The church school Christmas program was given December 22. Mrs. E. E. Thomas and Mrs. Frank Corcoran were in charge. A pot-luck dinner was held in the lower auditorium of the church on New Year's Eve, followed by a prayer service presided over by Priest Frank Corcoran.

Two new members, Mrs. Blanch Walker and Betty Jane Anderson, were baptized on Sunday, February 16, by Pastor E. E. Thomas.

On Friday, February 21, the women's department sponsored a Washington tea under the supervision of Mrs. E. E. Thomas. Mrs. Frank McDonald of St. Louis, Missouri, was guest speaker. Music was furnished by Mrs. Harold Walker, Eleanor Winner, and Clarice Anderson.

Tom Spillman, formerly of the U. S. Navy, was speaker at the Zion's League meeting on February 23; he related some of his experiences in various parts of the world while in service.

Recent speakers have been C. H. Davis, E. A. Kratzer, O. C. Thomas, E. E. Thomas, Frank Corcoran, Harold Walker, Guy Lewis, and Harold Skiles.

Moline, Illinois

Pastor, E. J. Lenox

The Daughters of Zion, a group of teenage girls, meet once a month in the homes of various members to study homemaking. Ruth Shippy is their leader. A Boy Scout troop has been organized with Jesse Cady as scoutmaster; Dick Martens and George Waddell are his assistants.

In November, a new type of missionary endeavor was introduced in Moline. Seventy E. Y. Hunker and Missionary Victor Witte conducted personal visits in the homes of prospective members; five new members were baptized as a result of this effort.

Robes for choir members have been purchased by the women's organization; they will be worn for the first time on April 6 when the choir presents an Easter cantata under the direction of Avis Tyree.

The women, with Kathryn Schroeder as leader, have organized a study class which is held once each month. Forty-five women are taking this course for credit; Ether Jordan of Milan is teacher. One group of women, supervised by Ada Williamson, has been sewing for the Red Cross. The "friendly visitor program" is another feature of the women's work; last month, thirty-eight calls were made at the homes of sick and shut-in members.

Two returned servicemen were recently ordained to the priesthood. Leo Sheppard was ordained a teacher and Dick Martens, a priest. Brother Martens has been selected as church school director. At present, there are ten classes in the church school division. Florence Cady of the nursery department is to be commended for her work with the very young.

Out-of-town speakers have been President F. Henry Edwards, Apostle Arthur Oakman, Evangelist John Grice, Seventy E. Y. Hunker, Missionary John Banks, and Elders Tom Beil and Buren Lenox.

Northern California District

The semi-annual conference of Northern California District was held February 15 and 16 at Sacramento. All branches and missions of the district were represented. The conference theme was, "I am the light of the world."

Two business sessions were held, one on Saturday afternoon and one in the evening. Delegates to General Conference were elected, and plans for reunion were discussed. Since it was deemed unwise to purchase a permanent site for reunion grounds at this time, the 1947 reunion will again be held at Asilomar, Pacific Grove, where classrooms, chapel, dining hall, and cabins are all available.

Sunday began with a 9 o'clock devotional.

Classes were taught by Seventy George Njeim, Elder Russell Ralston, and Sister Emma Appel. Mozart's "Gloria" was sung by the choir at the 11 o'clock service, Mrs. Edna Burdick directing. Apostle John W. Rushton was the speaker. A class in religious education was conducted in the afternoon by Mrs. Elizabeth Schall.

Flint, Michigan

Pastor, Harry J. Simons

For the third consecutive year, Flint congregation was host to the Chevrolet Male Chorus, composed of men from all departments of Chevrolet-Flint, under the direction of Winnifred Dunning.

On Sunday evening, March 9, before a capacity audience, the chorus presented a program of sacred numbers and Negro spirituals. Pastor Harry J. Simons introduced the chorus, and during the program Mr. Eugene Everhart, for many years a member of Flint Branch, gave an interesting talk on the history of music. Two members of the church are in the chorus. This appearance was made the occasion for the first wearing of tuxedo suits. The program consisted of eleven numbers including "Ave Maria," Arcadelt; "The Lord Is My Shepherd," Eratz; "Thanks Be to Thee," Handel; "In This Hour," Emerson; "The Lost Chord," Sullivan; and the spirituals: "Steal Away," "I'm a Baptist," and "Were You There?"

Dr. Wm. W. Norton, Flint's community music leader, and Mr. M. K. Hovey, Chevrolet-Flint's general manager, were present for the concert.

Scammon, Kansas

Pastor, George M. Doubledee

After being disorganized as a branch, the Saints of Scammon Mission continued to hold church school, although there was no member of the priesthood attending for many months. Finally, Priest Marvin Williams of Medoc, Missouri, was sent to minister to the group, and under his efficient leadership, two new members were converted, Mrs. Maxine Smittle and Hazel Cartwright. Interest and attendance continued to increase, and in October, 1945, Elder George Doubledee, also of Medoc, replaced Brother Williams, whose duties in his home branch made it necessary for him to remain there. On September 1, 1946, Mrs. Elizabeth McDaniel, Mrs. Evelyn Blundell, Dixie Ann Blundell, Ruby McCallum, and Ruth Dawson were baptized by Elder Tom Bath. Two more new members, Mrs. Lorene Beganda and Mrs. Grace Scowden, were baptized by Pastor Doubledee on September 7. At the annual business meeting the following officers were elected: George Doubledee, pastor; Melba Moorehead, church school director; Bud French, treasurer and young people's leader; Evelyn Blundell, secretary; Anzella Moorehead, women's leader; and Ruby McCallum, director of music. A Zion's League was organized on November 1 with Bud French as president; Marvin Moorehead, vice-president; and Marianna Westervelt, secretary-treasurer.

On November 6, District President William Patterson began a series of meetings. At the close of the series, he baptized Mrs. Mary Featherstone and Floyd McElroy. George J., son of Mrs. Evelyn Blundell, was blessed at this time also.

The Field is White...

At Home in Aruba

By Verneil Simmons

I had always dreamed of traveling in far lands and of seeing distant ports, but never in my wildest dreams had I bargained for a sea voyage during war time through submarine-infested waters. Yet, such was the beginning of my travels. The letter bringing me the good news that I could join my husband in Aruba, perhaps in time for Christmas, arrived on Saturday. The following day was December 7, 1941. Needless to say, I did not join my husband for the holidays.

When passage was finally arranged it was February and submarines were beginning to be quite troublesome on the east coast. Air bases in the Leeward Islands had become a prime necessity, and the boat on which I traveled, with my year-and-a-half-old son, carried men to build air bases in Antigua and Trinidad. Our sailing preceded the days of convoys, and for seven days and nights we zigged and zagged our way across the Atlantic with our whereabouts unknown to anyone but the captain and the crew—we hoped! Even with the daily anticipation of possible trouble, it was a bit of a shock to reach St. Lucia and be met with the news that we were supposed to have been sunk by submarines three days before! Despite all dire predictions and false alarms, we reached Trinidad without seeing anything more exciting than a school of porpoises.

After a one-day stay in tropical Port-au-Spain, I boarded my first airplane for the flight to Aruba—a distance of 600 miles across the Caribbean. My rejoicing at having reached my destination safely was a bit premature. Within the week, subs surfaced and shelled the refinery, doing little harm there but sinking seven tankers which were anchored outside the reef for the night. The immediate result of this was the strictest possible blackouts; sailors told us later that our blackout was “blacker” than London’s. Many women and children left the island. From then on we lived always with the realization that trouble could come, but these fears were never realized.

I soon felt at home in the American Colony, which was very much like any small town in the States. We had very comfortable homes, built and nicely furnished by the company, all the modern conveniences, our own commissary for necessary food, post office, service station, clubhouse with library and soda fountain, and recreational facilities. We were completely isolated from the rest of the island and (Continued on page 22.)

IF I SAY, “When we went to Aruba in ‘41,” somebody invariably asks, “Aruba? Where is Aruba?” and telling them that Aruba is in the Netherlands West Indies doesn’t help matters a bit. I can usually surprise a church member by telling him that Aruba is what practically amounts to our first and only Latin American mis-

Here Are the Simmons.

Wayne, age thirty-two, was born and reared in the vicinity of Cameron, Missouri. He was ordained a priest when he was seventeen and, during the 1930's, served as a youth leader in Far West Stake. After teaching rural school for five years, he went to Aruba as a pressure still operator.

Returning to the States in '45, he entered Kansas City University and will be graduated next spring. He is majoring in English and Spanish and hopes to do graduate work in Latin or South America. He is director of music and teacher of the young people's class at Malvern Hill Church in Kansas City. His hobby is 35 mm. color photography.

Verneil, age twenty-nine, was born at DeLoit, Iowa—the fifth generation of her family to belong to the Reorganized Church. She is interested in photography, books on archaeology, books on travel, and . . . books! She hopes that she and her family may become bilingual in Spanish and English by reason of present study and their anticipated stay in Latin America.

A survey of missionary possibilities in Aruba...

By Wayne Simmons

sion, and no matter how well versed he may be in church history, he tells me he has heard nothing about Aruba. So, it seems some sort of explanation is in order.

Aruba is a small, almost barren island, consisting of cactus, coral, and sand, lying eighteen miles off the northern coast of Venezuela. It is about 1,100 miles southeast of Miami, Florida. Sixteen miles long and four miles wide, it has a population of some 35,000 people composed of nearly every nationality under heaven. Situated upon its southeastern tip is the world's largest producing oil refinery.

Ever since 1928, members of the Reorganized Church have been residents of Aruba and during most of the period from then until the present, have held regular services there. When the island was first selected as a suitable spot for refining the petroleum produced in Venezuela, a call for construction workers, craftsmen, and operators extended to the Sugar Creek refinery in Independence where several members of our church were then employed. Two of them pioneered in accepting a contract to go to Aruba. When they arrived at the personnel office of the hiring company in New York, they were asked if they knew anyone else they could recommend to go to Aruba. They certainly did! The names they submitted were all of L. D. S. people, and as a result ten church families were residing in Aruba by 1930.

A colony of refinery employees was formed, and the first religious services within this group were held by priesthood members of our church. As many as fifteen different families of our people have been residents of Aruba from that day until now.

I arrived in Aruba in October of 1941. When my wife joined me four months later, there were five families beside our own worshipping together each week in the homes. Throughout the five war years, we met regularly to study such material as Cheville's Bible in Everyday Living, Edwards' Fundamentals, and the Doctrine and Covenants. Since I am a priest, my arrival made possible a Communion service each month; I was assisted by Walter Scott, a teacher.

War struck Aruba in no uncertain terms. Six days after my wife and small son arrived, the refinery was shelled by submarines. This attack introduced two years of unrelieved, monotonous blackout, and street lights became only something to dream about. The long nights I spent on shift work provided time for conversation with crew members in the stills, and more often than not, during the early morning hours, underneath the Southern Cross, our conversation would swing around to God, social ills, gospel, church—and I would then find opportunity to tell a little more about the gospel of the kingdom. Many of the locally hired men, from British Guiana, Surinam (Dutch Guiana), and even the more phlegmatic Arubans, all showed an interest in what I had to say about the church of my choice. In fact, such interest was developed among some that I am certain a great work could be accomplished if we were able as a church to send missionaries to the countries from which these men came.

While the Herald published our address during the war years, many merchant marine and servicemen visited us. Usually, we had non-member friends attending our study classes. One conversion resulted from such attendance.

Vernon Turner, who is still residing in Aruba, and I used to attend the Men's Forum, a study class held each Sunday morning in conjunction with the community church school. We were the only Latter Day Saints in the group during my stay; all the rest were members of orthodox Protestant churches. I think there is little doubt in the minds of most of those members of the class regarding what Latter Day Saints believe about the creation, revelation, divinity of Christ, principles of the gospel, and social objectives of Christianity. At various times, members of this group would attend our class during the week. At one time, I was invited to discuss, in the wake of a young Utah Mormon elder's lecture on "Mormonism," the differences between his church and mine. The group was a compact one, and at one stage in the presentation of my message, I exhibited my volumes of Brigham Young's Journal of Discourses, permitting them to read for themselves the doctrines Young introduced into the Restored Gospel.

All in all, we found comparatively little prejudice against our people there. Perhaps Latter Day Saints are best known in Aruba as "those folks who don't smoke, drink, or play the national lottery." But I hope that we are better remembered for some of the more positive gospel precepts which our little group tried to live and teach. Although we were nearly 3,000 miles away from the center place, each family's main topic of conversation had to do with their gathering to Zion. Nearly all own homes in Zion or her stakes, and their children have been instructed in the faith and have attended Graceland College. There aren't many members left in Aruba at present, but were you to go there, you would find a real Latter Day Saint welcome.

had no need to go outside the colony unless we chose. But the fun of being in a foreign land lay in the possibility of seeing people and costumes strange to us. Our greatest enjoyment came from exploring the island and poking into the little shops and stores in the towns.

One of our favorite picnicking spots was a remote palm grove which we found by accident one day. The road leading to it was so bad that any motorist with regard for his tires avoided it, but our curiosity being stronger than our thrift, we had to see where it led. The view from the last hill was breath-taking and worth a flat tire. Here we could see a small green valley tucked between two high barren hills, waving lacy fronds of stately palm trees, white sand, and the blue, blue of the rolling ocean beyond! We often found the native who owned the valley working among his palm trees, clearing away fallen fronds or gathering the nuts. He would slice the top from a young nut with a couple blows of his machete and present it for us to drink, without a drop spilled.

We found the natives to be a friendly, gracious people. Those indigenous to Aruba are of Carib Indian stock, and though the refinery has drawn all nationalities from surrounding islands and countries, the Aruban stays aloof from the mixed peoples except when working in the refinery. Most of them prefer to raise aloes on their little patches of farmland scattered over the barren hills. They seldom intermarry with those of other islands. The women stay close at home and, true to Latin American tradition, girls never go out without their mothers until they are married. Few older women are literate. Their homes are clean and neat though devoid of all the furnishings we deem essential. Their wages compare favorably to those received in the States, but they have little money left for luxuries, since they commonly must provide food for families of eight to twelve children.

On Sunday, everyone dresses up in his best and goes to visit his friends. Walking is the common method of travel, but it is not unusual to see the man of the family riding along on a tiny burro while his wife and children trudge on foot behind him. The children and young people seem to vie in their attempts to be the most colorfully dressed, all shades of red and brilliant greens and blues being in high favor. The mothers and grandmothers cling to the traditional costume of ankle-length, long-sleeved dresses in all-white or all-black with matching scarf covering head and shoulders. On weekdays, the children dispense with clothing —it is much cooler that way and saves laundry!

We spent many hours driving about the island, trying to converse with the people in their own language, visiting in their homes, and learning how they live. Our two sons, one of whom was born in Aruba, were taught to make no class distinction between the brown-skinned, naked children they met out on the island, and their white playmates in the colony. Before leaving Aruba, they devoted one day to giving their old toys to just the right family of native children without toys of their own.

Living nearly five years in a foreign land has deepened our awareness of the need of the kingdom. It has also stimulated a desire to see other Latin American countries, and we have set Central America as our next goal.

Communion at the Independence Sanitarium

For several years, Brother V. C. Bailey and I have taken the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to the Saints who are patients or employees of the Sanitarium at 6:40 a.m. In the chapel, we conduct a brief devotional and serve the emblems to the nurses before they report for duty. Returning again at 9:30, we are supplied a list of the members who desire the Communion. Accompanied by a nurse, we go to the individual rooms. Upon entering, we are introduced by the nurse to the patients, then we tell them that we have brought the bread and wine to them, which is served after a prayer of blessing is pronounced upon all in the room. After a handclasp and word of cheer, we go on to the next room. If administration is requested, we return later. The emblems are served in the dining hall for those who work in the kitchen. This service requires about three hours.

In my twenty-eight years of ministry, I have never enjoyed God's Spirit more than when helping the sick and suffering. There is nothing more gratifying than the appreciation of one who thinks he is forgotten in his hour of need and trial. I keep a list of all patients to whom we administer the Communion and continue to visit them as long as they are in the hospital.

DEATHS

GUNSOLLEY.—Julius Franklin, son of Noah M. and Mary E. Gunsolley, was born August 27, 1864, at Forestville, Iowa, and died February 28, 1947, at the Jackson County Emergency Hospital in Little Blue, Missouri. Moving to western Iowa as a boy, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Mondamin on October 7, 1884. For sixty-three years, he was faithful to his covenant, a student of church literature, and a ready speaker. He was married to Anne Pearsall on October 4, 1891; three children were born to this union. Mrs. Gunsolley and a son Arthur, preceded him in death. He attended Graceland College in 1895, the year of its opening, and returned in 1916 as superintendent of buildings and grounds—a position he held for three years. His chosen profession was that of a miller and millwright. He loved music, and in his retiring years made and repaired violins. He also gave violin lessons.

He is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Mabel Leibold and Mrs. Ola Savage, both of Independence, Missouri; a brother, J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; a sister, Mrs. Stella Wiley, Pittsburg, Kansas; six grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home in Independence, Evangelist F. A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LaPOINTE.—Janet Lee, was born August 30, 1941, in Ottumwa, Iowa, and died March 14, 1947, at her home in Ottumwa. She was blessed by Bishop Henry Livingston at the Reorganized Church in Ottumwa on October 12, 1941, and was a regular church-attender. Throughout her year of illness, she displayed a beautiful faith, even in the last month of intense suffering.

She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Myron F. LaPointe; two sisters: Joy and Sally Anne; her paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Orié LaPointe; her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Earl E. Leach; and her great-grandmother, Mrs. Elme LaPointe, all of Ottumwa. The funeral was held at the church in Ottumwa with E. J.

Gleazer, Jr., officiating. Six children from Garfield School where Janet attended kindergarten sang "Jesus Loves Me" and "The Child of Galilee." Interment was in Shaul Cemetery.

STERRETT.—Charles Edward, son of William and Permelia Sterrett, was born October 7, 1860, at Pleasant Grove, Utah, and died February 9, 1947, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on January 17, 1871. While in Utah, he and his brothers managed a kiln where bricks for the first brick church in Pleasant Grove were made. On November 15, 1885, he was married to Helena Sorenson; seven children were born to this union. The family moved to Independence, Missouri, in 1903 where Mrs. Sterrett died ten years later. Mr. Sterrett later married Sarah Rudd, who preceded him in death in 1940.

He is survived by one son, Anthony Blaine of Independence; five grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home in Independence, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ANTHONY.—Leona, daughter of Tella and Livona Gregory, was born September 1, 1893, at English, Indiana, and passed away at her home in Troy, Indiana, on March 14, 1947. She was married to Frank Anthony on December 14, 1910; six children were born to this union. Both she and Mr. Anthony were baptized into the Reorganized Church at East St. Louis on June 21, 1925. She was a true Saint, a faithful companion, a loving mother, and friend to many.

She is survived by her husband; four sons: Wilmer and Wilbur of East St. Louis, Illinois; Herbert and Harold of Troy; two daughters: Mrs. Belya Sabelhaus of Tell City, Indiana; and Berneta of the home; a sister; and six grandchildren. Elder Irvin Clark Glenn was in charge of the funeral service.

BRYANT.—Sallie Ann, was born near Hearne, Texas, on March 22, 1880, and died December 18, 1946, in Hearne. On January 27, 1894, she was married to James Lewis Bryant; twelve children were born to this union. Mr. Bryant died on December 19, 1946, and a double funeral service was held with Elder C. W. Tischer of Houston, Texas, officiating. Interment was in the McClanahan Cemetery.

BRYANT.—James Lewis, was born on January 2, 1873, near Hearne, Texas, and died December 19, 1946, at Hearne. His wife, Sallie, preceded him in death by only a few hours. Surviving are twelve children, thirty-seven grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. Elder C. W. Tischer officiated at the double funeral service which was held December 21. Burial was in the McClanahan Cemetery.

COCHRAN.—William I., was born March 2, 1872, in Kansas City, Missouri, and died December 22, 1946, in Chicago where he had made his home for fifty years. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1887, being ordained a priest in 1898 and an elder in 1927. He was active in the work of Central Chicago Branch until his death.

He leaves two sons: Fred of Chicago, and Harold of Manteno, Illinois; three daughters: Mrs. Virginia Nelson and Mrs. Grace Abrasart of Chicago, and Mrs. Helen Braun of St. Louis, Missouri; two sisters: Mrs. Pearl Smith and Mrs. Ethel Smith of Independence, Missouri; one brother, Edgar Cochran of Wichita, Kansas; and four grandchildren. Services were held at the Heinen Funeral home, Elder Joseph Baldwin officiating. Interment was in Beverly Cemetery.

DEARBORN.—Thomas Kent, was born February 10, 1947, at the University Hospital in Iowa City, Iowa, and died there on February 11. Funeral services were held at the hospital, Dr. Daihen officiating. Interment was in the Jefferson, Iowa, cemetery, with Reverend Reese conducting the graveside rites. He leaves his parents, Fred and Martha Dearborn; a brother, Freddie; and his grandparents: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dearborn of Aurora, Missouri, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Brandt of Jefferson, Iowa.

MILLER.—Clara A., was born August 10, 1867, and died February 11, 1947. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on December 28, 1890; the people of Southern Wisconsin District will long remember her as a faithful member.

She is survived by a son, Frank, with whom she made her home in Madison, Wisconsin; a daughter, Mrs. Celia Piper of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; eight grandchildren, and ten great-grandchildren.

SLAYTON.—Otto Earl, son of Robert O. and Hannah Slayton, was born near Haven, Kansas, on January 13, 1877, and died in Independence, Missouri, on January 9, 1947. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Eagle City, Oklahoma, on October 12, 1913. At the organization of Eagle City Branch, he was ordained to the office of teacher. On October 23, 1945, he moved from Canton, Oklahoma, to Independence.

He is survived by his wife; one daughter, Mrs. Christa Fountain, of Independence; and three sons: George E. and Otho E. of Independence, and Robert O. of Canton. Funeral services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home; Seventy Z. Z. Renfro, assisted by Elder Hubert Case, officiated. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

COOPER.—Jean Provan, was born April 17, 1879, in Braidwood, Illinois, and passed away February 23, 1947, in Chicago, Illinois. On April 25, 1896, she was married to John L. Cooper; five children were born to this union. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at East Delevan, Wisconsin, on August 31, 1889. From the year 1920 until their death, she and her companion devoted their lives to the ministry of the church, serving in the Eastern Illinois District, Omaha, Nebraska, and Kirtland, Ohio.

She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Maude Cook, Mrs. Ruth Wahlgren, and Mrs. Irene Scribner; two sons: Marion F. and John F.; and one brother, James F. Keir. She was laid to rest beside her companion in the Plano, Illinois, cemetery.

BURKS.—The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Burks of Afton, Oklahoma, died February 15 in the Vinita Hospital, Vinita, Oklahoma; she was born February 13. Funeral services were held in the local funeral home, Elder Guy G. Cadwell of Independence, Kansas, officiating. Burial was in the Ketchum Cemetery.

MAGARGE.—Byrdie M., was born August 9, 1880, in Greenville, Pennsylvania, and died February 24, 1947, at Independence, Missouri. She was married to William Magargee on March 11, 1903, at Osborn, Pennsylvania. They moved to Kansas in 1909, then to Michigan, and to Independence in 1930. Mrs. Magargee was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1914; she and her husband both were active in various branches throughout Michigan and Independence.

She leaves her husband, William; three sons: Lamont of Kansas City, Missouri; Charles of Sibley, Missouri; and Melville of the home; one daughter, Mrs. Birdie Kelley of Sibley; a brother, George Calvin of McKeesport, Pennsylvania; a sister, Joan Keen of Warren, Ohio; and seven grandchildren. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery in Independence.

HANDLEN.—Sarah Adelia, daughter of DeLorna and Eletha Parish, was born on September 29, 1870, in Hazel Dell Township, Iowa, and died at the Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on January 30, 1947. She was married to Franklin Ferris Handlen on May 6, 1890; five children were born to this union. One daughter, Lora Mae, preceded her mother in death.

Surviving are her husband; three sons: Vere P. of McClelland, Iowa; Leslie and Lynn of Council Bluffs; a daughter, Mrs. Charles Peters of Woodbine, Iowa; ten grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Woodring Parlors in Council Bluffs, Seventy E. Y. Hunker and Elder Nels P. Johnson officiating. Interment was in the Grange Cemetery.

KUYKENDALL.—Mary Dell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Andrew Desmuke, was born November 18, 1855, in San Antonio, Texas, and died January 24, 1947, at the home of her daughter in Miami, Oklahoma. She was married to Andrew Briggs Kuykendall on July 26, 1876, at San Antonio; ten children were born to this union. Mr. Kuykendall and six children preceded her in death. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1878 and was a frequent contributor to the Saints'

Herald, Autumn Leaves, and Zion's Hope. For a number of years, she was a school-teacher; she also assisted her father in caring for the sick. Two sons, three grandsons, and five great-grandsons were called to the priesthood.

She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Fred Smith of San Antonio; Mrs. Joseph Harp of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Matt Crownover of Miami, Oklahoma; a son, Glau R. Kuykendall of Hatfield, Arkansas; thirty-four grandchildren, sixty-five great-grandchildren, and twenty-five great-great-grandchildren. Elder B. F. Kiser officiated at the funeral service held in the Miami Reorganized Church, after which the body was taken to San Antonio where Elder H. E. Winegar conducted a second service. She was laid to rest beside her husband in Oak Wood Cemetery.

CONDIT.—David S., was born at Little Sioux, Iowa, on January 5, 1866, and died February 13, 1947, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was a member of the Reorganized Church and held the office of teacher. On March 20, 1887, he was married to Mary Ann McEvers; nine children were born to this union, eight of which preceded their father in death. He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Mrs. Gladys Reynolds; four grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren.

Donald Lents, pastor of the Walnut Park Church, was in charge of the funeral service with Glaude Smith, pastor of Stone Church, giving the sermon.

PHELPS.—Joseph Franklin, son of Robert H. and Lillian Archer Phelps, was born near Bloomfield, Iowa, on September 6, 1879, and passed away February 23, 1947, at Palisade, Nebraska. He was married to Bertha Mock on April 17, 1907; three daughters and one son were born to this marriage, all of whom survive him. In October, 1929, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by Elder E. J. Lenox at Culbertson, Nebraska. The Reverend Glen Marshall officiated at the funeral. Burial was in the Trenton, Nebraska, cemetery.

CHOATE.—Delia Ann, was born June 24, 1883, at Tunnelhill, Illinois, and died February 24, 1947, after several months' illness. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for over fifty years. Surviving are her husband, Charles; one daughter, Mrs. Iva Mae Thompson; a sister, Dora Sutton of Ulla, Illinois; a brother, Samuel Simmons, Marion, Illinois; and three grandchildren. Elder Joseph Baldwin conducted the funeral services in Chicago, where Mrs. Choate had lived since 1927. Burial was in the Webb Town Cemetery near Marion.

RESURRECTION

P. S.

He loved earth's joy and beauty
Under the shining sun,
And grieved that Light had died
When day was done.

So, through the long night's darkness
He mourned for beauty gone
Forgetting it awaited
Another dawn.

And when Death knocked upon his door
To bear a Soul away
He thought, while waiting darkly there
His soul, too, died that day.

That night, across a starless sky
Light shone; and hope reborn Recalled God's promises
And Resurrection Morn.

Beyond, the Land Immortal—
Beyond, love never dies.
Death is the humble portal
Of Paradise.

* The International Front

Among the friendliest of people are our Conference visitors from the British Isles. Gracious, charming, and agreeable, they have won their way into the affections of everybody. Apostle Arthur A. Oakman's home, naturally, was the first to welcome them here, since he had been in charge of the European Mission and knew them all very well.

Friday evening before Conference, the visitors were entertained at a reception at Bartholomew Hall, Independence, where acquaintance was established with the official personnel of the church headquarters. In the foyer and meeting places of the Conference, they have made themselves friendly to everyone.

The group includes Bishop A. T. Trapp and Sister Trapp, Elder James Barrington, Elder Charles Cousins and Sister Cousins, Elder Joseph Holmes and Sister Holmes, Brother Eric King, Sister Ada Meredith, Sister Beryl Meredith, and Sister Molly Maloney. Also among our British friends here are Elder T. E. Worth and Sister Worth, engaged for a time in missionary work here. There is also a fine group of British and Australian young people visiting the Conference from Graceland College this year.

Another gathering that included many of these visitors was a dinner given for them by Bishop and Sister Mark H. Siegfried. It was a happy, cordial occasion, and an opportunity for the editor to become much better acquainted with them. Apostle John W. Rushton was with them and added much to the pleasure of the gathering. And may we suggest that the home of Brother and Sister Siegfried might well be called "International House of Independence," since so many have been entertained there, not only from all States, but from most countries of the world where we have members. Not long ago, there was a gathering of the German Saints of Independence, to give help and information to Brother and Sister M. A. McConley before their departure for the European Mission. Brother and Sister Siegfried have done great good in this way.

* Sanitarium

The beautiful foyer of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is one of the most familiar views seen by visitors to the Conference who take the trouble to visit this church and community institution. We are proud of the "San" and the splendid work it does. In keeping with its efficiency under the direction of Miss Gertrude Copeland, is this fine entrance, which matches the arrangements of the rest of this excellent building.

* An amusing incident occurred at the Thursday business session when President Israel A. Smith soberly admonished: "Delegates are requested, please do not use the delegations' standards as hatracks!"

* Experience

Dorothy Thompson, writing in the "Saturday Review of Literature" for March 15, telling about "The Last Time I Saw Berlin," which was recently, creates a vivid and memorable statement about the people: "The unbridgeable chasm between myself and them was the chasm which would exist between people who had been to hell and those who had not."

There are days, and sometimes years of suffering, especially of loved ones, which can turn the brightest corner of heaven into the most painful depths of hell; and only those who have been through it can understand what it means. You can read about it or hear about it, but you will never know until you go there yourself. The sufficient reason, of course, why Christ himself descended into the pit.

Impressions of the Conference

The spirit of a General Conference can be gauged by the attendance at the business sessions. It is a pleasure to report that attendance at business sessions in this Conference is larger than ever before, if one may judge by the space filled without taking an actual count. Crowds keep the main floor comfortably filled, and spread over most of the balcony. Business sessions are not what would be generally called a good show, unless some colorful personality like our veteran, Brother Gomer T. Griffiths, arises to speak his piece in language that brings laughter from the farthest seats in the place. Other bits of color and drama are added when friends arise to support, with somewhat fulsome praise, the candidates for ordination, and when the ordinations are conducted. Relief from routine is provided in music and little ceremonies honoring church veterans. But in general the business sessions are serious, and good attendance is a good sign.

A number of people have been discussing the unity of this General Conference. A spirit of harmony has prevailed almost without a break. No disturbing element has made an appearance. Even the chronic eccentrics appear jovial in spite of themselves. One man said that sometimes an appearance of harmony is merely apathy. It is not that in this case. The people are alert, interested, intelligent, and expectant. They look to the future with hope. They are interested in plans for specific action. They want to do something, and they want it to be right. Harmony and unity grow out of good sense, common understanding, and desire to work together.

It is a friendly gathering. It gives a tremendous lift to heart and mind to meet old friends, some of them not seen for years. On what other occasion, and in what other place, could one meet so many? Thoughts and experiences are exchanged, ideas are traded, and above all one learns again what he had always hoped, that the people one has cared for so much still care that much for him. Friendship is still one of the most beautiful, enduring, precious values in the world. Whoever has friends has riches; and whoever has none is poor.

And then there is the great opportunity of meeting and making friends of new people. One feels like quoting Margaret Lee Runbeck's dear little sprite, Miss Boo, who said, "Strangers are only the friends you haven't met yet." Have you ever thought of that—all the friends you haven't met? Conference is a great place to take care of incomplete friendships.

The exhibits are fine educational features of the General Conference.

Most visitors were very much impressed by the very elaborate and beautiful exhibit of the Australasian Mission, which was organized by Apostle and Sister C. G. Mesley and many assistants. Creative imagination enters into every feature of it: for instance, "A Royal Welcome" with pictures of His Majesty George VI, Queen Elizabeth, and also H. R. H. Princess Elizabeth, making a lovely group at the entrance. One is impressed by photos of the alps of New Zealand, the "Switzerland of the Southern Hemisphere." The history of the mission is represented in pictures of pioneers, such as Glauud Roger, C. W. Wandell, and others. Then there are scenes of timbering, the cattle country, industry, agriculture, and the arts. Seashore and mountains provide settings for ideal vacation lands, of which Tiona reunion ground is one of the loveliest. Brother Mesley is willing to be responsible for the statement that "Adelaide is one of the most beautiful cities in the world." Probably most Australians would agree, but would make a contest if he had said, "the most beautiful in Australia." Patriarch C. A. Dickinson, of Sydney, Australia, contributed to the Joint Council a beautiful hardwood table having on its top an inlaid map of Australia. It is a work of exquisite skill and craftsmanship. Brother Dickinson is a furniture manufacturer. The base of the table was made in United States to save shipping space. Canberra, the capital of Australia, is one of the few "planned" cities of the world. A new beginning was made, so an ideal plan was possible. Other fine exhibits are there: the water color paintings of Brother Jarvis Arnold, rated the leading Australian painter of eucalyptus forest scenes, and certainly they create a desire to go to see these great woods. Then there is the beautiful handmade linen communion tablecloth, done by a Sister Davis, who expended more than 450 hours of labor upon it. "Somebody planted a seed," is the theme of the educational part of the exhibit, and some excellent publications are displayed.

Other excellent exhibits at the Conference are those of the Department of Religious Education, very helpful for all workers in this field; and the visual aids department. The fine book displays of the Herald Bookstore were arranged by Jeanne Scott Miller and her assistants. The Independence Sanitarium exhibit is both interesting and educational, and all people would be helped by seeing it.

These are but a few impressions

Changes in

QUORUM OF TWELVE

To the Quorums and Councils of the Church and to the General Conference:

For some time I have given prayerful consideration to the church and its present needs, in harmony with the call for prayer, and I am directed to present the following as the will of the Lord:

1. The unity among my people and in the councils of the church is commendable. If those of the priesthood will perform their responsibilities in good fellowship, and sustain each other, they will be supported by the faith and prayers of the church and the work will go forward with increasing power.

2. To fill vacancies already existing, let Roscoe E. Davey and Maurice L. Draper, now serving as Seventies, be ordained apostles and occupy with their brethren in the Quorum of Twelve.

3. My servant John W. Rushton has served his generation and the church long and faithfully, and he is honorably released from further responsibility as a member of the Quorum of Twelve, continuing to minister in his priesthood as he can and may desire, without specific assignment. His works are with me and his reward is sure.

4. W. Wallace Smith is called and should be ordained an apostle and take his place in the councils of the church. This call was made known before, but my servant withheld it from the body for reasons that he believed were sufficient.

5. The church is admonished again that all movements toward Zion and the gathering and temporalities connected therewith are within my law, and all things should be done in order, the advice and counsel of the elders and of the Bishop and his council be sought and honored when received, as before enjoined, though of necessity their counsel when given is not intended to dictate or to deny any man his agency. The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies, but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.

Respectfully submitted this 7th day of April, 1947.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Apostle John W. Rushton

Bids Farewell to Quorum of Twelve

At the momentous opening session of the General Conference, Apostle John W. Rushton received honorable release in a revelation to the church, from his long period of service since April 20, 1902. Not trusting extemporaneous address, he read a prepared farewell, which deeply moved the entire body of the Conference.

IT IS FORTY-FIVE YEARS ago I accepted ordination as a member of the Quorum of Twelve under the inspiration of Joseph Smith at Lamoni.

The years which have intervened have been eventful and momentous to the world and the church. Beginning my ministry under the leadership of Joseph Smith, I was privileged to enjoy the ministry and friendship of many of the most famous men and women of the church. I have seen the movement grow from 30,000, maybe less, to its present strength.

After a long and active career serving the church in many responsible fields, in all of which I had the cheerful and encouraging support of the gracious lady who for forty-nine years has been my wife, and in which I have had the friendship, hospitality, and countless kindnesses of many in the church world; to me, it is now a gracious thing that cessation from administrative responsibility has come this way. For some years I have been in official intimacy with those whose names are immortalized in the history of the church, through whom I have learned to appreciate the values which belong to the mission and message of the Latter Day work. Now, looking back over the years, I count it a rare privilege to have been able to assist in carrying the torch which they relinquished, I trust, further and higher.

Naturally, with the passing years changes must come, and after nearly half a century of activities in the front lines, it is pleasant to anticipate a period of contemplative quiet, in which while not relieved of the opportunity of service, I shall be free to do the things I desire.

So, I shall look forward to continuing a happy ministry in preaching and teaching in my home state of California, and also to take time to review my diaries and papers with a view to placing my experiences and observations on record, thus communicating whatever values they may have to the benefitting of others.

I rejoice to see the dawning of an era of peace, good will, and fellowship which the church has entered upon, and rejoice with you in expressing our gratitude for the financial prosperity which marks the present experience of the church. I hope also that in coming days there will come to realization the dreams and hopes which we have cherished together with some long since dead; but their faithful lives still speak of the coming of the Kingdom. We welcome the increase of the numbers of young men whose eager and efficient consecration qualifies them to take up the work where some of us must lay it down, and feel grateful that they can bring to their task talents and abilities of better and more refined quality than some of us, who by force of circumstances were denied those qualifications.

It is our prayer that God, who has been the source of power and inspiration to those who have made their contribution and have passed to their reward, continue to grant to them as his servants all needed grace and help. I bid farewell to the old ties and associations with regret that such happy relationships as we have enjoyed for so long must be severed, but shall hope to continue to enjoy the memories of the friendship which through the years have been developed, and by which my life has been abundantly enriched.

May divine grace and blessing attend you all from the President of the church to the newest and humblest member, who find their happiness in laboring for the fulfillment of God's purpose.

Thoughts

By Winifred Milner

Thoughts can be such little things,
And yet they reach so far;
If I think folks are friendly,
Then that's the way they are.

I think the world's against me,
And then I'm apt to be
The touchy, unkind person
I always hate to see.

I think my friends don't like me;
I moan and groan and sigh,
My face is long and cloudy,
I wish that I could die.

But if my thoughts go soaring
To reach beyond the sky
My face will catch the essence
Of stars and magnify,

Until my heart is opened
To hold the shining ray
That sets the world a-winging
And puts God in my day.

Summary of the General Conference

Weather that was cool and fair replaced the long, rainy spell that had kept Independence in a sodden condition more than a week preceding the General Conference. Visitors and hosts alike were grateful for the change. Registration of the home folk and a few early arrivals began on Friday, and was reaching into the hundreds on Saturday.

SUNDAY, APRIL 6

The very first activity of the Conference was the priesthood prayer meeting in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church. But even so early, crowds of people were arriving at the Auditorium, knowing that seats would be scarce or impossible to find long before the great Communion service would begin. About nine o'clock the preparatory music began, and in a half hour the service itself was under way. All seats were taken, many were standing in the corridors, and at Stone Church, some hundreds were turned away. It is estimated that nearly nine thousand persons received the Communion at the two services, and some hundreds of others were served immediately afterward.

Floral Hills Pageant

Not officially a part of the Conference, but always a feature of it, was the Easter pageant at Floral Hills Memorial Gardens, under the sponsorship of Dr. L. E. Faris, president of the organization. An estimated thirty thousand persons witnessed and heard this pageant in the beautiful amphitheater. It is presented annually by the White Masque Players, our church dramatic organization, with Ralph Freeman as director. This was the fourteenth annual presentation of the pageant, all of them under the direction of and staffed with church people. A memorial to the author, June Whiting Lea, who passed away last December 7, was written by Miss Frances Hartman and read by Stephen Black. A large cast, including Garland E. Tickemyer, pastor of the Los Angeles church, as the Christ, gave the pageant, and Apostle C. G. Mesley delivered the Easter Sermon.

Choral Concert

A notable musical event of the Conference was the presentation of Mozart's Requiem, under the direction of Franklyn S. Weddle. To this fine production, the following contributed: the Messiah Choir, the Graceland A Cappella Chorus, Bethel Davis Knoche, organist, and the soloists, Josephine C. Mader, soprano; Jeannette Nichols, contralto; Henry Anderson, tenor; and Clarence Farrar, bass. Brother Weddle, our Director of Music, is doing a splendid work in his field.

The President's Address

Sunday afternoon, President Israel A. Smith delivered the opening address to the Conference, "Advance Through Storm," a copy of which was made available and published in an earlier issue of this paper. In thoughtful words and scholarly style, President Smith allayed unreasonable fears and charted a course of advance for the church.

Apostle John W. Rushton was the speaker at the Auditorium on Sunday evening, and brought a message on the subject of "Enduring Values," showing how we find God in nature, in human history, and in the Scriptures.

MONDAY, APRIL 7

The regular routine of prayer meetings, quorum sessions, classes, and other special interests began on Monday morning, to continue throughout the week.

The Business Session

The first business session of the General Conference of 1947 opened with a colorful flag ceremony conducted by Apostle C. G. Mesley, immediately following musical numbers, a saxophone solo by Evelyn Tomlinson and a baritone solo by Homer Gatchitt. After the ceremonial placing of the large American Flag and the Church Flag at the front of the rostrum by Boy Scouts, Apostle Mesley took charge, and presented the flags of the nations in whose territories the church is represented by missions: the United States, Great Britain, Canada, France (for Tahiti), Australia, Holland, Hawaii (for U.S.A.), Denmark, New Zealand, Switzerland, Palestine, Germany, Spain (for the Cayman Islands) Poland, and the Christian Flag.

Another colorful and pleasing ceremony was the unveiling of a beautiful oil portrait of the late President Frederick M. Smith in a fine gilt frame, by Artist Lennon Bandel. The presentation was made by Mrs. Stephen Black for the Daughters of Zion, who sponsored and supported the project.

The great event of the Conference was the presentation of the revelation received by President Israel A. Smith. According to custom, President Smith retired during the consideration of the document. The Conference was deeply moved as they heard the words that announced the retirement of Apostle John W. Rushton from his quorum, in which he has served with honor and distinction since the year 1902. Brother Rushton, not trusting himself to extemporaneous speech, read a prepared statement which appears elsewhere in this issue.

To fill the vacancies in the Quorum of Twelve, the following men were called: Roscoe E. Davey, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, a president of Seventy; Maurice L. Draper, of Brewton, Alabama; and W. Wallace Smith, of Portland, Oregon.

At Stone Church Monday evening, E. Y. Hunker, Senior President of Seventy, was the speaker. At the Auditorium, President Israel A. Smith delivered the graduation address for the Class of 1947, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing.

Other events, such as the drama, "Family Portrait," a production of the White Masque Players at the Stone Church Annex, drew considerable numbers of people on Monday evening. Many others stayed after the meeting at the Auditorium to see the film, "The Campus Shop at Work," showing the activity of the now well-known organization there.

TUESDAY, APRIL 8

Bishop A. T. Trapp of England gave the invocation at the opening of the Tuesday business session. Then E. Y. Hunker, Senior President of Seventy, took charge for a ceremony in which Elder Hubert Case, who had served in the seventy from 1897 until 1944, was given special recognition and honor. Other eminent church men who had long served in the seventy were seated on the rostrum with him; the present seventies under appointment beautifully rendered a number of missionary songs, and all men who had ever served in the seventy were invited to the platform to participate in the service, and sang, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," a famous missionary hymn.

John W. Rushton, lately of the Twelve, offered a resolution to send a message to the President of the United States, which was unanimously approved. The message is given herewith:

April 7, 1947

*The Honorable Harry S. Truman,
President of the United States of America:*

Many thousands of ministers, officers, and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, representing the universal church, gathered together here in Independence, Missouri, for their 1947 conference, send greetings and express their heartfelt appreciation for the excellent statesmanship with which you have met the unique and complex problems of these trying times.

The warm, sympathetic characteristics of your relationship with so many of the stricken nations of our restless world in which there is so much hunger and distress and misery, together with your sincere and humble desire to unite diverse elements of our great citizenry into a true brotherhood, whose benefits may be enjoyed by all, have won our confidence and esteem.

In pledging our loyalty and support to you, as the Chief Magistrate of this great Republic, we offer the prayer that Almighty God may richly bless you with health and wisdom and ability as you continue to guide with assurance in all that belongs to the dignity, welfare, and ideals of our beloved country.

Ordination of New Apostles

Another high point of the Conference was reached in the ordination service arranged for the induction of the three new members into the Quorum of Twelve. Hymn 415, "We Thank Thee, O God," was sung, and Apostle D. T. Williams offered the invocation. The calls of the three men were announced, and they came forward as hymn 389,

"Men of God, Go Take Your Stations" was sung, taking their places in chairs facing the congregation. Garland E. Tickemyer, pastor of the Los Angeles church, sang, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains." Roscoe E. Davey was ordained by Apostles Paul M. Hanson and Arthur A. Oakman; Maurice L. Draper was ordained by Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Charles R. Hield; and W. Wallace Smith was ordained by Apostles D. Blair Jensen and C. George Mesley. Afterward, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Twelve; and President Israel A. Smith shook hands with the new men and welcomed them to their duties, and the service concluded as the congregation sang hymn 213, "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee."

The deadline for the introduction of new business was set at Thursday, April 10, at three o'clock p.m. The date for the next General Conference was set for Sunday, October 3, 1948, with the anticipation that the succeeding Conference would begin on April 6, 1950, and that thereafter the church would hold biennial conferences.

New Evangelists

Recommendations for calling and ordaining four men to the office of Evangelist were received and approved. These men are: Henry Castings of Des Moines, Iowa; J. J. Ledsworth of Port Huron, Michigan; Willard Hield of Denver, Colorado; and Leslie S. Wight of Chicago, Illinois.

The Auditorium was occupied with a rehearsal and preparation for a later program on Tuesday evening, so preaching services were held at the Stone Church, Apostle Charles R. Hield speaking in the upper chamber, and Evangelist Ray Whiting in the lower chamber. "Family Portrait," a drama of the family of Jesus, continued to draw appreciative crowds at the Stone Church Annex. A civic enterprise in which

Will a Man Rob God?

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

A sermon delivered at Walnut Park Church, Independence, Missouri, January 12, 1947.
Scripture reading, Malachi 3: 6-18.

FOR A NUMBER of weeks this text has been with me, "Will a man rob God?" There is more in this text than the subject of tithing.

At this time of the year we take inventory, I trust, not only of our worldly goods, but what we have been doing with our time, and what we propose to do with the time that yet remains. Some of us cannot help, by virtue of our responsibility, looking back through the pages of church history, and in the light of what is transpiring in the world about us and by virtue of the claims we make as the restored Church of Jesus Christ, feel a specific responsibility for the sons and daughters of men. We may also ask ourselves, To what extent have we as a church served the purpose of our Creator in the one hundred seventeen years that have passed since he authorized the organization of this church?

The more I read the third chapter of Malachi, the more I see in it. The prophet like every prophet before him and since, was concerned for the lives of the men and women he came to serve. The condition in which he found this people was responsible for the prophetic messages that he delivered under divine inspiration.

Malachi should have considerable authority with us because the angel of the Restoration referred to this prophet in the coming forth of the Latter Day work. I believe with all my heart and soul that the first verse of this chapter refers to the time in which you and I live, when it tells that the Lord would send a Messenger to prepare the way before him. This was not a reference to the first coming of Christ, for the type of work that would be carried on would take place before the Lord would suddenly come to his temple; and the question was raised, "Who may abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when he appeareth?" That would not apply to his first coming, for outside of the shepherds and Wise Men, who were divinely notified, very few people were conscious of the great event that took place when the Son of God was born on this earth. What I have to present is definitely related to this period in which you and I now live.

"Will a man rob God?"

LET US NOTICE some of the statements that the prophet makes in connection with that thought. Even a wicked man would be loath to rob God. I used to think that one of the safest places to put your money would be in a church treasury, yet in this age in which we live, thieves break into the church and into the alms box. I have not heard of any Latter Day Saints' churches being robbed; perhaps there is a reason for that. Occasionally we learn of someone embezzling in a church, but it is a rare occasion, because even a man who does not claim to be religious has a certain fear of touching that which might be associated with Deity; so when the prophet asked the question, "Will a man rob God?" the people knew that he was not thinking of their taking away something that belonged to God, something that had been placed on God's altar. That is true, but nevertheless these people were robbers, and they knew it, and like most others with guilty consciences, they did not need an accuser.

The people replied to the question, "Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings?" They knew they had not been paying God's tithe. (You notice I called it God's tithe. The tithe belongs to God whether you pay it or not.) The prophet went on to say, "Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me; even this whole nation." The whole nation! Nationally they were suffering as the consequence of the failure to do what God required them to do. "You are cursed with a curse."

Don't get the notion that you and I are worshiping a God who would deliberately curse an individual who refused to do what God asked him to do. God does not curse anyone; but the individual who fails to live in harmony with divine law curses himself, and the nation that is in transgression curses itself by virtue of its failure to comply with the law governing right relationships with God.

THEN THE PROPHET goes on to offer the remedy: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Even before God can demonstrate his power, it is necessary for his people to comply with his commandments.

"I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts." I can see an application in that statement that might have been difficult to see some years ago. Usually when you talk about the “devourer,” you are thinking about the enemies the farmer finds in the field, the canker worm, etc., but you know as well as I do that the failure of mankind to observe the law of God even in this regard has produced other devourers, even greater ones than those which destroyed the vines in the field and caused the vine to cast its fruit before its time. The system of economics under which you and I live has been responsible for men taking the products which God and nature provided and destroying them. We are still doing it. There are more devourers in this world than the canker worm and blight and other enemies, which, if we do not watch them and fight them, will destroy the crops. And there are even other destroyers that Malachi himself might not have discerned in his day; but God knew that in your day and mine these forces would be at work.

I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed; for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of Hosts.

I am not going to argue on tithing now; I am taking it for granted, as we take for granted baptism for the remission of sins. Too many of our people are willing to stop right there and fail to see the purpose of paying the tithe.

Will this promise be fulfilled merely because someone pays a tithe? Shall all nations call us blessed because some of us, or all of us, pay the tithe? Something must follow the paying of the tithe in order for us to become a blessed people in a delightsome land. And at this point God was concerned about the attitude of the people: “Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord.”

I once went out with a doctor when it was supposed to be his day off, but he was going to see some people, and he asked me to go along; he asked me to drive, and he did the talking. Among other things we were talking about people’s attitudes and some people who don’t pay their bills, etc., and finally he said, “When someone doesn’t pay a bill, the first thing he does is to find fault with your services.” He said, “As a professional man, I would rather forgive him the bill than have him find fault with my services.” Other men with whom I have discussed this matter say that that is an absolute fact—in order to justify their failure to pay their bills, they find fault with the service rendered.

PEOPLE DO THAT with the Lord. You may have heard some Latter Day Saints do that. I have heard some people in the church finding fault with the Lord.

Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord, Yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee? Ye have said, It is in vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance?

Did you ever hear anyone say that in our church? Have you ever heard anyone say, “You might as well be a Baptist, or a Methodist, or an Episcopalian?” These are our people who are not paying their bills. They are not in correspondence with the laws of life. They are not giving God or the church the opportunity to produce within them the fruits of righteousness or right living, and it is true that they might as well be a member of some other church—it would be better for us if they were. I am not saying that they would make good members of these other organizations, as there are good people in these organizations.

Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?

There is another indication that these people were not right before God. God has never required that his people should walk mournfully before him; the people of God should be the most delightful people on the face of the earth, and the happiest—a people of hope, a people of joy, for they are the people who are given the opportunity to serve with God, and service results in joy.

And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered.

I have had people point that out to me; they have called my attention to how certain people prosper who disregard the laws of God. What do they know about prospering? Are they in a position to realize what goes on in these various houses (not homes, but houses—for there is a difference between house and home). Do they know to what extent these people are really happy? Who is in a position to say that anyone really prospers unless he knows what prosperity really is?

And then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

Now the promise:

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

After this, the prophet told them they were cursed with a curse, even the whole nation. It could have been pointed out that their failure to recognize that all things belong to God was responsible for their situation. Let me repeat that—the failure to this people in Malachi’s time to recognize that all things belong to God was responsible for their condition. Do you suppose for one moment that if they had recognized God’s ownership they would have failed to pay the tithe and make their offerings?

THERE IS SOMETHING even worse than to fail to pay tithes and offerings. This is your failure to recognize God’s ownership which will cause you to take your material substance and use it contrary to the purpose of him who made it and entrusted its use to you. A wrong concept of wealth, both as to ownership and use, will damn any nation. Of course, if we determine who owns it we will use it properly.

I see Bishop Skinner is here tonight. He took me over to the Chamber of Commerce in Kansas City one time to listen to a Methodist bishop. I think Brother John Sheehy took Brother Elbert A. Smith—four of us attended. These gentlemen treated us to a mighty fine dinner, and I had the real pleasure of listening to Bishop Hughes, of the Methodist Church, tell the smug members of the Chamber of Commerce that they did not own anything. I remember he said, "Once a Methodist Bishop, always a Methodist Bishop." He did not fear them or fear his church, and he certainly rolled up his sleeves and went to work on the Chamber of Commerce. He defied them to look over their so-called property rights, look up their abstracts. He told them, "You will find, if you trace them back far enough that what you claim as yours belongs to Almighty God." He told them the truth. My only regret was that Bishop Hughes was not a Latter Day Saint bishop. What he gave them on that occasion was sound Latter Day Saint philosophy. In fact, what he laid down that day, we, as a church have yet to acknowledge in deed; we acknowledge in precept, but have yet to acknowledge in deed and in truth. We own nothing, in the truest sense of the term. All we possess, we hold in trust, and for the manner in which we administer this trust, we are accountable to God.

Israel had not learned that lesson. I think the conduct or behavior of the people of Malachi's time can be traced to their failure to recognize divine ownership, both as to goods and also as to their own selves, because all of us belong to God.

From the 24th Psalm I wish to read a few verses to you, commencing with the first verse:

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." That is about as complete a statement as anyone can make, isn't it? "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof"; or you could say "all of its contents"; "the world, and they that dwell therein." That takes us all in, too, doesn't it? All of us. What a fundamental statement of fact. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."

I knew that scripture was somewhere in the Bible, and following through in the concordance, my mind was directed back to where Moses found it necessary to remind Pharaoh of that truth. I opened my eyes, and I said, What a relationship—Moses was sent to Egypt to lead the Israelites from bondage. They were slaves. The reason Pharaoh did not want them to go was because he was making merchandise out of them. He did not like them; his people did not like them. You remember the statement, "There arose a king who knew not Joseph." These Israelites would not be assimilated into the Egyptian way of life. Pharaoh was concerned about these people being in the midst of Egypt. They were still foreigners in many ways, but they were profitable foreigners; they were slaves. These were the people they used to do the work the Egyptians did not care to do themselves. God sent Moses down to lead them from bondage. It struck me with considerable force that Moses said to Pharaoh, "The earth is the Lord's." If Pharaoh could have got that lesson, it would have done something for him. When the prophet and deliverer was going there to deliver these people from economic bondage, he had to remind that earthly ruler that he did not own anything. "The earth is the Lord's. That should have something to do with your attitude towards these people and your own people. God did not make man to be used as you are using him."

I WISH MEN AND NATIONS could recognize the ownership of God—what a difference that would make in human behavior. We talk about human rights. Roosevelt used to talk about human rights that should supersede property rights, and we are learning this truth today, time and again, even if great statesmen seem to overlook his philosophy, and some of the company he kept from time to time failed to accept that philosophy.

The failure of the people of Malachi's day (we had better talk about them, because it is easier to talk about somebody else than to talk about us—let us look at those failures back there) to pay tithes and offerings denied them the means ordained of God to keep them conscious of his ownership and their stewardship. That is the basic purpose of tithes and offerings. It is a divinely ordained exercise to save us from selfishness.

Our brother prayed tonight that we should get the spiritual significance of the offering taken. The payment of the tithe and the giving of offerings and, something that we have not yet touched upon except to read about it once in a while, the consecration of the surplus—these laws, given to govern us in securing, disbursing and using the material substance, were given not for the sake of substance, but for the sake of our souls.

We have suggested on some other occasions that God does not need the tithes in order to finance the church, but you and I need the opportunity to pay the tithe, to make our offerings, and to consecrate of our surplus, in order to bring to pass in us the development that will make us sons and daughters of God. Any of you who have studied behavioristic psychology will catch that point, I am sure. I remember how startled I was when someone suggested that we become afraid because we run. It is true that the bodily behavior at least intensifies the emotions. That is why you wake up sometimes from a dream, all out of breath. It is true whether in dreams or not, we can say this—that bodily behavior intensifies the emotions. God knew that before any of us thought of psychology or any other “ology.” God Almighty knew that if we would engage in certain exercises or behavior there would be created in us an emotional response. This is true of every ordinance in this church.

Do you suppose for one moment there is something in me that passes from me into my brother’s head through the act of ordination? I know one brother who wanted Frank Curtis to ordain him because he wanted to be a fiery preacher like Frank Curtis. I wanted to get a little of that fire too, and Frank Curtis ordained me to the Quorum of Twelve, with Elbert Smith. I hope I got a mixture of both.

GOD KNEW when he outlined services such as ordination and others that they were going to do something for people. God knew that physical behavior would have its effect on the ones being ordained, those participating and those observing. When ordinances of this church are properly performed, results follow. God must deal with us as we are. If we were different, God would not have to resort to this type of work. That is true of the ordinance of tithes, offerings, and consecration of surplus. When these people refused to pay tithes and make offerings, they denied the means ordained of God to make them conscious of his ownership and of their stewardship.

While talking on tithes, I want to point out that to do these things even makes a man a more successful business man. I remember a man who was a success during the depression. When asked how he did it, he said, “I am a partner with God. [And he meant it.] I am keeping the law. This is God’s business as well as my business. I am his junior partner, and I know there is no door closed to the Almighty.” And there wasn’t so far as he was concerned. He got business where no one else got business.

There was an assurance in an attitude like that, that men would recognize. The man had authority and spoke like one having authority. He couldn’t help having an effect upon people with that approach.

These people in Malachi denied the means ordained of God to make them conscious of his ownership and their stewardship; for that is the end our Father had in mind when he instituted the law of tithes, offerings, consecration. I want to point out that possessions and accumulation of wealth—in other words, “much goods”—became the purpose of their lives. It becomes the purpose of life whenever you find people who disregard God’s ownership; then their purpose in life is to seek possessions.

YOU DON’T HAVE TO be wealthy in order to be selfish. I think extreme poverty as well as extreme riches will produce selfishness. Extreme poverty makes a man so conscious of his own needs he can’t help but be selfish. Some people think you can’t be selfish unless you have, but this is not true. It is usually someone who has not. Just watch your youngsters at Christmas time—and you don’t have to wait until Christmas. That is why this church should seek to abolish poverty in the midst of its people.

Some people say it is the nature of children to be selfish. I don’t believe that. I will agree it is the environment. The surroundings of children have a tendency to make children selfish. It is not natural for children to be selfish any more than to be altruistic.

When we fail to believe in God’s ownership and everything associated with that principle, then we have a tendency to make possessions and accumulation of earthly substance the purpose of life. Like the rich man, you lay up “much goods.” And he had a problem. We think we have problems, and we think if we only had goods our problems would be solved, but much goods would create problems. He had a problem like the one we have today. He wanted to build, and evidently he could get the material. His accumulation of substance was such that his barns would not suffice. He had to pull them down and build greater. Do you know what God called him? God said, “Thou fool, this night thy soul will be required of thee.” When he makes an accounting of his life, what a miserable accounting it will be.

Then I think of a certain young man attracted to Jesus Christ and the associates of the Lord. He wanted to join them, even discussed the conditions. He evidently had observed certain commandments and must have been a clean young man. Jesus looked upon him and loved him. Opportunity was offered him to be a disciple of Christ. You know the answer. He turned aside, “for he had great possessions.” He went away sorrowful.

My friends, he didn’t have great possessions. His possessions had him; and when wealth possesses us we are damned. It is one thing to possess wealth; it is something else to have wealth possess you. In this instance his possessions possessed him.

In the case of Cornelius, he possessed his wealth, and even before he was baptized, he knew how to administer his wealth. He served as a steward even before baptism.

IT WAS THE PURPOSE of God that material things should serve man, not destroy him. People in Malachi’s time were lost to God. That was a great robbery. It wasn’t merely the withholding of tithes or offerings that was concerning God; it was the fact he had lost them, this nation. This people who could be a delightful people, a blessed people, were lost to God; that was the great robbery. So he said, “Return unto me, and I will return unto you.” And he also said, “And ye shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts.” Do you notice that? His possessions were coming back.

They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not.—Malachi 3: 18.

Jesus revealed that God had a purpose in the creation of man. I am so grateful always for God manifest in the flesh. It helps in so many ways. There is demonstrated in the life of a man what you and I can yet become. God demonstrated in Jesus that he had a purpose in these tabernacles of clay. You remember how Jesus revealed this himself when he stood before his earthly accusers and earthly judge, when Pilate said, Art thou a king? then Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king, to this end was I born.

Not to be an earthly king.

My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight. . . . To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth.—John 18: 36, 37.

And how can we bear witness of the truth unless we permit the truth of God to be revealed in our tabernacles of flesh? It is what we become that manifests the fruits of righteousness.

Jesus said on another important occasion when he knew that the time of his departure was at hand and he was praying to his Father in heaven,

I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.—John 17: 4.

No robbery here. Jesus, what have you done with your life? To what purpose have you spent your work and days?

I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

Here was the purpose of the Son of God—to manifest his father, to reveal the truth. No wonder John, in writing of him said, "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, . . . full of grace and truth."—John 1: 14.

The Psalmist said:

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handywork.—Psalm 19: 1.

There have been occasions when I have been jealous of the heavens and the firmament. How many times have we witnessed the beauty, grandeur, glory, and power of the infinite Creator displayed in the heavens and firmament, and after all, even the heavens and firmament were made for man, and not man for them.

WHAT IS GOD concerned in most?

Do you remember that little conversation that took place between God and Enoch? This great God who is glorified in the heavens and firmament, this great God broke down and wept! The God of the universe wept, and Enoch could not understand. Read Doctrine and Covenants 36: 6, 7. I haven't time to read it. Enoch was reasoning with God, could not understand why he should weep and said, "Look what you have made, your creations and power." And Enoch was able to see God's creations, not only this world but other worlds, and saw that this was the worst one he had made, saw all of God's power and said, "How can you weep?"

The Lord said unto Enoch, "Behold . . ." Enoch had been permitted to behold the wonder and power of the universe and recognized that God made them. He sensed the power of God under the power of the Spirit. Then God said to him, "Behold, these thy brethren." Then what? "These thy brethren, they are the workmanship of mine hands." Not only these universes you have seen, not only the glories that have been revealed to you but above all, these, thy brethren, in each tabernacle a spirit which came from God. "These, thy brethren, the workmanship of my hands, and I gave them knowledge in the day when I created them. And in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency. And unto your brethren have I said and also gave commandment, that they should love one another; and that they should choose me, their Father. But, behold, they are without affection."

They had affection for material things but were without affection for one another. Until such time as man recognizes divine ownership he is not going to have proper regard for his brethren.

I could use a statement here and apply it, a statement that says, "Whence cometh wars?" etc. You can expand that thought to point out that wars are a result of man's failure to recognize his relationship to his fellow men. It is a struggle for the material things of life that is responsible for class distinction and wars.

These people whom God had created and given them their agency and commanded that they love one another disregarded his advice. They were "without affection, and they hate their own blood; and the fire of mine indignation is kindled against them, and in hot displeasure will I send in the floods upon them; for my fierce anger is kindled against them."

Humanity changes but little. Aren't we doing the same thing the people of Enoch's day were doing? It was their failure to recognize the ownership of God and their purpose in life that brought about their destruction.

I WISH to close on a more optimistic note because there is another picture, but we might ask ourselves the question, Are we robbing God? I know it has been in the hearts of many of you people to see the day come that we would no longer have to say "The heavens declare the glory of God," but the day would come when it could be said of us as was said of Christ, that he was "the word become flesh and dwelt among us full of grace and truth."

What power Brother McConley would have in occupying in London, Denmark, Germany, if he could say that over here is a community of 5,000 or 2,000 people who have found a solution for war, have found a solution for strikes and walkouts. Here are people who have found a relationship similar to the one revealed by the children of Enoch. How my brother could preach with that kind of example! He could say "The gospel works. We have an example, we can give a demonstration." There are a sufficient number of good Latter Day Saints today who, if brought together, could build such a community where they could determine the behavior of the community. I am not asking for angels. I know we have enough good members. You know we have the people who, if brought into a community where their influence could count, would reveal that it is possible to have a free society—not communism, not dictatorship, but a free society where men exercising the agency given of God, in obedience to the laws of God, would so live that the purposes of God would be revealed in government, industry, and all social relationships.

My brethren, this is within our grasp if we want to move to that end. That is what I meant when I suggested one might preach a sermon on "Will a church rob God?" This church came into being to create such a society. That is what was meant when the Latter Day Prophet said, "Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." "But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:9.

That is a word we overlook. You are not going to establish a community like the one I am talking about by just moving in Latter Day Saints. They have to be a particular kind of Latter Day Saints. They have to be Latter Day Saints who are living in harmony with the law. You are not going to make them good by bringing them to Independence. And that is no reflection on Independence.

One man said about sprinkling, that if he thought sprinkling would save people, he would get out with a bucket and broom and sprinkle everybody. If I thought bringing people to Independence would save them, I would be out tomorrow pushing them in. These people are to become sanctified. That is the important condition.

Let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws.

What would the United Nations give if someone could actually demonstrate that people of various nationalities could live together in peace? And this church could prove that if it would. And, Brother McConley, what a privilege it would be to go to the lands beyond the sea and stand as a representative of the people of God who had so demonstrated the effectiveness of his work that you could speak as one having authority and not as a scribe. God speed the day when we can speak with the authority of accomplishment and not as scribes.

The following is a poem by Elbert A. Smith:

THE BUILDERS

The preachers and writers have told
How Zion should arise and shine;
In words both vehement and bold
They have pictured it line upon line.

The singers of Zion have sung,
The brightest, the purest, the best;
Till the blue vaults of heaven have rung,
And the heart burned warm in the breast.

The painters their concept have wrought,
Of the city, the temple, the men;
Portraying their vision and thought,
Reviving our spirits again.

But now let the builders lay to.
The builders, the builders, we call!
The men who shall make it come true!
For they shall be greatest of all.

In the light of this poem I am asking you now, including your speaker, Have we robbed God? Wherein have we robbed him? In tithes, offerings, and surplus? Yes, but a greater robbery—we have robbed him by our failure to become the kind of men and kind of women that would manifest the right relationships that would reveal the fact that Zion is in our midst.

May God help us to weigh carefully the responsibilities that are ours. May he give us strength to move forward that his kingdom may come and his will be manifest on the earth, is my prayer.

Organizes Church School

Seven months ago I was sent to Pleasanton, Kansas, by the company for which I work. After about a month, my wife and I were able to contact six Latter Day Saint families and began to plan some form of worship. The first Sunday we held church school twenty-six were present. Now, after five months, we have an enrollment of forty, and much interest is being shown by nonmembers. Several have wanted to know something about our message. I am anxious to get copies of the textbook, Jesus and His Message, to use in classwork; we have only three for the ten people in the class. We also solicit the prayers of the Saints that we may continue to help these people. We have no elder in our group but trust that God will supply our needs in the future.

Grateful for Prayers

It has been some time since I requested prayers for my daughter, Mrs. Hope Tisdale. I am happy to say she is now feeling fine and no operation will be necessary. I wish to thank all who prayed for her and also all who wrote. There was much comfort in the letters. We are isolated from church privileges here, and the experiences of others mean a great deal to us.

Note of Thanks

I regret that it has not been possible for me to personally acknowledge all the kindnesses shown to me in the trying days since the passing of my husband, Leander O. Johnson. Will my many friends please accept my thanks?

many of our people are actively interested was conducted at the Memorial Hall, where the Independence Little Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Franklyn S. Weddle, gave its third concert of the current season. A member, Josephine Crinklaw Mader, soprano, was the assisting artist, and received a generous ovation at the conclusion of her numbers selected from "The Barber of Seville" (Rossini), and "La Fille de Cadiz" (Delibes), with popular encores. Other works presented on the program included: "Fugue in G. Minor" (J. S. Bach), "Symphony No. 41 in C. Major" (Mozart), "Elegie" (Massenet), "Chaconne in G Minor" (Purcell-Barbirolli), and "Walther's Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner - Jungnickel). This concert was notable for the fact that Henry L. Livingston of the Presiding Bishopric, and Maurice L. Draper, newly ordained member of the Twelve, with Sister Draper as well as other church people, played in it.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9

At the afternoon session, a number of small items of business were dispatched. Major items of business concerned ordinations. Brother Glen H. Johnson, one of the fine younger men of the church, was called and approved for ordination as a president of seventy. Then an ordination service was conducted in which Brother Johnson was ordained to his office, and Brethren Henry Castings and Willard Hield, who had been called the preceding day, were ordained as evangelists.

An important event was the reading of a report from the Quorum of Twelve by Apostle G. G. Lewis. As it is expected this report will be published, no attempt should be made to summarize it here, other than to say that it deals with the world-wide missionary task, and moral and spiritual conditions in the world and among the membership.

Harold W. Cackler, of Des Moines, Iowa, was recommended and approved for ordination to the office of bishop. Allen J. Breckenridge, of the Southern Indiana district; James C. Daugherty, of Warrensburg, Missouri; and Floyd Potter, of Adelaide, Australia, were recommended and approved for ordination as seventies.

Wednesday evening, an elaborate musical, pageant, and program were given by Graceland College in the Auditorium, and a reception for Graceland Alumni was held in the basement afterward. At Stone Church, Elder Reed Holmes preached on the subject, "A Child in the Midst."

THURSDAY, APRIL 10

The first important event of this session was the ordination of Harold W. Cackler of Des Moines, Iowa, as a high priest and bishop, by Presidents J. F. Garver and F. Henry Edwards.

For the most part, this was financial day in the business session. Bishop G. L. DeLapp explained clearly the report of the Presiding Bishopric and answered questions. This report was unanimously approved.

Then came the Board of Appropriations report, which deals with the budget. There were questions and explanations, and when it was all covered everybody was satisfied, and it was also unanimously approved. Since the question was asked, it may be well to explain that the Board of Appropriations is composed of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Order of Bishops (which includes the Presiding Bishopric).

After everything was approved, Bishop DeLapp added a gracious and deeply appreciated note to the proceedings when he thanked his counselors, Bishops Henry L. Livingston and Walter N. Johnson, all staff officers who had made such fine reports possible, and the members of the church who had given their contributions and support. It gave just the right touch to the day's work, and made one feel that there is more than figures in finance.

Brother James Barrington of the British delegation brought a fine message of greeting and appreciation from the British members. It won a hearty round of sincere applause.

Evening Services

Bishop D. O. Chesworth was the speaker at the Stone Church, presenting the theme, "Out of Obscurity."

At the Auditorium there was an interesting pageant dealing with the history of church publications, the Herald Publishing House, and related matters. The background was a gigantic grouping of the Three Books, with the Holy Scriptures in the center, the Book of Mormon on one side, and the Doctrine and Covenants on the other. During the program, large paper sheets artistically illustrated were dropped down to illustrate the scenes depicted. The effect was very impressive, and the audience greatly appreciated it.

Sister Estella Wight, who has served as editor of juvenile publications forty years, and who is retiring this summer, was especially honored and accorded a great ovation. President J. F. Garver, who had served on the general editorial staff during twelve years in association with her, gave her a fine tribute. Children's songs were sung, and Sister Wight was given a bouquet of red roses by Donnis Graham, young daughter of Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager. Script for the pageant was prepared by Cleo Hanthorne Moon, and read by Brother and Sister Albert Brackenbury. Songs were given between scenes by the Cantanina Chorus under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Westwood, Jr. Director of the pageant was Mrs. D. S. McNamara of the White Masque Players. Organ accompaniment was by Oliver Houston. A solo honoring Sister Wight was sung by Miss Dana Wendelberg. Cast included employees of the Herald Publishing House, relatives, and friends. Valued assistance was given by Richard Miller, Mrs. Robert Miller, Harold Sandy, Marvin McDole, and others.

Impressions of the Conference of the 1947 General Conference. Much more could be recorded, but for lack of space. These are typical, however. If we have obtained from these notes a feeling of the good will, the hope, the expectancy of this Conference, the purpose will have been served. Truly, it is good to be here. God has blessed us.

Early Trader Clouded Titles of Caldwell County Farms

HAMILTON, MO., Feb. 4, 1947.—(Special)—It has been 100 years since Caldwell County was visited by one of the shrewdest traders in the country's history, Oliver Craig of Kentucky. He took advantage of the confusion which existed in the country over land titles as a result of the Mormon occupation of the county from 1835 to 1838.

The Mormons had been granted the land by the government when the Missouri legislature had organized the Caldwell as a Mormon county.

After the expulsion order came, many Mormons left their lands without bartering them to new owners. After the Mormons departed, the new settlers took possession of the abandoned lands with or without the proper titles.

Mr. Craig, in 1847, conceived an idea of making the rounds of the Mormons, who had left the county, and securing the land entries held by the Mormons.

Other traders took advantage of the situation and forged land entries, holding the papers in the smoke to give them a yellow look, which the original entries had.

In many cases the settlers were willing to pay high prices for the land titles as they had improved the land. It took several decades to clear the confusion in land titles in the county. Hundreds of cases have been tried in the county court to clear the titles.—St. Joseph (Missouri) Gazette.

A Job for You

By Nomie

If you can't be a leader, why not be the man or woman behind a leader? Maybe it's not in the cards for you to sit in the Senate or be a missionary to India, but that doesn't put you out of the game. You can be the spark if inspiration, the morale-builder, and the general promoter of someone who does have what it takes.

Thomas Edison owed much of his success to the two women in his life. Young Tom's mother had faith in him when probably no one else did—and she told him so. She might have changed the whole pattern of modern living if she'd believed the sad stories she heard about her son, but she would accept no part of them. —And we might still be reading by kerosene lamps if Mrs. Thomas Edison hadn't been the understanding wife she was. She didn't mind if her husband "stayed out nights" with an electric light bulb. She coaxed him from his work only long enough to make him eat, and while he ate, she told him he was a wonderful man and she knew he could do the job—even if he doubted that he could himself. Had Mrs. Edison complained that Tom was neglecting her and insisted that he get a job with regular hours so he could have his evenings free to go buggy-riding—or had she served a tearful "You don't love me any more" with the sandwiches she took him, the great American inventor might have given up his research to become a grocer or bricklayer or blacksmith, and Mrs. Edison would have been none the happier.

Joseph Smith didn't organize a church single-handed either. Besides the indispensable Emma, he had numerous young and willing men to back him. Maybe God and Joseph could have done the job themselves, but human assistance certainly expedited the spreading of the restored gospel.

Few people who have made a real contribution to society will boast that they did the job alone. Almost invariably there is one person, or a small group of persons, that makes the great man great. Once he finds the way, he has no difficulty in gaining followers, but during the days and years of uncertainty—of frustrated attempts and failures—it takes the faith and encouragement of someone willing to suffer through the trials and errors of the potential leader to help establish him on his course.

I know a woman who applies this "pat on the back" philosophy to everyone. I think she must have to look twice sometimes to find the hopeful quality, but she unfailingly discovers something. Under her kindly encouragement, the most self-conscious and unsocial youngsters have developed into youth leaders. She has convinced discouraged young brides that they have the ability to become the town's best cooks, and she has convinced the town's best cooks that they still look as sweet and charming as young brides. She doesn't stop at giving moral support, either; if the case demands, she comes through with the financial aid necessary to put a "down and outer" on his feet again. This woman isn't rich or famous, but she is one of the happiest people I have ever known.

It's all up to you. If you've failed to get your name in neon, or haven't, as yet, been called to the apostolic quorum, you can spend the rest of your life feeling sorry for yourself, or you can help someone else find his place in the world. You can share with him the success he enjoys and feel that you have had a vital part in making him what he is.

Of course, the talent of helping need not be born of defeat. Perhaps you've reached your goal and, because of your experience, are expertly fitted to help others realize their ambitions. You will find it gratifying to watch their progress—if you have a hand in it.

Whoever you are—wherever you are, somebody needs you. Help him, and you'll both find satisfaction.

News Briefs

Kirtland Temple

Pastor, Albert Wouters

On December 10, the young women met for a Christmas party in the chestnut room of the auditorium. A program of carols and readings was given, and secret sister names were revealed as gifts were exchanged. Mrs. Paul Webbe was hostess. The annual turkey dinner and bazaar were held on December 12; the women's department was represented by an apron bar; the young women, a miscellaneous booth; the Zion's League, a baked goods booth; and junior church, a soft drink bar and fish pond. On December 17, the women's church school class held its annual Yule party at the home of Mrs. Anne Holgate.

In a lovely pre-Christmas wedding on December 20, Elder John Banks united in marriage at the temple, Donald Sheppard, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Sheppard, and Miss Doris Allen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Allen.

On the morning of December 22, the children enjoyed a visit from Santa Claus and Christmas movies shown by Scott Liston and Floyd Pedersen. In the evening, the church school presented a nativity pageant under the direction of Mrs. Oakley Isenburg, with Mary Gale as reader.

Pastor Albert Wouters gave the Communion address the first Sunday of the new year. Seventy Donald Harvey gave his first talk to the local congregation on January 19. The following Sunday evening, Bishop C. A. Skinner was the speaker at the temple. Elder Harvey has been appointed to Kirtland as temple minister.

The Zion's League has resumed study of the course, Comparative Religions, with Elder Harvey as teacher. In connection with this study, Reverend W. P. Gross, pastor of the Presbyterian church, gave an interesting talk to the group. At the monthly potluck supper and fellowship service, Elder Casimir Nikel of Cleveland presented the thought for the evening, "Enter in at the Door," using Sallman's portrayal, "Christ at Heart's Door," as an illustration.

Members of the women's department held their semi-annual birthday luncheon on February 6. Mabel Thomas, leader, arranged an interesting program of religious picture appreciation. Special readings were given for each picture; a chorus of young women sang appropriate hymns.

Stockton, California

Pastor, D. P. Wright

Three new members, Gustin Johnson, Leroy Petz, and Penelope Bloom, were baptized at the close of a series of missionary meetings conducted by Seventy George Njeim from January 19 to February 2. During his stay in Stockton, Brother Njeim preached ten sermons, held five cottage meetings, one round-table discussion, and visited in the homes of the Saints and prospective members. Prior to these meetings, the young married women's group undertook the project of calling each residence listed in the telephone directory; the letters of the alphabet were assigned to various members. All who were called that seemed interested were mailed notices of the meetings; the response was very gratifying. The women of both groups visited the homes in their neighborhoods leaving notices and invitations to attend the services. The choir, under the direction of Dorothy Wixom, responded by contributing musical selections for the meetings.

Stockton Saints are looking forward to the erection of a new church; their present meeting place is inadequate for the growing congregation. A building fund has been established and, as soon as materials are available, the new church will be built.

The Zion's League sponsored an old-fashioned box supper on the evening of February 7. Mr. Cleary, a friend of the church, showed movies as a part of the program. He has also been lending his projector and religious pictures for use at one Sunday evening service each month.

The Men's Club has finished its project of redecorating the main and lower auditoriums, the kitchen, and nursery, making the church a much pleasanter place for worship.

Sunday, February 9, was financial observance day. Heman Davis of Sacramento, a counselor to the bishop, was guest speaker. At the close of the service, the "heads of the families" formed a procession and placed their inventories before the bishop.

A Girl Scout troop was organized recently under the leadership of Mrs. Harold Dale and Mrs. John Dowker. Attendance and interest have been good.

Chatham, Ontario

Pastor, J. A. Pray

Elder Almer Sheehy, pastor of London Branch, was the speaker at the 7 o'clock service on Sunday, March 2. In exchange, Pastor Jack Pray spoke at the evening service in London.

The women of Chatham District met in Chatham on Sunday, March 9, with Ena Slator of Detroit as guest leader of the institute. The morning services included a fellowship at 9:30 and a special class for women at 11. After the potluck dinner served in the lower auditorium, a round-table discussion was held, followed by classwork at 3 p.m. The institute was well attended. Much credit for its success goes to Lena Shaw, Chatham District women's leader.

A successful rummage sale was held Friday afternoon, February 28; the proceeds are to be used for various group activities of the Orioles and Blue Birds. On Tuesday evening, March 18, the Wansakasing Orioles went on a tour of the local museum. The women also visited the museum; Sister Wellington was guide and hostess at the evening meeting held in her home. On March 13, they sponsored a Saint Patrick's tea.

To aid in raising money for the Erie Beach reunion fund, the committee composed of J. V. Dent, V. E. Pritchard, L. W. Wood, J. F. Kelly, and A. Birkby, together with the pastor, planned a $5 banquet which was held Tuesday evening, March 11. Approximately 110 persons were present, netting $950 for the fund. Garry Gilbert, prestidigitator from Port Huron, entertained the audience with magic tricks. He was introduced by Pastor Pray, who served as master of ceremonies for the program. Royal Wood accompanied the group in a song fest, which was led by William Clarke. Musical numbers were given by Bessie Boyle, Nelson Badder, Merle Bekaert, Jack Clements, Helen and Jim Kelly, and Gladys Ferguson. Accompanists were Audrey Steinhoff and Virginia Clements.

Chatham Branch church school workers met in the lower auditorium on Friday evening, March 7, for a potluck supper meeting. District Director J. F. Kelly was the speaker. The Chatham Men's Club sponsored an old-fashioned pancake supper on Thursday evening, March 20; proceeds are to be used for the Boy's Club activities. The following Thursday evening, the club held its monthly supper meeting.

On Sunday night, March 23, a special Saints' Herald service was held with James Kelly, Helen and Jack Pray, and Gladys Ferguson giving short talks on "What the Saints' Herald Means to Me." John Bowman outlined the current drive for subscriptions and emphasized the importance of having the church publication in every home. Merle Bekaert was soloist at this service.

Salem, Oregon

Pastor, Charles H. Asher

Salem Mission was organized as a branch on Sunday, January 19, under the direction of District President J. L. Verhei. Officers are as follows: Charles Asher, pastor; Caleb Clark, treasurer; Connie Streeter, secretary; George Speed, church school director; O. E. Boatwright, custodian; Jay Streeter, Zion's League leader; Mary Beal, historian; Jessie Penrod, librarian; and Nellie Gummow, book steward and publicity agent. The building committee is composed of Priest Van Someren, Fred Nowack, and Otis Boatwright.

The district conference was held in Salem on February 21, 22, and 23. The dining room of the Christian Church was rented and 400 people were served meals there on Sunday. Missionary Arthur Gibbs began a series of illustrated lectures on Friday evening, February 21, which lasted through March 5. Otis Towner, Erskine and Earle Asher, Lily and Janice Van Someren were baptized at the close of the series. Elders Mark Yoeman, Albert Nelson, and George Oman assisted in the ordination service.

George Speed was ordained to the office of teacher and Otis Boatwright to the office of deacon at the district conference.

A church basement is being constructed that will accommodate future conference visitors as well as being useful to the local group.

—Nellie Gummow, reporter.

Tacoma, Washington

Pastor, Ray Sowers

Paul Miyamoto was the speaker on Sunday, February 9. Other speakers for the month were Elders Ray Stewart and Ray Sowers. C. O. Whipple, who is unable to attend Sunday services, is making a fine contribution to the group by conducting the midweek fellowship meetings.

Many Tacoma Saints attended the district conference held in Bremerton on February 15 and 16. Emphasis was placed on the importance of training in the church school.

David Lloyd, son of Lloyd and Loretta Thomas, was blessed on January 5, and Neville Kent and Sheldon Dean, twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. Louie Spadafore, were blessed on January 12 by Elders Ray Sowers and Ray Stewart.

Members of the Marietta Club are sponsoring a calling contest. They are divided into two groups with Fern Court and Hazel Shirley as leaders. One point is given for visiting an active member, two for visiting a member who attends occasionally, and three for visiting an inactive member. An extra point is given when the caller is accompanied by her husband. The losing group must entertain the winning group. The "traveling pig" is another club project. Each week, a member brings the piggy bank to meeting, puts her offering in it, and passes it on to another member along with a gift. When the "pig" has made the rounds, the contents are added to the club treasury.

The Zion's League gave a valentine party on February 13 for the entire branch. Admission of one cent per inch of each guest's height was charged. The prize of a cherry pie was awarded to Fred Eaton who had to pay the highest admission fee. The Leaguers recently enjoyed a skating party and an operetta presented at the high school.

Elder Ray Stewart's birthday was celebrated on March 2 with open house, planned by the Marietta Club, at the Stewart home. Following the entertainment, Elder Stewart was presented a pastor's individual Communion set.

Fern Court has been appointed librarian-historian by Pastor Sowers.

Pasadena, California

Evan Lewis, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. David Graham, was blessed during the morning service on January 12 by Elders L. B. Shippy and Blaine Bender. Keith Scott, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert E. Walden of San Gabriel, was blessed by Elder L. B. Shippy and F. A. Cool on Sunday morning, March 16.

On February 23, Alan Ingamells and Leslie Alan Dunster were ordained to the office of deacon, and William N. Swain to the office of priest. Officiating ministers were F. A. Cool and Blaine Bender.

Walter Hardwick of San Gabriel and Richard Ulery of Los Angeles were baptized on Sunday afternoon, March 16; Elders Paul Moore and Blaine Bender officiated. The confirmation service was held on March 23.

—Ednah M. Strong, reporter.

Chillicothe, Ohio

Pastor, Earl Caldwell

On March 23, members of the Jackson and Chillicothe Leagues held a rally day in Chillicothe. The day's activities included a fellowship service, morning sermon, basket dinner, song service, round-table discussion, and recreation. In charge of the services were Elders Roy Beatly, Orval Mapes, and Earl Caldwell, Priest Harley Vance, and Teachers Warner Roush and John Hart. The young people are planning programs for Easter and Mother's Day. Other coming events are the election in June, and the third annual Zion's League Day in August. A "buy a brick" contest between the boys and girls is proving an effective means in raising funds for the new church.

—Charles Parker, Jr., reporter.

Hamilton, Ontario

Pastor, Everett Kennedy

The forty-sixth anniversary of the organization of Hamilton Branch was observed on Sunday, February 16. A review of the early work of the Saints in Hamilton was given at the 9:30 service, after which visitors were welcomed. At 3 in the afternoon, members of the Zion's League, under the direction of Leslie Hill, gave two "radio" dramatizations: "The Musical Life of Jesus" and "Is Sincerity Enough?" Clifford Spillsbury, pastor of the Niagara Falls, New York, congregation, was the evening speaker. Music for the special services was provided by the choir, Doris Hewitt, and Joan Arrowsmith of Toronto.

Seventy H. I. Velt presented a series of nine evening sermons beginning Sunday, March

2. At the request of Brother Velt and the pastor, the Saints fasted one meal each day for three days previous to the series. The Leaguers distributed 2,000 handbills advertising the sermons. Average attendance was sixty-two; average nonmember attendance was fourteen. Four converts were baptized at the close of the series; District President W. J. Barrington was present for the baptismal service.

Members from Guelph and Niagara Falls attended the March 17 supper meeting of the B.F.E. Men's Club. John F. Sheehy, pastor of Toronto Branch, was the guest speaker. The women's department was in charge of catering.

San Leandro, California

Pastor, Charles Mottashed

Four children were blessed at the February 2 Communion service: Virginia Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Wood; Dennis Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Magby; William Ronald, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Smith, and Thomas Leland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Suer, Jr.

At a special meeting held in the home of Chester MacDougall, five men recently called to the priesthood were ordained by Apostle John Rushton, Elders Elma Andrews and Charles Mottashed. Paul Stanfield was ordained to the office of priest; John Ross, Orral Hartwig, Elmer Brown, and George Anderson to the office of deacon.

On February 23, Patriarch William Dawson of Sacramento was the speaker. He and Pastor Mottashed officiated at the blessing of Douglas James, infant son of Robert and Ruth Nelson.

The women of San Leandro Mission sponsored a valentine party on the evening of February 14 at the Holden home. Thirty members were present. A total of $34 was cleared at the St. Patrick's Day buffet dinner held March 14.

Guest speakers for February and March were William Dawson, Alma Andrews, William Roy, and Brother Hartsaugh.

Elder Charles Mottashed has been elected to succeed William Hall, who has moved to Los Angeles, as pastor. Mark Fonda and Paul Stanfield were selected as counselors to the pastor.

—Mardel Holden, reporter.

Lausing, Michigan

Pastor, Francis Boman

The January Communion talk was given by Pastor Francis Boman. Other speakers for the month of January were Seventy Harry Engle, G. H. Foster, Charles Wade, Garnett Smith, and Clarence Dudley. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was present for the special conference that convened at 2 p.m., February 2, for the election of delegates to General Conference. Alva Dexter, Clarence Dudley, John Luce, G. H. Foster, and Everett Berndt were the speakers in February.

A Men's Club was organized March 3 with William Kirksey as president. Dr. F. M. McDowell and Seventy Percy Farrow spoke at the February and March meetings.

A new pulpit, designed and made by Junior Church Pastor Charles Wade and Elder Clarence Dudley for the junior church, was dedicated on January 26. After it was unveiled, the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Saints' Hymnal were placed on it by the children. Members of the junior church department participated in the dedication service, with Elder Dudley giving the address. The children are being prepared for the baptismal service on Children's Day; present enrollment is forty.

The young people meet at various homes on Sunday evenings after church for a social hour. The women were privileged to hear Sister Burch of Grand Rapids give a summary of the talks which she heard while attending the world conference of churches in Kansas City recently. Pastor Boman gave the pre-Easter sermon on the life of Christ, and Mabel Foster presented an interpretation of the picture, "Peter and John," at the March women's meeting.

Seventy Percy Farrow of Toronto spoke at both the morning and evening services on Sunday, March 9, and again on Monday evening.

A farewell party was given for Mr. and Mrs. William Kirksey following the evening service on March 9. The Kirkseys, who are leaving for Florida, were presented a gift from their friends in Lansing congregation at the close of the evening. Samuel Horaney was elected to succeed Brother Kirksey as president of the Men's Club.

Seattle, Washington, District

The Seattle District Conference was held in Bremerton, Washington, on February 15 and 16. The theme was, "Workers Together, My God, My Church, and I." Classes on religious education in the church school were held Saturday with Kenneth Sheffer, district director, supervising. Various speakers talked on the importance of the worship service, methods, the junior and junior high departments, and junior church. In the evening, the Bremerton group presented a religious drama, "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," written by Pastor A. W. Lundeen. The Leaguers sponsored a reception in the lower auditorium of the church following the play.

All-day services were held Sunday in the Odd Fellows' Hall. Apostle D. T. Williams and District President Alma Johnson were in charge of the early morning prayer service. Gladys Anway presented a lesson in flannel-graph for the children at the church school hour, and Ray Sowers talked on the value of true worship services. Apostle Williams gave the 11 o'clock address. A forum was conducted in the afternoon following lunch, which was served by the Harmony Club. At the business session, the name of Kenneth Sheffer of Wenatchee was presented for ordination to the office of priest, and fifteen delegates to General Conference were elected. During the business meeting, the children were entertained with moving pictures in the lower hall.

—Eva Lundeen, reporter.

San Jose, California

Two delegates will represent San Jose at the coming General Conference.

The women recently cleared $234.55 at a rummage sale. Gertrude Sessions, a member of San Jose Branch, won second place in the hymn contest sponsored by the Independence Music Club.

A young married people's class has been organized with Elder Lewis Adams as teacher. Bill Hays is president, Larry Garrett, vice-president; Jean Sherman, secretary-treasurer; Beulah Cline and Mae Hays, friendly visitors. The group has selected the name, "Zion Home Builders." In addition to the Sunday morning class, regular meetings are held the second and fourth Fridays of each month.

—Mrs. Bill Hays, reporter.

Toledo, Ohio

Pastor, Lloyd Lynn

Toledo Branch was host to the Northwestern Ohio District Zion's League Conference on February 8 and 9. The theme was, "I Am Building Zion Now." Elder John W. Banks spoke at 11 o'clock on, "A Preventive Religion." The conference closed with a consecration service at 2:30.

Elder Banks delivered a series of sermons during the month of February on the general theme, "The Kingdom of God Way of Life—or Perish." He brought a stimulating ministry to the Toledo Saints, and the good attendance at these services testified to the widespread interest which was aroused. Attendance at all branch activities continues to grow.

The women's department has exceeded its goal of $600 for the year. Projects have included saving sales tax stamps, a rummage sale, sacrifice offering of one cent a meal, and a talent project in which each woman followed her own interest in handwork or other skill and gave the proceeds to the fund.

The branch recently purchased a mimeograph and has been printing weekly programs.

A number of Toledo Saints attended the district conference in St. Marys, Ohio, on the week end of March 1 and 2. Apostles E. J. Gleazer and D. Blair Jensen spent several days in Toledo en route to the conference; Apostle Gleazer spoke on Friday night, February 28. —Martha Ford Floro, reporter.

Clio, Michigan

Pastor, James McBride

Members of the Zion's League and their leader, Ida May Ross, sponsored a rummage sale in Flint on January 25 and an old-fashioned box social on March 1. The proceeds will be added to a fund for the construction of a recreation building.

Junior church services are held twice each month; Dorse Ross is the junior pastor. Recently, a special prayer service for the children was held with Pastor Ross and Elder Robert Luce in charge.

David Manning Miller was blessed at the morning service on February 2, Elders Robert Luce and James McBride officiating.

The semi-annual business meeting for officers and teachers was held on February 12.

Members of the adult class met at the church on February 14 for a business meeting and valentine party. Twenty-three persons attended.

Evangelist William Fligg of Niagara Falls, Ontario, conducted a series of meetings on "Signs of the Times" from March 9 to 23; he also gave eight patriarchal blessings during his stay. The adult class gave a supper at the church on March 14; the proceeds were used to help defray Brother Fligg's expenses.

A candlelight ordination service was held on March 16 with District President L. O. Brockway, Elder Harry Simmons of Flint, and Pastor James McBride in charge. Those ordained were Elwood Hester, elder; Eldon McBride and Nelson Chenny, deacons. Soloists were Faith McGeachy, Della and Ida May Ross.

Jeanne Brown and Donald Horning were baptized by Pastor McBride on March 23; the confirmation service was held in the evening with Evangelist Fligg and Pastor McBride officiating.

The women, with Mary Griswold as leader, meet three times a month at the homes of members for a round-table discussion, devotional, luncheon, and work. One business meeting is held each month.

The junior class, with Eva DeCaire in charge, meets one evening each month; class activities are within the children's division.

A play, "Shall I Comply?" was presented by the Senior Zion's League on the evening of March 30. Nelson Chenny gave a brief sermonette, and Arlene Ross sang a solo.

—Mrs. Lucille Reed, reporter.

Dallas, Texas

Pastor, Clyde Hastings

College Day offering totaled $51 and Christmas offering, $131. A fund has been provided for the promotion of visual education in the branch; Supervisor Henry Williams has presented several travelogues and religious pictures. Class discussion is held after each picture; teachers are Clyde Hastings, H. E. Davenport, and C. Green.

Pamela Irene, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Everett, and Norma Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don McDowell, were blessed recently by Elders R. F. Moore, W. F. Page, and H. E. Davenport.

Elder J. Charles May has just completed a week's series of cottage meetings and will return soon to continue his work. Other speakers have been Pastor Hastings, W. F. Page, R. F. Moore, H. E. Davenport, and F. A. Peterson. Music has been provided by Mrs. Constance Borders and the choir, under the direction of Merle Hallenberger. Mrs. Alma Estes gave a musical reading.

Bishop C. A. Skinner was the guest speaker at the Zion's League banquet; Pastor Clyde Hastings was toastmaster. Brief talks were also given by Boyd and Billie Broliar, Richard Hacker, and League Supervisor Warren Wilson. Contributing to the musical part of the program were Jannell Simmons, Virginia Borders, and Geraldine Graham. Bishop Skinner conducted a class for the young people and adults on his last Sunday in Dallas, and gave the 11 o'clock address. A priesthood meeting was held following the basket lunch at noon.

The adult class sponsored a turkey dinner to purchase a typewriter for the branch; over $110 were cleared.

Lillian Maxwell, a former Graceland student, has received her Bachelor of Arts degree in journalism at the University of Texas.

—Chattie Everett, reporter.

Southern Ohio District

The Southern Ohio District Conference was held in Columbus on March 8 and 9. Apostles D. Blair Jensen, E. J. Gleazer, and Missionary Merle Guthrie were in attendance. Saturday's activities included a business session and youth get-together. Following the fellowship meeting on Sunday morning, Apostle Gleazer gave the sermon. Dr. Gerald Swanson and Theodore Boechman were ordained to the office of elder at the afternoon service. The newly-elected district officers held a forum following the ordination service.

The 1947 goals of Southern Ohio District are a ten per cent increase in attendance, twenty-five per cent increase in baptisms, ten per cent increase in compliance with the financial law, and an increase of two branches or missions. Officers for the coming year are as follows: F. T. Rockwell, district president; S. E. Dickson and R. M. Gray, assistants; Elmer Caldwell, secretary; Theodore Boechman, treasurer; Norma Anne Kirkendall, director of religious education; Margaret Barker, youth leader; Lois Rockwell, director of music; Nelle Swanson, women's leader; and Ethel Kirkendall, historian.

This was the largest conference ever held in Southern Ohio District.

—Norma Anne Kirkendall, reporter.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, Joseph Breshears

Evangelist and Mrs. R. V. Hopkins were the guests of Springfield congregation on February 2. An outpouring of God's Spirit accompanied the early morning prayer service of which Brother Hopkins was in charge. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was served at 11 o'clock to an overflow congregation. A basket dinner at 1 and a lunch at 5 in the afternoon made it possible for the Saints to remain at church the entire day. A branch conference, at which the budget for the coming year was presented, was held in the afternoon. At a special service, Jane Engle and Versey Reibold were confirmed, R. V. Hopkins and Joseph Breshears officiating. Brother Hopkins gave the closing sermon.

The junior division continues its outstanding record in attendance. On a recent Sunday, every pupil and teacher were present; on the following Sunday, only three children were absent. Until the past two weeks, when an epidemic of illness affected attendance, every teacher had a perfect record since the beginning of the church year in October. Junior Pastor Henry Plumb is teaching the children through the use of visual education.

Michael Oliver, infant son of Ray and Mabel Oliver, was blessed February 9 during the junior church service by Francis Bishop and R. H. Evans.

Services of music appreciation were presented on the evenings of February 9 and March 2. Participating in these services were Ruth Akridge, Virginia Plumb, Lorene Browne, Maxine Mace, and Hattie Bishop. The policy of the music department has been to use all available talent in directing, singing, and playing. As music students progress in their lessons, they are given the opportunity to serve—the beginners at junior church and socials and older young people at church school and in worship services.

Members of the Senior Zion's League meet at 7 o'clock on Sunday evening for classwork; R. H. Evans is teacher. They have selected "Study to show thyself approved" as their theme. A social evening is held twice each month.

Various valentine parties were held in February including a covered-dish luncheon at the home of Evelyn Breshears by the women's department, a Senior League party at Harry Binkley's, a Junior League and children's party in the lower auditorium of the church.

Members of the Zion-Builders Circle have finished a course in appreciation with a lesson on "The Art of Dressing Well" taught by Helen Yager and Goldie Volsky; a demonstration of how to conduct a tea was given. The chili-soup-salad-pie supper sponsored by the women's department on February 24 netted a total of $48.50 for the branch treasury.

Den Mother Helen Yager and the "cubs" of Pack Twelve were hosts at pack night held at the church on February 28. Skits by the boys and a talk by Scout Executive Allen Foster were features of the evening.

—Charlcie Yeoman, reporter.

Uniontown, Pennsylvania

Visiting speakers during the past year have been Apostle Blair Jensen, District President Henry Winship, and Elders Merle Guthrie and James P. Marsh. Elder James McConnaughy has assisted the mission greatly through his correspondence. Elder and Mrs. Kirkendall and daughter, Norma Anne, were present on March 15 to give illustrated lectures on Mexico and Kirtland Temple. Several Catholic friends have been attending services.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Pastor, Carl E. Muir

The theme of the fellowship service on Sunday morning, February 16, was "Consecration." Pastor Carl Muir, Elders Russell Bacon, Louis Kuhn, Edward Lewis, and Teacher Lon Stone were in charge.

The New York-Philadelphia District Conference was held in Brooklyn on February 22 and 23. The Saints from Philadelphia went by chartered bus and automobile. Apostle George Lewis spoke at a special service on Thursday evening, February 27.

An early morning prayer meeting preceded the Communion service on March 2; Anna Thomas was soloist. Sunday, March 16, was observed as young people's day in Philadelphia Branch. Members of the Zion's League were in charge of all services during the day. Priest Norman Preusch presided over the opening fellowship service, assisted by Charles Harris, Jr., and David Wiesen, Jr. Douglas Muir, League president, conducted the church school; assisting were Jean and Dan Piedemonte. Pastor Carl Muir was in charge of the morning service; Norman Preusch gave the sermon. David Allen, president of Gimbel Chorus, was soloist, and the choir, directed by Clara Thumm, sang an anthem. A panel discussion was held in the evening on "Harmonizing Branch Activities." Dolly Lewis sang at this service.

The Saints of Philadelphia set aside Sunday, March 30, as a day of fasting and prayer for General Conference. In the evening, the choir sang, "Olivet to Calvary."

The League is now publishing a monthly paper, Chatter Box, which contains news of the branch. Family night is another monthly feature.

Speakers for March, in addition to those already mentioned, were Lewis Kuhn, Ira Humes, Adolph Edwards, Russell Bacon, and Lon Stone.

Brockton, Massachusetts

Pastor, Leonard Chesworth

Since the death of Pastor Ernest Megathlin on January 24, Leonard Chesworth has been appointed acting pastor. Elder Herman Chelina of Providence also assisted Brockton Branch in its time of need by giving the sermons on three consecutive Sundays.

A seminar in evangelism was conducted in February by Elders Albert Scherer and Reed Holmes for the purpose of preparing the Saints for the coming missionary series to be held by Seventy Eugene Theys. A study class was organized by the members as a result of the interest aroused by the seminar. Meetings are held each week in the homes of various members; Leonard Chesworth is in charge. Seventy Theys' services lasted from February 23 to March 2. James, Kenneth, and Warren Ekstrom, and Vera LeMott were baptized at the close of the series.

The Plymouth and Brockton Saints held a joint Communion service in March; Elder Benjamin Leland was in charge. A prayer and testimony meeting followed the serving of the emblems.

Mobile, Alabama

Pastor, A. Orlin Crownover

Wayne Hough was ordained to the office of priest on January 26 by Elders Henry Hough and A. Orlin Crownover. On February 9, seven new members were baptized by Pastor Crownover; they are Dale Watts, Sr., Dale Watts, Jr., Mary Brooks, Joanne Wise, Edward Wise, Willis Tillman, and George Tillman. The confirmation service was held on February 23.

Rally day, which was held on March 9 to raise money for the building fund, proved very successful.

Officers for the Zion's League elected on Thursday, March 20, are as follows: Wayne Hough, president; Hoyt Jones, vice-president; JoAnne Wise, secretary-treasurer; Betty Cropp, project chairman; Jean Vickery, worship program chairman; Laura Vickery, Sunday evening program chairman; and Melgwin Miller, banquet chairman. These officers will serve for the coming six months.

During Mardi Gras, the women sold sandwiches, hot dogs, and candied apples, netting a profit of $350. On March 24, they sponsored an oyster supper that cleared $170. The money was contributed to the building fund.

Guelph, Ontario

The young people's class of the church school prepared and served a chicken supper on December 18 to seventy-five guests. Following the supper, a varied program was presented in the main auditorium. On New Year's Eve, a watch service was held at which each person, as called upon, arose and told of the blessings he had received during the year; Elder James Phillips of Sandusky gave the sermonette.

A Men's Club was organized recently with Dr. Wilfred Shute as president; Dr. Kenneth Rose, vice-president; and Charles Walton, secretary-treasurer. The club will sponsor an oratorical contest for Owen Sound District this summer.

A modern heating system has been installed, and last month the main auditorium of the church was redecorated.

The women hold meetings on the first and third Thursdays of every month. In February, they sponsored a rummage sale; proceeds will be used to help purchase carpeting for the aisles of the church.

The men have been holding fireside meetings at the close of Sunday evening services; the result has been increased attendance and the contacting of several nonmembers. On March 16, the meeting took the form of a baptismal service when John Walker, Ernest and Lorne Hall united with the church. Elder Fred McLean was in charge, and Elder Alex Cadwell officiated. The confirmation service was held on Easter Sunday morning with Elders Alex Cadwell, J. Hockaday, F. C. McLean, and A. Dunn officiating.

Bakersfield, California

Pastor, H. E. Hampton

Mr. and Mrs. Silas D. Chronister celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on February 17. Their church friends surprised them with gifts and cards and a beautiful wedding cake. Grethe Israel sang "I Love You Truly" in their honor. Mr. and Mrs. Chronister came to Bakersfield from Independence, Missouri, in 1940. They have three children: Mrs. William Worth, Independence; Fred Chronister, Kansas City, Missouri; and John Chronister, Bakersfield; and three grandchildren. Mrs. Chronister has been treasurer of the Bakersfield mission for the past two years.

—Billy Canfield Simpson, reporter.

Grand Junction, Colorado

Pastor, Clarence B. Wallis

Grand Junction Branch held a rally day on March 23. Members from over the Western Slope attended. Theme for the day was "Working Together With God"; Elder Houston Hobart was guest speaker. Irby Mundy of Colorado Springs was also present. A basket dinner was served at noon to 125 people.

Attention All Kingdom-Builders

By CHARLES KORNMAN

An inquiring youngster once asked his Sunday school teacher, "Why did God make the world?" The teacher answered, perhaps with a somewhat limited insight, that it is God's nature to create. The best-known history concerning God and his relationship to man is full of His creativity. The Bible opens with a description of a new creation, and it closes with a dramatic story of a new heaven and a new earth that will belong to those who qualify.

In Genesis, God is talking with Christ, discussing the blueprint of the world. In the process, they came to man. After much discussion, probably pro and con, they decide to make him in their own image. The provision for a creative desire in every person was a daring stroke of ingenuity on the part of God. Normally we are creative by nature—evidence enough in a young child's love of mud pies and the pride of a woman when she brings a savory roast to the dinner table. The spur of competition, the discontent with our past achievements, and the urge to build a better mousetrap are all evidences of the creative desire in us. Is it not logical, then, to think of the nature of God as being creative and that he is constantly striving to produce a better world with better living conditions and better people in it?

God is still as creative by nature as he was in the days when he first made the world. To think otherwise, one would have to visualize the small child as he makes his mud pie, stopping to say that it is good, and then admiring it for the rest of his life. Sir Oliver Lodge, an eminent scientist, once said, "This is the lesson science has to teach theology—to look for the action of Deity if at all, then always; not in the past alone, nor alone in the future, but equally in the present. If his actions are not visible now, they never will be and never have been visible" (The Bible in Every Day Living).

We can look about us now and see evidence of the activity of the imagination of God. Look at a skyscraper as its foundation is laid, its steel skeleton is erected, and finally the outside and inside completed. Notice the small child as he first learns about God's concern for our welfare and the evolution of his character as he learns more about Him.

God must've known about butter before he ever produced a cow. He must've known about ham and eggs before he produced a pig and a chicken. He must've known about spectacles when he put our ears where they are. Nor did the kingdom of God develop as a result of a committee on human relations. The idea of Zion as a "nucleus of social amelioration" (Dr. R. A. Cheville's phrase) did not come as an afterthought. The possibility that men can live together in a harmonious relationship is written into the very structure of the human race.

God has a plan for mankind. A good plan. A plan that was in mind when he said, "Let there be light." A plan concerned with life—the fullest possible life for every person—not on the level of the average. A plan that calls for a group of people willing to live a life of stewardship—of voluntary consecration of their very lives as well as their finances. It is a plan for people who are devoted to the mission of kingdom-building, not someday in the bright hazy future, but now.

The kingdom of God has been proclaimed for as long as we have any record. Daniel, in his interpretation of a dream for Nebuchadnezzar, speaks about a kingdom which was set up by the "God of Heaven." He doesn't attempt in any way, though, to limit or define it. Long before Daniel, other great prophets spoke about preparation for the kingdom of God. Hosea and Amos both talked about attainment of kingdom caliber as necessary for admittance to the kingdom. And with the passage of time, other great spiritual leaders came with their urgent appeal to build the kingdom through personal righteousness. John the Baptist with his vigorous message of repentance and Christ with his multitude of parables concerning the kingdom typify the leaders of religious significance who came with an appeal for kingdom-builders. It is in keeping with history, then, that God has issued a new call. A call that rings out increasingly loud as each new advancement is made in the scientific and intellectual worlds.

To us, young people, that call comes with unusual clarity and force. Never before have we had such an opportunity to help so many. Never before have so many needed the message of the Restoration. "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him" was meant for the entire world

—not just one young lad who heard the words.

As participants in the building of this kingdom, our main responsibility is to demonstrate the workability of it. Too often we have been concerned over proving that we are the true church of Christ, that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and that prophets exist and function today. These things are important, tremendously so, but many times we let them become our major goals, when they are really only means to an end. Demonstration rather than proof must become the keyword in our daily life—demonstration of the centrality of Christ in our message and his functional value in our life. It sounds like a big job and it is. One of more importance will never come our way. But the God who said, "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward," is more concerned over this business than we can ever be. "God, Our Help" is more than just the title of a book.

Christ voiced the desperate need for kingdom-builders when he asked the question, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Wherever you are, ask yourself that question and then answer it, honestly and truthfully. From there on in, you're the quarterback.

Here Is the Writer . . .

"Chuck," at present, is working in a mine near Ohio City, Colorado. He tells us that he is a hundred miles from a photographer and "an old army grin is the best I have for you now." While at Graceland—from whence he was graduated in 1944—he spent his spare time and summers leading the Lamoni Junior Zion's League activities. His army career took him over a tour of the United States and on a trip to Italy. Next year, he plans to continue his college work in the fields of social science—for fun, and mining—for food.

HELP WANTED!

QUESTION: Young people are constantly being reminded that the job of Zion-building is up to them, but other than being told to pay their tithing and be "good kids" they are not given anything specific to do. Probably the reason so many lose interest in the great ideal is because they are given nothing tangible to apply their energy to. Is there no job for them? They must be given work for their hands as well as inspiring thoughts for their minds.

ANSWER: By Glaude A. Smith

"Is there no job for them?" is a question of first-rank importance. When one works with others in a given task—especially when that task is identified with a great cause—there is a sense of belonging which can be achieved no other way. All that may be done for the young people of the church—all the special activities and services planned for them alone will never compensate for any failure on the part of leaders to give them a share in the day-by-day tasks that keep the church moving toward its goals.

This is not a new problem. Through the years, the question of how youth may best share in the actual work of the church has been discussed at youth conferences, camps, local conventions, and at General Conference. The Department of Religious Education can point with satisfaction to the recorded results of many of these meetings. In June, 1939, a youth conference was held in Lamoni under the direction of general church officials, members of the Graceland faculty, and other prominent church leaders. The theme of the conference was "Youth Shares," and emphasis was placed on what young people can do today in the church. Suggestions for participation in the home branch are listed on pages 60 to 62, and for general church participation on pages 79 and 80 of the booklet, Youth Shares. Young people and pastors who are interested in finding something tangible for youth to do should read this carefully.

Another pamphlet, Youth Shares in Evangelism, was published following the young people's forum conducted at the 1940 General Conference. Pages 30 and 31 of this publication contain helpful suggestions. Definite tasks are specified on pages 217 to 222 of the Zion's League Handbook. Two new church school quarterlies in the "Church and Home" series offer help (see pages 56 to 60 in Dr. Cheville's quarterly and pages 51 to 57 in Dr. McDowell's quarterly).

For young people, ages twelve to fifteen, the service hours that must be given to the church in achieving the "God and Country" and "Light of Life" awards have led to a listing of possible activities in which boys and girls may share. For suggestions, see the booklet The Scouting Program in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, page 64; The Oriole Girls' Handbook, pages 110 to 112; and the booklet, "Light of Life" Religious Award Program for Girls, pages 14 to 16.

The place of youth in the church must first be the concern of the pastor, church school supervisor, and young people's leaders. Much is already being done in some branches by those in charge. It would be helpful to the Department of Religious Education if pastors and youth leaders throughout the church would send in reports of new ways they have found for young people to serve. The League and other groups within the church should formulate a plan for working together.

Young men have long served in some congregations as ushers under the direction of a member of the priesthood; in this way, they learn much about the conducting of services. A group of young persons, led by a capable adult, may serve by clearing the church grounds of leaves and papers; this will give them the satisfaction of feeling that they have had a part in maintaining the neat and inviting appearance of the church. They will also learn that there is some hard, tedious work connected with maintaining a church.

Older League members may work with the pastor in planning and carrying through a program of evangelism, including a series of missionary meetings at least once a year. This will include visiting, tracting, extending personal invitations to friends, preparing music, posters, and advertising in the local newspapers.

In one district, the Leaguers organized a young people's chorus and also arranged with the branch pastors to present the Sunday evening worship services. They chose as their speakers young ordained men who could talk inspiringly on current topics. They scheduled group visits to various branches in the district; this service stimulated the interest of other young people.

There is no question as to whether or not youth should be permitted to share; everyone is in favor. It is up to the pastors and leaders to work out a program to suit the needs of their individual branches; it is for the young people, themselves, to meet at youth conferences and discuss their place in the picture with their leaders. Both groups will profit from the sharing of these responsibilities.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Piatt of Butler, Missouri, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Sunday, February 23, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. H. A. Bruns. During the afternoon, a program was presented which included the wedding march by Lohengrin, two vocal duets, "I Love You Truly" and "Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet," a number of piano solos, and a musical reading. Mr. and Mrs. Piatt were married at Paton, Iowa, where they lived for several years before moving to Oklahoma; here Elder Piatt served as branch president of the El Reno congregation. They have made their home in Butler for the past eight years. Their friends of Butler Branch presented them a bouquet of snapdragons in honor of the occasion. They also received many gifts, cards, and greetings.

Because a little slave girl strayed from her kitchen to hear a sermon, Henrietta Booker and her sister, Idell East, are attending the R.L.D.S. Conference.

The guns of the Civil War were still sounding when a Latter Day Saint missionary held a series of meetings in the home of William Booker of Tunnel Springs, Ala. No one noticed the Negro girl who listened intently to the sermons from the doorway, but when the minister started to leave, she asked for baptism. Taking the last name of her master, she signed "Caroline Booker" to the church records, the first of thirty-seven Bookers to join the church through her influence.

Since there was no local branch for them to attend, Caroline and her husband conducted their own Sunday school classes with their children for the pupils. In 1905 the Bookers ordered quarterlies from the Herald Publishing House and reared their eight children on a succession of Bible lessons.

Missionaries such as Charles Hield, Maurice Draper, Ray Whiting, D. T. Williams, and Myron McConley stopped at the family church to ordain officers and to teach the songs, for sung in isolation, the familiar L.D.S. hymns had taken on a peculiar African swing.

Son Richard became a teacher, Perry an elder, and Ephraim a deacon.

As the children grew up and married they converted their children, and though many have moved to other cities, a congregation of Bookers still meets every Sunday morning in Pensacola, Fla. Henrietta and Idell are of the third generation of this group.

Henrietta is a graduate of Tuskegee Institute, and was a close friend of Dr. George Washington Carver, eminent Negro scientist.

This is their first visit to Independence and to a General Conference. —Biloine Whiting, in the Independence Examiner, April 7, 1947.

Flora, Illinois

The women of Flora Branch sponsored an oyster and chili supper on February 6 and a pie supper on February 27; proceeds were applied to the building fund. On Sunday, February 9, the Saints of Flora and Mount Vernon demonstrated how they followed the worship services outlined in the Herald each month at the district church school conference held in Mount Vernon. Recent speakers have been D. H. Milner, W. W. Brown, Eddie Colvin, and Harry Henson.

Kentucky-Tennessee District

We wish to have the names and addresses of all isolated members living in the Kentucky-Tennessee District. Will church members please co-operate, sending the names of all isolated members in this area. It is our purpose to contact these members either in person or by correspondence. With the help of everybody, we hope to keep busy in this work.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. John White, Route 2, Monica, Michigan, asks the prayers of the Saints that she might be healed of cancer, if it is God's will.

Mrs. Myrtle Ellis, 533 East Second Street, Concordia, Kansas, desires the prayers of the Saints. She is losing her sight, and oculists say there is no hope of saving it through surgery or treatment.

M. E. Altman of Sidell, Illinois, requests prayers for Jonathan Collins, a patient at the Rockville, Indiana, Tuberculosis Sanatorium. He and his wife were baptized about a year and a half ago and are striving to do all they can for the church.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Frank Lippstrew by her daughter, Mrs. Vera Cobb of Dalton, Nebraska. Mrs. Lippstrew is suffering with diabetes mellitus and is unable to carry the responsibilities that are hers because of this affliction.

Walter Bush and mother of Newcastle, Wyoming, request the prayers of the Saints. Mr. Bush is suffering with rheumatism; his mother has heart trouble.

DEATHS

GASKILL.—Samuel H. Sr., was born September 1, 1866, at Allenport, Pennsylvania, and died March 21, 1947, in Donora, Pennsylvania, after a short illness. On October 23, 1897, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, being called to the office of teacher, priest, and elder. He was elected to be pastor of Donora Branch in 1928 and served in that capacity until the time of his death. While making his home in North Charleroi, he was a member of the Borough Council and justice of the peace.

He is survived by his wife, Margaret; two sons: Willard of North Charleroi, and Samuel, Jr., of the home; one daughter, Grayce, also of the home; and two brothers: George and Hudson Gaskill of Speers. The funeral was held in New Philadelphia, Elder John Carlisle officiating. Interment was in the Belle Vernon Cemetery.

ELDER.—Mae Alice, was born July 10, 1928, at Nucla, Colorado, and died March 27, 1947. She is survived by her mother and stepfather, Joseph Towns; two brothers: Marion Lee Elder and Joseph Towns, Jr.; and a sister, Christina Towns. She also leaves three grandparents. Funeral services were held at Martin's Chapel, Elder Clarence Wallis officiating. Interment was in the Orchard Mesa Cemetery.

COBURN.—Gordon Orlow, was born December 23, 1882, in Blenheim, Ontario, and died January 19, 1947, in Port Huron Hospital, Port Huron, Michigan. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on September 16, 1891, by his father, Elder Richard Coburn. He was ordained a priest on May 3, 1914, and an elder on September 24, 1916. He served as pastor of Blenheim Branch for eleven years, and then moved to St. Clair, Michigan, where he was active in church work until his death. He was married to Hannah Elizabeth Lively in June, 1911.

He leaves his wife and two daughters, Mary of the home, and Evelyn of Saginaw, Michigan. Funeral services were conducted by Bishop J. C. Dent with Elder H. H. Grice assisting. Interment was in Hillside Cemetery.

PARKER.—Elizabeth Jane Willis, was born April 29, 1886, in Jackson County, Ohio, and passed away March 29, 1947, in Chillicothe, Ohio. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 16, 1925, remaining a faithful member of Chillicothe Branch until her death.

She is survived by her husband, Charles Parker; two daughters: Mrs. John Renner of Columbus, Ohio, and Mrs. Chester Grant of Chillicothe; a son, Charles Willis of the home; one sister, Mrs. Effie Hughes of Webster Groves, Missouri; a brother, Samuel Willis of Columbus; and eight grandchildren. Elders T. R. Beatty and E. K. Caldwell were in charge of the funeral service. Interment was in Greenlawn Cemetery.

McMURDO.—Lilla A. Minda, daughter of Hugh and Anna Wilson, was born in Ontario Province, Canada, on August 24, 1874, and passed away at the home of her daughter in Whitefish, Montana, on March 25, 1947. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1892 and was influential in establishing the church in Toronto. She continued to bear witness to the truthfulness of the Latter Day gospel even a few weeks before her death, testifying from her sick bed at a cottage meeting. On June 9, 1909, she was married to William McMurdo of Saskatchewan; in 1912, they moved to Montana. After Mr. McMurdo's death, she made her home with her son and daughter.

She is survived by a son, William, of Whitefish; two daughters: Mrs. Bernice Michel of Glasgow, Montana, and Mrs. Violet Rasmussen of Whitefish; five brothers: Curnel of Vancouver, British Columbia; Sam of Kelownia, British Columbia; Barkworth of Detroit, Michigan; Percy of Chicago, Illinois; and Booth of Toronto, Canada; six sisters: Mrs. Bertie McMullen and Mrs. Alice Bedford of Vancouver; Miss Lena Wilson of Toronto; Mrs. Ida Lashley of Lamon, Iowa; Mrs. Lucy Knox and Mrs. Lottie Bunell of Kelownia; and nine grandchildren.

PASSMAN.—Harry, was born December 11, 1883, in Rochester, New York, and passed away February 28, 1947, at his home in Forest Park, Illinois, where he had lived for the past twenty-one years. On February 15, 1903, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and was ordained an elder in 1913. In 1919, he went to Palestine as a missionary for the church and was in charge of the mission there until he returned to Chicago in 1926. He served as pastor of First Chicago Branch for several years and was instrumental in building the present church home. He also assisted in the development of the church work in Maywood, and at the time of his passing was pastor of the Elgin, Illinois, congregation. Since his return from Palestine, he was engaged in the real estate business. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Joseph Baldwin. Burial was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

COUGHENOUR.—Mary Frances, was born September 15, 1883, in Dunbar, Pennsylvania, and passed away February 27, 1947, at the home of her niece, Mrs. Thomas Kelly, in Donora, Pennsylvania. She had been ill for some time. On March 2, 1925, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. Her husband, Samuel Coughenour, preceded her in death. She is survived by a brother and six sisters. Elder Samuel H. Gaskill, Sr., officiated at the funeral which was held at the Reorganized Church in Donora.

WHITE.—John B., was born January 28, 1877, in Humansville, Missouri, and died at his home in Pittsburg, Kansas, on February 5, 1947. He was in ill health for eighteen years preceding his death. He had long been a member of the Reorganized Church.

He leaves his wife, Evalena; two daughters: Mrs. Dan Margrave of Pittsburg, Kansas, and Mrs. Dean Peck of Wichita, Kansas; one sister, Mrs. H. M. Conway of Fairview, Missouri; and four grandchildren. A son, John Burton, preceded him in death. Elder T. W. Bath was in charge of the funeral service. Burial was in the Mount Olive Cemetery in Pittsburg.

HORNOCKER.—Malissa, was born September 20, 1861, in Davies County, Indiana, and died at her home in Indianapolis, Indiana, on March 13, 1947. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by Elder J. W. Metcalf; she will be remembered for her great faith and unflinching courage. Her husband, Dennis Hornocker, preceded her in death several years ago.

She is survived by her son, Laurence, of Indianapolis; a sister, Mrs. Sallie Chandler of Jasonville, Indiana; and seven grandchildren. A morning funeral service was held at the Flanner and Buchanan Mortuary in Indianapolis, and an afternoon service at the Baptist Church in Silverville, Indiana. Evangelist Arthur W. Gage, assisted by Elder Charles A. Nolan, was in charge of both services. Interment was in the family lot adjoining the church in Silverville.

RHONEMUS.—Almina, was born December 5, 1863, in Wolverton, Ontario, and passed away at her home in Independence, Missouri, on February 28, 1947. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on November 29, 1885, at Lapeer, Michigan. Her husband, George Rhonemus, preceded her in death on April 27, 1938.

She is survived by two brothers: Leonard Harp of Imlay City, Michigan, and Emerson Harp of Newton, Michigan. Services were held at the Carson Funeral Home in Independence. Evangelist R. V. Hopkins officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Rasmus Peter, died at his home in Guilford, Missouri, on March 20, at the age of eighty-six. He was a native of Denmark and a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are his wife, Mina; three daughters: Mrs. Grace McClanahan of Guilford; Mrs. Edith Sparks, Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. Mildred Fordham, Fort Smith, Arkansas; eight sons: Otis, Gasland, Missouri; Harold, Parkville, Missouri; Inez, Council Bluffs, Iowa; Oakley, Lincoln, Nebraska; and Frank, Los Angeles, California; twenty-seven grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Reorganized Church in Guilford, Pastor A. B. Heinrichs officiating. Burial was in the Weatherman Cemetery near Guilford.

MURRAY.—James, was born May 8, 1859, at Morgantown, West Virginia, and died February 7, 1947. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1931. Funeral services were conducted at the Jenkins and Brown Mortuary in Morgantown, James L. Jeffries officiating.

HADLEY.—Alva Watson, was born August 2, 1863, in Wilmington, Ohio, and died at his home in Joplin, Missouri, on February 10, 1947, after a long illness. He united with the Reorganized Church early in childhood and served as a teacher for many years.

He leaves one daughter, Grace Karlstrom of Joplin; eight grandchildren, and ten great-grandchildren. His wife, Lizzie Hadley, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held in the Reorganized Church, Elder Roy Oehring officiating. Burial was in Osborn Cemetery.

KARLSTROM.—Nellie Gertrude, was born November 29, 1883, near Wilmington, Ohio, and died at her home in Joplin, Missouri, on January 3, 1947. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a girl and was ever a faithful member.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Leona Oehring of Neosho, Missouri, and Mrs. Mary Petrie of Auburn, Washington; four sons: Denver and Clyde of Joplin; Floyd of Neosho; and David, now home on leave from Germany; one sister, Grace Karlstrom of Joplin; and six grandchildren. Her husband, Elder O. C. Karlstrom, preceded her in death. The funeral service was held in the Reorganized Church; Elder Arthur Rock was in charge. Burial was in Osborn Cemetery.

PENNELL.—Elmer, son of John Wesley and Sarah Jane Pennell, was born September 14, 1868, in Washington County, Ohio, and died February 24, 1947, in the Independence Sanitarium. He is survived by his wife, Ellen A.; two daughters: Mrs. Gladys Myers of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Grace Tousey, Independence, Missouri; three sons: George W. and G. Darwin of Kansas City, and John E. of Independence. He also leaves a stepson, Wayne Rogers, of Independence. Services were held in the Walnut Park Church in Independence. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PRESTON.—Jessie I., daughter of Joseph and Janet Luff, was born December 20, 1875, at Toronto, Canada, and died March 23, 1947, at Independence, Missouri, after months of severe suffering. She was baptized by her father on October 17, 1886. On November 6, 1899, she was married to Sidney J. Preston; two daughters were born to this union.

She is survived by her aged father; her daughters: Mrs. Gracie Johnson and Mrs. Natalie Hattey; two brothers, Joseph and Alma Luff; and two sisters: Mrs. Hattie Dooley and Mrs. Mitty Bullard; all of Independence. Patriarch Frederick A. Smith gave the funeral sermon; Amos T. Higdon was in charge of the service. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LONDON.—Henry, was born in the Netherlands on September 15, 1884, and passed away February 15, 1947, at his home. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on November 26, 1931, was ordained a priest on July 21, 1932, and an elder on September 29, 1935. Surviving are his widow; one son, Henry, Jr., of Lansing, Michigan; two daughters: Mrs. Cecil Watson and Nellamae; and six brothers, Jelte and Derk London; and six grandchildren. The funeral was held Tuesday, February 13, with Elder Homer Harvey officiating. Burial was in Restlawn Memorial Park.

MOCKERMAN.—America F., died February 21, 1947, at the age of eighty-four. She had been a resident of Grand Rapids, Michigan, for the past seventeen years. She was born in Indiana, but moved to Sand Lake, Michigan, after her father was killed in the Civil War. On January 23, 1876, she was married to Harris Mockerman; Mr. Mockerman preceded her in death twenty-three years ago.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Laura Whittemore and Mrs. Flora Earl, both of Grand Rapids; five sons: Reuben of Nautinway, Michigan; George of Sand Lake; Eugene of Stockton, California; Stanley of Byron Center, Michigan; and Howard of Grand Rapids; twenty-seven grandchildren, and several great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Sullivan Chapel, Elder Garnett Smith officiating. Burial was in the Morley, Michigan, cemetery.

LETTERS

God's Pilgrims

Six years ago when we were looking for a place to buy, everything seemed to go against us. We wanted to live near the church we had been attending, since we felt so much at home there, but it seemed some force directed us to move elsewhere.

We could not understand why we were so impressed to buy our present home, since there was no Reorganized church near. We left all of our friends and came to what we called the frontier. For two years we went to our old branch as often as possible, a distance of eight miles. When the roads were bad, and gas and tires were rationed, we had to stay at home.

We began to think about having a church school of our own here. Two Latter Day Saint families moved only a few miles away from us, so we decided to hold meetings in our homes. But that proved to be unsatisfactory because so much of the time the roads were too bad to go by car, and we lived too far apart to walk. We forgot the idea for a while, but became impressed to start again.

We received permission from the school board to use an empty schoolhouse to hold our church school in. The building had been vacant for over eight years, and the birds, mice, and weather had done their worst to it.

We were well-initiated those first days of sweeping, scrubbing, and scraping. We finally got it to look presentable, and on July 22, 1945, we had our first church school and election of officers. Twenty-two were present, including ten nonmembers. Each Sunday brought a new face for several weeks. We were very much encouraged by this, but soon we realized that these people were only coming out of curiosity.

Our membership grew to twenty when a family from Canada joined us. These people have been a great help to us.

Now we are progressing nicely with our own members, and a few nonmembers who attend regularly. Forty-two people, approximately half of whom are children, are on the present roll.

We believe we were directed here for a purpose. Now that we have found our work and made up our minds to do it, we are happy. We who live in this small community consider ourselves one family. We are bound together by a force we cannot see, but one we feel very strongly.

We have developed a community spirit, and try to show by our actions that we are Christ's followers. This year we gave a Christmas program. At first we were going to have it just for our own group and by our own members. Then we decided we would include the community and give them a chance to participate too. We were granted permission to have it in a community church and our attendance that one evening was eighty-five! On several previous occasions we gave community parties which as many as fifty young people attended.

We are now working for a new church. We are reminded of the fact that our present meeting place was once a school by the seats we use. We hope to purchase appropriate furniture soon.

We know we are not wasting our time. Several children come quite regularly to our church school. This year, at our Thanksgiving Day prayer service, the spirit came to us, and we were told to continue on for those who would eventually move into our group.

We are pioneers here and are pushing our way into an unexplored field. Our path is hard, and we may make mistakes, but we are trying to set an example to the small ones, so that they may carry on with those who will follow. We are proud of our rural mission, because we are accomplishing something. We are God's Pilgrims.

Onset in Winter

The Southern New England District Reunions have been held at Onset, Massachusetts, for the past thirty-six years. Saints from many States cherish memories of their associations here. The reunions are held during the open season when Cape Cod is at its beauty peak, but during the winter, the little cottages are covered with snow, and the roaring tides thrash the shore. The big tabernacle is cold and empty. Yet each Sunday a few Saints who are willing to brave the extreme climate meet in their small chapel to thank God for his care and protection. Only a dozen of the eighty-seven cottages are occupied in winter. These people are the nucleus of Onset Branch. Recently the chapel was painted and new fixtures installed so that even in winter it is a cheerful place to worship. Many of the members are elderly, but they are still steadfast in spirit and faithful to their duties.

His Will Be Done

Last year I requested the prayers of the Saints that I might be healed so that the operation I was supposed to have wouldn't be necessary. My request was answered in another way. I was not spared the operation, but during my twelve days in the hospital, I suffered no pain. The doctors said my recovery was remarkable.

I realize now that God's will, not ours, is the thing for which we should pray. I am sixty-two years old and have many causes to rejoice in my Heavenly Father's goodness.

Would Appreciate Visitors

In February, I requested prayers of the Saints in my behalf as I was suffering intensely. Following an operation at the hospital in Fort Wayne, I began to wish for administration. Being an isolated member, I did not know of any elders available. However, my prayers were answered, and two elders came and administered to me. Immediately, my strength began to return, and the following day I was able to sit up. I am grateful to God for his mercy and to the ministers who came when I so needed them; I do not know their names, so I am hoping they will see this letter and accept my appreciation.

I pray that God will bless his people everywhere. If any care to visit me, I live on Route 1, four miles north of South Whitley, Indiana, at the home of Oris Noland.

Listen, Brother!

P. S.

* Distinction

If you wish to preserve your individuality, move to a small town.

Take your postal address, for example. Someone writes to you and addresses the envelope: John Smith, Blissville, Mo., and you get it. Out of the many countries and the teeming millions of all the earth, the letter carrier will find you quickly and surely. You will not be mistaken for anybody else.

Move to the great city, and you are nothing but a hat, a suit, and a pair of shoes, concealing a cheap commodity called Labor, identified by a number on your company time clock. If your cousin in the sticks wishes to write to you, he must put on the envelope, in addition to your name, the apartment number or floor, house number, street, zone, city, and state—seven items in all—and even then somebody may stamp it "Addressee Unknown," and send it back, no matter how long you have lived there. You must be rich and/or famous to get any personal attention; otherwise, a letter like John Smith's would go to the Dead Letter Office.

But in all the little crossroads towns of the nation, your individuality is a local landmark. Brother, if your ego sags and your fame is in need of repair, go to a small town.

* Unidentified Manuscripts. During the recent General Conference, a number of manuscripts were left for the editors, some of them without names or addresses. These cannot be handled in any way except to be committed to the "anonymous" file at the present time. If you have left such manuscripts, would you please write, giving titles of your articles? It is a good safeguard to have author's name and address on all articles.

Hundreds of books are written to tell you how to write and speak. The whole world wants to be articulate—it yearns to be heard. The quest of our generation is for an audience, just as our ancestors sought utopia, the philosopher's stone, or the fountain of youth. We think the height of success is to make somebody listen to us.

But has anybody written a book on how to listen? If so, it has eluded me. Yet nobody ever learns much with his mouth open; learning requires the open ear.

In youth we spend much effort to make older people listen. It is futile. Even the few who say, "Yes," have their minds on something else, and go right on with their old ideas. The cemetery is filled with people who thought they knew more than the experts.

Recently, I sat on the edge of a group of young people. We lived in two worlds, but by listening I could hear the voices of the future, and of some of the people who are to make that future. The words were familiar, but they were patterned in new arrangements, and they clothed new ideas. Without realizing, the young people were speaking prophetically, for what they said will make the world from what it is into something quite different.

I have learned that listening—and I do not mean just keeping quiet until it is my turn to speak again—is a pleasant experience. It stimulates the mind and rests the vocal cords. And, if one persists in it long enough, he is almost sure to learn something that will be of importance.—L. J. L.

rum of Twelve, both of which were incorporated in the record and printed, and to which we expect to give editorial attention in early issues of the HERALD.

A careful reading and better understanding of the comprehensive report of the Presiding Bishopric are recommended to the Saints.

Much was undoubtedly accomplished toward further unity. All memories are happy ones—none unpleasant. We give praise where it is due—to the Founder and Finisher of our Faith.

Reports indicate that classwork was profitable to all, and the fellowship and preaching services were attended to capacity and were times of spiritual rejoicing.

The General Conference

General Conferences of the church have been held annually or semi-annually from its beginning in 1830. The practice is not only in harmony with instructions given in early revelations and conducive to the orderly conduct of its affairs, but also—and more important—necessary to the spiritual development of the Saints. The writer remembers “Fall” Conferences held in outdoor “arbors” at Lamoni in October, north of the Herald Office, a custom which gave way in favor of reunions held first in summer months, beginning in Western Iowa and spreading to other areas. From the later 80’s or early 90’s, our General Conferences were annual gatherings until, under pressure of circumstances, they were on occasion held two years apart.

Our present conferences in range of activities have developed into far more than the conferences of early years when quorum meetings, prayer and preaching services, and the business sessions only were held. For many years now, classwork and teaching, the work of church schools, women’s and youth’s departments, etc., claim much of the time of the delegates and visitors, and for the priesthood especially, it is a time of intense activity.

No one not connected with the administrative councils can know the immense amount of work involved in the preparation for a General Conference. The development of a program, the schedule of classes, etc., for the conference just held have engaged the attention of some members of the Presidency and of other members of the Joint Council for months. For this reason we are greatly concerned in the success of this one great meeting of the Saints, and quite naturally, when the event has passed, seek to appraise it.

One could hardly speak or write extravagantly of the recent General Conference. The consensus of opinion is that for spiritual uplift it has not been excelled in recent years. We can but take courage from the general good will so much in evidence throughout its sessions.

As was the case in 1946, we approached the conference with a feeling of hope and expectancy, but without the apprehension of a year ago. The Saints met in faith that all would be well with the church and left for their homes with increased confidence in the rightness of our cause and with greater confidence in the ultimate triumph of the work “intrusted to all.”

And as in 1946, a watchful and beneficent Father recognized our need, answered our petitions, and blessed us with divine direction. We are indeed pleased that the Quorum of Twelve is again filled, enhancing the assurance that the chief missionary quorum, a co-ordinate branch of the administration, will carry on its appointed work of witness and testimony with ever-increasing effectiveness.

Timely instruction for unity and with respect to the gathering was received, comforting to the body, which will have a stabilizing effect if given proper consideration by both the ministry and the members.

The business of the conference was transacted with reasonable dispatch and with marked good will on the part of all. Administrative quorums, councils, and department heads gave the delegates needed assistance, all reports were in printed form for them, and full information respecting the work was furnished. There was a manifest desire, as always, to have the delegates fully advised, and in turn, the expedition in doing the necessary business of the church bears testimony that the delegates have confidence in its leading quorums and councils. This is most encouraging, indeed, and we can say with assurance, never was there greater determination on the part of the members of such councils to serve worthily and acceptably.

A note of sadness came as a result of Brother Rushton’s withdrawal from the Quorum of Twelve. The long and distinguished service of this senior Apostle constitutes one of the brightest pages of our history, and the church in conference assembled recorded its genuine approval and sincere appreciation of his loving ministry.

On behalf of the Presidency, we thank the delegates and ex officios for their co-operation.

To our Presiding Bishopric go our sincere thanks and appreciation for the able manner in which all the business affairs were presented. As usual the Quorum of Twelve were diligent and alert, and extremely helpful. The Council of Presidents of Seventy, though losing two of their number by call to the Quorum of Twelve, and their presiding head, Brother E. Y. Hunker, saddened by the death of a sister on the eve of conference, responded to duty and labored hard and successfully to strengthen their council and the Seventy. Likewise, quorums of the standing ministry, the high priests, and elders, sought to make the conference a success and to reinforce their ranks.

Thus the church “at work,” all as laborers together, has again demonstrated what a united church can do, and if it is a criterion or a prophecy—and we are sure it is—the period from now till the next General Conference in October, 1948, will be a momentous one in our forward march.

Far-reaching administrative and missionary programs were presented in the message from the First Presidency and the epistle from the Quo-

Editorial

Gold Plates

By Harold I. Velt

The question has at times been asked, "Could gold plates of hieroglyphic writing equal to the contents of more than seven hundred pages of printed matter be carried by a man?" or "Could such be carried as easily as our church history would seem to infer in reference to the plates of the Book of Mormon?"

Of interest is the following from the Geography of Commerce for Canadians by George A. Cornish, professor of science at the University of Toronto. (Published by Sir Isaac Pitman and Sons, Ltd., Canada.)

"Gold—As this metal resists successfully the action of air, water, sulphur, and ordinary chemicals, time cannot tarnish its surface: the glint of ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia, when dug from the ruins of seven thousand years, flashes forth with undimmed glory, for gold is one of the most indestructible of the earth's materials. So malleable is this precious metal that a piece much smaller than the head of a pin can be hammered into a sheet large enough to cover a good-sized room. So thin are such sheets that if the Encyclopaedia Britannica, consisting of twenty-four volumes of one thousand pages each, were printed on gold leaves it would take one hundred sets bound together to make a book one inch in thickness. So ductile is gold that two pounds can be drawn into a fine wire long enough to encircle the earth at the equator." (Page 220, section 382.)

From the above, for which I am indebted to Elder Loyd Belrose of Owen Sound, Ontario, we gather that 2,400,000 pages like those of the Encyclopaedia Britannica could be printed into a book of gold not thicker than one inch, providing the leaves were as thin as they could be made.

Miss Hawaii Comes to America

By Winifred Milner

IT WAS a few weeks before Christmas when I saw her the first time. She came one Sunday afternoon, knocking at my door.

"I'm Evelyn Yapp," she said. "Brother Howard Miller, our Hawaiian missionary, asked me to call on you. I'm a member of your church, and this is my friend, Dorothy Sun."

I was looking into the faces of two pretty Chinese girls. I led them down the long hall toward my living room, feeling grateful to friend Howard for such charming company.

The girls met daughter and son, and we had a delightful time. They didn't stay long, but they left freshness and enthusiasm behind, so that the room was more lonely when they had gone.

We took them to the Brooklyn church. They brought a spirit that touched the pastor and the congregation—it was the inspirational touch of friendship and good will.

CHRISTMAS DAY Miss Evelyn called upon us, bringing gifts in her arms, a scarf for daughter, a shirt for son, pin and earrings for me, and with the gifts she brought a part of herself, sweetness, goodness, the neighborliness of Hawaii and China.

Evelyn knows the McConleys, and when she learned that "Aunty Emma" was coming to New York, her face had a glow, so that you could see what it meant to the Hawaiian missions to have missionaries like Apostle Myron McConley and his beloved wife Emma.

Tuesday, February 17, the McConleys arrived in New York. It was their last stopping place on American soil, before taking the great ship "Queen Elizabeth" for a mission to England. Our pastor, LeRoy Squire, and his lovely wife Ethel brought them to our house that evening for dinner.

Evelyn came. I saw her locked in the arms of "Aunty Emma," crying tears of welcome.

Arm in arm they walked down the hall to join Apostle McConley and others in the living room.

Then came the tribute—two crepe paper leis, purple and gold, the church colors—one for Apostle McConley, and one for "Aunty Emma," each had been made by Evelyn's own clever hands. Two races had met and joined hearts in love. It was a promise of kinship for tomorrow.

Light

By Mrs. E. R. Soper

Light is a wonderful thing. It is used for so many purposes. Humanity cannot live without it. We use it to do our work in shop, store, and home.

It is much used along the coasts of our oceans, lakes, and rivers. We all know of the lighthouse that is built on the great rocks, where it guides many ships to safety.

When God said, "Let there be light," he was looking toward humanity's good. God placed the sun in the heavens to give light by day, and the moon which borrows its light from the light of the sun to give light by night. The light of the stars have their purpose, too.

But there is yet a different kind of light, a spiritual light. As much as we need light to do our material work, so also do we need this spiritual light to guide us in our efforts to gain our heavenly rewards. Jesus said, "I am the light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness but have the light of life." After Jesus left this world he sent his spirit among men to give us this spiritual light along our pathway of life. Through this light we gain in wisdom and knowledge of our Lord. If we have this light, it will shine unto all men. The world is in much need of a spiritual light.

So let us not hide our light under a bushel, but have it burning on a candlestick where it may give light to others around us.

The only way to get this light is to obey the gospel of Jesus Christ and keep his commandments. If we do this, God will keep his promises. Kings Highway, Rt. 4, Independence, Mo.

Man is his own star; and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man Commands all light, all influence, all fate. Nothing to him falls early or too late. Our acts our angels are, or good or ill. Our fatal shadows that walk by us still. —John Fletcher.

Business Session, Monday, April 7, 1947

The General Conference of 1947 assembled for business in the Auditorium in Independence, Missouri, at two o'clock p. m., Monday, April 7, 1947, pursuant to provisions of the Conference of 1946.

The first business session of the Conference was called to order by President Israel A. Smith, who entertained a motion by Apostle P. M. Hanson and Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp that the Presidency preside over this Conference, and be empowered to complete the organization.

Apostle Hanson put the motion to vote, and it prevailed unanimously.

President Smith resumed the chair and in behalf of the Presidency expressed appreciation of the confidence shown, and announced "Redeemer of Israel," the "battle-hymn of the church" as the opening song of the Conference. The congregation was led by Elder Roy A. Cheville, with Mrs. Irene Wolfe accompanying at the organ.

Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith offered the invocation.

A flag ceremony was conducted by Apostle C. G. Mesley, the congregation singing the National Anthem while the American Flag and the Church Banner were carried to the platform. Flags of the following nations where the message of the Restoration has gone, and also the Christian flag, were unfurled from the organ loft and then brought to the platform: United States, Great Britain, Canada, France, Australia, Holland, Hawaii, Denmark, New Zealand, Norway, Switzerland, Sweden, Palestine, Germany, Spain, and Poland.

"The Whole, Wide World For Jesus" was sung by the congregation, and Apostle Rushton offered prayer. One verse of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and a stanza of "God Save the King" were sung.

A solo was rendered by H. D. Gatchett entitled "The Voice in the Wilderness." He was accompanied by Mrs. Wolfe at the organ.

Secretary McDonald read a list of appointments for the permanent organization of the Conference, as follows:

GENERAL CONFERENCE APPOINTMENTS 1947

Secretaries: O. W. Newton, P. G. Fairbanks, Frank McDonald.

Stenographers: Miss Gladys Gould,

Mrs. Rosamond Sherman, Mrs. Ethel Dell, Miss Katherine Cochran.

Music: Franklyn S. Weddle with power to choose assistants.

Public Relations: Leonard Lea, with power to choose assistants.

Credentials Committee: C. L. Olson, Lloyd L. Bland, A. B. Taylor.

Ushers: Local and visiting deacons under the direction of Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, assisted by A. E. Terryberry, Monte L. Parker, John Chapman, Ralph H. Baker, and James E. Campbell.

Messengers: Boy Scouts.

Communion Service Arrangement: A. A. Oakman, Franklyn S. Weddle, Henry Stahl.

Decorations Committee: Mrs. Emma Lou Stahl, Chairman.

Reception Committee: Blanche Green, Chairman.

The chairman called attention to report of the Credentials Committee, as found in The Saints' Herald of April 5, beginning on page 312, which he stated would be spread upon the minutes subject to action. On motion of Bishop Livingston and Elder Perry Hiles the report was approved, and the chairman announced the Conference officially organized.

President Smith then stated that he wished to call attention to some of our distinguished visitors from the British Isles who are with us as delegates. The following were then presented to the Conference:

VISITORS FROM BRITISH ISLES

Bishop A. T. Trapp, Sister Trapp, Elder James Barrington, Elder Charles Cousins, Sister Cousins, Elder Joseph Holmes, Sister Holmes, Brother Eric King, Sister Ada Meredith, Sister Beryl Meredith, Elder T. E. Worth, Sister T. E. Worth.

The following cablegrams from Apostle McConley in charge of the European Mission, and Elder Herman Peisker, in charge of the Australasian Mission were read.

The chair recognized Mrs. Stephen A. Black, President of the Daughters of Zion of Independence, who, in behalf of her organization, presented to the church as a memorial, a portrait of the late President Frederick M. Smith by Mr. Lennon R. Bandel, of Cleveland, Ohio, formerly of Kansas City. The portrait was unveiled, and was accepted by President Smith in behalf of the church, who made the following statement:

It is fitting at this time the General Conference pay tribute to the memory of our brother, who served the church for this long period, during over thirty years of which he was the president of the High Priesthood and of the church.

President Smith brought to his task rare gifts and especially do we recall his excellent ability as a parliamentarian. His leadership raised the standard of the Conferences to the high level all appreciate today.

We respectfully suggest that in tribute to the memory of our late president and in token of appreciation of all he contributed to the common cause, so dear to each and all, that we devote a few moments of reverent silence, thus memorializing one who gave so much, and is enshrined in the memory of so many.

The congregation remained standing in silent tribute, which was followed by the singing of one verse of "Onward to Zion."

At this juncture President Smith relinquished the chair to President J. F. Garver, and withdrew from the assembly.

President Garver made the following statement: "It is our privilege, as well as our solemn obligation to inform the Conference that there is on the table a document from President Smith purporting to be the Word of God as direction to the church."

