards the group with whom we are working, our attitude towards those who might be lower in rank than we, religious attitudes, our attitude towards helping our fellow people, our usual procedure in judging other people, a dominant desire to want to run things, possibility of slumping into a pet peeve attitude, a desire to learn and to adjust ourselves to situations in which we find ourselves, evidences of excessive ego, snobbishness, innate honesty, the element of analytical thinking in our mental procedures, altruistic attitudes, reasoning ability, pugnacity, constructive curiosity, curiosity which amounts to pure nosiness, the inferiority complexes, sensible interest in sexual knowledge, the creative element in our thinking, possible desire to hoard and into what might it develop, gregariousness.

It might be a good idea for us to sit down and make a little self-evaluation in each of the above elements. Sometimes we let ourselves go without much thought until we drift into some rather unpleasant situations. Then we are brought up with a start. Frequently it is a good thing to sit down and look ourselves squarely in the face, so to speak. Then we are occasionally impressed by the thing we see. A young man with much self-assurance asked to take the test that would bring out his condition in the above dispositional traits. After an hour he returned, and putting the results on my desk, made this remark, "I am certainly a mess." After checking the results, I was quite willing to agree with him.

Do people just seem to like us or do they really like us? Are we a one evening affair—one date and then curtains? Do we hear whispers in the high school hall as we approach, and then silence when we are seen? Let us take one or two of the above elements for a little self-survey: First, for example, that of pugnacity. There are two types: just plain old fist fighting, backbiting, chip on the shoulder, taunts, etc., or the good wholesome type of fighting our way back from failure, never knowing when we are whipped in any of the endeavors to better ourselves or our fellow people. The second we might consider is that of ego. Are we super-proud of our achievements and run to tell the world of what we think we did? Or are we modest, receiving in humbleness the plaudits of the people concerning our achievements? How easily the braggart slips into wishful thinking! Are we willing to face ourselves as we are, or is it easier and more pleasant to shut our eyes to conditions and continue to be a social failure.

Another girl sat opposite me, but this time the eyes were blue. "Doctor, what shall I do about my father? He is next to impossible. He says that I shall come in at nine. He does not think that any of the boys are good enough for me to date. He says that I would be tempted to become wayward. Doctor, I simply cannot live as he wants me to do."

I talked with the father. He affirmed just what the daughter had told me. His daughter should not read any of the magazines that carried liquor or tobacco advertisements in them. He demanded that she be in at nine, even from the school parties, football, or basketball games. He thought that he should decide the things for which she should spend her allowance. Also he reserved the right to cut her allowance for any trivial misdemeanor. He did not believe in spending money for yearbooks, class pins, etc. Can this girl be her happy self with these rules hanging over her? Can she enjoy the presence of other people? Can she build a working personality?

I wonder just how far up the scale of ages can we say that parents can and do wield an influence on the personality of their children that will mean a cramped or undesirable individual set adrift in the social world? This girl is a hyper-supervised case wherein the entire method and content of supervision is adverse to a well-rounded pleasing personality.

The answers to the above questions are hard to solve. Possibly they are unanswerable. This girl should have been taught independent thinking and the ability to decide many matters for herself. She should have had a pal and not a boss for a father, one to whom she liked to go for conference over the puzzling situations that might confront her. She can never be an addition to her group. She will be a hindrance, or just simply ballast.

Devoted Parents

By Larry Hastings

ON SUNDAY, December 2, 1945, I witnessed the blessing of a baby. That, of course, was not a new experience. Nor was it unusual to hear blessings besought with majestic words, such as the elder who acted as the spokesman used. But this blessing took on a new significance to me, because instead of bowing my head and closing my eyes as I have done heretofore, I observed the reaction of those chiefly concerned with it.

The baby, being held by the two elders in a half-sitting position, yawned and blinked his eyes occasionally. Once or twice he looked up into the face of first one then the other. He seemed to be slightly mystified but demonstrated no fear, and apparently enjoyed the sacrament as much as his parents did.

The parents stood reverently with heads bowed and arms locked, manifesting with a smile, humble pride, and gratitude. When the elder concluded his prayer, he and his assistant turned and faced the parents. The father smilingly received his son, at the same time his companion turned and proceeded slowly from the rostrum to her seat ahead of him. As they were descending the steps, (the father closely behind the child's mother) I discerned that the infant's presence had been earnestly desired, and now these happy parents desired that they might be able to rear him in the way that would be pleasing to God.

Would it not be a grand world—almost free from tears—if all parents were as proud of their children as these two? Yes, it is obvious the world would be a very delightful habitation for all concerned if all parents would take as much interest in the intellectual growth of their children as these parents evidently will with their boy.

From such parents may be learned an insight to the joy of "true parenthood." Thus, one is impressed that planned parenthood is a magnificent experience. In fact, when a child's birth is in harmony with the wisdom and will of God, the experience contributes to a richly balanced mortal life. Moreover, when the parents are united in the doctrine of Christ, striving to rear the child in harmony with his divine principles, life takes on sublimity.

Instantly I was carried away in mind to behold the plight of less fortunate children in other parts of the world. In China the panorama obviously indicates that multitudes of children are growing up illiterate. Others are starving to death. And still others may be seen about the city and village streets scantily clad in ragged garments, suffering the pangs of cold and hunger. In India the social scene is no better. In England one is impressed that numbers are inadequately clothed and fed. In Germany some wander about hunger-stricken, and others fall at death's mercy. In Poland the situation of many children is equally pathetic. Countless numbers of these undernourished, scantily clothed, uneducated, and vapidly loved boys and girls were engulfed in squalid surroundings. The faces of some of the shivering, hungry children revealed bewilderment. Others disclosed an inquiry as to why they were born. The look of desperation on the faces of others might indicate that they plotted to get food and clothes at all costs. Still others were apparently resigned to their fate—evidently because they were almost beyond concern and recovery.

But is it necessary to leave America to find conditions that need improving? From a reliable person it was learned that a man stepped into one of Dallas's small delicatessen stores one day last summer to make a purchase, and saw the proprietor, at that moment, mercilessly trouncing her eighteen-month old boy. From her mouth came a volley of oaths. Instead of ceasing his crying as she commanded him, the boy cried only the louder. "Get in there," the woman snarled as she, with her toe, ousted the child in the room back of the store where they existed. "Having trouble?" the stranger inquired. "It wasn't my idea!" she sharply returned. "It was the old man's idea. He thought he might not have to go to war if we had a baby; now he's in the Pacific, and I've got it to take care of." "I wouldn't feel that way, maybe your husband will be proud of the boy," the customer interrupted. "By . . . when he gets back he can take care of it, I'm going to get out of here," she emphatically announced. The pathetic sobs of the infant were still coming from behind the closed door when the customer took leave.

Would it be difficult to find other children in America as unfortunate as this child born of a man and woman unfit to be parents? Not too difficult. In nearly every city and town the slum areas, and conditions in some rural homes indicate that thousands of children in this country are as unfortunate in one way or another as this boy. It is true that a rare person will arise from poverty and squalid surroundings to become a great leader of men, but a number suffer psychological setbacks from which few, if any, completely recover. This is due, chiefly because too many of the passers-by look upon the unclean, uncultured child with disdain, instead of lending him a sympathetic ear and offering helpful counsel, or aiding a needy girl to lead a meritorious life. The children, especially the boys, who are inherently rebellious against contemptuous treatment, usually plan to be captains of their own destinies, choosing in the majority of cases to be dishonest. In the latter, conditions grow worse.

These two pictures of human life, one of the fortunate boy in the arms of the elders who will doubtlessly be given the best of food, clothes, love, and mental guidance, and the latter depressing scene of children denied an adequate quantity of these essentials to make life wholesome, motivated an inquiry as to the basic reason for the contrast. It was then made evident that there will be no hungry, illiterate, cold children when they are born only in accordance with divine law and planned purpose. And while numbers continue to be born with no more forethought than male and female beasts of the jungle give to the birth of cubs, much less planning, conditions will remain tragic for many.

People obviously are not learning under present basic educational requirements and texts to think their way out of the depressing predicament in which multitudes find themselves. Is it not clear then that while governments and charitable organizations administer temporary physical relief to destitute people in several countries of the world, the assistance that people need most is denied the majority. Doubtlessly most fathers and mothers of destitute children lack knowledge of "true human parenthood." Therefore, when national leaders become more human-welfare-conscious than the majority have heretofore manifested, legislating laws, if necessary, that permit no one, save idiots and imbeciles, to grow to manhood and womanhood without sufficient education to cope intelligently with marriage and family problems, as well as to pursue professions requiring skill, life will be more delightful than it is today for large numbers of people.

The social ills obviously demand that children learn in public schools to do unto others as they would have others do unto them; to respect their parents; to nobly respect, and comply as human beings, with the laws of childbirth; to love their fellow men, and so forth. It is self-evident, therefore, that the government which first takes enough interest in the welfare of its people to lead them from poverty, strife, and sorrow into a state of abundance, peace, and joy will be the world's leading government regardless of the size and population of the country.

The Herald of January 19th carried a list of quarterlies which were wanted by the Editor of Church School Literature. We have had a very fine response from all over the United States and Canada on this request and take this opportunity to thank those who have made great effort to serve us.

Below, we are showing the quarterlies in the previous list which we still need. If you have any of these quarterlies which you can spare, kindly write us at once.

Please do not send in any quarterlies on this list, and do not mail any, before writing to us and receiving instructions to mail the copies wanted. Only one of each can be used.

CONCERNING COURSE B JUNIOR QUARTERLIES

In the Herald for February 2, page 23, we solicited your help in getting usable copies of the Junior Quarterly, "Jesus' Friends Carry On," (Q-323) for April, May and June. We are still needing these quarterlies and will pay full value, 20c, for each usable copy returned to us.

We fear that some have misunderstood these requests because quarterlies have come in which had no relationship to the general list mentioned above, or this one Junior Quarterly needed. We will appreciate it if you will look again for this particular Junior Quarterly, and mail those you can spare to the Herald Publishing House, Adjustment Department, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Faced with the necessity of lowering 3200 feet of telephone ducts 30 inches along a Brooklyn street because the city planned to lower the street level some three feet, the New York Telephone Company resorted to the use of ice cakes as lowering jacks. The melting ice provided gradual and uniform lowering as contrasted with jacks whose use previously had resulted in cracks and breaks in the ducts. Some 60,000 pounds of ice was required. A similar scheme was adopted when a new automobile factory was faced with the problem of lowering 90-ton forging machines and a 100-ton hydraulic body press into their foundation pits. The machines were rolled over the ice filled pits, and settled gradually and safely into position as the ice melted.

When Shall We Work?

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

*Now, the field is rich with harvest;
Now, God's kingdom is at hand.
Not in some vague, distant future;
Not in some celestial land.*

Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God.
—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 2.

THE CALL! much discussed, much misunderstood, much desired! For centuries thinking men and women have known that in the world there existed evils and harmful activities that were tearing into the hearts and souls of man. They have known, likewise, that a belief in God and his kingdom is the only real solution to this same potent problem. And what has come of this knowledge? So little . . . for they have stored up this knowledge in their hearts and grieved, without seeing that this very knowing was their call to go into the field.

Jesus Christ, answered the greatest call of all . . . to sacrifice his life and his whole personality to the saving of souls of men he believed capable of fashioning their own salvation if they could only be shown a way. He in turn called others . . . and what was their reaction to his call? "And they straightway left their nets, and followed him . . . And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him."<sup>1</sup> All of these disciples had their homes, their own lives, and ambitions, but they believed him when he said: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

ONE of the biggest reasons why men fail in converting others is that they have failed to prepare themselves for the work they must do. Remedy? "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."<sup>2</sup> Another reason for failure is that although men start in their well-intentioned work they fall by the wayside because of discouragements and hardships. Remedy? "And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."<sup>3</sup>

*Here on earth, in daily living,
Here, today, is heaven found.
Here, in serving and in giving;
Here, we tread on holy ground.*
W. G. Sonastine.

So you need pep talks? Paul's greatest task was the renewing of the faith of those who had been converted, but were "poor in spirit." He said: "Do all things without murmurings and disputings."<sup>4</sup> "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth."<sup>5</sup> "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil."<sup>6</sup> "But ye, brethren, be not weary in well doing."<sup>7</sup> "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."<sup>8</sup>

Such a few words, but they give the key to "sticking."

WE AGREE THEN, that one must work and stick at it. But just what can you do? "Behold, thou hast a gift, and blessed art thou because of thy gift."<sup>9</sup> What is your gift? Music, speech, tenderness, sympathy, virtue upon virtue? "If thou wilt do good, yea, and hold out faithful to the end, thou shalt be saved in the kingdom of God, which is the greatest of all gifts of God; for there is no gift greater than the gift of salvation."<sup>10</sup> What is your gift? You can't decide? What in the world shall I do to help? "Behold, you have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me; but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right, and if it is right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you; therefore, you shall feel that it is right; but if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought, that shall cause you to forget the thing which is wrong."<sup>11</sup> Your lack of knowledge itself, may indicate that you have not approached the right work.

How, then, shall one find just what he can do? Again, approach the scriptures: "Study my word which hath gone forth among the children of men, and also study my word which shall come forth among the children of men,"<sup>12</sup> "no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."<sup>13</sup> "Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."<sup>14</sup>

AH, YES! We shall all be evangelists, heal the sick, and minister to all the needs of men . . . don't laugh! Those high sounding activities are your task, but not high sounding ways. Have you ever realized that sweeping out the church basement is a way of serving God humbly? Have you ever thought that digging the dandelions out of the church lawn to make it more attractive may be an indirect method of evangelism? Have you ever chanced upon the idea that the good beef broth you took over to Sister . . . may have in it healing qualities to her body, and its gift soothe her nervous mind?

The call! much discussed, much misunderstood, much desired! "If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work,"<sup>15</sup> . . . called to serve humbly, uncomplainingly, in the dirtiest, ugliest, most unpleasant task in the smallest, most remote, backward branch or mission. Called! When? When the need comes . . . when the grass is high, when the

Why I Became a Latter Day Saint

By Kelton Shipley

(A talk prepared upon the request of Brother Stewart Wight, and given at Allendale, Missouri, in the winter of 1943-1944.)

IF I WERE TO SAY in two words just what led me into the church, they would be, "My wife," but perhaps you'd like for me to be more explanatory. So I have tried to pick out the things and experiences that eventually led me into baptism into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Up to about nine years ago in March, I never as much as heard of a Latter Day Saint church. I had gone to Sunday school some in the local churches of my home village, and had attended the revival meetings that were occasionally held there. It was at one of these meetings that I became sufficiently interested to become a member of the Christian church. I was not interested enough, however, to study its doctrines and beliefs. Consequently, when I got acquainted with my future wife in March, 1935, I was confronted with a challenge to my religion, and I was practically helpless in honest-to-goodness knowledge about it. To me she was about the "churchgoiness" person that I had ever known, and to try to weaken her allegiance to her church was like trying to budge the rock of Gibraltar. It couldn't be done. As I became a regular visitor at the Neal home, I found that they all loved the church, and studied its teachings, and tried to live it. That made a deep impression upon me that never left me.

I went to Sunday school at Allendale every Sunday. There were many things taught in the lessons that were not only new to me but much different than anything I had ever heard before. However, it all sounded reasonable, and since there was always proof of its truthfulness, it made me do considerable thinking. By the time we were married in August, I was deeply interested. And so was my wife. She went about the business of converting me as consistently and as energetically as she does everything else, but she did it so tactfully that I hardly realized at the time what was going on. She taught me to pray for the first time in my life, and I found that God does hear and answer prayers. We prayed often, over our material possessions as well as over our spiritual growth.

Our house was literally "oozing" with Latter Day Saint literature. There was the Herald first of all. Each week when it came, we read it together, sometimes in piecemeal fashion, with one article at the breakfast table, one before going to bed, etc. The Herald is one of the best ways of tying a person to the church, of making him acquainted with it as it operates and functions daily in the lives of its members.

Then there were tracts of every description. I couldn't pop a question but what my wife said, "Well, Brother So and So explains that in this tract," or, "Let's look that up in the Bible, or Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants." And so we looked it up. She never once intimated that I was dumb. She just patiently took time out to explain or discuss with me what was on my mind, and we both profited thereby.

We studied our Sunday school lessons regularly, and that was more than once a year. Of course, my wife always had her little folks' lesson to prepare, but she always found time to help me with my questions and answers.

I love good stories. The church writers have produced some fine ones, and we read several of them, such as The Vineyard Story, In The Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage, Call at Evening, The Fourth Relaford, and others. They all helped to bring me a little closer to the church.

We kept a record of our income and expenses, and each December my wife figured our financial statement and the amount of tithing due. I'll admit that she had to do this part of it rather alone sometimes, for I did not fully understand the financial law for several years, but her perseverance in keeping it made me study a little harder, and pray a little more until I came to an understanding of it.

A year ago last summer we decided to take a vacation trip. We had been married seven years at that time, and had not yet found time for a honeymoon. Our friends found out we were going on a trip, so each one urged us to go to a particular place—Bagnell Dam, the Ozarks, Colorado, and other similar places. I left it all up to my wife, however, and she said, "To the Stewartville Reunion first, then wherever you want to go after that."

So it was that we found ourselves at the reunion, which proved so interesting to us that we stayed a week, absorbing the spiritual experiences that were worth much more to me than anything else. Our pleasant associations with the church people there were the final reason for my baptism. During a steady downpour of rain one afternoon, Brother Hougas and Brother Theys helped me make proper plans for baptism the next day. With the kind assistance of a young brother, Norman Hinderks, who lent me some of his clean clothes because mine were more or less soiled from our week's stay, I presented myself unreservedly at the baptismal service and was baptized by Brother Edward Peterson. On Saturday morning I was confirmed a member of the church of Jesus Christ under the hands of Brother Hougas and Brother Renfroe.

This gives you some idea of how I came into the church. I realize your prayers and kindly interest have been in my behalf, and I hope that I can at least partly repay you by living my religion and serving in the greatest cause on earth—the building of the kingdom of God.

Grant City, Missouri

(Note: Brother Shipley has since accepted the call to the office of priest.)

From a Young Saint

Although I am only twelve years old, I have already received many blessings in my life. I was baptized when I was eight by my father, Elder Elroy Gamble, and confirmed by Joseph E. Myers. I enjoy attending church school, and I hope someday to be a worker for the church as my parents have both been. God has been good to me; I pray that he will bless my efforts in doing his work. If there are any young Latter Day Saints who would like to correspond with me, I shall appreciate their letters.

Jack Gamble.

Worship Suggestions for April

By Alma Louise Utz

(These thoughts are suggestive only and in every case should be adapted to the local needs, according to the various age groups which may use them. Make use of only the materials which may stimulate the spirit of worship, enlarging upon or simplifying them according to the need.)

THEME FOR THE MONTH:
"A NEW LIFE"

April 7, 1946

"THE GOSPEL LIVES AGAIN"

Prelude:

"Ye Wondering Nations, Now Give Ear," Saints' Hymnal 417.

Call to Worship:

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain.
—William Cowper.

Response:

"Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven."—Psalm 85: 11.

Hymn:

"When Earth in Bondage Long Had Lain," Saints' Hymnal 413, or "Book of Mormon, Hid for Ages,"
Saints' Hymnal 403.

Prayer Thoughts:

(These thoughts do not take the place of a prayer, but are suggested as the central theme of the prayer.)

We are thankful to have the gospel message again upon the earth and to be living in the day of fulfillment of the promises made so long ago that a marvelous work would again come forth among the children of men. We are truly thankful to be engaged in that marvelous work, and humbly seek to offer our best for its advancement.

Hymn:

"Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works," Saints' Hymnal 123, or
"I Have Found the Glorious Gospel,"
Saints' Hymnal 408.

Scripture Readings:

Isaiah 29: 11-22, Inspired Version; 2
Nephi 12: 42-70.

Special Song:

"God Has Spoken in all Ages," *Zion's
Praises* 178, or

"I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly," *Saints'
Hymnal* 412.

Reading:

"Dear Brother and Sister: By searching the prophecies contained in the Old Testament, we find it there prophesied that God will set his hand the second time to recover his people, the house of Israel. He has now commenced this work; he hath sent forth a revelation in these last days, and this revelation is called the Book of Mormon. . . . Perhaps you will inquire how this revelation came forth. It has been hid up in the earth fourteen hundred years, and was placed there by Moroni, one of the Nephites; it was engraven upon plates which had the appearance of gold. . . .
Joseph after repenting of his sins and humbling himself before God, was visited by an holy angel whose countenance was as lightning and whose garments were white above all whiteness who gave unto him commandments which inspired him from on high; and who gave unto him, by the means of which was before prepared, that he should translate this book."—(taken from a letter written by Lucy Smith, mother of Joseph, to her brother, under date of January 6, 1831.)—The Story of the Church, by Inez Smith Davis, page 50.

Hymn:

"In the Light," Saints' Hymnal 410, or
"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations,"
Saints' Hymnal 397.

Benediction:

Almighty God of love, set up the attracting sign,
And summon whom thou dost approve for messengers divine.
With Israel's myriads sealed, let all the nations meet,
And show the mystery fulfilled, the family complete.
In Jesus' name, Amen.

"NATURE LIVES AGAIN"

Prelude:

"The Spacious Firmament on High,"
Saints' Hymnal 119, or

"Sweet Are the Promises of the Early Spring," Zion's Praises 41.

Call to Worship:

There is no waste in nature, nothing lost.
The forest leaves decay, but law does not forget,
They live again when April melts the frost,
And bloom in the wind-flower or the violet.

Or build the lordly pine, beloved of men, Whose place upon the mountain top is merited;

Through root, and stem, and bough they mount again
And bud as leaves, their ancient right inherited.

The sun new risen, o'er the mountain range,
Greets them once more; they see the valley
palpitate

In purple haze uncertain, and the strange Small homes of men below, on plains that undulate

Unto the far off sea. 'Tis nature's way,
And nature's kindly ways are God's, immutable,

Who rules that all who live, die, and decay,
Shall live again through laws unknown, inscrutable.

—Elbert A. Smith.

Hymn:

"Earth With Her Ten Thousand Flowers," Saints' Hymnal 122, or

"For the Beauty of the Earth," *Saints'
Hymnal* 18.

Prayer of Invocation Thought:

(This thought does not take the place of a prayer, but is suggested as the central theme of the prayer.)

Express appreciation of the love of the Father as shown in the beauty of the earth created for his children. Our prayer is that we may ever seek to build up and never in any way bring harm or destruction to God's handiwork.

Inspirational Poem:

The full moon ascended the heavens
Zenith high, like a queen on her throne,
There she poured out her radiant splendor
On the earth, seeming dead, cold and lone.

Then a curtain was hung 'neath the Zenith,
A curtain of fast-falling snow.
But rifts in the curtain cloud's shadow
Let the silver moonbeams filter through.

Ah! the earth was not dead! only sleeping,
So God, with his fatherly care
Made a robe of his myriads of snowflakes
To cover his sleeping ones there.

The snow-cloud moved off; and the moonbeams
Poured out over the earth like a flood
Upon roots of our tulips and lilies
A virtue-white mantle from God.

God works on, while he cares for his loved ones
(Though men battle and die in war's strife)
To teach man that his work and his glory
Is man's immortal and eternal life.

—R. E. Hubricht.

Hymn:

"Fairest Lord Jesus," Saints' Hymnal
23, or

"God Is Love! the Earth Proclaims it," Saints' Hymnal 130.

Scripture Reading:

Psalm 19.

Solo:

"Earth Is the Gift of God," Rode-beaver's Special Solos and Duets, 132.

Meditation:

In the breast of a bulb is the promise of spring;
In the little blue egg is the bird that will sing;
In the heart of a seed is the hope of the sod;
In the soul of a hild is the kingdom of God.

"HE LIVES, CHRIST JESUS LIVES TODAY"

Worship Center:

Picture, Sallman's Head of Christ, banked with a profusion of flowers.

Prelude:

Vocal Quartette: "Christ Arose," Triumphant Service Songs, 238, or "He Lives," Triumphant Service Songs, 286.

Call to Worship:

Sing soul of mine, this day of days,
The Lord is risen . . .
Toward the sun rising set thy face
Behold, he giveth strength and grace;
For darkness, light; for morning praise . . .
Arise, O soul, this Easter day!
Forget the tomb of yesterday,
For thou from bondage are set free,
Because the Lord is risen.
—Selected.

Hymn:

"Lift Your Glad Voices," Saints' Hymnal 165.

Prayer Thoughts:

(This thought does not take the place of a prayer, but is suggested as the central theme of the prayer.)

Our hearts are sad when we think of the suffering of the Son of God on the cruel cross of Calvary, but we rejoice that he broke the bonds of death and arose from the tomb on that glad morning so long ago, for we, too, shall rise again into a new and more glorious life.

Reading:

EASTER ANTHEM:

Behold, He lives who once was mourned as dead!
And glory fills the reaching mind with light.
The utmost corners of the world are bright,
And only breathless, magic words are said.

And high the regal lily lifts her head!
An Easter parable in petaled white;
Behold, He lives who once was mourned as dead,
And glory fills the reaching mind with light.

Again that timeless truth which comforted
Three Marys who had wept throughout the night
Has brought to grieving hearts an inner sight,
Appeasing hunger with eternal bread;
New glory fills the reaching mind with light,
Because He lives who once was mourned as dead.

—Vivian Yeiser Laramore.

Hymn:

"I Know that My Redeemer Lives," Saints' Hymnal 256, or

"Look, Ye Saints! The Sight Is Glorious," Saints' Hymnal 168.

Scripture Reading:

Matthew 28: 1-10; John 20, Inspired Version for both.

Reading:

THE HOPE OF EASTER

The clouds hung low!
Not a faint tingle of silver
To brighten the darkness,
Nor a ray of light to dispel
The fears of humanity.
Hope was gone.

Gone? For just a while
And then the clouds
Turned inside out, to show
A light more dazzling than midday sun.
Fear was consumed
And doubts melted away—
Because Christ arose.
What a glorious hope!

The clouds hang low,
Furious and black
With the thunder of war.
But blessed is he
Whose heart is bowed in sorrow
Yet who keeps his head high
And finds hope in
The Man from Galilee!
—Emily A. King.

Solo:

"Thou Didst Leave Thy Throne," Saints' Hymnal 154.

Closing Meditation:

(Read to the accompaniment of soft music.)

I know that my Redeemer lives;
What joy the blest assurance gives;
He lives, he lives, who once was dead;
He lives, my everlasting Head!

He lives, to bless me with his love;
He lives, to plead for me above;
He lives, my hungry soul to feed;
He lives, to help in time of need.

He lives, all glory to his name;
He lives, my Savior still the same;
What joy the best assurance gives
I know that my Redeemer lives!

Solo or Duet—"All the Way," Zion's Praises 194, or Duet—"Come Close to the Savior," Zion's Praises 54.

Or,

Instrumental Prelude:

"Lead, Kindly Light," Saints' Hymnal 265.

Call to Worship:

Let me walk with you in the new day,
As one, under its peaceful sky;
When all but birds of song have flown away;
When man prepares to live—not die!

Where white clouds, for mountain peaks, give way;
When man prepares to live—not die!

Let me walk out with you, until we stray
Beyond the reach of worldly tie,
Just seeking nature blooms for Life's bouquet,
When man prepares to live—not die!

Hymn:

"Forward, Be Our Watchword," Saints' Hymnal 357, or

"Lead On, O King Eternal," Saints' Hymnal 181.

Scripture Readings:

"If a man die, shall he live again?
all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change comes. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.
. . . Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book!
That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; And though after my skin worms destroy this body; yet in my flesh shall I see God; Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."—Job 14: 14, 15; 19: 23-27.

"And I have been supported under trials and troubles of every kind, yea, and in all manner of afflictions; yea, God has delivered me from prison, and from bonds, and from death; yea, and I do put my trust in him, and he will still deliver me; And I know that he will raise me up at the last day to dwell with him in glory."—Alma 17: 25, 26.

Hymn:

"The Saints Shall Wear Robes as the Lilies," Saints' Hymnal 185, or

"How Will the Saints Rejoice to Tell,"
Saints' Hymnal 183.

THE LOW DOOR OF A SPACIOUS COUNTRY

Death is the low door of a spacious country.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Spokane, Washington

Pastor, L. A. Whiting

The choir, the Zion's League, and the Marietta Circle have been in the spotlight of activities of the branch. The League sponsored a Christmas program which included a play, choral singing, selected recordings from The Messiah, and organ music. The boys, with a number of their nonmember friends, have formed a basketball team and have entered into city-wide competition. This project offers both social and religious associations. A Tuesday evening "play night" for the entire League is devoted to games, while Sunday evening classes provide opportunity for discussion and learning. A recent "see the nations" party proved very successful with a large number of young people visiting the "nations" in various homes of the members. Refreshments representative of the different countries were served at each home.

The Marietta Circle has been preparing for its annual bazaar. The women gave a Thanksgiving dinner and program at the church for the entire branch in November, and a party for the Circle in December. Their financial plans are aimed toward remodeling the church kitchen.

The choir, newly organized in the branch, has provided a much-needed finishing touch to the services. It has given some commendable presentations in the way of sacred numbers, cantatas, and background music for special services.

—Stan Johnson, reporter.

Richland Mission

Pastor, H. E. Chapman

The new mission at Richland has settled down to active and constructive work and is steadily growing. The winter months have been filled with increased activity. Christmas parties were given by various classes, and a special Christmas program was presented by the church school department under the direction of H. C. Hight.

The Emma Smith Circle sponsored a bazaar on December 1. Members of the circle meet every other week in the afternoon at different homes. They have a short devotional, a business meeting, and a study class; the rest of the afternoon is spent in making articles of fancywork for the needlecraft booth at General Conference. Recently they purchased a Communion set and collection plates for the mission.

A young married people's Book of Mormon class has been organized and is proving very successful; H. C. Hight and Stephen Bowerman are in charge.

The choir, with Mrs. H. E. Chapman as director, presented a cantata at Christmas and has added much to other services throughout the year. Some of the members of the choir sang in The Messiah given by the Richland Choral Society; the church was also asked to provide two ushers for the occasion.

Apostle D. T. Williams and District President H. E. Constance were welcome visitors in October; Brother Constance was a guest speaker again in January.

Four new members have been added to the group through baptism; they are Mrs. John McKee, Jimmie Savage, Richard and Dorothy Winship.

Mrs. Vida Sarratt of Independence, Missouri, is spending the winter at the home of her son, Gerald Sarratt, of Spokane. —Evelyn Hight, reporter.

Coeur D'Alene, Idaho

Pastor, A. L. Gibson

In November the Saints of Coeur d'Alene were saddened to lose the ministry of their pastor, Stanley J. Fout, who was forced by serious illness to give up his pastoral work and move to a more favorable climate. He is now in Phoenix, Arizona, and his health is rapidly improving. His family will join him in the spring. A. L. Gibson was elected in December to serve the branch as pastor for the remainder of the year.

Under the leadership of Gladys Fout the League is gaining many new members; social activities, special classwork, and various study groups have been designed to increase the interest of young people in League work.

The women's department, with Mabel Bristow as leader, held its annual Christmas dinner at a nonmember's home where a number of "church friends" had the opportunity of becoming better acquainted with the women of Coeur d'Alene branch. Comparative Religions has been selected as the new course of study for the coming year; special entertainments and money-making projects have been planned to augment the building fund.

The first of an intended series of "Pastor's Open House" parties was held at the Gibson home in January. With the group, eleven nonmember friends were invited to be guests at an evening of games and music. These gatherings are designed to increase group interest and provide an opportunity for the Saints to share the gospel with their friends.

—Margaret Gibson, reporter.

Muscatine, Iowa

Pastor Lean Allen

Elder J. O. Dutton of Galva, Illinois, held a series of meetings in October; his sermons were highly instructive and spiritual.

No local services were held on Sunday, October 28, so that all could attend the district conference in Moline, Illinois. President L. F. P. Curry was the guest speaker.

The women's department sponsored a chicken-noodle supper on November 15 in the church basement; a total of $115 was cleared.

Irene Beitz and Sgt. Griffith Goddard attended the Graceland homecoming in November. Juanita and Joyce Beitz, students at Graceland, brought Myra Santos of Hawaii and Otto Bacon of Saginaw, Michigan, home with them as guests during the Christmas holidays.

The Saints extend their best wishes to Donald Wagler and his bride, the former Pearl Cordwell of Muscatine, who were married recently. They are making their home in Astoria, Oregon, where Donald is stationed.

There have been no casualties among the nineteen servicemen from Muscatine congregation; all but four have returned home.

The church school presented a Christmas program on Sunday morning, December 22, which consisted of songs and recitations. Treats were distributed to the children at the close of the service. Jennie Freers is church school director.