The document was read by the secretary as follows:

April 7, 1947

To the Quorums and Councils of the Church and to the General Conference:

For some time I have given prayerful consideration to the church and its present needs, in harmony with the call for prayer, and I am directed to present the following as the will of the Lord:

1. The unity among my people and in the councils of the church is commendable. If those of the priesthood will perform their responsibilities in good fellowship, and sustain each other, they will be supported by the faith and prayers of the church and the work will go forward with increasing power.

2. To fill vacancies already existing, let Roscoe E. Davey and Maurice L. Draper, now serving as Seventies, be ordained Apostles and occupy with their brethren in the Quorum of Twelve.

3. My servant John W. Rushton has served his generation and the church long and faithfully, and he is honorably released from further responsibility as a member of the Quorum of Twelve, continuing to minister in his priesthood as he can and may desire, without specific assignment. His works are with me and his reward is sure.

4. W. Wallace Smith is called and should be ordained an Apostle and take his place in the councils of the church. This call was made known before, but my servant withheld it from the body for reasons that he believed were sufficient.

5. The church is admonished again that all movements toward Zion and the gathering and temporalities connected therewith are within my law, and all things should be done in order, the advice and counsel of the elders and of the Bishop and his council be sought and honored when received, as before enjoined, though of necessity their counsel when given is not intended to dictate or to deny any man his agency. The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies; but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.

Respectfully submitted this 7th day of April, 1947.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

It was moved by Apostle P. M. Hanson and Elder Percy Farrow that the communication from President Israel A. Smith be accepted by the church as an expression of the divine will to guide and direct the affairs of the church at this present time, and that the same be incorporated in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Secretary McDonald then read the reports from the various quorums respecting their action on this document, as follows:

April 7, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

We have given to the document presented by the President of the church, and bearing the date of April 7, 1947, our careful scrutiny, and recognize and endorse it as embodying inspired instruction for the guidance of the church.

Very sincerely yours,

J. F. GARVER,
F. HENRY EDWARDS.

April 7, 1947

To the First Presidency and the General Conference:

Greeting:

The message dated April 7, 1947, from President Israel A. Smith, and presented as the will of the Lord to the quorums and councils of the church and to the General Conference, has received the prayerful consideration of the Quorum of Twelve. The unanimous decision of the Quorum of Twelve is to approve the document presented as the word of God to his church.

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE G. LEWIS,
Secretary, Quorum of Twelve.

April 7, 1947

To the First Presidency and the General Conference:

The members of the Quorum of Seventy in assembly this morning unanimously approved the document presented to the quorum by President Israel A. Smith.

Respectfully,

E. Y. HUNKER,
President.

April 7, 1947

President Israel A. Smith and the General Conference:

The document of April 7, 1947, submitted to the Order of Bishops, calling to office in the Quorum of Twelve, Roscoe E. Davey, Maurice L. Draper, and W. Wallace Smith, and releasing Apostle John W. Rushton, received our careful consideration, and the following resolution was adopted:

MOVED, that the Order of Bishops, in quorum session, approve the document from Israel A. Smith as revealing the will of the Lord, and that we express complete confidence in the provisions made.

The Order also wishes to pledge its full support to the men called to office in the Quorum of Twelve.

As some of the members of this quorum have been closely associated with Apostle John W. Rushton during many of the long years of service he has given to the church, we, as an Order, wish to express to him and to his wife our deep appreciation for the excellence of service so generously given and to wish for them additional years of happiness and church association.

G. L. DELAPP,
Presiding Bishop.

April 7, 1947

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

Greeting:

We report that the document dated April 7 and submitted to the quorums for consideration, was laid before the Order of Evangelists at 11:00 o'clock of this date, was examined paragraph by paragraph, and the motion prevailed that it be received and unanimously approved as the Word of God to the Conference and the church.

Respectfully submitted,

ELBERT A. SMITH,
Presiding Patriarch.

A. V. ARNOLD,
Secretary.

President I. A. Smith and General Conference:

This is to advise that the Aaronic Priesthood in quorum session met at ten o'clock this date to give consideration to the document dated April 7, 1947; and after due consideration the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

MOVED, that the Aaronic Priesthood in quorum session approve the document from President Israel A. Smith as revealing the will of the Lord.

We hereby express our complete confidence in the provisions made, both as to the men called to office in the Quorum of Twelve and to the release of Apostle John W. Rushton.

It is the further desire of the members of the Aaronic Order to express sincere and deep appreciation for the long years of service given to the church by Apostle John W. Rushton, and to wish for him continued years of happiness and further service to the church; and to extend to the men called to these new responsibilities our sincere support.

G. L. DELAPP,
President, Aaronic Priesthood.

At the invitation of the chairman, Elders R. E. Davey, M. L. Draper, and W. Wallace Smith addressed the Conference, each expressing his willingness to accept the responsibilities of the apostolic office.

Elders E. Y. Hunker and A. A. Oakman spoke in support of Elder Davey; Elder Percy E. Farrow spoke in support of Brethren Davey and Draper; E. J. Gleazer spoke in support of Brother Draper. Evangelist Elbert A. Smith stated he was ready to accept the calling of the three men named in the document, emphasizing his testimony in support of Brother Wallace Smith. Apostle Hield spoke in support of Brother Smith, and Apostle Williams spoke in support of the three brethren named, and paid tribute to the ministry of retiring apostle, John W. Rushton. Elders J. F. Curtis and Gomer T. Griffiths spoke in support of Brother Wallace Smith, and Apostle Mesley in support of Brother Draper and of the document as a whole.

The motion to accept the document prevailed unanimously by a standing vote.

Apostle John W. Rushton, on invitation of the chairman, addressed the Conference, and his statement will appear in The Saints' Herald.

Apostle Hanson spoke to a question of personal privilege, and paid earnest tribute to the life and ministry of his associate, Brother Rushton.

The chairman stated unless there were objections he would take the liberty of appointing a committee to draft suitable expressions of the church to Brother Rushton for adoption by the Conference and publication. He then appointed to constitute this committee, the President of the Church, the President of the Quorum of Twelve, the Presiding Bishop, the senior president of the Council of Presidents of Seventy, and the President of the High Priests Quorum.

The chair announced that the ordinations provided for would take place at the business session tomorrow afternoon.

"The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning" was sung; Apostle Rushton offered the benediction, and the Conference adjourned at 4:00 p. m., subject to the provisions of the Official Program.

Business Session, Tuesday, April 8, 1947

The General Conference convened in business session at 2:00 o'clock p.m., Tuesday, with President I. A. Smith in the chair.

Hymn "He Leadeth Me" was sung by the congregation under the leadership of Elder Roy A. Cheville, accompanied by Mrs. Edna Ehlers at the organ.

Bishop A. T. Trapp of the British Mission offered the invocation.

The chairman reported the decease of Elder James Puuohau, of Hilo, Hawaii.

Under the direction of Elder E. Y. Hunker, President of the Council of Presidents of Seventy, a ceremony of tribute to Elder Hubert Case was presented in honor of his forty-seven years of continuous labor as a member of the Quorum of Seventy. A chorus comprised of the members of the Seventies Quorum sang "Shout the Tidings of Salvation" under the leadership of Elder Glen H. Johnson. Elder Z. Z. Renfroe read scripture pertaining to the duties and office work of the Seventy.

Seated with Brother Case in positions of honor on the platform were Elders J. F. Mintun and Gomer T. Griffiths who were ordained Seventies in 1879. J. Arthur Davis ordained a Seventy in 1886, Frederick A. Smith, Charles J. Hunt and John Shields ordained Seventies in 1894. Elder Hubert Case was ordained to office of Seventy in 1897, and was superannuated in 1944, after forty-seven years of continuous ministry. In behalf of the assembly, greetings were extended to Elder Hubert Case by President I. A. Smith, Apostle P. M. Hanson and Elder E. Y. Hunker as a token of respect, appreciation and affection.

All members of the Assembly who at any time have held the office of Seventy were called to the platform, and sang "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," under the direction of Brother Johnson. At the conclusion of the ceremony the brethren returned to their places.

The minutes of April 7 were read and approved as read.

A supplemental report of the Credentials Committee was read as follows:

April 8, 1947

To the General Conference:

Since the publication of the list of delegates a Delegate Credential has been received from Miami, Florida, branch, which has elected Lester Tankersley, as its representative to General Conference.

The Credentials Committee recommends that Lester Tankersley be given a seat in the Conference as a delegate.

Respectfully submitted,
THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE,
By C. L. Olson.

On motion of Elders A. O. Crownover and Ray Whiting the report was approved.

To further complete the Conference organization, the chairman announced the following additions to the Press Committee: C. B. Hartshorn, Mrs. Orrin Russell, Sadi Anka Moon and Kenneth Morford.

The chair called attention to reports published in the Heralds of March 29 and April 5, which were ordered spread upon the minutes subject to further consideration and action, as follows:

The following reports appeared in the Saints' Herald of March 29:

General Council of Women, page 9; Order of Evangelists, 12; Graceland College, 12; Historical Department, 15; Herald Publishing House, 16; Statistical Department, 18; Church Architect, 19; Presidents of Seventy, 20; Australasian Mission, 20; Music Department, 22; Graphic Arts Bureau, 22; Department of Religious Education, 22; North Atlantic States Mission, 25; Great Lakes Mission, 26; Society for Archaeological Research, 26; First Quorum of Seventy, 26; Quorum of High Priests, 27; Central States Mission, 27; Independence Sanitarium and Hospital (Board), 28; Independence Sanitarium and Hospital (Supt. Miss G. E. Copeland), 29; Radio Department, 29.

The following reports appeared in the issue of April 5:

Presiding Bishopric, page 9; Auditor's Report, 12; Northwestern States Mission, 19; Independence and the States, 20; Southern Mission, 21; Hawaii District, 22; Southwestern States Mission, 23.

President Smith stated at this juncture we would proceed with the ordinations to the apostolic quorum approved by Conference action of yesterday.

The congregation sang "We Thank Thee O God for a Prophet," and a dedicatory prayer was offered by Apostle D. T. Williams.

"Men of God Go Take Your Stations" was sung, during which Brethren Roscoe E. Davey, Maurice L. Draper and W. Wallace Smith took places arranged for them on the platform.

Apostle Lewis read a scriptural commission from the Doctrine and Covenants.

A tenor solo was rendered by Elder Garland E. Tickemyer, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains," and was accompanied by Bethel Davis Knoche at the organ.

Roscoe E. Davey was ordained to the office of Apostle and member of the Quorum of Twelve by Apostles P. M. Hanson and Arthur A. Oakman.

Maurice L. Draper was ordained to the office of Apostle and member of the Quorum of Twelve by Apostles E. J. Gleazer and C. R. Hield.

W. Wallace Smith was ordained to the office of Apostle and member of the Quorum of Twelve by Apostles D. Blair Jensen and C. G. Mesley.

The newly ordained Apostles were greeted by President Smith, and Apostle Hanson, who welcomed them to the Quorum and escorted them to places on the platform with that body.

Brother John W. Rushton was recognized by the chair, and read the following communication addressed to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, and moved its adoption which was seconded by Bishop Stephen Robinson of Des Moines,

April 7, 1947

*The Honorable Harry S. Truman,
President of the United States of America:*

Many thousands of ministers, officers and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints representing the universal church, gathered together here in Independence, Missouri, for their 1947 conference, send greetings and express their heartfelt appreciation for the excellent statesmanship with which you have met the unique and complex problems of these trying times.

The warm, sympathetic characteristics of your relationship with so many of the stricken nations of our restless world in which there is so much hunger and distress, together with your sincere and humble desire to unite diverse elements of our great citizenry into a true brotherhood, whose benefits may be enjoyed by all, have won our confidence and esteem.

In pledging our loyalty and support to you, as the Chief Magistrate of this great Republic, we offer the prayer that Almighty God may richly bless you with health and wisdom and ability as you continue to guide with assurance in all that belongs to the dignity, welfare and ideals of our beloved country.

Very sincerely yours,

Motion to adopt prevailed unanimously.

President I. A. Smith read the following report to the General Conference from the First Presidency, and stated this would be spread upon the minutes subject to further consideration and action by the body.

GENERAL CONFERENCE REPORT

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

To the General Conference,

Greeting:

It is with pleasure that we render an account of our stewardship as Presidents of the high priesthood during the past year, and indicate the lines along which we believe the church should advance in the immediate future.

I wish to pay a just tribute to my counselors. They have been of great value in advising and in conducting the affairs of the office of the Presidency. They have supplemented my humble efforts in many ways, and I do not know how the work could have been carried on without their splendid counsel.

First of all, we wish to give heartfelt thanks to our Heavenly Father for the grace and mercy He has extended toward us and for the patience with which He has led us in spite of our many shortcomings. We also acknowledge with deep gratitude the kindness with which our immediate associates and those more distant have received our ministry, sustaining us in many ways and adding their strength to ours in order that the work committed to all might go forward through the strength and devotion of many. In making this acknowledgment we have particularly in mind the comradeship of the Presiding Patriarch, who served in the Presidency before us; of our brethren of the Twelve, our most immediate associates; of the members of the Presiding Bishopric, who have done so much to garner and safeguard the material resources which reflect the quality of our spiritual devotion; and of Elders Charles V. Graham and Glaude A. Smith and Bishop Kelley, and our other associates in the work in Independence. We have in mind, too, the Standing High Council, the High Priests and Seventies, the Bishops, Evangelists, and Pastors, the leaders of our departments and the directors of our church institutions, who have served in their several places with loyalty and steadfast purpose. Our hearts also reach out beyond this smaller circle to the growing thousands whose faith and works combine to prophesy the triumph of the Kingdom.

The year has been one of adjustment, but we believe it has been one of adjustment forward. As all know, the transition from war to peace, and from a world of isolation to a world of universal converse and responsibility has imposed new and exacting demands which the church has not fully escaped. The fundamental truths at the heart of the gospel are eternally valid, but the circumstances under which these truths must be proclaimed are changing from day to day. We are indeed fortunate that the church is so well adapted to serve in such an age, and that our natural hungering for security is balanced in the best of us by a spirit of courageous enterprise and our eager desire for Zion is paralleled by wholehearted concern for our missionary task.

A major effort of the year has been toward strengthening branches and districts as centers of spiritual life and evangelistic power. This should continue. The success attained has required the steadfast devotion of many hundreds of local ministers and many supporting sacrifices on the part of their families. Without such ministry the church could not go forward. It has involved, also, a vast amount of planned missionary activity; but such activity as builds in and near nuclei already established, and so enriches our fraternity, conserves our strength, and prepares the way for the gathering.

As part of this stable growth we have been very pleased to note the many branches which have recently acquired church homes, and the many more which plan to do so when the building situation permits, and where they are raising funds in the meantime. No branch is fully organized until it has a suitable church home. Through your past generous observance of the financial law, and the wise guidance of the Bishopric, general church funds have been and are available to assist in necessary and well-planned building projects.

The distressing plight of the Saints in Europe has called forth a quick and warm-hearted response from Saints in the United States, Canada, and Australia, and very substantial relief has been forwarded to Europe from each of these countries. Already many expressions of gratitude have been received, and we feel that the ties of Sainly fraternity have been greatly strengthened. In an endeavor to co-ordinate this relief and to re-establish the work of the church which has been seriously impaired by the war, Elder F. O. Davies has visited the European missions open to him and he has given needed counsel to the ministry and has sent back valuable information to the general authorities. Following this, it became necessary for the Joint Council to be more directly represented in Europe, and we were all heartened by the ready and sacrificial response of Apostle M. A. McConley and his good wife. Brother and Sister McConley are now in England, and Brother McConley's reports are already coming in. He will be joined by Elders F. Henry Edwards, E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and G. L. DeLapp as soon as transportation facilities permit, and these brethren will recommend long-time plans for the work in England and on the Continent. In the meantime, supervisory ministers for the various missions are being appointed, and their names will be presented to you later in the Conference.

In the absence of Apostolic direction in the field, Elder E. A. H. Peisker has presided with distinction over the church in Australasia. This mission will be visited by Elders J. F. Garver of the Presidency and Walter N. Johnson of the Presiding Bishopric during the forthcoming inter-Conference period.

The Society Island Mission has been under the guidance of Elder F. E. Butterworth, with Elder V. C. Sorensen as associate. Brother Butterworth will shortly return to the United States after completing his difficult assignment to the Islands.

The movement toward the Center Place continues. We are happy in this. But we find it necessary to repeat and emphasize counsel which has been given many times during our history, that those who expect to gather should first consult the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. There is good reason for this. The general authorities indicated in the law are concerned both with the immediate and the more permanent well-being of those who gather; and also in the influence of the gathering on the branches which lose members as well as on the stakes which gain them. Experience indicates that the most desirable additions to our strength in Zion and the Stakes come from those who gather as a deliberate step in a carefully planned life program, a program which entails careful weighing of all the factors involved, and adequate and timely consultation with the spiritual and temporal officers concerned. Specifically, and with kind but insistent emphasis, we deplore the attention sometimes given to misguided persons who presume to direct others in this matter on the basis of alleged spiritual manifestations which are in violation of the law. Prophecies of impending doom form a poor background against which to urge the gathering, and fear, of itself, is a totally inadequate motive for obedience to the kingdom law.

It is not infrequently true that persons who otherwise might well move to Independence or one of the Stakes will make a better total contribution by staying where they are until others have been found to take their places.

The gathering is primarily a spiritual enterprise. It should be initiated in our already existing homes and branches, where the principles of Zion living can be practiced until they become second nature. This becomes crystal clear when we reflect that the gathering is to Zion, not merely from somewhere else. It is toward a Zion point of view and standard of values. It is in the direction of a divinely guided expertness in the use of temporal means for spiritual ends. It is to approach an inspired revulsion from "goodness" which does not bless, and "wealth" which forgets to share, and "success" which mocks the purpose of our creation. Let us remember these things. Wise and prepared gathering to Zion and the regions round about is basic in the program of the church; but this involves much more than physical gathering. Every advance toward spiritual excellence is an advance toward the kingdom, and every failure to live up to our best understanding is a retreat from the kingdom. These facts are significant for all of us, no matter where we may live.

United and enlightened advance toward the kingdom requires the co-ordinated leadership of many ministers whose deep affection for each other is rooted in their common devotion to our great cause. Some of these ministers labor under general church appointment. Others are self-sustaining. All need the strength which comes from worshiping together and studying together and working together. As an approach to satisfying this need, the general authorities concerned sponsored an institute for appointees last August. Such educational activities as this are now being built into the regular framework of our church life. We expect that as opportunity permits, the church will establish approved training courses for all new appointees and refresher courses for those who have been under appointment for longer periods.

The lecture outlines used at the August institute were published and will be of value in numerous local study groups. Regional institutes for members of the local priesthood are being planned for the next inter-Conference period, and supporting publications are in process of preparation. It is anticipated that such regional institutes for the local priesthood will become part of the regular program of the church, and that the Priesthood Library will be steadily augmented.

While we are thus deeply concerned in the specialized education of the members of the ministry, we feel led to point out that some of our best training is done in actual ministry under guidance. Young members of the priesthood should enter on their appointed tasks with humility but with a sense of the sustaining grace of the One whose commission they carry. They should learn by doing, and their leaders should teach by showing.

In our administrative relations with the Quorum of Twelve, we have sought to carry into effect the spirit of a working agreement unanimously adopted by a Joint Council of the Presidency and Twelve on April 26, 1943. This agreement grew out of a careful study of the law and enactments of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 104:12; 120:4; 123:23; G. C. R. April, 1884, April, 1894) and recognizes that the Twelve has "active supervision and presidency, under the First Presidency," over the work in branches, districts, and stakes. Our intention to recognize this principle of organization was communicated to the members of the high priesthood and other district and branch presidents by letter and in personal conferences, and is mentioned here for the sake of information and emphasis. We believe that this agreement is particularly important at this time, since the church is now confronted with insistently urgent demands that existing branches shall be strengthened and that the work shall be planted in new centers at home and abroad. These two demands are not disparate but complementary to each other. A major purpose in branch organization is more concentrated and more effective missionary testimony, and a major purpose motivating missionary activity is the firm establishment of stable centers of vigorous church life. In view of these facts, we hope and expect that clear recognition of the rightful interest of the chief missionary quorum of the church in all phases of church endeavor will lead to the widespread quickening and wise direction of our missionary testimony.

We call attention with some concern to the comparatively low baptismal increase reported by the Statistician. This is in large measure due to a deplorable tendency to regard evangelism as a specialized function of certain appointee ministers, and to the consequent pre-occupation of the vast body of the Saints with activities which are excellent in their rightful places but which become menacing when they consume energies which ought to be devoted to individual and corporate testimony. Nothing brings greater personal joy, and nothing adds more richly to the sense of life and power in the body, than inspired missionary testimony. We call this to the attention of pastors and priesthood and Saints alike. In particular, we urge that those responsible for ministry among the young direct more of the study and activities of these young people into missionary channels. Within the next few years Zion's League should give to the church scores of young people with good academic training and a passionate interest in ministry at home and abroad.

The members of the Standing High Council have applied themselves during the year to searching judicial inquiry into a number of cases of transgression with a view to determining the specific issues involved, and contributing at the same time to clearer understanding of the fundamental ethical requirements of sainthood. In the work of the council, the breakdown of home standards becomes tragically apparent, while the superlative value of the Zionite home is set forth in sharp relief. We therefore turn with marked satisfaction to the good work being done under the direction of the Department of Religious Education, the Council of Women, and elsewhere to build into our young people those life-qualities which form the best possible preparation for marriage, and that love of beauty which finds its most creative expression in home and family associations.

The work of the Department of Religious Education has been more clearly defined as a result of correspondence and personal conferences with Brother McDowell and his associate, Elder John Darling. With their full co-operation it has been agreed that activities of any nature, conducted anywhere in the church, should be administered under the authority of appropriate administrative officers; if they relate to the branch, then by the authority of the branch president; if they relate to the district or stake, then by the authority of the district or stake president; if they relate to a still larger area, then by the apostle or apostles in that field. This reaffirms the role of the departmental officers in local organizations as a supporting ministry inseparably connected with the spirit and purpose of our total endeavor. It also frees general departmental officers for their major task of training leaders and preparing study and activity materials. And, yet again, it emphasizes the obligation of the spiritual authorities, both general and local, to become the shepherds of the entire flock, concerned about the needs of every age group, integrating ministry in the departments with the total ministry offered, and building for both present and future needs and service.

The strength of the church as an organization is rooted in the alert stability of her branches, the wise and vigorous outreach of her testimony, and the devoted and skillful development of her Zionite enterprises. We therefore propose that in the years immediately ahead special effort be made to build toward carefully pre-determined goals in our local and missionary and Zionite endeavors, checking our advance from time to time and revising our procedures in the light of our experience.

Specifically, we propose to work with the responsible general and local ministers to:

1. Set up immediate and long-time programs for branches and stakes. In large and important centers these programs will be the fruit of the labor of as many of the general officers as are necessary and can be available.

2. Pursue our missionary task in harmony with the branch and district and stake programs adopted, and in addition thereto strengthen and stabilize missionary work at home and abroad; underwriting the work in distant lands as experience, necessity, personnel and finances indicate and permit.

3. Advance the gathering with vigor while yet doing our utmost to retain in points distant from Independence those ministers and members whose services are necessary in the development of those centers.

As necessary means to these ends we further propose to:

4. Make persistent efforts to elevate the standards of home and family life throughout the church.

5. Call, train, supervise, and trust local leaders. The emphasis here will be on development of local leaders and workers so as to free general officers for their distinctive tasks.

6. Give departmental work distinctive Latter Day Saint significance and integrate it with the programs of the branches and districts and general church.

7. House our branches in adequate, attractive, well-located and debt-free church buildings. This should be a significant part of every branch program.

8. Seek out and minister to the poor in the spirit of mutual aid, looking toward their material and spiritual development.

9. Build literature, visual aids and approved techniques as quickly as opportunity and personnel will permit.

10. Direct the functioning and growth of our supporting institutions in such a way that they shall show the church in action on a high level of service.

11. Promote and minister both local and financial programs in such ways as to advance our spiritual purposes.

12. Give immediate, major, and continuous concern to the selection, appointment, training, and supervision of ministers who can lead our people in achieving the foregoing.

This program has been adopted in principle by the Joint Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and the Presiding Bishopric and is already being put into effect as quickly as circumstances permit. The activities of this Conference will be pointed toward its further approval and implementation. But beyond all that might be done in Council or in Conference lies the fundamental need indicated in the admonition given to the Church many years ago: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."

Your servants for Christ's sake,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Israel A. Smith

Communication from the First Presidency was read, as follows:

April 8, 1947

To the General Conference:
Greeting:

We suggest that the deadline for the introduction of new business be set at 3:00 p. m., Thursday, April 10, 1947. It is understood that if this suggestion is adopted, business before the quorums will not be affected thereby.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

On motion of Elders C. G. Mesley and James A. Thomas the recommendation was adopted.

The following communication from the First Presidency was read:

To the General Conference,
Greeting:

After consultation with the brethren most directly concerned, we recommend that when this conference adjourns it shall do so to reconvene on Sunday, October 3, 1948.

This recommendation is made in the expectation that the General Conference of 1948 may wish to adjourn until the week of April 6, 1950, and that thereafter General Conference shall be held biennially.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

This recommendation was approved on motion of Elders D. T. Williams and L. Wayne Updike.

Recommendations from the Quorum of Twelve for ordination to office of evangelist were presented, as follows:

April 4, 1947

To the First Presidency and General Conference, Greeting:

After due consideration the Quorum of Twelve wishes to recommend the following men for ordination to the office of Evangelist:

Henry Castings, Des Moines, Iowa
J. J. Ledsworth, Port Huron, Michigan
Willard Hield, Denver, Colorado
Leslie S. Wight, Chicago, Illinois
Very sincerely yours,
GEORGE G. LEWIS,
Secretary, Quorum of Twelve

It was moved by Elders Stephen Robinson and A. A. Oakman that the recommendations be approved.

Elder Henry Castings came to the tribune and expressed his willingness to accept this responsibility.

Brethren P. M. Hanson and Stephen Robinson spoke in support and commendation of Brother Castings and his ministry in the Des Moines District.

The recommendation touching Brother Castings was unanimously approved.

In the absence of Elder J. J. Ledsworth, of Port Huron, Mich., Apostle Gleazer spoke in his behalf, and in commendation of his ministerial service.

Dr. Lawrence Brockway, of Ann Arbor, Mich. and Elder E. R. Carter of Lansing, Mich., also spoke in commendation of Brother Ledsworth.

Vote resulted in the unanimous approval of Brother J. J. Ledsworth for the evangelical office.

Elder Willard W. Hield came to the tribune and indicated his willingness to accept ordination as recommended.

Elders D. T. Williams and Herbert M. Scott spoke in support of Brother Hield and the excellent quality of his ministry.

Brother Hield was unanimously approved for ordination to the office of evangelist.

Elder Leslie S. Wight not being present, Apostle Oakman spoke in his behalf.

Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith spoke in support of Brother Wight, and also expressed his pleasure in welcoming to the Order of Evangelists the others recommended.

Apostle Blair Jensen and Bishop J. S. Kelley also spoke in support of Brother Wight.

The recommendation concerning

Brother L. S. Wight was approved unanimously.

President Smith made the following statement:

The church is sometimes the beneficiary of a church-in-law. Mr. E. J. Short, who married Dorothy Atkins, daughter of our venerable brother, Reuben Atkins, through Elder Breshears, pastor of the Springfield, Missouri, Branch, sends the church his check for One Hundred Dollars as a token of his good will. This gift we acknowledge with gratitude, and we pass the check on to the Presiding Bishop.

Announcements were read, Hymn "Jesus Calls Us" was sung, and Apostle Oakman pronounced the benediction. The Conference adjourned at 4:25 p.m. subject to the usual order.

O. W. NEWTON,
FRANK McDONALD,
P. F. FAIRBANKS,
Secretaries.

Business Session, Wednesday, April 9, 1947

The business session of Wednesday, April 9, 1947, convened at two o'clock p.m. with President Israel A. Smith presiding.

"Faith of Our Fathers" was sung by the assembly, led by Elder Cheville, and accompanied by Brother Thomas Thomas, of Kirtland, Ohio, at the organ.

The invocation was offered by Elder W. A. Hougas, President of the Quorum of High Priests.

A missionary octet sang, "Onward, Ye Peoples," by Sibelius, under the direction of Elder Thomas R. Beil, accompanied by Mrs. James Kemp.

Minutes of April 8 were approved as read.

A supplementary report from the First Quorum of Seventy was read, as follows:

Independence, Mo.

EUGENE A. THEYS,
Secretary, First Quorum of Seventy.

The following statement from Mrs. Pauline J. Arnsion, chairman of the General Council of Women, was read.

The First Presidency,
Dear Brothers:

Through some error, the name of Sister Emma McConley was omitted from the list of Council members in the report of the General Council of Women on page 10, March 29, Herald. I would be pleased if this oversight could be corrected and called to the attention of the delegates so that they can add her name to our list.

Sincerely,
PAULINE J. ARNSION,
Chairman, General Council of Women.

A cablegram from Missionaries F. Edward Butterworth and V. C. Sorensen of Papeete, Tahiti, was read, extending greetings to the Conference.

The following communications from the First Presidency were read:

April 9, 1947

To the General Conference,
Greeting:

For your information, we wish to read the following communication which will be presented the Conference later in the sessions.

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

April 7, 1947

*To the General Conference,
Greetings:*

There are occasions when members of the church wish to transfer their membership to some other religious group. At present our procedure calls for court action granting their "persistent desire to withdraw," but this procedure is cumbersome and is sometimes offensive. We therefore recommend the adoption of the following:

"It is the sense of this body that when a member of the church makes a written request for a letter of transfer to some other religious body and, after due labor by the officers of this church, still persists in the request for a transfer, the First Presidency be authorized to issue the letter requested and to strike from the church records the name of the person so transferring and, further, that in the event that any person having been transferred in this manner shall later desire to resume association with this church, and shall give evidence of an understanding and way of life appropriate to such renewing of church membership, he may be restored to fellowship by action of the branch concerned on recommendation of the First Presidency."

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

A recommendation from The Presidents of Seventy was presented, as follows:

April 9, 1947

To the General Conference:

The calling of Roscoe E. Davey and Maurice L. Draper to the Quorum of Twelve took from the Council of Presidents of Seventy two members. We feel sure that these brethren will serve creditably in their new positions. We have this one regret, that the Council of Presidents of Seventies has been deprived of their fine, able, and valuable service.

Our Council has been left with three vacancies, and to fill one of these vacancies the Presidents of Seventy recommend, with the approval of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Quorum of Seventy, that Glen H. Johnson be ordained a President of Seventy.

Respectfully submitted,

THE PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY,

By E. Y. HUNKER,

President.

Apostles Gleazer and Draper moved to approve the recommendation.

Elder Johnson made a statement of his desire to serve the church, and his willingness to accept this office.

Elders Draper and Hunker spoke in support of Brother Johnson, and the vote to approve the recommendation prevailed unanimously.

The congregation sang "Onward Christian Soldiers" during which, at the request of the chairman, Willard W. Hield, Henry Castings and Glen H. Johnson took places on the platform to receive ordination.

Apostle Draper offered prayer, which was followed by a scripture reading by Apostle Jensen.

The congregation sang a stanza of "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art."

Williard W. Hield was ordained to the office of high priest and evangelist by Apostles C. R. Hield and D. T. Williams.

Henry Castings was ordained to office of evangelist by Apostles C. G. Mesley and R. E. Davey.

Glen H. Johnson was ordained a member of the Council of Presidents of Seventy by Elders E. Y. Hunker and Z. Z. Renfroe.

"Lord Speak To Me" was sung, and Apostle W. Wallace Smith offered a prayer of benediction and thanksgiving.

Report from the Quorum of Twelve was read by Apostle Lewis, Secretary of the Quorum, as follows:

April 8, 1947

To the President, Ministers and Delegates of the General Conference of 1947. Greetings to the Church:

Again the Apostolic Quorum takes advantage of this occasion to present its customary communication to the church; and, through this means express its ministry of "witnessing for Christ," which is its essential and primary function.

Since the cessation of hostilities and the securing of military victory we have been and still are deeply concerned with the many and complex problems confronting the whole world regarding the securing of a lasting peace. As we witness the restlessness and frustrations of the statesmen of the victorious nations in their efforts to gain this peace, we are convinced that only through the application of the ethics and principles of the Christian philosophy does hope of success in this quest lie. The growing influence of a system of government with an avowed godlessness is a stern and ruthless challenge to those who believe with all their hearts and minds that only in the acceptance of the principles of Christianity and by the power and grace of God can the prevailing evils be overcome.

It is necessary that we identify and catalogue these evils which challenge the power and principle of religious life undergirding our civilization. These evils are singularly identical with those which history as well as prophecy have clearly demonstrated to be the causes of the downfall of previous civilizations. Today the passion for luxury and ease, the increase of sensualism resulting in the desecration of home and family life, the tendency to evaluate all in terms of material success, indicate the downward course of our civilization.

A year ago, in our Conference, attention was called to the increasing alcoholism afflicting our manhood and womanhood. Appeal was made to the government of this country that steps be taken to seek effective control of this traffic which is lowering the health and moral stamina of its citizenry. Today, more than ever, there is urgent need for the self-discipline so necessary to health, moral and spiritual well-being.

As the church claiming to witness to divine interposition in human affairs, we cannot be indifferent to the conclusions reached in general experience, viz: the impotence of organized religion in the influencing of public life. We must be united in combating all those forces which would seek to destroy the freedom of religion, the agency of man and a Christian philosophy upon which our way of life is based.

We cannot but think of the prophetic warnings of the Scriptures, ancient and modern, advising us of this coming conflict between the powers of Evil and the powers of God, involving all peoples. We must be awakened to the primary duty of the Christian ministry, that as Ambassadors for God, we seek the reconciliation of man to Him, and man's salvation by his submission to the divine will as revealed in Jesus Christ. It is the goal towards which the Church, with her teachings, sacraments and worship experiences, must constantly and undeviatingly be directed.

As the events of the times unfold, our minds turn to these warnings given to the church when the Latter Day work was introduced, which warnings have been read, but to which little heed has been given. We call attention to the following: Because the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, spoke from heaven giving commandment that His servants should proclaim to the world these things which had been revealed:—among which is included:—the Lord is nigh, prepare for that which is to come, the anger of the Lord is kindled, His sword bathed in heaven shall fall upon the inhabitants of the world, and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed. The day will come when those who will not hear God's voice through His servants, prophets and apostles, shall be cut off, having strayed from His divine ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant, not seeking to establish the righteousness of the Lord.

Consequently, the day would speedily come when peace should be taken from the earth, and the powers of evil be marshaled against the power of God among His Saints, and judgment would come down upon the world.

In the century which has elapsed since that message was given, we have seen our earth seared by the fires of destructive wars; and, the apocalyptic horses riding their fateful courses.

No one acquainted with the news of the present can doubt the tragic fulfillment of these prophecies. True, they are gloomy; for "whereas sin abounds there death also abounds." But we have the promise that gloom will be abolished when the light of Truth shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep; and "Grace shall reign through righteousness unto eternal life."

It is here where our Apostolic ministry shall have its place and potency. The great need of the world for these resources of faith, hope and love must be met by the church bringing to bear all its power and influence to meet this urgent demand.

As we gather in conference meetings, enjoying the fellowship of this occasion, with our needs so lavishly supplied, our hearts go out in deep sympathy to the many in the lands across the seas who are still suffering because of the war conditions. Our prayers are that the day is near at hand when these restrictions, sorrows and miseries involving so many, shall pass, and our world bloom because of righteousness and justice, with peace and prosperity, temporally and spiritually.

The appointing authorities have been and are deeply concerned as to the welfare of our church members scattered abroad who have been so sorely tried and constantly we have in mind the need for stimulating them by added ministerial support. We have endeavored to respond to this Macedonian Cry; and, our fellow-apostle, M. A. McConley, with his wife are already in Great Britain, as an earnest of the pledge of the church to nurture and stimulate the work in the European field still further.

In addition to the fields abroad we are committed to the development of the missionary activities throughout the whole church. It cannot be said too frequently nor with too much emphasis that the church is above all things else the evangelization instrument, through which our Lord is extending Himself to save souls by teaching them to condition their whole life—body, mind and spirit in the will of God.

Most urgently we must be concerned with the spiritual meaning of our message, we must revise the methods of expression in theology, sacraments, worship and ideals. There is a demand that we shall adopt methods that will bring the ministry into more intimate relationship with people. By example, authenticating the spoken word, the reality of experience with God must reveal what we mean when we witness that Christ is our personal Saviour. We therefore urge that the ethic of Christ be made by each one the program for daily living.

To those who constitute our missionary staff we advise that methods and teachings be carefully studied, and more scientifically applied. Again we stress the efficacy of personal contacts, through tracting, house to house visitation, cottage meetings, carefully organized by the missionary in co-operation with local pastors, and supported by many local workers, ordained and laity, as can be encouraged to join in this work. They should be trained to carry this forward.

It is not sufficient to do this individually, but to put the scheme into effect, in such a measure that when the missionary leaves, the work may continue.

Personal consecration, a friendly attitude, and a reverent regard for the ideals of our Christian philosophy are the essentials of our ministry.

In conclusion, we cannot be unmoved as we see the definite shift of world leadership, politically, industrially, financially and morally to this country of America, without also being impressed with the grave responsibilities which rest upon us as a church. It was said by one of the late presidents of the United States that we cannot hope to survive materially unless we have spiritual devotion to worthy ends. However true that was a generation ago, it is much more applicable today. Yet with dismay we note the disposition to flirt with the evils to which reference has been made, unmindful of the warnings given by different ones in various ways. It is not in eating and drinking the Kingdom of God comes—but in the disciplining of mind and spirit in the mind of Christ—to love what He loves, to know as He knows and to will what He wills.

We call upon all who love God with heart, mind and strength to join us in the consecration of all we have and are to His purpose.

Yours in the call of Christ to service,
THE QUORUM OF TWELVE,
By Paul M. Hanson.

The chair announced that the report of the Board of Appropriations with respect to the financial needs of the church for the years 1947 and 1948 has been printed, and placed in the hands of the delegates, and will be spread upon the minutes, and will be discussed tomorrow by the Presiding Bishop.

REPORT OF BOARD OF APPROPRIATIONS

April 7, 1947

The Board of Appropriations, consisting of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and the Order of Bishops, met Saturday, April 5, and gave consideration to the financial needs of the church for the years 1947 and 1948. The following schedules and recommendations of appropriations were approved by the Board of Appropriations to cover these years.

The recommendations for 1947 cover an adjustment in the appropriations approved by the Conference of 1946.

The Board of Appropriations submits also an additional schedule which has been approved covering an appropriation of accumulated funds.

Respectfully submitted:

BOARD OF APPROPRIATIONS,
Israel A. Smith, Chairman.

April 7, 1947

Report of Board of Appropriations to General Conference covering Accumulated Funds:

Attention is called to the General Fund Balance Sheet of the Presiding Bishopric, which shows that Cash in Hand and in the Hands of Bishops and Agents, United States Government Bonds and Securities, Canadian Securities, and other Stocks and Bonds total $653,093.89.

The following allocation of these funds is hereby recommended by the Board of Appropriations; explanatory statements follow in sequence.

1. Missionary Reserve Fund

$50,538.50

Action has already been had by the Joint Council looking with favor upon the carrying on of missionary work in England and in Europe, and appointments have been made by the Joint Council in harmony with this policy. It has been recommended that an amount of $50,000 be placed in the Missionary Reserve Fund, especially marked for the purpose herein outlined. This $50,000 added to the amount previously allocated to this fund will make the total $200,000. The $50,000 set apart for work in England and Europe is to augment annual appropriations as the need may arise.

The amount of $538.50 is needed to restore the Missionary Reserve Fund to the amount of $150,000, this sum having been drawn from this fund in 1946.

2. Operating Reserve Fund

Attention is called to the increase in the operating budget for the years 1947 and 1948. The purpose of this reserve is to provide funds equivalent to that which is required to finance the church for a period of one year. In view of the fact that the present operating budget has substantially increased, there is need for the increase of this fund in the amount indicated, which will bring the total fund to $675,000.

3. Auditorium $75,000.00

Previous appropriations for construction work in the Auditorium have been made in the amount of $200,000. Rising costs and present estimates indicate that there is some question as to our ability to have the work previously approved by the General Conference done for the amount appropriated. The work previously authorized is as follows: covering the dome with copper, completing the walls with finish stone (Bedford limestone) supporting the dome, and roofing the flat deck of the whole building. It is hoped that the appropriation herein recommended will provide sufficient funds to cover the cost of this work, which is very much needed.

4. Independence Sanitarium and Hospital $25,000.00

Previous appropriation was made for this institution in the amount of $150,000. Additional funds are needed to complete this project in the amount herein recommended. These appropriations are to cover the cost of completion of the seventh floor, transferring of the operating rooms from the first floor to the fifth floor, the building of a shop and a receiving room, and also a laundry. Up to the present time it has been impossible to get materials and labor necessary to do this construction work.

5. Graceland College $90,000.00

At the last General Conference an appropriation was made of $150,000 which with a previous appropriation of $100,000 made a total of $250,000 for the construction of a dormitory at Graceland College. The architect's latest estimate places the cost of this dormitory at $269,000, or an increase of $19,000 over the amount appropriated.

In addition to this, it is estimated that a central heating plant will cost $62,700.

There is also need for additional classrooms, and it is recommended that an additional amount of $9,000 be appropriated to add to that which it is hoped will be granted by the Federal Works Agency to meet this need.

These total $90,000.

7. Australasian Ministerial Reserve Fund $5,616.00

This represents the amount set aside in Australia for the retirement costs of our ministers, in harmony with General Church practice.

8. Radio $87,603.23

This is to restore the amount received on the original contract with Radio Station KMBC in the amount of $75,000, which went into General Church Income; this to be added to that received at a subsequent adjustment in our contract with KMBC, which amounted to $35,000, making a total in this fund of $110,000. To replace funds spent for legal services in the amount of $1,246.27. For additional equipment needed at the present time for recording and studio needs in the amount of $3,856.96. To provide an amount of $7,500 to cover the cost of employing engineering and legal advice in the making of a survey and study of our present needs, to ascertain the desirability of making application for FM and AM broadcasting licenses looking toward the establishment of a radio station.

9. Messiah Broadcast $2,500.00

To provide funds for the broadcast of "The Messiah" over a national chain in the event that satisfactory arrangements can be made.

10. British Isles Headquarters $15,000.00

This will be for church headquarters in England. Recommendation for this arose out of Joint Council action to assist in meeting needs.

The following communication from the Presiding Bishop was read:

March 28, 1947

The First Presidency Auditorium

Dear Brethren:

We wish to present the following as our nominees for members of the Board of Publication of the Herald Publishing House:

- C. A. Skinner
- Walter N. Johnson
- Harry G. Barto
- John W. Luff
- David S. White
- Howard Andersen
- A. B. Taylor

We have presented to the Board the recommendation to make provision in the Articles of Incorporation for inclusion of two additional members, increasing the membership from five to seven.

Sincerely yours,

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DeLAPP.

On motion of Elders R. A. Cheville and E. Y. Hunker the document was approved.

The following recommendation from the First Presidency was read:

April 9, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

Having been directed thereunto by the leadings of the Spirit, we recommend that Elder Harold W. Cackler of Des Moines, Iowa, be ordained to the office of High Priest and Bishop.

We ask Conference approval.

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

It was moved by Apostle Oakman and Bishop DeLapp to approve the recommendation.

Brother Cackler expressed his willingness to accept the call and do his best in the office.

Elders A. A. Oakman, J. F. Garver, and John W. Blackstock spoke in support of Brother Cackler.

The motion to approve the recommendation prevailed unanimously.

Recommendation from the Presidents of Seventy was read, as follows:

April 8, 1947

To the General Conference:

The Council of Presidents of Seventy, with the approval of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Quorum of Seventy, submit for your action our recommendation that the following named brethren be ordained to office of Seventy:

1. Allen J. Breckenridge
2. James C. Daugherty
3. Floyd Potter

Respectfully,

THE PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY,

By E. Y. HUNKER,
President.

Apostles Hanson and Williams moved to approve the recommendations.

Brother Breckenridge indicated his willingness to accept this office, and was supported at the tribune by Elders W. A. Hougas, E. Y. Hunker, and C. R. Hield.

The recommendation touching Brother Breckenridge was approved unanimously.

Brother Daugherty stated he was willing to accept the office, and he was supported at the tribune by Elders A. A. Oakman and A. T. Higdon.

The motion to approve prevailed unanimously.

Apostle C. G. Mesley spoke in behalf of Elder Floyd Potter of Australia, who was not present. Brother Potter was also supported by Elder Albert Loving, and the motion to approve his ordination to office of Seventy prevailed unanimously.

The following communication from the First Presidency was read, and was ordered spread upon the minutes subject to later consideration.

March 28, 1947

To the General Conference, Greeting:

The General Conference of 1918 provided "that no church site be chosen, or edifice erected, by any branch without first conferring with the Presiding Bishop and the church architect."

In practice we have found that the First Presidency and the members of the Quorum of Twelve in the field affected are directly concerned in these matters. We have also found that the number of church buildings in process, the heavy demands upon the time of the church architect, and the availability of other reputable architects, sometimes combine to make it wise to consult an approved architect rather than to burden Elder Henry C. Smith.

In view of the foregoing we recommend that the action of 1918 above referred to be rescinded and that in place thereof the following be adopted:

"That it is the sense of this body that no church site, reunion grounds, or other church properties be purchased, or church edifices or other buildings erected by any Stake, District, or Branch unless approval is first had of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, the Apostles directly concerned, and the General Church Architect or other approved architect."

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Announcements were read, and the congregation sang as the closing hymn, "We Have a Story To Tell to the Nations." Elder James Barrington of the British Mission offered the benediction, and the Conference adjourned at 4:00 p.m. subject to provisions of the Official Program.

O. W. NEWTON,
P. G. FAIRBANKS,
FRANK McDONALD,
Secretaries.

Business Session, Thursday, April 10, 1947

The business session of Thursday, April 10, opened with President Smith in the chair.

The congregation sang, "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel" under the leadership of Elder Cheville, accompanied by Elder Evan A. Fry at the organ.

Elder Charles Cousins of the British Mission offered the invocation.

The minutes of April 9 were approved as read.

The President presented the following as a matter of information:

Attendance at the Communion service on last Sunday morning in the Auditorium was 7,615, a year ago 7,592. The attendance at the Stone Church this year was 2,050. We have no record of attendance at the Stone Church last year.

This makes a total of 9,665 to attend the two Communion services, and hundreds of members were unable to attend and were greatly disappointed because they were denied the privilege of partaking of the Communion with us.

The following telegram from Valdez, Alaska, was read:

April 10, 1947

President Israel A. Smith,
Independence, Missouri

GREETINGS TO CONFERENCE
ASSEMBLY OUR HOPES AND PRAYERS FOR A PROFITABLE CONFERENCE
HOPE TIME WILL SOON COME WHEN MISSIONS CAN BE ESTABLISHED IN TERRITORY.

GEORGE A. VELMA FOWLER.

The chairman called attention to report of the Church Physician, appearing in the Herald of April 12, page 14, which he stated would be received and spread upon the minutes.

President Smith stated the Conference would now give attention to the ordination of Harold W. Cackler, approved at the session of yesterday, and requested Brother Cackler to come to the rostrum while the congregation sang "O Master Workman."

Presiding Bishop G. L. DeLapp offered a preparatory prayer.

A missionary quartet composed of Donald Lents, C. Houston Hobart, Allen J. Breckenridge and L. W. Kohlman sang, "Where Cross the Crowded Ways," accompanied by Mrs. Louise Dillee at the piano.

Brother Cackler was then ordained to the office of high priest and bishop by Elders J. F. Garver and F. H. Edwards of the First Presidency.

After receiving congratulations Brother Cackler returned to his place in the assembly.

The chair called attention of the Conference to report of the Presiding Bishopric as published in the Herald of April 5, page 9.

Bishops J. Stanley Kelley and T. A. Beck moved to approve the report.

The chair recognized Bishop DeLapp who discussed the Balance Sheet on pages 10, 11, and 12, of the Herald of April 5, also Statement of Income and Expense on page 13, also Statement of Surplus on page 14.

The motion to approve the report of the Bishopric prevailed unanimously.

Attention was then directed to the report of the Board of Appropriations already a part of the minutes. It was moved by Elders C. J. Smith and E. R. Carter to approve the report and adopt the recommendations.

The Secretary read the proposed appropriations for years 1947-1948. Bishop DeLapp then discussed at some length these recommended appropriations, and the motion to approve prevailed.

Consideration followed on the recommendations concerning appropriation of accumulated funds, which were discussed by Bishop DeLapp and voted on separately and approved, as follows:

No. 1	Missionary Reserve Fund	$ 50,538.50
No. 2	Operating Reserve Fund	175,000.00
No. 3	Auditorium	75,000.00
No. 4	Indep. Sanitarium and Hospital	25,000.00
No. 5	Graceland College	90,000.00
No. 6	General Church Historical Property	22,000.00
No. 7	Australasian Ministerial Reserve Fund	5,616.00
No. 8	Radio	87,603.23
No. 9	Messiah Broadcast ..	2,500.00
No. 10	British Isles Headquarters	15,000.00

Discussion followed concerning the matter of allocating a larger proportion of general funds for local purposes. Brethren G. E. Tickemyer, G. L. DeLapp, J. W. Rushton, J. S. Kelley, J. F. Garver, J. A. Koehler, and Francis T. Schrunk participated in this discussion.

The vote was then taken on the document as a whole, and the motion to approve prevailed.

Bishop DeLapp spoke to a question of personal privilege, and expressed his appreciation and sincere thanks to his counselors, Bishops Livingston and Johnson, to the Order of Bishops, to the members of the Joint Council, for their assistance and co-operation, and to every member of the church for the fine support given, and the liberality which has made possible the results reflected in this report and recommendations.

The chairman recognized Brother James Barrington of England who read the following message to the Conference:

April 10, 1947

To the General Conference,
Greetings:

We the delegates of the British Mission desire to place on record the following:

First: We bring greetings and appreciation from the Saints whom we represent in response to your prayers and thoughtfulness during the dark days that have passed, and request that in the days to come you will continue to support us in your devotions.

We are looking forward with great anticipation and expectation to the forthcoming mission to Europe and are anticipating that those plans accepted in principle by the Joint Council will in turn prove worth-while in relation to the building of the kingdom.

It is our belief that the investment made in our land by the church has been well worth-while as it has resulted not only in producing our esteemed members of the Presiding Quorums, but also in changing the lives of men and women. Nevertheless we cannot help but feel proud of such men as Brother Rushton, Brother Edwards, Brother Oakman (we don't know if we dare claim Brother Gleazer but he was born a subject of the Crown).

Several of our delegates attended the reception for Brother and Sister McConley held at the Mission Headquarters, and we believe that the ministry of our brother and sister will be a blessing to the Saints and that like their predecessors they will win a place in the hearts of those with whom they come in contact.

The ministry of Apostle Oakman can not be measured by words but is reflected in the lives of many of the Saints in England. We could give many instances of their devotion and example during those dark days.

In conclusion, we wish to express our thanks and appreciation of the way in which we have been received by the Saints in the City of Zion.

The following resolution was read, and its adoption moved by Elders Roy Weldon and Ward A. Hougas.

RESOLVED: That the First Presidency of the church be authorized to name a committee which will make a survey of the entire field of Indian welfare movements and report back to the next General Conference. This committee would offer definite recommendations concerning the means by which the church can best help in bettering the condition of the Lamanites of both Americas.

Moved: Roy Weldon.

Seconded: Ward A. Hougas.

The chairman stated that unless there were objections consideration of this matter would be postponed until tomorrow.

The following resolution was then read; and its adoption moved by Brethren A. L. Loving and J. J. Keifer:

Independence, Mo.,
April 10, 1947

To the General Conference Assembled:

WHEREAS, Jehovah saw fit to bring forth the record of the Nephites and the Lamanites in the beginning of this Restoration Movement and have it translated into our language through the labors of His servant, Joseph Smith and others, and

WHEREAS, the same unchangeable Creator commanded the church to send Oliver Cowdery to the Lamanites in the year 1830 to carry the message of the "Holy One of Israel" to them (Doctrine and Covenants 27: 3), and

WHEREAS, the Reorganization has in the past fifty years baptized several hundreds of these Lamanite brethren, and

WHEREAS, they are today without shepherds and are fast falling a prey to many evils and other religious movements, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED: That the Joint Council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric be instructed to formulate an adequate, up-to-date, educationally sound, and practical Indian missionary program, in which provision shall also be made to create and provide sufficient funds to meet the needs of the training of two young Indian leaders per year.

It was moved by Brethren A. A. Oakman and H. A. Higgins that we defer consideration on the document which has just been read. The motion to defer prevailed.

Announcements were read, hymn "O God Give Strength," was sung, Apostle Davey offered the closing prayer, and the Conference adjourned at 4:30 p.m.

O. W. NEWTON,
P. G. FAIRBANKS,
FRANK McDONALD,
Secretaries.

Business Session, Friday, April 11, 1947

The business session of Friday, April 11th, was called to order by President Israel A. Smith at 2:00 p.m. Hymn, "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour" was sung under the direction of Elder R. A. Cheville, accompanied by Mrs. Edna Ehlers at the organ.

Elder Floyd M. McDowell offered the invocation.

The minutes of April 10 were read by the secretary. Elder A. L. Loving called attention to two errors in the printing of his resolution regarding an Indian missionary program, which the chairman stated would be corrected. Otherwise the minutes were approved as read.

Announcement of the appointment of Mrs. Viola Lade as one of the Conference reporters was made by the chair.

The following communication from the First Presidency was read, also report of committee on memorial for the late President Frederick M. Smith, which the chair stated would be received and spread upon the minutes.

April 11, 1947

*To the General Conference,
Greetings:*

The report and recommendations of the committee appointed by the Conference of 1946 to draft suggestions for a memorial to the late President Frederick Madison Smith, was presented to the Board of Appropriations for their information and the Board took the following action:

"That the Appropriations Committee approve the raising of $250,000.00 within the next five years to finance a memorial for the late President Frederick Madison Smith."

The report and recommendations of the committee are now presented to you for such action as you desire.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

April 9, 1947

To the First Presidency and the General Conference of 1947:

Having been appointed at the 1946 Conference as a committee to draft suggestions for a memorial for the late President Frederick Madison Smith, we have considered the various suggestions submitted and report as follows:

1. It is our opinion that a memorial for a leader of such character as the late president should possess certain attributes commensurate with his qualities. It should to a certain extent represent his interests; and it must have dignity, beauty and permanence. These requirements would be best met, it seems to us, by a public building.

2. At the same time, it does not seem expedient in view of the many needs of the church and its institutions, to divert funds for building purposes, unless such a building, in addition to its memorial character, be capable of filling some immediate and urgent need.

3. After considering these requirements, we suggest that the memorial for the late president consist of a building to be known as the Frederick Madison Smith Memorial Library, located on the campus of Graceland College, at Lamoni, Iowa.

4. The funds necessary for this purpose may be obtained by subscription. It is estimated that the cost of a suitable building of this nature, at present price levels, would be in the neighborhood of $250,000.00 which may be raised over a period of five years, if necessary.

5. It is our belief that a memorial library, housing as it does the fruit of the wisdom of the past, and dedicated to the use of the young people of the church, who are the hope and promise of its future, will stand perpetually as a tribute to a leader who worked and dreamed for the future of our church, and who devoted his life to the justification of his faith.

Very sincerely yours,
G. L. DELAPP
J. F. GARVER
PAUL N. CRAIG
ALICE M. EDWARDS
E. J. GLEAZER
HENRY C. SMITH

It was moved by Elders L. G. Holloway and D. E. Dowker to adopt.

Apostle D. T. Williams requested that the question be divided, and that the action of the Appropriations Committee, and the report and recommendations of the Memorial Committee be considered and voted on separately. The chairman stated if there were no objections, this procedure would be followed, and that the report and recommendations of the Appropriations Committee would be taken up first.

The motion to adopt the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee prevailed.

The chair then announced that the report of the Memorial Committee was now before the assembly on the same motion to approve.

Brethren D. T. Williams, G. L. DeLapp, E. J. Gleazer, Jr., Evan A. Fry, and Leonard Lea spoke to the question.

Apostle Lewis moved as a substitute that the decision as to the project for a memorial to the late President Frederick M. Smith be deferred at this time, and that the committee be requested to give further study of the matter, seeking suggestions from the church for the kind of memorial that would be representative of the late President as well as of the church. This motion was supported by Apostle D. T. Williams.

The chair stated this would be accepted and considered as a motion to defer, and as a recommitment to the committee as to the question of the nature of the memorial.

Brethren G. G. Lewis, J. F. Garver, D. T. Williams, E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and G. L. DeLapp discussed the motion to defer.

The previous question was ordered on motion of Elders G. T. Griffiths and R. M. Russell.

The vote was then taken and the motion to defer was lost.

The motion to adopt the report and recommendations of the Memorial Committee prevailed.

It was moved by Brethren Henry Stahl and Herman Thorman that we dispense with all applause following any speech from the floor or platform. The motion prevailed.

Bishop Updike suggested the propriety of having someone appointed to receive contributions for the Memorial during the remainder of this Conference. The chairman stated that probably some announcement would be made in respect to this matter tomorrow.

President Smith then called attention to communication from the First Presidency, entered upon the minutes of the 9th, concerning the purchase of church property, etc. It was moved by Elders Charles Cousins and H. A. Higgins that the recommendation be approved.

President Garver and Apostle Mesley discussed the question. Some questions were raised in an effort to clarify the scope of the resolution.

Brethren Harold Tabor and T. A. Beck moved to amend the resolution by adding the words, "or major improvements" after the word "buildings" in the fourth line of the resolution.

The amendment, and resolution as amended prevailed.

The chair recognized President Edwards who requested permission to amend document from the First Presidency, entered in the minutes of April 9th, respecting the transfer of membership, and the granting of letters of transfer to other religious organizations. He proposed to strike out after the word "authorized" the following: "to issue the letter requested and to strike from the church records the name of the person so transferring and, further, that in the event that any person having been transferred," and substitute therefore, the following: "to strike from the church records the name of the person so withdrawing and to issue to anyone concerned a statement commending this person as of good character and, further; that in the event that any person having withdrawn." The recommendation as amended would read as follows:

"It is the sense of this body that when a member of the church makes a written request for a letter of transfer to some other religious body and after due labor by the officers of this church, still persists in the request for a transfer, the First Presidency be authorized to strike from the church records the name of the person so withdrawing, and to issue to anyone concerned a statement commending this person as of good character and, further, that in the event that any person having withdrawn in this manner shall later desire to resume association with this church, and shall give evidence of an understanding and way of life appropriate to such renewing of church membership, he may be restored to fellowship by action of the branch concerned on recommendation of the First Presidency."

The chairman stated that unless objections be urged this change would be made and spread upon the minutes.

The following communication from the Presidency was read:

April 7, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:
We made the following recommendation to the General Conference of 1946:

"After giving consideration to the matter of Church Physician, we are of the opinion that the whole question should be carefully reviewed by us before the next General Conference when we can bring recommendations to the body. We suggest the matter should be left with the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric."

This recommendation was adopted. However, it has become apparent during the year that the whole matter of our health ministry needs to be given careful thought over a more extended period than has been available to us during the past year. We therefore request the indulgence of the Conference and anticipate having specific recommendations for presentation to our next general gathering.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

It was moved by Elders Oakman and Chevile to approve the request of the Presidency, and the motion prevailed.

The resolution introduced yesterday by Elders Roy Weldon and W. A. Hougas was called up for consideration, with its motion to adopt.

Brethren Roy Weldon and A. L. Loving discussed the resolution.

The motion to adopt prevailed.

Document from the First Presidency was read, as follows:

April 11, 1947

To the General Conference, Greeting:

Consideration has been given by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and the Board of Appropriations, to the future needs of the church in the field of radio broadcasting. We feel that further investigation and research are necessary, and have already recommended an appropriation of $7,500.00 to provide for competent engineering and legal services in this connection. This appropriation has been authorized by the Conference.

The following was approved by the Board of Appropriations, and is now submitted to the Conference for consideration and action:

"It is hereby recommended that if, after making such study, it is deemed advisable to make application for F.M. and/or A.M. licenses that the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric be authorized to do so.

"It is further recommended that in the event the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric find it advisable to proceed with the building of a station, that the Presiding Bishopric be authorized to draw upon the Radio Fund of $110,000.00 for such capital and initial expense as may be needed."

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

On motion of Elders D. T. Williams and William Patterson the recommendations were approved.

The chair announced that the business session tomorrow would convene at 1:30 p.m.

Announcements were read, hymn "This God Is the God We Adore," was sung, the benediction was offered by Elder Joseph Holmes of England, and the Conference adjourned at 4:30 p. m.

Business Session, Saturday, April 12, 1947

The business session of Saturday, April 12, opened with President Israel A. Smith in the chair. Elder Cheville led the congregation in singing "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," accompanied by Brother Thomas Thomas at the organ.

Elder P. S. Whalley offered the invocation.

The minutes of April 11 were read and approved as read.

The chair recognized Elder L. S. Wight who spoke with reference to his ordination to the office of evangelist, approved by this Conference, and expressed his willingness to accept, and his desire for the ordination to take place in his home district. The chairman stated that in harmony with Brother Wight's request, the ordination would take place in Chicago.

The following recommendation from the Presidency was read:

April 12, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

Dr. Lonzo Jones having resigned as a member of the Board of Graceland College, Dr. Lawrence O. Brockway, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, was selected by the Board on November 12, 1946, to fill the unexpired term of Dr. Jones. We recommend that the Conference approve the selection of Dr. Brockway.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

On motion of Elders H. L. Livingston and J. C. Stuart, the recommendation was approved.

The following recommendation relative to the Society of Archaeological Research was read:

March 28, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

In harmony with the Conference action taken April 13, 1946, we recommend that the executive committee of the Society for Archaeological Research consist of the following:

CHARLES R. HIELD, Chairman
LOUISE P. SHELDON
PAUL M. HANSON
HAROLD I. VOLT
ROY W. WELDON
Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

It was moved by Elders R. A. Cheville and W. Wallace Smith to approve, and the motion prevailed.

Communication from the Presidency was read, as follows:

April 12, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

We suggest that the Committee on Relations with the Church of Christ consist of Elders J. F. Garver, Paul M. Hanson, and Henry L. Livingston.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

On motion of Elders C. R. Hield and A. L. Loving, the recommendation was approved.

The following recommendation was read, with reference to committee on Indian Welfare:

April 12, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

In harmony with your action, we recommend that the Committee on Indian Welfare consist of Elders F. Henry Edwards, Charles R. Hield, L. Wayne Updike, Roy Weldon, and Ward A. Hougas.

Sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

A motion to adopt was moved by Elders A. A. Oakman and Perry Hiles.

Brethren C. G. Mesley and Cecil Wismer moved to amend by adding the name of A. L. Loving to the committee.

Brethren P. M. Hanson, C. G. Mesley, J. F. Garver, and Carl T. Self discussed the matter. Brother A. L. Loving spoke, and at the close of his statement declined to serve on the committee.

The chairman then stated that the question was on the motion to approve this committee. The vote was taken, and the motion prevailed.

Recommendations for appointment on the Zion's League Advisory Council were submitted as follows:

April 12, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

At the suggestion of Brother McDowell, we recommend the following for appointment on the Zion's League

Advisory Council for the coming inter-conference period:

Melvin Fowler, Chicago, Illinois
Mary B. Hill, Hamilton, Ontario
Sadi A. Moon, Independence, Missouri
Carl Mesle, Kansas City, Missouri
Gordon Mesley, Graceland College
Richard Wood, Detroit, Michigan
Carolyn Walden, Lamoni, Iowa
Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

On motion of Elders Alvin Wadsworth and Blair Jensen, the recommendations were approved.

Recommendation from the Presiding Bishopric was read, as follows:

Inasmuch as the Graceland College Endowment Fund bonds in the amount of $233,300.00 matured January 6, 1946, and have not been since renewed, it is hereby recommended that the Presiding Bishopric be authorized to take whatever legal steps are necessary to have the date of maturity of these bonds extended for ten years from January 6, 1946, or a reissuance for the same length of time.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DeLapp.

Elders D. T. Williams and Lewis Landsberg moved to approve, and the motion prevailed.

The following report from the General Zion's League Council was read by Brother Melvin Fowler:

Report of the General Zion's League Council to the First Presidency and the General Conference of April, 1947:

This report is submitted in the spirit of humility and consecration, in an effort to acquaint the church as to the deep feelings of its youth, and to express our sincere desire to work in its program and for our Saviour, Jesus the Christ. In the spirit of enlightenment and cooperation, we humbly submit ourselves to the acceptance of our God-given responsibilities in the progress of building the kingdom. We are not only preparing for future service, but we can and must serve the church now or many of our members will continue to find their life services in other pursuits.

The General Zion's League Council of the church, consisting of 175 delegates from 63 districts and stakes and four missions abroad, has met each day this past week at 11 a.m. in the Stone Church annex to evaluate the progress we have made and to study the errors of our Zion's League during the past ten years, which were the first ten years of its existence. We have tried to re-study, re-affirm, and re-consecrate it to the year ahead and to the future decade.

We have an abiding faith in our mission in the church and a determination, devotion, consecration, and courage to now move forward, giving our lives and energies in the work of kingdom-building. We happily acknowledge and accept the challenge as presented in the Presidency's report. It gives us confidence in ourselves and stimulates our zeal and enthusiasm for a part in the process of achieving the kingdom.

The following are some of the needs expressed in the Council deliberations and represent the consensus of its members:

1. We feel a definite need for understanding and using the materials that are now extant in the church for youth work. There is also a need for the development and dispersion of new materials and helps to meet the emerging needs of a growing alert body of youth.
2. A definite need exists to tie the League more closely into the total Zion's League movement of the church and to bring about an education and a clarification throughout the church of the position and responsibility of Zion's League members and Zion's League leaders, relative to the administrative arm of the church. Not only do these relationships need to be clarified, but it is recognized that there also needs to be a bond of fellowship and Christian love among the youth of the church throughout the world.
3. Many times in the past, we have judged the success of our League by numbers rather than by the quality of the experiences we have had, the services performed, or the Christian character of our members.
4. Too often we have limited our concept of the League to a weekly meeting.
5. Inasmuch as we are a recognized part of the church school and the branch, we feel that we should carry our part of the financial burden, and should have a place in the branch budget.
6. In the past, too often the branch has not known what our League was doing. We feel that it should be informed as to our purposes and activities, and believe that this will foster a greater spirit of co-operation.
7. Youth are dissatisfied with immature and trivial duties. We want to belong, to share, to lose ourselves in participation in the church's program and the effort to attain its objectives.

8. We recognize the lack of adequate leadership from within our own ranks as well as from the adult ranks, and the lack of complete consecration of present leadership.
9. We are alarmed and challenged by the general lowering of morals and ethical conduct among young people with whom we must live, which influence has carried over to some of our own church youth.

These needs are apparent. The Council calls upon the youth of the church to accept the responsibility of doing their part in a co-operative endeavor to meet these challenges. From among the many suggestions of a constructive nature which arose from our study and discussion this week, the following seem to stand out:

1. We must obtain an increased knowledge of our church and its purposes through our study, worship, recreation, and service programs. Through this sharing together, we seek to develop increased devotion and consecration to the goals of the church.
2. We feel the need for the objectives of branch, district, stake, and the church to be more clearly defined so that our program can be tied more definitely into the total program.
3. An effort should be made to increase the understanding by branch, district, and stake administrative officers and general church appointees of the purposes, organizational structure, and possibilities inherent in our total program.
4. We feel it is imperative that our members not otherwise engaged in educational pursuits should avail themselves of every opportunity to develop their abilities to serve through courses offered to us by Y.M.C.A., church organizations, school and college extension courses, and evening classes.
5. We would like to see a youth publication sponsored by the Zion's League organization to serve in meeting its needs and promoting its purposes.

The council also would like to see the following steps taken as soon as possible, if they do not interfere with the total program of the church:

1. The appointment of a full-time youth leader for the entire church, working under the director of religious education.
2. The assignment to youth of a big job, worthy of the energy and lives of young people, many of whom sacrificed for their country and who are ready and anxious to give even more for the nobler cause of the kingdom. This task might be twofold; one part having to do with the evangelization of the world, the other with the immediate task of kingdom-building.

3. An integration of the League with the total church, so that a unified program will be achieved. The youth are in, of, and with the church. We cannot exist apart from it.
4. A Zion's League leadership training program to include regional schools and a youth leader's camp. Reunion programs should also include functional youth leadership courses in training by doing.

The Zion's League Council is now working out a program that will help to attain a Zion's quality of living through sharing and service. It is our desire to move forward in the work of kingdom-building.

We have continuously felt the Spirit of Christ at this conference and are grateful for the direction that has been given. We are also thankful for the privilege of association with the good men and women of the church whose lives are an inspiration to us, and we sincerely appreciate the devotion and leadership of Brother Floyd McDowell who has won a permanent place in our hearts.

It is the conviction of the Council that the future holds a challenge for the church and that with dedication and devotion this challenge can be successfully met. May God bless the church and its officers who have devoted and consecrated their lives to its ongoing work.

Respectfully submitted,
THE GENERAL ZION'S LEAGUE COUNCIL

Drawn up by the following committee and passed unanimously by standing vote of the Council, April 11, 1947.

DELMAR M. SLOAN
MELVIN L. FOWLER
MARY B. HILL
RICHARD CANTEN
RAYMOND E. TROYER

The chairman stated this would be received and spread upon the minutes. Bishop DeLapp made a statement with reference to the objectives of the League, and their project for raising $25,000.00 during the inter-conference period. The Zion's League group sang a number under the direction of Elder Cheville.

The following from the Presidents of Seventy was read:

April 12, 1947

To the General Conference, Greeting:

The Council of Presidents of Seventy, with the unanimous approval of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Quorum of Seventy, submit to you for your approval the name of George A. Njeim to fill one of the vacancies in our Council and to request that his ordination to office of President of Seventy be provided for.

Respectfully,

THE PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY,
By Percy E. Farrow,
Secretary Pro Tem.

Elders J. W. Rushton and E. J. Gleazer moved to approve.

Brother Njeim made a statement of his willingness to accept the office. Brethren Percy E. Farrow and J. W. Rushton spoke in commendation of Elder Njeim, and the motion to approve his selection as a member of the Council of Presidents of Seventy prevailed.

Recommendation from the Presidents of Seventy was read, as follows:

April 12, 1947

To the General Conference, Greeting:

The Council of Presidents of Seventy, with the approval of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Quorum of Seventy, recommend that the following men be released from membership in the Quorum of Seventy:

1. C. W. Neville, because of greater adaptation to local work and improbability of return to church appointment.

2. G. T. Richards, and

3. R. D. Weaver, because of lack of quorum interest and activity, failure to report for three or more consecutive years, and improbability of being returned to general church appointment.

This recommendation is submitted to you for your action.

Respectfully,

THE PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY,
By Percy E. Farrow,
Secretary Pro Tem.

Brethren M. L. Draper and J. D. Anderson moved to approve the recommendation, and the motion prevailed.

Communication from the First Presidency was read, recommending ordinations to office of high priest, as follows:

April 10, 1947

To the General Conference, Greetings:

After careful consideration of each call, we recommend the ordination of the following named brethren to the office of High Priest:

Joseph E. Baldwin, Chicago, Illinois.

John E. Booth, Columbus, Ohio.

William Joseph Breshears, Springfield, Missouri.

Alex. Cadwell, Guelph, Ontario.

Leslie W. Kohlman, Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Eldon V. Osborn, Detroit, Michigan.

Enoch C. J. Swanson, Columbus, Ohio.

Victor J. Witte, Rock Island, Illinois.

These names were originally presented by members of the Quorum of Twelve. The names of the appointees recommended have been considered in the Joint Council, and all of these calls have been approved in the Quorum of High Priests.

Sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

Elders H. A. Higgins and V. D. Ruch moved to approve the recommendations.

Elder Joseph E. Baldwin indicated his willingness to accept ordination to this office.

Apostle Oakman spoke in commendation and support of Brother Baldwin, Brother Victor J. Witte, and Brother W. J. Breshears.

Brother Baldwin was duly approved for the office recommended.

Elder John E. Booth expressed his willingness to serve in the office indicated, and Apostle Jensen, representing Apostle Gleazer as well as himself, spoke in support of Elder Booth, and also of Elder Swanson. Elder D. E. Dowker spoke in support of Brother Booth and also of Brother Eldon V. Osborn.

Motion to approve Elder Booth prevailed.

Elder W. J. Breshears stated his readiness to accept the ordination. He was supported by Elder William Patterson, who also spoke in commendation of Brother Victor Witte.

The vote on Elder Breshears prevailed.

Elder Alex. Cadwell was not present, but Apostle Gleazer representing Apostle Jensen and himself spoke in behalf of Brother Cadwell, and also in support of Brother Osborn. Elder Farrow spoke in support of Brother Cadwell.

The motion to approve Brother Cadwell prevailed.

Elder Leslie W. Kohlman expressed his willingness to accept. He was supported by Apostle Hield, and duly approved by vote of the assembly for the ordination.

Elder Eldon V. Osborn indicated his willingness to accept the office. He was supported at the tribune by Elder Blair McClain.

Motion to approve Brother Osborn prevailed.

Elder E. C. J. Swanson was not present, but was supported by Elders G. G. Lewis, G. T. Griffiths, and John Booth.

Brother Swanson was duly approved by vote of the Conference.

Elder Victor J. Witte expressed his willingness to serve as indicated, and vote resulted in his approval.

The chairman announced that these ordinations would take place at the afternoon session tomorrow.

The congregation sang three stanzas of "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," led by Brother Cheville.

The following communication from the President of the High Priests' Quorum was read:

April 11, 1947

The First Presidency and the General Conference, Greetings:

For the past year a vacancy has been experienced in the presidency of the Quorum of High Priests. Brother John Sheehy has continued as one counselor, and I now feel the liberty of recommending the choice of Elder Emery E. Jennings as the other counselor.

This recommendation comes only after much prayer and meditation regarding this need in the quorum. At the meeting of the Quorum of High Priests at 10:00 a.m. today, the quorum unanimously approved this selection.

We present it to you for your further consideration and action,

Fraternally yours,

THE QUORUM OF HIGH PRIESTS,
By Ward A. Hougas, President

Brethren Orman Salisbury and Blair McClain moved to approve the recommendation. Elder Hougas spoke in commendation of Brother Jennings. The motion to approve the recommendation prevailed.

Attention was then directed by the chairman to resolution in the minutes of April 10, page 2, with reference to missionary program for the Indians.

An amendment was offered by Elders A. A. Oakman and R. A. Cheville to strike out the last paragraph of the document under consideration, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Be it Resolved: That the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric be requested to give earnest consideration to the needs of the Indian members of the church, and to the conservation, consolidation, and expansion of the work among the Indians as may be practicable in connection with other interests of the church.

This was discussed by Elders Cheville and Loving.

The amendment, and document as amended were adopted.

The chairman then placed before the assembly for consideration the document from the First Presidency with reference to letters of transfer, as appearing in the minutes of April 9 and April 11.

The adoption of this document was moved by Elders Carl T. Self and V. D. Ruch.

Elders Blair Jensen and L. Wayne Updike spoke to the question.

It was moved by Brethren G. G. Lewis and A. H. DuRose that the matter be referred to the Joint Council for their consideration.

This was discussed at the tribune by Elders F. H. Edwards, W. A. Hougas, and D. T. Williams.

The motion to refer to the Joint Council prevailed.

The following reports were read by the secretary and ordered spread upon the minutes:

April 11, 1947

First Presidency:

The report of the housing committee for this Conference, is as follows:

Number of persons assigned rooms	.951
Cot rentals arranged	50
Bed rentals arranged	102
Pillow rentals arranged	29

In addition to this, there were 243 reservations canceled. These cancellations caused much extra work and inconvenience. No doubt most of them were unavoidable but seem excessive in number.

Mrs. Essie Isenhardt, director of the housing, together with her assistants, Mrs. Mildred Cato, Miss Elizabeth Okerlind, and Mrs. Eva Holsworth, did an excellent work and complaints were few.

The women's department of Independence, was again of great help in canvassing the city for rooms.

Respectfully submitted,

GENERAL CONFERENCE HOUSING COMMITTEE,

By J. S. Kelley, Bishop

To the General Conference, Greetings:

We, your committee, appointed to have charge of administrations to the sick during the General Conference, report as follows:

We have endeavored to care for the many requests that have come to us which have amounted to about forty or fifty administrations per day. A number of elders have assisted us in performing the work that has been performed. We hope that spiritual strength and comfort may come to those who have received this ministry.

In gospel bonds,

J. F. CURTIS
L. R. HOLMES
A. K. DILLEE
Committee.

The First Presidency and the General Conference, Greetings:

The Quorum of High Priests met in regular session each day from Monday to Saturday inclusive. Besides the regular routine of business classes, fellowship services were held.

A rich spirit of fraternity prevailed, and the sessions closed with a high note of spirituality, with confidence and faith in the divine purposes of the church, its leadership, and the ability for our membership to make worth-while progress during the coming months and years.

We are most grateful to the First Presidency for the splendid direction and guidance that was given and pledge ourselves to more worth-while and devoted service.

Sincerely yours,

EMERY E. JENNINGS,

Secretary to the Quorum.

Announcements were read, hymn, "Where Wilt Thou Put Thy Trust," was sung, and Brother Rushton offered the benediction. The Conference adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to meet Sunday afternoon.

O. W. NEWTON,

P. G. FAIRBANKS,

FRANK McDONALD,

Secretaries.

I have just returned home from a happy experience. It leaves a glow of good will and appreciation in the heart. There was a convention of my civic organization in a distant city, and I had a chance to visit our congregation there, meet old friends and make new ones, and enjoy myself generally, as well as attend the sessions of our convention.

The next day came an opportunity that gave me particular pleasure. I was staying with a friend I have known for some years, a minister of another faith. He is also on the faculty of a college in that city, and invited me to address his class in religion, and tell them about the church, its founder, its principal doctrines and program. The young people were very friendly and attentive, and asked many questions at the close of the hour. I was, and am, very grateful for this experience.

This was not something that happened by accident. My minister friend first began to think well of the church because one of our bishops had befriended him in a time of discouragement. A young man in the class was interested because he had worked with some of our young people recently on the northwest coast. Friendly deeds and attitudes, Christian kindness, and consideration had prepared the way. My gratitude would be incomplete if it did not include that good bishop, and the unknown young people who built friendship.

I am more convinced than ever that friendship is one of the finest things in the world for spreading the gospel.

* A Woodland Brook

The eye of the artist finds a small spot of beauty in a place where ordinary people see only water, rocks and brush. To select such a spot, to capture the right instant of light and shade, and to make all the complicated arrangements of the camera to give it a perfect recording, this is a work of art. Such is the contribution of Frank B. Ross in providing our beautiful cover picture for this issue. It is the artist who goes through life increasing our happiness by seeking with infinite pains and recording with exquisite care nature's high moments of perfection and beauty.

* Partners

I was looking at the redbud tree blooming in the back yard, and I thought that nobody in the world could make anything more beautiful—nobody, of course, except God. Beholding it, I thought how wonderful it would be to have a share, however humble, in the creation of such beauty. But this kind of creation is not one of our privileges. Then I noticed a broken branch, and a place where insects were attacking the tree; so there was a chance for me to trim, cleanse, and disinfect. I could add something to the soil, too, to make the tree grow better. Here, after all, was a chance for me to share with God in his work of creating beauty. I could be his partner.

One gets something of the same feeling in trying to lift the minds of men and women upward toward the light, to free them of the things that hurt and give them things that heal. It also is a part of the work of creation, and we can be God's partners in it, too.

* Human Lemmings

There is a strange race of little creatures in the north of Europe, a kind of small rodent called the lemming, which amazes us with its peculiar ways. With ears somewhat like a rabbit's, the tiny body of an individual seems harmless enough. But collectively, through sheer force of numbers and insatiable appetite, the lemming creates great havoc, and sometimes eats himself out of a food supply. Then he and his relatives migrate in a great insensate mass movement. Many of them drown in rivers and lakes too wide for them, and millions of them swim out to sea in search of other lands, only to perish in the waves.

We sympathize with the tragic, foolish lemmings. And yet are not the members of the human race somewhat like them? We multiply until the land will not hold us. We set out to demand space and resources that do not exist. We destroy ourselves in wars in which there can be no gain. Who are we to laugh at the foolish lemmings?

Build Strong Branches

Every branch in the church should work toward an inclusive and worthy goal. This inspiring branch purpose should be shared by the entire membership and be set forth in terms of specific aims in such areas as the preaching and teaching ministries, baptismal gains, the development of working personnel, church buildings and improvements, aid to the unfortunate and underprivileged, and local and general finances. Moreover, this branch purpose should be carried on from year to year, constantly refined and ever more fully achieved, and always leading to a clearer vision of what yet remains to be done. It should unite the Saints in a fellowship of builders, provide continuity between the administration of today and that of tomorrow, and set up modes of kingdom enterprise in which godly families prepare for Zion.

A branch purpose such as this cannot be defined in all its details in a moment. And even when those responsible for guiding the destinies of the branch are fairly clear concerning the essential branch purpose and its major implications, such leaders should not expect everyone else concerned to share their vision immediately and fully. Unity of understanding has to be worked out in the growing experience of the whole group. Nevertheless, local pastors should draw on their personal experience, consult with their associates, and integrate the general lines of advance; with the implied understanding that the vision of today must be refined tomorrow and that obligations growing out of our Sainthood which are now but dimly perceived will become more sure and more impelling as we grow in wisdom and grace.

The glory of God is intelligence. We advance from glory to glory in our several communities as we apply our spiritual and material powers more and more wisely to the needs and opportunities which surround us. This requires every branch to face the facts of its situation squarely but with faith, knowing that labor and sacrifice are called for and yet knowing, also, what great victories are won by disciples who serve together under God.

This emphasis on the responsibilities which we all share as members of our respective branches involves no conflict with the responsibilities which we all carry as individuals. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them," but this call is to the intent that we shall all "labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." Sainthood implies partnership in our common task as well as worship of our common Lord. The duty of the elders is not merely to set forth plans, but also to unite the Saints, according to their several abilities, in a great Cause which is already partially achieved, as we become members of one another as the first fruit of our devotion.

As the presiding elders of our established branches, together with their brethren of the standing ministry, set their hands and their hearts to the great purpose which seeks expression in their calling, and seek to balance spiritual insight with practical achievement in every field of church endeavor, then will the Saints be made glad, our children be well nurtured, our message be well known, our branches be well housed, and the kingdom of God be firmly established.

"Wherefore now, let every branch of the church learn its duty, and act in the place to which it has been appointed, in all diligence."

F. H. E.

Our Church and Others

In all interchurch relations it is better to be friendly than competitive. To help the community in building better citizenship, to bring the gospel to those who have not known it, to minister to the spiritual needs of men and women, to bring redemption from sin to those who need it and hunger for it, and yet not to come into strained relations with any other organization, is to reach a high plane of service indeed.

A strong fifty per cent of the citizens of our country belong to no church, receive no religious or spiritual ministry, contribute to no organized religious endeavor, and are subject to none of the redemptive influences that religion brings to the world. Here in this unsalvaged portion of our population is our greatest opportunity for missionary work and useful endeavor. To win a single convert from this pagan element in our country is three times as useful a service as trying to win a member away from another faith. The reclaiming of our pagans adds to the total strength of the community of Christian faith; it stirs no feeling of hurt or resentment in any other church; it is a more meritorious, a more difficult, and a more honored service.

We must live in our communities, and our record there grows as we go along. We must consider well the consequences of the way we conduct our work, and particularly our evangelism. If we co-operate with other churches in every way possible, if we join in every effort to benefit the community, we soon have many friends outside of our own ranks and find that they will often help defend us when we are misunderstood. If we are competitive and unco-operative, we lose many fine contacts, friendships, and opportunities to serve, as well as to build and augment our numbers. L. J. L.

General Conference Notes

Timely word came from Apostle McConley in Germany during the Conference, as also from Elder Davies in England and Elder Peisker in Australia; Elders Butterworth, Sorensen, and Miller in the islands of the Pacific, all of which were presented to the Conference.

The presence of the "English" delegation brought glamour to the Conference. Their names have been published elsewhere in our columns. They had a part in the work of the Conference and were guests at a number of social gatherings. Two of Graceland students were from the Australasian Mission.

Expressions of thanks by letters from the Presidency will be sent to all who have assisted in making the Conference profitable and enjoyable; but we would be remiss if we did not mention specifically the Laurel Club. This fine and devoted organization met the task of feeding the thousands every day with efficiency, the food well prepared and the service all that could be expected. To them, on behalf of the church, thanks indeed!

Drs. E. V. and W. E. Shute

From the Kansas City Times we learn that two of our brethren of the Medical Fraternity, Drs. E. V. and W. E. Shute, have been in Kansas City where they both addressed the Kansas City Academy of Medicine. The article bore the heading, "New Hope in Vitamin E," and they both lectured on the same subject. The closing paragraph stated that recently "the brothers established in their home city [London, Canada] the Shute Foundation of Medical Research, a nonprofit organization to receive and expend funds in further exploration of Vitamin E."

Critical Literature

Brother W. S. Shea, Rochester, New York, sends us some pages of The Illustrated London News, issue of July 19, 1851. This paper, under the heading, "Illustrated Literature," printed a review of a book called The Mormons, or Latter Day Saints.

This account is interesting to us, for the reason that while going into details in a highly prejudicial history of the Saints, the persecution of the church, the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the dispersion, the trek west, etc., no mention is made of polygamy. The writer charged the Smiths with being "adventurers," but said, "They were morally no worse than their neighbours." ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Samuel Pope

Elder Samuel Pope of New Westminster, British Columbia, passed away on Friday, April 18, at his home. For many years he was the pastor of the congregation in his city, and influential in the affairs of the church in the Northwest. In recent years he was a visitor to the General Conference, and won many friends here at headquarters. His integrity and faithfulness, his spiritual leadership, will be greatly missed. Further information will be expected for later publication.

CONSIDERABLE NOTICE has been given in the religious magazines to the so-called "conversion" of ex-Congresswoman Clare Luce to the Roman Catholic faith. Says the Converted Catholic Magazine of April, 1947:

Her formal submission to Roman Catholicism was in no sense a spiritual "conversion" but a mere transition or change-over from one church denomination to another.

The "reasons" she gives for her change are many and varied, and she is not sure herself if there was any one "real" reason. From the fact that she speaks in Protestant terms of "the gift of faith by grace" (a doctrine condemned by the Roman Catholic Church), she is obviously drawing upon the terminology of her Protestant background as a pious covering for her meaningless and unsubstantiated statement that "Catholic doctrine seemed to me the solid objective truth."

But this will all go down well with the unthinking mass of Americans who are beginning to believe the persistent propaganda that all persons of prominence in American life are rushing to Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen for tickets of admission into the Roman Catholic Church.

Gratefulness

I thank thee, Lord, for blessings rare
That came to me today;
For faith and love and tender prayer
Will keep me in thy way.

I sought thee first at early dawn
For strength, this day alone;
Then trusted thee—thy will be done!
Thy way to me was shown. Amen.

Notes

After Conference Reflections

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1947 will linger pleasantly in the memory of those in attendance as one of the best that we have ever held. The evident unity of purpose within and among the quorums of the priesthood was reflected also among the delegates. President Israel A. Smith grew still further in the confidence and affection of the people—he did a fine job as presiding officer.

CONFERENCE HANDICAPS

The telephone strike which began promptly the second day of the Conference was a serious handicap in various ways. However, everyone made the best of the situation—just another instance of the public being caught between two minority groups in a strategic position to tie up public utilities. Independence people are sensitive about their spring conference weather. Visitors at that time fail to see the natural beauty of the surrounding country—they see it when it is drab and dreary, and the weather most “unusual.” The weather may be bad or it may be worse. Years ago our good friend Peter Kauffman, of Swiss extraction, came to Conference. After his return to his beloved sunny California, he wrote me, “You had rain, snow, and hail, mixed mit dunderings and lightnings.” It was not quite that bad this year.

THE REVELATION

The revelation presented at the very beginning of the Conference confirmed our ancient beliefs that God still speaks and will continue to speak to his church through approved channels. Satisfaction was felt in the provision of the revelation to bring the Quorum of Twelve again to full numerical strength by the addition of three excellent men. The release of John W. Rushton brought a pang to many in the realization that he would be missed from his accustomed place in the councils of the church. Yet there were compensations. Brother Rushton was ordained an apostle, April 20, 1902. The lifting of the burden of rather constant travel and attention to oft-times vexing administrative details must have been welcome. Then there were the words of commendation contained in the revelation and later the unanimous standing vote of the Conference, including visitors as well as delegates, in approval of the fine official tribute paid to the long-time friend of so many, John W. Rushton.

READ THAT CLOSING PARAGRAPH AGAIN

Many were thrilled to see the Quorum of Twelve again brought to full numerical strength; perhaps not everyone fully appreciated the closing paragraph of the revelation. How significant the prophetic statement, “Zionic conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies.” The Inspired Version of the Bible tells us that God created all things spiritually before he created them physically. The Rockefeller millions may build a magnificent capitol for the United Nations; but will there be a United Nations to occupy the magnificent structure? Had we the millions, we might build the outer structures of Zion; of what benefit would they be if the spirit of Zion was not within the people who came to dwell there?

In that closing paragraph, we find also the repeated warning that we shall not give heed to self-appointed leaders who run with their own tidings and who even propagandize the people as against the counsel of the men set to lead the counsel under the law. The revelation says: “The church is admonished again that all movements toward Zion and the gathering and temporalities connected therewith are within my law, and all things shall be done in order, the advice and counsel of the elders and of the Bishop and his council be sought and honored when received, as before enjoined.” The paragraph closes with this prophetic word of comfort, “My word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.”

DISTINCTIVE LATTER DAY SAINT SIGNIFICANCE

In the report of the First Presidency, there appeared twelve specific recommendations having to do with missionary and pastoral work and the gathering. All of them appealed to me, and one in particular: “Give departmental work distinctive Latter Day Saint significance.”

In the smaller outlying branches, ministered to often by missionaries, children and young people hear our distinctive beliefs and important items of history peculiar to the Restoration preached rather often, until they are familiar with them. In the early days of the church, this was so true that even children could defend the church against attack. Today in the larger branches of the church, this is no longer true. Young people sometimes ask the bewildered question, “What is the difference between our church and other churches? Is there any?” Catholics do not make that mistake. They specialize in their ministry to children and youth. This suggestion to the departments may also have some significance in our program of preaching. Some of us come to speak of “the church,” as all inclusive, taking in all churches, Protestant and Catholic, and our own.

Long ago, in a revelation which began, “O hearken, ye elders of my church,” and which contained the following, “Ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children

THE LADY WITH

IN 1856 A BRITISH battleship was dispatched to the Dardanelles to bring back to England a young woman. A whole nation awaited to do her honor; but modesty prompted her to return quietly, and she escaped to her country home before the news of her return could leak out. This amazing woman was Miss Florence Nightingale who had volunteered to take charge of a corps of British army nurses in the Crimea. Thirty-seven professional nurses went with her, to be joined by some hundreds of others.

The story of Miss Nightingale's labors at Scutari is said to be one of the "brightest pages in English annals." Under her direction, the mortality among British wounded was reduced from 42 per cent to 2 per cent, and though for a time Miss Nightingale was herself prostrated with fever, she refused to leave her post until the British evacuated Turkey. Thus an army nurse became a national hero, paralleled only by Clara Barton, the American nurse in the Civil War.

This early experience brought to the public mind what enlightened and consecrated service can do in times of emergency resulting in a consciousness of deep national gratitude for a great self-sacrificing service in the field of nursing.

THE PROFESSION OF nursing, developed so rapidly under the stresses of war and the demands of public necessity, comes now to be among the learned professions. Three very definite influences have helped to bring sick-nursing to its present high standing. First, religion; then war; and, lastly, science.

In the early centuries of the Christian era, women, impelled by religious feelings, took up the care of the sick as a charitable duty. Fabiola, a noble Roman lady, in A.D. 380, founded a hospital at Rome with a separate convalescent home. She gave herself and her fortune to the care of the sick poor.

The employment of women in such causes apparently was rapid, for in the reign of Honorius, about A.D. 400, several hundred women were engaged in the hospitals of Alexandria alone, which were managed by the clergy. In fact, through the Dark and Middle Ages, all hospitals and nursing were a part of the work of religious bodies, nurses being provided by monastic orders, both male and female, a system which largely continues to this day in Roman Catholic countries.

Some of the oldest foundations still survive, such as Hotel Dieu at Paris, St. Thomas and St. Bartholomew's in London.

Nursing, until a later period, was a menial office, looked down upon as a means of livelihood, followed mostly by women of the lower ranks, and without training or special skill. It thus continued down to the middle of the 19th century, when it began to be revolutionized, and the status of the nurse began to enlarge.

TRAINING FOR NURSES began. It was recognized as a special vocation. Isolated efforts as early as 1790 had been made to instruct nurses by lectures. Learning was thus imparted, but their skills had to be developed in the wards. There were no legal requirements, and little by the hospitals themselves, and the calling sank lower in the public mind.

Then in Germany came the inauguration of a new era or order, and training schools sprang up, and later in England, Florence Nightingale received the training which equipped her for the glorious service which made her a national hero.

While the business of nursing came out of religion, religious orders fostered training, and the emergencies of war gave all of it a tremendous impetus, first the Crimean War and then the Civil War in America.

Thus, briefly stated, we see how religion and humanitarian instinct give birth to nursing. War provided the great need of humanity for a better quality, and then science came along to complete the work so begun. Since 1880, increasing demands have revolutionized the craft—made it a profession, and the change has been characterized as "scientific cleanliness." The calling—now a profession—was elevated in dignity. It appealed to superior persons, and more and more they have adopted it as their life's work.

An encyclopedia published as late as 1911 said nursing was not, however, regulated by law, a statement of fact now very much outmoded, because all of the 48 States have come to recognize nursing as a much-needed profession and have established laws respecting the training and licensing of professional nurses, and have provided for certain standards of those institutions where nurses received their training.

IN THE BEGINNING, the Independence Sanitarium grew out of a religious movement. In 1906 the church represented here tonight was given instructions as follows:

It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, as my servant Joseph Smith has already stated to you. This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay. The presiding bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence Stake should take counsel together in locating and establishing this sanitarium.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 1.

Ground was broken, a building was constructed, and in 1909 its first patient was received. In course of a little time, nurse training was begun, and this phase of its work has steadily grown, until we witness here on this occasion the setting aside of one night of a busy General Conference of a growing church to pay our respects to, and to honor this institution, its official personnel, its staff of medical experts and teachers, and better still, the graduate nurses and those who now are being graduated.

Thus science has become the greatest factor in the training of nurses for their professional careers.

Born of the same compassion that motivated the good Samaritan who responded to a great pity and poured wine and oil on the wounds of the unfortunate man—and I often wonder if wine and oil are good for cuts—we find that even a loving service ignorantly rendered might become a real disservice.

A FEW YEARS AGO, the blind and unavailing efforts of well-intentioned ignorance were pictured in a Pageant and Masque of the Evolution of Trained Nurses, and from this book I have culled an interesting bit of reading, in which the nursing of an earlier day shows the triumph of the nursing spirit—the humanitarian instinct. The progress made is amazing when we remember that nurses throughout the centuries literally worked in the dark, much of that time without the least help from science.

In this drama, we find the Spirit of Nursing speaking:

"I wept for pity, and I strove to ease where I might not mend; when they cried for me I went,—no dungeon was too dark, no lazar house too noisome, no battlefield too terrible. I bound the wounds that festered; I washed the sores that would not heal; I spoke gentle words and ministered to the plague-stricken multitude, nor knew that the hem of my garment bore death. Water I carried to those athirst with fever, nor knew that the [water] course was polluted; milk tainted with disease I gave to wailing babes, and none told me I erred. I served the sick and suffering, kneeling; I gave my life and yearned over them as a mother over her babe. But I blundered and stumbled and none set my feet in the right path. Oh, Mother! my children were grievously stricken, and my help stayed them but little."

Then Science comes forward: "'Tis I can aid her, Goddess; what she lacks I have. I may not own her gentle voice and tone; I cannot weep for pity, and the cry of the suffering multitude does not tear my heart. But I can reveal the germ that festers the wound, and teach how it may be killed that the wound may heal true and clean. I can show how the water source may be preserved pure. I can build the dwelling that shall be clean, sweet, and wholesome. I can track the plague poison to its lair, and my skill can stay its course. I, Mother, can teach Man how to repair the ravages his sin and ignorance have caused in despite of thy laws; and I can teach my gentler sister how her ministrations may be thrice blessed. She shall blunder and stumble no longer; there is a knowledge and discipline that shall prevail over ignorance and prejudice, and equip her for her struggle with disease, and the dirt and folly that are its cause."

Then Hygea, the presiding deity, tells how science and skill must be wedded to the spirit of service and self-sacrifice, how the head and hand must reinforce and direct the heart in order that nursing shall be something more than "kindly ignorance" stumbling on in the dark, "for without that knowledge and skill, no tenderness, no sympathy, no love, no gentleness will save the sick and suffering. If science guide not pity, she may well harm those she seeks to save."

It was Florence Nightingale who first taught the world that nursing was an art, "the finest of the fine arts," and who first insisted on the need for a long and careful training which should include not only extended practice in the art itself, but sound knowledge of the principles on which it is based. It is this new emphasis on expert skill and knowledge which distinguishes the modern conception of nursing from the older idea of a purely voluntary religious or personal service on the one hand, or an unskilled form of manual labor on the other.

The real spirit of nursing is the crowning glory of the profession, for is it not an exemplification of the saying of the Master that if service be given to any the least of Christ's brethren, it is rendered unto him? But Science is the crowning achievement, for without learning and direction, it were a case of love's labor lost, and a patient could be lost or even killed through ignorance alone of what ought to be done.

In the Heroic Age, Homeric heroines of mythology were gifted with a knowledge of plants and their virtues, and mythology records that Asclepius, the Physician, had daughters, Hygeia, Panacea, Iaso, and Aegle, all of whom were specialists, so science had its early devotees—at least in imagination.

But our nurses of today have a technical knowledge never dreamed about from the earliest records of nursing down to the last one hundred years—even less. What goddesses these young women who are presented tonight could have been among the early Greek, the Trojans of Homer. Behold them! Indeed what goddesses they are among us in this prosaic and matter-of-fact 1947! And we are really much impressed not only by their wisdom and acquired knowledge, but indeed by their loveliness and beauty.

ON BEHALF of the Board of Trustees and the church which has fostered the institution which now confers its honors on them, I congratulate these young ladies on having reached their first objective in a noble career, a worthy profession, and wish for them a life rich in accomplishments in the interest of their fellow man.

And to Miss Copeland and her worthy assistants, Director Morgan, the teaching staff, the learned doctors, and all who have helped to bring these young ladies to this hour of achievement, our sincerest congratulations and appreciation.

Florence Nightingale was the inspiration for an American poet, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and he called his poem Santo Filomena, meaning Saint Nightingale. In this he pictured Miss Nightingale in the war hospitals in Crimea and among the wounded—May I read it?

He pictured—

The wounded from the battle-plain,
In dreary hospitals of pain,
The cheerless corridors,
The cold and stony floors.

Lo! in that house of misery
A lady with a lamp I see Pass through the glimmering gloom,
And flit from room to room.

And slow, as in a dream of bliss,
The speechless sufferer turns to kiss
Her shadow, as it falls
Upon the darkening walls.

As if a door in heaven should be Opened and then closed suddenly,
The vision came and went,
The light shone and was spent.

Of England's annals, through the long
Hereafter of her speech and song,
That light its rays shall cast
From portals of the past.

A Lady with a Lamp shall stand
In the great history of the land,
A noble type of good,
Heroic womanhood.

A Lady with a Lamp—Miss Nightingale. How appropriate the phrase! The Lamp of Relief from pain, of Mercy, of Understanding, of Intelligence, of Wisdom, of Loving Service.

May we not think of all these fine young women, who receive the seal of their labors and research today, each as a Lady with a Lamp, holding it high so that its rays of healing and understanding may minister to untold thousands during a rich life of devotion and service.

of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high.”—Doctrine and Covenants 43:4. True we may learn many things from the schools and from the press and radio; but in the things which God has revealed to us, we are “to teach and not to be taught,” to give and not to borrow. It is of doubtful propriety to borrow our materials, our sermon outlines, even their substance from other sources. The things we borrow are preached as well or better from other pulpits in finer church buildings—who will specialize in the message of the Restoration which came to us “from on high”?

The General Conference ministers to the people in various ways. There are the hours of worship and meditation, the ministry of music, the preaching service, the business session, and the many study hours in classes, quorums, and departmental meetings. The “Youth Assembly,” meeting each forenoon in the main auditorium, seemed to me the largest and finest gathering of young people that I have ever seen at one of our Conferences.

“TILL WE MEET AGAIN”

There is another, an informal, not-programmed meeting that goes on between sessions during Conference. The meeting of old friends, from the East Coast, the West Coast, from Canada, Texas, from overseas. Also new friendships being made. Young people in groups, and often by twos, hand in hand. Young people looking forward. Old friends talking of the past. The last day of the Conference I saw three old timers in a huddle in an upper corridor of the Auditorium. They had gone to school together, gone swimming in the old swimming hole. A preaching service was going on on the other side of the wall; but they were having their own conference. A half hour later I saw them still in a huddle, making up for lost time since last they met—not knowing when, if ever, they might meet again in this world. God be with them till they meet again—in another Conference, here or yonder.

God be with you all, till we meet again;
By his counsels guide uphold you;
With his sheep securely fold you—
God be with you till we meet again!

New Day Prayer

By Ethel M. Bishop

Ere thou risest from thy bed,
Speak to God whose wings were spread
O'er thee in the helpless night—
Lo, he wakes thee now with light!
Lift thy burden and thy care
In the mighty arms of prayer.

Lord, the newness of this day
Calls me to an untried way;
Let me gladly take the road.
Give me strength to bear my load,
Thou my guide and helper be—
I will travel through with thee.

Religious Education at Your Reunion

The times are critical—The word of God is certain—
The church calls for action—Qualified leadership is imperative—Reunions are costly. They must be made to count for God and the church.

BY F. M. McDOWELL

The Times Are Critical

No intelligent person denies this. A vivid description of its reality came from the lips of our leaders during the late conference. In the opening sermon of President Israel A. Smith:

In my work, I see the official publications of certain ecclesiastical organizations. Here is a statement found in one of them: "One year had elapsed since men laid down their arms and firing ceased, but peace was never so far beyond our reach. The dreams of a warless world have been rudely shattered. It would seem that we are surely nearing the end of the age. This critical world situation must be understood by God's people. The issues are spiritual—it is truth vs. falsehood; law vs. anarchy; God vs. Satan; Christ vs. anti-Christ. Let us stop living in a fool's paradise, dreaming that the world will right itself. This world order is doomed. Man's day is drawing to a close. The second Psalm will be enacted as the closing drama of human rebellion against God and his anointed!"

And a message from the Quorum of Twelve:

As we witness the restlessness and frustrations of the statesmen of the victorious nations in their efforts to gain this peace, we are convinced that only through the application of the ethics and principles of the Christian philosophy does hope of success in this quest lie. Today the passion for luxury and ease, the increase of sensualism, resulting in the desecration of home and family life, the tendency to evaluate all in terms of material success, indicate the downward course of our civilization.

The Word of God Is Certain.

Here we quote from the remarkable closing paragraph of the last revelation to the church dated April 7, 1947:

The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion's conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies, but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.

The Church Calls for Action

Again quoting from the message of the Quorum of Twelve:

Today, more than ever, there is urgent need for the self-discipline so necessary to health, moral and spiritual well-being. . . . It is here where our Apostolic ministry shall have its place and potency. The great need of the world for these resources of faith, hope, and love must be met by the church bringing to bear all its power and influence to meet this urgent demand.

Qualified Leadership Is Imperative The Setting: The General Conference of 1947

The Scene: A meeting of the General Council of Zion's League, composed of approximately 170 young people and their leaders from 67 stakes and districts of the church and several missions abroad.

The Problem: The needs and limitations of Zion's League as the youth program of such a church as ours in such a day as this.

The Answer: Responses coming from 75 young people within an hour revealed that the first, most insistent, and imperative need of our young people was leadership. Here are a few of these responses quoted verbatim.

There is a lack of church leadership to unify the entire Zion's League program and to follow through with it.

There is need for a full-time Zion's League leader in each district.

We need leadership to sit down with Zion's League leaders and members to evaluate their program and demonstrate new methods.

We do not have enough leaders among teen-age members.

There is no good training program for our Zion's League leaders.

There are too many people who won't take jobs.

Reunions Are Costly

Reunions are costly—tremendously costly. Costly in money, time, energy.

The budget of a single reunion often goes as high as $500 to $1,000. Approximately 1/6 of the total work year of the church is concerned with reunion activities. Dividing the total annual budget by six, one is appalled at what reunions cost the general church.

Then literally thousands of the Saints spend at least one week at some reunion. Here again is an outlay of many thousands of dollars. We repeat, reunions are costly. We must make them count for the advance of the work of God.

Religious Education Seeks to Help

The General Department of Religious Education is happy to be able to offer up-to-date materials and tested methods of procedure. This for the benefit of reunion committees generally, as they, within the next few weeks, plan their respective programs.

For the Children at Your Reunion

There is available now, absolutely new, attractive, uniquely Latter Day Saint materials for all ages of children from kindergarten through the junior high age. This series, available through the Herald Publishing House, is entitled "Behold the Light of the World." These materials are listed at the following prices:

Leaders' Handbook, $1.00
Leadership Training Curriculum, Vacation, 25c Kindergarten Manual, 50c
Primary Manual, 50c
Junior Manual, 50c
Junior High Manual, 75c
Daily Record Card, 15c doz.
Attendance Card, 10c doz.
Award Certificate, 15c doz.

By the way, why wouldn't it be a good idea to appoint the children's workers for your reunion now. This rather than a day or two before your reunion starts, or even as sometimes happens after the children arrive on the reunion grounds.

For the Young People at Your Reunion

Appoint now, as many weeks as possible ahead of your reunion, a qualified youth leader to take charge of all young people's activities during your reunion.

Plan for a temporary organization of the young people who will spend the week together on your reunion grounds. We suggest that this organization be patterned after the organization of the Zion's League. This would mean that the program of your reunion would be outlined and sponsored by a cabinet or council consisting of: the young people's leader, the young people's president, and other officers, and four chairmen of committees—one in each of the following fields: study, worship, recreation, service.

Such a program has been tried out and in each instance has provided most happy and profitable reunion experiences for the young people. Best of all, it constitutes ideal preparation for the work of Zion's League in the branches and districts after the reunion is over.

Suggestions for Classwork for Young People

And what could the young people study during reunion? Here are a few suggestions.

Exploring the Church, by Elbert A. Smith. This text constitutes the heart of the year-round Zion's League program for the next year.

Does It Make Any Difference? This is a most popular text and activity booklet for Zion's League for the current year.

Youth Work in the Church, a text by E. C. Harner, together with a study guide.

Overviews of Our Missionary Message, by Maurice Draper in quarterly form.

The League Program and How To Make It Go, (Advice and materials covering these and other topics will be gladly furnished by the Department of Religious Education, Auditorium, Independence, Mo.)

For the Adults at Your Reunion

A growing number of serious-minded adults complain that although reunion activities are usually inspirational, they often fail to provide practical helps. Within a few weeks after the close of reunion, so they say, the inspiration and emotional thrills of the moment have faded, and they are at as much of a loss as before reunion as to ways and means of carrying forward the work of their local branches.

Accordingly why not make leadership training a central feature of reunion activities? Many courses are available to choose from. See Bulletin 102. Instruction as to methods and procedures to be followed for credit will be gladly furnished by the Department of Religious Education. Here are a few of the many courses that could be offered:

How To Teach in the Church School, Vieth

Let Us Worship, C. B. Hartshorn

That Problem of Leadership, F. M. McDowell

Youth Work in the Church, N. C. Harner

Church and Home in Mutual Endeavor, F. M. McDowell

The Church in Christian Education, Paul H. Vieth

Exploring the Church, E. A. Smith

The Latter Day Saint Home of Today and Tomorrow, Alice Burgess

The Branch of Today and Tomorrow, Roy A. Cheville

Planning the Zion's Home, E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

God's Blueprint for the Temporal Things of Life, J. C. Runkle

Why not make reunion classwork count at a time when young and old alike plead for qualified leaders. We repeat we cannot afford the luxury of reunions that provide a few vacation thrills only. They must be made to count tremendously for the work of God. In this critical hour, let the Department of Religious Education help you.

A Divine Healing

Some weeks ago, I was a patient in the Independence Sanitarium. My case was diagnosed as a fungus infection of the nerves—a disease listed as incurable. My physician held no hopes for my recovery, but promised to do everything in his power to help me. While he and his assistants went to work with all that medical science could offer, word was sent to relatives and friends for prayers in my behalf. I was also administered to.

On Wednesday evening, February 5, at the union prayer service in Lamoni, Iowa, a special prayer for the sick was voiced by Clarence Heide. For a reason unknown to him, he was led to request that those who received divine aid should be allowed to know of it immediately. About 1 o'clock that night, I awoke feeling perfectly well. Something had happened to me. I sat up and talked with a fellow patient for about half an hour, then laid down and slept without a sedative until next morning. From that time on I had no more fever, and by Monday the doctor said I was making a remarkable recovery.

I write this as my testimonial to the goodness of God. Not only was the doctor directed in his treatment of my case, but more than human aid was granted me through the united prayers of many people. If there is a work for me to do, I desire to accomplish it in a manner pleasing to the Master.

Organ Playing in the Church

By Roy Benson

Teacher of Organ and Theory
Graceland College
Lamoni, Iowa

THE PRIMARY use of the organ in a church service is to accompany or assist singing. Its other function is to act as a unifying force from the time the service starts with the prelude to the time it ends with the playing of the postlude. The music in the service should, therefore, make a definite contribution to the act of worship.

The service should start with the organ (or piano) prelude. The prelude has a definite place in the church service; its function is to prepare for worship. It should be a period of meditation, not one of confusion and social disturbance. In a large majority of our branches, it is the time to usher people to their places, a signal that Sunday school is over and a choice time for social harangue, and I don't think our people are to blame. Much has to be done in training our ministers in all phases of church administration and supervision. Quite frequently our organists are notified that a certain service will start at 11:00 o'clock and asked if they would kindly start playing at 10:50; so for a good many years our organists have provided "walking and talking" music, not "preparation for worship" music. If the music is not permitted to contribute to worship, then let's do without it.

Assuming that we need organ music in the service, what music should be used? Here we have to make a distinction between poor music and good music; secular and sacred. Remember, the church is not a recital hall. Many compositions used might be good music—but not for church, because they can be associated with secular experiences. Here are a few extreme examples: The Old Refrain and Caprice Viennois are good compositions. We hear them on the radio, in the concert hall, and in the theater. Hearing them used as a prelude would hardly prepare one for a worship period; they would bring to my mind a concert violinist, his beautiful tone, ability to play double stops with perfect intonation, and a finger dexterity which was amazing. One can hardly think of such and prepare for worship. Music must be used that is good and will blend with the atmosphere of the church. It must produce a mood conducive to worship. Choose music that has, in general, the following characteristics:

- (1) Melodic intervals which are diatonic
- (2) Harmonic intervals which are diatonic
- (3) Rhythms not intricate
- (4) Is not secular

Music for church service need not be difficult. However it should be performed with good taste and accuracy. Playing the hymns is the most exacting part of the service. They can't be practiced too much. The following are necessary for good hymn playing:

- (1) Legato playing — playing phrases smoothly and evenly
- (2) Pedals played as written, using both feet
- (3) Tempo feeling—steady, comfortable
- (4) Phrase feeling
- (5) Balance between organ and voices
- (6) Variety of ways of playing hymns — without pedals — octave higher—as solo, etc.
- (7) Plenty of time between verses

The first two of the preceding seven points are greatly abused. Legato playing requires a well-controlled finger action. If one has accomplished this during his or her piano study it will be easy to apply

The General Church Music Department has asked a number of people to prepare material on Organ Playing for Church and giving lists of suitable music for church use. The following article is the first of these. We wish to thank Mr. Benson for his co-operation and urge our organists to read this article carefully.

FRANKLYN S. WEDDLE,

it to the manuals. This technique is fundamental for good organ playing; on the piano one may get by through the use of the sustaining pedal (which covers a multitude of sins). When an organ is played with poor legato, it is safe to say that the one playing it is also a poor pianist.

Pedals are to be played as written, using both feet. Pedals must be legato, also; this cannot be accomplished by "one-legged" organists. Try to get help on these points; if you can't, get an organ method book and go through it right from the beginning systematically. I would suggest the Stainer Organ Method; it is an old reliable text which has been revised and covers most of the organ problems.

Here is a list of several volumes of organ selections that can be used for church. All the music contained in these volumes is not good. The compositions range from very easy to—not so easy. Along with these can be used hymn tunes not familiar to our congregations using those in our own hymnal and also others. The Bach Chorales offer a wealth of material, and many of his organ works which are not too difficult, such as the 3rd and 6th selections from his Eight Little Preludes and Fugues, are good.

Zion's League--- Active Participant

BRIGHT sweaters and soft tweeds of young people—smiling, alert faces, row on row in the choir loft of The Auditorium—three hundred strong they arose to sing, with the affirmativeness and vigor which only the youth can know:

“Hail to the church and her youth,
Joined now for Christ and the truth.

One in fellowship,
One in stewardship,
Youth of the church.”

It was on Saturday afternoon of General Conference. One of these young people, Melvin Fowler, of Chicago, read to the Conference the report from the Zion's League Council. Such was the drama exemplifying the spirit of dedication of Latter Day Saint young people at the General Conference.

Nineteen hundred and forty-seven is the tenth anniversary of the Zion's League—“Youth United for Service in the Church.” Zion's Leaguers are church members above all. Young people like to work together and can work better in companionship with others like themselves. For those reasons there is a Zion's League.

On this tenth anniversary, there met together the General Zion's League Council. This council was newly formed, especially for this Conference. It was composed of appointed delegates from each district of the world-wide church. Delegates and visitors filled the Stone Church annex each day at 11:00 o'clock, to plan together the work of the Zion's League for the next eighteen months.

It was in the report to the General Conference that the hopes and objectives for the League, arrived at by this group, were presented.

As the Leaguers talked, a findings committee recorded their statements of needs and problems, their evaluations of League activities and their suggestions. Each day there was put into the hands of every delegate the report of the previous day's statements, as accumulated and organized by the findings committee. An advisory committee of ten of the delegates digested these daily reports. In communication with the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric of the church, they set up, with the aid of the findings committee, the Report to the General Conference, which appears in the minutes. This report presents the League's own evaluation of itself, its place, its needs, and its future in the work of the church. In it the young people make their dedication to the church's purpose and program.

Presidents Israel A. Smith and F. Henry Edwards graciously received the members of the General Zion's League Council who visited them. It was with understanding concern that they viewed the place of the young people in the church. The presidents earnestly solicited the Zion's League members to help find, with the guidance of the Heavenly Father, the routes by which the young peoples' energies can be directed most effectively toward the church-wide goals.

It was pointed out that the responsibility to keep the Zion's League meaningful rests with the youth.

The First Presidency made these suggestions:

1. The Zion's League can help each individual member make adequate preparation for life, by providing impetus and opportunity to—
 - a. Know Christ
 - b. Know the church's purpose and program
 - c. Know his life philosophy
 - d. Know his vocation

By SADI ANKA MOON

- e. Prepare for a high quality marriage
2. Concerning the vocation of each Latter Day Saint young person—
 - a. He should choose his vocation early
 - b. Preparation should be made in lines in which the skills can be used in Zion-building
 - c. When the young person is prepared with a college education, he should give to the church in service, as much benefit from this preparation as is possible.
3. Concerning the building of Zion—Zion can be built only by a people of devotion and culture.
4. The Zion's League as a church-wide organization should choose projects and complete them in given lengths of time. These projects should be in the areas of (1) missionary work and (2) the building of Zion.
5. Concerning the objectives of Zion-building and missionary work—
 - a. The church, districts, and branches are admonished to formulate immediate and long-time objectives in the immediate future.
 - b. The objectives of the Zion's League must coincide with the objectives of the church.

What then are the definite tasks the Zion's Leaguers set before themselves for the next eighteen months—these tasks to accord with the suggestions of The First Presidency?

1. They will have a church-wide year-round program schedule to give guidance to individual Leagues in techniques for study, worship, service, and play. This they will use in co-operation with the pastor of their respective branch. This yearbook, being prepared by the general church, will help create church-wide unity of the Zion's League.

2. On a given date, all the League's in the entire church will hold a celebration to be known as the Restoration Festival. It may be a day or a week in duration, depending upon the strength of the individual League. This festival will emphasize an understanding and appreciation of our church's function as a restoration movement for God's purpose.

3. Each person will be personally responsible to himself and the church to prepare himself to function wisely in leadership positions and as a craftsman in the business of building Zion. He will obtain needed education at night school, in Y.M.C.A. training courses, by extension courses from a college or university, or by extensive individual study.

4. The Zion's League Council will be made permanent. At each General Conference it will meet to study and extend the League program, to refurbish the individual branches' stocks of techniques, and to state again their objectives. This is that there might be unified and representative direction of individual effort for the progression of the whole.

5. By assignment of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, the Zion's League will raise a fund of $25,000 by next General Conference. Part of this money will go to have made two bronze busts of Frederick Madison Smith, one for Graceland College and one for The Auditorium. The rest of this money will be devoted to missionary work in other lands. This is the first church-wide Zion's League project.

6. The Leaguers will apply to their lives, their League, and their branch the goals set forth by the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric in their messages to the General Conference, registered in the conference minutes. Thus they will attempt to be active participants in the general church program.

7. The educational program of the Zion's League will center on Christ and the Resurrection as related to the Restoration. This is the need of the entire church. This understanding must be made a part of every individual life.

At 8:30 each morning in The Auditorium, the students of Graceland College presented to the young people of the church their understanding of "These Things We Share." In pageantry, drama, discussion, and demonstration the Zion's League looked at the Church flag, the Church's hymns, the Church's persons, the Church's books, the Church's world-wide fellowship. On Saturday morning they viewed, with the aid of these tools, their common task.

And thus it was that on the last Sunday morning of General Conference of this year of 1947, the young people of the church joined in prayer and fellowship. Lovely Englewood church in west Independence gave the setting for the early morning service of dedication to Christ and to the work of his church.

Thousands of Latter Day Saint young men and women are at home now in the branches all over the church. They want to take an honorable, mature place in the church. Will you help them?

Preventive Education

Lawrence F. Woolley, M.D.

Alcoholism, like any other symptomatic behavior, is an indication that something is going wrong; that the interpersonal relations of this individual so fail to yield him satisfaction that he is left frustrated and unhappy. Evidently he does not see the world as it is, nor people as they are; or if he does, he feels unable to face and meet the situation or do anything about it.

From the standpoint of prevention, our foremost need is a widely diffused educational program aimed at teaching people how to get along with each other. The rules are simple and are easily assimilated.

1. Face your problems; talk them over with someone who can help you, a minister, a friend. Formulate them as clearly as you can and try to solve them objectively. Try to see what is going wrong; how it goes wrong; why it doesn't work; what can be done to make it work better, especially what you can do to make it go better.

2. In all your relationships with other people be sure to see that they benefit from the contact as much as you do. Remember that loving someone doesn't mean that you want to get out of them all you can, but that you want to do those things which will be to their benefit even at the expense of their displeasure. Try to love freely in this sense and not be too concerned with what you are getting out of it. To be sure, there may be many instances in which you will have little return from the individual concerned, but on the whole the returns will be most gratifying. "Cast your bread upon the waters."

3. Be kind to people; avoid hurting whenever you can. Try not to retaliate for every offense nor to see every fault; try to balance those faults which you do see with good qualities that are also invariably present.

4. Be tolerant; accept people as they are; try to bring out in them that type of behavior which is best for you both. Put up with them. Remember that they have to put up with you.

5. Try to look upon failure as an opportunity to learn. Failure indicates that there is something you do not know about what you were trying to do, or that you have not developed skills necessary to success. Examine each failure to see what went wrong and try to decide whether there is something you can do about it, or whether success in that particular instance would be really worth the effort.

6. Try not to be too afraid of anxiety, depression, or frustration. No one ever arrives at that state of perfection in which such reactions do not occur. Try to follow unsuccessful experiences with something that works better. Keep on doing things.

7. Assume responsibilities, first of all for yourself, and secondly for others. When you assume responsibilities, discharge them. Make few promises—none that you don't feel quite sure you can carry out.

8. Remember that it is people, not things, that are most important.—Scientific Temperance Journal, Winter: 1947.

The Materials of Creation

(Reading: Psalm 104: 1-9)

A SCIENTIFIC and philosophical question which has puzzled a good many people is this: Where did God get the material out of which to create the earth, the stars, and all the incidental creations which go to make up our world and our universe? If we assume, as some people have explained, that matter was co-existent with God, we have two absolutes instead of one—two great sources or causes, instead of one. If matter was co-existent with God, then it is as eternal as God, and it may be that God grew out of matter—which is an absurdity. God is eternal. He was not created or made. From everlasting to everlasting, God was and shall be. Our minds cannot grasp such eternity, but that need not be a bar to our accepting it as a basic point from which to conduct all our exploration into the mysteries of creation. But when we attempt to give eternity both to God and gross, inert matter, we are presented with an inexplicable dilemma.

The belief of science not long since—in fact so recently as my high school days—was that all energy is the product or outgrowth of matter. Science pointed out that for every action there must be an equal and opposite reaction, and describes the sources of energy according to the way that energy was derived from matter—physical, chemical, or electrical. Yet what seemed to be true was obviously untrue in at least some respects. Life and intelligence do not spring alone and unaided out of dead matter; but rather life and intelligence gather around them the matter they need to develop into certain preconceived forms. It is not the soil, but the life and nature of the rosebush, which determines whether it will be a dwarf or a climber, and whether the roses will be red, yellow, or white. It is not the corn which determines what it shall become when it is fed to live stock or poultry, but the organism to which it is fed; for the same corn will produce white feathers on a chicken that produces black hair on a horse, or wool on a sheep. Living organisms gather and organize matter; but matter has never demonstrably produced a living, intelligent organism unaided.

WE ARE LIVING in an atomic age—an age in which we have torn into the atom far enough to discover that in last analysis it is not composed of material substance at all—not in the usually accepted sense of the term. An atom is almost pure energy. It consists of a nucleus, surrounded by negatively charged electrons, grouped in certain patterns, according to the kind of substance which they form. Break down the nucleus, which on first examination seems to be massed substance, and it resolves itself into a combination of protons and neutrons—simply more electrical charges which have no material substance of themselves at all, until they are grouped together in certain combinations. The protons are positive electrical charges; the neutrons are neutral; the electrons which surround the nucleus are negative. An atom, then, is simply a number of electrical charges, one kind forming the nucleus; another kind supplying the electrons which surround the nucleus. Which came first, the electricity or the substance? One noted scientist has answered the question something like this: electricity can exist apart from matter, but matter cannot exist apart from electricity.

The most powerful forces known to man are the forces which hold an atomic nucleus together. One scientist who lectured recently on a network symphony program said that the nuclear energy contained in one ounce of matter is equivalent to the entire output of the Boulder Dam power plant for one month! Such is the power, the force, the energy required every moment simply to hold the stuff of creation together!

With the single exception of uranium, no atomic nucleus has ever been completely split, so powerful are the forces holding the atom together. It is now routine to modify or transform one kind of nucleus into a nuclear atom of some other substance, or into a heavier atom of the same substance, by bombarding it with other protons, some of which join the protons of the nucleus under fire, causing rearrangement of the surrounding electrons. This is called "splitting the atom." But in the case of uranium, the nucleus is actually split, emitting protons which in turn bombard and split other nuclei, which split and continue the process. This is the basic principle of the atom bomb—a releasing of the tremendous energy of the atomic nucleus.

Science is now agreed that the ultimate source of all things in the universe—the ultimate reality—is spirit—force—energy—electricity—call it by whatever name you will. All matter is simply an emanation of this all-embracing, all-inclusive spirit, or force or energy, which the religious man and the believer call God. Since this energy or force or spirit obviously manifests plan and intelligence and purpose, it must have personality; God is a person. But since his Spirit is everywhere, and is the power by which all things are created, the force which holds all creation together, and which keeps it functioning in harmony, it is literally true, as Paul said, that "in him we live and move and have our being."

ONCE WE UNDERSTAND the modern scientific viewpoint, that matter is the product of energy, the riddle of where God got the material out of which to create the world is easily resolved. He took of the power, or energy, or spirit which was a part of his own being, arranged that force in proper order in atoms, with their electrons, protons, and neutrons of energy, and the result was material substance out of which the sun, the moon, the stars, the planets, and all the creations visible and invisible were made. The statement that to God all things are spiritual, becomes understandable, for all material things are the products of spirit, and are held together and sustained by spirit. In a very literal sense, the world was made not only by him, but of him. As Paul says in I Corinthians 8: "But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." The same idea is expressed in Hebrews 11: 3: "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." And the Psalmist says, (104: 30) "Thou sendest forth thy Spirit; they are created; and thou renewest the face of the earth."

Yes, the work of creation still goes on. God perpetually renews the face of the earth, through a perpetual stream of cosmic, or creative rays, which create new atoms and new energy. Then surely a world such as this, which is made by God and of God is not a world in which to fear; but a world of purpose and love and meaning, which wills good to those who obey its laws and trust in its Creator.

You will find it true that the things that are eagerly followed and admired are of no use to them who have gained them; while they who have not yet gained them imagine that, if they are acquired, everything will come along with them.—Epictetus.

Isolated, but not Idle

I have been a reader of the Herald for a number of years, and isolated from church privileges, I've become a Herald enthusiast. I feel that I have something to be enthused about. The Herald is a great light shining to a people who are walking in darkness. Its many inspiring articles have been an inspiration to me. It is a light that shineth in the world and the world perceiveth it not.

President Truman, in his address before a crowd of 25,000 at the dedication of the $115,000,000 T. V. A. dam at Gilbertsville, Kentucky, October 10, 1945, envisioning America on the brink of a great age, called for everybody to get into harness and push and pull until it comes about.

"We can't," he continued, "do it tomorrow, we can't do it next month, we probably can't do it next year. It's going to take some time for us to realize just exactly what we have and what we will do with it."

Dear Saints, is that the case with us? Is it going to take sometime for us yet to realize just exactly what we have and what we will do with it?

President Franklin D. Roosevelt, August 1, 1942, speaking at the dedication of the Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Maryland, in observance of the 100th anniversary of the Naval Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, said, "Today, we dedicate the American Nation to the removal from the earth of the injustices and inequalities which breed wars and create such inhuman tyrants as the German, Italian, and Japanese war leaders."

Now Mr. Roosevelt did not realize that right here in the geographical center of the United States of America (so dedicated) is the blueprint of a rightly organized economic society designed for the very purpose to the removal from the earth of the injustices and inequalities which breed war and create inhuman tyrants. It is a religious enterprise. It is religion's answer to the world problem. Do we realize just exactly what we have, and the extent of our mission?

Mr. Roosevelt did not realize that in July, 1831, this center place which is the land of Missouri was divinely appointed and consecrated as the place for the building of the city of Zion, the seat of the Restoration Movement, a religious enterprise designed to give the world an answer to its problem (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1).

Do we realize just exactly what we have and what we will do with it? Now, the blueprint of this plan has been (and is now) going out by radio, and has been (and is now) being published in the Herald and going into all parts of the land. It finds its way up here in the Redwood Empire in the northern part of California. I get extra copies of these papers and distribute them (along with other material) around where I think they will do the most good with the hopes that the seed of truth may fall upon good ground and in time bring forth fruit. In this manner I am holding up the light in this part of the field, in the hopes that others may be attracted and come into the light.

May we come to realize just exactly what we have and resolve to do something with it. This is the prayer of a humble servant in isolation.

Needlecraft

The Needlecraft Department of the church desires to express thanks and appreciation for the splendid co-operation of groups and individuals who made possible our good success in the needlework sale during the late General Conference. All will be pleased to know that $1200.00 has been turned over to the Bishop for our great cause. Individual acknowledgments of donations, received are being sent out as rapidly as possible—it will take some time to complete the list.

Thanks again to one and all for their kind help.

A NEW WORLD

By CHET WELDON

For Those Who Dream, Dare, and Plan

Any group that desires success in its program must fulfill two basic requirements. First, it must meet a specific need in society. Second, it must have a definite program that fulfills and is adequate to that need. An over-simplified example would be the classical joke of trying to sell refrigerators to the Eskimos. No matter what kind of salesmanship program one has, selling refrigerators to Eskimos is doomed to failure from the start because it does not meet an existing need in the Eskimo society. If that need in this particular instance should exist, there still would remain the tasks of analyzing the need and formulating a program that would be adequate in fulfilling the need.

What is the need in society today and how do we as a church propose to respond to that need? We propose to demonstrate to the world a new collective way of life (Zion). We have a scriptural basis for such a claim.

Ever since the industrial revolution and the expansion of science, institutions in society have been evolving at an ever rapid tempo, but at the same time other institutions have been lagging—especially religion. Instead of accepting new truths and new ideas, religion has taken the defensive and only acknowledges truth when the evidence is overwhelming. At no point has religion assumed leadership in the basic affairs of man today; it is everywhere on the defensive. The main setback to religion's influence has been the withering away among people of the fear of death and an increasing conviction on the part of society that religion, as such, does not hold the power of life or death of the soul in the next world. Religion's hold on society in the past has been based largely on fear.

We are witnessing today the need for the evolution of religious institutions to a sounder foundation. It seems quite obvious that religious institutions have lost contact with the true need of society, and other institutions have moved in to fill this vacuum. The world has turned to Fascistic, Communistic, and Socialistic doctrines as its creeds for a better way of life. There are all doctrines of collective action. It is also interesting to note that the followers of these philosophies exhibit the same zeal and devotion that is evoked from adherence to religious causes. It seems quite obvious that society has lost faith in individual righteousness as an instrument for social change or a better group way of life.

Christ said, "I am come that ye may have life and have it more abundantly." Society realizes that a more abundant life rests not in an individualistic philosophy but in a collective philosophy. Notwithstanding these facts, religious institutions keep right on advocating individual righteousness as the panacea for combating evil in the world; and, incidentally, they go right on consolidating because of loss of membership. If I seem to have taken a negative approach to religion, it is only because I wish to make a contrast with what I consider the real function of religion to be in our society.

The road to a more abundant life lies in collective action. I firmly believe that it is the function of religion to initiate and guide society in collective righteousness.

We, as a movement, would be classed perhaps as a school of Utopian Christian socialists. We take as our major premise that the function of religion is to sponsor social reform and experimentation. This we do in the faith that society will imitate a demonstration which shows the effectiveness of a certain type of social organization. This process of exemplification and imitation takes direct issue with most socialistic schools in that the other socialistic schools insist that the state should be the unit of social experimentation. The great bulk of socialists would begin their reorganization of society on a national scale. We insist that society should be integrated from the smallest unit up, thus avoiding major dislocation.

An example of experimentation and imitation may be cited in society today. The city manager type of city government was demonstrated by one city to be practical and, hence, was copied by others.

Another feature of a religious-sponsored communal experiment is that it can be directed and subsidized without personal loss to the participants in case of economic failure. Of all the institutions existing in our society today, religion is the only one capable of conducting community experimentation. Industrial concerns, labor organizations, government agencies, educational institutions, all these are wedded too inflexibly to certain dogmatic principles to sponsor communal experimentation. The greatest single factor that limits social scientists is their inability to conduct controlled experiments involving any number of people. A plan of social action acceptable to the labor segment of the laity would be opposed by the employer segment and vice versa. It may even be conceded that certain religious institutions are too heterogeneously composed to arrive at a unified plan of social action.

We, as a church, are quite fortunate in this respect; not only is our membership homogeneous, that is, for the most part from the same social strata of society, but we also have a common heritage in believing that our mission as a church is to establish the kingdom of God—Zion, on earth. No other religious institutions have that belief, but that does not mean they couldn't adopt it and attempt leadership in this field. This missionary concept is ingrained into the social consciousness of our church members, thus giving moral fabric upon which to fasten social righteousness.

A quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants shows scriptural basis for this trend of thought: "the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws," section 102:9. This seems to indicate that Zion shall demonstrate laws—that is, patterns of social behavior—which other nations will accept and copy.

In section 138, paragraph 3 of the Doctrine and Covenants we find this counsel. "Let the church again be admonished that the task of establishing Zion presses heavily upon us. Barriers and hindrances to the achievement of this goal should be removed as speedily as possible and practicable." This was given in 1940. Frederick Smith seemed to be indicating the factor of time. Where there exists a great social need in society, some philosophy will rush into the vacuum, attempting to meet that need.

The Prophet Isaiah says, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it; and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." (Isaiah 2: 2, 3.) Mountain, in this sense, connotes government. Zion will teach other peoples the evolving pattern for group righteousness. Zion will be a living laboratory in right human relationships where the peoples of the world may come and learn to apply the

The Trouble-Shooter

Why Pray?

QUESTION: If God always does what is best for the well-being of his people, and what will promote the furtherance of his divine plan—why pray?

ANSWER: —By Apostle A. Oakman

God always does the best he can for the well-being of everyone of his creatures, just as I endeavor to do the very best I can for my own son. Besides creating us living souls, he has done the best he can, and given to us our agency. That was the best he knew how to do. But what does that mean? It means that (1) every rational being has the power to say "yes" and "no" to divine mandates, and (2) that ultimately God takes responsibility for all that we do. Thus while he is not personally the doer of all that is done, eventually he comes into his own, and works his divine purpose in spite of the sin of his creatures.

Since we are creatures, and limited, not knowing what the best is that God has for us, we must of necessity "pray" him that his will may be made known. Prayer is not a means of changing God. It is a means of aligning our natures with his. A prayer meeting is not an organized "gimme" raid on God's bounty. It is a means of enrichment, of communion. Because we have said "no" to him so many times and gone our own way, the best he knows to do for us is to leave us to ourselves; and, while surrounding us with every inducement to come back to him, he does not force us. Imagine a son who never spoke to his father! Imagine a father who did not speak with his son! As well imagine the Christian life without prayer.

The question contains a hidden fallacy. God always does "the best he can" for us. He might well do more, were we to seek him oftener.

BULLETIN BOARD

Council Bluffs Anniversary Services

The eighty-fifth anniversary of the organization of Council Bluffs Branch will be observed with an all-day meeting on Sunday, May 18. President Israel A. Smith is to be the speaker. This observance will be in the form of a home-coming. An invitation is extended to all former pastors and members of the branch as well as any others who may wish to attend. Services will be held at 9:45 and 11 a.m., 2:30 and 8 p.m. A basket dinner will be served at noon.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. Sally Cunningham, 786 East Brooks Street, Galesburg, Illinois, requests prayers for her daughter, Mrs. Gladys Nelson of Galesburg, who is suffering with high blood pressure and a heart ailment, and her son, Keith Cunningham of Independence, Missouri, who has recently undergone two major operations.

C. N. Chiles, Climbing Hill, Iowa, requests prayers for his wife, Hattie, who is suffering with rheumatism. She has been afflicted for seven years.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. S. B. Malone of McLeon, Texas, who is suffering with a nerve disease. She has been healed through prayer before and believes she can be again.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Maggie Penrod, 851 Washington Avenue, Chillicothe, Ohio, and her daughter that they may be healed of the respiratory ailment with which they are suffering.

The Saints are asked to remember Mrs. Don Stafford of Kansas City, Missouri, who has been afflicted for thirteen years with a nerve ailment. Her only hope of cure and chance for a normal life is through divine healing.

Emma Judas requests prayers for Emil R. Judas, Courtright, Ontario, who has suffered eight strokes in the past two years and is seriously ill.

Mrs. Delphia A. Boley, Doylestown, Ohio, asks prayers for herself and her husband, Melvin, who is blind and has been bedfast for the past ten months. Mrs. Boley needs additional strength to carry the burden that is hers.

Benito U. Maliwat, 1014 West Linden, Independence, Missouri, asks the continued prayers of the Saints that his hand will be healed.

Mrs. William Watson, 1033 West Maple, Independence, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints that her health might be restored.

Eighty-nine-year-old Lizzie Stone, 521 West C Street, Wellston, Ohio, asks an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Mrs. Alice Powell, Box 28, Folsom, New Mexico, asks to be remembered in the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed, if it is God's will, of a serious ailment.

Mrs. J. J. Goff, 213 North Sixth Street, Nebraska City, Nebraska, requests prayers for her husband that his sight may be restored and for herself that she may regain her health.

Mrs. Ola Bullock, Route 1, Haskell, Oklahoma, a nonmember, asks the prayers of the Saints for her family and a fourteen-year-old neighbor boy who is ill.

DEATHS

IVES.—Angeline, daughter of Zenas, Jr. and Grace Gurley, was born near Lamoni, Iowa, on December 25, 1872, and died November 25, 1946, of pneumonia in Toledo, Ohio. For a number of years she did social welfare work and was superintendent of the Girls' Industrial School in Chillicothe, Missouri, after which she supervised the beach house of the Women's Protective Association in Toledo. Following her retirement from this position, she and her husband ran an antique shop in Nauvoo, Illinois. She did assist during an emergency last summer at the beach house, but found her strength inadequate to continue the work.

She is survived by her husband, Frank C. Ives; a daughter, Mrs. Lenon Fitzell of Denver, Colorado; two grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. He came to America in 1926, making his home in Stockton, Illinois. In 1929, he enlisted in the United States Army and was sent to Ft. Shafter in Hawaii. While in Hawaii, he met Edith Wong and was married to her on September 5, 1931. In June, 1946, they came to the States and made their home in Battlefield, Missouri. Mr. Kiefer was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church on December 23, 1930, at Honolulu by Gilbert J. Waller and R. L. Macrae. On July 9, 1933, he was ordained a priest and on June 18, 1939, an elder. While in Hawaii, he organized two Boy Scout troops and was a Scout commissioner. He served as a precinct warden during the war.

He is survived by his wife, Edith, and two sons, Jared John and Jacob Winston, all of Battlefield. Funeral services were conducted by Elder D. J. Williams at the Carson Chapel in Independence on April 16. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

News Briefs

Central Missouri Stake

President, Ward A. Hougas

A total of 574 persons attended the spring conference held in Warrensburg. Dr. Roy Cheville was guest speaker and conducted classes in preparation for General Conference. At the Saturday business meeting, twenty-two recommendations for ordinations were approved. Most of the men called are in their late teens or twenties. Special activities for the juniors were conducted throughout the conference.

The second series of quarterly meetings for members of the priesthood and their wives has been completed. Five separate meetings were held in the stake so that all could attend. At the first series in January, Apostle C. G. Mesley was the speaker. At the last series, Stake President Ward Hougas spoke. The instruction period was followed by a social hour with the last feature of the evening being a fifteen-minute worship period.

The following themes have been selected for the year's program: "Priesthood—What It Means to the Family," "Stake Activities," "Relating Priesthood to the Program," and "Our Financial Obligations."

Lee's Summit, Missouri

Pastor, Frank C. Sherwood

Apostle C. G. Mesley met several times with members of the priesthood and their wives and was guest speaker at the January 12 service. Other visiting speakers during January and February were Otho Clark, Howard Cook, Ward A. Hougas, and Orville Hulmes.

Mrs. Edna Walsh and Gerald Adams were baptized January 19 by Elder Darwin Bozarth.

Twenty-one young people from Lee's Summit attended the Zion's League meeting at Holden on January 25 and 26.

Leubin Loveland, a member of the Lee's Summit congregation, testifies that he has been healed of a serious illness through administration and the prayers and fasting of the Saints.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Reinking celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on February 9; on February 26, Mr. Reinking passed away. Another member, Mrs. Mary Mengel, died January 31. Sympathy is extended to the families of Mr. Reinking and Mrs. Mengel.

Holden, Missouri

Pastor, Robert P. Dillon

Several from Holden attended the young adults' conference held at Knob Noster in February. The Latter Day Saints and members of the five protestant churches observed the World Day of Prayer.

Missionary Loyd Adams preceded his series of meetings in early March with two weeks of visiting. He also addressed the high school assembly during his stay in Holden.

The women hold meetings twice monthly. Recent themes have been "Characteristics of Greatness," "Giving and Loving," "Value of Effort," and "A Rebirth."

The Stake High Council met in Holden on March 4.

Sharon, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Jackson, was blessed recently. Lester Sims is again attending services after his return from Korea where he was stationed with the Army. Mr. and Mrs. George Bullard are also additions to the congregation.

—Lola Johnson, reporter.

Marshall, Missouri

Pastor, Roe B. Vincent

The women met at the home of Mary Banks on February 6 to quilt. On branch night, February 7, a program was presented by the Blue Birds; the evening ended with a Bible quiz and refreshments, which were also served by the Blue Birds.

A group of young adults attended the rally held at Knob Noster on February 9. On the same evening, members of the Zion's League were in charge of the local service. Talks were given on the famous men of the church and nation. Fifteen Leaguers are studying Overviews of the Book of Mormon for credit; Mary Banks is teacher. League Leader Byrle Wilson was given a surprise party on her birthday by the young people. The Leaguers held a valentine party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Banlas, Jr.

Stake President Ward Hougas was the 11 o'clock speaker on Sunday, February 23. A basket dinner was served at noon.

Ora Hanson of Sedalia is a welcome addition to the group. She is assisting in the music department.

—Bernice Tyree, reporter.

St. Louis, Missouri

Pastor, Frank McDonald

Orban J. Hatch, Janet Fox, Janet Hands, Ronald Eilers, Jerry Norvell, William Tarrant, Linzie Braddy, and Virgil Noakes have been baptized since the first of the year, and Phyllis Rae Gordon and Sharon Lynn Mantle have been blessed. Evangelist R. V. Hopkins was present for a week in February and gave forty patriarchal blessings; he was the speaker on Sunday, February 16.

The women meet twice a month; they are studying Edward's God, Our Help under the leadership of Pastor McDonald. The young adults have selected Smith's Restoration as a study course for their Sunday morning class. They also meet twice a month for social activity; Charles Johnson is leader.

Pastor Frank McDonald has been the speaker at the Sunday evening services. The Leaguers hold a separate meeting at the same hour. In addition to their local activities, they are assisting in district projects, one of which is the printing of a district League paper. They are planning a trip for this summer to historically famous places in Missouri and Illinois.

Sixty-three persons in addition to the choir participated in the tableau given on April 4 depicting scenes from the life of Christ. Mathel Archibald directed the tableaux, and Frances Neff was in charge of music. Colored pictures were taken of each of the ten scenes at dress rehearsal.

Attendance at prayer service now averages over 100 each week.

—Ruth Cunningham, reporter.

Tacoma, Washington

Pastor, Ray Sowers

"Go Ye and Teach" was the theme of the March 2 Communion service; it was also used at various other services throughout the month.

Bishop Monte E. Lasater was the speaker on Sunday, March 16. On March 4, the branch board of trustees notified the congregation that a church desirably located and suited to the needs of the group was for sale. After the members voted to buy the church, Bishop Lasater investigated the matter and approved the purchase. Approval was also obtained from the Presiding Bishopric and enough money was raised in cash and pledges to make the down payment. The first service in the new church was held on Easter Sunday.

The Marietta Club contributed $30.20 in March to the church fund and purchased flannelgraph pictures of fifty-two events in the life of Christ to be used in the children's department. The women are now studying the pamphlet, Woman's Part in Evangelism.

The Leaguers met on March 28 at the home of Betty Stewart to entertain the winners of a three-month contest sponsored by the League. Barton Sallander was leader of the winning group. The young people have raised nearly $50 for the church fund.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Pastor, N. V. Morrison

Elder Will Cornish of Senlac, Saskatchewan, was present in late January to minister to the Vancouver Saints. On February 3, eight-year-old Joey Embleton was baptized in the New Westminster font by Pastor Norman Morrison. He was confirmed in the home church by Elders Calvin Taylor and Edwin Spargo. Following this ordinance, Eric Burton, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Andrews, was blessed by Elders Will Cornish and Norman Morrison.

Members of the priesthood have been meeting for the past two months following the suggestions in the Pastor's Manual. Much good has come of the priesthood visits with attendance at all services increasing. The use of visual aid materials has been introduced in junior church. Charles Stanbridge, junior pastor, is assisted by his wife, Belle, his daughter, Donna, and Elder Edwin Spargo.

The Vancouver Zion's League won the annual challenge cup this year in the British Columbia District drama festival. The winning play was "A Gift Twice Given"; Dorothea Spargo was the director. The Leaguers are studying the pamphlet, Does It Make Any Difference?

A farewell party was held recently for the Whites who are returning to their home in Ribstone, Alberta.

Under the direction of Edwin Spargo, the library and bookstore are flourishing.

The Daughters of Zion are assisting the local temperance workers in an effort to control the sale of liquor.

Priest Chester Taylor, who is attending the University of British Columbia, has been awarded membership in the Literary and Scientific Honorary Society. In spite of his work at the university, Brother Taylor attends services regularly.

Recent guest speakers have been George Millar, pastor of the New Westminster Church, and Apostle D. T. Williams who showed slides of his Hawaiian visit.

—Bert Embleton, reporter.

Independence, Missouri

Sugar Creek Congregation

Pastor, Ephriam Brown

Elder A. Blakeslee Smith has been the Sunday evening speaker for five successive weeks. Recent baptisms include those of Noel Rogers and Randolph Brown. Mr. and Mrs. Aldrich, formerly of Houston, Texas, are making their home in Independence and attending Sugar Creek Church. The Boehams, in whose home the mission was begun, have returned after an absence of fifteen years. The young people are active in the work of the church, holding prayer services, fellowships, and classes in stewardship under the direction of Bishop Walter Johnson. The latest social activity was a valentine party at the home of Mable Lonzo.

Southwestern Texas District

The 1947 Southwestern Texas District Conference was held at First Church in San Antonio on February 15. Rosecoe Davey presided over the conference, assisted by District President Theodore Dorow.

Reports from all officers, including those of each priesthood member were read. It was voted that a new boundary line for the Southwestern Texas District be established. This one includes San Antonio, Bandera, Austin, Corpus Christi, and the Rio Grande Valley. The names of Joe Berry and Fred Galbreath were presented for ordination to the office of priest and Albert Holder to the office of deacon. All were approved.

Officers for the coming year are as follows: J. E. Wilder, district president; Theodore Dorow and H. E. Winegar, counselors; Mrs. Carl Dorow, secretary-treasurer; Wayne Jackel, director of religious education; Ella Wheeler, women's leader; Carl Wheeler, Jr., young people's supervisor; Emma Jackson, director of music; and H. E. Winegar, nonresident pastor. Floyd Jett was sustained as bishop's agent. Delegates to General Conference were also elected.

On Saturday evening, J. E. Wilder showed pictures he had taken at the youth retreat in Bandera last September. A song fest preceded this service.

Sunday began with an 8:45 devotional, which was followed by church school classes. Missionary J. Charles May taught the adult class. At 11 o'clock, Brother Davey addressed the conference. A basket dinner was served at noon. Separate meetings were held by members of the priesthood and women's department at 1:30 p.m. An ordination service preceded the evening worship hour.

Sherwood, Oregon

Pastor, R. E. Chapman

The women, under the direction of Mrs. Bessie Shultz, meet bi-weekly at the church for a period of worship, a potluck lunch, and handwork projects. Money earned by the group is applied to the building fund. The Zion's League, with Mrs. Rowena Shultz as president and Joyce Adamson, vice-president, holds regular meetings for study, recreation, and group activities. On March 30, the Leaguers sponsored a dinner at the church for all members of the congregation. They presented a program following the dinner.

Missionary Arthur Gibbs, recently returned from Hawaii, conducted a series of missionary services at the Sherwood Church from March 9 to 19 inclusive. The sermons were preceded by a song service and the showing of Kodachrome slides of the islands. He also used chalk-talks, story-o-graphs, and slides to illustrate his lectures.

Patsy Ann Wilson, Wilsonville, Oregon; William Buckbee, Portland; and Mrs. D. A. Shultz, Tigard, were baptized at First Church at the close of the series. Kenneth Robert, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Buckbee; Darwin Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Owrey; and Donna May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Shultz, were blessed by Elders Clark Livingston, R. E. Chapman, and Arthur Gibbs on the same day.

A sunrise service, which was to have been held on Easter Sunday morning on the hill overlooking Sherwood, was canceled because of rain. Instead, a community service was held at the Friends' Church at 6 o'clock. At the church school worship service, Priest Vincent Shultz talked on "The Meaning of Easter." The Communion service was arranged by Pastor R. E. Chapman. Before a large white cross with a background of flowers and ferns, Dorothy Ballard presented in pantomime, "Rock of Ages," which was sung by Beverly Murdock. At the evening service, Pastor Chapman narrated the Easter story as he showed slides of the Resurrection. Music was furnished by a girls' trio.

Bradner, Ohio

Pastor, W. R. Wirebaugh

Branch officers are W. R. Wirebaugh, pastor; William Smith and Brandon Smith, counselors; Mary French, clerk and auditor; Cleo Smith, solicitor; William Smith, treasurer; Hazel Smith, director of music and publicity agent; Idella Todd, auditor; Milo Smith, church school director; Ruth Grahl, adult supervisor; Idella Rojeuski, young people's supervisor; Drusilla Estep, children's supervisor; and Milford Smith, secretary. Officers in the women's department are Mary French, president; Idella Todd, vice-president; Maude Smith, secretary and friendly visitor; Mae Smith, treasurer; Hazel Smith, reporter; Glada Wirebaugh and Nellie Smith, flower committee; and Ruth Grahl, program chairman. Officers of the fellowship class are Doras Crawford, president; Oria Smith, vice-president; and Glada Wirebaugh, secretary-treasurer. This group meets once each month for a study class.

On December 7, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Grahl invited the young people to their home for a 6 o'clock dinner. Present on this occasion were District President and Mrs. Wadsworth of Oak Harbor, and Pastor and Mrs. Wirebaugh. A Christmas program was presented on December 22. The Pollyannas held their Christmas party on December 24; mystery sisters were revealed at this time and names drawn for the coming year. On January 28, many of the Bradner women motored to Oak Harbor to attend the district women's institute.

A supper, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Doras Crawford, was sponsored by the adult class on the evening of February 28. Mr. Crawford is president of the class.

On March 1 and 2, several members attended the district conference at St. Marys. Apostles E. J. Gleazer and D. Blair Jensen were in charge.

—Hazel Smith, reporter.

Coalville, Iowa

Kathleen Jo, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gernhart, was blessed Sunday, December 15, by Elders F. H. Higgins and Harold E. Mann.

A Christmas program was presented on Sunday evening, December 22, to a large crowd. Treats were distributed at the close of the program.

Bishop Stephen Robinson was the morning speaker on Sunday, December 12. No services were held on January 19 so that local members could attend the financial observance meeting in Des Moines. Due to inclement weather and impassable roads, no services were held the first two Sundays in February.

Seventy E. Y. Hunker and Missionary John Conway conducted a series of services from February 16 to March 2. Despite the weather, attendance was good, and three new members were converted. The baptismal service was held in the Y. M. C. A. building in Fort Dodge on March 2, Brother Hunker officiating. The confirmation service was held at the church in the evening.

—Donna Jean Brooks, reporter.

Sioux City, Iowa

Pastor, Cecil Burnett

Willis W. Moore was baptized by Priest Charles Gunlock on January 5, and was confirmed the following Sunday by Elders Raymond Smith and Arthur Thompson.

Recent topics for study in the women's department have been "The Dawning of the Restoration," "The Restoration of the Priesthood," "The Church Restored," "Typical Beliefs Concerning God and Christ," "Our Scripture: The Three Books," and "Typical Beliefs Concerning America."

On February 13, the women held a valentine luncheon in the lower auditorium of the church, after which a program was presented.

Kathleen Gernhart and Daniel Thompson, midyear graduates, were honored by being two of the four speakers selected from the student body for the commencement exercises at East High School. Both are planning to attend Graceland next year.

Members of the priesthood have been holding a weekly study class on Monday evenings. They and their wives enjoyed a dinner in the lower auditorium of the church on March 4. After the dinner, a joint discussion was held on how to improve the branch. Hereafter, the women will meet the first Monday in every month for their own study period.

L. D. Weldon was guest speaker on March 11; in the afternoon, he met with the young people. Other recent speakers have been George Vandel, Raymond Smith, Charles Smith, Clem Evans, Larry Jones, Herbert Floyd, and Cecil Burnett.

—Velma Floyd, reporter.

Alton, Texas

A missionary project of the church school division has been the distributing of quarterlies to isolated Saints within a ninety-mile radius of Alton. The church radio program is also printed regularly in the local newspaper.

Three families, the Y. A. Knutsons, S. B. Malones, and A. R. Malones, have moved to Alton from McLain, Texas. There are now eight families in Alton and several nonresident members attending services. Officers for the group are: Y. A. Knutson, leader; Raymond Carson, church school director; R. L. Henson, solicitor; and Mrs. R. L. Henson, publicity agent.

Sunday, March 30, was observed as a day of fasting. Communion was served at 11 o'clock by S. B. Malone, Jr., of McLain.

Recent speakers have been District President Ralph F. Wilt, Missionary Glen Johnson, W. C. Haden, L. A. Johnson, and I. C. Schrier.

—Mrs. R. L. Henson, reporter.

Regina, Saskatchewan

Pastor, J. W. Mountenay

During the winter months, District Missionary James Menzies and Elder James Cornish have visited Regina and ministered to the Saints. Elder Guy Van Eaton of Shellbrook also worshiped in Regina while attending the legislative assembly.

The women, under the leadership of Sister Mountenay, hold regular meetings in the homes. Members of the Zion's League meet each Sunday evening following the regular service. Recent social events have been held at the Taylor and Carson homes. A small charge was made on these occasions to augment the building fund.

Regina Saints are handicapped by not having a regular place to meet. Sunday services are held in the Knights of Pythian Hall; all other meetings must be held in the homes.

1947	4,446

The attached schedule shows the geographical distribution of the registrants at the Conference, according to their home addresses, and evidences a wide support for this Conference from all parts of the country. We call special attention to the number who are here from the British Isles for the first time since the beginning of World War Two.

Respectfully yours,

THE REGISTRATION COMMITTEE,

C. L. OLSON,
A. B. TAYLOR,
LLOYD L. BLAND.

President Garver stated unless there be objections, the Presidency will convey the appreciation and thanks of the Conference to those who have so diligently labored for its success, and it was so ordered.

The chair recognized President Israel A. Smith who read, as follows, resolutions of appreciation to Brother John W. Rushton, and moved its adoption with the support of Apostle P. M. Hanson.

April 13, 1947

To the General Conference,
Greeting:

We, your committee appointed to prepare resolutions of respect concerning Elder John W. Rushton, beg leave to report the following:

To Elder John W. Rushton:

The members and ministry of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints wholeheartedly desire to record their appreciation of the excellent and sustained ministry you have rendered for the cause of Christ. From the time you as a young man responded to divine leadings, your exceptional gifts and abilities were clearly manifest. The vigor, quiet dignity, and ripened culture, inseparable from the magnifying of your calling, combined with your gracious personality, have endeared you to the whole church. You are universally loved.

Since you were ordained an apostle in 1902, you have supervised missions of the church in the United States, Canada, British Isles, Germany, Holland, Scandinavia, Society Islands, New Zealand, and Australia. You have exerted an ever-widening circle of influence from 1902, when you came from England, your homeland, to the United States, now the land of your adoption. You have ministered in kindness and with distinction, and all over the church world you have countless friends, friends who are proud to own you and who acknowledge and enjoy with gratitude your splendid gifts of oratory, wisdom, and knowledge.

In days of trouble and adversity, you stood firm, believing in freedom, in the dignity of human personality, in democracy, with faith that the eternal forces are ever on the side of right, and faith in the gospel to save to the uttermost those who put their trust in Christ. Always you have been the Christian gentleman. Always quick to see the good in others and slow to give recognition to their faults.

The light of prophecy has graced your soul, and the Lord has been pleased to utilize your rare gift of speech and testimony in strengthening and edifying the body of Christ. In the councils of the church, your breadth of mind and depth of understanding and powers of analysis have been of inestimable value to your brethren.

You now come to the eventide of your experience. The same voice of inspiration which revealed your apostolic calling in 1902 has acknowledged your faithful stewardship and has been heard in commendation and praise. We rejoice with you in your fine achievement. You belong to us, and we wish for you a long life yet of ministry and usefulness.

Nor do we fail to remember the gracious lady who has shared with you the hopes, the anxieties, and the vicissitudes of your many labors. She, together with your excellent family, shares the glory and satisfaction which is yours. May you both be richly blessed in health and happiness.

Respectfully submitted this 13th day of April, 1947.

I. A. SMITH,
PAUL M. HANSON,
G. L. DELAPP,
E. Y. HUNKER,
WARD A. HOUGAS,
Committee.

The resolutions were adopted by a standing vote, the courtesy of voting having been extended by the chair to the entire assembly.

Elder G. T. Griffiths spoke in eulogy of Brother Rushton.

Brother Rushton took the tribune and feelingly expressed his appreciation of the action. President Garver stated "we shall always cherish his memory and carry in our hearts the results and benefits of his fine ministry."

The chair suggested that we now proceed with the sustaining of quorums, officers, and departments of the church, and recommended that such motion cover the entire group, and consideration and vote be taken separately.

It was moved by Elders R. A. Cheville and L. S. Wight that we sustain the quorums, officers, and departments of the church.

Apostle Hanson put the question of sustaining the First Presidency, which prevailed unanimously.

The following were then sustained by vote of the Conference:

QUORUMS AND OFFICERS TO BE SUSTAINED

The chairman recognized President Israel A. Smith who addressed the assembly as follows:

Brother Chairman, and Members of the Conference:

I could preside over your deliberations in business session when fur might be flying and I might be thrown into a parliamentary tangle with more equanimity than when I attempt to do what I am about to try at this moment. I realize that I have succeeded some very worthy and very able men; and what I present I trust and pray will be in the spirit of what we have already witnessed and what was given earlier in the Conference to the body.

My father said that he did not believe that there ever would come another apostasy or schism in the church such as was witnessed after the martyrdom; but he did believe that danger to the church in the years to come would result from false brethren. And so I would stress the idea of extending faith and confidence and trust to each other between the members of our councils and between the councils and quorums of the church, believing confidently that if the priesthood of the church will be united and present a solid front, there is no question but the membership of the church will sustain them. Now we can give our respect and deference to one another and yet not fully sustain each other. I think it is difficult to sustain each other without praying for each other, for our officers and associates and those who minister in the councils and quorums of the church.

I rejoice in the good fellowship which is in evidence and which has been in evidence during the Conference and even during the last year. I do not know how many years the Lord will permit me to occupy. That has not been vouchsafed to me. But I have felt at times and have given expression to the thought that regardless of what other contribution I might make, if I could be a factor in perpetuating the present era of good feeling and brotherhood and fellowship in the church, that would be no mean accomplishment.

The ministry go hence with our blessing, and I would only add this brief counsel or advice: that they study the books of the church and especially the Doctrine and Covenants with respect to the things which they should preach and which they should teach and which they should promote among the peoples of the world; and if they go out and continue to occupy in the spirit of this Conference, I am sure their labors will be crowned with success unparalleled in recent years.

To the standing ministry: they are the shepherds of the flock. I am often reminded, when I think of a shepherd, that the symbol of the shepherd is the shepherd's crook—not a whip. Christ said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." And that is the spirit with which our pastors and our standing ministry should be endowed. The Master said that his sheep heard his voice and followed him. He did not drive them, and we were cautioned by him who occupied as the first president of the church never to exercise our priesthood in any arbitrary spirit or in any spirit of compulsion, and he warned that if we did so, it would be "good-by" to our priesthood. The shepherd's crook is used only for kindly restraint to recover the wandering sheep.

I extend to all of you and through you to the entire membership of the church my own personal thanks and the thanks and congratulations of the First Presidency for the way in which you have responded to our labors. It surely has been heartening to sense the support which you have given. The support which you have given to the administration in this Conference has to us been quite marvelous, and when one brother suggested the delegates didn't seem to be exercising very much of their rights, but supported everything that was presented, I remarked to my colleagues that I thought it evidenced your confidence in the administrative councils of the church. I trust that we and the other leading quorums of the church and the Joint Council will ever be worthy of your confidence.

Forty-two years ago my father stood before the General Conference on a Sunday afternoon, the closing day of the Conference, and made some remarks. From them I cull this, as it were, a voice from the past. I think it is peculiarly fitting, and I should like to present it to you and to adopt the counsel therein expressed as my own:

"I congratulate you, brethren, all of you, of every degree of the priesthood, every office in the priesthood, in the two priesthoods, for the—I was going to say magnificent effort that you have made, for the good record. I congratulate you upon the effort you have made to keep your ranks clean, and suggest that a proper oversight of your membership in the different quorums continue to this end. But be careful that you do not allow mistrust, suspicion, unjust aspersion, to either grow up in your heart or spring out from your lips. To my thinking it is altogether improper. And while we are authorized to take notice of diversions from right ways, we are not authorized to listen to the whisperings of unjust suspicion, and to repeat those whisperings where the influence of the man who is in the field, or any responsible position, is injured in his work. We cannot do that. Those who are sensitive feel this. Honorable men feel it. Useful men feel it. And notwithstanding they may put on a bold front, keeping a stout heart, it must sooner or later tell upon the individuality, and he will get weary, weary in spirit. Now we cannot afford to do that in my judgment.

"I am truly pleased with the degree of unanimity, as a whole, in which we have conducted the business which has been entrusted to this conference. It has been very peculiarly trying to some of us, and yet I believe we have preserved the love of God in our hearts."

I can adopt these sentiments expressed as my own today; and to you all—the priesthood, delegates, and members who are here, as a representative of the first presiding quorum of the church, I give you my benediction and blessing.

The chair announced the reading of appointments by the secretary, and requested the appointees to rise and stand in their places as their names were called. The appointments were read, and while the congregation sang, "Men of God, Go Take Your Stations," the appointees were requested to come to the platform.

Mrs. Pauline J. Arnson, Chairman of the General Council of Women, was asked by the chair to join those on the platform.

District presidents, pastors, local bishops, and evangelists in the assembly were requested to stand in their places.

On motion of Elders L. G. Holloway and A. G. Miller, the appointments were approved.

The congregation sang one verse of, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go."

The appointees resumed their seats in the assembly, and the minutes of April 12 and also the minutes of the closing session were approved as read.

President Garver yielded the chair to President Smith. Announcements were read, hymn, "Let Us, Brothers, Let Us Gladly," was sung, and the closing prayer of the Conference was offered by the Presiding Evangelist, Elbert A. Smith.

President Smith then announced that when this Conference adjourns, it does so to meet October 3, 1948, in harmony with previous action, and declared the General Conference of 1947 adjourned sine die.

One verse of "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" was sung.

The preaching and devotional services, and the classwork and quorum activities, were carried out substantially as planned and set forth in the Official Program. The Saints' Herald for March 29, April 5, April 12, April 19, and April 26, together with the Official Program, constitute the official record of the Conference.

Rejoices in Gospel

I wish to bear again my testimony of the divinity of this great and marvelous work. I have had evidence upon evidence that it is the true and living church of Christ. I can say, as did the great King Benjamin, that when we do right we are speedily blessed in this life and need not wait for the hereafter. It is vitally important that we do not violate the spiritual or physical laws. God is no respecter of persons, and when we violate a law we must pay the penalty.

I have always been glad to witness for the Master. I want to be faithful to the end. My prayer is that we, the Saints, will be humble and unselfish, mindful of our brother's needs and grateful to God for his goodness. May he bless each and everyone.

Evidence of the Power of God

I have a testimony in regard to the power of God made manifest to man in these latter days.

On May 1, 1921, our youngest son, Curtis, was stricken with spinal meningitis. My companion and I attended him during his illness and thought he was beginning to recover when one night we were awakened by his screaming and crying. I went to his bed, wrapped him in a blanket and took him downstairs. Then we called an elder who arrived in a few minutes. He annointed and administered to the boy who was ashen white, with eyes set, and fingernails colorless. No breathing was perceptible either.

I feel I need not hesitate to say that, by the power of God, I have seen the dead raised. Our son is now past twenty-six years of age, in good health, and is employed as a printer in one of the largest local commercial printing houses.

Your years are of the earth and sun and skies
 And bright brave learning and remembering of the whys.
 Your years are of blue iris and soft rain
 And quick forgetfulness of searing pain.
 Your years are of the baking of mince pies
 And quiet discouragement of youngsters' lies.
 Your years are of the making of good men.
 God grant you many more, and then

* Dymaxion House

Perhaps you have read of a fantastic modernistic creation, the Dymaxion house. Architects and engineers have labored to make it different from any type of home you may have known before. It is round and mounted on a pivot, so you can turn it to the sun all day long. For vitamins, of course. So far, so good.

But have they considered the other consequences? The thing can be spun like a top. Suppose somebody's Junior has a naughty streak, and spins poor Mother dizzy all afternoon so she can't spank him? Or suppose Father, coming home late at night, goes feeling his way around in the dark, muttering, "Now where could Mother have left that front door?"

No, thanks, the Dymaxion house will hardly do. Perhaps you could use it for oriole nests which swing in trees. Or it would make a good calaboose for the punishment of inebriates. Or if we could only once get Mr. Molotov into it, we would make him promise to behave before letting him out. But to live in? Not for us, thank you!

* A MANDATE FROM YOU

Those who answered our question about the use of news in the "Herald" will be interested in the tabulation of answers received. Here are the figures:

For News 57%
 For articles in place of news 35%
 For "limited" amount of news 6%
 For discontinuing birth, death, and marriage announcements 2%

Volunteering some suggestions outside of the questionnaire, a number of readers requested that we should carry a message from the First Presidency each week. We would like that, but we must remember the great weight of detailed work and responsibility which rests upon the Presidency.

Others renewed a request for the return of Question Time. Bishop A. B. Phillips, who conducted that popular department, had to discontinue it on account of sickness; and at present, he is very busy with other work.

* Three little children were in the bushes of the front yard, trying to hide themselves, quite ineffectually, of course. I thought it was mischief, and called to them, "What are you doing? What do you want?" One of them pointed to the door, and said happily, "May Baskets!" I looked, and there was a small paper cone, decorated at school with crayon, equipped with a ribbon handle, and filled with a spray of purple lilac bloom. Is it a sign of old age to forget the ancient festivals? Children pass the old traditions on to each other, from one generation to the next. Could any effort of parents stamp out Christmas, Halloween, Fourth of July, and May Day? It would be impossible. It seems beautifully appropriate to be reminded of the day to be thankful for spring by those who are young.

* THERE is always something you could buy, if you had the money. But you can live and be happy without it.

* RAINY DAYS will surely come, so it is good to carry a spare supply of sunshine in your heart.

* AIM at great goals, not little ones. It is the rarest accident to overshoot ambition's target. Better fall short of some splendid mark, and still achieve something fine, than to aim for something too low for your merit. Surround yourself with good friends, live in a good locality, and enrich your life with the best things you can put into it. You will be better able to serve your fellow man, and you will be happier.

Our Program of Action

HAVE YOU sometimes felt discouraged because the church did not make faster progress? Have you been critical of leaders because they did not immediately embark upon some spectacular social reform? Have you felt like the man who was a passenger on a great ship making for a distant port, and threatened to jump overboard and swim if "they" didn't hurry up?

Calm your troubled heart. Soothe your disturbed thoughts. Be tranquil. Remember that a great company of people on a large ship can travel vast distances at sea; but a lone swimmer floundering the waves must be an expert to go a single mile. There is something to be said for staying with your ship.

The soldier who remains in the battle lines has great chances of survival, because there are many others participating in his defense as well as theirs; and if he is wounded, his companions will carry him away to receive help. He is a part of a great organization that is very hard to destroy. But the soldier who deserts is utterly alone and without friendship or help. He is the loneliest creature in the world, and in great danger. There is something to be said for staying with your comrades.

SOME YEARS AGO a very fine, talented young man became impatient with the slow progress of the church. He made up his mind to quit "trifling" with the organization and its people. He was going out into the world to do something big. He went, and I did not hear of him for quite a while. For the time, I gave him up, but with a feeling that we had not seen the last of him; for God has a way of bringing his wandering children back, and He often does it. . . . At the last General Conference I saw my friend, grown a little older and probably wiser. I do not know what he found in the world; but it could not have been as wonderful as he anticipated, for he came back. And he seemed quite happy to be with the church people. In fact, when I talked to him, he seemed to have forgotten that he had ever been away. That, too, was as it should be, and all for the best.

BUT THE PLEA to stay with the organization is not an effort to make you contented with mediocre things, nor to exact obedience and submission. You can stay in your organization, but you do not have to be content with your place in it nor with your contribution to it. There is something that you can do. There is something that you should do.

In the first place, you can improve yourself. You can look within, and if you look honestly, you will see in your own person all the faults that plague the church, and a few more. Please consider, if God had to establish the kingdom out of building material no better than you are, what chance would even he have of success? With good humor and objective truth, you can make an honest appraisal of yourself as the kind of citizen who is capable of contributing something to the realization of the church ideals. And when you see the poor average reached by so many people, you can see the importance of improving the average in the one place where you have the most influence—with yourself. Even if you are good, what are you good for?

In the second place, you can make yours a Zionite home, whether you are the only one in it, or whether you have a large family. Having begun with yourself as an individual subject of improvement, you will find it easier to try to make yours a better, happier, cleaner, Christian home. You can increase the love and kindness there, and you can persuade other members of the family to make a similar effort.

In the third place, having contributed one improved member and one improved home to the community and to your congregation, you will be in a position to make some new contribution to the life of the local church. You can study to improve your teaching, your ministry, or some other phase of your work.

BE ASSURED, there is plenty for you to do. You are not required to mark time. You can keep busy all the time, working on yourself, working in your home, working in your congregation, making a little bit of Zion where you are, and gathering building material for the kingdom, and improving it, so that when He begins to build, he will not encounter scarcities, priorities, and inferior substitutions.

Substitutes can be used in many places, often effectively, enabling people to carry on where otherwise they would be stopped. But when life depends on it, we do not like substitutes. Nor should we be content with substitutes when spiritual life depends upon us. In the building of God's kingdom, there is no substitute for character, for intelligence, for righteousness, for ability, for devotion. Nothing ersatz can enter here.

From the splendid General Conference recently held, the church looks forward, and goes out to face its multitudes of tasks. We are cheered by the many splendid workers of ability and consecration who have offered their services, who are turning their minds and hands to the tasks. But let us all realize that none of us is as good, or able, or well trained for his work, as he should be. And let us consider also, in relation to all the opportunities before us, how few are the workers. Truly, "the fields are white unto the harvest." Have you taken your place among the laborers, or are you on the sidelines among those who only wait?

Portrait of the Late President
Frederick M. Smith

Among the pleasant experiences of the recent General Conference was the presentation to the church of an oil painting of the late President Frederick M. Smith by the Daughters of Zion. The presentation was made by Mrs. Stephen A. Black, president of the organization, who made the following short address:

Less than three years ago, in the fall of 1944, the young women of Independence met at Liberty Street Church to organize under the sponsorship of the Women's Department of the church. At this time we chose as our name, "Daughters of Zion." President Frederick M. Smith, who was present, commended us for this choice of name and also suggested that our theme be "to develop our talents and use them in the service of God and the church." When President Smith died a year ago, we felt that we must express in some tangible way our feeling at this loss, and so, after discussing the matter with his family, we decided to have a portrait painted to present to the church as a memorial of our late President. We were very fortunate to secure the services of a fine artist, Mr. Lennon R. Bandel, of Cleveland, Ohio, formerly of Kansas City, who painted this portrait for us. The painting was begun last August, and we received it just a month ago.

We announced at last Conference that those who wished to contribute to this portrait would be allowed to do so, and many of you did, and I know that you who did contribute will be very happy and proud of your gift when you see it.

And so, President [Israel A.] Smith, the Daughters of Zion present to you and to the church this portrait of Frederick M. Smith, and we hope that it will express, at least in part, the deep love and respect in which we hold his memory.

cial tribute was paid them during the evening. Mrs. Cooper, who had six sons in the service, was presented a bouquet of roses by the mayor. A brief, impressive memorial service was held at the close of the meeting for those who died in the war. Guest speaker was Harry Simons of Flint, Michigan; Harry Skitch, Sr., lead the singing.

Frank Clifton, president of the club, was recently elected to the city council as alderman for Ward Six. In addition to serving the church and community, he has worked for a number of years with the Boy Scouts, Kiwanis, and Shriners. A service of the Men's Club originated during the war by Brother Clifton was that of meeting troop trains and providing transportation for servicemen and their families to various parts of the city. The club received commendation from the mayor and civic committee for this service.

The Women of Bloomsburg

We must acknowledge a very fine Local Directory and Calendar gotten up by the good women of the Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, Branch, and to commend them for their enthusiasm and well-directed zeal. From Sister Harold Fritz, we get the information that these women realized a profit of $240.00 from their enterprise. She adds, "We are very proud. . . . We are few in numbers. . . . those who are faithful are trying to carry the banner high. We are trying to show the town of Bloomsburg that we have the 'pearl of great price.'"

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

The Work of the Aaronic Priesthood

An address given at the Aaronic Priesthood Banquet at Independence, Missouri, November 7, 1946.

By President F. Henry Edwards

IT IS A very great pleasure indeed to be here. It is good for us to do what we are now doing. It is good for many reasons. I think that one of the outstanding reasons is that the Saints tend to take for granted the services of the standing ministry, and it is highly desirable that we shall come together on such occasions as these to recognize both the value of that ministry and the great cost at which it is rendered. Standing here as the representative of the First Presidency and of the people of Zion, I, therefore, wish to take advantage of this opportunity to express to you briefly, but very feelingly, our appreciation for the contribution which you members of the Aaronic priesthood are making here in Zion. And I wish to extend this expression of gratitude to include the ladies who are so happily with us, and who join us in affectionate and affirmative relation to the work of the kingdom.

The work which you brethren have done and to which you sisters have contributed constitutes a very significant ministry for our time. Just a moment of thought will impress this on us. How could the church possibly continue without the ministry of the Aaronic priesthood? But what we frequently fail to recognize is that any work done by the grace of God and for the extension of his kingdom has in it the seeds of eternity. If we build today in the spirit of the kingdom, as we are privileged to build, we serve our day and generation; but in so serving, we serve also every day that is yet to come, every generation that is yet to be. I thank you, then, for the church; for the people of Zion as she is; and for the Zion that is to be, the Zion that we and our fellows are building together.

I think that I should say one other thing at this point: it is extremely difficult to organize a large group of the ministry for the kind of service which meets the needs of the body by drawing on the contribution of each one. Because of this, we of the Presidency, have been most happy that there has been going forward among you for a considerable time a process of preparation and of unfoldment and of education, which has already enriched our contribution throughout Independence and which has tremendous possibilities for good for the future. We are very grateful that the brethren of the Presiding Bishopric, on whom falls specific responsibility with regard to the Aaronic priesthood, have taken this work so seriously. I believe that they have done this because God has touched their imaginations, and they have had some glimpse of what we believe shall be as our people enter into the purpose of God for them.

We are all of us here as members and representatives of "the standing ministry." That is a very interesting expression, used in relation to the ministry who serve in a local capacity. It is used of us here perhaps more truly than of any people anywhere at any time, for we are here to stay. It may be that a branch may be planted elsewhere, or a district may be organized, and the passing of time might make it necessary to disorganize that branch or district later on; but nothing like that is contemplated here in Zion. It is our expectation that here, centering at this place, from now forward, there shall be a constantly more carefully refined spiritual and practical demonstration of the will of God for society, and that this exploration and embodiment of the will of God shall never cease until the Son of God himself shall come among us.

Here then we stand, in the words of the Apostle Paul, as a "colony of heaven." It is our business to plant the work of God here firmly; to root it here so that it shall never be uprooted; to so nurture and environ it that through all the years that are yet to come that which we now do, and which shall be built on by others who will follow us, shall be revealed as truly sound and worthy. As members of the standing ministry, who cannot turn away from what we have done, we must so build that the tomorrows will bring us no regrets, but, rather, that we shall meet the fruitage of our service with rightful pride and satisfaction. Our record abides; so serve that it shall stand to our honor.

TIME TESTS every man's ministry. If the passage of time is to vindicate us, then what we now do must be practical and right. It must not be the result of casual hunches which appeal and then are forgotten, but must be affirmative and true and solid, built into the facts of our social situation. We deal with things as they are and as they can become; with the truth in action. It is to such a ministry that the Aaronic priesthood are called.

The members of the Aaronic priesthood are concerned with the letter of the law. We have to do with the law of carnal commandments, with practices that pertain to the daily demonstration of the work of God in the lives of our people. It is very unfortunate that the Saints are so frequently attracted and even tantalized by alluring ideas to the detriment of the specific, immediate, and sometimes rather humdrum things that have to be done if the work is to be firmly established. As members of the Aaronic priesthood, it is our business to keep our feet on the ground, even though we must also lift our hearts toward Zion.

We are concerned with the habits of our people. There is no more important concern. Our people must not be good on occasion only; they must be habitually good. They must be set to do things which are right and true and constructive and honest; things which at first do not appear to be glamorous, but out of which come the reserves of strength and power and wisdom upon which the building of the superstructure depends. When we are so set, when we have built the right kind of fundamental habits, then—and only then—can we reach with confident assurance toward the fruits of Zion living.

BENEATH ALL the culture of which our generation is so proud is a sound physical foundation. Underlying the beauty of the music that we have enjoyed is the rigorous adjustment of the wood and wire of the piano, the disciplined harmony of sight and fingers of the pianist, and the practiced co-ordination of breathing on the part of the singer. We frequently forget these things. We are so carried away by the beauty of the song that we do not think at all of the struggle to understand and use the physical properties of the wood and the wire which go into the make-up of the piano. We are so thrilled by the finished artistry of the soloist that we forget the rigorous physical training which makes great singing possible; which extends day after day, week after week, month after month, and persists only because someone knows that behind the beauty of the song must be perfection of the mechanics involved.

In similar fashion, beneath the highest spiritual culture of the Saints there must be those habitual and fundamental adjustments of our natural life to our spiritual purpose. The divine harmony toward which we aspire must be undergirded by no less divine harmonies of work, and prayer, and scripture study, and glad co-operation in the financial endeavor which our task imposes.

AS MEMBERS of the Aaronic priesthood, it is your business to go into the homes of the Saints to see that our people learn how to pray. This involves infinitely more than merely saying our prayers. It requires us to cultivate the habit of looking at life with our Heavenly Father, and disciplining ourselves to accept his point of view. It involves cultivation, through daily devotion, of the spirit of brotherhood as applied to daily situations. It involves daily renewal of the sense of assurance and of victory which alone can enable us to endure steadfastly for the right.

As members of the Aaronic priesthood, it is your business, possibly more than the business of anyone else, to see that the Saints become and continue to be a scripture-loving people. It is your business to see that our children, our young people, our young married people, the middle aged, and the older ones find joy and peace and power in the word of God. Few things could do more to set the church on fire with light and power than a quiet and persistent endeavor on the part of the Aaronic priesthood to read choice Scriptures well in the homes of the Saints. I can imagine nothing which would do more to encourage family scripture-reading, and therefore nothing which would minister so richly to the fundamental spiritual culture of our people.

As members of the Aaronic priesthood, you should be concerned that the Saints form the fundamentally significant spiritual habit of paying tithing. This is much more than merely paying money into the coffers of the church. It involves the payment of this money as a definite expression of spiritual partnership. It is important that this shall become habitual and yet not casual. It is most unfortunate that so many of us have to be stirred up by some great emotional appeal before we realize the great privilege of working with God day after day and week after week. It is your privilege to see that sharing with God is a matter of daily experience, and to see that this partnership is brought down to brass tacks where it stops being idle talk and becomes veritable kingdom-building.

As members of the Aaronic priesthood, it is your privilege to see that none of our people are so poor that they and their families are denied the necessities of life, and so have to think more than they ought to think about the struggle for existence and the importance of money and the sheer physical necessities of life. Free men ought to be free to help themselves and those they love toward a competence which will enable them to cultivate the beauties of life and the joys of the spirit.

As members of the Aaronic priesthood, there are those of you who will be directly and responsibly concerned in the construction and maintenance of church homes. It is your privilege to see that these churches are clean and attractive and well ventilated and comfortable, and to do these things as a means to the spiritual enrichment of the Saints. So many of these basic ministries are taken for granted. So many times your work as ushers, for example, is ignored. Yet these are important ministries. Through our excellent performance, we must see that they commend themselves more and more fully to the members of the church.

OF COURSE, there are times when these ministries, and others like them, do not seem to have any great significance for the establishment of the kingdom of God. But I think that as we sit together, everyone of us finds his soul stirred by the fresh realization of the fraternity which exists among us. We belong to each other, because we first of all belong to God. And here, in the heart of this community, if we will, there is now being set up among us a sure and visible prophecy of the kingdom that is to be. No written or spoken word can be so deeply significant for the kingdom as the warm handclasps of men or women who are united in intelligent understanding of the obligations of service. Nothing can speak so truly of the power of God in establishing his kingdom, as the experience of brotherhood in the actual building of that kingdom. Here, we have held out before our eyes a prophecy that ought to be refined, that ought to be freshly illustrated from time to time, that ought to be noised abroad, that the kingdom is on the way.

The members of the Presidency are frankly concerned that this sense of the living promise of the kingdom shall be shared by more and more of the Saints. We are eager that the eyes of the faithful shall be opened to the realities of the spiritual life now available. We deplore the tendency to wait for the great days which are to come, and are avid for the endowment of the Spirit which is always available when our people work together in love on tasks which pertain to the kingdom. I believe that if we here in Independence can sense with growing appreciation the sheer joy of working together for God, then the day is not far distant when we shall find ourselves already dwelling in the radiance of his kingdom. If we will work on the essentials, by the light of faith, we can do something for Zion that has never yet been done.

The English people love to recall the great heroes of their history. One of the memories that comes to me again and again is taken out of the dark days of Bloody Queen Mary. At that time, just about 400 years ago, two of the bishops of the English Church were to be burned at the stake for their religious convictions. As Latimer and Ridley walked toward the stake, Latimer turned to his companion and said, "Be of good cheer, Brother Ridley, for by the Grace of God we shall this day light a candle in England that shall never be put out." And they did. The realization that these men, dying, lit a candle with their own bodies, so appealed to the imagination of the English people that nothing that was subsequently said or done could wholly destroy the light of their testimony.

In similar vein, though at much less cost, this day, if we will, we can light a candle for Zion which shall never be put out. We can do this by taking seriously our responsibility for building into the daily habits of the Saints the hopes and expectations and sacrifices and joy of the kingdom of God.

May God bless you all together with a sense of the fundamental worth of your calling, the very, very great privilege of service; and the rich possibilities of the fellowship we enjoy together under God. May it be his good pleasure to build his kingdom in us and among us and through us.

Shall We Loose God's Hands Today?

By Carlos H. Crownover

Have we submitted within ourselves, as we walk life's weary way;
To the things that lead us on and up,
or have we tied God's hands today?

Are we going to sit idly by,
and let opportunity come our way;
And perhaps feel his presence near,
yet keeping his hands tied today?

Though we are little in his sight,
and oftentimes drift away;
He would arm us for the fight,
if we but loosed his hands today.

We have no need to worry or fear,
if we would only pray;
To him, his children are very dear,
we'll know, if we loose his hands today.

He'd take your hand and also mine,
if we would only say;
Not my will be done, but thine.
Shall we loose God's hands today?

Every kindly word is a boost in its right place. Every step higher, with the hand of someone else in yours, is a tribute to your selflessness. If you want to climb high, take another with you as you climb!

—George Matthew Adams.

It's Easy When They Believe in You

George Bernard Shaw has always been an ogre to motion picture producers. For years, one movie mogul after another tried to buy picture rights to Shaw's plays. The answers, in a variety of barbed words of which Shaw is master, always amounted to the same thing—a resounding "No!" The cinema gave Shaw up. Money didn't interest him. He was impregnable. The legend grew that Shaw's plays would never reach the screen.

And then, one day, a stocky Hungarian by the name of Gabriel Pascal, unknown to Hollywood, reached out and plucked the choice plum that had evaded the highest-paid geniuses in the industry. Shaw had sold the movie rights of his plays to a man Hollywood had never heard of. The community was astounded. How had it happened?

To Pascal himself, there was no mystery.

"I talked dramatic art and told him what I wanted to do," he explained. "Other producers waved checks at him. My way was not the way of others. You see, I have no inferiority complex, not before geniuses or kings or anybody. I said I would make no picture with box-office compromises. I think the old man believed in me and that's all."

The Life of Religion

William James, the famous Harvard psychologist, once said: "Were one asked to characterize the life of religion in the broadest and most general terms possible, one might say that it consists of the belief that there is an unseen order, and that our supreme good lies in harmoniously adjusting ourselves thereto. This belief and this adjustment are the religious attitude in the soul."

ZION'S LEAGUE TAKES STOCK

Plans for New and Better Days

By F. M. McDowell

The Saints' Herald of March 1 contained a call for action, and a plan of procedure in connection with the celebration of the tenth anniversary of Zion's League (1937-47). Briefly, the plan provided for the calling together of official representatives of Zion's League from each of the stakes and districts of the church and missions abroad. This for the purpose of critically evaluating the work of the League during the first ten years of its history, and profiting by these experiences, building more wisely and adequately during the years ahead.

Somewhat precocious for a youngster of ten, Zion's League seemed little concerned about, or interested in, any gala birthday party. Rather with surprisingly healthy maturity, it faced its needs and limitations with insight and courage, and then with the vision, imagination, and enthusiasm of youth, turned to look forward creatively. We believe that we express the unanimous opinion of all of those who participated, when we say that the meetings of the General Council constituted the most profitable experience of the entire life of the League thus far.

YOUTH SHARING NOW

The ideals, spirit, and purpose of Zion's League were splendidly exemplified in the conference as a whole. Here indeed, young people were found "sharing now in the life and work of the church." Each of the busy days of the conference found hundreds of young people busily and happily participating—in classwork; in daily assemblies as delegates to the conference; at work in booths, exhibits; participating in special programs; working long hours as members of committees; contributing to worship services, in music, in drama, and discussion.

ZION'S LEAGUE COMES INTO ITS OWN

The work of the General Council of Zion's League composed of 175 officially appointed delegates from 63 stakes and districts and four missions abroad, undoubtedly marks a high point in the history of Zion's League.

Brief as were the six one-hour sessions of the council, it found time to:

Review the story of the origin and development of youth work in the church.

Review the story of the origin and development of Zion's League.

Make an appraisal of the ideals, nature, spirit, purpose, and organization of the League.

Make a critical analysis of the needs and workings of the League as revealed during the first ten years of its history.

Map out ways and means of improving the League, both as to organization, materials, and methods of procedure.

Present and evaluate a round-the-year program for the League.

Appoint and hear reports of committees which interviewed the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

Formulate and present to the General Conference a report covering the work of the council and the needs of the League in its relationship to the general church.

Launch a church-wide project—the raising of a fund of $25,000.00 for the promotion of missions abroad.

ZION'S LEAGUE MAKES HISTORY

All in all the General Conference of 1947 will long be remembered as marking the inauguration of a new era for youth work in the church. Then and there Zion's League made history.

We asked some representative members of the committees of the council just what, in their opinion, constituted the significant results of the council sessions. They replied in part as follows:

1. A rebirth of Zion's League in the minds and hearts of young people and their leaders.

2. The re-establishment of the organization of Zion's League, as our official church-centered program for young people.

3. Renewed assumption by young people of responsibility to the church and the rededication of lives, both individually and collectively to the work of the church.

4. Mapping out and launching of a church-wide round-the-year program for Zion's League, consisting of month by month purposeful activities, an annual festival, and a missionary project.

5. Strengthening the bonds of international fellowship among the youth of the church.

6. An integration of the organization and work of the League with organization and work of the church—branch, district, and general.

Zion's League, signifying the "Youth of the church united in action for Christ," now comes into its own in the church. There can no longer be any justifiable question, if such were ever true, as to the need for, and place of, Zion's League in the church. This program constitutes the officially approved and recognized church program for our young people. It is uniquely ours, it is uniquely theirs. With all the earnestness at their command, they have called, through their duly appointed representatives, for recognition, for leadership, and for opportunity to serve. Likewise, with

An After-Conference Appraisal

By G. L. DeLapp Presiding Bishop

THERE is always need, following a Conference, to evaluate what transpired and to consider carefully the effect of the enactments of the Conference in its business sessions. Among other important legislation at the recent General Conference was the approval of the largest operating budget that the church has ever adopted. The need for this is quite apparent to all who have followed the growth of the church, and who have been aware of the shrinking purchasing power of the dollar, for the church very definitely has emerged from a condition where it was heavily involved in debt to a point where it is free from debt, and now has been able to set aside substantial reserves.

During this same period of time, the ministerial appointee list has undergone a substantial change. At the low point of the depression, it was necessary for the church to reduce its appointee list until there was but a bare skeleton to meet the needs for administrative, pastoral, and missionary responsibilities. Prior consideration had to be given to those who were in the inactive period of their ministry due to age. Since that time, many important pastorates and missionary assignments have been filled, and while there are still many more places where the need is great, the church has very definitely strengthened its position; this strengthening, however, has not been without considerable increase in per capita ministerial cost, for the costs are much larger for those who of necessity devote their full time to their ministry than for those who are on the retired list of appointees and, because of retirement, are free from official and ministerial responsibilities. It must be remembered that back in the days of the depression, the bulk of our expenditures went for those who were retired or about to be retired. This increase in active appointees accounts in part for the increase in the ministerial costs.

The fact that the dollar has lost its purchasing power due to the inflationary conditions we are experiencing accounts also in part for the increase in the general church budget. This increase applies, however, not only to the ministerial and family allowance costs, but to the administrative costs as well. With the growth of our appointee list and the increase in active personnel, there has been need for an increase in our salaried force, the expense of which has also increased due to the need arising out of higher living costs.

The breakdown of our 1947-1948 appropriations (which are for all practical purposes the same for both years) on a percentage basis is as follows:

Ministerial - Active	$402,483.00	60.88%
Ministerial - Inactive	75,408.00	11.41%
	$477,891.00	72.29%
Administrative Expense	117,395.00	17.74%
Payments to Graceland College	55,700.00	8.43%
Houses of Worship	8,078.00	1.22%
Miscellaneous	2,000.00	.32%
	$661,064.00	100 %

It is to be noted that 72.29% of our total budget goes for ministerial costs. Included in this, however, are also the reserves that are set up for ministry.

It appears that the Administrative Expense of 17.74% is out of proportion to the total budget. This includes General Church Headquarters expenditures, Stakes and Districts and Missions Abroad. The details of these have already been published. The concern we feel arises out of the fact that with heavy pastoral and administrative costs we are not spending a sufficiently large portion of our budget in the work of evangelization. In other words, we are spending large sums in service and pastoral assignments and for administration. Our efforts and resources need to be directed in the future toward an expansion of our missionary personnel and for the work of proselyting. With the addition of missionary appointees what now appears to be too heavy a proportion for administrative expense will tend to be corrected. Our present procedure and policies require further analysis and study, and it is our hope that specific recommendations arising out of these studies will be forthcoming for consideration at the next General Conference.

It is also to be noted that due to the accumulated costs of many of the appointees arising out of the depression period, and inability to catch up with such costs during the period of prosperity and high living costs, the individual budget allowances need to be quite generous, and for the most part are, when considered in the light of the ability of the church and the future needs of the church. It is, therefore, essential that our appointee families conserve insofar as possible their resources and not assume obligations beyond present ability to pay. Commitments for future payments may have to be paid off at a time when retrenchments in budgets will have to be made and will, therefore, work a hardship upon the families concerned. This same principle will, of course, apply to all members of the church, for it is quite frequently brought to our attention that many of our church members who have recently been blessed with substantial incomes have failed to take into account the fact that these incomes will probably not hold up for a great length of time; and therefore conservation of income should be practiced, and it is unwise to take on heavy obligations in the way of debts that will have to be paid off in a period of deflation.

We should not lose sight of the fact that there will be a time of deflation when income will be curtailed, and the need will be apparent for drastic reductions in budgetary expenditures both for church and for family. It is readily recognized that it is more difficult to reduce budgetary costs than it is to increase them, and some of us still have in our memory the unfortunate steps that it was necessary for us to take in the reduction of the budget in the early 1930's.

Undoubtedly a number of people left our Conference with reasonable concern about the increase in budgetary appropriations, but recognizing the needs because of high living costs and administrative costs, quite cheerfully supported the appropriations. It is apparent to many that continued care and caution must be exercised in the administration of our finances, and that we must be ready to face realistically the need for reduction of budgetary costs with a decline in income and a decline in living costs.

In the meantime, it is highly essential that we give our wholehearted support to the raising of funds during the current years of 1947 and 1948. We need additional surplus funds over and above budgetary appropriations. It is hoped that by another Conference we will have additional surplus to add to our Houses of Worship Revolving Fund; we have the unfinished project of the Auditorium; these and other needs will continue to be with us.

We must emphasize the continued need for keeping the church law, and complying with the law will make provision for contributions to the church out of the net increase that accrues to individual and family. Keeping the law, maintaining our balanced budgets, and conserving our resources will carry us safely through the trying period ahead.

We are deeply appreciative of the fine support given, and ask for a continuation during 1947 and 1948.

When It "Can't Be Done"

A man who says a thing can't be done should bear in mind that his testimony is entirely negative. In court, negative testimony never gets as much weight as positive. If one witness says he heard a clock strike at a certain time, and another man declares that he didn't hear such a sound, the one who says he did hear it is more likely to be telling the truth. When a man says a thing isn't so, it is well to ask him: "Then what are the facts?"

Prayer: "Lord's Prayer" (led by a junior) or
"A Boy's Prayer"

(For a boy with folded hands and bowed head. Beginners on front rows kneel, with the boy praying in the center.)

Dear Jesus, you were once a boy

Who liked to run and play;
Please help me do the things I should
All through the busy day.

Help me be fair in games and school,
And make me always strong,
To choose the right. Please show me how
To keep away from wrong.

This is the children's day, you know;
May children everywhere

Learn more about the loving Friend
Who keeps them in his care.

Picture: "Hope of the World," by Copping. "Hope of the World" was painted by Harold Copping, a contemporary English artist. Jesus is shown as the "children's friend" as he gathers them about him. The expression on Jesus' face indicates love and understanding for children. The artist has portrayed the racial beauty of each child. Through this technique he makes us feel that Jesus is pleased with the individual differences and the various gifts that the children have to give. As we study this picture, we feel that Jesus appreciates and finds good in each race. This reminds us of the parable of the piano keys by Aggrey of Africa. His wisdom reminds us, "You can play a tune of sorts on the white keys; you can play a tune of sorts on the black keys; but for harmony you must use both black and white."

A beautiful church was being built in a certain city. The time had come to secure an artist to paint a picture from which a stained-glass window would be made. So it was left to a committee to choose the artist and the subject of the picture. Since the name of the church was "The Church of the Christ Child," the committee decided the picture should be that of Christ with a group of children about him.

The best artist in all the country was located, and the purpose of the picture was explained. The artist went to work and painted what he considered his best picture. When the work was completed, there was Jesus with a group of children about him. Their heads were thrown back, their throats were swelling with music, and one could almost hear their singing.

The artist sent for the committee to come the next morning and see the picture. He wanted their opinion of it before he started making the stained-glass window. He went to sleep that evening with a feeling of satisfaction, for he considered the picture the best he had ever made. In the middle of the night, he heard a noise in the studio. He hurried into the studio and found a stranger painting on his picture.

The artist rushed up, crying, "Oh, stop, stop! You are ruining the picture! Look what you have done already! And the committee is coming in the morning to judge the picture."

The stranger turned around slowly and calmly. "When I came into the room I saw that you had already ruined it, and I am merely making it right. Why did you use only one color for the faces of the children? Who told you that the faces of all the children in the family of God are white?"

The artist looked surprised as he replied, "Why no one ever told me, sir, but I always thought of it that way."

The stranger smiled kindly, "You see how mistaken you were. You have used only one color, and you had five colors on your palette. I have made some of the faces yellow, some red, while others are brown and black. These children have come from many lands in answer to my call."

"Your call?" asked the artist, puzzled. "What call was that, sir?"

The stranger replied in words that sounded strangely familiar, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

At once the artist knew that the stranger must be the Lord Jesus himself, but even as he knew it, the stranger was gone. The artist was alone, facing his changed picture. For some time he stared at the yellow children with slanting eyes, the brown children with great brown eyes, the black children with laughing eyes, and the red children with serious eyes.

The artist thought of the countries from which these children came. As if speaking to the children, he said, "You brown fellows with your turbans, you are from India; you little girls with your gay shawls are from Persia; you little lads with your beautiful silk costumes are from China; you little black boys with the sturdy bodies, you are from Africa; while you little red children live near me in America. You are American Indians." Looking at the picture, he liked it better all the time. Then all of a sudden he woke up to find the morning sun shining through the window, and he was still in bed. He could not understand.

The artist rushed into the studio. There stood his picture—and all of the faces of the children were white. Then he knew it was a dream. What could he do? He said, "I know. I can make it look as the stranger had it in the dream. I must work rapidly, for the committee is coming this morning." Soon there appeared one by one yellow faces with slanting eyes, brown faces with great brown eyes, black faces with smiling eyes, and red faces with serious eyes. At last the picture was equally as beautiful as the dream picture had been.

When the committee arrived, they were delighted with the picture. With joy one member of the group exclaimed, "Why, it's God's family at home with him! I am greatly pleased with the picture."

Prayer:

Processional: "Suffer Little Children," Zion's Praises, No. 55.

A baptismal service or blessing of little children may follow the above worship service.

"Our Offering"

First Child:

There are so many little ones
Just like my friends and me,
We cannot talk to them for they
Are far away, you see.

Second Child:

But we can think of them each day
And speak of them in prayer,
And we can save our pennies, too,
And send them over there.

Third Child:

Though some are dark and some are fair,
They are God's children, too,
And God expects us to divide
And asks the same of you.

Fourth Child:

We want you all to come and join
Our missionary band,
To help us send God's Holy Word
To every foreign land.

Fifth Child:

There is a work for me and you,
Come, freely give today,
We have so much, and we should share
With those so far away.

FOR NEW PARENTS

(From the Viewpoint of a New Mother)

By Martha Ford Floro

YOU'RE A YOUNG person. All of a sudden you find yourself in love and if all goes well, it won't be long before you're saying, "I do." You know how the story goes.

And thus begins marriage, about which much has been said and written, but which, in spite of innumerable unfavorable statistics, is still the greatest potential factor in human happiness. Before long, if you're of normal inclination and can afford the luxury of having a child in our inflated capitalistic system, you begin to plan in that direction. After months of watching your diet, knitting tiny garments, and reading all the books available on babies, the big day arrives. You're whizzed off to the hospital, hours too soon, by a jittery husband and, after what seems to be an eternity, a cheerful voice breaks through the distance of gray silence.

"You have a fine son. Wake up!"

When you finally get your wits about you, a nurse walks in and deposits a small, blanketed bundle in your arms. All you can see is a little pink face peering up at you with a wistful, hungry look. A lump comes into your throat, and you can't think of anything to say. This bundle is your baby—it belongs to you and that man you took for better or worse—it is yours to guide and direct through the flexible years ahead. What a challenge! Only God knew how inadequate you felt at that moment. All of you who are parents have had essentially the same experience. Nothing else is quite as important as this new opportunity.

What new horizons are opened up as one looks into the deep blue of a baby's eyes and knows that a new life is in his keeping.

MONTHS COME AND go. Before you can realize it, this small, helpless infant is walking, feeding himself, saying a few words, and "jabbering" many others which only he can understand. Suddenly it dawns upon you that here is a personality to be reckoned with. He is still small, but nevertheless imperative in his demands upon your time, energy, and patience.

This article is addressed to you young mothers. I am speaking as one of you, not as a child psychologist. For scientific information, by all means consult an authority. What I have to offer comes out of my own experience, which is no doubt more limited than many of yours, but I hope my simple suggestions may help you discover some new helps for parenthood.

The task of setting the emotional quality of the home is largely up to the homemaker. No one can take a father's place in the lives of his children, but neither can anyone else fulfill your responsibilities. It is up to you to organize and direct the many household activities, and also your task to supervise the daily schedule of this small revolutionist who has brought about such a change in your home since his arrival.

Perhaps there is not a single day passes when we, as mothers, do not look at these growing children of ours, and ask ourselves the question, "How can I best help this child to meet his problems and improve his relationships?" For children do have many serious problems, even though they may seem insignificant to an adult—the moving of a chair, reaching a desired toy, or crawling over an obstacle.

WE HAVE the opportunity daily to create a healthy emotional situation for our child's development. If we can keep him busy at constructive activities, he will have a minimum of temptations to do the forbidden things. It is better to anticipate a child's wrongdoing and divert him than to administer a spanking after the deed has been done.

A healthy situation will vary with a child's age and ability. A toy that is too heavy for a child to handle or requires too much skill for him to enjoy will only serve to irritate him, and had better be put away until he is older. It is my personal opinion that there should be a minimum of breakable gadgets and untouchable bric-a-brac within reach. The home belongs to the entire family and should take all members into consideration. Therefore, it might be advisable to put away that beautiful vase Aunt Margaret brought you from the Orient until Junior becomes a little more socialized. Otherwise, in spite of your many warnings, he is likely to forget (a habit which children have) and during some moment when your back is turned, he will examine the vase with disastrous results. Of course, its value means nothing to Junior, and he won't understand why you are so upset. The tragedy is that all your spanking won't put the broken vase together, but a little foresight might have preserved it for posterity.

In child-rearing, as in all other professions, there are tricks of the trade. We can learn a great deal by talking to other mothers and watching them handle their children. Every mother knows how disconcerting it is to be constantly interrupted during household tasks by an irritable child. Many times fus-ness can be avoided by being sure that the child is in excellent physical condition, has plenty of sleep, outdoor play, well-balanced meals at regular hours, comfortable clothing, plenty of affection, and something constructive to do. Even though you are in the middle of an important task, such as washing or housecleaning, oftentimes sitting down with the child for ten minutes while you show him a picture book will get him started in a happy activity. Or singing a familiar nursery song or hymn will sometimes have the same results. Whatever we are doing, it is secondary to the welfare of the child. The house will need cleaning again in a few days, but the results we are building in our child's character will still be there when he is old, and we have been gone for many years.

WAS THERE ever a parent who didn't desire more of this precious trait, patience? None of us has enough for the demands of everyday life, but we must constantly be developing emotional quietness and poise. I have observed that many times a calm manner on the part of a parent is contagious and will be reflected in the child's attitude. It is easier to be a good mother when we ourselves are in good physical condition. Regular hours of sleep at night are essential, and I have found it a good idea to use the afternoon naptime to get some extra relaxation for myself.

As the young parents of today, we are building young Latter Day Saints who, almost before we know it, will be growing up, attending Graceland, making their contributions to the church. We cannot leave the responsibility of teaching our children religion up to the church school or any outside agency, although these have their place. If our children are to participate in Zion's community life, what a big task is ours of indoctrinating them with the ideals and purposes of the church. And, beyond this, there is the spirit of Zion's endeavor which they must catch from us.

Missionary Qualities

A DEVOTIONAL GIVEN AT THE STONE CHURCH

By Katherine H. Wilson

An eight-year-old boy was asked if he knew what saints were. Stories of King Arthur and knights of old caused his face to light up in reply, "Oh, yes, they are men who shine." And so they are, and so they have been from when early Christians died as martyrs. They lived long ago, they live among us now in modern dress. We meet them and talk with them casually. We call them by many names, these bearers of beauty: missionaries, mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles, friends—saints in shining armor!

There's "Aunt Sarah." She was a schoolteacher who taught boys and girls in grade school for many years. Two hundred boys and girls were saved by her who had been termed "incorrigibles." "Oh, I just loved them as if they were my own boys and girls," she said. She loved them as her own! A young man of Nazareth made a similar statement, you remember.

Then the mother who wanted all her life to be an artist, and all the canvas she ever had to work on was worn-out clothing, and she made stitches so beautiful that every patch was a work of art. She loved beauty and color, and yet she never complained that her canvases were only overalls and socks. And all the while the ministry of building character was hers—clean, honorable lives were growing. Yes, there is a ministry of women! If the women of this church of just one generation would think of their responsibilities as an important ministry, the next generation would be ready for Zion.

We all know fathers who industriously work all their lives to provide homes and security for loved ones. Fathers, who build homes on firm foundations of wisdom and right-living, with walls of truth and honor; roofed in unselfishness and gloriously painted with love and happiness—are they not saints in modern dress?

The great Negro singer, Roland Hayes, who was a deeply religious man, was once asked if he had certain hours of communion with God. He replied, "Years ago I had certain hours, but now every breath I draw and every moment of the day is a communion with God. When I walk out upon the stage, I employ a certain technique. I stand there perfectly quiet with my hands clasped before me and pray: that Roland Hayes may be blotted entirely out of the picture, that the people sitting there may feel only the Spirit of God flowing through melody and rhythm, that racial prejudice may be forgotten. They grow quiet, too. I capture them that moment and never let them go until I am done."

Roland Hayes then related this lovely, true story: "A few years ago I gave a concert before a large and enthusiastic audience down in Alabama. The next day I journeyed to the old plantation where my mother had been a slave. The old master and his wife were still alive, but what a change the years had wrought! The old gentleman and his wife were barely existing in a little shanty. I introduced myself and asked if they remembered my mother. Yes, of course, they did. They had called her Pony, and she was much beloved."

As Roland Hayes looked around the room at the sign of poverty, he knew that in the minds of the old people the same thought was running—the contrast between their present condition of want and the good old days when there had been plenty of money and a great home, the days when Pony and her little son had been slaves, the son who was now one of the world's famous artists. He wanted to help them but was afraid of causing them embarrassment. Finally he mustered his courage and asked, "Is there anything that Pony's son could do to help?" The old man pondered for a moment, then said, "I suppose there is." The remainder of the experience is related by Mr. Mayes. "I reached into my pocket and pulled out a check. It was a large one, the returns from several recent concerts. Since the old lady was ill, she was lying on the bed. I walked over and laid it on her chest. She picked it up and, seeing the size of it, suddenly realized that it meant getting the old plantation back and ending their days in peace. She gave a little cry and threw open her arms, into which the aged master and I both fell. In a moment we had our arms about each other—just three of God's children, with no dividing color line."

Let us make a vow to God. Let us promise him that by his grace and from this time forward we think of Zion in world-wide terms, seeing in every human being a possible friend—a member of the great family which embraces all races and nations and whose head is "Our Heavenly Father."

What does it take to help other people? What are the qualities we must develop? Basic is love for God, and if we would help others, love for them. Unselfishness, humility, tolerance, wisdom, understanding, kindness—and out of lives like these will come the world beautiful!

Yes, saints are still "the men who

Worship Suggestions for June

To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of him whose holy work was doing good;
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

(2) Friends

I think that God will never send
A gift so precious as a friend—
A friend who always understands
And fills each need as it demands;
Whose loyalty will stand the test,
When skies are bright or overcast,
Who sees the faults that merit blame
But keeps on loving just the same;
Who does far more than creeds could do
To make us good, to make us true.
—Rosalie Carter.

Meditation: "Calm as the Night," Bohm, violin and piano.

Hymn: "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," Saints'
Hymnal, No. 343.

Prayer: (These thoughts may be included)
Help us to love others, for in doing so we open our lives and souls to let in a new happiness both for ourselves and our neighbor.

Scripture Readings:

"Behold, let us love one another: for love is of God; and everyone that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God . . . for God is love."

"Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another

"Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. . . ."

"Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Romans 12: 10, 15, 16, 21.

"For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you."—Matthew 7: 1, 2.

Special Music:

"I Shall Not Pass Again This Way."
"I Thank Thee, Lord," quartet, Saints'
Hymnal, No. 348.

"Love Thyself Last," girls' trio, (Tunes and Harmonies, 6th grade book, World of Music Series.)

"Loving Each Other," quartet, Zion's Praises,
No. 83.

Using the picture, "Praying Hands," with the story is effective.

(3) "The Touch of the Master's Hand"
(From Devotions for Youth, by Gilbert).

Beautiful thoughts and actions lay hidden in all our friends about us. Do we bring out the beauty that lies a possibility in our friends?
Do we inspire our friends to do their best?
Do we bring harmony in others' lives? Or does our careless touch break the hearts of those about us?

Drama—

"Jesus, as Seen by Mary Magdalene."
A monologue by Mary telling of the effect of Jesus' love in her life—Christ and the Fine Arts, Maus, page 228.

Hymn: "When Thy Heart with Joy O'erflowing," Saints' Hymnal, No. 349, or "Humility," Saints' Hymnal, No. 340.

Benediction: (These thoughts to be included)
We would have a Christlike love in our hearts, the kind of love that makes men do great things. Help us to remember that we change others' hearts by changing our own.

(A simplified version in "Twice 55" songbook.)

Call to Worship:

"My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction: for whom the Lord loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth."— Proverbs 3: 11, 12.

"Children, obey your parents in the Lord:
for this is right. Honor thy father and thy mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath;
but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Ephesians 6: 1-4.

Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," Saints'
Hymnal, No. 291.

Prayer: By a son or daughter.

Greeting:

"Father's Day"

We little folk are very glad
To stand up here and say,
We like to see our daddies have A truly Father's Day.
For on that day we get a chance
To tell to you and you

(point to right and left)
How much we love our daddies, who Are strong and good and true.

(1) "Up to Me Sweet Childhood Looketh," fathers' quartet.

(Use the following words to the tune
"Beecher," Saints' Hymnal, No. 345.)

Up to me sweet childhood looketh,
Heart and mind and soul awake;
Teach me of thy ways, O Father,
For sweet childhood's precious sake.
In their young hearts, soft and tender,
Guide my hand good seed to sow,
That its blossoming may praise thee
Wheresoever they may go.

Give to me a cheerful spirit,
That my little flock may see
It is good and pleasant service
To be taught, O Lord, of Thee.
Father, order all my footsteps;
So direct my daily way,
That in following me, the children
May not stumbling, go astray.

Let thy holy counsel lead me,
Let thy light before me shine,
That they may not stumble over
Thoughtless word or deed of mine.
Draw us hand in hand to Jesus,
He who children ne'er forgot,

"Let the little ones come to Me,
And do thou forbid them not."

tet, from Fathers of Men, page 19.

Poem:

"Growing Like Dad"

(For a small boy. He may carry a big hat and put it on just before beginning to recite.)

I look just like my dad, they say,
I want to be more like him every day.
To be to others kind and good,
To act just as my daddy would.

The remainder of the service may be a series of talks, stories of great men, or a play.
Each leader should choose the material best suited to his branch.

Short Plays: (Few speaking parts)

(1) "From a Far Country," (Prodigal Son).
(2) "Fathers of the Bible," (Noah and sons, Jacob and Joseph, Samuel and parents).

(3) "I and the Lad" (a modern story of fathers).

No. 1.)

Talks:

A father tells his desires for his son or daughter. He realizes the best gifts he can give his child are honesty, courage, courtesy, kindness, sympathy, and forgiveness toward fellow men, and a reverence and love for God.
"If" or "The Bridge Builder" would be excellent poems to use in this talk.

A son or daughter gives a talk in appreciation of the tasks the father has done. The poem, "Father," by Guest, or "My Daddy," may be found valuable.

"My Daddy"

Daddy—whose hair is turning gray,
Whose eyes are tired, but always gay;
It's he who gives his life for me,
And like him I hope to be.

Daddy—a man both brave and true,
A man who always tries to do
What Christ, if he were here today,
Would have him do and have him say.

Poem:

"The Two Brothers"

In Palestine long years ago
(So runs the legend old)—
Where Kedron's sparkling waters flow
Across their sands of gold,
And Mt. Moriah lifts his head
Above the sunny plain;
Two brothers owned, as one, 'tis said,
A field of golden grain.

And when the autumn days had come,
And all the shocks and sheaves
Stood waiting for the "harvest home,"
Among the withering leaves,
The elder brother said one night:
"I'm stronger far than Saul,
My younger brother; 'tis but right
That I should give him all
These sheaves that grew upon the plain
We own together, so
I'll put with his my stacks of grain,
And he will never know!"

Scarce had he left the sheaves of wheat
When quietly there came Across the field, with stealthy feet,
On errand just the same,
The younger lad, who said: "I see
My brother Simon's need
Is greater far than mine, for he Hath wife and child to feed;
And so to him I'll give my sheaves,
It is but right, I know,
And he will never think who leaves
These wheat stacks on his row!"

Next morning when the brothers twain
Began to count their store,
Behold, each found his stacks of grain
To number as before!
"Why, how is this?" in great surprise
Each to himself then said.
"I'll watch tonight and see who tries These tricks when I'm abed!"
And so, halfway across the plain
They met, each one bent o'er
With shocks and sheaves of golden grain
To swell his brother's store!

Good Saul and Simon! Would today
More brothers might be found
Who seek each other's good alway,
And in kind deeds abound.

"A Prayer"

My Father:

In this new day of life which thou dost trust to me,
I cannot help but touch some other lives.
I cannot know their inner longings, griefs or joys;
I cannot see how I might help them best.
But thou, my Father, knowest each of these—
Thy children all are they.
Teach me today, my Father,
Just the words to speak, the gentle, loving act
to do,

That I may cheer and help and lift
The heart that needs.

I would be helpful, Father, through this day—
Not cold or careless, thoughtless or unkind. . . .
All this I dare to ask, my Father,
Because of Him whose days were filled with love,
Whose every act was gentle, thoughtful, kind—
Jesus, Thy Son, my Saviour and my Friend.
Amen.

Thou who taught the thronging people
By blue Galilee;
Speak to us, Thy erring children,
Teach us purity.

Thou whose touch could heal the leper,
Make the blind to see;
Touch our hearts and turn the sinning
Into purity.

Thou whose word could still the tempest,
Calm the raging sea;
Hush the storm of human passion,
Give us purity.

Thou who sinless met the tempter;
Grant, O Christ, that we May overcome the bent to evil
By thy purity.

When you are inclined to be pessimistic about the future, brighten up your mind with a few fundamentals. First of all, there will be millions of people who'll need things. We'll have in this country the greatest productive machine ever devised. We'll have skilled workmen, plenty of raw materials, ships to deliver finished goods and to bring back whatever we need. But we'll have to accept changes.

The old system which showed its weakness during the terrible years of unemployment needs changing. But there is nothing sacred about anything merely because it is old. Only that is sacred which serves. New commercial practices, new management ideas will take the place of older ones that didn't work so well.

Men with flexible minds will find a new world with great opportunities ready to be grasped. The sun will continue to shine in the future.—Thomas Dreier.

Challenges

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

I must have started my writing career very early. In about my fourth year at school I learned a new word, "pliant." Somehow it made a picture, so I proceeded to write a long verse (I called it poetry then). My subject was the wind and its many escapades—even "bending the branches that were pliant." See how I got the word in? Many lines described how plants, animals, and men were upset by this wind, in quite a graphic description. My climax and ending came suddenly when I said, "And the wind went away."

Maybe I then had a glimpse of the adult world whose trials and temptations sorely wound. Maybe I saw a shadow of hardships and grief and the aching hearts of a war-torn sphere. And if I did, the climax remains the same, "And the wind went away," for such things are of the moment—important now but as inconsequential in years to come as the wind. And I still like that word I discovered then, for a pliant soul can withstand these storms, and when they have passed return into place, never once stopping its process of growing.

Recently I had an excellent visit with our Negro mission in Uniontown, Pennsylvania. I was impressed by the quality of their meetings and by their sincerity. The closing prayer gave me a real challenge. Brother William said in it: "Lord, I know you. You introduced yourself to me, and we became acquaintances. Now we're friends."

What a wonderful testimony. It denotes not only God's part in the conversion, but man's desire for his friendship. "Friend" tells of the happiness which results, the willing sacrifice, the self-denial. This tells of much beyond mere entrance into the church, it reminds of daily association growing out of many experiences of learning about each other. Surely this is a testimony to emulate.

A railroad runs outside my office window. On the distant track the mainliners speed by. I like to watch them pass; passengers relaxed or nodding in a nap, fascinating Pullman names, a diner with the chef in white, a glimpse of busy hands sorting mail.

The closer track is just a siding leading to the factories along the way. No streamline engines here, just smoky, puffing machines. No passengers, just perspiring trainmen clambering from car to car. No diner or Pullman, just endless boxcars distinguishable only by the numbers. This is a dull, drab railroad, no scenery, no romance. But this is the train upon whose tracks run the lifeblood (coal and supplies) for these essential industries. There can be no speed, just constant startings and clanking stops. They are anonymous in character, but distinctive in content.

One might produce this analogy in daily life: those who spectacularly speed along from job to job, performing well their functions but likewise carrying fame and name. For every one of these, a thousand freights stand by—the hard work, inglorious jobs are those they fall heir to. Yet each is an essential in this system—and yours to choose how you serve.

Much of what we do in our services is strictly a matter of habit. We sing, pray, hear an anthem, and depart—every Sunday in the same routine. This ritual is an outward expression of inward worship but as we do it over and over again, we often come to consider the performance more important than the state of heart which first prompted it. The ritual thus becomes the all-important part of the meeting.

Thus many attend a communion service—and come away with no different spiritual outlook than they have for any other service.

Sometimes the ritual becomes so important that any change—a new order of service, an added solo, an omission of the usual scripture reading—upsets the congregation. When a change helps to create a spiritual outlook, that change should be welcomed. Christ startled his disciples when he washed their feet.

I found a phrase the other day that describes many of our lives. It is fortunate that few of us never commit the really great sins. We are not participants in the filthy minds and activities of others. Our rebellions have been minor, though discouragements came often. Our sorrows and happiness probably have reached a relative balance. Yet, somehow, our lives are not shining and pure.

There comes this phrase, "a shabby life." A garment that is shabby is worn and often patched. It is not dirty but shows the signs of the oft-needed cleansings. This garment cannot be recognized now as the new one years ago. Through constant use the material has worn and finally loses its full effectiveness.

Look to your spiritual garments. Are they threadbare and rough? When God looks down on his shabby children, they are far from the pattern of the original man he designed. But shabbiness can be overcome by putting on the new garment—be it material or spiritual. Are you satisfied with being not really bad, but just a little shabby?

shine," bearers of beauty in shining armor—the armor of Christ!

A CHRISTIAN'S "IF"

If we could remember all of the beautiful,

Lovely things that we know,
There'd be no room left in these hearts of ours
For the things that are mean and low.

If we could say all of the kindly words,
That our lips have been taught to frame,
There'd be no breath left for saying the things
That would afterward cause us shame.

If we spent all our days in doing the things
That we know to be right and true,
There'd never be time for anything else
On this earth for our hands to do.

Then our feet would be set in the narrow way
That the Master's feet have trod;
And we'd find when we came to the journey's end
That they'd carried us straight to God!

The Goal

Education is not concerned primarily with intellectual luxuries, but with elements which make the individual a valuable member of society.—W. M. Lewis.

News Briefs

Far West Stake

Trenton, Missouri

Pastor, Paul Starks

A week's series of missionary meetings was conducted by Emery E. Jennings, president of Far West Stake, recently. Janice, Phyllis, and Jimmy Matis, children of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Matis of Avalon, Missouri, were baptized at a special service on Tuesday night, December 2, and confirmed on December 7. The missionary meetings were successful and the efforts of Brother Jennings much appreciated. The women meet every first and last Thursday of the month. They are studying the Book of Mormon.

—Nell Lambkin, reporter.

Maple Grove, Missouri

Pastor, Archie Constance

Following a chili supper held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Johnson on January 29, slides were shown by Pastor Archie Constance. A class with Norman Hinderks as teacher was held each Sunday night preceding the pre-Easter service on February 23. Recent speakers have been Emery Jennings, Orville Moffet of St. Joseph, and Joseph Hidy of Stewartsville.

—Mrs. Orville Johnson, reporter.

Bedison, Missouri

Pastor, Harry Jensen

Several from Bedison attended the missionary series conducted by Seventy Eugene A. Theys in Guilford during January. The Leaguers hold a study class the first Friday evening in every month. They also take charge of the evening service the first Sunday in each month. In January, instructions were given on filing financial statements, and many Leaguers made out their inventories.

Several Bedison representatives were at the stake conference held in St. Joseph on March 7, 8, and 9.

THE HILL

By Doris F. Miller

A nostalgic picture of "home" that will stir poignant memories in the minds of many readers.

"The Hill" is a symbol of Graceland. It is an affectionate term we all know and understand. "The Hill" is also a symbol to me of our farm lying aslant in the sun on an Iowa slope. It is a remembrance of my childhood and a growing-up period I shall not know again. From the crest of my hill, Illinois rises out of the Mississippi on the right. The curving, wide, and flat valley, which was a lake in prehistoric eras, unfurls at my feet. The hills continue westward, then north, finally turning east to the sunrise twelve lovely miles away. They completely corral my small home town, the bigger city farther upriver, and farms that happen to be captured. I wonder what ancient god used my valley for a swimming pool?

The distant hills are a smoky teal. Those nearer reveal a man and nature-made pattern of woodland, pasture slopes, and twisting roads. My hill is divided into two sections—the wood and the pasture. In spring, the wood has a faint green haziness to partially conceal its skinny limbs. A bright splotch of pink marks a redbud tree. Under the trees on the spongy, virgin earth, Dutchman's-breeches, spring beauties, purple and yellow violets, jack-in-the-pulpits, wake robins, and sweet Williams beg for attention. Sunday afternoons are flower-picking time, and the scorners of garden varieties climb my hill, scramble over fallen branches, and get their feet muddy to gather huge bouquets that will fill all the vases and overflow into fruit jars.

If you have an eye for them, you can find mushrooms here. They are especially plentiful around the thin trickle of water that meanders down the little ravine in spring only. It dries at its source at the top of the hill in summer. Dad could always find mushrooms and fill his pockets full while I very nobly added two or three to the collection. However, I always took my share of credit for the golden omelettes filled with mushrooms.

The other slope is the pasture. Halfway up is a small grove of walnut trees, scene of many a childhood picnic. A little further is the bush under which I once found the biggest mushroom of the year. At the very top, a little left of middle, is an old mulberry tree that, curiously enough, never has any mulberries. This was my goal on many a Sunday afternoon. There with a magazine or the latest library book, a few crumbs, and field glasses to view the town and surrounding countryside, I was a queen on a green, slightly-tilted throne. The village was full of my subjects whose noisy sounds were dim in my ears. The river was my own private ocean and the ferry, my yacht.

The trains, that were mere smoky worms on the distant Santa Fe, were rushing to do my bidding. Mother brought me back to earth when she blew the whistle that could be heard even at that distance, and my ears and my stomach told me supper was ready.

Dividing the pasture and woods is the road which was built by my father and grandfather. It is rutty, rock strewn clay and has a steep drop on one side. Trees arch over it, suggesting green hands which clasp and unclasp letting a little sunlight sift through like chaff. This cool, narrow, half mile of road wonder winds and turns and climbs till it reaches the top and bursts into the open under a Jonathan tree. On this road, we found cool surcease from the hot afternoon sun that beat and tramped upon the hill.

Most of my working hours on the hill are scratched in my memory by raspberry vines. I received the privilege of picking berries when ten and was paid half of what the outside pickers got. My tray held five pint boxes and, with a partner on the other side of the row, the berries would eventually fill them. I never could pick fast enough to satisfy my grandmother who crated them—or my purse—even though my hands were stained from fuchsia to purple. The odor of hot raspberries, crushed by my careless fingers and the sound of airplane engines of insects are the symbols of the pulsating heat of those July afternoons.

It was a little cooler on Point Lookout, a little jutting piece of pasture which made a comfortable place to eat lunch. From here I could cross the river with my eyes and see Nauvoo climb the opposite hill. The part stone, part brick Nauvoo House, reflected in the still water; the Homestead almost hidden by trees; the roof of the Mansion House; the four white, boxlike bunkhouses; and the old red icehouse Tabernacle are familiar from that distance. At the top of the hill, the town is dominated spiritually and physically by the Catholic church whose steeple

Witnessing for Christ

By Mike Fowler

The life of Christ was a life of challenges. In the last recorded conversation he had with his disciples, he challenged them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. This charge is known as the great commission, and it has been echoed by countless thousands who have seen the need in their society for the gospel of Christ.

The challenge of this message touched the life of Saul of Tarsus, persecutor of Christians, and changed him to Paul, the apostle. It sent Stanley and Livingstone into the jungles of the "dark con-

Apostle Charles Field once said that Latter Day Saints should live lives of such a nature that people would know immediately what their basic beliefs are. He also said that their lives should be unique and different in such a way that they would automatically hold positions of leadership in our society.

E. J. Gleazer, Jr., President of Graceland College, recently said that youth is a time of questioning—not doubting. There is a very significant difference: Questioning implies a study and analysis of a problem and its potential remedies; doubting is usually passive. We are not required to accept any way of life merely on hearsay, but if we accept the great challenge to preach the gospel, we must analyze and study it.

A person is the sum total of his past experiences. A friend of mine says that every time a person speaks, it is really a panel discussion, for that person's thoughts are colored by those who have previously entered his life through conversation, action, and literature. Contact with the great minds through study of such books as the Bible gives us the inspiration to move forward in a life of witnessing for Christ. The inspiration that has come to others can inspire us, and we, in turn, can illumine the lives of those we contact.

Another way we can witness for Christ is by setting goals and keeping our eyes fixed on them. We have all known individuals who could look only at the past. Many times we have heard them say, "I guess I'll never be much good, at least I haven't done very well so far." We are familiar, too, with congregations in which there is much talk about the "good old days." Always, it seems that at some time in the past everything had a golden hue but now there is only disillusionment and frustration.

In witnessing for Christ, we must build on the experiences of the past and look to a new goal. Paul said, "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those continent" to minister to the natives there who were plagued with the ravages of tropical diseases and the oppression of slave traders. It called Charles Wandell and Glaude Rodgers to leave their homes and tell the story of the Restoration to the peoples of the Australasian mission. It has been so vital to so many through the ages that it must surely have some importance in our lives today. We might do well to consider its content as it challenges us to witness for Christ.

Many times we have been told of the importance of telling the gospel and then making it effective by living according to its principles. It's an old and true axiom that states, "What you do speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say."

things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Let us, like Paul, press toward the mark that we may preach the gospel.

all the earnestness at our command, we now appeal to administrative officers, members of the priesthood, parents, and adults generally to provide our young people with understanding, love, and sympathetic, intelligent guidance in these critical days for the world and church. To provide less than this is to be recreant to our trust under God, and to hinder the advance of his kingdom.

brings the earth even nearer heaven. I digested this scene with my lunch until it is as much a part of me as my own flesh.

The whole of this hill and the views gained from it are my father and mother in nature. When I am away from them, they are no further than the distance and time it takes to close my eyes. Graceland's hill and my personal hill, symbols of the best of God and man, will always inspire me to do and be my best in life.

If You Cannot Take Milk

Some people find that milk is not good for them. In substituting for it one should find foods high in calcium and phosphorus, and in Vitamins A, B1, and G. The leafy greens (excluding spinach, because the body does not utilize the calcium in spinach) contain values similar to milk's nutritional elements and ought to be eaten more lavishly by people who cannot use milk. Buttermilk, cheese, egg yolk, meat, whole grains and nuts rather than spaghetti, cake, pie, and sweetened drinks should be included in a diet low or lacking in milk.

LETTERS

Grateful for Blessings

Last August, X rays of my chest showed that my lungs were infected. I was told to wait six weeks and then return to the clinic for another X ray. The Sunday before I was to report, I attended church in East St. Louis and asked for administration. During the prayer, I felt the Spirit of God permeating my body; then I asked the Saints to remember me in their prayers that I might be able to care for my family when I returned home. When the final X ray was taken, it revealed that the infection was completely gone.

Recently, I wrote to the Herald requesting prayers for my small grandson who was afflicted with asthma. He, too, was healed.

I am asking now, that the Saints continue to pray for me and my family. I am the only one belonging to the church, and I do sincerely desire that my husband and children will someday accept the Restored Gospel.

I am grateful for the blessing I have received and I wish to thank all who have remembered me in their prayers. I also wish to express my appreciation to the many who have written, giving me hope and encouragement in my time of trial.

A Tribute to the Late Thomas Newton

(The following letter was written by Mr. Newton's niece, Mrs. Annie Leyendecker.)

It was while Uncle Tom visited in my home that I learned to know the great spiritual depths of his heart and soul. He was always praying not my Father's will, but our Father's will be done on earth as it is in heaven. He often spoke of his wonderful friends and co-workers in the mission field of the Reorganized Church. Although I am a Christian Science practitioner, I had great reverence and respect for Uncle Tom's choice of serving God. We attended his church while he was visiting in Houston and were both asked what we considered the most essential step to promote world progress. I arose and said, "I

"I Will Build My Church"

The first of the new slide sets produced under the direction of the Advisory Committee on Visual Education.

The distinctive features of the Church of Jesus Christ: Ministerial offices, doctrinal principles, spiritual gifts, revelation, and fellowship—illustrated by drawings of the church. Scriptural references are the basis for an authoritative message.

This set has been produced in two forms: single frame filmstrip, and 2" x 2" slides. The cost has been kept as low as possible to allow the widest possible distribution of these missionary aids. The script that accompanies this set is designed for two purposes; (1) to provide a suggestive script for use with the set of slides or filmstrip of the same name; and (2) to acquaint our friends with our convictions concerning the church of Jesus Christ as the Master built it, and as we believe it has been restored through divine command in the latter days. The script is illustrated with reproductions of each slide. Extra copies are available at the prices listed below.

think the greatest thing is spiritual understanding." Then Uncle Tom quoted the familiar verse, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all other things shall be added unto you." He also said that ours should be a practical religion—one which we could live by each day to develop our ability to understand God. Line after line of the books of poems he had published about a year ago revealed his great trust in the sustaining infinite—the love and power of God as taught by the Latter Day Saint Church. Truly his was a life dedicated to God.

Testimonies Wanted

The more wonderful testimonies I receive from the Saints for the book being prepared by the Descendant Pioneers, the more thankful I am to be among those who have heard and obeyed the gospel. I wish to express my appreciation to all who have contributed and to urge those who have promised to write but have failed to do so as yet to send me their testimonies. Many are waiting anxiously for the book, so if you have a contribution to make to it, please send it to me immediately.

What of Tomorrow?

P. S.

It seems so very long ago since peace was ever ours,
And yet—we know so little of the deeply rooted scars
A war can bring—of devastation wrought.
We never will, unless war should be brought
To our own shores . . . Would we, in fear,
Cry out to Him our prayers to hear?

Why should we hope, in an hour of need
He will hear our prayers—that he will heed
Our plea for help?—when through the day
We did not stop along the way
To offer thanks? Why then should he
In troubled times hear you and me?

With little thought, if any, to the Giver there above
We accept the many blessings, the many gifts of love
And ask for more. How can we dare
Accept tomorrow without a prayer?
Take heed! Search deep within your heart
For prayers unsaid, then humble thanks impart.

In the midst of chaos, if troubled times are here
You will feel his very nearness, there'll be no need for fear.
He will be there to guide you, safely see you through,
And your prayers, all answered, will descend on you.
For the very breath of life give thanks to God above
And revel in the warmth and glory of his love.

* He Wanted a Prayer

One of the sweetest stories that has come to us concerns a little boy, a French refugee, who was sick in a hospital and keeping the other patients awake at night with his constant talking. As he could speak only French, the nurses could not understand him and could not guess what he wanted.

Down the corridor there was a thirteen-year-old German girl, also a refugee and quite ill. She could speak a little French and English, and offered to see if she could help. They brought her in a wheel chair to the child's bedside. His eyes were closed, but he talked continuously. She bent her head over to hear him.

After she had listened a moment, she said, "I know what he wants now. He wants a prayer. If you will bow your head," she said to the nurse, "I will make a prayer for him."

The nurse bowed her head, and in the best French she could command the young girl lifted three souls up to the heavenly throne. The boy was soon comforted and dropped asleep.

It is wonderful that the love of God is still able to bring people of all nations, even those who have misunderstood each other, together and make it possible for them to help each other. And if older ones could be as wise and unprejudiced as the children, we would all be much better, and this would be a better world.

This reminds us also of Rudyard Kipling, who lay on his deathbed. He was speaking in a voice so low the nurse could not hear him, but she gathered that he wanted something. "What is it, Mr. Kipling? What do you want?" she asked. "I want my Heavenly Father," he replied.

* A THOUSAND DOLLARS is no good to a man who is headed for a tavern. A dollar is good for a man who is headed for a bank, a library, or a church.

* "God cannot be commanded. But he can be asked."—Alfred P. Haake, in "Guideposts."

* ALLOW ENOUGH TIME whatever you do. Then if anything goes wrong, if you have an accident or delay, you still have a chance to make it up. Doing things at the last minute is often costly and often leads to disappointment and failure.

* MANY A TROUBLE can be solved, especially in the field of strained human relations, simply by forgetting it.

* DO NOT BE DISTURBED if somebody is angry. Remember, he may have trials you don't know about; and in his moment of weakness, he may say something he doesn't mean. Keep quiet. A little later he will recover, and be his normal friendly self again. As his neighbor, it is your privilege to keep your self-control until he regains his.

* CRITICAL PEOPLE are often those who have a very narrow range of appreciations. Learn to like many different kinds of weather, and you will spend less time being unhappy about it. And why should bad weather have a power to make you miserable? The greater the variety of your likes, the more often you will enjoy happy days. You will be happier, too, if you learn to like all kinds of people.

* TAKE A TIP from the robin. Though he spends much of his life on the ground, and gets his living from it, he takes time out to look up every minute or so.

Harmonious Relations

History has shown that strong and able men are apt to have differences of beliefs and opinions. Our experience as a church has demonstrated that strong and able men have not always agreed on questions of procedure and official prerogatives. It is a source of satisfaction, however, that they have been able to collaborate in a common cause in spite of such disagreements.

For many years members of the Joint Council from time to time have sought to reach a common understanding of the respective duties and responsibilities and authority of the First Presidency and the Quorum or Council of Twelve. It is not difficult to see how divergent views have been held, since the law in the Doctrine and Covenants is found in a number of the revelations. Besides the written instructions, precedent and practice, established and otherwise, have had their influence or impress on the private or personal interpretation of the revelations bearing on the subject.

Under the mild and democratic rule of the late Joseph Smith, and during the formative years of the Reorganization, questions of respective authority did not result in sharp conflict, as well they might have; but rather early in the administration of our late president, as the work of the church grew and became more complex there developed serious differences. We must assume—and we gladly acquiesce in the thought—that there was a parity of sincerity, and equal desire on the part of all members of the quorums involved, to arrive at unanimity and the hope that their findings would be in harmony with the divine mind as reflected in the basic law of the church. If any were jealous of their rights, it was only because of their consuming desire to serve with fidelity their Lord and Master. Had they held lightly their duty in the premises, disagreements as to the law probably would not have arisen. Common consent to them did not exclude an exercise of individual judgment; it was not supine acquiescence.

A crisis in this divergence of interpretation came in 1919 which threatened amicable relations for a time; but, as always can be done when men are rightly disposed, an agreement was reached, a working basis on which they could and did proceed.

In 1943 the question of the relations between the First Presidency and the Twelve was again projected in joint quorum council, when the law and procedure were again reviewed. This time by coincidence, the writer, on behalf of the First Presidency, and the two brethren now occupying with him, then members and acting on behalf of the Quorum of Twelve, were appointed a committee to consider and bring in a report with recommendations, which we did. Our work was accepted and approved by the two quorums in council.

The members of the First Presidency as sustained by the church in 1946, from the beginning of their joint labors, have had a sincere desire to help the Quorum of Twelve occupy their rightful place in the great work of the Restoration, a place which can hardly be overestimated. Presidents Garver and Edwards occupied as members of that quorum for nearly a quarter of a century. It would be strange if they did not have mature judgment and knowledge of the work of that quorum. They have evidenced their earnest desire that the Twelve have full recognition and have the approval not only of the First Presidency, but indeed of the whole church. In this way—and only in this way—will the labors of the Twelve be blessed and rewarded, as intended, by an increase of the Spirit's power in the whole body.

With this attitude, then, and with a desire to conserve the greatest good, when the question was again presented this spring, and it was thought by the Twelve the church should know what had been accomplished in interpretation of the law, we deemed it wisdom to make a statement of the matter in our address to the General Conference, which we did and from which we reaffirm the following:

“In our administrative relations with the Quorum of Twelve, we have sought to carry into effect the spirit of a working agreement unanimously adopted by a Joint Council of the Presidency and Twelve on April 26, 1943. This agreement grew out of a careful study of the law and enactments of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12; 120: 4; 123: 23; G. C. R., April, 1884; April, 1894) and recognizes that the Twelve has ‘active supervision and presidency, under the First Presidency,’ over the work in branches, districts, and stakes. . . .

“We believe that this agreement is particularly important at this time, since the church is now confronted with insistently urgent demands that existing branches shall be strengthened and that the work shall be planted in new centers at home and abroad. These two demands are not disparate but complementary to each other. A major purpose in branch organization is more concentrated and more effective missionary testimony, and a major purpose motivating missionary activity is the firm establishment of stable centers of vigorous church life. In view of these facts, we hope and expect that clear recognition of the rightful interest of the chief missionary quorum of the church in all phases of church endeavor will lead to the widespread quickening and wise direction of our missionary testimony.”

The Price of Liberty

Observing people have long noted the adroit methods through the radio and movie media to build up the Catholic Church in the public mind. We have yet to learn that any of the great Protestant Churches have done anything along the same line of endeavor. The Protestant Churches, however, as well as other patriotic agencies are apparently on their guard against other activities more or less insidious, pointing in the same direction.

Liberty, a magazine of religious freedom, of Washington, D. C., in an editorial (issue for second quarter of 1947), sounds a warning to the American people. Under the caption, "Current Attempts to Unite Church and State," they allege a number of bills have been introduced in the National Congress which, though they seem "innocent" or "innocuous," are nonetheless "dangerous."

We could perhaps with profit deal with these proposals at length, but it may be well to call attention to one, for an example, and after giving a list, leave it to our readers to ask their Congressmen and Senators for copies.

This provides that a commission of twelve members is to be established "to consider and select a suitable form and site for a national memorial, to be located in the District of Columbia, commemorating the contributions of members of the various religious faiths to American military and naval history, particularly during World War II."

Maybe this bill could not be construed as "an establishment of religion," but it does seem to attempt to exalt religious soldiers and sailors above the equally brave, equally self-sacrificing, equally patriotic nonreligious servicemen. Whether a citizen is religious or not is none of the Government's business. All any government has a right to ask of any citizen is that he discharge his civic obligations without interfering with the equal rights of his fellow citizens.

The bill is discriminatory. It is dangerous because it proposes to expend the taxes of all the people to elevate and praise a special class. If this group is to be especially honored in the District of Columbia, why not in the various States? We might have many monuments. Religious folks are not always humble or unpretentious.

If this stimulates our readers, let them get copies of the following measures now pending in Congress for consideration and careful study. If they believe such bills constitute a threat to our national Constitution, or are dangerous in that they are merely propaganda for certain churches, or if any will result in publicity in favor of any church or churches as against others, then protest their approval by writing to those who represent you at Washington, those who are the servants of the people.

These measures are: Senate Joint Resolution No. 2 (referred to), House Joint Resolutions Nos. 20, 36, and 58; Senate Bills Nos. 199 and 472; House Bills Nos. 156 and 263.

President Truman

On our recent visit to the National Capital, we had the privilege of meeting President Truman at the White House. He appeared to be in good health and spirits and talked earnestly about the difficulties presented in our relations with Russia and of what he desires to do in stabilizing our national economy. He spoke appreciatively of our General Conference resolution, a copy of which had been sent to him.

On April 13 President Truman wrote us as follows:

Dear President Smith:

I appreciate more than I can say your warm letter of April seventh extending greetings from the ministers, officers, and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

This pledge of loyalty and support is heartening and gives one courage for the day's work. I am grateful also for the assurance that I am remembered in your prayers. Very sincerely yours,

Harry S. Truman,

Israel A. Smith.

A Time of Accounting

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 70: 1-3.

Text: "None are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."

INTRODUCTION

This morning as we approach the closing hours of the Conference, I have been made to feel that we have had a most enjoyable experience; but, while it has been enjoyable, it has impressed upon my mind in a greater degree than ever before in my experience, a sense of the responsibility which rests upon our church; and because this is true, it rests upon each one of us individually. So I have come, conscious of my own human limitations in the face of the tremendous task ahead of us. Yet I come with faith and with the assurance that if we respond to the challenge of the great program which has been unfolded to us in the hours in which we have been in association in the business of the Conference, and to the challenge which comes because of the great opportunities open to us, we shall be blessed in the attainment of our goals. I hope that as I come, presenting some aspects of what I believe to be the divine law of the church, it may be received in the spirit in which it is presented, as an unfolding of the gospel law to which God would have us respond.

THERE IS A TIME when each must render an accounting of his stewardship. In the Scriptures which I read, emphasis was made on the accountability of the men to whom special reference was made—Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, John Whitmer, Sidney Rigdon, W. W. Phelps—who were placed as stewards over the revelations. They were admonished that an accounting would be required of them of their stewardship in the Day of Judgment.

In this revelation which imposed such serious consequences upon these men, there is also placed upon every member of the church who has raised his voice in testimony, every member who has accepted the doctrine of baptism, the responsibilities of an accounting. All members of the church are accountable to God through the law of stewardship. We have learned that stewardship is essential to our church life; it is essential to our church economy; it is the basis on which God's kingdom is to be established. It was the premise laid down at the very beginning of time, the time when God created man, and his relationship to his physical creation was pronounced—this as we find recorded in the first chapter of Genesis, verses 27 and 28:

And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so.

And I, God, said, Let them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

Thus there was given to man the right of dominion, the right to subdue that physical creation—to take that physical creation and use it to the purposes that God intended man should use it, to supply the needs of man; but more than that, to share that which had been God-given with all men throughout all the world, that they might enjoy also the abundance of God's creation.

YET, WHILE man has had dominion over God's physical creation, God has nevertheless evidenced his authority over man, even though man has had the right of agency; for when man insisted upon pursuing the ways of wickedness, there came that ultimatum which preceded the great flood: "I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth."

Down through the ages there have been repeated evidences of the power and majesty of God and of his determination to accomplish through man that which was in his mind from the beginning of time—the establishment of his kingdom—that kingdom envisioned by Daniel, who spoke as divinely recorded in the 4th chapter, 3rd verse:

How great are his signs! and how mighty are his wonders! his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation.

It was to bring to pass the establishment of that kingdom on the earth that God gave his Only Begotten Son "that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." This same man, this Son of God, whose triumph over death we have recently commemorated, stated his divine purpose and mission on the earth in these words, "I am come that ye may have life and have it more abundantly."

As we scan the pages of history, we find there has been made a record of great events which have affected the lives of men in their relation one to another and in the relation of nations one to another; and we have learned to evaluate these relationships to God and to evaluate events which take place in these various relationships of man to man and of man to God as a part of the divine plan of God. We have learned that life is made up of events which transpire and of actions which take place; and that of these events and of these actions man must give an accounting. This was emphasized in the parable of the wise steward, which was referred to in Luke, where the Master called one of his disciples, saying, "How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward."

IN THE LAST two decades there have been those who have arisen to positions of power, and who have used that power for selfish interests, even to the point of bringing destruction and suffering to millions of people. We have witnessed the rise of aggressor nations under the leadership of men without conscience, without a sense of responsibility to God, without a sense of responsibility to their fellow men; and then we have witnessed that these leaders, without conscience, without a sense of responsibility, have finally succumbed under the power of those who in righteous indignation arose to protect the rights of humanity and spoke in the interests of God and of his divine purpose. For those leaders without conscience and without a sense of responsibility, there came the day of accounting when it was necessary for them to stand before the judgment bar of those whom they had sought to destroy. There is also the day when these same leaders stand before the judgment bar of Almighty God.

There does indeed come to all the day of accounting; and what is more significant, that accounting is not only to those with whom we live, our close associates, but ultimately that accounting must be made to society as a whole; and even more than that, the accounting must be made before the judgment bar of God.

For every action there is a corresponding result. For every act, man must assume the consequences. This has been true down through the ages, since the beginning of time. There are those in our world today who evade or seek to evade the responsibility of their own actions.

There are those who seek to hide by excuse or by other device the consequences of those acts within their own lives; but there is no evasion—there is no way of subterfuge—there is no way finally and ultimately but to stand squarely before the judgment bar of God to face the consequences of the acts of one's lifetime.

We have referred to the records of nations that have eventually decayed and disintegrated when their leaders have arisen to thrones of power and with ruthlessness have oppressed those who were weaker. The course of history is replete with the rise and fall of great nations of the past, and today we are passing through another period of world crisis. It is the day of accounting for the past, but even more, it is the day of accounting for the present. War-torn nations and peoples are impoverished and in distress. The course taken by those nations capable of helping and of rendering assistance will, to a large extent, determine the future of our world. Help extended in time of need may be the turning between more war and bloodshed, or peace and contentment.

I was deeply gratified when there was brought to the floor of this Conference action supporting the President of the United States; and the implications of that document were such that we who are able, and because our nation is strong, should support our President in the extension of aid to those war-torn nations that are destitute, impoverished, in need of the physical resources which are a part of God's creation. I am happy that our church has placed itself on record as giving support to the action of this great nation of ours to extend a helping hand to those in distress.

OF ALL NATIONS of the world qualified to extend assistance, our nation is most powerful. It is nevertheless a time of national accounting for us, a time when great decisions are being made, a time for careful consideration of our relationships with nations of lesser power. Whether we are qualified to make these decisions only the future will tell. For us, the average citizens who are seemingly without power, whose lives apparently do not have much impact upon the destiny of the nation as a whole, we wonder what the future holds for us. Are we to take part in the accounting rendered at this time? Is our nation to make those decisions which will turn the tide from present chaos to order and progress? Who can tell? Can we as members of the Church of Jesus Christ relate ourselves and our lives to these great events which are transpiring today? Or are we just little, insignificant people without conscience, without responsibility, without power? God doesn't think so, for through his Son, Jesus Christ, he impressed upon all men everywhere the great worth of the individual, the tremendous value of personality; and through his Son, Jesus Christ, he evidenced the fact that there is present within the individual a potential power to demonstrate the divine will and the power and majesty of God.

There is some evidence that groups within our political economy are taking stock of themselves and seeking to chart a course which will conserve the gains attained up to the present time. Other groups are stubbornly refusing to face the facts of the present crisis. No accounting is being made; the time of accounting is deferred. We look to those groups—political, labor, capital—and we are concerned. We hope for progress. But this morning as we look over the vast panorama of great events which are transpiring and seek to study the consequences and results of impending actions and present events, we find that it is essential for us to turn our faces inward, and in that turning inward to draw from those heavenly sources which are available to us, that our own personalities, our own weaknesses might be revealed to us, that we might understand more clearly our dependence upon God, that we might desire to reach forward and touch his hand, and in so doing gain strength sufficient for the task which is ours in the building of the kingdom. Even as these other groups face the time of accounting, so do we as a church have an account to render.

A GENERAL CONFERENCE is primarily for such a purpose. To what end have we been meeting here together? To what end have we enjoyed the association of men and women believing in the gospel of Jesus Christ? To what end have we conducted our business? To what end have we looked forward to the accomplishment of the work of the future?

The First Presidency rendered an accounting to the church of their stewardship during the past year, at the same time outlining new objectives that challenge the attention of the church in the years which are ahead. I thrilled to the depths of my soul when I read the first introductory paragraph of that message:

It is with pleasure that we render an account of our stewardship as presidents of the high priesthood during the past year, and indicate the lines along which we believe the church should advance in the immediate future.

The Quorum of Twelve—the twelve Apostles—came with their report, giving an accounting of their stewardship, of progress made, of objectives not yet attained. The Twelve have expressed concern for our church members scattered abroad—made reference to the sending of Apostle McConley that through this there may be some evidence that we are accepting responsibility to our church members in Europe, to nurture them and to stimulate the work in the European field. The Twelve also emphasized that it is committed to the development of missionary activities throughout the whole church. They, too, recognize the responsibility of the church in these words:

In conclusion, we cannot be unmoved as we see the definite shift of world leadership, politically, industrially, financially, and morally to this country of America, without also being impressed with the grave responsibilities which rest upon us as a church.

The time is coming when our stewardship of the revelations to which reference is made in the introductory Scripture which I read will be at hand. The time of our accounting is present, and I find the councils of the church responding to this challenge as evidenced in the reports which have been submitted to the Conference.

I read from the report of the Council of Presidents of Seventy:

A seventy is primarily called and sent forth to be a special witness for Christ. In an important sense, this is likewise the mission of the church of Jesus Christ. It is vital, then, that men of deeply moving convictions as well as of intelligence shall be sought out for this specific work that is so vitally a part of the very spiritual lifeblood of the church. In emphasizing this, we are not desirous of merely focusing attention upon the Quorum of Seventy, but rather upon the need and work of the church, as the body of Christ, to function in its divinely designed mission and ministry to the world.

The Presidents of Seventy feel deeply the weight of the responsibility of their work. Without divine guidance we can not rightly direct the work we are called upon to perform. We, therefore, sincerely request of the other quorums and of the entire church membership their support in faith and prayer.

This is a plea to respond to the spirit of the Restoration—that spirit which came forth with the commandment, “Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.”

What were the revelations over which these men were stewards?

Ye are chosen out of the world to declare my gospel with the sound of rejoicing as with the voice of a trump, lift up your hearts and be glad, for I am in your midst.—Doctrine and Covenants 28, September, 1830.

This was the message to those men in the early church—to Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, Whitmer, Rigdon, and others. These men discharged their stewardship responsibilities, so there came to us the revelation of divine will; there came to us the revealment of those commandments which were to guide us in preparation and work in the building and establishment of the kingdom of God.

TODAY AGAIN we emphasize the fact that we have a time of accounting. A study of all of the reports which have been submitted to the Conference indicates that specific responsibilities have been assumed by various quorums and departments of the church. The objectives outlined in all of these reports to which reference has been made—the reports of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, the Council of Seventy, the High Priests, the Radio Department, the Department of Religious Education, the reports of our institutions—all of these indicate the need for financial support if the work of these departments is to go on and their objectives are to be attained; if the purposes outlined are to be achieved, then there will be need for financial support greater than we have ever given in the years of the past.

There are those today who would rest upon the oars of achievements of the past and who would say that we have arrived because we have found it possible to accumulate resources beyond our immediate needs; but when we evaluate the objectives of the program outlined in these reports to Conference, it is obvious to the person who will take the time to evaluate the cost, that we are faced with tremendous needs; we have not reached a point where we can relax in our endeavors.

We of the Presiding Bishopric have rendered an accounting to the Conference of the stewardship pertinent to our work. We have given a report of the funds gathered, how they have been disbursed, and made recommendations through the Board of Appropriations, approved by the board and by the Conference, for the allocation of funds, with objectives set out for future consideration affecting the temporalities of the church. This is as it should be, for stewardship always requires an accounting. It was to this end that the Lord gave instructions that none is exempt from the law who belongs to the church of the living God.

AS WE LOOK to the future, we see the need for a continuation of our responsibility as stewards. Let us consider our immediate stewardship responsibility to the church. Among other things, the Presidency emphasizes the need for the strengthening of missions abroad. They call for wise and prepared gathering to Zion; they are not saying that the Saints of the church shall not gather, nor are we of the Bishopric saying that the Saints of the church shall not gather; we join the Presidency in saying that the time has come for the preparation for the gathering, but let this preparation be in harmony with the law as revealed.

The Presidency calls for the training of the priesthood, co-ordination of the work of the quorums, and specifically set up immediate and long-time programs for branches and stakes to pursue our missionary task and advance the gathering with vigor. These and other major activities have been outlined by the Presidency in its report. We realize that the carrying out of this program will be just in proportion that we as members of the church assume our stewardship responsibilities and comply with the temporal law.

With the Bishopric, the responsibility is that of gathering funds to provide for the financing of the cost involved in carrying out such a program. A careful and conservative administration of funds is essential, the teaching of the law of stewardship, the teaching of the law of the gathering, an emphasis on the need for compliance with law, a call for the filing of financial statements, the paying of the tithe. But the bishopric cannot carry on the full program of teaching; it must be accepted as the responsibility of every member of the priesthood, of every church school teacher, the responsibility of every person who can, in conversation with his neighbor, point toward the goals of the church and impress each one with a sense of his responsibility to support the church through the filing of the financial statement, the paying of the tithe, that these programs may be carried forward. Every person is accountable. Every person should be taught.

THE GOALS OF THE church challenge us. The goals of financial administration to achieve these broad goals of the church challenge every member of the Order of Bishops and our staff of agents and solicitors. For those who have carefully studied the reports to the Conference, it will be observed—and I wish you would note this carefully—that the church has arrived at a point where we must consider carefully the direction in which we are to go. There must be more additions to the missionary personnel. There must be more intensive organization of the local priesthood to the specific task of increasing our membership. Our administrative costs, however, are getting top-heavy and the cost of administration is out of proportion to the results achieved. It is an imperative need at the present time that we increase our numerical strength. Therefore, there must come the challenge to every individual, to every member of the church, to do what he can to bring new members into the church. It is not only that there might come initial strength to the church, but there is the need that every person in the world has to hear the sound of the gospel message to come to an understanding of the divine purpose.

We have assumed the responsibility of world evangelism and the responsibility of Zionic organization. We have assumed the responsibility of a well-directed gathering, of the organization of stewards, the building of houses of worship to meet our needs, of purchasing lands for the gathering. All of these require large sums of money. We are not a rich church. Our strength lies in the devotion and consecration of humble people. We must reach outward and touch the lives of people throughout the world and through our consecration bring to the church the additional strength that is needed. The need is great; the opportunities are unlimited. The church is at a point where it can render an accounting of its stewardship. Can we say that a time of accounting is at hand? Can we see in the coming conference period an increase in the number of tithepayers, the number of financial statements filed? Can we increase our membership? Can we respond to the challenge the day brings? We can if we are willing to recognize that this is the time of our accounting.

Were those revelations over which Cowdery and the others were stewards, of the divine will? If they were, and if they still represent the divine will, let us then move forward with faith in God. Let us respond to the challenge of the quorums of the First Presidency and of the Twelve and the Seventies. Let us consecrate our wealth, our resources to the cause of Christ and to the building of his kingdom. Let us, in fact, in the assumption of stewardship responsibilities, re-dedicate and re-consecrate the life that God has given us, and then moving forward in faith and in association with our fellows, seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion, to the end that the gospel of Jesus Christ may not only increase throughout the entire world, but that the ensign of his kingdom may be set up in this Center Place, as God intended.

To this end I ask the prayers of each and every person here, that we may work together to the accomplishment of the goals toward which we have turned our faces and our task.

The past is only the present become invisible and mute; and because it is invisible and mute, its memoried glances and its murmurs are infinitely precious. We are tomorrow's past.—Mary Webb.

The Family---

A Seed-Plot of Spiritual Nurture

BY F. M. McDOWELL

Motivated by convictions similar to those set forth in this article, the Department of Religious Education, in co-operation with the editor of church school materials, Elder C. B. Hartshorn, has sponsored and published several quarterlies dealing with the church and home. Among these are "Planning the Zion Home," by E. J. Gleazer, Jr., "The Latter Day Saint Home of Today and Tomorrow," by Alice Burgess, "The Church and Home in Mutual Endeavor," by F. M. McDowell, "The Child Grows Up in Church and Home," a symposium.

Leaders interested would do well to address the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, for a leaflet (free) entitled, "The Church and Home," which reviews new courses now available in this important field.

Recently there has come to our attention a British publication entitled The Family and the State, by W. F. Loft-house. Since this book so splendidly represents some of the best of the current thinking in the field of family life and since the heart of its message is so thoroughly Christian and, dare we say, Latter Day Saint, in so many respects, we shall here briefly review its contents, especially as such deals with the unique place or social significance of the home in social life.

The purpose motivating and the spirit underlying this splendid book may be briefly summarized in the words of the author as follows:

"The book is written under the stress of the convictions that the family, in some shape or other, is inextricably intertwined with human life; that the conditions of its existence point to the highest type of human conduct; that in the actual course of its history it has been at once a cause of blessing and of misery to the different races of mankind; that under the influences of the social and economic changes taking place, especially in this country, before our eyes, its power to produce either effect may be substantially diminished. The Christian, I have urged, will see in the family a pattern which rests in the will of God; liable to corruption and degradation through the folly and ignorance and sin of man, but intended to prepare him for the divine society where men have received authority to become sons of God."¹

What are the basic contributions of the home and family to social life and human welfare?

1. Social life is a partnership, and the family is partnership in its simplest form. Even economic life is in essence but a "co-operation in sharing in production and a sharing in enjoyment." It is just this sharing that is learned and practiced first of all and best of all in the family. Here, if at all, men learn "to respect, co-operate, and the recognition of mutual responsibility." In the family the purposes, spirit, and techniques of genuine partnership in human affairs come to be understood, practiced, and in a great measure achieved.

2. It is in the home and family that we acquire genuine affection—attachment for others. Love is cultivated and expressed in the relationships of the family as nowhere else. From the family it tends to move out and express itself in other and larger groups and relationships. Note that the terminology of the family, "fatherhood" and "brotherhood," are used to define the relationship of the kingdom of God.

3. The state, at its best, exists to make secure the good life of its citizens. The state soon learns that if human values are to be preserved, individual citizens must become persons; i. e., must develop personalities. Government not only seeks such but depends upon such. Now there is no better place for the development of personality than the family-like group. Here "each member needs and is needed by the rest." Here "each receives according to his needs and gives according to his power." (Familiar language to Latter Day Saints,) and this is indeed the essence of the new society which must come to be.

4. The family is the bulwark of morals. Negatively, the family provides the best leash for the passions of men. More important than this, it is in the home and family that the rules of the good life and the rules of a good society come first to be understood, appreciated, and practiced. There the rights of others take precedence. There the individual becomes the end and not the means of living. In the home and family, we perhaps first of all and best of all grow in understanding until we can appreciate the words of the Master, "for their sakes, I sanctify myself."

5. Nothing, not even the church, can replace the family as an institution or means of religious nurture. Dr. Loft-house says: "Religion is well aware that nothing can replace the family altar and the family pew. The abiding lessons are those which are learned at the mother's knee. Today, when complaints are universal in religious circles that family religion is breaking down, the Church is a poor substitute as a 'tutor' to bring men to Christ. The church itself has a gloomy prospect before it if there are no families to send their children to Sunday school or to bring them to the public worship of God."²

The family teaches that "order, reverence, and love" which constitute the very heart of religion. "There men learn by practice to care for those in need. There they learn to share mutual woes." There for each other is "shed the sympathizing tear." There the door is locked against pride, selfishness, and lust, and there trouble, by becoming a common cross of those united in fellowship, is transformed into an ever-renewing and richer fellowship.

Dr. Loft-house concludes:

"If then we may see in the family the handiwork of the Master who made men in his own image, male and female, husband and wife, and therefore parent and child, we can surely detect a far-reaching design, suggested by those ancient words of Genesis, wherein the family, the divine pattern for human life, is the seed-plot for all that makes for excellence in conduct and reverence in worship, the joy that springs out of pain, the magic that touches things human till they are lifted to the skies."³

Cameo Earring Found

During the General Conference, a woman lost one of a pair of cameo earrings, valued highly for sentimental reasons. Another woman found it, and forgetfully carried it in her purse until the last day of the conference before turning it in to the Lost and Found department. Now the name of the loser is lost. If she or her friends reads this item, will she please write, giving an identifying description so that we may return it to her? PITTSBURG HOUSE

A Story by Winifred Milner

It was a small, two-story brick house, similar to many houses in that district of Pittsburg, and it snuggled in between two other houses, looking old but well cared for. Perhaps it was the way little old Donna Maria de Hernandez always kept clean pillows in the porch swing, with a woolen frazada folded in the seat in winter, that gave it the comfortable air of well-being. Maybe it was the black paint that covered the iron railing that ran around the porch, or the redness of the brick pillars supporting it, or it may have been the yard. Even in winter, the yard had a groomed look; the sidewalks were always swept clean of litter; the leafless shrubs had a pruned appearance; there were no weeds or grass protruding through the snow; one knew at a glance that the owners took great pride in keeping up the place.

Inside the house was the same careful neatness. Age marked everything, but it was not an ugly aging. The pieces of furniture had been chosen with an eye for taste and beauty. They were not expensive, but they had stood up well.

It was a little past the noon hour. A meal of vegetables and meat had just been completed in the dining room, with most of the food still untouched on the table. Seven people sat in tense silence around the table. The silence hung over the room as though unpleasant things had been spoken, and more were to follow—as though each waited, hesitating to proceed, holding back words that were frozen on the tongue.

Senora Maria de Hernandez sat at her end of the table, a frail little woman staring at the empty chair at the other end, feeling the pain inside her as she pressed her small hands together in her lap. Yesterday they had buried her husband, Don Jose Hernandez. The others must not guess how old and frightened she felt. What an odd thing to be sitting here trembling at what her own children had been saying. Here they were, all her family together for the first time in months, and angry because she did not want to go away from Pittsburg, from this house, from all the familiar things that had been her life for nearly half a century. They did not believe her, or perhaps they did not think it was important when she told them that she could not be happy or content away from this house, away from this street, away from the friends that she knew and understood.

Enrique, her eldest son was beating a tattoo on the table with the fingers of his left hand, while the other hand toyed with a spoon. Senora Maria stopped staring at the empty chair and watched him with small eyes black as jet beads. If she had died instead of Don Jose, he would have known how to deal with the stubbornness of his children.

Enrique's voice was firm and determined when he spoke. "Seventy is too old to live alone, madre." He pronounced the seventy as though he meant one hundred. "Tomorrow when we leave this house, you are going along with us, to stay."

He spoke with such finality that she caught the table with trembling hands. Could it be that she was really too frail to keep things going here without Don Jose? Her eyes moved from one to the other of them, around the table. It was useless to ask anyone of them to live with her here. They were New Yorkers, and they would not exchange New York for Pittsburg. Her daughter Ramona, and Ramona's husband Diego were nodding and smiling their approval at Enrique, as though a woman of seventy had no right to make decisions for herself. "You'll like the arrangement once you get used to it, madre." Ramona's tones were wheedling. "It isn't as if you were going to have to live with anyone of us all of the time. You'll spend half a year with Enrique, and the other half with me. New York City is a nice place, once you get used to it."

Ramona's eight year old son sat between his parents, fidgeting on his chair, as if he wanted to leave the table but was afraid he would miss out on the excitement. Now he looked at his mother with his brown eyes big and troubled. "Where will she sleep when she lives with us? We have only two beds."

"With you, darling. Won't that be nice?"

"No. She's a girl and I'm a man. Men don't sleep with girls."

"Hush, child," his father said sharply.

Senora Maria spoke gently to Ricardo. "Have no fear. I shall not sleep in your bed. It is here I shall be staying."

Enrique seemed to lean across the table. "You are coming with us, so say no more. An hour ago we called the real estate agency and listed your house for rent. Renting the house was Ramona's idea. If it were left up to me, I'd sell it. Real estate in Pittsburg brings a high price now. You will never have a chance to sell for so much again, and we could use the money." His eyes traveled past her and rested on his sixteen year old daughter. "You did call the agency, didn't you, Josefa?"

"I called them. It was a cruel thing to do." Josefa ran to her grandmother and hugged her bent trembling shoulders. "It was a wicked thing we did, father, do you hear?" Tears ran down the girl's cheeks.

Senora de Hernandez clung to Josefa, rocking and moaning. "It is my house—my home. Strangers I cannot let into it. They will ruin everything." And she was thinking: In Enrique's house they will give me a bed in the living room, because Josefa has a single bed, and there are no spare bedrooms in the house. Old women go to bed early. Josefa will have no place to bring her friends. Her voice moved out to fill the room. "I must stay in this house."

"You are making yourself ill," Josefa whispered, and she sighed. "It is no use. You can't win when you fight him. Father always gets his way—always."

Nobody seemed to listen to Maria de Hernandez except Josefa. Nobody seemed to care that New York frightened her, that she was afraid to walk alone in the New York streets, that her children's small, cramped apartments seemed to shut off her breathing, because there were no yards, or privacy, only the parks to go to for quiet moments alone. She wished that she were brave enough to tell them that she did not understand Enrique's wife, Luisa, who insisted upon being called Louise. Luisa knew how things were between them. Why didn't she speak up when she knew that just a two weeks' visit in the spring left them speaking to one another in strained politeness, with their nerves raw and edgy, each enduring the other for the sake of Enrique and Josefa. Why must she sit stiffly in her chair now without saying a word, looking at the tablecloth and turning her water glass round and round in her hand. Was it Enrique she was afraid of?

Ramona stood up yawning. "I'll do the dishes and pack them. I want the good china sent to my house. Afterward I'll pack the linens."

Luisa stopped twirling the water glass. Her eyes were challenging as they met Ramona's. "Not all the linens. I want half." Her hand moved over the smooth surface of the tablecloth that hung nearly to the floor. "You can't buy things like this in the stores now. I don't know how your parents managed to buy such beautiful things. We've never been able to afford things like this."

Senora Maria dropped her lids over her eyes to hide their pain. China—linens—silver—the children coveted them without thought of the sweat and careful counting of money that had produced them. They would begin sorting her treasures now, and packing them in separate boxes for themselves. She had spoiled them when they were children, perhaps because she had loved them too well, and now here they sat, selfish creatures with their hands ready to clutch the best away from each other. Upstairs were blankets of thick wool, quilts in gay colors that she had pieced and put together herself with the smallest of stitches, and sheets whose fine linen threads had been woven on the looms of Rosario. They would go together to do the sorting; they would stay together, afraid that one would profit above the other. They did not care that they were packing away her heart; they did not even remember that over the years she had given them presents, sheets, blankets, quilts with hours of work in the making. They did not ask her if she wished to part with all these possessions that meant Jose and his goodness to her.

With downcast eyes she raised herself from the table, and without looking at them she asked to be excused. She went into the living room where she could be alone. It was a fine, old room. She touched the familiar things in it with loving hands, and she kept moaning to herself over and over, "Jose—Jose—Jose."

Outside the snow fell silently against the windowpane. By now his grave would be covered with snow, and all the bright colored funeral flowers would be covered, too, with the beauty and life frozen out of them.

Donna Maria de Hernandez went to the sofa where her black lace mantilla lay folded. She picked it up and unfolding it, she put it around her small shoulders. She was shivering, but it was not the temperature in the room that was making her cold.

On top of the radio, among other things was a small musical powder box. She picked it up, listening while it played its familiar tune. The music made her remember a night when she and Jose were young and lived in Rosario. He had taken her to the Fiesta de Flores, en la Plaza de Juegos. Perhaps it was the things they had talked about that night that made her know how deeply she loved Jose. He told her he was going away from Rosario, to Los Estados Unidos—a promised land —a land of prosperity and plenty—a land where wheat harvests were so large that there were not enough granaries and freight cars to hold them all. In this land was timber enough to build fine houses for every family in that country, with enough left over to cover all the vast unoccupied acres that stretched for miles away from Rosario. In this pais, gold lay in the streets thicker than the dust in the streets of Rosario. It was a place of opportunity and freedom.

And she had murmured, "Take me with you, Jose."

As soon as they were married, they had come to the United States. There was no gold to be picked up in the streets, but there was work. People spoke a babbling tongue called English, a harsh sounding language of which she knew not even a word, but there was laughter and good will in the land. And Jose's great faith in the new country kept her, when homesickness for Rosario had all but stifled her.

In Rosario, Jose had been a stone cutter, and eventually he made friends with a man who got him a good job in Pittsburg as a stone cutter. At first she had disliked the fogs, the winds, the crowds. Then she had gone with Jose to school, and learned to understand the babbling English, until gradually she came to like the sound of it. But the names of her children she always spoke in Spanish, because she thought her own language was more musical. Pittsburg was a friendly place, so that in time it no longer hurt to think of Rosario. But next to her husband and her children, the brick house was her love. Here her heart was at home, her soul at peace.

The ringing of the doorbell brought an end to her thoughts of Rosario and early Pittsburg. She clutched the music box with tight fingers and waited. If it were someone to look at her house—trespassing strangers! She watched white faced for one of the children—Enrique. The bell rang again, a shaper, more persistent ring. Then she put the music box in its place on the radio and went to answer the door herself.

A middle aged couple stood there, and they did want to know about renting the house. He was tall and thin, and she was short and plump. As soon as Maria de Hernandez opened the door they came inside, and seemed to fill the room. They were very bold, moving about with an air of possession, as if everything were already theirs, and nothing belonged to the senora any more. The woman went about sniffing at everything, and examining all the furniture with her hands. Suddenly she began to laugh. The laughter began at low C and moved up the scale with an affected sound, as though each variation had been practiced to produce a certain effect. "What will our friends think when they see all this old furniture, Frederick? Did you ever see anything so old fashioned?"

With the first laughing notes, Maria de Hernandez' frail body began to take on height, and two red spots appeared in her pale cheeks.

The woman had no eyes for Senora Maria; she was concerned only with her husband. "I suppose we could put gay paper on the walls, something in bright colors. These pastel walls look like something a Spaniard would choose. I can't stand them."

Senora Maria came forward quietly, walking with her proud head high. Even in her anger there was a dignity about her; she knew she was a lady, and because she knew, she forced self-control, with movements so slow and deliberate that her feet made almost no sound at all they moved forward to face the woman who was belittling her. Anger showed only in her eyes, two blazing points of flame, black as ebony wood and as hard. "Go now." She spoke the words ever so gently.

The woman turned to her husband. "Can you beat that? The old lady is asking us to go." Her affected laughter did gymnastics on the scale again. Then she turned back to Maria. "If you don't want the walls redone, I suppose we can leave them as is. But we weren't going to ask you to pay for anything. We were going to do them on our own. How's that? No bills for you, and a complete renovating job."

"I said go now." Senora Maria de Hernandez stood white lipped, pointing to the door. "This house I will not rent you. You cannot name big enough money to get it."

"But—but—" The tall man and the plump lady looked at one another in alarmed dismay. He coughed disconcertedly and teetered back and forth from the toes to the heels of his black shoes. "We want this house, madam," he said. "Houses are scarce in Pittsburg."

The senora raised herself as tall as her five feet one would allow. "Go! You do not like my house. You do not value old things that are good. Sala! Go! Out now!"

"Look, lady—" The tall man bent down and would have put his hand on Maria de Hernandez shoulder, but she stepped back haughtily, drawing her mantilla more snugly around her slight shoulders.

"Tell you what I'll do," he said. "I'll slip you an extra five and ten green every month above the OPA ceiling price

Religious Education Moves Ahead

At General Conference

By Chris B. Hartshorn

Conference visitors who came looking for helps to assist them on their jobs back home had twelve offerings from which to choose. The complaint we heard was not that their needs were not anticipated, but that they could be in only one place at one time. This required some choices and decisions which made for considerable wear and tear on original thought.

Each day was started by a worship service which had for its general theme: "As the Master Taught." Christ was presented to the group which crowded into the Stone Church Annex at 7:30 each morning as "The Leader," by George Mesley; "The Prophet," by F. H. Edwards; "The Student," by E. J. Gleazer, Jr.; "The Shepherd," by C. V. Graham; "The Steward," by Walter Johnson; and "The Saviour," by Glen Johnson.

WHERE SHALL WE GO?

A Zion's League Assembly and three sectional meetings were held during the next hour starting at 8:30 a.m. Roy Cheville had a large group of young people and their leaders with him each day in the Auditorium. The general theme was: "These Things We Share." On successive mornings these topics received attention: "The Church Flag," "The Church's Hymns," "The Church's Persons," "The Church's Books," "The Church's World-wide Fellowship," and "A Common Task."

The sectional meetings concerned themselves with "More and Better Teaching." The children's section was under the leadership of Mrs. R. L. McFarlane. The first morning was given to a flannelgraph demonstration of the first six chapters of Between the Covers of the Book of Mormon. This was presented by Lillian Hadley of Chicago. The next morning was given to the "Use of the Story" under the leadership of Blanche Green. This was followed by a morning devoted to "Music," led by Beatrice Darling. Among other things in this field was shown the method of teaching new songs by use of charts. On Thursday morning, Fern Sears discussed "The Lesson Plan." She suggested that each teacher should first read through the entire quarterly for an overview. A list should be made of the reference books and the supplies needed. These should be ordered at once. Then as a part of an over-all plan, on one sheet of paper should be listed the data on the quarter's work under these headings:

Lesson Number	Topic	Objective
Scripture References		Visual Aids
Activity	Carry Over (from last lesson)

She also showed how the lesson plan, or immediate plan, for the day's lesson was developed and used. A copy of this type plan has been carried on the back cover of all new quarterlies during the past year.

Helen Skinner discussed the "Use of (flat) Pictures and the Worship Center" on Friday morning. Arvilla Propst had a class demonstration on Saturday and used several teaching aids. She also discussed the use of reference books and supplementary texts, and presented a teacher self-rating plan.

"More and Better Teaching of Young People" was conducted under the leadership of John Darling. This group was first challenged by Thelona Stevens who discussed spiritual hunger. Only those who are prepared and in touch with the Master can supply this hunger. The morning's theme was, "What Shall We Teach." On Tuesday, Stewart

Wight told of his Lamoni class experiences in teaching, "The Use of the Inspired Version With Other Versions." "How Shall We Teach," was the theme for this morning. Various methods were discussed.

The use of flannelgraph in missionary teaching was demonstrated by Lloyd Hadley who presented part of the book, The Call at Evening. This revealed a new way to present the basic beliefs of the church. On Thursday morning the group was led by Joy Harris in a demonstration of three ways of teaching. The first was "The Interview," next was the use of a quiz game, and the last used, "The Discussion Method."

On Friday morning, Blanche Green discussed youth projects as they had been carried out in Slover Park congregation. This was a most interesting session in which some of the young people who had shared the experience came before the group and bore their testimony in an effectual way. Some of the projects mentioned were: planting and harvesting alfalfa, fasting and praying for an afflicted member, roller-skating party, home decorating for a partly blinded widower, a box supper to aid a needy family, Thanksgiving dinner for lonely ones, and a check stand at General Conference.

The last morning this section viewed a Kodachrome slide set, "The Eyes and Ears of Youth," made and presented by Tom Biel.

"More and Better Teaching for Adults" was under the leadership of Olive Mortimore. The topics used on successive days were: "What Is the Job To Be Done?" "How Would Jesus Attack the Problem in the Twentieth Century?" "A New Approach to Lesson Material," "Visual Aids in Adult Education," "The Use of Checks and Tests," and "Evaluation and Recapitulation."

THE WORKSHOPS

At 9:45 each day, six classes met, using the theme: "Improving Our Craftsmanship." Glenn Holmes led a group which studied the problem of "Standardizing Our Church

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Schools." The Yearbook for Church School Workers—Standards and Goals for 1946-1947 was the basic text for this study. A committee which worked on recommendations has proposed that this be made a "Five-Year Plan" to improve our schools. The yearbook will soon be reprinted with some of the changes recommended included in it.

Carl Mesle led a group in studying the merits and weaknesses of the "God and Country" Award Program in Scouting. Their conclusions included the need for a plan to acquaint more of the Scout leaders and pastors with this part of Scouting.

"The Light of Life" Award Program for girls was discussed by a group under the leadership of Edna Easter. The first four days were spent on getting a clearer over-all view of girl's work in the church. The Blue Birds and Oriole movements and how they fit in with the national girls' work organizations through the Light of Life program was discussed. Here again there seems to be the need for a broader educational program throughout the church so that our leaders will be able to take full advantage of these programs.

"Our Camping Program" was presented to a group under the leadership of F. M. McDowell. The history of the movement, leadership trends, and emphases for improving camp facilities were presented. The difference between youth work at reunions and at a youth camp was stressed. In the latter, age limits are observed, and young people actually live together under the supervision of a well-trained staff. This is quite different from having a few prayer meetings and classes for youth at a reunion.

"Summer Vacation Schools and Children's Work at Reunions," was considered in another workshop at this period each day under the leadership of C. B. Hartshorn. An attempt was made to bring to the visitors of the Conference who were interested in this specialized activity the inspiration of those who had organized and carried on so successfully the vacation church school work here in Zion. Garland Tickemyer told of more than doubling the enrollment the second year by the simple device of having a parade to let the people know what was going on in town. The parade, with Garland in the lead ringing a school bell, almost doubled in size as it progressed through the streets. A pony and cart for the tiny tots, paper hats, and plenty of horns, drums, and other noise makers did the trick. Last year the enrollment was over 1,200.

The new material just off the press for this year's work, complete with administrative and handcraft instructions, lessons, worship materials, and music, was presented during the week. On the last day a group of children was brought in and a demonstration of the program was made. Elva Oakman presented the Kindergarten and Primary Manuals, C. B. Hartshorn presented the Junior Manual, Blanche Green gave the work on the Junior High Manual, and Bernice Bonham conducted the pupil demonstration. Beatrice Darling gave all of the music instruction, assisted by Marie Johnson at the piano. The group responded enthusiastically to this new music which was produced by church musicians especially for these manuals. Each day specimens of the handwork were exhibited and their construction explained. Each piece had some permanent utility value. A pupil should select one project only and make that well. He is also taught the use and care of tools in the course.

The sixth workshop was conducted by Thelona Stevens on the subject, "Leadership Training in Practice." A large group filled the room each day to consider elements of leadership. Monday's interest was on the theme, "Study." We profess to love Jesus and his church. But only as we study to the point that we know them, can we really love them. Instead of studying more and more about the subject we like most, it is better to study systematically for a well-balanced knowledge of truth.

Tuesday's subject was "The Church School and Preparation of Teachers." The characteristics of competent teachers were discussed. "The Vacation Church School," was next considered. Its advantage of daily continuity for two weeks was emphasized. "Worship" was the fourth day's topic. Illustrations of effective methods for church school, home, and vacation church school were used. On Friday the church's program for youth was discussed. The problems of leadership in Zion's League, the Orioles, Scouting, etc., were considered. The tie-in of religious awards was emphasized. The spiritual hunger of young people and their interest are much the same as those of nonmembers. Adults who have been in the church for years are liable to overlook this situation. The final day was given to an overview. Perry Wood presented a chart showing the phases of interest and organization of religious education in the Lenox, California, Branch. The parting admonition was in the language of Alma (18:18), "Now go, my son, and teach the word unto this people. Be sober. My son, farewell."

HELP FOR ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICERS

Two new features of this General Conference were the opportunity for counseling on church school literature and of presenting the program of religious education to members of the priesthood. At the counseling tables in the Department of Religious Education booths were members of the departmental advisory committees created by the editor of church school literature to provide "the voice of experience." Each day between 12:30 and 2:00 p.m., some of the following were on duty: Mrs. Katie May Martin, Lena Jones, and Elsie Reynolds for the nursery; Mrs. G. L. DeLapp and

Mrs. R. L. McFarlane for kindergarten; Agnes Edmunds and Fern Sears for primary; Verda Bryant, Carrie Baird, and Arvilla Propst for junior; Eunice Smith Livingston and Sadi Anka Moon for junior high; and Bea McNamara and Cecil Talcott for senior department work.

On four successive days, the priesthood groups studying administrative problems—the small branch, the rural branch, the urban branch, and the large branch—heard F. M. McDowell discuss the objectives and trends in religious education. In previous General Conferences, the conflict in time schedules which called the priesthood members to quorum sessions or special lectures for men engaged in missionary or branch leadership activity left them without opportunity to attend the classes of the Department of Religious Education. This year most of our appointees and local administrators got at least one hour's discussion of the program. The solution was a case of Mohammed going to the mountain.

On Thursday, at 9:45 a.m., the mass meeting of women was addressed by Dr. McDowell. Here he emphasized the need for church school and home co-operating in religious education. He stressed the literature and the program for bringing about this co-operation.

RESULTS EXPECTED

Now that the Conference is over and most of the delegates have returned to their homes with full notebooks, vivid impressions, and some new and helpful literature, what will happen? Under the influence of the workshop and the inspiration of the lecture, some would hitch their wagon to a star and soar to ethereal realms about things they would love to do in their branch IF A much larger and more practical group got a clearer vision of the basic meaning of Christian education, and by keeping their feet on the ground will start things of

To the Southwestern Mission

To the Ministry, Members, and Friends of the Southwestern Mission; including California, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico; Greeting:

The recent 1947 General Conference made some changes in the personnel of the administrative staff, among which is the relationship which since the beginning of 1938 has existed between you and myself as the supervising minister of this field. It was in 1902 that I was ordained an Apostle and for the larger part of the time have functioned with the Quorum of Twelve in administrative work. In 1915 I was appointed to the Pacific Coast Mission (as it was then called), and the pleasant associations which then began have continued because though my appointments were changed at different times to other fields, my home was established in California, and with my family, we have grown up among you.

I was again appointed to this field in the beginning of 1938 after a period abroad in the European field, and for about eight years have enjoyed the ministerial associations we have had together until now. I now must bid you farewell as the minister in charge, and give place to those who have been appointed to take over the guidance of the church work in this important part of our church world. I take advantage of this opportunity to express my gratitude for the very happy experiences which we have had together, the fine spirit of comradeship, the generous hospitality, the kindly courtesy, and the fraternal co-operation in all of our official work—all of which make up a treasured memory which these fourteen years of intimate friendship have enriched. I can only express my feelings towards you in the language of Paul to his beloved Philipians, "I have you in my heart always."

From the bottom of my heart, to one and all, I say again, Thank you for all I have enjoyed in my ministry with you. My prayer is that God will continue to bless the work, so that whether it is Paul who sows the seed, or Apollos who may water it, God will grant the increase.

At this time it is fitting that I introduce the brethren chosen to succeed me in the supervision of the work I now lay down: Apostle Charles R. Hield is well known to the church through a talented and diversified ministry. He brings to you a real significance and see them through. These are destined to be the salt of the earth. These will build a city on top of a hill. May God bless them.

rare scholarship and culture as well as loyalty and spiritual devotion together with an attractive personality. His fellow minister, W. Wallace Smith, was selected and ordained to the apostolate at the last Conference. Brother Smith is the second son of the late President Joseph Smith by Sister Ada (Clark) Smith and is a half brother to President Israel A. Smith. He has served as a local minister in several important fields, including St. Joseph, Missouri, and recently in Portland, Oregon. It is obvious that through the experiences our brother will gain both in missionary and administrative activities as well as in the councils of the church, he may be fitted for what may well be the destiny his name and heritage indicate. May God richly bless both of these brethren with all needed grace, and I shall be happy to continue my ministry under their direction in harmony with the appointment made by the Conference, so that we may all rejoice in the progress of the cause of Christ.

While I am relieved of administrative responsibilities, I shall look forward to ministering in pulpiting, teaching, and increased literary work. I have loved to preach and am still in love with my profession.

Time passes (at more than 1000 miles per hour), and with its passage, changes must come, though not necessarily "decay" but rather "rebirth." In such changes, God grant there may be increase of value to all.

As ever, very sincerely yours,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

I may say that my capacity for enjoyment has enlarged since I ceased to be bullied by highbrows into the dreary routine of passive satisfactions which pass as culture. At forty I enjoyed the sight of daffodils growing along the Teign valley in late March far more than I have ever enjoyed an art gallery. I am a happier man because I am beginning to enjoy the experience of having grown-up children far more than I ever enjoyed four attempts to finish The Brothers Karamazov. I am a happier man at forty because I openly read P. G. Wodehouse on a train journey and no longer carry Virginia Woolf to impress the other people in the compartment. To adapt Dr. Johnson's remark, "I have tried hard to be a cultured man, but I always found cheerfulness creeping in." — Lancelot Hogben in Dangerous Thoughts (Allen & Unwin).

*PresentsA Spiritual Experience

Several years ago I suffered a long and severe illness caused by shock and worry. For a month, during this time, I was unconscious. Each day I received administration and was cared for by the Saints. Finally, however, the doctors said nothing could be done for me and that I was dying. The friend who stayed with me believed I was dead when I quit breathing and, after watching me for a while, went to call my husband. During this time, I found myself in a vast and beautiful field. Right in front of me was the largest tree I had ever seen. As I walked close to it, the leaves touched my head, and all pain was erased. Wherever they contacted my body, I was healed. I also saw flowers and wished that I might pick them, but hesitated as there was no one near from whom I could get permission. When I stooped to look at them more closely, I saw that each flower was the emblem of the Reorganized Church. Then I remembered that it was time for prayer service and, although I hated to leave, I knew that I must go and tell the Saints of my healing. Just as my friend left the room to call my husband, I regained consciousness and began to recover. I believe that, for the space of a very short while, my spirit left my body.

Twice since then I have been told that my days have been lengthened. My only desire is to be ever humble and faithful and to do as God wills I should.

Is Helped by Prayers

I wish to thank all who remembered me in their prayers when I was injured in a recent train wreck. I also want to express my gratitude to those who have written to me and to Apostle Lewis who came to visit me here in Altoona Hospital. I expect to return to my home soon, but I shall have to wear a brace on my back for several months. I feel I am very fortunate because the doctors say it's a miracle that I'm alive.

I'm thankful to all who have helped me. It is indeed gratifying to be remembered by one's friends in such a time of need.

Elder J. D. Shower's Remarkable Healing

About eight and a half years ago, Elder J. D. Shower, a retired missionary of the church and a member of the Stone Church congregation, was badly crippled when riding on a large bus. Since then he has moved about with great difficulty and almost continual pain.

About six weeks ago, he attended the afternoon prayer service and while bearing testimony to the almost miraculous manner in which he was brought into the church, he had a distinct feeling that he was relieved of his affliction. At the close of the meeting, he discovered that he was completely healed and had no further need of his crutch and cane. He says that he feels even better than he did before his accident, and friends in and outside the church can scarcely believe their eyes when they see him walking down the street with no sign whatever of his former affliction.

I also have personally known Elder J. D. Shower. His healing is very remarkable. While I do not know of the details of his accident, I know of the years of his acute suffering, and I can confirm the fact that he has been restored to health and is well today.—L. J. LEA.

I was severely injured in a Santa Fe bus accident a little west of Lawrence, Kansas, November 14, 1937.

I was coming home from western Kansas, riding in the bus at about 4 o'clock in the morning, and I was lying down in my seat. The bus driver had given me two pillows for my head. A car had been parked on the highway in which were two young couples. The bus driver said he did not see this car until he was about 25 feet from it. Meeting a car headed the same way we were going, instead of turning to the left, the driver turned to the right, which threw me to the left, and I was thrown from my seat and pitched around in the bus. When I came to myself, I was sitting up, blood was running from my left ear, and my head was paining me so it seemed as though it was torn to pieces with such pain as I had never experienced.

The bus driver told me if I was not able to go on to Kansas City he would put me in a hospital in Lawrence, Kansas. At Lawrence he came to me and asked me what I thought about it. I told him I would try to go on to Kansas City. Every little jolt of the bus seemed to tear my head to pieces, and I was in such pain it seemed as though my head was crushed, consequently I could not remember much that went on.

When we arrived in Kansas City, there was a doctor and two other men that met the bus. As I later learned, the driver had phoned ahead to Kansas City. Two other men also met the bus, and I know one was a lawyer as he came over once with the doctor to my home at Independence.

After the doctor washed the blood out of my ear, he bound it up and left me to get home the best I could. It was difficult for me to get on and off the bus, and as soon as I arrived home I went to bed, and as soon as I lay down, I went into a nervous chill. When I came out of the chill, my head hurt severely, and when I passed my hand over my body it seemed as though my insides were also torn to pieces, and as a doctor of Kansas City told me, my insides were just as if they were scrambled, my coccyx bone was broken in two places, both hips were thrown out, a number of my vertebrae were thrown out of place, and there was some injury to the brain. Some of the doctors said they could not operate, and later, when my head was a little better, they said the broken pieces had grown together and they would have to break my back to move the vertebrae, so I suffered for eight and one-half years. Part of the time I was bedfast. After about two years I did some walking with two crutches and as I threw my weight on my right leg to save the left that was injured, I threw my right hip out again. The doctor put it back into place, but it went out again quite a number of times, and I suffered intense pain. They again put me to bed, and again I was confined for some six weeks. No one but the dear Lord knew how I suffered. The first time I was confined, I was administered to 19 times, and the second time I was again administered to quite often, but just temporary blessings were all that I received.

I prayed the Lord would take my life, as the suffering was more than I could bear. He answered, "My son, thy life's work is not yet completed." I answered again, "Lord, this pain is more than I can bear." Again he answered, "Fear not, my child, in my own due time I will come to thy rescue."

Eight and a half long years I waited, and the waiting seemed long. Why the wait? Was it necessary to first burn out the dross and I be purified so that I might be worthy to receive a divine blessing?

While I was confined, I prayed earnestly, and the Lord was very near to me, much nearer than I had ever experienced.

Time went on until on May 12, 1946, on Sunday afternoon at the 2:30 prayer meeting at the Stone Church, I arose to bear my testimony as to how the Lord had so miraculously brought me into the church (the account of my conversion I will write later), and as I started to give this experience, some Power which seemed like an electric current began in my head and just shook it and then down my back and shook it just as I was sitting down, then it struck my hips and worked at them also. By this time, I realized that this was the Power of the Lord, working my bones and putting them back in place after being dislocated eight and a half years. My body was placed in order, joints moved, bones put back, and I was relieved from the terrible pain in my head, which had been so sore I could not lie on one side more than a couple of hours, and then I would awaken and turn over. This was gone, for in an instant I had been relieved. I was now just as sore as if some physician had made some adjustments of my entire body.

O what freedom I now have in walking. I no longer need a crutch or cane and do not so much as limp, and I am much more active than I have been for 35 years. I cannot praise the Lord enough, and I am so happy and feel so free sometimes it seems this must be just a dream. I have been blessed with a much greater degree of the Spirit since I was healed, and I have been told that I look so different many that I have known for years have not known me when I meet them. Members of the church and nonmembers have said this is a miracle of the Lord. A week ago last Saturday I went in to see one of the doctors who had treated me for some time, and he said he had heard about my healing and asked me to step out and walk. When I did, he said the Lord had adjusted my body and put it in order as no doctor could, and he said, "Oh, how happy I am," for he appreciated my great blessing.

While I was suffering and it just seemed there was no rest for me, a part of the Twenty-third Psalm was quoted to me, 4-6, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: . . . Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

While the physical blessings are greatly to be enjoyed, yet the greater degree of the Spirit of the Lord that has been mine to enjoy since I received this bodily blessing is worth far more to me than the physical.

Strive as I may, I cannot repay the Lord for his goodness and mercy that he has bestowed upon me. May the blessings of the Lord be with all the Saints is my prayer. J. D. Shower

Lincoln, Nebraska

Pastor, Francis T. Schrunk

Pastor Francis Schrunk has set three goals for the branch for 1947: a fifty per cent increase in attendance at all services, an increase in branch enrollment by at least twelve members, and spiritual growth for the group. An intensive missionary program has been outlined to accomplish these goals.

Members of the Zion's League are in charge of the Sunday evening worship services each month. The women, known as "Zion's Circle," held a special meeting on the evening of March 27 to which the men were invited. Several from Nebraska City attended, and V. D. Ruch, pastor of the church in Council Bluffs, was guest speaker. Refreshments were served in the lower auditorium following the meeting. Other recent activities of the women's department include a chili supper, rummage sale, and a "trip around the world."

The church has been completely redecorated. The lower auditorium has been replastered, and a new cement floor and plumbing installed in the kitchen.

Bonnie Jean, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Steinhauer, was blessed on Sunday, January 12, and William Dale, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Toland, was blessed on Sunday, April 13.

Elder and Mrs. John Schrunk have returned to Lincoln from Hollis, Oklahoma. Mr. Schrunk is an instructor in the department of agriculture engineering at the Nebraska College of Agriculture.

Inglewood, California

Lennox Branch

Pastor, H. R. Blakeman

Seventy George Njeim conducted a series of missionary meetings in March. At the close of this series, Ruth, Sylvia, and Mary Ann Stoddard were baptized.

Inglewood was represented at General Conference by Herbert and Mayme Blakeman, Perry and Norah Woods, Glenn Holmes, Betty Stewart, Millie Rounds, and Vern and Bill Webb of Graceland.

The women's department sponsored a box supper on March 15, the proceeds of which went to the building fund. On April 18, Bernice Liddell and Vaughn Root, who are to be married soon, were given a shower by members of the congregation.

—Harriet Glaze, reporter.

Pasadena, California

Walter Hardwick of San Gabriel was baptized by Lewis B. Shippy and confirmed by Elders Lewis Shippy and Paul Moore. Richard A. Ulery was baptized by Elder Paul Moore and confirmed by Elders Paul Moore and Lewis Shippy. They were baptized on Sunday, March 16, and confirmed the following week.

Fremont, Nebraska

Pastor, C. G. Riley

A watch party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Kreizel on New Year's Eve. Branch night in January was sponsored by the young people. A play, "This Day I Choose," was presented under the direction of Margaret Newton. Proceeds from the box social held at the close of the evening were applied to the building fund.

A Zion's League has been organized with fourteen charter members. Clifford and Xenia Kreizel are the supervisors, and Richard Johnson is president. The Zion's League Handbook is being used as the present course of study. In February, the group was entertained by the Lincoln, Nebraska, League.

The women were in charge of the February "guest night." Entertainment was provided by a tumbling team from an Omaha high school with Esmond Crown as supervisor and teacher. Proceeds from the candy and cookie sale were placed in the flower fund.

The junior choir provided music for the church school Easter program and the children from the three lower classes gave readings.

Attendance at the midweek prayer services is increasing. Farrold Olry is teaching the Book of Mormon at the men's study class. Recent guest speakers have been District President A. A. Livingston and John Moffett of Modesto, California.

Australasian Mission

The twenty-fourth conference of the Australasian Mission was held in Sydney from April 4 to 7. Because the churches in Sydney were too small, several services were held in the Astra Theater, Drummoyne. Delegates from all states of Australia and New Zealand were present; as many as 550 attended some of the sessions. The Maundy Thursday priesthood Communion service was attended by fifty ordained men.

High Priest A. S. Frater, mission director of religious education, presented a Good Friday meditation in story and song; participating in this service were Elder Oscar and Sister Dorothy Stack of Fremantle, West Australia. The sacred cantata, "Darkness and Dawn," was given under the direction of Elder F. Rawson, mission director of music. Soloists were Mrs. Heather Mansell, soprano; Bessie Harvey, contralto; Bob Henderson, tenor; and Paul Hendricks, baritone.

One of the major items of business was the setting up of a board of management for the Tiona reunion grounds to replace the board of directors that automatically disbanded when the church assumed control of the grounds, following the voluntary liquidation of the Tiona Reunion Grounds, Limited. Seventy H. Peisker was in charge of the business session with High Priests D. A. Alberts and C. A. Davies assisting.

Les Dalzeil, mission youth leader, directed the Leaguers in a concert given at Leichhardt church.

Elder Floyd Potter was in charge of the Easter Sunday church school service at which the triumph of the risen Lord was portrayed. Several concurrent services were held after this with Sister Nance Parkes, women's leader, conducting a session for the women; Patriarch C. A. Dickinson and Seventy A. V. Robinson addressing the Melchisedec priesthood; High Priests D. A. Alberts and A. J. Corbett, the Aronic priesthood; and High Priest G. W. Stewart, the men.