The young married people, under the direction of Irene Beitz, are publishing the church bulletin. They have also been responsible for several recent services. On Sunday evening, January 27, Victor Witte of the Tri-Cities was guest speaker. At the close of the service refreshments were served by the women's department.

Three members of the local priesthood were in charge of the Communion service on Sunday morning, February 3.

The women's department had charge of the evening service on February 10.

The program was arranged by Mabel Freers. The department meets every Wednesday afternoon at the church to study the Doctrine and Covenants. Evelyn Church is teacher, and Virginia Gritton is departmental leader.

Grace Freers entertained the Zion's League at her home on the evening of February 11. Valentines were exchanged, a lunch served, and a pleasant time was had by all attending.

—Mabel Freers, reporter.

Portsmouth, Ohio

Pastor, Donald Bealor

Though few in number, the Saints of Portsmouth continue to hold services under the leadership of Pastor Donald Bealor. Recent speakers of the local priesthood have been C. A. Rexroad, James Chaffins, M. L. Crabtree, and Francis May.

A turkey dinner was sponsored by the women's department on November 22 at the church. Following the dinner a program of music and songs, speeches, readings, and a Bible quiz was presented. Sixty attended.

Elder V. J. Billings recently completed a series of meetings. Due to the severely cold weather attendance was small, but those who were present received inspiration and strength from his words. The Saints are grateful for Brother Billings' sermons, and for the special music provided by Sister Billings.

The church school, under the leadership of Hoadley Copas, is progressing nicely. On Sunday morning, December 25, the children and young people gave a Christmas program. A visit from Santa was the climaxing event of the entertainment. A play, "The Littlest Shepherd," was presented in the evening with William Myers as director. Those participating in the play were Janet and Earl Myers, Billy Woalrey, Lorraine McIntire, Irene Aeh, Jenny Myers, Samuel Rexroad, Willard Myers, Sonny McGraw, Dorothy Sharpe, Osbern Rexroad, Mary Lou Sharpe, Orville McIntire, Nellie Rexroad, Alton Scott, Genevieve Myers, and Gertrude McIntire.

The junior class had a candy party on Saturday evening, January 27, at the church. On Sunday morning, February 10, they enjoyed a Valentine box; Gertrude McIntire is teacher.

District President Floyd Rockwell visited the branch on January 27. He spoke on Saturday evening and Sunday morning.

M. L. Crabtree was in charge of the February 3 Communion service. Norman Pallock offered the prayer. Under the peaceful influence of the spirit, fourteen testimonies were offered.

William Randall, infant son of William and Genevieve Myers, and Donald Leroy Bealor, Jr., son of Pastor and Mrs. Donald Bealor, were blessed November 25 by Elder O. A. Rexroad.

One by one the young men from Portsmouth branch who have been in the armed service are returning. Joseph Culp and Leroy Chaffins have received their discharges.

—Nellie G. Rexroad, reporter.

Salina, Kansas

Pastor, Louis Hancock

The Saints at Salina are holding services in the Y. M. C. A. building located at 315 West Iron Street. It is hoped a church home may soon be erected with the building fund which has grown rapidly.

The adult class of the church school is studying Elbert Smith's Restoration, A Study in Prophecy.

The Patroness Society with Edna Henry as president, Evon Kueker as vice-president, and Marjorie Gamble as secretary-treasurer, meets twice each month at the homes of various members. The meetings open with a devotion; while hemming towels for the Independence Sanitarium, each member contributes to a program of readings and musical numbers. Dr. Roy Cheville's The Bible in Everyday Living is being studied, each woman taking her turn at presenting the lesson. The hostess is always responsible for presenting a plan to increase the building fund. A Christmas party was held at the home of Edna Henry; the program consisted of carols, vocal and piano solos, and readings. Instead of the usual gift exchange, gifts of money were attractively wrapped and turned over to the treasurer to be added to the building fund. A covered dish luncheon was held at the home of Helene Hancock recently, after which Mrs. Fred Tyree was given a shower by the group.

Ensign and Mrs. Clayton G. Henry spent the Christmas holidays with Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Henry. Ensign Henry is now stationed at Green Cove Springs, Florida, where he is working with the Navy insurance benefits division.

The junior department has charge of the opening exercises one Sunday of every month.

Salina mission was fortunate to have Elder H. S. Chaplin of Belleville, Kansas, as a visitor on February 3. He assisted Pastor Louis Hancock in the Communion service and gave an inspiring talk to the group.

—Evon Kueker, reporter.

Portland, Oregon

Central East Side Congregation

Pastor, J. L. Verhei

The Central East Side congregation held a business meeting on October 22 at which Apostle D. T. Williams was present, and the group was officially organized into a branch. Elder J. L. Verhei was selected pastor, with a full corps of officers to assist him. The following Sunday Estella Fuller united with the church. Pastor Verhei preached at the morning service, and Elder Yeoman spoke in the evening. The first prayer service was in charge of Elder Harry Fry.

Since the beginning of the work in this group, an evening class has been held at 6:45, during which time Apostle Edward's Overviews of Church History was studied for credits. At the close of the study, Sister Verhei, supervisor of the class, announced that there were some who had not missed a single class period, while others had missed only one. She then said there were several who had not missed a service of any kind since the group began holding meetings. The present course of study is Dr. Roy Cheville's Overviews of the Book of Mormon.

The Halloween party held October 30 was a success; approximately thirty attended and a good time was had by all.

The Communion service on November 4 was in charge of Pastor Verhei, assisted by Elders F. E. Shapman and Miles Whiting of the district presidency.

A special treat was prepared for the men on November 3 when the first morning Breakfast Club meeting was held in an upper classroom of the church. Meeting at 7. A. M., they enjoyed a "farm style" breakfast consisting of hot biscuits with butter and honey, fried eggs, and link sausages; the meal was prepared by Siser Verhei.

The Leaguers held their district gathering on November 4. They began with an early morning prayer meeting, then participated in the Communion service; a basket luncheon was served at noon. The main session of the conference was held in the afternoon. In the evening Elder Phillip Moore began a series of missionary meetings; they were well attended and should bear much fruit among those who heard them. Special music was provided by Freda Moore and Carolyn Larson of First Church, and the girls' quartet from the Rhone Street congregation. The series ended on November 18.

Elder Elmer Larson from First Church, Elder Walter Webberly and Elder Carpenter from Vancouver were guest speakers in November.

The annual Thanksgiving dinner was held on November 22 at the church. Elder and Mrs. Paul Fischel from Vancouver were special guests. The dinner was preceded by a lovely worship service in charge of Elder Moore.

The women's department has continued its untiring effort to build up the work. Susan Yeoman is the leader. Apostle Edward's Fundamentals is being studied; although the group is small, it is accomplishing a great deal. The sale of handwork through the Christmas season totaled $60; a rummage sale held by the department on December 6 and 7 netted $150.

Evangelist W. H. Barker was guest speaker in January. Military visitors were Lt. Arthur Hawkes, Sgt. Robert Gunner, and Lt. Frances Nowak, army nurse. Glenn A. Haviland, Ray Nelson, Forrest Barker, and Lloyd Verhei Shannon have received their discharges from the armed services.

—Olive S. Yeoman, reporter.

Brooklyn, New York

Pastor, E. LeRoy Squire

Christmas was observed on Sunday, December 23; Betty Jean Black was in charge of the worship service presented by the junior department, and Pastor E. L. Squire was the 11 o'clock speaker. In the evening the Saints participated in a solemn and impressive candlelight service. The choir sang several anthems, after which Pastor Squire gave a sermonette; a trio composed of Adelin Harris Siegfried, Louise and Joseph Hufferd presented selections from The Messiah while members of the congregation came to the front of the church and placed their gifts before the altar.

The women of the Loyal Club held their Christmas party at the home of Ethel Squire where, after playing several games, they discovered who their "Loyal Friends" had been for the past year. A new course of study in the Book of Mormon was decided upon; Ethel Squire will be the teacher.

Joyce Lenore, infant daughter of Glenford and Olga Guest, was blessed by Brother Ephraim Squire at a January service.

Brooklyn branch welcomes home Charles Harris who served as a lieutenant in the Army Air Force for two years. Lt. Adela Harris Siegfried, who served in the WAC since 1942, has received her discharge. Roy Squire, recently returned after several years with the Army in the Pacific theater, has also been discharged.

Jess, Charm, and Michael Cady were guests at a farewell party given in their honor in January. The Cady's have been living in Brooklyn for some time and will be greatly missed by the Saints. They are returning to their home in Moline, Illinois.

Independence, Missouri

Stone Church

Pastor, G. E. Tickemyer

Concert at Auditorium

Despite a blinding snowstorm, 5,000 music-lovers attended the afternoon concert given in the Auditorium on February 13 by the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Efrem Kurtz. Four thousand school children from Independence and rural Jackson County were in the audience. The concert was the result of the efforts of the Junior Service League of Independence to bring a symphony performance to the children; classes in music appreciation were held in the schools preceding the program. The concert opened with "The Star-Spangled Banner" followed by an interesting repertoire of classical selections and old favorites including the "Missouri Waltz." The director complimented the children on their attention and generous applause.

Predict Record Attendance at Conference

Church officials are making every effort to find accommodations for General Conference visitors. This will be the first peacetime conference since 1940, and many more requests for rooms than can be supplied is anticipated. It is hoped that generous sharing will meet the need.

Former Resident on Important Mission

Capt. A. Max Carmichael, son of Bishop Albert Carmichael and brother of D. R. Carmichael of Independence, was selected to represent the United States at a four-day conference attended by the educational leaders of ten nations. Captain Carmichael addressed the meeting held at Brussels, Belgium, on "Appreciation of Philosophy of American Education." All speeches were delivered in French; Captain Carmichael's command of that language was largely responsible for his being selected. He is stationed at Biarritz, France, with the American Army University, but expects to be discharged next summer.

Sunday Morning Services

Both the 8:15 and 11 o'clock services on February 17 were well attended. Pastor Garland Tickemyer was the speaker on each occasion. He chose "Getting Along With Others" for his sermon topic at the first meeting, and "Be Not Afraid" for the later service.

President for Quorum of Deacons

John Chapman, recently chosen to serve as president of the first quorum of deacons, was set apart for his new office by Gomer T. Griffiths, spokesman, and Ralph Baker, deacon. The lower auditorium of Stone Church was filled to capacity for the fellowship service that followed. Elder Floya Deal was in charge, and Elder W. E. Wakeman of the Englewood congregation gave a talk on "Zion in Action."

Glaude Smith Speaks

Glaude A. Smith, pastor of the Walnut Park congregation, spoke at the evening service on February 17. He chose "The Spirit of God" as his sermon topic. The Hymn Singers, directed by Mrs. George Hulmes and accompanied by Mrs. Dorothy Koehler Hamilton, provided special music for the service.

Pulpit Decorations

The beautiful flowers placed before the pulpit were furnished by Brother and Sister W. J. Hartley who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, February 17. They entertained with open house at their home from 2 to 6 o'clock. Two additional baskets of flowers were shared with the congregation by the family of Sister Andy Goode.

Evan Fry Recovering

Radio Director Evan Fry who has been a patient in the Independence Sanitarium for the past week is recovering satisfactorily. He expects to be back on the air conducting "Morning Devotions" in another week.

Stone Church Hostesses

From the annual report of the Stone Church hostesses to the pastor the following data reveals the effectiveness of the work of these friendly women who greet both members and visitors at the entrance of the church. Of the 1,567 guests registered, 336 were non-members, representing the Christian, Methodist, Bahai, United Brethren, Catholic, Lutheran, Assembly of God, Trinity Episcopal, Episcopal, Holy Roller, Community Church, Church of England, Pilgrim Holiness, Reno Church, Utah Mormon, Congregational, Nazarene, Anglican of Canada, Dutch Reformed, Swedish Methodist, Friends Church, and Army Church (a serviceman with no affiliation). Approximately 266 hours of service have been given by the hostesses. Three social evenings have been held for new people coming into the Stone Church congregation during the year. Blanche Gault is the energetic and genial supervisor of the hostess committee; she has fifty-three assistants. No visitor or nonmember is forgotten; a personal message is sent to each who registers, thus keeping prospective members in contact with the church.

Walnut Park

Pastor, Glaude A. Smith

The Walnut Park congregation enjoyed hearing two of its own young men as speakers on Sunday evening, December 2. They were Ammon Robertson, who used "Are Latter Day Saints Isolationists?" as his subject, and Bernard Butterworth, who spoke on "The Church and Returning GIs." Both are ex-servicemen.

Elder J. Charles May, recently returned from missionary work in the Society Islands, delivered the Sunday morning address on December 9. At 7 p. m., the junior chorus, directed by Winifred Dillee, presented a half hour of music. "What Dost Thou Work?" was Pastor Glaude Smith's sermon topic at the evening service.

Pastor Smith also preached on Sunday morning, December 16; Elder R. D. Weaver spoke in the evening.

A covered dish luncheon was held at the church on December 20 by the women's department. Special musical numbers were given by Mrs. Ralph Davis, and Mrs. C. A. Skinner gave a reading, "The Gift." Evangelist Ray Whiting's very interesting talk was entitled "The Spirit of Christmas in the home."

The annual gift service was held Sunday morning, December 23. The Walnut Park choir, under the direction of Betty Ann Mosier, sang a selection of Christmas carols as a prelude to the service, and later sang other special musical numbers. A pageant, "The Manger Scene," was given with Frances Oeser as Mary; William Vernon as Joseph; Ray Hoover, Ralph Remington, and Ralph Freeman as the shepherds; Bernard Butterworth, Ammon Robertson, and Milford Nace as the wise men; and Warren Haskins as the angel. Pastor Glaude Smith gave the Christmas message. A trio composed of Winifred Dillee, Naomi Moorman, and Alene Lucas sang "Just As I Am"; after which a song response was given by the children of the primary and kindergarten classes, and a hymn response by the juniors. After singing "Consecration," members of the congregation took their gifts to the altar.

Major Samuel K. Toomey delivered a very thought-provoking sermon in the evening.

A baptismal service was held at 6:30 p. m., December 23, with Elder A. Blakeslee Smith in charge. Those entering the waters of baptism were Jewell Veta Countryman, Ray Jewell Thomas, Kathleen Smith, and Daniel Grover Gallaher.

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman was the speaker on Sunday morning, December 30, and Pastor Glaude Smith spoke at the evening service. A candlelight vesper service was sponsored by the Zion's League at 6 p. m. Elder A. Blakeslee Smith was in charge of a baptismal service at seven. Those baptized were Shirley Yvonne Evenson, Tommy Watson Adkins, and Loy Ellsworth Campbell; thirty-six new members were added to the Walnut Park congregation during the year 1945.

Flora, Illinois

Pastor, Eddie Colvin

The Thanksgiving program presented during the church school hour on Sunday, November 18, was prepared by Mrs. Sam Anderson of the Zion's League, assisted by Mrs. J. C. Henson.

The women's department, with Mrs. Eddie Colvin as president, has contributed a total of $231.54 to the building fund since the last report. A rummage sale and bazaar held November 30 and December 1 netted $106.54 of this amount. The remaining $125 represents proceeds from three bake sales, a patch-pocket apron, exchange of a food basket, and donations.

A Christmas program was prepared by Mrs. J. C. Henson for the church school on Sunday, December 23. In the evening a pageant, "Let Us Adore Him," was presented under the direction of Mrs. J. C. Henson and Mrs. Herbert Henson.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Mrs. Galen Morefield, sold Christmas cards and wrappings and made $26 for the building fund. Norma Leann Colvin had the honor of selling the most boxes.

On January 10 the Saints gathered at the church hall for a potluck supper and a miscellaneous shower for Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Martin, who were married recently. The women of the branch met at the home of Mrs. Virgil Burgess, January 7, and organized a La Da Sa club. Mrs. Herbert Henson, president, was hostess at the first meeting held February 4.

Phillip Lee, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Henson, was blessed at the Henson home, Sunday, January 13, by Elders Eugene A. Theys and D. H. Milner.

On January 13, 14, 15 the Saints of Flora were happy to have as visitors Missionary Loyd Adams from McKenzie, Alabama, and District President Eugene A. Theys of Mt. Vernon, Illinois. Each delivered two fine sermons of admonition. Preceding Elder Adams' sermon, January 13, the choir sang as a special number, "Oh, Precious Savior." Elder Theys and the building committee discussed plans for a new church home. Their decisions, presented to the membership for approval, were unanimously accepted.

Flora branch was favored to have Missionary Z. Z. Renfro of Independence, Missouri, conduct a special series of missionary lectures January 24 through February 3.

Pastor Eddie Colvin, assisted by Burl Luttrell, gave an interesting talk and showed slides of "Life After Death" on the evening of February 3.

Recent visiting servicemen have been Sam Anderson, Eldred Knapp, Galen Morefield, who have been discharged, and Howard Knapp Y 3/c, and Jessie Davis, Jr., RM 3/c, who were home on leave.

First and Second Columbus, Ohio, Church News Correction

A combining of the news of the First and Second Columbus congregations resulted in several errors appearing in the February 16 Herald. Paragraph five of the Columbus news should read: "Pastor Donald V. Lents was in charge of the January Communion service at the Second Columbus church; he was assisted by Elder E. C. J. Swanson." Paragraph nine should read: "On January 27 Elder Casimir Nickel of Cleveland spoke at the Second Columbus church in the morning, and at the First Columbus church in the evening."

Francine Kay, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Winston E. Inslee, was blessed February 3 in Seattle, Washington, by her grandfather, Elder O. L. Oppelt, assisted by Elder Alma Johnson.

Sioux City, Iowa

Pastor, C. E. Burnett

Seventy Roscoe E. Davey completed a two-weeks' series of illustrated missionary lectures on December 9. The meetings were well attended in spite of the siege of influenza in Sioux City at that time.

Members of the women's department held their annual supper and bazaar in December. They also sponsored a Christmas party in the home of Mrs. Erwin Field. Appropriate games and gift exchanges were followed with refreshments.

Pastor C. E. Burnett delivered the Christmas sermon on December 23. He used as his theme, "Glory to God in the Highest." The department of religious education sponsored a "white Christmas" for the entire church at the evening service. The side walls and the walls behind the rostrum were hung with white sheets and all gifts presented were wrapped in white. The only decoration was the lighted white candles. Each class came forward to the rostrum where, seated in portrayal, were Mary, Joseph, and the Christ child. The nursery class, primary class, and junior class brought gifts of scrapbooks, color books, storybooks, and crayons for hospitalized children. The adults presented sheets and pillow cases for hospital use. The intermediate class and older young people had drawn names of elderly people at the county home and presented appropriate gifts for the man or woman whose name they had drawn. The E. O. W. class gave a donation of money for the Graceland College new men's dormitory.

At the February Communion service, District President Elvin Baughman and Mrs. Baughman of Dow City, Walter Weldon of Moorhead, and Mr. and Mrs. Billings of Dennison were present. At the priesthood meeting at 3 p. m., Elder Baughman and Elder Weldon spoke in the lower auditorium. At the same hour Mrs. Baughman spoke in the main auditorium to a group of women on women's work in the church, after which Mrs. Billings talked on the importance of the music department.

The women are continuing their study program with lessons on "Spiritual Defenses" by Mrs. Herbert Floyd, and "Faith" by Mrs. Lloyd McIntyre. The latter part of January Mrs. Dewey Bruggeman held a quilting bee at her home followed by a 1 o'clock luncheon. The women sponsored a valentine luncheon on February 14 at the home of Mrs. A. H. Thompson; Mrs. C. E. Burnett and Mrs. Erwin Field were the assisting hostesses. Proceeds of the luncheon will be used to help purchase built-in cupboards for the church kitchen.

John William David Evans, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Clem Evans, and Louis Scott Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Davis, were blessed at a recent service.

Pfc. Raymond Smith sang a solo and occupied the pulpit one Sunday while home on furlough during the Christmas holidays. Other servicemen are returning one by one; those who have received discharges are Grange Huff S 1/C, who saw action in the south Pacific; M/Sgt. Frank Smith, Marine Corps, Pacific theater; Ens. L. N. Jones, Australia; T/Sgt. G. M. Vandel, photographic reconnaissance, south Pacific; and Cpl. Herbert Floyd, who has been stationed in the states.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Vandel were happy to have their four sons home for the first time in many months. Capt. Frederick, who has re-enlisted in the army medical corps, and T/Sgt. George, were both home from the Pacific theater; Sanford came from Bloomington, Illinois, and Philip from New York City to make the family reunion complete.

E. L. Edwards of the northwestern Iowa presiding bishopric was present for the January inventory day to officiate in accepting the inventories and financial statements. He was also the 11 o'clock speaker.

Other speakers in the branch have been C. J. Smith, Charles Gunlock, and Clem Evans.

—Mrs. Ralph Pederson, reporter.

Dallas, Texas

Pastor, Clyde F. Hastings

The Saints were happy to have the F. A. Petersons with them again and to hear their encouraging testimonies. Mr. and Mrs. Warren Wilson and daughter have also returned to Dallas following Mr. Wilson's discharge from the Navy. Ola Elam left recently for Independence, Missouri; she will be greatly missed, but her friends wish her success and happiness in her new home. She is replaced by Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Rusch and daughter who came from Independence to live in Dallas.

The branch goal, "Let Us Arise and Build," is being materially accomplished. Treasurer Martha Marsh reports that the building fund now totals $1,354.25.

Spiritual encouragement was received at the Communion service, February 3;

Elder R. F. Moore was in charge. The Saints have also been inspired by the fine sermons delivered recently by Pastor Clyde Hastings, H. E. Davenport, and Henry Williams. Topics included "The Power of Influence," "True Representatives of Christ," "Revelation," and "Steps to Perfection."

—Chattie Everett, reporter.

Walthill, Nebraska

Pastor, Lester W. Hunt

The Walthill Saints are very thankful for the success they feel they have achieved since the beginning of the new year. Although attendance has been small, the group has shown sincere devotion and a desire to press forward in the cause of righteousness.

On September 23 Mary Birdsell and Ellrena Orr were baptized. The two infant daughters of Mr. and Mrs. James Orr were blessed at a very impressive service. Members of the local priesthood were assisted by John Jensen of Missouri Valley, Iowa.

Through individual contributions and the work of the women's department, Walthill branch began the new year free of debt. The women meet regularly in the homes of various members. They have selected "Religion and Culture in the Home" for their theme in 1946; Bessie Taylor is the teacher.

Elder A. L. Loving was guest speaker on January 27 and again on February 10. His visits were greatly appreciated by the Saints.

Sunday evening classes have been devoted to round-table discussions in which members of the congregation ask questions they wish to have discussed. These have centered around stewardship, church history, the Book of Mormon, the millenium, the founding of the church, and spiritual gifts; some personal problems have also been solved at these sessions.

All of the young men from the Walthill congregation have returned to civilian life except Sgt. Lester Hunt who is serving with the army of occupation in Germany. None were injured as a result of their service.

Testimony of Charles Herron

In my years of isolation from the church activities I was unable to have very much religious training. Because I was blind, I was unable to read church books and had to depend on my friends to read the Bible or whatever religious material I could get. Due to this fact there were several things in connection with the gospel that I was not able to understand; mainly, why God, being a loving father, as he is portrayed by the Bible, could permit so much cruelty, bloodshed and destruction to go on in the world, and not take any action to prevent it. But since I have come to a better understanding, I find that I was really confused about the plan of God. There are many young people of today in our church and other churches who are having the same type of confusion in their minds because they do not understand the true plan of God and his purposes toward the human race. It is my intention in this article to bring out the plan as it has been revealed to me under the impulse of the Spirit through a heavenly vision. In answer to my consistent prayers to the Lord and in keeping with his promise, he has revealed this information to me to be passed on to others for their blessing and benefit.

It seemed that I was raised on a high peak of a mountain. Before me was a scene in the beginning of the world. On the right hand was a bank of light representing God. On the left hand was darkness, representing the enemies of God. In between was the human race. The impression I gained through the impulse of the Spirit while looking at this was that God created man after his own image, that he made him a free agent to serve God in order that he may be developed and worship God naturally, so that God may praise him and give unto him all of the blessings of eternal life. It was necessary for God to make man his free agent in order that he may develop freely and without restraint, and hold his individual identity because the plan of God contains a provision that each individual should be developed along certain lines with certain talents, and blending these talents and individualities together, form a perfect picture of art.

As I looked, the darkness closed in and a voice said, "Watch." It seemed that the evil forces were trying to destroy the work of God and prevent him from accomplishing his purpose in perfecting mankind according to his original plan. But through the darkness I could see lights appearing, as though they were in the hearts of men, designating the desire to worship God, and immediately the Spirit of God came from heaven and touched each one of these figures, and their clothing was turned white and around them was a path of light. As I watched, these white clad figures were drawn into groups by the change of light coming from heaven representing the Holy Ghost. These white clad figures were then clothed in armor and a flaming sword appeared in their hands. Then came the scene of these people under the direction of God fighting his enemies, the agents of darkness and destruction.

As I watched this scene, I was impressed with the way certain figures went about through the different groups, administering to those who were weak or weary, who had been hit exceptionally hard blows by the enemies of God. The administering figures were ordained men of God. Sometimes these figures stumbled and fell, but to all that raised their eyes into the heavens, the strain of light which connected them with heaven immediately increased and, raising them to their feet, renewed their strength, and they attacked their enemies with greater vigor; those showing that in spite of the destruction that was brought into the world by the enemies of God, God was still working in the hearts of men to renew them and restore them to their former place as his children. The only requirement is that they be willing to open their hearts and look to him for strength and guidance and to receive his Spirit to nurse their souls and develop them according to his plans.

In order to do this each one must empty himself of all selfish desires: pride, hatred, jealousy and all love of worldly pleasures, in order that God may fill him with his spirit and create in him the love for his fellow men, even for his enemies. In this way they will be able to reflect the love and mercy of God to all mankind and be able to cultivate the friendship of all, even of those in sin, to the extent that they will be able to plant the gospel of Christ in their hearts and help them find a better way of life. It is the responsibility and the duty of each Christian who enters the waters of baptism to first be converted to the way of the Lord, and then set about sowing the seed of good tidings of the gifts of the gospel to all others whom they come in contact with who are willing to receive the gospel and turn to God.

This cannot be done if the Christians shun the people with whom they come in contact because of their conduct or anything they may do which is not in keeping with the best Christian law. A good Christian will shun the evil, but not shun the individual.

The last scene in this vision was a masterpiece of art. It seemed that it was made up of stones of all odd shapes and sizes, small and great. Each one was of a different shade of color, blended together by a Master's hand, showing that God was willing to save those seemingly weak and unimportant individuals as well as those who seem to be strong and more important, showing definitely that it was not the will of God for anyone to be lost. It is up to the individual to accept or reject the plan of God which he has offered to the human race because he loves us all. The individuals who will not accept the plan of God and who have no desire to do so are the enemies of God and the enemies of those who worship God and obey him. Therefore, his servants can expect the same kind of cruelty and punishment from his enemies as these enemies would desire to inflict on God himself. Because those who know God are in tune with his will, and are a part of the family of God and, therefore, any offense against his children is an offense against God, and he has promised vengeance on his enemies and to revenge his children, which is his perfect right as to the head of his household.

Therefore, Christians will not seek revenge on their enemies, but will love them and try to bring them into the right way and wait for God to punish those who will not turn into the right way in his own way and his own due time.

Charles Herron.

A Unique Conversion

Brother James Cassidy of Glasgow, Scotland, wrote recently in the Herald that he would like to hear from his Canadian friends; this brought to my mind a remarkable happening that led to the conversion of George Jardine and his mother.

Jimmy came to Canada through the Salvation Army. While living in Rose-dale, British Columbia, he went to work on Brother Jim Muirhead's farm. Through Brother Muirhead's teaching and influence, Jimmy decided to become a member of the Reorganized

The following officers were elected at the annual business meeting held in Berkeley, California: Alma C. Andrews, pastor; Russell Ralston and Fred Browning, counselors to the pastor; Catherine Baker, branch clerk; Alvin Woods, treasurer; Dale Aldridge, assistant treasurer; Ernest Miller, director of religious education; Verna Browning, director of women's department; Irene Gatchett, director of music; Alvin Woods and Dale Aldridge, building custodians; Lowell Schmid, auditor; Gladys Carmichael, branch historian; Emily Bruhns, librarian; Homer Gatchett, publicity director; Catherine Baker, Herald Publishing House solicitor; Ernest Miller, bishop's solicitor; John Carmichael, assistant bishop's solicitor; Homer Gatchett, Fred Browning, and Julia Christensen, finance committee; Margaret Christensen, Zion's League supervisor; Homer Gatchett, adult church school supervisor; Maxine Bowman, young people's church school supervisor; Florence Ralston, children's supervisor; Gladys Carmichael, cradle roll and kindergarten supervisor; Homer Gatchett, Russell Ralston, and Luella Hawley, building and maintenance committee.

Southern Indiana Youth Retreat

The second midwinter youth retreat of the southern Indiana district was held at Wilson Park in Bedford, Indiana, January 12 and 13. The retreat theme was "We are Willing." Young people and their leaders from all parts of the district participated in a fellowship which served to bring them closer to each other and to God. A great deal of credit is due the young people who participated so wholeheartedly, the district officers in charge, and the small group of Saints living in Bedford who worked so tirelessly under the leadership of W. M. Charles to make the retreat successful.

Present for the opening session was the mayor of Bedford who gave a fine welcoming address to the young people.

Maurice Thompson, district young people's leader, and Chester Metcalf, district president, were in charge. Warren Chelline, a young missionary, was guest of the district at the retreat and conducted several inspirational services. Others who conducted classes were H. W. Burwell, Chester Metcalf, and Lloyd Cleveland.

The outstanding service of the retreat was the youth prayer service on Sunday morning. Meeting in the beautiful community house in an atmosphere charged with the Spirit of God, these young people, some of whom had never before taken part in such a service, rose to their feet and expressed their determination to carry on the work of building the kingdom.

In the closing session of the retreat, a vote of thanks was given the Bedford Saints for their part in making the meetings so successful. A vote of thanks was also extended the mayor of Bedford and the townspeople for their hospitality.

Our Departed Ones

GILLEN.—James Arthur, oldest son of Apostle and Mrs. James W. Gillen, was born May 24, 1868, at Malad, Idaho, and died February 11 at his home in Independence. His early boyhood was spent in Bozeman, Montana, and Lamoni, Iowa. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight years by his father. In his young manhood he studied law in the office of William Jennings Bryan for two years. He was united in marriage to Kate Fry on October 16, 1902, in Denver, Colorado. He was ordained to the office of elder in 1900; high priest in 1909; and apostle in 1913. On October 15, 1922, he was called and set apart as president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles. During the long period of his ministry he labored in every state of the union, the Dominion of Canada and British Isles, and visited in the European mission. He resigned as president of the quorum on April 13, 1934, because of poor health, and was superannuated on April 13, 1940. He administered in a local capacity as long as his health permitted, but was permanently confined to his bed from 1942 until his death.

He is survived by his wife, Kate; four daughters: Carol Holmes, Chicago, Illinois; Clarice Webster, Meeteetse, Wyoming; Anita Dickstein, Kansas City, Missouri; and Jeanne Snively of the home; and one son, James W. Gillen. A daughter, Kathryn Aileen, preceded him in death in 1919. He also leaves three sisters, one brother, and eleven grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church in Independence on February 13. Apostle F. Henry Edwards officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

VAN TUYL.—William D., was born May 31, 1887, at Nichols, Iowa, and died at Atherton, Missouri, January 23, when his car was struck by a train. In 1907 he went to northern Texas where he was united in marriage to Lucie Marston on August 9, 1911. In June, 1917, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder S. W. Simmons; soon afterwards he brought his family to Missouri. He made his home for a number of years near Odessa and Bates City. In 1923 he moved to one of the church farms near Atherton and lived there for eighteen years.

He is survived by his wife; four daughters: Mrs. Esther Resch and Mrs. Anna Matye, Independence, Missouri; Marian and Mona of the home; and four sons: Wendell, pastor of the church at Atherton; Kenneth, Independence; Alan, Atherton; and Harold, who is in the Navy. Another son, Roger, was killed in Belgium, on January 15, 1945. Also surviving are four sisters, one brother, and five grandchildren. Services were held at the church in Atherton with Elder James A. Thomas officiating, assisted by Elder Otho Clark. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

GUTHRIE.—W. A., was born in the Sideview community south of Nebo, Illinois, on December 10, 1870, and died at his home in Nebo on January 2 after five years of illness. On March 23, 1892, he was married to Nora Johnson; eleven children were born to this marriage, one dying in infancy. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1892, and was called to the office of elder. In the early days of his ministry, he held services in the homes of the community, and was responsible for the building of the church in Howell Hollow in which he served as pastor for forty-seven years. He was a gifted speaker and did much to improve the community in which he lived.