During the Communion service, tribute was paid to the late President Frederick M. Smith, and Elsa Davies sang the solo, "Come, Sweet Comforter." Associated with Brother D. A. Alberts at the altar were all members of the active missionary force except Elder A. R. Gunning, missionary to New Zealand.

Seventy H. Peisker spoke at the closing session of the conference. On Easter Monday, a large number of visitors went by special ferry across beautiful Sydney Harbor to Parsley Bay picnic grounds.

Each morning during the conference, Seventy W. J. Vaughan and High Priest A. J. Corbett conducted inspirational prayer services. On Easter, the young people held their own service with Les Dalzell and G. F. Spencer in charge. High Priest S. Jacka was responsible for producing the Conference Daily which contained copies of reports to the conference and an account of all activities.

Missionary Symposium

For the week preceding conference, the missionaries met in Balmain Church under the leadership of Seventy H. Peisker for a series of discussions. Elder F. Potter discussed missionary opportunities in the branch departments; Seventy W. J. Vaughan talked on the work of pastors; Seventy A. V. Robinson on tracting and making contacts; High Priest S. Jacka on missionary publicity; High Priest A. S. Frater on religious education; High Priest C. A. Davies on specialized fields of ministry including pastoral counseling; and High Priest D. A. Alberts on the mission's financial program. Brother Peisker summarized the discussion and gave helpful counsel to the appointees at the close of the series.

Winfield, Kansas

Pastor, John H. Hufford

Although there are only thirty-five members on the roll, the branch began 1947 with $143.67 in the bank.

Lloyd F. Vickery was ordained to the office of deacon at the afternoon service of the district conference held in Wichita on March 9.

A pie and candy auction was sponsored by the Winfield and Arkansas City branches on Tuesday evening, March 11. The proceeds were evenly divided, making $22.63 for each group. Winfield's share will be used to help purchase a motion picture projector.

Seventy A. L. Loving conducted a week's series of meetings from March 23 to 30. All-day services were held on the closing Sunday. Following the morning meeting, a basket dinner was served at the Vickery home. In the afternoon, Mrs. Cecil Jackson and the daughter of Mrs. Maggie Hutchins were baptized by Brother Loving. Officiating at the confirmation service in the evening were Elders George Vickery, Cady S. Gose, John Hufford, and A. L. Loving. The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Jackson was blessed at this service. The closing activity was a fellowship which lasted until 9:30.

Those from Winfield attending General Conference were Carol McKibben, George, Mabel, and Alice Vickery.

—Mabel Vickery, reporter.

Winnipeg, Manitoba

Apostle D. T. Williams visited Manitoba from February 27 to March 3, preaching at the morning and evening services on March 2. He also spoke to the young people, telling them of the work of the church in Hawaii.

Thirteen dollars were cleared on the pancake supper sponsored by the women's department at the home of Sister Terry.

Elder James Menzies conducted a series of missionary services from March 3 to 30. Through the week, illustrated lectures were given in the homes. Capacity crowds attended the Sunday preaching services. On March 15, members and church friends were given a banquet at which Elder Menzies was the speaker; his theme was, "Youth's Hopes for Tomorrow." William Brown was in charge of banquet arrangements.

—Mildred Taylor, reporter.

Memphis, Tennessee

Pastor, J. Adelbert Withee

The Sunday evening class is studying The Enduring Word with Eugene Wells as teacher.

Bettejane Cramer, who is attending Drake University in Des Moines, and Harry Van Nieuwenhuize of Castle Heights Military School spent the holidays with their parents in Memphis. Keith Van Nieuwenhuize has received his discharge from the Army.

Recent speakers have been Evangelist Ray Whiting, Seventy Allen Breckenridge, and Elder Earl Grigg. Wayne Mink was ordained to the office of priest on Sunday, March 30, by Pastor J. A. Withee. Needed: A Religious Revival in America

Down through the ages, religion has played a very important part in the fate of people, nations, and even whole continents. The early cave-man both feared and worshiped the elements of nature in his environment. He feared the sun, fire, rain, wind, rivers, and other natural forces, and because they were something that he couldn't grasp, he in turn worshiped them in accordance with his fear of the unknown. The Greeks and Romans worshiped pagan gods for the same basic reason—something above their mortal conceptions. As we turn the pages of history, we find that the church became the head of countries; wars were fought—nations colonized—lives sacrificed needlessly to further the cause of religion. Therefore, it can be said that religion has been one of the greatest influencing factors to determine the course of history.

In the history of the colonization of our own country, there is no more dramatic story ever told than that of the struggle and fight of peoples for religious tolerance and freedom. When America was a young country, people flocked to her shores to seek refuge from religious persecutions, to start colonies where they could worship in freedom and peace. In Pennsylvania there were the Quakers; in Maryland, the Roman Catholics; in the New England States, the Separatists and the Pilgrims—each colony seeking its own religious freedom. The very heart of our country has been built on the principle that each person has the right to worship as he pleases. But as the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries passed, these people, who had fought so fervently for the right to worship God as they wished, became less tolerant of other people and of new faiths.

By the nineteenth century, America became the hotbed of a religious revival. It was during this period that our own church and many of the other orthodox churches in the United States were born and nurtured by the flames of the restless times. People were once again driven from their homes and lives sacrificed needlessly, until the whole country was in an uproar of religious intolerance and hate. But by the middle of the century, the flames were finally subdued, and once again our country settled back into its so-called shell of religious tolerance.

Today, America is in desperate need of a religious revival—a revival of an entirely different nature than that of the nineteenth century, but one which will equal the revivals that are surging in the other parts of the world. For out of the chaotic conditions that are prevailing in Europe and Asia is coming a re-birth of churches and of new religions. In Germany, there are the Lutherans and Roman Catholics; in Communistic Russia, the Greek Orthodox churches have once again opened their doors to a people who are learning that they can't live without the warmth of religion. In Poland, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland, religion is flourishing. In China, Christianity is growing by leaps and bounds, and many of the great leaders have been converted to the Christian way of life. But in the United States, there have been no important religious revivals. Here is a prosperous nation notorious for its crime waves, strikes, and general public restlessness. It is during such times that many people shut their doors in God's face, refusing to call on him until some crisis arises when they need his help.

But we, the youth of the church must not wait; we must push forward to new religious frontiers—for now is the time to establish missions. We must have missions abroad, but we must not overlook the fertile field at home. We must serve as guides for others, all of us making it our own personal task, our own goal to help the church grow stronger. This job can be accomplished in only one way: by organizing our groups into units that will study the problems from all angles. Research must be done on economical, political, and social problems if we are to get a true picture of our American life, for religion is conditioned by the world of which it is a part. Our youth must also try to keep in tune with the advancements that are being made in scientific study and atom research, because only by co-ordinating all the factors of our human society will we be able to keep in step with the fast-moving social order and the trend of modern times. Our young people must be educated; they must choose wisely their leaders and try to break through the crust that has grown over many phases of American religion today, if they are to bring back with a new feeling the personal warmth and individuality that is the very core of the Christian movement. By doing this, young Latter Day Saints and the youth of other churches can go hand in hand with our rapidly progressing society; together they can create a brighter horizon for the future of American religion.

Precious Promise

Precious promise in the Scriptures
 Made to all who dwell on earth,
 Who shall strive in might to serve him,
 Christ, the son of holy birth.
 In the glorious resurrection
 We shall rise to heights unknown,
 Sharing daily in his glory,
 And to know as we are known.

At the time of his appearing,
 We are told that we shall be Raised to glory in his likeness—
 To live always, Lord, with thee.
 For this happy expectation,
 We rejoice in one accord,
 That we might behold thy likeness
 As depicted in thy word.

Help us now to live and prosper
 In the things that we shall do
 For thy kingdom to thy glory,
 We must strive to build anew.
 Ev'ry hour and ev'ry minute
 We must all unite in praise
 To our Master for his goodness,
 And his tender loving ways.

The Trouble-Shooter

EXPOSING Your Friends . . . To the Gospel

QUESTION: I'd like a simple formula for presenting the gospel. I have friends with whom I feel I should share my religion, but I've never been able to tell them in an effective manner what it is. Which doctrinal facts, how much history, and what future aims should I include in my "sales talk"? Most important of all, how can I make my church and its message appeal to nonmembers?

ANSWER: By Leonard Lea

If you have friends who should know about the church, introduce them to other friends among church people. Select the best representatives, those that the prospect is most apt to like and admire, people of good personality and character, and interesting conversationists. The church and the gospel will come naturally into the conversation, stimulate questions and a desire to know more. Plan a party or a dinner for the meeting of these friends, with something to do—games, music, conversation, pictures or some hobby—that will make the time interesting. Invite the non-member to church programs, dinners, or entertainments first, and to good sermons later. Out of these experiences the friend will develop a desire to know more about your religion. Also give him a chance to participate and help in your activities.

Even if you are isolated, social contacts form the most favorable background for serious conversation, which will help you in exchanging views on philosophy of life, ideas, and religion.

Church literature will aid you. Faith of Our Fathers, by Elbert A. Smith, is good for everybody. A Call at Evening, by Jessie Ward LeBaron, presents the gospel in story form and has won many converts. For college and university friends, the best booklet is The Latter Day Saints and Their Changing Relationship to the Social Order, by Roy A. Cheville. The Angel Message Tracts will give you all basic information for your own study or for your friends' reading.

The most interesting feature of our gospel for people today is the church social program. The hope of developing friendly, helpful relationships and high community standards in Christian community life—we call it Zion—always arouses interest. People are attracted by discussion of economic justice and social equity.

Missionaries find the Book of Mormon a potent source of interest for beginning with nonmembers. Others use the Inspired Version of the Bible effectively. The career of Joseph Smith, with a true story of his life, can also be used as a beginning point.

One can begin with such doctrines as restored revelation, stewardship, probation after death, and lead to the six principles and other basic information. Church history can feature the beginning of the church in 1830, the movement toward the west, the cities of Kirtland and Nauvoo, the death of the founders in 1844, the Reorganization effected from 1852 to 1860, and steady growth of the church since that time.

As for appeal, simply tell what the church has meant to you and how much the gospel has helped you. Bear a testimony as to what the Spirit of God has done in your life. Tell of your hope of eternal life, the companionship of loved ones in eternity, and your faith in the future. Let your friends know how the gospel has brought meaning and purpose into your life.

in order to get this house. That's how much it's worth to me."

Senora Maria took his arm; her small fingers were strong and determined; she began shaking him as she might have shaken the arm of a child, and the surprised man let her do it. "When I tell you to go, you do not move. When I tell you the house is not for you, you do not listen. So come, I shall push you out my door. If you do not go, I shall scream. Did you ever hear an old woman scream? It is not nice to hear." She hauled him to the door and pushed him through it. The plump lady followed, muttering and threatening calamities as she went.

When they had gone, Maria de Hermandes sank into her rocker and waited for her pounding heart to grow calm. Her anger was gone now, and she was thinking deep and serious thoughts. The old rocking chair made creaking sounds, moving back and forth, but the senora was not aware of the rocking. For many minutes she sat, then she lifted herself calmly out of her chair, and stretched her height to its full five feet and one inch. She squared her slight shoulders like a soldier going into battle and went to look for the children. Maybe she was seventy, she told herself, but there was still plenty of fight in her yet.

She found them in the kitchen. They were altogether just as she expected them to be, bickering and quarreling as they divided her china, silver, and fine linens. She knew this dividing of goods had kept them from answering the doorbell when it rang. She wondered how she could have been afraid of Enrique, remembering how cowed the tall man had been when she had pushed him through the door. She stood in the doorway with a hand on each thin hip, watching the children pack the cherished possessions she had been accumulating for more than half a century. She was an old woman, these things would not be much use to her now without Jose, but their quarreling and selfishness filled her with a disgust that was like a kind of sickness, so she said: "You can stop packing up my things. I am not going with you to New York, so I shall be needing them a while longer."

They stopped their work to stare at her. Her words had the effect of a bomb being thrown among them.

"Not going?"

"But of course you're going."

"What on earth has come over you, madre?"

Enrique put down a plate he was wrapping. "You're going all right. That was all settled this noon."

She neither cringed nor cowered. She knew her strength now. "I have thought my problem through, and I know exactly what I am going to do. I shall rent my house when I find a tenant who likes it just the way it is. But I am going to rent it with me in it."

Nobody spoke for a while, because on her face was the same resolute look that had cowed them into submission from crib days through adolescence.

Josefa was the first to break the silence. "If you want to stay in this house, I'm all for your idea, Abuela mio." She kissed her. "If it were not for changing schools and everything, I'd move in here with you myself. It's a fine, old house."

The others were difficult to convince. Enrique was most stubborn, he argued, he threatened, but in the end Maria won. When all of them had spoken, and none of them had anything more to say, she left them. She was very tired. It would be nice to go upstairs and rest a while.

Her hands moved along the banister, feeling the wood like the touch of a well-loved friend. Yet she knew that without Don Jose, the house would never be the same again. The soul had gone out of it. She pushed back a lock of her hair, wondering why she was crying. "If I don't like the people who move in here, I shall fire them out." She told herself fiercely.

She opened the door of her room and stood quietly for a moment before she moved toward the bed. It had been Don Jose's bed and hers for many years—old fashioned maybe—but solid oak and beautiful. She sank down upon it and put her head on the goose-feather pillow. Beside her Don Jose's pillow stood with its white linen pillowcase freshly ironed and undented. Senora Maria reached out and gathered it tight in her arms, pressing her face into its clean softness. "In this house I shall stay," she told the lonely room, and then her tears were wetting the embroidery on the pillowcase that her own hands had made.

BULLETIN BOARD

Brush Creek Reunion

The reunion for the Southeastern Illinois, Central Illinois, and St. Louis Districts will be held at Brush Creek, near Xenia, Illinois, August 1 to 10 inclusive. This announcement is to inform all who wish to schedule their vacations then.

ARTHUR HENSON,
Reunion Secretary.

Nauvoo Reunion

The Nauvoo District Reunion will be held on the church grounds in Nauvoo, Illinois, from June 22 to 29. All who plan to attend should write to Max Hromek, 2807 Avenue N, Fort Madison, Iowa, for reservations.

R. H. ATKINSON.

Texas Statewide Reunion

The Central and Southwestern Texas District Reunion will be held at Camp Ben McCulloch near Austin, Texas, from June 20 to 30. For information on tents, cots, or anything else pertaining to the reunion, write to The Reunion Committee, 3217 Lawrence, Houston, Texas.

F. L. FREEMAN, Secretary.

Port Elgin Reunion

The combined reunion of the Toronto and Owen Sound Districts will be held at Port Elgin, Ontario, June 28 to July 6. Apostle D. Blair Jensen, Seventies H. I. Velt and Percy E. Farrow, High Priests J. F. Sheehy and Almer Sheehy, and Evangelists B. H. Hewitt, W. I. Flegg, and Benson Belrose are to be in attendance.

High quality meals will be served at costs: adults, $1.05, and children $.70 per day. There are modern cabins available, also tourist rooms, all at reasonable rates. Tents and cots may also be procured. All orders for cabins, rooms, tents, and cots should be placed at an early date with Sidney Smith, Box 255, Port Elgin, Ontario.

Port Elgin Reunion has been rapidly growing into one of the most popular reunions of the church. There are few places that provide better all around facilities for the combining of recreational, religious, and spiritual activities.

This year, the reunion ground offers an up-to-date commissary with capacity for serving more than 300 at a time, clean, modern rest rooms, and a new auditorium which will seat 800. Plan now to attend.

—PERCY E. FARROW,
For the committee.

Central Illinois Conference

The Central Illinois Conference will be held at Decatur on June 7 and 8, beginning with a priesthood class at 2 p.m. on Saturday. Apostle Arthur Oakman is to be the teacher. All priesthood members are urged to attend. Sunday's activities will include a 9 o'clock prayer service, preaching at 11, and an afternoon business session.

ARTHUR HENSON,
District President.

Kirtland Youth Conference

The second annual regional youth conference will be held in Kirtland, Ohio, on June 21 and 22. Those districts in the area concerned are Northwestern Ohio, Kirtland, Southern Ohio, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Further information on registration and time of meetings will appear in a later issue of the Herald.

MRS. EDITH WINSHIP, Committee Secretary.

Information, Please

The First Presidency is sponsoring a program designed to bring college and university people of the church into a closer relationship with the objectives of the general church. One of the preliminary phases of this program is the taking of a census of church members now enrolled in all colleges, junior colleges, and universities in the state of Michigan. If you are acquainted with any such student, please send his name, home and school address to L. O. Brockway, Department of Chemistry, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan. 3-t

The funeral service was conducted by Elder Clarence MacDonald. Interment was in Morgan Point cemetery.

LETTERS

Comforted by a Vision

Nine years ago my husband and I lost our eleven-month-old son; our grief was almost greater than we could bear. Several months after his death, I suffered a nervous breakdown; for five days and nights I couldn't sleep. Then one evening I heard a voice say, "Your baby is at rest," and, looking toward the window, I saw a beautiful flower garden with a large bush of white roses in the center. One of the roses opened to reveal my baby, asleep and smiling. Then the voice spoke again, "Don't grieve; your family needs you." From that moment I began to feel better, and in a few days I was able to care for my four children and do all my housework. We now have a six-year-old son to take the place of the one who died.

There is much for us to be thankful for if we but take time to count our blessings. I am grateful for the Herald which comes to our home each week; after reading letters from the Saints, I feel that I have received a personal letter from a close friend. We are isolated from church privileges, but have been able to take our vacation in eastern Oklahoma the past two years where we could attend services. If there are any Saints in or near Ada, we should like to hear from them.

On the eve of his retirement from the post office department, Alva M. Coombs, who for many years has served both as pastor of the Latter Day Saint Church and as a clerk at the main post office, was honored with a banquet attended by more than sixty local post office employees. Mr. Coombs began his postal career on July 23, 1908.

Following the dinner, Mr. Coombs was presented with an easy chair by Toastmaster Dowty who, in addition to praising the pastor, described him as a minister who "always practices what he preaches."

To Be Content

I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.—Philippians 4:11.

ONE NEEDS only to walk down the street of any town and look into the faces of his fellow citizens to realize the vast amount of discontent that rests like a burden on most of them. They are not sick, not suffering, not sorrowful, not unhappy; they are not in want. They are simply discontented with what they are, where they are, or what they have.

St. Paul gives us a key to acquiring the gift of peace of mind.

When you have done the best you can with your life, when you have surrounded yourself with things that are pleasant, good, and beautiful, when you have sought the companionship of people you love and respect, you may still find that you have fallen far short of attaining your desires.

If you keep your mind fixed upon what you do not have all the time, your life will be miserable and you will go about presenting to your fellow citizens a face that is a mirrorlike reflection of small woes and petty dissatisfactions.

But if you keep your mind upon the blessings you have, express your gratitude to God for the good friends, the security, and the peace you are enjoying, you can be content. This will not prevent you from trying diligently to improve your life and to make such progress as will bring you to a better and nobler future.

Our cover picture was taken from the campus of the American University of Beirut on the Syrian coast, at a point overlooking the usually calm, blue Mediterranean Sea. * My Friend Afar

I have never seen her
But she writes a letter
Filled with friendliness and charm.
She tells of soft-eyed heifers
Grazing in the fields; of downy chicks,
And acres planted row on row
With things to put upon her pantry shelf
In gleaming jars,
Their colors ripe and glowing

She tells of burning sun and fragrant rain,
And berry picking,
The shiny pails filled with sweet fruit,
Of hands stained red,
And then she tells of quiet rural nights
While Nature sleeps
And God and she commune.

How fine a friend to have
Who holds her blessings priceless.
Yet shares them all
With me.

The Standing Ministry

A significant provision is that for standing ministers of the church, anticipating the qualification, the devotion, and the sustained endeavor in righteousness of a local as distinguished from a traveling ministry. And the potency of such a ministry when attained is clearly indicated in the law governing.

The high priest, the elder, the priest, the teacher, and the deacon, each is included for the full quota; and as such may be provided, the evangelist and the bishop may be regarded as eligible for inclusion for the ministry intended, each in his place and according to his calling.

Referring to the former, specifically, it is indicated these men under leadership of one of the Melchisedec Order of priesthood have "the watch care of the membership, and nurturing and sustaining them," in their development towards the Christ character and labors of love in each other's behalf.

Now to have the watch care over the members of the church of Christ, to nurture them for growth in godliness, and to sustain them to these ends in character and functioning is a very great and responsible and holy calling.

And all members of the church need sustaining, or holding on an even keel. Many are immature emotionally and otherwise. And the more mature also need steadying, especially in times of uncertainty, or trouble, or when affected by some personal interest, or ambition, or disappointment, or hurt, or what have you. Balance of understanding, of judgment, and of intelligence is essential to saintly life and endeavor. And these with other needful helps, the standing ministry of the church are in the law presumed to supply.

All members need nurturing. No one is without weaknesses. The ministry of nurturing is towards the strength one should have by means of which to stand amidst the vicissitudes of life in his own right. And the nurturing is to be done with consideration not only to current experiences, but also to personalities, to stages in life growth, and to potentialities.

And all members need the sympathetic watch care, the over-all concern, the lead, the stimulation, and it may be now and again the intelligent discipline contributory to the growth of life and proficiency in service commensurate with their calling as Saints of God in this the dispensation of the fullness of times.

For these purposes there is endeavored on the part of the church competent standing ministers: men who can stand up among its people, known to them for their stability, their strength, their understanding, their wisdom, their intelligence, their righteousness, and their helpful ministry to many. To such the Saints may turn with confidence in whatever trouble, or experience, or expectancy, or need.

And, finally, such a ministry is basic to the full life of the church and its members, and in behalf of mankind to the ends of the earth.

What a charge is this to keep!

Tabor Anniversary

At Tabor, Iowa, on April 20, was observed the eighty-first anniversary of the organization of this branch. The writer having been fifty years ago (come September) baptized a member of the branch, was asked to participate in the activities of the day. And it has been a long time, referring to the contribution of others than himself, since he has observed exercises more appropriately arranged for an occasion or more intelligently executed.

Note was taken of services rendered in official capacity in the branch throughout the years and of diligence on the part of many to maintain the work at this place. And as was fitting, Charles Forney and N. L. Mortimore, former pastors, now retired, were accorded places of honor on the platform and their good works commemorated.

Many were the expressions of appreciation for what has been here, and there was modest though definite anticipation of what may yet be in the experience and ministry of the good folk who shall make up this group of Saints.

In the past eighty-one years, a lot of people have been helped by Tabor Branch, none more than the writer, who by the outreach of the group in those days in the person of elders and priests coming to the community some miles distant where he worked, heard the gospel preached, and learned the faith and ways of this people; and in a little Sunday school there, organized under the auspices of Tabor Branch, had his first experience in church life and work. These were humble men, farmers for the more part. They were sincere, godly men. They spoke with conviction, and backed up their words by works worthy of their calling. One does not forget such ministers, the group who sent them forth to serve him, or the contribution such have so freely made to his life in the church. And there are others who could bear like testimony of the help received of this branch and people.

Many were the memories and emotions stirred by this renewal of relationship with the Saints of Tabor; and in particular in association with those who were among the branch membership fifty years ago, foremost among whom was Charles Fry, who was one of the ministers carrying the gospel in outreach of the branch as cited. Brother and Sister Fry, by the way, returned to Tabor on his retirement from church appointment, and are well situated and happy in their renewal of membership in the branch.

There were in attendance also some formerly of Thurman Branch, who on the destruction by fire of their church building some years ago, were enrolled at Tabor. Of these also there were a few who held membership in Thurman Branch fifty years ago, and whose contribution to the life and resultant ministry of the writer has throughout the years since been appreciated. Foremost of these in attendance formerly of Thurman was Paul M. Hanson, not a "native" of Thurman Branch, though a welcomed and distinguished member by transfer.

Altogether, the experiences, and recollections, and stimulations of the day went to make up a delightful and helpful occasion. And it is confidently felt that the good done those in attendance shall live long in their life and in that of Tabor Branch.

Across the Desk

From V. D. Ruch, Council Bluffs, Iowa:

The conference seems to have been a grand success. The church is going forward spiritually and financially. Zion, indeed, beckons us on.

Sister Zella Standefer, San Antonio, Texas:

It may be of interest to you to know the department of women here has sent food and clothing to our needy members in Germany. We have tried to encourage each family to contribute one can of food a month. There has been a generous response. It has given much pleasure to be able to collect the good clothing to send to our needy members.

Brother Lloyd L. Hadley, River Forest, Illinois:

I can assure you that I was greatly impressed with the solemnity and beauty of the Communion service which was held on April 6. I want to take this occasion to compliment you on the splendid manner in which you conducted the business sessions, and I particularly noted your fairness and impartiality in presiding over those sessions.

The one thing that has been the most outstanding in my mind in connection with the Conference has been the reaffirmation to me personally of the importance of greater individual consecration if we are to make the maximum contribution to the cause in which we are all so deeply concerned.

Let's Measure Up

Elder Russell F. Ralston, of San Francisco, California:

"I sincerely appreciate the inspiration that comes as a result of the dynamic leadership expressed at General Conference in the far-reaching program of the church and the vision of the task that lies ahead. It is my humble prayer that I with the many others may measure up to the opportunities God has placed in our hands."

Catholicism

A well-established Protestant religious weekly impeaches the claim made in certain quarters that there is a rush of people toward the Catholic Church, and denies specifically that that church is "sweeping the country." It estimates that Protestant churches in 1945 alone had drawn more than twenty-five thousand from the ranks of Catholicism. The trouble seems to be that little publicity of conversions comes except from Catholic quarters.

Tribute to Sister J. W. Stringer

From a letter written earlier this year by Brother Z. Z. Renfroe of the Seventy, we quote the following excellent tribute to Sister J. W. Stringer, who passed away last year. Many will remember her worthy life and good work which were an example to all who knew her.

Last summer when I counseled with you relative to my reunion work, you assisted me in arranging the schedule so as to enable my being at Wichita Falls, Texas, for the funeral of Sister J. W. Stringer in the event of her passing, prior to the termination of the reunion work. As you know, it was her urgent request, as well as her family's, that I should officiate at the funeral. Because of her serious illness, we knew the time was short, so at the close of the Colorado Springs Reunion, I returned to Wichita Falls on August 27.

During the time of the depression, when the church was obliged to reduce its missionary force, Sister Stringer, out of her own resources, made steady contributions in the maintenance of one of our missionaries, looking after the needs of his family for a number of years, until the church could resume this expense again. It was just one of many splendid things she did.

Brother Renfroe's letter continues,

The four children who survive her are persons of exceptional qualities. All who know them realize that in the rearing of her children, Sister Stringer did unusually well in this important stewardship.

Many people are appreciative of her good life, and of her true devotion to the church of her choice and its work for Christ.

Early Caldwell County History

Elder Abner Lloyd of Kansas City brings to our attention an interesting historical item published in the Advocate of Hamilton, Missouri, January 30:

In bringing an abstract of title up to date on a 345-acre tract of land in the west part of Clinton County for Curtis Holland, Cameron, it was necessary for Stephen J. Millett of the Caldwell County Abstract Company to copy a deed from the records in the office of Bart C. Fulton, recorder, which was written by John Cleminson, clerk of the Caldwell County circuit court while Cleminson was a prisoner in a camp south of Far West in November, 1838.

The deed was made by fourteen grantors, all Latter Day Saints, known as Mormons. They stated in the instrument that they were compelled to leave their homes in Caldwell County by a mob under the leadership and commanded by John B. Clark. The land in question had been entered by the grantors at Lexington and was located in Caldwell, Clinton, and Daviess counties.

These refugees gave title to their lands to David Fullmer with the specific request that when these lands were sold to him that Bishop Partridge was to have the funds and he to give the money to the "most distressed of the sisters and their children." It was also agreed that Fullmer was not to sell any of the land to any member of the mob.

Elias Higbee, a justice of Caldwell County, certified to the fourteen signatures of the grantors, and stated that the sale was for the express purpose of obtaining means from friends in Illinois or Ohio to support the destitute women and children who were hemmed in by John B. Clark and his men.

John Cleminson, circuit clerk, certified at the close of the deed that he had written the instrument while in camp and a prisoner south of Far West on November 9, 1838. However the deed was not recorded in Caldwell County until September 12, 1870.

A CHILD IN THE MIDST

IT IS THE PURPOSE of this General Conference to strengthen the missionary effort. We wish to align ourselves wholeheartedly with this purpose. It is the motivation for our effort. Unless we shall be awakened to the world's need of Christ, and be aroused with a passion to win the souls of men to him, then another people must be raised up to accomplish the will of God. It is the absence of missionary zeal which concerns us, and we address ourselves to the means of enlivening our movement with that zeal!

Obvious methods of doing this are: to send more men into the field; to encourage the spirit of personal evangelism (every member a missionary); or, to develop the inclination and techniques of departmental and congregational evangelism. Each of these is basic. We wish, however, to draw your attention to a less obvious method, but one which undergirds all others and largely determines their efficiency. Let's look at the home as the prime agency of energizing evangelistic fervor.

Many times the home is so busy being a refuge it loses something of its sense of social responsibility. This becomes acute when the home fails to transmit and to magnify its heritage of faith. I once talked with a man whose eyes and voice were filled with pride. His grandfather had come from England because of his conviction about the Restoration. His father was instrumental in establishing the work in a certain area. And yet, of this man's children, not one claims allegiance to the cause of Zion. The tragedy is that this situation is duplicated many times over.

While regretting this failure to conserve our natural increase as we might have, and the diminishing desire to witness on the part of those reared in the church—it shall not be our intention to mull over the past. What's done is done, and many anguished parents have wept because a son or daughter has been lost from the fold.

However, it shall be our desire to stir up interest in this fruitful field of evangelistic effort. We shall point up the problem and hint at some of the answers. Certainly not as one who knows all the answers but as one who struggles to understand because so much is at stake. Our concern in this field is real and rises out of our observation of many whose bases of loyalty were so weak that they have surrendered to other invitations than that of Christ.

OUR TEXT is drawn from the dramatic incident of the disciples' rebuff of parents who brought their children to Christ. They were so busy with some of the more obvious tasks of ministry that they just didn't think. Their hearts were right, but—the little ones were in the way (probably between them and the Christ)—and what could they understand of the kingdom of God anyway!

The Master's rebuke was swift, "Permit the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." He might have said, "If we wait until later we wait too long. The pattern is too frequently set. Let the little ones come. We may melt and mold and fill and use them. Let them come while they are forming their habits and attitudes, and gaining their knowledge. Of such can we fashion the kingdom! Of course they are selfish, but their selfishness is not fixed, their ways of seeing and doing not set. We can use their curiosity and their ability to show enthusiasm."

The lesson was to be repeated by the Master. In the most provocative discussion of the meaning of love, Peter was to learn that devotion is something more than affection. Peter was quick to proclaim his love, but the Master persisted with "Lovest thou me?" until Peter's impetuous heart rebelled. Then the Master pressed the point home. "If you love me, Peter, feed my lambs—bring the LITTLE ones to me that I may touch them and teach them."

How careful we are in sculpturing, or in fashioning a figure in wood! How patient, how tender the stroke! And yet how often we take for granted the molding and shaping of the life of a child!

IT WAS NOT A stroke of genius but the exercise of simple judgment that the dictators of the recent past carefully and systematically raised up a generation of children as the strength of their evil designs. They recognized that when someone teaches a child, the world becomes what the child is taught. We who would build a Zion will do well to realize that it must first be grown in the lives of our children. Each worthy parent, nervously holding a newborn child in his arms has prayed with Manoah, the father of Samson, "Lord, teach us what we shall do unto the child that is born." Many of us have looked with mingled pride and trepidation at a tiny son and have cried in our souls for direction. Desiring peace, and holding out to the world the ideal of Zion, we are staggered by the immensity of our task. We realize, in moments of enlightenment, that the generation at our knee must be instilled with the passion and the ability to make Zion a reality.

If our church is to fulfill its function as the Church of Jesus Christ, and is to exercise prophetic power, we must develop personalities that are rich in human understanding, sympathy, discipline, and with the ability and the inclination to serve humanity. We need parents whose eyes are alert to the needs of mankind and whose sympathies stretch beyond the immediate family circle. We need homes that shall instill in the hearts of youth a passion to serve mankind, and which shall equip them with the distinctive message of the Restoration. And there are distinctives which need to be re-evaluated in terms of 1947 and built into our youth.

That is what we want to do. We are not without this compassionate desire. We see our children as a tremendous stewardship. We yearn for their welfare, and for them to take their place alongside those who work for a better world. And yet, despite our desire, we still lose many of our children from church fellowship. Many who remain in the church are members in name only. Many who marry nonmembers are not stable enough in their faith to maintain it. Too many sacrifice their religion at the altar of business. Too few love it enough to give it to others.

What, then, shall we do? Perhaps it might be well for us to take very literally what Jesus said. Let us bring our little children to Christ that they may learn of him. One of the proverbs reads, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." We need to take that old proverb literally. One of the largest churches does, and has succeeded in conserving its natural increase to a remarkable degree. While it has some regrettable doctrinal fallacies, the Roman church is to be commended for this example of evangelistic acumen.

THE IMPORTANCE of the formative years of the child's life cannot be overestimated. Character begins to develop early. The experiences of the child are tremendously important in determining its loyalties and therefore its character. The basic qualities of Sainthood root into these formative years. Even the fundamental attributes which qualify one for the tender give and take of marital harmony are attributes learned early. Sensitivity to the needs of others, the willingness to expend self for others, honesty—these and other qualities find their impetus early. On the other hand, the seeds of maladjustment are planted at the same time. Many a soul has been fractured by what happens in the first few years of life.

A noted student of child life, quoted recently by E. J. Gleazer, Jr., has verified the Biblical observation by his own study and experimentation. He asserts that the child, by the time he starts school, has learned 95 per cent of all he will ever learn. The child's personality is pretty well determined by the age of seven (viz., June may be a jolly, forthright girl, while Sue is shy, unfriendly, and inclined to be deceitful). The boy of eight is much like the man of 28 in the way he will solve his problems.

One may be inclined to doubt the validity of these claims on face value, and yet upon investigation, the truth begins to appear. Of the utmost importance is the statement that the personality—the attitudes, values, and habits—is pretty well determined during the first seven years of life. In other words the years of greatest plasticity and meaning are those lived almost entirely in the home. The fundamental virtues our civilization demands are largely learned before the child is eight years of age. They are virtues acquired in the home, if acquired at all. They are acquired by the basic pattern of learning, imitation. Honesty, acceptance of responsibility, courtesy, sharing, sublimation of self, faith in God and man—these are acquired characteristics primarily learned before the child leaves home.

How significant for the Restoration Movement, and for our program of strengthening the missionary effort. If we are to win the children to Christ, if we are to convert them, if we are to fire them with evangelistic zeal—we must not wait until we can preach to them. They are largely won or lost before that time.

Let's admit that the Lord is right in section 68 of the Doctrine and Covenants. Something more than a rule for the few in the neighborhood of Jackson County is being laid down in this instance. A principle for the church is being stated: "Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents . . . their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." The Lord expresses his concern because "children are . . . growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. These things ought not to be."

The condition became even more acute, and in the 90th section the Lord spoke again: "I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth, but verily I say unto you . . . you have continued under this condemnation; you have not taught your children light and truth—and that wicked one hath power, as yet over you, and this is the cause of your affliction.” May we assume, therefore, that the possibility of an increase in power may be found in the more diligent teaching of our children? In the 90th section also there is the pointed statement, “see that they [the family] are more diligent and concerned in the home.”

IT IS OUR PURPOSE to see the home as the most important link in the educational and evangelistic process. The home teaches and evangelizes—let that fact be recognized. The most important teacher-evangelists we shall ever have are our parent-teacher-evangelists. We learn from them, not so much by intentional lessons taught as by imitation and absorption. How important it is then that the child shall find religious practices and conversation and concern as the normal movement of the home. It is the home which leads, not sends, the children to Christ.

For the sake of the child in our midst, we are concerned that the home shall teach the right things, that proper values shall be elevated, that right habits be instilled, that maturity of religious conviction shall be guaranteed—and that the fire of the Restoration may be kindled early in their bosoms.

Perhaps we may say that far more important than the physical birth of the child is the birth of religious convictions—and equally as important as physical development is the development of religious concepts. We must, then, admit that our parentage of their spiritual life is fully as significant a stewardship as our parentage of their physical life. Evangelism becomes for us the process of influencing the children to develop and mature in their beliefs and loyalties.

A maturity of concept is needed by us that we may guide the development of our children. Let them appreciate that their ideas of God must

Confession of a Little Boy

By Winifred Milner

When I go up to bed at night
And all the lights are out,
I like to see the moon and stars
A-shining round about.
'Cause then I see my brother's face
All outlined in the dark;
It doesn't even matter then
If dogs begin to bark.

But when the moon and stars are gone,
And windowpanes are black,
I pull the covers round my head,
And shiver in my back.
I see the black things on the wall;
My brother's face is hid;
And I get awful sorry then
For bad things that I did.

I think tomorrow when it's light,
I'll be so good and kind.
I'll let my brother use the trike;
And all day long I'll mind.
But when the sun brings in the day,
I forget things I've said.
I only seem to think of them
When I am scared in bed.

grow as they grow. A childish view of Divinity will not stand the jolt of adult crises and decisions. Many a child while passing through the period of adolescence carries with him a 2 x 4 concept of God. The school stimulates the mind to perceive an infinite universe beyond his comprehension. If our evangelism has failed to stimulate a growing concept of God, the child will find his stunted idea insufficient, and, sick at heart, may lose faith in the church. It is part of our evangelistic responsibility to rescue our children from meager concepts of God.

If we may take the conversion of “the child in our midst” to be a tooling or retooling of the mind and the heart to produce the attitudes and attributes of the kingdom of God, then we should pray the Lord of the harvest to help us build for stability of character in the formative years.

UNWELCOME MEMORIES come flooding in of youth who have lacked stability and have gone off the deep end in one way or another. Each tragedy points up a failure somewhere along the line. Here is an overpampered, oversheltered youth whose decisions have been ready-made. With family ties cut, and no stability built in, there are trying days ahead. Here is a child subject to an overbearing or inattentive parent. He scorns the idea of a benevolent Father in heaven. Here is a child reared in an atmosphere of jealousy or of carping criticism—his view of life and of the church is distorted. In each case the child is led away from Christ rather than into his presence and our evangelistic effort falls down.

Instability, we are told, very often rises out of the inconsistency between deed and creed on the part of one or both parents. Some homes are consistent in both action and theology. From these there come forth well-adjusted and contributing members of the church. On the other hand, many of our youth of uncertain faith and belief come from homes where there was an unconscious conflict between their parents' way of living and way of believing. Disparity between deed and creed has driven a wedge in the faith of such children, and has utterly negated the possibility of their becoming witnesses for Christ.

WE OWE IT TO our children to be consistent. We can't preach a God of love and act in cruelty ourselves. Nor can we expect our children to have warmth of convictions if ours are cold. Lip loyalty is not enough if we expect our children to give full allegiance to the cause of Zion. If Christ means anything, he must mean everything, else our dualism of faith will bring frightful consequences of uncertainty and disloyalty in our children.

Another problem, cut of the same cloth, and which must find answer in us, finds expression in the disturbing degree in which the worldly standard of success has become, in many instances, the ideal of our youth. We grant that every man should be competent, and should earnestly strive to provide adequately for his family's needs. We need more men and women who are interested in achievement, and who will develop their God-given capacities to the utmost, for the sake of the kingdom of God. But, preoccupation with financial returns is a sorry counterfeit for the abundant life. Such preoccupation has oftentimes been absorbed from parents whose passion for the things of this world has overbalanced their passion for the cause of Zion. We sow to the wind and reap the whirlwind. We think of many who have achieved success in business and the professions. Looking back upon their small and humble church, they are filled with chagrin and consider it beneath their dignity and station. Thus they fail to perpetuate the heritage which was their motivation.

How much better it would be for us to modify the idea of success as did John J. Eagan of Atlanta. An outstanding success in the business world, it was said of him upon his death, "He was a simple follower of Jesus Christ. This was his real business, and everything he did was related to this central interest of his life."

IN EVERY AREA of motivation and action, the child in our midst should see religion as the normal movement of the home. Prayer should be a normal experience for the adolescent, because a family altar has been maintained since childhood. Generous support and close adherence to the principles of the church should be a normal expression because of the example of the parents. Attendance should be no struggle since the habit has been established and strengthened by the parents. A desire to witness could very well be absorbed from wise parental concern that the message of the Restoration be carried to others at home and abroad.

And, for the sake of the child and our endeavor to bring him to Christ, the functioning relationship of the Aaronic priesthood and the home must be improved. It is the function of the Aaronic priesthood to teach the outward habits of righteousness, to help the people to live up to their expressed ideals, and to help in encouraging right motivations. This function ought to be performed while the children are young, else it shall be too late and another generation be lost.

Let's have done with the misapprehension that by teaching the children nothing they are somehow qualified to choose for themselves a few years later than the age of eight. That is a denial of our faith in Christ and his church, and a contradiction of our purposes.

There is nothing wrong with teaching loyalty to Christ. Each of us needs and will seek an object of loyalty. Why deprive the children of the best? A child becomes Christian by knowing the personality of Christ through Christian men and women, not by knowing facts. Don't wait for them to acquire all knowledge, but let them come into the steadying and inspiring influence of the church.

We can stress attitudes toward God, Christ, and the church early. Their way of living will be in response to these attitudes. Let us ground the children in religious experience. Let their loyalties be stabilized in the cleansing and empowering acts of baptism. If, in later years, they may choose another course, then, that is for them to decide in their exercise of their agency. We will have, at any rate, brought them into the best influence we know—and that is our responsibility.

We have enough religious illiterates in our country, and we have enough Restoration illiterates and delinquents on the loose within our church. Only by early training, augmented with persistent ministry, shall we be able to guarantee a new generation of Zion builders and witnesses for Christ.

The plea is persistently made for more men for the mission and pastoral fields. From whence do they come? Generally, they come from homes that have the fire of the gospel burning upon the altar, homes of missionary drive, of conviction and concern. So it is with Zion. Zion builders come from homes which are the living definition and prophecy of Zion.

The Prophet Enos once went into the valley of decision. While wrestling with his problem, he recalled his father in these words:

"He taught me in his language, and also in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. And blessed be the name of my God for it the words which I had often heard my father speak, concerning eternal life, and the joy of the Saints, sunk deep into my heart."

Thus, there was transmitted in childhood the stabilizing and inspirational influence which girded Enos for the problems of maturity. The father brought his son into the pathway of Christ.

God grant that we may strengthen our hands for the good work of home evangelism. Let the insistent invitation of the Christ penetrate our hearts, "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

No agreement about books can make us look upon another man with so friendly an eye as the discovery that he belonged to our period, and shared our special enthusiasms about reading, in the years that stretched between the sixth birthday and the sixteenth.—Vilda Sauvage Owens.

Literature is my Utopia. Here I am not disfranchised. No barrier of the senses shuts me out from the sweet, gracious discourse of my book friends. They talk to me without embarrassment or awkwardness.—Helen Keller.

BOOKS

COMFORT YE MY PEOPLE, by Russell Dicks. N. Y., Macmillan, 1947. 136 pages. $1.50.

Prayers, Scripture selections, and poems for most pastoral needs and occasions is the principal content of this handy pocket-sized book. It is a useful book for those who feel the inadequacy of their own spiritual resources for prayer and comfort, and who seek additional materials to help others. The selections are good, and the convenient classifications are sure to be helpful to pastors who are often too busy to spend the necessary time in searching for their own selections.

TOWARD CERTAINTY, by Robert H. Gearhart, Jr., Association Press, 1947, 92 pages, price $1.50.

This practical little work is written on a popular level suitable for readers of almost every age except the juvenile. It attempts to bring to the reader an understanding of the basic contributions of religion to his personal life, and to establish a moral, wholesome relation to God, society, and the church. It is excellently written and a work of good quality.

A STUDY OF HISTORY, by Arnold J. Toynbee, six volumes abridged into one, by D. C. Somervell, Oxford University Press, 1947, 617 pages, price $5.00.

Those who pursue their reading seriously through the years become increasingly aware that history is one of the most important subjects of human study; that ignorance of it inevitably leads to fatal mistakes in human life, either for a single individual or for a national government. Therefore, an understanding of the meaning of history becomes one of the prime requisites of an intelligent approach to our destiny.

Previously, Toynbee's great, six-volume work under the above title was recognized as one of the greatest literary and historical contributions of our century. At the same time, it was too voluminous for most people to read and too expensive for many to own. The author of this single volume has, therefore, performed a meritorious service in summarizing the great work into a single volume.

We have had many inquiries at our bookstore for this work, and are pleased to let our readers know that it is in stock. It is a book for students who are really willing to work.

TRUTH FOR TODAY, by Bertha Munro, Beacon Hill Press, Kansas City, Missouri, 1947, 380 pages, price $2.00.

Nearly every religious publishing house produces some volume on the plan of this book. There is a page for each day of the year for personal worship and meditation. Each small article starts the theme for meditation, gives a Scripture reading and text, and then provides a discussion with stories and illustrations from life. It concludes with a short verse or prayer.

The advantage of this volume, produced by the publishing house of the Nazarene Church, is that it is not burdened with long words and scholarly language. It is on the simple, humble level of everyday life, deeply sincere and very practical. Every church member can find something good, practical, and inspirational in it for each day of the year.

WHAT MUST THE CHURCH DO? by Robert S. Bilheimer, Harper, 1947, price $1.00.

This is the fifth and concluding summary volume of a series of books addressed to church leaders, seminary students, and others who are on the policy making level of world-wide Christian movement. It deals with the place of the church in modern civilization and contemporary affairs. Those who are endeavoring to understand the place and meaning of organized religion in the life of the world will appreciate it.

HUMAN DESTINY, by Leconte du Nouy, Longman's Green & Co., Inc., 289 pages, price $3.50.

A deeply philosophical work is this volume dealing with physical conditions in the understanding of human life. It has attracted attention among readers on the highest cultural and intellectual levels. It is a landmark in publication that will probably have to be interpreted and diluted for popular consumption at a later time. College and university people will appreciate reading the original contribution and reading it now.

NEW TESTAMENT ORIGIN, by George M. Lamsa. Ziff-Davis, 1947. 104 pages. $2.

This book is a study of the thesis that the New Testament was originally written in Aramaic, the language that Jesus spoke, and that his followers later recorded, and not in Greek as was for so long supposed. We must turn to the Aramaic language for an understanding of the course of Christianity, according to the author.

Mr. Lamsa is an Assyrian, an eminent scholar, a translator of the Scriptures, and an authority in this field. While under the rule of the Turks for six hundred years, his ancestors spoke, wrote, and prayed in the Aramaic language, as he himself did.

This is a book that everyone who wishes to add to his library a significant book about the Bible will wish to buy and read.

Before You See a Psychiatrist

BY NOMIE

IF YOU'RE suffering from an inferiority complex, don't bother some already overburdened psychiatrist with your troubles—don't, that is, until you've tried going to church. Believe me, your church can help you develop confidence in yourself, and it can help you to make friends.

All of which sounds as fabulous as a toothpaste ad, but I speak from experience. Looking back over the painful years of growing up, I can see a shining thread of events born of my church associations which has lighted my way to a happy present.

Like most youngsters, at ten, I resented parental insistence that I attend Sunday school. At twelve, the resentment grew, and I looked upon midweek prayer services as a special preventive measure designed to keep youngsters from doing what they wanted to. At fourteen, I had not altered that opinion, and I was doubtlessly the source of much unhappy speculation to my good mother and father. At sixteen, something happened. I suppose everyone at sixteen feels an overwhelming desire to be recognized as an important part of society. Fortunately, the church gave me that chance. From then on, church and I were pals.

It all began when a very kind lady, who, I am sure, didn't realize how poorly I played, asked me to substitute when the regular pianist wasn't at church one Sunday morning. I was scared stiff—so stiff, in fact, I could hardly move my fingers—but I played, and I went home feeling extremely proud of myself. That was only the beginning. I was asked to play frequently, and I thoroughly enjoyed doing it, although I still blush a little, remembering what difficulty the director had in following me. This experience was just what I needed to put purpose into practicing, and I began working to improve my performance.

I played both the Zion's Praises and Saints' Hymnal through twice, concentrating on such sticklers as "Yes, We Trust the Day Is Breaking" and "Now Thank We All Our God," because I wanted to be able to play whatever was called for. There were other things, too, that helped me overcome the usual teen-age inferiorities. I made speeches, read poems, and directed a play.

After graduation from high school, I moved to another state, but there was church to break the ice and help me get established. It was a small branch with a big need for workers. In a few months, I was teaching a church school class, planning League devotionals, and playing for every service. I had never felt more indispensable, and I loved it. I took any new ambitions that came my way along to church with me. There was the flair for decorating. I asked the pastor (an unusually good-natured man) if I could rearrange the front of the church. For several months I experimented with drapes and pictures and lights and flowers and had a wonderful time providing the congregation with something new to look at each week.

Then came the urge to write. This hit even harder, and I spent a lot of time dreaming about the beautiful opportunities it offered. I began by writing poems . . . poems for the Herald. It was a great day for me when I saw that first one in print. It gave me something good to think about when other things went wrong, and I enrolled in college with high hopes of becoming a journalist.

College might have been a somewhat disappointing experience had it not been for church. Being two hundred miles away from home on unfamiliar ground without even so much as a second-cousin to fall back on can make you feel pretty much an orphan. The church became my family, and we got together often.

The Wednesday evening prayer service that I shunned only a few years before became an important part of my week. As always, there were unlimited opportunities to serve. I played for the children's services and wrote branch news. League provided all the social life I had time for outside of college . . . and so what might have been a rather lonely venture turned out to be a very pleasant one.

Before coming to Independence, I was warned not to attend Stone Church if I wanted to keep on "doing things," because all the jobs were taken, and the congregation was so large people wouldn't even know I was there. Which, of course, proved untrue. All anyone in any branch needs is to be willing; he can't escape getting put to work if he says he's available. Contrary to rumor, the people of Stone Church are extremely friendly. Within two months after I came to the "center place," I had a larger collection of church friends than ever before—larger because there are more young Latter Day Saints in Independence than any other one city in the world. It was easy to find a place in the League and young people's class—and I joined the choir, too. The surprising thing about this is, I thought I couldn't sing. The "audition" proved almost as terrifying an experience as that first Sunday I played, but it was worth a case of nerves.

Now I'm working for the church. This and all the best things of my life (and that includes the man I married) have come as a result of my church associations. I'm terribly impatient with people who regard the church as just another money-making organization; I'm a little impatient, too, with those who look at it as a place to "get religion." Your church is a school of living that can help you be the person you want to be.

If you're suffering from an inferiority complex, you may only be needing a chance for self-expression. Try going to church. If that doesn't help you, by all means see a psychiatrist.

"For Thou Art With Me"

Cogitations of a Hospital Patient

By Hazel Napier

THIS SUNDAY has been one of the happiest of my life. The pale, soft rays of the early-morning sun, falling across the bed, entered my heart like the quietly spoken words of an invocation, and gave promise of a time well spent in silent worship. Never had I felt any nearer to God. The room filled with his Spirit, even as it filled with the glow of the ever-brightening sun. Angelina, my roommate, also perceived it. "The air is full of holiness," she whispered in her broken English. "The Lord seems to be right here in this room."

A part of the Twenty-third Psalm streaked cometlike through my mind, leaving behind the light of its passing: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me." A great peace welled in my heart, sweeping away all unrest and uncertainty. Why had I been uneasy and afraid? Why be afraid of what the X rays and the interminable tests and eye examinations might reveal? Instead of needlessly and foolishly worrying, as I was prone to do, why not spend much of my time in contemplation and quiet meditation? Relaxed, comforted, and strengthened, I fluffed up the pillows and settled down for an hour or so of much-needed sleep. The words, "For thou art with me," reiterated in my mind with the calming and consoling effect of the music of a hymn.

Late this afternoon birds held a noisy conference in the trees below the window. Judging from their raucous tones, they were members of the blackbird family. Their vociferous garrulity might have been disagreeable under other circumstances, but was a welcome break in the monotony of hospital life. Angelina and I laughingly pronounced joint blessings upon their little black heads.

When their session ended and they flew away, I thought of the old legend about how the birds acquired their wings. This is the story as I heard it: Long, long ago, before man was on earth, the birds had no wings. They could sing but could not fly. The animals, not the birds, were the important ones of the earth, and were therefore chosen to do a particular work. But they refused. The lion said he was too great; the rabbit said he was too little; the sheep, overly proud of his position in the world, said he had no time. There was no one to carry the burdens until the humble little birds volunteered to do so. The bundles were tied to their backs, and they carried them from place to place, singing happily as they hopped along. As the days went by, the burdens grew lighter and lighter until they disappeared, and wings grew in their stead. Now the birds could fly high into the sunlight where they were closer to God. As they soared in the clear, blue sky, their songs grew remarkably clear and sweet, exquisite trills of joy and praise.

That story can be applied to our lives. Through the bearing of burdens, we can develop characteristics that enable us to rise singing into the clear, sun-flooded vault of moral and spiritual achievement. Even as the birds volunteered to carry the burdens, so does every true Saint, though perhaps without his cognizance. He does so when he prays for the things that bring him higher and closer to God: wisdom, courage, strength, patience, faith, and love. Such attributes are not ours for the mere asking, but are the results of application, forbearance, perseverance, and the will and determination to surmount every obstacle. We find wisdom in the solving of difficult and perplexing problems; courage in facing and routing the things that make us afraid; strength in overcoming weakness and temptation; patience by enduring without complaint the unpleasant, unhappy things over which we have no control; faith, a daily growing faith, by being tested, perhaps to the utmost; and charity, or sympathetic understanding, by experiencing the ills common to mankind. The triumphant bearing of such burdens gives us wings of victory that can lift us to the golden vicinity of God's presence.

I have formed a deep attachment for Angelina and her family. Every evening the room is filled with laughter and the staccato speech of a foreign tongue—also the smell of garlic. This is my first contact with people of foreign birth, and it came to me as an actual surprise—though why it should, I do not know—that they are just like people I know—somewhat impulsive, a little emotional, kind, considerate, generous, loving. The children adore their little blue-eyed, black-haired mother, and shower her with every attention. They are also mindful of their mother's fellow patient. "We will pray for you," the girls said to me last night. "We will pray that health be restored to your body and the sight to your eyes, if it suits His purpose for you."

I thought of my former attitude toward Angelina and was ashamed. When I arrived at the hospital and was given the room with her, my first thought was, Are they putting me with a foreigner? Quickly I banished the unworthy thought. Always I considered tolerance one of my virtues, but when confronted with the situation failed to measure up to my ideals. Latter Day Saints, I reflected, teach the brotherhood of man and believe that people of all races shall come to Zion, yet some are guilty of intolerant thought, as I had been. Others even refuse to sit by colored people on busses and street cars, and mentally draw their garments aside from people they consider inferior. Such an attitude hinders the work of the church.

Much of the intolerance, if not all, arises from prejudices formed in childhood by improper training. We see evidence of this on all sides. For example, one otherwise good man honestly believes that Hitler did a good deed when he exterminated the Jews. Asked why he so bitterly opposed this sorely oppressed people, he answered, "I don't know, unless it is because my father did."

Let us, then, implant within our children love and consideration for those of different color and class. Let us teach them to choose for their friends people of high and noble character, regardless of race or creed; and that a person's worth is estimated, not by the color of his skin and the country where he was born, but by the things he stands for and the use he makes of his leisure time. Neighborly love and brotherly kindness in action among a people imbued with the principles of the gospel, as we hope our children to be, will culminate in the consummation of our Zionite ideals. The intolerant person will have no place in a society composed of people from all nations; in fact, he would not feel at home there.

Genuine love, such as I have never seen in any group of people, is manifested among the recuperating patients of this hospital. It is expressed in the affectionate gleam of their smiles as they pass in the hall, and revealed in their tender regard as they engage in conversation. Illness has placed them on an equal footing, uniting them by a common interest—their interest in one another.

Their love is undoubtedly the result of equality. This substantiates the interpretation given a statement found in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew: "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Iniquity, it is believed, is another word for inequality. Without equality there can be no real and lasting love, the brotherly love so needed in the world today.

To illustrate, here is an imaginary situation that might be duplicated with modification in many of our branches: There is little, if any, love between comfortably-situated Sister Eugenia and poor Sister Molly. They honestly try to like each other, and make special effort to speak when they meet at church. Eugenia, not knowing the real Molly, is somewhat disdainful—though she may not realize it—of the other's humble, unattractive appearance. Sensing this attitude, Molly is resentful and perhaps a little envious. The barrier existing between them cannot be broken down by casual, ineffectual greetings once or twice a week.

How can such a situation—intolerable among Saints!—be remedied? By frequent visits made in the Spirit of the Master. Eugenia should visit Molly, study her needs and those of the family, and do what she can to alleviate any distressing condition in the home. In return, there are many things Molly could do for her more affluent sister: nurse the family in sickness, comfort them in sorrow, or share any mental or spiritual attainment. Since they have performed a mutual service, they are equals in spite of the difference in finances. By continual visitation they grow to understand and appreciate each other. Respect and love is the result.

That illustration can be given a church-wide application. Through sharing we become equals; through visiting we learn to share. It is not enough merely to see one another on Sundays and Wednesday nights and exchange a few smiles and handshakes. Only through heart-to-heart talks can we recognize individual needs and share what we are able to give. In a spiritual experience one woman was told, "If my people would visit more often and tell one another their experiences, they would be greatly blessed." Through sharing our temporal and spiritual possessions, we would be blessed with the love that breaks down barriers; that understands and forgives. Then the Scripture previously quoted could be paraphrased: "And because equality doth abound, love waxes warm and strong in the hearts of my people."

On Thursday I was given a new partner, an aged woman with a dislocated shoulder. Since Mrs. Henderson is so helpless and it takes so long to get one of the over-worked nurses, I have been doing for her whatever I can, giving her a drink, straightening the bed covers, unwrapping her ice cream, finding the ever-straying spectacles, etc. I performed these pleasant duties as a matter of course, considering it the natural, normal thing to do, and neither wanted nor expected any thanks or reward.

Accordingly, this morning I was very much surprised when Mrs. Barton, daughter of the aged woman, bustled in with a smile as big and shining as the basket of fruit she carried. The apples and oranges, polished by a vigorous, painstaking hand, gleamed like rubies and lumps of gold through the artfully tied crinkly, transparent paper. Pears, bananas, and grapes, superlative in quality and looks, were arranged to the best advantage. The whole made a very attractive appearance. Involuntarily, I uttered an exclamation of delight when Mrs. Barton, beaming with pleasure, placed the basket on the bedside table.

"Mrs. Napier," she said, "I have a gift for you. You have been so kind and good to my mother."

"I loved helping your mother," I said after thanking her for the lovely basket. "I'm glad I was able to do so."

"What you did for her, I appreciate far more than I would a million dollars." Tears glistened in her eyes. "Always I'll remember you with gratitude."

From this I have learned a lesson. The little things are so important, much appreciated—and sadly neglected. Some church members fervently express their desire to serve their fellow beings, yet fail, perhaps because they feel inferior or inadequate, to exercise their good intentions. When death, illness, or any other trouble occurs in the community or church family, someone makes the inevitable remark, "There is no need for me to go; there is so little that I can do." That little thing you or I alone can do or say may bring joy, progress, or victory to others. Our combined efforts will result in the fulfillment of our Zion plans and the evangelization of the world. The little stone cut out without hands becomes a great mountain through the process of aggregation. If every Latter Day Saint consistently does his part, in short time our church will be like a city set on a hill, and will radiate a light that transcends the sun at noonday and fills the night with inconceivable glory.

Since nothing about my eyes reveals any degree of blindness, the nurses, seeing my Braille Manual for the first time, stare in an open-mouthed astonishment that seems to be occasioned not so much by the condition of my eyes as by the nature of my occupation. Apparently they never before saw a hospital patient engage in study.

Last night, while I was reading my Braille lesson, I was visited by a sweet and beautiful nun. Like the nurses, she was astonished—very much so. "And you brought that"—indicating the book—"to study while you are here. God love you!"

After gazing at me intently for a moment, she continued, "It isn't what we bear that counts, but the way we bear it. Some people do not carry their crosses; they drag them." She gave me another long, searching glance. "My dear," she spoke in quiet but ringing tones, "you are going to have a high place in heaven."

After she left, I thought on her words, "Some people do not carry their crosses; they drag them." While it is true that some either through laziness, selfishness, or self-pity fail to lift their crosses high, others drag them because they are too heavy to bear alone. Forgetting that even Christ fell under his Cross, we are prone to criticize or even condemn. "He has no courage," we say of such a person. "He has no faith, no love. It is useless to try to help him." So we let him trod the rough, steep path alone. Still worse is the expression of unkind, uncharitable opinions formed by prejudice or unrighteous judgment.

Or else we are too busy to offer our help. We must see one person about a program and another one about a committee, and brush by little Sister Hannah, whose shoulders sag under the weight of her cross, without a pat, a word, or even a smile. Too concerned with the mechanisms of church-building, we forget our great objective—ministry to people. We forget that easing heartaches and drying tear-dimmed eyes is more important than perfecting a church supper.

Giving assistance does not mean that we are to shoulder the entire responsibility, though we should do all we can to ease the load. The important thing is to let the sufferer know that we love him and have faith in him. Such a message can be conveyed in a letter, over the telephone, or by the pressure of an understanding hand on a bent and weary shoulder. Even the strong and those of enduring faith need this help. It gives them courage until they can stand erect and unconquerable under a cross lightened and made beautiful by love.

Feeling a little lonely (for the first time since my arrival at the hospital I am alone), I turned on the radio in time to hear "my song," a beautiful hymn giving hope to those who must brave the storms of life. I call it my song, for I never hear it except at the times I need comfort and encouragement. This may be coincidence, though I do not think so. Several times I have had the urge to turn on the radio just when the song was being broadcast.

As usual, the song reminded me of a dream I had several years ago. In the dream I was going to church, walking along the familiar streets. Suddenly black, oily clouds appeared on the horizon and boiled upward until the entire sky was covered. Darkness fell about me. Cold, sharp, driving rain pelted my uncovered head. The wind blew against me with such force it was all I could do to take one step after another. It would have been so easy to turn around and let the wind blow me the other way, but I would not. I cried aloud, "I will not give up." Immediately I sensed an invisible Presence beside me, and was given strength to go on. Soon the rain ceased, the wind died away, the clouds broke, and the most beautiful golden light fell upon me. Simultaneously a clear, sweet voice spoke, "I give unto thee everlasting life."

Though the central figure in the dream was, of course, myself, it is

The Majesty of Calmness

By Bessie Taylor

One responsibility that a man cannot evade is the one perhaps he thinks of least—his personal influence. Our conscious influence when on dress parade and posing to impress others, is very small. But our unconscious influence—the silent, subtle radiation of our personality, the effects of our words and acts, the trifles we don't consider—is tremendous.

Into the hands of every individual is given a marvelous power for good or evil—the silent, unconscious, unseen influence of his life. No individual is so insignificant as to be without atmosphere. Life is a state of constant radiation and absorption. We should not be merely an influence, we should be an inspiration.

The man who is calm in the midst of trial and turmoil and duty and industry, who can love and laugh at times when others would be repressed or perturbed by the strain and hurry of an overburdened day, will unconsciously pass these fine elements of his make-up into the character of others.

Life is wondrously complex. There are a thousand mysteries of right and wrong that have baffled the wise men of the ages—to see virtue in rags and vice in velvets; to see ignorance at a premium and knowledge at a discount; to see men starve while others feast; to see so much pain and sorrow in this world, why indeed should there be any? Neither philosophy nor religion can give a final answer of absolute proof. So we must fall back on faith and be wise enough to say, "I will not be disconcerted by these problems and be plunged into doubt. We cannot demand of God the full solution of all his mysteries."

Life is but a succession of opportunities, and all that others can do for us is to give us opportunity. Our greatest opportunities are not always successful. It takes heroic courage and calmness to face fruitless effort and look bravely toward the future. But what to our eyes may seem hopeless failure is often but the dawning of a greater success. Many of our failures sweep us to greater heights of success than we ever hoped for. Life is a successive unfolding of success from failure. There is no honest and true work carried along with constant and sincere purpose that ever really fails. Failure is often the turning-point, the pivot of circumstance that swings us to higher levels. It may not be financial success or fame, but new spiritual and moral inspiration that will change us for all the later years of our life. Life is not really what comes to us, but what we get from it. Failure is one of God's educators. It is experience and steppingstones leading man to higher things. Failure is often the rock-bottom foundation of true success. As we look back and see where we have profited by our failure, it gives us new courage and calmness to face new failures. We must live at our best at all times, and rest calm and untroubled no matter what results come of our efforts. Living at one's best is constant preparation for instant use. No one lives his life more fully, more intensely, and more consciously than the man who is calm.

Calmness poises our natures so that we might live in harmony with ourselves and our ideals. Calmness cannot be acquired of itself and by itself; it must come as the culmination of a series of virtues. The nation that is strongest is the one that contains within its boundaries all that its people need. What is true of nations is true of individuals. History is the biography of a nation; biography is the history of the individual. So it must be that the individual who is most strong in any trial, sorrow, or need, is he who lives on the inherent strength of the virtues and graces of God, and who needs no scaffolding of commonplace sympathy to uphold him. He is calm and poised, ready in an instant to meet any crisis. Man is strong only as he is strong from within, and the more he depends on himself and God, the stronger will he be to help others in the hour of their need.

The Sphinx is not a true type of calmness—petrification is not calmness, it is death. The fatalist is not calm; he hopelessly surrenders to the present and is recklessly indifferent to the future. He has no compass, no chart, no known port to which he is sailing. The man who is calm has his course in life clearly marked on his chart. He is ever mindful of danger and is ever prepared and ready. He knows a clear mind and a cool head are needed in the event of any crisis of his voyage.

Calmness comes ever from within. It is the peace and restfulness of the depths of our natures. The fury of a storm agitates only the surface of the sea—below that is the calm unruffled deep. We can all learn to control our emotions outwardly, but our task is to keep control of the subconscious so that there is no disturbance down deep in our souls. If we cultivate these inner resources, when a crisis does come, we will have a reserve just as we draw on a bank account. Courage, calmness, and indomitable hope come from a systematic, personal, devotional life and serenity in our daily living. There is no better source of study for guidance for soul development than the Three Standard Books of the church. The application of their texts puts us on the highest plane of living. When a man has developed the spirit of calmness and tranquility until it becomes so absolutely part of him that his very presence radiates it, he has made great progress in his life.

Hurry and haste are enemies, number one, to calmness, to dignity, to poise. We are not born with patience, we must acquire it. How easy it is to be impatient, to chafe at delay, fret over failure, and worry over results. This is the age of the "hothouse" and "streamliner"—natural growth is pushed aside, the force pump is substituted. We are truly living in "the hastening time" foretold by the prophets of old. In this day of competition, we hurry to surpass others, while we should seek only to surpass ourselves.

Everything that is great in life is the product of slow growth. Nature never hurries. A fad lives a few weeks, a philosophy for ages. The Tower of Babel, the world's first skyscraper, was a failure because of hurry. Hurry seeks to make energy a substitute for a clearly defined plan. It is both the cause and result of our high-pressure civilization. Hurry always pays the highest price. Most of us do not linger long enough in God's presence to find out his will. We have need to be quiet, silent, watchful for his thoughts, his feelings, and enjoy God, seeking nothing but himself. To thus retire away from the noise, the confusion, and strife of the world is not selfish isolation for the man who is calm and is intensely interested in all that concerns the welfare of humanity. His calmness is but a holy of holies, into which he can retire from the world to get strength to live in the world. Then, in some great hour of his life, when he stands face to face with some awful trial, when the structure of life's ambitions crumble, he will be brave and calm. He will be undismayed and undaunted on the ashes of hope, and the wreck of his building. When the hand of death touches the one he holds dearest, and paralyzes his energy, the calmness that has been accumulating in long years becomes in a moment his refuge and his reserve strength.

Freedom of Speech and of Mind

A Twenty-four Million Dollar Man Hunt

Who Is Qualified To Do the Hunting?

Note: The author of the following letter is a retired minister, a friend of many eminent Americans, a student and observer of our national affairs. For many years he was a friend of the late President Frederick M. Smith. He sees a danger developing in America in the many attempts to "protect" our national interests by limiting the freedom the founding fathers won with such difficulty.—Editors.

Our government is preparing to "purge" all employees "where there is reasonable grounds to doubt their loyalty." This raises several questions. First: loyalty to what? There are many opinions as to what constitutes loyalty to democracy. The members of Congress have never been in complete agreement as to what constitutes loyalty to our form of government; in fact, they differ as to what our form of government really is, or should be. Who are to be the judges in this hunt for disloyalty?

After the first world war, the Ku Klux Klan set itself to conduct a loyalty campaign, and a more disgraceful situation never prevailed in this country. Those sitting in judgment were often without brains or character; in fact, history reveals that this is the type of individual most ready to sit in judgment on men from whom he differs. Why are politicians and office holders supposed to be qualified to assume authority on intellectual differences of opinions in government? Most of them have had no special education nor training to warrant such an assumption. Having been intimately associated for more than fifty years with office holders, from constable to president, we are convinced that finding a group qualified to sit in judgment on the loyalty of men from whom they differ in politics or religion, will be a very difficult task.

In the late war when an intellectual crisis arose, we turned to our universities and colleges for men who could speak with authority. Will we turn to them for help in this delicate and dangerous task? We certainly will need experts whose honesty and wisdom cannot be questioned, for we are embarking upon one of the most dangerous "hunts" a democracy can engage in. You cannot "purge" men's brains by dismissing them from some position, nor by locking them in a prison cell.

The late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "When men have realized that time has upset many fighting faiths, they may come to believe even more than they believe the very foundations of their own conduct, that the ultimate good desired is better reached by free trade in ideas—that the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in a competition of the market." Following the first world war, he wrote to his friend Pollock of England this comment: "The prevailing notion of free speech, seems to be that you may say what you please if you do not shock me." Those fat intolerant years in our country's history, led the great Holmes to decisions that earned for him the title of "The Great Dissenter."

Thomas Jefferson, the father of American Democracy, has left us this guiding principle, "I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." Freedom has to be won in every generation, and without intellectual freedom we cannot have intellectual honesty; and without intellectual honesty, we cannot build a just and enduring Democracy.

Tribute to Samuel Pope

SAMUEL POPE

Samuel Pope, the sixth child of Anne and William Pope, was born in Morend, England, in 1862. His mother died when he was just a boy, and his sister assumed the task of caring for the family. In 1885, they came to Canada and made their home in London, Ontario. Samuel, who was always religiously inclined, joined the Bible Christians in England because he felt it would help him to live a better life. While working in a shoe factory in London, he first heard of the Reorganized Church and read with interest the tracts given him by a fellow worker. When he attended services with his friend, he felt strongly that there was something worth-while in the Latter Day Saint teachings. He heard at one service that names were being submitted for baptism, but he walked out of the church. When he reached the corner, he walked back to the church and asked for baptism—a step which he never regretted. His greatest happiness was in working for the church. After his ordination as an elder, he served the Communion to the sick in his congregation. He was married in 1894 to Editha Mortimer, organist at London Church. With her and his two daughters, he left London for New Westminster, British Columbia. Here he was appointed to serve as pastor of the branch, a position he held for over twenty years. Even after his resignation in 1933, he continued to help as much as his declining strength would permit. His wife, Editha, died in 1931. Following a serious illness in 1943, he went to the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. Paul Rannie, in Independence, Missouri. He was happy to be able to attend Stone Church and renew old acquaintances, for many of the missionaries had been his guests in past years. He assisted at group meetings and rejoiced that even in his old age he could still work for the Lord. His thoughts were like those of the poet who said, "Still tackling plans unfinished, tasks undone clear to the end . . . No lagging steps, no faltering, no shirking. Let me die working." Brother Pope returned to his home in New Westminster shortly before his death on April 18, 1947.

High Lights of the Women's Class -- First Period General Conference

Subject -- "Looking Inward -- Reaching Outward"

Reported by Mrs. Lena Graham and Jeanette Hield

Monday - April 7, 1947.

The meetings of the Women's Department at the 9:45 - 10:45 period were in the nature of informative talks by qualified leaders on the various phases of the work, the general theme being "Looking Inward—Reaching Outward." Special numbers were omitted, so that more time might be devoted to the educational features.

Mrs. Pauline Arnsion, leader of the general church-wide organization, was in charge of the gatherings daily, and addressed the opening meeting. Prayer by Bishop James F. Keir followed by one verse of "Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," sung by the congregation, opened the meeting of April 7.

Mrs. Arnsion sounded a note of welcome to all women, especially to the sisters from foreign lands who had come so far to attend the Conference meetings. "I am glad to see new faces," she said, "to make new friends. That is as it should be if we would continue to progress. We cannot do this without being constantly built up by new recruits. The women's work is most important; from its ranks come our wives and mothers. It is almost as old as the church itself. History tells us that twelve years after the church was organized the Nauvoo Female Relief Society was born, and it was recognized as one of the first organizations for charitable purposes in the country. We have made many changes since then but the same goals have motivated us."

Mrs. Arnsion then outlined the various working bodies in the organization, from the General Council of Women, which consists of seventeen members in the United States, one in Australia and one honorary member, nineteen in all, to the local leader, in each case stressing the necessity for co-operation with those in charge.

The General Council works under and in direct charge of the First Presidency. Its duties include general oversight of the work, formulating programs for General Conference, reunions and institutes, furnishing teaching personnel where necessary, editing study material, etc. The supervisory council works through the district leaders, who in turn co-ordinate, advise with, and direct the work of the local organizations through the local leaders. The women of the local organizations are the ones who put into effect plans formulated in the General Council. These local leaders need to keep in close contact with the district leaders. This can best be accomplished by the filing of periodical reports. Failure to do this by local leaders retards the reports of the district leaders to the General Council and often causes confusion and embarrassment.

Close co-operation between local pastors and leaders of local women's organizations is necessary, for the pastor is the chief authority in the local church. Otherwise unity cannot be achieved and progress made. It sometimes takes tact and patience, Mrs. Arnsion said, but it can usually be achieved. If co-operation seems impossible there is always one higher up for us to appeal to.

The speaker called attention to the vast amount of good study material available in pamphlets and the Women's Handbook which provide information regarding the duties of leaders and the scope of their work. Each local should have a set of bylaws to govern the body.

Mrs. Arnsion advocated the need for a balanced program in locals. She suggested the study of marriage planning for the youth and budgeting the income. Money-making projects have their place also, as well as handwork and fellowship.

The pastor should be consulted as to projects before money is earned.

She stressed especially the visiting program and the cradle roll work in the women's department.

The program of the local women's organization should fit into the general program of the branch, for all must be for the total good of the church.

Tuesday - April 8, 1947

The program for April 8 was divided into three parts. Before introducing the first speaker, Mrs. Arnsion read greetings from Mrs. Nellie Arrowsmith, a sister of Mrs. Blanche Mesley, in England; from women of the church in Berlin; and from Mrs. Mildred Grabske, whose home is in Independence, but who is temporarily located in California. A verse of the song "Consecration" was sung; prayer by Mrs. Arnsion.

I

Mrs. J. Harry Paxton of the General Council then took charge of the discussion and treated the subject, "Reunions and Institutes." In discussing the benefits of the institute for women, she said reunion classes and planned institutes bring women of the district into closer contact, helping them to plan their work and to sense the need for greater and more co-operative endeavor. "The purpose of the institute is not for entertainment, but to find ways and means of doing the job better," Mrs. Paxton said. The goals of the planned institute she listed under five distinct heads:

1. To carry back to those at home material useful in stimulating co-operation in the local.
2. To develop a consciousness of the place of the local as an important part of the whole.
3. To improve the technique and organization of the visiting program.
4. To encourage better service to the community. Here Mrs. Paxton inserted the thought that no local was functioning 100 per cent as long as there was one unsightly back yard in the community.
5. To teach the women the use of the Handbook that will answer fifty per cent of their questions.

II

At this time Mrs. Paxton gave way to Mrs. Orris Salisbury of Stewartsville, leader of the Far West Stake Women's organization, who discussed the subject of "Planning the Institute for Rural Areas." Far West Stake is distinctly rural. There are twenty-four congregations and nineteen women's locals, all of which, with the exception of St. Joseph, are located in small towns or rural districts.

In planning their first institute in 1945, in co-operation with the stake president, Emery Jennings, a matter of first consideration was a central location, and Stewartsville was chosen. October has been found to be the best time. A one-day institute is best for rural people. Sunday was chosen as the day. A skeleton program is first outlined and later developed in detail, starting well in advance of the day set. Guest speakers are secured, time given following the talk for questions and discussions. A get-acquainted period is scheduled between programs. A co-operative lunch is served at noon.

A balanced program is essential, the speaker said, using women of varying age groups, and also women from different parts of the stake or district, as well as a balance between local and imported talent. Among the goals accomplished, these were enumerated: closer friendship, greater efficiency, challenge to greater activity, better understanding.

As a rural leader she mentioned a few don'ts. "Don't fill the day too full; don't start too early, but start on time and close early, around 3:30 to allow time for the return trip, as many drive long distances to attend."

Contact afterward the women who were not present, urging attendance at the next institute.

III

Mrs. C. C. Peterson, leader of women in the Kansas City, Missouri, Stake, discussed "Planning the Institute for City Areas." "Organization is a cold term," she said, "but organization is very necessary." The city institute can well cover a period of two or three days, as the people are more closely situated and transportation is not a major problem.

A large enough church to accommodate the crowd must be chosen, sometimes it is divided between two churches on different days. Programs must be arranged well in advance and speakers informed. Subjects chosen must carry a charge to spiritual growth and challenge our thinking. The time is important; must be chosen when other things do not detract, and must best suit the majority.

Publicity must be started at least a month in advance. Plans should be made so as not to be too hard on family life. Evening sessions are arranged for business women. Provisions for noon lunch and care of children are included in plans. Mrs. Peterson also stressed the idea of a balanced program and the use of as many younger women as possible.

A Sunday dedicatory service may well be a fitting climax.

IV

Mrs. Paxton concluded her talk with a brief discussion of reunion work. "Great progress has been made in planning reunions," she said. "Forty years ago reunion programs consisted of three sermons and a prayer meeting daily." Now programs are well organized. The needs of the young people are met; children also; there are priesthood classes, recreational periods. The women should have class-work also and at the regular class period. The women can get co-operation if they work in harmony with the reunion committee. "I hope for the day," Mrs. Paxton said, "when there will be a woman on every reunion committee."

Wednesday - April 9, 1947.

The meeting opened by singing a verse of "Take Time To Be Holy" and prayer by Mrs. Carrie M. Ballinger of Independence.

Bishop C. A. Skinner was the speaker, his subject being, "Having To Do With Money." "Money is important as an aid to better living," but the speaker quoted the Apostle Paul who said, "The love of money is the root of all evil." Better be poor than allow money to rob one of his spirituality. Many Scriptures can be found to support frugality.

One of the principal causes of financial troubles is living beyond one's income. We should spend first for things we need, and things which will bring the greatest lasting satisfaction. Other contributing factors to financial failures are: lack of an aim, nine out of ten spend recklessly with no aim for the future; inefficiency and mismanagement; installment buying. The way money is spent determines one's financial standing. Money represents labor. If the wage is five dollars a day and that amount is spent, we have spent a day of our life.

Bishop Skinner used charts to illustrate his talk, one showing the alarmingly small percentage of people who after a stated period of economic opportunity were even self-supporting; fewer still were comfortably fixed for old age, and still fewer rich.

He offered the system of budgeting the income as a solution, under normal conditions, explaining it in detail and called attention to budget books and expense record books available at the church bookstore.

Bishop Skinner suggested that the family should be brought together and help decide in advance what amount and how the money is to be spent. His advice was to put down in a book immediately the amounts spent daily and balance monthly.

Thursday - April 10, 1947.

"Take Time To Be Holy," was again used for opening, followed by prayer by Mrs. Arnsen. Dr. F. M. McDowell, head of the Department of Religious Education, discussed the subject "Reciprocal Relationships," or how women can assist and promote youth movements of the church.

"The strength of the church is in the quality of its men, women and children," the speaker said. The wave of moral delinquency among the young, the increase of the divorce rate, have made inroads into our own church. The loss of members of junior high school age is a problem. The Department of Religious Education is attempting to overcome these problems in various ways: improvement and standardization of church schools; systematic leadership training; Boy Scout training with "God and Country" award; special age programs.

Most important of all agencies, however, is church-home co-operation. All agencies depend upon the active support of mothers. The church home will not survive unless it is made a school of religious education. The home must assume the major role. It must not only co-operate; it must take first place. Parents practice teaching in every phase, in every range of human endeavor. It must be the uppermost thing in their lives. Boys and girls need the ministry of the priesthood as much as adults, but all other agencies must supplement home teaching. A united endeavor will be required to lift family life so the home will become the first school of human conduct.

Dr. McDowell called to the attention of his listeners the vast amount of literature aids available, including eight series of quarterlies.

Friday - April 11, 1947

The period from 9:45 to 10:45 on Friday was devoted to a play called "Henceforth Friends," written by Mrs. S. A. Burgess and Miss Eveline Burgess. Mrs. Pauline Arnsen opened the meeting, then Mrs. Burgess made introductory remarks on Friendly Visiting, giving credit to past leaders in Independence who had done fine work with this part of women's work in the church. The names of the cast were read. The scene showed the pastor, women's leader and friendly visitor talking over the needs of certain individuals in the branch and the best ways these people could be approached. Before the meeting closed the pastor asked divine help on their efforts.

The second and third scenes showed the calls being made—first to one who had lost her companion and the second to the young mother. The visitors brought encouragement and help as well as the knowledge that the church had an interest in them.

After the play, which was well acted, further explanation of the visiting program was made and a question period followed.

Saturday - April 12, 1947

Mrs. Arnson, General Chairman, opened this meeting by informing the class that this was the birthday of the women's organization in the Reorganization. It was organized April 12, 1893. She then presented a motion that greetings expressing the love and affection of this Conference be sent to the women abroad. This motion was carried unanimously by a standing vote.

Mrs. Evelyn Velt then took charge of the meeting. Her subject, "International Womanhood," was introduced by telling the story of the artist commissioned to design windows for a church and his dream of a stranger changing the color of the faces of the children on his canvas. The story illustrated the fact that all men, regardless of color or race are God's children.

Representatives from different nations in which the gospel had been preached were seated on the platform behind Mrs. Velt. She related several spiritual experiences which strengthened her faith and demonstrated that God works through all people. She added that we must know people to love them and without knowledge we get the wrong impressions and prejudices. Latter Day Saint women should lead in creating right attitudes. Children are not color conscious. Friendliness cannot be legislated. By making friends of all people we destroy our possible enemies.

The meeting closed with the benediction by Mrs. Pauline Arnson.

With an Eye Single to What?

YOU ARE a habitual . . . what? Each human being forms a set of habits peculiar to himself. Thus, each of us is a habitual something—or other, ranging from habitual drunks to habitual churchgoers.

Lying between these two extremes is a maze of complexities, but let us single out the individual who is habitually shortsighted. He plans from day to day—that is, if he plans at all. Which is more, he utterly fails to draw on his own experience or the experiences of others to govern and guide his actions. He is quick to take avenues of short and temporary gains so that he can build up his temporal prestige and give himself temporary success. This is accomplished by his, and only his, own hand. He insists on traveling this road because it is the easiest, even though future results may be severely punishing. He is not dishonest with others, but is not always too scrupulous in apparently small things, thus being dishonest with himself. Because he doesn't face things squarely, his neighbors and friends feel uncomfortably the pressure of his doing.

If this fellow would step back and look at himself and those about him, he would observe several things. He would see that his short gains are often bait to make a sad and losing gambler of himself—a gambler not only with his economic goods but also with his soul. Too, he could see that those short gains make his shortsightedness ever shorter. The small material gains at the expense of his neighbors and friends are collective insurance of his ignominiousness and crowning spiritual failure. He is serving his God full speed in reverse and the society in which he lives in like manner.

Our present-day society is too intricately balanced for him or his loved ones to escape the repercussions of his shortsightedness. Sadly enough, it is usually the loved ones who feel those repercussions. This shortsightedness enters into the economical, political, social, and religious life of the man and the society around him. Ugly, but real.

Now let's turn the scrutinizing eye on ourselves, since we know what we're looking for. Yes, habitual shortsightedness! We all have it; some more, some less. We Latter Day Saints as a progressive people, Zion-builders, and followers of God, cannot afford to have that habit, much less foster it. It is too expensive a pleasure. If we do choose to indulge, then our eyes are single to nothing.

One of the many steps in stretching out past that barrier of shortsightedness is to see the fellow in the back seat of our church services, business meetings, and social functions. He is as much a part of the group as the leader. People outside judge a group by their contacts with it. The leader represents the group, but so does the fellow in the back seat. If that link is weak, the whole organization suffers. Success depends on united effort. We must be sure we are reaching that fellow in the back seat with the same force and enthusiasm as we are the folks in the front seats.

Here lies the necessity of each and every individual being fully informed and well educated. By education, I do not mean a collection of facts and principles. I mean a sense of balance and direction and purpose, also. Knowing Christ's teaching is not Christian education; rather, it is interpreting those teachings in well-guided action. Education of every type is available today. This opportunity is not being ignored by Latter Day Saints. Our ability to be a progressive force in today's world rests heavily on how well we use the opportunity.

If all we draw from teaching is a volume of facts, we have missed the mark. Education is planned action. We should be gaining that most necessary sense of balance, direction, and purpose, and we must shed the all too-expensive habit of being shortsighted. As Latter Day Saints, we should be moving forward as individuals, and as a body, making sure to leave no one behind but gathering new recruits to add speed and force to God's cause.

We come from every walk of life, yet we should be moving toward a single goal. In order to do that, we must see beyond today into such a distant future that we can determine which direction we must move to gain that much-talked-of and somewhat-less-worked-on-goal, Zion.

We must proceed "with an eye single to the glory of God." This is our insurance against shortsightedness.

New Horizons

As Molding Clay In God's Hand

By Bernice Fleeharty

Recently, I was observing a display of greenhouse roses. It was a picture of exquisite beauty. As I was standing there, I heard someone near by say to her friend, "Is it not miraculous the way roses grow in such rare beauty?" This was not a new thought. Yet, from its adequate expression, there occurred to me a different and broader understanding of it. Was not the baked clay vase in which the roses were arranged as important to the beauty of that atmosphere as the flowers themselves? True, the flowers furnished the loveliness of the picture, but it was the vase containing the water which sustained this beauty.

My head dropped in reverence, and a silent prayer leaving my heart found God.

Thank you, dear Father, for all the tangible beauties of this universe. We are deeply appreciative of them, but we ask thee to help us see beyond them to the beauty of their sustainers—universal laws, divine principles, and human lives. Help us to play our part in the picture of life as does the vase of clay, with purpose and dignity, yet humbly and with an unassuming spirit. Help us to understand and accept the molding, the changing, the designing, and the tempering which is necessary in our lives if, like the vase, we desire to serve.

We would place ourselves as unreservedly in your hands as the clay in the hands of its master artist. This we know will enable you to mold into our lives a beauty which will harmonize with the beauty of thy plan as completely as this vase harmonizes with the beauty of these roses. Grant us, when we stray from the original pattern, the courage to submit ourselves for change. If it becomes necessary for us to be remolded, help us then, without bitterness or skepticism, to place ourselves anew in your hands.

Make us see the sin and ignorance of sitting by as shapeless wads of clay on a window sill, complacently harboring unlimited possibilities but lacking the touch of the master's hand. Take our lives and mold them to thy will, tempering them with experiences which will stabilize and give us a completeness and beauty pleasing to you. Make us like this vase whose beauty is lasting.

After my prayerful pondering, I opened my eyes to find that the greenhouse attendant had removed the roses from the vase. In their stead had been placed a bouquet of red and white carnations. Beside me someone was saying, "Is it not miraculous the way carnations grow in such rare beauty?"

I smiled.

The Trouble-Shooter

If You're Not Really Sorry . . .

QUESTION: What does the process of repenting involve? I know what is right, but I find that I'm not really willing to do it. How can I develop a "contrite heart" when I don't actually feel repentant?

ANSWER:

By Seventy Harold I. Velt

The attitude of unwillingness to do what one should is not exceptional. It has been the common lot of humanity since Adam and is the fundamental reason why everyone should be "born again."

The process of repenting involves the allowing of a divine testimony to produce within us the desire to set ourselves right with God, the realization of the futility of personal effort alone to transform a life, and prayer for a change of heart through the work of the Holy Spirit. This prayer might well be: "Lord, I find myself unwilling to do what I should, so I ask thee to change my heart." True repentance also requires a consistent effort on our part to do all we can to overcome our human tendencies. . . . "For we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do." (2 Nephi 11:44). We know by experience and the testimony of others what will happen if this plan is followed. It is God's eternal decree. It is the good news of the gospel. It is the urgent need of many whose names are on the records of the church as well as the unconverted, for not all members have allowed themselves to be transformed by the power of God, nor have all retained that transforming grace after receiving it.

How can you develop a contrite heart when you don't actually feel repentant? God be thanked, one does not have to follow his natural feelings if he would experience a contrite heart and the process of regeneration. This is where faith comes in . . . faith to do right regardless of contrary feelings. Some of the most outstanding conversions have come as the result of suppressing feelings in order to do right. Faith to do right is of greater value than faith to believe. One of our apostles, before uniting with the church, stated that he was being baptized not because of any spiritual desire or emotional urge but because he believed it was the right thing for him to do. During his confirmation, the Spirit was present in power to confirm his faith.

God is willing and anxious to transform every life. He will not take away any man's agency, so there must first be a willingness on our part to allow God's purpose to develop in us. Remember, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."

Personal Achievement

Mrs. Ethel Durboraw, a member of the faculty of the Minnesota State Teachers College at Moorhead, was honored in a full-page feature article in the Moorhead Daily News for May 3, 1947, concerning her achievements in conducting the laboratory kindergarten class at the college. She is a member of the Fargo, North Dakota, Branch of the church, and district leader of the women's work, according to a report sent us by Mrs. Cy Bielfeldt, 116 Fourteenth Street South, Moorhead, Minn. Sister Durboraw was formerly Ethel Banta of Lamoni.

Sperry, Oklahoma

Pastor, W. P. Rumsey

L. W. Kohlman of Tulsa was the 11 o'clock speaker on Sunday, April 27. Following the basket dinner at noon, the wedding of Una Cisman and Ray Childers was solemnized at the church. At 2:30, an ordination service was held at which Joe Faulk and W. B. Howard were ordained elders; L. W. Kohlman, O. A. McDowell, Glen Johnson, and W. P. Rumsey officiated. W. C. Haden was the evening speaker.

The Zion Builders Class, which meets each Monday evening, is studying The Story of the Church. This group is preparing a dramatized sermon to be given in late May. The juniors were in charge of the Mother's Day program.

The proceeds from the pie and box supper held in the church basement in April will be used to send several of the young people to youth camp at Pawnee in June.

A total of $1,100 has been saved for the building of an annex to the church. Attendance at church school has increased so much that there is not adequate space in the present building for all the classes. The women continue to meet each Thursday and quilt.

Sperry Saints extend their sympathy to Mrs. Florence Davis in the loss of her husband, Ralph.

Springfield, Missouri

Pastor, Norman Cox

Former Pastor W. J. Breshears was ordained to the office of high priest at General Conference. Now under general church appointment, he is being sent to the Gulf States area as district president. Mrs. Breshears and the children will remain in Springfield until the close of school. James and Helen Kemp, natives of Springfield, who have been serving under general church appointment in Spokane, Washington, are being sent to Hawaii on a three-year mission. Stopping in Springfield on their way back from conference, they worshiped with the local congregation at a midweek prayer service.

Three young men, Keith Scott, Norman Eugene Cox, and Bennie Simmons, have been called to the Aaronic priesthood.

Seventy James Daugherty spent ten days in Springfield visiting, preaching, and holding cottage meetings. During his stay, he gave illustrated lectures on "The Church That Jesus Christ Built" and "Archæological Ruins in Central America."

Lester Scott, captain of detectives, recently showed a film on juvenile delinquency. Special guests on this occasion were the Cubs, Boy Scouts, and members of the Scout Executive Council.

Leonard Lea, managing editor of the Herald, was the speaker on Sunday morning, April 20.

On May 4, James W. Davis of Mansfield, Missouri, was ordained to the office of patriarch, and High Priest Norman Cox was installed as pastor of the branch. Apostle Arthur Oakman was the speaker. A basket dinner was served at noon by the women's department.

An attendance-quiz contest is now in progress in the church school. A new class for young adults has been organized with Charlcie Yeoman as teacher; they are studying Smith's Exploring the Church.

The women recently sponsored a chili-soup-salad-pie supper and white elephant sale to raise money.

To get funds to charter a bus for General Conference on the final Sunday, the young people gave a chicken dinner and program, "A Day in Radio." The meal was served by costumed waiters and waitresses.

Leo Nye and Roy Starkey were baptized by Francis Bishop on March 29 and confirmed by Elders Joseph Breshears and James Daugherty. Mary Riebold, Ralph and Betty Anderson were baptized on April 27 by Joseph Breshears and Glen Yeoman. The confirmation service was held on the following Wednesday evening, Elders Glen Yeoman, Joseph Breshears, Norman Cox, and Francis Bishop officiating. Johnny and Mary Francis, son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, were also blessed at this service.

The Springfield Saints have been saddened by the death of Noel Starks on March 24, Jacob Kiefer on April 13, and LaVerne Marvel on April 22.

San Francisco, California

First Church

Pastor, R. F. Ralston

The women, with their leader, Lydia Gann, meet regularly for classwork with Pastor Russell Ralston as teacher. A progressive program for the priesthood was outlined and discussed on April 27. Each family in San Francisco is to be visited in the near future.

The Junior Leaguers met at the home of Elaine Wadhams on Friday, April 4, for a wiener roast. An all-League picnic was held in Golden Gate Park on April 20.

Seventy George Njeim conducted a two-weeks' series of missionary services in March. Over thirty-five nonmembers were contacted through the cottage meetings which preceded the series with three baptisms resulting.

The pastor and members of the priesthood are devoting Saturdays to digging a larger church basement and laying a new foundation.

First Church was represented at General Conference by Glen Smith and Emery S. Parks.

—Emery S. Parks, reporter.

Tucson, Arizona

Pastor, August Hartman

The Junior Leaguers meet every two weeks with their leader, Robert Heald. At present, they are raising money to pay their way, as a group to the reunion at Granite Dells. On Easter Sunday, they presented a sunrise tableau of the first Easter; later they sponsored an egg hunt for the small children in Tucson Mountain Park. The program by the League and department of music was given between church school and Communion service.

The young adult class is studying Overviews of Latter Day Saintism with Elder Harry Sheffer as teacher. This group has a potluck supper, business meeting, and social gathering once each month.

A prebaptismal class is being taught by Pastor August Hartman.

Recent activities sponsored by the women have been a game night, Mexican supper, dollar day, kitchen bazaar, and luncheon. They have sent six boxes of clothing, three boxes of food, and forty-four pounds of soap to Holland. The study class is held the first Friday evening of each month. At present, Mrs. Alfred Sleight is teaching; Women of the Bible is being used as a text.

Jack West is in charge of visual aids. Films on Peru, Jerusalem, and church history have been shown since March.

The music department is under the direction of Marian Chesworth and Hazel Donn.

Priest Heber Colvin, book steward, has given several book reviews at the close of the church school hour. On Memory's Beam was reviewed by Lulu Hill.

A "fun night" was held on March 21 under the supervision of Russell Wood, treasurer of the Arizona reunion committee. Proceeds were donated to the reunion fund.

Visiting speakers have been John W. Rush-ton, T. R. Davis of Bisbee, and Ammon Robertson of Las Cruces, New Mexico. Clara McDole gave a resume' of General Conference activities on the evening of April 27.

—Mrs. Russell Wood, reporter.

Goodland, Kansas

Pastor, J. R. Graybill

Branch day is observed the first Sunday of each month. Following the potluck dinner at noon, committee meetings and group discussions pertaining to branch needs are held. On January 19, financial statements were filed. A song for the occasion was written by Pauline Roberts and sung by Vera Van Donge.

Stevens' Bible Studies is being used as a text by the Leaguers. On March 26, they presented two plays, "Answered Prayer" and "This Day I Choose." The League choir, directed by Twyla Middleton, has sung several times at various services.

The following officers have been elected by the women's department: Pauline Roberts, president; Libby VanDonge, vice-president; and O'ella Marolf, secretary. Laurine Carl and Gladys Rohr were appointed to serve on the flower committee. The department has adopted a church family in Germany to send food and clothing to.

Third quarter teachers are Dorothy Graybill, kindergarten; O'ella Marolf, primary; Gladys Rohr, junior; Pauline Roberts, junior high; and Dick Marolf, adult.

Stratford, Ontario

Pastor, H. G. Schlotzbauer

The junior department of the church school, under the supervision of Mrs. H. G. Schlotzbauer, was entertained at a valentine party in the lower auditorium of the church. A basket lunch was served at the supper hour. Mr. and Mrs. Earl Galbraith gave a party at their home for the Leaguers on Saturday evening, February 15. The women sponsored a potluck supper in the basement of the church the following Wednesday to raise money to further department projects. The members are currently serving dinners in their homes for $.50 each.

March 30 was observed as parents' day in the junior departments.

Nearly 100 per cent of the families are now taking the Herald.

Four members of the congregation attended General Conference and returned with favorable reports. Many Stratford Saints went to London on Sunday, May 3, to hear Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Apostle D. Blair Jensen who spoke at the district conference.

Guest speakers have been Elders D. B. Perkins of Wiar-ton and Arthur Dunn of Guelph, and Bishop J. C. Dent of London.

DEATHS

SYMMONDS.—Rosa Mae, daughter of Grant and Ellen Woolsey, was born January 13, 1890, in Atchison County, Missouri, and died April 26, 1947, at St. Joseph, Missouri. On May 2, 1911, she was united in marriage to Isaac Newton Symmonds. They made their home on a farm in Atchison County until four years ago when they moved to St. Joseph. On November 3, 1946, Mrs. Symmonds was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. She was a great lover of home and family and was ever concerned about those who cared for her during her illness. A son, Woolsey Edison, preceded her in death, being killed at Anzio Beachhead, Italy, on May 26, 1944.

She leaves her husband, Isaac; four daughters; Mrs. Leona Seamonds and Mrs. Mildred Close, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Eunice Brown, Tarkio, Missouri; and Mrs. Roberts Stevens, Blanchard, Missouri; a son Merlin, of the home; one brother, Ernest Woolsey, Tarkio; and three grandchildren. Services were conducted at Westboro, Missouri, Elder R. M. Russell officiating. Interment was in Tarkio cemetery.

GOULD.—Ella J., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Lewis Whiting, was born December 6, 1857, at Manti, Iowa, and died April 2, 1947, at her home in Independence, Missouri. As a child, she moved with her parents and the first colony of white settlers following the Indian raids to what is now Otter Tail County, Minnesota. This group of Latter Day Saints established the town of Clitherall and it was there that Ella married Winfield W. Gould on July 7, 1875; eight children were born to them. Mr. Gould, a son, Winfield, and a daughter, Iva, preceded her in death. Her passing marks the last of the Minnesota colony survivors.

She leaves one son, Leon A. of Bemidji, Minnesota; five daughters; Mrs. P. A. Sherman, Mrs. Ethel Tucker, Hallie M. and Gladys Gould of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Nina Tucker of Pleasant Hill, Missouri; a sister, Mrs. W. F. Perry of Rich Hill, Missouri; a brother, Lester Whiting of Independence; twenty grandchildren, and forty-seven great-grandchildren. The funeral was held at the Roland Speaks Chapel with Elder Glaude Smith in charge and Evangelist R. V. Hopkins officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, Ida, to whom he was married fifty-five years ago; three daughters; Ethel of Alpena, Michigan; Bessie of Detroit; and Lulu of Bay City. He also leaves two brothers. One daughter, Pearl, preceded him in death. Funeral services were conducted by John Umphrey at the Pinconning Chapel. Burial was in the Bentley cemetery.

STARKS.—Noel L., was born August 25, 1880, at Hamilton, Michigan, and died March 24, 1947, at the home of his brother in Springfield, Missouri. He was baptized July 31, 1894, into the Reorganized Church, being ordained a priest on July 1, 1910, and an elder on September 3, 1911. For a number of years, he resided in Texas and was the first pastor of Houston Branch.

Surviving are two sons: Arthur E. and Allen M., both of Elizabeth, New Jersey; two daughters: Mrs. Arthur Carpenter of Fulton, New York, and Mrs. Edward Murray of Hannibal, New York; a brother, Arthur, of Springfield; and eight grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the church in Springfield, Elder John Dowker and Joseph Breshears officiating. Interment was in East Lawn Cemetery.

KLOPPING.—Adolph L., was born March 25, 1868, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died April 29, 1947, in the Jennie Edmundson Hospital. He spent his entire life in Pottawattomie County, Iowa, living on a farm near Underwood for more than fifty years. He was married to Mary Fisher in February, 1892. Mrs. Klopping preceded him in death in 1921. On October 10, 1925, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful worker throughout his life.

He leaves a son, Ray, of Patterson, California; a daughter, Mae Scott of Council Bluffs; two sisters: Mrs. Ed Geise of Minden, Iowa, and Mrs. Jared Stageman of Big Timber, Montana; three grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Services were held at the Cutler Funeral Home in Council Bluffs, with Elder V. D. Ruch in charge. Burial was in Walnut Hill Cemetery.

HASBROUCK.—Mattie L., was born in Bolling Green, Indiana, on November 15, 1867, and died at the home of her son on April 12, 1947. She was married to John Jay Hasbrouck in November, 1884; six children were born to this union. Mr. Hasbrouck and two sons, Abram and Irving, preceded her in death. Both she and her husband joined the Reorganized Church on July 25, 1892. During the forty-seven years she was a resident of Nampa, Idaho, she was an active member, frequently opening her home to missionaries to be used for cottage services.

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Edith Rice of Seattle, Washington; three sons: Ralph and Harold of Nampa, and Dewitt of Boise, Idaho; one brother; six grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

MEGERS.—George, was born October 18, 1871, in Kankakee County, Illinois, the son of George and Amelia Meggers, and died at his home near Pisgah, Iowa, (no date given), on September 13, 1899, he was married to Bertha C. Beecham in Little Sioux, Iowa, where they lived until 1912 when they moved to Pisgah. Mrs. Meggers preceded him in death thirteen years ago. He was a life-long member of the Reorganized Church and held the office of elder.

He is survived by a brother, Henry, of Independence, Missouri; and two sisters: Mrs. A. O'Dell of California and Emma Meggers of Pennsylvania. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Pisgah, with Elders Mark Hutchinson and Frank Hough officiating. Burial was in the Little Sioux cemetery.

JARVIS.—Imogene Blair, died April 15, 1947, at Independence, Missouri, at the age of seventy-one. She is survived by her two daughters: Mrs. J. R. Johnson, Shreveport, Louisiana, and Mrs. Rouse Sastham, San Antonio, Texas; nine grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Akers Funeral Home on April 17, Elder H. E. Winegar officiating. Interment was in Mission Burial Park.

SILK.—William Isaac, was born in 1869 near Shelburne, Ontario, and passed away April 2, 1947, in Toronto, Canada. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood.

Surviving are his wife, Louise; a son, William, Jr.; four daughters: Mrs. Florence Kaiser, Mrs. Mary Booth, Mrs. Laura Waller, and Mrs. Dorothy Cain; two brothers: Herbert and Delbert Silk; two sisters: Mrs. Frank La Plante and Mrs. J. F. Huston; six grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Trull Funeral Home in Toronto, Elder J. L. Prentice officiating. Invitation to Nevada Saints

On March 30, four families met at the Trimmer home in Genoa for services. In compliance with President Smith's request, we fasted and had a season of prayer in the forenoon. Two young members, Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler of Carson City, met with us.

We are interested in contacting any Saints who have moved into our vicinity recently. If you live near Yerington, or Genoa, please write to Mrs. Anna Trimmer, Genoa, Nevada, or to me.

Hubert Case Gives Thanks

I asked President Edwards if he was responsible for the impressive ceremony in the General Conference honoring my 47 years of service in the Quorum of Seventy. He answered that "Hubert Case was responsible for that event." Well, Saints everywhere, I want to say that I felt very highly honored, to have the conference pause in the midst of business for me to be seated, as described in the minutes, with those faithful men. Then to have all the older men of all the Quorums of Seventy, come to the platform and unite in singing a good, old missionary hymn, after the younger men of the present missionary force had sung. It was a great honor to be congratulated by President Israel A. Smith, Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve, and E. Y. Hunker, President of the seven presidents of Seventy.

My very faithful companion was not present as we had had no knowledge that such a service was to take place. This we regret. She and I went to the South Seas in 1894 and had been there three years in service before I was ordained a Seventy by Elder Joseph Burton. These three years added to the forty-seven as a Seventy, made 50 years of continuous service under General Conference appointment.

While the Conference of 1897 was in session, we were on the island of Hikueru. One day while on my way to the new church which I was helping to build, I had an open vision, in which I saw that conference in session, saw the Quorum of Twelve filled, and eight men chosen to be ordained to the Seventy. My own name was added to the list. This was in April, and we did not get our mail containing conference news until September. What we read, confirmed my vision.

In all these years of service, my wife sacrificed more than I did, for she reared the children and had all the care of the home.

The four years in the South Seas we had no allowance from the church—on some occasions it was a great hardship. After our return home in 1898, we lived on a mere pittance for a great many years. I thank the Lord times are much better in that respect today. I am glad I have lived to see a new era for the church, and if all learn the lesson of love for God and man, great things await the people of God,

Your co-worker,

Hubert Case.

Celebrates Ninety-Second Birthday

Mrs. Ella Doty celebrated her ninety-second birthday on May 5 by holding open house at the home of her grandson, Harry L. Doty, in Traverse City, Michigan. She was born in St. Catherines, Ontario, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at South Boardman, Michigan, in 1909. She is making her home with her son, Homer, in Traverse City.

A Happy Heart

P. S.

WHY do you look at me with mournful faces?
 What is done is done, it cannot change.
 The memory is with me now of happier places,
 Of laughter shared, and love an all-consuming flame
 Which burned itself into a quiet, steady loveliness
 After awhile.

LET us not be mute or tearful
 Or banish the sunshine from our souls Forever.
 Let us talk of her gently, proudly,
 Let us remember her,
 Tracing with the delicate finger of love
 Her face, her voice, her own sweet way.
 I loved her more than life while she still lived.
 In death I love her too,
 Just as before.

SMILE with me now, for somewhere she is watching
 And I am not alone.
 Yes, even yet I seek to please her.
 Her wish is still my constant guide.
 My tears are spent, a smile is better now;
 For best of all, I know she liked
 A happy heart.

 On Your Bulletin Board

Zion's League officers—young people—please see that a copy of the double page center spread of this issue, "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," is placed on the bulletin board of your church, and called to the attention of the people. Discuss it in your League and young people's classes, and, if possible, ask the pastor to arrange a sermon on the subject. This will help in making the project succeed.

 Editorial Travels

Brother B. F. Kaiser of Miami, Oklahoma, not long ago made possible a visit to the grounds of the Reunion of the Ozarks. Years ago, Dr. Ronald Smith of Pittsburg, Kansas, visited this beautiful spot, saw the great walnut trees, the many springs of cool, delicious water, the many shade trees, the natural playground and amphitheater, and from that time he began a campaign to get it for a reunion ground. With the help of many others, the dream has been realized, buildings are going up, and this year will see the opening of one of the finest reunions of the church.

The Young Matrons of the Pittsburg, Kansas, congregation lately held their annual dinner—the climax of a year's hard work and study—in a big room of the city's best hotel, with everything formal, husbands in attendance, and a fine program by their own talent. It was a pleasure to be the visiting speaker on such an occasion. It is inspiring to see a group of women upholding homemaking as the highest and noblest of all occupations, sure to result in happier childhood and better citizenship for the future.

Mapleton, Kansas, is a peaceful and pleasant prairie town, and has a pretty white church that has been the spiritual home of several generations of our people. Lee Quick, a well-known veteran of our missionary forces and an active participant in General Conference legislation, is the kindly, genial pastor of the flock, a sort of second father to the youngest folk. Mapleton children have the pinkest cheeks and prettiest complexions in the Middle West. Wondering about it, this editor touched a little boy's cheek; he had nothing on his face that was not put there by sunshine, fresh air, and good country food and exercise.

 Invitations

Our social life is complicated by a variety of invitations, and one is often uncertain as to whether they are to be taken seriously or not.

There is the "Mae West" invitation, for example, which is generally worded, "Come up and see us sometime." This one doesn't mean that you are really expected to make a call. It means only that the people like you and wish to say something pleasant. If you did call, you would probably find them doing a washing or spanking the baby and completely surprised as to why you came.

The proper response to the "Mae West" invitation is this: "Thank you. I'll be very glad to do it." Inwardly you make a note of the word "sometime," which sets no date either for the invitation or the visit. It is equal to tabling the motion in a business meeting, and nobody is hurt.

Another one is the command, usually gushed, "You must come and see us." This from people who wouldn't visit you under any circumstances. Pay no attention. It is issued to break the dreadful silence, or to escape and go on their errands.

Finally, there is the genuine invitation: "We're having some friends in, and we'd like you to have dinner with us Friday evening. Can you come?" That, Brother, is genuine. Accept it with gratitude. When people are willing to put food before you, they want you to come.

Priesthood Training

In the forefront of church endeavor move the ministers of the church, and as go the ministers, so goes the church and its people in all good works and labors of love.

Priesthood came first in the restoration of the church in these last days. Priesthood has come first in every organized functioning of the church from that day to this. It ever shall be so, in the very nature of the church and of the work to be done under its auspices. And according to the qualification and quality of priesthood in leadership and ministry of life, shall the church attain to greatness as the body of Christ, and to service in His stead.

And with the increasing complexity of the life of these days, there is an increase of specialized tasks to be performed: undertakings in consideration of the economic, the social, the spiritual, and the cultural needs of the people; and in the gathering, the organization, and the direction of the Saints towards the Zion life and ministry anticipated in the Restoration Movement.

All of this is to say, there is no need of the church greater than its need for a trained priesthood. This not any more for work contributory to the life of the Saints, than for the carrying of the gospel as the power of God unto salvation to the nations and peoples of earth.

It was towards such developing ministry the First Presidency addressed themselves in their report to the late General Conference, in the words:

United and enlightened advance toward the kingdom requires the co-ordinated leadership of many ministers whose deep affection for each other is rooted in their common devotion to our great Cause. Some of these ministers labor under general church appointment. Others are self-sustaining. All need the strength which comes from worshipping together and studying together and working together. As an approach to satisfying this need, the general authorities concerned sponsored an institute for appointees last August. Such educational activities as this are now being built into the regular framework of our church life. We expect, that as opportunity permits, the church will establish approved training courses for all new appointees and refresher courses for those who have been under appointment for longer periods.

The lecture outlines used at the August institute were published and will be of value in numerous local study groups. Regional institutes for members of the local priesthood are being planned for the next inter-Conference period, and supporting publications are in process of preparation. It is anticipated that such regional institutes for the local priesthood will become part of the regular program of the church, and that the Priesthood Library will be steadily augmented.

While we are thus deeply concerned in the specialized education of the members of the ministry, we feel led to point out that some of our best training is done in actual ministry under guidance. Young members of the priesthood should enter on their appointed tasks with humility but with a sense of the sustaining grace of the One whose commission they carry. They should learn by doing, and their leaders should teach by showing.

There is upon ordained leadership of the church in whatever capacity, the obligation to lead in the training of priesthood of the church: Training in ministry performed under supervision, and in association with like laborers in a common cause; training by study; and training by faith, to undertake and to endure in service towards proficiency of ministry unto the triumphant kingdom.

This obligation the Presidency of the church has assumed in consciousness of its magnitude as well as of its significance, and the obligation they pass on to others in positions of leadership, in proportion to responsibility imposed by the offices occupied. And to each of the ministers of the church they say, The obligation is yours to qualify by education and training for the work to which you have been called and for which you shall be chosen in the measure you make ready and move in and occupy.

Nor is one from under obligation who stands alone, or without adequate leadership in training. The first elder of the church stood alone, as has every first elder in whatever place there has first been an elder. Or it may have been a first priest, or teacher, or deacon, without benefit of lead or supervision towards a developing ministry. Such are required to exercise double diligence. And there are helps, and these shall be more available to the alert for training and serving effectually in the things given one to do by virtue of the priestly office imposed on him by ordination.

What shall we do, then, who are in positions of leadership for the training of the priesthood of the church? Here is a first among the musts in kingdom-building. Upon a trained, devoted, righteous, and active priesthood the cause we serve and the well-being of the Saints of these latter days are dependent. Helps in this endeavor are to be made available as rapidly and as fully as man power and other means allow. What can we do other than go forward in the measure of the strength given us in the training of our priesthood for the work that awaits their full qualification and service in behalf of the people and cause of Christ?

A. M. Chase

Elder A. M. Chase, for years a prominent missionary of the church, passed away in Independence on Saturday, May 17. Brother Chase was noted for his interest in church music and his effective use of it, as well as for his missionary zeal. For some time, following the passing of his companion, he had been in poor health. He had been making his home with his daughter, Mrs. S. A. Burgess of Independence.

Admissions to Graceland College

The following report has been prepared by the Public Relations Department of Graceland College in the interest of clarifying the present position of the college with relation to the admission of students for the school term of 1947-48.

Graceland College is still admitting students for the term which begins this fall.

Application forms have been going out to students since March 1. The Student Selection Committee has been meeting regularly since May 1 to consider and return forms. A portion of the student body has been selected, and they have been notified of the committee's action. But the bulk of the student body which will meet for the first time when the West Door opens wide on September 15, have not been chosen.

They will be chosen between now and the beginning of the fall term. The committee will be considering applications throughout the summer.

This means that there is still ample opportunity for the prospective student to apply for admission to Graceland College. He should write the Student Selection Committee for application papers. These will be sent to him immediately on request.

Application forms are sent out to the prospective student only on the basis of request. When he has returned his completed forms to the committee along with other supporting data as mentioned in the forms, the committee meets immediately to consider his application. As soon as the committee has come to a decision on the applicant, he is informed of that decision.

Six hundred students, of which about 300 will be new, will be admitted to Graceland this fall. Many of the 300 will be admitted from students who to this moment have not indicated to the college their desire to enroll.

The Student Selection Committee invites inquiry from the prospective student.

OFFICIAL

Organization of New District

Meetings will be held on Sunday, June 8, 1947, at the church at 17 East Earl Street, Youngstown, Ohio, for the chief purpose of perfecting the organization of a new district recently provided for that area. Elder D. Blair Jensen of the Quorum of Twelve will be present to supervise this work. Prayer service will be held at 9:30 a.m., preaching at 11:00 a.m. and business meeting at 2:30 in the afternoon. This new district will be comprised of Trumble, Mahoning and Columbiana Counties in Ohio, and Beaver, Butler, Lawrence, Venango, Mercer and Crawford Counties in Pennsylvania. A good representation from this territory is requested.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards

Changes in District Boundaries

At a joint council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric held at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, on Tuesday, April 15 last, the following changes in district boundaries were made:

WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA: The following Wisconsin counties were transferred to the Minnesota District: Douglas, Bayfield, Ashland, Burnett, Washburn, Sawyer, Polk, Barron, Rusk, St. Croix, Pierce, Dunn, Chippewa, Eau Claire, Pepin, Buffalo, Trempleau, and Jackson. This places in the Minnesota administration the branches at Eau Claire and Ladysmith, Frankfort, Chetek, and Black River Falls, and the nonresident Saints of these regions. The enlarged Minnesota District is under the apostolic direction of Elder R. E. Davey.

The northern boundary of the Southern Wisconsin District was readjusted so as to run from Lake Michigan to the western boundary of Juneau County, thence north on the western boundary of Juneau County, and then west on the northern boundary of Monroe County, and then to follow the course of the Black River to LaCrosse. This will be known as the Wisconsin District. The remainder of the state of Wisconsin is declared unorganized territory.

OREGON: The Portland District was enlarged by the addition of Wallowa, Union, Baker Counties, and the eastern half of Grant County. This will ensure closer administrative supervision for the Baker, LaGrande, and Wallowa groups.

MICHIGAN AND ONTARIO: The Sudbury and Algoma districts and Manitoulin Island have been transferred from the Owen Sound, Ontario, District and joined to Alger, Delta, Schoolcraft, Luce, Chippewa, and Mackinac Counties of Northern Michigan District to form the new Sault Ste Marie District, which will be under the apostolic direction of Elder D. Blair Jensen. Brother Jensen will call the initial conference of the new district at his early convenience.

MICHIGAN: Northern Michigan District to be bounded on the north by the Straits of Mackinac, on the west by Lake Michigan, on the east by Lake Huron, and on the south by the southern boundaries of the counties of Benzie, Grand Traverse, Kalkaska, Crawford, Oscoda, and Alcona.

Central Michigan District to be bounded on the north by the southern boundary of the Northern District, on the west by Lake Michigan, on the east by Lake Huron, and on the south by the southern boundaries of counties of Mason, Lake, Osceola, Clare, Gladwin, and Arenac.

The South Central Michigan District to be comprised of Oceana, Newago, Mecosta, Isabella, Midland, Gratiot, Bay Saginaw Counties.

The territory of the Western Michigan District is included in the foregoing, and that district is therefore abolished.

ONTARIO: The following counties, hitherto part of the Toronto District, will henceforth be considered as unorganized territory: Timiskaming, Parry Sound, Nipissing, Hastings, Renfrew, Lennox Addition, Prince Edward, Frontenac, Lanark, Leed, Greenville, Carlton, Dundas, Storm, Russell, Prescott, and Glengory. Ministry to the Saints in this area will be the direct responsibility of Elder D. Blair Jensen or his appointees. The Bishopric will be represented by Bishop John C. Dent of 387 Central Avenue, London, Ontario.

PENNSYLVANIA AND OHIO: Counties which were formerly part of the Kirtland, Pittsburgh, or West Virginia Districts have now been associated to form a new district consisting of Lawrence, Beaver, Butler, Venango, Mercer, and Crawford Counties in Pennsylvania, and Columbiana, Mahoning, and Trumbull Counties in Ohio. The congregations affected are Warren, Ohio; Youngstown,

Open Letter to the Young People of the Church

Dear Young People:

The Conference of 1947 marked the tenth anniversary of Zion's League, and those who are closest to the young people who participated say that some of the best work of the ten years was done during Conference. We hope and expect that as the influence of the Conference spreads throughout the church one of its results will be a more vigorous, more understanding, more sustained, and more fully co-ordinated participation in the work of the church by individual young people and by the local and general Zion's League groups. This has already been forecast by the adoption of the project for raising $25,000 by the church-wide Zion's League and for contributing a large proportion of this money for work in missions abroad.

We are most happy to have you working in a constantly closer partnership with the older members of the church. The church has no Tomorrow except as you make that Tomorrow; and the dreams that we have cherished will never be realized except as you carry them to fruition.

Because we are so deeply concerned that we shall work together, and that the best values of our experience shall be made readily available to you, we are here offering some suggestions regarding your contribution to the life and power of the church. Some of these suggestions may sound quite familiar. Indeed, most of them may do so. But in our opinion they are fundamentally important, and we are passing them on with a prayer that they will be truly helpful.

The first and most searching obligation laid on kingdom builders is the obligation of wholehearted loyalty to our King. Take the Lord Jesus Christ as your Leader and Exemplar, and open your life to his guidance through prayer, meditation, study of the Scriptures, and diligent efforts to do his bidding.

The most significant point at which you can build into our kingdom enterprise is in elevating the quality of your own lives. We plead with you not to let any mere activities, or any secondary contributions, take the place of this fundamental requirement. The next step forward in the building of the kingdom of God requires an army of young men and women who are clean and honest and forthright and co-operative and happy. The greatest contribution you can make to the church is the contribution of your own selves. To make this gift truly great, you must yourselves become the vanguard of a great people. Serve God with your heart, might, mind, and strength. Give him clean bodies, sound and cultivated minds, and the devotion of warm hearts.

We are frankly eager that you shall raise your standards of education. At such a time as this, when opportunities for education are available to all who are willing to make the effort, we admonish you most earnestly to augment your faith in God and your devotion to his service by preparing for life on the highest levels. Give attention to literature and music, study the lessons of history; cultivate respect for the spirit of science, which is love of the truth; look at life with the great of every age and every land. No one whose life is given to the service of God need fear sound education.

As members of the church, you should share happily in the privileges of membership: worship, study, and service. Some of you are already called to positions of responsibility in the priesthood or in the departmental work of the church. But all of you, whether called to leadership or not, should prepare for the better expression of church life in the days to come by participating in the best life of the church today. Attend services regularly. Take your full share of local responsibility. Be not over-critical of the ministry offered. Cultivate pleasant personal relations with your leaders so that you can share their problems in a friendly and tactful way, passing on to them some of your hopes and the reassurances which your vitality brings.

Some of you have already started married life and have begun to realize how challenging and rewarding the adventure of marriage can be. Many of you look forward to establishing homes of your own. Nowhere can you make a finer contribution to the kingdom. But the love which you expect to demonstrate in your homes demands that you cultivate patience and tolerance and good humor and self-discipline, and these must be rooted in specific and practical situations. It is at this point that our church teaching regarding managing our incomes, filing our inventories, and paying our tithes is of immense spiritual importance. Take God into practical partnership each day, joyously and not grudgingly, as the counterpart and fulfillment of your devotional experiences, and the Zion's graces will come to delightful maturity among you.

Your primary contribution to the organized life of the church will be made in your local branch. No district or general church activities should be permitted to unduly deflect you from taking your rightful places and fulfilling your proper functions in your local branch life. Nevertheless, contacts with the surrounding branches and with the general church are as important to the local Zion's League as contacts with brothers and sisters and parents are to a newly married couple. Share as fully as you can in the total Zion's League endeavor, therefore, but keep in mind the primacy of your local responsibilities.

The Zion's League project for the Conference period is nicely geared to our total church enterprise. It calls specifically for the League to raise $25,000 to make a special contribution to missions abroad. But far more important than the raising of the money—important as that is—is the interest in world-wide evangelism which we hope this project will develop. We invite you to share with us our deep desire that the gospel shall be more firmly planted in the lands to which it has already been carried; and that as quickly as our strength permits, it shall be planted in centers hitherto unreached by the Restoration message.

Church service is the most demanding enterprise on earth. It calls for character, intelligence, physical health, practical sagacity, artistic insight, and every other kind of qualification. No one of us is fully endowed to meet these demands, but we sincerely believe that your generation may have more to give than any generation of the Restoration so far. We congratulate you on your heritage, and we feel sure that as you enter in and possess it, you will grow in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Quorum of Twelve

To the Young People:

The call to "witness Christ" to the world is the privilege and responsibility of every member of the Church of Jesus Christ. Zion's League, representing the youth of the church in action, is an integral part of the church and, therefore, has a very important place in its extension and promotion. The members of Zion's League are expected to fulfill the ordinary duties of church members; but the church needs those who go beyond requirements.

The Church-wide Zion's League at General Conference in 1947 proposed to raise as a missionary project the sum of $25,000 for use in missions abroad. This is a very worthy and commendable project; the application of the law of sacrifice to help other people—our world neighbors, because we want them to know and enjoy the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Quorum of Twelve, primarily responsible for promoting the missionary work of the church in all the world, urge all young people to accordingly make a contribution to the cause that means life to a dying world. Remember, the gift without the giver is bare.

Let the youth of the church respond wholeheartedly to their project and demonstrate tangibly their part and place in the total evangelistic program of the church.

Fraternally,
THE QUORUM OF TWELVE,
By: Paul M. Hanson, President
George G. Lewis, Secretary

The Presiding Bishopric

To the Young People:

It was at the request of a committee of Zion's League delegates attending General Conference that permission was granted to the League to undertake the task of raising $25,000.00 in this interim Conference period, the major portion to be used for financing missionary work abroad. The committee agreed to apply from $2,000.00 to $3,000.00 to cover the cost of procuring two busts of President Frederick M. Smith, one to go to Graceland and one for the Auditorium.

If this were an attempt to avoid the responsibilities of the financial law, or to merely glamorize the raising of funds for missions abroad while neglecting local responsibilities, we could not give support to such a project. We are convinced, however, that it is the sincere desire of the Zion's League members attending Conference to accept the great challenge of the financial law with all it involves of stewardship of time, talents, and possessions, and by means of this special project unite our youth in the aggressive missionary program of the church.

Such an endeavor calls for wise administration on the part of all officers concerned, careful local planning, hard work and downright sacrifice on the part of our young people. We rejoice in their willingness to accept such a responsibility and give them our full support, assured that their lives shall be enriched, even as their efforts shall make possible the enrichment of other lives through the ministry of the church.

Sincerely yours,

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Limits

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

FROM MY office window I often watched the post prisoners as they went about doing the odd jobs necessary on this large army installation. Most of these were young men, sentenced from days to months for all forms of insubordination, from failing to answer roll call to refusal to obey specific orders. In most cases the same misdemeanor would have been overlooked if it had occurred in the business world. In military life, however, no laxness of any sort is countenanced. There can be no excuses, no coffee nerves, no jitters, no distractions.

I firmly believe that much of the cause of fast living, traffic accidents, marital disturbances, and ill health are due to lack of self-discipline in those areas. The small slip-up is overlooked or condoned until soon it becomes a major crime within the individual's life. Either the person is living such a life of personal freedom that he has no limits, or he is ignoring his self-imposed limits.

IT'S TOO BAD that there is not some way to punish the person who is insubordinate to the laws of happiness. Thus the selfish, the greedy, the thieves, the liars, and the other offenders of society would be caught short before their insubordinations had grown to proportions capable of hurting others.

A child is punished for a lie, but an adult may spread a damaging gossip unendingly. That same child is made to repent for the theft of a penny, while his father manipulates his stock purchases, and his mother cheats at bridge. Children who quarrel are forced to shake hands, and soon they are bosom friends again. Yet nations fight wars and carry grudges for generations.

A horse is bridled, a bird is caged, and a monkey is kept on a chain. These restraints are used to keep these animals in check, that their uninhibited actions might not damage the possessions of another. Now, man cannot thus be controlled, and if there were such a control in existence I would be the last to advocate its use. Every individual has his agency and determines his own code of morals. There are institutions to aid his choice of behavior, but there is nothing which can force him to conform to a standard code.

Few people know what they believe, and the majority of human beings are made to believe a certain credo by the excellent advertising of its adherents, rather than by the worth of its works. How can a man discipline himself to a moral code, when he has none?

If a city set up a traffic rule which said that black cars could go seventy miles per hour, blue cars could go fifty, and red cars could only travel at thirty, there would soon be a committee of indignant citizens petitioning a referendum. Yet, society as a whole works on such a premise. A man of one nationality may be condemned because of his color and not his actions. Thus this man must regulate his personal life, his living, and his every deed to fit a pattern set up by a society bigger than himself or his race. Now his own moral code must be subordinate to one deeming himself superior and any deviation from this standard is considered criminal.

There are the two extremes, the man whose freedom is unlimited, as opposed to a man whose boundaries of action are plainly marked.

My earnest contention is that every man should set his own limits of behavior but be thoroughly familiar with the possible results thereof. Then that man should have developed his ability at self-discipline to the extent that he may control his actions and refrain from any activity which would bring ill results either to himself or to others. If this were true, there would be no need for prisons, for reform schools, or for any type of social ostracism. Then in their place we would have a highly developed self-discipline.

Instructions to Solicitors, Bishop's Agents, and Bishops

Inasmuch as this is a church-wide Zion's League project, it would be our thought that receipts by solicitors, agents, and Bishops should be written to the Zion's League of the branch, district, or stake concerned, and that as far as possible, the writing of receipts to individual members should be avoided.

A receipt should read, "Received from Zion's League, Branch" (Stake or District); the name of the Zion's League treasurer might well be shown on the receipt. In the "Other Items" box in the lower right hand corner of the receipt, should be written "Z. L. Missionary Fund" or some abbreviation which will indicate clearly the purpose of the contribution. The funds received by the solicitor should be included in his regular monthly report and at headquarters will be treated as a special offering and appear on our report as such. If these instructions are followed, the church-wide Zion's League will receive credit for all funds raised for this good cause.

Even more important than the mechanics of receipt writing and reporting, is the opportunity presented for sustained, helpful ministry to our young people. We have been greatly encouraged by the zeal and devotion displayed by our representative Zion's League members attending Conference. The project to raise $25,000.00 in the interim Conference period is undertaken with the understanding that it is to be included in the program of the various stake, district, and branch organizations, and it does not absolve any young person from complying with the financial law or from giving support to both general and local church needs. It is an "extra"; something additional beyond our normal expectations for them; a "second mile" which they have willingly and eagerly taken upon themselves.

This heart-warming evidence of their devotion should give you opportunity to encourage young people in your branch or district to (1) file financial statements, (2) pay tithing, (3) give offerings to both general and local church. It calls for an educational program which will inform our young people of the functioning of the church and the direct relationship existing between careful management of personal finances and the preaching of the gospel abroad through compliance with the financial law.

In light of the foregoing, we urge that you give encouragement and help to Zion's League as it raises these proposed funds by group effort. Our prayer is that our young people may be greatly strengthened in this good cause as they work to advance the missionary objectives of the church.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Minute Musings

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

Have you ever noticed that "for God's sake" is both a curse and a prayer? It may denote spiritual fidelity and trust or vileness of thought. This phrase speaks of sacrifice or derision; of ingrained love or sacrilege; of growing faith or hypocrisy. It is yours to choose—what shall you use?

* * * * *

Judas betrayed Christ, and when he came to full realization of his guilt, he went out to a lonely field and took his own life. He resorted to suicide as the only solution for his sin. Peter betrayed his Lord, denying him thrice, but his guilt was merely a steppingstone to full repentance, forgiveness, and a new start. To every man comes sin—but is he a Judas or a Peter?

* * * * *

One year 30,000 people left the university stadium when Ohio State was ahead and only one half minute left to play. I stayed, and saw Notre Dame put over the winning touchdown, a heartbreaking sight to an enthusiastic football fan. How many times I've seen people leave a meeting before the benediction. They leave before they ask God's blessing, and thereby lose the great value of the assembly.

* * * * *

My father owned a garage in a southern town. One day a local preacher came to borrow a battery, and the last my dad saw of him was the sign on his car: "Jesus paid it all." Evidently . . . for neither battery nor payment was ever seen. This is the motto of too many people. Your spiritual or temporal credit is not sustained because Jesus paid the price. He made the down payment only, we pay the balance of the debt.

The Prophetic View of Man

By J. A. Koehler

With this article we resume the presentation of the series of radio addresses on the subject, "The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet." The series was interrupted at the March 29 issue for General Conference material. Due to an earlier accident, number 18 was omitted, which is presented herewith. The remainder of the series will be presented in regular order.

THE PSALMIST DAVID does not appear to have been a prophet of so high an order as Moses or Samuel. But David had enough of the genius of the prophets to give a very good answer to the question, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" And that answer is, Man is a creature of an order "a little lower than the angels"—which is not a low, but a high, order of being.

Almost the first thing said in the first chapter of Genesis and the last thing said in the last chapter of Revelation means that man is made in the image of God. If there is doubt respecting the meaning of "the image of God," we have only to read the first characterization of man in its entirety to dispel that doubt. The substance of that statement is, "And God said let us make man in our own image, after our likeness; and [here is the revealing clause] let him have dominion." Let him possess his own soul. Let him be an originator! a kind of creator of social situations.

"So [in this manner] God created man in his own image . . . and said unto him, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion." In the image of a creator, God created man.

AS WE TURN to almost the last sentence in the last book of the Bible, we find that the first prophetic appreciation of man is also the last. For this is the testimony of St. John: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst say, Come. And whosoever will, let him [come and] take of the water of life freely;" of his own free moral will.

"Come," "Take," "Will," that human life may be abundant. Man's capacity to become morally—which is to become socially; his capacity to achieve the good life through his own social-self discipline—that is the essence of the prophetic view of man. That is man's business under God.

The invitation to "Come" and to "take of the water of life freely," is but another form of the invitation to "Come unto me"—"me," the way, the truth, and the life. It is God's reminder to man of his capacity to apprehend the truth of human living together—primarily the truth respecting matrimony, industry, and government—and of his freedom to promote the good life by implementing the will of God in the family of social institutions—which, I repeat, it is the business of man to build.

"Come unto me" is an invitation to do God's will on earth as it is done in heaven. And that can mean only that man has capacity to achieve the very "Kingdom of God."

THE MORAL LIFE, the life of man's free moral willing, is the social life; and the social life, conformed to the moral order of the universe, is the good life. It is the "fellowship" life. It is the life of love. And love is living-together-ness. It is social unity.

"It is not good that man should be alone" (which means that the good life is a unity of lives) is a true of one primary affair of a people as of another. It is as true of industry and government as it is of matrimony or education or devotions. The distinctive prophetic view of man is an apprehension of man's capacity to promote the morally right in all social situations. It is a vision of man in God's Kingdom "coming."

There are many prophetic proclamations, injunctions, predictions, and what not, all of which witness that the prophetic view of man is a vision of God's Kingdom coming. I have in mind such proclamations of Isaiah as, "If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke [if thou take it away of thine own free moral will] . . . and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry . . . [if thou possess thine own soul aright], then shall thy light rise in obscurity" and "ye shall be a delightsome land," and "violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders," but "Thou shalt be called, sought out, a city not forsaken."

I have in mind also such injunctions of Jesus as "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." (For the Kingdom of God is essentially the righteousness of man's primary affairs); and the promise of Jesus that if people will do that willingly, for love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity, "all these things [which are products of the good life] shall be added unto you."

PUT TOGETHER ALL such testimony, and we have the prophetic view of man. And that view is a vision of man accomplishing his warfare, eradicating all the causes of civil strife and human misery and degradation and making the whole business of human living together a soul-welfare-promoting experience.

It is the conviction of the prophets that in the course of human events the good in man shall overcome the bad. It is that in the end all kingdoms of this world shall become kingdoms of our God and of his Christ.

That conviction accounts for the prophetic injunction to accept the responsibility of self-governance. You do not find a Hitler, nor even an Alexander Hamilton, among the prophets. No emperor, no dictator, no bureaucrat, no "ruler" of any kind, no one who sees man as a creature to be managed by a will that is not his own, as cattlemen manage their herds, no one who feels or believes that man is not to be trusted to govern himself aright, was ever numbered with the prophets. Such persons do not have the prophetic view of man.

THE PROPHETS of The Kingdom know even better than any other categories of thinkers that man's instincts tend to manifest themselves in accordance with the stage-setting of his life. They know that man must order his own social affairs aright—primarily his marital, economic, and political affairs—to engender within himself the good spirit. They know that personality cannot fulfill itself, they know that man cannot become moral or spiritual, except through his acceptance of responsibility for the moral character of life in society. The prophets know that it is quite as requisite that society should be godlike if persons are to be godlike as it is that persons should be born of the godly spirit if society is to be godly.

It is because the prophets do know that truth that we have the social philosophy of the modern prophet. The call of that prophet is to "Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." It is a call to peoples to accept their inborn responsibility for the constitution of economic society in particular. It is a call to make that society just. It is a call to implement a true religious social philosophy in a whole system of economic institutions; in "A City" out of which the God in whose image man was made shall shine.

THE CALL OF the modern prophet is the call of Moses. And that call is to make the communities in which men live, or to make the business of peoples—which is self-governance—an implementation of righteousness and truth. "Kingdom" righteousness and "kingdom" truth.

The modern prophet knew that the acquired natures of men—which do not represent the image in which man was made—make the fulfillment of the mission of even The Elect extremely difficult. He knew that the failure of his own people to master the true philosophy of social life, which it was his mission to proclaim, presented almost insuperable obstacles to the establishment of the Kingdom of God in his generation.

But the modern prophet knew also—because he was a real Kingdom prophet—that God made man for that mastery. He knew that, in time, the native urge to achieve the good life would become effectual. He knew that God made man to become. The modern prophet, as his social philosophy witnesses, had the distinctive ancient prophetic view of man.

When the high heart we magnify,
And the clear vision celebrate,
And worship greatness passing by,
Ourselves are great.

—Abraham Lincoln.

Ponderings

"Prayer Changes Things"

The occasion was a prayer service.

A young mother arose, and after telling of her confidence in her Father in heaven, she sang this song, "Prayer Changes Things."

Tears swam in the eyes of the congregation. They, too, knew that prayer changes things.

Too many times we try to fight our problems through, but if we would resort to prayer, how easily we would meet these trials. Perhaps it is a problem of child discipline. We do not know just how to meet the situation. Then we take our problem to the Father in prayer, and "Prayer Changes Things." Peace comes, where before was chaos and turmoil, no matter what caused us to fret.

One mother was concerned over a son who had taken the car to town. Roads were not quite safe, and the hour grew late. Her concern grew into deep anxiety, but after taking this to the Master in prayer, prayer changed things. Peace and calm came to her. She knew he was safe.

Many a mother and wife received assurance during the late war when sons, daughters, and husbands were in foreign lands facing they knew not what. Prayer calmed their anxious fears, and gave them courage to live full lives, and to have something fine for their loved ones when they returned.

The Master says, "Have faith in God." Only in seeking him can we know the help he can give.

I have observed with wonder so many intellectual and literary fashions that I have come at last to rely positively upon one conviction alone. No idea is so antiquated that it was not once modern. No idea is so modern that it will not some day be antiquated. . . . To seize the flying thought before it escapes us is our only touch with reality.—Ellen Glasgow.

To Every Zion's League-- To Every Young Member of the Church-- This Is Our Task-- This Is Our Opportunity!

The persistency of youth for a real job in the missionary effort of the church has been rewarded with the task of raising $25,000 during the one and one-half year interconference period. The fund will be used for two purposes:

1. A small amount will go for memorializing the spirit of youth which the late President Frederick Madison Smith always recognized. Two bronze busts of the late President Smith will be cast, one to be placed at Graceland College and the other to be placed in the foyer of the Auditorium.
2. The major portion of the fund will go directly into the missionary channels of the church to help in evangelizing the world.

Christ gathered around him the spiritually hungry and fed them. Today, throughout every country of the world, people are spiritually starved. Millions are searching for that food which can be given only by servants of the living God. Zion's League members who have longed to share their vision, to broadcast, as though sowing seed in the springtime, the ideals and inspiration that have come to them through the gospel message, now will find happiness in this missionary fund campaign. We can ill afford to wait longer, for every fleeting day means the loss of an opportunity to tell the good news to some person or groups of people.

In giving to this fund and in our group efforts, it is not enough just to accumulate money. Remember, the spirit with which we carry out this venture will determine its influence. If the united prayers and sacrifice of Zion's League members around the world accompany the drive, the Lord of the Harvest will surely bless it, and its real value will be increased manyfold. It is up to all of us to do our part, and our faith and prayers are as important as our enthusiasm and financial support.

KEEP THE LAW

In asking Bishop DeLapp for a missionary project, representatives of the Zion's League stressed the fact that it would be a project in addition to the present program of tithing and offerings of the church. They told the Bishop that if he would outline for them such a project, League members would feel that they were more a part of the church missionary endeavor, and many more of them would probably also file their inventories and pay their tithing. The representatives have faith that local Zion's League members will back them up in these commitments.

We must retain our partnership with God if this project is to be 100 per cent successful. We are told, "It is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship." To all of us, there is a divinely given responsibility for the use we make of our time, our talents, and our money. The faithful accounting to the Bishopric for our stewardship is one small means of showing that we desire to retain this right relationship with God and that we are in a small measure appreciative of the spiritual and material blessings we receive from him. Through this channel, we become more keenly aware of the loving partnership which is possible with our Heavenly Father.

Much of our tithes will go through the regular designated channels into keeping missionaries and their families in the field. In addition to this, the Zion's League missionary fund will help in the enormous task we have of spreading the gospel throughout the world.

CO-OPERATION NEEDED

For complete success in our campaign to raise funds for the Zion's League Missionary project, there must be a spirit of co-operation. This will mean first of all, discussing plans with Zion's League supervisors, church school directors, pastors, and district officers so that there will be no conflicts. At local and district council meetings, plans can well be discussed. If these people in administrative capacity are consulted before beginning a project and frequently as it progresses, there should be a unity of effort which is desired. Let's show other members of the church that we do want to co-operate and that through co-operation with our leaders, with other members of the branch, and among ourselves, the Zion's League can accomplish big things.

SET YOUR QUOTAS

Not being in a position to know local conditions, the General Zion's League officers have not set quotas to be raised other than the goal of $25,000. This may be done however in your branch or district after considering local needs and discussing your plans with local church officers. In some branches, funds may be quite urgent for a new church building or an addition to the present building. In such cases, the goals will be low as compared to what they would have been other-

Money Raising Ideas That Clicked For Zion's League

Programs

1. A special program held in connection with the Restoration Festival with a missionary offering being taken.
2. A play or religious drama.
3. A music festival to be held in four languages.
4. A variety show.
5. A mock radio program.
6. A minstrel show.
7. A program to include recordings made from musicals from other Zion's Leagues.
8. A "Church Chautauqua."

It was suggested that any of the above programs could be repeated before other district Zion's Leagues, parent-teacher associations, and various other organizations, with the proceeds being divided with the sponsoring organization.

Dinners

1. A "family night" with a charge made for the supper.
2. A Zion's League Founders Day banquet, June 27, at which time special recognition could be given to past presidents of the local League.
3. An International Dinner with booths appropriately decorated and from which native dishes could be served representative of our missions abroad.
4. A banquet with the theme, the program, decorations, and the dinner representative of one of our missions abroad.
5. A picnic and charge according to weight—a penny a pound.
6. A foodless supper, guests to pay for the supper whether they attended or not and a worship service presented to provide spiritual food.
7. A box supper.

Projects

1. A bake sale.
2. A rummage or white elephant sale.
3. Make, repair, and sell toys, clothing, and miscellaneous articles.
4. A picture night with projector. (Also travelogues, slides, and illustrations from countries in which our missionaries are located.)
5. Printing of a "Birthday Calendar." (Pay to have name put on calendar, advertising sold to local merchants, charge made for printed calendar.)

6. A paper and magazine drive.
7. A garden project. One Zion's League raised $400 from eight acres of alfalfa. This could be duplicated with potatoes, etc.
8. A luncheon and fashion show can be sponsored with assistance from local merchants.
9. Sell greeting cards the year-round. (Christmas, Easter, valentines, get-well, sympathy, etc.)
10. Sell Christmas text calendars and Christian verse wall plaques.
11. A basketball and volleyball tournament.
12. A hobby show.
13. Be the agent for a florist during special seasons.
14. Concessions at the district reunion.

Individual Means

Each Zion's League member should sacrifice at least one thing each month to swell your League's missionary fund for the Missionary Fund project. (A meal, an article of clothing, some commercial recreation, etc.)

Wherever possible, the missionary theme should be tied in with the Zion's League project. This can be done with decorations, with pictures and flags from our mission abroad, and with songs, stories, or readings depicting the life of the people inhabiting the countries where our missions are located or where we hope they will be able to go as soon as funds are available.

To Every Zion's League—

wise. Whatever the goal, however, we know we can depend on you to work to reach it.

Every Zion's Leaguer also knows that his efforts are being supplemented by others. Members throughout the world are supporting this campaign with their prayers, their talents, and their sacrifices. Moral support is also being given by every other age group in the church. As we accomplish that which has been entrusted to us, we have the opportunity to "try ourselves," and greater responsibilities can be assumed as we are proved worthy.

Did You Ever Hear?

Did you ever hear of a man who lost his job because he was a total abstainer?

Did you ever hear of an insurance company that offered reduced premiums to booze addicts?

Did you ever hear of a woman saying, "My husband would be the best man in the world if he would only drink"?

Did you ever hear of a chauffeur who could drive his car with more safety if he took a snort of alcohol before starting out?

Did you ever hear of a railway engineer who stood better with his employers if he patronized the saloon or a cocktail bar?

Did you ever hear of a child who complained because his daddy did not come home half soused?

Did you ever hear of a man who objected to his daughter marrying a man because he was not a booze addict?

Did you ever hear of a woman complaining because her husband spent too little time in the grocery?

Did you ever hear of a murderer on the gallows declaring that his abstinence practices led him to his predicament?

Did you ever hear of a man who beat his wife and thrashed his baby because he was sober when he came home?

Did you ever hear of a house owner who charged higher rentals because a saloon had been set up next door?—W. E. Johnston, in The Standard (Australia).

Personal Evangelism

By Ethel G. Bryant

(A talk given to the Women's Class at the Regional meeting at Tacoma, Washington, Sunday morning, January 26, 1947.)

THE WORD "EVANGEL" means good news or gospel. Evangelism means the proclamation of the gospel or to share Christ with others. Evangel is the seed; evangelism is sowing the seed. When Jesus was here among men, evangelism was the theme of his message. He came down from heaven to teach men how to live together in love.

The first service I ever attended in the Latter Day Saint Church was a business session at a district conference. At this business meeting, the Holy Spirit came to me in such great power that it convinced me that this is truly the Church of Jesus Christ. In less than two months, I became a member of this organization. A short time after becoming a member, I went to my mother's home for a visit. In the locality where my mother lived, the Latter Day Saint Church was unheard of. I tried to tell my mother what I had found but she would not listen. She told others I had lost my mind over religion. At this same time I also visited my husband's sisters. They are members of the Baptist Church. These three sisters of my husband's are fine women, and I thought all I would have to do would be to tell them about the church, and they would accept it as I had done. However, I was disappointed when they argued against every point I brought up. At that time I had lots of enthusiasm, very little knowledge, and no wisdom. It is better that we learn what we as a church believe before we try to impart it to others.

I presume the majority of us here today are mothers. Our evangelism starts first in our homes. We must save our own children and our companions to the church if they are outside the fold. And I would like to say right here that I think the best way to interest and win our companions is for us to be interested in the work and progress of the church ourselves. If we want other people to be enthusiastic, we've got to be enthusiastic ourselves. Then from us they will catch that fire and enthusiasm which come only from serving. I am acquainted with a number of women who are members of the church whose husbands do not belong, and from my observation, if these wives themselves were more enthusiastic, I am convinced that their husbands would become more interested. This gospel is contagious. It is caught as well as taught.

Then there are those weak members of the branch. We must not let them develop the habit of staying away from church. We are faced with the fact that in most of our branches only one third to one half of the membership attend church regularly. There is something lacking in the branch, or there is something lacking in the members who stay away. We should try in some way to learn, if we can, just what the trouble is. I am acquainted with a woman who is a good Latter Day Saint who at one time gradually developed the habit of staying away from church. She thought she had a good reason for staying away. And the longer she stayed away, the more justified her reason seemed to her. I visited this sister, and she talked at first as though she would never attend church again. She made excuses why she was not attending the services, and she was pretty independent about the whole thing. I talked to her very kindly but firmly and told her this is the work of God and nothing that members say or do should keep us away. After a time she gradually started coming back, and now she attends all of the services and takes part.

Concerning the priesthood, it is the duty of the teachers and deacons to see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty (Doctrine and Covenants 17:11; 83:22). The teachers and deacons are also responsible for the attendance of our membership, but nowhere does the law say that good and intelligent and well-meaning lay members including women cannot visit in attempts to reclaim careless brothers and sisters. This is where we come in. In this business of reclaiming nonattending members there is no substitute for personal contact.

To be successful missionaries, the prospect must first admire and respect the bearer of the message before he will admire and respect the message. We gain this admiration and respect through love and kindness. We gain this love and kindness by serving our Heavenly Father, and we serve our Heavenly Father by serving our fellow men.