Surviving are his wife and ten children: Mrs. Verna Ford, St. Louis, Missouri; Oral Guthrie, Hamburg, Illinois; Forest Guthrie, Pleasant Hill, Illinois; Mrs. Violet Hunter, Oakland, California; Mrs. Vera Scranton and Mrs. Bernita Delany, East St. Louis, Illinois; Leonard Guthrie, Nebo, Illinois; Mrs. Carol Mrs. Irma Campbell, St. Louis, Missouri;

Thomas and Mrs. Glenna Weaver, Pleasant Hill, Illinois. He also leaves twenty-five grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Baptist church in Pleasant Hill with Elder Z. Z. Renfro of Independence, Missouri, officiating. Interment was in Crescent Heights Cemetery at Pleasant Hill.

KENNEDY.—Margaret Anna, daughter of William and Eunice Pettichard, was born August 18, 1867, in Oskaloosa, Iowa, and passed away January 12 at Chicago, Illinois. In 1885 she was united in marriage to the late Solomon Line; to this union five children were born. A son, Frank Line, and a daughter, Mrs. Etta Long, preceded her in death. In 1898 she was married to Ernest Kennedy, now deceased. She resided in Chicago for twenty years, where in 1929 following her daughter's death she made a home for her eleven grandchildren. Her faith in God inspired her to unusual endurance and untiring devotion to her loved ones.

She is survived by her three children: Mrs. Florence Covelli and Mrs. Eunice Carlson of Chicago, and Alpha Line of Glendive, Montana; a sister, Mrs. Mary Meyers of Oskaloosa; one brother, Wilbur Pettichard, also of Oskaloosa; fourteen grandchildren; and sixteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Joseph E. Baldwin on January 16. Burial was in Mount Auburn Cemetery in Berwyn, Illinois.

CLAPP.—Addie Louisa, daughter of Samuel and Rachel Whaley, was born in Sonoma County, California, on February 16, 1880, and passed away at Redlands, California, on February 10 after a short illness. She was married to Frederick Clapp, who, with their two sons, Maurice of Redlands, and Lieutenant Joseph of the Army, mourn her passing. She also leaves a brother, Ed Whaley of Redlands, and a sister, Mrs. Birdie Clark, of Visalia. Mrs. Clapp, a member of the San Bernardino branch, was a faithful worker in the church. She was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, and a loyal friend.

Services were held in the Emmerson Funeral Parlour, Apostle John W. Rushton officiating. Burial was in the Redlands cemetery.

REIGLEMAN.—Wilda Ellen, was born March 23, 1895, at Fredonia, Pennsylvania, and passed away February 6 at the Mercer Cottage Hospital. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in July, 1906. On February 7, 1914, she was married to Grover Reigleman.

She is survived by her husband; six children: Mrs. Marie Miller, Clark, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Gladys Wagner and Robert Reigleman, Greenville, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Shirley Dick, Dorset, Pennsylvania; Duane and Evelyn Mae of the home; two sisters: Mrs. Francis Fisher and Mrs. Grace Ott; one brother, Charles Anderson; and six grandchildren. Services were held at the Loutzenhiser Funeral Home with Elder Richard Baldwin in charge, assisted by Elder LaMont McDowell. Burial was in Shenango Valley Cemetery, Greenville, Pennsylvania.

DAVENPORT.—Phillip, was born January 16, 1865, at Montgomeryville, Wisconsin, and died at Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin, on February 7. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1904; at the time of his death he held the office of teacher. He was a highly respected member of the church and of the community where he spent his life.

Surviving are his wife, Blanche; a son, Wesley, of LaCrosse, Wisconsin; a daughter, Bessie Fish, of North Clayton; four grandchildren; six great-grandchildren; one brother, David, and a sister, Mrs. Everett Hutcroft, both of Soldier's Grove. Funeral services were conducted by Elder E. Y. Hunker in the church at Montgomeryville. Interment was in the Montgomeryville cemetery.

VALE.—Lutie Phetteplace, was born March 25, 1862, at Wilkesville, Ohio, and died at her home in Vale's Mills, Ohio, on January 7. She was married to John Vale on November 20, 1873; four children were born to this marriage; only one daughter survives. Mrs. Vale also leaves two grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in April, 1909.

Funeral services were held at the church in Vale's Mills on January 10. Floyd Rockwell of Dayton, Ohio, officiated, assisted by D. V. Cummings of the home church.

CARTER.—Eunice Albert Parslow, was born July 3, 1879, at Glenwood City, Wisconsin, and died December 30, 1945, at St. Mary's Hospital in Ladysmith, Wisconsin, after a long illness. On November 30, 1898, she was married to William Claude Carter at Superior, Wisconsin. To this union three children were born. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in July, 1939.

Mr. Carter passed away on January 2, three days after his wife's death. The double funeral service was held at McElravy's Funeral Home in Ladysmith with Harry Steede in charge.

The Carters are survived by their two daughters: Mrs. Walter Meisegier of Bruce, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Raymond Lassic of Eau Claire; a son, Darcy Carter, of Ladysmith; and two granddaughters. Mrs. Carter also leaves a sister, Mrs. Hattie Davies of Franklin, Idaho; and two brothers, Harold and Myron Parslow, of California.

STOKER.—Gertrude Estelle, was born at Clifton, Ohio, on January 20, 1860, the daughter of Patrick and Anna Murphy, and passed away at Blue Springs, Missouri (Date of death not given.) On January 20, 1880, she was married to Isaac Walter Stoker at Richmond, Indiana. Eleven children were born to this marriage; five sons and one daughter preceded Mrs. Stoker in death. She and her companion lived to celebrate their sixty-third wedding anniversary. Mr. Stoker died November 6, 1943. In 1895 she became a member of the Reorganized Church and remained ever faithful to its teachings.

She is survived by two sons: John Emory, Baker, Florida; and Harry Clifton, Salt Lake City, Utah; three daughters: Frances Louise Boone, Kansas City, Missouri; Genevieve Ferguson of the home; and Mary McCarrison, Kansas City, Missouri. She also leaves nine grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Reorganized Church in Blue Springs with Elder Fred Cousins in charge assisted by J. T. Smith. Burial was in the Perdee Cemetery.

DAVIS.—Lutie Bell, was born at Lankin, North Dakota, on February 9, 1887, and passed away November 14, 1945, in Spokane, Washington, after a long illness. Her childhood and early years were spent in North Dakota; she moved to Washington in 1919 with her family and remained there the rest of her life. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on June 12, 1907, and gave thirty-eight years of consecrated service to the latter-day work.

She is survived by three brothers: Roy Davis of Everett, Washington; Clare Davis of Dishman, Washington; and Ben Davis of Millwood, Washington.

KINDELSPERGER.—Charity, was born May 19, 1876, in Jewell, Kansas, and died February 7 at her home in DeWitt, Iowa. She had been in poor health since 1934, and seriously ill since last November. Miss Kindelsperger taught school in Rock Island and Mercer counties thirty-five years before retiring in 1934. She was graduated from Western Illinois Teacher's College at Macomb, and last taught at Grant School in Moline.

Surviving are two brothers, Ora and Ernest Kindelsperger of Moline. Her parents, two brothers, and a sister preceded her in death. Services were held at the Knox Funeral Home with Elder Victor Witte officiating. Burial was in the Viola Cemetery.

Mrs. Rose Neitz of Barberton, Ohio, requests the prayers of the Saints for her father, Elder J. C. McConaughy, who was injured in a fall February 10, which has affected his spine so that he is unable to sit up.

struments to use that Jesus in his day, and with his human limitations, could not use; we can stand before the microphone and preach the gospel to unseen people thousands of miles away. Jesus could not literally do that under the limitations of his time, and also his human limitations. He was going to his Father, but he had a vision of great things his followers would yet do. Be that as it may, in his teachings, his conduct, and his personality, he challenges us always to do our best under our limitations—to do the things that he did. It is the kindly challenge of our 'Elder Brother,' and reverently and in all humility, we may accept it and travel the long road upward, following in his footsteps."—From Blue Pencil Notes, by Elbert A. Smith.

then there would come an ensign (lowest in the rank of commissioned officers) or a lieutenant, junior grade (next lowest), or even a chief petty officer (highest rate of enlisted personnel), and each of these proceeded to the receiving window, entirely disregarding the waiting line.

As I left the window, I noticed about two-thirds of the way down the line that strung out behind me, a full-fledged commander, scrambled eggs on his hat and everything, taking his step in turn with the rest who were sending their clothing to the cleaner.

It surprised me to see such a high-ranking officer falling in line this way, but I noticed on his sleeve, along with his three gold stripes, the oak leaf which signified him a member of the medical department. Undoubtedly, he was a civilian doctor who had been given a commission during the emergency.

Of course, to be a success, a doctor, more than anyone else, must have patience.

Church. Later he came to Vancouver and lived with the Jardines. One Sunday evening two young men, James and George, walked into the Vancouver Church, their clothing thoroughly soaked. They had walked six miles in the rain to attend the service. I made arrangements to visit them and lent them books. On the following day, which was Christmas, I called on them.

The first thing they wanted was an explanation of the significance of a lion and a lamb with a little child standing near them with the word "Peace" written underneath, encircled by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I asked them why they wished to know. George said, "Jimmy told me that if I wanted to know whether or not this church was true I should kneel down and ask God." The two boys prayed until 3 A. M., and the bedroom became bright; projected on the wall was the church seal. Not having seen it before, they wondered at its meaning.

I explained that it was the official seal of the church and showed them how it was printed on our church books. They knew that George had received an answer to his prayer, and both he and his mother were baptized.

Inspired By a Father's Faith

My story dates back to my childhood when my father was left to care for my brother, my two sisters, and me. Mother passed away when we were small, and dad became both mother and father to us. He worked hard, and I know he must have become very weary, but he never neglected our religious training; he read the Bible and Book of Mormon to us regularly. Then I cared little for what the two books contained, but a few good seeds were planted—a few good thoughts remained—and when I became a mother, although far from a Reorganized Church, I still read the Bible occasionally.

I frequently attended other churches, many of them denouncing my faith and referring to the Reorganized Church as "the Mormons"; I became confused trying to figure out which of the many churches was best. Somehow I couldn't understand the things I read and heard preached by different ministers.

I made several attempts to read the Book of Mormon, but always something would interfere; I guess I just wasn't interested. My health began to fail; my six children were growing up while I just drifted. I was miserable; my family was as confused about God's plan for his children as I was.

While recovering from a major operation and unable to do any work, dad came to see me and brought his Book of Mormon, hoping and praying that I would read it. As always, I found something else to read or just worried to pass the time away. Still miserable after several attempts, I opened it, glanced here and there and saw nothing that interested me. All the while I seemed to hear someone whisper, "You're fooling your time away on that Mormonism." My condition grew steadily worse and I began to have rheumatism; I could find no relief. When a spider bite caused even further trouble, I began to feel that Satan himself was just a jump behind me. Hesitatingly I opened the Book of Mormon which I felt was looking straight at me. I read the first page, then on and on; it was not so dull as I had expected. After finishing the First Book of Nephi, I became more and more interested; I took time to pray. Things I could not understand in the Bible were unfolding to me, and I felt as if a hand were pointing out and explaining passages to my complete satisfaction. I was so thrilled I could hardly wait to read further. The Bible I had read so carefully and could not understand was being made plain and simple.

There were no Saints near where we lived at that time, but I clung desperately to the things that I knew were true and that had been revealed for my benefit by a merciful God. I felt that everyone should be glad to know the things I had just learned, and I told the gospel story to many, but too often they were as reluctant to listen as I had been. I desired baptism and prayed that a way might be opened. It was seven years later, however, before my wish was fulfilled. In September, 1945, I visited my father, J. A. Wilson, in Kingman, Arizona; we motored to Woodville, California, to see my brother and attended church in Tulare. The Saints there arranged a special meeting; while being confirmed I knew that my greatest desire was at last being realized.

My father is eighty-four years and in very poor health; I would appreciate your prayers for him.

A Tribute to John F. Wiles

A few days ago there entered into his rest a man who for many years had been well-known and esteemed on the Pacific Coast as a minister of the church. John F. Wiles used to be a seventy, and years ago was on the missionary list. He had been a local elder, at least since 1915, and was well known in the southern part of the northern California district. He had a mobile outfit for sharpening knives, scissors, etc., and general fixing of household implements; because of his work he was known as "Dr. Fixit." His kindly smile, willingness to help, and genial attitude won him many friends and opened the way for him to bear witness to the work he loved. He won converts to the church, and as he traveled about would visit and encourage the scattered Saints and administer to the sick.

One of the first memories I have of Brother Wiles is of his solicitude of his widowed mother, and tender care of her after she was paralyzed. He was her constant companion until she died. He was one of the old-fashioned ministers, and while limited in some ways, his kindly, gentle spirit was always happy in doing good.

As one who knew him and had been associated with him for many years, I pay my tribute of respect to one of the comrades who labored in the interests of the church, when it was a sacrifice, but also a joy to serve.

To his widow and her family we express sympathy to them in their loss, and pray the gospel John believed in with all his heart may bring comfort to them.

The Country Church

America has drawn its leadership—in business, industry, education, the professions, and the ministry—rather largely from the country. There is something about country life that makes strong character.

In the molding of this leadership, the country church and the country school have played a great part. How important to our nation, then, is the future of the country church!

General Conference Housing

We advise all prospective visitors to the General Conference, whether delegates or not, to await the notice from the Housing Committee if they depend on securing rooms through this committee. At present there is a shortage of 250 rooms and prospects for improvement are not good. We shall continue to seek suitable quarters for visitors and suggest that you bring bedding and cots if coming without advance notice of accommodations. However, there is no assurance of securing rooms for you if you have not received notice in advance.

General Conference
Housing Committee.

THE PAPER SHORTAGE has struck us again. There isn't any rationing to blame this time. There's hardly any paper. We order a carload, the Business Manager says, and they send us a quarter of a carload, the rest going to other firms.

GENERAL CONFERENCE is coming on, and we must have paper to print the big issues that will carry the conference reports and the conference news to you, as well as for other items that are essential to conference business. Unless we cut the size of our editions, there will not be enough paper when the conference comes. So, we're saving now.

CAUSES OF THE TROUBLE are almost anything you don't like, in these days. If you are a capitalist, the cause is labor. If you are a union man, the cause is capital. If you are a plain citizen, with no privileges in Washington such as these pampered groups enjoy, the cause is O. P. A. Take your choice. But really, it appears that paper-making machinery, going at top capacity during the war, wore out rapidly, and there were no replacements. There is still no steel to make new machinery, and there is still little labor cutting wood.

WE FIND IT DIFFICULT to shift gears so often. The Editors labored to adjust readers and contributors to limited-size editions, and wartime people kindly complied. Then we were given full-sized editions, but with the warning that paper might not last. We called for help, and our writers responded. Now we have to turn off the faucets of production again. The situation not only strikes us—it strikes all the people who are helping us to make this church publication a success.

PLEASE CONTINUE TO HELP us in these difficult times. With your support and understanding of our problem, we can meet any conditions. We don't do these things because we like them; we simply can't help ourselves.

WE CONTINUE TO NEED the church news, but we shall have to condense again. We need articles of all lengths and kinds, suitable to our publication. We especially need the good quality leading articles, written by people of ability, that will be suitable reading for the finest people to whom you

Launch Out

Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught.— Luke 5: 4.

By Virgil J. Billings

Member of Quorum of Seventy

TODAY we are at the end of an old era, and we stand on the threshold of a new adventure. Again the world will be swayed by various appeals and philosophies of life—of trying to achieve success, to get on in life, and to have a pleasant time without flagrantly violating the moral code of one's fellow citizens. It was nearly two thousand years ago that Christ came to the earth and turned men's attention to a church with the dynamics and power to affect the kingdom of God—a kingdom that would call people from a life of self-complacency, and challenge them to give their lives in the service of love of their fellow men.

The program of Christ's church was and still is centered upon raising man up to a higher standard of social living which is directly related to his spiritual well-being. In its highest sense, the church of Jesus Christ becomes more than simply a congregation of people or an assembly. In ordinary gatherings—speaking as a whole and not individually—each member thinks primarily about his own personal gains and not of the welfare of his brother. But in the church of Jesus Christ the attitude of the individual toward his fellow man is directly associated with his program of redemption. Hence, the challenge that comes to us as followers of "the Christ," is more than just "getting along in life." It is infinitely more than receiving a spiritual experience. It must be a fellowship of those who desire to work together, not only for the benefit of themselves but for the good of all people. Our willingness to have an equality of things temporal as well as things spiritual is a true test of converted Christian character. It means the gathering of a converted people of the church to one central place that there they might work, live, and worship together in a fellowship of brotherly love. It was to such a program that "the saints" of the New Testament church were converted and called. Let us read from Acts 2: 41-47:

Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

Here we find a group of people who were converted by the power of God and the apostles' testimony about the kingdom. They received a rich spiritual experience, but they translated that enlightenment into social living.

WE ARE NOW LIVING in the time of "the gentile dispensation," and from the Scriptures we learn that this gathering which is to take place in this period of time is to be called Zion. We refer you to Isaiah 62: 2, 3:

And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

And again referring to Isaiah 2: 2, 3:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

In Psalm 50 we find one of many such references to the establishment of Zion in these latter days. We read the first six verses:

The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness.

From this we can see that when Zion is fully established there shall come to its inhabitants a power of salvation, an experience of perfection, and a demonstration of beauty both in the development of our temporal life as well as our spiritual living.

This program of Zion brings to the Christian world a more complete program of salvation because it ministers to the entire man—his physical, his mental, his moral, his spiritual, and his emotional desires of life. For, generally speaking, salvation is an aftergrowth that springs from human behavior. It brings freedom from evil and exemption from the servitude of sin by providing the greatest enjoyment of all possible good. Salvation is the satisfying condition of man—a happy experience of living, an enjoyment of the more abundant life Christ speaks about in John 10: 10: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." Yes, this kingdom of God shall bring to us joy and peace in the Holy Ghost.

Again (from the Inspired Version of the Bible Matthew 6: 38) Christ says in the way of a challenge, "But seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Thus we learn that there is a responsibility on our part to help bring to pass this kingdom of God in which justice is done between man and man in society, and in which the mercies of God are best manifested to men. For those who will launch out into the deep, which is a great adventure in Christian living, and let down their nets, which is putting Christ on exhibition in the kingdom of God, there shall be provided all things necessary for his life.

As a church we believe in the Restoration of the gospel which is in the business of building the kingdom of God. We seek to bring to all peoples this good tidings which is truly "the good tidings of great joy."

The Realism of Prophecy

By J. A. Koehler

A TRUE prophet may always have his "head in heaven"; but, at the same time, he always has his "feet on the earth." He may always have his eye on the future, but he also has his mind on the present. He may plan to take the kiddies for a buggy ride; but not the while he needs his horses to plow corn. No wishful dreaming about a blissful heaven, the while things are in a terrible state on earth — not with the prophets.

"Life is real. Life is earnest." And the prophets say that if life is to be abundant—either hereafter or here—both peoples and persons must master its inescapable realities. For the present, this is the only life there is to live. There can be no future life that is not a phase of the present or that does not arise out of it. So, for the present, to live this life aright, is the engrossing concern of the prophets.

THE Books of Moses are, perhaps, the best portrayal of the ancient prophet. The first chapter of Genesis, in particular, is a typical proclamation of the genius of true prophecy. One short sentence in that chapter comprehends more truth than a dozen other chapters put together. When Moses said that God commanded man to "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion . . ." he put about all the realism possible in one nutshell.

For who does not know that matrimony, industry, and government are the primary affairs of all peoples, the basic realities of life? Who does not know that the manner in which these affairs are conducted shapes the destiny of man? Who does not know that religion—true religion—can attain its objects, both hereafter and here, only through the right conduct and the good management of these affairs? Who does not know that true religion must achieve the ideal through its own mastery of the real?

THE message of prophecy is an endless round of proclamations of responsibilities in vital relations. From beginning to end the theme of prophecy is this: Master the real business of life, and you shall be saved in the Kingdom of God—you shall achieve the ideal. Fail in the task of mastering that real business, and you shall be damned. You will not attain to the ideal. Salvation in the Kingdom of God, say the prophets, must be achieved through masteries of the realities.

You probably have heard it said many times by men whose small-time business or financial successes have gone to their heads—the kind of successes that make the business of peoples failures—you have heard it said that so and so, who is said to be a prophet, is impractical. He does not face the realities of life.

That may be true of this or that person. But if it is, it is because he is not a real Kingdom prophet. He may be a false alarm. He may have some of the characteristics of a real prophet, as thousands of men do; but these resemblances do not justify his classification as a Kingdom prophet.

You would not call a person "a real musician" because he has one or two of the characteristics of a musician, would you? Of course not. For a real musician is one who has capacity to do whatever needs to be done to make the music business a success.

Music may not be one of the practical affairs. Some may not even regard it as one of the realities. But whether music is a practical affair or not, the business of the Kingdom, which is the business of the peoples of the prophets, is very practical. It is so very practical that there is no place in it for the impractical business, financial, commercial, political, and other devices which have caused every crisis through which our nation has ever passed. It can have no place for the so-called practicalities or realities that make the present business of human living together a failure.

REVIEW the lives of the Kingdom-prophets sometime, if you have not already done so, and you will find that every one of them was practical. Every one of them was a realist. Abram is the first of the prophets who is said to have "looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God"—for a civilization that will enrich human life, instead of causing human suffering, as the civilization does that has been shaped by the men who boast that it is they who are practical.

Was Abram a practical man? Was he a realist? Did he have his feet on the ground? Did he know what to do about the realities? If you know the story of his life, you know he did. You know that it is because he did have an eye to the business of the present that he also had it on the future. You know that it is because he knew that the business of the present must be conducted aright, if it is to succeed, that he looked for quite a different economy than the one which the self-styled "practical man" imposes upon us.

Moses and Samuel and Isaiah and Daniel succeeded Abram, in that order. Were they practical men? Were they realists? Did they know anything about the real business of life? I imagine I hear you say, "Don't make me laugh!"

THERE are not a few people who believe that the relation of cause and effect, the law of causation, is a distinctively scientific concept, or that it is a discovery of modern science. Nothing can be farther from the truth. For from the very beginning of Bible history, the genius of true religion—which is the genius of prophecy—has said that man must sow if he would reap. And it has said, in one form or another, that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap." From the very beginning that genius has said, in one form or another, that only "the truth shall make you free." The genius of religion was ages ahead of the genius of science in its apprehension of the principle of causality. Nothing is more characteristic of prophecy than its realism.

It is true that the prophets did maintain that men may sustain personal relations to God. They held that God, personally, would be on the side of the people that will be on his side. But they did not conceive these personal relations and helps to be substitutes for the universal or natural provisions made for the satisfaction of human wants. They did not believe that the actions of Providence did away with Everywhere you meet the idea that "Religion is impractical." Well, some religions are. But not the religion of Bible prophets.

Everywhere you meet the statement that "We must be realistic." So often this means that you must take the "worm's-eye view" of life and the world, that you must chloroform your moral and ethical senses, and shut your eyes to the fact that these "realists" are fattening themselves by the destruction of society—your society, your world.

Listen! Religion is practical—the religion of God's prophets is practical, and their realism is the great realism—it is the truth that will make men free.

the laws of nature and the realities of life. They did say "Praise the Lord." But they said also "Pass the ammunition." The prophets did not conceive the sacraments of religion as substitutes for the laws "replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion . . ." To the prophets the distinctively religious laws and institutions are only supplemental to the laws and institutions required by the very original nature of man. The special laws of religion are necessities arising from the acquired nature of man. If the prophets are idealists, certainly they are at once realists.

IDEAS of what is practical have changed greatly within the century. Even the business man believes now that "a soft answer" is a practical business device. And he resorts to it daily, hourly, from practical reasons.

Even politicians now believe that the very, very idealistic conception of human rights is a practical concept. They now seek to turn away the wrath of even national foes by pretending to honor their rights.

And so runs the story. But are these things new to the prophets? They are not. They are as old as prophecy itself—which is much older than technology.

Causation, rationality, utility, the whole category of what moderns call realism, from the very beginnings of Bible history, have been featured by the genius of prophecy.

That is one of the reasons we believe that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy. For there has arrived again a religious genius that is characterized by all the realism of the ancient voice of prophecy.

That the Kingdom-coming message of Restoration is divine, that there truly is a modern voice of prophecy, is witnessed by the ineffectual attempts of the men who have regarded themselves as the only realists to make moral readjustments.

One of the assurances that the voice of Restoration is the modern voice of prophecy is its realism.

Importance of Letters

It has been quite a while since I last wrote a letter for the Herald. I surely enjoy reading the letters and feel that there is something missing when none are printed.

Since reading the letter of Sister Addie Van Syoc, I am reminded of the experiences I had while investigating the teachings of the church. I always looked first for letters when the Herald came; they were a great help to me. Although my husband belonged to the church and did much to convert me, the letters were added testimonies which convinced me of the truthfulness of the gospel.

We have been wonderfully blessed. All of our children belong to the church except two who are not yet old enough to join; one of them has already asked for baptism.

We are very lonely since we cannot attend our own church services, but we are hoping the day will soon come when we may be privileged to. That God may bless those who are seeking for the true gospel is my prayer.

The Apostasy and What Was Lost in It

BY EVAN A. FRY

IN COMMON with all of the Protestant world, and with many of the best Catholic historians as well, Latter Day Saints believe that the church founded by Christ, and further established by his apostles, did not long remain the church he had expected and commanded it to be. To put it quite plainly, the church went into apostasy. A great many men, both within and without the church, recognized that something was wrong, and tried to do something about it. Councils of the church met at more or less regular intervals to deal with new heresies that had sprung up, and to formulate new creeds and catechisms. A few great and far-seeing men within the church saw the need for reform in certain fields, and instigated those reforms in spite of opposition which always resents any tampering with that which time has sanctioned. The great reformers arose, beginning their work of reform within the established church, but usually being forced to break away from that church, and to establish their own fellowship of believers and worshipers. More reformers arose to reform the reformed; denominations branched off here and there and multiplied; but ultimately all got back to this fact, that the church and the gospel of Christ had been lost somehow during or preceding the Dark Ages.

Latter Day Saints believe that the Apostasy was predicted by Christ and by the apostles, who warned specifically against it; but that it became an established fact. For the sake of convenience, we date the Apostasy from the conversion of Constantine, because that was the beginning of the end. We do reverence to the memory of the reformers who undertook to correct the abuses and errors of apostasy, often at the cost of their lives. We are grateful for the contributions they made to the world's thinking, and to the church's theology. We agree with them that the church of Christ was lost in the wilderness during the Dark Ages. But we cannot agree that Reformation was sufficient to restore that church to its pristine simplicity and purity of doctrine. An act of God was necessary—an act of Restoration. We plan to discuss some phases of Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration, as believed by Latter Day Saints, and our first topic is, "What Was Lost in the Apostasy?"

THE FIRST THING which was lost in the Apostasy was Christ's original simplicity and purity of doctrine. It was not surprising in the comparatively new church, to find countless new theories and doctrines and dogmas creeping in from among the new converts, each of whom had his own peculiar background of former faith and belief. Paul, and Peter, and John, all foresaw this danger, warned against it, and fought against it. So long as the church was fairly small, and held compactly together by persecution, and guided by the spiritual ministry of the apostles, these doctrinal differences could be resolved and heresy put down. But when Christianity became the popular and official state religion, converts flocked to it faster than they could be assimilated, and theological anarchy was the result. This anarchy was stabilized into orthodoxy by the Council of Nicaea in 325, and ever since that day men have been rewriting and revising their creeds in an attempt to reconcile the thousand and one conflicts between past and present, between science and religion, between orthodoxy and common sense.

The second thing which was lost in the Apostasy was the original perfection in church organization. There are many who say that Christ did not organize a church; that the church was organized on the day of Pentecost. But although his church was not complete, it seems fairly obvious that Jesus did have some pretty definite plans and blueprints for his church, which it was his intention for the apostles to carry on to completion. He had chosen twelve apostles, and Paul says that he had set them in the church. He had chosen seventies to assist the work of the apostles. In his instructions on reconciling offenses, he had counseled that when personal attempts at reconciliation failed, the one seeking satisfaction should "tell it to the church." The Acts and the epistles of the New Testament draw us a picture—a rather sketchy picture to be sure—of a simple church organization, functional in form, without pomp or riches or worldly power, and containing such officers as apostles, prophets, seventies, deacons, elders, bishops, and pastors. But with the coming of apostasy, the head of the church eventually became the temporal, as well as the spiritual ruler, of the Roman Empire. Candidates for church office and for priesthood were no longer selected by the voice of the Spirit, but by political expediency. Forsaking the example of Christ, those who called themselves his ambassadors and representatives vied with each other for political power, for riches, for worldly pomp and glitter and glory. Thus was the whole ecclesiastical structure of the church of Christ changed, until it bore absolutely no resemblance to the original.

The third thing which the church lost in the apostasy was its humility. Men who fall into sin and stubbornly refuse to repent cannot remain humble; they have to assert their own correctness and infallibility to justify their own error, and churches are the same way. The humble person, who is not quite sure that he has all the truth, is much more apt to be right than the cocksure, stubbornly opinionated one who knows it all. When the Christian church became all-powerful, in state as well as in the field of morals and dogma, she lost her humility. She undertook the regulation of the thinking of men. She dictated what should be taught. She used force to win converts. She invoked the power of the state, which was under her control, to punish and to suppress heresy. She persecuted all who would not agree with her; she attempted to force all men to come to her. What a difference between this attitude and the Christ who designed to draw all men unto him through the humble suffering of the cross, or the Christ who wept over Jerusalem which might have come to him, but would not.

The fourth thing which was lost in the apostasy was the original simplicity of the church's ordinances and sacraments. The rite of baptism, which was always administered by immersion in the early church, was too inconvenient for kings and nobles who didn't want to get wet, and too slow for conquerors who had converted thousands and tens of thousands at the point of the sword; so immersion was changed to sprinkling. The simple memorial meal of the last supper became a complex and lengthy ritual, confused by the doctrine of transubstantiation. Paganry and symbolism were brought into the church whose founder used only the symbolism of homely parables, and only the paganry of a slow march up the hill of Calvary. In the name of him who took little children up in his arms and blessed them, and who said "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," little children were baptized to save them from an eternal torture in hell. In the name of him who promised that his Spirit would guide into all truth,

A Note to Readers

This article is a reprint of one that appeared in the "Herald" of October 6, 1945, page 937. Our plan at that time was to present the whole series of which it was the first. Circumstances interfered, and we were not able to carry out the plan.

Now the whole series of articles is on hand, and, in order to have them together in this year's list, we are beginning again.

and who counseled his disciples to seek that truth, to ask for it, to knock that it might be opened unto them, men were taught the dark things of ignorance and superstition.

The fifth thing that was lost in the apostasy was personal and corporate morality or righteousness. Sin became not so much something that had to be made right with God and with the one wronged, as something which had to be made right with the church. It became easy to buy forgiveness of sin, either before or after it was committed. The representatives of the church became rich and greedy and pitiless of the poor. Lust and license and adultery became common, even among the clergy, while the church held up the ideal of celibacy. Intrigue and plottings led more and more often to violence, robbery, and even murder. Literature, art, science, invention, and drama all decayed. Education was neglected. Men's rights and dignities were abridged more and more, or stripped from them completely. The lights went out in Europe, and in the world.

IF THESE things be true (and no one can say that they are not) where was the church of Christ at the end of the Dark Ages? There are three possible theories which you may subscribe to. One is, that in spite of her mistakes and wanderings, and in spite of the imperfections and sins of her priesthood, the church continued on down in unbroken succession from the time of Christ and the apostles, learning as she grew, struggling towards perfection, but still unqualifiedly entitled to be known as the church of Christ. Another theory is that this church of the Dark Ages was still potentially the church of Christ, but not actually, because of the Apostasy; therefore a reformation was needed. The third theory is that things were so far gone that only one thing could ever establish the church of Christ as it was in the beginning—a Restoration.

There is a delicate point of logical argument here. At what point is apostasy complete? Suppose that you hired a man to run a business for you. You had drawn very definite and specific plans for that business, and had outlined its policies, its organization, its methods. But as the years went by, and you were still unable to be present to run that business in person, your old trusted employees died off, and were replaced by newcomers who changed the administrative setup, the methods of doing business, the purposes of the business, and the rules by which it was run. Suppose further that they began to use that business as a means of self-aggrandizement and power, and that eventually they succeeded in manipulating affairs in such a way that you would be ashamed to have your name used in connection with that business. Suppose furthermore that your investment in that business had been lost through the machinations of these evil men, who during your absence had shouldered you out. If you wanted to re-establish that or a similar business again, in the same location what would you do—try to take over the old, complete with its false servants, its erroneous policies, and its altered and dishonest business methods, recognizing it as still yours? Or would you try to crowd into that business where you were not wanted and reform it, still keeping it under your name? Or would you start a new business, beginning all over again with new employees, and a restoration of the old policies which had once made your original business a success of which you could be proud?

THIS BRINGS US to the sixth thing which Latter Day Saints believe was lost in the apostasy—the authority to speak for, act for, or represent God—or in other words, the authority of priesthood. Just where the breaking point is might be open for argument, but it is inescapable that no man is going to continue to recognize as his representative another man who ignores his instructions, violates the rules, does not carry out the work assigned, and in general does exactly the opposite to what he has been commanded to do. Latter Day Saints do not believe that God will go on indefinitely recognizing such unfaithful servants, either. They believe that the authority of the church was lost during the dark ages, as a result of apostasy, and that a Restoration was necessary to make the church of Christ a functioning body upon the earth once more.

In following sermons we shall treat more specifically of the work of the reformers, and their preparation for a later work of Restoration, which was begun and carried out under the prophetic ministry of Joseph Smith. We invite you to join us in this examination and study.

The Word of Wisdom

By Francis T. Schrunk

A word of wisdom for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland, and church; and also, the Saints in Zion. To be sent greeting, not by commandment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom; showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days. Given for a principle, with promise; adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints.

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly.

And again, verily I say unto you, All wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and ever fruit in the season thereof. All of these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving. Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter or of cold, or famine. All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life, not only for man, but for the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, and all wild animals that run or creep on the earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger.

All grain is good for the food of man, as also the fruit of the vine, that which yieldeth fruit, whether in the ground or above the ground. Nevertheless, wheat for the man, and corn for the ox, and oats for the horse, and rye for the fowls, and for swine, and for all beasts of the field, and barley for all useful animals, and for mild drinks, as also other grain. And all saints who remember to keep these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 86.

LACK OF OBSERVANCE AMONG THE SAINTS

It may be that the servants of God are neglecting to teach this revelation to the Saints, and it may be that the Saints are simply ignoring it, for I doubt if there is another revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants that is more widely known among our people, and even among non-Latter Day Saints. But whatever the cause, it certainly must grieve our Heavenly Father because of the lightness in which we treat this as "the will of God." It must grieve him further to see the Saints missing the wonderful promises contained therein. Are we overlooking this part entirely? Surely our attitude toward God is not right when we treat this Word of Wisdom as we do.

When one sits down by another who drinks coffee that person will almost invariably say, "So you do not drink coffee. Well, I do, and anyway the Word of Wisdom doesn't mean tea and coffee." Who is right, and why be so indifferent about searching far enough to find out who is correct? Other excuses are sometimes offered. One sister told me once that there was not any more harm in drinking coffee than there was in the contention that came up in the discussion of who was right or wrong. When the Pharisees came to Christ, tempting him with their many foolish questions, did he turn them aside with, "Just run along and do as you choose, and I will do as I choose?" Hardly, but rather he gave to them in a very definite way the right side of the question and then left the choice with them; but whatever their choice, there was no escaping the responsibility laid upon them by the Christ. There is a right side to the above question, too, and that has been brought to the attention of our people so many times, with such strong emphasis, that to continue to ignore the truth contained therein along with other things that we as a people sometimes ignore, will only bring greater judgment upon us.

Many people really do believe that such things as the "cocktail," the cigarette, or the cup of coffee or tea is just a little thing, and is so trifling that we need not be concerned over such. But why did the Lord give his people this revelation in the very early days of the church? Granted, for the sake of argument, that these indulgences might be just "little sins," do we not learn to overcome big things, temptations, by first exercising the will power we have in overcoming little things? In fact, this is the only way we can receive strength to meet successfully the greater temptations and thus grow in spirituality and in character.

MEDICAL SCIENCE CONFIRMS GOD'S WORD

It seems rather strange that a people who have been commanded to build Zion should not first take advantage of the tools that are available to build lives to fit into such a society. We should, as obedient children, who love their earthly father, be very anxious to please our Heavenly Father. We might be excused if there were doubt concerning the meaning and interpretation of this revelation or if we had no evidence whatsoever in the world, after one hundred years since its coming to us, to confirm it as being of the best and soundest advice that God ever gave to a people as pertaining to their temporal welfare. But by a careful examination of what the medical field has found out in its research along this line, we find that we have no excuse, for they have a wealth of confirmatory material for the word that God gave to us. In the last few years I have read much data submitted by those who have made a study of the different foods. They find among the best, such foods as milk, fruits, and vegetables. They have also found that such foods as meat should not be eaten in hot weather and only sparingly otherwise, and for a beverage plenty of good wholesome water or milk is sufficient. Furthermore, such things as coffee, tea, and cocoa are not good for the body or belly, and such things as drugs, along with tobacco and alcohol, are condemned in the way man uses them.

Without quoting too much at length from too many of these articles, let me refer to two or three.

In the February issue of the Readers Digest, (This was written in 1938 or 1939), is an article, entitled, "A Step Toward Livelier Old Age," by Ray Gile. It reads thus: Early in 1937, Irving Fisher, Yale Professor Emeritus of Economics, described in a three-minute radio talk an experiment which may be the next great stride toward longer lives for all of us—and lives with such vitality that we shall no longer dread growing old. For decades he has studied the subject of longevity and collected stories of persons whose health has been transformed through the simple expedient of a new regime of living. A typical story is of a prominent physician who was about to retire four years ago because of ill health. He decided to revise his living habits. His meals consist largely of vegetables, fruits, and salads. He eats no meat, drinks no alcoholics, tea or coffee. Every day he exercises briskly. He sleeps with very light coverings even on the coldest nights, and this practice together with cold baths and light clothing, keeps his skin well stimulated. He has adhered faithfully to his Spartan regime. Today, at 65, he outworked many of the young physicians in the hospital where he operates. "Any person can do for his health vastly more than he now realizes," says Professor Fisher. "For example by eating more fruits, vegetables, and milk you may well add several years to your life. Daily exercise, calisthenics, or outdoor life may easily add several years more. Either better breathing, or better elimination, might prolong your life a year or two. Thus you can begin today not only to increase your present life expectancy by seven or eight years, but to gain greater vitality and energy. Simply by living as you know you should."

Recently Professor Fisher saw some statistics comparing the Mormon death rate with that of six foreign countries. The table was surprisingly favorable to the Latter Day Saints. Their mortality from cancer and from diseases of the kidneys and the nervous system was less than half that of the foreign countries. "Now Utah is a healthful place to live," said Professor Fisher, "so I looked into the death rate of Mormons as compared to that of non-Mormons in the same state. It was 70% lower." I think I know the reason. Joseph Smith, founder of the religion, wrote a book, Words of Wisdom, in which he laid down rules for his followers. They included: no alcoholics, tea, coffee, or tobacco. He urged moderation in the use of meat but advised an abundance of vegetables and fruit. There you have a mass demonstration of the effect of simple living, and I understand the Mormon group is notable for the number of vigorous old people within it."

Not long ago there appeared in several of the newspapers of the land, the following, which was clipped from the Kansas City Times, February 25, 1938, and headed New York. "Discovery of a biological index that predicts the length of a person's life in average figures after he is an adult was reported here tonight by Dr. Raymond Pearl, biologist of Johns Hopkins University. Dr. Pearl also reported the first "life table" on tobacco-smoking. It showed that all smoking, even in moderation, shortens life. . . . The tobacco-smoking tables were based on 6,813 persons, some still living. All the smokers were white men. Part of them were moderate smokers, part heavy, and the others total abstainers. The tables, said Dr. Pearl, show that smoking is associated with definite impairment of longevity. This impairment is proportional to the habitual amount of tobacco usage by smoking, being great for heavy smokers and less for moderate smokers. The moderate smokers' lives are definitely shorter than those of the total abstainers."

Now let us turn from the data given us by the world and look upon a record left by some of our own men of God. In the Conference Daily Herald of April 8, 1938, is a list of the men of the Melchisedec priesthood who passed to their reward in the conference period, 1936 to 1938. Nineteen of these were full-time church appointees and probably kept the Word of Wisdom as well or better than any others in the church. For these nineteen, the average life span was 76 years plus. This speaks very well for our people who strive to keep the word of God. All of this evidence confirms in a marvelous way that which the Lord presented to his people over one hundred years ago. Why are we so slow to see? Can not we hear his pleading voice to us through these findings? Why must we continue to treat this so lightly, along with the many other treasures he has given us?

SENT BY WAY OF GREETING AND AS
THE WILL OF GOD

May I ask again, what is the meaning and interpretation of section 86, in the Doctrine and Covenants? The very first statement is an invitation to welcome this revelation. "To be sent greeting." God approaches us like a father who does not want to offend his child or arouse his evil nature. We stumble so much over the next statement, "not by commandment or constraint," and we think, that since it is not a commandment then it matters not to our salvation whether it is kept or not. It may not be a commandment in the sense that "thou shalt not commit adultery" is, perhaps more like the father who desires and wills that his son have a good education and he says to him, not by commandment or constraint, "Son, it will pay you to get a good education," rather than, "John, you get busy, study hard, I want you to get an education so that you will amount to something." But this revelation is "the order and will of God," concerning our temporal salvation. God wills that all men shall be saved, but salvation is not forced upon them. "Verily I say unto you it is not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Thus the Word of Wisdom is part of the will of God. It is for our temporal benefit and what enhances the temporal always helps the spiritual.

Again we find it like a statement found in Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6, "for, behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. . . . but he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with a doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. Who am I, that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments? Who am I, saith the Lord, that have promised and have not fulfilled"? How much more a father loves his child, if he, the child, sees things to do about the place without constantly being urged or commanded. The Lord doesn't want constantly to urge us to do the things that are right and his will.

Again we have a principle laid down by the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 63:7, which could easily apply in the Word of Wisdom. "And now, verily I say unto you, that as I said that I would make known my will unto you, behold, I will make it known unto you, not by the way of commandment, for there are many who observe not to keep my commandments; but unto him that keepeth my commandments, I will give the mysteries of my kingdom, and the same shall be in him a well of living water, springing up unto everlasting life." We are reminded that those who keep the commandments of God have a wonderful promise, and that the Lord cannot always command, but makes his will known to men otherwise.

GIVEN AS A PRINCIPLE WITH PROMISE

"And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones." Rather than the above, we hear complaints from almost all Saints about their ills. God desires that we have the best of health so that we can give the best to him in service and talents.

"And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasure." Saints, is this not badly needed in our trials, temptations, and Christian warfare, especially in these days of turmoil, strife, and confusion. But how can these things come to our minds, how can we comprehend the things of God if our minds are befogged by drugs or distressed by lack of sleep or ill health? We need clear minds and healthful bodies to drink in the word of life. These treasures of knowledge remain a mystery to us without the above application. Can this be why we have so many different interpretations of the Scriptures?

"And shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint." What a promise. Is it not worth all the effort and sacrifice that must come if we are to give up the indulgences that are condemned above? And then comes the promise of promises.

"And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel and not slay them." Can this mean that when the pestilences, plagues, and desolating sicknesses come upon the earth, which the prophets have long foretold, that it will take first those whose bodies are weakened by such things as alcohol, tobacco, coffee, tea, etc?

The Word of Wisdom was given as a principle with promise, and it seems this is the most important part of the manifestation, and in our failure to keep any part or all of it we miss these wonderful promises. Our Saints should at least have an earnest desire to receive the greater promise even though the minor ones do not seem to come.

ADAPTED FOR ALL

The Lord informs us that it is "adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints." I have seen some men, habitual smokers, who on coming into the church, gave up the use of tobacco immediately and seemingly without much struggle. They had strong will power or possessed a great degree of loyalty, or were actually "born again." I have seen others who have had a struggle that almost overcame them, and yet others, weaker yet, apparently, who have not as yet tried. But the Lord says this is for the weakest of all Saints as well, so it is possible for all to keep if the proper effort to overcome is made.

CORRECT INTERPRETATION OF THE WORD OF WISDOM

The Lord, seeing the evils and designs that will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days warns his children and forewarns them. Here we have a warning and a forewarning. The Lord not only points out to us the dangers and wares of evil-designing men around us at the present time, or at the time this was given, but by the gospel we receive his Spirit, which will in the future point out the further evils and designs of conspiring men. Almost constantly some new thing is being placed upon the market, some of which are foods, and by the blessing of God we are able to detect that which is not good for the body. Many of these foods easily escape the scrutiny of the pure food laws of the land.

The word of the Lord concerning the use of strong drink in any form and the use of tobacco is plain and definite, and we need not dwell on it at least at length. "Strong drinks are not for the belly, . . . and again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly." However, one cannot help but take note that more and more Saints are addicted to the use of tobacco. What is the reason? Could it be that besides failing to teach "the will of the Lord" concerning this unsaintly habit, we have also failed to set the proper example so far as tea and coffee is concerned. For some reason our people think that these latter two are not harmful enough to go to the bother of refraining from. No doubt both alcohol and tobacco are much more harmful to the body than tea and coffee, but sin is not only committed in the use of these but also in the attitude of the Saints toward this part of the revelation. Does the Lord treat this so lightly that it is too insignificant to keep? Most of those who use tobacco recognize that the Lord is right in condemning it, but with tea and coffee they rather doubt that the Lord included them in the term "hot drinks," even after those whose duty it is to teach or interpret the revelations of God have handed down a very decisive and unanimous interpretation, and we are left without excuse. Let us recall first the severe rebuke given us for "treating lightly the things they had received, which lightness has brought the whole church under condemnation." Could not the church be under partial condemnation today, and as a result the gifts of the gospel and an abundance of the spirit of light and understanding are being withheld?

My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:1, 2.

May we again quote the interpretation of the prophets and their counselors relative to the term "hot drinks." If they have expressed doubt or uncertainty then perchance we might be excused. If they have expressed certainty and unanimity then our misunderstanding and confusion has come as a result of our "not being sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations." Please note well the following:

In the Saints' Herald of November 22, 1921, under the heading, "Hot Drinks and Cancer," the editors, F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith, members of the presidency of the high priesthood who are to teach the revelations, wrote the following note as preface to an article by J. R. Lambert: "The writer points out that hot drinks were clearly understood to mean tea and coffee at the time the Word of Wisdom was given. The taking of anything hot, either solid or liquid, is probably injurious. The same is true of anything extremely cold. Tea and coffee are injurious in themselves, and taken very hot or very cold there is the possibility of additional injury from temperature."

Here is a plain statement by two members of the Presidency that hot drinks were clearly understood to mean tea and coffee at the time the Word of Wisdom was given.

In an article by E. A. Smith on the Word of Wisdom, published in the Herald in 1914, and reprinted by request in Herald of November 29, 1922, we read, "There is no doubt in our mind that the term 'hot drinks' was intended to include tea and coffee. True, the words tea and coffee do not appear, yet they are covered by the general term. In a sermon in Nauvoo May, 1842, Hyrum Smith, who at that time was presiding patriarch, formerly member of the first presidency, said: And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly; there are many who wonder what this can mean, whether it refers to tea and coffee or not. I say it does refer to tea and coffee." (Times and Seasons, Vol. 3, page 800). So far as we know, this interpretation was never challenged by the early church or by any quorum or prominent leader of the church. President Joseph Smith, who was to teach "those revelations which you have received" is on record as follows: "Tea and coffee are not named in the word, but they are included in the sentence, 'Hot drinks are not for the body or belly.'"

According to the above which I have quoted as quoted by H. I. Velt in an article on "Tea and Coffee as Beverages" in the Herald of August 7, 1934, it shows very plainly that all of the First Presidency, as well as those counselors who spoke about this subject, have brought to us a clear and unanimous interpretation of the term "hot drinks."

From the above we find that evidently there must be something in tea and coffee that is injurious whether hot or cold, and since science has proved that there is a harmful drug in these drinks, confirming what the Lord has already condemned, then the forewarning part in the word warns us to beware of other things that may have this same drug or similar ones in them. That is the reason the Lord forewarned us. This is quite a blessing to us, for instead of the Lord identifying every food or product that would be undesirable in the last days, for the Saints to use, rather he forewarned of these evil-designing men who would constantly be urging their wares upon innocent men. As we look upon the signboards with all their false and pernicious advertisements, cannot we look further than just the product advertised? The statement made in the advertisement, of itself, may be true, but it is the things that are unsaid that makes the whole advertisement a lie. Cannot we see in this malicious advertisement the forewarning voice of God? He warned us against using tobacco, but forewarned us against just such things as Marijuana. Many things are left for us to find out for ourselves, not by experimenting but by wisdom and the Spirit of God. Such drinks as cocoa or Coca-Cola, whether hot or cold contain the same thing that is condemned in the term "hot drinks." Such warm drinks as the cereal beverages cannot fall under the above classification if free from the drug.

Our Saints who persist in serving the above condemned beverages at social or church functions cannot expect the blessings of God to come to them in their fullest extent. If there are those who care for warm drinks or must have them at their meals, why do not some of our good designing men prepare a good wholesome drink that shall be so good as to challenge the sale of these others? This ought to be a challenge to some energetic enterprising Saint.

In regard to meat, the Lord plainly states because there are those who refuse to eat meat, "that meat is for man, with thanksgiving." Nevertheless they are to be used sparingly, and "it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine." This part of the revelation, though worded somewhat differently, seems to be largely overlooked too. It says "sparingly" when used, and then only in winter, or cold or famine. Do we not use meat too much all the year around rather than when we should to be consistent with the rest of the revelation? Doctors again verify what the Lord has said here, for they say too much meat is not good, and it is best to refrain from it in summer. The meat of swine should come under the above classification if they have been fed as the Word of Wisdom directs, and not as scavengers, as so many farmers do today.

Then it reminds us that "grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life, not only for man, but for the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven, and all wild animals that run or creep on the earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger." There is no sympathy here for the sportsman who goes out and kills just for the fun of it or the man who destroys for monopoly or hoarding.

"All grain is good for the food of man, as also the fruit of the vine, that which yieldeth fruit, whether in the ground or above the ground," then it says, "Wheat for man, corn for the ox, oats for the horse, rye for fowls and swine, . . . and barley for all useful animals and for mild drinks." By this the Lord does not mean man should eat only wheat and the ox only corn, but that this is the most common food for each of these, but that all grain is good for the food of man, etc. The man who eats only, or will eat only whole wheat, misses the clear interpretation of the whole commandment.

May we see more of the goodness and love of God in giving to us this wonderful revelation for our temporal salvation, and may we see the seriousness in taking any part of this manifestation or any other lightly, so that we can merit all the blessings and promises of God. As we forsake anything that is evil, no matter how small a thing it may be, it will give us greater strength for the greater trials ahead as well as give courage and determination to others to forsake the same, as well as the more evil habits or vices. The Word of Wisdom has a clear and definite interpretation. May we apply our lives thereto and receive God's smile of approval upon us, together with his many promises.

Advice to Church Workers

After reading the request in the Herald for leaders and workers to write for the letter column, I felt that I should write of my experiences.

Upon being chosen leader of the women's department in 1940, I wrote to my mother, telling her I would need her assistance and asking her to pray that I might be able to cope with any problems which might arise. Her answer was that I should "stand for the right, pray often in secret, and read all good books." When in March, 1940, I received word of my mother's death, I felt that I was left alone, but heeding her advice I did pray often asking the Heavenly Father for guidance. I am still leader of the women's department and have recently been chosen teacher for the young people's class.

My advice to leaders and workers in the church is to go to God in earnest prayer in times of trouble; he will strengthen you and give you understanding, and aid you in your work.

I have had many wonderful experiences in my life. I have been healed three times through administration when medical experts said there was no hope of recovery. I feel that my work here on earth is not finished, and I hope the Saints will pray for me that I may live worthily.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Lamoni Stake

Pastor, E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson met with the Lamoni Stake presidency and bishopric in Chariton, Iowa, on December 8 and 9 as a counselor. The group was setting up the tentative calendar for the year. Their quarterly meetings for intensive study of stake plans are reported as highly fruitful.

The December activities in Lamoni included the Christmas services, notably the Graceland College service of song on December 16, and the Lamoni public school service on December 19. Ending the year 1945, the priesthood of Lamoni Stake came together for study and fellowship in a yuletide conference on December 29 and 30. The conference was an additional move toward organization of priesthood quorums. The meeting centered around the subject of priesthood education. Over one half of the priesthood of the stake was in attendance in spite of icy roads and cold weather. On that Sunday, members of the high council occupied the pulpits of the stake to make it possible for all pastors and other priesthood of the sixteen congregations of the stake to attend the conference.

Financial law emphasis was observed January 6 to 20 and brought an outstanding response according to figures released by Bishop Lewis E. Landsberg. The period was observed in all the congregations of the stake, and in each was brought to a climax with financial law inventory day on January 20. A pattern of increase in the number of inventories and financial statements filed in the stake has been set over a period of years. The year 1944 showed an eighty-one per cent increase over 1943, and 1945 showed the same increase over 1944. Seventy-five per cent of the priesthood members complied with the financial law this year, as contrasted with forty per cent at the close of 1944. Contributions to the general church fell slightly under one hundred dollars, the contributions for 1944. The difference is attributable to economic conditions influenced by the war and to the fact that extra local responsibility has brought the contributions of the Lamoni branch down somewhat. The Lamoni Saints are focusing their efforts toward the erecting of a new church building in the spring.

Work on the project was carried forward in committees during December and January. On December 30 and January 2, members of the branch were called in consultation on church plans. At the December meeting the congregation assembled in the basement of the Coliseum, each person equipped with pencil, paper, and ruler. Dr. Roy A. Cheville, chairman of the building committee, presented some of the problems, and called for a session of discussion and suggestions. On January 2 the group met similarly equipped in the high school building. They divided themselves into interest groups and formulated specific suggestions. On February 3 the building committee held its annual organization meeting. Dr. Cheville was sustained as the committee chairman. Subcommittees were reorganized.

The men's dinner, served before the annual Lamoni branch business meeting, has become an annual affair. It proves to be a successful community mixer. This year the humble hamburger and plebeian soup gave way before a planned evening of southern hospitality. The ham, yams, and cornbread, with proper additional were served by colored, singing waiters after the guests had been welcomed by a southern gentleman (Wallace Blair) and his comely lady (Arthur Derry) and escorted to their tables by an eager, obliging Rastus (Fred Condit). More than fifty men served on committees for the meal.

Programs leading to the preparation for the coming stake conference were followed throughout Lamoni branch during the early part of February. On February 3 the subject of the service was "The Priesthood Call." The meeting had a dominant note of testimony. It was intended largely to help orientate several young men who were to be ordained to priesthood offices at the stake conference, and to prepare the congregation to receive their ordinations. The evening service on February 10 presented the agenda for the stake conference; the dates set for the conference were February 15-17.

Pastor E. J. Gleazer is concerned about the housing of his flock. The Communion service on February 3 was attended by 627 persons; the normal seating capacity of the Coliseum is 510.

The additional attendants were seated in the boxes, the orchestra pit, and on the stage. The eighty-eight new Graceland students account for some of the overflow, although it is not infrequent that people are turned away for lack of space to accommodate them. The new church is planned with a seating capacity of 700. The need for the new building is particularly evident on the first Sunday of each month.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Pastor, Charles V. Graham

The women's department has been responsible for much diligent and enthusiastic work throughout the year; a bazaar was sponsored to help the branch meet its budget for 1945.

The 106th anniversary of the organization of Philadelphia branch was commemorated on Sunday, December 16. A white gift service was held in the morning, and a well-planned program was presented by the League at the evening service.

Elizabeth Murdock's gift to the branch at Christmas was a beautiful hand-painted picture of the Wise Men presenting their gifts to the Christ child. The painting represents one on a stained glass window. It has been greatly admired by all who have seen it.

The choir, under the direction of Sister C. S. Thumm, sang selections from Handel's Messiah on December 23; Ruth Bacon was the accompanist. During the evening hour the group dramatized "Maunder's Bethlehem."

The church school Christmas party was held on Wednesday evening, December 26. A group of children, under the direction of Sister E. M. Benson, presented "The Bird's Christmas Carol." After the play, Santa made his appearance to distribute treats.

The Saints of Philadelphia branch held a watch party beginning at 10:30 p. m. December 31, and lasting until the new year. Then 1946 was entered in a spirit of prayer and fellowship.

The Communion service on January 6 was one in which peace, good will, and the determination to realize new goals reigned.

A splendid work is being done by the local priesthood. The present project is a series of missionary services based on Elbert A. Smith's Restoration—A Study in Prophecy. On January 6, Priest T. Freeland presented the first talk of the series using the theme "Time Vindicates the Prophets." The succeeding weeks have been in charge of Elder A. M. Piedimonte who spoke on "Functions of the Prophet"; Priest Samuel Hettrick, whose message was "A Chosen People"; and Deacon Phillip Beckmann who used "Prophets Witnessed for Christ" as his theme.

Thursday evening prayer services have been well attended. The spirit of sincerity and fellowship is always present to bless those who attend.

A business meeting was held January 31 at which time mimeographed sheets of the suggested 1946 budget were distributed, each item discussed and voted on.

The Zion's League has recently sponsored several bowling and skating parties. The group is winning the respect and friendship of other youth in the city.

Friday evening, January 11, was family night. Each member of the branch was invited to enjoy the fun, fellowship, and refreshments. Family night is a regular monthly feature.

A district conference will be held in Philadelphia on February 9 and 10. Apostle G. G. Lewis is expected to be present.

Attleboro, Massachusetts

Pastor, Ralph L. Power

Pastor Ralph Power, assisted by Elders Earle and Raymond Bradshaw, was in charge of the December 2 Communion service. During the service Wayne Richard, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank LaMere, was blessed by Pastor Power.

The Equi Club, newly organized men's group, held a supper meeting on Monday evening, December 3, with Representative Clarence Telford of the state legislature as guest speaker.

The Laurel Club held its annual Christmas bazaar on Thursday afternoon and evening, December 6; a cafeteria supper was served in the evening. The women of the club meet once a month in accordance with planned programs outlined in their yearbook.

On Sunday afternoon, December 16, the choir presented Handel's The Messiah under the direction of Helen G. Coombs. This performance was dedicated to T. Albert Bradshaw who passed away on November 24. Brother Bradshaw, or "Al" as he was familiarly known, was a member of the choir for many years; although untrained, his bass voice had outstanding quality and is greatly missed in the music department. He loved music, and nothing gave him more joy than singing in The Messiah.

Pastor Ralph Power's sermon subject on December 23 was "The Message of Christmas." At 6 o'clock a candlelight vesper service was held with Miriam Chesworth as soloist.

On Christmas Eve the church school presented a concert. Six-year-old Marilyn Nash repeated a monologue which she had given a year ago especially for her father, Merrill Nash, who had just been discharged from the Navy after many months service in the Hawaiian Islands. A program of recitations, songs, and tableaux was presented by the children under the direction of Mrs. Ruth Bradshaw.

Pastor Ralph Power was guest speaker at the January meeting of the Laurel Club; the theme of his talk was "The New Year's Message." Members of the club add to their treasury fund by saving a penny a day throughout the year. On January 26 the group held a "snowball luncheon" at the church; at the close of the social hour each member placed her pennies in the snow-bowl, increasing the club fund by more than $70.

The League has carried out a well-balanced program of activities during the fall and winter months under the leadership of Miriam Chesworth, young people's supervisor. Classes were conducted in "Personality and Psychology," with Pastor Ralph Power as speaker. Other activities included handcraft, bowling and roller skating parties, and joint meetings with the Providence Zion's Leaguers. The Christmas social took the form of a dinner party to which the girls wore formals. The outstanding achievement of this group for the past sixteen months has been the sponsoring of a paper called "Homelights" which was edited primarily as a newsletter for the young men and women of the branch who were in the service. Issued once a month, "Homelights" not only brought news from home, but provided cheer and comfort to servicemen and women overseas. Ruth Chesworth was the editor, assisted by Miriam Chesworth and Herbert Moore, Jr. Much credit is due the editor for the untiring faithfulness with which she planned each edition, designing a new cover each month.

Servicemen of the branch who have received discharges in the past few months are Kenneth Baldwin, Merton Churchill, Harlow Paul, and Richard Pilling.

Speakers for December and January were Pastor Ralph Power, Elder Earle Bradshaw, District Missionary Albert Scherer, and Evangelist Frederick Roberts of Onset. One Sunday morning service was conducted by two members of the Gideon Society. Sunday evening services were omitted during January, due to hazardous traveling conditions caused by ice and snow.

Miami, Oklahoma

Pastor, B. F. Kyser

Those who attended the reunion at Columbus, Kansas, from this congregation returned with renewed zeal and awakened interest which has since reflected in an increase of attendance in all departments and activities of the branch.

College Day was observed with Acting President A. R. Gilbert of Graceland as the guest speaker; his message was greatly appreciated. The congregation contributed $100 to the college fund for the erection of a men's dormitory. There are five former Graceland students in the congregation.

The Thanksgiving guest speaker was District President William Patterson.

Sunday, January 20, Apostle A. A. Oakman visited Miami and delivered two inspiring sermons to large and appreciative audiences.

On February 10 Elder and Sister J. Charles May were welcome guests of the congregation; Brother May spoke at 11 o'clock on his mission to the Society Islands. Brother and Sister May both spoke in the evening of their island experiences.

The religious education department, under the efficient leadership of E. G. Gilbert, has made substantial progress in all classes of the church school; the increasing attendance bespeaks the interest of members and friends. With Erma Jean Jackson as the teacher, seventeen students have completed the course in "New Trails for Christian Teachers." They will receive their awards at a special service and covered-dish supper at the church Monday evening, February 25. A new class was organized at the beginning of the month with thirty-one members enrolled; they are studying The Church School by Lydia Wight, with Sister Jackson as teacher.

The women's department, with an average attendance of twenty-five, meets twice a month under the leadership of Marjorie Gilbert. Hazel Rook is teaching the group "Bible Studies." During the month of January the women, in cooperation with the Zion's League, sponsored a box social which netted $187, all of which is to be applied to equipping the new reunion grounds and kitchen.

An excellent program was furnished on this occasion by the Leaguers under the direction of Elder Donald Kyser, president of the League, and Hazel Kyser, who had charge of the program. In March the women's department will be host to all the churches in Miami in the World Day of Prayer.

The music department, under the leadership of Ethel Gaston, assisted by Victor Krucker and Hazel Rook, is progressing nicely with both the adult and young people's choirs practicing music to be used at General Conference.

Lois Quick Shipley, supervisor of the primary department, is doing a splendid work, assisted by a corps of able teachers.

Most of the boys have returned from service, and are doing their part in the work of the church.

One of the causes for the increasing attendance is the priesthood visitation program which is under the direction of Pastor B. F. Kyser, assisted by Elder Alvin Smith.

Branch Solicitor W. E. Sample reports that thirty members have filed their inventories and financial statements; it is expected that this number will be increased soon. $1,113.48 in tithing was contributed for the month of January.

District President William Patterson preached to a large congregation, including several nonmembers, on Sunday evening, February 17.

In addition to visiting speakers, the following members of the local priesthood have delivered sermons recently: Elders B. F. Kyser, C. D. Wilson, Alvin Smith, Clarence Rook, Matthew Crownover, and Teacher W. E. Sample.

Members of the Ozark reunion committee met in Miami on Monday evening, February 18, at the home of B. F. Kyser.

Guelph, Ontario

Pastor, Arthur Dunn

The women's department held a successful bazaar and bake sale in December. The proceeds, together with a substantial amount raised by a penny contest, provided $100 for the furnace fund.

A Christmas concert was held in the church; both children and adults took part. An enjoyable time was had by all, especially at the end of the evening when Santa made his appearance. On Sunday, December 23, the annual white gift service was observed, and the Christmas offering quota was raised.

During the month of December, the Saints were happy to have Howard Slotzhauer and Russel Atkins of Stratford as Sunday evening speakers.

Among the returning servicemen of this branch are Alex Sharpe, Kenneth Rowe, William Shaw, Blake Swift, Lloyd Swackhammer, Ralph Swackhammer, Frank Illingworth, Mac McLean, Robert Cox, and Bob McMaster.

The Saints are glad to welcome to the branch Brother and Sister Nephi Phillips of Sarnia. Brother Phillips served four and a half years in the Air Force.

The new year opened with a two-week series of meetings conducted by District President Percy Farrow. In his sermons he spoke about the divine origin of the church, its ordinances, and the restoration.

The new furnace and heating system has been installed, and new improvements are being made in the church basement.

The Christmas offering goal has been set at $60 for the new year.

—Edna Dunn, reporter.

Runnells, Iowa

Pastor, R. W. Gunlock

A three-weeks' series of meetings was conducted by Henry Castings and C. E. MacDonald beginning January 14. On two occasions District President Frank Fry presided. Special musical numbers were supplied by members of the local congregation and Saints from Des Moines. The services were a welcome spiritual experience for all attending.