Several years ago I read in the Herald where 80 per cent of our people are won by personal contact of the membership; not by sermons or series of meetings but by personal contact. The missionary effort starts before the sermons or series of meetings begin. One must first succeed in persuading people to attend church before they can be preached to. There is where the personal contact enters in.

In a recent booklet, Priesthood Study Outlines, published in 1946, page 151, Apostle Hield said concerning personal contact, "Ninety-five per cent of the people first learn of our truths because of the concern of a friend."

My experience has been that every person we try to interest in the church will have to be approached differently. Some like the social side of the gospel or our Zionite ideals, others like the spiritual, still others are attracted by the intellec-

A Talk With God

A STORY BY BETTY LOU SANFORD

MARTHA sat straight up in bed. Something had wakened her. Her heart was beating much too fast, and the little pulse in her throat was throbbing wildly. Her hands felt clammy, and her breath came in little jerks. She was actually terrified of the darkness. She reached out on the bed beside her and touched an empty pillow. John was gone!

For a moment she stifled the desire to scream, then her head cleared, and she remembered he had gone to Nauvoo for the day. Hesitantly, she glanced around the darkened room. Shadows gave the dresser and chair eerie shapes, and the wind, which was rising steadily outside, blew the curtains about wildly, into the open window.

When the wild cry of fright rang through the house in that next instant, she fought back her terror of the shadowy darkness and sprang out of bed.

Lucie! That scream had been Lucie's! Disregarding the coldness of the floor beneath her bare feet and the blackness of the hall before her, she somehow managed to reach her daughter's room just as a light flashed on beneath the crack of the closed door.

Lucie had the look of a wild woman. She sat motionless on the bed, rigid and tense, staring at Martha with eyes that were seeing nothing. "I was dreaming again. When I screamed, I woke up. I was there beside him. I saw his smile and his firm hands upon the wheel. I said, 'Darling, we're going to—Watch out!'—Oh, Mother!" The frozen look had disappeared, and she fell into a passionate storm of weeping as Martha gathered her gently into her arms. "Oh, God! God! Why did this have to happen now? Why tonight of all nights? Hasn't she suffered enough? Hasn't she paid for everything now? She's so young yet, why should she have to go through this again?"

Martha Logan stroked her daughter's hair soothingly and gave what little comfort she could. "There, there, Baby, there's nothing to worry about any more. It's all over and forgotten. You go ahead and cry, and then you'll feel more like sleeping. Tomorrow's going to be a big day for you, and you mustn't let this upset you so."

A LONG TIME LATER, Martha lay awake, staring into the darkness about her. This time she lay without fear, for her mind was far away from her present surroundings.

Sometimes doing what was right just didn't seem to be enough. Sometimes no matter how good a person you were or what you believed in, the hard knocks just seemed to come to you anyway.

Lucie hadn't been like her brother, Paul. She hadn't accepted her parents' religion without any forethought. From the moment she had been old enough to make her own decisions and come to her own conclusions, she had rebelled against the staid, precise pattern for living set down for her by her mother and father, and their mother and father before them. She had been as good a child as Paul, sometimes better, but she had never joined the church nor accepted their faith. It had made Martha and John despondent many times, and it was often the source of great embarrassment—a minister's daughter who did not even belong to the church of her father's faith. But at eight, when all the other children were being baptized, Lucie had rebelled. She said she didn't want to be baptized 'till she knew what she was doing. Something in her appeal had withheld family argument. "Later," they had said, but later had never come. She went to church every Sunday, and she gave of her talents and her time to help those who needed her, but still she did not join.

Martha and John had both prayed for her often. Long ago they had discovered that it wasn't stubbornness that held her back, but uncertainty. She was seeking! She was striving to find all the right answers of her puzzling curiosity before she accepted the Latter Day Saint doctrine. She was a product of modern youth—wanting to know "why" and "what" made such and such a thing so. The basic facts had been presented to her many times, but the spiritual revelation of assurance had never been given her. So she had stumbled along blindly, gathering a scrap here and a scrap there. Constantly she added to her source of knowledge, a keen, clear, concise understanding of life and the people who dwell in it. People liked Lucie. Friends gathered about her at all times. She had a talent for painting, and she dabbled a little at poetry. She loved to sing, and she took extreme pleasure in teaching the children's classes at Sunday school.

But she had her faults, too. She had a preoccupied state of mind that sometimes irritated people. She made hasty judgments and then had to back track and discover and forgive. She had "pet peeves" that sometimes became radical points of view that she would refuse to change. Drinking was one of them. She couldn't stand a drunkard. She had no pity, no compassion for one whatsoever. She didn't try to excuse him for his weakness and would listen to no reasonable explanation concerning him even if one could be found. About other conditions, particularly mental, she had every thought of gentleness and understanding and mercy. Sometimes her attitudes just didn't make sense, but she was entirely human in that respect.

* * * * *

MARTHA TRIED IN VAIN to relax and go to sleep. Tomorrow would be a big day, and she would have to be at her best in order to strengthen Lucie after what had happened tonight.

It just didn't seem fair. Lucie had tried so hard. She had always been so eager to learn.

She'd had lots of fun in high school—never went in for the "necking parties" and "drinking sprees," but had had her share of thrills and excitement. Martha remembered how they'd worried about the dancing problem. Lucie had never particularly cared for it, but when she became a junior in high school, the thrill of the annual junior and senior prom was almost too much for her to stifle. She had wanted to go so badly, and they had debated it so long, but in the end, with her promise of "being good," they had consented. Not however, without much fasting and prayer before making their decision.

She had looked breath-takingly lovely in her first formal with Johnny Nelson's roses pinned to her shoulder. By rights she wasn't a particularly handsome girl, but that night, with the stars of happiness shining in her eyes and the excitement bubbling in her cheeks, she had come very close to being beautiful.

That was the night she fell in love! The next morning she and Martha had sat a long time in her airy bedroom and discussed the prom and Johnny. They hadn't danced much, she said, just sat and watched everyone else. She and Johnny had gone to Sunday school together for years but had never really been acquainted before. They had both been thrilled and eager to "soak in" all that was going on around them that someday they might tell their grandchildren what "heathens" they had been.

John had passed lightly over the idea of his daughter's being in love, but gradually they began to sit up and take notice of how often Lucie and Johnny Nelson went to church together, how often the lad was down for supper at the house, and how often they went to school basketball games together. Sometimes, Lucie and he would have long talks, and he began to realize with almost a prayerful thanksgiving that she was beginning to see some of the things she had never been able to see before.

Just before Johnny left for the Navy, after completing his senior year in school, two things happened which nearly changed Lucie over night. The first was the receiving of a small glittering diamond from him for her third finger left hand. At first, Martha and John had protested that she was far too young, but Johnny had signed up for two years and by that time Lucie would be old enough to take the serious step of marriage. She had gone about in a daze. Loving Johnny had put a new zeal and new life into her. She came closer to knowing God in those few weeks than she ever had before. She had admitted to her mother that she spent more hours in prayer and fasting than ever before.

The second event was a direct answer to John and Martha's prayers. Johnny was called to the priesthood! If ever Lucie needed proof of God's reality, she came the closest to receiving it then from Johnny. He never tried to persuade her to believe in his God and his church, but he never let a day go by without teaching her some new principle to add to her growing knowledge.

Lucie had changed after Johnny left. She began to read more. Several times Martha had seen the Call at Evening and Riches Untold lying on the bedstand, with lines and phrases underlined in dark ink. Often she spent hours reading over Johnny's letters and sometimes read excerpts from them to the family. She offered prayer at the table more often and asked her father countless questions about the church.

When Johnny got home on leave, he preached his first sermon in the little church he himself had grown up in. Martha had watched her daughter's quiet face that morning and had seen the various emotions play across it. That day she knew that God was answering their prayers. Lucie was going to join the church. She was finding God.

Two years were a long time to wait. Lucie finished high school and thought of attending Graceland but wanted to wait until Johnny got home to decide. Johnny's folks were wonderful to her, and no girl could have been so amply blessed as she. She seemed at last to realize this and was waiting only for his return so she could be baptized.

MARTHA GOT OUT of bed, went over to the window and stared out. The wind had died down considerably, and the moon was beginning to shine brightly. She stared up at the heavens above her and shook her head as if to erase the memory of what had happened after Johnny got his discharge.

Easter Sunday he had walked in unannounced, and Lucie had nearly had hysterics. That evening when the family gathered for their evening worship, she had confessed before them all her unworthiness and her humbleness to God for what he had given her. How could she doubt that there was a God now that such happiness was hers to enjoy?

Wedding plans and baptism plans were combined. The baptism was to be held exactly one week before the wedding.

* * * * *

MARTHA SHUDDERED involuntarily and almost refused to allow her mind to go on remembering. The two of them, Johnny and Lucie, had driven over to Nauvoo for a Zion's League meeting one night and were rather late in getting started back. Lucie had not been able to tell them exactly what had happened, but just shortly outside the city limits a drunken driver had suddenly appeared out of nowhere, and both cars had turned over. Martha could still see Lucie lying in the hospital bed that night after they had finally reached her. She could still feel those beseeching eyes upon her as Lucie had opened them and looked around the bare, white hospital room. Her first words, her first thoughts, were of him. "Johnny?" she had asked. John had refused to meet her gaze.

"He's dead, Lucie."
Wearily Martha crept back to bed. "Oh, God," she prayed. "Tomorrow she's going to be baptized. Tomorrow, after six long months of sorrow, she is going to enter your church here on earth. Why did this have to happen to her tonight? Why? Why? Why?" Unable to find the answer to these questions, Martha at last fell into a deep, troubled sleep.

* * * * *

JOHN was shaking her gently. "Wake up, sleepyhead, and greet the morn. Today's a big day for us."

She clung to him for a moment, feeling a strange weakness grip her. She felt the firm strength of his arms and compared it with the firm strength of the man himself. Beside him, her own weakness showed up ever so clearly. She hesitated about telling him of last night and finally decided against it. She got out of bed with forced cheerfulness she did not feel.

Lucie looked pale, but otherwise nothing seemed amiss. John took it for a sign of nervousness and thought nothing about it. Paul was in exceptionally good spirits and teased Lucie until the old smile tugged at her mouth again. Only one long look passed between mother and daughter, and it was enough to assure Martha that Lucie was game and would go through with this but that she had lost a deep portion of the new faith she had so miraculously acquired.

LEONA ANDERSON had just been baptized and Lucie was to be next. Martha sat with folded hands and prayed that God would be merciful and enlighten their ignorant minds as to the doing of his will.

John stepped into the water and Lucie started toward him. As she took her father's outstretched hand, her features changed. Her eyes shone with a radiance Martha had never before imagined. Her lips were parted slightly and her head was thrown back proudly and upon her face was the most precious, the most beautiful, the most blinding look of reassurance and happiness and peace that Martha had ever seen. She could hardly see through her tears.

"I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen."

LUCIE reached Martha first. Tears were coming down her cheeks, and she was trembling, but she was walking straight and tall and proud.

"Hello, darling" her mother said.
"Mother! I talked with God!"
"I know, dear, I know."
"You knew, Mother?"
"Yes, I knew."
"And was he pleased, Mother? Was he proud of me as I went under the water?"

Martha could still see the shining light which had ascended above her daughter's head as John had said "Amen," and she smiled through her own tears.

"Yes, dear. I'm sure he was pleased."

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Conard, 417 Freeman, Topeka, Kansas, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on April 29. On Sunday, May 4, they held open house at their home from 2 until 5 p.m. They were married at the Reorganized Church in Fanning, Kansas, in 1897. They have three living children; two daughters: Mrs. John Northrup and Mrs. Arthur Marchall; a son, Oscar Conard; ten grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Mr. Conard's mother, Mrs. America Chapple, is eighty-nine years old and lives near Fanning.

tual part. A woman with whom I work is keenly aware of the gross inequality that exists in the world. She would like very much to do something to better working conditions. She would like to see everyone have his needs and just wants. This woman will have to be taught about the social order that God through men is going to establish here on earth. She will have to be won by our economic philosophy.

I also work with a girl who is Jewish. And at the time I became acquainted with her, she was an atheist. This is an unusual combination. I consider myself very fortunate to have this rare opportunity, to tell the gospel to one who is Jewish and an atheist. About three years ago when I first became acquainted with her, she was an talk religion to her, and she said to me, "There is no God." Here is a missionary problem that a sermon or a series of meetings could not possibly reach, because this girl won't go to church. But she has been reached by personal contact. When I first began talking with this girl three years ago, she said to me, "There is no God," but after two years of love, kindness, long-suffering, patience, constant and intimate association with this girl, she became an agnostic and told me, "I don't know whether there is a God or not." Now after three years of personal contact, she tells me she believes there is a supreme being. I was attracted to this girl because of her outstanding character. She has a deep love for her fellow men, she is kind, unselfish, decent, and strictly honest.

I think another good way to evangelize is by distributing tracts. We should select a suitable tract for each personality. Many times when I tell people what church I belong to, they usually respond by saying, "Oh! You're a Mormon." In this case a proper tract to give them would be,

Differences That Persist, by Elbert A. Smith. If people are interested in learning the beliefs of our church, an appropriate tract to give them would be, The Latter Day Saints and What They Believe, by A. B. Phillips. If someone's church believes the proper mode of baptism is sprinkling, give him a tract on baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. It might be more tactful in this case to give him a tract on what we believe about baptism, than to try to tell him for fear it might offend.

Both my husband and I are acquainted with a very fine married couple. We have known this couple for about four years. We are very good friends. On many occasions during these four years, we have tried to tell them about our church, but our friends resent very much the subject of religion. Still they are good people, and they are fond of us. Some might think they are lost to the church and why bother about them; but we don't think so; it's just a matter of a different approach. We sent them a nonmember subscription to the Saints' Herald, and much of the former resentment is being broken down. Furthermore, sending a nonmember a subscription to the Saints' Herald requires very little effort and very little money. This couple to whom we could not tell the story are now receiving our church paper once each week or fifty-two times a year for one dollar and fifty cents which is about three cents a copy. The constant arrival of this paper once each week will do more good than showering people with literature once or occasionally, and then not following up these contacts. Giving a person too much to read at one time might discourage him from reading any of it.

My husband and I have given away perhaps fifty copies of The Call at Evening, by Jessie Ward. This book, we think, contains one of the best missionary messages for beginners, that the church publishes. The Call at Evening is very reasonably priced, it sells for one dollar and a

Converted Schoolhouse Makes a Church

Last October, we were told the church we had been renting for the past six years would no longer be available. Our group was small, and we had no money to build, so the future looked discouraging until one member heard of an abandoned schoolhouse which was for sale. He purchased it and resold it to the group for the same price. It was moved to a suitable lot by the men of the congregation, who also dug the basement for it. Funds were solicited from the businessmen and several friends also contributed; among these were Irby Mundy and Sarah Hudson. The women sold cards and small kitchen appliances and sponsored a rummage sale and swap shop. Actual cost of reconversion was $4,000, of which only $1,000 remains to be paid. The floor has been sanded and varnished. The piano was purchased from the city for $1.00 and a table, stand, pulpit, and stoves bought at reduced prices. A picture of "The Last Supper" was contributed by a friend. Part of the cement for the concrete foundation was donated, and other materials were purchased at a ten per cent discount.

The members of Eldorado congregation wish to express their thanks to all who helped them in establishing their present church home.

Report on Wallowa, Oregon

This little town is one of many such beautiful places in the valleys of north-eastern Oregon. It is located forty-eight miles northeast of LaGrande in the rich Wallowa Valley—an area almost untouched by Latter Day Saint evangelism.

At present, however, there are three quarter and can be purchased at the Herald Publishing House.

The world is in dire need of God's plan of salvation. What could create within us more joy, more soul satisfaction than presenting his message to the world. In conclusion may I say, "Soul-winning is the most thrilling adventure upon which a human being can enter." We are told in Proverbs, chapter 11, and verse 30, "He that winneth souls is wise."

priests in Wallowa. Priest Frank Wilcox, originally of Sweet Home, is specializing in church school work and has employed the use of visual aids in his teaching. Two of us attended the recent Portland District Conference at Salem. The ordination service, in charge of District President J. L. Verhei, was exceptionally impressive. My brother was ordained to the office of priest at this time. He is in charge of the church school at both LaGrande and Wallowa. Last Sunday we drove eighty miles to meet with the scattered Saints of Pondosa and Baker; we hope these people will be instrumental in establishing branches in the future. W. T. Ferguson and Frank Wilcox were in charge of the Communion service, which was a spiritual feast for the isolated members. I was the speaker at the evening service.

Although this beautiful mountain country has not long been a field of missionary endeavor, it may later be a stake of Zion.

Will Appreciate Letters

I greatly enjoy reading the Herald and other church literature. At our family worship, we are reading the New Testament. My husband is not a member of the Reorganized Church, and most of my family and old acquaintances have moved from Corinth, but we continue to hold services. The majority of the members come from other towns.

I send greetings to all my friends in the church. I shall appreciate receiving letters from any of the sisters who care to write.

Golden Wedding

Open house in observance of the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cousins was held Sunday afternoon, March 16, from two to five o'clock, at their home, three and one-half miles southwest of Grain Valley, where 140 of their friends called to extend their greetings.

The anniversary was observed with a family dinner at the Town House in Independence. Eight of their children and seven grandchildren were present.

Fred and Fanny Cousins both are natives of England. They were married in Chesterfield in 1897 and in 1904 came to America, locating at Bevier, Missouri. Following a residence there, they spent ten years in Lamoni, Iowa, then moved to Wyoming where they spent twenty years, and in 1937 settled near Grain Valley where they have since made their home.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Cousins left brothers and sisters in England. One of the brothers, Charles Cousins of Clay Cross, attended General Conference, and he visited with them and other relatives in Independence. Mr. Cousins joined the Reorganized Latter Day Saints at the age of 16; his wife joining after their marriage. Fred was ordained an elder while in Wyoming.

Unable to attend the anniversary was Mrs. Elsie Myers of Flat Valley, Saskatchewan, Canada. Those attending included Mrs. Maud Curtis of Helena, Montana; Mrs. Frances Savage of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Rogene Baxtey of Dallas, Texas; Harry Cousins, Chadron, Nebraska; Boyd Cousins and Charles Cousins, both of Kansas City, Missouri; Raymond Cousins of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Jo Arba, Gomer T. Griffiths.

There are fifteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Wants Addresses of German Members

Mrs. H. C. Lanphere, with her husband who is serving in the occupation forces at Wurzburg, Germany, sends the following appeal for information:

I should like very much to have a list of the names and addresses of church members living in Germany, and would appreciate your sending it to me at your earliest convenience.

A few months ago I came to Germany to be with my husband, who is stationed here with the Army of Occupation. While it is difficult to get transportation, occasionally we are able to get a jeep for short trips, and it occurred to us that there might be some church members close by, or even right here in Wurzburg, whom we could visit.

Church members in this country who know addresses of members living in Germany could help by furnishing addresses of those members who are in the area near Wurzburg, especially. The following is the address:

The Eyes of Truth

By NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL

Through Truth's clear eyes
One sees true peace
Must come to human kind;
Through Truth's great mind
One knows the growth
Shown forth in human sign.

There is no life
Untouched by Him,
Unmindful of his love;
There is no man
Who lives below
Without the One above.

Truth touches heart,
And mind and soul,
And makes the spirit grow;
There is no task
Beyond our reach
When perfect Truth we know.

Let's Change the Fork

To the Editor

Sir:

It is time that man's inventive genius should attack the problem of one of our most common household implements. It needs reform, a new design based upon modern requirements. The traditional design is outmoded.

Since it was developed in the Middle Ages, there has been little real improvement in the common table fork. The tines are too long. They often impale a piece of meat up to the hilt, so that a major operation is required to remove it. The fork is completely useless for dealing with gravy, sauces, and the juice of vegetables which, you will admit, are often the most delectable part of the dish, the final triumph of gustatory perfection.

Short tines, attached to some sort of spoon or bowl effect, would be much better for the purpose.

But can we expect a simple, useful reform like this to be adopted in one generation? Hardly, sir. It took three hundred years to train men to use forks, and some of them still resist. Among the primitive there are still those who prefer to elevate their frijoles to the dental orifice with some adaptation of the saber or dagger. Therefore, I do not expect my invention to become popular until about the year 2247.

And what shall we name the new utensil? A combination is obvious. We have a choice between "spork" and "foon." But when I see these words I am afraid for the fate of my invention. Who could regard an implement with such a name as anything but ridiculous? It would never be popular. We must think of something else. Anyway, there are three hundred years yet, and in that time somebody is sure to think of a good name.

Respectfully yours,

The Cogitator.

Wants Old Church Books

Frank R. Shank, 5519 Kenwood, Apt. 423, Chicago 37, Illinois, wishes to hear from those who may have any of the following books for sale: Presidency and Priesthood, copies of Journal of History, Exegesis of the Priesthood, and other old books of the church. Please state price and condition of the books.

Prayer Perfect

By ALICE CROSSAN

GOD WAS HAVING an especially busy day. He had been seeing that things were in readiness for the new arrivals expected on the morrow, and he had been greeting those who had come in today. The weather on earth had been bad, and there had been many accidents. He had only just now found time to come into the prayer department.

"And what do my little ones say today?" he asked in his gentle voice. In spite of all he had done that morning, there was no trace of weariness on his serene face. But there was a kindly smile.

Pam came forward with a sheaf of papers.

"Here are the prayers from the children today, Lord," she said. "I have taken them down carefully as they came in, and have filed copies, as you instructed me to do. These are the Now-I-Lay-Me-Down-to-Sleeps, and these are the Table Graces," she motioned toward a pile she had placed on her desk, "and here are the usual Sunday School Prayers, and here in this group are the unclassified ones that children say when they want help with their lessons or are afraid to go outdoors in the dark. And these are the Special Requests."

God looked thoughtfully at the neat piles of paper. Then, touching the smallest stack, he looked at his efficient helper.

"What are these, Pam?"

Pam's glance followed his pointing finger. Her eyes were sad.

"I'm afraid those are the Thank You Prayers, Lord," she admitted hesitantly. "They are always small."

She felt sorry for God. He was always the same, always kind, always just, always good, and he listened to every prayer that came into heaven. Whether he answered the prayers directly or not, he always sent a little of his peace to the one who had prayed. She knew this, because she was a great friend of Mary, one of the directors of the Peace Department. But so very few people ever bothered to say a Thank You Prayer. They seemed to think Please Prayers were all that were necessary. Pam knew that God was always happy to get the Thank You Prayers. He felt, she reasoned, just as she had felt on earth when she had been sick once and her friends had sent her cheery get-well cards. She wished she could somehow influence people to include thank-you's in their prayers more often.

"The grownups' Thank You Prayers are always small, too," God said reflectively. But abruptly his beautiful smile widened. "However, Pam, there are many songs sung on earth each day. A song of praise, you know, is a hymn of thanks to the Lord."

"That is true, Lord," Pam said, feeling cheered. How wise God was to know this! She wondered if even the people who sang realized what great happiness their glad voices gave him.

"You have sent copies of all these to the right departments?" God asked.

"Yes," Pam said, "I have been very careful not to miss one. I knew you would want to see all the Special Requests; there are many you will want to grant, because of the children's faith."

"Yes, the very young really believe in me," God said joyfully. "And I believe in them as much as they do in me."

Pam handed a small, white slip to him. "I thought you might like to see this one first, Lord," she said. "It is such a beautiful prayer. It comes from a little girl in Poland. She is only nine years old, and she is all alone, except for her father who is dying of cancer."

God took the paper on which the prayer had been written. As he read, Pam saw that tears glistened in his eyes. It reminded her of all the times during the last war when God had read the many Special Requests from children to protect their fathers who were fighting. They had all been very busy in the prayer department, and Pam had been just a newcomer then. She had come over during the blitz on London. They had been needing her in the children's prayer department, and she had started to help at once. On earth, she had been director of a radio program for children, and her past experience had been a great help. Then, too, she had learned her new duties quickly because all the angels had been so kind.

Sometimes now she laughed about the ideas she had had when she was on earth. For one thing, she had never expected to come over here so soon. That had been a complete surprise. Why, she had been just a young woman! But God told her that some people finished their work on earth earlier than others. She had been needed more here than on earth. She had supposed, too, that everyone rested in heaven. How foolish that idea seemed to her now! Why, even on earth, unemployment made everybody unhappy. With all the countless millions in heaven, how would they occupy themselves for all eternity if there was no satisfying work to be done? There were no labor troubles here—never any lack of material, and never any friction between workers. They all worked because they loved what they were doing.

She meant, sometime soon, perhaps this very afternoon, to go over to the Creative Arts Department where all the artists were. She had heard that Michelangelo had done some beautiful work there, and Grant Wood was helping to make some rolling hills for the new planet. It had been his suggestion that they make the hills on the new planet like the ones in Iowa. Everyone said that his new shades of green were gorgeous. The Morning Star had headlined the making of this new planet, and Pam had read it with much interest.

Pam was startled out of her profound thoughts by a sudden movement at her side. God had finished the prayer and was replacing it on her desk. He stood a long time in brooding thought, and she did not intrude upon the silence. At last, he looked at her and smiled.

"This little girl is not only wholly unselfish, but her faith is very great," he said slowly. "She knows that her father is about to die of cancer. Her father is a scientist, and she wants him to continue living so that the world may profit by the discoveries he is hoping to make. So she asks that the cancer be put into her own body instead of her father's. She thinks that as long as one of them must die, it would be better for her to do so."

"You will spare the father's life?" Pam questioned hopefully.

God shook his head.

"No, Pam, that would necessitate performing a miracle, and the world no longer believes in miracles. Everything must follow the laws of nature. If a man has a deadly disease, he must die of the disease, unless other men find, by these same laws, a way of curing him. For cancer, this method has not yet been discovered. This father is not the one appointed to find the cure. His work in the world is completed. We need his help in our physics department over here. I am expecting him in a few days."

"But certainly you will lessen his suffering, as his little daughter asks!"

Here Is the Writer . . .

Alice Crossan is twenty-six years old, and, although she has never written for the "Herald" before, she confesses, "Ever since I penned my first 'poem' at the age of seven (not without some unmistakable signs of plagiarism) I have had a desire to write. For years my tolerant mother has been picking up scribbled pages all over the house." In addition to writing, she has taught school, worked for the Collector of Internal Revenue, and is at present taking a course in commercial art.

"Because of her faith, I will take away his pain. And because of her faith and her great love for her fellow beings, I will bestow upon her a special gift."

Again Pam marveled at the wisdom of God. She knew now without asking that the greatest work of the father on earth had been finished when his child was born into it. This child was to complete the thing he had dreamed of doing for mankind.

"You know what this special gift will be?" God looked at her closely, perceiving the things that were in her heart.

"I know that whatever it is, and however you choose to bestow it, Lord, it will be wisely given," she said humbly.

"This child," God said prophetically, "will grow to womanhood in her native land. A great love of knowledge will burn within her. She will give up all other passions, joys, and desires to follow after this great love. As she grows older, she will become more and more determined to find a cure for the dreadful disease that took her father's life. She will do this because of love for her father—and I shall help her. One day this little child will come forth with the thing the whole world, despite its advancement, does not yet possess. She will discover the cure for cancer."

Pam cleared her desk. It was time for lunch.

"Are you going over to see how the new planet is coming? The afternoon is yours, you know."

"Yes, I was thinking of it," Pam smiled.

BOOKS

IN THE LIGHT OF THE CROSS, by Harold Cooke Phillips, Abingdon Cokesbury Press, 1947, 204 pages, price $1.75.

This series of lectures takes a definite viewpoint of the events surrounding the crucifixion of Christ. The author's interpretation brings out of each group and situation a principle of national or social conduct that can be applied to our own times. The author begins with a question, "What crucified Jesus?" In the succeeding chapters he gives the following significant answer: ecclesiasticism, privilege, nationalism, opportunism, secularism, militarism, and acquiescence. The concluding chapter is on the subject of salvation. The work is of an intellectual quality and addressed to the serious student and reader.

THE PREACHING MINISTRY OF TODAY, by Roland W. Schloerb, Harper, 1947, 113 pages, price $1.25.

Another volume for the preachers' library, small but significant, is offered in this high quality literary work. In five stimulating chapters, the author deals with the following topics: ultimate goals and immediate hazards, preaching as the proclamation of news, preaching as the communication of insight, preaching as a summons to action, and preaching as a pastoral function.

WORSHIP GOD, a guide toward genuineness and worship, by Or-ene McIlwain, John Knox Press, Richmond, Virginia, 1947, 157 pages, price $1.50.

For those who wish to build a

"And I must be going, too," God said, drawing his shining robe more closely about him. "My Son and I must sit in court this afternoon."

library in worship techniques and resources, this book will make a good contribution. It places the emphasis upon the spirit and reality of worship. The book contains many practical suggestions including songs, stories, illustrations, poems, and bibliography.

HIS WORD THROUGH PREACHING, by Gerald Kennedy, Harper, 1947, 243 pages, price $2.50.

The best preachers are always anxious to enrich their resources, deepen their understanding, and improve their ability to serve the people of the church in their ministry. Only the very poorest of preachers feel that it is not necessary to do anything to improve. So the offering of a new book in the field of pulpit ministry is an event that should be of wide interest.

This book is to be recommended for its rich scholarship, its sincerity, and its seriousness. Among the books on preaching, this will be considered one of the best quality.

SKEPTIC'S SEARCH FOR GOD, by Barbara Spofford Morgan, Harper, 1947, 248 pages, price $3.00.

This excellent book is for those people who find themselves in the upper intellectual circles, but living a somewhat empty and distressed existence for lack of some central meaning in their life. Anyone who has tried it realizes that there is no spiritual peace or happiness in such a condition. The author's purpose is to bring understanding and help to such people. Although the book is written on the university level, the style is not heavy and should be appreciated by all who are accustomed to serious reading and thinking.

PREACH THE WORD, by Roy L. Smith, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1947, 128 pages, price $1.00.

The author of this little book is one of the best liked and most brilliant religious writers in America for the lay reader. It consists of the Peyton Lectures given at Southern Methodist University. Dr. Smith is well known to American readers as editor of the Christian Advocate. Readers will find a good fund of information about the Bible and the people who produced it in these pages.

Eden Heights Congregation

Pastor, Fred A. Fry

The excavation for the foundation of the Eden Heights Church was begun in April, 1943, under the direction of Elder Emery Jennings, then pastor of Walnut Park congregation. At that time, Eden Heights was known as the Walnut Park Mission.

In December, 1944, the building was complete enough that meetings could be held in it, and Elder John Taylor was appointed pastor. Brother Taylor served in this capacity for twenty-nine months.

On March 16, 1947, the finished building was dedicated with Elder Fred A. Fry as pastor. The dedication address was given by President Israel A. Smith. Bishop G. L. DeLapp received the key and then returned it to Hiram Robinson, bishop's agent. Music on this occasion was furnished by the choir and Melba Troyer, soloist.

—Dorothy Keebler, reporter.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Pastor, N. W. Morrison

Early in April, Vancouver Saints held a social at which Allan and Selma Coats were honored guests. They were given a wedding gift at the close of the evening.

Tribute was paid to the late Samuel Pope, former pastor of Vancouver Branch, at the 11 o'clock service on April 20. Dorothy Fay Foss, a great-grandchild of J. J. Cornish, was blessed by Elders Edwin Spargo and Norman Morrison at the close of this service.

Leaguers throughout the district met at Vancouver Church for an early-morning prayer service on March 30, remaining for preaching and lunch in the lower auditorium. Pearl Phillips of the Royal Columbian Hospital in New Westminster and Marjorie Courtenay of St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver are among the spring graduates. Each is the honor student of her class.

The Daughters of Zion recently held the first of a series of evening meetings at the home of Sister Wintermute. Annie Butterworth of New Westminster spoke on girl guide work at this meeting.

Visiting speakers have been District President Samuel Clark and Teacher J. Robbins of New Westminster.

The church is being painted and repaired in preparation for the spring convention to be held in June.

—Bert Embleton, reporter.

Springfield, Illinois

Pastor, J. A. Williams

Springfield mission was reorganized into a branch on March 23. Apostle Arthur Oakman was in charge of the all-day services held on this occasion. Many visiting Saints were in attendance.

Elder J. A. Williams was presented as president of the branch. He will be assisted by Priests F. L. McKane and Ralph France and Teacher Alma Jones. Elizabeth McKane was elected branch clerk; F. W. Washburn, treasurer; and Ralph France, church school director.

The most urgent problem confronting the new branch is the lack of a suitable church home. At present, Sunday morning services are conducted at the Odd Fellows Hall; Sunday and Wednesday evening meetings are held in the homes of members.

The women's department, with twelve active members, has contributed $900 to the building fund. Their goal is a minimum of twenty-five dollars a month. They meet regularly every Thursday morning, each woman bringing her own lunch, and sew until two o'clock when the weekly meeting is conducted.

O. C. Hansen of Decatur was the speaker on April 27; his inspiring sermon was greatly appreciated.

Although many Saints in Springfield are not active workers, it is the goal of the branch to reinterest them so that the church may grow stronger.

—Elizabeth McKane, reporter.

Bayou La Batre, Alabama

Pastor, O. O. Tillman

Recent guest speakers have been Elders A. O. Crownover, Franklin Steiner, and R. L. Booker, all of Mobile, Alabama.

Glenda Alma, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alma Tillman, was blessed by Elder O. O. Tillman at the morning service on February 16.

An Easter egg hunt was sponsored at the home of Irma Tillman on April 6 for the children.

Elder A. O. Crownover gave the Mother's Day sermon on the night of May 11.

Apostle M. L. Draper and High Priest W. J. Breshears visited Bayou La Batre on May 14. The annual spring picnic will be held May 18.

—Leona Tillman, reporter.

Lone Star, Alabama

A Bible class was held by the Lone Star League on April 29. At the close of the meeting, it was decided that the group should buy a blackboard for the church. On the following Thursday evening, Apostle M. L. Draper and High Priest W. J. Breshears visited Lone Star Branch. Brother Breshears gave the sermon and Apostle Draper, a short talk.

—Dorcilla McClamy, reporter.

Correction: Lone Star, Alabama, has been incorrectly listed as Lone Star, Texas, in previous reports.

Iron Mountain, Missouri

Pastor, J. N. Hopkins

In February, the Iron Mountain Saints were granted permission to rent the American Legion Hall at Flat River, Missouri. A service has been held there every Sunday since. Prior to that time, prayer meetings and study periods were held in the home of W. E. Haden; DeLapp's Zionist Procedure was used as a text.

On Sunday, April 27, District Church School Director Benjamin Clark was present to organize the Iron Mountain church school. The following officers were elected: Edward Yoder, director and book steward; Ruby Rigler, secretary; Carrie Hopkins, publicity agent; and Martha Hopkins, pianist. Teachers for the three classes were also appointed.

Paul Counts was the speaker on Sunday, May 18.

—Carrie Hopkins, reporter.

West Virginia District Youth Conference

The West Virginia District Youth Conference will be held in Moundsville, West Virginia, on June 29. Brother Merle Guthrie, the missionary for our district, will be the speaker, and there will be services all day. All services will be on daylight saving time.

MAY R. GRIFFIN,
Secretary, West Virginia District.

Information, Please

The First Presidency is sponsoring a program designed to bring college and university people of the church into a closer relationship with the objectives of the general church. One of the preliminary phases of this program is the taking of a census of church members now enrolled in all colleges, junior colleges, and universities in the state of Michigan. If you are acquainted with any such student, please send his name, home and school address to L. O. Brockway, Department of Chemistry, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Requests for Prayers

Clarence Counts of Kennett, Missouri, asks the continued prayers of the Saints that he may be healed of tuberculosis.

W. N. Bledsoe of Washington, Oklahoma, asks the prayers of the Saints for his wife and himself. Both are in ill health.

WEDDINGS

Ross-Carlson

Emma Jean Carlson and Kenneth H. Ross, both of DuBois, Pennsylvania, were married at the home of Elder and Mrs. Earl H. Brennan of Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, on May 13, Elder Brennan officiating.

Births

Mr. and Mrs. Rodney E. Hammond of Seattle, Washington, announce the birth of a son, Mark Stephen, born January 13. Mrs. Hammond is the former Audrey Spear.

A daughter, Cheryl Elaine, was born to Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Gorden of Camdenton, Missouri, on October 20, 1946, at the Independence Sanitarium.

A son, Stephen Harold, was born November 25, 1946, to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Clark at the Independence Sanitarium.

DEATHS

CHAMBERS.—Robert N., was born July 11, 1875, at Fall Brook, Pennsylvania, and died March 23, 1947, at Colorado Springs, Colorado. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Florence, Colorado, by Elder James Kemp on February 13, 1893.

He is survived by his wife, Lulu; a son, Earl of Victor, Colorado; a stepson; two brothers, and four sisters. Elder J. D. Curtis officiated at the funeral. Burial was in the Colorado Springs cemetery.

LARSEN.—Margaret, was born at Aalborg, Denmark, on March 1, 1865, and died at her home in Independence, Missouri, on April 24, 1947. She came to the United States at the age of seven and settled in Utah. In 1893, she was married to A. P. Larsen, who preceded her in death in December, 1943. In 1907, the family moved to Lee's Summit, Missouri, where they lived until 1942, when they made their home in Independence. Mrs. Larsen was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by Elder C. DePuy in 1909.

She is survived by three daughters: Mrs. Bertha Beach, Ferron, Utah; Miss Cleo and Miss Anna Larsen of the home; a son, A. C. Larsen of Independence; one sister, Mrs. Karen Christensen, Salt Lake City, Utah; a brother, Hans Larsen of Castle Dale, Utah; and fourteen grandchildren. Services were held at the church in Lee's Summit. Dr. F. M. McDowell was in charge, assisted by Elders Roy Thrutchley and Christie Kearns. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SMITH.—Daniel Fredrick, son of Daniel and Grace Smith, was born March 10, 1916, at Chariton, Iowa, and died May 1, 1947. In 1929, he moved to Des Moines with his parents. Here he was married to Viola Page on March 10, 1945; one daughter, Wanda Louise, was born to this union. Daniel was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church. He is survived by his wife and daughter, his parents, and many friends.

DICKEY.—Adeline A. Gamet, was born April 1, 1858, in Little Sioux, Iowa, and passed away April 4, 1947, at Sioux City, Iowa, after a brief illness. She was married to John F. Dickey in 1875 and was baptized into the Reorganized Church soon afterward. Mr. Dickey and five of the nine children preceded her in death.

Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Cassie Jones, Mrs. C. J. Smith, and Mrs. G. L. Freeburger of Sioux City, Iowa, and Mrs. M. O. Hall of Chicago, Illinois.

WALTERS.—Elmer J., was born in Haskins, Ohio, on July 24, 1876, and died May 3, 1947, in Duluth, Minnesota. He moved from Flint, Michigan, to Carlton, Minnesota, in 1898, where he was a resident for the past forty-nine years. He served as a rural mail carrier out of Carlton for twenty-three years until his retirement in 1943. He was married to Mary McFarland on June 4, 1903; to this union five children were born. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church when he was nineteen and remained a devoted worker until his death. He was ordained a priest in 1929, and an elder in 1931. He served as pastor in Duluth, and as associate district president in the Minnesota District until 1936 when it became necessary for him to resign from active administrative work. He gave himself unreservedly to providing for his family and serving others in his ministerial duties.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; two sons: Russell M. of Duluth, and Howard J. of Carlton; two daughters: Mrs. Ruth Longmore, Moose Lake, Minnesota, and Miss Mildred Walters, Washington, D. C.; a brother, George of Flint; and three grandchildren. One son preceded him in death. J. H. Yager was in charge of the funeral service. Interment was in Carlton cemetery.

LIVELY.—Marietta G., was born November 28, 1887, in Algonac, Michigan, and died April 10, 1947, at Independence, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in the year 1908 and was an active member until her death. She was married to Herbert R. Lively in June, 1908; three children were born to this marriage.

She leaves her husband; two daughters: Mrs. Ilene Chisnell of St. Clair, Michigan, and Mrs. Elizabeth Masten of Independence; a son, Herbert C. of Lamoni, Iowa; a sister, Mrs. Mattie Poole of Algonac; two brothers: Andrew J. Rathbun of Cleveland, Ohio, and John L. Rathbun of Detroit, Michigan; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Patriarch George Booth, assisted by Elder Robert Brown. Interment was in Hillside Cemetery in St. Clair.

MONTAGUE.—Joseph Eldridge, son of George and Frances Montague, was born July 11, 1862, at Gallands Grove, Iowa, and died April 21, 1947, at Warrensburg, Missouri. He united with the Reorganized Church at the age of eight, and was a faithful member for seventy-five years. On December 8, 1893, he was married to Effie Bartholomew; seven children were born to this union, five of whom survive. Brother Montague held the office of elder; most of his active ministry was in Oklahoma.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Marjorie Mullins, Warrensburg; Mrs. H. C. Williams, Milo, Missouri; and Mrs. Alice Waller, Stillwater, Oklahoma; two sons: James B. of Stillwater, and Mark of Odessa, Texas; four sisters: Mrs. Hubert Case, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Mary Wilson, Woodbine, Iowa; Mrs. Nancy Koestner, Berkeley, California; and Mrs. Grace Vredenburg, fifteen grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. Elder E. P. Darnell officiated at the funeral. Burial was in the Warrensburg cemetery.

MARKEN.—Helen Lucile, daughter of Edward and Nora Lister, was born April 6, 1905, and died April 29, 1947, at her home in Savanna, Illinois, following a lingering illness. On July 16, 1923, she was married to James Marken; five children were born to this union.

She was a member of the Reorganized Church and the Milwaukee Woman's Club.

Surviving are her husband; a daughter, Mrs. John Paasch of Savanna; four sons: Jack, Gene, Donnie, and Jimmy, all of the home; her mother and a sister, Mrs. Floyd Welch, both of Savanna; and four brothers: Allen, Irwin, and Edward Lister of Savanna, and Howard Lister of Brewster, Nebraska. Funeral services were held at the Fuller Chapel with Elder V. J. Witte officiating. Burial was in Savanna cemetery.

McMILLAN.—John, died April 29 at his home in Newport Beach, California, at the age of eighty-five. He was a native of Campbelltown, Argyllshire, Scotland, from which port he sailed around the world, many times by way of the Horn. He settled in Newport Beach in 1880 when it was little more than sand dunes and mud flats. He was a pioneer, serving as harbor master and water superintendent, a position from which he resigned several years ago. He was also postmaster for a while. His wife was the daughter of D. S. Mills, well-known west coast missionary. Although he never joined the church, Mr. McMillan was devoted to its interest and his hospitality to the Saints was widely recognized.

He is survived by two sons: John and Neil of Newport Beach; two daughters: Sadie Irwin of Newport Beach, and Agnes Ellsworth of Inglewood, California; eleven grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Smith and Tutthill Mortuary in Santa Ana, Elders John Rushton and Albert Carmichael officiating.

RODGER.—Anna, daughter of Isaac and Sarah E. Wiltse Bogue, was born August 22, 1862, near Saginaw, Michigan, at Thomastown, and died May 3, 1947, in Independence, Missouri. She united with the Reorganized Church on June 24, 1877, and was a consistent attendant and worker until the time of her death. She was married to Joseph B. Rodger on December 17, 1883; three children were born to this union. Mr. Rodger died six years ago.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Zaide M. Hartshorn, Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Hazel Rahm, Sedalia, Missouri; a son, Dr. Glaude W. Rodger, also of Sedalia; a sister, Mrs. Emma Thomas, Lamoni, Iowa; and one grandchild. Services were held at the Stahl Funeral Home. Elder Don Lents officiated, assisted by Patriarch Elbert A. Smith. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BROWN.—Sarah A., was born June 6, 1861, and passed away on April 15, 1947, at the home of her son in Flint, Michigan, following five years of illness. Her husband, Thomas Brown, preceded her in death several years ago. She was well known and loved by many people in the Flint-Port Huron and Eastern Michigan Districts. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 20, 1902.

She is survived by a son, James, of Flint; three stepdaughters: Mrs. Agnes Cook, Decker-ville, Michigan; Mrs. Arthur Merideth, Snover, Michigan; and Mrs. Paul Genhart, Detroit, Michigan; seven grandchildren, and sixteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Theodore Bush and Harry Simons. Burial was in Flint Memorial Park.

The Soul's Journey

HERE comes a time when day is done
 And all the earth is still,
 My soul goes forth upon his quest
 To reach some wooded hill.

Some place of quietude and rest,
 Some place of distant height
 Where lives the warmth of dying sun,
 Where stars are born at night.

The noise and busy streets I leave
 To climb the rooted way,
 And in the hush that twilight brings
 I pause, and kneel to pray.

A hunger for the good and true,
 A thirst to know God's plan
 Were placed within the soul he gave
 When first my life began.

The path is narrow, often steep,
 But ever on I wend—
 A seasoned hope, a nurtured faith
 Must find the journey's end!

FRANCES HARTMAN

 Cover Picture

The artistic picture caught by the photographer presents two forces of nature—the endless movement of the sea and the inexhaustible energy of youth. Master Sergeant H. E. Dixon is stationed with U. S. Government forces at San Francisco, and took this picture on the beach there. Roaming about, camera in hand, he looks for interesting subjects. "Children and dogs make the best shots," he says. So, just waiting his chance and watching two unidentified little girls, he obtained this perfect composition of movement, rhythm, and light. He is from Knoxville, Iowa, and is attached to Letterman General Hospital.

 Public Relations

Everything goes better if you make up your mind to like the people with whom you are to deal. It must be sincere and from the heart. No amount of manners can long cover up a sham. Counterfeit feeling, like lead covered with gilt, will soon show through at one or more spots. If you really like people, you have nothing to hide, nothing to pretend.

The world is becoming conscious of public relations. Great corporations hire expensive staffs to manage this for them, since something must be done to overcome the frequent misunderstandings and consequent ill-will that develop. Corporations know that if the public does not like them, laws against them will find their way into the statute books. They must work continuously to lead the public to like them. Railroads still suffer from a president who is reported to have said, a generation ago, "The public be damned!" True or not, it has cost the railroads a lot of good will and money. The fine attitudes and public service of many other railroad officials have been required to overcome it.

Persons also have public relations. Are you aware of that? Have you sometimes felt sorry that you could not get people to like you? Each of us has a complicated problem in public relations. It is not easy to solve. But you can always begin by liking people. Be genuine about it. Be patient—a chance for you to show your liking will come. You may fail with a few individuals, but you will win with the majority. And the benefits are reciprocal, for you will soon discover that you are leading a happier life.

* As you go higher, the company becomes smaller. Nobody counts the number of children who will finish the grades this year. The number of high school classes graduating runs into many thousands. There is an army of bachelor's degrees granted by the universities, and a small handful of doctor's degrees. If you don't like being crowded, if you want elbow room, go up higher.

* Indecision can kill you. Make up your mind, and let the decision stand until you have some new evidence to indicate a change is necessary. This is the only way to obtain peace. To make no decision is in itself a decision—and it is the only kind that will do you no good whatever.

* A temper is like a powerful engine. Never let it run wide open or it will destroy itself. The throttle must be kept under control.

* No matter how good the car, if you see a fellow slamming it around corners, it will not be good long. Good cars need good drivers.

* Stand on both feet. You can lose your convictions while standing on one foot, wondering whether to put the other down.

Reunions Are Here!

Fellowship

We shall probably never understand all the reasons why it is good for church people to meet, visit, work together, and enjoy themselves in pleasant occupations and experiences. Understanding is good if we can attain it; but there is no harm if we can't. We profit by many blessings that we do not understand. The church has been admonished to meet together often to partake of the Lord's Supper, and it is considered wise that we should meet often for many other activities, such as prayer meetings, worship and preaching services, classes, institutes, retreats, and reunions. The social aspect of the gospel is indicated in the promise of the Saviour who told his disciples that "Where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Even a small group, he wanted them to know, could claim his attention and presence. He blesses them, and they help each other.

Reunions

Large investments of money, work, planning, time, and effort have gone into the development of our reunion grounds, and from all indications church people consider these investments worth-while. New uses for these grounds have been discovered, especially in connection with youth programs, priesthood training programs, and other special church interests, in addition to the basic reunion purposes. Our view is that, once we acquire a piece of property for church use, we should take the fullest possible advantage of its capacities for service. This also gives us more occasions for getting together.

Now that the investments have been made, and more of them will be made, it seems important that many church families and individuals should plan to enjoy and profit by the opportunities afforded us. We would be unwise indeed to invest all this work and money, and not use it. The reunion grounds are intended for us. A little planning, a very modest expense, and we can have a very happy time with other members of the church. Fine new friendships and associations, educational and spiritual experiences, growth of character and understanding—all the splendid fruits of fellowship—can be ours for a little effort and planning.

You can enjoy some good reunion or other camping experience this summer if you will plan and take the trouble.

Your Family Vacation

During the coming summer, millions of Americans and thousands of church members will take their vacations in traveling or in camp. They will inhale incalculable quantities of dust and gasoline fumes, pay high prices for food and sight-seeing, and spend their time next to people they will not see again, and with whom they have little in common. Many such vacations are nightmares of fatigue and inconvenience from which people gladly escape, thankful for the peace and quiet of their own homes.

Why not have a pleasant, happy, profitable vacation that will increase your friendships among church people, give you something good to remember, and a fresh interest in the church and its plans? In most parts of our country—and generally somewhere within easy traveling or driving distance of your home—there is a good reunion ground where our people will meet, glad to welcome you and anxious to do what they can to make your stay pleasant, friendly, and a happy experience. Why not budget the necessary money now, make your plans and reservations, and assure yourself of a good time?

Church Associations

One of the great complaints of our people is that "Our young people marry outside of the church and are lost to it." That is because in many a small branch there is no suitable companion for some of the young folk. This lack can be remedied at reunion. It is an opportunity to meet other young people and form new friendships that may result in the establishment of happy homes. Americans are so much inclined to let this important part of the lives of young people be managed by accident. It often leads to poor results. Young people enjoy meeting others of their own age, forming new friendships and companionships. The best service we can do for them is to make it possible for them to meet many young persons of superior quality.

Your Family and the Church

In general, your family life will be what you make it. Provide educational and cultural influences, and you can expect a development of refined personality. Neglect to do anything about the social and intellectual needs of your children, and in a few years you will be mourning about the results.

One thing is sure: If you keep your family away from the church and its activities and influences, you oppose the world alone in trying to direct the formation of their characters. But if you bring them to church—even if you can do nothing more for them—you will find an organization enlisted to help you toward all the better things you desire for them. The church, the reunion, the church schools, and all other parts of our great work, all stand ready to help you, extending an invitation. Will you accept?

Is It True?

By James F. Keir

A friend of mine recently said to me, "When my husband gets well, he is going to join the church. Of course, it does not make any difference what church you join."

It is doubtful that people who make this statement have ever given the matter of actively identifying themselves with the cause of Christ much serious thought.

The counsel of God through the Prophet Jeremiah (6:16) reads, "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, wherein is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

No one can question the good that all churches do, and the salutary influence they exert in the world. And for those who have not yet found the more excellent way which God in these last days has restored to earth, they may, with profit and with a degree of joy, join forces with all who acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ, for as Jesus once said, "They that are not against us are for us."

To the extent that any church preaches truth, God will bless. To the extent that their pronouncements are error, God will withhold his blessing. That statement will apply to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as well as to every other church.

Churches, like individuals, make mistakes and may have false beliefs. I can think of no more fertile field in which Satan could sow his tares than in the field of religion. Keep in mind that Satan is a liar. It has always been his purpose to deceive. One of his most skillful ways of deception is to sandwich the untrue and ungodly thing in with a goodly portion of very enjoyable and easily recognizable truth, and then saying to his innocent, uninformed and gullible subject, as he did to Eve, "Ye shall not surely die."

Why would God counsel men to "Stand in the ways and see and ask for the old paths" if it makes no difference in which path we travel? Christ surely did not share this common error. He did not enroll with any of the established religious sects of his time. In each of them he could have found those who shared some of his views.

First, they believed in God.

Second, they exercised faith.

Third, some believed in the resurrection.

Fourth, they held that life was eternal.

Fifth, they looked for a Messiah.

But, in spite of their common ground, he declares, "I will build my church."

Churches might be likened to light bulbs. Some emit greater light than others: some ten watts, twenty-five watts, sixty watts, one-hundred watts. Churches are like that. The more any church conforms to the divine pattern in organization, teaching, and practices, the more evidences of Divinity should be manifest in its membership.

The call of God is unto repentance. Repentance leads to obedience. Obedience develops righteousness. Righteousness brings to God's people a testimony that Jesus is the Christ. Our safeguard against error while we are searching for the way of life and salvation is a prayerful life, supplemented by "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—John 5:39. You judge. Is it true?

A Wednesday Evening Prayer Meeting in the Center Place

In a semi-circle of light, on the west lawn of the Stone Church a prayer meeting was being held. It was mid-summer and a beautiful Wednesday evening. The busy thoroughfare of Lexington Street, and the street bordering on the west, were overloaded with the early evening traffic. The noise of passing

Changes in District Boundaries

The Herald for May 31, in announcing the readjustment of district boundaries in Wisconsin indicated that part of the state has been declared unorganized territory. This is an error. The work in Wisconsin, except for the counties assigned to the Minnesota District, will all be part of a new district to be known as the Wisconsin District. There will be no unorganized territory in the state.

cars and busses and the honking of horns was loud and incessant. A deep-throated train whistled and puffed its way through the beauty of the evening. Then the drone and roar of a heavy plane at this moment passed overhead. The voices that were lifted in prayer were scarcely audible above the turmoil of man's transportation and travel.

I wondered if God could hear the prayers of this people so earnest in heart and full of faith. I wondered if our faith and our lives could merit his straining his ear to catch our faint supplications here on this earth. How many of us are strong enough spiritually to make our prayers heard in this world of strife and noise and speed and wickedness?

Soon, the noise and confusion seemed quieter, was stilled, except for an occasional roar or rattle of a motor or honk of a horn; the voices of God's people became louder and clearer on the night air, first in song and then in testimony. God's Spirit seemed to hover down over this small group of sincere people. His Spirit could be felt greater than all the noises of man, greater than all his wickedness and strife, too. It seemed to enter the heart of everyone there. It was as if one could reach out and almost touch his presence.

I was glad that I had come, so I bring my testimony from the Center Place, God does hear our prayers. His power is great and his presence is sweet to feel.

Missions Abroad

By George G. Lewis

Of the Quorum of Twelve

This is one of a series of articles relating to the theme of the Zion's League organization for the period leading up to the General Conference of 1948, "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations." This is related to the Zion's League project presented in our issue of May 31, for raising a $25,000 fund to promote "Missions Abroad."

SUPPOSE you were sitting in a General Conference hearing the appointments read. You would be interested, of course, for there is always an element of surprise and anticipation. But suppose your appointment read "To Norway—or to Denmark—or to Holland—or to China"—a mission abroad, how would you feel? How would you react? Would you be able to sing, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord" and mean it? Wouldn't you want to feel that the whole church—adults, youth, and children—was behind you, supporting you in faith, prayers, and good works? Of course, you would.

Well, some of our young men and their companions at this last General Conference heard their names read and their assignments made to Great Britain, Holland, Germany, Hawaii, and Society Islands. Were you not thrilled to hear the reading of the appointments and to know at last we are attempting to send help to our brothers and sisters abroad? The long war years—years of terror, suffering, and spiritual isolation from the church are ending, and now succor and help are near. Yes, the whole church is behind the Missions Abroad.

Historically, the church has always been interested in missions abroad—one time called "foreign missions." But there are no foreigners in the church or body of Christ. We are all brothers and sisters in Christ. Remember the first mission to England and Wales in 1837! Think of the sacrifices made by those early Saints! Without much money they started from Kirtland. They were rich, though, in faith and faith paid dividends. Read the story of that missionary effort in The Story of the Church. Doesn't it make you want to do something to count yourself as one with such good people?

Remember the story of Charles Wandell and Glauod Rodger who in 1873 left for Australia and there planted the seed of the gospel. These men and their families sacrificed years in service—and Charles Wandell died in Australia. How can we help the church which had such pioneers? Don't you want to help such a movement?

"Missions Abroad" are by no means easy. It is not a picnic or vacation for the missionary and his family. There will be hardships, there will be sacrifices, and perhaps some real suffering. But there are compensations money cannot buy—the thrill of service to needy people, the inspiration and direction of God, and the smile and appreciation of people who hear the message and receive help of a better world.

The Quorum of Twelve, as the chief missionary quorum of the church, is looking towards extending the work of God at home and abroad. We must have a strong, stabilized, growing church in the homeland—a church that is busy telling the story at home; a church that is building Zionically; a church that is supporting financially according to God's laws. The people abroad expect the church at home to be examples to which they may point and say, "It works." So you who remain at home must carry on the work of witnessing and bearing testimony and winning others. Join the crusade of witnesses this year. You will also have opportunity to support the work abroad through your tithes and offerings. The offerings will be very acceptable if they come as real sacrifices. Let it really cost you something. You will then enjoy more of the spirit of Missions Abroad and share in the total project.

Apostle McConley and companions are abroad in Europe at this present moment. Our hearts and minds and prayers are with him as he seeks to proclaim the acceptable year of our Lord to the war-weary people. Soon Seventy Albert Scherer and wife and son will go to Holland. Think of it! They must learn Dutch. Then Seventy Eugene Theys and family must learn German, for they will seek to minister to the people of Germany. Seventy Glen Johnson and family and High Priest Frank Fry and family will sail for Great Britain to minister to our people in that land.

You are for them and with them in spirit. They are young people eager to do the Lord's will. Let's all support them.

We appeal to the youth of the church to enter realistically into the program of the church. Let your Zion's Leagues be real leagues for Zion-builders. You can have your fun—and will. But in your Leagues learn about the church, its message, its history. Plan to do your part in your locality. And then as a church-wide League get behind the effort to raise the sum set by the Zion's League to promote missions abroad. $25,000! It can be done! It will be done! if the spirit of evangelism touches the hearts of all.

What shall our missionaries and emissaries tell the people abroad about our youth? That they are interested in them and are working for the promotion of the kingdom of God among all peoples.

For Missions Abroad we will need chapels, equipment for chapels, literature—books, tracts, hymnbooks, —mission headquarters, social service supplies.

We, therefore, commend to the youth of the church the effort of Zion's League to raise $25,000 for the promotion of missions abroad and invite YOU to co-operate.

We Must Repent

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

"Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance."—Luke 3: 7, 8.

A MAN STOOD to speak, and his words were good for they were the words of the gospel—yet I could not hear them because what he was shouted, and the clamor of his conduct drowned out the sound of his speaking. I looked at his face, and it showed the signs of a warped attitude, belying the words of his mouth. I could not see his heart for his former actions hid it. How then can I know he is sincere, this time?

Yesterday he fought against good; now he's defending it. How can I know that his "about face" is not just a means to the end he avowed before—a cause against God's church?

Now comes the need for forgiveness and asking for it. I can forgive him for his former attitude and actual transgressions against God's church, but he has not asked for this forgiveness and has never admitted or formally disavowed his guilt. It was guilt—a fight against right.

What is to be my attitude? Yes, I can forgive him, for his pettiness—although it caused grief and heart-aches among God's children—did nothing to harm the church, rather to belittle the soul of the transgressor. It is good that he has changed, but the bile of his unhealthy attitude still galls him and those whom he hurt. This must be expelled through the process of confession and a real desire for forgiveness.

Without confession he has never truly repented. Without full repentance, I cannot give full forgiveness. Therefore, that man is still depriving himself and me of the full portion of God's law and love.

Yes, his words are true but they are only mere echoes of what he could be saying if he obeyed the law in full, and both he and I are deprived of the fullness of God's mercy.

I understand his case and give him my prayers and support for his desire to return, but I also think, have I wounded another thus?

About 100 Years Ago

There was not a public library in the United States.

Almost all furniture was imported from England.

An old copper mine in Connecticut was used as a prison.

There was only one hat factory and it made cocked hats.

Every gentleman wore a queue and powdered his hair.

Crockery plates were objected to because they dulled the knives.

Virginia contained a fifth of the whole population of the country.

A man who jeered at the preacher or criticized a sermon was fined.

Two stagecoaches bore all the travel between New York and Boston.

A day laborer considered himself well paid with two shillings a day.

The whipping post and pillory were still standing in Boston and New York.

Buttons were scarce and expensive, and the trousers were fastened with pegs or lace.

Leather breeches, a checked shirt, a red flannel jacket, and a cocked hat formed the dress of the real artisan.

Beef, pork, salt fish, potatoes, and hominy were the staple diet all the year around.

The Dominion of Man

By J. A. Koehler

Number 29 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

"In the beginning God created . . . the earth." "And God created man . . . and said . . . have dominion"—have dominion over everything upon the face of the earth; have right of possession and use of a place to live and of the means of satisfying human wants; not the right or power to change the course of nature; but the right to exploit the earth so as to sustain and promote life; have a kind of physical-world dominion. So reads the story of creation.

I have stated that the physical universe is the dominion of God. I said that in that universe the will of God is supreme; that the seasons come and go; that everything in nature goes on as the Almighty ordained that it should go on; and that no one can change that course of events in any way or in any degree. I said that the physical world is God's absolute dominion.

But when, as the Bible story reads, God said to man "have dominion" over everything on the face of the whole earth, he said that man, too, is a kind of physical-world ruler; he has an incidental or subordinate dominion; a dominion under God.

What is the nature or essence of man's physical-world dominion? How does it differ from God's dominion? The answer to these questions is to be found through contemplating man. Man has a soul which only he has power to possess. In other words, man has personality. He has a will which is his own. He does not have power to abolish the law of gravitation, nor can he do anything else to change the course of nature.

But man can uproot one tree and plant another. He may eradicate the cockleburs in his cornfield. He can control the actions of pigs so that they will become larger on smaller quantities of grain. And, what is much more to the point, he may regulate his own uses of the hogs he has fattened. He may ordain the manner in which he himself shall use the things of this world. He may decree that all men shall have equal claim on the things which come of the earth for use in satisfying their wants. In other words, man has power to order his own relations to the physical world. He may exercise moral authority in earthly affairs. And that is the nature and essence of man's distinctive physical-world dominion. That is the difference between man's and God's earthly dominion.

As I intimated a moment since, the proof of that truth is man himself—his nature and his history. Man has looked into himself, and he has found there the indisputable testimony that he has a will which is in itself a right of physical-world dominion for moral ends. He has sovereign power to use or not to use "the things of this world in the manner designed of God." The whole history of man is a record of the ways in which he has related himself to God's creations of his own free moral will.

There can be no moral willing where there is nothing for the moral will to act upon. You could not actually will to make bread for hungry people to eat if there were nothing of which to make bread. If there were no earth, no place of abode for man, no anything which gives rise to moral considerations or which calls forth the action of the moral will, there would be no real agency of man. So, when God placed man "in the garden of Eden," in a sense, he "gave" man his agency, as the Scripture says. That is to say, that in putting man in possession of the earth God gave man power to exercise agency. I think that is what the modern prophet meant when he said, "in the garden of Eden 'gave' I unto man his agency."

I said that there could be no moral willing if there were no life situations which did not give rise to moral considerations. If God had created only Adam; if there were no Eve; no anyone whose well-being and happiness would be affected by the things Adam elected to do with "the things of this world"; if there were no questions of rights of other persons, there would still be no agency. In other words, it is not simply possession of the earth that conditions moral willing; it is the presence of other men on earth who also have rights in God's creations and in the products of labor. That means that when God said "have dominion," he meant to have social-world dominion. He meant that man's sovereignty is a social or moral world sovereignty.

That moral or social-world dominion of man is absolute. Not even God can do much about it except to decree the manner in which it should be exercised and to hold man to account for the manner in which he exercises it—unless, indeed, God could exterminate man, so that there would be no free moral will or agency.

That is what I see in the proclamation of the modern prophet, that "all truth is independent . . . to act for itself, as all intelligence also (is independent to act for itself), otherwise there is no existence." No truly "human" existence. As a human being, man would have no existence at all, if he did not have a mind of his own; a moral will of his own; a soul of his own.

So, said the modern prophet, "Behold here is the agency of man," or herein is the essence of man's agency, that he has intelligence, moral will, power to act independently for himself. That is the meaning of agency: that in the conduct of human affairs—which are the affairs of human society—man's own will is supreme. Man is the sovereign power. Man only has dominion.

That, said the prophet, is the way God wants it to be. "It pleased God," said the prophet, "that he hath given these [physical world] things unto man." "For unto this end were they made, to be used [by man] with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion." In other words, it pleased God to set the stage so that man might be really free to make his own moral choices. God so loved man, that he made it possible for him really to become a real man, through the exercise of dominion.

Now these convictions: (1) That man is an absolutely free moral agent, (2) that he must use the things of this world to exercise that agency, (3) that there is a moral order of the universe, or a "right" way in which social world dominion is designed to be exercised, and (4) that man is accountable to God for the conduct of the affairs of human society—these four convictions are the foundation on which rests the social philosophy of the modern prophet.

"The spirit and the body are the soul of man." The social philosophy of the modern prophet is adapted to the quickening of that spirit, not merely to the feeding of that body. Surely you must know through actual experience, you must know positively, that you cannot gladden your heart and enliven your soul unless you give some thought to the care of your body.

All the efforts of man to enrich "human" life—which is the life of the soul—have failed, except when peoples were concerned about social-world relations as certainly as natural world relations. The history of man is proof, positive proof, that "man shall not live by bread alone"; that industry cannot make "human" life abundant, unless peoples have a care about the orderliness, the efficiency, and above all the justice of their governments.

You know the story of "the loaves and fishes," and other stories too, which testify that God's sovereign power in the physical world, on occasion, makes up somewhat, temporarily, for man's impotency. But you know of no evidence whatever, that God ever made human society just. Human society never was made happy and prosperous and peaceful through any sovereignty except the sovereignty of man. Only as man, through the exercise of social-world dominion, has related himself to the physical world aright, only as he has ordered government with judgment and established it with justice, has the prophecy been fulfilled in any degree, that "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting and destruction within thy borders."

I do not know how anyone who believes that "God is love," who knows the causes of warfare and human misery, can believe that social-world dominion belongs to God. I do not know how anyone who believes that whatsoever man sows that also shall he reap, can believe that the social world is not the dominion of man. I do not know how anyone who knows the nature and the experience of man can fail of the conviction that to conduct the business of human living together aright is his responsibility; that in the social world the will of man is sovereign, or that the social world is the dominion of man.

The Greatest Responsibility

By Ramona Grace Seeley

I am only one of the many young mothers in the church today, and as I realize the challenge that motherhood brings, I sometimes tremble at the responsibility that is mine.

In studying psychology or human behavior patterns, we find more and more that a man is what he learned to be as a child. The attitudes and behavior patterns, acquired from babyhood onward, determine how he will act as an adult.

This child that I have brought into the world is my responsibility. The ways in which I teach him now will determine what he will be as a man. What kind of a man will he be?

I hold within my arms either a potential backslider and slacker or a potential builder and worker in God's kingdom, according to the way in which I teach and live my religion. Which is it going to be?

I hold within my hands the power to mold a character strong in faith and in the Spirit of the Lord, diligent in the teachings of Christ—a character full of love and brotherly kindness, of long-suffering and patience—of many other Christlike attributes, or I can fail miserably in my task and raise a weakling in the church—one who would soon stray from the teachings of Christ—one who could not withstand the bright temptations of a sinful world.

I must not fail; for as the man is, so is the home—as the home is, so is the community—as the community is, so is the country—as the country is, so is the world.

What a responsibility we mothers have!

What a service we can render to mankind—to the church—to the world, if we raise up a generation of young adults full of strength and determination to do God's will, having humble hearts and being full of wisdom and love.

To the Manner Born

By FLORENCE W. SIMMONS

THREE COUSINS, each about nine years of age, were having a day together. "No, you first," said the girl with the braids. And Miss Braids took her turn last. Auntie dropped a paper, and before the other two girls had made up their minds who should pick it up, Miss Braids, without flourish, had handed it to her. Later, when the small hostess put her hands into dishpan suds, it was Miss Braids who reached up to the rack and asked as she took it, "Is this the dish towel?"

As the day swiftly passed, another of the girls said, "Here, you first. You've been last all day!" "I really don't mind," Miss Braids pleasantly assured her. But the gentle crowding, the spurts ahead to be first, diminished for the other two cousins.

Another day, Big Sister had carried away the picnic dishes, and it was not till Miss Braids appeared that the other two children resting in the shade seemed to know she had been gone also. "Where were you?" said one. "Inside," Miss Braids replied. "What were you doing?" "Oh, drying dishes," was the casual answer.

Three little girls, each being taught in her home to be considerate of others, was responding in varied measure; but with the one the measure sprang from a heart more nearly won to this highroad of "In honour preferring one another." Grace is gathering about the personality of Miss Braids as one is reminded that inherent with her home teaching she is "to the manner born," the saintly manner. This consideration-for-others manner has its embryo in the major principle of the celestial Law of Love. And since revelation informs us that our project, "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom," a mode of living expressing it is required, the saintly manner of dealing with others. The city of beauty requires for its builders those whose superiority lies in the most perfect expression of this celestial principle so that the hand they put forth to serve creates from the perfection of beauty within.

THE ZIONIC PATTERN for the world, the "ensign," must be an adequate one, made so by a people won to the celestial principle for creating social and economic adequacy. The purveyor is love of God and those whom he has created. The adherence calls for the complete acceptance of the principle as a life-time working basis. It asks for the full measure rather than a partial one.

The beauty of this principle, love, drew the three little girls into a happy unity, entirely free of discord. When this principle is disregarded, instead of beauty there follows its antithesis, distortion.

A returned vacationer was trick-riding her bicycle before a group of playmates whose usual holiday at the seashore had been curtailed that summer. Keeping herself quite aloof, she rode with enormous care before the group who became increasingly engrossed in their play. She was doing what children who have "been away" sometimes do to impress those who have stayed home. Irrked by the lack of response to herself, the little rider tried a bit of pressure. "Why don't some of you go and take care of that baby!" she demanded loftily. The group became wrapped in a sheath of silence. The fussing baby in the playpen was the charge of elders who at the moment were not on the scene. From the security of having been away she commanded imperiously, "Someone go and take care of that baby!"

From the group came the faint, weary voice of a diabetic, the rider's contemporary. As though the whole situation of superiority assumption and its infliction, plus the baby disturbance, were either too trifling or burdensome as an issue, the child quietly, casually resentful, dismissed the matter with: "Well, why don't you go and take care of him then, if you think he needs to be taken care of?" Was her detachment the devitalizing illness or an expedient to parry a blow? At any rate she had not become perturbed. Aware of both logic and unconcern, the rider acted quite like her pre-vacation self at once; the tension lifted, and the group began playing as though another day had dawn.

IN THIS TRIVIAL child-incident we see the beginnings of the conflict with the celestial principle for unity, love. The conflict caused by the effort to manifest superiority by assertion of power over others. And as this effort for mastery over others assumes dominance, we witness the corruption of the normal desire born in every child to be a superior being. In thus gaining domination, he is inflated with a sense of superiority quite false when based on quality of personality. A disintegration of personality occurs for those who seek elevation by force. One reaches out to aggrandize self and the inherent beauty in personality dims. On the part of lawful effort, the man who reaches forth to create beauty for those about him radiates with the power he seeks only to bestow. People rise above the common level of personality on a superiority created out of benefits—for others. Through such selfless motivation to create we come to earnestly search for and know God and assist in the establishment of his kingdom of beauty.

We have forgotten the duelists who sought to prove the best man. But we can never forget the name of the poor young man who muddied his new suit pulling a pig out of a midwest mire, and who later mortally risked his life for "a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

Our manner with others varies to three general levels: the untaught, unobserving level, the ethical, and the Zion or purified. With our project, "Zion the Beautiful," we are crowded by the urgency of the times to the door of decision. Will we take part in the demonstration of such a kingdom's adequacy for creating and holding the confidence of a people disciplined in its Zion manner as the way of life, "In honour preferring one another"? Do we believe in the Zion manner as the way of love, that it bears the harvest of the only lasting abundance? This is a matter that will gradually be settled in the hearts and minds of many people whose desire is for that sort of abundance—an abundance they are hungry for and know not how to create. After becoming certain of our belief, we are willing to help form the pattern, make at least a sales effort to live on the level of the saintly manner that the world may have its guide for living peace and abundance. The world has witnessed this manner of living in but rare instances, and is not convinced that it is practical, either socially or in business. It has been the question of the ages. Only a satisfactory demonstration in daily living to this principle of unity will convince those who seek from out of the world.

However, revelation informs us that this way of life is to be exalted by its own quality as the standard of living not simply for one nation, but that all kingdoms shall become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. The demonstration of the way of love, or the major principle of the celestial law, must be a message of peace written in the very lives of the kingdom builders if it is to be read with conviction. In the light of such a project as Zion the Beautiful, we feel the need for personal reconditioning in the saintly manner so that that which is unlovely and ineffective may be replaced by that which is beautiful and effectual.

Such a decision for participation in preparing this city beautiful requires that we look in on the circle of thoughts, and outward to the manners habituated by us through the years to note if we have become grooved to the restlessness and boredom of self-seeking. And if so, rise to that standard ranking high with the best adventure; the adventure of "in honour preferring one another," or the saintly manner. It is a manner splendid with kindness and understanding of the good in others. When one steps from the lower level to the higher one, however, there is a price to be paid for the better manner, and courage is required to meet the price in full. It is in the nature of growth that we should earn and pay for what we receive, and since this higher level opens to eternal life, nothing that we might pay would be too much. The price is peculiar in its effect upon others, rising from the merely ethical or policy level to peaks of sacrifice for others, of generosity to an enemy, of forgiving and forgetting injury, of a fraternizing mind with those less privileged. There are times when we forget that from the backwoods have sprung many of the giants of the forest, that leaders of civilization have been begotten from the ranks of the lowly in such men as Lincoln, Edison, Einstein, Carver, and the very poor boy who opened a veritable mart where the poorest could buy—Woolworth, a leader in merchandising.

We have a long way to go in the evaluation of personality and its highest potential for building material in "Zion the Beautiful." The price of the saintly manner includes time, attention, and love given to the unfoldment of personality where it often has least encouragement. Looking back to Rome's fall and her majority slave class, we realize that the triumph of the kingdom lies in raising those about its nucleus to a similar appreciative or spiritual level. In describing the components of the saintly manner, Christ was simply depicting man's best procedure for abundant living or the creation of the kingdom beautiful.

Pricing may be tiresome, but it is well for the success of our attempt that we be informed and have an idea of the way ahead on the highroad. There is the charge in possible criticism from those who either do not understand the values of the Zioniac manner or else are not ready to incorporate it into their own way of life. To pay this price in full is to turn with serenity from self-pride to praise of the beauty in others, and to a devotion to all that reverts glory to the Creator of beauty. While the price may seem heavy at times for thus "In honour preferring one another," one's capacity to do so becomes increased. One becomes a deeper spring and the waters more refreshing. Is there anything richer in reward than the ability to create beauty, and to do so in growing skill and excellence? An example is furnished us in God's generous gift of this earth upon which we tenant. With any price we may pay for the Zioniac manner, it can never truthfully be said that we have been robbed since eternal life is the ultimate earning. We are reminded of Paul's explanation of proportion: "He who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house."—Hebrews 3: 3.

All over our country, people who see beauty where it often does not remotely exist for others, are buying up wretched, misshapen, sometimes moldering houses with sagging porches, and almost everything else wrong with them. They build new foundations, open cramped partitions to the sweep of air and sun and emerge finally with abodes singing of activated dreams; and surely, nothing less than dignity meeting a landscaped lawn that used to be ragweed and briar bushes. There is the human parallel here, too obvious to put aside. There is the price of snobbery for the saintly manner, but consider the unfortunate who are lifted up by this manner of living to beauty in their own personality. All of us have had a shock in learning that some gracious woman, who now has two well-behaved children and splendid husband, was one barefoot child out of eight that used to live in a dilapidated house at the edge of town. She came from a family dubbed carelessly, "no-account." Someone with the saintly manner, a teacher, minister, a kindly mother in Israel, had stepped to the Zioniac level and given the child a "lift." Isn't one more than paid for a few criticisms when one can achieve splendor in a life that seemed staked down to mediocrity or worse? And if the lifted one should make greater achievement in the world than he who helped her to rise, is there anything that can surpass love? the love which sent her up and on the highroad.

In hoping to achieve beauty, however, we need to be aware that the Zioniac manner is a quality of character rather than simply a surfacing. There is a halfway place on the upper road for seekers after beauty. It is the niche where one appears beautiful but the warmth of love is absent. Here beauty is more marble than human. Here all of the kindly, generous, loving impulses are tempered to preserve the merciless attitude of appearance. Here people think that to give hospitality to some pitiful persons would harm their social standing, that only beautiful appearing people should come to them. The merely ethical level of manner tends to crystallize to decorative functioning, but at best it falls short of the full measure of the Zioniac. Grace characterizes the Zioniac manner. Yet, I believe it must be lived to be grasped. It is the overflow of inner beauty. Authority renders this meaning: full of kindness; possessing or exhibiting divine grace. There is a worldly tendency to interpret this word in the spirit of poesy rather than from a regard for personality. We are again reminded of the revelation that this is the level of the "honorable men of the earth, who were blinded by the craftiness of men; these are they who receive of his glory but not of his fullness; these are they who receive of the presence of the Son, but not of the fullness of the Father; wherefore they are bodies terrestrial, and not bodies celestial." The ethical is the secondary level of manners because there is the better quality, the Zioniac. These receive the terrestrial reward because they refuse the fullness of the celestial law and its reward.

Why is it so often the case that we rise in our own esteem when we are materially prospered? When our surroundings are superior, why do we feel that we are better people? Is it the sense of achievement? Perhaps circumstance was kind to us. We are indeed on a superior level in the sense that we are better equipped to help others higher. But what is superior to personality regardless of the garb? What sort of people would we consider ourselves if accident robbed us of a right arm and leg, and no one would employ us so that we became lacking in the material things of life and people gradually shunned us as our surroundings became less beautiful? It would give us opportunity to sound our character, find out just how much courage, patience, and understanding we possessed. It would be a vast opportunity to be magnanimous to those who scorned us because we were without the appearance of beauty, disregarding the reason for our plight. We can be grateful for the scourgings of life when through them we find our strength, and rise to beauty of personality. Pride heads the list of the seven deadly sins, and it is permitted to rank without censure on the merely ethical level. An ancient singer mourned: "They speak vanity everyone with his neighbor: with flattering lips and with a double heart, do they speak." James, obviously referring to mere mannerisms, is stern: "Purify your hearts, ye double-minded." Our country is gradually coming to acceptance of the one standard of manners, the ethical. While we have risen from the hollow etiquette era of polite gush and extemporaneous flimflam, too much of it remains in a time when the cry is for the solid verities which are to distinguish the "kingdom of our God and of his Christ." The Zionite manner is distinguished by grace rather than rococo mannerisms. When we kneel to bare the intent of our hearts to God, we realize well that he is not the father of sophistication.

We ask ourselves what Christ meant when he said that he was giving something in a different manner than the world. "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." We know how the world gives. He gave the manner for achieving abundant living, the way of love, the saintly manner. To awaken us to this abundance he said, "Be ye alive!" Envision a community which decided to become not simply daytime awake, but spiritually awake. The differing talents of every person would be enhanced and released in a virtual harvest of creative abundance. Humdrum copying would be left behind in an originality bearing the refinement of the Zionite manner. What if the divine designer had created all of us with the same face so that we were all duplicates of each other in appearance? It is no less shocking than herd talent output. The Zionite manner would cheapen itself if it should resort to string-pulling. The Psalmist guides us from the path of policy to the open Zionite path with his statement: "The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times." Seven times, since it is the symbolism connoting the complete, the whole. Would such words circumvent and flatter?

Christ must have been well known for the saintly manner because he said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples: that ye have love one for another." We have no record that he encouraged his disciples to prove their superiority by condescension. That, indeed, was his criticism of the manner of the Pharisees. His one effort was the preservation in all people of that light which was given to "every man that cometh into the world"—enough light for man to discern between the good manner and the quasi-good. Good taste is described as a sense of fitness. In our quest for beauty, we do well to remember that the milk of human kindness is more restoring to the hungry heart than a Beethoven symphony. Humanity, in all of its ranks, is still first. Love expressed in personality is the highest form of beauty. Good art holds place in the realm of beauty, but it does not rescue a child from the wheels of a train. Those who have love one for another are the disciples of Christ. They are identified by kindness, justice, mercy—the saintly manner.

One of our British missionaries said that if we really believed Christ's teachings we would live them; that if we really believed modern revelation we would become the revelation itself. We are inclined to think that love will only work part way, not as Christ gave it in the first commandment, and the second which he said was like unto it. We therefore accept Christ in portions but not in his fullness of teaching. We hear much about his background of material sparseness in prestigeless Nazareth. But the story of Jesus is that of a person who went about restoring true values and seeking to open the eyes of the people to these values. His distinction lay in his regard for human life and personality rather than in things. His polish was as the clearly defined luster on fine jewels. He was a man of poise and resourcefulness, saving the social standing of the host of a wedding feast in Cana. He was a person of good taste admonishing his followers that one should wait for recognition rather than try to force it, describing the upper and lower chamber tradition. He advised suitable clothes for weddings. He was a man of grace, going out of his way to restore the ruler's daughter, and we have no record that they were old friends. He was a man of hospitality and this with superlative grace. When his disciples suggested sending the self-invited multitude away hungry, Christ was the embodiment of grace. He did not lose poise nor make excuses about the absence of a bakery and a fish market. He permitted his disciples to rise to the occasion with him, enlisting them as waiters. And out of his faith and love, he created food for 5,000 people.

Not in any way approximating such hospitality in its magnitude but with something of the same regard for personality, a hostess rose to the occasion in a humble cottage on Cape Cod. The good church member asked an unexpected guest to sit at table with them to supper, but wondered how she would provide, since there was just enough for one small fish piece for the family. As a blessing was asked upon the food, daughter Lucy was impelled to open her eyes and there above the covered platter was a beautiful hand. When the cover was removed to serve the fish there lay an extra one provided for the caller. This woman's saintly manner was not found wanting when put to the test, and that manner was openly rewarded.

Have you ever marveled at some person who was grace itself, but who, you knew, had lived without privilege or social standing? Trace the heritage of these people and there is always the one surprise: the teachings of Christ are in their background. Such are "to the manner born." They are considerate of others, kind, courteous, and with that radiance of personality we term charm, delicacy of feeling, openness rather than guile of nature. In terms of flowers, these folk bring to mind brook violets that spring up in grace away from the garden. They were always violets, thoroughbred from the first, and are as lovely in the garden as in the leafmold of the meadow. Mrs. Post in her book, Children Are People, says: "When we hear someone described as being 'to the manner born,' we naturally take this phrase as meaning one whose parents and grandparents, and perhaps a few generations before these, were 'gentle' people, whose example, followed by their children, assured their growing up as gentle people, too. There is, however, one aspect of this yesterday world of charm and distinction which we of today are apt to overlook: perfect behavior that is seemingly gentle and charming and simple, was always disciplined behavior. Perfect behavior today is also and must ever be the result of discipline. This, however, may be acquired with little if any conscientious effort by the child whose training begins literally on the day he is born."

The certitudes on good manners of the young man who taught in Galilee ring on through the ages to us. And we hear their echo in Mrs. Post's "True Meaning of Etiquette." As we listen to her in our modern setting of conflict and atomic potentials, the luminescence of his words shows us the mountaintop she tries to describe ethically: "the code of a thoroughbred, whether it be applied to a man or a woman, or to a half-grown child, is the code of instinctive decency, . . . I give unto you to be the salt of the earth . . . ethical integrity, . . . blessed are the pure in heart . . . self-respect and loyalty . . . Except your righteousness exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees . . . Let your light so shine before this world, that they may

"Adventures in Courage"

"No Ivory Towers"

Mrs. Mesley spoke of her great pleasure in meeting the women of the church again after being in the Australasian Mission for several years. "One has to be away to appreciate what it means to get back," she said. She spoke of bringing the love and reverence of the women of Australia—they expect us here to be perfection plus—their faces are steadfastly set toward Zion, and their deep love and well wishes are for the women of Zion.

Why did you come to Conference? It makes a world of difference in answering it. Just for the trip? That has its value—the value of relaxation. Because it gave you an opportunity to get a new outfit? That also has value; there's a moral uplift in having one. Did you come out of curiosity? The value of a fine healthy, wisely-directed curiosity has remade the world. Did you come for practical information, for facts and figures? Knowledge of what the church is doing in this day and age is good. Did you come for fellowship? To see people you haven't seen for years? Fellowship has a distinctive place in our lives. Sometimes we are not in the spirit of friendship and fellowship, and we have need to build up reserves of spiritual grace. Through the months and years, the graces of patience, sympathy, and understanding run low.

We hope you came to revise some of your attitudes, to renew your powers, to drink deeply of spiritual forces.

Mrs. Mesley used the 24th verse of the 31st Psalm as a basis for the week's discussion. "Be of good courage and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord."

We cannot claim courage as a Christian grace—so many people who are not Christians have had courage. Courage is a quality of mind, a quality of heart and spirit in addition to mind. Courage helps people "encounter danger and difficulty with firmness."—Webster.

Be firm in face of danger. Courage has a large element of faith in it. Courage has a large element of self-discipline in it. Courage has strength in it. There are at least two types of courage. Some experiences call for slow patience and endurance, the principle of "going the second mile."

The spirit of adventurous courage used in a righteous cause can do untold things for the building of Zion. Think of Paul's amazing courage in carrying the message of Christ to the Gentiles. Think of the quiet, winsome courage of our Lord. We cannot hope to build the kingdom of God on earth without courage. We must be a courageous people, have the will to do a thing or the will to quietly endure. The lack of the spirit of adventurous courage is holding back the work of the church. The lack of the spirit of adventurous courage is holding back the work of the women. An example of the lack of adventurous courage is that of the rich young ruler who came to Jesus and had everything—everything but courage to follow Him. As Christian women we should not have the attitude of fear—afraid we won't measure up, afraid we can't do the job. You will grow if you only take hold with adventurous courage.

"1947 B. C.—A. D. 1947"

The first mission to England sounds like a chapter from the Acts of the Apostles. We thank God for devoted, brilliant Christian women.

Life is an adventure in courage. It is quite commonplace for all people to think they are living in a period of climaxes. We share the thought that these are critical times. God, himself, said in 1938 that these are portentous times. Undoubtedly we are living in a time of crisis. A crisis is good if we recognize it as such and go in on a high level and come out on a higher level.

As women in the church, we should be alert to the world-wide hunger for Christ. Bishop Blair prayed for courage when his child was born. To give birth to anything demands courage. Marriage takes courage. It takes courage to live according to our convictions. In the East, in the midst of home, there was an "ivory tower," a place of peace and seclusion. No such thing today. The tendency is to retreat to our ivory towers to indulge in daydreams with wishful thinking. Worthy people do not want, nor did Jesus want, an ivory tower. He could have called down ten legions to his help. Neither you nor I can retire to ivory towers and redeem our families. God gave us the desire to help others. To turn our backs on ivory towers takes courage. The command to Joshua was, "Be . . . of a good courage." Israel was not yet welded into a nation. Example from New Testament. Woman ill of disease was despised and ostracized. Jesus' first word to her was, "Daughter, be of good comfort." Jesus walking on the Sea of Galilee said, "Be not afraid." Don't be afraid of the unknown. Paul in prison, lonely and discouraged, "Be of good courage."

The Lord says to us today, "Be of good courage." Wherever you are, live your life with courage. This is a grand age in which to live but not an easy one. The world is full of courage today—think of England during the "blitz." English women are here today. They have spent their money to come here instead of rebuilding. Our missionaries to Tahiti are cultured, highly educated. Sister Sorenson serves and helps the native people. Sister Mesley, tempted to stay with her, said, "God bless you." A girl born without hands or feet learned to play the sliding trombone.

Seeing that we are surrounded by such a "cloud of witnesses," of courage, we should say, "I am determined to dare big things for this work." There is no ivory tower, physically, mentally, or spiritually. Our place is on the front line to demonstrate the gospel of Christ!

"Peter—Paul—You"

The paramount need of every group, nation, and person is for God and to know his purposes. This is the great need of the world today. Our concept of God must not be the concept of yesterday; our conception of God must grow. The Israelites limited Jehovah to the Hebrew God—the New Testament concept was in advance of theirs. Various concepts through the ages were inadequate.

What is our concept? Peter's lesson was hard—to learn that the Gentiles were to know the gospel. Do we have the courage to live that belief?

Marian Anderson was denied the privilege of singing in Constitution Hall in Washington because the pigmentation of her skin happened to be dark. A Christian should carry the map of the world in his heart. "God has made of one blood all nations on the earth."—Paul. "God so loved the world that he gave . . ." There is no room in the heart of God for racial prejudices. Until we rid ourselves of racial prejudices, our concept of God is very limited.

Marian Anderson was born dark through no fault of her own. We are born white through no fault of ours.

"In the beginning God created" the world. In our endeavor to widen and enlarge our concept of God, suppose we think of him as the Creator and trace him through the world through all the ages. Man is the most glorious creation of God, and the greatest testimony of the gospel is its power to transform lives.

"Our Father"—superlative qualities of God at his best. As Christian people, we know that God provides for our needs. "I like to think of God as a God of fellowship."

We must understand the forgiveness of God. Jesus tells us the story of the man who was forgiven his debts and failed to forgive another the debt owed him. Are we not much this way? As a group do we rejoice at any other's happiness? We are not nearly as loving and sympathetic as we should be. God as a father is "human" enough to take pride in workmanship. His forgiveness is always reaching out toward us. One of the sweetest phrases we meet in modern revelation is, "This is my beloved Son."

The Lord, who loves us, disciplines us. You and I know that whom the Lord loves, he chastens. We are full of unsightly bumps and dents that should be smoothed out. We need to stretch our spiritual muscles, strengthen our spiritual backbone, and learn to stand on our own feet.

As Christian women and as Latter Day Saints, it is imperative that we develop a growing understanding of God. It is vital to our growth and vital to the establishment of Zion.

Peter and Paul had much in common, but they were very different. Peter was fishing and the Lord said so simply and quietly, "Come, follow me." Peter was a skillful fisherman, a married man, and here he was asked to leave his fishing and preach for Christ. It must have seemed foolish to some people, this call to Peter. Peter probably felt inadequate to do the job.

The call to Paul was so dramatic! Paul was shaken awake by the shock of his blinding vision. Christ's commission to Paul was given through Ananias. "The God of our fathers has chosen that ye shall know his will." We are called with the same calling, baptized with the same baptism, working for the same kingdom. The mantle of Peter and Paul falls squarely on our shoulders, and so that call comes to us today, awe inspiring, uplifting, and challenging!

What are some of the ways the Lord calls us to follow him in service? "Come, follow me" into the ways of humble service. "Come follow me" into ways of winsome goodness—attractive, approachable goodness. "Come follow me" into the ways of prayer. If our Lord and Redeemer had need to pray—don't you think we have a need to practice it?

Be brave enough to face facts in the presence of God. Intercede for people—pray for our husbands, pray for our children that they may have wisdom and courage to live as they should. Do you pray for your relatives at home and abroad? Do you pray daily for the church officers? For the foreign missionaries, for your enemies? We are told to "Pray for them who despitefully use us." Have we come to that exalted position where we can pray for them—pray that our attitude will change toward them—their attitude change toward us. There can be no peace in your souls until you do.

Latter Day Saints should be the happiest people in the world. (Here the speaker told the story of Stephen, first martyr of the Church—Acts 7—stating that his face was seen as the face of an angel.)

Roman floggings were classed light and heavy. A light flogging was given by a rope knotted at the ends which tore flesh. Rope thongs covered with metal were used in heavy floggings, and broke the bones. Peter was flogged on several occasions and rejoiced that he was counted worthy. Paul had more than 198 lashings in his life, and yet he and Silas sang praises to the Lord.

Jesus said, "Come follow me" into the realm of discipline. Can we day by day give up the things that are dear to us if they stand between us and the Master? We must be brave enough to discipline ourselves for the good of others. Follow him away from littleness and trivialities, but follow him into big and worthy issues. Jesus calls us to a recognition of his Messiahship. What is Jesus to you?

"Our Increasing Purpose"

"I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs."—Tennyson.

Mrs. Mesley stated that she wanted to direct our thoughts toward an adequate understanding of and appreciation for the Restoration Movement. Those born in the church often lose the concept that it is unique, startling, and awe inspiring.

1. The Restoration puts God in the present tense again. Moses was told that he was to tell Israel that the God of their fathers said, "I am his who sent me." The sense of active direction is lost to a marked degree, and we ought to preserve the sense of uniqueness. Attention was called to Doctrine and Covenants 1. We so often seek not to establish his righteousness but walk after the image of our own ways—death. Every man may choose the way of life or the way of death. Seeing this calamity, God provided a way by restoring his church. "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

2. There is nothing trivial about this Restoration. Carry the sense of the greatness and the enthusiasm of the Restoration Movement. Carry the thought of the universality of the message of Christ to all men, for all the world. There is nothing vacillating or apologetic about the Restoration Movement. There is a sense of majesty and dignity in it. "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." Nothing selfish, nothing personal, no personal aggrandizement is expressed there—God's primary desire was to give all.

3. We are to remember that we believe in continuing revelation. We are thereby challenged to mental and spiritual growth. The amount we receive is restricted only by our capacity to receive. The revelations God has given are still challenging us. When mental and spiritual growth is made, more is given. Through the years God leads us steadily upward in understanding and in appreciation of his mind and will, as we fulfill the laws of growth and development. Don't be disappointed if nothing spectacular occurs, but quietly and consistently God leads you forward. Courageous, sweet, tender, and winsome as he is, and small as we are, we increase our capacity as we take and use revelation.

What is the Restoration?

It was so different from what was expected. Jesus came with his message, "He who would be great among you . . ." "The kingdom of God is like a seed . . . a goodly pearl," etc. No one definition is enough; not even combined do they give all. God's definition for the Restoration was, "A great and marvelous work"—something to be accomplished, a vision and an ideal but an achievement and an accomplishment.

If you want to minister to people, you must get down and suffer; no one can lead without pain. Like every work, it fluctuates—a plateau of gathering strength or a low valley.

The Restoration Movement means something is done. Bishop J. A. Koehler says, "It is the genius of the kingdom seeking to win all nations to the ways of peace, prosperity, and happiness." What that could mean to all countries!—China, Russia, England. The genius of prophecy striving to impress its character upon the governments of the world! It is the elect in the process of mobilizing for an outright adventure.

It is a religiously motivated people endeavoring to lead the world out of the greatest crisis of all time. The church has yet to make the supreme contribution of its time. Christianity has not failed, but has failed to "put into practice."

What about the cost of living this Restoration Movement? It's big, it's grand, it's glorious! To establish his church, it cost Jesus, Calvary. To restore his church in these latter days cost Joseph Smith his life.

We are called to build the kingdom!

We are called to this adventure of courage.

We are called to the army of the great who battle through to victory!

"Reaching for the Stars"

Is an ideal home life possible today, 1947? In trying to establish the ideal Zionite home today, we are reaching for the stars. Does it help to have an uplifting place in doing our humdrum jobs? These exalted phrases are helpful. Mrs. Mesley thinks of mending as "angel's work."

The war has left its mark upon our homes—responsibilities that formerly belonged to husbands and sons fell upon the shoulders of women in the home. Families doubled up for the war's duration. Wartime living and shift work made for tension. Moral breakdown particularly in the area of sex life, more money than ever before, and appetites ran rampant. Returned veterans not the same people they were before, wives had lived their own lives, and all these changes caused tension in our homes. The old pattern of family life has been broken and may never return, but there is no reason the new pattern cannot be even more beautiful than the old. The challenge to us at this period of transition is to create and maintain, setting ourselves to the task of making Zionite homes. "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts"—this we must remember. There is only one name under heaven by which man can be saved. Only one name under heaven to help us in the development of desirable attitudes. Attitude is more than knowledge or a collection of facts—it is a turning of heart, mind, and will in a certain direction to accomplish a desired result. This attitude, this turning has always been necessary for people who work for God. The angel said to Daniel, "Daniel, thou didst set thy heart to understanding and chasten thyself before the Lord." We should set our hearts to understanding.

What would you say to a two-year-old who asked you where the Heavenly Mother is? Or how does God stay in the sky? Or where does God keep the wind?

Youth is a perpetual question mark—always something to know. Are we always prepared to answer them? When we come to the older child in our homes, we face even more perplexing questions. Preserve the attitude of intelligent honesty. "Let's face facts together." Not always easy to admit we don't know, but don't feel afraid to say so. If you know how or where to find out, find out together.

When these questions and problems come up, the personal element always enters in as a vital factor. Adolescent children are not always convinced in their minds as to divinity of the Latter Day Saint gospel, they are not yet ready to take the full responsibility of discipleship. We must pledge ourselves to take the family for which we are responsible, and develop each person individually for the purpose of kingdom-building. Use meaningful words in our instruction. Our vocabulary that we used twenty years ago may not be the best language to use—words are often used with totally different meanings. "Homely" in England means lovable and approachable, while we in America think of it as meaning plain or ugly. Do our words mean the same thing to our children that they mean to us? Watch your attitude as well as your vocabulary when you talk to young people. Say with conviction the things that you know. A family is a unique organization because of the varied ages and is enriched by the different age groups. Physical health is much more than the absence of illness. Abounding energy is needed to be equal to the heavy demands of home life in these days. Physical health means more than bodily vigor, it reaches over into our mental area. Work for mental contentment—some women are born worriers. Some of us enjoy worry, but worry is a vicious thing, a poison that saps our mental powers. Be on your guard that you do not let it creep upon you. We can't dodge, but we can control the way we meet problems. We can so build up our mental and spiritual attitudes until they can meet these hard blows—worry, doubts, and fears. Take everything that science can give us to wipe out doubt and fear. Make our mental outlook modern. Discard mental quirks twenty years old. We hate to be seen in a three-year-old outfit, yet we trudge around with mental attitudes that are twenty years old. Discard them. Do not take burdens from our children, but help them to carry them with courage—seek to help them to meet them wisely and well. We owe it to ourselves and families to enjoy our work. Train yourself in developing joy in doing the things which must be done even though we may have distaste for it. How foolish we are that we are not more childlike to take our joy and beauty as we live along. Are you wise enough to forget all grudges? Paul tells us to think upon those things that are beautiful, fine, and of good report. Don't carry old grudges—they sour our area of mental contentment. Contentment has to do with wise forgetting as well as wise remembering.

Forget the ugly, sordid, and sour things.

Saturday, April 12

"This Is the Victory"

The most important factor in any undertaking is the personal element. You set the tone again and again—provide vision, stimulation, and encouragement. Let us think of some pitfalls that face us in building the kingdom. Weddings have a deep remembrance. We feel the hope, ambition, doubts and fears—two young people facing what? Somehow the exalted vision loses its brilliance. It is good for us to go to a wedding to renew our vision and catch back the romance and glamour of our own! We want to be perfectionists—expert cook, laundress, seamstress, tailoress, psychologist, psychiatrist, nurse, and doctor. We all try to be experts in all these lines almost over night.

1. Don't attempt too much! "Don't run faster than thy strength will allow," the Lord said to Joseph Smith. You can't achieve all the technique at once. "Here a little and there a little."

2. Beware of discouragement. It's a mean thing, it never strikes us when we are on top of the world; it waits until we are ill, tired, feeling low, or bereaved, then this arch enemy gives the final slap! Insidiously in ways that are trivial, discouragement comes upon us. What part can you hope to accomplish? Too small to amount to anything. In Emerson's story, "The Mountain and the Squirrel," they had a quarrel. "If I cannot carry forests on my back, neither can you crack a nut!" Discouragement means cutting asunder. It makes you feel small and insignificant, unable to do the job. Who cares? Who cares whether you do excellent work or not? Don't let yourself be ousted by discouragement! Don't let it put you off your stroke by the thought that it doesn't matter how you do your work. Mrs. Mesley told the story of two young men who were carving a spray of leaves requiring skill and patience. It would be in a high place and one said, "Why bother? No one will know whether you do it well or not." The other

replied, "God and I will know." There is some satisfaction and self-respect in doing your best. God can't do for your family what your family needs without your help. God can't do for this church what he is longing to do without your help. God can't do for your women's department what he wants to do without your help. Don't let discouragement keep you from doing the things you know you ought to do.

Things Mrs. Mesley does when she is feeling "low."

1. Sings (joyful noise) hymns of sweet and strong affirmation. "His Saints Are Lovely in His Sight" (she longed to be beautiful and so she thinks of being lovely in "His sight"), "Father, in Thy Mysterious Presence Kneeling," "Peace, Perfect Peace." Nothing matters as long as God reigns in our hearts! Hymn No. 261 she found particularly helpful to her in the trying times during the war when she was far away in Australia. Try singing the songs of Zion, and sing peace and strength and comfort into your heart.

2. How many times have you repeated familiar passages of Scripture when you were discouraged? "The Lord is my shepherd."

3. Most people pray when they are discouraged. But do you sometimes reach the place where you feel your prayers are going no higher than your head? Pray harder than ever, that is the time you need to most. There is a saving grace in prayer.

Remember you chose to be a homemaker. Be a good sport, quit complaining. Remind yourself that you chose the job. Say, "this is my blessing, not my doom." Ask yourself if you would change places with anyone else. Enjoy it, don't let it get you down no matter how hard the going may be.

Don't allow yourself to be stuffy! Cultivate a wind-swept soul. Air our souls with the reviving Spirit of the Lord. Wash away our doubts and fears, pettiness and smallness and narrow vision.

Don't be unmindful of the rewards that come from being submissive. Power comes to us through submission. A dynamic sentence: "Thy will be done." My way is the way of ignorance, arrogance, of selfishness, quick temper. Jesus said, "Thy will be done, not mine."

I exchange my quick temper for his patience.

I exchange my covetousness for his altruism.

I exchange my arrogance for his wonderful humility, and power flows into my soul. Moses was happy and contented in the land of Media, and God asked him to exchange his will for God's will—the way of danger, hardship, and misunderstanding. But with courage in both hands, Moses went down to Egypt, and tremendous power flowed into his life for the help of the Israelites. At Pentecost, the power of God flowed through the heart and mind and soul of Peter and 3,000 responded.

Don't be afraid of the rewards of submission.

Because we are conscious of our responsibilities, remember the Lord said, "Practice holiness and virtue before me continuously."

Our challenge to continue in steadfastness and faith and "let nothing separate you from each other and from the work whereunto you have been called. And I will be with you by my spirit and my presence and my power to the end."

General Women's Department Announcement

We are pleased to announce that the play, "HENCEFORTH-FRIENDS" written by Mrs. S. A. Burgess and Miss Evaline Burgess, which was presented to the Women's class at the last General Conference is now mimeographed and ready to be sent out on order. Price is 15c per copy. Address your order to the General Women's Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Mo. The theme of the play is Friendly Visiting and has three scenes and eight characters. It is entertaining as well as instructive.

A New Pamphlet

At the request of the General Department of Women, a new pamphlet "Leadership in Women's Department" has been written by Mrs. T. W. Bath, Pittsburg, Kansas and is now for sale. The price is 25c per copy. Address your order to the General Women's Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

"This pamphlet has been developed because of the need expressed by those who have been selected as leaders of the women's department groups and have felt themselves unqualified for their responsibility. This pamphlet is offered as a primer to the inexperienced leader and as an inspirational aid to all leaders endeavoring to push forward."

I saw God wash the world last night,
Ah, would he had washed me
As clean of all my dust and dirt
As that old white birch tree.

—William Leroy Stidger.

see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven. . . . Decency means not merely propriety of speech and conduct but honesty and trustworthiness in every obligation. Integrity includes not only honesty but a delicacy of motive and of fairness in judging the motives of others But I say unto you, love your enemies. . . . Self-respect, among many other things, means refusal to accept obligations that one is unwilling to return. This word "unwilling" is of utmost importance, since we can imagine no more contemptible person than one who takes all he can get and gives as little as he can Give to him that asketh of thee; and from him who would borrow of thee, turn not thou away. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; And ye shall be the children of the HIGHEST: For he is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil! Loyalty means faithfulness not only to friends but to principles. . . . Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake what one is, is of far greater importance than what one appears to be" Thou shalt not be as the hypocrites. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples that ye have love one for another.

Do we believe in the effectiveness for personality of this manner of living prescribed by Christ? Do we believe it will create a pattern of harmony and grace in social as well as business life for an ensign for the world? If so, let us demonstrate this saintly manner, and then the seekers after beauty will be able to say: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." Come, let us create this beauty.

A Prayer to Remember

She knelt beside her little bed

To say her evening prayer,
"Our Father," she began, then looked At me and said,

"Mother, I know that prayer so well,
I'll say another one,
I'll tell him all about myself,
The things that I have done."

My eyes then slowly filled with tears.
She bowed her little head.
These words I'll treasure in my heart—
The prayer my baby said.

Worship Suggestions for July

By Minerva Yerrington

thrown aside."—Cadman's Parables of Jesus.
Prelude: "O Galilee, Sweet Galilee," Zion's Praises, No. 46.

Call to Worship:

"And now as he walked by the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."
—Mark 1: 16, 17.

Introductory Thought:

From our overview today of the great diversity of creeds with a mere semblance of righteousness of the kingdom therein, we can appreciate the fact that in Christ's day the creeds "from which every vestige of virtue seemed to have vanished away" may have satisfied the schools of learning of that day—the scribes and the Pharisees—but Jesus knew that his gospel, his plan of salvation, must be for all mankind. As in the parable of the sower, so in the story of the drag-net, the diversity of material which makes up the kingdom is made a bit of profound wisdom.

Hymns: "Just As I Am," Saints' Hymnal, No. 297; "Blessed Are the Souls," Saints' Hymnal, No. 87.

Prayer

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Matthew 13: 48-52 (Inspired Version preferred).

Theme Talk:

The vividness, yet simplicity of the picture of this parable is a piece of art in itself. The Sea of Galilee. The fishing boats dotting its blue surface. The strain of the fishermen as they drag the seine up to the boat. The great catch of fish of all kinds. The sorting when finally pulled to shore, according to their profitableness to the fishermen. And Jesus said, "So is the kingdom of heaven." As with the dragnet, so there are bound to be all kinds of queer fish in the Master's net. There is no selectivity of material for the kingdom. "All are called." This was the unusual democracy of Christ's message—the whole human race was included in his redeeming love. As in the parable of the feast, the invitation goes out to all. There is no discrimination, no scrutiny of credentials. But the day of reckoning comes later, and then their conduct is under scrutiny. There comes the sifting time when it is made quite evident that "all are called, but few are chosen."

This fact is self-evident, there is bound to be good and evil in the church—the kingdom of God. No one has a right to point the finger of scorn, crying "Hypocrite," or even to judge those who would be "the children of God." It remains for the Great Judge to decide that which is unprofitable and to the profitable to say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matthew 25: 34.

Then, there will be that certain triumph—perfection—in the kingdom of heaven.

Poem:

Fisher of mortal men,
Even of those that are being saved,
Ever the holy fish,
From the wild ocean
Of the world's sea of sin
By thy sweet life thou enticest away.

Fisher of men, the blest,
Out of the world's unrest,
Out of sin's troubled sea,
Taking us, Lord, to Thee;
Out of the waves of strife,
With bait of blissful life,
With choicest fish good store,
Drawing Thy nets to shore.

Theme for the Month: PARABLES OF JESUS

JULY 6, 1947

Theme: A PARABLE OF THE KINGDOM—
THE SOWER

Prelude: Instrumental Music.

Call to Worship:

"And it came to pass when Jesus had ended these sayings with his disciples, the people were astonished at his doctrine: For he taught them as one having authority from God, and not as having authority from the scribes."—Matthew 7: 36, 37, Inspired Version.

Introductory Thoughts:

We accept Jesus as the "Great Teacher." We also recognize that he delighted to teach in parables—gems of truth and of wisdom. Jesus is the Light of the World, and it has been observed that "nowhere does his light shine with more luster than through the prismatic rays of these sayings."

The parables of Jesus have been classified in a number of ways, but according to S. Parkes Cadman in The Parables of Jesus, they easily fall into three groups: Parables of the Kingdom, Parables Showing the Grace of God, and Parables of Moral Instruction and Warning.

In the parables of the kingdom, Jesus used the two settings that were most intimately a part of the lives of his people—the soil and the sea. In the story of the sower, the theme of the morning, the Master Teacher reveals his appreciation for God's good earth and God's care for his every creation.

Theme Talk:

Early in his ministry, Jesus made it clear that his chief concern was for the kingdom of God.

"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God; And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1: 13, 14.

In the work of the sower, the Great Teacher found a likeness to his own mission, for he had seed to be sown, the word of God. And the soil it would find encompassed every condition of the human heart, from the hard and stony with prejudice and hate to the fertile and responsive with loyalty and obedience. Like the creative seed of the farmer, his words of "spirit and life" had the dynamic force to create this new world which he proclaimed, the kingdom of God, conditioned, however, by the nature of the soil which received it. Classed as the wayside soil are those who are lacking in understanding and so are limited in their evaluation of life. The rocky soil may be those entirely superficial in nature, never below the surface in thinking and living. And those of the thorny soil are so much encumbered with the cares and conflicts of the world that their powers are dissipated. Even those of the good soil are admonished that there are degrees of fruitfulness—some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold. The challenge is for our best.

Challenge:

O Christ who holds the open gate,
O Christ who drives the furrow straight,
O Christ, the plough, O Christ, the laughter
Of holy white birds flying after;
Lo, all my heart's field red and torn,
And Thou wilt bring the young green corn,
The young green corn divinely springing,
And when the field is fresh and fair,
Thy blessed feet shall glitter there,
And we shall walk the weeded field,
And tell the golden harvest's yield.
—John Masefield in The Everlasting Mercy.

Poem:

Scattering precious seed by the wayside,
Scattering precious seed by the hillside,
Scattering precious seed o'er the field, wide,
Scattering precious seed by the way.

Scattering precious seed, doubting never,
Scattering precious seed, trusting ever,
Sowing the word with pray'r and endeavor,
Trusting the Lord for growth and for yield.

Games of Wisdom:

Who soweth good seed shall surely reap,
The year grows rich as it groweth old;
And life's latest sand are its sands of gold!
—Julia C. R. Dorr.

Men must reap the things they sow,
Force from force must ever flow,
Or worse; But 'tis a bitter woe
That love or reason cannot change.

Theme: A PARABLE OF THE KINGDOM
—THE DRAG-NET

Pictures: "The Drag-net," N. C. Wyeth.

"Miraculous Draught of Fishes," Raphael (or Vogel).

Picture Appreciation:

The western shore of the Sea of Galilee was Palestine's fishing ground, the source of one of their chief foods. The variety of fish in this sea is unusual, since there are above 40 species and of these 20 are said to be edible. Also, "the thickness of the shoals of fish in the Lake of Genesaret is almost incredible to anyone who has not witnessed them. They often cover an acre or more than an acre; and when the fish move slowly forward in a mass, . . . they are packed so closely together that it appears as if a heavy rain was beating down on the surface of the water."—Tristram.

"Few sights are more exciting than the pulling of the dragnet. The floats on its shallows begin to bob, the cords attached to each end of the net tighten, the waters boil as the seething masses of entangled fish leap and struggle, the eager spectators crowd around until the haul is completed; after which the edible fish are put into vessels and the worthless ones are

Theme: PARABLE OF THE GRACE OF GOD—THE LOST SHEEP

Prelude: "The Lord Is My Shepherd" (Preferably the melody of Thomas Koschat).

Call to Worship:

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold,
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold;
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.
—Clephane.

Introductory Thought:

The parable for the thought of the morning has a peculiarly universal appeal. Without doubt or exception at some time in life's experience, all have felt lost, whether it be a physical, mental, social, or spiritual emergency. And to each of us has come the joy and soul-satisfaction of being found again by the grace of God, by the soul-searching spirit of the Good Shepherd. We can sing sincerely and joyously the words of the poet:

Hymn: "The King of Love My Shepherd Is," Saints' Hymnal, No. 288.

Preparation for Prayer: The 23rd Psalm, in unison, or

The Lord is my Shepherd, no want shall I know,
I feed in green pastures, safe folded I rest;
He leadeth my soul where the still waters flow, Restores me when wandering, Redeems when oppressed.

Through the valley of shadow of death though
I stray,
Since thou art my guardian no evil I fear;
Thy rod shall defend me, thy staff be my stay;
No harm can befall with my Comforter near.

In the midst of affliction my table be spread;
With blessings unmeasured my cup runneth o'er;
With perfume and oil thou anointest my head;
Oh, what shall I ask of thy providence more?

Let goodness and mercy, my bountiful God,
Still follow my steps till I meet thee above;
I seek by the path which my forefathers trod,
Through the land of their sojourn, thy Kingdom of love.

—James Montgomery.

Prayer Thought: (which may be included in the prayer)
Directed of thee, O God, may we ever be inclined to choose the green pastures that our usefulness may not be dissipated or lost to thee, but when we inadvertently or willfully go astray, feel after us, draw us, and rescue us that our mended lives may be rededicated to thee.

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Luke 15: 1-7.

Picture Appreciation: "The Lost Sheep," by Alfred Soord.

Alfred Soord has given one of the most vivid and satisfying presentations of modern art in his interpretation of the parable of the lost sheep. His is not the "Good Shepherd" who leads beside the still waters, but rather the real shepherd of the Palestinian hills, rugged with virile and versatile strength to meet the vicissitudes of a rough country. His sheep is unmistakably lost and an easy prey for anyone of his several enemies—the night, the storm, hunger, the precipice, the eagle. His Christ is the One who eagerly left his Father in heaven to seek and to save, although it cost him great discomfort and even peril of life.

Special Music: "The Ninety and Nine," Elizabeth C. Clephane.

"Dear to the Heart of the Shepherd," Zion's Praises, No. 88.

Theme Talk:

The parable of the lost sheep has been a favorite of poet, artist, musician, and philosopher. It lends itself so easily to their picturesque and pathetic embellishments. Its appeal is as piquant today as it was to the multitudes who sat at his feet and listened to Jesus make his appeal to the lost sheep of the House of Israel. There was no mistaking the Good Shepherd's concern for the soul's welfare of every single individual: "There cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman; but Christ is all, and in all."—Colossians 3: 11. The artificial social barriers prevalent in his day were as detestable in his sight as they are today, a continued, pestiferous hindrance to our modern democracy and fraternity. We are still "lost sheep" in our wandering attempts to understand the great brotherhood of him who so earnestly expressed "his passion for the inward and outward freedom of every human personality."

"The parable also admonishes us concerning the fatal proclivity to wander." It is understandable that we do not with deliberation seek to be lost. It comes upon us all unawares, starting innocently enough from a little adventurousness of spirit, too much self-confidence, a slight deviation to this side or that, missing a designated trail-mark, or seeing a shortcut to catch up with those who have gone steadily onward. Then, suddenly we find ourselves, as the Lost Sheep, "clinging helplessly and hopelessly to nothing." But, not hopelessly, for the Word assures that the Good Shepherd "seeks those who are lost in the bleak wilderness of a blighted life far more eagerly than they seek him," because he loves them.

Poem:

SHEPHERD OF TENDER YOUTH

Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth,
Through devious ways;
We come thy name to sing,
Hither our children bring
To sound thy praise.

Thou art our Holy Lord,
The all-subduing Word,
Healer of Strife;
Thou didst thyself abase,
That from sin's deep disgrace
Thou mightest save our race,
And give us life.

Ever be thou our guide,
Our shepherd and our pride,
Our staff and song;
Jesus, thou Christ of God,
By thy perennial word,
Lead us where thou hast trod,
Making our faith strong.

So now, and till we die,
Sound we thy praises high,
And joyful sing;
Let all the holy throng,
Who to thy church belong,
Unite and swell the song,
To Christ, our King.

Theme: PARABLE OF THE GRACE OF GOD—THE UNFORGIVING DEBTOR

Prelude

Call to Worship:

"And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. . . . For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."—Matthew 6: 12, 14, 15.

Introductory Thought:

"Infinite love and unlimited forgiveness are most certainly twin graces of God. Identical twins, because of their inter-dependence, for we cannot conceive of one without the other. Both are essential qualifications for children of God.

Hymn: "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing," Saints' Hymnal, No. 4.

Prayer: The Lord's Prayer, in unison, or

Prayer Thought:

Lord, make me strong, to work, to live,
Lord, teach my heart all others to forgive,
As in Thy Name forgiven I may be;
Lord, make me strong to live and love but Thee.

Lord, make me strong to live and love but Thee.
Lord, hear my plea I do implore,
Teach me thy will to do for evermore;
Hide thou my bitter tears when things go wrong,
Guide and protect me, Lord, and make me strong;
Be this my prayer of life: "Lord, make me strong."

—Words, Daniel Twohig.
—Music, Vernon Eville.

Scripture: The Parable. Matthew 18: 23-34

Special Music:

"The Stranger of Galilee," Morris
"The Lord's Prayer," Music by Malotte
"Lord, Make Me Strong," Twohig and Eville

Theme Talk:

A story is told that once Robert G. Ingersoll, reaffirming his disbelief in an all-wise and all-loving Heavenly Father, pulled his watch from his pocket and declared he would give God three minutes to strike him dead. Nothing happened, but a venerable minister of the gospel was heard to soliloquize, "Did the little man think that he could exhaust the patience of the eternal God in three minutes?"

It is significant that the parable of the unforgiving debtor follows a discussion among the disciples which gave the Master some concern that the authority which was to be increasingly theirs should be ever tempered with the right spirit, the spirit of brotherhood, of conciliation, of forgiveness, and of mutual forbearance. Peter, desiring to be helpful, suggested that to forgive seven times might be sufficient, but Jesus said it should be seventy times seven, if need be. In other words, "when could a loving heart refuse to forgive?"

In the parable that follows, the willingness of the King to cancel the debt of his servant and release him and his family from enslavement exemplifies the great heart of our Heavenly Master and his readiness to forgive anything—his grace and his goodness.

Then, even while rejoicing in his own freedom with words of gratitude fresh on his lips, the forgiven man turns on a fellow-servant who owes him and, without mercy, casts him into prison for a trifling debt. This vividly portrays the weakness of humanity. How often we are forgiven, but not forgiving! Jesus was well aware that no law of the kingdom was more difficult for man to obey. Readiness to forgive becomes one of the essential characteristics of the children of God. In fact, our own forgiveness is dependent upon it. "If ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses" (Mark 11: 26). The obligation of a canceled debt is a serious thing. Jesus said, "I forgave thee all that debt . . . shouldst not thou also . . ." And so, giving forgiveness for forgiveness, service for service, joy for joy, light for light, love for love, we go on toward perfection.

Gems of Wisdom:

Good nature and good sense must ever join,
To err is human, to forgive divine.

—Pope.

The more we know the better we forgive,
Who'er feels deeply, feels for all who live.

—Madame de Staël.

Thou whom avenging powers pass by,
Cancel my debt (too great to pay)
Before the sad Accounting Day.

—Wentworth Dillon.

Meanest creatures,
Who love God, God accepts while loving so.

LETTERS

A Conversion

I am thankful to receive the Herald each week and be able to read the news of our people in all parts of the world. I enjoy reading the letters, too, especially those from members I have met.

I was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 17, 1898, at Simms, Texas. I first heard of the Restored Gospel at the Gum Springs school in which Elders John Kent and Sam Reed were conducting a series of missionary services. Prejudice ran high, and there were always tormenters in the crowd. Several times mobs formed and fired guns in an attempt to scare the ministers out of town. Protected by the power of God, Brother Kent would deliver his sermon, pass through the crowd unnoticed, and be at home before his persecutors knew that he had left.

Although I knew the church was unpopular and my friends would disown me, I asked for baptism. My mother and father also joined. Today, I am still convinced this is the true church of God. I want to live so that all who know me will recognize me as a follower of Christ, for I have been greatly blessed and owe my best to the Master.

Comforted in Hour of Sorrow

Last week I read Sister Clyde Moore's letter of how she was helped by a vision. I received a similar blessing several years ago when our six children were ill with influenza. Jack, our oldest son, was very ill and the doctor, upon seeing him, said that he should be taken to the hospital immediately. That evening, after caring for the other children all day, I lay on the bed too worried to sleep. Finally, a peaceful feeling came over me, and I slept soundly for several hours until I was awakened by one of the children. After waiting on him, I returned to bed and again went to sleep. It was then that I saw, in vision, a river, misty and gray, and a tall figure standing in a row boat. Looking more closely, I saw another person sitting in the boat, holding a child in his arms. Suddenly, I awoke and looked at the clock; it was a few minutes past two. I began weeping because I knew that my son had died.

At nine o'clock, the word came. My husband had asked that I not be disturbed before morning. Although I was grieved, I thanked God for having blessed me with the physical rest I needed before the shock came, and for having prepared me for it by sending the vision.

Report on Wilburton Mission

Although our group is small, I should like to tell something of our work. We have leased the church formerly used by the Methodists, and have approximately twenty-five regular attendants. Elder Clarence Owen is our leader. On May 11, Linda Lou, infant daughter of Floyd and Maxine Coen, was blessed following the Mother's Day program. At the last Communion service, the Spirit of God was present and we were given divine counsel and encouragement.

I am the mother of seven sons, four of whom were in service during the war. I also have seven grandchildren. I am soon to undergo an operation and ask the prayers of the Saints that my health will be restored so that I can resume my duties.

I shall be glad to hear from any of the Saints who care to write.

Sixty-Seventh Wedding Anniversary

A celebration was held in honor of the sixty-seventh wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Wright on the evening of February 26, at the American Legion Hall in St. Francois, Missouri. The party was arranged by the members of St. Ironton Mission of which J. N. Hopkins is pastor.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright were married in Forsythe, North Carolina, in 1880; four years later they moved to Missouri where they have lived ever since. Both were born in 1857. They have seven living children, twenty-six grandchildren, and forty great-grandchildren.

Realization

Morning is fresh life—
Like a clear and joyous song,
It rises in a crescent swell
Above the reach of wrong.

Noontime is great faith—
Like a mighty, burning sword,
It guards the living souls of men
Where wondrous things are stored.

Evening is deep trust—
Like a river, strong and swift,
It knows its purpose, finds its goal;
Our Lord's eternal gift.

Lamoni Stake

Oland Congregation

Pastor, Roy Kopp

One evening each week the members of Oland congregation meet at the church with their lawnmowers. After the church yard has been mowed, they have a picnic supper and social hour.

On Sunday, May 11, at the close of church school, a tribute to mothers was read by Ruth Hoffman. Roy Kopp and Ray Blair sang a duet. Harold Tabor was the 11 o'clock speaker.

At the May 18 worship service, Melve Haskings talked on the Aaronic priesthood and Mrs. A. L. Keen sang a solo. William Shakespeare gave the morning sermon. Mildred and Ray Blair sang at the worship service the following Sunday.

Newcomers to the group are Mr. and Mrs. Roy Beaty and family formerly of Colorado. —Vera Blair, reporter.

Southern Michigan District

The third annual women's institute of Southern Michigan District was held at Lansing on Sunday, May 18. The opening activity was a fellowship service conducted by members of the district presidency. Mrs. T. Carlson, district music director, led the singing. Theme song of the institute was, "We Would Be Building."

Mrs. C. Mottashed, leader, recognized the services of past leaders, Louise Evans, Mrs. E. Blett, Mrs. A. Dexter, and Mrs. Harry Simons; each was presented a corsage. Members of the district council of women were then introduced and given their badges.

Following lunch served by the Lansing group, Mrs. J. E. Lancaster reviewed The Herdsman and Mrs. H. Simons talked on the ideal Zionite home. An unusual benediction, "Women at the Well," was portrayed by the Grand Rapids group.

The final meeting was a Communion service held at the Lansing Church under the direction of the district presidency.

—Anna May Nesbitt, reporter.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

Pastor, Walter H. Lewis

Bishop and Mrs. D. O. Chesworth stopped at Bloomsburg on their way to General Conference. An all-day meeting was held at the church, with the women serving lunch at noon. On May 11, Bishop Chesworth returned to give an account of conference activities.

The children were in charge of the church school hour on Easter Sunday morning. Robert, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Vanhorn, and the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kisner were blessed during the Communion service. The drama, "The Way of Life," was presented at 7:30 in the evening under the direction of Mrs. Harold Fritz.

The women have discontinued their activities for the summer. They sponsored a mother-daughter banquet on May 8 and gave a play, "Our Heritage of Faith," on the evening of May 11. During the winter, they conducted penny suppers, an all-year birthday party, radio party, paper party, and other social activities. They also sold memorandum pads, birthday calendars, and prepared a church directory.

They are now making articles for the bazaar at Deer Park Reunion. In their study periods, they have been reading the Doctrine and Covenants.

The church school has grown under the leadership of John Shaffer. A contest is being held, the prize of which is a trip to Hill Cumorah.

A new furnace has been installed in the church.

San Jose, California

Pastor, Elbert Guilbert

Seventy George Njeim recently conducted a series of missionary services at the church. Seven new members were baptized at the close of this series; they are Bertha Mae Chandler, Rosinda Maupin, Myrna Gail Allard, Eugene Allard, Elmer Gilbert, Eugene Robinson, and Eugene Chandler. Pastor Elbert Guilbert and Elder Lloyd Cline officiated. Brother Njeim also gave the Mother's Day sermon on May 11.

John Gamet, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Giles of Stanford University, was blessed in San Jose church on Sunday, May 4.

—Mrs. Bill Hays, reporter.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

A worship service centered around Sallman's "Head of Christ" was presented on Easter morning; music for the service was provided by the junior choir. In the evening, the Zion's League gave a pageant, "The Risen Lord," with anthems by the choir and a sermon by Frank Ward.

The League also sponsored an evening of entertainment recently which featured two moving pictures. Miss Lyle Fewster, a graduate in scientific temperance teaching, gave a demonstration, after which refreshments were served in the lower auditorium by the young people. The collection taken was applied to the radio fund.

Three children, Barbara Phillips, Thomas Gore, and Gary McCamon, were blessed on Mother's Day. Elder J. A. Jordan of Prince Albert was the evening speaker. Following the sermon, Vivian and Dan Laverty presented a tableau, while Alex Mackie sang "My Mother's Prayer."

—Charlotte Diggle, reporter.

Miami, Florida

Pastor, Harold L. Kelley

Evangelist Ray Whiting conducted a series of services the week of January 19 to 25. He also gave a number of patriarchal blessings during his stay in Miami.

On February 2, Mrs. Helen Brown and Jerry Tankersley were baptized by Seventy N. L. Booker. They were confirmed the same day by Elders R. J. Hawkins and H. P. Kelley.

The women meet the first Thursday of each month. Mrs. Francis Booker and Mrs. Lester Tankersley have been elected friendly visitors for the next three months.

On March 22, Elder H. P. Kelley resigned as pastor because of ill health. Harold L. Kelley was elected to succeed him. Edward Fisher, former League leader, who also resigned, has been replaced by Lawrence Bates.

—Mrs. Lester Tankersley, reporter.

Dow City, Iowa

Pastor, Elvin Baughman

Rebecca Annette, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Smith, was blessed by Elders Elvin Baughman and Paul Argotsinger on May 25.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Gorham were given a shower in the lower auditorium of the church on April 29. Later, members of the Zion's League sponsored a house-warming at their home near Dunlap.

E. R. Butterworth of Ainsworth, Iowa, has been chosen by the board of education to be superintendent of schools for the current year. The Butterworths are former members of the Dow City congregation.

A commemorative service was held on May 18 in observance of the 116th anniversary of the restoration of the Aaronic priesthood. Brief talks were given by four of the priesthood members.

A new oil furnace was installed in the church last winter. Recent fund-raising projects have been a public supper, which netted $77, and the serving of the high school alumni banquet on May 16, which cleared $135.

Alma Baughman and Dale Argotsinger are in charge of junior church.

Bryce Argotsinger has received his discharge from the Army and is again making his home in Dow City. Lyman Gress is stationed with the Army of Occupation in Italy.

Can You Afford It?

By IONE SARTWELL

MUCH HAS BEEN said and written about how we can use our time and our talents to best serve the purpose of the kingdom. But if anyone dares to suggest how we could use our money for the same cause, we raise our chin a trifle, and over one slightly-twisted shoulder, reply coldly, "That's my business."

This is not an article about tithing, so don't turn the page. I am speaking of that other nine tenths.

The counsel to spend wisely does not necessarily mean to save. The wisest spender of money may not have a penny in the bank, but he may have a home instead of an eviction notice, a diploma instead of an unemployment check, a handful of receipts instead of a handful of bills. Save, yes, but be careful what you put on your "can't afford" list.

There is no set rule for the spending of money, for this varies with circumstances and desires. You know families who always have a luxurious car, although the children squint for lack of glasses, or do all their chewing on one side of their mouths because their teeth need fixing. On the other hand, there are some who could afford a car and thereby get to church on time and maybe take their less fortunate neighbors, too, but they would rather fry their potatoes in butter, indulge in cokes and malted milks, avoid all basement-floor shopping, and go on complaining about the taxi service.

One reason why people fail to afford something worth-while is that they can't see the finished product.

Laboratories of Abundant Living

By Foch Worthington

Out of the laboratories of science have come great discoveries. One of the most amazing of these is that little things can prove to be tremendously powerful. Today, we are well aware of the awful qualities of the atom, which, in itself, is inconceivably small.

It is fortunate that God instilled in man the initiative to search for truth. The same curiosity which led Edison to discover electricity, and Louis Pasteur, the processes of pasteurization and inoculation, has inspired other men to search out the social and psychiatric laws underlying human relations. Still, we have a long way to go, and there are many little things we yet must recognize if we are to make any real progress toward building the perfect society.

There is a reason back of every action. Frequently, we are not aware of these hidden forces which make us act either wisely or unwisely. Unfortunately, they are not discernible with a microscope; they must be discovered through the intricate process of life study. Christ gave us the fundamental principles by which to live, but he didn't reveal all. It is our business to find out for ourselves the undiscovered facts controlling human nature.

We are not evil, although various schools of thought would brand man as such. God created in us the ability to become divine creatures. We do not achieve this goal merely by being born, for life is not a hocus-pocus affair. It is a bundle of potentialities which must be molded into the perfect pattern.

At birth, we are mere physical beings and have no realization of selfhood. This is not belittling God's highest creation, because within us is the hope of all that he meant us to be. We must be born socially as well as physically. This acquisition of personality is the result of social interaction. Each person is the composite of all other persons with whom he has been or is associated. Finally, we must be born spiritually. This comes through accepting God's way of life. Only when we have realized these three "births" can we fulfill the true purpose of our creation.

No man is too insignificant to attain this level of existence. It is for all who are willing to work for it. Each day the steppingstones to the perfect life and social order are more clearly defined, and each day God waits for us to follow them.

Our possibilities are unlimited. The power within us to do good is greater than the atom's power to destroy. The least we can do is to devote as much attention to the development of mankind as we devote to the development of implements of war. It is up to us to take the initiative. Until we give our energy, our talents, and our money to the cause, God's hands are tied.

We can see the bird in the hand, but sometimes it takes a little faith and a little patience to see the two in the bush. The children may have their glasses, their dental attention, their warm clothing, their vitamin-rich food, etc., but how do we know Johnny has any musical talent? We can't afford the price of a piano and piano lessons because he may not "take to it" at all. So Johnny grows up, not only without the ability to play the piano, but also without appreciation for good music. Then who's to blame if he prefers jukebox music in the corner drugstore to the beautiful anthems of the church choir?

Sometimes we put too much stress on the value-received angle. I once heard a person complain of the price of a book before he had even read it. Since when do we judge the value of a book by the number of pages, the size of the print, or the magnificence of the cover? A four-color, full-page advertisement is a big expense to the advertiser, but would you trade it for a page of wisdom and light in just plain black-and-white?

Does our fellow man share in our money, too? Or does he have to be content with sharing a little of our time when he's sick in the hospital, or with sharing some of our talent when he attends that program in which we're participating? One time a local organization sponsored a show, the proceeds of which were to go to a well-known relief society. It was just an ordinary movie that usually costs $.43 in the local theater, but this time it cost $2.20. To some, this was an outrageous extravagance. Why, who would pay five times the usual price for this particular show? They forgot that the other $1.77 was going where it would help to relieve misery and suffering, so they saved their $1.77 and spent it where they themselves would profit therefrom.

It is the love of money that is the root of all evil. Money itself can be the root of as much good as it is of evil. Let's just be careful where we plant it.

Why Draw the Line?

By JOSEPH R. PIEDIMONTE

Upon my return from service a little more than a year ago, I was happy to find that a youth conference was being planned in my home branch. I had missed the three previous conferences while on foreign duty. I joined the pace set by the planning committee and began extending invitations to everyone with whom I came in contact. I was disappointed to learn, however, that members in their late twenties or older were not attending. They had not attended the past few years, because the youth of the branch had set an age limit that excluded these people. It wasn't that there were inadequate facilities necessitating limited attendance, it was just that they were too old—they were over twenty-six.

The line had been drawn between the young and the "old people"; we were old enough to walk alone. At the end of the conference, we found that we had walked alone, but we had stumbled. We traveled, but we went nowhere. Looking back over our efforts, we agreed that we had cut off the source of our inspiration. I wondered, then, how the "old people" felt.

I have found that I am dependent upon my elders for most of my learning and inspiration. All children identify themselves as adults when they play. Frequently, they pattern their lives after some hero or heroine, with the hope that they may be the same kind of person when they grow up. Actually, no one ever really "grows up." He is always looking to somebody for inspiration, direction, and guidance. As surely as a person loses the ability to draw inspiration from others, whether they be older or younger, he himself becomes old in attitude and thinking. He draws his own line.

I was thinking of this a few weeks ago at fellowship when one of the students rose to speak. She had not frequently participated in the services, but she had had an experience that she felt she should share with us. She told of having attended a prayer and testimony service at the Old Folks' Home. Here she heard elderly people tell of their many years of working in the church and of their hopes for the future.

At the close of fellowship, I asked her more about her visit, and she told me of an eighty-three year old brother who had been a member of the church for seventy years. She said he had testified that he knew the church would go on to its goal and that the kingdom would be built. His assurance was born of his confidence in the youth of the church.

Had she drawn herself to one side of the line, this girl would never have experienced the inspiration of associating with these older people. She had gained insight into the peace that comes from years of service to God. She had given them something, too. "You should have seen their faces brighten when a young person spoke," she said as we walked away.

Here is an example of the mutual inspiration that can come of the association of people of all ages in a service. These folk were old, but only in years. For them age was a measurement of time, not spirit.

Someone has defined youth as the mental dominance of courage over timidity, the zest for adventure over love of ease. There is no line to separate youth from age. An unknown writer has said, "Fortunate are we mortals in discovering that each individual has a fountain of youth within himself—that to keep it ever flowing, he need only be confident of the future and strong in the courage of his convictions."

DEATHS

McMAHON.—John Wesley, was born in Lindsay, Ontario, in 1886, and died April 8, 1947, in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. He leaves his wife, Pearl, and four small children: Dennis, Claire, Lynda, and Jordan.

VOTAW.—Mabel M., was born June 20, 1873, in Great Village, Nova Scotia, and died at her home in Sacramento, California, on May 12, 1947. She had been a resident of the United States for fifty-five years and had made her home in California for the past fifty years. She was married to Albert Votaw on September 7, 1915, and helped him in his work as pastor of Fresno Branch for a number of years. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since February 25, 1894.

Brother Votaw preceded her in death a year ago.

She is survived by a son, Lawrence MacDonald, who is president of Northern California District; two daughters: Mrs. Edna Burdick and Mrs. Clorah Roberts of Sacramento; three sisters: Mrs. Zilla Walsh of Massachusetts; Mrs. Marion Stevens of Nova Scotia; and Gladys McLaughlin of Los Angeles, California; a brother, Merton McLaughlin, also of Los Angeles; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Citizens' Mortuary in Sacramento, John W. Rushton and John B. Carmichael officiating. Interment was in the family lot in Mountain View Cemetery, Fresno.

JONES.—Thomas, was born in Nantyglo, Wales, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Roy LeVan, in Berwick, Pennsylvania, at the age of seventy years. He came to Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1922 after serving as a missionary for the Reorganized Church in Wales and England for twelve years.

He leaves his wife, Mary; two daughters: Mrs. George Hancock of England, and Mrs. Roy LeVan of Berwick; one son, Isaac of Franklin, Maine; five sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, Lindhurst, New Jersey; Mrs. Sara Bards, Blaina, England; Mrs. Alice Clugston, Bloomsburg; Mrs. Thomas Thomas and Mrs. George Vaughn of Nanticoke, Pennsylvania; three brothers: Alfred, Scranton, Pennsylvania; Elwyn, Fort Wayne, Indiana; and George, Nantyglo; and seven grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the church at Bloomsburg with Pastor W. H. Lewis and Elder H. A. Cunningham in charge. Interment was in Creveling Cemetery.

BISHOP.—Lily Agnes, was born August 25, 1881, at Llanelley, Carmarthenshire, Wales, and died at the Sanitarium in Independence, Missouri, on April 23, 1947. She was married to James E. Bishop on May 19, 1907, at Cladyfodwg, Wales. In 1909, they came to the United States and made their home in Steubenville, Ohio, where they remained for thirty years. Subsequently, they lived in California, Missouri, Ohio, and Nauvoo, Illinois.

Surviving are her husband, two brothers, and one sister. Funeral services were held at Speaks Chapel in Independence on May 25, President John Garver officiating, assisted by Elder L. F. P. Curry. Burial was at Steubenville.

McKAY.—George Austin, was born at Walkerton, Ontario, on February 1, 1874, and died at Toronto, Ontario, on May 17, 1947. On January 1, 1907, he was married to Lulu Embrey, who preceded him in death on January 25, 1944. Mr. McKay was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1918 and was a faithful member until his death.

He is survived by two sons: Harold and Easton; one daughter, Catherine; a brother, John; and four grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Toronto with Elders John Sheehy and James Wilson officiating. Interment was at Napanee, Ontario.

MOORE.—Karl Churchill, was born May 7, 1923, at Rushville, Illinois, and died April 21, 1947, at Beardstown, Illinois, of polio. He served two years in the armed forces, one year of which he spent in the European theater. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Beardstown on November 5, 1944.

He is survived by his wife and two small sons. Funeral services were conducted by Elder E. E. Thomas at the church in Beardstown.

Thank You, God!

P. S.

 Ronnie

It wasn't love at first sight when I met Ronnie. But by the time I took the third look at him, I was far gone. Down on the floor, we soon established an "entente cordiale" and after a half hour with his toys and books we were in an alliance of perpetual friendship. Next day, while I was at a meeting, he came to his mother and said, "Couldn't Brother L. stay with us a while?" "No, dear," she replied, "he has to go back to Independence to his work." A long pause for a thought. Then, "But couldn't he be my uncle, or something?" That, my friends, is a precious memory of how I became an Adopted Uncle.

Ronnie was five last year when this photo was taken. The picture rests on the mantel of the fireplace at his home, where he lives with his parents, Brother and Sister Arthur Henson, of Taylorville, Illinois. Brother Henson is District President. Sister Henson is the organization and personnel that makes it possible to run a business, do church work, entertain visiting ministers, and a lot of other duties. Ronnie is Chairman of the Hospitality Committee, Director of Entertainment, Demonstrator of Toys, Explainer of Puzzles, Investigator of Mysteries, to give a few of his duties.

So, you have fallen in love with Ronnie, too? I thought you would!

 Nauvoo

Brother R. H. Atkinson is pastor of our Nauvoo, Illinois, congregation. Many visitors converge upon this crossroads of church history. One little group did something very lovely and different.

Sister Atkinson writes: "When Brother Atkinson went to the church on Saturday to prepare the Communion for the following day, he found the enclosed note, which touched him deeply. . . ."

And the note read: "We five Gracelanders visited your beautiful little church, Saturday, May 24, and had an experience we shan't forget. In Nauvoo we visited the historic and sentimental sights. We stopped here in passing, and finding the church open, held our little service. We sang some hymns and then all prayed. We thank you for the opportunity." It was signed by Lillian Henderson, Washington, D. C.; Danny Waite, Vancouver, B. C.; Vern Webb, Inglewood, California; Roberta Carr, Elkton, Maryland; and Doris F. Miller, Montrose, Iowa. An article by Sister Miller appeared in our "New Horizons" department for May 10.

Life means more to people who do things like that.

 How to Be Happy

A very few experiences in life lift you to the heights of ecstasy and delight. It isn't necessary for you to do anything about them. A very few plunge you into the depths of despondency or sorrow. There isn't much you can do about them. But the majority of life's experiences are in-between. You can let them get you down or make them build you up. You can be happy in spite of them, or sad because of them, or vice versa. It all depends on you. Do you want a happy life? You can make it with your mind!

* The roots of the mightiest trees are not laid, complete in size, like a water pipe. They begin small, gradually pushing out and enlarging themselves, growing stronger, reaching sources of nourishment for the tree farther and farther away. Our cultural development takes place in much the same way. Culture cannot be installed all at once, ready and complete; it is to be absorbed a little at a time, assimilated, and used, as all the while the channels of our development are enlarged and extended.

THANK YOU, God, for giving me a tiny soul over which I shall be guardian. I know she isn't really mine; for she was made in heaven. . . . I know You sent her to me. . . . Sometimes when she is sleeping, and I gaze upon her lovely little face, I feel your breath upon me; and when she awakes, she lifts her bright baby eyes to mine and smiles, I feel that heaven has smiled, too. Hers is the laughter of perfect love and trust; hers the embodiment of earth-forgotten purity; hers, the wonderment of new discoveries each day. And as she grows, I humbly vow that she shall know the fullness of your love which brought her to me—that she shall walk in godliness and virtue all her life because of her love for You, that she may one day receive from your hands this marvelous gift of your creation; that she may herself experience the unforgettable wonder of motherhood.

"Blest Be the Tie"

WEDNESDAY evening. In many an Independence home, groups of church people were gathering for the prayer meetings. It has been going on for years, and will probably continue for years to come, giving comfort, spiritual strength, and neighborliness to many. If you have moved here and find you have not made contacts or friends, go to prayer meeting and take part—you will soon have friends.

As our small group gathered into one of the homes, we felt exceptionally fortunate: two of our visiting British members, Bishop A. T. Trapp and Brother James Barrington, were present. Their splendid contributions to the meeting cheered and encouraged us all. Certainly they gave us something to remember, and under the good spirit that was present, our local people responded actively. One could feel bonds of fraternity between Britain and America rapidly growing and strengthening. It was an experience not soon to be forgotten.

IN THE MIDDLE of the meeting, it was remembered that there were also some German members in the group, and so far the remarks had contained no special comfort for them. Here was a situation that could have been rather one-sided, and it seemed something should be done about it. A brief comment on the wide international character of our "Missions Abroad" movement, and an invitation brought one of the German sisters to her feet, to bear a humble and beautiful testimony, and tell about some of the conditions among her people in the "Old Country."

This account of suffering and need was one that truly touched all hearts sympathetically, and Brother Barrington arose to offer a special prayer for the German Saints and their families.

Here we were in a situation with people who had suffered on both sides in the war. In a meeting of another kind, tensions could easily have developed. But the people were wise, and the spirit of Christian love was strong, so that the meeting was immediately expanded from an atmosphere of British-American amity to include "the whole, wide world" and all its people. In this mood nearly all members present participated in one way or another. There was a fine blessing, an outpouring of spiritual power.

The love of Christ is great enough to bring all people, of all nations, together in harmony and peace.

How grateful one felt for the words of the song:

*Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.*

THE GREAT TIE is the Law of Love—the love of God, and the love of his people. Truly it is a blessed tie. It is a tie that can bind all the various factions and dissident parties of the world together, and help them to forget their differences. It is a balm that can heal all wounds, comfort all sorrows, give fellowship to the lonely, faith to the bereaved.

Have you ever doubted and wondered if the gospel can work? It worked for this group. Have you ever felt that the ideals of Zion are beautiful but impractical? They were beautiful, but not impractical in this situation.

Experiences like this are foundation stones. One can stand upon them and not be shaken. He can say, "This much I witnessed. This I know. Now I am sure."

The mind becomes radiant with light. The heart sings "Blest be the tie Blest be the tie that binds" And one can see the beginning realization of the promise when "perfect love and friendship reign, through all eternity."

THERE ARE many ties that bind us together. But they all begin with Christian love.

There is the religious tie: the belief in restored revelation, in the Book of Mormon, the restoration of the gifts and blessings of the New Testament church, the works and powers of Jesus.

There is the friendship tie: people we have grown up with, those we have met, some with whom we have shared in church work and sacrifices of many kinds.

There is the economic tie: the hope of a Zion which will give our people control over the conditions of their own life. It will be hard to achieve, but world conditions make it increasingly important, increasingly imperative.

There is the social tie: the hope of a growing Christian community life, in which we can have improved conditions, a better situation for our children to grow, to be educated, to find employment, to marry, and to make their homes.

There is the cultural tie: the love of good music, good literature, clean entertainment, innocent fun for youth, decent leisure occupations for the older ones. Education for people of all ages motivated by the purpose of making all life richer, happier, more beautiful.

All these ties go together to make one, in the church. One is very grateful for them. "Blest be the tie Blest be the tie that binds Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love!"

Across the Desk

Sometime ago Elder Thomas Newton, of Independence, eighty-seven years of age, and a retired General Conference appointee, was the victim of an automobile accident. It happens that Brother Newton had written to Elder John W. Rushton shortly before this sad event, and the kindness of Brother Rushton permits us to quote the following from this last letter of Brother Newton's:

Do you know, my dear Brother, I think a lot of you. You were the one to start me out on my missionary career and the dear Lord has surely blessed me in my work, and I do love and adore him with all my heart, soul, and strength. It does me so much good in reading in the Herald the California news. I invariably find your name. Dear Brother John you are making a good record, and God is blessing you in your work. I pray for you that your effort may be crowned with abundant success.

My message to the Saints is that we should cultivate the acquaintance of our dear Heavenly Father, that we should get into the habit of talking to him, do nothing without consulting him. In so doing he will enter into our life and greatly enrich it. We should in all our ways acknowledge him, and he will direct our path. I find that this pays. His kindness to me is wonderful.

Elder Blair McClain, in charge of our work in Detroit, is an enthusiastic missionary, and in this work he is receiving some able assistance from Elder Warren Chelline. In a report to the Apostles in the field, Brother McClain says:

We advised you in a previous report that we were conducting a missionary series at the River Rouge congregation. Immediately following this series we did not receive any request for baptism and wondered just how successful the series might have been. Just this last week, however, we have received requests for baptism from five individuals who are attending River Rouge. Three of these are adults and two are children. Also, Brother Gleazer, the day we saw you off on the train, we left the station to make a missionary call, and we were successful in finding a person who was ready for baptism and she also submitted her name.

Warren (Chelline) just concluded a missionary series at Roseville which was very successful, and this is to be followed by a series at Mound Road which is to start Sunday morning and continue through next Friday evening. We hope to use this as a follow-through on the Roseville series and also to climax some visiting which has taken place at the Mound Road congregation. We have several good prospects in mind. You never know how to count on the number of baptisms exactly, but we will have approximately ten or twelve for the 30th of March.

Sister Pauline Arnson, leader of the women, wrote us, on April 23, about their Conference activities:

The classwork for the women was outstanding. Sister Blanche Mesley did a wonderful job and was able to tell her classes what they should do in such a kindly way that I am sure they will remember her counsel and try to put it into effect. . . .

Greetings were sent us by Sister Arrow-smith from the women of England and I presented these along with the greetings from the German sisters which came by letter through the young soldier, Julian Latell. On Saturday, April 12, which by the way happened to be the 54th birthday anniversary of the women's work in the Reorganization, I presented a motion which was unanimously carried by rising vote that we send love and greetings to the women in the British Isles Mission, to the German sisters, those in Australia, New Zealand, and in the Islands of the sea, and to Sister Emma McConley.

The city-wide organization of women in Independence did a very fine job in making the preparations for the big reception which was held Monday evening at the Memorial Building. It went off nicely and all those who attended enjoyed the social period. . . .