Five new members were baptized on the evening of February 3; they were confirmed on February 10. The converts are Vesta Ridgeway, Alfred Wicker, Jean Freel, Nancy Griffith, and Jack Penman.

The Saints met at the home of Mrs. Emma Park, who has been a member of the church for sixty years, on Wednesday evening, February 13, for prayer service. The meeting was outstanding for its spirituality.

Moline, Illinois

Pastor, H. R. Cady

The young people of Rock Island district held a convention at the Moline church on January 20. The theme of the day was "This Is Your Hour." The opening prayer service was in charge of V. J. Witte, followed by a discussion hour under the leadership of John Stiegel. The women's department served lunch in the lower auditorium at noon. At 2 o'clock another discussion hour was held under the direction of Brother Stiegel; at 3 o'clock V. J. Witte was in charge of the service, "Your Hour of Summaries." Sandwiches, cake, and ice cream were served at a 5 o'clock supper.

The evening service began with a musical program which included a marimba solo by Lahonta Davis, a vocal solo by Lt. Elmer Cousineau, a piano solo by David Shippy, a vocal trio sung by Muriel Lenox, Louise and Lucille Sheppard, a musical reading by Marie Bevan, a trumpet solo by George Barber, a clarinet and saxophone duet by Alan and Ronnie Tyree, and a vocal solo by Rozella Sheppard. The final meeting was a worship service held at 7:30; Tom Beil was the guest speaker.

Servicemen who have recently received their discharges are Merlin Lenox, Stewart Ryan, David Cox, Don Giles, Leo Sheppard, and Dick Martens.

Janet Kay, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Merlin Lenox; Ronald Keith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Lane; Harland James, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hale Cady; Kenneth Allen and Dawn Marie, children of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Lane, were blessed at recent services.

—Mrs. Leo J. Sheppard, reporter.

New Albany, Indiana

Pastor, W. O. Robertson

Two servicemen have recently returned and taken their places in the congregation; they are Paul Maymon of the Signal Corps, and James Robinson who served in the Infantry. Brother Robinson came back with the Purple Heart and Bronze Star awards.

The women of Albany branch have been quite active. They have given several dinners in the lower auditorium of the church, and will serve the meals at the district priesthood institute to be held February 23 and 24.

The music department is training young people in chorister work. The church school music is handled exclusively by members ten to sixteen years old; rotating pianists and choristers work under the supervision of the director of music. The regular pianist for all other services is Wanda Jane Fouts, fifteen years old.

Alvina Tretter, special music director, is training the young people in quartet and choir work. The four Tretter children have a quartet of their own; soprano for the group is Josie Lynn, five years old.

The Christmas program and New Year's Eve watch party was in charge of Margaret Maymon, program director. Among the many games enjoyed at the watch party was an old-fashioned spelling match between the people over forty and those under forty. W. O. Robertson and Harry Tretter, Jr., were top spellers on the two teams.

George Maymon, Zion's League leader, is planning a full program for the coming year. A valentine party and formal banquet was held on February

BULLETIN BOARD

Northeastern Illinois District

For the first time in the history of the northeastern Illinois district, a two-day ministerial retreat was held at Mission branch on February 9 and 10.

The retreat was opened by the district president, Dr. Dwight D. Davis, who made a statement about the purposes and objectives of the gathering. Two classes were held between 3 and 5 p. m. on Saturday. The theme for the first was "Priesthood—What are its opportunities for service to mankind?"; the discussion was led by Doctor Davis. "What is meant by an authoritative ministry?" was the theme of the second class taught by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

An excellent dinner was served in the lower auditorium by the women's department of Mission branch following the last class period. Grace was pronounced upon the food by Dr. O. T. Hayer, pastor of Pontiac mission. Elder Arnold Settles, pastor of Aurora branch, was recreational leader following the dinner, enlisting the participation of every priesthood member present in some very amusing and enjoyable quiet games.

At 7:15 p. m. the group retired to the upper auditorium for a round table discussion with Apostle Edwards answering the questions. While this was under way, the lower auditorium was prepared for a priesthood prayer and fellowship hour, the arrangements for the musical setting and decorations were taken care of by Charles Homuth, pastor of DeKalb branch, and Marion Blakely, pastor of Sandwich branch.

"This Is My Task" was the theme used for the hour of prayer and testimony. A circular arrangement of the ministry provided a friendly and close setting for the theme talk delivered by Elder Frank Shank of Central Church, Chicago. Dr. Russell Rogers, pastor of Elgin 14 in the lower auditorium of the church. Pastor and Mrs. Robertson were special guests. The theme for the evening was "Working for a Bigger and Better League." Thirty were present. A one-act comedy, "An Evening With Parson Grindstone," written and directed by George Maymon, topped the evening of fun. It was such a success that it is to be repeated at the priesthood institute.

District Missionary Allen Breckenridge and wife are making their home in New Albany. On February 10 Brother Breckenridge talked on "Life After Death," illustrating it with a chart. This was at the request of several nonmembers who attend the evening services regularly. The southern Indiana district played Santa to the Breckenridges by presenting them with a desk at Christmas.

On Sunday, February 17, District President Chester Metcalfe began a series of lectures on the "Life of Christ," illustrating his talks with colored slides. These lectures will continue through February 19.

—Elsa Robertson, reporter.

mission and district director of music, sang a cappella, Ashford's "This Is My Task." Prayer and testimony portion of the service was under the direction of Apostle Edwards and the district presidency.

Early Sunday morning the ministry met for a Communion, prayer, and testimony service. The theme was "My Faith Looks Up To Thee." Elder Marion Blakely was responsible for the beautiful sacramental setting: an all white backdrop with rich purple drapings framing a picture of Christ, in front of which was an open Bible flanked by burning candles. From this setting the emblems of the Lord's Supper were served. The spirit of God was present at this service.

Mission branch was responsible for the church school hour with Robert Fewell in charge. Clarence White of Aurora offered the invocation. Apostle Edwards taught the combined classes of young people, adults, and priesthood, using as his topic for group discussion, "What must we do now to guarantee stable ministerial power?"

At the eleven o'clock hour Dr. Russell Rogers sang "Thanks Be To God," accompanied by Mrs. Vernon Hougas of Mission branch. The invocation and benediction were offered by Elder Richard Wildermuth, pastor of Plano branch. Apostle Edwards delivered an appealing message on "What is our relationship to God?"

Following the morning sermon, the women's group at Mission served a very complete buffet dinner. Elder William Pinkerton, pastor of Belvidere branch, asked God's blessing upon the food.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations . . . and, lo, I am with you always" was the theme for the special 2 p. m. dedication service for the district priesthood under the direction of Elder Dwight Davis and his counselors. Elder Settles offered the invocation. A special piano selection was played by Margaret Jameson of Mission branch. Elder Davis summarized the high points of the priesthood retreat by making a series of statements in answer to the question, "Why did you come?" Apostle Edwards gave the charge of dedication, basing his remarks on the theme. Elder Blakely pronounced the benediction.

Contributing notably to the spiritual setting of all services was the recorded music played so clearly before and between services on the recording machine made by Elder Charles Homuth.

Excellent support was given this priesthood retreat by the ministry. All who came felt that the original objectives for the gathering were realized, and expressed the hope that it represented the first of many more such meetings to follow in the future.

Religious Education Conference Northeastern Illinois District

A religious education conference of the northeastern Illinois district will be held at Plano, Illinois, March 16 and 17. The first meeting is scheduled for 2:15 p. m. on Saturday, when special classes will be held for workers in the children's, young people's, and women's departments. A program composed of contributions from the various branches will be given at 7:30 p. m. Sunday services will begin with a devotional at 9:30 a. m., followed by a sermon at 11:00, and a re-dedication service at 2:00 p. m.

Silver Lake Reunion

For the benefit of many who have already made inquiries, and for those who may wish to make their reservations well in advance of the Silver Lake Reunion, the following information is submitted. The district presidents of the Portland, Seattle, Spokane, and British Columbia groups, northwestern states bishop, and the Apostle in charge met in Seattle on Sunday, February 17, and decided to have a joint reunion on the Silver Lake grounds near Everett, Washington. The date has been tentatively set for July 26 to August 4 inclusive. Those wishing to make reservations for tents or cottages should write to Bishop M. E. Lasater, 4115 Bagley Avenue, Seattle, Washington. A dining room and grocery store facilities will be available. The program for the reunion is in charge of Elder J. L. Verhei, 3824 SE Grant Court, Portland, Oregon; those having requests in regards to the program may consult him. This will be the first reunion for the Saints of Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, and northern Idaho since 1941.

Request for Prayers

Members of the Indianapolis congregation request the united prayers of the Saints in behalf of Timothy McIntosh, infant son of Pearl Creston McIntosh, who seems to be blind. The father is still overseas and has never seen his son.

Mrs. Daisy Erickson of Delisle, Saskatchewan, requests the prayers of the Saints. She is isolated from the church, and will soon be going to the hospital for treatment of a serious ailment.

Mrs. Sarah Selbe of Phillipsburg, Kansas, asks to be remembered in the prayers of the Saints that she might be healed of her affliction.

Lt. Bernard Black

Lt. Bernard S. (Bunny) Black, reported missing in action on January 9, 1945, after his sixth mission over enemy territory, was officially declared dead by the war department on January 10, 1946.

Lieutenant Black was a graduate of Graceland and received his Bachelor of Science degree in aeronautical engineering from Iowa State College prior to his induction into the service in February, 1942. After completing his training as a flight engineer in Seattle, Washington; Denver, Colorado; Clovis, New Mexico; and Pratt, Kansas, he flew to Saipan as a member of the crew of Waddy's Wagon and participated in the first B-29 raid on Tokyo.

His wife, the former Betty Jean Potts, also a graduate of Graceland, is residing in Woodhaven, New York. He is survived also by his father, Eugene M. Black; two sisters, Mrs. Virginia Morse and Mrs. Doris Grafton; and a brother, Fred Black.

Sgt. Virgil Kinne

Sgt. Virgil Elbert Kinne was born April 17, 1923, at Spokane, Washington, and died December 8, 1945, at Billings, Montana. He was a graduate of Spokane High School. In March, 1943, he entered the service, receiving his basic training at Fort Knox, Kentucky; he was sent to England on July 2, 1944. He served with General Hodges' first army through its sweep across France, Belgium, and Germany without receiving a single wound. On October 21, 1945, he left Germany, arriving at Camp Kilmer, New Jersey, November 28. He was enroute to Fort Lewis for discharge when the transport plane on which he was a passenger crashed while attempting to land at Billings, Montana, killing all aboard.

He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on April 21, 1935, and was active in League activities before going overseas. He was married to Charity Mason of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, on October 31, 1942; to this marriage one son, Michael, was born.

Besides his wife and son he is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Kinne of Spokane; one brother, 1/Sgt. Lyle Kinne with the Army in the Philippines; and a sister, Marjorie Halvorsen.

Norman Johnson, S 1/C

Norman Johnson, S 1/C, has been officially pronounced dead by the Navy department. In August, 1944, hopes rose when an announcement was released at Washington indicating that 300 aboard the "U.S.S. Houston" might be prisoners of war in Thailand. The ship disappeared without leaving a trace in the battle of the Java Sea on February 28, 1942. It was one of a small group of British, Dutch, and American warships that were swept before the Japanese tide in the early days of World War II. The last fight came in a desperate and futile effort to keep the Japanese from invading the Dutch East Indies.

Norman enlisted in June, 1940. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Johnson, have received from the war department the Presidential Citation awarded to crew members of the "U.S.S. Houston." The award was given for outstanding performance against the enemy from December 7, 1941, to February 28, 1942.

Besides his parents, he is survived by one sister, Fern, and two brothers, Ronald and Gerald, all of Beloit, Wisconsin.

Our Departed Ones

BRADSHAW.—Thomas Albert, eldest son of George and Mary Bradshaw, was born May 22, 1883, at Attleboro, Massachusetts, and passed away November 24, 1945, after a brief illness. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in his youth, and was a devoted member until his death. He was married to Stella Smith, who survives him. He also leaves a son, Harold, of Easton, Pennsylvania; a daughter, Mrs. Myrtice Loranger of Taunton, Massachusetts; three grandchildren; his aged mother; two brothers, Elders Earle and Raymond Bradshaw; and a sister, Mrs. Ada Power, all of Attleboro. His father preceded him in death in 1916. Services were conducted in the Attleboro church, Elder Ralph Power officiating. Interment was in Oak Knoll Cemetery.

CHAMBERS.—Wilbur, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Chambers, was born October 19, 1875, at Coldwater, Michigan, and passed away at the Independence Sanitarium on February 15. In 1901 he enlisted in the Army and served with the 15th Cavalry in the Philippines until his discharge in 1904. On December 25, 1905, he was united in marriage to Gladys Morton; six children were born to this union. One son, Graydon, preceded his father in death. Mrs. Gladys Chambers died in 1928.

On April 19, 1930, he was married to Mrs. Maymie Dooley of Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in West Branch, Michigan, on August 19, 1906, and was ordained a teacher in 1920.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Mildred Belrose of Detroit; Mrs. Violet Adair, also of Detroit; and Mrs. Elaine Moore of Los Angeles; two sons: Edwin and Orville Chambers, both of Independence; a twin brother, Walter Chambers; two sisters, Mrs. Maude Liff and Mrs. Luna Stevens; six step-children: Mrs. Alma Dixon, Mrs. Fern Long, Mrs. Opal Curless, John, Roland, and A. R. Dooley; twenty-six grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Carson Funeral Home conducted by Amos T. Higdon and R. V. Hopkins. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GOODE.—Stella Emma, died at her home in Independence on February 13 at the age of sixty-three. She had been ill for several months. A faithful member of the church, she also belonged to the Home Beautiful Club and was a charter member of the Laurel Club. Surviving are one daughter, two sons, two brothers, and a sister. Funeral services were conducted at the Stone Church on Friday, February 15, at 2:30 p. m. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BURTON.—John Carter, only son of Rudolph and Dorothy Burton, was born July 5, 1945, at Baltimore, Maryland, and died at the home of his parents in Baltimore on February 9. He was blessed August 19, 1945, by Elder E. H. Brennan at the church in Punxsutawney. Funeral services were held at the home of his maternal grandparents in Punxsutawney, Elder E. H. Brennan officiating. Interment was in the Circle Hill Cemetery.

VANDERWOOD.—William H., son of John and Anna Vanderwood, was born at Malad, Idaho, on January 31, 1887, and died at Malad on February 8 of a heart attack. He was baptized March 10, 1918, at Ogden, Utah, and was later ordained to the office of priest. He was a faithful member, loved and respected by all who knew him. On September 19, 1928, he was united in marriage to June Starr; to this marriage one daughter was born who passed away at birth.

He leaves three sisters and a brother, Elder J. E. Vanderwood, besides his wife. Funeral services were held from the second ward meeting house at Malad, Idaho. E. E. Richards was in charge, with Josiah Price giving the sermon. Interment was in the family lot in the Saint John Cemetery.

Articles may be a little slow reaching publication, as they were before, but we shall need the supply when full-sized editions can be printed again. Please keep sending the articles. We shall need all of them in time.

NOTICE OF THE CHANGE came to us after most of the type for this edition had been set. In future editions there will be more smaller type. This time we are shifting and condensing the editorial page, subject to further consideration with the top directors of editorial policy. It seems hardly possible to continue "business as usual" in this department while all other departments accept retrenchment.

ONE THING IS HOPEFUL. Our people have responded wonderfully when we have explained the facts and shared the problem with them. Our experience of the last few months has proved that. Calls for help have brought generous and intelligent responses. Through the present difficulty we feel sure we shall be able to continue the work with best effectiveness by asking your help. THE GENERAL CONFERENCE is the center of attention during these days when preparations for it are being made. In the midweek prayer meetings, numerous petitions are offered on behalf of the conference, the church, and the leaders. Everywhere that church members gather, the conversation turns to the conference.

It seems to us that the feeling of insecurity and uncertainty which is abroad in the world has not left our people unaffected, and we share in the general apprehensions which arise out of the great and difficult problems facing the nations. It is very important that we should not let this feeling come into the General Conference.

In our conference we shall need all the patience with each other and trust in God that it is possible to summon. We need faith and strength. We need unity. We need to care so much for each other and for the church that we will let nothing divide us.

Recently we were reading the manuscript for the new history of Grace-land College by Dr. R. A. Cheville. He said many things that impressed us; one of them fits this occasion for the whole church. He records that students have said, "Whatever we do, let's all do it together!"

That is a good rule for any conference. Let us have the propositions presented. Let us consider the evidence and the discussion. Put it to a vote. Then abide by the majority decision, and all work together. The conference will go according to the condition and the will of the people. We need no psychic capacities, no extraordinary powers, to predict that. There are no external conditions to make any real difficulties for us. In unity and harmony, the church has always found a great blessing. If we keep together through the apprehensions and fears of these times, our church will be able to accomplish a great work, and will grow in strength and service to humanity.

THE LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played a beautiful concert at Memorial Hall in Independence a few evenings ago. Under the leadership of Brother Franklyn Weddle, our church Director of Music, this organization has reached the highest development of instrumental music yet attained by Independence people. We were able to identify nineteen of the thirty-eight orchestra personnel as members of our own congregations. It is splendid that artists and players of all groups can unite in this fine project. Brother Weddle commented, "There are many more able musicians in Independence, who could give us great help. But we have not been able to interest them in this effort." We add our urgent appeal that people of every group should support the Little Symphony. It will bring not only excellent music, but friendship and understanding. More good than we realize is done by such organizations.

J. CHARLES MAY, veteran missionary, had the good fortune to be doing church work near Fulton, Missouri, about March 5, when Mr. Winston Churchill, former Prime Minister of Britain, was to deliver an address there. A short bus trip took Brother May to Fulton. Going to the gymnasium at Westminster College, he learned that many thousands had been disappointed in efforts to get seats; but he spoke to a guard, met, and shook hands with President Truman, and received a seat reservation that had been canceled by a holder who could not attend. "Mr. Churchill seemed really very sincere," said Brother May. "There was a spirit of brotherhood between him and President Truman."

The tailored dress I saw today
Was sweetly flowered, pertly gay;
I thought it fit (by self-persuasion)
To wear on more than one occasion.

Of rayon sheer, hard to ignore—
That dress and I had true rapport.
The price? My dear, as I'm alive,
Reduced to Dollar Ninety-five!

Ay, ay, but here's the mortal rub:
Just yesterday a leading pub.
Sent me a special close-out list
Of books, (one choice one I had missed).

Sheer vanity I'll not express,
So on that tempting little dress
I will not cast another look;
One Ninety-five will buy that book!

Prophets for Today

By M. L. Draper

ONE of the outstanding teachings of the Scriptures about the nature of our Heavenly Father is that he is the "same yesterday, today, and forever," that he is the eternal, unchangeable God. In the words of Malachi in the sixth verse of the third chapter, "I am the Lord; I change not!" This characteristic of God cannot be over-emphasized. If the Scriptures contain truth at all, then this is fundamental to all truth, that the creator of heaven and earth, the maker of all things, and the father of all men is the same from everlasting to everlasting, the same eternal, unchangeable God.

Now if this be true, as we certainly believe that it is, then it is also true that he is still trying to save men from the sins that plague us, by the establishment of his kingdom on the earth. As Jesus taught us to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven; hallowed be thy name. Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." This is still the divine purpose, for God has not changed. He is at work among men to bring to pass his kingdom on earth.

IN THE light of this divine purpose, there is a statement of Amos, in the seventh verse of the third chapter, which assumes special significance. Amos said, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Note—the Lord God will do nothing except by a prophetic ministry, that man may know and co-operate with the divine will. The story in the Scriptures is the story of the efforts of our Heavenly Father, through the ministry of his prophets, to reveal his way of life to men, and to call them into his kingdom.

In every age of spiritual enlightenment there have been prophets. In the days of Adam, the Lord spoke to him, even in his fallen state, in order to reveal the way back to righteousness. In the days of the patriarchs there were prophets, and out of their ministry came the calling of the Hebrew people as a chosen, servant group, to serve the rest of the world in a ministry which would reveal the true and living God and his divine will to the peoples of that time. During the entire Old Testament history, the story of the Hebrew people is that of their fortunes and misfortunes as they obeyed the revelations of God through their prophets, or followed the other peoples who lived among them into the worship of idolatrous gods. The ministry of the New Testament in the life of Jesus was introduced by one of the great prophets of all time, the "Voice of one crying in the wilderness," John the Baptist. He it was who made possible the beginning of the ministry of Jesus by preparing the way before him, and by introducing him to the people with the words, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world." Jesus has been called the greatest of all prophets, and such he was, for he revealed the nature of God and the divine purpose in terms of life better and more completely than any other.

BECAUSE of the constant turnover in the world's population as the generations come and go, the gospel needs to be constantly reinterpreted; not changed, for it, like its author, is unchangeable through all eternity, but restated in terms of the present, and each generation in turn needs to be taught of the will of God through the ministry of its prophets, if they have faith to receive it. After the ascension of Jesus, there were many prophets in the church who continually reminded those who had been followers of the Master in the flesh, and witnessed unto those who were converted after his ascension, of the standards of the gospel. We have the record in the New Testament of the work of some of these prophets up to about A. D. 100. There may have been such ministry afterwards, but their writings were not included in the Scripture.

Let us be reminded again of the statement of Amos, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." This was true in the beginning. It was true during the days of the patriarchs, during the exodus from Egypt, during the Old Testament period. It was true in the days of Christ and the New Testament church. The Scriptures teach that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever. That means that it is still true today. "Surely" even today "the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

IT IS well to note here that the ministry of these prophets has usually been associated with the "called-out" people of God—those who are separated out of the world for the special purpose of rendering the service of kingdom-building, so that all men may see in operation and come to understand the heavenly way of life. In the Old Testament, this meant that the prophetic ministry was directed primarily to the needs of the world through the "chosen" Hebrew nation. They were the ones who, under the leadership of Moses, were organized into the Old Testament church, out of which there came, because of apostasy and confusion, the sects known as the Pharisees, Sadducees, etc. In the New Testament period, there is no record in the Scriptures of this prophetic ministry originating outside the church of Christ. If God is still the same, then we should expect, similarly, that today prophetic ministry would not be haphazard and confused, but that it would be associated with the Church of Jesus Christ. Thus, as Paul writes in I Corinthians 12: 28, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets." The prophets are set in the church.

Now, if there is a church of Christ upon the earth today, it will have, besides all the other characteristics of the New Testament church, a prophetic ministry through those who are set in the church for that specific purpose. More than that, since the greater portion of the scriptures in the Bible are the experiences of the prophets as they attempted to reveal God to the people, there should be preserved today, for the benefit of those who wish to study and meditate over the revelations, and for the use of the generations to come, a record of the ministry of such prophets. We of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints believe that there is such a prophetic ministry, and that there has been since before the organization of the church in 1830, and that there is a record of the ministry of these prophets for today, just as there is a record of the prophetic ministry of olden times. The record is contained in the pages of a book, which is called, the Doctrine and Covenants, selected from the revelations of God by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The first edition of this book was published in 1835, and there have been numerous editions since that time. The current edition, published in 1945, carries a document dated April 10, 1940. Thus, even though it has run many editions, the book is not yet finished, nor will it be until the final achievement of the works of God, for he does not change, and as Amos said, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."

It is our purpose to study "Prophets for Today." We want to know who these prophets are, what understanding of the divine purpose we may receive by their ministry, and in what ways they have added to the work of salvation by their prophetic function. Some will be tempted to read again the eighteenth and nineteenth verses of the twenty-second chapter of Revelation, where we are admonished not to add to nor take away from the revealed word of God. They will wonder if we are adding to the Scripture when we say there is a record of divine revelation for today. But if they will turn to Deuteronomy 4:2, almost the same words will be found. Does that mean that everything in the Bible after Deuteronomy 4:2 is wrong? Of course not. It means that man must not pervert the revelation of the divine will by adding to or taking from the words of God. But after Moses wrote Deuteronomy, there were centuries following in which most of the Bible was written. This was by the work of God through his divinely appointed prophets. It is these divinely appointed prophets for today, and their work, which we shall consider in the coming weeks, that we shall thus learn that God is no respecter of persons, and that he leads us today toward his kingdom by the ministry of "prophets for today."

General Conference Housing

As a special urgent request, we ask all persons who have listed their names for rooms with the Housing Committee to notify us at once if they have made arrangements other than through committee channels. Failure to notify us of having secured rooms privately has caused confusion.

Some improvement in the housing outlook is noted, but we are still 150 rooms short to date.

GENERAL CONFERENCE
HOUSING COMMITTEE

Blue Pencil Notes

In this present time of confusion and disorder (when in our darker moments half the world seems crazy and the other half—half crazy), it is refreshing at times to watch the play of unspoiled children and listen to their talk. Here is an anecdote credited to the Toronto Globe and Mail that interested me:

Two small children were playing at housekeeping. One pretended to want to rent the play house of the other.

"Have you any parents?" the little house owner asked.

"Yes," said the other little girl, "two."

"I'm sorry," replied the little landlady.

"I never rent to children with parents—they are so destructive."

That story is something more than funny. The child said more than she knew. For years past, adults the world over have made destruction their chief business. It has been our "big business." And now when the war is said to be over, we do not know how to get about the peaceful work of rebuilding.

Recently I happened to be reading words penned by the president of the church. He wrote: "A feeling of unrest, in some of downright dissatisfaction and in others of annoyance and distress, had [has] gone out into the different districts of the church, and affected the delegates." He was writing about General Conference delegates. However, I must hasten to add that the words quoted were written by President Joseph Smith in 1885. There were some very real reasons why the Saints were disturbed. And yet when Brother Joseph continued to write about that conference, he said that light and unity came, and "great harmony of both sentiment and spirit." In fact some thought it one of the best conferences that had ever been held by the church.

Many times in the past when fears and forebodings have troubled the minds of the Saints as General Conference approached, ere the conference ended, light came, and unity and peace prevailed. It is not always so; but perhaps the outcome is always one of blessing when the Saints are humble and prayerful and anxious unitedly to learn the will of God, and to do it.

THE PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH
IN 1832

When Joseph Smith received the revelation in 1832 predicting the Civil War, that document added that "The days will come when war shall be poured out upon all nations." And it ended, "until the consumption decreed hath made a full end of all nations." At the time such a statement seemed utterly incredible.

THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES IN 1946

Recently the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches, representing ninety church groups from thirty-two countries, issued a statement, dated Geneva, February 25, in which they said: "Man's triumph in the release of atomic energy threatens his destruction . . . unless man's whole outlook is changed, our civilization will perish." That would just about mean "a full end of all nations."

Beyond such possible catastrophes, we look for the setting up of a world government that shall endure in peace. Still further, in its conclusion, the revelation from which we have quoted adds, "Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved until the day of the Lord come."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Law of Work

THE LAW of work does seem utterly unfair—but there it is, and nothing can change it: the higher the pay in enjoyment the worker gets out of it, the higher shall be his pay in money also.

The Authority of the Modern Voice of Prophecy

By J. A. Koehler

WE USE THE word "authority" here as meaning the right to speak (and, of course, the right to be heard) which arises from a superior insight into human nature and affairs, or from a superior understanding of what is requisite to enrich human life. Call it a superior outlook or vision of the shape of human affairs to come, if you prefer.

Prophetic authority is a power in the sense that knowledge of the truth is power. The prophetic voice has right to speak because the truth has right to a right of way, or right to be implemented, in the lives, the affairs, the business of both peoples and persons. Since the word of prophecy respects the "right" conduct of "human" affairs the authority to speak the word of prophecy arises from moral excellence as well as intellectual superiority. It arises from an intelligent, burning love of God and man.

THERE HAVE NOT been many great prophets, for great prophets appear only when there are very important turns of events that shape the fortunes of men. The two incomparable prophets are Moses and Jesus, one of whom spoke with consummate authority on the organization of human society and the other on the spiritual foundation that must underlie rightly constituted human society. Moses spoke with authority in one specific relation and Jesus in another.

The relation in which the voice of prophecy speaks with authority is determined by the circumstances of man, by the needs of the times. About all that may be said of Abram's prophetic authority is that "He looked for a city [a mode of organized human society] which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God," or which is an embodiment of the will of God; and that he saw, as through a glass darkly, the role of his people in the building of that city.

The authority of Moses' prophetic voice was much greater. For he apprehended, he seems to have apprehended, the system of social principles—which are at once moral principles—in which the city that Abram looked for is to be grounded. Moses spoke with consummate authority on the special application of those principles that should have been made in his day and time, or in the circumstances of his people.

Jesus is the consummate authority on the state or temper of mind, or on the spirit that must pervade a people, if it is to build the city which Abram saw. The substance of what Jesus said is, Except a people be born of a spirit which is in the likeness of God—except it be born of the "Holy" Spirit—it shall never achieve the Kingdom of God. It shall never build the city which Abram saw.

Some of the lesser prophets—St. John the Divine, for instance—spoke with more authority on the doom of peoples whose spirits are degenerate; on the fate of peoples that are reprobate. Isaiah's specialty is the circumstances of the building of the Kingdom in the latter days. On the whole the prophetic voice spoke with more specific authority with the passing of time and the broadening of human experience, and particularly as the affairs of Kingdom-building peoples, especially, developed.

THERE ARE MANY evidences of refinements of prophetic convictions as civilization marched on, or as the affairs of peoples progressed. For instance: the first proclamation of record in the Bible respecting matrimony is, "Be fruitful and multiply." Simply that, and nothing more. The last proclamation is much more refined. It says "You [shall] both agree to be each other's companion, husband [companion] and wife [companion], observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." The last prophetic voice, then, spoke with greater authority than the first on the spiritual aspect of the marital relation.

And so it is as respects the first prophetic message respecting industry. That voice of prophecy said, simply "replenish the earth and subdue it." That, and nothing more. Isaiah had much more than that to say about the conduct of industry. As respects the ethics of economic life he spoke with more authority. We do not know how Isaiah compared with Moses as an authority on the organization of the state. All we know is that it was not his mission to speak on that question. That was the mission of Moses.

MY ESPECIAL concern is the authority of the modern voice of prophecy. Again it is the circumstances of the people, the need of the times, the turn of human events, that gave rise to the specific message of prophecy. I speak, of course of modern prophecy. This time, instead of the people leaving Egypt in a body and of establishing the business of the Kingdom with "hands," or by force of arms, it is a case of coming out of Babylon one by one; and of establishing the Kingdom "without" hands. The necessity today is to form a Kingdom-building people through the gathering of "the elect" from here and there and everywhere. And instead of coming into possession of a land, on which to build the city, through conquest, in the last days the land must be procured through purchase.

Wants Historical Photographs

The Graphic Arts Bureau has been gathering photographs of historical interest for years. We have also collected books of historical interest.

We have in our possession a daguerreotype of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and also one of Emma Smith. We have a copy that we made from a daguerreotype of the Nauvoo Temple. We also have a number of other daguerrotypes of great historical value.

This date, we received an 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon in very good condition. This book was brought from England by the father of David Ferguson, Director of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Creston, Iowa. In 1906 it was given by Mr. Ferguson to George B. Hall, Creston, Iowa, and in turn by him to the Graphic Arts Bureau.

If any of the Saints have pictures of historical interest that would be of benefit to this department, we hope they will get in touch with us.

who seek the Kingdom are very different today from what they were in the days of Moses. They are very different from what they were in any previous age. Accordingly the authority of the modern voice of prophecy must be different, as respects particulars, from the authority of the ancient voice.

Moreover, the concept of economic justice proclaimed by Moses was lost in apostasy. It needed to be restored. That is the reason one of the characteristics of the modern message of prophecy is its system of ethico-economic principles. Moreover, there is a need today of a very special agency—a church, we call it—through which the gathering of the elect, and all, is to be consummated. There is need of an agency competent to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.

Many circumstances are different. The applications of the laws of rent and wages and stewardships and tithing and surplus, and almost everything else, must be somewhat different in our day. Distribution, for instance, is quite a different problem from what it was in Abram's household. So, the modern voice of prophecy must speak with a very special authority, in these latter days, on the business of building the Kingdom.

HERE ARE A few passages of the modern message of prophecy. You will see what I mean when I say the modern voice of prophecy must speak with more specific authority. "All things shall be done by common consent." "The inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion." "Let all the churches gather together their moneys . . . And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase the lands" upon which the city which Abram saw is to be built. "Gather mine elect to the places appointed." "And you are to be equal, in other words, you are to have equal claims upon the properties [the land and other economic resources of "the people"] for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just. . . . Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God." And so on and on, until the message is completed.

The whole setting of the business of the Kingdom is different in our day. The affairs of all nations are in confusion. The industrial or economic affairs of all peoples are in a tangle—an almost indissoluble tangle. There is a world calamity. Civilization faces its crisis. It is on the economic crisis that the voice of prophecy needs to be heard. And it is precisely on that baffling problem that the modern voice of prophecy speaks with consummate authority.

For the Sick and Discouraged

Thy Health Shall Spring Forth, by Russell L. Dicks. N. Y., Macmillan, 1945. 61 pages. $1.25.

The minister who collaborated in producing that excellent volume, The Art of Ministering to the Sick, and who has contributed a number of other good works in the field of counseling, brings us a fine new small book, much needed in the trade. It is the kind of book any reviewer would have wished to write, but is delighted to find that somebody else has done it much better.

Here are prose and verse selections, by the author and by others, for meditation and prayer when the mind and body are in distress, in a sufficient variety and number for most needs and occasions.

Even if you aren't sick you should get this book for those dark times in your life when you don't feel that you have courage to face the world and its problems. It will help you. We like the headings: "The night before an operation"; "For one in pain"; "For one who feels guilty"—there is one for most of us!; "For one who feels lonely"; "For one who is disabled"; two good items on "In behalf of nurses" and "In behalf of physicians"; "A prayer for sleep"; "A prayer to be free from worry"; and many others. This volume is especially good for troubled editors. We are taking it home and putting it on the bedside table.

A Philosophy of Justice

Justice and the Social Order, by Emil Brunner. Translated by Mary Hottinger. N. Y., Harper, 1945. 304 pages. $3.

It was only in the safety of Switzerland, of nearly all places in Europe, that Brunner could have written this book in the year 1943. Its Foreword is signed in Zurich, in September of that year. The translation is recent. This is a conception of justice, freedom, and of the rights of the human individual that none of the dictators would have tolerated anywhere that people came under their power. The contribution of the book is that it finds the foundation of freedom in philosophy and religion rather than in politics. Seeing what can happen in politics, we can believe that this is a better foundation.

Dr. Brunner is a Swiss who writes in the German language (for the Swiss have three languages, including also French and Italian, but none of their own). He was in America, but when the war broke, he felt, as a patriotic Swiss, that he should return home to help his country.

Average readers will find this book requires deep plowing. The thoughtful, scholarly readers with good background will find values in it.

Dog Story

Every Dog Has Its Day, by Julie Haydon. Marcel Rodd, 1945. 120 pages, $1.50.

This is the story of a dog's life, written ultra-modern style, by a distinguished young actress. It covers exactly one day with Maxim, a wire-haired fox terrier, beginning with her early morning caprices, through puppy biscuits, a walk in Bryant Park, a bath in Miss Haydon's tub, a trip to the photographer, more puppy biscuits, and a bedtime story. Every Dog Has Its Day is recommended to the canine conscious only.

Short Inspirational Talks

Religion and Everyday Life, by J. B. Chapman. Kansas City, Beacon Hill Press, 1945. 141 pages. $1.

A friendly, practical tone and viewpoint pervades these short talks which take their starting point in some passage of Scripture and calmly work over some of the perplexing difficulties of everyday life. This neighboring publisher has put the book in good, clear type, easily read by those whose eyes need help.

For Funerals

The Improved Funeral Manual, by William H. Leach. N. Y., Fleming H. Revell Co., 1946. 224 pages. $1.50.

The well-known Editor of the magazine Church Management has enlarged and improved the funeral manual which he formerly offered to the public through another publisher. Revell is a nondenominational house, and this book is not limited to the needs of any particular church, although it contains the historical liturgies of the Protestant Episcopal, the United Lutheran, and the Presbyterian churches. There is a generous section (Part III) from which liturgical materials may be selected and arranged.

Negro Biographies

Rising Above Color, by Philip Henry Lotz. Associated Press, 1945. 112 pages. $1.50.

This is a series of short character-biographies written by a Methodist pastor about thirteen of America's outstanding Negroes. Although handicapped by racial prejudices, poverty, and limited educational facilities, these talented individuals won national and international acclaim. If you have not read the life stories of Roland Hayes, Richard Allen, Walter White, W. E. B. DuBois, Robert R. Moton, Marian Anderson, Frederick Douglass, Daniel H. Williams, Booker T. Washington, Paul Laurence Dunbar, James Weldon Johnson, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, and George Washington Carver you will enjoy Philip Lotz's inspiring and easy-to-read Rising Above Color.

John F. Garver

One of the "Friends of Graceland College" series prepared in connection with the Fiftieth Anniversary Celebration, 1945.

By the Lambda Delta Sigma Society

AT HOMECOMING, he struts in new shoes, wears a moth-eaten "G" sweater, and brags of captaining the 1902 football team, whose squad of thirteen constituted the entire male enrollment of that year. A stranger watching the stout, heavily built man enjoying himself with such noisy gusto might need to be told that he is the Chairman of the Board of Trustees, and that he holds high place among those who have built Graceland College.

John Garver was born January 28, 1878, near Elkhart, Indiana, the oldest of a family of seven children. When he was five years old, his parents moved to Jackson County, Missouri, and two years later moved to Cloud County, Kansas, where John spent his boyhood days in a pioneer environment marked by hard labor, grinding poverty, and scanty educational and cultural opportunities. At a very early age he was earning his own living. The year that Graceland College was founded, he was working in Mills County, Iowa. The following year, employment with a Latter Day Saint farmer brought to his ears for the first time the story of the Restored Gospel. He joined the church September 26, 1897, and for five years he looked toward the new church college and saved his money for the opportunity of an education which circumstances had thus far denied him.

IN SEPTEMBER, 1902, the Administration Building, standing proud and solitary on Graceland's hill, opened her doors to a little group of eager students which included John Garver. Possessed of a boundless physical and nervous energy, he threw himself into the life of the college and community. It is not easy for him to explain the effect which Graceland had on his life. This is partly due to the fact that the influence of the college was intermingled with the imprint of the church and town life. As he looks back to his early years in the little town of Lamoni, which was to become his home, he is inclined to marvel at the readiness with which he was accepted and put to work in various church and community activities. The college opened the door to a new world of thought and knowledge for the untrained young man, and personal contacts with the college faculty and the fine characters of the community were tremendously stimulating to one of his natural ability, and in sharp contrast to the hard and narrow background which had been his lot. He was a keen student, taking special interest in history and English. His eagerness for knowledge was given direction and balance by the personal efforts of such college notables as R. M. Stewart, E. R. Dewsnup, and J. A. Gunsolley. Among those of the community who were most influential in his life were Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, F. B. Blair, and John Smith. These men, with many others of his early associates in Lamoni, have always held his admiration and affection. His experience in Lamoni provided him with a healthy self-respect he had not known previously, and channeled his strong character and rugged individualism into the work of the church.

For five years he carried partial courses at the college and worked at various tasks in the town. He edited the Lamoni Chronicle for two years, and later worked at the Herald Publishing House, being employed there when it was destroyed by fire in 1907. In Lamoni he found the girl of his choice, and he and Miss Mynn Hayer were married August 11, 1907. Two months later he became a counselor to John Smith in the Lamoni Stake Presidency and on January 1, 1908, was appointed a minister of the general church. He continued as counselor in the stake presidency for nine and one-half years, and during the last three years of this period, he carried the additional responsibility of the assistant editorship of the Saints' Herald. In June, 1916, he succeeded John Smith in the stake presidency, and continued in that office until called into the Quorum of Twelve in 1922. His first sixteen years in the quorum were spent in the Central States Mission, and as his home was in Lamoni it was possible for him to maintain close contacts with the college, its faculty, and student body.

DURING THE YEARS he was achieving a place in the highest councils of the church, he was taking a growing interest in the struggling church college. In April, 1912, he was elected to the college Board of Trustees, and with the Fiftieth Anniversary celebration has completed more than a third of a century of service on the board. He filled the office of secretary from 1910 to 1932, and since this latter date has served as chairman.

With the background and experience of the Reorganization Movement it was impossible for the college to receive the whole-hearted support of the church membership, nor is it surprising that some of the church stalwarts could give only an uncertain and wavering allegiance to the new institution. During the time when John Garver was a student, the General Conference ordered that the college be discontinued. This event profoundly impressed the young student for whom the college was making such a vital contribution. The passing years and widening experience in the ministry of the church served to strengthen his early conviction, born at this time, that the college must make its way in the regard of the church membership on the basis of its long-term service in bringing enlightenment to its young people, providing training for leadership in church work, and promoting unity and a common basis of understanding within the church.

AS A BOARD MEMBER since 1912, he has worked for and had a part in physical improvements made on the campus. He gave consistent and valuable support to President G. N. Briggs in his successful efforts to improve the academic standing of the college. In all the problems which have confronted the college during his long service as a trustee, he has given of his best thought and judgment and has been influ-

I don't know why I always think,
When February's over,
That March will come, and bring us

I long for summer's blazing heat
So I can be just lazy.

entia in every progressive move.

However it is safe to say that his greatest contribution has been in relating the college to the life of the church. As a general church officer, he has had ample opportunity to evaluate the influence of the college on the church membership. He has measured the success of the college in terms of developing Christian character and expanding the vision of the young people who attend there. He believes firmly that "nothing is worth the making which does not make the man." This basic philosophy has enabled him to evaluate the college in the total program of the church. It has made it possible for him to curb his own impatience in planning for the college, and at the council table of the Board of Trustees has often given him a somewhat deceptive appearance as a strong conservative. His personal enthusiasm for the college has always been tempered by his appreciation for the over-all picture of the church. At times, he has felt called upon to restrain those who he thought would do the college a long-time disservice by rushing its expansion beyond the strength of its parent organization, the church. At the same time, he has been zealous in his efforts to steer a course which has kept the college making progress in keeping with the growth of the institution which sponsors it.

To the Board of Trustees he has always brought the viewpoint of the general church, and thus laid a broad base of understanding on which the problems of the college could be discussed and solved to best advantage. To the general church in all his work from individual conversations to quorum, council, and general conference assemblies, he has envisioned the hopes of the college with authority and conviction, and championed its need with moderation and good judgment. The full story of his influence will never be told, but in the growing esteem in which Graceland is held by the church, John Garver has always played an important part. For that he asks no praise, nor would he even claim credit for some of the achievements for which he has been largely responsible. Only the few friends who know him most intimately realize how generously he has taken on his broad shoulders the problems of the college.

As chairman of the board, his associates would agree that he has made every effort to develop opportunities for each one to make his best contributions. He presides in such a manner that there is freedom of expression, and the opportunity for the board members, when not in agreement, to work their way to a group decision which makes for strength and cordial relationships within the board.

Few, if any, of Graceland's alumni have so richly repaid the institution for its contribution to their lives. The college and its sponsoring organization brought him a richer and better way of life, and in return his life's work has been concentrated into avenues of service for the college and church. Among the names of the worthy men and women who have built Graceland to her present stature, and laid the strong foundations for the greater Graceland of Tomorrow, a high and honored place has been earned by our inimitable John F. Garver.

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

THE APOSTASY was not a sudden, cataclysmic thing. Rather, it was slow, insidious, gradual. It may still be going on today, wherever and whenever men depart from the ways of God, change his laws to suit themselves, and break their covenant with him. Reformation, too, is a slow, tedious process. It is still going on today, for in due time it seems necessary that even the reformers shall be reformed. And that is just one of the reasons why Latter Day Saints believe that Reformation alone was not enough to restore the church to the condition of the church which Christ left on earth, which the apostles enlarged and more completely organized under the direction of the Holy Spirit. Restoration was necessary to accomplish this end, rather than centuries of reformation. But we are not unmindful of the great debt which Restoration religion owes to Reformation. As a consequence we are making a brief examination of the question, What did the Reformation reform?

The Reformation in Europe had four main causes, all interdependent one upon the other, and so commingled that it is impossible to tell where one cause begins, and the other ends. Those four causes were: first, moral; second, doctrinal; third, economic; and fourth, political. The Reformation was part and parcel with the Renaissance, and a general revival of learning, art, literature, and new thought, and an increase in political freedom and democracy.

ONE THING OVERLOOKED oftentimes by both Catholics and Protestants who make a superficial study of the Reformation, is that it began in the Catholic church. Some of its most distinguished clergy, and even some of its popes called loudly for reform over a period of four centuries. From the time of Innocent III, in 1215, to Leo X in 1512, nine great church councils were held in the interests of church reform. The calling of each in turn was an admission that its predecessor had failed to complete all the needed reforms for which the church itself was clamoring. George Gordon Coulton, in his article on the Reformation for the Encyclopedia Britannica, says: "From St. Bernard at the beginning of the 12th century to Bishop Fox, who founded Corpus Christi college at Oxford in 1516, there is no generation from which we cannot choose orthodox and distinguished churchmen who urged the crying need for church reform in language which might seem harsh from the pen of a modern Protestant."

First let us have a look at the moral causes of the Reformation. Let us remember that preceding the Reformation, many churchmen had taken occasion to criticize the morals of the clergy. Guillaume Durand in 1311 said that the thing most needed in the church was "a reformation in head and in members," that is, from the pope downward. Since the adoption of the doctrine of the celibacy of the clergy, it had been an unending source of trouble. Denied the normal relationships of marriage, the clergy simply resorted to concubinage, sometimes buying permits or licenses for such practice from their superiors. St. Anselm tried to stamp out the practice in England, as early as the eleventh century, and admitted his failure. Medieval authors almost universally generalize about the immoral example of the monks and nuns of their day, and many a good church father blamed the loose lives of the clergy for the increase in heresy and in skepticism among the laity.

Long before Luther's day orthodox Catholics were calling attention quite vigorously to the abusive side of many church doctrines and practices. They deplored the multiplication of the holy days, and the ensuing vice and riot that often accompanied them. They deplored the abuse of the consecrated oils of the church for witchcraft. They questioned whether clerical immunity to secular law did not encourage crime. They pointed out that in many respects the laity seemed to be improving more rapidly than the clergy. It was some of these moral abuses that the Reformation undertook to correct in a more drastic way than had heretofore been tried by the church men who had seen the need long previously.

The need for moral reform served to high light and point out the need for doctrinal reform. Ordinarily, the mass of common people is not interested in doctrine, or the fine points of theology. They leave that to the theologians, the philosophers, the college professors, the clergy. But when they see the lives of their theologians and ministers differing so widely from their professed doctrinal creed, they begin to think about doctrine. This was very largely true in the Reformation.

THE FIRST HALF of the twelfth century saw the rise of several minor heretical sects, most of them anti-sacerdotal: that is, opposed to a special priesthood in the church. More than one of these sects taught that the personal immorality or unworthiness of the priest officiating in a sacrament or ordinance of the church, destroyed the value of the sacrament. That was not so heretical as it might at first seem, for Anselm had followed the same principle in trying to stamp out concubinage in England, holding that such sin automatically rendered men unfit to officiate in the ordinances and sacraments of the church. In the twelfth century, the Waldenses adopted the Bible as their standard of religious faith and practice. They read it in the vernacular, memorized much of it, quoted it in support of their position. They contended that there was no essential difference between clergy and laity, but there was no general or wide diffusion of these views.

The great schism in the church, with two, and sometimes three claimants to the papal throne hurling anathemas at each other, brought further doubt upon the doctrines of the church. People began to think and to talk about such things as predestination and indulgences, and to question why all virtuous non-Christians should be damned. They began to reject the necessity of priesthood for salvation, and talk about personal salvation, justification by faith, and the confirmation of the saved by the Holy Spirit. They began to question the works of penance and the keeping of fasts and holy days as means of salvation.

As for the economic causes of the Reformation, there were many. It has been variously estimated that the church and churchmen owned from one fifth to one third of all the landed property of Europe, and on all this property they claimed exemption from taxes. That placed an enormous burden of taxation on other property, of course, which was augmented by the tithes collected by the church. The pope claimed the right to appoint all benefices, which were so often sold to the highest bidder that Aeneas Silvius, who later became Pius II, wrote, "Nothing is to be had at Rome without money." Half of the income of each bishop went to the pope, and a proportionate amount of the income of each abbot. Bribery was common; courts were bought and sold without regard to justice. Even the inquisition had its economic side; heretics, even if they became reconciled, lost all their goods to the church. When all the rich heretics had either been reconciled or destroyed, interest in the Inquisition died. It is not surprising then, that both inside and outside the church there was an insistent cry for economic reform, which contributed to forwarding of the total Reformation movement. People who felt that they were unjustly treated economically—who constantly felt the grind of poverty in the midst of opulent plenty,—were ripe material for the spread of Reformation ideas and the correction of moral and doctrinal derelictions.

THE RISE of the Reformation movement was inseparably connected also with the political upheavals of that time. There was no separation of church and state; such separation was not even thought desirable by many of the reformers. Religious quarrels were often settled on the basis of political expediency, or by means of political horse-trading. The political claims of the pope reached their culmination in Gregory VII, who claimed that the papal power of binding or loosing on earth as well as in heaven put him above all earthly sovereigns, enabled him to annul oaths when they were contrary to God's will (of which he was the sole judge) and authorized him to absolve subjects from allegiance to any king or emperor whom he had deposed. Innocent III reasserted these claims, and Boniface VIII attempted to forbid all taxation of the clergy by the state, on the grounds that all human beings are subject to the pontiff of Rome. It was the adjustment of those claims which brought on many a bloody war preceding and during the Reformation period.

Essentially, the Reformation grew to be a quarrel between two conflicting and irreconcilable ideas—the idea of personal judgment and private interpretation of Biblical truth, versus the idea of final and absolute authority. Both sides recognized the infallibility of the Bible. One side held that only the authorized councils and priesthood of the church could interpret scripture. The other side held that each man was entitled to make his own private interpretation of scripture, and that the Bible itself was to be the final authority, since church councils had manifestly rendered decisions in some cases contradictory to the Bible. It was a clash of established and entrenched authority, backed by force and the arm of secular power, against the individual conscience, combined in the power of public opinion.

SOME OF THE results of the Reformation, then, were these: It helped to bring to the fore the ecclesiastical abuses in the field of morals, doctrine, economics, and politics. It taught that man's greatest duty was to know the will of God, and to obey that will. It demanded a higher plane of morality from both clergy and laity, a morality which extended over into the economic and political field. Doctrinally, the Reformation started people thinking about predestination, about justification by faith. It began to place a greater emphasis on personal salvation, and the witness of that salvation which comes by the Holy Spirit; and less emphasis on the "works" such as penance, alms, pilgrimages, sacraments, and ordinances, as means to salvation.

Reformation and its accompanying movements began to bring about certain economic reforms. The church's land holdings were reduced in size, and the tax structure made more equitable. The political problem was brought into the open, and though it has never been fully settled, the outgrowth of the Reformation has been the gradual growth of religious tolerance. The Reformation's stress of conscience and individual judgment has led naturally to a rise of popular education, so that men may be mentally equipped to make their own decisions. The Reformation has led to a much wider printing and distribution of the Bible, and its reading by the common people. The Reformation encouraged preaching in the vernacular of the people, and the writing and singing of hymns. It encouraged the rise of congregationalism in church government, in opposition to the absolute sacerdotalism of an earlier day. It contributed to the simplification of ceremony and ritual and formalism.

Junior Quarterly, Q-323-D

In the Herald of February 2, 1946, we advertized for usable copies of the April-June Quarterly, "Jesus Friends Carry On." The response to this purchase offer has been inadequate to save us the expense of a re-issue. It is necessary, therefore, to cancel our offer.

Please do not send us more of these Quarterlies. We shall try to have a new supply ready in time to supply all orders.

Nature Did It First

An interesting story is told about the building of one of London's prewar skyscrapers. When the preparations were being made for the famous London Exhibition of 1851, a vast building was envisioned but, unfortunately, no architect was able to supply a plan to which there was not some objections.

One day a gardener produced a rough plan of a building on a totally new principle. He had studied the enormous leaves of the "Victoria Regia," a giant water plant which is so strong that one leaf will support the weight of a child, and had discovered the secret of the leaf's supporting power.

In his plan the gardener had simply copied—in steel girders—the arrangement of the ribs of the round lily pads and added the glass panes of his greenhouse. The gardener was Sir Joseph Paxton, and the building was the famous Crystal Palace.—(Sent by a reader, from an unidentified publication.)

LETTERS

Two Spiritual Experiences

It has been my experience that when we are instructed by the spirit to do something we shall be sorry if we do not heed, and we shall rejoice if we do.

One day while about my work a voice (not audible) spoke to me saying: "Pray for Hugh on the high seas." I knew I would not have used the expression "high seas." Our son was at Pearl Harbor the last we had heard from him. I did pray as directed, and the next letter we received was from San Francisco. He had come all the way from Pearl Harbor on a submarine; of the fifteen days he was on the ocean, eleven were stormy with waves so high the crew was in constant danger. His comment was that he never wanted to make another trip like that.

We have had many wonderful experiences in our family, especially gifts of healing, but I wish to relate one that was different.

While at work in my kitchen one morning, I heard a knock at the door; it seemed to be in the dining room. I went to the door, opened it, and found no one there. I went to each of the outside doors, but found no one at any of them. Both my son and daughter heard the knock.

In the afternoon a young boy, the son of a neighbor, was sitting near the window in the dining room. I was again in the kitchen. The boy said, "Mrs. Kearney, someone is knocking." I said that I had heard it and so had my children. I went to the door, and the boy looked out of the window to see who it was. When I opened the door no one was there. We told the boy of our experience in the morning. He was so startled he ran home and told his family. They wanted him to knock just as he had heard the knock on my door, but he said that he couldn't. It was not loud, but soft and clear and seemed to penetrate all through the house so that four of us heard it.

Not long after the last knock the telephone rang; it was a long distance call from Sister T. J. Jones at Lewis Station, a small town north of us. She requested that I go to the home of Elder Charles Athey and ask him to come preach the funeral sermon for a little baby who had died that day. I told Brother Athey, but his wife said he couldn't go as he had been ill and wasn't able to do so. I said, "I think he should go," and then told them of the experience which occurred earlier in the day. Elder Athey officiated at the funeral, and I was told later that he delivered a very wonderful sermon. I have often thought it was the guardian angel of the child who knocked at our door that day.

God Is Still Working With His People

In 1929 our eldest son was seriously injured while stacking hay; he was rushed to a hospital, but within three days his condition became very serious and he was in great pain. We called Elders Higdon and Martin to administer to him; while they were administering, he fell asleep, his fever left, and in a few days he was dismissed from the hospital. Several years later this same son became very ill and suffered for five months. He called for the elders to administer to him, and each time the administration would bring him relief and comfort. We constantly prayed that he would be healed if it were God's will, but he died. While our prayers were not answered and our son was taken from us, we were not left alone. God's Spirit hovered over us, making our burden easier to bear. I believe it caused me to have a stronger faith, and brought me closer to my Heavenly Father. Days when the burden seemed more than I could endure, these comforting words would come to me: "Your burdens will not be more than you are able to bear, if you will only trust me." I remembered how Mary, the mother of Jesus, suffered as she stood by and saw her son nailed to the cross. She bore her burden without faltering. This gave me much strength and courage. I know there is a true Savior who is ready and waiting to guide and comfort us if we will open the door and let him in. If each of us put our trust in him at all times and live a life that is pleasing to him, he will not leave us alone when our burdens weigh heavily.

MY INSPIRATION

She knelt by me
In church today.
While he blessed the bread,
She knelt by me.
She looked at me
And smiled, it's true.
But—after all
She's only two.

News OF THE CHURCHES

Independence, Missouri

Stone Church

Pastor, Garland E. Tickemyer

Preparations for General Conference are occupying the attention of all church organizations in Independence. The Saints are eager to extend their customary hospitality to conference guests, even though postwar shortages present some difficulties.

Incidental to the musical features of the conference is the installation of the new organ in Stone Church. This will involve some changes in structure of the interior of the building; the congregation will be called upon to choose one of two alternatives relative to these changes on March 17.

Pastor G. E. Tickemyer has been ill the past week and was unable to occupy his usual place in the pulpit. Elder Leonard Lea, although suffering with a cold, delivered the two morning sermons on February 24.

The young people of Independence have arranged for a week's series of missionary meetings to be held at Stone Church from March 3 to 10. Committees have been appointed to attend to all details, and much enthusiasm is obvious. Z. Z. Renfroe, one of the seven presidents of the Quorum of Seventy, will be the speaker.

The Youth Choir made its first appearance at the 8:15 service on February 24, featuring Robert Sparks as soloist. Ammon Roberson is the director.

The nurses' capping service was observed at the evening hour. Twenty-nine student nurses received their caps, signifying the completion of the first six months of study. Chaplain R. V. Hopkins gave the invocation and benediction; Bishop W. N. Johnson presented the sermonette. Student nurse Emily Easter talked on the "Significance of Candlelighting," and Eula Allen, R.N., on the "Significance of the Nurse's Cap." Gertrude Copeland, superintendent of the Sanitarium, conducted the candlelighting ceremony, and Nelle Morgan, supervisor of nurses, presented the caps. The Cantanina Chorus, under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Westwood, sang two anthems from the rear balcony.

The women of Stone Church held their monthly meeting at Bartholomew Hall on February 21. The supervisor and leaders of division A were hostesses, dressed as Mount Vernon personalities. The program consisted of a vocal solo by Eloise Steele, accompanied by Mrs. Louise Lewis; two poems by Mrs. Israel Smith; and a talk on historical national shrines by Mrs. Leonard Lea. A display of old treasures brought by those present was viewed after the meeting.

Division 1-A of the women's department will sponsor meal service in the Women's Center, one block from the Auditorium, during conference. Three light meals will be prepared daily for conference visitors, and any others who wish such accommodation.

Liberty Street Church

Pastor, Howard C. Timm

Louise Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas G. Cullen, was blessed at the February 3 Communion service by her uncle, William LaGrece, and Cecil Walker. Mrs. Cullen was formerly Miss Gertrude LaGrece.

At the 11 o'clock hour, February 10, Paul Sargent and Ernest Stilwell were ordained priests by Pastor Timm and William LaGrece.

Gerald Wayne Edson, Larry Douglas, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Stephenson were baptized Sunday afternoon, February 10. Pastor Timm was in charge of the service. Ray Beem sang, "Ye Must Be Born Again," and "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked."

A very helpful and interesting sermon was delivered by J. Charles May Sunday evening, February 3. Brother May, who has recently returned from several years in the south Pacific, related his missionary experiences with the natives. Other speakers for the month were R. V. Hopkins, William LaGrece, Leonard Lea, Leon J. Look, Walter Johnson, and Pastor Howard Timm.

At the 11 o'clock hour on February 10 Joseph Frick showed a series of pictures entitled "Mexican Moods," "Vera Cruz," and "Town in Old Mexico." On the following Sunday A. E. Propst, assistant leader of the Englewood junior department, gave a unique explanation of how Saints may let their light shine. Several electric light bulbs, representing people, were used in illustration. This very interesting and impressive service will, no doubt, be well remembered by the boys and girls. Albert Douglas led an interesting discussion on "The Miracles of Today and Yesterday" at the February 24 service.

The junior stewards are learning to keep the financial law under the able leadership of Clyde Kearns. Their total contributions for the past year was $82.52. The following members paid their tithes and offerings regularly each month: Ruth Zion, Barbara Petre, Martha Fye, Mary Cooper, Ruth White, Ellen Graff, Alberta Douglas, and Kathryn Wrigley.

On February 1 the juniors sponsored a box supper, and on February 9 they enjoyed a valentine party.

Projects for raising money for the new building fund are under way; already the boys and girls have contributed a small sum.

On February 3 the League went in a body to the Methodist church to attend the city-wide national youth convention. A business meeting was held February 10. At the close of the business session, Bill Tignor read one of Evan Fry's talks, "Give All Diligence." Election of officers was held February 17. Eugene McConnell was elected president.

The Zion's League was in charge of the evening service February 24. Pastor Timm delivered a very helpful sermon; his subject was "God Our Hope and Salvation." A quartet composed of Carl and Mabel Holsworth, Juanita Tignor, and Frank Tuttle sang "Repentance."

Twenty-two members of the League enjoyed a covered dish luncheon at the home of Carl and Mabel Holsworth Tuesday evening, February 19. They also practiced in a play.

Englewood Congregation

Pastor, W. E. Wakeman

Pastor W. E. Wakeman was in charge of the January 6 Communion service, and gave the talk preceding the passing of the emblems. He was assisted by Kenneth Henry and Matthew Taylor. Soloist Esther Riepen sang

"Holy Spirit." Pastor Wakeman was also the speaker at the evening service, using "The Antiquity of the Kingdom" as his sermon theme.

The Zions League sponsored a skating party on Monday evening, January 7, at 7:30 p. m.

Bishop W. N. Johnson delivered the 11 o'clock sermon on January 13. Preceding Bishop Johnson's message, the choir sang "O For a Thousand Tongues." A. S. Propst gave an illustrated sermonette at the junior church service. Pastor Wakeman spoke in the evening on "Israel's New Covenant."

The January 16 prayer service was led by Elder Glen Closson.

The Leaguers enjoyed a Corinthian dinner on the evening of January 16, and a taffy pull the following Friday night.

Apostle M. A. McConley was the morning speaker on January 20. The women's choir provided special music for the service by singing the "Prayer Perfect." Mrs. Frank Prell and Mrs. George Gee, violinists, played "Berceuse" as a prelude at the evening service; "Adoration" was played as a solo before Pastor Wakeman's sermon on "The Working of Contending Powers."

January 20 was observed as inventory day. The prayer service on January 23 was led by Elder Roy Howery. The women's department held its meeting on January 24 at 1309 Ash Avenue.

R. E. Jones spoke at 11 o'clock on January 27, and Pastor W. E. Wakeman at the evening service.

Coldwater, Michigan

Pastor, Edgar Peer

Thirteen new books have been added to the church library in the past six months. It is hoped that eventually the library will contain all the books recommended in the Herald.

On September 30 Elder Forrest Meyers of Mishawaka was the guest speaker; he also took charge of the election of officers for the branch. Elder Earl Burt of Ft. Wayne occupied the pulpit on October 14; his topic was "Upon this rock I shall build my church." The same theme was presented again with lantern slides by Elder Meyers on the evening of October 26.

During November Elder Sam Nichols of Ft. Wayne and Elder E. R. Carter of Lansing were guest speakers.

A group of Saints motored to Sturgis for a farewell party given for the Harpleys who are moving to Akron, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Waltz have also left the branch; Mr. Waltz, a veteran, is now attending dental college in Detroit.

Mrs. Judson Corless was hostess to the women's department at a Christmas party. She presented a lovely program, followed by refreshments and an exchange of gifts. Mrs. Corless was also hostess at a Christmas party given for the Zion's League.

A play, Christmas at the Orphanage, was presented at the annual church Christmas program. Much credit is due Helen Smith and Margaret Johnson for their work on the program, and members of the junior choir for the beautiful carols they sang under the direction of Doris Reppert.

The women's department held a supper and bazaar which proved very successful. A total of $270 was cleared. Articles left from the bazaar have been sent to Independence where they will be on sale during General Conference. Several members from Coldwater are planning to attend conference.

Elder Forrest Meyers was again the speaker on February 10, and took charge of a special business meeting held for the election of a new pastor. Elder Wayne Johnson resigned because of poor health, and Elder Edgar Peer was elected as his successor.

On February 17 Elder Coonfare, bishop's agent, was present to handle the resignation sent in by Martha Fish, solicitor, secretary, and treasurer, who has served the church for many years. A note of thanks was extended Sister Fish for her service, and Helen Smith was elected to take her place.

Those recently discharged from service are Lt. Wayne Wickes, Sgt. Robert Peer, Pfc. Ronald Peer, Pvt. Harold Fiske, and Alverto Paddock. Jesse J. Dexter, SM 3/C, is now home on furlough.

The infant daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John Ostrom and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Paradine were blessed at recent services.

—Mrs. Howard Sager, reporter.

Sabetha, Kansas

Pastor, E. L. White

Priest Marvin White and Deacon Arthur Clark were the speakers at the evening services on January 6 and 20.

Mrs. Andrew Mincher was in charge of the financial law program sponsored by the adult department on January 27. On Monday evening, January 28, Pastor E. L. White, Arthur Clark, and Marvin White attended the priesthood conference held in St. Joseph. A combined council meeting and prayer service was held on Thursday evening.

Marvin White spoke February 3 at the 8 o'clock service; Arthur Clark delivered the evening message on February 17. At the morning service the Zion's League presented a program; Marvin White was in charge—his last time before entering the Navy. Beulah Mincher was elected as the new president. The regular League meeting was re-scheduled for the second, rather than the third Sunday of each month.

U. C. Welch of the Navy visited several times in January. Pfc. Howard Brunner should have arrived in Germany by now.

—Mrs. Arthur Clark, reporter.