I believe the women of the church have gone back to their branches with a deeper desire to give service than ever before, and I am sure that they, along with us, appreciate your fine and humble yet efficient leadership.

Elder Edward R. Carter, Lansing, Michigan:

We enjoyed the Conference very much and returned home safely but quite tired and will take a few days to get rested up. I want to congratulate you on your presiding ability, your kindness to the old timers and your give-and-take policy in the chair. I heard many kind remarks among the people in your behalf, and I am sure that all left the Conference with a good uplifting feeling and satisfaction that our church is growing and going forward. I have a personal feeling that the years 1947 and '48 will be two outstanding years for our church.

Sister Lula F. Parks, Dinuba, California:

I had hoped to report the conversion of two young Mormon elders, but they are not willing to listen to anything not published by their church. . . . I was surprised how these Mormon elders stand up for polygamy; yet they say they hope it will never be practiced again.

Evidently polygamy does not satisfy them as having been regular or orthodox.

On April 14, 1946, at conference, a brother ordered at the booth, and paid for a projector. The carbon paper had slipped, and we failed to obtain the brother's name and address. To date he has not claimed the projector. If he sees this please write me.

God Walks With Me

BY HARRIETT C. MUIR

God takes my hand and walks with me,
He clears my path so I may see
The beauty, grandeur, peace divine,
Of all the things that can be mine
If I but walk with God each mile
And do my duties with a smile.

God is my strength all through the days
But I must listen to what he says,
With arms of love, he encircles us
If in only him we put our trust.
With my hand in God's I go forth and on,
To keep my feet on higher ground.

A sermon delivered Sunday, March 16, at Stone Church, Independence

By E. J. Gleazer
Of the Quorum of Twelve

"Thy Faith Hath Made Thee Whole"

And, behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment:

For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole.

But Jesus turned him about, and when he saw her, he said, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.

—Matthew 9: 20-22.

A NUMBER OF experiences of healing like the one we have just read have been preserved or recorded that we might be able to learn a lesson which could be applied also in a spiritual way. In itself, this healing was not so important that it had to be placed in the written word. No doubt there were many people who were assisted by Jesus Christ that were never mentioned in the written record. But this one is important for the lesson it contains. Of course we are concerned for the welfare of the physical body, but we have a greater concern for that which pertains to the spirit. So let us examine this experience in order that we might emphasize one or two points in connection with the same, and then we would like to make an application.

Note the fact that this good woman not only was diseased for twelve years, but that she had also spent her living trying to obtain relief. Consequently, at this point she was indeed desperate, and in her desperation she reached forth and touched the hem of his garment, and received the result mentioned—she was made whole. There was no other course open for her—all earthly help had failed—she had gone just as far as she could. It was fortunate indeed that Jesus Christ was available; and she was to be commended that she had faith sufficient to come in contact with the source of all light.

I like to make this application now to our church, the church that we have every reason to accept as the church of the living God. If you do not believe that you need to be converted. I believe with all my heart that this church came forth by the power of God, and that it has continued to this day by that same power. But we must also admit that inasmuch as you and I are permitted to hold membership in the church, it is not only a divine institution, but it is also human. It is a partnership—God with us. In order for this organization to accomplish the purpose that brought it into being, we, too, are in need of a power greater than that which is within us.

I will not affirm today that the church is sick in the sense in which this woman was, but I think you will agree with me that in many respects we are limited. Our limitations are such that there should be a growing concern upon the part of each and everyone of us if we really are a part of this body. Frankly, if we are satisfied with the progress that we have made during the past one hundred seventeen years, in the light of the mission that has been assigned to us, we have neither discerned the purposes of God in the creation of this institution nor do we sense the need of our fellow men for that which the church has to offer. We may have spent a considerable portion of our living in seeking aid, but have we returned to the source of the power that made possible this organization and was also responsible for our conversion? For I am convinced that everyone of us that is really converted to this church was born of the Spirit.

I DOUBT THAT there has ever been an age in which man has had more need for a power greater than himself. Of course in every dispensation of time man has sensed the need of a power outside himself. He has designated that power by various names, but I am told that even among a people who are classed as heathen, they do sense this need for a supernatural power; and sensing that need, they bow down to altars of wood and stone. But life among such a people was indeed simple, to say the least. Life among us today is anything but simple; it is complex as never before. We are more dependent one upon the other than at any other period of history, and by virtue of this growing inter-dependency upon our fellow men, in order to live, we are becoming more and more concerned as to whether or not we shall be permitted to tarry on the face of the earth. All you need to do is to read your current magazines, the editorials in your daily newspapers, to know something of the threat that hangs over all mankind.

I have been amazed that people not of our faith seem to be more concerned in what is happening to this world than we are. Surely, by virtue of the Scriptures as contained in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and that which has been revealed to us in latter-day revelation, this people that I represent should be more concerned in what is happening in the world than any other people. We are living in the age of the fulfillment of prophecy. We also should realize more than any other people that man cannot save himself. That is the testimony of leading authorities today; that has been the testimony of the prophets; and those of us who profess to believe in the prophets should be glad that their message has been supplemented by the best brains of our age.

THAT DOES NOT present a very pleasant picture, and I don't want to present a pleasant picture; for unless we are aware of the great danger that surrounds us everywhere, we are not going to be concerned in the welfare of our fellow men, neither in the purposes of God concerning mankind. It is altogether possible that as members of the church we have lost something of the distinctiveness of this latter-day work, and while we might be aware of the dangers that are threatening our fellow men, we may be looking elsewhere for deliverance or help.

I trust I shall not be considered narrow minded if I voice the sentiment that little help can be expected outside the church of the living God. Honorable men and women everywhere are making an attempt to do something for their fellow men. We respect their efforts, but if the words of the prophets are true—if history can be relied upon, regardless of the good intentions of all these good people, little help can be expected outside of the church of the living God.

Then we might ask ourselves the question: Of what assistance is the church today in offering the warning voice and proclaiming against the iniquities of our time that are destroying man from the face of the earth? What has the church to offer today as a means of escape?

ONE OF OUR GREAT educators has just recently completed a trip around the world. An issue of Life magazine contained an article about it. This gentleman visited the religious capitals of the world; he did not confine his travels merely to Palestine or Jerusalem or to Rome, but availed himself of the opportunity of visiting all of the great religious bodies where they have their headquarters and analyzing that which they have to offer. He did not, according to this article, visit Independence. I wish he had. I wish we could have had more to offer him.

You may not consider it good news, but sometimes it takes bad news to stimulate a people to accomplish what can be called good news. Independence, whether we want to admit it or not, is a religious capital. Independence today is associated with President Truman, and I know many of you people are getting satisfaction from that thought. But Independence is also a religious capital; and had this scholar, this educator, visited Independence, I wonder if he could have discovered something here that he has not discovered elsewhere.

He reveals this startling fact — that while men everywhere are turning to religion, they are not turning to the churches. I am not going to discuss the reasons with you; I think you know the reason.

What an opportunity is before this church, with men and women everywhere among all nations, recognizing their need of God, not finding that need in the modern churches or any church. Ancient churches, ancient faiths will not suffice. Yet these people nevertheless are searching after God for they have reached the conclusion that they are without help, that they are not sufficient within themselves to meet the need of this hour. I again repeat, what an opportunity such a situation brings to this church!

However, we have a problem, and that problem is simply this—that while we can explain the works of God in these last days, or in this last dispensation, and successfully maintain that this church came forth at the time and in the manner in which the prophets predicted, that this church possesses the faith (and I refer now to the Articles of Faith), the organization, and the doctrine, such as the church of Christ possessed in another dispensation of time—we have not yet demonstrated the relationship of the church to the need of man, confronted as he is by this, the greatest crisis of all time.

This same scholar and others are calling our attention to the fact that this world cannot go on divided, communism on one side, free enterprise or so-called democracy on the other. When I use the term "so-called democracy," I am not reflecting on the democratic system. I am simply saying in the language of Mrs. Roosevelt, who has used that term recently herself, that we have not yet achieved a democracy. As a democracy we are almost in the same situation as Latter Day Saints. In a democracy we have a theory, but the theory has not yet been translated into terms of human conduct. That is why I referred to a "so-called" democracy.

THE BROADCAST OF OUR President last week emphasized that same thought—that the world cannot exist in a divided state—communistic and democratic. Those of us who protest communism argue that we must have free enterprise, but the only way that free enterprise can succeed—first of all, the only way free enterprise can be given an opportunity to succeed—is by bringing to pass such a regeneration on the part of mankind that he will permit his fellows to live without being in bondage in any sense to their fellow men. The only way free enterprise can continue to exist if it shall be established (and it certainly has not been established as yet; we don't have free enterprise; don't let anyone tell you we have)—the only way it could successfully continue is to have men and women so converted to the cause of Jesus Christ that they will conduct themselves so that the interest of each and every person therein shall be preserved. What is going to bring this to pass? The free enterprise that so many people talk about is nothing more nor less than that which took place when Enoch and his people attained to perfection. The definition of Zion itself reveals this state. "The Lord called his people Zion because they were of one heart, they were of one mind, and they dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." Such a people would enjoy free enterprise, unity of the affections, unity of the intellect, with one accord living in right relationships. When we live righteously we are in right relationships to God, (and that is where we must begin this matter of adjustment) we are in right relationships to our fellow men, in right relationships to substance, to material possessions. Such a people could not have any poor among them.

BUT WHAT IS going to bring such a people into existence? We don't have such a people in our own church today. Oh, we do have some individuals scattered throughout this church who have demonstrated in their own lives that the gospel is in deed and in truth the power of God unto salvation. I have met a sufficient number of such men and women in my travels during the past thirty-one years, and I know that where this gospel is applied, it works. But these people of whom I speak have yet to be brought together into such community where there is a sufficient number to give a social demonstration, and what our world needs today is a social demonstration of this way of life. I have already suggested, and I now affirm that suggestion that the only means of producing such a people and therefore producing such a way of life is through the gospel of Jesus Christ and through the church wherein you and I hold membership.

We have not as yet manifested that way of life to the extent that either men or nations are led to inquire after our way. The ensign of right-living has yet to be raised, that people in distress might be attracted thereto. I think there have been periods in our church when we have underestimated what must transpire before we as a people can become the people of God indeed.

A few years ago with enthusiasm and zeal and, thank God, with faith, I talked to Bishop McGuire in his office. I was a young missionary, and he had the patience to listen to me. I said, "Why don't we establish Zion?" We then had a membership of thirty or forty thousand. He listened to me patiently. We should listen to young men patiently today, too. Young men have ideas, though they may not be practicable. He said, "Brother Gleazer, evidently you do not understand human nature." I didn't like that answer at that time. I have long since understood he was right. I didn't understand human nature or myself. My concept of Zion in that day was certainly more limited than today. I, therefore, thought it would be easy. I had heard many people testify and say they were willing to die for this church. I actually believed them. I heard people say they were willing to give all they had to the church, and I believed that, too. The bishops have a different story. It is difficult for a bishop, or bishop's agent, or branch treasurer to enjoy a prayer meeting. They hear some of us say we are willing to die for the church, willing to do something for it, and they know it has been a long time since we paid God the tithe we owe him. So I think I am reaching the place where I, too, can admit I haven't understood human nature. This human nature must be changed. I think it was C. Ed. Miller who used to claim there wasn't anything wrong with human nature, it was just perverted. If perverted, it must be changed. The only power I know of to change our perverted natures is revealed in and through the power of Jesus Christ. I don't think we have gone far enough with this gospel. As an institution we have been in business 117 years or thereabouts. How many people have we converted during that time? How many people have we converted during the year just past?

Brother Jensen and I had a little thrill because we increased—or we possibly helped increase the number of baptisms in the Great Lakes Mission over 10 per cent over the previous year, but don't ask me to tell you what the previous year was like.

SERIOUSLY, IF WE were to make out a balance sheet as people make them out in business, we would have every reason to be concerned, for our balance sheet would show beyond a shadow of a doubt that we are not adding to the faith those who should be saved. We can say this is because we have so few missionaries, but that answer will not suffice, for these few missionaries, if they could have touched the hem of His garment more in the past would have been much more effective than they have been. If no one else wants to admit that, I will admit it. I know it is possible for me to accomplish much more than I have done, and with God's help I want to do that.

But what of our members? Many of the converts baptized into this church have come into contact with the gospel as a result of the testimony concerning this work as it fell from the lips of neighbors and friends. I myself am only one. I was not converted as a result of any sermon I heard in this church. Thank God some humble people took time out from their daily work to tell me the story of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. These people had faith in this work, and their faith did something to me. Even with our 130,000 members, if we really believed that the power to save the work is manifest through the gospel of Jesus Christ and, believing it, would never rest until we shared that gospel with every honest hearted soul we met, you would be surprised at the number baptized into the church annually.

That same thing applies to our social and economic program. It is not an easy program. Men and women have to learn to live all over again, just as after being ill and being confined to bed, some of us have had to learn to walk again. Some of us have developed habits of life that have to be changed. It will require more of the power of God to bring about this change than we have had heretofore. No one will dare argue there is no need for a social demonstration of the power of God. This is the greatest need this world has. Such a demonstration of the power of God in community life would open doors for our missionaries that are now closed, and would attract the attention of governments who have never heard of this latter-day evangel. For wherever you have magistrates and rulers they are concerned in the future welfare of their people; or at least if they are not concerned, there are in every land and every clime individuals who are concerned in the preservation of the peace and the manifestation of good will toward all mankind.

IF WE GO THROUGH our Conference content with a few personnel changes, or many of them, as the case may be, singing a few songs, praying a few prayers, putting on a few plays or pageants; if we are going to sit with a crowd in the Auditorium and thrill a few people who have come from small branches and have never before seen so many Latter Day Saints, if we go into such activities, and such only, then we have met in vain.

I would to God, as we approach our tasks that we should do so in consideration of a world civilization that is helpless unless God is given opportunity to function; with the knowledge that this is the church of God, that he brought it out of the wilderness and out of obscurity and made possible all the preparations necessary to demonstrate his power in the lives of men individually and socially. It seems that alone we lack the power to make this effective but the divine source is still available. We must not be satisfied unless we can receive the same power that came to the woman who had this issue of blood for twelve years.

I am not so concerned for the moment in our limited numbers, for with our 130,000 or more members, if we could receive more of this power, there is a sufficient number of men and women in this fellowship that their way of life could be expressed, and nations seeing that expression would be led to "inquire after their way."

I have already told you God is in this work. You know that as well as I do. We have been too easily satisfied to get along in our own strength. We may have trusted in the arm of flesh, we may have had to see every step before we would take it.

The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is still there just as our brother read it. You go home and read about what faith accomplished in the lives of men who had it. That same God still lives, and our need is even greater than the need of the men we read of. Shall we have to see every step of the way before we take a step?—What are we waiting for?

I read the other day of a certain person who invited a prominent man to go to church. He went. He was invited the second time to go to church. Before he went the second time he said, "I am not going to go unless you can assure me the speaker will so stimulate me that I will want to go out and do the impossible." This is what this church was designed of God Almighty to bring about. This people must not approach our task as the people of the world approach their task. Where would we have been today if that had been the attitude of Joseph Smith and the early missionaries? This people must be so stimulated that they will dare to do the impossible. The impossible becomes the possible when we move forward in the power of Israel's God.

The day of opportunity is at hand. This people must occupy where God intended them to occupy. This people must bring to this world what no other people can bring, what God intended them to bring. But this is not the hour of compromise. It is not the hour to depend on the flesh. The hour is here when sensing the world's desperation we move forward as God has outlined, when we trust him for the accomplishment of his work.

May God help us, therefore, today to manifest the same faith as this woman in my text, and who knows, it may be said of us as an institution by even God himself, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

Little self-denials, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over favorite temptations—these are the select threads of gold which, when woven together, gleam out so brightly in the pattern that God approves.—Canon Farrar.

Why a Philosophy of Education Now?

This article is a part of a symposium sponsored by Graceland College on the subject: "Educational Philosophy and Planning." It has been made available for our use, and we publish it in the hope that it will promote a more thorough understanding of the educational problems which confront the church and its people, particularly as they affect our young students. It is also a step toward the realization of our hopes in the field of adult education.—Editors.

WITH MANY people, "philosophy" is a bad word. It implies a deep and un-understandable nebulous, something or other which is the exclusive possession of sages and seers.

It is my contention that every human person and every organization of human persons embraces a philosophy, even though they may not be aware of it.

Practically speaking, a philosophy is that pattern or organization of principles accepted by a person or an organization of persons as a basis for formulating purposes, judging values, directing and integrating behavior, and evaluating results.

Whether a person will cheat or be honest, harm or help, thwart or cooperate in any particular instance, depends to a large degree upon the philosophies involved. It was his philosophy which has made Jesus the great character and the great power of all time.

If Graceland has a philosophy, why all the fuss about one now? In the first place, philosophies are evolved by people. They are not ready made entities showered on us from on high. Moreover, it is possible to "decide" upon or formulate a philosophy, within limits, and put it to immediate use. We might, for example, agree that we would revert to the primitive and ultra-simple in our living and by applying this principle, alter drastically and immediately certain aspects of our living.

We must therefore constantly check our philosophy to insure that it is wisely conceived.

WHAT COULD be more appropriate than to pause during the commemoration of Graceland's 50th anniversary in order to check her philosophy and make observations regarding characteristics which should be considered in its formulation? Such a course is especially appropriate in view of the rapid transition taking place now in our socio-economic life.

Through setting Graceland's philosophy, we set her course, mark her aspirations and concerns, set the spotlight and the shadows of her endeavors, and determine the settings in which she will find her joys and her sorrows.

During this first half century, we have learned to avoid some philosophic pitfalls.

We have learned to beware of the piecemeal or patchwork method of policy making. Our philosophy must possess organic unity—must fit together in such a manner as to make a functional whole.

Our philosophy must consider and be appropriate to our resources in personnel and material. It would be a mistake to "ape" this or that institution which has gained prominence in the eyes of people, irrespective of the fitness of such an imitation to our unique situation. We should, on the other hand, be sensitive to good suggestions.

We have learned that there is often a difference between "bigness" and "goodness."

We have learned that we cannot do all things and be all things. It is necessary to choose and to discard resolutely.

We should, we believe, capitalize our strengths and avoid programs which tax our weaknesses.

By A. R. Gilbert

Dean of Graceland College

We should, we believe, avoid a "head in the sand" policy which denies a relationship with the world at large. It is, however, our privilege to declare and shape the nature of our national and international influence.

I commend to you a co-operative effort to shape for Graceland a wise philosophy of education and trust that it may ever be used as a profound resource in setting up and accomplishing her tasks.

Gardeners

There are people who cannot be happy without memberships in country clubs, powerful yachts for cruising, many-cylindered cars for fast driving, big houses with as many servants as they need for hotels; and there are other people who find all the happiness they can possibly use in taking care of little gardens.

They exchange plants with other garden enthusiasts, work early and late making changes, compare notes with those who have had different garden adventures, and go to sleep at night to dream of gardens and flowers and fruits and the things that made the Garden of Eden.

It isn't the things we possess that count; it is what we think and feel about those things. There may be more happiness and contentment in a canoe on the Charles River than on a great yacht in Boston Harbor—or the reverse may be true.

It isn't the canoe or the yacht that is important. What matters is what is in the minds and hearts of those aboard them.—Thomas Dreier.

Man's Business Under God

By J. A. Koehler

Number 30 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

WHEN MOSES said that "God said" to man, "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion" over everything on the face of the earth, he proclaimed man's business under God. He did not indicate every specific thing that must be done to make that business a success. He did not say, for instance, to take sleep in the hours appointed. In that proclamation he did not mention even the Sabbath. But he did indicate the foundation stones on which that business rests. He did mention the affairs which require to be attended to by all peoples. And, translated into the language of our day, those affairs are matrimony, industry, and government.

The first three chapters of Genesis merely mention matrimony and government. They say very little, specifically, even about industry. For, according to that story of the creation, in its first stages, industry was little more than a stretching out of the hand to take apples to eat. Soon, it involved the making of a pair of aprons out of fig leaves. But that was a mere incident.

WHAT IS NOTEWORTHY is that, in its infancy, industry was an individual or private affair. Two natural laws were of force: (1) "subdue the earth," and (2) do not eat the fruit that is "forbidden." Do some self disciplining. Cultivate the soul. But those laws were rules of personal conduct. At the outset not even "subdue the earth" was in practice a law of "peoples." It was not a rule by which to govern society, the community, the state. In practice it was simply a rule of individual behavior.

For anything of which Adam and Eve wished to possess themselves, any animal or anything else, except the "forbidden fruit," was theirs by right simply because it was made for man's use in satisfying his wants. There were no moral questions involved in the taking of anything of which Adam and Eve wished to possess themselves, because there were no other men whose rights in the natural creations ought to have been taken into consideration. There was no "society" in the true sense of that word. Industry as yet had not become the business of "peoples."

That was true of matrimony, too. Adam and Eve's love affair was strictly their own business. At that stage in the life of man, matrimony did not need to be regulated by laws of Congress or what. It was an individual or private affair. It had not yet become the business of "peoples," the business of the community, the business of organized society.

But by the time Israel took possession of the land of Canaan, certain affairs of persons had become the affairs of peoples. Then the whole body of persons had interests in everything that grew naturally and in every foot of ground there was to cultivate or even to stand on. If Adam and Eve had been living in that day neither of them could have said, "That's for me." That is, they could not have "gotten away with it" as they did in the Garden of Eden. For by that time "the people," the community, the nation, had taken over.

AS CIVILIZATION marched on, it became necessary, it became imperative, that "the people" should say whether "Adam and Eve" might pick certain apples or not. It became necessary to have "my neighbor's landmark." Neither matrimony nor industry could be left to regulate itself. Both had to be regulated by law. As civilization marched on, matrimony and industry became more and more the business of peoples.

I do not say that every word of Moses' story of the creation is gospel truth. All I say is that the gospel truth is revealed in that story. And that truth is that to govern industry and matrimony aright is man's business under God.

GOVERNMENT IS direction and control of the affairs, not of persons, but of peoples. To keep your face and hands clean is not an affair of a people. It is your personal affair. There are many affairs which are purely personal. Pure government—not the kind of government that exists on every hand—is not direction and control of the affairs to which only persons have right to attend; it is direction and control of affairs to which only "peoples" have right as peoples to attend. Government is the business of peoples.

You probably have read the history of frontier life in America. You probably know how "six gun" law worked. If you have read that story in particular, and especially if you have read the history of civilization in general, you should know what happens when "persons" take over the business of "peoples"; or when peoples turn their business over to persons, as Israel did when she said, "Give us a king"; or when peoples are so indifferent to their responsibility under God that persons are obliged to try to carry it. It is an ugly story, isn't it? It is a dreadful story. It is hideous. It is terrifying. The biggest mistake man ever made, the most idiotic thing he ever did was to turn his business under God over to other hands. When man did that, he sold his birthright under God for a mess of baneful pottage.

The whole story of the Bible proclaims that man's business under God is government; the government of matrimony and industry. The word "government" is not used often in that story, but the idea is put forward constantly. "Have dominion" means, Attend to the business of government. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God" means to seek to establish God's mode of government. "Cast ye up the highway" means to attend to the business of government. From Abram, to Moses, to Israel, to Jesus, to St. John the Divine, the story of Bible religion is a proclamation of man's business under God. That story proclaims that that business is government.

As I have intimated, government is man's business under God in the very nature of things. There is no means of reaching the end for which man exerts himself save government. Without government life in society could not be made orderly; it could not even be made efficient, as our wasteful bureaucracies witness; much less can it be made just. The closest man has ever come to achieving social justice was when he himself attended faithfully to his own business under God; which is the business of government.

It is impossible that there should be truly human society without pure government. I say "pure" government; not rule, however beneficent it may seem to be. In the very nature of things, human society is self-governance. And it is self-governance that is adapted to the attainment of moral objects.

FROM BEGINNING to end, the truly human instincts, as they are commonly called, have rebelled against the "rule" of persons, or against the exercise of private authority in public relations. When the Egyptian who had smitten a Hebrew said to Moses, "Who made thee a prince and a ruler over us?"

"God . . . Hath Made of One Blood

All Nations"

By Ruby LeNeve Motta

HE was a hero. The idol of all my high school friends. He was a strong football player and his rippling muscles were beautiful to watch when he circled the track. He was a modest and quiet boy in spite of all the adoration we gave him and the public acclaim he received—for his abilities were talked about outside the bounds of our athletic field. Yet, when the senior prom appeared on the school calendar, our hero was not allowed by the girls' dean to attend because he had asked permission to bring a girl friend of another high school.

SHE touched their clothes. She washed them clean and ironed them smooth. Yet, she collected their laundry and left it by the back door. If she ever forgot and went to the front door her employers would fire her.

THE seats were filled in the streetcar except for one beside a young girl. Yet, the smartly dressed middle-aged woman passed by the empty seat—to stand.

THE tall, slender young man was a poet-orator. His liquid voice quietly seethed with emotion whenever he spoke and he won many collegiate contests because of his sincerity and originality. Yet, when he and his elderly coach, who is nationally known in the literary field, entered a restaurant, they were insulted and asked to leave.

I NOTICED HER in my classes as a quiet, reserved student. Never before had I spoken beyond casual "hello's" to one of her kind. I wanted to know her: learned her name and tried to speak to her as if she were the same as my other friends. But I could not. I had to have a closer bond. Then I touched her arm and found her skin as warm and smooth as my own. Then I knew that black skin made her no different from me with my white one.

he displayed the temper of every real person, from the beginning of time to the end. He said in effect that if there is to be "administration" of justice, it shall be by public authority. It shall not be by persons, but by peoples. Even my own five-year-old grandson will not yield to the arbitrary demands of persons.

It is true that some peoples seem to want some persons to attend to the business of man. But did you ever know a real people that wanted to abolish that business? Why even Anarchism is a theory of government. Even the Anarchists know of no way of attaining their objects without government. And since the liberation of human thought and the moral awakening, or the enlightenment of the moral will, the demand is becoming increasingly insistent (not by the morally recreant; not by the customary moralist; but by the reflective moralists, or the moral elite) that government shall be the business of peoples.

I have used both the terms, the business of man and the business of peoples, because in some of its aspects government is the business of one and in other aspects it is the business of the other. The UNO is, in effect, an affirmation of that truth. What we have heard about the UNO means that the conviction has taken root that there are some things which the whole human family only, or which only "man," has right to govern. Even though the whole UNO business may turn out to be abortive, its inauguration is a declaration of man's intention to include in his business everything that involves the welfare of the whole human family. The UNO means that man believes government is his business under God. And it is because it throws so much light on that question that we bring to your attention the social philosophy of the modern prophet.

Missionary Methods:

A Psychological Study of Publicity Materials

BY EUGENE A. THEYS

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE are selecting their purchases through the medium of advertising. Newspapers and radios are making a telling effect on the mind of the public; it is time that we give some of these methods serious consideration and adapt some of them to our own needs.

We have a great message, and it becomes our duty to see that it is presented in the best possible way. As long as the public is publicity conscious, we have a job in this field. The greatness of God's truth must be felt in the life of men, or we will fail miserably in our task as a church.

There are only two kinds of publicity—good and bad. Good publicity when well done is economical, but poor publicity material is expensive regardless of how cheap the cost. We wish to discuss the psychological effects that publicity must have in order for us to influence the minds of people.

Successful publicity demands a psychological point of view. Publicity must accomplish what a missionary is expected to do when he goes out to preach the gospel. Therefore, when publicity is placed in the hands of the public, it must act as a missionary for us; it must be representative of our total program. There is an interaction which must be anticipated by the one writing the material; he must anticipate his reader's reaction and create certain desires. The author is expected to stimulate his reader and to do for him what he would hope to do if he were in his presence.

The human mind. William James describes the mind as a stream, consisting of the sum total of mental processes going on within the individual: such as, ideas, sensations, feelings, volitions, and actions. Kitson in his book, The Mind of the Buyer says, "some of the characteristics of the stream are:

1. The mind never stands still. It is in constant motion. The thought of the moment is quickly replaced by others. The mind of the buyer in a sale consists of a procession of sensations, feelings, and willings.
2. The mind is complex. It is not a simple thing that we are dealing with, but an organism of many qualities and powers.

From the very time the individual picks up a copy of our publicity material until he is baptized into the church, his thoughts have been constantly acting upon suggested impulses which turn that person to a new and better way of life.

Marks of good publicity. In order for our evangelistic materials to get results they must have these six underlying principles. They are:

1. Attention
2. Interest
3. Desire
4. Confidence
5. Decision
6. Satisfaction

These motivative impulses are not always in order named, but these impelling factors must be found in our materials and used to our best advantage. This may best be illustrated such as, interest may come simultaneous with attention; confidence may precede desire. However, the order named above will usually find its place in the reader's thinking. In order for us to improve our evangelistic efforts, we must cease the "rule of thumb method" and turn our attention to some well-proved scientific methods carried on in the laboratories by the psychologist; rule of thumb psychology is unsystematic and unordered; while scientific psychology is systematic and orderly.

ATTENTION

One of the first tasks we have is to attract the attention of the public, not as a collected group but individually. The mind is an ever-running stream kept constantly on the move by the things going on about us. To catch the attention and to hold it there, we must not expect to stop the flow of the stream or to even slow it up but to thrust into the middle of it. Kitson says, "The ease with which we the seller may do this depends partly upon the rate of flow of the stream and partly upon the contents of it. Sometimes the current flows sluggishly, as when the reader sits without occupation in a streetcar and casts his eyes carelessly from one advertising card to another. On such occasions it is easy for us to enter the stream."

Yet on the other hand we may find it difficult to attract the attention of our public when the mind is working rapidly as at an exciting ball game. Another example can be used to illustrate this point: when the commodity or material we are using (and this can most certainly be our sermon topics), is foreign or in other words has no relationship to the person's present needs. Our sermon topics must be clothed with vital and living issues which will meet the present need.

Certain objects will attract attention, even as in olden days the town crier used a bell, the fishmonger, a horn. An attractive picture of Christ, soft colors, clever folders, and neatly printed materials will help to do this. Colors should be well selected since they play an important part in stimulating the emotions of the reader. Choose a stimulus stronger than the other objects about him. A missionary will refuse to use intensity in his personal contacting probably because of its frequent rudeness and vulgarity.

Extensivity. This second factor is extensivity, by which we mean size, bigness, magnitude. The mind is susceptible to the influence of bigness. The mind will quite often ignore the small objects and turn to the larger ones which hold the greatest attraction. Extensivity makes us read into the object so glaringly displayed qualities of superiority in quantity. We tend to associate superiority in size with superiority in quality. We regard it practically as a virtue in itself. Whenever we see a thing that is relatively large, we tend to judge it larger than it really is. Whatever be its explanation, it offers a real cue to the missionary, and suggests that he may increase his chances of success by operating on a large scale.

Change. The third proposition concerning our discussion of attention is that change has great value in arresting attention—change in any sense, in intensity, extensivity, or nature stimulus. We can test this point by the truth of everyday life by noting that we are aware that the clock has been ticking, only after it has stopped.

Color. Another factor which arises out of attention. Psychologists calculate that there are at least 30,000 varieties of color. When we talk about colors, we mean any visual stimuli that is neither black, white, or some intermediate degree of gray. All visual stimuli that affect the mental stream may be classified as either grayness (black, white, or one of seven hundred intermediate shades of gray) or color.

Several lines of proof point to the overpowering attractiveness of color. For one, we need go no further than everyday observation. When the early settlers of America wanted to make an attractive price to the Indians, did they offer black or gray beads? We are not told so. It is said that the mail-order houses have found colored catalogues to be very superior to those in black and white. More scientific proof from the laboratories is reported in the voluminous literature upon the subject.

We may inquire why color attracts the attention so much more easily than grayness, we may find a partial explanation in the fact that the light waves for colors travel farther than do those for grayness. Whatever the reason may be, we should use color whenever possible and with great care. Color not only attracts attention but holds it. It arouses pleasurable feelings, or it may give pleasure by reason of certain ideas it arouses within the reader.

Repetition. In order for a thing to affect the mind, it must enter the pathways to the brain. These pathways are somewhat resistant to new impressions, but after repeated assault, they open and permit access to the brain. Psychologists assert that man is innately credulous, that he is inclined to accept as true every statement he hears. In the course of experience, however, the adult person develops inhibitions, which make him sophisticated and resistant. To overcome this resistance requires considerable battering. To this factor is due the effectiveness of many appealing words like "Uneda." The public may resist this for a time; they eventually come to believe that they do need a biscuit, and make the purchase. As we keep the name of the church constantly before the public and especially reading materials such as tracts, radio sermons, newspaper items, and many forms of advertisements, it will wear its way not only into the minds of the people but into their way of life.

Our publicity cannot become so branded upon the public mind that any set form will work in any community. The public is unique and is composed of as many minds as there are cities in this country. Certain popular magazines today appeal to a different public.

It should be noted that a public is not a simple arithmetical summation of individual minds. Nor is it a new super-mind transcending its components. It can be regarded as one mind only in the sense that the individual minds composing it are almost identical in certain respects. Then, because each member of the group knows that all the other members hold opinions identical with his, he feels more strongly than he would without such social support. It is in such a sense, then, that we speak of a collective mind as different from the individual minds composing it. To better illustrate this point, let me point out what we mean. The Chicago American public, for example, differs from that of the Evening Post. The readers of the Country Gentleman differ from the readers of the Reader's Digest.

Public measuring stick.

1. Geographical. We must know where the people live. Are they living in the southern, western, or eastern section of the country? The geographical location plays a definite part in preparing our materials for an approach to these people.

2. Economic. Something should be known about the economic conditions where we are going to work and alert ourselves to the conditions.

3. Psychological. Some of the greatest differences between publics are mental—ideas, feelings, motives, and the like.

4. Sociological. What is the social level of the public? What are the leading occupations represented; sports and relaxations?

If we are going into a new country or community for the first time, many of the national magazines and newspapers will be happy to furnish any information on your new public. They have already made this sort of study and are constantly revising their study from time to time.

INTEREST

In order for us to appreciate properly the value of this part of our discussion, perhaps it would be well for us to define interest: "Interest is the recognition of a thing which has been vitally connected with experience before—a thing recognized as old." Interest naturally arouses tendencies to act.

The first law of interest is: "In order to create interest in a thing, give information about it." A publicity director works this principle overtime when he sells a new movie star to the public. He will give you all the history that he possibly can about this individual such as age, color of hair and eyes, place of birth, hobbies, etc. But the missionary must create an interest in other people by giving points of interest about his church, its people, and the teachings of his church. He cannot blast the faith already established by the public, but must build upon this faith a confidence which will be sufficient enough to pursue an affirmative interest in our work. We must follow the rule of the day by stating the new in terms of the old. For example, the living issues of the day as compared to the living issues of the past. People are primarily concerned with the present but interested in the past.

In choosing informational facts with which to evoke interest in our message, we might group them in four classes: (1) God speaks today. (2) History reveals the eternal vigilance of truth. (3) Priesthood and its function in perfecting lives of men. (4) Zion or chaos.

Empathy in decisions. Quite often we form mental images in trying to see ourselves in the thing we are most interested in; we call that mental empathy. Empathy may be defined as "the process of humanizing objects, of reading or feeling ourselves into them." We are so constituted that we are inclined to place ourselves imaginably into situations that may be presented before us. We put ourselves in Paul's place as we read his conversation before King Agrippa. We see ourselves playing the part of the hero in a good play or by reading a good book.

DESIRE

When interest persists long enough, it will merge into desire. Desire is stimulated by the following steps:

1. Attention to something new—an unusual message of truth and hope.

2. Within this unusual message is found certain truths, stimuli, and dreams of the past.

3. The forward projection of the reader's past is quite likely to be determined in terms, images, or empathy which we have previously discussed.

4. The trains of images are pleasantly toned. Generally speaking, the greater the pleasantness, the greater the desire.

5. So vivid become some of the images and so alluring, that they lead the prospect into making decisive decisions to accept whatever the cost.

Desire is short lived unless action is taken by the missionary to climax the decision of the individual. Too many of our good prospects are lost to the church because we have often hesitated to press them for a decision. If desire is created by publicity material, then we must be able to follow up with cottage meetings, series of missionary services, and church school. Unless this is done, all our work and planning publicity is futile.

CONFIDENCE

It is much easier for one to impress confidence upon another if he is associated with an individual, or if he is preaching; one's own convictions as he speaks gives to another that confidence and assurance. The Spirit of God is another source from which one can receive confidence, but when we try to establish confidence in another by the means of publicity, then we are faced with a different problem.

In order for us to establish confidence in our message as others read our materials, we must make each statement agree with reality. One of the first reactions of the public is to associate past experiences with the material at hand; these experiences are usually unfavorably compared with the statements found in the material. Therefore, we must constantly approach the public with our message from every conceivable approach, but always with truth and reality. The public must be challenged, but in the challenge there must be given the feeling that they can achieve the goal desired. Our material must never bear an antagonistic attitude; this destroys confidence in our message quicker than any other thing. We must start with what truth they have and build into their thinking what we have.

Devices for instilling confidence.

Two psychological aids to be remembered for instilling confidence are:

The first is repetition. If a statement is asserted often enough, it will go far toward creating belief in it. You have heard the statements used many times, "Ask the man who owns one," "Watch the Fords go by," and many other catch phrases. Many appropriate slogans which catch up the significance of our work can be used to good advantage not only in our publicity but in tract materials and sermons.

The second is to arouse and maintain a feeling of satisfaction within the public. Confidence is marked by something warm and pleasant—it is a true feeling as we have already said; feeling is ever an animus to action. A missionary may give ever so convincing arguments; he may bristle with reasons why the prospect should join the church, but if he fails to create confidence, he will not convert an individual. It would be well for us to remember the old adage: "A man convinced without the feeling of confidence is of the same opinion still." Therefore, confidence is inevitable in getting one interested in the church or getting a decision to join.

DECISION AND ACTION

By the time we have accomplished the previous stages in arranging our publicity materials, we are ready to consider the next step. The condition of the prospect's mind at this point is considered unique. It is called by such names as decision, resolution, will, volition, psychological moment.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Analysis of reasoning. Kitson states, "When a person reasons, he goes through four rather clearly marked stages. In the mental stream we may distinguish four divisions: (1) the awareness of difficulty; (2) the location of the difficulty; (3) the search for a solution; (4) the solution."

Recognition of a difficulty. Each individual faced with problems in life is prone to look at the difficult side first. These difficulties should be pointed out to avoid overemphasis on the part of the prospect. The more abundant way is not an easy role, but the gospel of Jesus Christ is the steadying influence which will help one to achieve this fuller way of life.

Location of difficulty. We must be able to point out in this step that unless the gospel of Christ becomes the stabilizing influence in the life of people, they cannot hope to see the "dawn of a new day." The way of salvation is the only solution to man's many problems. In this stage of our material, we must impress our public with the evidence of all our arguments and that is to say that when the principles of Jesus Christ have been adapted by an individual, he has found joy unspeakable, and life holds out before him a new way. "He that loseth his life willingly for my sake shall find it."

Solution of difficulty. Positive statements are the only method to establish a solution to the difficulty of reaching a decision. A man's convictions when asserted in preaching is the method employed by the missionary in moving his hearers to action. Sincerity is not enough, neither is a statement of truth unless it carries with it an affirmative feeling on the part of the one who reads it.

Reasoning alone will not induce a man to accept our theory. Illustrations are found to be one of the greatest influences in aiding advertisers to sell their products. A speaker does not rely upon pure reasoning; he will color his remarks with sentences which describe and stimulate one's thinking. Apostle Hield's preaching is an excellent example of this. Whenever possible, pictures should be used that can be an aid in getting action.

SATISFACTION

As we view our material from time to time in preparing it, we can never consider it complete until it has created a feeling of satisfaction on the part of those who read it. This satisfaction must come to the extent that the individual concerned has either decided to look into the matter at hand or to unite himself with the movement. If we are striving to get a convert's decision, we must apply this same principle. Satisfaction is the only telling force that a missionary can rely on when he has made contact with the public.

One reaches the state of satisfaction when he comes to realize the personal benefits achieved and the results obtained by sharing with others. Satisfaction comes through feeling a sense of security, loyalty, peace, and understanding.

Therefore, if the psychological effects of publicity are of any value to us in our publicity program, we must give it our serious consideration as we outline our materials for use in missionary endeavors. God works through the spirit of intelligence, and it becomes the duty of every quorum in the church to exercise this gift to our greatest advantage. We must cease being amateurs in this field and perfect an intelligent understanding of what good publicity materials can do for us.

There is no unbelief;
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.

—Eliabeth York Case, Unbelief.

For Young People Making Decisions

By EVA COOK

I have been asked several times by young people who are full of life and vitality what I think about dancing, smoking, and drinking. My heart goes out to these young people, for I realize greatly the grave situation they face today. What is the answer?

Christ said that he came "that men might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." The desire of all people is to find peace of mind, contentment, and happiness. Will dancing, smoking, and drinking help to bring that more abundant life and lasting happiness? Think these things through and, as I have told these young people, let the inward spirit be their guide. Do you feel right within yourself when you go to that dance? Are you at ease when you light the cigarette or take the drink? A great many young people have this decision to make, and the majority who have talked to me admit they do not feel right or do not receive the enjoyment they thought they might in doing these things. If you have this feeling, these things are not for you. I sincerely hope that our young people who are tempted in these ways, who have that feeling of questioning within their hearts, will not continue in these acts until they fail to hear that warning voice and have the feeling of justification in doing these acts.

I would like to relate an experience here that may clarify these thoughts. A lovely young lady of high character and a great love for this church had the desire to dance. She had been reared in a Reorganized Latter Day Saint home and was taught these things were not for her to do. She could not see any harm in dancing. She felt it would not lower her character, and in some cases her reasoning seemed just. She prayed about this. One night she had a dream. She was in a large room. Half the room was light—the other half dark. There was music playing. She wanted to dance. Finally a partner reached for her, and she began dancing. She was laughing and having a good time, but her partner was in the dark part of the room. She tried to dance him into the light but was never able to do so. She made her decision. This young woman is working in the church today. She is and can be of great service to the young people. At first she thought dancing would not hold her back in God's work in any manner, but what about those

Temperance Tales

By VIDA M. FLETCHER

WHEN CHILDREN come into a good home, conscientious parents are greatly concerned about rearing them to be healthy, well-developed individuals. They take great interest in proper diet, good health habits, exercise, clothing, housing, and education. They teach them to know danger and how to escape injury. There is no danger to homes and children that is more real and potent than the liquor evil. Many parents do not realize this and do not teach their children the effects of alcohol on the human body.

Children should be taught to avoid the use of alcohol and tobacco just as they are taught traffic rules. Narcotics can wreck children's lives just as completely as any traffic injury. Many parents leave this instruction for the public schools, but the scientific facts about the effects of alcohol and other narcotics on the human body should be taught in the home. Personalities can be kept out of this instruction, for the children can be taught about the harm of narcotics just the same as they can be taught to keep away from snakes or poison ivy.

Children can be taught that they are stewards over their bodies—that the houses God gives them for their souls are best kept clean and healthy. With this respect for God's gift and a thorough knowledge of what narcotics will do to those who use them, most young people will refrain from using them, just as they would refuse to take doses of any other poison.

WHAT WOULD WE think of a mother who takes her children for a walk and as they pass along the road, she tells them about the birds, the trees, the grass, the flowers, and the clouds but says never a word about a rattlesnake coiled up by the road all ready to strike?

That is much the way many parents, teachers, and ministers are avoiding the liquor question. They teach many good things to their youth but do little or no teaching about alcoholic beverages or tobacco. In comparing liquor to a rattlesnake, however, we must offer apologies to the snake. No rattlesnake dresses up in attractive garb to deceive anyone as to his real identity. No rattlesnake would sponsor a radio program recommending his brand of poison; nor would he invite, in smooth and cultured language, customers to try his wares. He would not show motion pictures of people being bitten and apparently suffer no harm. No, the rattlesnake is honest. He gives warning before he strikes; everyone knows his bite is poison and is almost sure to kill his victim.

While we church workers are so busy teaching youth about the fair and good things they should know, old John Barleycorn is also very busily and effectively teaching them to accept alcoholic beverages as a commonplace and a desirable part of their lives. Let us beware lest we suffer the reprimand of the scribes and Pharisees, "These things ye ought to have done and not to have left the other undone."

MR. X WAS much concerned about the alcohol and tobacco education the liquor and tobacco interests were giving the American public. He wanted everyone to know how deceptive was their attractive sales bait through radio, advertising, and motion pictures. His sphere of influence was limited and he felt there was not much he could do.

However, he loved children and there were rural schools near his farm home, so he visited several of them, giving educational talks to the children. He told the effects of alcohol and tobacco on the human body. Over a period of several years, especially in the school nearest him, he taught the children once or twice each year.

When the war came, many neighbor boys were called into the army. What was his surprise, when the war was over, and the boys came home, to learn that those boys he had been closest to had not become either liquor or tobacco addicts. He rejoiced that the truths he had taught them had fortified them against the evil influences they had encountered in the army. What if he had failed to do what he could!

LITTLE SHARON'S parents saw no harm in serving alcoholic beverages in their home, and very early in life she was taught to drink with them. When she was in the second grade at school, she was fortunate in having a teacher who had taken training in alcohol education so that she could present the truth about alcohol in just as effective a way as the liquor interests present untruths about their beverages.

Soon Sharon was refusing to drink beer and wine when her parents were serving them. Her mother was puzzled and asked her why she did not drink with them. The little girl explained that her teacher had showed the class that there was a poison called alcohol in those drinks, and she did not want to drink them any more.

"I never heard anything like that when I went to school," said her mother. "My teachers never taught anything about alcohol." "Well, mother," said Sharon, with all the wisdom of a seven-year-old, "your teacher did not tell you because she did not know. My teacher knows."

MRS. B IS one of those troubled mothers whose children are never as good as she thinks they should be. She scolds and grieves, and they answer her with impudence and ingratitude. When they were small, she took just anyone she

The Lord's Prayer

3. Hallowed Be Thy Name

By Robert S. Farnham
President of Lamoni Stake

This is one of a series of meditations presented at the Appointee Institute, held at Independence, August 28 to September 14, 1946. The first in this series was presented in our January 18 issue, the second in that of January 25.

THE WORD "hallowed" is not often used in common speech, and is most popularly known for its use in the Lord's Prayer, and in Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. It is a devotional term that we would do well to understand better and use more frequently. To hallow is to consecrate or devote to a sacred purpose or to revere. It is a process through which a thing or person is regarded as holy.

The Lord blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it."—Exodus 20: 11. Here the action and purpose of God are revealed in the hallowing of a period of time.

The first thirty-six verses of Exodus 29 describe in detail the Lord's instructions to be followed that Aaron and his sons might be "hallowed," cleansed that they might be considered holy and consecrated to serve in the temple. The balance of the story deals with the process of hallowing the altar of the temple.

"Neither shall ye profane my holy name; but I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the Lord which hallow you."—Leviticus 22: 32. The story of the hallowing of people and things and God himself, continues through the Old Testament and is emphasized anew by Christ in the Lord's Prayer.

We frequently engage in discussions which deal with the purpose of life for men on this earth. Surely God would never hallow men nor require that we regard him with reverence as holy, without serious purpose.

President Lincoln read the Bible as a young man until he became well versed with its teachings, literature, and history. The fact that he absorbed so much of it is evidenced in his speech and writing, and in his reactions later in life. His use of the word "hallow" in his Gettysburg address is one example of his use of his knowledge of the Bible.

The story is told of a pious man who engaged President Lincoln in conversation while the Civil War was in progress and observed, "Mr. President, we should be thankful that God is on our side in this great conflict."

Lincoln unhesitatingly replied, "I am not so much concerned about God being on our side as I am about whether or not we are on his side."

As we pray, "Hallowed be thy name," this same question with all its implications should be our concern. Having been made aware of the social aspects of the worship of God by the opening phrase of this prayer, we know that God desires that all men shall hallow his name. As members of his priesthood, we are committed to a course of action that would direct every living individual on this earth to revere the Lord's name. What a task! Think of the multitudes who have no desire to show any respect to God; and the many who show deliberate disrespect.

We teach the abiding presence of God. We believe that God hears our prayers wherever we may be. How should we give evidence of our respect for him? How can we transmit "Hallowed be thy name" into action and experience?

He does not expect us to stand at attention all day, rendering obedience and displaying respect and loyalty. God has made provision where our lives may reveal our innermost feelings about him in the things we do and the cause we serve.

Inasmuch as our soul speaks, "Hallowed be thy name," likewise our life will be devoted and consecrated to the purposes of Divinity, every minute of the day. What more worthy test of our ministry could we devise? May we be about our Father's business that all men, everywhere, will be led to follow Christ and with humility and sincerity pray, "Hallowed be thy name."

A Prayer Poem for Young Matrons

By Esther Wilson Heller

Our Father, now we come to thee
With thankful hearts, for we would be Ever nearer. We would know
Thy will for us, for thus we grow.
For all thy blessings great and good,
We thank thee as we know we should;
But not alone for blessings great
Do we give thanks before thy gate,
But for the little things as well:
A cheery word, a friendly smile,
A song, a letter, or a book,
The time to read in a quiet nook.
We thank thee, Father, and we pray
That we may do some good each day;
That we may live so close to thee
That from our faults we may be free.
Help us to turn to thee again,
In Jesus' name, we pray. Amen.

News Briefs

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Pastor, Carl E. Muir

Pastor and Mrs. Carl Muir and fourteen other members of the branch attended General Conference. Pastor Muir spoke on conference activities on the morning of April 20. In the evening, he and Mrs. Muir and Elder A. Piedimonte each gave a report.

Elder Louis Kuhn was in charge of the April Communion service.

President Israel A. Smith spoke at the morning service on April 27. Priest Norman Preusch gave the evening sermon, after which the movie, "Good Samaritan," was shown.

Pastor Muir was in charge of the May Communion meeting; John Zimmermann, Jr., gave the talk. Following a talk by the pastor on "That Certain Nobleman" in the evening, pictures were shown to illustrate the story.

A minstrel show was given by the young adults on Saturday evening, May 10.

Mother's Day was observed with a fellowship service. The choir sang, "Memory," "Mother and Home," and "Little Mother of Mine." The oldest and youngest mothers were honored with corsages. In the evening, the children presented a program under the direction of Mabel Vanlinten.

Karen Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kugel, was blessed by Elders Russel Bacon and Edward Lewis, and Janice Elaine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Shaffer, was blessed by Elders Edward Lewis and Carl Muir.

Organ meditations are given each Sunday by Beryl Benson and Anna Thomas.

On May 18, District President Thomas Carr of Elkton, Maryland, spoke at the morning service, and Elder LeRoy Squire of Brooklyn, New York, gave the evening sermon. Mrs. Ethel Squire, district women's leader, addressed the women of the branch at 6 o'clock.

A prebaptismal class is being conducted each Sunday until Children's Day. Mrs. Margaret Jackson is in charge of the nursery department and is doing a splendid work in caring for the small children while their parents attend the morning service.

Speakers for May, in addition to those already mentioned, were Louis Kuhn, Adolph Edwards, and John Cuning.

Southern Wisconsin District

The Southern Wisconsin District Women's Institute was held in Madison on May 17 and 18 with Cleo Kimball, district leader, in charge. Projects, problems, and programs were discussed Saturday morning. At 1 o'clock in the afternoon, Rachel Reistad sang "Trees," accompanied by Marabeth Ford, after which Evelyn Velt talked on home prayer life. At 2 p.m., James Doyle, assistant district attorney, gave a lecture on the work of the Department of Justice. Marabeth Ford played a piano solo at this service. Minnie Edwards gave a reading at the following meeting and Sister Velt again addressed the group on "The Missionary-Minded Home." Forty-five women attended the banquet held at 7 p.m. at Kennedy Manor. The program consisted of two vocal solos by Lois Carpenter; a humorous reading by Sylvia Dennis; group singing, games, and brief talks by Alma Davenport, Alice McGlasson, Ester Brigham, Dessa Hunt, Bririne Mussell, and Evelyn Velt.

Sunday services began at 8:15 with meditation and prayer. District President Ormond Kimball and Seventy James Daugherty were in charge. Sister Velt spoke on the subject, "We Serve With Efficiency and Cheerfulness," the following hour. Seventy Daugherty was the 11 o'clock speaker. Lunch was served in the lower auditorium at noon.

The final meeting of the institute was held at 2 p.m. Music for this service was provided by Myrtle Dettman, Manor Kuenze and Marabeth Ford. Cleo Kimball led the discussion on projects for the coming Chetek Reunion. A summary of the institute was given by Vida Lafferty, after which Bririne Mussell presided over a dedicatory worship service.

In addition to representatives from each group in the southern district, visitors from La Crosse and Fond du Lac also attended the institute.

Los Angeles, California

East Los Angeles Congregation

Pastor, V. L. Lum

A turkey dinner and Christmas package sale netted $250 for the building fund.

Sharon Ann, daughter of Boyd and Velma Engle, was blessed December 22 by Elders V. L. Lum and James Bunt.

Since December 1, the women's department has sent seventeen boxes of food and clothing to the Saints in England and Holland.

Six young people from East Los Angeles, Royce Foster, Lindal Mark, Dewitt Filer, Letha Van Valkenburg, Jean Pederson, and Gale Foreman, were students at Graceland this year.

Jack Jay, son of Barney and June Seagraves, was blessed January 26 by Elders Glen Holmes and James Bunt.

After a long and serious illness following his service in the war, High Priest L. L. Sutherland, former pastor of East Los Angeles congregation and director of religious education for Southern California District, is again participating in branch activities.

Easter Sunday began with an early morning prayer service conducted by the Zion's League. The choir sang at the 11 o'clock Communion service. Three blessings were given at this time: Jo Ann, daughter of Jack and Bessie Fewell; Trisha, daughter of Harold and Meredith Mock; and Patricia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bowers. Officiating at these blessings were Eders L. L. Sutherland, V. L. Lum, and James Bunt.

A potluck lunch was served at the groundbreaking ceremony at Concourse and Olympic. Ann Jasper and the charter members of East Los Angeles broke the ground, and Pastor V. L. Lum gave a talk. Music was provided by a quartet. The first load of lumber for the new church was delivered on May 5.

Until the church is finished, meetings will continue to be held at the Y. M. C. A. Building, 2834 Whittier Boulevard.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Pastor, R. H. Atkinson

Seventy-five Leaguers from the Tri-Cities visited Nauvoo on Sunday, May 11. At 11 o'clock, they presented a program with Victor Witte introducing the speakers, David Shippy, Bill Williams, and Ellen Blake. Edith Fusselman, president of the Nauvoo League, and Pastor R. H. Atkinson, welcomed the group. Lillian Williams was in charge of the music. A piano solo was given by Lucille Sheppard and a vocal solo by Rosella Sheppard. At noon, a basket lunch was served on the church grounds by the river.

Mother's Day was observed with a program presented by the mothers of the branch. A series of tableaux arranged by Roberta Garrett and Madilyn Hartman depicted various mothers. Florence Ourth portrayed the mother of the very young; she sang Brahm's "Lullaby" to her infant son, Alan Bruce. Shirley Tripp represented the mother of the older child; she read a story to her daughter, Joyce. Sophie Lee portrayed Emma Smith with Lynn Ourth, Lloyd Tripp, and Robert Garrett as her three sons. After admonishing them to carry on the work of their father, she sang, "Rise Up, O Men of God." Anne Lambert represented the grandmother; her daughter, Tot Stevenson, sang "That Wonderful Mother of Mine." Roberta Garrett introduced the scenes; Edith Fusselman, Mabel Atkinson, and Blanche Klingelmueller read appropriate poems between the tableaux. "Faith of Our Mothers" was sung by the congregation, and Madilyn Hartman told the story, "A Parable for Mothers." In the evening the League presented a service of songs and readings.

Twenty-five members of Nauvoo Branch attended General Conference and gave reports upon their return from Independence.

A memorial service was held at the church on May 18 for Lily A. Bishop who died the week after conference at the Independence Sanitarium. Elder J. E. Vanderwood, guide at the Mansion House for a number of years, died several weeks later.

Bishop C. A. Skinner, who spent a week in Nauvoo on business, gave a chalk talk on May 17. He and Harold Reed, caretaker of Kirtland Temple, were the speakers on Sunday evening. Bishop Skinner also addressed the group on Monday evening.

No services were held at the church on May 25 so that all might attend the district conference in Burlington.

—Mabel Atkinson, reporter.

Grand Junction, Colorado

Pastor, Clarence B. Wallis

Apostle Charles R. Hield and Evangelist Willard Hield visited in Grand Junction several days following conference. Apostle Hield lectured at the church and Mesa College on archaeology and also spoke to the Saints at Delta Branch.

Members of the church school presented the Mother's Day program on May 11. Bishop Elwin Vest of Delta Branch was the morning and evening speaker on the following Sunday.

—R. H. Oliver, reporter.

Dallas, Texas

Pastor, Clyde F. Hastings

Seventy J. Charles May held a two-weeks' series of cottage meetings. One Mormon family became interested and invited Brother May to meet with them every Sunday. At one service, twenty-eight nonmembers were present.

Various departments in the church are responsible for the Sunday evening services. A class period follows the devotional. Recent themes have been "The Life and Works of W. W. Phelps," by the department of music, "Service," by the Zion's League, and "Good Books," by Mrs. Verna Livingston, librarian. The evening classes have been taught by Elders Clyde Hastings and H. E. Davenport. The latest visual aid picture to be shown by Henry Williams, supervisor, was "The Blind Beggar of Jerusalem."

Apostle Roscoe Davey spent two days in Dallas, preaching and visiting the Saints. Other speakers have been Clyde Hastings, H. E. Davenport, W. F. Page, and C. A. Green.

Each class in the church school division is responsible for one morning devotional each month.

A basket dinner is to be held the last Sunday in every month at the church annex with the women's department in charge. The dinner is to be followed by a council meeting, prayer service for leaders and teachers, and a class in leadership.

The children, under the direction of Mamie Dallas, gave the Easter program. Junior church is held twice monthly. The choir, directed by Merle Hellenberger, sang selections from "The Crucifixion"; Mrs. Constance Borders was soloist and Mrs. Alma Estes, pianist. Elder H. E. Davenport gave the sermon.

Constance Borders has been elected women's leader. The department is divided into three groups: the La Da Sa's, older women; the Athenas, young matrons, and a group which meets once a month with Margie Williams as leader. These women assist in publishing The Challenge, branch monthly. Mrs. Velma Brollair is supervisor of all projects for raising money for the building fund. The offering on the second Sunday each month is also contributed to this fund.

Newcomers to the branch are Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Wheeler, formerly of San Antonio.

Check List for Educators

summarizes a panel discussion by a group of Graceland graduates now attending the University of Chicago.

Do your writings go unread? Does your church school class drag? Do your sermons go undigested even though you put plenty of "food for thought" in them? If so, you may find the medicine you need in this article. But you will have to make the diagnosis yourself.

To many people there may seem to be little relation between the church and adult education. If this is so, it is because education has been viewed too narrowly. We should give serious thought to the matter of what education really is, for the term has often been used too loosely. Many people criticize what they call education, not realizing that they are criticizing only one kind of education.

We should not think of education as something that goes on inside institutions, but rather as something that goes on inside individuals. Mark Twain expressed this same thought in a slightly different way when he remarked, "I have never let my schooling interfere with my education."

Education takes place whenever the behavior of an individual changes. When this change in behavior is a desirable one, it is a good education—when not, a bad education. Sir Richard Livingston puts it this way, ". . . it [education] is not an assemblage of piecemeal acquisitions and accomplishments, but the formation, largely unconscious, of an outlook and an attitude."

When education is viewed in this broader light, it becomes clear that the entire program of the church is an educational one. For what is any sermon, church school class, quarterly, or Herald article but an attempt to change the behavior of individuals? If this be true, the church might well profit by examining the field of education to see what it has to offer. It might be most profitable to look specifically at adult education since so many of the church's programs are directed toward adults.

For the past eight months I have had the opportunity of working on a program of adult education sponsored by the University of Chicago. This is but a short period of time, yet I have made some observations which I believe are sound and pertinent. These may be classified as follows:

(1) Objectives must be clearly defined. To organize a course of study, it is essential to have clearly in mind the objectives of the course. This seems obvious, but it is amazing how educational programs develop. Most of them, like Topsy,

just grow. In no time at all, educators are apt to be conducting their business by habit without questioning what they are doing or where they are going. To prevent this from happening, it is necessary to be continually self-critical.

(2) Education should begin with the learners' interests. Recently I have been engaged, along with others, in working out courses of study in a relatively new field. One of the first things we learned was that the classes must appeal to the learners. The motivations usually employed in school are lacking in adult education. Adults cannot be forced to learn by threatening them with disciplinary action. Grades, degrees, et cetera, have little appeal to them. Adults will not continue to attend a class unless they feel they are getting something out of it. Thus, we found it necessary to begin courses at the interest level of the learners.

(3) Various methods of instruction must be used. We early discovered that methods often employed in universities and colleges simply did not work with adults. A professor lecturing from "moth eaten" notes soon found himself lecturing to an empty room. Other methods of instruction were attempted. These included class discussions, forums, visual aids, and demonstrations. We found that the method used should be determined by the objective of the program. For example, if the objective was to impart information, the lecture method was appropriate. But if the objective was to bring out the implications of knowledge which adults already had, the discussion method was better. Visual aids were found to be invaluable.

(4) Constant evaluation is essential. After each session had been conducted, those involved in working it out sat down with the instructors who conducted it and discussed the ways in which improvements could be made. The course of study was then revised in light of this evaluation.

(5) Adults can learn. After the first few class sessions had been conducted, I began to question the old adage, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks." I had seen too many instances of marked changes in the behavior of adults to no longer question such a belief. Psychological research bears out this observation. The studies of Thorndike and others have shown that the ability to learn increases rapidly until about the age of twenty. Then it remains approximately constant until about forty-five, at which time it tapers off. However, if an adult continues to exercise his ability to learn, that ability may not decrease at all, or only slightly, when he reaches the age of forty-five. We might do well to remember the words of Cato who when asked why he started to learn Greek at the age of eighty, replied, "What other age have I?"

(6) There is a lack of co-ordination among the various agencies of adult education. One of the characteristics of adult education seems to be a lack of co-ordination among various agencies. Some of the agencies of adult education are the public schools, university extension, agricultural extension, proprietary schools, vocational rehabilitation, libraries, museums, and social group work agencies. There are many gaps and overlappings in the offerings of these various agencies which could and should be eliminated.

These observations have implications which, as I have stated, might be of use to those engaged in any of the various programs of the church. Perhaps it might be in order to examine one of them to search for possible implications. The second observation listed above might serve as an illustration. Do we not often overlook the learners' interest when we plan a program? Might not a sermon on "brotherly love" be more effective if it began with the reading of a newspaper account of some local act of kindness or unkindness rather than with the reading of some appropriate text from the Scriptures? If the text is the Golden Rule, for example, many people lose interest immediately, for they have heard it so often they feel they will not learn anything new about it. On the other hand, if the sermon is begun with a newspaper account, many people will feel that the sermon may deal with some problem which they daily face, and they are interested in learning what religion has to offer in the way of a solution. The speaker can then buttress his remarks with many scriptural references, rather than expanding the one or two he has chosen for a text.

Do we not often attack a topic in what we assume to be a logical order, but which is not the best method? For example, a church school class studying the Book of Mormon often begins at the first of the book and takes it up chapter by chapter. The same is often true when we study the Bible. Goodspeed, in his book, How to Read the Bible, points out the folly of such a method. He reminds us that the Bible is not a book but a library and observes that ones does not read a library alphabetically or chronologically — he chooses books according to his interests. Might it not be better to organize a course for a church school class around some interest common to a certain age group; for example, many people in our church, when they become parents, encounter the problem of developing Christian character in their children. A class might be organized around such a topic with the Three Standard Book of the church and any other worth-while material being used as references.

Other observations have their implications. Perhaps these questions will suffice to indicate the nature of some: (a) Are the objectives of all the programs of adult education in the church (church school, women's department, Herald Publishing House, and priesthood institutes) clearly defined? (b) Have not church school classes too often been conducted in the same manner week after week, regardless of the objective? Have visual aids (charts, diagrams, maps, pictures, slides, and movies) been used whenever possible? (c) How often is any program evaluated objectively? (d) How closely co-ordinated are the various programs of adult education mentioned above?

This article is not to be interpreted as criticism of any of the church's various programs. Rather, it is hoped that these observations, made in the field of adult education, might provoke thought as to ways in which the work of the church might be carried on even more effectively.

could get to sit with them while she went to numerous clubs and parties. When they grew old enough to go to the movies alone, it was a relief to her distracted soul to get them out of the way.

Her family never has fun together. The children are always eager to go out with someone—usually, most anyone. Much of the time she does not know who they are with or what time they will get home. Since her family has not had a Christian home, they hardly know what one would be like. And since their education about alcohol and tobacco has come

Address of Welcome to Ozark Reunion Grounds Decoration Day, 1947

By WILLIAM PATTERSON

WE WELCOME you to your buildings and to your grounds, to our buildings and to our grounds, and to God's buildings and to his grounds where he will walk by our footsteps. I said "your grounds" because we want you to feel a sense of ownership and possession which will create personal responsibility for righteousness while on them; "our grounds" because we want all to feel that these grounds are purchased for the use and benefit of all who come here to worship and fellowship, and as a result of our association here we shall develop that sense of social responsibility and attitude that people will see in us the children of God because of our oneness; and we must not at any time forget that these are God's acres and by our attitude or conduct say or do that which will desecrate them.

When we contemplated purchasing reunion grounds three years ago, we did not expect to be so fortunate to secure such well-situated and adequate grounds as these, but thanks to the watchfulness and far-sightedness of Brother Ronald G. Smith our attention was directed to this place, which received the unanimous approval of the reunion committee and the members of the reunion association; and which, since its purchase, has increasingly become a shrine to us all. Nor did we expect to have such elegant, commodious, and conveniently arranged structures in so short a time. The improvements which you see are the results of the co-operative spirit of the members of your committee, to the good workmanship of Mr. Marion Eldred, the foreman, and his efficient and conscientious crew of workmen, to the justified confidence of the committee in the devotion, support, and sacrifice of the people of the Spring River and Rich Hill Districts, and to the general church officers whose approval and moral support together with a financial loan made it possible.

These grounds should be by us made a symbol for all for which the church stands, a training ground for Zion's living, a place of physical relaxation from secular affairs, of mental adjustment and spiritual awakening. A place of spiritual rejuvenation for young and old. As we partake of the refreshing waters from the springs, may we be persuaded to partake of the life of Christ which shall be in us "living water springing up unto eternal life." Welcome to these grounds, and in turn may you exhibit the spirit of welcome to all who come here.

from the radio, popular magazines, and motion pictures, what chance have they to escape the snares set for their unwary feet?

MRS. W is one of those unusual mothers who never seems to have any serious difficulties with her family. Her children are getting well into their high school years and are leaders in school activities. They never run the streets—never are interested in undesirable companions or wild parties. They are pleasantly polite to their elders and have the affectionate esteem of their neighbors wherever they go.

The W's are not rich people—in fact some people would think they were undesirably poor. In conversation with Mrs. W recently, she said, "We may never own a house but we have had many homes; a place where the children are always glad to come back to." Continuing our conversation, she said, "Some people are always having trouble finding sitters to stay with their children. We never have wanted anyone to stay with ours. They grow up and change so fast, I want every minute of their lives that I can have. We stayed at home with them when they were little, and liked it; now whenever we can, we all go out together. We have always had fun together." This consecrated Christian mother has not failed to instruct her family about the harm in alcoholic beverages and tobacco. Will John Barleycorn be able to deceive any of her flock?

For Young People Making Decisions

who admire and respect her? They are following her life as an example, and may not be as strong in turning down temptation. Perhaps this one act on her part would lead a life astray and in turn, many more, just as a good act may influence many to do good.

Then there is this point. In giving up dancing, did she not take one step forward on that straight and narrow path that leads to eternal life? Remember, there are two paths. We want the path that will bring us lasting happiness and eternal life, the path that will make us grow spiritually and bring about a better world. Are dancing, smoking, and drinking on this path?

Let us say, if you wish, these things done in moderation are not great sins (don't forget that these very things lead to great sins and the downward path) but we as Latter Day Saints cannot give our best in the service of the Master or attain the more abundant life if these things are a part of our life.

Young people, you will find that when you have a great love of God and Jesus in your hearts, when you have a burning conviction of this great gospel plan, your desire to do these things and other acts which will hinder you in any way in your spiritual growth will diminish, and as you continue to grow will cease to be a part of your life. Instead you will find a greater happiness coming into your life than ever before, even to the point that you will radiate this love and happiness to others. You will have new and wonderful experiences. You will find that nothing in the world will compare with the contentment and happiness that will be yours when you are serving God by serving his people. You will find sacrificing little things of this world, though they seem great at the time, will bring you such satisfaction and will lead you into the abundant life which is far greater than a few minutes of worldly happiness and pleasure.

May God bless you in making right decisions in life and realizing your responsibility of service to God and his church.

When Claude Monet, the great French artist, was eighty-one years old, he wrote to Sacha Guitry: "I've just been through a bad time with my work, but it is going better now and I'm hopeful of the future." To think of that, hopeful of the future at eighty-one! Yet there are men and women who surrender to old age at fifty. We keep our youth just as long as we retain our creativeness.

DEATHS

MARVEL.—Lucille LaVerne, was born November 11, 1910, at Knob Noster, Missouri, and passed away on April 22, 1947, at her home in Republic, Missouri. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of eight years in Ontario, California.

Surviving are her mother, Mrs. LaVerne Marvel; three brothers: Emery and Marshall of Republic, and Bernard of Monett, Missouri. Funeral services were held April 24 at the Reorganized Church in Springfield, Elder Francis M. Bishop officiating. Interment was in Green Lawn Cemetery.

EPPERSON.—Minnie E. Wicker, was born November 11, 1879, at Des Moines, Iowa, and died May 20, 1947, at the home of her daughter in Council Bluffs, Iowa, following a long illness. She was married to J. Roy Epperson on December 24, 1899; five children were born to this union. Mr. Epperson preceded her in death nine years ago. He was pastor of Shenandoah Branch for eight years and also served as associate pastor in Council Bluffs. Sister Epperson was always his faithful companion and helper; her special contribution was in the primary department of the church school.

She leaves two sons: Clarence and Leslie of Chicago, Illinois; three daughters: Mrs. Hazel Benton, Mrs. Harry Schropp, and Mrs. Homer Doty, all of Council Bluffs; three brothers: Ralph Wicker of Des Moines, Iowa; Harry Wicker, Red Top, Missouri; and Fred Wicker of Los Angeles, California; one sister, Mrs. Lovie Snook of Webb City, Missouri; and nine grandchildren. Services were held at the Woodring Funeral Home, Elders O. A. Currie and V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in the Walnut Hill Cemetery in Council Bluffs.

BUDWORTH.—Arabelle, was born March 24, 1866, at Muscatine, Iowa, and died February 27, 1947, at San Bernardino, California. She was baptized at Morrison, Oklahoma, in 1899 by William Aylor. She and her husband made their home available to all missionaries who visited Morrison, and, until her death, she was a faithful worker in the church.

She is survived by her husband, W. W. Budworth; four sons: Robert, Benjamin, Walter, and Clark; seven daughters: Mrs. Edna Brinkerhoff, Hazel Budworth, Carrie Sampman, Hester Vallen, Dora Curley, Bessie Rumar, and Reha Notmyer; eighteen grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. Interment was in Mountain View Cemetery in San Bernardino. Elder George H. Wixom was in charge of the funeral.

DAY.—Clara S., daughter of the late Peter and Clara Frederickson, was born December 30, 1895, at Oakland, California, and died April 29, 1947. She was baptized by Apostle John W. Rushton on August 23, 1918, and was always a faithful worker. She served as secretary for Berkeley Branch for several years and was supervisor of the Junior Dorcas Club. She was also a member of the V. F. W. Auxiliary and assisted as secretary and pianist in that organization. She was married July 5, 1919, to Charles Roy Day.

Besides her husband, she leaves one son, recently returned from overseas; three sisters, and a brother. The funeral service was held at the Little Chapel of the Flowers, Pastor Alma Andrews officiating.

POORT.—Albert William, was born in Sheboygan, Wisconsin, on October 27, 1878, and died at his home in Topeka, Kansas, following an extended illness (date of death not given). He was a member of the Reorganized Church. For many years, he worked as a carpenter and contractor.

He is survived by his wife, Maude, of the home; four daughters: Mrs. Erma Tindall, Compton, California; Naomi Poort of the home; Mrs. Merle Johnson and Mrs. Ruth Schoenfeldt of Topeka; four sons: Hugh, Centerville, Missouri; Orin J., Wichita, Kansas; Vernon J. and Herbert of Topeka; a sister, Mrs. Edna Hope of Topeka; three brothers: Cornelius, Menomonee, Wisconsin; John B., Mansfield, Missouri; and James, Harrison, Arkansas; twenty-three grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Topeka.

Travel Notes

It was a great pleasure to have the company of Brother James Barrington, one of our visiting British church members, as a companion on a journey from Independence, Missouri, to Plano, Illinois, two very important places in the history of the church. The route took us through some of the prettiest scenery in Missouri along highway U. S. 24 through Nauvoo northward along the Mississippi River and east on U. S. 34. Although he knows many beautiful scenes in his own country, Brother Barrington was kind enough to say, "It's very beautiful, and there's so much of it!" At Plano he was met by Brother Joseph Baldwin of Chicago, and taken to a plane on his way eastward toward his home.

Plano Saints are justly proud of the historical structure which they have in charge. This property is entirely maintained by a local congregation of seventy-five persons with the usual percentage carrying the burden of work and responsibility. Plano became headquarters of the church after the burning of Mechanics Hall in Amboy. The Publishing House was established there in 1863, and in 1865 young President Joseph Smith began his long career as editor, five years after he had accepted the Presidency of the church. The building that formerly sheltered the publishing house there has been moved to a new location and painted a clean white, and is now used as a dwelling. A bank stands on the spot it formerly occupied. The church seal was adopted in Plano.

Historic Plano Church has thick walls of stone. It was built well and but few cracks show in the masonry. It might last indefinitely. Plano Saints have lately been occupied in remodeling the basement for the Junior Church School Department. Upstairs there is lovely old-fashioned woodwork around the windows and good wainscoting. A very remarkable feature of the Plano Church is found in the heavy seats for the congregation. Old timers knew how to make them comfortable—much better, indeed, than most modern pews. The cast iron standards used as supports for the seats were made in Plano. They are in a pretty leaf and vine design. For some time members have wished to replace the seats, but now many are beginning to realize their importance as antiques and as a part of the history of the church. It is hoped that they will never remove them.

Many fine old church families are represented in the Plano Church. A well-known church missionary, Brother Lester Wildermuth, is retired there and takes a hand in local church affairs. His son, Richard W. Wildermuth, is an able pastor, sincerely devoted to the important work he does. Church work is the constant theme in the pastor's home, for Sister Wildermuth is district leader of the women's work, as well as the pastor's ablest assistant.

The way home from Plano led by the famous highway U. S. 66, which is now one of the most modern in the country. Wide and engineered slabs make almost any speed possible running southwest from Chicago, with four-lane arterials around the cities. U. S. 54 is older and does not get so much of the cross-country traffic, but leads through some of the prettiest regions of Illinois and Missouri. A visit to the city of Louisiana is very interesting for its fine old houses, its early commercial enterprise, its rugged scenery, and the great nurseries about it.

* Radio

A new church broadcast is now being made from KCBC in Des Moines, Iowa, 1390 kilocycles, each Sunday morning from 10:30 to 11 a.m.

Far and Near

I dugged the brown earth here and there
While countless bird songs filled the air.
And as I watched their flight on high
It seemed they almost reached the sky.
I thought as I turned back to the sod,
"How far it is to heaven and God!"

But as I lingered working there,
A lovely fragrance filled the air.
I saw the rose upon its stem,
And thought, "How close we are to Him."

The World in Danger

Biological Warfare

When in Grand Rapids recently, I suggested some of the things planned for aggressive warfare which may prove more deadly and more effective in winning wars than the atomic bomb.

John Hersey's book, Hiroshima, vividly portrays what happened to that unfortunate city, and news items from the tests at Bikini give us some idea of what atomic warfare may be.

Recently a lengthy report from the American Association of Scientific Workers brings to the public mind the possibilities of biological warfare in future world conflict.

The exploration was finished some years ago in an attempt to develop the most effective forms of germ warfare. Here are a few only of the methods planned: Botulinus toxin, to render water supplies deadly; anthrax bacillus; pneumonic plague; yellow fever virus; spotted fever; a whole group of germ diseases to destroy cattle and other animals. Germs would be sprayed over water reservoirs, on grass, even on fencing, to kill whole populations.

Time to Whistle in the Dark!

Nearly everyone recalls some childhood experience in which he has had to walk home late at night, alone, down some dark road or street where it was impossible to see clearly, and ominous shadows concealed all sorts of dangers, real or imaginary. No matter what terror filled the heart, he put on a bold front, nervously whistled some melody all out of tune, and marched on, hoping to get through unharmed. In later years we smile in amusement when we remember such an experience, and we indulge in derision when we observe other adults "whistling in the dark."

Beyond all question, the world is

After years of work, these methods are now ready to be put into practice.

Thus man proposes to use science and learning for ends no Machiavelli ever dreamed of until recently.

Atomic Energy

While many men of many nations are planning the use of atomic energy for war and devastation purposes, it is gratifying to know others have been striving to apply it to peaceful industrial purposes. Leonard Engel, author of World Aflame, is quoted as saying that "if we want it, we can have atomic energy to use—millions of kilowatts of it—in two or three years. In ten years we can be on the way to an atomic standard of living—cities without smoke, super-convenient mechanized homes, and an inexhaustible abundance of goods without long or desirable labor. That we are not already on the road to an atomic age is due more to political than to scientific or technical circumstances."

Alas, Mars has been given the right of way over the Goddess of Peace.

in the dark at the present time. The dread terror of the atom bomb, the fear of what the Russians may do, world-wide economic and political problems, dangers of new wars, collapse, and revolution, and many other perils both possible and real, all make our life seem very insecure and uncertain. Under these conditions, it is a long time since anybody has seen or heard of an old-fashioned optimist. Let an artist strike an average of the national countenance in any land, and the expression would be decidedly grim. We are not so much mad as scared. Some of our dangers are real and some imaginary.

Isn't it about time for somebody to begin whistling in the dark?

Say or think what you like, the suggestion is based on good psychology and common sense. It is better to be cheerful in the midst of danger than depressed. One's chance of survival, either by fight or flight, is much greater if the mind is in any degree at ease.

Suppose we are all to be destroyed anyway? It would be just as well to cultivate a few cheerful illusions and keep happy until the big explosion occurs.

Judging by past history, there will probably be some big explosions. But will they destroy us all? Let's explore that question a bit. It might help.

Through the centuries there have always been predictions of disaster, prophecies of ruin and destruction. The nervous people imagine that every heavy rain is going to drown the world. They think it will be shaken to pieces by every earthquake. A volcano eruption sets them dreaming of the earth being consumed by fire. People have always feared annihilation by one thing or another. The terror of the Middle Ages was the Black Death; of the First World War, poison gas; of the Second World War, buzz bombs and secret weapons; and of the present, the atom bomb and bacterial warfare.

Yet the world has always somehow managed to pull through its troubles and hurts. Most of humanity has survived. The terrible predictions and prophecies have generally fallen short of complete fulfillment. The embarrassment of false prophets is as regular as their appearance.

It may help us, as Christian people, to remember that God has an interest in this world, and a plan for the people. His purposes will not and cannot be frustrated. Isaiah saw this, and declared (45:18),

Presidential Travels

Sojourn to Michigan

The writer was recently invited by the Men's Club at Grand Rapids, Michigan, to be their guest speaker on May 29th. By arrangement with Elder A. E. Shotwell, I was privileged and happy to meet also the Saints there in a social way on Friday night (30th) and in a communion service on Sunday, June 1. I occupied at the eleven o'clock service on that day. While there I was a guest at the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Charles C. Babb.

The Saints at Grand Rapids recently sold their old building on Division Street, and are planning a new and adequate edifice in another part of the city. The site purchased I believe will prove to be well-chosen; it is amply large and in a fine neighborhood. The members are rallying under the genial leadership of Brother Shotwell.

I was pleased to greet Bishop Elmer Evans at the service on Sunday. Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and District President E. R. Carter, and his counselor, Charles Mottashed, met me upon my arrival at Grand Rapids; they were en route to other points in the field.

The Men's Club gives evidence of vigorous growth under the able leadership of Brother Ed Watson, and it was a privilege and pleasure for me to meet this fine group. Grand Rapids is a fine city, and I predict great things for our members there in the years immediately before them.

Anniversary at Council Bluffs

I recently had a pleasant experience at Council Bluffs, Iowa. The Saints there celebrated the eighty-fifth anniversary of its organization on May 11, 1862, by that grand veteran and Saint, Charles Derry. The services were planned by and under the able presidency of Brother V. D. Ruch, pastor. Two anniversary services were held at 8:30 and 11 a. m., on May 11, when I addressed the people; a meeting for reminiscence was held at 2 p. m., and Apostle D. T. Williams, Missionary in Charge, spoke at night. He also addressed the adult division at 9 a. m. Dinner was served at the church by the women at noon.

We were pleased to share our ministry there with Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who worshiped at Council Bluffs when a young lad, Brethren Williams, Ruch, Charles F. Putnam, and others.

The branch began with ten members, and now numbers about twelve hundred. The roster of its pastors is a long and notable one, including many who were or later became prominent in the work of the church.

Sister A. E. Dempsey, whose father was Elder James Caffall, a member of the Quorum of Twelve in an early day, is the oldest member in length of membership, having been baptized in 1866.

Their first church, dedicated in 1869 by Elders Alexander H. and David H. Smith, was later enlarged; but is now quite inadequate. A fine site for a new structure has been purchased, and, with funds in hand, the Saints of this place, a landmark in the Reorganization, have the right to anticipate they will soon be worshipping in a building suited to their increasing needs.

Across the Desk

Elder V. D. Ruch, Council Bluffs, Iowa:

The month of May has been an important one in Council Bluffs in that we celebrated the 85th anniversary of the organization of the branch. We had a very happy occasion on Sunday, May 16, when that event was observed. We had President Smith and Apostle Williams as our guest speakers, and they both made a fine contribution to the success of the day. Two identical meetings had to be held in the forenoon in order to accommodate the large attendance. We are pleased that the branch has had such a long existence and that it is moving along nicely.

The Enemy Within

"The Communist Party will systematically and persistently propagate the idea of the inevitability of the necessity for violent revolution, and will prepare the workers for armed insurrection as the only means of overthrowing the capitalist state."

Excerpt from the "Manifesto of the Communist Party of America," published in The Worker on Saturday, February 16, 1922:

"We know very well that capitalism cannot be abolished without the use of force."

Excerpt from an article in The Communist (monthly organ of the Communist Party) published in August, 1934:

"... The general strike does not come like a bolt from the blue. It comes on the rising tide of revolutionary mass action (demonstrations, partial strikes, etc.) and as a result of the persistent preparation which the Communists must make."

Excerpt from "Milestones in the History of the Communist Party," by Alex Bittelman, a Communist functionary, published by the Communist Party in 1937:

"It is no accident that the fifteenth anniversary of our party will be celebrated in a heightened revolutionary atmosphere generated by the great general strike in San Francisco which was of a nature of a historic vanguard battle in the developing revolutionary counter-offensive of the American proletariat."

"There are more San Franciscos to come with higher revolutionary consciousness among the masses and wider Communist leadership."—These quotations are taken from The Civic Bulletin, of June 21, 1946. Communism is paganism, the antithesis of freedom, the death of Christian morality and faith.

Lord Convert Me Tomorrow

By James N. Kemp

LIFE IS definitely composed of a series of decisions, some simple and very elementary, while others are very complex and of a magnitude beyond our comprehension. There are those who face daily choices with firmness. They resolve that, "this thing must be. I must, with whatever wisdom God has given me, select my path and through hard work and effort reach a degree of happiness in my life." Then there are others of us who continually strive to "side-track" decisions and take the easy channel of least resistance.

Remembering a man who has meant a great deal to the history of Christianity, I am reminded of the inward struggle of duty or pleasure he had to endure. He knew he had a Christian labor to perform. He also knew how great was his lust for the things of the world.

Augustine, a brilliant young man of the fourth century, knew and fought the will of God for almost twenty years. He was more than willing to relinquish his life to the man of sin, that he might not be troubled by his ever-nagging conscience. I am not upholding the doctrines and teachings of Augustine, for they would not be in harmony with the true gospel of Christ, but I am using him as a good example of the internal conflict of man. He was a teacher of the highest education of his period. He accepted two different philosophical religions as a substitute for Christianity. Yet, as he continued to study and read the various writers of his day, the conviction grew ever stronger that the religion of Christ, as he understood it, was true and nothing could ever replace it.

The turmoil increased. He knew Christianity to be true. He was unwilling to accept it because it deprived him of his sensual pleasures. Without those he could not see life, for he had always lived in the narrow sphere of sin and debauchery. Augustine had one attribute. He was honest, even with himself. When he prayed, it was after this fashion: "O Lord, make me pure and chaste, but not quite yet. For" he confesses, "I feared lest thou shouldest hear me soon, and soon cure me of the disease of concupiscence, which I wished to have satisfied, rather than extinguished"—Confessions, Book VIII: 17, page 163.

The psychology of Satan is very effectual. His ever-present power of suggestion is that life as we have been living it is fine. If we will continue just as we have in the past, letting the natural, physical urges govern our behavior, we are doing nothing that will cause us to deteriorate spiritually. He has crept into our lives so strongly that to sin is the natural thing to do. Are we no longer conscious of the contest between good and evil? King Benjamin says, "For the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam, and will be, for ever and ever."—Book of Mormon, Mosiah 1: 119, page 218. Our decisions must be made after listening to the kindly advice of the Holy Comforter who tells us to put off the natural man and become a saint.

How many of us are crying in our prayers, "Lord! Lord! convert me. But not yet! I still have a few wild oats to sow. I still have those habits that are two pleasurable to dispense with. I have friends whom I couldn't give up just yet. I have within me the ability to become famous, to accomplish great things in this world. Dear God, I am young, with most of my life before me. I know that thou art a true and understanding God, so bear with me just a little longer. When I have ceased to be full of youthly vigor, when I have satisfied my worldly lusts and desires, then I will be a worker. In the twilight hours of my full life will I turn to thee and give unto thee what is left. Please, Lord, convert me. But not today!"

This is not a missionary endeavor. This is not a plea for worthy people to enter the waters of baptism. This is an appeal to you and me to open our eyes, to recognize our talents and our limitations, to utilize our strength while we are yet young and say with spiritual fervor, "Here am I, Lord, send me!"

There are many Latter Day Saints who are still crying, "Lord, convert me, but not yet!" Many of these Saints are extremely talented but refuse to give their services. When approached they give the same answers they have been giving for years, "I would like to help, but I just don't have the time. Maybe next fall I will be in a position to do more." Fall is the "tomorrow" that never comes. Years later these same people look with longing on the younger generation and meditate over the past, the wasted years. Talents that are not used soon grow stagnant and cease to be talents at all. While we are crying, "Lord, not yet!" our talents are sinking into obscurity.

We must adopt a definite course of action in this span of time that is fast fading. We cannot wait for the completion of our worldly desires. There are not enough "tomorrows" left in which to be converted. We must take our place in the legions of Christ, today.

I hope I shall always possess firmness and virtue enough to maintain what I consider the most enviable of all titles, the character of an "Honest Man." — Washington, Moral Maxims.

The World Today

By Fred Alexander

IT IS NOW a foregone conclusion that President Truman will veto the 30 per cent tax-cut bill that passed both houses of Congress by uncomfortably slim margins last week. Evidence shown in various polls taken in recent weeks reveals that the majority of the public will not care. They want debt reduction more than they want tax reductions.

The small, but powerful, minority of big business men with huge incomes are the ones who are squirming because of this development. To them the income tax cut would mean thousands of extra dollars left in the till. The tax reduction bill is not the political dynamite that pending labor legislation in Congress has turned out to be. From all indications the President will veto the labor bill that Congress will finally accept. Chances are that the House will rebel and override the veto, but the Senate is a big question mark. Best bet is that the Senate will also override, and the bill will become law.

Reason: the Senate version of labor legislation is much more mild than the severe House bill. The conference committee to hammer both bills into one has tended to swing toward the Senate version thus making for a much more acceptable piece of legislation to the Congress as a whole.

One thing is sure, the bill will be passed or not passed on one consideration only—the political consequences. Most all congressmen think some remedial legislation is necessary and that some legislation is better than none at all. If a veto held, it might mean no labor legislation at all for this session of Congress. Congress is thinking seriously now about the possibility of an economic recession which will probably be in full swing by the first of 1948. Nothing will be done about it in this session of Congress. The people would not accept legislation along this line at present, because there are far too many who still believe that a recession is just a figment of the national imagination.

Recession will hit us hardest next year when other countries begin to find themselves unable to buy U. S. exports . . . and the United States must have exports to keep the national economy functioning. Possible legislation to remedy the situation will mean spending more money to get needy countries back on their feet so they can buy what we have to sell. A shot in the arm to these countries might mean that the impending recession could be stalled off or made less severe.

One thing is sure, the U. S. has got to feed the kitty or pay the piper—and the piper's price might turn out to be a bitter dose.

* * * * *

SOME PEOPLE LAUGHED when Herbert Hoover suggested making a separate peace with Germany. But now they're laughing on the other side of their faces because the State Department was thinking just the same thing in secret. Best guess is that a separate peace will be made with Germany sometime in January, 1948. Russia will remain aloof.

The U. S. will probably pour millions of dollars into Germany in order to build up German industry. If we don't, Russia will take over and extend its huge program of exploitation. The battle between the U. S. and Russia for world domination is shaping up with Russia playing silent man and the U. S. aiming for the squeeze play, attempting to isolate Russia and cut her tentacles. Main U. S. weapon: U. S. dollars.

It sizes up this way. If we don't spend money now, we invite a severe economic depression and world domination by Russia. A depression in this country would be the signal for a super campaign by the Soviets inside the United States—a campaign to incite hatred and revolution. The implications of such a threat point a menacing finger in the direction of armed conflict. Along the general topic of war, a new book has just been published by the Dial Press called, World Aflame, the Great War Between Russia and the United States in 1950. If you have trouble with oversleeping, just read this little tome, it'll keep you awake all night for weeks!

Recordings on Stone Church Organ

On October 12, 1946, the day before the old Stone Church organ was dismantled, several recordings were made by Bethel Davis Knoche to preserve its voice for those who loved this old instrument. Orders are now being accepted for these recordings on 12-inch double-faced vinylite plastic records. The titles available are:

Largo, by Handel, and Traumerei, by Schumann

One Hour With Jesus, and Redeemer of Israel

The Old, Old Path, and God Is Marching His Army.

The hymn records could be used to accompany congregational singing. They play on any standard phonograph at 78 RPM. Price, $2.00 per record (two selections), postage paid. Cash in advance or C.O.D. Order from the Radio Department, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. tf

Radio Programs

Effective Sunday, June 29, the schedule of church radio programs over KMBC, 980 kilocycles, will be as follows:

6:30 a.m. to 6:45 a.m., Monday through Saturday, Morning Devotions, with Evan Fry and Dan Sorden.

SUNDAY

7:45 a.m. to 8:00 a.m., THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY. Ralph Freeman, reader; Beatrice Mengel, organist.

11:00 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., Stone Church Choir, with sermon by Dan Sorden.

5:30 p.m. to 6:00 p.m., Wayside Chapel.

10:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., Studio Service, with sermon by Evan Fry.

What Is Achieved in Baptism?

By E. Y. Hunker
Senior President of Seventy

THE purpose of this presentation is not to prove that immersion is the proper mode of baptism. That it is, is so clearly maintained by immersionists and so frequently admitted by non-immersionists that the field on that score is quite thoroughly cleared. It is desired that the essential nature of baptism be set forth. And insofar as this is done at all effectively, immersion in water as the only correct mode will be substantiated as definitely as it would be by a critical study of the etymology of the word "baptism" itself. The essential nature of baptism will be evident and significant for us in the measure of our comprehension of His nature who instituted the ordinance and commanded compliance therewith.

Baptism is:

- A. An ordinance:
 1. a) That which is decreed or ordained, as by God or fate.
 - b) A prescribed practice or usage.
 2. Eccl.—An established rite for the administration of a sacrament; hence, a sacrament. — Webster.
- B. A sacrament:
1. Eccl.—One of certain religious ceremonies distinguished in Christian rites as instituted or recognized by Christ. . . . According to some, sacraments were instituted by Christ as the visible means by which divine grace is sought and conferred; according to others, they are observed in memory of him and as a sign, seal, or symbol of a Christian experience or profession.
 2. A token or symbol.
 3. A spiritual covenant, as between God and man.—Webster.
 4. "Primarily, what is meant by a sacrament is the symbolizing and mediating of spiritual values through material means and processes."—J. W. Rushton, Herald, July 27, 1946, page 5 (709).
 5. "A sacrament in the theological sense requires three things, (a) a material thing as a fitting symbol, (b) the consecrating authority of the priesthood; (c) the attitude of the participant in the sacrament."—Ibid.

It is an ordinance and rite enjoined by Deity. A command to be complied with. In its order and position, it is an outward symbol to typify some of the most important and essential processes in the "several co-ordinate elements of salvation" that have already taken place. There are, however, other processes of salvation contingent upon and subsequent to compliance with the outward rite, without which salvation never can be complete. Hence, baptism is an ordinance essential to salvation.

Baptism: Why it is:

It is a divine command. Faith in God presupposes our recognition of our finiteness and limitations as compared to his infinite wisdom and knowledge. When, therefore, we are confronted with a divine command, we must begin our experience with God as Adam did—knowing no reason for obeying other than that he whom we believe and trust has commanded it. See Genesis 4: 4-6, I. V. Consequently, our experiences through the exercise of faith ripen into sufficient knowledge to teach us that back of God's commands, because of his omniscience, are sound reasons, grounded in truth and universal law. As Plato said, "Law is an expression not of God's will but of God's intellect."

It is properly symbolic. Human needs for symbols is inherent in the very nature and being of man: man is "object" minded. This is evident from observation of human traits the world over. It is demonstrated in the desire of the soul for outward tokens to objectify the inner emotions, understandings, or desires, and to clarify the mental concept. For example, note the handshake, the kiss, the engagement ring, the signature or mark of personal identity sealing a contract or agreement between persons, and other manifestations by outward acts which serve to objectify and accelerate the processes of learning. They augment the rate and degree of responsiveness to the presentation of things or ideas. Not alone the fact of objects, but the form, type, and color play an important role in effectiveness of attention, insight, and impression. It is difficult, if not impossible, for man to grasp abstract truth and thought without the function of objective imagery.

God, who made man, has always known these needs were inherent in man. "Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand?"—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12. And the answer to Adam, through an angel was, "This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father."—Genesis 4: 7, I. V. And God's own direct answer, "Behold, all things have their likeness: and all things are created and made to bear record of me; both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; and things which are on the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, . . . and under the earth."—Genesis 6: 66.

In the gospel plan, through the church, there are divinely instituted ordinances and sacraments to be performed with ritual and ceremony. These are simple, meaningful, and to the point. Their very simplicity, in fact, endows them with greater force and effectiveness. God did not institute a great deal of ritual—not too much—but enough. Enough to carry across the lessons we should learn. Enough to enhance the beauty and significance of what he desires to teach. Enough to meet the need inherent in human nature. But not so much that men would become involved in the mechanics of formality to the exclusion or loss of the spirit of religion. Rather, sufficient to aid man to enter more into the spirit and purpose of Deity's great cause in which we are to collaborate and assist until the whole world is won to God and to his way of life. Baptism is such an ordinance and symbol—instituted by command of God—and as such it is a law of gospel principle and of the more abundant life. It is worthy of our sincerest observation and respect. As a law, it is in harmony with the true natural law, which Cicero, in his De Legibus, describes as right reason and of which he said: "There is indeed a true law, right reason agreeing with nature and diffused among all, unchanging, everlasting." The law of baptism is no innovation in the plan of God. It was revealed when the antiquity of the gospel made it contemporaneous with the beginning of Biblical history in the dawn of man's earth life. (Priesthood Journal, October, 1939, page 3, topic 2.)

Baptism—true and complete—is far more than immersion. Were the entire significance of baptism alone in a burial in water, it might be argued by some that the disobedient who perished in the flood in Noah's day were all baptized. There is no doubt as to their being buried in water. But they were not baptized; they were drowned. They were not saved; they perished.

Not even priestly authority in performing the outward rite imparts to baptism all that is required to make it fully significant. There must be, too, as has been shown, the correct attitude of the candidate to validate it as a sacrament. This is well stated by J. M. Frost. "Baptism as a physical act is quite ordinary, altogether commonplace—simply the immersion of a person in water; but baptism as a Christian ordinance is altogether extraordinary, passes at once into the sphere of the sublime, and becomes possessed of a moral grandeur unsurpassed, possibly unequalled in any other human act. . . . Manifestly baptism cannot be studied by itself as a single act. It has inseparable associations and connections within which lie its significance and moral dignity as an act of Christian obedience."—Moral Dignity of Baptism, pages 15, 16.

There are certain prerequisites if baptism is to be meaningful and effectual in its symbology and fruitage. These are (1) proper instruction (preaching and/or teaching); (2) genuine repentance from dead works; and (3) faith toward God and Christ. Without these no candidate can enjoy the full and rich experience and benefits made available through baptism.

It is believed by some, and their idea is worthy of our intelligent consideration, that those were wise translators who refused to translate literally as immersion the Greek word for water baptism. There is a spiritual essence and quality that inheres in the ordinance, so it can be said that, "as the body without the spirit is dead," likewise water baptism without spiritual baptism is dead. The soul of baptism is something like the soul of man. The physical man is the instrumentality or medium of expression for the spiritual man. The spiritual man is actually the essential man. But it is only when the physical man and the spiritual man are properly joined together that man is a living soul—the complete man. The analogy is, "The baptism of water and of the Holy Spirit are of essential importance to man's salvation. That in their spiritual meaning, and therefore their complete meaning, they form one baptism, is evidently conveyed by Paul when he declares: "there is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—Ephesians 4: 4-6 (Priesthood Journal, October, 1939, page 2).

Baptism: What it achieves:

As has previously been asserted, baptism is a divine ordinance, instituted by God for the salvation of man. "It consummates faith and repentance and makes effective the atonement of Christ. We are hereby born again, through compliance with one of the requirements of the celestial [the highest] kingdom. Because the atonement makes possible the resurrection at which time we take on again our bodies, they must be cleansed from all unrighteousness if we are to inherit the glory designed of God for those who believe and obey the gospel. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper keeps baptism a working principle in our lives until the resurrection is consummated."—L. W. Stiegel.

Ecclesiastics representing different religious bodies disagree in opinion as to the merits of the act of baptism by or in water. Some say that baptism is "an outward sign of an inward grace." This inward grace, they argue, is attained prior to baptism, brought to pass through the processes of faith and repentance which effect regeneration, or the new birth, independent of the outward ordinance of baptism. Baptism is therefore not essential to salvation, but is a sealing ordinance for those already saved by grace. (Baptist view.—J. M. Frost in Moral Dignity of Baptism, pages 32, 33). Others, especially the Anglicans or Episcopalians, assert, especially in regard to baptized infants, that "in the act of baptism we are made members of Christ, children of God, inheritors of the kingdom of heaven." (Prof. Wm. Adams, D.D., Professor of Systematic Divinity in Nashotah Theological Seminary, Wisconsin, Regeneration in Baptism, 1871). Our own view is probably best expressed in the words of Joseph Smith: "Being born again, comes by the spirit of God through ordinances."

The new birth comes about through a series of progressive steps. It is not consummated in one single act at one single point. Somewhere, near its beginning, faith and repentance tremendously augment the process. It unfolds to the stage where some symbol or act is desired and required to objectify the urge and decision to leave off the old man of sin, and, as a new man, to be completely submerged in God and Christ. "All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and truly before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their work that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7 (B. of M. 762: 1-4).

Here, at this stage, man needs a symbol as a mark of obedience for which he is now ready. He seals his decision in the symbolic act of baptism. But his new birth is not yet complete. He does not yet breathe the breath of life. He must be quickened from heaven, by and in the baptism of the Holy Spirit. "And the first-fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God."—Book of Mormon, page 771: 29. In water baptism, man puts forth his hand to covenant with God. In spirit baptism, God grasps the hand of man and seals the covenant. There is truly something glorious and deeply significant that transpires in and through baptism—and not until. The "earnest of our inheritance" is not granted until after water baptism.—(See Genesis 6: 67-69, I. V.; also Priesthood Journal, October, 1939, page 52).

In baptism is demonstrated in a dramatic manner the marvelous transition from the old life to the new life. "No mere change of mind will satisfy the demands of a new life. Something must happen to break the power of the sin which the love of God has canceled, and the power of sin lies in the very nature of the sinner. He has sinned because of what he has been, body and spirit. He now needs to become a new man, body and spirit. He does so by the grace of God. But the symbol of this change, and the point at which it becomes socially effective and recognizable, is the act of baptism in water; a bodily renewal having spiritual significance."—F. H. Edwards, Priesthood Journal, July, 1942, page 65.

Through baptism we achieve a sense of life in proper perspective and proportion. There comes a balance of the entire personality. Our Heavenly Father designed, and desires, through the plan of salvation, to bring men to a correct oneness in intelligently integrated personality.

In baptism we portray and wield obedience to God. Adam asked: "Why is it that men must repent, and be baptized in water?" God replied: "By reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit I have made, and so became of dust a living soul; even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of Mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory. For by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified."—Genesis 6: 54, 61, 62. (Read also to end of chapter).

In baptism we seal a most important decision. Here we determine a course from which we ought never to deviate. We no longer halt. We choose to go forward. We cross a certain line which involves destiny in a terrific way. As Cæsar said in grim decision and unwavering purpose as he plunged into the Rubicon: "The die is cast."

In baptism we symbolize our enlistment under the banner of King Emmanuel. Here it is that we openly and irrevocably vow our fealty. We pledge faith, obedience, loyalty, and devotion to God and his church. It is this that imparts to baptism as a sacrament, one of its loftiest interpretations, derived from the sense of the Latin Sacramentum, in which the Roman soldier took oath of allegiance to defend and support the Roman Empire.

Based upon the above premise, we may say that "baptism puts us under bond to live a holy life," from which we achieve a sense of obligation—first to God. Then as spiritual life and experience quicken and broaden our scope of social consciousness, we sense an obligation to the body of believers with whom we are joined in the enterprise of building the ideal brotherhood and social order—Zion. "The men who were baptized by John were not looking forward to death and to salvation after death, but to the coming of Messiah. They repented and accepted the badge of baptism in order to have a share in the blessings of the kingdom and to escape the imminent judgment of the Messiah. Baptism was then the mark of a national and social movement toward a new era, and was a personal dedication to a righteous social order. This original idea of baptism was practically lost to the Christian consciousness in later times. Every man who today realizes the kingdom of God as the supreme good, can reaffirm his own baptism as a dedication to the social ideal and to the leadership of Jesus who initiated it. Such a social interpretation of our personal discipleship will bring us into closer spiritual agreement with the original aim of Christianity."—Rauschenbusch, in Social Principles of Jesus. "No conviction is more necessary among men who today would build a better world than the conviction that they are engaged in an enterprise which crowns the yearning of the ages, which can only succeed as it is enriched with the wisdom of the ages, which must go forward under the Lord of all ages, and for which they must be born anew."—F. H. Edwards, Priesthood Journal, July, 1942, page 68.

In the act of baptism, we definitely identify ourselves with the body of Christ. We get the sense of belonging to a group, of being an integral part of this particular body of people. "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." We are engrafted into the main trunk of the vine, so the life of the vine is imparted to the engrafted branch. It is a wonderful privilege to be integrated into the organism of the living body of Christ, the church, and to be enlivened by the life and vitality that flows to every fiber and cell. Here is the fellowship essential to the brotherhood required for the bringing in of the kingdom of God on earth. Men must be brought back to "God and into a new and stronger fellowship with each other." "And he did teach them, and did preach unto them repentance, and redemption, and faith on the Lord. And it came to pass that he said unto them, Behold, here are the waters of Mormon; for thus were they called. And now, as ye are desirous to come into the fold of God, and to be called his people, and are willing to bear one another's burdens, that they may be light; yea, and are willing to mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and to stand as witnesses of God at all times, and in all things, and in all places that ye may be in, even until death, that ye may be redeemed of God, and be numbered with those of the first resurrection, that ye may have eternal life: now I say unto you, if this be the desire of your hearts, what have you against being baptized in the name of the Lord."—Book of Mormon, page 258: 37, 41.

In baptism we obey the command of God. This unlocks the door to the baptism of the Holy Spirit. This is "the initiatory rite of entrance into the spiritual body, the true spiritual Church of Christ." There is hereby indicated one of the greatest experiences of all—"baptized into Christ"—truly submerged into him, into his spirit, into his way of life, into his work, into his love, and into his nature, the actual "putting on of Christ."—Galatians 3: 27. "To be at one with God we must be freed from sin, which is attained through the divine forgiveness and the atonement of Christ. In the act of baptism is symbolized this cleansing of the soul."—Priesthood Journal, October, 1939, page 24.

In baptism, furthermore, we are helped to envision and commemorate three tremendously important and moving events in the mission of our Lord: (1) his death for our sins, (2) his burial, and (3) his resurrection. This typifies something we greatly need to do, and we need, too, the sense of its being done in us, viz., our death to sin, and our spiritual resurrection. "We have rightly magnified baptism as burial, but have not given sufficient emphasis to baptism as a resurrection."—Frost. Baptism is a figure indicating the victory of our Lord over sin and death, and a prophecy that for those who continue a life of righteousness beginning at the new birth, the victory will be consummated in the future resurrection of the dead. "Along the track of the ages," says Frost, "God's plan has been to mark the great events through which he worked out the fullness of his purposes, and to leave some monument to commemorate what he had done."—Frost, in Moral Dignity of Baptism, page 25.

The ordinance of baptism, with its varied phases of rich symbology, is like a rare diamond with many facets. It catches the light at varied angles in arresting, appealing, unsurpassed beauty and meaning. As you think about the ordinance, its purpose, and nature, can you conceive of any mode other than immersion that would appropriately and adequately objectify all it is intended to convey?

"Baptism is designed precisely to objectify the facts of repentance and rebirth, and it liberates within those submitting thereto, forces and powers which remake man. The baptismal font was instituted as a type of the grave. The candidate submits himself to the minister voluntarily, enters that grave as a symbol of his spiritual death, yields himself to the representative of Christ in the

Make a Date - - and Keep It!

THERE IS a well-known maxim which says: "A turtle never gets anywhere until he sticks his neck out!" I ask, "Does anyone?" Just being born into this world constitutes sticking out one's neck; because the obligation comes with that birth to eat, to grow, and to make one's place in the world; and the place one makes for oneself in the world is controlled by just when, where, and why one sticks his neck out.

People the world over are very much the same—they don't get much done without first obligating themselves. So the first requisite toward getting something done is to obligate ourselves. Make a date,—and keep it!

HOW DOES IT happen that anything ever gets done? Does it just happen that dinner is ready at six o'clock, or haven't we actually made a date and kept it? Does it just happen that we get to church at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning, or haven't we made a date and kept it? Many dates are made that are never intended to be kept. It is my observation that people actually keep dates to do the things they really want to do.

For instance, one night we drove nine miles to the next town through a blinding snowstorm in near zero weather just to see a picture that we had decided the week before we wanted to see; and whenever I am tempted to remain home from something just because of inclement weather, I recall our wild drive that night just to see a movie; and I resist the temptation.

Then, on the other side of the ledger, I recall the time we drove seventy miles to a district conference, threatened constantly by floods which might have endangered our lives. Later we learned that less than an hour after we had passed a certain section of the road it was completely washed out. Often we have remarked that if we wanted to do something we would do it in spite of "hell and high water." We didn't know about the "hell," but we certainly hit the "high water" to attend that conference.

In both instances, we had made a date to do certain things, and we had kept those dates.

VERDA E. BRYANT

I HAVE LEARNED that it is of little avail to say to our friends, "Come over and see us sometime." "Sometime" is no time to get together, for "sometime" never seems to come. It is much better to make a definite date—and keep it.

I had a friend—a lonely friend—whom I had always intended to ask to lunch that we might "chin over the food," become better acquainted, relieve some of her apparent loneliness, and enjoy each others' fellowship; but I was always so busy that I never got around to asking her. Now it is too late—my opportunity has flown—for she has gone on to that place where there is no need for lunches, where there is peace and comfort, and where she is no longer lonely; and I am left to bemoan the fact that I didn't make a date!

As I look back over my life and my work in the church, I can see that the only things I have done are those to which I definitely obligated myself; and the many things I wanted to do and which I often wish I had done, have been left undone, actually because I did not stick my neck out! There are some things I wanted to do with the Stone Church Blue Birds this past winter, but I didn't make a date to keep, and now it is spring, Conference has come and gone, and it is too late; and I can only resolve that henceforth when I want to do something I will make a date—and keep it!

ZION WILL NEVER be built by a people who just desire to build Zion. Desire must be converted to a desire if we are to get the job done. We may acknowledge the fact that there is work to be done, that someone must pitch in and do it; but until the realization hits us squarely in the face that the person who must pitch in and do it is the person we see when we look in the mirror, Zion will remain only a goal, and Jesus will have to delay his coming still longer.

As we look in the mirror, we acknowledge the fact that we are good Latter Day Saints, that we do want to see Zion built, and that we do want to help in that building. However, right now all we can do is to get out to church on Sunday morning and to prayer services on Wednesday evening, because there are so many routine duties to take up our time; there is the living to make or the home to be kept, and the children to rear; but, we tell ourselves, after Timmy and Trudy grow up, then we'll help. Is that a date? Will

we keep it?

What might prevent us from keeping it? After Timmy and Trudy have grown up, there may be a little Timmy or a little Trudy who needs our attention; lumbago might settle in our backs; or we may feel it's a case of "you can't teach an old dog new tricks"—that inasmuch as we've never taught a class, or led a group of youngsters, we won't know how, and feel we are just too old to start in now to learn. Besides, the youngsters will get on our nerves; and we reason that Zion should be built by the young—those with zeal and forcefulness—not by those in the later years of their lives.

Any of a dozen things might come up to prevent us from keeping such a date, and the realization comes to us that because we have never taken an active part in the building of the kingdom, our Timmy and our Trudy—in the prime of their lives—aren't very much interested in Zion-building.

SO, LET'S NOT make the date for so far ahead; let's make it for now!

Mark the date on our calendar of the next women's department meeting—then go!

Is there someone sick or lonely who needs a friendly call?—then call!

Are teachers needed in the church school?—then teach!

Are leaders needed for a week-day activity for the youngsters to tie them in closer to their church?—then lead them!

Will our pastor please suggest how we can help in the work of the church in our branch?—then work!

There is a place for everyone in the building of the kingdom, and it can only be done if we make a date—and keep it!

But, we ask, what of the time it will take from our routine duties? What will we do with our Timmy and Trudy? What of the scrubbing, the laundry, the ironing, the dishes, the daily cleaning and dusting?

Why not take Timmy and Trudy along and they, too, will absorb some of the life-giving strength which comes from associating with, and working with, those who are building the kingdom. They will learn how to conduct themselves in a group, come to the realization that they are not the center of attraction—the only jewels in the crown (as they are apt to become in the home)—but that they are a part of a larger whole and become jewels only as they earn their place in that crown.

While ironing, scrubbing, and doing dishes, great plans can be laid; it takes only arm power, not brain power, to do these tasks.

As to our routine tasks, there are few of us who do not waste some time. True, if we add several hours of work a week to our routine, there will not be so much time to talk over the back fence with our neighbor as we hang up the washing, but what have we missed if we haven't heard the whole story of Aunt Jane's brother-in-law's mother's troubles? And if we have to remind our telephoning friend that we are due at church in half an hour and we still have to comb our hair, we won't hear all the gossip about how scandalously Mary Smith's Johnny is carrying on with Jane Doe's Susie; but as we work into our important job of Zion-building, the troubles of Aunt Jane's relatives, and the carrying-on of two teen-agers will be important to us only in that we may find some way to help them.

Then again, we can learn that it is no disgrace to neatly stack the dishes until we get home from the meeting; that the extra couple of hours the beds are aired while we make that call and before we get them made will improve our sleep that night; and that two days' dust on the mantel dusts off as readily as one day's—perhaps more readily because with a light heart that comes from having a reason for the hope that is within us, our work becomes easier, and we swing through it in jig time.

The dishes, the beds, and the dust will very patiently await our return.

I, who would run when my Heavenly Father bids me to walk, find a lesson in the patience of my housework. If I could only have such patience! If I could just bide my time and take things in my stride, knowing that eventually things will work out for the right—as does my housework—instead of jumping in where angels fear to tread to get things done my way and now, I would save myself, and others, much grief.

Then, too, if we make a date—and keep it, there is no time to be bored with the routine of life. We've just so much routine work that has to be done, and we whiz through it because we have a date and we are going to keep it and we find that actually we get just about as much done as we would if we didn't keep our date.

We find we have more friends whose interests are the same as ours, whose dates correspond with ours and with whom we have more enjoyment in planning and accomplishing those things which will further the cause of Zion, than we ever had gossiping with those who have not this goal, and we wonder how we could ever stand to live without these friends we have made while working for Christ and his church.

So, in order that we may help in the building of the kingdom of God on earth, in order that we may speed the second coming of our Saviour, in order that we may give new meaning to our own lives, let us take stock of our talents and the jobs that need to be done, give of our time and our energy, stick our necks out, and then make a date—and keep it!

Let us strive to improve ourselves, for we cannot remain stationary: one either progresses or retrogrades.—Mme. du Deffand.

The things taught in schools and colleges are not an education, but the means of education.—Emerson, Journal, 1831.

They Loved to Learn About Worship

By Thelona D. Stevens

One of the popular courses of the past year has been that on Worship, using the text prepared by C. B. Hartshorn, "Let Us Worship." This excellent course has been the means of bringing many into deeper appreciation of what true worship means, and the interest which has been shown in this course proves that leaders and lay members alike are anxious to develop the ability to truly worship. Both individuals and classes report enthusiastically their enjoyment of the course. More than a few have expressed their regrets when the end of the course was reached.

A WHOLE DISTRICT STUDIES

A few weeks ago Brother John Rogers, District Director of Religious Education in Eastern Michigan District, reported to this department a plan whereby the entire district might study this course on worship. The plan was this:

There would be two classes. The first would be in the northern half of the district, and would combine Bay Port, Caseville, and Owendale with Brother Rogers as teacher, assisted by Eldon Winters, a Grace-land graduate. Elder H. E. C. Muir, of Valley Center, would organize the second class in the southern half of the district.

Brother Rogers observed: "If this plan is completed, the whole district will have had an opportunity to take this course."

Now the first class has finished the course, and a few days ago this department issued course cards for twenty-eight members. The report from the director, however, told a yet more interesting story:

"There are three or four more who will complete the work. . . . It is always good when most of the class members complete the work, but I feel that the outstanding feature of this class was the devotion and unity that existed at each session. . . . Although our enrollment was thirty-nine, our attendance was between fifty and seventy throughout the series."

Then Brother Rogers referred to the class being organized in the southern part of the district: "Our second class in Worship is now getting under way, and we shall send you the enrollments next week. It appears that our attendance will be smaller than in the first class, but we have a number of our leaders, and by working through them, we trust the work will go forward."

Thus, we see the whole Eastern Michigan District goes to school to learn more about planning and conducting worship services in the various church services and also in the home.

THESE LOVED IT, TOO

Sister Lois Shipley, Director of Religious Education for the Spring River District, served as the teacher of a class in Miami, Oklahoma, in this same subject, and was most enthusiastic about the outcome of the class. Before each class session they had a short (not over five minutes) worship service, illustrating the various types. By way of appreciation, she says: "I am sure Brother Hartshorn would be gratified if he could have heard some of the discussion on his presentations. I might say that the class 'just ate it up' and agreed that the use of many of the suggestions sound appealing. The methods are being used by those leaders who took the course, too."

A very interesting feature of Sister Shipley's report is a list of the branch officials who attended and completed the work for credit, which included:

E. G. Gilbert, Church School Director; Marjorie Gilbert, Children's Leader; Ethel Gaston, Music Leader; Ermajean Jackson, Women's Leader; Hazel Rook, Women's Department Teacher; Melva Sample, Zion's League President; Alma Sample, Librarian; Walter Sample, Branch Solicitor; and four church school teachers: Helen Adams, Gladys Goettel, Edna Klimek, and Esther Wilson.

There were nine others who also completed the course, making a class of twenty-one to receive credit for their work.

The awarding of the course cards was planned for a time when the District President, William Patterson, could be there to preside at the worship service which preceded the presentation of the cards. A candle-lighting vesper service was arranged, based on the worship suggestions for March 10, 1946, in the Herald of February 2, 1946. (This department will send copies of the order of the service adapted by the Miami class, if desired.)

If you are interested in studying this course, or any others, our department will gladly furnish full details, which are in Bulletin No. 102, sent free on request. Just write to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Tribute to Mary George

A true mother in Israel, Mary E. Hulmes George died on March 8 at the age of eighty-eight. She was an example of a real Christian; with her, God's work was always first. She loved the Restored Gospel and her home was always open to missionaries. E. C. Briggs, A. H. Parsons, O. B. Thomas, and S. F. Cushman were among those who shared this hospitality. Sister George reared four motherless children as well as two of her own. Those who knew her can say, as J. J. Cornish said to his good wife, "Little mother, we shall meet on the morning of the first resurrection."

Missions Abroad Project

That $25,000 Fund and How to Raise It

By F. M. McDowell

The General Director of Religious Education whose department is responsible for the general supervision of the Zion's League, here explains the special "Missions Abroad Project," provides detailed instructions as to procedure to be followed by district and local Leagues throughout the church, and summons all to action.

It's Time for Action

The Saints' Herald for May 31, constitutes, almost from cover to cover, a "Call to Action" addressed to members of Zion's League throughout the world. The $25,000 Missionary Project has now been officially launched. Indeed, it is on its way. The young people of the church through the General Zion's League Council asked for it and got it—just like that. There is no turning back now. Anyway, who wants to turn back?

What's needed now are a few detailed plans and many months of good, honest toil. To help get the ball rolling, we submit the following:

What It's all About

The church wide Zion's League is undertaking the task of raising a fund of $25,000, a major portion of which will be used by the general church in promoting missions abroad. A small portion of this fund will be used to purchase two bronze busts of the late President Smith. (For complete information see Saints' Herald, May 31, 1947.)

Who Started It?

This project originated in the office of the Presiding Bishopric of the church during an interview with a committee representing the General Council of Zion's League. This committee was authorized by the council to request of the Presiding

Bishopric an assignment of a task worthy of the mettle of the youth of the church and yet in harmony with the objectives and program of the church.

It has the unqualified endorsement of:

1) The leading administrative quorums of the church, namely the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric. Signed statements to this effect will be found in the Saints' Herald for May 31, 1947.

2) The Department of Religious Education which is charged by the general church with the responsibility of carrying forward the work of Zion's League generally as a part of the total Religious Education Program of the church.

3) The General Zion's League Council which during the late Conference sustained the project by a unanimous vote.

This project represents the proper business of young people:

1) It is an opportunity for the young people to give real meaning to the great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

2) It is consistent with the new interest and attention being given to missions abroad by the general church.

3) It is a fitting response to the increasing pressure that is being brought to bear on the young people of the church that they share now in the life and work of the church.

4) It is representative of the growing disposition and ability of the young people to take active part in the major activities of the church, sharing sacrificially in all of such.

5) It moves in the direction of an adequate educational program for our young people. Through it our young people may best develop an interest in, an understanding of, and skill in carrying forward the work of evangelism, the stewardship program, observance of the financial law, and the work of the church generally.

6) This project represents in concrete form the new international note of Zion's League. Here, as in no other way, Zion's League comes, indeed, to be the youth of the church united in action for Christ.

It must be understood that this project:

1) Is to be carried forward only with the complete understanding, approval, and co-operation of the administrative officers of stakes, districts, and branches throughout the church.

2) Is to be a definite part of the total program of such stakes, districts, and branches. It in no way supplants or takes the place of the regular work of such administrative units.

3) Along with meeting the obligations of this project, the young people are expected to share happily and whole-heartedly in the privileges and obligations of church membership.

4) Is a part of the total program of Zion's League. It in no way is to be considered a substitute of a continuing purposeful balanced League program in every stake, district, and branch of the church.

5) Is to be based upon, rather than supplanting, observance of the financial law on the part of the young people of the church. The project is in no sense a substitute for meeting the obligations of membership in this respect.

6) Funds for this project are to be raised by the group efforts of Zion's League throughout the church rather than by individual offerings on the part of League members.

7) Funds contributed under this project are to be received and receipts issued by the duly constituted representatives of the Presiding Bishopric, i. e., Bishops, Bishops' agents, and solicitors throughout the church.

Here is what you can do to help this good cause in your district:

The district young people's leader or supervisor is the responsible leader for promoting this project in the district. The official textbook for this project is the Saints' Herald for May 31, 1947.

The district young people's leader or supervisor should first of all discuss the project with his district president and perhaps later with other district officers, especially the Bishop or Bishop's agent of the district.

The district leader should assure himself of the full and complete support and co-operation of the district president or other district officers in the promotion of the project in his district.

If possible, agreement should be reached on such matters as:

1) A reasonable quota for the Zion's League of his district.

2) Ways in which the project may best be promoted in the district, i. e., a district youth conference; young people at reunions; distributing instruction leaflets and posters; visiting each branch and local League; assisting local leaders to map out ways and means of raising funds; bring to the attention of the local workers some of the suggestions provided below as to methods of carrying out the project in the local League.

Here is what you can do in your branch:

The young people's supervisor of the branch is the responsible leader for promoting this project in the branch. His official text is the Saints' Herald, May 31, 1947.

Before launching the project in his League, the local young people's leader should discuss the plans thoroughly with the pastor of the branch. In these discussions, he should seek to assure himself of the complete understanding, support, and co-operation of the pastor in carrying forward the project.

Following this, it may be well for the young people's leader to:

1) Talk it all over with the Bishop's agent or solicitor.

2) Call a meeting of the local Zion's League cabinet, canvass the project, and agree upon steps to be taken to promote it.

3) Agree upon a quota for the branch.

4) Agree upon ways and means of raising the money.

5) Assign responsible persons or committees as needed.

Here are a few of the many things the local League could do:

1) Keep the bulletin board of the church supplied with materials on the project and its progress.

2) Provide a large and attractive "thermometer" which indicates the progress of the League in raising its quota.

3) Arrange with the pastor for one or more sermons on Missions Abroad in general and the special project of the League in particular.

4) Arrange for one or more Sunday evening panel or forum discussion at which time the entire project would be presented to the branch.

5) Appoint members of the League to conduct research covering interesting aspects of the missionary program of the church, especially in foreign lands.

6) Correspond with missionaries now serving abroad or with those having so served.

7) Correspond with members of the church in missions abroad.

8) Arrange to conduct interviews with visiting missionaries covering interesting facts and experiences in connection with missionary work.

9) Conduct classes or discussion groups using article in Saints' Herald for May 31, as text. It might be well to have individual members of the League make reports on some of the articles found in that issue of the Herald.

10) Devote a session or more in the League to discussion on method of raising money (see page 14, Saints' Herald, May 31, 1947), this with a view to planning best methods for your branch.

11) Prepare and present dramatic skits calculated to stimulate interest in missionary enterprises in general and in this special missionary project in particular.

Rebirth OF A Nation

(Written from Mexico)

By NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL

THE SPARKS FROM the volcano came tumbling down, and the cracking of the advancing lava seemed ominous amid its red glow. The horses stood patiently there and by their side a silent figure wrapped in colorful rebozo. He is a Tarascan Indian, you cannot mistake his identity or ancestry. These horses of his had brought us to see the spectacular Paricutin. As Cruz (Cross), my little horse boy, guided us over treacherous rocks and hot lava, I found that he, too, is Tarascan and spoke nothing but his native Indian dialect—until the volcano and the advent of tourists. Now he is rapidly becoming tri-lingual.

This ancestral land of theirs was rather worthless but now is absolutely useless. The lava and the ash have reduced it to utter desolation. A lone church spire shows where once a town had stood, now a ghostly forest of dead lava. It took a holocaust to carry civilization to these Tarascans.

We were in Morelia on Corpus Christus Day, a fiesta which brought thousands of Indians in from the hundreds of villages near by. Here riches and rags mingled freely but a common disaster is theirs. The hoof-and-mouth cattle disease has reached such gigantic proportions in this section that American engineers were asked to help. One of the necessary evils in eradication of this disease is the killing of the affected cattle. Rumors flew and soon the word had spread that the Americans were burning villages, destroying cattle, and killing people. Fear of the unknown is hampering the work.

Uruapan is the center of the production of fine lacquer work, but recently this art has been slowly disappearing. Until the new president, Aleman (a man whom I much admire) set up a government subsidy for the preservation of native arts, they were slowly being lost.

Near Toluca thousands of hectares of land are gutted and lined by deadly erosion—the work of centuries of wind and water. Once more the government has stepped in to save the remnants and restore the remainder to the impoverished inhabitants of the adobe towns.

At Cholula, inside the Pyramid, the little lady who goes ahead to turn on lights, deplored in rapid Spanish the fact that so few tourists are now visiting Mexico, and she said, "This is one of the first places they cut off their list." She could not understand why interest should wane in the archaeological offerings of this rich land. Nor can I.

The fifth annual Book Fair is being held about the Monument to the Revolution. Thousands of books from all over the world are in these stalls. Education exhibits trace progress typified by the Alphabetacion Program, a method by which every person in the country is learning to read and write. Many people wander about the fair, but a simple puppet show holds them spellbound.

At Monterrey, I inspected the grade card of Pepe's sister, an almost perfect average. She takes piano lessons and sings and hopes to become a great concert artist. Her brother, my friend, is now working at a spot twelve hour's journey by horseback across the mountains from his home which is a two-hour journey from the nearest village, which in turn is thirty miles from the highway.

Everywhere is construction: schools, libraries, hospitals, and residences. The building boom has extended in every direction except churches, and the crumbling cathedrals are merely braced against further deterioration. An omen?

One must know the geology, geography, anthropology, history, religion, and politics of this land to completely understand what is happening. In simple words, this spells birth of new ideas and rebirth of ideals. Education in all life phases, be it agriculture or book learning, is changing the pattern from mere acceptance to active participation. Everywhere I see signs of increased infidelity to Catholicism and an intelligent approach to the problem of bettering their standard of living.

That Tarascan Indian, a symbol of historic silence, now may vote and earn his just needs (a condition that once existed on this continent but was lost through iniquity). Thus democratic equality is reborn, gradually and with growing pains.

Just a Housewife and Mother

By Zealia Jennings

THE SPEECH CLASS wasn't very large but it had a special quality of friendliness about it. The instructor had asked them to tell about the work they were engaged in doing and how they happened to be in that kind of work.

She was just a housewife and mother. So were several other members of the class. What could she say about her work? How did she get into it anyway?

In the first place her best girl friend used to tease her about wanting to be a teacher. This girl friend was going to be a nurse. She had thought it was fine to be a nurse, but she preferred teaching.

What she wanted to do would take a great deal more schooling than her family could afford. She would have to use her commercial training to get funds for higher education.

She took a position as a bookkeeper Later, she tried a new job as a stenographer.

In the meantime, there was a young man at the church who was becoming very interested in her, so much so, in fact that he persuaded her to marry him.

NOW she had a still different job. It was a period of adjustment and before it was thoroughly made she had another work to do. She was the mother of the finest boy in the world. At least they thought so until his brother came along. Then when Sissy was born they knew they had the most precious gift of all.

Now they began to grow up all over again. They learned to play with the "kids." Those ball games in the vacant lot in front of the house were a revelation in character building and co-operation. They found that the second boy was one to adhere closely to the rules. Of course, he had to learn that everyone did not always put the same interpretation on the rules that he did; that he would have to give in some times to the other fellow's ideas. Mother wanted to give Sissy a big margin in their games and did, but Dad played as hard as he could and kept them all racing around to keep up with him.

They learned to work together, too. The schedule they made and tacked on the kitchen wall for the three to do dishes by saved many an argument about whose turn it was to wash, wipe, or clean up. The yard had to be cleaned periodically, too. They all saw the humor in the fact that the fellow next door cut a tree in half to keep the boys out of the branches that extended over the line into their yard. Then he would dump his shorn grass over on their side of the fence rather than take it to the alley and dispose of it.

They learned to pray a new way, too. They used a more straight-forward approach and were sure that the prayers would be answered for their good. They learned what they should pray about and knew that when they prayed their prayers would be used as patterns.

They learned about family loyalty and church loyalty because they were away from their relatives and church associations for so many years.

Then when the oldest boy would bang into the house upsetting everything he came to and call "Mother" in a new deep voice; when his younger brother would seriously discuss what he was going to be when he grew up; when he would say, "Do you think I will be a preacher, Mother?"—when Sissy made so many play houses behind the divan and kept up a rapid fire conversation all the time not caring whether Mother heard her or not just so she didn't interrupt—there was an event that topped all other events of their lives—Joe was born!

NEVER DID A CHILD come into a home with greater expectancy. When there are three children to look on the wonder of babyhood and live a richer life because of the new love that a baby brings into a home, happiness seems almost perfect.

Joe could smile and even laugh before most babies would be focusing their eyes well. His name was a real problem for them though. They had been so sure that they would have another girl that they even had her name picked out. But now there was a boy to name. They had exhausted the grandfather's and father's names on the two older boys. What would be the best for this new boy? Mother did have a longing for the name of the church founder. It was an old time-honored name and would fit into the family names nicely. Well, the second boy had a secret longing, too. He came into Mother's room the third night and said, "Would it be all right to name him for a good and famous man who is dead?" "Of course," Mother said, "whom were you thinking about?" "Joseph Smith," he said. So he became Joseph and Dad said he must have for his second name the name of his uncle who was a fine preacher in the church.

SHE HAD a full career ahead of her now. She was a teacher at last, but in a much larger field than the schoolroom. She had to teach not only the school lessons that needed extra explaining but finance, budgeting, ethics, religion, music. She had to be a nurse and cook and maid. She had to be an ever ready counselor and judge in time of trouble.

That time some bigger boys wanted to find out what the boys were made of and were going to take them apart in the alley back of the house. She looked out the window when she heard the commotion and came to her senses just in time to stop an angry rush from the back door to protect her offspring. She was frantic. What to do? What to do! WHAT TO DO!

Then the inspiration came. There on the table was a plate of newly-made fudge. So that was why she had made it that afternoon before they got home? Sure. That was it. She seized it with trembling fingers and then calming herself, quietly called out the back door. "Would you boys like some fudge?" The fighting stopped. She called again. They got up from the ground and looked at her unbelievably. She said it again a third time. "Would you boys like some fudge? I just made it this afternoon." Then the oldest boy said, "Come on, let's get some candy." They all filed up to the house and timidly took some of the candy. She urged more and more on them until the plate was empty. Well, they had no more fights or threats of fights after that. They had found out what those new boys were made of and they wanted to be friends.

When the time came to make that speech in class, she not only talked freely about her position as a housewife and mother but heartily recommended it to every girl present.

The Parable of the Housewife and the Sweet Peppers

By Carol Lylas Dawson

ONCE upon a time there was a certain good housewife. Each day she kept her house, and cleaned and cooked for her husband and her four children. And when her housework was done, she would work in her garden.

The garden was the joy and pride of the woman's heart. And in the garden was a row of sweet peppers, which the woman prized above all else in the garden. The plants must be tended long and carefully to bear the rich, red fruits.

But the season was short and the winter came too soon, so the peppers must be watched carefully lest the frost destroy the plants before the fruit was gathered, yet they must be left to grow as long as possible that the fruit might mature.

Now, this woman had a cousin who greatly resembled her. But the cousin had never married, but had gone out into the world to seek her fortune.

One morning, as the woman sat at breakfast with her husband, while the children were yet sleeping, she saw in the morning paper her cousin's picture. For the cousin had now become very wealthy and famous.

As the woman looked at the picture, she became filled with envy and discontent.

"Oh, poor is my lot," she lamented, "and unlucky am I, for my cousin is famous and has wealth and much leisure, while I must labor from morn till night, and have only the mere necessities of life."

And suddenly her little cottage seemed bare and shabby. And so she spent the day grudgingly doing her work and wishing that she, too, might follow the path that her cousin had taken.

By evening, when her husband returned from his work, she was cross and unhappy and scolded her children for every little thing until her husband ached within himself that he could not give her more of the world's goods.

BUT soon the household retired for the night, and the woman slept, and as she slept, she dreamed—

And as she dreamed, she stood by a road that wound off into the distant hills. The woman was filled with a great yearning to follow the road and she wondered whence it led. As she stood thus pondering, she saw coming along the road, a donkey and cart with a little old man driving it.

"I say, old man," she called, "can you tell me where this road leads?" "It is the road to fame and fortune," he answered. "Many have taken it, but few have found happiness there. But follow me, if you must, and I will show you the way."

"I will come," she said, "but first I must pick my sweet peppers, for no one else will think of them, and they will surely be frosted if I leave them."

"I cannot wait," he said. "You must come now or it is too late." So, not wanting to be left behind, the woman began to follow the cart.

Now it seemed that she was dressed in her very nicest clothes. "It is well," she thought, "for if I am to seek my fame and fortune, it is better that I look my best."

And the woman had a beautiful new coat that her husband had bought for her, of which she was very proud, as she had not too many pretty things.

As she walked along it seemed that great clouds of dust began to roll up from the wheels of the donkey cart. She noticed that her shoes were getting covered with dust. "Oh! my beautiful slippers will be ruined," she thought, so she slipped them off and carried them in her hand.

The dust rose in little puffs with each step she took until soon she noticed that it was beginning to settle on the sleeves and shoulders of her coat.

"Oh, my beautiful new coat will be ruined," she wailed, as she brushed it with her hands. "I wish that the little old man would leave me to go alone. I'm sure I could find the way without him." But no matter how fast she walked nor how slow, the donkey cart was always just ahead.

Presently the little old man turned his head and looked back at her and laughed a croaking, evil sort of laugh. "Why, you wicked old man," she thought, "I believe it pleases you that I am covered with dust and my beautiful clothes are going to be ruined."

And as the woman walked along, she was not at all surprised to see that her pepper row appeared to be growing along the side of the road. The bright fruit shone through the leaves and appeared to be full and mature.

"Oh, the peppers are ready to pick," the woman said to herself. "It will only take a moment to pick them." Then she saw that she had left her basket by the row. So without giving another thought to the old man and the donkey cart, she began the happy task of gathering the luscious, sweet peppers. She picked for some time without stopping, but suddenly as she picked, the vines and fruit became dry as dust, and crumpled in her hand. In dismay, she felt of the fruits in the basket, but they were firm and good.

"Now the frost has destroyed the plants," she said, "but I have saved enough and to spare."

Then she thought, suddenly, of the old man and the donkey cart. But as she looked up they were just disappearing over the rise of a hill in the distance. The old man's evil cackle drifted back to her. For a moment she would have arisen and hastened to catch him, but suddenly she perceived that the sweet pepper row had risen into a hedge and had shut her off from the road so that she could not follow him.

"It is just as well," she thought, "for I have saved my sweet peppers and now I shall not ruin my nice clothes."

Then she saw that the dust had cleared away, and the sun shone brightly on the sweet pepper row. The birds sang, all the world seemed bright and gay and the sun shone brighter and brighter.

And suddenly the sweet pepper patch was the gay patchwork quilt on her bed, and the sun was shining through the window.

"Truly I have had a vision," she said. Then she looked at her husband sleeping beside her. "How dear and good he is," she said. "How hard he works that we might have bread." Then she stroked his hair and caressed him.

She arose from her bed with a song in her heart and dressed and started the breakfast for the family. Never had her children seen their mother in a gayer mood. She opened the door and looked out on her garden. The dew sparkled in the early morning sunshine, the birds sang, and all the world seemed very wonderful. "God has been very good to me," she thought. "For my children are strong and intelligent, my husband is kind and good, and surely I have a fine garden. I doubt if there is a finer one in the neighborhood."

"Today should be a good day to pick the sweet peppers."

Happiness in Service

The life of Virginia Lee Butterworth was an example and a challenge to all young church people to find joy in the work of mature life.

Regular listeners to Morning Devotions on Radio KMBC were accustomed to hear a fine young group of singers presenting the hymns on Friday mornings. Among them, Virginia Lee Butterworth, wife of Robert W. Butterworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Taylor, was one of the most talented and faithful. When she passed away on January 19, the loss was grieved by many friends. On the next Friday, January 24, the program was a memorial service for her, with the tribute below given by Evan A. Fry.

VIRGINIA LEE BUTTERWORTH
1922—1947

WE WISH to say a few words this morning in memory of Virginia Lee Butterworth, whose untimely death last Sunday has brought us a sense of deep personal loss because of her connection with the quartet which has sung our Friday morning hymns for us for several years. She came to this Friday morning group I believe in July, 1943, to take the place of Maxine Thompson, who was moving to Texas to be with her husband in service. She has missed very few Friday mornings since that time, except for three or four when her second child was born in 1944.

Virginia was born in Lomoni, Iowa, but came to Independence with her parents when she was only a few weeks old. She attended the McCoy school, the Independence Junior High School, and the William Chrisman High School. Through all of her school experience she achieved an enviable reputation as a scholar, and as both a vocal and instrumental musician. She began very early to establish a reputation for faithful, dependable, generous use of her talents, and for cheerfulness and good nature. I believe that all of us who remember her could bear witness to those outstanding traits. I cannot recall ever seeing her without a smile on her face and a laugh in her voice. Her smile and her laugh were not the foolish giggling of one who refused to acknowledge the seriousness of life, but the good cheer of one who had faced life, had savored of both the bitter and the sweet that life has to offer, and had decided that life was worth living and God is good. Her good humor was the kind that comes from a soul that is at peace with itself, with its God, and with its friends.

When her husband was called into the service, I wondered whether Virginia would keep on with her Friday morning singing. Certainly with two babies at home, and a husband away in service, she would have been justified in saying that she could no longer afford the time to practice, or to leave her family at this early morning hour. But if it ever occurred to Virginia to quit, she never mentioned it to any of us. There was no grumbling, no complaining, no change in the cheery smile and the ready laugh, as she accepted the changed conditions, arranged her life so that it could go on as much as possible as it had before, and continued to work at the task she had set herself to do each week as her duty to the church she loved.

The last time I saw her was the morning of Friday, January 3. That was the morning when the thermometer hit 20 below in Independence, and snow was drifted deep in walks and roads and driveways. Under the circumstances, Virginia would have been perfectly justified in refusing to come out, but she braved the drifts and the cold to reach my car upon the road in front of her house, and sang that morning as if it were all in a day's work. Next week, on January 10, she sang for Brother Sorden on Friday morning, and the next day went to the hospital for the birth of her third child—a beautiful girl. Her joy knew no bounds then, for the first two children had been boys, and this girl was the fulfillment of all her dreams. Everything was going well until last Sunday morning, January 19; and then suddenly, within ten minutes, she was gone. It was one of those unpredictable things which no one could have helped and for which no one could be blamed.

She leaves an empty place that can never be filled. She will be missed as a daughter, as a sister, as wife, mother, and friend. To her family we extend the sympathy of the radio audience which has profited so many times from her faithful and generous service, which was always done without ostentation or hope of reward.

Somehow we cannot make ourselves believe that God took her away. I do not believe that it is, or ever was God's will that we should be separated from our loved ones by death. Death is present with us, even in life, as a result of sin. Jesus did not teach that we should ignore death, or that we should not weep and sorrow for the bereavement which death brings. He, himself, wept for the loss of his friend, Lazarus. But Jesus did teach, and he did prove by his own death and resurrection that he who lives by the laws of God, and who believes on Christ and the power of his resurrection, shall have power over death. When in spite of God's warnings, death became inevitable for the human race, God in his great love gave his Son, that there should be no terror in death, no sting, no victory of death over life. And no matter whether we go early or late, whether we die quietly in bed or on the battlefield or under the fangs of wild beasts in some pagan arena, nothing can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

We sorrow for our loss, but we shall continue to try to follow the example of Virginia's good cheer and faithfulness and helpfulness, knowing that in the keeping of God's love she is happy and secure, and that in that love we, too, may face the future with hope and with assurance that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

On Borrowed Time

All those who live on borrowed time
Are lucky in a way;
They must live to the fullest each
And every passing day.

That kind deed that they thought to do
That kind word they would say
For them there is no "putting off"
It must be done this day.

They must do all the good they can 'Ere the sands of time run low
This hour is all they're sure of
Soon comes the call to go.

But in living life the way they must
'Ere they're placed beneath the sod
They find great compensation—
They've been living close to God.

While we, poor fools, with endless time—
How we procrastinate!
When our time comes, we're not ready
We've done "too little" and "too late."

—G. Ruth Harpster.

The Right To Blunder

By KATHERINE KECK BEAR

You can't make a discord on the piano if you never touch it. You'll never spell a word wrong if you don't make the effort to learn, because "x" will do for everything. Little children in Sunday school will never be misguided by your teachings if you won't teach.

So why take a chance on blundering? You're bound never to make a mistake if you never do anything—except possibly that most unforgivable mistake of all, sitting in the easiest chair all evening because you got there first.

We're here to blunder. We take our baby fingers and spoil their ineffectual pink softness by daily practice on the piano, by gaining skill in using a ball, a pen, a gavel, a flag, or the Bible.

There is the law of trial and error. If you hold a Chinese checkerboard, and shake around on its surface several marbles of different sizes, you'll wind up with a correct total of all the marbles on the board that have the right size to fit the holes. The little ones fall through, and the big ones refuse to be accommodated by a scone too small.

But it takes time. And some shaking around. And marbles free to move.

That's life. You take your shifting around, you by-pass the right-sized hole more than once, you blunder into all sorts of other marbles on their individual routes. Maybe you finally find the right hole, fit yourself down into it for a while, only to have one of the oversized ones come blundering down the board and bump you loose to hunt another.

Man is governed by the physical law of the survival of the fittest, with the addition of a nature that is self-starting and self-propelling; and in so effective a way, that a bump on the spiritual being can be transformed from the "equal and opposite reaction" demanded in nature, to a reaction-in-any-way-he-wants-to-go.

A man confronted by deep sorrow can choose how to use it. He applies it to his particular gift, puts the whole force of his emotion into it, and has for his use, power, instead of a potentiality for defeat. Behind every real masterpiece that has carried human emotion from one generation into the next is fruitful spiritual effort that has been routed from despair or negative sorrow into a positive vessel for carrying strength to others.

We have to have the positive vessel ready, though, before the storm. Mechanically we build for physical and mental strength in youth. We groom our mental and moral reactions through a daily process of building right habits of thought. Just as the concert pianist throws away millions of notes, right and wrong, while he gains possession of the muscles of his body, so we throw away millions of right and wrong attempts at the art of living right.

If nine tenths of our effort may be classified as practice, then, as we observe efforts of others, we are bound to allow them at least nine blunders for one good performance. The blunders to be classified as transitional and put into the category with the lost notes of the virtuoso.

So, if the choir director's petticoat hangs a bit, or if the high point of a sermon is drowned by the sudden wail of a baby—or even if a woman blunders once in the teaching of her Sunday school class or the president of the church is too positive for our taste, once, these things are lost notes on the air. Better things are on the way because someone had the courage to take an unknown path and the fortitude to chance mistakes on his way to perfection.

News Briefs

Chicago, Illinois, District

President, Joseph E. Baldwin

A resume' of women's activities in the district for the year was given by Mrs. Genevieve Lusha, district leader, at the annual mother-daughter banquet held at the Piccadilly Tearoom on May 9. One hundred four women attended the banquet, and recognition was given all district and local officers. Mrs. Fern Baldwin, assistant district leader, was in charge of the program. Gloria Fisher sang a number of arias honoring the mothers, and the oldest woman present was given a gift. District President Joseph Baldwin and E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College, were given $275 as a gift from area groups for the furnishing of a room in the boys' new dormitory to be erected soon. President Gleazer's acceptance message, "True Religion or Confusing Superstition," will be long remembered. The presidents of various evening groups in the area were responsible for the table decorations.

Under the direction of Melvin Fowler, district youth leader, a Zion's League retreat was held at Y. M. C. A. Camp Duncan on the week end of May 23. Activities of the retreat included worship, study, discussion, and recreation. The camp was widely advertised in the branches, and on Friday evening, seventy young people between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one enrolled. Theme of the retreat was "Does It Make Any Difference?"

First Chicago Congregation

Pastor, H. T. McCaig

Several members from First Chicago Branch participated in the district choir's presentation of "Olivet to Calvary," by Maunder, at Central Church on April 3. D. M. Wiesen was the director; soloists were Sally Anderson, Gloria Fisher, Paul Deaver, Jack Wight, and Dick Keir. Ruth Skinner was at the piano.

H. T. McCaig gave the pastoral message and J. A. Jacques the Communion talk on Easter Sunday. Other speakers for the month of April were Lyman Jones, J. E. Baldwin, and D. M. Wiesen. Gloria Fisher and Paul Deaver were soloists. The theme for April was "And Be Baptized"—a part of the yearly theme, "Share Christ's Gospel, Keep His Law."

Beverly Irene Gelhorn, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Gelhorn, was blessed at the April 6 worship service by Elders H. T. McCaig and Lyman Jones. Clarence Candy was baptized by D. M. Wiesen and confirmed by H. T. McCaig and A. O. Skinner.

The North Side Study Class met at the Wiesen and Jones homes in April. Nina Campbell was hostess to the Ssenippah Guild and Margaret Newlin to the Friendship Guild. The North Side Circle met at the home of Betty Behnke; Ruth Wiggins was co-hostess. On April 17, members of the circle held a potluck luncheon at the church with Jane Johnson, Elizabeth O'Reilly, and Marie Swanson as hostesses.

Zion's League meetings are held each Friday evening. On April 21, the men and boys met at the church for an evening of fellowship, entertainment, and refreshments.

A union meeting of the women of Chicago District was held at First Chicago Church on April 29. The devotional was planned by Fern Baldwin, and Joseph Baldwin gave a review of General Conference. Sally Anderson sang two solos, accompanied by Esther Nelson. Tea was served following the meeting in the lower auditorium by members of the North Side Circle.

The women have voted to adopt another German family for the summer.

—Velva E. Castins, reporter.

Hammond, Indiana

A district youth assembly was held in Hammond Branch on the afternoon of March 16. The meeting was supervised by Mike Fowler, district young people's leader. After the two o'clock potluck luncheon served by the Hammond League, a worship service, discussion period, and short business meeting were held.

Forty-four Herald subscriptions were secured by Eleanor Meyers, book steward, during the church-wide drive for new subscribers. Hammond Branch doubled the quota assigned it by the district officers.

The women continue to meet bi-monthly. Preparations are being made by both the afternoon and evening groups for a bazaar in early fall.

The boys and girls were in charge of the 9:45 worship service on Easter Sunday morning. Communion was served the following hour.

Recent speakers have been President John Garver and Elder Kenneth Lusha.

—Emma Guse, reporter.

Chillicothe, Ohio

Plans for June include Children's Day services with Charles Parker as morning speaker and Millard Weese of Lemrick as evening speaker. A committee has been appointed to arrange the Father's Day program. On June 21 and 22, the Zion's League will hold its third annual League Day with Elders Elmer Caldwell and George Howdyshell of Lancaster as guest speakers. A memorial service is to be held on June 29, honoring Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The Independence Day sermon will be given in the evening by Elder E. K. Caldwell.