Boston Massachusetts

Pastor, Reed M. Holmes

Missionary Warren H. Chelline was the guest speaker on Sunday morning, December 30; he was assisted in the service by his father, Elder Herman A. Chelline of Providence, Rhode Island. "Our Attitudes as We Seek God's Direction" was the theme of Brother Chelline's sermon. During the service a brief talk concerning tithing was given by Bishop's Agent Myron C. Fisher, Jr. "The Lord Is My Shepherd" was sung by Ruth B. York and Ruth Alice Briggs. In the evening Pastor Reed M. Holmes spoke on the subject, "Young Man, Give an Account of Yourself."

On New Year's Eve the study group and young people attended the Ice Capades in Boston; later they gathered at various homes of the Saints in Lexington.

The theme for the month of January has been "We Are Stewards." The first Communion service of the new year was in charge of Pastor Holmes, assisted by Leon A. Jordan and John W. Foster. The pastoral address was on stewardship. Ruth Alice Briggs sang

"The Hour of Prayer." Preceding the evening address given by Myron C. Fisher, Jr., the choir sang "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life."

Sanford L. Fisher spoke Sunday morning, January 13, on "Our Personal Stewardship." He was assisted in the service by George Armeson. "Appear Thou Light Divine" was rendered by the choir. In the evening Pastor Holmes preached on "The Gathering and the Storehouse."

Boston branch was host to the district youth at a convention held January 18, 19, and 20.

On Sunday morning, January 27, Elder John W. Foster gave the message. Special music was furnished by Ruth Alice Briggs who sang "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." A service of consecration was held in the evening. Pastor Holmes sang a solo, "Blessed Are the Meek," and a quartette consisting of Marjorie Billings, Ruth Alice Briggs, John Foster, and Albert Fisher sang "From Thee all Skill." The address, "Laborers Together With God," was given by Reed M. Holmes. The climax of the service was the consecration of offerings; each family brought its financial statements, tithes, and offerings to the altar. A prayer of blessing was given by Myron C. Fisher, Jr., and a prayer response by the congregation, "We Give Thee But Thine Own," followed by a choral benediction by the quartette.

The Monday Club met at the home of Kay Fisher in Lexington, Monday afternoon, January 28; a talk on interior decorating was given by the hostess. The study group met at the Sanford Fisher home in Lexington on Friday evening, February 1; Rebecca K. Carter, Eugene Carter, Urban Black, and Albert Fisher discussed "Labor Views."

Members of the women's department and their families met at the church on Friday evening, January 25. The theme of the evening centered around tithing. The children brought their banks, and Kathryn Armeson explained why they should tithe their money and set it aside for the church. George Armeson also spoke to them on the same subject and told them about the uses of tithing. Hostesses for the evening were Lillian Carter, Bertha Rumery, Ina Beverage, Dorothy Fisher, and Ruth Alice Briggs.

Rio Grande Valley, Texas

The Rio Grande Valley Zion's League is working on several short plays based on Bible stories; they plan to present them to the congregation from time to time. League officers who attended the conference held at Dallas, Texas, were Darrel Wilson, Betty Jackel, and Mary Jo Wilder.

Burdette Root of Houston was the speaker on February 10. "Christian Personality" was the subject of his sermon.

The branch is happy to have the J. A. Otis family back again. Mr. and Mrs. Otis lived in the Houston-Beaumont area during the war.

Ten people from the Valley attended the district conference held in Dallas on February 15, 16, and 17. The round trip distance from the Valley to Dallas exceeds 1,000 miles. Those attending felt well repaid for the lengthy trip because of the fine instruction they received. The two delegates elected to attend General Conference are Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wilder.

Invitations are out for a dinner to be given on Washington's birthday, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Yearington of Des Moines, and Mr. and Mrs. Mike Otis and children. It will be held at the community building in Alamo.

—Mary Jo Wilder, reporter.

Enid, Oklahoma

Pastor, Irah H. Parker

The Saints are happy to have many servicemen returning to the Enid congregation. The Maurice Johnson family of Battle Creek, Michigan, is also a welcome addition. Brother Johnson, who is ill, has not been able to attend services regularly, but it is hoped his health will soon be improved.

On October 21 the group was officially organized into a branch. Apostle Charles R. Hield was in charge of the service, assisted by District President E. F. Yerrington of Oklahoma City, J. Arthur Dixon, former pastor of Enid who now lives at Tulsa, and Pastor Irah H. Parker. The prayer service was conducted by Brother Dixon and Lawrence Webb of El Reno. A history of the group was read at the beginning of the organization meeting. Brother Parker was elected pastor; Velma Groves, secretary-treasurer; Muriel Maunce, women's leader; Ralph Groves, church school superintendent; Zelma Lungwitz, director of music; and Walter Saunier, Zion's League leader. At the close of the meeting, dinner was served in the dining room. At 2:30 in the afternoon, Brother Yerrington gave a talk on the financial law. Apostle Hield lectured on ancient America and showed Kodochrome slides at the evening service. The church and parsonage debt was paid in full in October. The women's department is now redecorating the church.

A Christmas party was given in the recreation room with Valeria Parker and Lorene Saunier in charge. Gifts were exchanged, and a program was presented. Refreshments were served around a festively decorated table.

D. C. Feely gave the Christmas sermon on the evening of December 23. Treats were given to all present at the close of the service.

Brother Irbby Mundy was a welcome visitor recently.

—Mrs. W. J. Saunier, reporter.

Toronto, Ontario

Pastor, John F. Sheehy

The month of January was an important one for the Toronto branch. Not only did it usher in the new year, but it was also the anniversary month of the building of the present church home. As usual, the celebration of this event was enjoyed by a large congregation of members and friends. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was guest speaker at the Monday evening banquet. Several people remarked that his talk made them feel they must be "up and doing."

Pastor John F. Sheehy was the speaker at both the morning and evening services on Sunday.

The branch accomplished many things and made several changes in 1945. Chief among these accomplishments was the paying of the mortgage on the church building.

Elder Harry Simons' two years of ministry was completed last year. The Toronto Saints were sorry to have the Simons leave, but wish them every success in the new appointment. With their departure, Elder John F. Sheehy took his place as pastor; it is felt that much can be accomplished under his capable leadership. Sister Sheehy too has found a place in the hearts of the Saints.

At the evening service on December 16, "The Christmas Story," written and directed by Pat Lockyer, was portrayed in tableaux, readings, and music; it was an inspiration to all who heard and saw it. On December 23, in a beautiful candlelight setting, a Christmas cantata, The Holy Child, was presented by the choir under the direction of Vera Clark; Margaret Prentice Packer was the accompanist.

A large group of London young people was entertained by the Toronto young people on the week end of February 9, 10; the venture proved a great success.

As the majority of servicemen have now returned, the Men's Club is planning a victory and thanksgiving banquet for Monday, February 25. "The boys," their wives, and sweet-hearts will be guests of honor.

Toronto has many talented young people and is looking forward to the accomplishment of much which the past six years of war made impossible.

Having burned the mortgage on the present building, the Toronto Saints have set a new goal. They plan to raise $30,000 within the next two years to complete the church home. This will finance the building of a main auditorium for worship services, so that the present lower auditorium may be used for church school and recreational activities.

—Elsie Preston Castle, reporter.

Goodland, Kansas

Pastor, J. R. Graybill

This branch was visited by District President Arthur E. Stoft the latter part of the year; his preaching and visiting in the homes were greatly appreciated.

Several representatives from Goodland attended the district conference at Denver, Colorado, January 26 and 27. Those chosen as delegates, and several others, are hoping to make arrangements soon to attend General Conference.

The Saints received an admonition last year to keep the church and its edifice more holy. One of the goals of the branch is to make all the church activities more worshipful.

Three were baptized in the church font February 3; they were Lowell, Fern, and Shirley Cowan. It is hoped that others who are assisting in the work will soon become members.

The Zion's League meets Sunday evenings for worship and study. O'ella Marolf is president and Jared Graybill is vice-president.

A special effort is being made to raise money for the church, both general and local, through tithes and offerings. So far this year there has been thirty inventories filed. Efforts are being made to interest others in this phase of the gospel work.

Recreational activities are being individually or home sponsored, leaving the branch and departmental leaders to do more specified spiritual work.

Two members of the congregation are still in the service of their country; the group is looking forward to the time when their duties there are completed so they can return.

Pauline Roberts is women's leader. Year-books have been made, arranging for two meetings each month of the year.

Another goal of the priesthood is more visiting of the membership. Priests Kenneth Ingram and Byron Graybill have just completed their first visit to the homes of the Saints this year.

Irvin Eugene Cowan, small son of Lowell and Fern Cowan, was blessed by Elder J. R. Graybill.

—Mrs. Kenneth Ingram, reporter.

The Saints in Enfield, England, contributed over five pounds to the Graceland fund, and sixty-five pounds as Christmas offering. The Oriole group alone raised over 1,000 pounds for war stamps in two and a half years.

★ Gold Star Column

Sgt. Roland Bergman

Sgt. Roland D. Bergman of the 15th Air Force has been officially declared dead by the war department. He had been listed as missing in action since December 18, 1944, when his plane failed to return from a mission over Germany.

Sergeant Bergman was born near Andover, Missouri, on August 17, 1920. At the age of twelve, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. He worked diligently in his home branch until entering the service in July, 1942.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Bergman of Andover, Missouri; a sister, Laurita Bergman, a teacher in the junior high school at Lamoni, Iowa; a brother, John Bergman, with the occupation forces in Cheju-Do, Korea; and an aged grandfather, August Johnson, of Andover.

Howard Wildermuth AMM 3/c

Howard "Buddy" Wildermuth, twenty-three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Wildermuth of Cleveland, Ohio, died aboard his ship, the "USS Franklin D. Roosevelt" in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, on February 23, as a result of injuries sustained when he was hit by a broken barrier wire. The telegram giving the account of his death was received by his wife, Ruth Hansen Wildermuth, of Aurora, Illinois.

Born at Plano on March 12, 1922, Howard moved to Aurora with his parents in 1936. He was graduated in 1940 from West High School where he was active in tennis, football, and the choir. He had just finished his apprenticeship as a tool- and diemaker at the plant of Lyon Metal, Inc., when he enlisted in the naval reserve on June 19, 1944. He took his boot training at Great Lakes, and then attended school at Norman, Oklahoma; Boston, Massachusetts; and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He served aboard the "USS Charger," the "USS Boxer," and was finally assigned to the "USS Franklin D. Roosevelt." He had enough points for discharge on February 19, had he not been at sea.

In addition to his wife and parents he is survived by his two daughters, Kathie Anne and Janice Kay; one brother, Erle, of Columbus, Ohio; and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Wildermuth, of Plano, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cortwright of Aurora.

Sgt. Chester Ralston

Sgt. Chester Martin Ralston was born March 11, 1919, at Wiley, Colorado, the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Ralston, now of LaJunta, Colorado. He was killed in action at Geilenkirchen, Germany, on November 19, 1944. His body was recovered and buried in a United States military cemetery at Margraten, Holland. The chaplain stated that a religious funeral service was conducted according to Sergeant Ralston's belief, and that he was honored with an appropriate memorial service on Memorial Day, 1945, by the members of his company.

Chester Ralston was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church on April 10, 1927, and at the time of his enlistment was a member of the Long Beach branch. Prior to his army career, he was manager of the North Long Beach Dollar Market.

Sergeant Ralston's commanding officer said that his death was a great loss to his company and his country, that he was a true friend and a model soldier, a pleasant young man who always discharged his military duties cheerfully and well.

Besides his parents, he is survived by his wife, Margaret Leiphardt Ralston, of Long Beach; three brothers: Manfred, seaman first class, of Martinez, California; Denzil of Riverside; and Hugh, yeoman second class, of Shoemaker; and one sister, Rogene, of Vroman, Colorado.

BULLETIN BOARD

West Virginia District Conference

The West Virginia district conference was held at Wellsburg, West Virginia, on February 23 and 24. Saturday evening's session opened with a musical concert which was in charge of the district music director. The theme of this concert was "Memory Lane," and included many of the old favorites; piano and vocal solos, duets, and a mixed chorus contributed to the success of the program.

A priesthood meeting was held on Sunday morning at 8:30 with Apostle G. G. Lewis in charge. Elders S. M. Zonker, R. Rodgers, S. Martin, Apostle Lewis, and Brother Holloway were in charge of the prayer and testimony meeting which followed. Apostle Lewis was the 11 o'clock speaker; the Wellsburg choir sang "Hear Our Prayer."

The women's department served lunch in the lower auditorium.

A district officer's meeting was held at 2:30 p. m. with District President R. E. Rodgers in charge. Apostle Lewis presided over the round-table discussion on "Stewardship and Zion," after which the election of delegates to General Conference was held.

Brother Holloway delivered the closing sermon of the conference. Music for the service was furnished by the Wellsburg choir, with Doris Ritz as soloist.

Kentucky-Tennessee District Conference

The Kentucky-Tennessee district conference was held at Paris, Tennessee, on February 23 and 24. On Friday evening, February 22, the women's department sponsored the usual monthly birthday dinner and family social at the church. Apostle M. A. McConley and Elder Allen Brekenridge were welcome guests; both participated in the program. Myrtle Sutton acted as mistress of ceremonies.

Saturday's activities began with a prayer service at 10 a. m., followed by a sermon by Elder Brekenridge at 11 o'clock. At 2:30 in the afternoon a business meeting was held with Apostle McConley in charge. Delegates to General Conference were elected. Brother McConley was the speaker at the evening service also.

The Sunday morning prayer service was held at 9:30; Apostle McConley gave the address at the 11 o'clock hour. At 1:30 he called all members of the priesthood together for a special meeting. Elder Brekenridge delivered the afternoon sermon. Apostle McConley gave an illustrated lecture on the Hawaiian Islands in the evening, after which conference was adjourned.

Elder Merle Howard, pastor of the Midland, Michigan, branch, will be guest speaker. The convention will begin at 3 p. m. on Saturday. A 9 o'clock prayer service will be the first of the Sunday activities.

erie Beach Reunion

Upon vote of the London district conference, the Chatham and London districts have amalgamated their efforts toward the furtherance of the Erie Beach reunion which heretofore has been sponsored by Chatham district alone. The first reunion committee meeting was held on February 21, at which time reunion dates were set for August 2-12.

Request for Prayers

Stella Newman, Dunlap, Iowa, requests the prayers of Herald readers that she might be spared an operation which she must have if not healed through divine assistance.

Prayers are requested for Elder George W. Stephens who has been bedfast for the past three years as the result of a stroke. He is at the home of his daughter, Mrs. P. H. Asbury, in New Lebanon, Ohio.

WEDDINGS

Stephens-Walker

Betty Louise Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil B. Walker, and Warner Stephens, Jr., were married at the Liberty Street church in Independence, Missouri, on Friday evening, February 22. The service was read by Elder Wynne Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Stephens are making their home in Independence.

DeBarthe-Thomas

Alice Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Thomas of Lamoni, Iowa, and William DeBarthe, MM 2/C, stationed at Bremerton, Washington, were united in marriage on February 13 at Bothel, Washington. Elder Eugene Davis performed the ceremony. The young couple are making their home in Renton.

Owens-Byfield

Phyllis Elaine Byfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orian Byfield of Nowata, Oklahoma, and Earl Edward Owens of Mountain Park, Oklahoma, were married on Saturday evening, February 9, at the Nowata Methodist church. Elder Lee Quick of Mapleton, Kansas, officiated. Following the ceremony a reception was held in the dining room of the church. The couple is at home on their farm at Mountain Park.

Anderson-Burch

Helen Burch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Burch of Beardstown, Illinois, was united in marriage to Sgt. Andy Anderson of Arenzville, Illinois, in the home of Pastor F. F. Thomas in Beardstown, Elder Thomas officiating. The Andersons will make their home at Lake Charles, Louisiana, where Sergeant Anderson is now stationed.

Peters-Thomas

Rozella Thomas, granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Bendergraft of Beardstown, Illinois, and Lyle Peters, son of Mrs. Lavera Peters of Decatur, Illinois, were united in marriage at 2 o'clock at the Beardstown church on Sunday, February 10. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Elder F. F. Thomas. The young couple will make their home in Chicago, Illinois, where the groom is attending school. Mr. Peters received his discharge from the armed forces, after two years overseas service.

Maslowski-Willey

The marriage of Ruth Willey and Stanley Maslowski was solemnized at the Reorganized Church in Rock Island, Illinois, on February 3. Elder Charles Shippy officiated at the double-ring ceremony. A reception was held in the evening at the bride's home.

Clark-Taylor

Jeanne Taylor and Kenneth Clark were united in marriage at the church in Rock Island, Illinois, on Sunday evening, February 10. Victor Witte performed the ceremony.

Jordan-Harris

Lillian Alice Harris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Harris of St. Thomas, Ontario, and Jack William Jordan, son of Mr. John Jordan of St. Thomas, were united in marriage in London, Ontario, on December 2. They are making their home in St. Thomas.

Births

A daughter, Joy Kaye, was born to Pastor and Mrs. Ed Colvin on February 1 at the Webber Hospital in Olney, Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. Bonnie Barry announce the birth of a son, Bruce, born December 26, at Coldwater, Michigan. The father, recently returned after several months' service in the Pacific, has just received his discharge.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul L. Norris of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, announce the birth of a daughter, Paula Ann, born February 25.

A daughter, Bonnie Mae, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Mossman on November 8, at Coldwater, Michigan. The father, a first-class petty officer in the Navy, is overseas.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Black of Somerville, Massachusetts, who announced the birth of their daughter in the January 26 Herald, have changed the name from Arline Bernadette to Sharon Bernadette.

Our Departed Ones

BUSHDIECKER.—Charles Henry, was born January 1, 1891, and passed away February 23 at St. Charles, Missouri. In 1911 he was united in marriage to Malissie Coose; ten children were born to this union. On November 3, 1912, he became a member of the Reorganized Church.

He is survived by his wife; six daughters: Mrs. Margaret Ham, Mrs. Genevieve Maloney, Mrs. Ann Wehmeier, Mrs. Helen Ray, and Juanita of St. Charles, and Mrs. Esther Barnes of Miami, Florida; four sons: Bernard and Eugene of St. Charles; James of the Maritime service; and Robert of the Navy; his mother, Mrs. Mary Bushdiecker; four brothers: Job, Irvin, Elmer, and Fred; one sister, Mrs. Mabel Ostmann; and eleven grandchildren, all of St. Charles.

Services were held at the Dallmeyer Funeral Home in St. Charles, Elder F. F. O'Bryan officiating. Burial was in Oak Grove Cemetery.

HARE.—Bert Eugene, was born November 20, 1875, at East Delavan, Wisconsin, and died February 18 at the sanitarium in Webb City, Missouri. Most of his life was spent in Holden, Missouri. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in March, 1900; this faith gave him a philosophy that sustained him to the end. In 1904 he was united in marriage to Druna Cook who preceded him in death.

He is survived by four daughters: Lorene Lukeheart, Gallatin, Missouri; Alberta Wheelton, Toledo, Ohio; Marguerite Wilkenson, Kansas City, Missouri; and Frances Bixby, Lamoni, Iowa; two sons: Lloyd J. Maumee, Ohio; and James E., of Kansas City, Missouri; a stepson, Harry Stevens, Detroit, Michigan; one brother, F. J. Hare, Grain Valley, Missouri; twenty-three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. He spent the last few years of his life with his son, James, in Kansas City. Services were held at the Dixon L. Kepley Funeral Home in Independence, Missouri, with Elder G. R. Wells officiating. Interment was at Holden.

MUERMANN.—Loretta H., was born October 19, 1862, at La Farge, Wisconsin, and died February 14 at her home in Chetek, Wisconsin. On September 19, 1880, she was united in marriage to Fred Muermann at Valley Junction; to this union five children were born. In early womanhood she became a member of the Reorganized Church, and remained faithful to its teachings throughout her life. She was afflicted with asthma for a number of years, her last illness covering a period of three weeks when the suffering was intense, yet she bore her affliction with patience and Christian fortitude.

She is survived by her children: Bertha, Louise, John, and Carl of Chetek, and Leda of Madison, Wisconsin; eighteen grandchildren; fifteen great-grandchildren; four sisters; and two brothers. She was preceded in death by her husband who passed away eighteen years ago. Funeral services were held at the church in Chetek with Elder F. T. Mussel officiating. Burial was at Lakeview Cemetery.

My Prayer

*LORD, let me live this lovely day
As you would have me. Now I pray
To speak the words along the way
You want me to.
Let me each talent gladly share
With those who stumble in despair;
Let me stop often everywhere
And talk with you.
Lord, let me make this world more bright;
Let me be like a glowing light,
Steady and shining through the night,
My whole life through.*

Concerning President Frederick M. Smith

We regret to announce that President Frederick M. Smith is confined to the Sanitarium because of a condition set forth in the physician's statement immediately following. Everything possible is being done for him and undoubtedly the Saints will uphold him in their prayers.

This statement is being made because of the natural concern of the membership of the church and in a desire to keep them properly informed.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, By Israel A. Smith.

Physician's Statement

President Frederick M. Smith has been critically ill since Wednesday, March 6, 1946. He was stricken at his home early that morning by acute circulatory failure and taken to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital for fullest attention and care. At the present time he is suffering relatively little pain, but the gravity of the affliction compels much apprehension as to the ultimate prognosis.

Hymn Writing Contest

Due to several inquiries and manuscripts from foreign countries, and to permit time for these manuscripts to be made eligible to enter the contest, the closing time of the Hymn Writing Contest has been extended to September 1, 1946.

Rules for the contest were published in the "Herald," January 19, 1946, page 8.

The idea seems prevalent that it is not necessary these hymn poems be accompanied by original music. Please read the rules carefully—and to avoid disappointment—comply fully with them. Notice especially the paragraphs stating, "Entries, original words and music, 'complete,' etc," and "Contestants are to use a nom-de-plume in signing their manuscripts; also to send real name, together with their nom-de-plume in separate envelope."

Recently some very good hymns, complete, have been received, with no name nor non-de-plume.

The Church School

Easter and Palm Sunday Church School Lessons

Because Easter varies from March 21 to April 21 in the time of its occurrence, it is difficult to place the lessons in our church school quarterlies so that they will be conveniently arranged to be used on Easter Sunday and on the Sunday preceding Easter. We are suggesting that this year you observe the following order:

Kindergarten Course A.—Lessons 1, 2 and 3 may be taught in the order shown this year on April 7, 14, and 21 respectively.

Primary Course A.—Teach Lesson 3 on April 7, Lesson 1 on April 14, and Lesson 2 on April 21.

Primary Course B.—Q-223-D. Teach Lessons 3, 1, and 2 on April 7, 14, and 21 respectively.

Primary Course C.—Q-233-D. Teach Lessons 2, 3, and 1 on April 7, 14, and 21 respectively.

Junior Quarterly, Course B.—Q-323-D. Teach Lessons 3, 1, and 2 on April 7, 14, and 21 respectively.

Junior Course C.—Q-333-D. Teach Lessons 2, 3, and 1 on April 7, 14, and 21 respectively.

Senior Course C.—Q-533-D. Teach Lessons 2, 3, and 1 on April 7, 14, and 21 respectively.

There are no Easter lessons in the Junior High School courses.

Chris B. Hartshorn, Editor of Church School Literature.

Conference Guide Service

Visitors to General Conference:

For the benefit of those visitors who are not familiar with Independence, we are pleased to announce that the Fellowship Class of Independence, under the leadership of Brother Paul Kelsey, has arranged to furnish guide service to your quarters. Representatives of this group will be on hand with cars April 5, 6, and 7, at the Auditorium to assist visitors, both in finding their abode and in transporting them there. So if you are in doubt about how to get around Independence, go directly to the Auditorium upon arrival.

The New Age of Power

THERE IS A VERSE in the first chapter of the gospel of St. John that indicates almost unlimited capacities and possibilities for the human race. It says, "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

The mind dwells upon these words: "to them gave he power." Certainly it is true that in the last hundred years or so, power has been given to, or discovered by men. Today our power seems too great for our limited intelligence, our immature morality, our imperfect wisdom. Wrongly used, it could easily destroy us. But the power meant in our scripture reading is one that will bring us great good, conditional upon obedience to a certain regulation of our lives.

In these times, when tragic disappointments and disillusionments in our world situation are coming to us, it is well for us to keep a firm hold on that great declaration. It is a promise and a foundation of hope.

THIS IS AN AGE of power. Even before last August, it was an age of tremendous mechanical and physical power: great military power, great destructive power of artillery, explosives, and airplanes. And then came the atomic bomb, revealing a whole new universe of power, too great for us to comprehend, too terrible for us to control. More than ever, it also includes the danger of self-destruction.

What intellectual and spiritual resources had we to match the tremendous new energies we had unlocked? Within ourselves alone, we could find nothing adequate to the need. We are afraid.

But there in the Scriptures is the promise that, among the many powers we have received, some of which may spell our doom, there is one that makes possible our salvation. It is the promise that there is a power by which we can become "the sons of God." If we could understand the implications and the significance of that great promise, we would be lifted in an hour from the depths of an impenetrable despair to the peaks of a glorious new hope.

Jesus once said to the father of an afflicted son, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."—Mark 9:23. Yes, all things are possible to those who have great faith. The miracle of American production made possible the winning of the war because some strong men believed that it could be done. History is full of miracles founded upon human faith and divine love. "All things are possible" to those who believe and are willing to work incessantly, undiscouraged, and unfaltering, to accomplish the purpose and reach the goal.

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE around the world are longing for peace—permanent peace—peace with justice, honor, and equity for all. And yet, we are in the midst of rumors of war. Is it any wonder that people become discouraged?

In this new age of power, people dread another war more than any other calamity. We know that if it comes it will be more terrible than any other war that has ever afflicted the world. All our force and strength are marshalled against it, yet we seem helpless to prevent its approach.

Are you willing to enter a Third World War? Do you want it? Probably not. Yet a nationally-known magazine has conducted a poll of representative Americans, in which four out of five say they think we shall have to go to war with Russia. Realize what that means—war with a government whose people outnumber us by about fifty million, a state that has tremendous resources, and that is just beginning a great era of industrial development, a state that developed incredible military strength out of weakness on one of the hardest fields of battle in the world. Do you agree that we must fight Russia? Do you like the prospect?

The above article was prepared as an address delivered on Radio KM-BC, Sunday evening, March 3, at 10 p. m.

One of the great paradoxes of Christianity is the fact that Christians have cultivated an abhorrence of war, and yet we have resorted to it as frequently, and with as sanguinary consequences, as any other people of the world. In theory, Christians are lovers of peace; in practice, they go to war. We have just finished a terrible conflict, during which we lost about a million young Americans, and went so deeply into debt that we may not be able to recover our financial freedom for generations to come; this, in addition to all that other nations lost. Yet here we are, with our dead still hardly counted, the costs still not calculated, our wounded still needing hospitalization—here we are, considering another war. Is this the best we can do with our power?

ONE OF THE weaknesses of our Christian people is that we cannot make up our minds about war. We have no adequate philosophy of the employment of power; we are idealistic, and believe in the use of persuasion in the reconciliation of human differences. We are not realistic enough to see that in the present state of human development force is sometimes necessary. We do not put war in its proper place. In time of peace, we are against war and everything connected with it. But when war comes, we swing around and support it. We cannot be either right or wrong both times. We need a philosophy of the employment of power.

The mistake of militarism is to employ power for wrong and evil purposes. At the other extreme, the mistake of pacifism is to abandon the use of power altogether. The pressing need for this age and for the future is something different from both of them. That need is for the use of power under conditions of righteousness and responsibility. The Christian conscience must see that our great nation keeps its power, but exercises it in justice, wisdom, mercy, and equity.

This is an age of power, a world organized on the basis of power. Power in itself is neither good nor bad. The unrighteous use of power is bad; the righteous use of power is good. Somebody must exercise power in the world. Why should America leave it to the dictators?

It is wrong, of course, to employ power in aggressive warfare. But we must have power for defensive war, when needed. We cannot prevent the rising of evil forces in the world, and we must defend ourselves against them. We must help defend the world against them. Nobody likes war, or wants it, except those who think they have something to gain from it. There are sometimes those governments in the world, dominated by mad, unscrupulous leaders, lusting for blood and glory, who are willing to pay the price of war and destruction in order to gain their ends. In spite of UNO, we see them rising now. Nothing but the use of force will stop them; and when they choose war, their victims must accept it, or conditions of slavery and ruin as the only alternative. This is the bald fact that pacifism never accepts or recognizes. And the protection that pacifism offers is conference, negotiation, treaties, prayers, hopes—mere helplessness and inoffensiveness in the face of the foe. It would be the same thing as if, for civil protection, we should abolish our courts and police forces, and install chaplains in their places. Chaplains do a wonderful work in the world, but they could not keep down crimes of violence against persons or property.

Certainly we should do nothing to hinder or discourage any direct or frontal attack on war; we should welcome every wise effort to prevent it. At the same time we should realize that war is an effect of many preceding conditions and forces at work in the world. And it is toward these causes that attention should be directed, serious studies conducted, and efforts made to eliminate them as factors in international relationships. We need to learn the wise and intelligent use of power, not to throw away our power. What this nation needs is not less armament, but greater righteousness.

It is not necessary that our great power be exercised in a hostile way. We can be friendly to the great nations, and no small people needs to fear either our intentions or our acts. The long experience of history has taught us that justice is safe, and safe only, to the extent that it is backed by a strong and responsible power.

This is an age of power. We cannot escape it, and we cannot evade our responsibility unless we wish to throw opportunity into the hands of another set of dictators as we did into the hands of Hitler and Mussolini between the two World Wars.

This is an age of power. The world has had long experience with power that was exercised by ignorant, rapacious, unprincipled leaders. Some good people have concluded therefrom that power itself is evil and to be avoided. It is an erroneous thought.

What the world needs now is a demonstration of the righteous use of power—the use of power to protect the conditions in which we may build a Christian civilization.

"To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even them that believe on his name."

Man feels himself an infinity above those creatures who stand, zoologically, only one step below him, but every human being looks up to the birds. They suit the fancy of us all. What they feel they can voice, as we try to; they court and nest, they battle with the elements, they are torn by two opposing impulses, a love of home and a passion for far places. Only with birds do we share so much emotion.—Donald Culross Peattie, Singing in the Wilderness.

Why Geography?

By Donald A. Rightmyer

FIFTY YEARS AGO our United States was considerably different from the nation which exists today. It had less of everything, including people, industry, and knowledge. The same was true fifty years before that, and so it is in any other continent or nation where people have existed since the beginning of time. We may attribute these differences to environment which is defined by Webster as "the aggregate of all external influences affecting the life and development of an organism, human behavior, society, religion, etc." This aggregation, for our purpose, includes climate, natural resources, and flora and fauna.

In an over-all view of both present and past societies, climatic conditions are one of the influences usually recognized first as affecting physically and socially the different peoples. Weather and temperature vary from area to area with respect to altitude, latitude, and longitude, as may be seen in Middle and South America where there are what is known as the three climates. These are: (1) Tierra Caliente, the hot region; (2) Tierra Templado, the temperate region; and (3) Tierra Fria, the cold region. One peculiarity about these three climates in Latin America is that they are found in mountainous regions, one on top of the other. That is, at sea level you are in the hottest region, and as the altitude increases, the heat decreases until you approach the cold region of the highlands. For example, high in the Andean Mountains of Ecuador the weather is as cold as it is anywhere else in the world, even though the equator passes through this region. These climates are also associated with other factors which cause flora and fauna to differ. The tropical regions of Central America are influenced to some extent by the Gulf of Mexico and their location between the Tropic of Cancer and the equator. The vegetation here is tremendous, forming a strong contrast to the southwestern United States where there is very little vegetation. The temperate zone may be found in North America and in the southern part of South America.

Seasons constitute an interesting variant. They are not the same in North America as they are in South America. In some places such as Mexico City there are two summers and two winters, or one hot period, a cold period, another hot period, and a final cold period. For these reasons Latin America has seen many cultural differences since its occupation due partially to its equatorial position, its tropical surroundings and to the great mountains rising up in the midst of these surroundings.

Our next observation deals with the influence of natural resources on different cultures. Considering the resources found in our own environment, coal, iron, copper, timber, and waterpower are a few occupying important places. Similarly, in ancient periods of time people adjusted their cultures to the resources that were most required by their needs, or the "first necessities" of life.

Of these needs, food resources were always considered among the "first necessities" in order that man might satisfy his hunger. The methods of providing food have been classified in several groups. One is a hunting and fishing combination, and another is an agricultural complex which was developed in comparatively recent times. Primitive man probably learned to hunt and fish while his wife was a gatherer of berries and nuts. It was she who became acquainted with the botanical structure of plant life and who in turn cultivated wild plants which led finally to the development of agriculture. More will be said about this subject later in the discussion.