Edmonton, Alberta

Pastor, Alvin Walvatb

Attendance has increased so that the present church home is inadequate for the needs of the group. A building committee composed of William Owen, David Larmour, H. B. Seaman, and Eleanor Bowerman, was elected on April 26 to draw up plans for a larger and better equipped church. The women cleared over $100 for the building fund at an auction sale and pie social. They have also sent food, clothing, and soap to the needy Saints in Europe. The Leaguers helped to purchase the piano that is now being used in the church.

The cantata, "Calvary," was presented by the choir on Easter under the direction of Eleanor and Mrs. C. R. Bowerman. Eleanor Bowerman had the feminine lead in the Edmonton Civic Opera, "Prince of Pilsen," and was awarded a one hundred dollar scholarship several days later to aid her in continuing her vocal training. Stewart Dallyn, who had just received his Bachelor of Science degree from the Alberta Branch of the Agricultural Institute of Canada, was awarded two scholarships last year. He has also been given first-class standing and a university honor award. Georgiana Burton and Mildred Pearse, who have been in nurses' training, were recently graduated.

Jonesport, Maine

A one-day conference was held in Jonesport on Sunday, May 18, with District President Newman Wilson in charge. The following men were ordained to the priesthood: Eugene Look, elder; Calvin Crowley and Maurice Gray, deacons. Officiating at the ordination service were Apostle George Lewis, and Elders Chester Gray, Newman Wilson, Willis Foss, and Benjamin Carter.

On the following Sunday, a conference was held at Stonington. Laurence Carter was approved for ordination to the office of deacon at this meeting. The theme of the 11 o'clock service was religious education. Mrs. Frances Look and Mrs. Virginia Pliskowski gave talks on leadership and teacher training courses. Music was provided by the junior choir under the direction of Marjorie Billings. At 2:30 in the afternoon, the Jonesport choir, directed by Geneva Church, gave the Easter cantata, "The Lord's Prayer." Apostle George Lewis spoke in the evening.

Australia

Twenty-fourth Mission Conference

Delegates from nearly all of Australia's thirty-three branches and groups and representatives from New Zealand attended the twenty-fourth mission conference held in Sydney. The church appointees, who had assembled prior to Easter for preconference lectures and discussions, conducted the services assisted by local men. Sixty members of the priesthood met in Leichhardt Church for a Communion service, but Balmain Church and the Astra Theater, Drummoynne, were the main activity centers. The general Communion service was attended by 460 people and church school by 360. This broke all previous records of attendance at mission conferences.

The cantata, "Darkness to Dawn," was presented by a fifty-five voice choir under the direction of Fred Rawson to an audience of 550. Les Dalziel, youth leader, conducted the concert. Spirituality reached a peak at the prayer meetings and choral Communion service.

The acquisition of another mission home was reported. This third home is the contribution of Mr. and Mrs. Cramp of Carnegie Branch, Melbourne. Gifts of money include 300 pounds given anonymously and 450 pounds received from the sale of property for the mission home project. This project was started in 1940; total contributions since then amount to 3,774 pounds.

Three hundred thirteen baptisms and thirty ordinations were reported for the two-year conference period. Australia's membership is now 3,280. Attendance at the last Tiona Reunion was 700, and it is anticipated that provisions for 1,000 campers will soon need to be made. The grounds, which have been held by a company of Saints as shareholders, is being given to the church with all attendant assets. A special bill is before the New South Wales Parliament which will give the church necessary legal status to hold property. This bill was originally prepared for presentation in 1932 when High Priest W. J. Haworth was in charge of the mission, but delays occurred, and it is just now being voted on.

Victoria District Easter Reunion

Although many regular attendants of the annual Easter Reunion were in Sydney for the mission conference, a large number of Saints gathered at Wesgarth Church in Melbourne on Easter Sunday. Local officers from the various branches assisted in presenting the services. A play, "An Hour in Liberty Jail," was staged by Carnegie Branch, and a "Tahitian Interlude" was arranged by Elder S. W. Ballard of Geelong, former missionary to the Society Islands. Following the Communion service, Elder Shaw of Carnegie Branch gave the Easter sermon.

Chatham, Ontario

Pastor, J. A. Pray

The pupils of Merle Bekaert's church school class were the willing subjects in a demonstration of the correct and incorrect ways of conducting a class. This demonstration was given on April 1 as a climax to the leadership training classes taught by Helen Kelly.

On Sunday evening, April 6, a pageant, "The Meaning of the Cross," was presented by the Zion's League under the direction of Royal Wood, who was assisted by Paul Wood, Mildred Hodgson, and Helen Kelly. Edna and Sylvia Prevett gave a flannelgraph illustration of the Easter story at the church school hour. Jimmy Hodgson read the Scripture at this service; Corabell Wood and Arlene Dauphin sang a duet.

April 24 was observed as ladies' night at the Men's Club monthly supper meeting. Under the supervision of Monitors Pearl Canniff and Audrey Steinhoff, the Wansakasing Oriole girls served a "deep South" meal.

Elder R. T. Brown of Merlin was guest speaker and Emerald Liddard, soloist, on the evening of April 20.

A report on General Conference was given on April 27 at the evening service by Pastor Jack Pray.

The following week, Helen Pray, Pearl Canniff, Gladys Ferguson, Arthur Birkby, James Kelly, and Jack Pray presented a forum discussion on conference activities.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Apostle D. Blair Jensen visited Chatham on May 2; Bishop DeLapp spoke in the evening.

On May 9, a mother-daughter banquet was held in the lower auditorium of the church. Margaret Dent, women's leader and program chairman, introduced the guest speaker, Helen Atkinson of Merlin, who talked on home-building. Others participating in the program were Helen Pray, Mildred Hodgson, Sylvia Prevett, Margaret Rapley, Dorothy Liddard, Cora Wood, Darlene Clarke, and Virginia Clements. Corsages were presented by Hilda Bowman to Mary Armstrong and Eileen Thompson, the oldest and youngest mother present. The men of the branch served the meal.

John Bowman, church school director, gave a Mother's Day talk at church school on May 11, after which poems were read by Corliss Kelly and Jimmy Hodgson; Leslie Kelly and Dorothy Baker sang solos, and the story, "A Mother's Parable," was told by Mildred Hodgson. Betty Rapley read the call to worship. In the evening, Pastor Pray gave the sermon.
—Gladys Ferguson, reporter.

Delta, Colorado

Pastor, Arthur G. Rose

Apostle Charles R. Hield gave an illustrated lecture in May on Central America.

The La Da Sa women continue to hold meetings once each month. They have finished their study of Zion's Procedure and through the summer will study Faith of Our Fathers and the Busy Man's Series of tracts.

The new church being built on Eleventh and Meeker should be completed by fall. At present, services are being held in the Seventh Day Adventist Church at Seventh and Meeker. All Saints in or near Delta are invited to attend.
—Mrs. Lura Craven, reporter.

Des Moines, Iowa

Pastor, Frank A. Fry

Dr. F. M. McDowell was guest speaker at the youth rally banquet held Saturday evening, February 15, in the lower auditorium of the church. He also spoke at the 11 o'clock service on Sunday. Following the basket lunch at noon, a devotional and dedication service was held at 1:45. February 18 was observed as ladies' night at the meeting of the Men's Club; Apostle Mesley gave an illustrated lecture on Australia. President John F. Garver was guest speaker on Young Adult Day, February 23. The 6:30 discussion period was introduced with a skit written by Arline Cackler. Nine people were baptized at 7:30. The evening closed with a social in the lower auditorium.

A friendship tea was sponsored on March 16 by the Ni-No-Van Club for the purpose of contacting young matrons who have recently moved to Des Moines. Pianist Louis Weerts of Station KRNT was featured as guest artist at the March meeting of the Music Club. The first prebaptismal class was held on March 23. Elder C. B. Hartshorn was the 11 o'clock speaker on that day. A brief business session was held at the close of the evening service on March 30; radio broadcasting and the purchasing of an organ were discussed.

"The One Great Hope," written and directed by Arline Cackler, was presented by the dramatic department on the evening of April 2. Naomi Alexander is dramatic leader.

A chartered bus took Des Moines Saints to General Conference on the opening Sunday. On the final Sunday, the choir took the same bus and sang at the 9:30 service.

David Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Barr, and Doyle Donald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Siebert Chesnutt, were blessed by Elders Frank A. Fry and Harold Cackler.

Representative Charles Van Eaton presented a movie travelog following the April dinner meeting of the Men's Club. April 25 was fun and frolic night for the entire branch. A potluck dinner was served, after which Marion Pease as master of ceremonies presented a varied program.

Kenneth Alan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Mardis, was blessed at the morning service on April 27. In the afternoon, the Graceland College band, directed by William Graves, gave a concert.

The first of a series of thirteen radio broadcasts on "What Latter Day Saints Believe" was given on Sunday, March 4, between 10:30 and 11 a.m. over Station KCBC in Des Moines. These broadcasts feature fifteen minutes of music by the choir and a fifteen-minute sermon by Pastor Frank Fry. Harold Cackler is the announcer.

The Music Club held its guest night program on May 9 at the church. The general women's department sponsored a mother-daughter tea on the afternoon of May 11.

Apostle D. T. Williams gave the Mother's Day sermon. John Arthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Johnson, was blessed at this service by Elders Frank Fry and Harold Cackler. Priesthood school was held at 3:30 in the afternoon.

The choir gave a concert in the Boone High School auditorium on the afternoon of May 18. Soloists were Helen Harrington, Maxine Dunshiee, Shirley Mason, Bettejane Cramer, and Larkin Barry. Members of the choir and their families were guests at a dinner served by the Boone women in the evening.

The final meeting of the Men's Club for this season was held on May 20. Kathryn Metz was the speaker. At the close of the evening, Pastor Fry was presented a movie camera.

Tacoma, Washington

Pastor, Ray Sowers

Evangelist A. C. Martin was the speaker at both the morning and evening services on Sunday, April 20. Music was furnished by the "Martin Trio," composed of Lela, Ione, and Mrs. Martin.

A commendable improvement in all services, especially church school, has taken place since the new church home was purchased. At the April meeting of the Marietta Club, supervisors for the junior and nursery classes were chosen. Gladys Patterson is junior supervisor and Ruth McGuire, nursery supervisor. Betty Stewart has been appointed director of music since the resignation of Gladys Patterson, who is devoting full time to junior church.

On April 4, the Leaguers met at the Walter Sprague home where Esther Curtis showed motion pictures of the reunion and summer retreats. At the following meeting, they voted to sponsor a series of paper drives to raise money for the church fund.

Appreciates the Herald

I wish to say that I appreciate the Herald and the good purpose it is serving throughout the church. I am sorry that not all members are receiving it. I have belonged to the Reorganized Church since 1911; through it I have come to know something of the love of God. I shall always be glad to testify to his goodness and mercy.

person of the minister, and thus symbolizes his trust and confidence of being able to emerge from the grave and walk in newness of life "Only let men be exposed to the life and ministry of Jesus, and his life power will quicken them into a consciousness of their need—as deep answering to deep. Then let them be led into the watery grave so that they may freely register in their own natures their determination to die to sin, and then the most significant of all processes will take place, and silently, from those realms unseen, the divine nature will be vouchsafed."—A. The Long Road to ZION

BY IONE SARTWELL

Latter Day Saints are sometimes described as too idealistic, dreamy, and impractical. Such criticism is not entirely unjust, for often we have pictured Zion as a city of glittering spires rising majestically from a nebulous, far distant horizon—a city with golden streets, a city at which the nations of the world will gaze, awe-struck with its magnificent grandeur, wherein we shall reign supreme and serene in the “sweet by and by.” And what’s wrong with such a vision? There is nothing wrong with the vision

Once upon a time, the people of the earth looked for a king to come in majesty and power to conquer their enemies, free them from bondage, and rule justly and wisely over them forevermore. That was a good vision, too. But the king was a little baby with a manger for a throne, and it was thirty years before he “reigned.” During those thirty years, he was nurtured and taught by those who loved him, and he grew and “waxed strong in spirit.”

What, then, are some of the things we who love Zion must do to “nurture” it? There are many plans to make, many decisions to reach. For instance

Is the beauty of Zion going to lie solely in the minds and hearts of the people, or will it be reflected also in well-painted homes, well-kept lawns, and streets paved, not with gold, but with durable concrete? What plans for city beautification can we make now?

“A city of refuge” hints of flight, and, while I certainly hope that not all will come in flight to Zion, it seems very probable that some will—some out of necessity, others out of mere procrastination. What plans can we make, what can we suggest now, to help with this “refugee” problem?

“Zion the Beautiful beckons us on” we sing over and over again. Who is “us”? You and me and Sister So-and-so who’s been so faithful all these years? Or does it include our black, brown, red, and yellow brothers and sisters, too? Yes, of course, but—How are we going to get rid of that eternal “but”?

Race prejudice isn’t the whole problem either. How are our Saints overseas going to migrate to Zion, barred by obsolete and discriminatory immigration laws, and too much “keep foreigners out” propaganda? Well, that’s the government for you. But we’re part of the government. We live in a democracy, so we have a voice in lawmaking. And maybe we’ll have to write some good literature to counteract the propaganda.

No doubt the way will be opened, some way. But the question of assimilation arises. Will God unconfound the languages, or should we be prepared to teach ours and learn others? Not only languages, but there are customs, too. Won’t the English miss Guy Fawkes? Does being “of one heart and mind” Americanize everyone? Surely not. But how kind and understanding we are going to have to be to keep our Saints from falling apart into their own respective “colonies.”

There are many questions involved in a project as huge as this. What wage scale shall we use in Zion? How shall we determine the “worthy poor”? Shall we revise the educational system to include Latter Day Saint teachings? Shall we socialize medicine? What about this capital-labor problem?

I do not know the answers to these questions. Maybe you don’t either. But wouldn’t it be interesting and challenging to us, as youth of the church, to express our opinions and ideas, to offer our suggestions, through this column? We like to think that Zion will be established in our day. Let us hope and pray

Of Government and Religion

QUESTION: Do members of the Reorganized Church believe that, when the kingdom of God is established, the church and the state will be one? If not, what will be their relationship?

ANSWER: By Bishop J. A. Koehler
This question is too big to be answered intelligibly in a little space. But, sketchily, this is my answer.

The word "church" is used by the prophet of Restoration in no less than four meanings. See Sections 17, 42, and 51, of Doctrine and Covenants. It does exist in various forms. It may exist in the form of the Commonwealth of Zion or any one of its segments, called originally "Stakes." In Restoration ideology, "the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of . . . God" (Doctrine and Covenants 102:9). In one sense of the word, "Zion" is also the "church." If the state should come to be Zion, the answer to the first part of the question would be: yes, in one sense of the word, church and state will be one; that is to say, they will not exist separately. They would be "of one heart and one mind," and, therefore, united in action, as mind and body are united in action.

But, structurally, the state—which is the all-inclusive society—is a unit composed of parts which have separate identities. It is composed of homes and schools and ever so many kinds of associational groups, including the church. The state is a political community organized under one distinct government. As a political structure, the state and the government are one.

The state—the political community—is that it will, but in the meantime, we must be prepared to meet the problems that come with it. We know that we will receive divine help in this work, but let us not leave it all up to God. He gave us the minds to solve the problems, the hands to do the work, and the hearts to love each other. Let us begin now to build the groundwork for our glittering spires.

related to all of its parts through its government. But in different ways. It is not related to the church as it is to its components. State and church can never be "one" in the sense that the state and its territorial units are one, or in the sense that the government of the state is a unity of (state) governments.

The state exists for the sake of all the persons who compose it and for the sake of all the groups of persons (including the church) that exist within its jurisdiction. It exists that home and school and church and the rest may perform specific functions within it, in their own rights severally, to attain their specific objects in independent action—but not in subversive action. Insofar only as its actions bear upon the common purpose of the people who form the state, the church is a "subject" society. It may not exercise the supreme authority which the state exercises through the instrumentality of its government.

State and church shall never be one so long as the church retains its distinctive character and the state its distinctive character. For the church is a "spiritual house"; it is a cultivator of the "soul"; it is an engenderer of a will to do the will of God in the relations in which the authority of the state is supreme. Its jurisdiction—which is limited to "spiritual" affairs only—is personal. The jurisdiction of the state is territorial.

If church and state were one, as the government and the state are one, if the will of the church were of necessity the will of the state, if it were the will of the church that was binding in the conduct of the affairs of the state, the church would lose its distinctive moral character. For the moral ends of the church cannot be reached through the exercise of the (necessarily) coercive (on occasion) authority of the state. In the legal sense, in the political sense, in the governmental sense, church and state (unless they lose their distinctive characters) shall never be one.

What, then, shall be the relationship of church and state when the kingdom of God shall have been established?

If the church status of the past and the present has meaning in this relation, it is that the church will always be related to the state as a revealer or teacher of the truth (in which the business of the state should be grounded) and as an inspirer to righteousness in the conduct of that business. It will be related as the nurturer of the spirit which will make the institutions of the state effectual means to the enrichment of the soul.

Religion is properly the all-inclusive interest of man. The church is its instrument. As a moral influence, the church is intended to be the social institution of highest rank; it may even have the effect of an over-all social institution. But to reach its spiritual or personal or moral ends, it must ever remain one of the constituents of the state, making its singular contribution independently, as a separate entity, to the welfare of mankind.

Time to Whistle in the Dark!

"For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited."

When you read the papers and listen to the radio, when your jittery neighbor has put on his fright wig and whispers tales of horror, ponder on the words of Isaiah, and others. The world and its people have survived many things, and will survive many more. No men nor combination of men are great enough to frustrate the divine purposes. In this we must have faith. It's time to whistle in the dark!

eight children were born to this union. To the young people of his community, he was affectionately known as "Daddy Winn"; his home was always a haven for youth and many a boy is a better man today because of his associations there. His wife, Maggie, died in 1943; in 1946, he was wed to Mrs. Estelle Sullivan of Independence who survives him.

He also leaves six sons: Wilfred J., Merriam, Kansas; D. Scott, Los Angeles, California; Clarence W., Norfolk, Virginia; Clifford L. and Charles E., Kansas City, Missouri; and Alpha L., Kansas City, Kansas; two daughters: Mrs. Juanita Mae Allen, Colorado Springs, Colorado, and Mrs. Shirli B. Sheffer, Tucson, Arizona; two brothers: Robert D. Winn, Columbus, Ohio, and Ray H. Winn, Paso Robles, California; two sisters: Mrs. Stella Keys, Maywood, Illinois, and Mrs. Eva Cox, Kansas City, Kansas; fifteen grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Elder Glaude Smith was in charge of the funeral service and Elder Amos T. Higdon gave the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

STOWELL.—Helen Myra, was born October 29, 1941, and died May 12, 1947. She is survived by her parents, Ammon Curtis and Lovina Barnum Stowell; four sisters: Odetta Vera, Barbara, Doris, and Donna; and a brother, Charles, all of Bandette, Minnesota. George W. Day officiated at the funeral.

VICKERY.—George Wentworth, was born at Sanwich, Illinois, on March 6, 1868, and died May 9, 1947, at Winfield, Kansas, following a stroke. In 1904, he and his family moved to Kansas and made their home near Hackney. He was ordained to the priesthood while in Illinois and served as pastor of Winfield Branch from 1919 to 1925 and again from 1926 to 1937.

Survivors include his widow, the former May Pauley; two daughters: Mrs. Fred Swain of Lee's Summit, Missouri, and Mrs. Chester Crooks of Augusta, Missouri; a son, Lloyd Vickery of Winfield, a brother, Lewis Vickery; a sister, Mrs. Albert Greenfields of Salem, Missouri; several grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

My Father's Hands

P. S.

*THE LATE PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

Today I see my father's hands—
Caressing new planed wood;
Exploring, seeing, knowing hands
Satisfied when work is good.

A book I see in father's hands,
A very special one.
The cover smooth to work-worn hands,
A gift from mon or son.

Or the winding trail on some old map
Is the conversation piece.
His finger points the way that
Our interest may increase.

Today I see my father's hands
Old with toil and weather,
But alive and moving are his hands,
Not cold and folded close together.

Hands caressing daughter's hair,
Thinking of his mother.
Daughter knows the love that's there,
Proud of looking like grandmother.

I will always see my father's hands
Steady and firm and true;
I pray there is work in immortal lands,
Work for my father to do.

GLADYS PENNELL MYERS.

Soon after the death of President Frederick M. Smith, the Daughters of Zion began a movement to secure an oil portrait which would do him justice. Sister Stephen Black, who has been president of this organization for the last three years, gave the matter her special attention. The portrait was painted by Lennon R. Bandel of Cleveland, Ohio, and having been finished in good time, she presented it, on behalf of her group, to the church at the recent General Conference. An account of the matter and Sister Black's presentation speech appeared in a recent "Herald."

We are pleased to present herewith a cut of this picture. Critics appraise the work as having features of merit.

The portrait will be given a permanent place in the foyer of the Auditorium.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

* Reunion of the Ozarks

Inquiries have come from members as to how to reach the new Reunion of the Ozarks grounds. It is two miles northeast of Racine, Missouri. From the edge of Joplin one may drive twelve miles and reach it, going south on Missouri 43; watch for a "Y" fork in the road and take the left fork (Spring City) which is the Joplin-Racine route; when nearing a big oil pumping station, turn one mile east and one-fourth mile south. The Editor isn't sure he could find it himself; the above is the way he understands what was told him. If wrong, he will try again. Anyway, if you get lost, the country is beautiful and the neighbors are kind. From developments being made, it is anticipated that this property will be useful almost the year around; leases will be sold for cottages so that no land can be diverted from church ownership. It is an ideal vacation site, and our very energetic people there have already made fine progress.

* Relief Packages to Germany

Gift packages sent to Germany can weigh a maximum of 22 pounds after June 15. This is double the weight permitted at present. The increase has been authorized by Allied authorities to boost the flow of relief goods from private sources. Other restrictions now applying to the packages will remain in force. The parcels must consist of nonperishable foods, clothing, medicines, and other mailable items. The size of the packages cannot exceed 72 inches in length and girth combined. Americans alone already have sent about 10 million relief packages, containing approximately 100,000,000 pounds of necessities, into all zones of Germany. —From "World Report."

* If You Are Lonely

If you have been left alone in the world and are unhappy because of it, seek the company of people. Having no family of your own, associate with other persons and families whenever you have an opportunity. You need them, and you may find that there is something you can do that will make them want and need you. Work with them, listen to them, learn from them. Do not try too hard to impress your personality on them. Many a lonely person has made himself more lonely still by seeking to run things in any little group he joins. Help out with any projects they may have on hand before introducing one of your own. Don't try to dominate the situation. Be yourself, but don't try to make everybody else be like you. The lonely person will find a place for himself and soon not be lonely if he will seek a group in which he can help other people.

Father, Bless This Union

(A Marriage Hymn)

By RHODA PHELPS

Father to thy house and altar
These two people now have come,
They've exchanged their vows and pledges
That they might become as one.

*Father, bless this holy union
With thy Spirit and thy love,
Seal the vows they here have given
In your heavenly courts above.*

See, they humbly kneel before thee,
They thy blessing now implore;
Help them, Lord, to love each other
'Till life's journey here is o'er.

May the vows they here have given
Ever bind and fill their hearts,
For what thou hath joined together
Let no man asunder part.

A Superior Civilization

Americans

We set a high value on particular conveniences and comforts that are given to us by our society and civilization. Especially when it is threatened by war, revolution, or an atomic bomb, we look about for a means of preserving it. Protection of our property rights, security of a kind, a supply of the things that satisfy our wants—these are the benefits for which we will fight and die to save the social, political, and economic order in which we live.

It is true that we criticize many faults, inequities, injustices, discomforts and inconveniences, and large wrongs. We criticize them because we hope to improve conditions and bring about a better way of life. Our purpose is not to destroy what we have, but to improve it. On the whole, we are satisfied with our general way of life. We do not imagine, we do not plan nor create, anything better.

Amerindians

A short while ago, as history and geology run, the whole of this land was occupied by another race of people. Under their economy these vast prairies supported a rather small population. They hunted, fished, tended a few hills of corn and squash or other garden plants.

Probably if we could turn back two centuries of time and listen to the conversations of the native Amerindian peoples, we could have heard a few criticisms. They must have found bad weather inconvenient and uncomfortable, their doctors the medicine men who failed to save a sick child must have brought condemnation on their medical profession, and it is possible that they complained that they had to pay too much for the support of the local chieftain and his family.

Perhaps there were some few improvements they would have liked to accomplish, but found conservative elements in their communities against them.

But, on the whole, like ourselves, it seems very reasonable to believe that the Indians liked their way of life, considered it a rather advanced state of society, and never thought that it would one day be forced out and replaced by a civilization that would support a much greater population on the land. They could have easily thought that their way of life would last forever.

How Permanent?

Thoughtful people know, of course, that there is no guaranty that our way of life will go on forever. We think it is good, and many people think it is the best; at least we find it hard to imagine anything superior this side of heaven.

We have seen in the history of many lands—in Russia, China, India, Europe, and America (via the Book of Mormon) how peoples culturally superior have declined in power by corruption of their moral and ethical standards, and have been conquered by a strong invader who was inferior in every other respect.

On the other hand, inferior cultures have been replaced or destroyed when a people of superior culture have moved in. Sometimes, as often in China, the invaders have won the military struggle, while the native population won the longer effort and made a cultural assimilation of the conqueror.

How permanent is our way of life? Will God always care to have us and our affairs cluttering up this portion of his earth? Some other race of people could move in and take this land away from us, unless we maintain our strength, morality, and integrity.

Marks of Superiority

Several important obligations rest upon any great society. First, it must be able to protect itself from destruction by attack from another people or power, and from disintegration from deterioration within. Second, it must discover and practice a technique of correction and improvement that will keep the social order growing, developing, meeting new problems as they arise and solving them. Third, a great power recognizes that all its benefits come from the thoughts and work of individuals, and that it will be stronger as it is able to invite, cultivate, and utilize the ideas and labors of the maximum number of individuals; that is why, in the long run, a democracy is stronger than a tyranny; tyranny asks only for the body—democracy asks for the gift of the free mind and spirit. Fourth, it must recognize the necessity of organizing and integrating the affairs of peoples on a world-wide basis.

It was not possible for the Amerindian social economy to meet these tests. Our social economy only partly meets them. We are in that degree in danger of impermanence.

Every nation, every government in the world today, therefore, is in a kind of peril—an immediate peril. It will be weighed in the balance, and it might be found wanting.

And what is it that is wanting? A full recognition of the Christian ideal of brotherhood and co-operation; righteousness in the affairs of the citizens; justice and equity, mercy and kindness, care for the weak and needy. And many others of the same kind. A superior civilization has the power to preserve itself, and will correct its mistakes; and inferior culture refuses to change and perishes. We have a choice in this matter. Will we make the right decision?

Relief for Our Members in Europe

Since Conference the Presiding Bishopric has attempted to organize the work involved in sending relief packages to our church members in Europe. There are two agencies which have participated in this work most effectively. For a number of years the Campus Shop has carried on a fine work in assisting to meet the relief needs in Independence. Detailed reports of the activities of this group of women, under the supervision of Mrs. Henry R. Rowland, have been published in the Herald, and a moving picture was shown at the last two Conferences. Their work is outstanding and has proved to be most helpful in this time when clothing and shoes are so much needed to supply the needs of our members in Europe.

The task, however, of getting other clothing, sorting it, and packing it in boxes to go with foodstuffs, has been so great that it was necessary to set up a complementary organization to take care of this phase of the work. This was done under the leadership and supervision of Brother L. R. Holmes of Independence, who has devoted a great deal of time in looking after this work. His organization consists of approximately thirty women who have also met on Tuesday of each week, the same day that the Campus Shop workers meet. They pack, label, and address the packages, and have processed over 800 packages up to this time. These cost an average of $5.00 per box, including the foodstuffs and postage. This cost is met from the Oblation Funds contributed by members of the church.

We have kept a record of boxes sent and a list of the addresses of people to whom boxes have been sent, and each time one is sent the date of its sending is recorded. We have tried to avoid duplication insofar as possible except that additional boxes are sent to each addressee from week to week.

Apostle McConley has covered a great deal of territory in the European Mission and has forwarded to us corrected lists of our members. In writing to us he has emphasized the importance of our having a list of all members to whom packages have been sent. There are other groups sending packages throughout the church. We would appreciate such groups or individuals sending us the names and addresses of the people to whom they are sending packages; also advice as to whether acknowledgment has been received of these packages, as we feel it is vitally important to meet the needs of all of our people; and it may be that some are receiving an abundance of packages, while others are receiving none.

We are not suggesting that individuals or groups cease sending, but that they advise us as stated above of the names and a general list of items sent.

Arrangements have been made with the Campus Shop to give special attention to the supplying of clothing for our members in Europe. The shop is well equipped and qualified to sort, repair, and handle such clothing, utilizing and conserving it more economically than is possible in small groups. The Campus Shop works in full accord with the General Church officials and all resources of the shop are made available for the needs of the church. It is, therefore, suggested that branches and groups located within an area of one hundred miles of Independence can probably best serve our needs by sending clothing, shoes, etc., in bundles to The Campus Shop, 406 South Pleasant, Independence, Missouri. It may be more practicable for groups a considerable distance from Independence to obtain lists and instructions from our office than to send clothing here. We will be glad to furnish such lists, but when doing so we would like to have such groups or individuals assume the definite responsibility of sending such goods, as lists given will not be included in shipments from Independence.

With the organization of women working under the supervision of Brother Holmes, many packages can be sent and shipments properly recorded.

It has taken some little time to get the whole organization co-ordinated, but real progress has been made, and it is our hope that we may continue to meet the needs of our people in Europe.

Eternal Values

By Apostle Charles R. Hield

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Philippians 4:13.

MOST OF US had not realized, perhaps, that the location finally decided upon for the permanent home of the United Nations in New York City was the spot where Nathan Hale was tried and finally executed by the British. Going to a place where history has taken place is inspiring to most people. Thousands of tourists visit the Battery in New York City and try to imagine there the old Dutch settlers under Peter Stuyvesant. It was there they bowled upon the green. It gives one a new appreciation of the founders of our country when one stops at Plymouth, Massachusetts, and tries to picture in his mind the Pilgrim Fathers landing in that area, and building their first little community.

I had the opportunity a few years ago, before World War II, of visiting the city of Rome, in Italy. That city yet cherishes many of the fine memories of the old imperial city of the Caesars. It was this past glory that Mussolini attempted to revive. One is thrilled with the great Triumphal Arch of Titus, also the huge Colosseum and remains of the Roman Forum. These are ruins of a great civilization of power, force, and might. Yet Rome became wicked. It made slaves of its enemies and ruled by the strength of its armies.

One of the greatest landmarks of history, however, is beneath the ground in Rome. The courage, the determination, and the fortitude of the early Christians in that ancient city are brought to mind by the catacombs and dungeons. They left no arches of triumph or amphitheaters, but the quality of life lived by those early Christians is a challenge to us today.

It was particularly interesting to me to go down into the Mamertine Prison, sometimes called the Tullianum prison. This dungeon is partly cut in the tufa rock of the Capitoline Hill and partly built of two-foot blocks of stone. There are two chambers in this dungeon, one above the other. The only access to the circular lower dungeon is through a round hole in the floor of the upper chamber. In recent years a stairway has been built to the lower dungeon for the benefit of tourists. The victims who were placed in this horrible cell were lowered through the opening in the stone floor. This prison is of particular importance to Christians because it is the place where it is said the Apostle Paul was imprisoned during the latter part of his sojourn in the city of Rome.

AS FAR as we can reconstruct history, the Apostle Paul first came to Rome as a prisoner in the year 61. There were two imprisonments with an interval of missionary work between. He probably lived as a free man in a rented house until after the Great Fire and the Christian persecutions. In the year 65 and 66 he is supposed to have been confined in this dark, gloomy, and damp dungeon. There is a stone post in the room to which Paul was chained. A little spring furnished water from which the apostle could quench his thirst. There probably was a little straw over to one side which he used for his bed. Over the hole in the ceiling was placed an iron grating. The ceiling is much too high for one to escape unaided. It is the dungeon where many of the political and military prisoners, before and after the time of Paul, were placed. There they were left to die of starvation.

There is something almost sacred about the spot. We stood there for some time and tried to reconstruct in our mind the events which occurred in that dismal place. With not too great a stretch of imagination one can picture the Apostle Paul handcuffed to a guard who has just come from the games or the chariot races outside perhaps drunk with wine, and his stomach full of the food which was provided at public expense. He may have just witnessed some of the bloody contests in the arena of the Circus Maximus. One can easily imagine him cursing his own fate at being forced to be chained for eight hours to this man. Scripture seems to indicate, however, that some of the guards of the Apostle Paul were converted to a belief in Christ. One can imagine a change of guards, and perhaps a friendly soldier conversing with the apostle on the beauties and the intelligence of the divine plan. The Apostle Paul obtained some writing material and wrote letters to some of his former converts and to his former missionary helpers. One can also imagine the flickering light of an oil lamp or a candle and almost hear the rattle of the chain as he wrote his letters to the Corinthians, and the Philippians. How astonished the guard must have been, were he to look over his shoulder and read what Paul was writing. Or the apostle may even have read to him the letter after he had finished it.

I count all things but lost for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ, my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice. . . . Not that I speak in respect of want, for I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased and I know how to abound. Everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me.—Philippians 3: 8; 4: 4, 11-13.

Paul had great faith in the overruling protection of divine providence.

My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus. Now unto God and your father be glory for ever and ever, amen.—Philippians 4: 19, 20.

He evidently had originally intended to close his letter with the word "amen." There are three more verses, however, to the fourth chapter of Philippians. He seems to have taken up his letter and added a postscript. Could it be that some of the saints of the Caesar's household had visited him? It is not difficult to visualize the iron grating, covering the entrance to the hole, being slowly moved aside, a ladder descending, and a small group of men and women descending into his prison. These were the ones he had converted, perhaps, during the past four years, some of them even of the household of Nero.

You may be sure that they would tell Paul about the crimes and the persecutions that the saints were enduring in the city since they had last met. The apostle would be told which ones had been captured; which ones had been killed; which ones were still in hiding. One of the stories of early Christian persecutions is that of a certain Roman captain who fell in love with a Christian captive. He was her guard in the cells. He had begged her to renounce Christianity and marry him. Then she would be set free. This she refused to do, and when the time came, she resolutely stepped forward into the circus arena to face the lions and death. Being deeply in love with her, and because of her courage and faith in the truths of Christianity, the captain went to his death with her. The Apostle Paul may have heard this story, or a similar one.

We can imagine this great spiritual leader encouraging his converts to remain firm in spite of the difficult times. He would plead with them not to forsake the Christ, but to endure, if need be, any punishment, rather than to deny their Master. Well could this great preacher tell of other persecutions in the church and give examples of how faithful other Christians had been. Perhaps he told the story of the stoning of Stephen. He could mention some of the events of his own conversion; how at one time he himself persecuted the Christians. On the way to Damascus, he was struck down and was blind for three days. He had been sent to Ananias and told what he must do to fulfill the wishes of his Christ. He could relate how his former friends, when he came to leave Damascus, now a converted Christian, sought to kill him. He had to have himself let down at night in a basket from the wall. He could tell of his experience at Lystra, how a cripple had been healed and the people had hailed him and Barnabas as gods! His enemies from Antioch arrived and stirred up the people against him. Finally he was stoned and dragged outside of the city and left for dead. He could relate how five times he had been beaten with thirty-nine lashes, how three times he was beaten with rods, how he was thrice ship-wrecked, once a night and a day holding on to a floating spar in the sea.

Some inquisitive member of the group could well ask the apostle to whom he was writing. The reply would be that he was writing to a jailor over in Philippi. That would call for an explanation, and the apostle could well tell of the conversion of Lydia and how he and Silas, through the power of God, had cast out the spirit of divination from a damsel. The authorities were angry with them and ordered them beaten and placed in an inner prison, their feet in stocks. If Paul told all the story, he would tell how he and Silas sang that night and prayed, and how an earthquake came and all were set free. The jailor, fearing imprisonment, was about to commit suicide when the Apostle Paul called to him. The keeper of the prison and his household were all baptized.

One can imagine someone of the group asking Paul how he happened to come to Rome in the first place. In reply he would tell them that in the year 58, at the Pentecostal season, he had taken a young Greek convert into the temple area and had incurred the anger of the Jews. They had dragged him from the temple and beaten him, hoping to kill him. He was rescued by a Roman officer and placed in a prison for safety. The Lord, however, had appeared to him at night and said, "Be of good cheer, Paul; for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome."—Acts 23:11. He would tell how Felix imprisoned him for two years and how finally he was brought before Festus and Agrippa for a hearing. Taken then to Caesarea to be brought back finally to Jerusalem for trial, the apostle had appealed to Caesar. Next our aging Christian leader could tell how in the year 60 he started for Rome. For fourteen days the ship was tossed by a storm and finally shipwrecked on the reef isle of Malta. He could tell of the bite of the viper and how he shook it off into the fire.

Yes, the Apostle Paul in his dungeon could tell from his own experiences of the power of God and the great faith he had in the ultimate victory of Christian people. He would encourage the little band from Nero's household to stand firm in their belief in Christ and his resurrection. They may lose their physical existences, but their enemies could not harm their souls. He offers to be an example and to die with them. We can imagine him praying with them before they leave. They climb back up the ladder, and the hole is covered again with the iron grating.

We have often wondered why Paul seems to have closed his letter once and then added a postscript to it. It may have been due to one of these visits from the saints of Caesar's household. At any rate he did write a postscript:

Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The brethren which are with me greet you. All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Caesar's household. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.—Philippians 4: 21-23.

Anyone who gets an opportunity to visit Rome should not fail to visit this Mamertine Prison.

ABOVE GROUND in Rome tremendous things were taking place. Not the spirit of love, peace, harmony, good will, and service that were actuating the Apostle Paul in his dungeon. The ruler in those days was Nero. He had become emperor of Rome in the year 54, at seventeen years of age. Nero's mother, Agrippina, had been married several times and Nero, born in the year A.D. 37, was a child by her second husband. By a series of plots, Agrippina caused Mesallina, the wife of the Emperor Claudius, to be disgraced and executed. Then she herself married the emperor. Next she persuaded her new husband to adopt Nero. The rightful heir and son of Claudius, Britannicus, was murdered. The young Nero was then married to a daughter of the emperor, Octavia, even though Nero was only sixteen and Octavia was only eleven. In the year 54 Claudius, the emperor, was poisoned and Nero, only seventeen years old, was proclaimed emperor. At nineteen years of age, Nero fell in love with the wife of one of the generals.

This lady's name was Poppaea. Nero had his first wife, Octavia, banished and barbarously murdered. Poppaea got a divorce from her husband, Otho, and married the young emperor. When this young ruler was twenty-one, he tried to connive the death of his mother by having a boat fall apart in the river. She swam ashore, however, but he had her followed and killed. This caused consternation in Rome and Nero had to flee for six months, until the trouble quieted down. He came back later and entertained the people with carnivals, chariot races, games, drama, etc. He gave himself up to five years of pleasures. As an administrator, he was a failure. In 61 a revolt broke out in England, under Boadicea. In the year 63 occurred the very famous earthquake at Pompeii. In the same year there was a very disastrous military defeat in Armenia. The senate was about to put him out. In July, 64, the great fire broke out in Rome, starting in one of the wooden booths of the south-east end of the Circus Maximus. Two-thirds of the city of Rome was destroyed in that great conflagration.

Nero found it very convenient to blame the Christians for this. Did they not live to themselves? They did not attend the circuses. They did not drink. They took no part in the carousing. Did they not preach equality? Did they not foretell that the end of the world was to come by fire? Nero had the Christians hunted out. They were nailed to crosses. Some were covered with hides and worried to death by dogs. Some were dragged by bulls, exposed to hungry lions in the arena, or placed upon the rack and tormented. Others were covered with tar and pitch and set afire.

In the year 65 a plot was made upon the life of the emperor. The plot failed, but Nero instituted a purge. He had some of the prominent men of the time, Lucan, Piso, Rufus, and others, put to death. In a fit of passion he kicked Poppaea, who, about to give birth to a child, died. Nero then courted Antonia, who was the remaining daughter of the former emperor and a sister of Nero's first wife, Octavia. Antonia refused Nero's attentions, and he had her killed.

Pestilence broke out in Rome after the fire, and Nero, to get away from it all, made a trip to Greece, to take part in the Olympics. There he entered into each competition, particularly singing and dramatics, and waited for the decision of the judges like a nervous schoolboy.

Nero returned to Rome full of egotism, with the prized laurel upon his brow. In the year 66 there was a revolt in Palestine. A holy war broke out. At first the Jews defeated the Roman Legion. Vespasian was sent to quell the disorder. This gave new reason for persecuting the Jews and Christians in Rome.

ABOUT THE YEAR 66 or 67, Paul was finally brought before Nero and condemned to be killed by the sword. After such a sentence, the law allowed the condemned ten days of grace. We can imagine the Apostle Paul staying in his dungeon, spending his last few days writing letters to some of his friends. One such letter possibly written during this period, was sent to Timothy, the evangelist. The apostle mentions his impending fate:

Watch thou in all things, endure affliction, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry, for I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me, only, but unto all them, also, that love his appearing.—II Timothy 4: 5-8.

We do not know how long after writing this letter he actually was "offered." Tradition indicates that he was taken out of the city of Rome by the soldiers of Nero and beheaded on the Ostian way.

It would almost seem that the heavens revolted against such a fate for one of God's servants. In the year 67 the Roman army in Gaul, in France, and in Spain revolted. Otho marched upon Rome. Nero's Praetorian guards deserted him. The senate met and proclaimed Galba emperor, and Nero a traitor and a danger to the empire. Troops were sent to seize him. As is often the case with dictators who seek to rule by force, power, and fear, Nero fled in the disguise of a peasant to a little town five miles away. His hiding place was made the goal of a systematic search. When the soldiers finally learned where he was and surrounded the house, he begged a servant to kill him, but the fellow refused. Nero finally committed suicide, slashing his own throat with a dagger, crying just before he did so, "What an artist perishes in me!"

The statues Nero had erected to himself and Poppaea were torn down. The coins he had issued with this woman's likeness upon them were called in. His "golden house" was destroyed. Yet in all this madness, there comes at the end of his life a little picture of charm, as history records that an old childhood sweetheart, Acte, came and claimed his mutilated body and took it away and gave it burial.

Nero had lived only thirty years, yet they were thirty years of turmoil and strife. What good he could have done for the world, had he accepted the message of his prisoner, the Apostle Paul! Both men died, as we all shall die. But how different were their goals in life! Nero is remembered today only with scorn and hatred. He is emblematic of sin, immorality, cruelty, force, and hatred. No mother names her child "Nero." The name is only given to mongrel dogs, and that because they may be black or vicious. Nero had lived for himself. He thought only of his own pleasures, his own magnificence, his own grandeur, and his own popularity. Anybody who got in his way he killed. He forced his childhood tutor, the famous Spaniard, Seneca, to commit suicide by cutting his arteries.

The Apostle Paul, however, is a living example of the power, the strength, and the courage which come to those who are caught up under the great love of building a godlike community here upon the earth. There is no other power that will cause men to rise to such feats of service. It is true what the Lord had said to Ananias, about the Apostle Paul: "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake."—Acts 9:16.

CHристианITY has always thrived in times of stress and persecution. We learn, therefore, that men and women are not saved by themselves or for themselves. They are saved in the process of giving themselves for humanity. Never can a true Christian accept of sin and evil as preferable to death. To become a Christian is the experience of a moment, but to be a Christian is the experience of a lifetime. Man wins freedom by the pursuit of truth and goodness, it does not burst forth like a gusher oil well.

When we study the life of the Apostle Paul, I am often reminded of a commentary written by an excellent Bible student. He thought that perhaps the rich young ruler to whom the Christ talked at one time might have been given the apostleship later bestowed upon the Apostle Paul. This rich young ruler was interested in things rather than in people. He was classified as "the man who might have been."

In the past thirty-five years our world has gone through a period of maladjustments. We have had panics, inflation, depressions, and two wars. The world needs righteous men of indomitable will similar to the Apostle Paul.

In Paul we find the example of a man who allowed nothing to stop his zeal for building the kingdom. How often our modern Christians are offended or hurt because of some minor detail, some minor difference of opinion. The apostle did feel cast down at times, yet he never felt forsaken.

Nero had the wealth of a great empire. He lived in a mansion, his "Golden House." He robbed the conquered provinces of their art and their treasures to furnish his rooms. He had everything, seemingly, that he wanted. Yet he lost the only thing of eternal value—his own soul. The Apostle Paul was always the master of himself. He was always able to rightly judge the values of life. He had no ambition to control wealth, or to dominate large numbers of people. He was poor in worldly goods, yet he obtained the riches of eternity.

He did grieve, he was concerned about the lives of people. He even cried, for he says, "... by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one, night and day, with tears." (Acts 20:31) Yet he had an abounding joy in his service. He was always foretelling victories. He was always urging his followers to "rejoice." The measure of a man is the size of a thing that it takes to get his goat. Watching our little Boston bull dog, I realize that it is not always the size of a dog in the fight, but the fight that is in the dog that determines which one wins.

MANY, like the Emperor Nero, are always seeking some new amusement, some new thrill, some new form of entertainment. Like Nero, such people are full of fear. They act impulsively. The theory of "letting oneself go" is erroneous. Progress and advancement have only occurred when conscious effort has been substituted for instinct, and when reason and inspiration have taken the place of impulse.

There is no question as to which of these two men, Nero or Paul, lived the more successful life. We may, however, well review our own standards. What values are we accepting as our guides?

We do not know what is ahead of us. We do know, however, that life is most normal with God, and that people live happiest when they co-operate with his great spiritual program. When we give ourselves in service we find that there comes to our lives, as there did to Paul's life, poise, courage, determination, and joy. Christ and his program of social reconstruction always have been an outlet for pent-up nerves. "He restoreth my soul." The Christ said: "My peace I give unto you. Not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."—John 14:27. A righteous man in a righteous cause has no fear of any man in any cause.

It is a much harder job, it takes much more intestinal fortitude to conquer oneself than it does to be hard upon others. It takes a higher type of manhood to use wealth for the good of mankind, than it does to use it only upon oneself and his family. The really powerful, the really strong, the really tough personalities today, are those men and women who have learned to control the blessings of our universe, and use them for the benefit of mankind as a whole.

The world is hoping that someone might find a cure for cancer, for diabetes, for polio, and other diseases. Who would not like to be the discoverer of some medicine or some vaccine which would render man immune from these terrible afflictions?

Who would not like to find the solution for unemployment, for poverty, for hatred, for insecurity, war, and crime? God has a plan, and he is asking us to carry out this great experiment. We Christians are his laboratory assistants. There is always greater joy in sacrificial service than there is in selfish expenditure of time and talent.

There is always a struggle in the world between those who would live off the fat of the land, thinking only of themselves, being indifferent to social progress, and a minority who are willing to spend themselves in service for mankind. Within our own bodies we have the same type of phenomena. Pus from a wound is the accumulation of the dead bodies of white corpuscles, who have sacrificed themselves in the struggle against harmful bacteria.

Paul "fought a good fight." The challenge of Christ to this generation and all generations is also to fight a good fight. Thousands of fine Christians are winning this battle. They do not have to whip themselves into doing it; there is no strain or tension. They have poise, courage, and great power.

Nero had an opportunity to be a great blessing to mankind. Instead he became the Quisling of the Power of Evil. He accepted the cunning and false theory that pride, earthly pleasures, and wealth are enduring. He foolishly gambled his life and lost, as those who put their trust in such values in the end always lose.

Paul chose lasting and eternal values. He aligned himself with truth and justice. Joining forces with Christ and the Righteous Power of the universe, Apostle Paul lived and died a victor. No wonder he wrote: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

We can do the same.

Kemps Arrive in Hawaii

Brother and Sister James N. Kemp arrived in Honolulu by plane on the 19th of May. They were met at the airport by about 35 of the Honolulu Saints and received in true Hawaiian fashion. I think they make church history by being the first missionaries to fly the Pacific.

The Monday they arrived, after having a fish dinner at the Foo's, they came to the Mission House where they were received informally by the members. On the following Wednesday they were officially welcomed by the combined branches of Honolulu and introduced to the official family. Of course, they were presented with leis and the background of Hawaiian music, which a newcomer, as well as an old timer, always enjoys. Knowing Brother and Sister Kemp were musicians, we invited them to sing as well as speak, which hit a very welcome chord, and they were "in."

On Friday, the 23rd, we took the plane to Hilo and were met by Brother Dela Cruz. That evening we enjoyed a dinner party at the Mission House where the Kemps are staying. The house was all prepared for them and stocked with food, etc., which is the Hawaiian custom.

Saturday, we enjoyed the program at Waiakea Kai which opened the Rally Day. And Sunday was another day of rally day activities with the missions at Pahoa and Haulaula attending. Seven were baptized by Priest Charles Aki and confirmed by the elders present.

They had a very effective program arranged to welcome the Kemps at the 11 a.m. service which presented scenes in pantomime of the history of the church from Joseph's vision until the work was brought to the islands, giving a short history of Brother Waller's work and, also Brother McConley's, as the Hilo Branch was built. After that they sent Hawaiians in proper royal cape down to escort the Kemps to the platform to join the many nations represented there and then presented them with a beautiful gardenia lei apiece. This program was arranged by Brother Dela Cruz and provided a very fine setting for the action taken in the afternoon.

In the afternoon we held a business meeting. At which time we presented the resignation of Brother Dela Cruz and then recommended that Brother Kemp become pastor of the Hilo Branch with Brother Dela Cruz as his associate. This was unanimously approved with all members voting and the largest representation present I have ever witnessed in Hilo. We also suggested that the missions on that island work directly under Brother Kemp as pastor of the Hilo Branch which was well taken, and Brother Kong of Halaula and Brother Nii came forward and welcomed Brother Kemp.

Cultivating the Soul

By Cultivating the Soil

By J. A. Koehler

Number 31 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

A FEW YEARS AGO I heard a Federal jurist say that "The business of the church is to cultivate the soul. It is not to cultivate the soil." If he meant that it is not the function of the church to be engaged in farming, or even to supervise farming operations, I think he was right. The function of the church, as that word is commonly used, is not to teach even its own members either the science or the art of farming. But if that jurist meant that it is not the business of "peoples" of the church to pursue farming (or any other practical affair) as an activity of the soul, if he meant that there is no necessary relation between the cultivation of the soil and the cultivation of the soul, I think he was dead wrong.

"Cultivate the soil" has more than one meaning. As an activity of an individual farmer, or as a private affair or livelihood, it may mean simply to till the land. But as an activity of a "community," or as an affair of a "people," it means to sustain life through the systematic regulation, or government, of economic affairs in general. Soil cultivation by peoples is the establishment and maintenance of definite economic relations by public authority—relations that are essentially relations of man to man. Soil cultivation by peoples is a matter of ordering human relations, or of determining the constitution of economic society.

PURE RELIGION is soul cultivation—call it purification or sanctification or salvation of the soul or whatever you choose. There may be no conscious relation between an individual farmer's soil cultivation and his soul cultivation, for there are many kinds of religions. Perhaps I should say that some farmers may not believe that such a relationship exists. There may still be religious groups, peoples, who hold that business and religion are separate affairs. But to the Israelites, in the times of the prophets, there could be no separation of soil cultivation from soul cultivation. Nor can we separate the one from the other now—except in our imagination.

"Kingdom" righteousness is both soul and soil cultivation. It is peoples grounding their economies in the will of God. That is implied in the admonition of Jesus to seek first "the kingdom of God, and his righteousness [or as establishing his righteousness]; and all these things [all these products of industry which keep the soul alive] shall be added unto you."

But Jesus maintained that soil cultivation, or "Kingdom" or social or communal righteousness, is at once soul cultivation. If you doubt that, ponder the sixth chapter of Matthew in particular.

The story of the Bible regarded as a whole affirms the truth that to order human relations aright, relations to the soil must be ordered aright.

And surely every Bible believer must believe that human relations are the soul-cultivating relations.

ORDINARY FARMING illustrates that truth. In your imagination draw a picture of a farmer engaged throughout the years in producing corn. You know, of course, that corn is one of the forms of plant life. It may have no soul such as man has. But it has a germ, a substance out of which it reproduces itself. And that process of reproduction is comparable, it may even be analogous, to the activities of the soul through which it achieves eternal life, or which assures that man shall come forth in the resurrection of the just.

In drawing the picture of corn cultivation the ideas uppermost in your thinking respect the character of the soil in which the seed corn is planted, the preparation of the soil through proper culture, and the cultivation of the crop. And why? Simply because there can be no cultivation of the "soul" of the corn, so to speak, except through the cultivation of the soil. A farmer must till his soil as a means promoting the growth of his corn.

In one sense a farmer does not reproduce corn; he does not produce a crop; the corn reproduces itself through its own activity or vegetative processes. And that is precisely what the soul of man does. Its activity is its life. It cultivates itself through that activity; through its own self-conscious, self-willed, mental, moral, or spiritual activity.

Not all farming is highly successful. Some corn crops, in some instances for one reason only, are very poor. That reason is the manner in which corn is related to the soil. Many a novice has planted his seed corn so close that it could not produce good ears. Corn cultivation may be a failure, too, because it is planted too far apart, or because the relations of the seed corn to the soil relate the growing plants to each other in impossible ways. No one who plants his kernels of corn fourteen feet apart in single rows can hope to harvest a full crop of superior corn.

SOCIETY is man relating himself to the soil, or to the natural or physical world. Which means that natural world relations are at once social world relations. In relating himself to the soil, man relates himself to his fellows. Which means that soil relations are at once human relations. "Thy neighbor's landmark" is a human relationship. The oil and wine inpouring of the neighbor, the Good Samaritan, is a relationship of compassion; it is human relationship. And it is the kind of human relationship—which is at once a soil-relationship—that cultivates the soul.

The contention of the genius of true religion (as bad corn planting illustrates) is that the soil must be cultivated aright to cultivate the soul successfully. It is conversely that the wrong ordering of man's relations to the soil—which is at once the wrong ordering of man's relations to man—cannot save the soul. It cannot produce men that are in the likeness of God. That genius maintains that when economic or soil relations are wrong the soul cannot cultivate itself aright. No one can be a party to the maintenance of wrong relations to the soil without degrading his soul. For wrong relations to the soil—which are wrong social relations—are the principal causes of selfishness, of un-neighborly ill will, of national hatreds—in a word, of all the business, financial, industrial, commercial, political, and military evils that degrade the soul.

THE BUSINESS of a religious people, the business of the church, is to cultivate the soul. But no religious people can cultivate its soul effectually except through cultivating the soil aright. Except through ordering soil relations—which are at once human relations—aright. And that means, does it not, that true religion is an implementation of a true philosophy of social life.

Restoration religion is a philosophy of social life. One of the provisions of that social philosophy is this: "You are to be equal, or in other words you are to have equal claims on the properties (or on the economic resources of the people or community) for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just . . . that every man may improve upon his talent . . . every man seeking the interest of his neighbor and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."

Translate that provision into corn-field terms and judge of whether it is true. It says that the field should be cultivated for the sake of each and every stock of corn in the field. The field should be planted, in other words, so that each plant may have room to grow, access to the things through the use of which life is sustained and promoted. It shall be planted so that each plant shall be benefited by the falling of the pollen of one tassel upon the silks of others. It means that rightly ordered human society is a relationship of mutual aid.

Mutual aid, or economic fellowship, has most to do with the cultivation of the soul. But economic fellowship is a physical or temporal world as well as a spiritual world relationship. It is both at once. It could not truly be the one without being the other. To promote true economic fellowship, a people must promote true relations to the garden of God. That means that society, which is an activity of the soul, is a soil-cultivating affair. It means that true religion's way of cultivating the soul effectually is to cultivate the soil aright.

A Spiritual Experience

I know that God does live and protect his people. One evening, as I was walking down a road, I heard a voice say, "Run." I ran for about twenty feet and, looking back, saw a large limb fall where I had been walking. I have been healed through administration several times, and I am grateful for these divine blessings.

I have been a member of the Reorganized Church since January 24, 1909. I am proud of this affiliation, and I want to live a life that will be a credit to it.

Our Task

After reading Apostle Gleazer's article, "The Tie That Binds," I felt the need to bow in humility and ask forgiveness for my own slothfulness and lack of faith and courage. I think we of the church are so self-satisfied with the knowledge and blessings we have received that we often fail to sense the great responsibility that is ours. Occasionally, we wonder why we don't feel God's presence as we once did, but we are reluctant to "thrust in our sickles and reap." I am trying to share the gospel with those about me by passing on the Herald to them, pointing out those articles in which I think they will find the greatest help. We must not allow ourselves to fall in the "neither hot nor cold" category, because the adversary is always alert to our weaknesses. We must be prayerful, watchful, and careful. God has promised that we may become laborers together with God if we will but touch the hem of his garment. Great opportunities are open to us as the time of our redemption is nigh. We must grasp them if we wish to reap the reward of the faithful.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Open house was held in observance of the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cousins on Sunday afternoon, March 16, at their home near Grain Valley, Missouri, following a family dinner at the Town House in Independence. Eight of their children and seven grandchildren were present for the dinner. They have fifteen grandchildren in all and one great-grandchild. One hundred forty of their friends called during the afternoon.

Fred and Fannie Cousins are both natives of England; they were married in Chesterfield in 1897. In 1904, they came to America and have since lived in Iowa, Wyoming, and Missouri. Mr. Cousins joined the Reorganized Church at the age of sixteen; he was ordained an elder while living in Wyoming. Mrs. Cousins was baptized soon after her marriage.

A recent visitor in their home was Mr. Cousins' brother, Charles, of Clay Cross, England, who attended General Conference.

ARE YOU ISOLATED?

If so, we'd like to help you. We want to know how nonresident pastors can best serve you, what you would like to see included in your reunion program, what you think of participation in the activities of other churches, and what you would like to do for the church. Write us, won't you? We'll print as many suggestions as space permits.

Here's What You Can Do

But we, the youth of the church, must not wait; we must push forward to new religious frontiers.

—Carolyn Scott.

Probably ninety-five per cent of all church literature urges us to take an active part in the religious life and work of the church. Since our childhood, we have heard ministers plead for action. We have been asked over and over again, "Are you willing to serve?" And everywhere people are earnestly and wholeheartedly saying, "Yes, we are willing. We want to serve this church more than anything else, but what can we do?"

Our leaders are overburdened with endless cares and responsibilities. It is not strange that they answer in general terms when asked by any one individual what he is to do. But generalities will not help many people. Once they have been persuaded to serve, they want to know exactly what part of the great task is theirs, and unless they are told, they lose interest.

Young people are admonished to study the word of God as found in the Three Standard Books, to read the church periodicals, to attend services regularly, to keep the financial law, to be clean of habit and conversation, to go to Graceland, to make leisure-time creative, and to marry in the church. All of this is fine advice, but it does not outline any specific course of action.

Here, as I see it are some new religious frontiers for young people who want actual assignments:

1. Writing. There is a constant demand for articles, poems, fiction, and nonfiction for church publications. The Herald welcomes young writers with a new approach to old problems. There is also a need for district and stake papers which can supply news and items of local interest to groups within a certain area. Anyone who has a fair command of the English language and a typewriter can satisfy his urge to serve in this way. The church needs good novels to replace the old favorites now out of print—stories about Graceland, present-day missionaries, reunions. Both the local and general church would welcome plays which present Latter Day Saint ideals in the language of today. If you can write for children, offer your help to the editors of Blue Bird, Oriole, and youth camp publications. Zion's Hope and Stepping Stones may be able to use your contributions, too.

2. Art. Again, church publications need artists. If you're in the Henry Anderson class, try illustrating some part of the church history or Bible. Few youngsters can resist comic books; older people have been known to read them, too. If you're a sign painter by vocation or avocation, you can be head man on the publicity committee. If you're an artist of the floor and wall painting school, you can probably add a much-needed touch of beauty to some part of your local church home.

3. Music. Good music is one of the finest advertisements a church can have. A singing people is a progressive people, and the right songs can have a real influence on their thinking. Why not make music to fit the occasion? If you're planning a young people's retreat, write a song that will make the theme more meaningful. Write one for Thanksgiving, Christmas, the Fourth of July. Maybe it won't ever be included in the Saints' Hymnal, but you'll feel better for having produced it, and at least one other person is bound to like it. If you play an instrument, tell your local music director. You may be just the person who can brighten up the worship services on Sunday morning.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Rich Price is a graduate of Graceland College, having attended, he says, "during the manless years of 1943-45." He has also attended the Universities of Missouri and Idaho. At the 1946 Idaho District Reunion, he was ordained to the office of priest and elected editor of the district's first periodical, "The Idaho Herald." By profession, he is a teacher of English in the New Plymouth, Idaho, High School.

Horizons

4. Zion's League. Maybe Z. L. seems a little childish, but it's still your number one chance to develop any talent of leadership with which you may have been blessed. Through it, you can become an active participant in the missionary program of the church (see the May 31 Herald); you're being counted on to help raise $25,000 by October 1, 1948.

* * * * *

These are just a few suggestions.

Now that I've started the list, you can add to it.

Follow the general directions set down for you by church leaders, but keep doing little things all the while that will give you the much-needed feeling of having accomplished something definite and tangible.

"We, the youth of the church, must not wait; we must push forward to new religious frontiers."

of the finger or in one youth convention. In the church, we shall do well to vision where we are going in the next fifty years. Youth will do well to push this viewpoint.

Third, let's start our research in our home neighborhoods. For instance, Leagues of Detroit and Kansas City have plenty of agencies of information and inter-group programs to bring this right to earth. I fear that survey investigations would not disclose Latter Day Saint young people better informed than those outside the church. Such studies have to be approached with the idea of understanding, rather than blowing up things as they are. Let the youth enthusiasts consult their pastors and specialists in the field on how to proceed.

Fourth, investigate the possibilities of our church's working with some minority group. This will involve specialization in training. For instance, if we were to undertake a twenty year program of work among the American Indians, how many competent young men and women

One World and the Church

QUESTION:

Much is said about the importance of overcoming racial barriers. What, precisely, are we supposed to do? Have we, as a church, a program for promoting international friendship?

ANSWER:

By Dr. Roy A. Cheville

Questions like this will keep on appearing in this feature. And they should. Studies in this field ought to increase in every League and branch of our church. Our alert young Latter Day Saints are concerned. This is a credit to them and to our faith. They are insisting that we cannot afford to dillydally along saying nothing and doing nothing. I find myself in this group that thinks our church has some leadership responsibilities, some genuine opportunities in the field of race relations.

I am a religionist who believes that "God made of one blood all nations." As such, I speak out for good will and brotherhood. I also am a sociologist. In this role, I insist that good intentions are not enough. Programs of action must be constructed on the data of research; they must gear to the natural laws of social relationships. It seems to me that our church has a rare opportunity of linking the spiritual and scientific in this ticklish area of race and minority problems. No group has done this so far.

The first thing Latter Day Saint youth can do is to get down to some first-class studying. The first requisite is to understand the problem. Too many of us want to do something, in the sense of starting off some get-together program. Just now, nothing can mess up the possibilities ahead of us more than half-informed radicals who feel the urge to start a revolution. By studying, I do not mean exchanging opinions and playing ping-pong with likes and dislikes. I mean getting hold of facts, more facts, and still more facts. We need to distinguish between race and racism, to see how minority groups develop, and so on. There is no substitute for this. Too many of our discussions are gab fests.

A second essential is to gear ourselves for a long-time program. We are dealing with something that reaches back into centuries; it cannot be solved at a snap would we have to initiate this ministry? Such a study requires that we ask ourselves very frankly what our church can contribute to enrich the life of these peoples.

Yes, I agree that my church needs to get into this field. Just now, I believe that we must implement our want-to with know-how. I also believe that young spirits need to do a lot of pushing to get the church conscious of the fact that we cannot drop this matter aside. I look around, however, and cannot find one League that seems to be doing a masterly job of studying the question. Let's get at it.

News Briefs

Independence, Missouri

South Chrysler Congregation

Pastor, Roy Thurtchley

The South Chrysler community group is again holding Sunday morning services. The first session was conducted on June 8 in the basement south of the church which is being constructed. The new building should be ready for use within sixty to ninety days.

Sixty-eight children attended the two weeks of vacation Bible school held recently.

The new church school officers are as follows: Stanley Withee, director; Ruby Williamson, assistant director; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Craig, directors of music; L. Z. Prichard, business manager; and Mrs. Cliff Smith, secretary-treasurer. Department heads are Mrs. W. A. Peck, kindergarten; Mrs. George Meyer, primary; George Meyer, junior; W. A. Peck, junior high; Anna Larson, senior high; and Roy Thurtchley, adult.

Two new members, Cliff Smith and Earl Langford, were baptized May 18 at Stone Church, Elders W. F. Bolinger and Perry Hiles officiating. They were confirmed the following Wednesday evening at the group prayer service. Elders W. F. Bolinger, Roy Thurtchley, Perry and George Hiles officiated at this service.

The women have met each Thursday since they organized on March 23, 1945. The Leaguers meet on Sunday evenings with their sponsors, Mr. and Mrs. John Pritchard. The branch also has an active group of Orioles; three of the girls and their monitor will attend camp at Gardner's Lake this summer.

Liberty Street Congregation

Pastor, Howard C. Timm

Evangelist Ray Whiting closed a successful two weeks' series of missionary services on Sunday evening, March 25. Eight candidates were baptized in the afternoon.

A Children's Day program and baptismal service were held June 8. Following a prelude by Ruth Zion and call to worship by Donald DeTray, a flag ceremony was presented. Foresta Franklin gave the invocation. Clyde Kearns, junior steward leader, made the offertory remarks, and the offering was taken by seven children. Special numbers included a vocal duet by Sharon and Kathleen Mills, songs by the children, and recitations by the Knowledge Club. Albert Douglas, supervisor of the junior department, gave a talk explaining that the ribbon badges which members of the club were wearing signified that they had met the requirements for membership: good conduct, taking part in programs when asked, attending at least one 11 o'clock service each month, learning the church sacraments, the six principles of the gospel, the books of the Bible and Book of Mormon, the Lord's Prayer, the Twenty-third Psalm, the Epitome of Faith, and the story of a hymn. Those participating in this part of the program were Jerry Edson, Larry Douglas, Alberta Douglas, Kathryn Wrigley, Boyd Hayes, Gary Plowman, Eddie DeTray, and Bobbie Crick. A story, illustrated with flannelgraph, was told by Mrs. Frances Cravens. Robert Hanson gave the Scripture reading. William LaGrece gave a talk concerning children and the responsibility of parents and others toward them. Then children and two young people were baptized at 11 o'clock. David Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Hurshman, was blessed by Elders Howard Timm and William LaGrece.

The various departments and classes are endeavoring to raise money for the new church. On Thursday evening, May 29 the young adult class sponsored a play and made a net profit of $675.54. The Zion's League and junior departments sold refreshments and added several dollars to their building funds. On Friday, June 13, the women's department served an Italian dinner. The juniors are earning money through a penny drive and by collecting papers. On Saturday, July 19, they will sponsor a food sale.

For the past several weeks, the Zion's League study class has had speakers to discuss historical points of interest near Independence. Fifty-seven young people toured the city on Sunday, June 8.

—Ethel Hart, reporter.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Pastor, Francis T. Schrunk

Talks were given on Sunday evening, April 20, by members of the congregation who attended General Conference. Family night was held on April 25.

The Sunday evening adult class taught by Pastor Schrunk is now using An Introductory Study of the Book of Mormon for a text. Many are taking this course for credit.

Junior church is held all but the first Sunday of each month. Softball games will be held every Friday night throughout the summer in Antelope Park.

Mrs. Reba Teton received special recognition recently for having attended church fifty-five consecutive Sundays. She walked to services on two of the coldest days last winter. Jerry Oehring was given his Life Award in Scouting at the last Court of Honor. Servicemen of both wars were honored at a special service on Sunday evening, June 1. Thirty-four names were on the roll.

Lincoln Saints mourn the passing of Nellie Friese who died May 21. She was an active member of the congregation before her illness.

Elder Charles Fry was guest speaker for the Zion's Circle on May 22. Husbands and guests were invited to this evening meeting.

Apostle D. T. Williams was also a recent guest speaker.

—Vinton Wight, reporter.

Dahinda, Illinois

Pastor, J. O. Dutton

District President W. W. Richards visited Dahinda on Sunday, June 8. The women of the branch are now studying The Life and Ministry of Jesus. Pastor Dutton is planning a series of meetings to be held in the near future.

Ruth Duvall, who has been serving as branch clerk, has moved to Moline.

—Stella Dawson, reporter.

The World Today

By Fred Alexander

The explosive Taft-Hartley bill, which is now on President Truman's desk, is still the center of interest in Washington as well as the entire country. Labor is hard put for a veto. The unions are pouring money into a terrific campaign for a White House veto. Much pressure is being brought to bear on the President.

Mr. Truman, however, is keeping a Sphinx-like silence concerning his intentions. But the President did drop a slight hint concerning things to come last week in a conversation with three members of the House labor committee, Lesinski of Michigan, Madden of Indiana, and Klein of New York. The President said: "Well, I've always been a friend of labor, and I still am a friend of labor. That is a matter of record, before and during the time I was a member of the Senate, and since. However, labor hasn't always been reasonable with us."

The President paused a moment and then said: "Labor will find after this question has been settled that I am still on its side." Mr. Truman said no more to further enlighten his three listeners, but many a conclusion will be drawn.

A Senate vote on a presidential veto will be hair-raisingly close. Lobbyists, pro and con, are focusing all their efforts on twelve senators who are of unsettled convictions. The chief fence-walkers are: Lucas of Illinois, Aiken of Vermont, Sparkman of Alabama, and Hatch of New Mexico. These four men may block or pass the labor bill—it is that close.

Many are betting that, as the situation stands now, the President will veto and Congress will override the veto by a narrow margin in the Senate—but—the situation may change between now and June 20, as a result of the intensive labor lobby.

Churchmen high in the Catholic hierarchy are preparing to speak out against the bill, and their words will carry much weight.

Politicians who have received support from labor will find themselves obliged to lobby against the bill's passage.

Many political futures are in the balance—how well the big men on Capitol Hill know that. Meanwhile the nation waits.

Definitely no reduction in taxes this year. Everything points to the fact that the public does not want a tax cut. Debt reduction is preferable. Here are some facts and figures to keep in mind about the current tax bill and any other bills that may come up in the future—and there will be others.

Note I—54.6% of the American people earn less than $2,000.00 per year. This group pays 18.5% of the taxes. Tax Bill would have given them 28.3% to 31% cut. A man with four in his family would have gained about 1% more spendable income.

Note II—39.1% earn between $2,000 and $4,000 per year. This group pays 32.5% of the tax bill. The Tax Bill would have given them 22.7% to 28.3% cut. A family of four would have gained about 1% to 2% more spendable income.

Note III—5% of the American people earn between $4,000 and $10,000. This group pays 12.4% of the tax bill. Tax bill would have given them 20.9% to 22.7% cut. A family of four would have gained about 2% to 4.6% more spendable income.

Note IV—1.3% of the people receive in excess of $10,000 per year. This group pays 36.6% of the taxes. Tax bill would have given them 11.1% to 22.7% cut. Income of $25,000 would have meant 10.3% more spendable income. Income of $50,000 would have meant 18.6% more spendable income. A man making $500,000 per year would have received 69.9% more spendable income.

Remarkable observation: This bill did not favor low-income groups.

The Russians are steadily gaining in influence in Europe and Asia as witness events in the Balkans and in China. Also, watch Italy and France. In many parts of the Eurasian continent, the United States has lost face, and the Soviets have made tremendous strides. The straws in the wind are no longer pink but a violent Soviet red.

In this country Henry Wallace continues to pack them in along the route of his 10,000 mile "peace crusade." It appears from recent statements that Wallace may form a third party. The chances are very good for such an eventuality. This would hurt the Democratic Party. Wallace is no longer a joke but a real political threat to be reckoned with. This farmer from Iowa will bear close watching—corn is not his only crop specialty—He might try raising a little Cain this year.

Things to watch for: A new U. S. policy to fight the spread of Communism in Europe. This new policy will involve untold millions of dollars in aid.

Communist advances in Italy. If the Soviets take "The Boot," the Mediterranean becomes theirs and the U. S. plans for Greece and Turkey will flop. Do not forget that U. S. troops must leave Italy within 90 days because the Italian treaty has been ratified. When the U. S. leaves, the U. S. S. R. comes in.

Watch the movement for Universal Military Training. It is a must. Read the report if possible. Write to Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. Send 75 cents. Ask for "UMT Report."

in Independence. Pastor Donald Lents read the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Kenepp are making their home in Independence.

McMullen-Wrigley

Mary Rose Wrigley, daughter of Mrs. Grace Wrigley and Mr. M. R. Wrigley, became the bride of Fred McMullen, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. McMullen, on May 31 at the Liberty Street Church in Independence, Missouri. Elder William LaGrace performed the ceremony. The couple will make their home in Independence.

Whipple-Swanson

Shirley Swanson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph G. Swanson of Chicago, Illinois, and John Whipple, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Whipple of Independence, Missouri, were married June 6 at Walnut Park Church. The groom's father performed the double-ring ceremony. Following a honeymoon in the Ozarks, the couple will make their home in Independence. Mrs. Whipple is a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium.

Ryan-Sampson

Dorothy Yokley Sampson and Captain Edward Ryan were married on June 1 at the Reorganized Church in Knob Noster, Missouri, Elder Loyd Adams officiating. They are making their home in Warrensburg, Missouri, where Captain Ryan is stationed.

Bennett-Holsworth

Helen Louise Holsworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Holsworth, became the bride of Donald C. Bennett on June 14 at the Liberty Street Church in Independence, Missouri. Elder I. G. Whipple, grandfather of the bride, read the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are making their home in Independence.

Smith-White

Marion White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee A. White of Rock Island, Illinois, and Kenneth P. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Orin Smith of Bradner, Ohio, were married May 24 at the Reorganized Church in Rock Island. President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., officiated at the double-ring ceremony. The couple will make their home in Evanston, Illinois.

Harrell-Nail

Maxine Nail, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Winton Nail, and Franklin G. Harrell, both of Pleasanton, Texas, were married June 8, Elder H. E. Winegar officiating.

Kuykendall-Kunz

Virginia Mae Kunz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Erwin J. Kunz, San Antonio, Texas, was united in marriage to Myles Reyburn Kuykendall, son of Mrs. Mae Kuykendall, San Antonio, on June 14. Elder H. E. Winegar performed the ceremony.

* Elder Hubert Case

The many people who know and love our veteran missionary, Elder Hubert Case, will be glad to hear of the happy experience that he had on his seventy-seventh birthday, which occurred June 5. There was a reception at the home of Bishop and Mrs. G. L. DeLapp (she is Brother Case's daughter), at which many friends were present to congratulate him. A fine oil portrait of Brother Case, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur B. Church, and painted by the Kansas City artist, Joseph A. Fleck, was exhibited, which added to the enjoyment of visitors. Mrs. Church is also a daughter of Brother Case.

Among the pleasant incidents of the day was the presentation of a poem written by a friend, John Turner, which Brother Case appreciated and offers for publication:

He comes without calling, this man called of God,
Unto us, and his knowledge he shares—
By the kindness and wisdom and love he displays,
Every thought and each word proves he cares.
Rich in experience, many blessings unfold,
Toiling through years, God's message has told.
May we on this day, expressing our love,
Acclaim you, as one from on high,
Send greetings, best wishes, with faith from above,
And pray that all blessings may be yours by and by.

* Thanks

Grandchildren are the most remarkable people in the world. They say and do the most wonderful things, according to the grandparents. And sometimes they really have something.

A good thought was reported at a local prayer meeting by Sister Madge Siegfried, quoting her grandson Eric, son of the F. E. Fowlers. Eric was saying grace at the table: "Dear Lord, we thank Thee for all the good food, and for all the nice people."

In such a spirit, we could all get along with our neighbors much more happily than we do.

* Strength

I can't remember now who made the statement that I found written at some church meeting on a page of my notebook. But it is worth passing on as a subject for a short talk or sermon. It is as follows:

"He who gave me this work to do
Will give me strength to do it."

What a calm and wonderful faith is expressed in that declaration. If, in the depth of our trouble and distress, we could remember it, how much we would be helped to go onward!

* False Knowledge

The Nelson Gallery recently had on exhibition a famous painting, "The Illness of Pierrot," by Thomas Couture (1815-97). Pierrot, dressed in his gay theatrical costume, is stretched out on the bed, and the doctor is standing there, as if considering a course of treatment. Other people are there, too, appearing helpless. In the painting there is a sign in French, hanging on the wall, which may be read from the original, but not from the prints of it. It reflects a bit of cynicism of the artist: Translated, it says, "Science makes the doctor see what is not, and prevents him from seeing what everybody knows."

Science has taken many a sharp thrust from its critics, and will probably take many more. It endures because, though it has often been mistaken, it is on the right course in the pursuit of truth. Without science, we should be in abysmal depths of ignorance, and we would still be dying of the Black Death, yellow fever, tuberculosis, cholera, and a host of other enemies of mankind. With science, more and more of us have the privilege of dying of old age and personal folly!

The artist is right in the idea that partial knowledge is dangerous. If you attempt to know anything, learn all you can about it. It is sometimes worse to know half of the facts than to know none at all.

Church Leaders to European Mission

June 23, 1947

To the Saints of the European Mission:

On the eve of their departure, I wish to commend to you the brethren of the Joint Council who have been commissioned to visit you. That they were selected in council is evidence of the high regard in which they are held, and I am confident that they will justify the confidence that you as loyal members will in any and all events accord them.

President F. Henry Edwards is of course well known to you. Many of you have known him "boy and man," and he needs no introduction. We could hardly speak of him in terms too laudatory. Since the General Conference of 1946, he has demonstrated his outstanding ability, and the wisdom of his selection at that time has been fully confirmed. His willingness to carry the burden attests his great devotion to the cause. He now comes to you to minister as one of the Presidency, at the same time meet again his relatives and friends.

Brother E. J. Gleazer, Sr., comes to you as a seasoned and experienced Apostle who has demonstrated his ability to carry the burden of missionary supervision. To you he is somewhat more than a brother in the cause, since he claims Ireland as the land of his nativity, with his share of Irish, and we are assured he will be well received among you.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp is the second one holding the office of Presiding Bishop to visit Europe. He has earned the high place he holds in the councils of the church. I think I could pay him no greater compliment than to repeat what the late President Frederick M. Smith said to me some months before his death: "Bishop DeLapp is an ideal church executive." In this I heartily concur.

Thus we desire you to know that we greatly value these our brethren who come from us to you within the next few days. They had hoped to travel by sea, but found that transportation was not available until fall, and the needs of the church demand that they should be back in the United States by that time. They are, therefore, scheduled to come to you by plane, leaving Chicago on July 9. Our prayers are for their safety and welfare, and we commend them to you for your Saintly consideration.

We are conscious of the fact that our very worthy colleague, Apostle Myron A. McConley, and his esteemed and capable wife, are already in your midst. We have the utmost confidence in them, and ere this reaches you, you will have had, I trust, the privilege of making their acquaintance.

In faith that the work will be blessed through the special labors of our brethren, assuring you and them of our unqualified confidence and trust, I remain,

Your fellow servant,
ISRAEL A. SMITH, President.

In "Dry Dock"

There is a common saying, of course not true, that there is always a first; but fortunate is he to whom some firsts never happen. The undersigned has recently experienced a first, the first time he has been a patient in a hospital, the first time to submit his welfare to the skill of a surgeon.

On advice of my physician and my own immediate associates, I entered the Independence Sanitarium, our very excellent hospital, on June 4 and underwent an operation which probably should have been attended to some years ago. Apparently it has been successful and as I write I am about to be discharged and go home. [Note: Since writing this President Smith has returned to his home.]

There is much I could and would like to say about this experience; but it is perhaps sufficient for me to say I have been amazed at the organization and efficiency of our own health institution. The knowledge displayed by all and the wisdom and careful oversight of doctors, nurses, and attendants attest the high degree of efficiency obtained by the modern hospital. Every need anticipated and every wish solicited, one could not but feel he was an outright burden on society in general.

My sincere thanks go to Doctor John R. Green, surgeon; Doctor Vance Link; Miss Copeland, superintendent; Miss Eva Franklin, supervisor; and Mrs. Phillips, assistant supervisor of nurses "in surgery," and all those very fine and intelligent and capable nurses to whom my personal welfare was intrusted, too numerous to mention, but none of whom will be forgotten by me. Most of these nurses are identified with the church and gave evidence of their personal interest in the poor executive temporarily "laid low" for repairs.

While here I have received many evidences of concern from my friends, many letters and cards wishing me a speedy recovery, and many floral offerings. To all these I make grateful acknowledgment, as also to my companion who visited me often.

A little black spider about the size of a half dime made his quarters in Room 219, and many hours I have spent in watching his movements. How he lives I do not know, but I have developed quite a fellow feeling for him. The Psalmist wrote: "The spider reacheth up with her hands and finds herself in kings' palaces." And so this little creature keeps me company in this fine room so splendidly equipped, as shown by the plate on the door, by the Detroit Saints, to whom also goes my sincere appreciation.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Something Rotten This Side of Denmark

One of the most iniquitous things in American politics is the big city "machine." In principle, it is Facist or Nazi. There is the big "boss," the "fuehrer." He is certainly not elected and has no standing under constitutional law. He just takes over. He may have come up out of a saloon, as the Pendergast machine did in Kansas City, as Hitler's organization was born in a Munich beer hall. He has no brown shirted army, but he does have an alliance with the criminal world which gives him an army of thugs and gangsters. He gathers leaders under him in wards and precincts and districts—and farther afield—as far as Washington.

This sort of thing goes back at least as far as the rotten Tweed rule in New York City, and the beginning (1805) of Tammany Hall in that gateway to America. The "machine" swings local elections and influences state and national elections by intimidation, violence, corruption of election officials, bribery, purchase of votes. It handpicks mayors, aldermen, members of the state legislature, sometimes even selects men for the United States Senate. It endeavors to corrupt local and state police to protect its henchmen and interests.

The machine is able to distribute patronage, jobs on overpadded city and county pay rolls, thus building up its following; and it has sources of enormous revenue. It dips into the public taxes, takes a cut out of the salary of its henchmen in many departments, grows rich from its levies on protected gambling, horse racing, houses of ill repute, its monopoly of some essentials that contractors must have and dare not buy elsewhere in a competitive market.

The machine is rotten, ruthless, murderous. It is hard to kill. Boss Tweed was finally convicted and died in jail while suits were pending for the recovery of $6,000,000 filched from the city; but Tammany Hall survived and within ten years was able to figure largely in national elections. Tom Pendergast and some 250 of his lieutenants were convicted of vote frauds by a Federal Grand Jury in 1938 and received penitentiary sentences. Pendergast died while on parole. The machine went under cover but did not die. By 1946 and 1947 it was back in the business of stealing elections to local, state, and national high offices. In the summer of 1947, a grand jury returned charges against 71 men in Kansas City and Jackson County, charging conspiracy in flagrant vote frauds. That news startled the nation one day, and the next day the news broke that hired gangsters had broken into the Kansas City Court House, blasted open the steel doors of a vault and stolen the ballot boxes on the contents of which the Grand Jury had returned its findings and on which in the pending trials the prosecution proposed to rest its case. The machine had functioned after its nature.

This news went around the world. This happened in the "heart of America," at the time close to the home of the President of the United States. Patriotic citizens at home were shamed and humiliated. America was discredited abroad in the world at a time when America was attempting world leadership in the name of Democracy.

This was the sort of thing Markham had in mind when he wrote:

I fear the vermin that shall undermine
Senate and citadel, school and shrine—
The worm of greed, the fatted form of ease,

And all the crawling progeny of these—
The vermin that shall honeycomb the towers
And walls of state in unsuspecting hours.

On the other side of the picture, we note the courage and zeal of independent newspapers, courageous prosecuting attorneys and lawyers, jurymen and religious and civic organizations, and good citizens generally who have fought against machine rule in many cities and for honest democratic government at home—at home first—overseas if possible. In this instance, as usual, exposure came first through the press—a free press. The Kansas City Star "broke the story." The attack was pressed by men who yet have the right of free speech; and it was backed by an aroused and informed public opinion. This reaction could not have occurred under a dictatorship, Nazi, Facist, or Communist, under which men are told what they may and may not read, say, do, or think.

The church, as an institution, does not take sides in partisan politics; but it is against iniquity in every form, and a crook is a crook no matter what his party badge. In a democracy there are few worse political crimes than the corruption of the ballot. Someone has said, "We hear of many things wrong in our country; but we do hear of them, and we do set ourselves to correct them."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

"Statistics record only the smallest part of the misery caused by alcohol. From the first glass to insanity, to crime, to despair and suicide, there are a thousand degrees. Only those who fall the lowest are accounted for by statistics."—G. Von Bunge, in an address delivered at the University of Basel.

Our Human Destiny

A Lay Sermon, Representing the Modern Viewpoint, on "Signs of the Times"

By Elaine Carson

I DON'T KNOW what the church is coming to! I think every man ordained to the ministry has preached at least one sermon on the "signs of the times," and now I, a mere lay member, am going to have my say.

Not long ago I heard just about as close to a "hell-fire" sermon as I am likely to in this day and age, of course it was somewhat diluted insofar as we Latter Day Saints have more than the two choices: "heaven or hell, bliss or blister," as Brother J. F. Curtis used to say, but it had all the implications of the "good old days"—if we don't behave, it's going to be pretty bad for us, and just look where this wicked old world is going to with all her wars and rumors of wars. The end is near—we can tell because of the famines, floods, wars, earthquakes, plane crashes, and I think there was one volcano. The speaker paid halting homage to the good things of "the world," but they were insignificant as compared to the troubles to come.

The words may be different, but somehow it sounded pretty much like the blistering forecasts of about 1820 and 1830, and if I remember correctly, God proclaimed to the prophet that such doctrines were an abomination in his sight. If the minister had been one of the "old school" about to be superannuated, I would not have minded half so much—but he was a young man, not a day over thirty, and I figured we were doomed to at least another generation of the same theme. Maybe it doesn't matter so much, and I shouldn't be inviting myself to an attack of ulcers by getting so worked up, but we're not going to build the kingdom of God on a negative gospel.

Why should we look forward to the coming of Christ with such fear and trembling? Certainly he will come, but to a world that is capable of receiving him, and a world in which his message can do some good. Look at the precedent—God sent his Son to the Jews when they could have received him, but for various causes they did not recognize their opportunity. God was not wrong in his timing—the Jews were wrong in their judgment.

NEVER IN their history were they so ready to receive the Son of God. They were not only looking for a "deliverer," they were used to them. Joseph delivered them from the famines of Canaan, Moses delivered them from the Egyptians, David delivered them from the Philistines and various other enemies, Nehemiah rebuilt Jerusalem for them, and Judas, the Maccabean, rebuilt their empire. Through all these centuries of history, there was woven into the Jewish way of thinking a belief in one God, the Creator.

Moses could not leave them alone for forty days before they reverted to idolatry, and even their jealous Jehovah, who would have no other gods before him, allowed them the tangible Ark of the Covenant, something they could see in order to help them concentrate on one deity. Even up into Elijah's day the same old war between one God and idolatry was being waged, but progress was being made—the nation was growing politically and by the time the kingdom split into two nations, following the death of Solomon, for the first time in the history of the whole world, more than one nation worshiped one God.

Then there were other factors—religious leaders like Hillel, about whom we have heard very little. They are not mentioned in the Bible, for the simple reason that there is a gap of about four hundred years between the "Prophets" and the New Testament. But no one expects us to believe that nothing happened to the Jewish nation and Jewish thinking in that period of time. Let me quote from Gerald Heard in his Introduction to The Gospel According to Gamaliel: "His grandfather [Gamaliel's] was the great Hillel, who not only became president of the Sanhedrin, but who also by his deep learning, piety, humility, and passionate love of peace, brought the thought of Judaism into that form which has made it able to survive as a lofty ethic until the present. . . . The Temple with its blood sacrifices was becoming increasingly a spiritual anachronism The synagogue was becoming their real religious center and their real worship the reading of the Law and the practice of prayer, not the sacrifices and the rituals at the altars." Hillel, according to Heard, was the spiritual father of the Essene and Nazarite movement, culminating in John the Baptist. "This is the forerunner phase, the period of waiting, questioning, looking forward, seeking"

The Jew was ready to accept Christ. It had taken God approximately two thousand years to build up this chosen people from the nomad family of Abraham to a nation capable of accepting so great a responsibility and unbounded honor. If it was the Jews' great opportunity, it was also the testing time for God's great labor of love—it was his first opportunity to make himself known to us. As President Edwards says: "to search for us and find us."

CHRIST came!
Christ taught: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." "When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things." "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "Life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment . . . seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink . . . your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things, but rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you." "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

But the Jews did not see Jesus nor the Father!

To the sincere Pharisee, he was a blasphemer and a breaker of the sacred Law. To the insincere Pharisee—the opportunist—the religious racketeer of that day, he was a menace, politically and financially. To the run-of-the-mill Jew, he was many things. To some a leader for a revolt against the Romans. Where they would have given him a sword, he taught: "Love your enemies; do good to them that spitefully use you; the truth shall make you free." To some he was a healer, a giver of material blessings, which many did not even appreciate. "Were there not ten cleansed?" he asked as one, a Samaritan, returned to give thanks,

"but where are the nine?" To only one of the twelve apostles, whom he had chosen at the direction of his Father and with whom he had associated most closely for nearly three years of ministry, he was the Christ, the Son of the Living God. Even his family "stood without" and were possibly hurt when he widened his family circle to include as his mother, and brothers, and sisters, "whosoever should do the will of his Father."

The Jews did not see Jesus because misconceptions of the will of their Father, because greed and avarice, because political aspirations, because ingratitude, because lack of foresight, and because selfish possessiveness cut off their vision. "The kingdom was within them" but they did not recognize it, and they crucified the Christ. But God had other sheep, which were not of that fold, and he turned to the pagan Gentile, spiritually as far back as the Jew had been in Moses day. God's clock had been set back two thousand years. It did not stop, however!

COMPARE THE standard of living today with the germ-infested huts of the pagan world of two thousand years ago, when one out of four children died before the age of twelve months; when the ones that were unfortunate enough to live played with the scrawny, scrubby piglets that rooted in the ground. Compare the galley slave, the gladiator, with the common laborer of our day—the day of organized labor and collective bargaining. Compare the political power of kings and emperors—the Caesars, the Napoleons, the Charleses and the Louises—with the spreading democracies of our day. Compare the medical practices of third, fourth, and fifth century Europe with the medical science of today. Compare the religious hatreds of the Spanish Inquisition, the intolerance of Elizabeth, Henry; the necessitous flights of the Puritians; the Mormon War of 1830 and after; with the freedom of worship, the tolerance, the tendency toward unity, of our day. Compare all that and a hundred other things, and add to your conclusions a budding conception of international brotherhood. God has been working!

Of course we have had wars, we have wars, and we'll have wars. We have yet much to reap from the skullduggery of the centuries; we are not infallible; and even as we clear up one problem, we more than likely create another. But ideas—big ideas—have been born. Some are new, some are old, and they are growing. International government, for instance. There were smaller efforts, but for the sake of simplicity, it started with the League of Nations. It failed. The United Nations, our present day effort in the same direction, might also fail. It doesn't have to. Mr. Byrnes, former American Secretary of State, was convinced that there is within our governments the strength to do it. But even if it does fail, and even if we go to war again, we shall also build again. That is as much our nature as it is God's—we are all his children.

BUT THESE failures, these problems, these tragedies are not signs that God is angry with us, and that he's going to make bare his mighty arm and blast all but the righteous from the earth. They are signs that man is busy, and that in spite of mistakes, past, present, and future, he's going to improve himself. They are signs that we need God with us, that we need the leadership of his Son.

God is longing to give us just that—"It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." We can only go so far politically, scientifically, socially, or any way that can be mentioned without the inspiration of a sound religion—a character-building religion that will create men and women of vision, men and women who can see the opportunity of their day, men and women who will recognize Christ when he does come.

The churches of today are comparatively empty—not so much because

When Is Education Religious?

By DR. F. M. McDOWELL

Director, Department of Religious Education

This article was one of a series of papers read for the three-day colloquium of the Graceland College Alumni Association on the subject, "The Church's Philosophy of Education," last year. The script was not ready for publication then and has since been made available for use here.—Editors.

RELIGION AND EDUCATION have had a long history. They have been in fact co-existent with the human race. We are dealing here with what someone has referred to as "the two greatest institutionalized interests of the human spirit—each representing a vast complex of institutions and vested interest—philosophies, purposes, and methods."

Each of these great interests with which we are here concerned seems ever to defy even approximately exact or satisfying definition. As one peruses a portion of the vast literature in this field, he is confronted with almost as many conceptions and definitions as there are individual writers. One well-known authority quotes forty-eight definitions of religion and adds two of his own as though to make it an even fifty. As to "education," one text alone contains an assortment of two hundred attempts to define the word.

And when one seeks to merge the two, new difficulties arise. To do just this, of the "wickedness" of the people but because of the attitude of the churches themselves. They think they are opposed to the "world." The "wicked world" is not in one camp opposed to the "good people" of the churches in the other. We are together with medicine, science, invention, government, or any other field of worth-while endeavor, in one giant, wonderful, challenging movement toward God.

The day may not be far distant when God will want to entrust to us, as he did the Jews, the responsibility and unbounded honor of the ages.

Will we see Jesus as the Son of God?

to fuse education and religion in a mutually helpful relationship, has been at once the hope and the faith of generations past.

Dr. P. R. Hayward thus quotes "some obscure penman":

God, my brethren—the most transforming fact man has ever reached for.

Education, my brethren—the most profound process man has ever created or felt.

To fuse these two, my brethren—would do something to us that we have not seen thus far.¹

Some of the best minds in each of these fields continue to grapple with this problem. Witness for example the oft-repeated long-time purpose of the Religious Education Association:

To inspire the educational forces of our country with the religious ideal;

To inspire the religious forces of our country with the educational ideal; and

To keep before the public mind the ideal of religious education, and the sense of its need and value.

Add to this the plea of the Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association which we quote only in part:

No greater task rests upon the secondary schools than to help their pupils to find their God—when this takes place life assumes poise, dignity, grandeur—otherwise its strivings, its struggles, its achievements seem trivial and insignificant.²

WHEN IS EDUCATION religious?

Here is indeed, couched in four simple innocent-looking words, a problem of utmost difficulty and far-reaching significance. In the opinion of the writer, it is one of the most vital matters confronting the church, our church and our college, one deserving sustained consideration of our best minds, one concerning which we must carefully seek and expect to receive divine guidance. If then we shall here succeed only in stimulating helpful thinking leading in the direction of clarifying insights, we shall be content.

What is religion? Education? In order that our talk and discussion shall be more or less unified, I have somewhat arbitrarily selected as working definitions of the two terms with which we are to deal, the following:

Religion is the serious and social attitude of individuals or communities toward the power or powers which they conceive as having ultimate control over their interests and destinies.³

The educational process means that experience, whether planned or unplanned, by which a person comes to possess new knowledges, attitudes, purposes, and abilities.⁴

Our problem may therefore be stated in the following form: When and how does this process, this cumulative experience by which a person comes to possess new knowledges, attitudes, etc., become consistent with, meaningfully and helpfully correlated with our "serious and social attitude . . . toward that power or powers" which we believe to have "ultimate control over" our "interests and destinies"?

To get at the very essence of the uniqueness of religion according to this point of view, we cite two additional definitions:

One's religion is his relation to whatever he believes to be the vital, supreme reality in the universe. One acts religiously whenever he acts in harmony with what he believes to be central in the universe, whenever he strives to think and live in accordance with what he conceives to be the laws of the cosmos as they apply to him. Religion, as I ask you to think of it, is what a person (or a group) does to keep life moving in line with what the person (or group) believes to be the fundamental demands which the universe makes on human beings.⁵

Carlyle in his essay "The Hero as Divinity" writes:

The thing a man does practically believe . . . the thing a man does practically lay to heart, and know for certain, concerning his vital relations to this mysterious Universe, and his duty and destiny there, that is in all cases the primary thing for him, and creatively determines all the rest. That is his religion.⁶

RELIGION, therefore, as here conceived is both objective and subjective. In it is involved the whole of the personality—intelligence, feeling, and willing. In it there is a place for the traditional, the rational, and the mystic—these to be balanced with and expressed in action.

Religion thus involves one's total self. It is life lived to the full in its relationship with what one believes to be the "supreme reality in the universe."

Religion involves theology, is dependent upon it and yet the two are not identical. Likewise religion and morality have much in common yet are not the same. One's sincere attitude toward the Determiner of our Destiny is simply not to be wholly identified with morality or ethics, however desirable the latter may be.

The significance of this reality which man holds to be supreme—"the thing which he does practically lay to heart, and know for certain, concerning his vital relations to this mysterious Universe"—multiplies as his conception of it is defined and clarified in the revelation of God as found in the Christian religion.

Likewise, the uniqueness of our church and college in the fields of education and religion will stem from our conception of the nature and purpose of God. Consider here, for example, the following references: Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4; 85: 12; 76: 3; 1: 3-6; Book of Mormon, Alma 16: 54, 55, 228-232; Nephi 11: 96; Moroni 10: 8-14.

We have sought also to isolate the essence of the meaning of education. As stated above, "The educational process means that experience, whether planned or unplanned, by which a person comes to possess new knowledges, attitudes, purposes, and abilities."

Modern educators, however, would appear to add a much more challenging note to this concept of education. Accordingly we find them repeatedly using such terms as the following: "The re-evaluation and reconstruction of experience," "unlimited possibilities and potentialities of growth in man," "perpetual discovery," "perpetual re-creation," "democratic processes," "rethinking, re-creation, experimentation." Thus they arrive at some such definition of Christian education as the following:

It is the systematic, critical examination and reconstruction of relations between persons, guided by Jesus' assumption that persons are of infinite worth, and by the hypotheses of the existence of God, the Great Valuer of Persons.⁷

Here education becomes more than the process by which "a person comes to possess new knowledges, attitudes, purposes, and abilities." It involves a critical and re-creative attitude toward individual and social life. Education consists therefore only incidentally in the handing on of knowledge and experience. It involves guiding the learner into all sorts of new experiences as he re-evaluates the past and creates new and better ways of living for himself and for all mankind.

Our problem thus becomes: May this process of acquiring new knowledges, purposes, attitudes, and abilities which moves out to include the reconstruction and re-creation of life itself be conceived and utilized as being in line with that which we have accepted as the supreme and eternal verities of our universe? When is such education religious? How may such almost revolutionary procedures in education form a helpful alliance with our knowledge of God and with those truths which have through him been revealed to us? Is there any place for such a pattern of education in the Restoration Movement?

WHEN, THEN, IS EDUCATION RELIGIOUS?

1. Education if it is to be considered truly religious should be predicated upon and integrated with sound theological conceptions concerning the spiritual foundations, the eternal realities of the universe itself.

Dr. Roy Cheville has provided us with a very helpful summary of some of these fundamental conceptions of Latter Day Saintism as such may be gleaned from the Doctrine and Covenants. Here are but a few of the many presented:

The work of God is continuously creative, the elements of his world are eternal.

Man himself is of infinite worth.

Christ is central in this religious philosophy.

The church is the institution divinely established and designated for the furthering of God's purposes among men.

God continues to reveal his will to men. The Scriptures are a repository of the plan of the gospel.

The social purposes of God for man are caught up in Zion.

2. Education is religious when by means of it the learner finds his conception of these eternal verities increasingly clarified, when he moves from understanding to assent and from mere assent to conviction and when convictions become more purposeful, articulate, and meaningful as they meet the challenge of our expanding knowledge and our rapidly changing social order.

As a means of checking the success of our educational process in this respect such questions as the following may be asked. Are persons being stimulated to think through their whole philosophy of life and religion? Are they being helped to identify the essential elements of our religious philosophy and faith? Is the learner increasingly able to distinguish the permanent from the passing? The eternal from the ephemeral? Is it becoming increasingly clear to him how he may bring this understanding and these convictions to bear upon his individual and social life? Can he harmonize such with the findings of scientific research and the rapidly expanding social needs and experiences of man?

3. Education is religious when it consistently provides for a growth in understanding and appreciation of the need for and place of God in the education process.

Current views on this point are much in conflict. Note three of such:

1. God is the educational process.
2. God is above educational process.
3. God is in the educational process.

Without discussing these varying conceptions, we may say briefly that education is religious when it recognizes both God and man—divine initiative and human endeavor. This view would consider the laws of growth as the laws of God. The educational process really constitutes God's way of doing things. His way with man is essentially that of a teacher. Here education becomes religious indeed, working with God in his ways and for his purposes.

Apropos of this is the following illustration furnished by Dr. P. R. Hayward:

In this connection one is reminded a bit of the recipe, written out of hard experience by an old New England lady of a century or more ago and now preserved in faded ink, entitled "A Cake Without Eggs." After the rather unpromising instructions the lady had added, with the wholesome regard for reality that marked her period and her section of the country, "This cake is better when made with an egg." Many people making educational recipes—and we in religious education are not all exempt from the thrust of this sentence—have been busy often showing how it can be done without a divine sanction and center; perhaps we have sometimes added wistfully at the bottom of the page, "This program is better when it is carried out with an awareness of God."⁸

If we would check our education in these respects, let us ask and answer in all frankness such queries as the following: Does the learner appear to be developing ever clearer and more helpful concepts of God as a reality in human experience? Is he developing a sense of personal relationship with Him? Is there evidence of a growing knowledge of and faith in God? Is there evidence of a growing conviction of the reality of God and the truth of his being? Education that fosters such is genuinely religious.

4. Education to be considered religion must find a way to maintain its creative processes within the pattern of the tested theological conceptions which we have just set forth.

One's first reaction is that such reconciliation is impossible. Here we come face to face with what has been called the Christian teacher's dilemma. "Is the primary purpose of Christian education to hand on a religion or to create a new world?"

The issue is both an old and continuing one. Both education and religion have a great past. A record of this has been preserved for us in what someone has designated as the "funded experience of history." Certainly this must be made available to each generation in turn. How tragic and futile it would be if each should have to begin again empty-minded and empty-handed. Certainly education that is genuinely creative will find a way to profit by this experience of the past and the verifiable knowledge and truth derived therefrom.

There is of course a danger that education, particularly religious education, shall be "transmissive only," centering its emphases upon materials and content. In religion this becomes "the truth once delivered to the Saints" and which must be held and passed on intact. Hence the various practices of the church have been largely concerned with indoctrinating each new generation.

Modern religious education would seem to be diametrically opposed to this approach. It is, as we have seen, centered in life today. It seeks a continuous re-evaluation of religious experience. Its methods are those of exploration and discovery. Hence the problem: "Shall education be primarily concerned with the perpetuation of something already existing or the continuous reconstruction and improvement of life and culture?"

Surely education can find a way to be both transmissive and creative. Certainly it will be none the less creative because it recognizes the wealth of religious truth that has been verified again and again in human experience. Education that is religious will not expect to proceed without tapping these spiritual resources.

Have we not a clue to the solution of this problem within the theological pattern which we have outlined? Is not God continuously creative, creating now as in all history a spiritual and moral order of religion and good will? Does this not appear to anticipate as someone has said, "Something unprecedented and unpredictable from the past involving and superseding some ancient good"? Will not following Christ requite us to walk in "His road of discovery and creation"? Indeed, if the work of God and Christ is that of continuing creation, and if man partakes of the divine nature, as we believe he does, will he not be recreant to his trust if he for any reason avoids the thinking and toil, daring and suffering involved in sharing in these on-going creative processes? Education is genuinely religious when it is in this vital way creative.

5. Education to be religious must be Christ-centered. It must be soundly Christian in spirit, purpose, content, methods, and procedure.

In the words of Dr. William Clayton Bower, this means:

It becomes an instrument of growth into Christlike personality. By such a use we find ourselves seeking to do what Christ did—to bring ourselves face to face with the realities of living, to have faith in life as the good gift of God, to have a fresh and vivid experience of God through the mediation of the common life, to discover in every experience the qualities that spring from the deepest spiritual values, and thus to commit ourselves to Christ and his cause. Nothing less than this is Christian education.⁹

Surely religious education after the pattern of Christ would be creative—indeed revolutionary.

6. Education is religious when it promotes the disposition and ability to share the life-giving light and truth expressed or implied in our religious convictions. Education to be truly religious must be genuinely evangelistic.

Evangelism at its best posits salvation from above as the gift of God. It is characterized by the presence of compelling conviction, the consciousness of a divine commission, and a passion for souls. The evangelist considers himself to be a messenger, an ambassador, and a witness. Evangelism speaks of truth to be repeated, good news to be told, and souls to be saved. All of this is possible because the evangelist embodies the spirit and power of God.

Education on the other hand speaks of "stimulating, guiding, and encouraging learning." It is concerned with life here and now. It strives to discover and obey the laws of growth. It has much to say about method and human potentialities, and the possibilities of leadership and guidance.

But are these two procedures necessarily opposed, and may not both be utilized in a helpful and active alliance? May they not be combined in what has been called educational evangelism? Was not Christ "the teacher come from God"? Did he not seek to save souls by the educational method, while at the same time conceiving himself to be a divine messenger? Did he not evidence a passion for souls and the infinite patience and skill of a true teacher? Was he not prophet, evangelist, and teacher all in one? May we not find in him ways to make our education more genuinely evangelistic and our evangelism more soundly educational? Knowing that it can and should be done, may we not make a more determined effort to discover new and better ways of developing through our educational processes the disposition and ability to share the life-giving light and truth of our religion?

7. Education is functioning religiously when it fosters inquiring minds, fidelity to truth, open-mindedness to new light. Accordingly we must find ways to utilize both scientific research and revelation, and to bring into a profitable working harmony a religion of authority and the established principles and procedures of democracy.

The possibility and desirability of utilizing these seemingly diverse means of discovering or receiving new light and truth is clearly indicated in our sacred literature. Note for example:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . and it shall be given him.—James 1: 5.

. . . to be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God.—Book of Mormon 109: 61.

The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

He that keepeth his commandments, receiveth truth and light.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.

In this connection we may observe that the Doctrine and Covenants (85: 18-21) outlines a curriculum worthy of the mettle of a modern college and specifically commends both fervent prayer and diligent research as methods to be used in the discovery and mastery of new truth and light.

Just what difference would this plan make in the actual practice of the student?

Sincerely believing in the discovery of truth through scientific methods, he would expect to comply painstakingly with the laws involved. He will know or soon learn that such involves infinite patience, perseverance, and skill, together with a high quality of honor and integrity.

Believing just as firmly in divine guidance and inspiration, he will seek to discover and observe the conditions of such revelation. He will find that this requires belief in God as one who rewards those who diligently seek him.

He will find, too that he must live for and respond to new light rather than expect to continuously receive by mere asking. He will discover that spiritual attunement is the high privilege of those who strive to mount and to walk along the frontiers of knowledge and right-living.

Education is highly religious when it fosters learning through this quality of study and faith.

8. Education is religious when it fosters in growing persons the disposition and ability to share creatively in the work of the church as an essential implement of those religious values, purposes, and ideals which we hold to be supreme.

It will, at all times, seek to promote the development of a "churchmanship" of high devotion and genuine skill.

It is said that the men of the early church out-lived, out-thought, out-fought, and out-died those of the pagan world about them.

Far too seldom is this quality of devotion witnessed in the church of today. Far too often secular causes—good, bad, or indifferent—seem able to command a far greater loyalty and allegiance than the church itself.

To a passionate and courageous devotion to the church, there must be added a genuine craftsmanship in the work of religion. Every phase of our church work suffers for the want of what has been called churchmanship. Witness congregations withering and dying on every hand because of inadequate leadership. Contemplate the many areas in which "Zion's Procedure" will require vision, knowledge, intelligence, and skill even excelling the best available for secular pursuits.

Against such needs our present efforts in religious education seem pitifully weak. The church languishes today while it awaits a new quality of leadership adequate for new tasks and new achievements—this in every department of its work.

Education that is religious will be found constantly striving to meet this need.

9. Education is religious when learners are found growing in the disposition and ability to participate in and contribute constructively to the building of a social order which embodies our accepted religious ideals and values; i. e., the kingdom of God.

Such a task often fails to challenge us when presented in generalities.

Familiar, oft-repeated phrases leave us either entirely unmoved, or arouse in us a sense of security and smugness quite as deadily.

It is only when the job is broken down into various and manifold aspects that we even begin to comprehend its magnitude.

Each and every area of our social life must be made regenerate—home life, recreational life, vocational and industrial life, citizenship, national life, education and race relations—each confronted today with staggering new situations and difficulties, each must be made to feel the redemptive power of the word and will of God through the gospel of Christ.

Each area teems with problems demanding solution. Old and established ways of doing things are no longer acceptable or adequate.

No field will or should escape the critical eye of science. No area will be too sacred for social experimentation, carried forward not so much in test tubes as in the great laboratories of living where the best we know of truth discovered and truth revealed will face the acid test of life as it is.

Consider, for example, the possibilities of the family, the branch, the community, the college, as great experiment stations in Christian living.

Education—however well it succeeds elsewhere—fails utterly if it fails to foster growth in appreciation, interest, knowledge, disposition, and skill—essential to grappling successfully with these problems and opportunities.

10. Education is religious when it results in growth in integrity, in wholeness of personality. Education is irreligious when it is devisive, when it results in and contributes to the disintegration of personality.

11. Education is religious when it develops in persons the disposition to and skill in identifying and resisting the "forces of evil"; i. e., those forces which by their very nature are ever unrelenting enemies of those values of life which have been accepted as divine.

I shall close this discussion with another quotation from Dr. Coe, because it seems to me to be so challenging in so many respects. It presents a scholarly attempt to answer our problem. It projects the future field for the Christian college. If, as some believe, Dr. Coe in most of his writings neglects God in his program of religious education, this statement is interesting in that it would seem to indicate that, after all, he believes "this cake will be better with an egg."

Then, too, since he builds so well upon the mere "hypothesis that there is a God" one wonders what we could and should not do, we who profess to the world an ever-fresh witness of God's presence and reality.

At any rate, here is the quotation:

Would it be wildly irrational to dream of a college that should live, move, and have its meaning in the hypothesis that there is a God? A hypothesis in process of being examined, revised, and tested; therefore a college that focuses all study upon the unsolved problems of human weal and woe, and especially upon our unfinished tasks if we are to live together as persons supremely valuing one another. Such a college would neither imitate other academic institutions, nor be beholden to the church of yesterday, but only to the church that is engaged in transcending its yesterday by repentance and reconstruction. Because everywhere meanings in life and for life would be sought with critical pointedness, the present motivation of both teachers and students would constantly feel the touch of a spur. One can fancy a rebirth of philosophy in such an environment, and the intellectual excitement that would seize the collegiate mind, now blasé toward big things but straining itself over little ones. The sciences would thrive, being not only released from restraints but also inspired by interesting and developing tasks. Religion would not be an appendage of academic interests, or even a guest or companion, nor would religious thinking continue to be defensive, for the whole enterprise, suffused with a sense of the worthfulness of the personal, would be inherently and aggressively religious. Is not this the true job of the Christian college?²⁰

Human Rights and Duties

By J. A. Koehler

Number 32 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE FOUNDERS OF our nation maintained that there is a natural or moral right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness which is inalienable; a right which neither rulers nor governors have right in infringe. The governments of all truly free peoples are ways of honoring the rights of persons and peoples, and of insuring or assuring that as the rights of man are honored so shall the duties of man be fulfilled.

I do not say that the governments of even the so-called free peoples have resolved the problem of human rights and duties, for if they had they would be free at least from internal strife, or civil warfare. I only say that it is characteristic of what we call self-governing or free peoples to have ideas of human rights and duties; mostly of human rights.

Religious peoples in particular have said much about their own rights to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences. But I do not know of many whose resolution it has been to honor the rights of all other persons and peoples—everywhere and in all relations. And if you are a student of this question, you know that the ideas of even the contenders for human rights have not all been the same.

Ideas of divine rights—which many people in this comparatively enlightened age say are neither divine nor right—were accepted almost without question, and almost universally, in the not-so-distant past. The idea of a true equality of human rights in all relations—in religious as in secular affairs—is not universally and deeply rooted even today.

THE SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY of the modern prophet is a philosophy of human rights and duties. I mean that it is a system of ideas of basic human rights and duties which the prophet sought to maintain in reason. For instance, as revealing the moral or ethical grounds for his theory of distribution, he propounded this question:

"What man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter of them, and they serve him obediently"—what man in such circumstances would say to one of his sons, "Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there," and then look upon his sons and say, "I am just"? Can such ideas of justice—ideas of the defensibility of the poverty of laborers in the midst of plenty—can such ideas of distributive justice be maintained in reason?

Throughout the message of the modern prophet are to be found such proclamations as this: "You are to be equal, or, in other words, you are to have equal claims on the property [that is to say, on the economic resources of your people] for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants [as well as his needs] . . . in as much as his wants are just . . ." And these proclamations mean that the social philosophy of that prophet is grounded in ideas of human rights and duties; the honoring of which and the fulfillment of which are held to condition not only the peace, prosperity, and happiness of peoples, but the welfare also of the souls of persons. Indeed, the enjoyment of human rights and the fulfillment of human duties, in the thinking of the prophet, are to the soul of man what the vegetative processes are to the beauty and fragrance of the rose.

THE SOCIAL philosophy of the modern prophet is concerned with the most vital of human interests.

That philosophy is a pattern of an economic commonwealth. So that, when that mode of economic self-governance shall have been established, it will be found to be grounded in such ethical principles as these:

ONE. The right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is at once a right to the means of life. It is a right of freedom of the individual to pursue his happiness by any means whatsoever, provided only that in the exercise of that right and freedom the person does not fail to fulfill his duties. And that means that persons do not have right, in the pursuit of personal objects, to neglect to pursue the objects of their peoples; much less do they have right to pursue their own objects in ways which are in opposition to the social purposes of their peoples, or which defeat the purpose of government.

TWO. It is the duty of peoples to honor the rights of persons. And since that is true, in the matter of what we call stewardships and inheritances, it is the right of peoples to such control of their economic resources as will make it possible for them to honor these rights of persons. What we call "Zion"—which is an economic society—is shaped by such ethical principles.

THREE. Where no rights are infringed no restraints are proper. Or, in other words, so long as what you do, or would do if you were a citizen of Zion, does not infringe the rights of others, others have no right to repress your activities. They have no right to prevent you from pursuing your well-being and happiness in the manner in which you desire to pursue it. And that is but a way of saying that there can be no right to do wrong—no right either of peoples or persons.

FOUR. What we have said thus far is an implication of a right of self-determination. It is the right of each person separately to conduct his own private life in his own way, limited only by his duties to others; and it is the right of each and every community to conduct its own internal affairs in its own way—provided, of course, that its manner of governing its internal economic affairs does not infringe that right of any other community.

FIVE. Units of control should coincide with the character and area of interests involved. For example: The unit of control of family affairs—the control of the pocketbook in particular—is properly the family. That pocketbook represents only the interests of the family, in other words. Therefore no one outside your family, not even the community, or as we are in the habit of saying, not even the government has right to interfere with your conduct of your own internal family affairs—unless, indeed, your manner of conducting your internal family affairs involves the rights of others. Unless, for instance, the blare of your radio at two o'clock in the morning makes it impossible for your neighbor family to get its sleep.

I have referred only to the family, but only for the purpose of illustration or example. For in the social philosophy of the modern prophet, the principle of the right of internal self-determination applies to the community as it does to the family. And that, as a little reflection should reveal, implies much with respect to imperialism and bureaucracy, or to centralization of administration of economic affairs.

SIX. The social philosophy of the modern prophet declares that failure of duty is a forfeiture of rights. In your city, for example, your refusal to keep your automobile on the right side of the road—which is a failure of duty—is a forfeiture of your right to the use of the road. And in Zion, failure of duty of a citizen to obey the laws of his people is a forfeiture of his right of inheritance—which is a right of citizenship.

THE SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY of the modern prophet is a philosophy of rights and duties of persons and peoples. Together with his plan of social action, or his proposed means of implementing that social philosophy, it is—so it seems to us—not only the way to the eternal peace, prosperity, and happiness of any community, it is also the way out of the crisis of civilization. For underlying the whole problem of human living together is this question of human rights and duties.

The One Important Thing

By Harold E. Whitehead

It is quite evident when we talk with some of the people of the world today that the purpose of their being on the earth as they are causes them no particular worry. The feeling is quite prevalent that we are here today and gone tomorrow, and let us enjoy life while we may. The interpretation that is put upon the word "life" and the meaning of enjoyment is, to my way of thinking, wrongly used.

To us as Latter Day Saints, our sojourn here upon this earth in our present physical being is merely the means to an end. It is of very short duration in comparison to the time we spent before taking on this earthly body, and the time that will be spent after we cast it aside. We believe that we were placed here upon the earth in order that we might work out our own salvation after the pattern set up by Jesus the Christ. That through our living in the flesh, and the termination of that life, we may have earned the right to live in the presence of Christ for time without end. These things, however, are beyond our comprehension as mere mortal men, and too much time should not be spent pondering things that we can never understand.

What we are most interested in at this time is the great need that must be met in relation to the vast multitudes of people the world over. The chaotic condition of nations and governments today should be an indication to us of the great task that lies before us. The feeling of unrest, the lack of tolerance for each other, not only between individuals, but between the nations; the dependence that is placed upon the wisdom of men alone to right these conditions is another indication that every effort should be made on our part as a church, the true church of Christ, to restore to the hearts of men the plan set up hundreds of years ago by the Man of Galilee. The plan is so simple, so easy to understand, and the only plan by which peace and understanding can ever be established once again.

We find the people of the world going hither and yon, seeking to amass great wealth in any way possible, not caring how nor from whom they get it. The almighty dollar has become a thing of worship, rather than a means of livelihood. It seems to be the existing thought that, in order to attain happiness and enjoyment, they must be bought. In order to be of any importance in the world, we must have sufficient wealth to command the respect of our neighbors. What a false and foolish belief that is. We have only to remember the words of Christ, "For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."—Luke 18: 25.

There is only one important thing that we should be concerned with—deeply concerned: The gospel of Jesus Christ as given to us in the Three Books of the church. All else should be considered as associated with our main purpose. If we follow the pattern set up, there will be no petty bickerings among ourselves, no discord or dissension in our branches, and no animosity or restraint in our personal relations. We cannot keep from being united in humility and brotherly love, with one purpose standing ever before us: the building of the kingdom of God.

The World Today

By Fred Alexander

The new Taft-Hartley Act gives the nation a new labor law of doubtful quality. The provisions of the law are so complicated that it will take time along with hundreds of court decisions to find how the Act will actually affect the labor movement as a whole.

Certain other effects of the law are more readily apparent. It will not put an end to strikes and will probably only cause a new wave of labor disturbances. Peace on the labor front cannot be achieved by this law.

Unions will probably be fighting mad. The unions are looking for legal loopholes and have found them, in abundance. Employers will find the law's provisions full of dangerous pitfalls for them. It will give employers the right to talk back to unions and will limit the power of union leaders.

Important things to remember. Strikes are still legal. Certain types of strikes are made illegal. However, union leaders get around this provision by selecting carefully the reason for striking. There is plenty of leeway to make a free choice of reason to conform with the law.

Wildcat strikes will probably be nicked for the simple reason that most of them will violate contracts with employers for which, under the new law, the labor union can be sued. Now that unions are suable they will tread cautiously.

Strikes for reasons of safety are approved. Merely another loophole which appears in the law—a loophole which employers will undoubtedly use to their advantage.

Industry-wide strikes and bargaining are still legal, but the new law makes the procedure very annoying and difficult to go through in order to force industry-wide negotiation.

The new power that the government has to bring injunctions against unions cannot be utilized by employers. The government only decides when an injunction should be used against a union strike. Further, injunctions can only be brought in cases in which the national safety or health is in danger.

The closed shop is now illegal and has been replaced with the union shop. The difference is this. An employer working under a closed shop agreement with a union formerly could hire only union members. Under the new law and the union shop, the employer may hire anybody he pleases but that man must join the union within a specified period of time. The employer must agree to a union shop before it can be adopted by employees.

The system of checkoff for payment of dues will be used only on consent of the employee as an individual. The mass checkoff system is outlawed. The hiring of useless employees because of pressure from unions, a process known as featherbedding, is outlawed.

Sidelight: Under the new law, no union may expel a man for any other reason than nonpayment of dues or fees. Communists will find that this law will assist them to infiltrate into labor union groups. The government will keep an eye on men with doubtful backgrounds by a system of reports on labor leader's personal lives.

Under this law, business for lawyers and the courts should be exceptionally good. June 23 was a bad day for labor. Not only was the Taft-Hartley bill made the law of the land but the Supreme Court also upheld the constitutionality of the Lea Bill, popularly known as the anti-Petrillo bill. This bill knocks the props out from under the featherbedding practices of the musicians' union in forcing radio stations to hire stand-by musicians that do not play a note of music.

Rumor has it that Congress is getting very fed up with practices of the building trades which are out-and-out in restraint of trade. Such practices as regulating the size of paint brushes, banning spray guns, putting a limit on the number of bricks that can be laid in one day, etc. Congress will act against these practices if the building trades persist in restraining trade in this manner. The pendulum is indeed swinging back against labor—a reaction which was bound to come. How labor will react is yet to be seen.

There will be another tax relief law passed in January, 1948. Truman will not veto such a measure for political reasons. The new bill will give more liberal relief to lower income brackets, a feature that was not pertinent to the recent tax cut bill.

It is very likely that Henry Wallace will not form a third party as has been rumored. Such a course of action would be too difficult because of state laws governing creation of new political parties. However, Wallace will split the Democratic party wide open in the '48 elections, there is no doubt about this. Wallace is a long-range planner, some reporters have said, looking toward 1952 election. Wallace would like to see the Democrats become a left-liberal party in that election year with a candidate of similar faith—a candidate named Henry Wallace.

The prospect for a Republican victory in 1948 grows by the day. However, Truman is playing his politics shrewdly. It is feared that Truman often acts in the interest of politics and not in the interest of good government.

As this is being written, news comes from RCA that a new development in the science of communication is in the offing. RCA calls the new media, ultrafax. The inventors say that this new communications system can transmit up to a million words a minute. The infinite possibilities offered by such a system to future peoples and even to this generation is indeed awe-inspiring.

From La Preste, France, comes heartening news. A cure for cancer may be in the making. A product known as H. 11, a by-product of wine and waters found in the area of La Preste have been found to have remarkable curative powers when used to combat malignant growths. Numerous experiments have been successfully demonstrated on mice, and there are some instances of complete cures in human beings. This may be the beginning of a cure to abolish the curse of cancer from the human race.

Bystanders or Stand-Bys

By Grace L. Krahl

It is sometimes a subtle temptation to be a bystander. At other times, it is an act of deliberation.

There are no objections to being a bystander if one does not make it a vocation. A bystander may render valuable help in case of a traffic accident or he may prevent a casualty or offer help in other ways. Even a small boy relieved the desperation of a truck driver one day when his truck became wedged in an underpass. Not able to dislodge it after working at it for some time, he turned to the crowd and asked, "Does anyone here have an idea how this truck may be moved?" The small boy edged his way up to the almost despairing man and said, "Mister, I know what you can do; deflate the tires." Strangely enough the driver had not thought of that, and the truck went merrily on.

Recalling an old phrase, "Let George do it," is frequently the attitude of some bystanders not of the "helping hand" variety.

I have seen men on a street corner supporting a building by standing even on one foot, smoking a pipe, and looking into the vast future. I have wondered what great ideas were evolving in the brains of these onlookers.

It appears that there are three or more classes of bystanders; the apathetic, pessimistic, and optimistic. The attitudes of the two latter groups may be illustrated by the story of the bystanders who for the first time were viewing a locomotive. One said, "You'll never start her!" And when it started, another echoed, "You'll never stop her!"

We need optimists in the great humanitarian movements of the world, just as a baseball game needs its "fans" for the vigor and enthusiasm of the players, and high school sports their cheer leaders for the ardor and spirit of the participants. But it is not enough simply to proclaim our commendation and good will, or our belief in a cause that is just and true when as an adventure it needs our support and cooperation if we have a mind for the common good.

Referring, not unkindly we hope, to passive or apathetic observers: In 1834 when the leaders of the church called upon the Saints in the East to furnish money for the purchase of lands and equipment in Missouri for the building of Zion, some responded, others said, "We will wait and see whether the enterprise succeeds before we invest our money." Bystanders!

This is a truth not yet learned too well by us that with any undertaking commanded of the Lord, there is no risk or uncertainty. "I am bound when ye do what I say." The uncertainty is whether we are following his instructions as best we can. His promise to fulfill all that he has said should be reassuring.

But it does not follow that once a bystander, always a bystander. The Apostle Paul was once an onlooker, and nothing in after life brought him more grief or remorse than when he recalled the scene of Stephen's death and himself a bystander, holding the garments of the killers. But no one of the former or latter Christian fathers exceeded Paul as a stand-by and an unremitting defender of the faith following his remarkable conversion.

At the late General Conference we learned that only twenty-five per cent of the church membership pay tithing. But these are stand-bys. These have the reward of knowing they have helped to make it possible for the church to carry out, though limitedly, the command of the Christ, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." It was pathetic, at the same time rewarding, when Jesus said to the eleven, "Ye are they who have continued with me in my temptations." It was those ready to stand by through peril, toil, and pain, who preserved the cause of Christ in a pagan world. It must be those who are ready to stand by today, whatever the cost, whom he will use for his unfolding purposes in the ushering in of his kingdom.

Of One Blood

By BILLIE WHITING

Forgive thy stumbling people, Lord.
We grope through darkness. Not to thee
But, drunken on the creeds of men,
We look to chains to set us free.
Look kindly down, we pray, Oh, Lord,
Upon black hands to thee raised high
In spite of hate, that foredooms them
To dig their graves to reach the sky.
Reach swiftly down, we pray, Oh, Lord;
Forsake thy kingdom in the sun
And lift our eyes to see with thee
That, dark or light, we are but one.

Elder Robert Murray

Clay Cross, England

From two sources, namely Brethren Arthur Oakman and Charles Cousins, the pastor of the Clay Cross Branch, England, at present visiting in America, news came to me of the death of Elder Robert Murray on May 28 at the age of 81.

For many years Brother Murray has been associated with the Clay Cross Branch, and his familiar figure astride his bicycle was well known in and around that country, pushing his machine up the steep grades and coasting down them almost with the zest of youth.

In many ways Brother Bob Murray was one of the most unique characters drawn to the church in Britain, and belonged to a rapidly diminishing group which included such men as Thomas Taylor, G. W. Leggott, J. E. Meredith, Simon Holmes, Sr., John Schofield, William Spargo, Thomas Bradshaw, and others whose names are in the "Book of Remembrance" of the British Mission; strong in their individualism, quaint in their character, but all devoted adherents to the cause which they believed was Christ's their Lord, both "theirs and ours," as St. Paul phrases it.

Robert Murray was born in northern Ireland, and came from typical Irish farm stock. But like so many of his countrymen, Ireland could not hold him; so at an early age he sailed forth to find his fortune in the coal mines of Lanarkshire, Scotland, locating at Blantyre, through which the River Clyde flows, and not far from the house in which the great African missionary, David Livingstone, was born. His rather tall and gaunt figure gave no indication of the unusual strength of the man. Owing to his work in the mines, he was rather stooped and loose-jointed, but carried himself well, walking with a sort of loping stride, which enabled him to cover much ground as he walked. In those days of missionary work in Scotland, he was often my companion, and walking was the favorite method of locomotion. Automobiles were rather a curiosity in those days, and cycling our most luxurious method of travel. I well remember teaching Bob to ride the machine, and once suggested to him perhaps he might do better with spurs on his heels. It was after much practice that he could ride with the abandon which characterized his technique of later years. I also taught Thomas Taylor to negotiate this strange machine. I never knew anyone that could perform so many singular convolutions and gather so much dust on his person as Brother Taylor in a wild, nocturnal ride from Glasgow to Hamilton, where we reached home sometime in the early hours of the morning much to the relief of my young wife, who dutifully had waited up for our return.

Robert Murray became acquainted with the Latter Day Message through the testimony of Brother and Sister John Ely with whom he was visiting at their home in the mining village of Rothwell, four or five miles from the city of Leeds (my native home). Brother Ely and his good wife were converts of the late Thomas J. Sheldon, who had gone as missionary of the church to this, his native place also. Brother and Sister Ely both had been officers in the Salvation Army and had known Brother and Sister Murray, also members of the Army, in Scotland. In those days, the Salvation Army was a hard school in which to learn ministerial work. The officers were not allowed to take from the collections the means to supply their meager needs until all the expenses of the local barracks had been met. There was not a general fund from which they could augment their income when the public collections failed to yield sufficient; consequently, many times the young officer and his wife suffered. It was under such circumstances Brother Murray's kindness and generosity proved to be a true benefaction to the struggling pair.

I met Brother Murray about this time, and on our return to Hamilton, where we were striving to establish the work of the church on my first mission for the church, he immediately gave himself without reserve to the efforts of the little group. He would accompany us on preaching tours to towns and villages and hold our hat while we preached, give out tracts, shoulder the inevitable drunks (who so frequently became enthusiastic in their religious opposition or approval) out of the way. In Glasgow, particularly on Cathedral Square, he would be partnered by James Wilson, another fine stalwart brother whom we last knew of being in Philadelphia; tramping up and down the tenement stairs giving tracts from door to door in what was real missionary work without velvet and talcum in those far-away days. Many times when money was scarce, which was not infrequent, always he was ready to help out of his hard-earned income. Truly, he was one of those of whom it is written, "they will in no wise lose their reward." Soon Sister Murray (Martha) was baptized into the church (who survives her husband, but is feeble and advanced in years) and their home was often the rendezvous of the tired missionaries as well as serving for prayer and preaching services.

After several years of strenuous work in which men like the late Joseph Arber, George Thorburn, John Davis, W. H. Kelley, and others of the missionary staff who were supported by men like W. H. Greenwood, Thomas Taylor, George W. Leggott, W. R. Armstrong, and local brethren as Robert Munro, Alex Porteus (our first convert in Scotland), and a few others, Brother Murray moved to Manchester at the instigation of Brother Leggott; and, because of his generosity, Brother Murray, whose financial condition at that time was not so good, he was a local missionary, and through tracting and house-to-house visitation he won souls to the church there. I recall one family in particular—that of the Holden's, where our brother not only testified to the word but demonstrated through practical ministry what that word meant and won them to the church. Sometime later, because of labor conditions, Brother Murray moved to Clay Cross, Derbyshire, and joined with the faithful group of that place and collaborated with Brother Charles Cousins, the pastor of that day, and soon made himself effective in the same way as in Scotland and Manchester.

Among the ones who responded to our brother's efforts in that place was the family of Brother John Morris. Of course these do not represent the whole harvest of souls who redound to the credit of this brother's ministry, as he let his light shine in his way. But they represent what was done by one who, soundly converted himself, set on fire others by his enthusiasm for God. Many times I was reminded of St. Paul's saying, "How not many wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, but God chose the foolish things of the world to put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world, that he might put to shame the things that are strong; and the base things of the world, and the things that are despised did God choose, yea and things that are not, that he might bring to naught the things that are: that no flesh should glory before God."

On my return to the British Mission in 1932, it was a pleasure to renew the old associations and revive the friendships of previous years, among which was that of this old crusader, and recount again the experiences of the former years. His zeal had not abated, his love of the gospel was as strong as of yore. After retiring from the strenuous work of coal mining, our brother applied himself to gardening, and in this, together with his missionary

Worship Suggestions for August

By Minerva Yerrington

Theme for the Month: THE PARABLES—
GEMS OF MORAL INSTRUCTION—

AUGUST 3, 1947

Theme: THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN

Prelude: Instrumental Music.

Call to Worship:

He that is down needs fear no fall,
He that is low, no pride;
He that is humble ever shall Have God to be his guide.

—John Bunyan.

Introductory Thought:

"And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others."—Luke 18:9.

Someone has said that "the beginning and end of true Christianity is simple humility before God." We can easily see that it goes before the recognition of our waywardness, our repentance, and our right-about-face toward the better way, but it is not so easy to keep humility as a constant companion to the end of our Christian warfare to guard against self-righteousness and false pride.

Hymn or Solo: "Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly," S. H., No. 258. (This might be used as a solo with chorus by congregation.)

Prayer of Supplication

or

Prayer Verse:

O for a heart to praise my God,
A heart from sin set free,
A heart that always feels thy blood
So freely shed for me!
A heart resigned, submissive, meek,
My great Redeemer's throne;
Where only Christ is heard to speak,
Where Jesus reigns alone.

A humble, lowly, contrite heart,
Believing, true, and clean,
Which neither life nor death can part
From him that dwells within.
A heart in every thought renewed,
And full of love divine;
Perfect, and right, and pure, and good,
A copy, Lord, of thine.
—Charles Wesley.

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Luke 18:10-14.

Theme Talk:

In Christ's day those who were proverbially recognized as the self-righteous were seemingly grouped in one class—"the Pharisees." Today we cannot deny that they are scattered abroad in every land, sect, creed, community, and group. This false pride Jesus decried as a sure betrayal of one's true self. The Pharisee found no sin in himself, but to Jesus this condition of self-satisfaction was itself a grievous sin. The Pharisee stood, conspicuously by himself, self-centered even in prayer, that he might be heard for his much praying. The publican stood afar off, not caring or daring to be an offense to anyone about him. In his egotism, devoid of any sense of need, the Pharisee could express only pride that he was not like those with whom he must be associated. But the publican smote his breast and prostrated himself before the immensity of self-revelation in the true spirit of repentance. Again, the Pharisee, finding no fault with himself, could boast only of his well-doing, little realizing that his self-exaltation was an abomination in the sight of God, closing the gates of heaven to his mockery of prayer. While the publican, burdened with the realization of his sins, seen and unseen, cried out for mercy, and his petition verily reached the loving heart of his God. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite spirit, O God, thou wilt not despise."—Psalm 51:17. Thus, in his brief prayer, the publican evidenced all the marks of a true supplicant—reverence, for he stood afar off; humility, for he bowed his head in shame; awareness of sin, for he knew his own heart.

The Pharisee forgot that no man liveth to himself alone; that the first rule of the kingdom is to love thy neighbor as thyself and that love expanded to reach out and embrace all peoples automatically enlarges and glorifies self. Sam Walter Foss expresses this so easily in his poem, "The House by the Side of the Road."

Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorn's seat
Nor hurl the cynic's ban—
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Hymn: "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," S. H., No. 334.

Suggested Poetry:

Father, when in love to thee
Low we bow the adoring knee,
When, repentant, to the skies
Scarce we lift our streaming eyes;
Oh, by all the pain and woe
Suffered by thy Son below,
Bending from thy throne on high,
Hear and answer when we cry.
—Sir Robert Grant.

Therefore, when thou wouldst pray, or dost thine alms,
Blow not a trump before thee; Hypocrites
Do thus, vaingloriously; the common streets
Boast of their largess, echoing their psalms.
God needs not iteration nor vain cries:
That man communion with his God might share
Below, Christ gave the ordinance of prayer:
Vague ambages, and witless ecstasies,
Avail not; ere a voice to prayer be given
The heart should rise on wings of love to heaven.
—Sir Aubrey de Vere.

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The Captains and the Kings depart:
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.
—Rudyard Kipling.

Gems of Wisdom:

Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5:3.

Humility, that low, sweet root
From which all heavenly virtues shoot.
—Clement C. Moore.

God hath sworn to lift on high
Who sinks himself by true humility.
—Rev. John Keble.

The higher a man is in grace,
The lower he will be in his own esteem.
—Rev. Charles Spurgeon.

No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love.—Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.

AUGUST 10, 1947

Theme: THE FOOLISH FARMER or THE RICH FOOL

Prelude: Instrumental Music.

Call to Worship:

Store up no treasure for yourself on earth,
Where moth and rust consume,
And where thieves break through and steal:
But store up for yourself treasures in heaven,
Where neither moth nor rust consume,
And where thieves do not break through or steal.
For where thy treasure is,
There is thine heart also.
—Matthew 6:19-21.

Introductory Thought:

We recognize the fact that the matchless teachings of Jesus are timeless in their application to the frailties of human nature, and especially do we find them emphatic in denouncing the materialism of today, with an accent on the acquisitive instinct of man, a "getting while the getting is good"—making possessiveness of things an end in itself. Jesus did not condemn success or wealth, but he did condemn the unwillingness to share with others.

Hymn: "With My Substance I will Honor," S. H., No. 351.

Prayer of thanks for the blessings of life that make it good to live;
of appreciation for the chance and ability to serve;
of submission to the will of a loving Heavenly Father.

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Luke 12:16-21 (verses 18-23, I. V.)

Associated Scripture:

"The rich . . . shall carry nothing away." Psalm 49:16-20.

"Love of money is the root of all evil."—I Timothy 6:7-19 (I. V. preferred).

"Treasure in Heaven."—Matthew 6:19-24.

"Poor exalted . . . rich made low."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

Special Music.

Theme Talk:

This is one of the parables in which Jesus indulged in a simple and direct characterization —the farmer was a fool, for in his estimation a fool is one who makes no provision for his soul in that future life which is eternity. Now, the farmer was not foolish because he had produced an abundance and filled his barns to their capacity, but because he had done it with self-centered interest. He was not a slothful servant, but rather a hard worker, diligent in providing for all the needs of the body and farsighted in storing away plenty for the day when he should rest from his labors. He was a fool to think that wealth could supply the needs of the soul, saying, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up . . . take thine ease." How could the soul rest, for now his life was spent and he had no riches toward God. Alex Louis Fraser pictures his sad plight in the following:

He toiled and saved his earnings every day,
But starved his mind and grasped at common things;
His prisoned soul ne'er struggled out of clay,
His better nature never found its wings.

He hoped to sit with happiness at last,
Mansioned, sufficient, when he would be old;
But he was just a graveyard, and the past
Left naught for him but a rude pile of gold.

Besides his lack of spiritual foresight, he forgot that all things come from God and he was just a steward over the things which he possessed, in partnership with God. However, as a partner of God, all the vast resources of his kingdom were made available to him and he had been content to acquire mere riches. He forgot that in God's judgment it is what we are and not what we have that counts; that by seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all things else will be added unto us.

In the phrase, "eat, drink, and be merry," the Foolish Farmer revealed the whole, niggardly philosophy of his life. He had lived and striven but to satisfy the needs of the flesh, finding satisfaction in skill and success only because it supplied his need, realizing no joy in his labors except for the monetary remuneration. Jesus said, "Take heed and beware." "Man's life is not a part of his possessions," and no matter how great his wealth, he cannot buy happiness, health, service, and character with it.

Challenge:

Creating another beatitude, we would say, "Blessed are the men who regard their wealth as a sacred trust, for they may help greatly to build the kingdom of God." Such is their stewardship for, "A stewardship is acceptance from God of personal responsibility for all life and life's affairs."

Closing Hymn: "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel," S. H., No. 121.

Benediction:

O how happy are they who the Saviour obey,
And have laid up their treasures above;
Tongue can never express the sweet comfort and peace
Of a soul in its earliest love.
—Charles Wesley.

Gems of Wisdom:

Much knowledge shows how little mortals know,
Much wealth, how little worldings can enjoy.
—Charles Duke Young.

Excess of wealth is cause of covetousness.
—Christopher Marlowe.

Can wealth give happiness? Look around, and see

What gay distress! What splendid misery!
Whatever fortune lavishly can pour,
The mind annihilates, and calls for more.
—Charles Duke Young.

If thou art rich, thou art poor,
For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bearest thy heavy burden but a journey
And death unloads thee.
—Shakespeare.

Theme: THE COMPASSIONATE or GOOD SAMARITAN

Worship Center: Picture, "The Good Samaritan," George Frederic Watts.

(There are several good ones from which to choose.)

Prelude: Instrumental use of "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour," S. H., No. 324.

Introductory Thought:

"The greatest joy in any form instructs, not by moralization, but by suggestion." In this the imagination is quickened, the mind alerted and creative thought provoked. The parable used this morning is one of those classic examples of such art. "No narrative has done so much to create in a shamefully selfish world the sense of personal responsibility for social redemption."

Hymn: (to be selected)

"O Brother Man, Fold to Thy Heart," S. H., No. 339.

"O Jesus, Master, When I Meet," S. H., No. 340.

"Teach Us, O Lord, True Brotherhood," S. H., No. 341.

Prayer Verse:

What shall I do to be just?
What shall I do for the gain.
Of the world—O Seer that I trust,
Chart me the difficult main.
Shall I wrench from my finger the ring
To cast to the tramp at my door?
Shall I tear off each luminous thing
To drop in the palm of the poor?
What shall I do to be just?
Teach me, O Ye in the light,
Whom the rich and the poor alike trust;
My heart is aflame to be right.
—Hamlin Garland.

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Luke 10: 25-37 (verses 26-38, I. V. preferred.)

Associated Scriptures:

"The first and greatest commandment."—Matthew 22: 35-40.

"I came not to be ministered unto but to minister."—Matthew 20: 28.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matthew 25: 40.

Special Music:

"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," S. H., No. 350.

Hymn Appreciation:

"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," Christ and the Fine Arts, page 739.

Theme Talk:

Out of the two questions propounded by the lawyer came the essential truths of man's relationship to his fellow men, "What must I do to inherit celestial life?" and "Who is my neighbor?" The first question brought out the threefold nature of the first and greatest commandment—the love of God, the love of neighbor equal to the love of self. Since in that day there was considerable quibbling as to "Who is my neighbor?" and since man's salvation really depended upon his proper relationship with his neighbor, the second question proved to have much more depth and significance than the lawyer intended. However, with his unique artistry of approach, Christ changed the question from its objective viewpoint of "Who is a neighbor to me?" to the essentially subjective view of "Who proved himself a neighbor to the one in need?"

There are at least four thoughts that we should gain from the lesson in this parable. First, we must know that religious profession is no criteria for genuine goodness—that our actions speak louder than our words. Second, it is very evident that our neighbor does not have to be of the same creed, or class, or race, but this is a truism that has to be reiterated again and again to make any impression on the social consciousness. Again, need is the measure by which we can identify our neighbor, and in this Christ set the example, for he was a brother to the lowliest and found his delight in serving the one in the sorest need. Lastly, being a neighbor does entail some sacrifice, small or great, of time, effort, or money. If it were not so, all would willingly be neighbors.

We are told that in the likeness of the Good Samaritan we have the only human example commended to us for our exemplification. Jesus said, "Go, and do thou likewise," with an emphasis on the "do." There is the inference that this was a model for all time, for he had indeed given all and had done it unselfishly, thoroughly, and personally.

Challenge:

Christ interprets our relationship to himself and God by our conduct to the least of his brethren. He says, "Let this mind be in you which was in the Lord Jesus." We find the challenge expressed in the words of the poet,

The bread that giveth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live:
I want to help the fainting day by day,
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

Closing Hymn (selected)

"When Thy Heart With Joy O'erflowing," S. H., No. 349.

"Is Thy Cruse of Comfort Failing," S. H., No. 345.

"I Thank Thee, Lord, for Strength of Arm," S. H., No. 348.

Benediction.

Poetry:

Who is thy neighbor? He whom thou
Hast power to aid or bless,
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor
Whose eye with want is dim.
Oh, enter thou his humble door
With aid and peace for him.

Thy neighbor? He who drinks the cup
When sorrow drowns the brim;
With words of high sustaining hope
Go thou and comfort him.

Thy neighbor? Pass no mourner by,
Perhaps thou canst redeem

A breaking heart from misery.
Go share thy lot with him.

PASS IT ON

Have you had a kindness shown?

Pass it on;
'Twas not given for thee alone,
Pass it on;

Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears—
Pass it on.

Have you found the heavenly light?

Pass it on;
Souls are groping in the night,
Daylight gone;
Hold thy lighted lamp on high,
Be a star in someone's sky,
He may live who else would die—
Pass it on.

Be not selfish in thy greed,

Pass it on;
Look upon thy brother's need,
Pass it on;
Live for self, you live in vain,
Live for Christ, you live again,
Live for him, with him you reign—
Pass it on.

Theme: THE TWO BUILDERS

Call to Worship:

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. . . . Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which builds his house upon a rock."—Matthew 7: 21, 24.

Hymn: "How Firm a Foundation," S. H., No. 245.

Prayer Thought:

If thou but suffer God to guide thee,
And hope in him through all thy ways,
He'll give thee strength, whate'er betide thee,
And bear thee through the evil days;
Who trusts in God's unchanging love
Builds on the rock that naught can move.
—George Neumark.

Congregational Prayer: "The Lord's Prayer," in unison.

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Matthew 7: 24-27 (verses 34, 35, I. V.), or Luke 6: 47-49.

or

The Scripture in Verse:

Everyone, now, who listens to these my teachings,
And acts upon them,
Will be like the wise man
Who built his house on the rock;
And the heavy rain poured down;
The swollen streams swirled along;
And the winds blew and beat on that house.
But it did not fall, for it was founded on rock.

Everyone, however, who listens to these words of mine

And does not act on them
Will be like the stupid man
Who built his house upon the sand.
The heavy rain poured down;
The swollen stream swirled;
The winds blew and beat upon the house
And it fell—with a mighty crash!

—Basil Mathews.

"The Solid Rock," or "On Christ, the Solid Rock, I Stand," by Edward Mote. (In Methodist and other hymnals.)

Theme Talk:

Again, Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth, was on very familiar ground when he used the fundamentals of good building for his very practical teachings about the building of character. Every house has a foundation. It was the kind of foundation, its strength, and endurance that concerned the Master. It is said that to Jesus there was "no wealth but character," and so in Jesus we find all the embodiment of good character—the Christian character, as it is familiarly called. In good building these essentials, at least, are fundamental: a competent architect, a suitable plan for all, a sure foundation, and a testing time. For us, God is the great architect and he has given the plan of salvation as a means for the building of the kingdom, which is sufficient and true for all peoples and all ages. Truly, the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man is the sure foundation, for this was the essence of the whole teachings of Christ. "Other foundations can no man lay than that which is laid—Jesus Christ." Some are prone to build their lives on good intentions, some on the lives of noble parents, some on their charity and fine gifts, some on their shrewd wit. Such cannot withstand the crucial test: i. e., the certainty that "God shall try every man's work, of what sort it is." "They that trust the Lord shall be as Mt. Zion, which cannot be moved, but abideth forever," but "the way of the ungodly shall perish."

Hymn: "Oh, Then to the Rock Let Me Fly,"
S. H., No. 242. "I'm Pressing on the Upward Way," S. H., No. 241.

Benediction.

Associated Scripture:

"Build upon my rock, which is my gospel; deny not the spirit of prophecy."—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 11.

"Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16: 18.

"Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14: 6.

Poetry:

THE WAY, THE TRUTH, AND THE LIFE

O thou great Friend to all the sons of men,
Who once appear'st in humblest guise below,
Sin to rebuke, to break the captive's chain,
To call thy brethren forth from want and woe!
Thee would I sing. Thy truth is still the light
Which guides the nations groping on their way,
Stumbling and falling in disastrous night,
Yet hoping ever for the perfect day.

Yes, thou art still the life: thou art the way
The holiest know, light, life, and the way of heaven;
And they who dearest hope and deepest pray
Toil by the truth, life, way that thou hast given;
And in thy name aspiring mortals trust
To uplift their bleeding brothers rescued from the dust.

—Theodore Parker.

CHRIST'S LIFE OUR CODE

Christ's life our code, His cross our creed,
Our common, glad confession be;
Our deepest wants, our highest aims,
Find their fulfillment, Lord, in thee.

Dear Son of God! Thy blessed will
Our hearts would own, with saints above;
All life is larger for thy law,
All service sweeter for thy love.

Thy life our code! in letters clear
We read our duty, day by day;
Thy footsteps tracing eagerly,
Who art the Truth, the Life, the Way.