Another "first necessity" was man's shelter. Generally speaking, man built his home from materials found near at hand. In the drier, more temperate, regions of the Andean Mountains and the coastal range from Mexico to Chile, mud or adobe and stone materials were most commonly used for building. In the Amazon Basin, in the Central American tropics, and in parts of North America, the home structures were little more than frames covered with thatch. On the northwest coast, houses were made of bark, and in the extreme north and south portions of the respective continents, these structures were covered with skins. Many places still use the same materials and build the same type of structures their ancestors built.¹

The final "first necessity" that we shall discuss here is clothing. A lot has been written about the dress of primitive peoples and about their costumes, ornamentation, and jewelry. Keeping within the limits of natural resources, however, there are four generally recognized materials from which clothing is made. These are bast, cotton, wool, and silk. Tendon or sinew is not recognized as a textile, but it can hardly be omitted since the Eskimo, for one, finds it very useful for clothing. Of the first four, bast fiber is found more extensively throughout the world, because it is found wherever there is vegetation. Where cotton is cultivated and wool-bearing animals are domesticated, we find a simultaneous use of cotton and wool textiles. Silk, important though it is to modern women, is not found anywhere among the aboriginal Americans.²

¹Clark Wissler, The American Indian, chapter VI.

In order that any society may subsist, it must be located where resources for food, shelter, and clothing are present. Vegetation is obviously found growing close to rivers and streams which also provide a means of transportation. It is therefore easy to see why homes and villages of primitive peoples were usually never found very far from streams and rivers.

We shall return now to the economic setup of primitive people and the relationship it had to culture. Archeological finds show that early man was primarily a hunter before he was anything else. His time was consumed during the day in hunting and eating, and he retired early at night. There wasn't much time left to devote to inventions or other people, and for this reason he never had much of a chance to become civilized. He didn't have a home, and he slept wherever he was when darkness came. Later he learned that when it rained and snowed he could make use of caves, and he found that they also afforded comfort and protection from wandering wild animals at night. As time passed, early man, while traveling from place to place, decided to try his luck at fishing. He invented and learned to use several fishing devices, such as the spear, harpoon, net, and the bow and arrow. On the other hand, hunting and fishing were occupations that early woman usually didn't have anything to do with. She took care of the children, cooked, and did all the other family jobs that needed attending to. She picked berries and nuts as she traveled, becoming acquainted with the botanical structures of plant life. One day she probably had an urge to try cultivating a couple of plants when she found that she could make plants grow better and also bear better fruit, she persuaded her husband to stay longer in one place in order to plant and harvest various crops. Thus it is that early woman has the distinction of being the first to become agriculturally minded. Even now in many primitive societies, the man is either a hunter or a fisherman while the woman is an agriculturist. Note, however, that not all primitive peoples have these same characteristics, because the rise and fall of various cultures have taken on many varied peculiarities. High cultures existant two thousand years ago in Latin America, for example, have degenerated and have returned to such a state that some either have become or are almost extinct today.

Combining climatic conditions, natural resources, and economic setups, we can easily see that social structures within short distances of each other may take on very different characteristics. There are innumerable social structures differing from each other existing in Latin America, but to a student of The Book of Mormon this is no surprise. We know that three different groups came to America at three different periods of time. We know that they landed in three different environments, but that they all had the same objective in mind and that was to live according to the laws of God. Each group lived in different environments, therefore having different climates, natural resources, and economic sources to deal with. As these groups multiplied and were forced to spread further apart, these factors became even more varied. Some became hunters and some became fishermen, but the majority of men have remained in an agricultural state. Due to these varied resources some men have had to build their homes of brush and thatch while others have built theirs of mud and stone.

The agricultural complex had developed to such an extent by the time the Nephites encountered the new world that they were able with the faith they had in God to do things that seem like miracles to us today. Maize or Indian corn which was found nowhere outside of the New World is believed now to have been developed in Peru. Excellent work in metallurgy, intricate textile designs, and numerous bridges were other features that are attributed to these societies. The objective of these people was essentially the same but among them as among us today, there were those who would not believe and who many times succeeded in undermining that objective. These conditions usually brought about bloodshed, hatred, and social confusion which led to even greater breaks in the continuity of thought. People reverted to primitive stages and were forced to begin all over again and again until they had to readjust themselves to any environment where they found themselves located.

As social structures are influenced by environment, so do environmental conditions tend to affect religious thought. In primitive societies deities were identified with almost everything that people couldn't control or understand, and prayers were offered to them whenever the occasion demanded. When a person went hunting or fishing, prayers were often offered to the appropriate deity and if the supplicant was successful in his pursuit, he was supposedly in good favor with his deity. Again, according to his trend of thought, if he didn't make his catch, he believed his deity to be angry with him. Prayers were offered all during the planting season and again all through the harvest period and for almost every other conceivable event.

When Christ appeared among the American aboriginals he taught them an entirely new philosophy of life. He gave them new laws to govern themselves by, and he worked many great miracles among them. He rebuilt a religious and a social structure that had almost been ruined by disbelief and lack of wisdom among peoples whose ancestors once held the key to the kingdom of heaven.

Two hundred years after Christ's visit, the people began again to dwell in iniquity and disbelief. As this situation became more serious, numerous deities popped up and were attributed to things that people couldn't control or understand. Those things not controlled or understood by man were climatic conditions, natural resources, and flora and fauna. The respective deities varied from area to area according to the type of culture which existed at the time, but the main deity or Christ, as we Latter Day Saints believe him to be, has continued to remain the same everywhere. With the addition of time, prayers often developed into extensive ceremonies and rituals, which in some places turned into human sacrifice. In short, the large numbers of differing cultures now existant in Latin America were at one time closely associated with each other. As they were forced to spread further apart, the environment also changed, and as a result new and strange changes in religious and social behavior took, and are still taking place, in the new world.

It is apparent then, that geographical factors of environment are important influences in the religious and social thought of most primitive communities. A culture is built up around the type of economic background present, and as the environment changes from time to time additions and subtractions are made to the central structure until it is difficult many times to even attempt to trace it back to its original form. Thus, it is not hard to see why the ethnologist and the archaeologist face so many problems when attempting to discover the origin of backward societies. I hope that this discussion will show the prospective anthropologist why geography is important in any anthropological investigation. It has led others and it may lead you to an understanding of archaeological mysteries which are now kept only in the museum of antiquity.

Finds Happiness in Zion

I have often wondered if our experiences in coming to Zion would be of interest to other Saints. I can look back and see where God has led and blessed us in many ways. He opened up the way for us when we needed divine direction. I know now that he did this for us when we moved to Zion.

My wife and I were born and reared near Coffeyville, Kansas. Five years after our marriage, we moved with our two small daughters to Fairland, Oklahoma. This proved to be a wise move, and I felt that we had been divinely directed to do so. We lived there for over twenty years, working with as fine a branch of Saints as I have ever known.

After several years my wife had the desire to move to Independence. I had no intention of making such a move as I loved the people in Fairland, enjoyed working with them, and felt that we had been blessed there. Then came the depression. We lost everything we had financially. For a year I was out of work; then I found a job and in three years had managed to save $800. My wife still wanted to move to Zion. She had a dream in which she saw a land, she knew not where, and was given to know that we were to make our future home there. I began to feel that we should make some kind of a change. Our children were grown, and there were few opportunities for them where we were. We made a trip to Independence, and while driving out east of the city one day, my wife suddenly exclaimed, "This is the land I saw in my dream." I felt much better and, after consulting with the Bishopric, I contracted for a small two-acre tract at the north edge of town. I was taking a risk as I paid only $250 down, which left us $500 to live on until I could get an income started. Too many people make this mistake in coming to Zion; I would advise others who plan to come to be very careful before they actually make the move. I won't go into details as to our ups and downs the first two years. I was trying to make a living raising chickens and truck gardening. I had not tried to find employment anywhere; I did not know any trade. There were few jobs of any kind available, and there were fifty men for every job that was. It was hard for us to meet our payments, and I thought several times we would lose our home; then something happened. My daughter was making our monthly payment one day when the president of the firm, who happened to be waiting on her, asked, "What does your father do for a living? Do you suppose he would like a job?" She told him that she would call me. I talked to the man over the telephone, and he said he needed a janitor at once. I told him I would be up the following morning to talk it over with him. "If you are interested at all, come now."

he said. "I am going to hire a man today. There are others who want the job." As a rule it takes me a little time to make up my mind on matters like that, but I felt that God wanted me to have the job and had put it in the mind of the man to ask about me. I began working and soon learned to like it. Our financial worries were over in Zion. I still had time to care for our little farm, and it was easy to meet the payments. Not only did the extra money prove a blessing, but it opened up the way for something better. Three years later there was an opening at the Herald Publishing House for caretaker. The manager, knowing that I was doing this type of work, got in touch with me and hired me for the job. I had always been interested in printing, in fact, as a young boy I started to learn the trade but was called back to the farm. I found myself in surroundings that I really liked. I have now been able to break away from janitorial work and spend all my time in the bindery. I like my work and feel it a blessing to work for the church.

Truly God has opened up the way for us in Zion. I shall always remember the time when we were having trouble meeting our payments—I was feeling discouraged and was not well, so I had two of the elders administer to me. I don't believe either of them knew my difficulties, but in the confirmation, this was part of the prayer: "Bless our brother. Thou knowest he has come to Zion to make his home. Open up the way before him that this may be possible. My testimony is that that prayer, along with our own, has been answered. I desire to continue in such a way as to be always worthy of God's help and direction.

Thankful for the True Gospel

I enjoy the Herald very much and wait impatiently for each one to come. I read the letters first and am glad that more are being printed now. The quality is much better also. We grow tired of reading about physical illnesses—after all, the mind and spirit suffer too, at times. It is inspiring to read of others' experiences.

I especially enjoyed reading Albert Loving's article, "The Indian." It was beautifully written, and I read it over several times. That poor Indian is so like the rest of us—we try to do what's right, but we cannot do it alone. We need the help and association of the Saints. I live among people who are good in their own way, but they do not have the understanding that our church members possess. I have wept tears of loneliness, and sometimes I feel that I can't go on without the association of those in the church, but then I pray and study and receive consolation.

When first converted to the gospel I was given much evidence of its truthfulness; I was filled with the Spirit, and I was happier than I had ever been before. The world was beautiful; I loved everyone, and I felt as if I could convert the whole world. Now I am inclined to feel a little useless.

I am glad that I was permitted to know the truth, and I hope that someday everyone will know. My prayer is that Zion will be established as an example for the nations of the world to follow.

THE RESTORATION

By Evan A. Fry

IT IS A PRINCIPLE of life that new things do not spring full-fledged out of nothing. All new things, all new inventions, all new discoveries, all new thoughts, and all new movements have their roots in the past, and grow and progress as men of vision and of intelligence send out new branches at more or less regular intervals. Or to use another metaphor, and to compare the progress of the world with a football game—we do not advance the ball by going back to the starting line after each play, but by using teamwork and advancing the ball little by little on each play.

In this current series of sermons on Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration, we have tried to show that this principle operates in the field of religion, as well as in science, politics, and social progress. The apostasy which completely changed the primitive Christian church, and made it into something hardly resembling the original at all, did not happen in one instant, or one year, or in one century. Rather, it was the result of a slow process of gradual change, a little here and a little there, until the transformation was complete. The Reformation came about in the same way.

Though the work of the Reformation is usually considered to have begun with Luther, there were several other men who prepared the way for him, and laid the foundation upon which he built. Some were prior to him; some contemporary with him. One of the first men to feed the flickering flame of Reformation was John Wycliffe, an Oxford scholar and priest who lived from 1320 to 1384. He is remembered principally for being the scholar who in 1382 made the first full translation of the Bible into English. The far-reaching results of that single achievement can never be realized or properly evaluated. But there were other achievements and revolutionary teachings. He taught that lordship and property were held by God's grace, and were forfeited if the holders thereof fell into mortal sin. He said that the church should hold no property, collect no taxes, and exercise no civil jurisdiction. He sent the Lollards throughout England, preaching in denunciation of the luxury and immorality of rich churchmen. If he had not had the support of John of Gaunt—the power behind the throne—he would undoubtedly have died a martyr's death.

One of the men greatly influenced by Wycliffe was John Huss, who was born in a little Bohemian village in 1369, attended the university of Prague, and later became a lecturer and rector there. Early in his life he read the writings of Wycliffe (in Latin) which was the universal language of that day. He preached powerful sermons in the Czech (Bohemian) tongue, and is also considered the founder of the Bohemian tongue as a literary language. He was an advocate of freedom of speech and freedom of conscience, in a day when such ideas were dangerous. He publicly opposed the burning of Wycliffe's books, and in consequence was forbidden to preach or teach any more. His followers burned the papal bull containing this prohibition, and Huss was excommunicated and outlawed. Conditions were complicated by the fact of two—and sometimes three—claimants to the papal throne. Huss was bitter in his denunciation of the sale of indulgences by one of these claimants for the purpose of financing war against his ecclesiastical enemy. Through the subterfuge of a safe conduct from the Emperor

Sigismund, he was induced to attend the Council of Constance in 1415, presumably to state his views and seek some basis of unity in the church. The safe-conduct was violated; Huss was arrested, tried as a heretic, and burned at the stake on July 6, 1415. In the words of one of his biographers, "Thinking to extinguish heresy, the Council of Constance had made it the national faith of Bohemia, and had made the martyr Huss the national hero and national saint."

No small amount of credit for the beginnings of the Reformation must go to Erasmus, a Dutch theologian. He appeared upon the scene about the time that printing was beginning to come into its own. He stimulated research into the organization and teachings of the early church through his printed editions of the Greek New Testament, and the writings of the early church Fathers.

THE GREAT, TOWERING figure of the Reformation, of course, was Martin Luther. He was born of very poor parents, in Saxony of Germany, in 1483, studied law, entered a convent of monks, and became a professor in the new University of Wittenberg. A few years later he went to Rome on business for his monastic order, and returned still loyal to the church, but doubtful of some of the things he had seen at Rome. Already in his mind he was beginning to formulate his doctrine of "justification by faith."

On October 31, 1517, he posted the famous 95 theses on the door of the castle church at Wittenberg, attacking the practice of selling indulgences. The sale of indulgences was based on the theory that the church was the repository of good works done by saints, martyrs, etc., and that the pope could draw on this treasury of good works and transfer some of the merit from these who had more than they needed, to those who lacked enough. As originally begun, the practice was not too objectionable, because repentance and contrition were obligatory before the indulgence was granted. In practice, there came to be less and less emphasis placed on the repentance and contrition, and more and more on the money payment. This method was used to finance some of the wars of the Crusades, and the building of St. Peter's in Rome. Naturally, Luther's new doctrine of "Justification by Faith" brought him into violent opposition with this doctrine of dependence on good works. Called to defend himself before the Diet of Worms, he delivered himself of a flat refusal to recant or alter his position unless he could be proved wrong by the Scriptures. Returning from this historic meeting, he was kidnaped by the friendly Elector of Saxony, and hidden in his castle until it was safe for him to return to Wittenberg.

Luther did more than any other single man to advance the cause of the Reformation. His writings and pamphlets were voluminous. He replaced the Latin mass with a mass in German, which the people could understand and follow. He wrote many hymns, and catechisms for both young and old. He translated the Bible into German. He advised and worked for popular education. Theologically, he declared that justification is due solely to the mercy or grace of God and the merit of Christ, appropriated by faith, not to human works or merits. He condemned indulgences; he controverted the divine right of the papacy; he questioned the infallibility of any general council, pointing out how often they had been forced to reverse their "infallible" decisions; he asserted the supreme authority of Scripture. He taught that the Christian had the duty as well as the right, to free himself from priestly bondage. He attacked oral confession, monastic vows, and the private mass. He opposed celibacy for the clergy, and to make his opposition all the more spectacular, married an ex-nun. His constant stress was on justification by faith, and the freedom of the individual from the work-righteousness of medieval religion. He taught that salvation involves the obligation of self-discipline and service to others as the indispensable fruit of a justifying faith. He was not in favor of violence in the matter of reformation, but called on the people to support the constituted government, and the government to speed the reform of the church if the church would not.

His philosophy presented some queer anomalies, such as belief in freedom of conscience, but his advocacy of the death penalty for the heretical Anabaptists; and his personal fearlessness and zeal for reform as contrasted with his support of the nobles in the Peasants' war, in which the peasants were trying to speed reform with violence. He advanced the cause of Reformation by great leaps and bounds, but he left many questions unanswered and many differences and difficulties unreconciled. He was the great renovator, rather than the great innovator of the church.

THE LEADER of the Reformation in Switzerland was Ulrich Zwingli, born in 1484, educated in Swiss schools and the University of Vienna; in 1516 appointed as priest at the Shrine of Ensedeln; and in 1518 appointed preacher at the Cathedral of Zurich. He studied Erasmus' edition of the New Testament, and found that in many respects the church of his day was not like the one therein described. Under Luther's influence, he broke completely with the Roman church, and taught that the Bible should be the supreme authority in matters of religion and conscience. He preached his own direct interpretation of Scripture and attacked what he thought to be abuses in the church. When Pope Adrian VI asked the people of Switzerland to abandon Zwingli, the resulting debate took several Swiss cantons, or provinces, out of the church with their leader. He was killed in a battle between the Catholic and Protestant cantons of Switzerland, in 1531.

JOHN CALVIN was perhaps the greatest thinker and theologian of the Reformation. In his youth he studied for the priesthood, grew unsettled and turned to law; and at the age of 22 experienced a conversion in which he felt himself divinely called to forsake Catholicism for a simpler form of Christianity. His book, The Institutes of the Christian Religion, became a rallying point for Protestants all over Europe. When France became unsafe, he fled to Geneva, where his iron will and stern unyielding piety made it a veritable "city of God," where purity, simplicity, and devout religious faith were enforced. He founded the University of Geneva; he was consulted on civic matters as well as religious. His teachings formed the basis for the Presbyterian and Reformed churches, the Huguenots of France, the Protestants of the Netherlands and Scotland, the Puritans of England, and the Pilgrims who came to America. He lived between 1509 and 1564.

Calvin was also a firm believer in the Bible as the only rule of human conduct in religious matters, terming the Biblical writers "sure and authentic amanuenses of the Holy Spirit"; that is, teaching the literal inspiration and infallibility of each word. His theological system centered around the doctrine of total depravity, justification by faith, and predestination. He taught that through Adam's fall, depravity and corruption attach to all men, and that even infants are bound by their own fault, in that their whole nature is a seed of sin, and hateful to God. Man must be united to Christ, and made a partaker of his death and resurrection, through the Holy Spirit; and being thus justified by faith, the believer receives witness that he is saved. Those "called" by God to salvation are kept by him in progressive faith and holiness unto the end, so that personal righteousness may be joined with the righteousness imputed from Christ. Baptism was regarded as a sign of confession and confirmation of faith. His church organization consisted of pastors, who presided over and admonished the members; teachers to instruct them and expound the Scriptures; a group of pious men or elders to act as a church senate or governing body, and deacons to oversee the care of the poor. He believed in theocratic government, with every member of the state under the discipline of the church and its governing body of elders.

Calvin's great work was his appeal to a higher order of intelligence, and his establishment of a great body of theology, even if much of it has since been abandoned. Even Calvinistic churches no longer believe in the magistrate as the preserver of church purity, nor in the right of the church to interfere in secular affairs. They have toned down or rejected completely the doctrines of man's total depravity, infant damnation, the infallibility of the Bible, and predestination. Calvin will be remembered also for his insistence on a personal morality and active righteousness of a high order.

JOHAN KNOX, a contemporary of Calvin, was a boy of 12 when Luther nailed his theses to the church door at Wittenberg. The church in Scotland was then oppressive and corrupt. Knox was precipitated into the Reformation when he went to aid a group of men who were besieged in the castle of Cardinal Beaton. These men were friends of George Wishart, who had been martyred by the Cardinal. In revenge, Wishart's friends murdered the Cardinal, and precipitated a chain of violence which continued for many years. Knox was sentenced for two years to the French galleys, since Scotland was then under French control; took refuge in England until Mary Tudor made England unsafe for Protestants; defied the edict of Mary of Guise against the preaching of the Reformed doctrine; and joined with the "Lords of the Congregation" in appealing to Queen Elizabeth of England for aid. With her help the French were driven from Scotland, and the Scotch Parliament abolished the pope's authority in Scotland and forbade the celebration of the mass. Knox was deeply sincere, conscientious, harsh, dogmatic, and intolerant. His policy was to reject all usages of the Catholic church for which there was no positive scriptural warrant. He accordingly opposed written prayers, religious images and pictures, and instrumental music in the church.

The leader of the Reformation in England, strangely enough, was Henry the Eighth, but his leadership was political and ecclesiastical more than religious or theological. When the Pope refused to annul his marriage to Catherine of Aragon so that he might marry Anne Boleyn, he arrested Cardinal Wolsey on a charge of treason, and made Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury in his place without the consent of Rome. Henry promptly got his divorce through Cranmer. An act of Parliament declared Henry the "Supreme Head of the Church of England," and made it an act of treason to deny that title. Appeals to the pope's court were forbidden, and payments to Rome stopped. There was little change in the ritual or the doctrine of the new church, except that translations of the Bible were placed in all the churches. Henry even wrote a pamphlet against the heresies of Luther which won for him the title "Defender of the Faith" which is borne by English kings to this day. Henry "persecuted with equal severity the Catholics who adhered to the government of Rome, and the Protestants who rejected its doctrines."

In the brief time available we shall not be able to mention the Anabaptists, who were the extreme left-wingers of the Reformation, nor to pay more than passing tribute to Roger Williams, the first great exponent of religious freedom in America, and to the Wesleys, who in the 18th century asserted that the grace of God could transform any life that would receive it. If we had more time, we should also mention George Fox, founder of the Friends or Quakers, and his stress upon the guidance of the inner light, and consequent rejection of all church authority, ordinances, sacraments, and rituals. And, if we cared to continue down into the 19th century, there are many more devout men who carried on the work of Reformation a little farther, each in his turn.

As one studies the Reformation, one fact stands out—the same fact, basically, which we stressed at the beginning of this sermon: No one leader of the Reformation movement made any sweeping or all-inclusive changes. Some changed one doctrine, or ordinance, or custom; some changed another. Some changes got the church nearer to

CITY-WIDE MUSIC FESTIVAL

The city-wide Zion's League music festival was held on the evenings of February 28 and 29; the first contest was held at Liberty Street Church, and the second at Stone Church. Monday evening was devoted to all entries of an orchestral and vocal ensemble type.

Vocal solos were featured on Tuesday evening. Judging was done according to a national standard, each person on his own ability. A rating of "one" represented a nearly perfect performance, "two" an outstanding rendition, "three" a very good performance, "four" a good one, and "five" a need for improvement. The average grade was three. Several ratings of two were awarded, and there was one top award.

CITY-WIDE BANQUET

Songs, food, fellowship, and fun were in abundance at the city-wide banquet held Friday evening, March 1. One hundred seventy-five young people were served by members of the Laurel Club in the dining room of the Auditorium. Decorations were carried out in the form of a ship with portholes and streamers. The table centerpieces were river scenes featuring pipe-cleaner figures. The four long tables were decorated with helms on which were printed the various kinds of "ships"—courtship, leadership, statesmanship, etc. The programs were blue and gold shields—the League colors and symbol.

Program features included: a song fest, toasts to the U.S.S. Zion's League and its officers, short addresses by young leaders, a dramatic skit, announcement of the results of the music contest, and a "barber shop" quartet.

Many of the girls came in formal attire. It was a gay affair both in color and atmosphere.

EAST INDEPENDENCE

The January 27 program centered around a contest consisting of questions from the Bible. Following the service, the young people went to a home and spent the evening playing games. The girls made fudge and popped corn for refreshments.

On February 10, a picture study was made of Sallman's "Christ at Heart's Door." The story of the picture was told and a soloist sang "Oh Jesus, Thou Art Standing Outside the Fast Closed Door."

The Leaguers have set the raising of $100 for the building fund as their goal for the year.

SOUTH CRYSLER MISSION

The young people of the new South Chrysler mission met February 22 to organize a League. Games were played and hot dogs its pristine perfection; others took it farther away. Later reformers often reformed and revised and modified the reforms of their predecessors. But the total effect of the Reformation was to prepare the way for a new day—for something bigger and finer and more complete than any of the Reformers had been able to achieve. Latter Day Saints believe that the Reformation was a preparation for Restoration.

and root beer were served as refreshments. At the close of the evening, songs were sung by candlelight, and the pastor gave a short talk on the future plans for the League. Each member offered a sentence-prayer for the benediction.

The newly organized League has a full corps of officers, and several meetings have already been held.

ENGLEWOOD

The Englewood Leaguers held a party at the church on February 22, in celebration of Washington's birthday. The girls wore bows, pigtailed, and short skirts; the boys wore short trousers. Each came equipped with a piece of bubble gum and assorted "poppings" broke the silence. Farmer-in-the-dell and upset the fruit basket were the main game attractions of the evening. Pop and cup cakes were served as refreshments.

LIBERTY STREET MISSION

Twenty of the young people of Liberty Street mission met at the home of their leaders on the evening of February 19 for a combination play practice and fun night. A covered-dish luncheon made the evening a complete success.

Pioneer Booth at Conference

A new feature of interest to everyone will be the "Brick Church Pioneer Booth." The Pioneers' Club was unable to hold its yearly meetings during the war, but since has met and turned over the work of the club to the descendant pioneers, as the very few pioneers who are left are getting well up in years and hope the younger group will carry on the valuable work they have started.

One of their objects is to gather some personal spiritual testimonies of the early pioneers, those faithful Saints before 1888, who sacrificed so much and stood faithful under hardships and heavy trials, to keep this priceless gospel for the Saints of today.

We feel we are losing much valuable testimony with the passing of these dear old people and hope to get many things of interest and much help and encouragement for our young people. We wish to welcome each and everyone attending conference to visit with us at our booth. and if you are a pioneer or a descendant of one, or a guest pioneer—those belonging to the church before 1888, will you please see us and get your name on our books. DAISY BOWEN BROWN,

Vice-President and Secretary of the Junior Pioneers.
Lee's Summit, Missouri.

Administration Heals

About five years ago I was in a serious accident. I was injured so badly that the doctors said if I lived I would be blind and crippled the rest of my life. The elders came and administered to me several times, and today I am neither blind nor crippled. God certainly answers prayer. MRS. IDA MILLEN.

Graceland College Religious Emphasis Week

The sixth annual observance of Religious Emphasis Week was held on the Graceland College Campus February 17-24, with the theme, "Inspiration and Intelligence Together in Today's Life." Apostle John W. Rushton and Evangelist Ray Whiting, visiting ministers, participated in student life during the week, and over 55 students received their patriarchal blessings from Brother Whiting. The week's program was officially opened Sunday evening, February 17, with a sermon by Apostle Rushton. A special class was conducted Monday afternoon in preparation for the giving of patriarchal blessings to those who were ready. Topics for the week's evening services conducted by Apostle Rushton were as follows: "Is Revelation Still Vital in Modern Times?"; "Does God Enlighten Everybody?"; "How Do I Know It's Inspiration?"; "Are the Gifts Still Necessary?"; and "What Inspired Insights Does the Church Need Today?"

A faculty reception was held on Tuesday afternoon, in honor of the visiting ministers. Evangelist Whiting spoke at a supper Wednesday evening to students who are members of the priesthood, on the subject, "Getting Fit for Inspiration." Thursday morning's assembly was a continuation of the week's special program, with a talk by Brother Whiting on "Inspired and Inspiring Persons I Have Known."

A high spot of the week was the formal dinner Friday night. Carrying out the theme of "Frontiers Through the Years," scenes were presented representing the Colonial period, the Civil War period, the Gay Nineties, the Nineteen Hundreds, the Roaring Twenties, and Modern Times. Ray Whiting's presentation of "Frontiers" was very fitting.

At four o'clock Saturday afternoon, a question box session was conducted, in which the students evidenced a lively interest. Relaxation was afforded by the basketball game Saturday evening between freshmen and sophomore girls. The first postwar Graceland band made its debut at the event.

The threads of the week's topics of emphasis were caught up in the theme of the closing fellowship service on Sunday morning: "These Things I See." The sincerity of each participant as testimonies rapidly followed each other gave evidence of the inspiration which touched each individual through some aspect of the week's program.

Special music for the week was fur-

R. Melvin Russell, Pastor

Washington, D. C.

Pastor, Ray L. Hurst

Washington branch celebrated its tenth anniversary and homecoming November 2-4 with a banquet at the Eastern Star Club, and Sunday services at the Pythian Temple; eighty-five members and visitors were present. District President Thomas M. Carr acted as toastmaster at the banquet and on Sunday preached the anniversary sermon, reviewing milestones in the progress of the branch. He complimented the charter members on the fine work they had done in being instrumental in bringing the branch to its present stage of development and encouraged all to work diligently together toward a successful and growing future.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp and Apostle John F. Garver visited Washington on Sunday, December 9. Bishop DeLapp brought a message of encouragement and confidence, basing his remarks on the financial phase of the zionic gathering. He was also the speaker at the evening service, after which an open forum discussion was held.

Sunday, December 16, LeRoy Beckham occupied at the morning service.

The service was supplemented by a beautiful solo by Mrs. Modelle Tacy. On January 13 Brother Beckham preached his farewell sermon in Washington as he is being discharged from the Navy. Pastor Ray L. Hurst occupied the pulpit on Sunday, January 27, choosing as his topic the inspirational "Sermon on the Mount." Other speakers have been Elders A. W. Powell, Carl Mesle, Harry L. Ratcliffe, Thomas T. Forbes and Elder S. C. Mesle of Sherrill, New York, who occupied at the Sunday morning service on February 17. Mrs. Ada L. Davison sang a solo, "More Love to Thee, O Christ." Sunday evening services, sponsored alternately by the priesthood, Zion's League, and the women's department, have comprised a series of prayer meetings, timely topics, musical programs, and preaching. These have been nished by the A Capella Choir; Herbert Lively and Henry Anderson, faculty members of the music department; the faculty quartet, composed of Mr. Lively, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Gould, and Mr. Goode; Lorna Howard, Gwendolyn Binns, Bonabelle Nelson, Marilyn Juergens, Odessa Barlow, Marcheta Inman, Shirley Sanford, Lenore Ellis, Rosalee Smith, and Norma Jean Johnson.

The student body, especially those members who have recently returned from the armed services, feel that this week will be one of the high points of their year at Graceland.

interesting and well attended.

The Christmas worship service on December 23 was combined with a children's program of music, recitations, and the exchange of gifts. The Christmas and New Year services were entered into with a feeling of real thankfulness, inasmuch as they marked the first of the holiday observances free from war.

Donald Leslie Emslie, the infant son of Lt. and Mrs. Wm. R. Emslie, was blessed on Sunday, December 30, by Pastor Ray L. Hurst, assisted by Major Carl Mesle.

Washington branch is happy to welcome back several returned servicemen. These include Dana Keller, stationed at nearby Bellevue, Robert Cole and Ben Moser, formerly with the Navy; Stuart Barnes, James Gregg, and Mark Crown of the Army. The many friends of Margaret Farrar were pleased to receive her back into the local group upon the transfer from St. Louis to Washington of the government department with which she is employed. Regretful farewells are being said to others of the service personnel leaving Washington. These are Major and Mrs. Frank C. Mesle and daughter, Sherry, who have returned to live in Independence, Missouri; Sgt. and Mrs. Lester Tacy, who will be leaving soon for Benton Harbor, Michigan; and Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Beckham and daughter Glenda, who have returned to Butler, Missouri. A real loss will be felt in the absence of these talented people who have so willingly served the Washington branch.

Under direction of the women's department a bazaar was given December 5 for the benefit of the church-building fund. Many fine handmade articles which were donated to the bazaar found ready sale. A spectacular achievement in the sale of Christmas cards also resulted in an earning of $565 for the building fund. The women's department has a steady program for the year based on the subject "The Latter Day Saints and Their Changing Relationship to the Social Order."

Other branch activities have included aid in the way of food and clothing to the European war needy; it is felt that this is a program which can well be enlarged.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Willard A. Atwell of 1135 Gudgeil Avenue, Independence, Missouri, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on February 21. Their five sons, Willard A., Jr., of the home; Alma D., of Compton, California; Melvin R., Gwen O., and Immanuel B., all of Independence, were present to help with the celebration. Mr. Atwell's brother, Ernest P. Atwell, of Kansas City, and eleven grandchildren were also guests. On the following Sunday, fifty members of the Gudgeil Park congregation attended open house held at the Atwell home. Many beautiful gifts were presented the Atwells

The February Communion service was presided over by Pastor R. M. Russell; as a part of the service, Donna Raye Graham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ervan L. Graham, was blessed by Elder Floyd Hirst of Nebraska City and Pastor Russell.

Boy Scout Day was observed on the morning of February 10. The pastor talked on "Religious Awards in Scouting," and the second and third God and Country Awards were presented to Richard Henderson and Marlin Constance of Troop 43.