Theme: THE UNFRUITFUL FIG TREE

Call to Worship:

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—
John 10: 10.

Introductory Thought:

Because it was his purpose and his glory to give the more abundant life to all, it must have been and ever will be a source of concern to Christ to see the wanton waste and gross neglect of life's creative forces. In the parable of the barren fig tree, we find that concern and the touch of keen disappointment, but also the righteous judgment of the Master in the words, "cut it down," if it is to do nothing but cumber the ground.

Opening Hymn: "What Fruit Have You Gathered for Jesus?" S. H., No. 221.

Prayer:

Thanks that we have been planted in the vineyard of the Lord;
appreciation for the elements of life and growth in that environment;
supplication for grace that we might ever bear good fruit.

Scripture Reading:

The Parable. Luke 13: 6-9. (I. V. preferred.)

Associated Scripture:

Parable of the Vineyard.—Isaiah 5: 1-4.

The Tree and the Chaff.—Psalm 1.

The Crucial Test.—Matthew 7: 19 (verse 28, I. V.)

Special Music.

Theme Talk:

The beauty and significance of this parable becomes much more appealing when we stop to consider that Christ, as co-creator with his Heavenly Father, knew full well the possibilities and purposes of each of his earthly creations, even the fig tree, and his joy was to see the fulfillment of each divine appointment. The lamp was to be a light, the fish to fill the nets, and in the words of a poet, man was to fill his varied purpose in life:

Singers, sing! The hoary world
Needs reminder of its youth:
Prophet, tell! The darkness lies
On the labyrinths of truth:
Builder, build! Let rocks uprise
Into cities 'neath thy hand;
Farmers, till! The sun and rain
Harken for the seed's demand:
Artist, paint! Thy canvasses
Patiently convey thy soul:
Writer, write! With pen blood-dipped
Trace no segment, but the whole:
Teacher, teach! Thyself the creed—
Only that a child may know:
Dreamer, dream! Nor hide thy face

Though thy castles crumble low.
Where the toiler turns the sod
Man beholds the living God.
—Richard Wightman.

Time and again man asked, "What must I do to make sure of life?" and Christ's answers all meant that the divine purpose in man was his conscious, consistent growth and development in goodness, even unto perfection, which is his soul's salvation. While rebuking the unfaithful, the slothful, the unprofitable one, the parable also suggests the Father's forbearance, his willingness to work with us yet a little longer that we may bear fruit. It isn't too much that the Master should come seeking and expecting results for his labors. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Thus we are to be judged worthy or unworthy to remain in the vineyard of the Lord.
The Challenge:

A PRAYER

We know the paths wherein our feet should press,
Across our hearts are written thy decrees:
Yet now, O Lord, be merciful to bless
With more than these.
Grant us the will to fashion as we feel,
Grant us the strength to labor as we know,
Grant us the purpose, ribb'd and edg'd with steel,
To strike the blow.
Knowledge we ask not—knowledge Thou hast lent,
But, Lord, the will—there lies our bitter need,
Give us to build above the deep intent
The deed, the deed.
—John Drinkwater.

Gems of Wisdom:

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Ah, great it is to believe the dream,
As we stand in youth by the starry stream;
But a greater thing is to fight life through, activities, found much joy and satisfaction. He worked in the garden of Bishop Trapp, also did much in the new church property in Birmingham and other places and incidentally took to his heart the baby boy of Brother and Sister Oakman and delighted Channing with his fostering interest. He was exceedingly fond of little children, and among the many memories we have of Brother Murray was his loving care of our little boy, William, born in Hamilton and always very delicate. Oftentimes when home from his work and after washing and cleaning himself after his long day in the pit, he would come over and soothe the pain-wracked body of our little son.
And say at the end, the dream is true.

Truly Bob Murray would have made a fine addition to the group of "Twice Born Men" of which Harold Begbie wrote when he investigated the miracle of transformed lives in the Salvation Army and the West End London Mission, which in the mind of this London journalist witnessed to the reality of the saving power of religion. Our brother was not educated, he could not read or write, he kept up his correspondence with his friends through some kind amanuensis. His knowledge of religion was not academic, but practical. Jesus Christ was his personal Saviour. He could not appreciate the mysteries of the theology or the sacraments of the church so that he could win souls through discussion of these things; but he had heard the Voice of the Good Shepherd and he followed him faithfully. At times he was discouraged for he was very human, he did not sort his words with the precision of a linguist, but like Livingstone he "loved people into a knowledge of the Christ." He could not explain the meaning of the Trinity, but he exemplified the reality of regeneration, he knew that obedience to what was known of the Master's word would bring peace and safety to the souls of men. Like the rest of humanity, he had his flaws and weaknesses, but always he was true to his discipleship. Many will miss Bob Murray and his ministrations, but his name will be green in the memory of many who have known him and with whom he shared so generously what he had. With his limited talents he did much and shamed some of us who had more.

In appreciation and sincere condolence,

Sharing the Gospel

Have you ever had the privilege of telling the gospel story to one who is seeking the truth? I have, and the joy it has brought to me is inconceivable.

I have not lived long in Independence. During my years of isolation from church privileges, I didn't suppose I could ever be of any service. The woman to whom I am telling the story of the restoration prayed for a Christian neighbor. Not only did God answer her prayer, he also recognized my desire to be of help to someone. From our first meeting, we were kindred spirits. When she questioned me about my belief, I prayed that my answers might be divinely inspired. I am deeply grateful for the inspiration I received. Each time I visit my neighbor and see the glow of hope in her eyes as I tell of the Latter Day work, I realize that I have been granted an extraordinary opportunity.

How satisfying it is to serve a living God. When burdens grow heavy, peace prevails; when sorrows come, comfort is easily availed. Truth is like rain upon the thirsty land and sunshine after a storm. The spirit of comfort and peace follows each visit with God. Try it—it works.

Grateful for Prayers

Mrs. J. L. O'Neal, 33 Orchard Drive, Herrin, Illinois, expresses her appreciation to all who remembered her with prayers, cards, and letters, during her illness.

"There you sit," Harry Lauder used to taunt his audience merrily. "You've been side by side for two hours, and not one of you spoke to the fellow in the next seat!"

And not one of us but, under that warm-hearted influence, turned and spoke to the stranger beside him.

It's easy as that. A word, a smile, and you may turn the stranger at your elbow into a friend. For the world is at heart a friendly place. It's a bank, with unlimited reserves, in which men and women of good will have been making deposits for generations. Everybody can add to its capital. Anybody can draw on it.—Donald Culross Peattie in Your Life, New York.

Log of Camp Yokoma

By Aleta Runkle

An informal chronicle of a young people's camp conducted under church leaders, giving an idea of what it is like for those who have not attended one.

Sunday, June 8, 12 o'clock noon.

Car wheels crunching the gravel just outside the dining hall. Shouts for "Les" (Leslie Kohlman, business manager) to see what camper has arrived so early. How nice! First registrant—an Indian boy from Kaw City—Vance Littlewalker. Here early—hm—he'll be sorry! I have five tables and benches yet to scrub—guess I'll recruit his help. (Nice response—very helpful.) Staff chores all done for the moment. A quick dash through the showers and then back to the dining hall to greet this enthusiastic group pouring into camp from all directions—from Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, and Arkansas. A likely-looking bunch. Fifty-two of them—all between the ages of fifteen and eighteen. Hugs and squeals of joy as the twenty-two "old" campers back from last year spot each other. Now—formalities of registration—signing up for one of the three morning classes, one of the two afternoon projects, taking care of health cards, the "minor" details of banking, etc.

A bell. Supper already? No lack of camp spirit here. No inhibitions—a steady chatter through the meal. Someone starts singing, "Stand up, table seven, stand up." Good-naturedly, Table Seven decides to "sit it out." No complaints from the staff, but wait, after supper that bringer of glad tidings with his little black book announces K. P. for Table Seven.

How about some mealtime singing, kids?

10:15 p.m.

And now the first day is nearly ended. An excellent illustrated lecture at 7:30 by Brother Glen Johnson on "The Life of Christ," using some extraordinarily beautiful slides, and later an inspiring campfire centering about, "I Choose a Profession."

Taps. Quiet steals over the camp. Hushed whispers and muffled giggles. The day is done.

(I skim through my camp memory book to complete details of my daily log, and pause here and there to reminisce over some unforgettable memories.)

Monday, June 9, 10:15 p.m.

Nightly chores finished. Girls all have their hair pinned up and are in bed. Taps. Hard day. Good to ease into my cot—must be dreaming. Thought I heard someone singing. Addilean, Aarona (dorm counselors)—you hear anything? Sure enough—"Let Me Call You Sweetheart"—an honest-to-goodness serenade. Excited screams—exclamations of surprise as girls fall over cots trying to find housecoats in the dark. "With Someone Like You"—Perfect harmony. Rich voices. Medley of love songs with girls (and "dignified" counselors) ah-ing and oh-ing with delight. Girls sing response and then boys serve ice cold pop. Thanks, fellows. Wonderful surprise!

Tuesday, June 10, 6:00 a.m.

Couldn't be the bugler already. Thought somebody throttled him last night. "Fall out, girls." Half hour later we shoo the last stragglers out the door. Daily flag ceremony—pledge of allegiance—patriotic song—call to colors—impressive, meaningful. Ray (Raymond Booker, camp director from Mobile, Alabama) looks at his watch with an exclamation, "discovers" we're up a half hour early—"proposes" we spend the extra time at the pool—early dip before breakfast—in addition to the daily afternoon swim. Loud shouts of approval. Hour later everybody crawls out of water with gloomy prospects of table-setting ahead at camp, but "orders" are to proceed due west. At peak of hill—picnic site. Cooks there with bacon and eggs, hot rolls, hot chocolate. Yum! (Everybody disappointed.) Still more surprises! Arthur (Arthur Rock from Joplin, Mo.) announces devotionals will be in natural amphitheater adjacent. Birds singing. Winds sighing in the trees. Scriptures read with resonant voices. Hymns in reverent tones. Smiles of friends.

Wednesday, June 11, 6:00 p.m.

Hayride announced at noon now under way. Every "guy" with his best "gal"—and what a night!

8:00 p.m.

Two hour perfect ride from camp to north end of Big Lake. Aarona and Addilean took turns riding the lone mule escort driven by a diminutive shy little Indian lad. The kids in our wagon had to keep rescuing Don from a slippery bale at the edge of the rack. Sang everything from "Cannibal King" and "Shine on Harvest Moon" to "Old, Old Path." Piled out of hay wagons and sat in campfire circle for Galilean service. Ray, in Biblical attire, stood in boat slightly off shore and read selected quotations of the Master. Campers responded with sentence dedications. Bette sang Malotte's benediction, "The Lord's Prayer." A perfect day. Another treasured memory.

Thursday, June 12, 6:30 p.m.

Time for annual feast of the Yokoma tribe. Deep in Indian country here. Keep Indian traditions. Boys' afternoon work project (under supervision of Alan Kelley and LeRoy Thomas, staff members) to prepare food and setting for feast—and keep all information secret from girls. Happened upon the council ring for the feast this afternoon—breath-taking. Sheltered clearing in near-by woods, three teepees colorfully decorated, barbecue pit (Joe and Alan all set to barbecue ribs even then) rustic serving trays carved from wood. All set to entertain girls in primitive Indian style. Girls have surprise, too. Indian program carefully planned in costume with fitting ceremonials. That was girls' afternoon work project.

Torrential rains flooding camp. Oh, well! So we sing, "Blue Skies," "Ain't Goin' to Rain no More," and "Let a Smile Be Your Umbrella." We wade through to council ring and have a wonderful time. Staff disgraces itself with excessive laughter. Torchbearers light the way home.

Friday, June 13, 9:00 a.m.

Last day of classes at camp. Those in handcraft are proud of sequin pins, initialed stationery, metal-tapping designs. Drama and music classes combine tonight in vesper service, "The Choices of Christ." Hymns, tableaux, and narration tell of great decisions in the ilfe of the Master.

8:45 p.m.

Vesper service just concluded. Effective—revealing. Almost time for our closing campfire—fellowship service tonight. Some are already there. A star-studded sky, a lighted cross on a near-by hill, a spiraling campfire. Hushed voices sing, "The Old, Old Path." Friends sit close in a fellowship circle welded by intimately-shared experiences of a week in camp.

"This has been a wonderful camp, and I love it here"—our Indian boy. "I've had a swell time here at camp, and I know Christian fellowship can exist among all denominations"—one of our splendid nonmember campers. "I've looked forward to this camp since last January when I began making arrangements for it, but one experience such as this tonight is worth all of the time and effort I put into it"—a hard-working staff member. "I gave up one week of my two weeks' vacation to come to camp, but it was no sacrifice"—another devoted staff member. "Words are so inadequate—if they could only convey what we feel"—our beloved camp director.

(Even now in reverie I hear again the low sincere voices of those young campers as they shared their joys of the week—their most cherished memories.)

Saturday, June 14, 6:30 a.m.

Somebody hand me the ice tongs. I'm frozen to the cot. Dreamt I was in the Antarctic with Admiral Byrd. Last breakfast—hot biscuits, eggs, cereal, hot chocolate. M-m-m! Clean-up, and then at nine—Assembly. Each day one boy and one girl selected as campers of the day were given recognition at campfire. This morning the new title, "Campers of the Night," goes to Don, Arthur, Rosalee, and Glenna Lee who worked all night so that we could have our camp paper before leaving. Thanks, friends!

Now our campers of the week, Joe and Frances, give short talks. We sit in intimate silence. All individual resolves not to be sentimental dissolve and together we melt in tears. Staff members speak. We sing, "The Old, Old Path," and "God Be With You 'Till We Meet Again." Pictures are snipped. Farewells waved. Camp is over—

I shut the covers of my camp log and with fondest memories dedicate the sketch therein to the Yokoma tribe.

If you really want to get the fullest enjoyment out of living in a community, you must be more than a mere spectator. You must make yourself a part of it. You must give yourself to it. You must accept responsibility for its growth and development. You must share in the joys and griefs of your neighbors. You must be willing to take on unpleasant tasks that compel you to put forth your best. A good neighbor is also a good worker.—Thomas Dreier.

Testimony of a Mother

I greatly appreciate the articles and testimonies in the Herald. Because I have been helped by reading the experiences of others, I share this testimony with the hope that it may benefit someone else.

When our daughter was eleven months old, she fell while eating some peanut candy. One of the peanuts lodged in her lung and caused an infection that soon developed into a serious condition. We took her to the hospital and called for a specialist, who discovered that one lung had collapsed with pneumonia and there was very little chance for her recovery. First, he suggested that she be taken to another hospital where better equipment was available, then he said that immediate surgery would be her only hope. We had summoned Elder Frank Higgins to administer to her, but he didn't arrive until after the operation. During that time, we prayed as we had never prayed before. We are convinced that God heard our prayers, because the operation was a success and, after receiving administration, our child began to recover rapidly. Today, she is as healthy as if she had never suffered the unfortunate experience.

Wants to Locate Relatives

I am writing this letter in the hope that it will be read by members of my family or friends of my family in England and Australia. My mother was Jane Evans, daughter of Edward and Jane Evans of Montgomeryshire, Wales. Her oldest brother, Evan Evans, went to Australia and settled in Wallaroo. His son, John Evans, was later mayor of that city. My father, John William Jones, was the son of John and Bridget Hughes Jones. His brother, Hugh and William, and his sisters, Ann (Jones) Shrine and Catherine (Jones) Jones, lived in Liverpool, England. If anyone living in either of these places can tell me anything about my relatives, I shall indeed be grateful.

My prayers are that we as a united group, may soon make Zion a reality.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Vows they made fifty years ago were repeated by Mr. and Mrs. Frank John Lacey on Sunday afternoon, May 25, at the Reorganized Church in Ontario, California, when they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in the presence of 130 friends and relatives. Preceding the ceremony, a musical program was presented by Janie Renfro, Lorna Cruse, Kay Roberts, Jacque Manley, Mrs. Dorothy Cruse, and Mrs. Harriet Peterson. Mrs. Fern Roberts, accompanied by Mrs. Mary Ritchie, gave a musical reading, "Why Do I Love You?" Elder Clyde Roberts, pastor of the branch, read the ceremony. Mrs. Lacey's eldest daughter, Mrs. Pearl Carter, was matron of honor. Four granddaughters, Jacque Lacey, Kay Roberts, Joan Lacey, and Mrs. Colleen Ryder, were bridesmaids; Carole and Christie Roberts, also granddaughters, were flower girls. Bonnie Ritchie served as best man, and Richard Peterson and George Steele as ushers. A reception was held immediately following the wedding on the picnic grounds at the rear of the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Lacey were married at Tabor, Iowa, on May 27, 1897, by Elder Charles Fry. Both are members of Ontario Branch. Mr. Lacey, an elder, joined the church in 1894 and Mrs. Lacey, in 1898.

Mrs. J. H. Langton, of Lakota, North Dakota, would like to hear from church members in Alaska.

The Hour of Prayer

'Tis the hour of prayer in the early morn,
That brings sweet peace to the soul;
Communion with Him at the break of day,
Helps us go on our way to the goal.

Then drop to the knees at the noontide bright,
To thank God, thus far on the way.
He'll give us glad hearts if we trust in him
And walk with him all through the day.

With loved ones we bow in the evening hour;
'Round the altar we raised in our home;
Each trying to know about God and his word
That our feet may nevermore roam.

Then commune with him in the midnight calm,
When the earth and all else is at rest.
He speaks to the soul in a still, small voice,
And envisioning Christ, we are blest.

The greatest gangster-aggressor of all time is now feathering his arsenal to the west across the Pacific. The Communist plague is sweeping across the face of Eurasia like a hot wind across the desert. Russian scientists and military men are working at fever pitch behind the Iron Curtain to prepare Russia for the greatest mass aggression ever to be hurled against the peoples of the world. Communistic agents have infiltrated into every part of the world and have buried themselves among the masses in order to carry out their activities for Communist Russia. The United States itself is honeycombed with agents and fellow travelers who give their undivided allegiance to the Soviet Union and all that it stands for—a way of life that destroys millions of its own people every year.

In the face of these vicious overtures, the American people, as a whole, still cling tenaciously to the idea that peace is just around the corner and that the Soviet Union is merely a kindly group of republics, all symbolized by the benign appearance of Joseph Stalin. The leaders of state in this country know better critical, at times alarmingly so. But I think that the present period is in many respects even more critical."

During the course of an address to the Economic Club of New York on February 25, Secretary of the Navy Forrestal said: "The future of than this, but their lips are or have been sealed because of diplomatic reasons. But recently the situation has become so serious that many leaders have spoken out in clear, unmistakable language.

While speaking at Princeton University recently, Secretary of State George Marshall made the following statement: "The war years were civilization may be determined in the next twenty-four months."

During a recent speech in Kansas City before members of the 35th Division, President Truman departed from the printed version of his address to warn the world wide listeners that no country had better attempt to attack the United States or it would regret it.

FRED ALEXANDER

A man who knows the story of Russian policy from beginning to end is former Governor of Pennsylvania, George H. Earle who served as Minister to Bulgaria during World War II, as a Naval attaché to Turkey and more recently as a secret representative of President Roosevelt on Balkan affairs. The information he learned on these assignments was of such a sensational nature that President Roosevelt, who now appears to have been very pro-Russian, exiled him to an assignment in Samoa so that he could not talk.

The honorable Mr. Earle who characterizes America as "the only country that stands between Russia and world domination," says bluntly, "There is no defense against the atomic bomb, and there will be no defense against the atomic bomb. Frankly, I do not believe there is better than an even chance that ten per cent of us Americans will be alive five years from today."

These men know whereof they speak. Any attempt to lessen the impact of what they say is merely foolish rationalizing.

Further, observe with care what the scientists are saying. Ask any nuclear physicist about the future of atom bombs, and he will tell you that soon you will see the production of bombs one thousand times more powerful than those dropped on Japan. This means that if the old bombs could devastate an area one mile in diameter, the new bombs will destroy and lay waste an area roughly the size of one third of the United States. Such a bomb exploded off the Pacific coast could endanger the whole United States by radioactive cloud formations.

The United States government has now awakened to the fact that America faces the gravest situation in her history. But the people are far behind in this realization. This is a bad situation, because it forces the government to act sluggishly in response to the rapierlike political thrusts made by Moscow. The truth is that the crisis which the U. S. and the entire world now face is more serious than was the combined threat created by the Axis powers, Germany, Italy, and Japan.

The public must come to realize this. The Nation must remain alert to every movement of the Soviet Union. The people should be conditioned to expect aggression from Russia. The cry set up by many, that if we expect aggression from Russia we will surely get it because we have not thought affirmatively of peace is so much psychological mouthwash. Wars are caused by powers who want more than their rightful share of world possessions. In this case, Russia is bent on world dominance.

It must be remembered that the Russians can move swiftly. The dictatorial hierarchy within Russia does not wait for public opinion to jell before taking extraordinary steps toward aggression. The decision is made, and the act is done.

Not so in the United States. The democratic system demands, and rightly so, that the people must approve every action taken by government.

Russia is better prepared to wage battle on a world scale than any country in the history of the world. The U. S. S. R. has vast natural resources, greater than all three of the Axis powers combined.

Russia has almost unlimited land area. This offers an unsurpassed natural defensive barrier. Russia's system of decentralization developed during the last war, would tend to make atom bombs dropped on her major cities comparatively ineffective because the major strength would be spread out over a tremendous area of land. The theory now is that it would be very difficult to break Russia's power by means of atomic warfare. U. S. industry is concentrated.

The U. S. S. R. is a vast stage with a closed curtain. Other nations have no idea about what goes on behind that curtain. In the last war, the Allies knew much of Germany's plans because of an elaborate spy system inside Germany. The Russian blackout is so successful that Fred Alexander, known to KMBC listeners as Joe Marshall, has long been a contributor to the "Herald." His column, "The World Today," was first featured four years ago. there is little to tell absolutely but much to surmise. The Russians are in a position to use the element of surprise as no other nation in the history of the world has been.

Not only does Russia have a vast internal system perfectly designed for warfare, but it also has an elaborate system of agents and sympathizers throughout the world. Here is a vast intelligence network controlled by Russia that has no match in all of history. What does all this mean to the average American? Many have taken this line of thought, "Another war, all right, but let's not drive ourselves crazy thinking about it, let's have a good time while we can." Such is not a very mature attitude. On the other hand, many know and realize that we have arrived at that time in history to which every signpost of time has pointed for thousands of years. These times fulfill prophecy. Every world event is pregnant with meaning and unfolds majestically day by day the dramatic story of the birth of a new day—a new horizon yet in the distance.

There should be a great hope in the hearts of all who live in this age. Just one more obstacle to surmount, and a great new era will be upon us. An age of peace—truly a golden age.

Central Missouri Stake

There have been seventy-five baptisms in the stake in 1947. Nineteen of these new members attend Warrensburg Church. Eleven were baptized at the close of a series of meetings held in Buckner recently by Missionary Loyd Adams.

A stake League rally was held June 1 at Knob Noster State Park. One hundred fifty-four young people participated in a program given at Craft's Barn in the park, and then closed the rally with a dedication service. Loyd Adams was guest speaker.

On June 10, the young adults held a regional meeting in the municipal auditorium at Lexington. Carlos Smith was song leader for the occasion. Leonard Smith presided over the meeting, and E. P. Darnell, missionary supervisor for the stake, was guest speaker. A young adult rally is to be held in Warrensburg on June 22.

Over thirty Latter Day Saint students are attending the summer session at Missouri State College in Warrensburg.

Knob Noster, Missouri

Pastor, Felix Hacker

The young adults of the stake held a rally at Knob Noster on February 9; approximately 200 attended. Elder Evan Fry was guest speaker. On February 22, they sponsored a bake sale which netted $30. Bishop T. A. Beck was present on February 27 for family night. Following a potluck supper, a short program was given, and subscriptions were sold to raise money for redecorating the interior of the church. The main auditorium has been painted, and the floors will be sanded and varnished in the near future.

The primary department was in charge of branch night for March.

No services were held at the local church during General Conference.

The women now meet the first and third Thursdays of each month. They are making clothes and bedding for the Ray family whose home burned recently.

The young adults celebrated the birthdays of all in their group born in April with a party at the home of Kenneth and Phyllis Vick.

Mother's Day was observed with a musical program and an address by Ben Kramer of Independence. Each mother was presented a bouquet of flowers by the primary department. Grandma Deller and Mrs. Adrien Vick received potted plants for being the oldest and youngest mothers present. Mrs. Effie Vick and Mrs. Minnie Moorman were given plants for having the largest number of living children.

Stake President Ward A. Hougas was the morning speaker on Sunday, May 25. Elder E. P. Darnell concluded his series of Sunday evening services that night. Felix Hacker delivered the address at the city cemetery on Memorial Day. Other recent guest speakers have been Clifford Long and Nelson Gard.

A parents' banquet was held in the lower auditorium of the church on Friday evening, May 30. The dining hall was decorated with pink and white streamers, and each table had a centerpiece of peonies and iris. The front of the hall, which represented an old-fashioned garden, was the stage for a pantomime given by Evelyn and David Hacker. The banquet was sponsored by the Zion's League.

To Branch Reporters News Briefs Discontinued

Because of a renewed difficulty with our paper supply, the editors find themselves confronted once more with the problem of allocating space in our issues to the various departments and interests of church work. The news department has suffered severely in the past, and it has been impossible to give adequate representation to the churches. For this reason, we believe it is necessary until further notice to discontinue the publication of routine church news relating to regular services, speakers, and activities. Only extraordinary news can be handled.—Editors.

Grandview, Missouri

Pastor, Lester Bronson

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Ganzer, Mrs. Richard Goddard and daughter, Jean Ann, Mrs. Lola Bliss, Mrs. Richard Barnett, and Mrs. Robert Curtis were baptized at a special service held at 9:45 on Sunday morning, March 30. Chicago, Illinois, District

District President, Joseph E. Baldwin

A five-session institute was conducted for members of the priesthood in Chicago District preceding the conference held May 18. Apostle Arthur Oakman lectured and led discussions on the three books and gifts of the Spirit as tools of the ministry. An average attendance of thirty was recorded at the evening and Saturday meetings. On Sunday, the conference began at 9:30 with a social service led by President F. Henry Edwards, Apostle Oakman, and District President Joseph Baldwin. A sextet from First Church sang "Sweet Hour of Prayer" at the opening of the service, after which various members of the priesthood summarized their experiences at the institute. Leslie Wight was ordained to the office of patriarch at the close of the service. President Edwards gave the morning sermon. Music was in charge of David Wiesen, and Mrs. Sally Anderson, youth leader of Maywood Branch, sang Mallott's "Lord's Prayer."

The women served lunch at noon, netting over $30 for the district treasury.

The assembly was divided into two groups in the afternoon. Apostle Oakman discussed spiritual gifts with members of the priesthood, while President Edwards talked to the young people and adults. Preceding his address, Betty Lusha of West Pullman played a piano prelude, and Mrs. Ruby Motta of First Church gave a biographical sketch of Carl Sandburg and read one of his poems.

A religious education institute for district church school workers and parents was held for five consecutive Monday evenings at Central Church beginning May 12. District Director Hattie K. Bell planned and scheduled each two-hour session, which included a worship service, class study, and challenges by various local and district officers. Harley Morris lectured on child psychology and Mrs. Lydia Wight on techniques in planning worship. Average attendance was forty.

The department of women and district musicians sponsored an evening of music on June 14 at Central Church. Guest artists as well as local musicians participated in the two-hour program. Proceeds from ticket sales amounted to $75.

The people who know God and have faith in their heritage will not fear. The Lord has promised, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 54: 17.

These are times that demand a passionate devotion to church and nation. The heritage granted this people cannot be purchased for silver in the market place. It can be had only by those who can rightfully claim it by blood descent and by those who adopt the Christian way of life—the way of life preached by the restored gospel.

Even now at this period every year, the nation celebrates the signing of a document which meant the breaking off the bonds of tyranny and oppression from America. The nation must rise up and reaffirm its independence from a tyranny that seeks to engulf the world. The people must retain their birthright by putting on the mantle of righteousness which is adequate armor against the most lethal instrument of destruction that could ever be conceived by man.

The time for preparation is now. The Nation must sign a new Declaration of Independence from sin. Every home must become a tabernacle dedicated to God. The secret of survival is love of Christ and fellow man. If the people obey the law, they will not be forgotten in their time of need. "But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee."—Isaiah 49: 14, 15.

A well-known national radio program always opens with the words,

"Wake Up, America." That is precisely what must happen. The people must awaken to the facts and do battle in the name of the Lord. That time is now upon us. Pray God that we shall not sleep past the time when the cock crows in the courtyard.

She had been a resident of Sandusky and Argyle about fifty-eight years. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in October, 1894, at Shabbona, Michigan. On June 4, 1883, she was married to Charles Smith, who preceded her in death fifteen years ago.

She is survived by four daughters: Mrs. Bertha Kilbourne, Port Huron, Michigan; Mrs. Alta Cooke, Sandusky, Michigan; Mrs. Sara Krause, Pontiac, Michigan; and Mrs. Edith Provost, Sandusky, Michigan; two sons: Ira of Snover, Michigan, and John of Port Huron, Michigan; sixteen grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Reorganized Church, Pastor James Phillips officiating. Interment was in Greenwood Cemetery.

ROBERTS.—Lewis W., was born October 13, 1875, in Dunlap, Iowa, and died May 31, 1947. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1898, and held the office of elder at the time of his death. On September 17, 1902, he was married to Pearl Allen. In 1910, they moved to Fresno, California, where they lived most of the time since.

Mr. Roberts leaves his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Letha Seib and Mrs. Altha Richardson of Fresno, California, and Mrs. Louise Miller of Friant, California; three sons: Allen and Lewis of Fresno, and Ray of Kansas City, Missouri; three brothers: Wilber, Willis, and Gene, all of Iowa; seventeen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Laurence A. MacDonald. Interment was in Belmont Memorial Cemetery.

CURTIS.—Edward Alva, Jr., was born July 20, 1915, at Holyoke, Colorado, and died May 24, 1947, in Kansas City, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight and attended school at Grandview, Missouri. On February 16, 1939, he was married to Eunice Blair. A son preceded him in death in 1940.

He is survived by his wife and a son, Blair Edward, of the home; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Curtis; four brothers: Robert W., Richard B., Jack M., and M. Keith; and his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Brackenbury.

COLE.—Joseph Charles, son of Joseph G. and Elizabeth Tyler Cole, was born October 23, 1889, in St. Louis, Missouri, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on June 13, 1947. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since a boy. On February 13, 1941, he was married to Lura Mannering at Independence, Missouri.

Surviving are his wife; a daughter, Mrs. Russell Carter of Carrollton, Missouri; a son, Ralph of Kansas City, Missouri; a daughter-in-law, Mrs. Richard Cole of Kansas City; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Cole; a sister, Amy Hendricks; and a brother, Claude, all of Henderson, Illinois. He also leaves three grandchildren. A son, Richard, was killed in the war three years ago.

VANDERWOOD.—John Elias, son of John and Anna Vanderwood, was born at Malad City, Idaho, on August 29, 1879, and died May 7, 1947, in Independence, Missouri. He was married to Bertha Radmall on December 22, 1904; four children were born to this union. A daughter, Vivian, died in infancy. Mr. Vanderwood was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Elkhorn, Idaho, on October 8, 1887. He was ordained an elder on March 1, 1903, and a seventy in April, 1909. He was under general church appointment for forty-three years; the last seven, he served as a guide at Nauvoo.

He leaves his wife; two sons: Elvin J. and Dean H.; a daughter, Mrs. Hazel L. Close, all of Independence; three sisters, and three grandsons. Elder Donald Lents was in charge of the funeral service, with Elder Claude Smith giving the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—Gus Henry, was born March 4, 1870, at Camanche, Iowa, and died June 15, 1947, at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 4, 1920. He also belonged to the Odd Fellow and Masonic orders. For over sixty-one years he was employed as a streetcar conductor in Council Bluffs.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Otto

Meis and Mrs. Cecil Cooney, both of Council Bluffs, and Mrs. Myrtle Barton of Wichita, Kansas; a son, Robert C. of Council Bluffs; two brothers: S. B. of Omaha, Nebraska, and Bruce of Council Bluffs; a sister, Mrs. Ida Reid of Pittsburg, Kansas; nine grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Woodring Funeral Home with Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery in Council Bluffs.

ERICKSON.—Marcus O., was born June 12, 1872, in Steele County, Minnesota, and died at his home on May 23, 1947. At the age of eight, he moved to Cormorant with his parents. On February 22, 1908, he was married to Amanda Johnson; five children were born to them. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1893, being ordained a teacher in 1894 and an elder in 1896. He also took an active part in community affairs. He served on the school board for thirty years, was a member of the town board, and, at the time of his passing, was one of the directors for the Lake Park and Cuba Fire Insurance Company.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Enoch, a master sergeant stationed in London, England; and Robert of Lake Park, Minnesota; three daughters: Mrs. Archie Peterson, Audubon, Minnesota; Mrs. Lloyd Peterson and Althea Erickson of Lake Park; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the home on June 1; Elder Charles Young and C. R. Rotzien of Fargo, North Dakota, officiating. Interment was in Strandwich Cemetery.

BROWN.—Joseph M., was born June 16, 1879, in Ontario, Canada, and died June 3, 1947, at Mt. Ayr, Iowa, where he had resided for the past forty-five years. He was married to Pearl Stanley in 1902. A member of the Reorganized Church, he held the office of priest. Although in poor health for a long period of time, he bore his illness with patience and Christian fortitude.

Besides his wife, he leaves seven sons: J. Eugene, Los Angeles, California; Arlis W., Carlisle, Iowa; Harmon W., Glendale, California; Hale O., Burbank, California; J. Daniel, Pasadena, California; Wade D. and Dr. Addison Brown, Des Moines, Iowa; four sisters: Mrs. Eliza Lane, Tingley, Iowa; Mrs. Susan Franks, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Mrs. Addie Johnson, Lamoni, Iowa; and Mrs. Viola Sharp, Blythedale, Missouri; two brothers: Israel and Ephraim, Independence, Missouri; and eleven grandchildren. Services were conducted at the Lilly Funeral Home in Des Moines on June 6 and at the graveside in Lamoni by Elders F. T. Mussell and F. A. Fry.

NAFUS.—Carolyn, daughter of August and Sarah Deller, was born at Ironton, Ohio, on December 30, 1873, and passed away at her home in El Dorado Springs, Missouri, on March 29, 1947. She moved with her parents to Missouri and spent her girlhood at Rich Hill. On July 20, 1896, she was married to James C. Nafus, who preceded her in death on March 2, 1932. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a child and was a charter member of Rich Hill Branch. She was one of the first women in the state to obtain an embalmer's license, and was the first woman coroner in Missouri. Following the death of her husband, she continued to operate their funeral home in El Dorado. She was a member of the Eastern Star, Royal Neighbors, and American Legion Auxiliary.

Surviving are her daughter, Mrs. Alice Allen, Independence, Missouri; her son, George W. Nafus, El Dorado Springs; two grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; four sisters, and four brothers. Funeral services were held at the Christian Church, Elder William Patterson and the Reverend R. A. Bialock officiating. Burial was at Rich Hill.

HALL.—Earl Frank, son of William D. and Tryphena Hall, was born in Shenandoah, Iowa, on January 1, 1880, and died at the Lutheran Hospital in Des Moines, Iowa, on June 2, 1947. In 1892, he moved with his family to Creston, Iowa, remaining there until he was eighteen when he made his home in Des Moines. Here he was baptized into the Reorganized Church and married to Winnie Newlan. After his marriage, he and his wife went to Lamoni, Iowa, where he was employed for fifteen years by the Herald Publishing House. He was called to the priesthood in 1906 and served in the mission field for a year. In 1910, a son, Robert David, was born. After the death of his wife, Winnie, he was married to Amy Lysinger; a son, E. Weston, was born to this union. In 1921, they moved to Des Moines where Mr. Hall was employed by Chamberlain's Laboratory.

He is survived by his wife, Amy; two sons: Robert and Weston; and two brothers, George B. of Creston and Robert E. of Des Moines.

THE ESSENCE OF EVANGELISM

By John W. Rushton

The Merciful Art

Nursing is an art—and if it be made an art, requires as exclusive a devotion, as hard a preparation as any painter's work, for what is the training to do with dead canvas or cold marble compared with having to do with the living body—the temple of God's Spirit. Nursing is an art which concerns every family in the world.

—FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

P. S.

* A Need for Nurses

The nation is facing a critical period in a shortage of nurses. Readjustments, following wartime employment have left hospitals understaffed. An effort is necessary to recruit able young women to take training in the schools of nursing.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is doing its part in this national effort. Two pages of this issue are devoted to the recruiting of students for the School of Nursing conducted by the Sanitarium. All young women should read the two pages, "Dedication," and "Skilled Hands."

Excellent opportunities for young women are afforded in the School of Nursing of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Fine church and social privileges are to be had in this city for young women who come here from a distance.

Hard times may come. Employment may drop off. The present conditions, so abnormally favorable to the worker, cannot last long—at least not forever. But nursing is a profession that provides long-time security. Its economic rewards are high and steady over a long course of time. The work is hard, but many young women find good health, satisfaction, fine contacts, and reward in it.

* Meetings

Once upon a time there was a nice little church. It had a nice little pastor, an earnest, good, hard-working, kindly man. And, in the course of time, along came a problem that was not particularly nice, nor did it seem very little.

The pastor organized a new meeting to solve the problem, a meeting which took the people out of their homes one more night in the week. They solved the problem, but the pastor liked the meeting so well that he kept it going. Then a new problem appeared, and there was a new meeting. And another. And another. Etc. The answer to everything was a meeting. And no meeting was ever allowed to die. The people might die. Fatigue, old age, apathy, and general weariness might take their toll. But the meetings went on.

Finally the people began to be very tired, and a slow spirit of resentment and disinterest set in. They slacked in their attendance. Some of them just quit coming.

The pastor was grieved. What did they want? Hadn't he organized all those nice meetings for them? He thought they were lacking in faith and appreciation.

By and by, there was an election, and the people voted for a new man. So our nice little pastor found another church. And just as he had done before, he began by organizing some nice new meetings for them.

* Wrong Label

This happened in the family of Meredith Mader. The mother, Josephine Crinklaw Mader, is well known as concert artist, oratorio soloist, and vocal teacher.

A visitor was admiring the youngest Mader, who looked very attractive in her crib.

"Hello, Butch," the visitor said, while going through the coochie-coochie routine.

Little sister Phyllis, aged four, was disturbed. "That isn't a Butch," she announced firmly. "It's a Toots!"

* Practice

Being a good Christian requires something more than the seat of your trousers. You cannot build the kingdom of God by "just sitting it out" for a number of years. It requires the planning of the head and the work of the hands as well as the devotion of the heart. You must get up and do something about your faith.

A Mother's Thought

In a little room we fixed for you,
A room all blue and white—
I tucked you in your baby bed
Then kissed you, son, goodnight.

As I stood looking down on you
Snuggled safe within your covers,
I felt a tugging at my heart
As I thought of other mothers.

Mothers in another land
Where skies are over-run
With planes that any minute
Might destroy a mother's son.

I said a silent prayer for them—
I made no stipulation,
For regardless of their race or creed
Each one is God's creation.

Though wars are raging, race hates race
And men kill one another—
In every land—no matter which
A woman's first a mother.

If wars or peace depended on
The mothers—wars would cease
Then a mother's dreams would all come true

In a Universe of Peace.

Elevate Our Marriage Standards

AT THE ROOT of all Zionic endeavor is improvement of our home life. Responsibility in this field lies with both priesthood and members. It involves obligations in which every member of the church has a share. As these obligations are successfully met, every aspect of our common life is enriched.

Successful marriages reflect the whole life of the participants. These marriages are not built on advanced education, or adequate finances, or good jobs, or careful sex adjustments in the sense that any or all of these guarantee marital stability and endurance. They are built on the mutual love of high principled and disciplined and courageous men and women; persons of industry and thrift and patience and sympathy, warmed by tolerance and good humor. The best marriage partner is a truly good man or woman; not a sanctimonious person, but one who lives honestly and affirmatively and zestfully.

Marriage is a life partnership. A relationship of such far-reaching significance should not be entered into lightly or hastily, but should be approached seriously and with frank regard for all the factors involved. Physical attraction is important. But of much more fundamental importance are such things as common ideals and interests, demonstrated ability to get along with people, industry, sobriety, and compassion. Possession of such qualities as these can only be verified in experience together, and this takes time.

Preparation for marriage begins with life itself. Nevertheless, specific preparation for such an important phase of life is manifestly wise. The period of engagement is part of this preparation. Obviously this should not be a period of suspicious or even doubtful inquiry, since it is based on avowed affection and a tentative agreement to marry, but it is nevertheless a time of open, mutual assessment of the wisdom of the marriage. It should be long enough to fulfill its purpose, but not so long as to lose its piquancy.

Much has been said and written concerning marriage counseling. Such counseling is very desirable if the counselor is wise and sympathetic and informed, and if he knows what not to say as well as what to say. But the ability to give wise guidance to young people who are contemplating marriage cannot be acquired by reading a few books. Such counseling involves ministry of the highest order. No minister should lightly assume that his own abilities are adequate to such an important task. And, specifically, no minister having only a lay understanding of the physical and psychological factors involved should presume to advise young people concerning the sexual factors in the marriage situation. Much more frequently than some of us realize, the best ministry that a young pastor can give to engaged couples under his charge is to see that the informed advice of a good doctor or of an older and more experienced minister is made available to them. The seriousness of marriage counseling should not make the inexperienced pastor shirk his obligations, but it should make him very careful to marshal for the task the best resources that are available.

Marriages should be solemnized with dignity. This means that commercialized or "stunt" weddings should not be countenanced under any circumstances. Civil marriages, though legally acceptable, recognize only the civil significance of the compact and by their very nature tend to minimize the spiritual values involved. God is a major partner in every true marriage, and should be accorded his rightful place from the beginning.

There is good reason for the admonition of the Doctrine and Covenants that members of the church seek their life companions within the fellowship of the faith. The "gospel bonds" about which our fathers wrote with such deep joy, can do much to make a marriage a truly indissoluble union and, on the other hand, the strain of following diverse convictions can do much to hamper the achievement of such a union. But, unfortunately, opportunities for our young people to meet other young people of like faith are not always readily available. This is one of many sound reasons for the gathering. And, while so many of us are yet scattered abroad, here is sound reason for providing frequent opportunities for our young people to meet each other at conferences and reunions and at college. It is a little late for a pastor to tell one of his flock that she is "considered weak in the faith" because she has become engaged to one not yet enrolled with the church, when that pastor has done nothing to see that her circle of friends within the church was wide enough to permit her some range of choice.

The church is deeply concerned in creating constantly higher marriage standards. This goal will not be reached in a moment. But such elevated standards can become characteristic of the Saints if we will give them careful and persistent and intelligent attention.

F. H. E.

Heckler, to Hyde Park soap box orator, "Christianity has been in the world for two thousand years, and look at the state of the world!" "Yes," replied the orator, "and water has been in the world for two million years, and look at the state of your face!"—Leslie D. Weatherhead in This Is the Victory, p. 242.

History of Council Bluffs

(When this branch on May 18, last, celebrated its eighty-fifth anniversary, Elder V. D. Ruch, pastor, read the following history of the work there.—I. A. S.)

At the general conference of the church held at Amboy, Illinois, in August, 1859, Elders W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs were sent out as missionaries. In June, 1860, they came to the hills and vales of western Iowa for the purpose of looking up the lost sheep of the house of Israel who had been scattered by the persecution at Nauvoo. They found a few who had adhered to the faith as it had been committed to them under the administration of Joseph Smith, the Seer.

Those in the vicinity of Council Bluffs were visited by these missionaries from time to time, and under their ministry they renewed their covenant which they had made with God when they united with the church. On May 18, 1862, a branch of eight members was organized by Elder Charles Derry. The membership included three elders, namely: Thomas Revell, John Clark, and Hans Hansen; one teacher, namely: James Stuart; and four other members: Elizabeth Revell, Margaret Stuart, Rachel Clark, and Hans S. Michelson. The first president or pastor of the branch was Thomas Revell, a man of English birth who commanded the respect and confidence of the community. The branch has had a continuous existence since that small beginning 85 years ago today (May 18, 1947).

During that period of time it has had 25 pastors, as follows: Thomas Revell, John Clark, James M. Judkins, Hugh Lytle, Henry Kemp, James Caffall, Calvin A. Beebe, Robert McKinzie, Lewis Davis, Sentulam Butler, T. W. Williams, William Gess, John S. Strain, A. J. Davidson, Sam Harding, F. M. Cooper, B. S. Lambkin, Orman Salisbury, H. H. Hand, George Beaty, Ray Whiting, Frank McDonald, Glaude Smith, Chas. F. Putnam, and V. D. Ruch. Eight of these pastors are still living, as follows: B. S. Lambkin, in Michigan; Orman Salisbury at St. Joseph, Missouri; Ray Whiting and Glaude Smith at Independence, Missouri; Frank McDonald at St. Louis, Missouri; H. H. Hand, Chas. F. Putnam, and V. D. Ruch in Council Bluffs. Having had 25 pastors in 85 years, the average time served by each is a little less than three and one half years. Perhaps the longest period served by any of the pastors was that by Ray Whiting which was a little more than eight years, from January 24, 1928, to April, 1936. Some of the pastors served just a few months.

For the first few years after the organization of the branch, the Saints met in the home of the teacher, James Stuart, a two-room cottage on Pierce Street between Park Avenue and First Street. In 1867, the meeting place was transferred from the home of Brother Stuart to a room in the Phoenix Block, corner of Broadway and First Street. Then in 1868 Brother C. A. Beebe erected a house on Pierce Street between Glen and Park Avenues. It was a story and a half house. The upper room was placed at the free service of the branch.

After holding meetings in private homes and rented halls for six and one half years, the branch, in a called meeting on November 4, 1868, decided to secure a lot and build a house of worship. A committee was appointed to secure subscriptions to that end. One of the first to contribute was a spiritualist by the name of William Smith who had a saw-mill in the southern part of the city. He gave one thousand feet of cottonwood lumber, much of which is still in the present building.

On January 1, 1869, the Saints gave a tea party at which they cleared $59.25. This entertainment consisted of a supper and a musical and literary program. Later they succeeded in raising $300. They bought the lot on Pierce Street, west of Glen Avenue, for $500. That lot is our present location. In early spring they succeeded in putting up a frame building 24 by 50 feet, the lot and building costing $1,640. It was a very plain structure even for those times, but it was a home for the local church, and the membership was grateful. Though not fully out of debt, the church was dedicated on June 20, 1869, by Elders Alexander H. Smith and David H. Smith. A deed for the property was at once sent to Bishop Israel L. Rogers. The branch at that time numbered 93 members.

In April, 1899, twenty years after it was built, the church was remodeled at considerable expense. The ceiling was raised, new windows of the Gothic type, chair and pulpit platform with an alcove for the chair back of the pulpit, and a baptismal font under the platform; also a vestibule at the main entrance. The cost of these improvements was never made a matter of record. In 1913 the church was again remodeled and enlarged at an expense of $6,000. That is the church in which we meet today, 34 years later. During the summer of 1946 the branch purchased a new lot at the corner of First Avenue and South Sixth Street on which it is contemplated in due time to build a larger and better church to meet the growing needs of the branch. It is estimated that the new church will cost at least $100,000.

Our first Sunday school in Council Bluffs was organized on December 23, 1866, with 22 scholars and Elder Lewis Davis as superintendent. He was succeeded by James Caffall, Robert McKenzie, J. Charles Jensen, C. A. Beebe, J. F. McDowell, A. C. Riley, A. E. Dempsey, Sr., T. W. Williams, Julia A. Hansen, and others. In a letter to the Saints' Herald, February 1, 1868, a Brother C——, of Council Bluffs, commends the Sunday school of that city. The Sunday school was a new institution in the Pottawattamie District, and met with much opposition both active and passive. It was called a sectarian institution. Elders and members considered it beneath their dignity to engage in the work, so it was difficult to find teachers for the few classes they had. The record shows that Brother A. E. Dempsey, Sr., was quite active in Sunday school work both locally and in the district. As a coincidence, his son, A. E. Dempsey, Jr., is the present church school director.

The local Zion's Religio-Literary Association was organized in the spring of 1893 with G. J. Harding president. He was succeeded by T. W. Williams on September 4, the same year. The society, at its organization, consisted of 34 members.

In 1913 missions were opened in the western part of the city known as Riverside, Belmont, and Orchard Height. They were conducted by local brethren. In 1922 a church building was erected to house the Riverside mission. The lot and building at Belmont had been purchased some time earlier. The Orchard Heights mission occupied a country schoolhouse, located some miles north of the city. These missions were all later discontinued and the buildings sold.

It is interesting to note that, according to the history, the following people have served as branch clerk: John Clark, Benj. Allen, A. W. Sanders, David Chambers, Jr., Frederick Hansen, J. Charles Jensen, C. P. Jensen, Peter Andersen, A. C. Riley, James D. Stuart, T. J. Smith, J. C. Dempsey, S. C. Jacobsen, J. J. Hartnett, Evelyn Vallier, Irene Turpin, and Ada S. Putnam.

The branch has had the honor of several of its members serving under general church appointment. In 1866 two of the brethren, John W. Lewis and Thomas Revell, were sent to England to represent the church. In April, 1873, Elder James Caffall was called to the office of apostle. He was Sunday school superintendent at the time of this call and resigned that office on October 8, 1873, to enter the mission field. The following year he was appointed in charge of the European mission with headquarters in England, where he spent three years. The record shows that 20 years later he returned to England in 1894 and spent three more years, returning to his home in Council Bluffs on September 4, 1897. P. M. Hanson, dur-

The Essence of EVANGELISM

INSTINCTIVELY, IT would seem that men have accepted this familiar saying as the kernel of evangelical truth. The love of God is the dynamic principle of all his activities concerning man. Jesus Christ is the token and expression of that love. Anything different must be spurious and ineffective.

Man's part in this tripartite process is fidelity and loyalty to him in obedience and service. The resultant is salvation. To be saved means nothing less than living in harmony with the truth revealed in Jesus Christ. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3. Willing, purposive unity with what we know to be the will of God is the necessary discipline by which each one can secure salvation.

What we call "theology," we understand is the nature and the purpose of God. It is well said, "The end of all theology is a true concept of God." In the sacraments of baptism, the laying on of hands, the Holy Communion, etc., we share ourselves with God and elevate life and its work to the level of worship, and thus glorify our Father in heaven.

Ethically, our conduct is brought into accord with the will of God "in which is our peace" by making Jesus Christ the standard of our personal conduct. Through our church membership, we become part of the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. And there is extended through such fellowship the ministry of the incarnation of God in Christ Jesus. God in Christ, Christ in us, the hope of glory. All of which implies that when we speak of heaven, we think

A Personal Testimony to Youth

God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—
John 3: 16.

By John W. Rushton

of this experience of unity with the will and purpose of God. This is the end to which religious experience must lead us. Consequently, it is not enough to give verbal testimony, important as it is to "speak his word," but the word must be vitalized by the life and character of the disciple.

Upon these elementary teachings of Jesus Christ, our evangel must be established. Jesus Christ reveals God to us in terms of truth, goodness, and beauty, and these spiritual values he has translated into human expressions of helpful, even sacrificial services according to which God will evaluate the worth of each life. Our Lord summed up the meaning of his evangel in the familiar saying, "The whole duty of man is in the love of the whole man—body, mind, and spirit for God expressed in a love of one's fellow man." So the validity of a man's religion is declared in terms of human as well as divine relationships.

LIFE IS relationship whether human or divine. Man's highest good is realized when he makes himself capable of the best service to the greatest number. His destiny in eternity derives from his disciplining himself in harmony with the will of God as revealed in nature, human experience, and finally in Jesus Christ who is "God manifest in flesh."

The same principle is discerned in science, morals, and spiritual experience which may be stated as follows: To be out of harmony with the nature of things, we may be morally certain we are out of harmony with God. This dissonance with God makes Hell, and to establish harmony with him is heaven to the soul.

To be effective evangelists and missionaries, it is clear that just as Christ is his Christianity, so each of us must authenticate the message we proclaim. Consequently our great need today is not more but better Christian men and women through, and in whom, the light of the life of Christ is shining. Such lives will be potent for good, and attractive in their drawing power. Whichever field of human endeavor we consider, we may conclude once again that Jesus has the key to effective evangelism when he said, "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me."

We Must Keep the Financial Law

By ORLIN CROWNOVER

If the kingdom of God is to be built on the earth at the present time, it must be through obedience to certain well-defined laws. One of these, and one of the most important, is the financial law of the church. We believe that this law must be kept scrupulously. While observance of and compliance with this law is not compulsory, members feel a definite obligation to keep it. We believe that the growth of the kingdom on the earth is in direct proportion to the faithfulness with which the members of the church adhere to the teachings of the financial law. We know, too, that failure to observe and practice the financial law will result in the death of Christ's church and the failure of his people to build his kingdom.

Compliance with the financial law is not a test of membership. We do not think that compulsory observance would do either the member or the church any good. While the church has certain ends to achieve which cannot be realized without money, it is more interested, by far, in the spiritual life of the individual than it is in any material gain. We can quickly see that money spent for anything to which people are not devoted, will, in the final analysis, go for naught. Only when there is a willingness to observe the law will the gospel of the kingdom be effective; and only when voluntary adherence is the keynote of the law, will the spires of Zion reach heavenward.

Observance of the financial law should begin as soon as we are conscious of our responsibility to obey the gospel of Christ. It may precede baptism into the church, or if not, it should immediately follow. Compliance with the law indicates as few things can, the sincerity of one's repentance and desire to obey the whole law of Christ. If one understands his relationship with God, he will not hesitate in complying. We must recognize God as the supreme and sole owner of the universe, and consequently of all things therein. Since he is the owner of all things, he is the giver of all we possess and enjoy. It is impossible to use or think of anything without tracing ownership to him. The other requisite in our relationship with God is that we shall recognize ourselves as trustees or stewards. We are held accountable for the way in which the things he has given us are managed. All that God asks is that we shall be wise and profitable stewards, and return unto him a small amount of that which he has given us.

The one who does not comply with the financial law is selfish. The Heavenly Father placed us on earth that we might share with each other. It should be incumbent on him to whom much has been given, that he share with those who have less. He should realize, too, that someone paid the price in money, time, labor, and devotion, that he might hear and accept the gospel. Then it will dawn upon him that his small contribution will help some other soul to hear the gospel, and thus help to fulfill the purpose of the gospel. Not only will such men feel in their hearts that they have tried to do their part, but they will have begun to earn for themselves the rewards that God has for those who diligently serve him.

The church member begins to comply with the financial law by filing an inventory. An inventory is an itemized statement of one's property or possessions. It sets forth one's net worth, assets and liabilities.

The second obligation in keeping the law is in the payment of tithes. The first tithe to be paid is one tenth of the net worth as shown on the inventory. Thereafter, the law says that the individual should pay one tenth of his increase annually. This is at variance with the belief held by some churches that one should pay one tenth of his income. The Bible says, however, that we should pay tithing on the increase, as instructed in Deuteronomy 14: 22. Income and increase have two vastly different meanings. The payment of one tenth of income would not hurt most people, but it would hurt some people very much. We can readily see that a person making $300.00 a month could pay $30.00 a month tithing without any great hardship; but we also know that if an aged widow received only $20.00 a month, and all of that money was needed for actual living expenses, it would work an extreme hardship on her to require her to pay $2.00 tithing. Our interpretation of the law is that everyone is entitled to a decent living, and if there is no money left when actual food, clothing, and shelter costs have been met, then the individual owes no tithing. To expect tithing from one who has no increase is not only a false interpretation of the law, but it is grossly unfair. Only he who has an increase must pay tithing, and he is obligated to pay one tenth of that increase. God, being a just Father, has never expected anything from his children which would deprive them of the necessities of life, and likewise he is not unreasonable in what he expects us to pay in tithes. The main purpose for which tithing is used is to support the families of missionaries and general church workers. Thus we can see that it is extremely important that tithes be paid continuously that the gospel be preached in all the earth.

The next step in compliance with the financial law is the payment of surplus. A surplus exists when one has accumulated more money and property than that for which he has need, even for reasonable security. The nine tenths that are left out of the increase when the tithing has been paid, technically belongs to the individual, but the consecrated steward who has more than he needs will want to give part of that to the work of building the kingdom. Here again the refining influence of the gospel will be manifest; when those motivated by this righteous impulse will want to give part of their earnings for the promulgation of the gospel.

After the surplus has been paid, offerings may be given. We usually think of offerings as being associated with sacrifice, and we can understand that one cannot give through sacrifice until he has first given of his surplus. Offerings are given from one's reserves or from one's own necessities. An offering is usually a test of one's loyalty and devotion to the church and to the gospel of Christ. They are given from those who are intimately sharing in the Master's work, and oftentimes represent considerable self-denial. An offering is usually symbolic of one's consecration to the work of building the kingdom, and only through offerings can the ultimate purposes of the kingdom be realized. This does not mean so much that the money paid in offerings will be required in building the kingdom, while that is extremely important; but it means that those who give sacrificial offerings will have distinguished themselves as being worthy for participation in the building of that kingdom.

Besides the steps we have outlined in the compliance with the financial law, there is one more which may be observed, and that is the consecration of money or property to the church. These are made as outright gifts, and may be given with or without statements as to how they are to be used. They may be given during one's lifetime, or left in his will. Through these consecrations, the cause of Zion shall be greatly aided. If a few thousand people were to consecrate a part of their possessions to the church, it would be immeasurably strengthened.

In a brief summary, let us say that one complies with the financial law as given in the Scriptures by filing his inventory, paying his tithes, paying his surplus, making offerings, set-

To Jim on His Twenty-First Birthday

By a Mother

Today Jim was twenty-one, and my mind goes back over the years, remembering. Remembering when I first held that little bundle in my arms and looking across at my mother said, "Why, I love him."

Jim, a few months old patting my shoulder as I sang him to sleep. Jim, three and one-half years old, walking backwards with his outstretched hands full of toy cars and saying, "Come on little brother, take another step." Jim staggering half asleep out to the school bus, and my watching fearfully lest the big boys be unkind to him.

Jim as a Boy Scout with his coltish legs in wrapped leggings and his big shoes sticking out below. Jim, older now, and calling in a new deep voice as he banged into the house after school. Jim, proudly holding his new baby brother and tenderly watching over each new development of his babyhood.

Jim, determined to learn to drive, and my being over-solicitous, but Dad understanding and saying, "Here, son, take the car and get some ice for the ice cream." Sissy, loyally taking her place by his side as he drove away.

Jim, with his slight blush and broad grin, quietly answering when Dad asked, "Who was the girl you sat with in church this morning?" Jim, graduating from high school, and all of us in the balcony craning our necks and trying to pick him out of the three hundred caps and gowns filing down the aisle.

Jim and his first man's job. Mother's Day and an envelope with "To Mother" in bold handwriting across the front. Inside, five dollars and a note saying, "For you to get something selfish with."

Jim, going away to war. I gave him up as surely as any mother whose son went away and never came back—only Jim was back the next day, disappointed and a little angry because the draft board had made a mistake.

Jim, with his patriarchal blessing, wondering why steadfastness and goodness were recognized as his attributes. I knew these things were true and thanked God for them.

Jim, breezing off to college after two years of war work. How I missed him those first few weeks away from home!

Jim, you were a good boy, a fine son—now you are a man. Some day, God willing, you will be a wise and loving father.

ting aside consecrations whenever possible and desired, and by making an annual financial statement. We believe that if one is to recognize his stewardship and his indebtedness to the Master, he will comply with the law in entirety, remembering that everything comes from God.

The financial law, as well as all the laws of God, is founded upon justice, equity, and righteousness. It is God's law governing the manner in which the income of the church is to be obtained, the purposes for which it is to be used, and the channels through which expenditures are to be made. Since the law is, above all, fair and equitable, there is no reason why anyone should neglect observing it. We know that rich blessings always attend those who willingly choose to keep the laws of God in their fullness, and we have every reason to believe that the same attendant blessings will be for those who comply with the financial law of the church. As we said before, except the financial law shall be understood and kept, Zion shall never be complete, and the kingdom of God shall never be built. Let us, then, seek to know and practice the teachings of the Scriptures; that as we pray, "Thy kingdom come," we shall be assisting God to answer our prayer.

Dedication

A Tribute to the Nurse

YOU were a slave in Homer's time, and washing the feet of a wandering beggar who sat in the hall of Odysseus, you were the first to recognize the returned master by his scars when his own wife doubted You were a cloistered nun in the Hotel-Dieu of Paris, walking for centuries through endless corridors, serving countless patients for Christ's sake You were a pauper in London town, heavy and filthy and drunken, and in the absence of other employment you became an asylum nurse, but as you could not read, you asked the lunatics to decipher the labels on the medicine bottles In the lost abyss of Scutari, you were the Lady-with-the-Lamp, and with the background of a vast cemetery for statistics, your pity and your passion created Modern Nursing You were a modern girl, and you became a trained nurse for humanity's sake In the zero hour of Democracy, you landed with the American troops, and giving sulfa drugs and plasma under fire, you died on the beachhead of Anzio Now the war is over, and peace has come again, but Mother Earth, sick and hungry and tired, awaits your healing hands. . . .

Skilled Hands

Even the most casual reader of current publications knows that there is an alarming shortage of Registered Nurses. Many opinions about the causes for this condition are advanced by members of the medical, nursing, hospital administration, and journalistic professions. But whatever the reasons, one startling question leaps out; it is a question of life-and-death importance to you: WHO WILL NURSE YOU OR YOUR LOVED ONES WHEN SERIOUS ILLNESS STRIKES?

Think that over!

"But what can I do about it?" you are probably asking. You can do two things right now.

1. Familiarize yourself with nursing education: what it costs, where to get it, length of training, the eligibility requirements, the economic and social aspects of nursing. A post card addressed to Miss Nelle Morgan, R.N., Director of Nurses, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Independence, Missouri, requesting the Nursing Packet, will bring you this information. When it comes, study it.

Photos by Iris Palmer

These skilled hands belong to Edith Davey, R.N., B.S., Instructor in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing.

2. Make it your business to channel the vocational interest of some young woman, whom you know well, into entering the nursing profession by way of a basic, three-year nursing course climaxed by the acquisition of the legal title: Registered Nurse. Put the Nursing Packet into her hands.

Unless the national need for the enrollment of 45,000 nursing students is met within the next year, you may, from your hospital bed, ring in vain for the wearer of a white cap—a nurse with knowing hands.

The Sanitarium school of nursing has facilities for educating a class of forty students each year. Additional enrollments up to twenty-nine are needed for the September class.

The next move is yours. Mail that post card TODAY.

The Redemption of the Land

Number 33 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:

"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

By J. A. Koehler

Where would you live if there were no place to live—no earth? Where would you get food with which to sustain life, if there were no earth? For all anyone knows, you would not live at all. You could not live. You would not even have come into being, for you were formed of "the dust of the ground." That means that if there were no "dust of the ground" there would be no "you."

So "in the beginning," in the very "beginning," "God created . . . the earth." Before he made man, he made a place for man to live; he provided the physical basis of human life. Not the basis of the life of the body, only; but the life of the soul, too. As the modern prophet put it, before God created man, he created the earth "for the benefit and use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart"; both to nourish the body "and to enliven the soul."

For which man did God create the earth? For the Englishman? For the white man? No, not for this or that man, nor for this or that people, but simply for "man." For the last man that is to be born as well as the first man that came into being. "The earth is the Lord's," said the Psalmist. And unless we say what is not true when we say "Our Father, which art in heaven," unless we misstate the facts when we say "God is no respecter of persons," and all such like, God made his earth for the use of every person and every people that is or ever shall be.

We say that God said, "Thou shalt not kill." Thou shalt not destroy human life. For man has in himself a right to life. Now if there is for man, in the very nature of things or, if you prefer, by the decree of The Almighty One, the right to life, then there is for that very reason the right to the means of life. For the right to life without the means of sustaining life is actually not a right at all. So that when we treat intelligently of man's relations to the earth, we treat from necessity of man's rights to possession and use of the earth.

Speaking of the things which God has made—of the earth and the things which come naturally of it—the modern prophet said, "It is not given [it is not "right," that is] that one man should possess that which is above another." It is wrong to exercise dominion so that some have the advantage of others in this matter of possessing and using the earth for the purpose of promoting life. All persons and peoples should have equal claim on the wealth which came and still comes into existence by an "act of God"—equal claims, that is, for the purposes for which that wealth exists.

If, from beginning to end, man had replenished the earth in proper ways, each and every people would have come into exclusive possession on a basis of equality, of a land area for use in satisfying its wants, or for use in promoting its own well-being by its own industry, etc. And if each people had exercised territorial jurisdiction as we believe The Almighty intended they should have done, each and every person would have come into his right of inheritance in the earth. Which right, according to the modern prophet, is a guaranteed right of exclusive possession and use of land in accordance with the individual's circumstances or his function in the life of his people. Or, to quote the prophet verbatim, each individual would have "equal claim on the properties [I believe that means the economic resources of the people or community] for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants, and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just . . ."

But that is not the land situation. The race—which does not appear to be a real "human family"—does not honor the rights of peoples. And peoples in turn do not honor the rights of persons.

Surely it is not necessary to retell the story of the manner in which, from the beginning of time, man replenished the earth. For you should know the story of the migrations of peoples, of the land-grabbing of the centuries, of the rise and spread of imperialism, of the conquests and servitudes of peoples and all such like. You should know how even religious authorities decreed without reason that all the land of unknown extent on one side of an arbitrarily drawn imaginary line should be the property of so and so, and the land on the other side the property of another so and so. Merely to mention that the replenishing of the earth did not take place in manner to honor the equal rights of all persons and peoples to land areas for possession and use in satisfying their wants, is enough for our present purpose.

Is that important? Does it have anything to do with the political liberty of the peoples of Europe today? The news which has been reaching our ears especially since V-Day, witnesses that it is very highly important. It is a crucial question; so crucial that there will be no real peace until the demands of some nations that other nations shall give up some of their lands, and all such like, are satisfied. And if the testimony of history is true, even then there will not be peace, unless, in the redistribution of land, persons as well as peoples come into their rightful inheritances.

Every economic theory, every real social philosophy, treats primarily of rights in land. The most primary question in the civil code which Moses gave Israel is the land question. "I will give" to Abraham's seed, to the people of Israel, "the land of Canaan," is said to be a promise of The Almighty. Even religion must have a thought about "thy neighbor's landmark." And because industry is a primary affair of all peoples, because there can be no economy which is not concerned with man's right in land, the social philosophy of the modern prophet is shot through with measures which have to do with "the redemption of the land," "the land of Zion."

I explained, in a former article, that Zion is "a cause"; it is a great religious enterprise grounded in moral considerations, or in ethics. In the thinking of the modern prophet, the redemption of the land is at bottom a recovering of the right which the people of Zion, in common with all other peoples may claim in land.

The redemption of the land means, simply, to restore it to its right relations to peoples and to persons—first to peoples and second to persons. For only as peoples come into their rights in land can persons come into their rights of inheritance; for only peoples can honor the rights of persons.

The first step in Restoration's land-redeeming program is to gather together the moneys of the people so that the people as such, not individuals severally may come into possession of the land upon which its Zion is to be built.

The second step is to "appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs," and to make this right of inheritance secure by legal or lawful measures.

The third step—which is in truth a part of the second—is to make appointments of stewardships, or to entrust lands to persons for the purpose of gaining a livelihood, or for the purpose of performing their several functions in the economic life of the people, or the community.

The next step in Restoration's land-redemption has to do with the socialization of wealth produced by individuals which is in excess of their personal needs and just wants, so that the land with its products may become a means of real social security, a means of improving the condition of all the persons who form the community, and a means of advancing the cause—which, as is implied in what we have said, may be advanced only as the land is possessed in accordance with "the law of consecration" of the land to "the cause."

That is redeeming land, not by force, or "by blood," but by peaceful means. That is cutting "a stone" out of a "mountain," or establishing a government within a government, as the Prophet Daniel said it shall be done "without hands."

Now that is not the whole story of the redemption of the land of Zion, which the social philosophy of the modern prophet anticipates and contemplates. But it should give a rough idea of what we mean by "the redemption of the land."

As a concluding thought, the methods of land-redemption advocated by the modern prophet for application by his people—whose relation to the state is that of an associational group—can hardly be the methods by which the land is to be redeemed by all peoples, throughout all the world, by the human race or family. But these methods do represent what land redemption consists in. The essence of that redemption is to set peoples in right relations to land, so that they may honor the rights of persons. It is to honor the right of each people to exclusive possession of land and of internal self-determination in its uses of that land; and the right of each person—the last person that is to be born as well as the first—his right of individual inheritance in the land. The redemption of the land is a foundation stone in the social philosophy of the modern prophet.

History of Council Bluffs

ing his childhood, went to school in Council Bluffs and was a member of this branch. Other brethren from the branch who have been under appointment are Chas. F. Putnam, Peter T. Andersen, and others. Seventy R. E. Davey, whose present membership is in Council Bluffs, was called to the office of apostle at the recent General Conference. Our young brother, James C. Reneau, who is attending Grace-land College, received an appointment as a missionary at the recent conference, and will enter the mission field in June at the close of the school year.

At one period in the history of the branch, services in the Danish language were held on Sunday afternoons by Elders Hans Petersen and J. J. Christensen for the benefit of the many Scandinavian members.

The present membership of the branch is 1,190. Of this number, 39 hold the priesthood, as follows: one apostle, three high priests, eleven elders, eleven priests, eight teachers, and deacons. It is believed that the branch will continue to grow and that a great work is yet to be done in this place.

Gomer R. Wells

Brother Gomer R. Wells, veteran missionary, who is now giving his time to the guide work at the Auditorium, will celebrate his eightieth birthday on July 10. Anticipating this event, a member in Australia has written a letter of appreciation. Brother Wells made two trips to Australia and spent fifteen years there in missionary work. We quote an extract of the letter from Sister Ruth (Waller) Henricks, 22 College Street, Drummoyne, N. S. W.)

Quite recently Paul (my son) asked me, "About how old would Brother Wells be now? I'd love to see him." A day or so after, I remembered a long disused birthday book, and there was your name—July 10, 1867. The House of Henricks congratulates you! Your name is very familiar to each member of this family. . . . My husband never failed to remember you. To you he owed his conversion to the faith. It was through your influence indirectly that we have the fine pipe organ in the Balmain church. I also feel that I owe much to you for my development in the gospel. When you brought us the Gospel Quarterlies you opened up a new world for the children of my generation. You will always be loved by the people of Australia. . . . You were the first editor of The Gospel Standard, and what a new world it meant was known only to those who could remember when there was no such paper.

Our Neighbors Evangelize

By F. M. McDOWELL

This paper was prepared for the annual Religious Education Association and was published in the July-August edition of "Religious Education." Quotations are printed by permission of the editor.

The July-August issue of Religious Education contains an article entitled, "New Evangelistic Movements and Religious Education," by Frank M. McKibben, Northwestern University, which, we believe, merits the critical attention of our people.

In this article, Dr. McKibben cites many evidences of what he calls a "resurgence of evangelistic expression in Protestant circles." He briefly reviews such movements as the "Youth for Christ" and the "Child Evangelism Fellowship,"¹ but gives his major attention to the "rather extended development and spread of fundamentalist and ultra conservative sects across the country in recent years."

Dr. McKibben frankly confesses the concern of the "regular religious bodies" over these developments, concern that these sects shall:

1. Become strongly competing groups to the older and established churches.
2. Bring religion in general into disrepute.
3. Actually be found ministering to people in ways which the regular churches seem to fail to provide.

Something of the rapidity of growth of these "New Evangelistic Movements" is indicated by the following figures:

GROWTH IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP* (1926-1943-44)

Church of God—
Saints of God (colored)	450%
Assemblies of God	374%
Church of Nazarene	194%
Pentecostal Holiness	207%
Salvation Army	178%

In contrast note:

Baptist Bodies	68%
Methodist Bodies	22%
Presbyterian Bodies	11.8%
Lutheran Bodies	29%

Dr. McKibben's search for and conclusions concerning the reasons for this situation are most illuminating. Here are some of them:

¹These movements deserve our further study and perhaps consideration in a later issue of the Herald.

*See Information Service for December, 1945. These figures are more recent and inclusive than those furnished by Dr. McKibben.

CHURCH SCHOOLS:

There is a striking contrast as to the ratio of Sunday school members to church membership between these newer sects and the major denominations. Note the following number of church school attendants for every hundred church members:

Pentecostal Holiness, 187 pupils; Church of the Nazarene, 166; Christian and Missionary Alliances, 135; Salvation Army, 118; Assemblies of God, 117.

On the other hand, the ratio for Methodists is 88; for Southern Presbyterians, 74; for Northern Presbyterians, 64; Disciples of Christ, 64; United Lutherans, 49; Episcopalians, 25.

Undoubtedly, there is a definite relationship between the church school attendance of nonmembers and the rate of increase in church membership. Clearly, with these "newer sects" the church school becomes an out-and-out instrument for evangelism.

WORLD CONFUSION

A second contributing factor to the remarkable growth of these "newer sects" is pointed out by Dr. McKibben as follows:

"Undoubtedly the background for the rise of many of these sects and the shifting of persons from established denominations to these newer groups is the general widespread confusion, uncertainty, sense of impending catastrophe and feeling of personal frustration and inadequacy coincident with the coming, duration and subsequent turmoil of the great world wars. The times are ripe for any new messiah, any new group that is vigorous and generous in its promises of what it can offer to those who 'join up' and commit themselves to the program proposed."

PRONOUNCED CHARACTERISTICS

A close study of the characteristics and techniques of these groups reveals certain conclusions which are most challenging.

These newer sects:

1. Seem to bring their members "through to a definiteness of conviction concerning their faith."
2. Do a better job of getting their members to witness their faith.
3. Are indifferent to public sentiment—fearlessly stand for their cause.
4. Believe that membership means everything to them.

5. Have a sense of urgency, fostered by their belief in the second coming of Christ.
6. Assign each lay member and hold him responsible for specific tasks; i. e., witnessing.
7. Make extensive use of printed materials (one group distributed twenty-seven million pieces in a single year).
8. Employ definite technics in helping members gain the vaunted benefits of their religion—in salvation, health, security, peace of mind—rather than the general advice and platitudes which are often the sole wares of the orthodox churches.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THESE FACTS

The writer was particularly interested in Dr. McKibben's comments as to the significance of the facts revealed in his study. For example:

1. The theology of these groups is branded as unacceptable to a majority of those representing the Religious Education Association. Therefore, the orthodox churches must "seek to secure these results in other ways or accept the fact that we cannot achieve them."
2. Since the bad features of these movements are so definitely a part of their nature and activity, they cannot be given support.
3. The total membership of these newer groups is comparatively small. Hence, there would appear "slight cause for grave concern."
4. Nevertheless, there is need to bear in mind "How great a fire a match kindleth." Indeed some one of these sects "may bear the seed of a great religious mustard tree of the future."
5. These movements are definitely stimulating evangelistic activities, even "crusade" among the older Protestant churches, i. e., the "Teaching Mission and Youth United for Christ."

QUESTIONS FOR FURTHER THOUGHT, STUDY, AND ACTION

Where do we stand? How well are we doing? Are we holding our own? Shall we not face facts realistically, no matter how painful the process may be?

Growth of a Mission

In 1944, two families of Latter Day Saints moved with us to Vestaburg, Michigan. It was eighteen miles to the nearest church, and, during the war years of rationing, we were seldom able to attend. We decided, since there were children in the group, that it would be well to conduct a Bible class on Friday nights. This proved an interesting venture, so we began holding church school early in 1945. In February, another Latter Day Saint family moved into the community, and we decided to have preaching services each Sunday following church school. In July, 1946, we obtained the use of a schoolhouse and twice each month enjoyed the ministry of visiting speakers. We also conducted midweek prayer services. There were ten baptisms this year on Children's Day. For these new members we are deeply grateful. With God as our guide, we have the assurance that we shall continue to progress.

Negligence

We never know how many blessings—even miracles—we deny others by failing to do the things which we feel a strong inner urge to do. That unwritten letter; that kind deed, so often thought of but still undone at the close of day; that visit we plan to make, but never do . . . these are the things that might change the entire life of someone, but, because they are never done, the world and its people go on much the same as if we had never been born.

Alice Carter.

Importance of Kindness

There is nothing more important than kindness in the promoting of Zion's ideals. Love for people will fill our churches and expedite the building of the kingdom. We who have been enlightened should want to tell everyone the story of the gospel, but none will listen unless we use a kindly approach. Taking Christ for our example, we should sense the needs of those about us and seek to help them. The Son of God was willing to give his life for the sake of others; the least we can do is to live so that all who come in contact

They fell among thieves!

A thief stole a set of visual education slides from a young minister who was traveling from Stanwood to Seattle . . . It was suggested that the thief would do well to view them through a projector . . . for, said a minister, "they concern a man who traveled from Jerusalem to Jerico, and fell among thieves."

CHURCH-CRAFT Bible Slides inspire young and old beyond the power of word or tongue. They are ideal for impressing the lessons on pupils of Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

LOVE CAN DO IT

BY ELAINE CARSON

"I didn't quite hear your name, but would you like to see my paper?"

Less than a month ago I heard the basic truth of Christ's teachings being taught, not from the pulpit nor by a Latter Day Saint, but by a woman of education and culture—a woman who was making a profession of helping people. She said: "We seem to have got away from some good old-fashioned principles and words, such as faith and charity; and before we are going to get anywhere, regardless of our knowledge and skills, we've got to get back to or somehow recover—if we ever had it—a feeling of just plain love for people."

I liked that, and I liked that woman. She was conducting an institute in child welfare work, and somehow her whole approach had more meaning and power because behind it there was love—not a sanctimonious pity for "unfortunate clients" nor a condescending patronage in an effort to make the "other half" feel an equality that she believed really did not exist. Her every word, action, and bearing exemplified the thing she taught. Here was the same adage, rated first and foremost by Christ, the greatest teacher, being taught again nearly two thousand years later: "Thou shalt love."

I heard a politician say the other day in an effort to interpret to the public a program of progressive social welfare, "After all, we are all the sons and daughters of the living God, in whose image we were made, and that makes us brothers. Any less conception than that will defeat our purpose."

Every day I see love a fact, and every day I see where love would have healed a wound or prevented an injury. The wounds are not always physical; they are wounds to the mind and to the very soul of man, and the greatest of these is a betrayal of love. The other day a woman wept bitterly in my office, "Oh, I've been a fool, but I was desperate. I didn't know what I was doing. When he told me that our marriage was through, that the boys and I meant nothing to him, I just didn't think any more." Maybe you smile a little sardonically or shrug your shoulders and say, "She read too many love stories." It was no laughing matter, however. Here was a woman terribly hurt, the timbers of her whole life strewn in confusion around her, her children homeless, her name disgraced. We've all seen a puppy crawl toward his master, a pleading in his brown eyes for fondling rather than punishment. This woman looked to me in much the same way, with pleading hope but not much expectancy—"After all," she sighed, "how can you help me? Everything is such a mess!"

I prayed for help that day, as I have done many times, and then we proceeded to talk things over. "Are you big enough," I asked her, "to rebuild your life, to protect your boys? You know how you have been hurt. They are younger than you, their lives more vulnerable. What are you going to do to protect them?" The importance of her life's work was not underestimated, and after a clear picture was painted, we proceeded to examine her equipment to do the job. When the interview was over, things in this woman's life had not actually changed one iota, and yet, somehow, she had received a vision of what she had to do and how she could do it. Then she thanked me, and said, "You didn't criticize me for my great sin."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Mrs. S, we all make mistakes—some greater than others, but the important thing for you to see is not the mistake, but the result. The courage and vision with which you face this thing is what is going to matter ten years from now, and what is more, I'm not paid to judge you." She smiled when I shook hands with her. A job, a smile, hope, and love will go a lot further than anything else in helping people find themselves. There came to me a picture of Christ writing on the sand, and another woman being advised to go her way and sin no more.

An Indian woman was confined to a public ward of a large hospital with two other women, one of whom was elderly, rather outspoken, and not too thoughtful. With no inquiry as to the Indian's proper name, this woman immediately dubbed her "Rosie," treating her with about the same condescension as would be meted out to a pet of some sort. The Indian was rather shy, showing almost a deference for the "white ladies," and no one seemed to sense that she would not like the nickname, although all the other patients were addressed formally, "Mrs. So and So."

Late one afternoon a younger woman was brought into the fourth bed, and introduced to the other patients, the Indian being named by the nurse as "Mrs. A." After the evening meal, the young woman asked Mrs. A if she would like to read her paper, saying: "I didn't quite hear your name, but would you like to see my paper?"

"Her name is Rosie," spoke up the elderly woman, "the little brown devil."

"Is that your name?" asked the younger woman.

"That is what she calls me," was the reply, "but my name is Mrs. A." It was a subtle sort of an implication on the part of the elderly lady, and it possibly was not a conscious desire to hurt, but the native woman certainly felt it. Later, when the younger woman made a point of calling her "Mrs. A," and when the nurses seemed to "catch on" and do likewise, the Indian woman was noticeably pleased.

It was such a small thing, possibly not even worth mentioning, but, somehow, if Christianity and the command, "Thou shalt love," were an innate part of our very thinking, there would have been no possibility of that Indian woman's feelings having been hurt.

Because of circumstances in their family life, it became necessary for a young couple with two small children to board the wife's sister. For almost a week after her arrival, the little three year old daughter was absolutely uncontrollable—she was "cheeky," flew into tantrums, was disobedient, and had the whole household about wild with her antics. One night, after a particularly stormy session, the child was being put to bed because she was "bad." The young mother, in desperation, took the child in her arms and with an almost vicious hug said, "Oh, Honey, what am I going to do with you?" The child seemed almost hungry for that hug and replied, "Mummy, I not mean to be bad!" It then occurred to the mother that she and her sister had been so wrapped up in their new-found companionship that they had shut the little girl out; naturally, she resented it. Next morning the mother paid more attention to the child, joined her in her play, gave her a few almost unnecessary hugs, and the mischief of the previous week just disappeared. Love had found the way and had given understanding.

"Oh, Honey, what am I going to do with you?"

Love is like that. It is the easiest thing in the world to give, but withholding it costs us an unbearable price. If we loved our neighbor as ourselves, we could not have war. If everyone loved his family as he should, there would be fewer broken homes, fewer delinquent children, and ninety per cent of the emotional and mental diseases could be wiped out in one generation. Love is free, but in order to have it, we must give it away. Love, someone has said, is the universal language—even the dumb can speak it and the deaf can understand it. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

Pattern for Living

BY LOUISE

Love can heal a wounded spirit,
Soothe a child in troubled rest,
Love can guide a puzzled conscience,
Ease a weary heart, hard-pressed.
Love can bring a lot of gladness
To a life that's dull and grey
And bestow a peace that's priceless—
Is not Love the Christlike way?

Memo From Normandy:

To the Policy Makers

If you forget, my tongue is wedged in clay.
 Benumbed, blind, wedded to the slime you locked me in to serve your proud and unrepentant hearts,
 I cannot cry alarm. The hastening day of fire and fury looms, the vicious rhyme, repetitive, macabre, moves on again. Apart and voiceless, I, before the living, mark the far and misty mutter of the drums, and measured tread
 of baby shoes along the roads we marched, their sires. The way you take is dark,
 Through grim and ghastly hedgerows, and our sons will walk before.

* THE DOG THAT GOD SENT

Tommy had been pleading with Dad for some months to get him a dog. Dad was reluctant . . . he couldn't decide whether to get a Cocker Spaniel, a Dachshund, or a Chow. Tommy wasn't particular, but he was getting impatient. "Dad," he said with finality one evening, "you're too slow. I'm going to pray for a dog." Several weeks later Tommy had a birthday, the high light of which was the unannounced arrival of a nondescript mongrel, obviously a refugee from some back alley. One look at the dog and Dad immediately offered to replace him with a more sightly specimen, but Tommy protested, "I don't want another dog. God sent this one, and I'm going to keep him."

P. S.

* Wait

Here is a common word that needs a better understanding. We tend to think of it as meaning simply to cease activity, to pause while expecting something to happen, or somebody else to do something.

"Wait" means more than that, especially as used in the Scriptures. How often they admonish us, "Wait on the Lord."

Please notice number 5 in the list of definitions of the word given by Webster's Unabridged Dictionary: "To be or to remain ready to execute orders; to be in waiting; to act as attendant or servant; esp. to attend or wait upon persons at table; to serve."

There you have it. When you think of waiting on the Lord, remember that it includes the idea of serving him.

* Dr. Grabske Returns

Dr. Charles F. Grabske, Church Physician, has returned to Independence after a year's research on the west coast. Church people seeking medical aid will be glad to know that he is again available for consultation.

* Get Out of Your Rut!

Believe it or not, you're in a rut! Look at your daily program of activities. You leave home in the morning, go to the office or shop, to the restaurant, to the bank, to the postoffice, to the grocery store, and back home, right where you started. It's a circle that never ends, unless you end it. It's a good circle, of course, but it doesn't fill all the needs of your life. You see the same people, wear the same clothes, think the same thoughts, day after day, week after week, year after year. Isn't it monotonous?

Fortunately, the Lord provided you with a means of breaking that monotony. He gave you Sunday to rest, to dress up and go to church, to get some good ideas for the improvement of your mind and soul, to take the family out to dinner, to see your friends, and other possibilities.

Further, there are the reunions where you can go once a year, hear church leaders, meet friends you do not see in the home town, rest, learn, and enjoy yourself.

Our pioneer ancestors understood the importance of breaking the routine of life and work to relieve monotony. They didn't have cars and highways, but they traveled. If they had the horses or buggies, they rode. If not, they walked. They did not mind walking from ten to twenty miles to go to a town, to visit a friend, or to see something interesting.

Today, we have many more facilities for getting out of the ruts that make dull circles of our lives. Time clocks and working hours limit us, but we have freedom too. Let's use our free time to get out of our ruts. It will help both mind and spirit.

Small Boy

A mother and her young son were visiting the office. The lad was shy, and an effort to get acquainted with him did not progress very rapidly. "Don't worry about him," the mother cautioned. "When he gets over his shyness he will swarm all over you. Then you'll like him better this way!"

* Wanted

If you can't have what you want, don't break your heart about it. Want something you can get.

There is no royal road to anything. One thing at a time, all things in succession. That which grows fast withers as rapidly; that which grows slowly endures.—J. G. Holland.

Departmental Officers a Supporting Ministry

As the church has grown in numbers and in concomitant problems to be solved and ministries to be performed, its administrative officers have been increasingly concerned that it shall function effectually, or commensurately with its growing responsibilities.

This study has drawn attention to the intent of the law governing in the matter of institutional and departmental as well as official functioning, and as time passes one might well expect some clearance of understanding, with increase of proficiency in labors performed.

The work of the Department of Religious Education has, of course, come under this closer scrutiny, with conclusions in the field of administration as cited in the report of the First Presidency to the late General Conference, as follows:

The work of the Department of Religious Education has been more clearly defined as a result of correspondence and personal conferences with Brother McDowell and his associate, Elder John Darling. With their full co-operation, it has been agreed that activities of any nature, conducted anywhere in the church, should be administered under the authority of appropriate administrative officers; if they relate to the branch, then by the authority of the branch president; if they relate to the district or stake, then by the authority of the district or stake president; if they relate to a still larger area, then by the Apostle or Apostles in that field.

This reaffirms the role of the departmental officers in local organizations as a supporting ministry inseparably connected with the spirit and purpose of our total endeavor. It also frees general departmental officers for their major task of training leaders and preparing study and activity materials. And, yet again, it emphasizes the obligation of the spiritual authorities, both general and local, to become the shepherds of the entire flock, concerned about the needs of every age group, integrating ministry in the departments with the total ministry offered, and building for both present and future needs and service.

This division of labor is clear-cut and concise, as it ought to be. It centers in the administrative officers of the church as placed there by the law, the responsibility of specific as well as over-all shepherding of the flock of God, to be made effectual by means of an integrated ministry available to all Saints, and related to future as well as current needs. And it leaves to the Department of Religious Education in that field its work as a supporting ministry, free from the burdens and vexations and heartbreaks attending those whose calling it is to administer the affairs of the church.

As the church looks to the evangelical order for spiritual ministry divorced from administrative distractions, so it looks to the Department of Religious Education apart from administrative diversions, for the educational viewpoint, the resources, and the trained teaching staff essential to the education of its membership. And this it does with the confidence that as the administrative officers of the church function effectually in their several places and labors as assigned, and the officers of the Department of Religious Education in theirs, this department shall be found making its full and potent contribution to the unfolding life of these, the people of God.

Maya Civilization

Life for June 30, 1947, contains an interesting story of the Maya civilization, devoting seventeen pages to some of the finest Kodachrome pictures we have seen. This should be of interest to Latter Day Saints. One of the full-page illustrations is that of the Castillo, sanctum sanctorum of Kukulcan.

On his latest visit to Central America, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, secured many valuable pictures in color, among them this same

Across the Desk

APOSTLE D. BLAIR JENSEN reports that the Youngstown, Ohio, District was organized June 8, 1947, in pursuance of an earlier action by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. Elder William G. McCune of New Castle, Pennsylvania, was selected as district president and Elder Homer McDowell was approved as Bishop's Agent. There will be about 500 members in the new district which starts out with excellent prospects for growth.

A RECENT LETTER from Elder Blair McClain, pastor at Detroit, calls attention to the fine faith of Sister Lydia Clark. We feel sure the Saints will be interested in reading this letter which follows:

June 19, 1947.

Dear Brethren:

I visited Sister Lydia (Blakeslee) Clark again a few days ago and received another wonderful ministry from her. I think that I have never witnessed such faith and love for the Restoration. Her eyesight is good and she reads the Bible and Saints' Herald daily (especially the Herald).

Sister Clark was born in Batavia, Illinois, 93 years ago last October, and until the death of her husband five years ago, she had lived in Galien, Illinois, most of her life. She is a daughter of Bishop George A. Blakeslee, second Bishop of the Reorganized Church. Mrs. S. B. Smith, mother of Blakeslee Smith, who now lives in Independence, is a sister. Another sister was Mrs. Viola Blair, now deceased, who made her home in Detroit.

It is interesting to note that Sister Clark was baptized at the Annual Conference at Beaverton, Boone County, Illinois, in the month of April, 1859 (according to the Church History). She has been a continuous subscriber to the Saints' Herald for 74 years. She was bishop's solicitor in her home branch for many years. Many of the early day missionaries and church officers were welcomed into their home as guests, enjoying their generous hospitality, and Brother Joseph Smith was well known and loved by their family.

Sister Clark is now making her home in Detroit with her daughter, Mrs. Lloyd Babcock, 16420 Schoolcraft Avenue, Detroit 27, Michigan, and would enjoy hearing from any of her old friends. She enjoys the memory of Brother Israel Smith's visit with her when he was in Detroit a few months ago.

This note of her continuous Herald subscription for 74 years should be a record.

APOSTLE M. A. MCCONLEY reports that he has just returned from a trip through northern England during which he visited our branches and missions at Wigan, Warrington, Farnsworth, Stockport, Beresford Road Manchester, James St. Manchester, Leeds, Bradford, and Hull. In these and other centers a good foundation has long been laid for the work of the church and everywhere Brother McConley reports that he has found consecrated men and women who are eager to make their contribution under the guidance of the Spirit.

This is anniversary time in England, when special services for Sunday school scholars are held in practically every church. Brother McConley and Elders Davies and Rowe of the appointee forces are quite busy attending these special services. Baptisms are recently reported as follows: Clay Cross, 3; Wigan, 3; Nuneaton, 1; Llanelly, 4; Farnsworth, 2.

WORD COMES from Germany that 13 were baptized at Gross Räschen on Sunday, May 25. While this is the largest report of baptisms at any one time, the missionary spirit is very evident throughout the entire German mission.

THE FOLLOWING LETTER has recently been received from Elder John Smolny who was in charge of the work in Germany during the war years:

Gross Räschen, May 5, 1947.

To the First Presidency:

I send you greetings from Germany and to let you know that I met Brother McConley in Berlin. As he was not allowed to come into the Russian Zone, he asked me to meet him in Berlin which I did with two other elders. Brother McConley was only permitted to stay for two days, so the time was short, but our friendship was deep as if we knew each other for years, which the gospel of Christ does for us. We were very satisfied with Apostle McConley and hoped that he could stay in Germany. He was of good service to us and answered our questions about Zion wisely. He is gifted to draw people to himself but too bad he had to leave us until the month of July. If the other brothers who come may enter the Russian Zone is still a question, but we hope they let us know in time so we can have a large delegation of us meet them in Berlin.

We are thankful that Brother McConley promised to get the Saints' Herald to us, which gives us a connection with headquarters. Also we are happy to get the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants sent in German. We are compiling a hymnbook here and hope to present it to you, when you come, for your approval and to decide where it could be printed, as there is a bad shortage of paper here. Smaller matters we may be able to translate and print here.

With greetings to the church in America and with joy that the Lord again has spoken, I remain,

Your brother in the Lord,

JOHN SMOLNY.

A RECENT LETTER from Elder Hermann Peisker of the Australasian Mission indicates that Brother Floyd Potter has accepted his call to the office of Seventy, as approved by the recent General Conference, and will shortly be ordained. The Saints from "down under" are eagerly anticipating the visit of Elders Garver and Johnson and are particularly anxious to have them share the ten-day mission reunion at Tiona at Christmas time. It looks as though arrangements to this end will now be possible.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, Youngstown District

July 2, 1947

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Homer D. McDowell, Route 1, Sharpsville Pennsylvania, as Bishop's Agent of the newly organized Youngstown District. Solicitors in this district are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of July and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother McDowell at the above address.

We appreciate the willingness of Brother McDowell to accept this responsibility and take this opportunity of commending him to the Saints for their favorable consideration and support.

Attorney At Law Ariel L. Crowley, of Boise, Idaho, sends us a copy of his latest work in defense of the Book of Mormon record. In thirty-three pages he deals exhaustively with the evidences of the use of metal plates for the purpose of historical record. He amply authenticates his work. Mr. Crowley has done a splendid piece of work which suggests painstaking research. We acknowledge our thanks to him.

A missionary in Swaziland, South Africa, told a native that feathers made a good bed. The native went to his kraal and spread a few feathers on a board. When he awoke next morning, he was stiff and sore, and complained that the missionary was a liar. The trouble was not in the missionary, but in the fewness of the feathers.

The Ground of Prophetic Faith

INTRODUCTION

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

The third of four studies in the field of Christian apologetics. The second of the series appeared in our February 22 issue.

APOLOGETICS is that branch of theology which seeks to defend on grounds of reason, the divine origin and authority of Christianity. It seeks to make luminous and to justify the great deeds done by God for man; reasoning from fact to faith, and from faith to knowledge.

When we reason, the whole man is engaged. We think, not alone with the brain cells, but with heart and with disposition—with the “set” of the will. No one can begin to reason without a desire to do so. Desire engages feelings—emotions. And, once the process is begun, a determination to reach a conclusion is called forth. Determination connotes will. So, then, mind, heart, and will, the whole man, is encompassed when one reasons. Apologetics, then, has to do with those aspects of experience which are representative of men as men. Abstract reasoning alone (if such a thing there be) does not wholly satisfy, for the “heart has reasons of its own.” No amount of mathematics will convince a man that he ought to be kind, generous, true, and righteous. But the revelation of a Holy Will, coupled with infinite love and guided by superlative intelligence will evoke that allegiance in which alone mind, heart, and will find their peace and home. Such revelation was given in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. Apologetics justifies this revelation. Peter urged all Christians to become apologists when he wrote, “be ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you.”

It is contended in this study, that in the prophets of Israel a process of revelation was going on, and that such revelation found its culmination in Christ. The “higher pantheism” is very unsatisfying. It conveys no sure hold on a personal God who can enter into intimate communion with his creatures. The unaided reason of the best men fails. “Canst thou by searching find out God?” Unless the quest for him is met by his quest for mankind, the music of the spheres is sad. To the question, then, with which the previous study closed, viz.: “Has God, from his side, taken any specific steps to disclose himself to mankind, other than, and in addition to, the half-concealed revelation in nature?”

I. IMPERMANENCE OF RECENT THEORIES

In answer, we know what the prophets of old would say. Unhesitatingly they would reply, “Yes, he has.” But the dread of superstition which dominates the scientific mind has been the cause of many reasonably minded people depreciating any such claim as we here propose to examine. Many feel “safe” or on “solid ground” when listening to some scientific theory. But science cannot claim infallibility on the ground of consistency in its attempt to get at the truth. Science has demonstrated so many things to be true which in the abstract appeared impossible, that we should accord it great respect. On the other hand, that which was taught by scientists fifty years ago has been placed in the discard today, or even reversed in the light of fresh discovery. How else, for example, can we interpret the statements of these great ones, other than to assume that their language is certainly fragmentary?

A. Alternatives

“There is nothing between absolute scientific belief in a creative Power and the acceptance of the theory of a fortuitous concourse of atoms.”—Lord Kelvin, in 1903.

“We are faced by two alternatives: either the law and order of the Universe is the result of haphazard happenings, or it is the result of a definite purpose.”—Michael Pupin, 1927.

B. The Change of Front

“There is no definite aim and no special purpose to be traced in it [the Universe], there seems to be no alternative but to leave everything to “blind chance” The development of the Universe is a monistic mechanical process in which we discover no aim or purpose whatever—all is the result of chance.”—Ernst Haeckel, Riddle of the Universe.

“Thirty years ago, we thought, or assumed, that we were heading towards an ultimate reality of a mechanical kind. It seemed to consist of a fortuitous jumble of atoms, which was destined to perform meaningless dances for a time under the action of blind purposeless forces, and then fall back to form a dead world. Into this wholly mechanical world, through the play of the same blind forces, life had stumbled by accident. “Today there is a wide measure of agreement, which on the physical side of science approaches almost to unanimity, that the stream of knowledge is heading towards a nonmechanical reality; the Universe begins to look more like a great thought than like a great machine. Mind no longer appears as an accidental intruder into the realm of matter; we begin to suspect that we ought to rather to hail it as the creator and governor of the realm of matter."—Sir James Jeans, Mysterious Universe, page 148.

"Our universe is not merely bankrupt; there remains no dividend at all; it has not simply liquidated; it is going clean out of existence, leaving not a wrack behind. The attempt to trace a pattern of any sort is absolutely futile."—H. G. Wells, 1946.

C. Old and New Views

"The old, confident nineteenth-century materialism, among the alert scientists, lies in ruins. Modern physicists are not even bothered about that old materialism, save, with as great expedition as possible, to clear away the debris."—H. A. Overstreet, Enduring Quest, page 26, (1931).

"Materialism, once a scientific theory, is now the fatalistic creed of thousands, but materialism is nothing better than a superstition on the same level as belief in witches and devils."—J. S. Haldane.

"We discover that the universe shows evidence of a designing or controlling power that has something in common with our own individual minds."—Jeans, Ibid., page 149.

It is wise that we do not "reason in fetters." We shall be dominated neither by a superstitious regard for the sanctity of the written word, nor by the (apparent) authority of scientific theory. Let us "go where the argument leads," and feel as we do that such a claim as the prophets present is at least worthy of sympathetic scrutiny.

II. REVELATION IN HEBREW HISTORY

A. Special Vocations of Specific Peoples

Ewald says that the "all absorbing quest of Israel was religion, and the good life based thereupon." Athanasius (c. 325) affirmed that Israel was, through the prophets, "the sacred school of the knowledge of God and of the spiritual life for all mankind." Various nations have fulfilled distinctive missions in history. We remember the Greeks for their artistic and philosophic genius. In art not only were they pre-eminent among ancient peoples, but their artistic sense dominated their whole life; and this fact is the secret at once of the strength and of the weakness of the Greek ideal. They saw everything in terms of beauty. Their religion was religion of beauty, and their ethics partook of the same character. Naturally, they saw life from a subjective point of view. And their ethics were individualistic and subjective in character. As Ellwood says, "Almost from the first, Grecian civilization was corrupt, and at length, in certain of its features, it became degraded beyond belief." However, in spite of this, we owe to the Greeks our artistic and intellectual traditions. Fisher says, "We are the children of the Hellas."

The Romans were primarily a military and warlike people. Their standards in ethics and religion were neither philosophic nor very much above the level of barbarism. But they had genius for political and legal organization, and laid the foundations for all modern government. The keeping of standing armies was first advocated in modern times by Machiavelli, in the 16th century, because he admired the methods of ancient Rome. Rome was a militant nation, aiming at the domination of the world by force, and while many of the unfortunate tendencies in our civilization have come from Rome, we have greatly benefited by their genius for law and organization.

Still another ancient people contributed to our present life, the Teutons. They brought to us a strong tradition of individual liberty. So we must recognize, as we have said, that certain peoples have been the channels through which various aspects of reality have come to us.

B. Historical Limits

But supreme among these contributions is that of Israel, whose concept of God and whose ethic lies at the very heart of all that is enduring in our present civilization. In their literature and history they have evolved a monotheistic religion under the tutelage of the prophets and developed the conception of the ethical fruits thereof.

A study of religions comparatively will not alter this fact. We may freely admit that Zoroaster, 600 B. C., or Mohammed, A. D. 507-632, or Confucius, 551-478 B. C., or Socrates, 469-399 B. C., were to some extent inspired by the Spirit of God. In admitting this we shall simply validate the Scripture which says, "the light of Christ lighteth every man that cometh into the world." This will not prevent us from accepting the thesis that in Israel we see a special movement of God towards man, gradually enlarging and refining itself in the measure of man's adjustment thereto. This divine revelation has its roots in history, and if we are to understand it, we must see it at work. We have, then, between the year 760 B. C., the time of Amos, to about 400 B. C., the time of Malachi, a succession of men who claim that in a special sense the mind and will of God was impressed upon them. It is not necessary to argue this point, since the most hostile critic would be prepared to concede that the language these men use admits of no other interpretation but that they claimed to be in touch with God.

The Old Testament speaks of Moses and of Elijah and of others, who were before Amos, but it is generally recognized that within the historical limits set, 760-400 B. C., we are on solid historical ground. Further, we cannot doubt that the conceptions of God and of human duty were, before the days of Amos, mixed with much superstition borrowed from neighboring nations and tribes. Then the worship of Jehovah was corrupt. Consequently, the prophets, even of olden times, again and again accused the people of thinking wickedly, in that God was "such a one" as they were. From Amos to Malachi we see emerging against the background of the mists and shadows of antiquity a clear conception of one God, who is God of the whole earth, who has called Israel for a special mission because he has regard to the welfare of all men. And, these prophets are insistent in demanding righteousness; in calling for equality.

C. Prophets Tell of Their Commission

In analyzing their own explanation of the experiences from which their utterances stem, they say without equivocation, "thus saith the Lord." At times they appear to be reasoning with Jehovah, and are at some pains to excuse themselves from the commission to which they have been called. But they are constrained to yield to an overmastering sense of the Divine which takes possession of them. Let us listen to some typical utterances:

I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees; and the Lord took me from following the flock, and the Lord said unto me, go, prophesy unto my people Israel. Now, therefore, the word of the Lord.

But I truly am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

Mine heart within me is broken, all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome; because of the Lord, and because of his holy words . . . Is not my word like as fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

We notice that they are acutely conscious of the contrast between their own feelings and ideas on the one hand, and on the other of the purpose and mind of God who constrains them. This is vividly presented where the prophet holds conversations with God, represents to God his own feelings, questions, and complaints, and is answered. These prophets are clearly conscious of the distinct overmastering pressure of God who possesses them, making his mind and will articulate to them.

D. Nature of God the Ground of Prophecy

"Such passages recur constantly. The prophets, then, because they are conscious of being thus even violently dealt with and possessed, claimed to utter with supreme authority a word message from God to man. The content of this message, is on the whole quite clear in its final outcome. It is a message which proclaims God as intensely personal and moral, as the one and only God, the absolute creator and sustainer and judge of all that is, almighty in the sense that no other God or external power exists to restrain him. It proclaims him in unmistakable terms for a practical purpose, not, that is, with a view to the satisfaction of metaphysical inquiries, but for the sole purpose of making his people understand that there is no manner of fellowship with him possible except by conformity to his character, that is, by goodness, social and individual, by 'doing justly, and loving mercy, and walking humbly with God.' It proclaims the responsibility of man as a free being, and his awful power to thwart God by his pride and willfulness, and to throw his world into confusion—in Isaiah's tremendous phrase, 'To make God serve with his sins.' It assumes that God does not, over the long course of this world's history, intend to remove man's liberty thus to thwart his purpose; but it declares God's intention to judge and overthrow one by one every structure and device of human pride and willfulness, and finally to vindicate himself in his whole creation. That is 'the day of the Lord.' Meanwhile, his prophets are his mouthpiece to make his character and will and purpose known, and to call on those who have ears to hear to correspond and co-operate with him, that is, to stand for righteousness and truth in evil days."—Charles Gore.

Thus we are here presented with a succession of men who claim that God spoke to them in such terms as could not be apprehended by the unassisted mind of man in contemplation of the creation. If there were really such a process of divine education as these men say, it would place Israel in a position analogous to the Greeks in relation to beauty and the Romans in relation to law, as a special vehicle for the apprehension of arresting religious truths; although Israel would be profoundly different as to the method in which this special vocation was secured to them. No one can read the prophets without feeling that either God did or he did not speak to them. And the question pre-emptorily thus presented holds in its grasp tremendous moral consequences for mankind. Those who believe the message and are sure of its origin find themselves laid under a pressing obligation to obey it. History affirms that as the message has been believed and obeyed, it has released to men great moral and spiritual power.

Were the experiences of the prophets real? Did God, the Creator, the Sustainer and Judge of all nature and the world of men actually take the initiative and impress himself upon these men, so that their experiences had intellectual content, and could be made over into human language adequate, at least in part, to convey his will? That is the main question, and it is profoundly important. The intellectual world of today is "studiously refusing" to face it. In doing so, various theories are advanced in an attempt to explain away both the idea of revelation and the conclusions borne in the idea. Before we examine some of these theories let us say at once that we do take note of some facts concerning the origin, the nature, and the progressive character of the teaching of the prophets.

III. ORIGIN, NATURE, AND PROGRESSION OF PROPHETIC TEACHING

A. Origin

Chrysostom, one of the church Fathers, declared that all the elements of the Jewish cultus, "the sacrifices, cleansings and the new moons and the ark and the temple itself had their origin from heathen grossness." So, in effect, many of the other church Fathers. The peoples with which Israel was surrounded had their professional priests, soothsayers, and seers, whose function it was to ascertain the will of the god of the particular nation. Most of these surrounding peoples worshiped nature, and often the productive and reproductive aspects of it. As nature seems to be indifferent to morality, so was the religion thus fostered nonmoral or even immoral. There is no doubt but that the earlier religion of Israel was mixed with much heathen superstition and grossness. We may admit it, and even lay aside the pregnant question as to whether Israel received a perfect system of religion and rite in the beginning from which they departed subsequently. The fact is that it is impossible to read some of the narratives in Judges or Samuel, or to peruse the denunciations of the prophets aimed at the superstitions around them without feeling sure that Jahweh was to the Hebrews, in many respects, simply a tribal god, who belonged exclusively to his people, and who demanded ceremony and rite without regard to moral purpose or social righteousness. Superstition is religion that is nonmoral. It is worship and rite unrelated to social duty. To the early Hebrews it appears that religion was not incompatible with sexual immorality, drunkenness, fraud, oppression, and gross economic inequality. Because their worship bore no social fruit, it was denounced by the prophets. The people sought the will of their god by all manner of means, by Urim and Thummim, by sacred pillars, by ephod and ark much the same way as the surrounding nations and tribes sought the favor of their gods in military and practical concerns.

From this welter of superstition, made all the more glorious by contrast with it, there arose, through the work of the prophets, a conception of the moral character of God. As a "root out of a dry ground," surely, grew gradually, but with expanding and pervasive power, the ideal of social justice and corporate righteousness. This ideal was, according to the men who fostered it, received by them from God as part of a process of divine education. We shall not discard the conception because of its antecedents, nor shall we assume that Deity had nothing to do with the process because it began as it did—in gross misconception of him and his purpose. The end explains the beginning, and is its own justification.

B. Nature of Prophetic Teaching

What was the function of these great prophets? Was it to foretell the future? It must be admitted that in their utterances there is a large measure of apocalypticism. Specific dooms are pronounced on certain peoples, and what will befall "Israel" in the "latter days" is also set forth. And it must be remembered that insofar as history has unfolded to the present time, these predictions have had, upon the whole, remarkable fulfillment. But there is great danger in overestimating the importance of this evident function of the prophets. Whatever foresight they had, sprang from their insight. They saw into the nature and character of God, and compared this with the contemporary situation, and in the agony of this process, they perceived with unerring insight the principles which moved to judgment. It was this juxtaposition of the ideal with the real, of that which ought to have been with that which prevailed, which lent wings to their vision. There is no disposition on their part to demonstrate the "cleverness" of Jehovah, by telling something which would come to pass without regard to the moral challenge laid on the people by the character of God. Every prediction of future judgment, or vision of blessed apocalypse, carries with it the qualities of character which are the basis of adjustment to the will of Deity. The prophets, then, were not primarily foretellers of the future. Rather were they the revealers of the nature of God. Furthermore, to "write history beforehand" apart from the moral considerations just discussed, may demonstrate a clever mind, but it can lay no sure hold on the will of man. To possess prior knowledge of what will be, in and of itself, does not necessarily say that what will be is what ought to be. This binding together of the future with the moral character of God is what assured the prophets of the triumph of righteousness. Because God was God, and because he was as he was, he was bound to come into his own in the end. Evil works and rival gods, powers and principalities have within them and their nefarious activities the certainty of their own doom. To the prophets the coming kingdom was certain, and the most glorious aspect of that kingdom was the King.

Only in so far, then, as foreknowledge could serve the useful purpose of unveiling the character of God, was it given to the prophets. Surely we can see in the rise and fall of nations and peoples that their power to endure is directly proportional to the extent to which they incorporate into their economy the nature of God revealed in the Hebrew Prophets.

C. Progression in Prophetic Teaching

The theory of evolution in the natural sciences has fostered the doctrine of development in the field of history. This idea of development finds confirmation in the Bible. We can see successive steps in the growth of morality. Under the tutelage of the prophets, a process of divine education went on in Israel, and in the measure of their ability to assimilate, the people were led upward. It was a great advance when Jahweh was accorded his rightful place as the one and only God, the Creator of all that is. Amos added to this concept further enrichment. He saw that because God is God he must judge all impartially, including Israel and Judah. Further light came when Ezekiel affirmed that as in the case of nations absolute justice is meted out to each individual. Ezekiel also refashioned the traditional worship so as to make it the center and inspiration of a new social order which was to characterize Israel. From these successive advances, there was no retrogression. The gains made were permanent. Of course, one prophet borrows from another; and just as musical or poetical motifs and ideas may dominate a period, so also the prophets were influenced one by the other. But each is unique, and each would reject the charge of plagiarism by citing his own calling as something conveyed to him personally by Jehovah.

What we see here is in the nature of a process of divine education. As the mind and experience of man were able to comprehend and respond to the progressive revelation given through the prophets and culminating in its individual mode in Jesus Christ, so the movement of Divinity became more and more pronounced. So, also, there was given increased moral power to those responding to the movement of God; and thus over long periods of time, and in the widest experience of the race, the prophetic and Christian ethic has shown itself capable of sustaining mankind on the highest levels of creative achievement.

The prophetic faith was not developed as a result of a process of philosophy. The Hebrew people were singularly unresponsive to questions of philosophy. Philosophy was the special vocation of the Greeks. The prophets acted on the assumption that God was real and able to communicate himself to them, and the intellectual questions and difficulties which beset the Greek thinkers did not occur to the prophets. The Greeks never laid secure hold on the personality of God—for them, he was more of an object of intellectual contemplation than a person to be sought after, loved, and responded to. Whatever the prophets discerned was received by them, and did not spring from their own reason.

IV. THE PROPHETS "EXPLAINED"

In seeking to explain the long succession of inspired souls who constituted the instruments of divine education in Israel, many arguments have been advanced. Three of these we shall briefly examine, namely, (a) that the prophets and their ethical doctrine resulted from what is called the "semitic genius for monotheism," (b) that they were taught by experience, and (c) their utterances stemmed from the unconscious regions of their own minds.

A. "Semitic Genius for Monotheism"

It used to be argued that the Hebrews were simply one of a family of nations who had a genius for religion. The Babylonians wrote hymns to one god, hymns of great beauty and power. In Egypt there was a heretical king, Akhnaton, who developed a monotheism which ran counter to the prevailing polytheism of his time, and who wrote a remarkable psalm which some say is worthy to be placed alongside some of David's psalms. These and other instances have been cited to show that the Hebrews simply developed a tendency already manifested in their kindred peoples, the Semites.

But a moment's reflection will serve to show that the prophets advanced their ideas not with current conceptions, but precisely against them. The surrounding tribes were polytheistic, and their worship was of the productive and reproductive aspects of nature and on the whole grossly immoral. On a wide view of Semitic religions, a great scholar has described their characteristic on the whole as not "Monotheism," but "sexual dualism." As for the king, Akhnaton, his religion was stifled at birth, and one can see even now, on the cylinders and bas-reliefs disinterred from that ancient kingdom, clear evidences of his name having been erased by the priesthood hostile to his views. Certainly his views did not affect the stream of Egyptian religious history with its polytheism, idolatry, and preoccupation with the world of the dead. It may be that the Babylonians and the Jews both shared certain myths or legends about the creation and the flood; but under the tutelage of the prophets, a whole new world of moral meaning was infused into these legends which certainly never affected the Babylonians or practice of the Semitic people. There was nothing in the tradition or practice of the Semitic peoples to account for the prophetic teaching.

B. Prophetic Teaching Not a Reflection on Experience

Nor were the prophets taught by experience. Under their guidance, there was developed a keen sense of divine justice, which had not yet been vindicated in time. Indeed, while they affirmed that if Israel kept the commandments, Israel would prosper, Jehovah had never had a chance to show what he could really do for his people. Even in times of apparent prosperity, the prophets were not deceived by the appearance of things. Material gain and wealth there might be, but, said the prophets, it was accompanied by gross inequality, by sexual vice and idolatry, and they were not deceived. Prosperity materiel, when accompanied by departure from the commandments of God was chimerical. Like the hungry man who falls asleep and dreams of filling his belly only to awaken with a keener sense of hunger by reason of his dream, so also the nations who fight against God, including Israel and Judah.

Individuals had wrestled with the problem of divine justice. How could there be any such thing as justice, when the "wicked flourished as the green bay tree"? Under stern necessity, then, developed the doctrine of immortality, and there was brought into focus that region beyond the grave where divine justice has full sway, and where the wrongs of this life are righted. What was true of individuals remained true also of nations. Let Israel keep the commandments, then come what may, sometime, somewhere, the "mountain of the Lord's house" would be established over all the earth.

This conviction of the absolute finality and inexorableness of divine justice was not a conclusion based upon experience. It was a conviction born out of communion with God. Because he was as he was, he must come into his own.

C. Prophets and the Unconscious

But there is a further explanation of the work of the prophets which is more appetizing to the modern mind. It is the psychological explanation. According to this view, these inspired souls simply experienced an uprush from the subconscious. What was normally suppressed, and is in most of us not in permanent view of the conscious mind or part of us, was, in the case of the prophets, jarred loose by some emotional strain or trancelike condition. This uprush was vivid enough to appear to them, as the voice of another person. What was subconscious became thus co-conscious. William James enunciated the doctrine of the subliminal self thus: "Apart from all religious considerations there is actually and literally more life in our total soul than we are at any time aware of." Again, Myers says, "Each of us is in reality an abiding psychical entity far more extensive than he knows, an individuality which can never express itself completely through any corporeal manifestation." According to the psychological explanation of the prophetic mind, it is from these trans-marginal regions of consciousness that the "word of the Lord" is supposed to have come.

Now it is true that the mind of man is a wonderfully mysterious entity. Psychology has done a great service to suffering humanity, especially in the area of psychiatry. When the unconscious becomes a writhing mass of frustrations and conflicts between incompatible ideals, the mental balance is disturbed. Attitudes which have been fostered either consciously or unconsciously are stored in the hidden recesses of the mind, and when these attitudes are un-social, or come in conflict with the standards set by society, they are repressed and not given expression. Thus they fester underneath and are often manifested as a "co-consciousness" or split personality, or a "demoniac possession." People become ill mentally. It has been the high calling of psychiatry to assist such sick people to mental health. Thus we cannot deny that the mind is a vaster area than engages the mentality at any given moment.

While we admit this, however, it is not to be supposed that the prophets were in the same case. The subconscious is related to the past individually and racially. How could the prophets have had any prior knowledge of future events except they had been introduced to a preview of those events by some power or brooding spirit which had them in comprehension? The predictions of the prophets have had on the whole remarkable fulfillment. Could Isaiah's knowledge of Cyrus have been stored in his subconscious by past experience? Think of the remarkable and concise review of history "written beforetime" given in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew's Gospel. How else could the Master have known about these things save he were in contact with some spirit to which all things were present, and which saw all time at once was outside the time series, and, therefore, eternal? Think of the prophecies of Joseph Smith, especially the utterance concerning the Civil War of 1861-64 previewed in 1832. It is inconceivable that these utterances stemmed from an uprush by the subconscious.

Even more remarkable is the statement of moral principles given over and over again far in advance of the ethical standards of the times in which they emerged, yet finding confirmation in the social history of mankind later.

These "explanations of the prophetic voice" will not do. Let each take his own view. For my part I can find no explanation for what history records other than that the prophets were in touch with God. The following from the pen of Emily Bronte satisfies the soul:

"With wide-embracing love,
Thy spirit animates eternal years,
Pervades and broods above Changes, sustains, dissolves, creates, and rears."

How many times, conscious of this brooding spirit of the eternal, must the prophets, great souls that they were, have prayed in something like the following language:

"Eternal Father, God of Truth,
To whom all things, seem as they are.
Thou, who of old the prophet's eye
unsealed,
While heavy sleep fell down on other men,
In holy vision tranced.
The future pass before him,
And, to Judah's harp attuned?
Burdens that made the pagan mountains
shake,
And Zion's cedars bow.
Inspire my song,
My eye unscale,
Me what is substance teach,
And shadow what, while I of things to come
As past rehearsing,
Sing the Course of Time."—Pollock.

The prophets affirm that God is. They affirm that he is a person capable of exercising all the functions of personality among which is that of communicating his word and his nature to mankind. They were not taught by experience, nor were they inspired by surrounding tribes and peoples. They did not come by their perceptions as a result of the "unconscious" cerebration of which we today hear so much. They went to school with a living God, and the results of their education are plain for all to see.

The Rural Church

By Ward A. Hougas

President, Central Missouri Stake

THERE IS such a thing as a rural church. It is an important segment of our total spiritual economy as a church. This is news to many—even to many living in rural communities. To be right sure that we are speaking the same language, it is well to keep in mind that a rural church is any church located in any area of less than 2,500 population. This means that the term “Rural Church” includes not only the churches located in the wide-open country, but also most all churches located in villages and towns of less than 2,500 population. There may be some exceptions to this rule in connection with suburban towns and, on the other hand, there may be some “rural” churches in towns larger than 2,500 depending upon the background of the membership and the community.

The sociology of the rural church is not so different from that of the urban church as some have been inclined to believe. The position of the rural church in the community, however, is vastly different, due to the more simple social structure of the rural group. This gives the church a more prominent part in the community life. We need to face some of these questions and to evolve a type of ministry which will meet these needs. Our church originated in a rural area and continues to remain predominantly so. We need to discover how to minister to this rural population.

Because of reasons for which we probably have not been responsible, urban life—and urban church life as well—has been set up as the ideal. Our church literature has been urban in its background. Our training, our teaching, our joking, our everything has ignored the rural church as a specific institution. Now comes a general awakening that rural life is not an offshoot from urban life. In fact, we are beginning to sense that just the reverse is true. Some realize that, from the larger viewpoint, rural life is still the ideal and should be the coveted mode of life. Likewise the rural church is beginning to come into its own in the minds of leading thinkers in this field. Rural sociology is a new science just beginning to take form.

And so, as a church, we begin to push our thinking into the possibilities of this extensive field. We are anticipating the training of ministry for this task. We are starting to search for competent young men and women who have a real love for rural life in their hearts, and who are willing to devote themselves to ministry in this field of activity.

Many questions must be answered. Many things must be studied. Why have a large number of rural churches been abandoned? Why have the young people left their native surroundings and gone to the city? What relationship is there between the productivity of the soil and the success of rural churches? What is the relationship of community organizations and projects to the rural church? Is the presentation of the “six principles” the extent of our missionary message to rural folk? Are our present one-room churches sufficient for rural activities? Is it possible to make rural church life such that young men and young women will voluntarily choose to remain in rural areas? Is the percentage of children and older folk greater in rural areas? If so, does our program meet that challenge? Who constitutes this rural population? How many are farmers, businessmen, professional men and women? Are we employing a type of ministry that has been developed for an entirely different type of life?

The trend just now, with what little research we have been able to make, seems to suggest that our first opportunities lie in the following:

1. Development of rural ministers who know and believe in rural life so completely that they are willing to give themselves to it.

2. Development of rural church plants that are suitable as community centers, both in size and quality.

3. Acceptance of the challenge for leadership in community affairs; viz., 4H Clubs, agricultural extension work, Parent-Teachers' Associations, community clubs, etc.

4. Development of a social order that will offer, among other things, financial assistance to worthy young people who desire to remain in rural areas.

Other opportunities will arise as we advance in this field, yet our activity must of necessity be limited in its beginning.

This is not a matter for a few committee meetings or General Conference legislation. It is a matter of education first and action later. In order to assist those who are interested in studying this question, we include a bibliography which offers at least a beginning. This is a very “readable” field. By that, we mean it is an interesting field in which to read—even for those with little or no sociological background. It is one of the most important lines of research that faces the church. Will we meet the challenge, or will we continue to ignore it until many more

What Is Achieved in the Laying on of Hands

By E. Y. HUNKER

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS is a first principle of the doctrine of Jesus Christ. It is likewise an ordinance and sacrament of his church. As such, it has the same force behind it as have baptism and the Eucharist. Because Divinity is back of it, intelligent reason is the basis of its being instituted. Consequently, its observance is mandatory in the spiritual administration of the church. Its usage and custom, based on divine authority, class it as a statute or law of the Lord. Like baptism, it is a fitting symbol, admirably and intelligently suited to man's nature and need of such objectivity as will enable him to visualize certain indispensable spiritual experiences and transactions vouchsafed through his moving in harmony with the gospel economy. It is, therefore, vitally important in spiritual experience, unfoldment, and stabilization.

The principle of the laying on of hands is like a tree-trunk, out of which spring forth six major branches or ordinances, viz.:

- (1) blessing of children,
- (2) ordination of ministers,
- (3) administration to the sick,
- (4) confirmation of baptized persons,
- (5) patriarchal blessing, (blessings by the evangelist), and
- (6) other occasional blessings.

The physical sense of touch-feeling is one, if not the most basic of the physical senses, by and through which concepts are formed, ideas objectified, and intelligence transmitted. A person may lose his sight, or hearing powers, and still, through the sense of feeling of form, vibration, and texture, develop proper concepts. Thus he may intelligently interpret, understand, and react. Helen Keller's experience and achievements verify this fact. Because of the place and play of the sense of touch in human experience, the hand shake is a vital and significant symbol for millions of people. This is mentioned in order to deepen our appreciation of what it is possible to achieve through the ordinance of the laying on of hands. The hymn, "The Touch of His Hand on Mine" is not mere silly sentimentalism. It expresses a need and a desire, rooted in deeply underlying fundamental traits inherent in human nature.

The human hand, marvelously designed and created, is an instrument of power and skill in craftsmanship, and is almost indispensable to man's success in the realm of the physical environment. By and through the hand are transmitted and expressed the creations of his mind and the welling emotions of his heart into sculpture, music, painting, building, and the cultivation and improvement of crops. Little wonder, then, that the hand has come to be a symbol of power, achievement, authority, and union. Edwin Markham asserted that there is enough evidence of creative intelligence in one joint of the thumb to put utterly to rout all the arguments of the atheists. The hand is, furthermore, employed much as a symbol of encouragement and support, to transmit strength, sympathy, and understanding.

The ordinance of the laying on of hands serves to objectify a connecting link between man and Deity and the fact of God's power being entrusted to divinely called ministers, who, by obedience and godly quality of life, stand in the stead of Christ as transmitters of heavenly gifts and blessings. Thus is vivified the concept of the reality of powers and beings in the generally unseen world.

Bearing all this in mind, we can better appreciate the purpose of this ordinance in its various phases. Particularly is this true when we consider the profound implication in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8, in that one of the duties of the elders of the church is "to confirm the church by the laying on of hands." For the word "confirm" is derived from the Latin confirmare: to make firm; to validate—give legal force to; to give assurance of the truth; to strengthen, as in an opinion or a habit; to establish—make enduring (Webster).

The following is achieved in the laying on of hands in the blessing of children:

1. A public expression of gratitude and justifiable pride in the miracle and blessing of a new life, complementing the estate of family and home;
2. A deepened sense of the "sacredness of childhood";
3. A sublimated sense of parental partnership with Deity in a most sacred stewardship over life and personality;

4. A realization of responsibility on the part of (a) the immediate family, (b) the church as the spiritual family, and (c) the priesthood who is "to feed the lambs."
5. An ordinance of dedication and pledge (a) of the child to God and God's purposes; (b) of the parent's energies and means to the stewardship of parenthood; and (c) of the church and its priesthood to the aid and support of the child and parents.
6. Humility of spirit in the recognition of duty to labor with God and Christ for the unfoldment and maturing of personality to highest usefulness as a citizen of the kingdom of God, and, consequently, as the best type of citizen and person in civic life.

The laying on of hands in ordaining ministers objectifies: 1. Man's acceptance of and submission to the divine call of God to him. 2. God's recognition of man's acceptance, and the sealing of the covenant. Doctrine and Covenant 83: 6, ". . . for whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies; they become the sons of Moses and of Aaron, and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom and the elect of God; and also all they who receive this priesthood receiveth me, saith the Lord, for he that receiveth my servants receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father, and he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom. Therefore, all that my Father hath shall be given unto him; and this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood. Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he can not break, neither can it be moved; but whoso breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come." 3. Dedication of the minister, together with his powers, energies, abilities—even his whole life—to labor for God for the sake of mankind; to bring men to Christ and, through Christ and the gospel, to perfection. 4. An obligation to holy living, intensified by the consciousness of the holiness of the work. This that the man of God may have "power" to represent God and minister for him.

"The rights of priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven: and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled, only upon the principles of righteousness, that they may be conferred upon us it is true, but when we undertake to cover our sins, to gratify our pride, vain ambition, or to exercise dominion or compulsion over the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold the heavens withdraw themselves, the Spirit of the Lord is grieved, then amen to the priesthood, or to the authority of that man."—Joseph Smith, Jr., in Times and Seasons, Volume 1. (Also in Unity, November, 1916.) This power is dependent, not so much on a high "I. Q.," or adroitness, shrewdness, or cleverness, as on an incorruptible goodness. A man is ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost in the one who ordains him.—Doctrine and Covenant 17: 12.

A consciousness of God's fatherhood, Christ's compassion, and a divine concern for human well-being is achieved in administration to the sick. This is not only a concern about suffering, but also about health. A full normal capacity to enjoy life—to receive and to return all possible—is not the lot of a person who is handicapped by either organic disease and pain, or spiritual discouragement and suffering based on functional disorder. There was a time when medical science considered man's body as something separate from man's mental entity and so treated disease on that basis. The Scriptures, however, have from the first declared that body and spirit properly integrated constitute the complete man. Today, medical science and psychiatry agree that body and mind are meant to be a unity, not separate entities. The greatest hope for well-being is when the person is a harmoniously adjusted being. In other words, when he has achieved wholeness. Jesus said to the woman who was healed by touching the hem of his garment, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

In this ordinance, then, we come to see the superior comprehension of God relative to all our needs and that the major concern of Deity has been to effect spiritual healing. Organic disease (illness caused by basic physical disorders) influences the mental and spiritual outlook and reaction. It is asserted, however, that more ailments are the result of personality maladjustments than of organic causes. Let the spirit and mind be adjusted, and often physical pain and incapacitation will vanish. A well-adjusted mind in a disabled body often will help a person to make a much better adaptation to life's situations than frequently is the case in which an organically sound body is sabotaged by a greatly disturbed and distracted mind. It is desirable, of course, that a sound mind should have habitation in a sound body. But of the two, it becomes apparent that a sound mind is the more vital. And we should be aware that a person who is maladjusted is sick and suffers. The general attitude on this score needs re-adjusting. We often contribute to the suffering of maladjusted persons by lack of intelligent, sympathetic ministry. Persons are sensitive beings, delicately constructed and adjusted. Sympathetic and understanding ministry—not pampering ministry—is needed. Christ had compassion on the suffering. He cast out "devils," and some of these maladjustments are devils. They furnish a condition that Satan uses to every disadvantage of and hurt to the sufferers.

In what way does the ordinance of laying on of hands have application in such situations? Here is found place for one of its most outstanding services. For often the basic need is the assurance of divine concern and the sense of the touch of the hand of the Great Physician. The laying on of hands by the servants of God, in humble and intelligent petition, makes a connecting link between the Heavenly Father and the affected person—an extension of God's and Christ's hands and power and blessing through the hands and person of the elder. It gives the sense of leaning on and being supported by the Everlasting Arms (Deuteronomy 33: 27). Often that is needed more than medicine. A wise old physician once asserted that in his practice a cheerful attitude and personal interest did his patients more good than all the medicine he prescribed.

In view of the mental or psychological factors involved, is there then any direct healing at all? Certainly! God's power is not restricted to psychological reaction and mental suggestion. Neither should it be concluded that because he does operate through these channels that it is any the less divine healing. God will employ every available legitimate agency at his command in his labors of love for his children. At times, he will combine these various agencies and focus them in particular instances, so that the concentrated power may help to pierce the armor of ill-forces about the person afflicted. This unifying of the best of divine forces and agencies is made available in the laying on of hands in administration. Prayer is helpful. Suggestion is helpful. Each has its place. Administration is a combination of both. There can be no effectual ordinance of laying on of hands without intelligent, sincere faith, wisdom, and fervent prayer.

An exceptionally valuable instruction is given to the church in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12. It involves a viewpoint beyond this life and an understanding of eternal things: "If they die they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me." Too many people pray for the sick on the basis of the sparing of the physical being for the sake of the physical and temporary alone.

God wants us to get the viewpoint of eternity.

Now let us be assured that when we are properly attuned to God, there is more than suggestion in administration. There is the working of the supreme power added to our own feeble powers, far over and above anything we can do. This fact has been repeatedly verified in the experience of the elders. We know it is true. We cannot always explain the how or why, but we do know that it happens. Something is achieved and the church is confirmed thereby.

Laying on of hands for confirmation of baptized persons achieves a completion of the steps of obedience which seal the baptismal covenant. "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost."—Acts 8: 17. In this, the process of the new birth nears completion—which is when the gift of the Holy Ghost is bestowed. This is not always experienced while hands are imposed nor always immediately afterward, though there are instances both ancient and modern in which it did so occur. At times, it is like a gift earned, but with the condition that it may be held in reserve until, in God's wisdom, the opportune occasion arrives for its utilization to the best and most telling advantage. There is achieved, furthermore, the sense and experience of entire forgiveness of sins—purged therefrom by the refining and cleansing process of "baptism with fire," co-ordinately with our full adoption by Deity. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption; whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Romans 8: 2, 14-17. "Did not our hearts burn within us?" is the way the disciples who walked with the risen Christ expressed it (Luke 24: 32). We may say, then, that in and through the laying on of hands of the elders is achieved the transmission of the most precious and significant of all gifts in earth—life, the gift of the Holy Spirit—without which the greatest of all gifts, eternal life, cannot be attained. The bestowal of the Holy Ghost brings to fruition the gifts of the Spirit: (a) enlightenment, knowledge, (b) comfort, (c) prompting, (d) strength, (e) revelation, (f) guidance, (g) testimony, (h) assurance, and (i) wisdom, to the end that the fruits of the Spirit, the Christian graces, may abound. The newborn babe in Christ, now emerged and in unreserved consecration before the altar of God, ready to respond to the call of the kingdom of heaven, further commits the eldership to aid and nurture this new life to its unfolding into the full bloom of spiritual maturity. There is also given herein, an expanded measure of the significance of the word "confirm" by the laying on of the hands of the elders.

Laying on of hands provides for the special work of the evangelist in conferring patriarchal blessings. This is no doubt intended by Deity to help "confirm" the church (collective body) in the larger import of the term. The calling of the evangelist to be "a father to the church" places him in a position of trust and influence to do much in "confirming" the church. This is likewise true of the purpose of "other occasional blessings," which may have been kept altogether too occasional, when Deity has intended a deeper and fuller significance of the ordinance of the laying on of hands of the eldership, in general, to truly "confirm" the whole church. As specified in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8, there appears to be a rather clear distinction indicated between the two statements that the elders are (a) "to confirm those [individual persons] who are baptized into the church, by the laying on of hands for the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost," and (b) "to confirm the church [collective body of previously confirmed persons] by the laying on of hands, and the giving of the Holy Ghost." It is possible that highly desirable, needful, and entirely legitimate blessings and "confirmings," available through the laying on of hands in the occasional field, await our utilization in conferring, to quote President Garver: (a) "assurance of divine grace to accompany one in his engagements, and (b) for the clearing vision, and (c) strength of heart to hold to the course laid out for him (d) with a view to his enduring to the end." Such blessings would without question do much to "confirm" the church. All of us who come to grips with the grim realities of the terrific impact of sin upon the spiritual life of our people can realize how much the church needs "confirming."

There is, then, in and through the ordinances stemming out of the principle of the laying on of hands a most excellent and fitting symbology that objectifies and achieves:

1. The reality of a connecting link between man and God.
2. The fact of God's operating through

- properly authorized human agents.
3. The extension of God's hands and power through human intermediaries.
4. The fact of Deity's unceasing concern for life to be at its best.
5. The bestowal of the Holy Ghost and diverse gifts of the Spirit for man's profit and salvation.
6. The adoption of the sincerely repentant and obedient into the fold and kingdom of God—into the greater family relationship.
7. A fuller, deeper moving, more intelligent adoration, worship, and service to the Maker.
8. The making steadfast or firm in the course of the new life.

All of which, like the reserve waters at the source of a mighty stream provide constant supply for the steady flow of the best of life-forces, drawn by the gravitation of God's eternal love and purpose to its eternal ocean home—the final fulfillment of divine objective and being—immortality and eternal life.

The movement and influence of the Holy Spirit may sometimes be experienced in an outpouring of mighty power that will penetrate and charge with divine fire and passion to the utmost fiber and cell of the physical man, and to the utmost reach of his spiritual entity. But, more generally, it will be shed forth upon the humble, sincere, diligent, and obedient children of the Lord in a gentle and quiet distillation like the dews of heaven that fall upon the fields in the silent watches of the night. This is made available to our generation, in its original measure of abundance, grace, and love, through the mighty workings of the Father in the restoration of the fullness of the gospel in these latter days.

Love Is a Gypsy

By LOUISE WRIGLEY

Love's gown is the mist of a rose dawn,
 Her hair is a moonbeam, airspun.
 The silvery strain of her laughter
 Is echoed where little brooks run.

Her swift gypsy feet swish through violets,
 Those first timid heralds of Spring.
 Crystal tears fill her eyes with deep dew pools
 Like those which to gentian hearts cling.

The daffodil's fragrance enfolds her
 The lily's pure heart is her home.
 Her smile is the glow from the meadow—
 The buttercup sea's golden foam.

Twilight's blue shadow her cloak is,
 The leaves are her lacy-meshed shade
 Her dark, sultry eyes hold an anthem
 Of brooding peace, as yet unplayed.

But her heart's a torch, kindled at dawning,
 Steady-burning, forever alight,
 A bright beacon to guide us by day-time
 And a warm, friendly glow in the night.

The Lord's Prayer

4. "Thy Kingdom Come"

By John W. Banks

This is the fourth in a series of meditations presented at the Appointee Institute held at Independence, August 28 to September 14, 1946. The first three appeared in the issues of January 18, January 25, and June 14.

Since man has had the capacity in higher varying degrees to be sensitive to the tug and pull of the universe (God's heart) about him, his prayer (the sincere desire of his heart) has been "Thy Kingdom Come." There seems to be in man an urge for a fuller and more complete life. This state of perfection, personal and social, he has symbolized in the term, "God's kingdom." That kingdom is ever a coming thing as life, public and private, is in the process of completing, fulfilling, and perfecting.

I'm thankful for that ever-present longing that seems to be at the center of our lives, to live closer to God and to receive his kingdom. We can be grateful for a God who, first of all, inspires us with his divine presence. For there could be no aspiration within our hearts for the beautiful, good, and true in life, or for the coming of God's kingdom, except for the inspiration of his divine initiative. While it is true that the kingdom is within us, it is also true that it is written into the very structure and make-up of the universe about us. God and all life are directed toward realizing the coming kingdom. The creative urge for a perfect life is in our mental and moral make-up, in society and the universe. As that creative urge (God's love) expresses itself, it draws, in a most magnetic way, our spirits, our lives, our society, our world, and our universe on to perfection. In the language of St. Augustine, "Thou hast made me for thyself, and I am restless until I rest in thee." All of God's creation is restless, in the very nature of things, until it rests in him. To rest in God is to rest in perfection or to attain unity with him, and to attain unity with him is to realize beauty in all life. Apostle John W. Rushton says, "realizing beauty is the synthesizing of unitary parts into a harmonious whole." We would call this social Zion. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

Only willful disobedience, indolence, and ignorance stand in the way of our success in kingdom-building efforts. These sins dull our sensitive powers of reception to light and power from on high.

It is for us, then, to develop keener sensitivity of mind and heart to God's impelling, loving spirit. Then, we will aspire to answer our own prayer, "Thy kingdom come," and shall most assuredly be inspired in our task. Jesus said: ". . . blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost." When we move toward God and feel his downward reach to us, there will ensue an increasing discontent with what we are and with what society now is. This, in turn, will cause us to revolt inwardly against both. The kingdom will then come in power and beauty in our lives and in the social, economic, and political life not only of our Zion communities but in the nations of the earth. ". . . let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, . . . that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ, therefore, let us become subject unto her laws." (Doctrine and Covenants 102:9.) The kingdom having come, all life will be sublimated and conformed to God's most holy and divine will.

We who endeavor to lead should pray very earnestly, "Thy Kingdom Come," and then strive in an equally earnest way to help God to answer our prayer.

The founders of the Restoration Movement were told to ". . . pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; . . . call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven . . . to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, . . . for thine is the honor, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 65.

What Is "Alcohol Abuse"?

There is alcohol abuse when people allow themselves an inferiority of performance and ability to work, or of lowered capacity for responsibility at times like these, from the consumption of alcohol which does not reveal itself in overt acts offensive to public order or private customs of life, but which renders them less efficient, whether driving a car or an aeroplane, working at a lathe or adding machine, or directing the work or discipline of others.

Such abuse is not that of the drunkard, or of the acute or chronic alcoholic, but of the men or women who drink as they believe in moderation but sufficiently to lower their level of performance below what they are capable of at their best.—Haven Emerson, M. D., Professor Emeritus, Public Health Practice, Alcohol Abuse a Public Health Problem.

WE GATHER

Amusing and thoughtful is this brightly pleasant little comedy of the family that decided to move into the regions of "the Center Place."

By Mae Elliot and Orpha Lorance

SCENE I

Setting: Living room stripped of everything but a few large articles of furniture. Some boxes are in sight.

Mother: (entering and sinking wearily into chair) I'm glad that room is done. This packing is getting me down.

Teen-age Daughter: No wonder. Getting ready to move in just one week is too much to expect. I don't know what father was thinking of.

Mother: Well, you know it isn't every day one gets such a good cash offer for a house, even in these times. It paid us to vacate quickly, you know. And after all, we've looked forward to moving to Lamoni for years.

Small Boy: (entering slowly, in doleful tone) I sure wish I liked beans. (He crosses room and moves chair, sits staring moodily out the window.)

Father: (from without) Where's my brown coat? I want to wear it on the train.

Mother: (rising abruptly) Why didn't you tell me? I'm almost sure I packed it away—but I can't remember just where. Let me see. Maybe—I think—I may have packed it with the bedding—that box near the hall door.

(Father goes out. There is a sound of creaking boards.)

Small Boy: (still staring out of the window, to no one in particular) I sure wish I liked beans.

Father: (appearing at door again) Nothing in that box but blankets and quilts, and I can't get them back in again.

Mother: (sighing) Well, I can't think where else it might be, unless it's in that black trunk. Odds and ends in the bottom, but I packed clothes in the top.

Father: (withdrawing, muttering) What a blessing it will be to get started, actually started.

Small Boy: (moving restlessly) I sure wish I liked beans.

Daughter: Why do you keep talking about beans? (Looks toward door and bursts out laughing as father enters wrapped in an Indian blanket, holding a feather duster at the top of his head.) Father, what are you doing?

Father: In that old trunk were ten coats, none of them mine. I did find this feather duster though. I thought maybe with these feathers and this blanket I might gather to Zion as a Lamanite.

Mother: (buckling) I expect I'd better look for your coat. (She rises.)

Daughter: What coat does he want?

Mother: His brown coat.

Daughter: Oh, I know where that is. It was lying on the bed, so I hung it back in the closet. I'll get it.

Father: Never mind. Just so I know where it is. (Apologetically to mother): I'm sorry I can't get this stuff repacked, either. It just doesn't seem to fit in right again.

Mother: That's all right. I'll fix it again as soon as I rest a bit.

Daughter: (sinking back into chair again) We all need a little rest. I wish I had time to visit all my friends. I'm going to miss them a lot.

Small Boy: I sure do wish I liked beans.

Daughter: (Half-amused, half-irritated) Why do you keep saying that?

Small Boy: Beans is what we'll have to eat in Zion.

Mother: Whatever gave you such an idea as that?

Small Boy: Chester Brown told me. He was at reunion several years ago with his Aunt Mary. They were just beginning to eat dinner and Brother Cheville—he's one of the big leaders down there and has a lot of say in things—well, he stuck his head in at the door and called, "The Saints are gathering in goodly numbers. Better open the beans."

(Everyone laughs.)

Daughter: But that doesn't mean we'd all have to eat just beans.

Small Boy: Chester said it did.

Daughter: Chester is a big tease. He's about twice your age, he should be ashamed to torment a small boy. We're to have milk and honey at least; it's a land flowing with milk and honey.

Mother: I expect I'll continue to cook the same kind of meals you've always been used to eating.

Small Boy: Well, that's a load off my mind. (He slips from chair and goes out of the room.)

Mother: (thoughtfully) I wonder if we don't all have a few erroneous ideas about Zion? I hope I can fit in and adjust myself in the proper way.

Daughter: You'd fit in with the very best of them anywhere.

Father: People are about the same there as here—only better, of course.

Daughter: That's what worries me; probably there's nothing to do there but to be good, and they've had a lot of practice at it. I am trying hard not to use slang—I hope I won't forget; I'd like my conversation to be as dignified and solemn as any of them. It won't be. I can't think we'll have much fun, though.

Small Boy: (entering with an armful of comic books) You forgot to pack these.

Mother: (smiling) I really don't think we should take them with us. People in Lamoni probably don't read them at all. But you may take Henry Anderson's Book of Mormon picture book.

Small Boy: I'm thankful for that, anyway. I wish he'd make some more books like that.

Father: I wonder—is my umbrella in the closet where my coat is? I want to be sure to take it.

Small Boy: Why?

Father: Why does one carry an umbrella?

Small Boy: But it doesn't rain in Iowa. Zion probably doesn't need rain.

Father: What gave you that idea?

Small Boy: Well, I read in a book at school that the farmers in Iowa do dry farming.

Daughter: (giggling) Dry farming means they don't irrigate. It probably rains now and then.

Mother: "The rain falls on the just and the unjust—"

Small Boy: That doesn't seem quite fair.

Daughter: I'm glad I like to knit and embroider things. At least I'll have something to do beside go to church. Though, of course, I'll enjoy that, too. I wish I could have a visit with our pastor before we go. Do you think it would be all right to call on him this morning, father?

Father: I'm afraid not, dear. We can all write him a letter from Lamoni. He's pretty busy at the store right now.

Small Boy: They say at Lamoni the pastor is just like a missionary. He doesn't have a thing to do but go around all the time and see to it that people are good. And the bishop just sits and looks on while his secretary takes in tithing.

People line up and give him their inventories and tithing.

Daughter: That reminds me—I still owe seven cents tithing. Should I pay it here or wait till we get to Zion?

Small Boy (in alarmed tone) Better pay it quick—they won't let you in if you aren't paid up. Will they, father?

Father: I don't know where you get some of your ideas. But we'd better finish packing. (To mother) I packed the things in the bathroom.

Mother: The bathroom!

Father: Yes, and I cleared off the dresser top, too, since all those things were similar.

Mother: My comb, powder, hair pins, and all? What did you do with them? Where did you put them?

Father: Why? It doesn't matter, does it? I put them in with the hammers and other tools. You have a comb in your handbag, haven't you?

Small Boy: There's the van! They're coming for our furniture!

Mother: Oh, dear, I didn't expect the movers for an hour yet? I'll have to rush.

SCENE II

(Same furniture arranged slightly different. Daughter sits at desk writing. Mother is at her left sewing. Boy is on divan counting marbles. Father comes in door, center.)

Father: Well, how do you like Lamoni so far?

Mother: I'll like it better when I get the house tidied up the way I want it. I've been asked to take part in so many things and met so many people, I'm almost bewildered.

Small Boy: I sure wish I'd brought those comic books along. I coulda traded them for marbles. The kids here like funnies the same as I do. And I had some different ones. Lamoni is just like back home.

Mother: It is just about the same as any town—except—

Father: Except for subtle differences.

Daughter: Mother, will you please listen to my letter and see if I've left anything out? I'm writing to Mavis.

"Dearest, most beloved friend of my past: As I ponder upon the joys of yesterday, I think continually of you and my old friends with excruciating longing."

Small Boy: (with emphasis) Excuse me! (He goes out.)

Daughter: (after a little pause) "I know, Mavis, that you will want to hear all about our new home. It is neither magnificent, nor yet ugly. It is not a palace, nor is it a hovel."

Mother: Dear, why don't you just say it is a nice little cottage?

Daughter: And have them think I haven't developed a bit in the two weeks

I've been here? I wanted to choose words that were stately and dignified. (reads again) "Our house is rather small with only six rooms, but only one family lives in it, namely us. It is painted white and has green trees around it and shrubs and a wide, green lawn. The view out to the west is simply excruciating."

Father: You don't mean excruciating, do you? Excruciating means, among other things, painful.

Daughter: I meant it was so beautiful it filled me with pain to look at it.

Small Boy: (reappearing in doorway and entering room) What's painful?

Mother: Your sister is talking about the view in the western sky.

Small Boy: Isn't that the truth? It's been full of rain clouds almost ever since we came.

Daughter: I had reference to the sunsets, however—over the western hills.

(Reads on) "This is a farming country around here. Lamoni itself, of course, is a town and when college is going on, several hundred young people are here, too. I saw one boy that looks like Frank Sinatra. He belongs to the summer crew.

But outside the town you can see fields of waving grasses and corn starting to come up, long rows of it. It is an inspiring sight, though they say we have had too much rain. My brother is changing his mind about dry farming! Mother says it rains on the just and the unjust, and I guess it must. Now I'll proceed to tell you about the people. We've met a lot of the town people, and they're just lovely.

There are meetings on Sunday and prayer meetings Wednesday night and, of course, Zion's League meetings for the young folks. Mother feels quite at home in the women's department. Thursday nights daddy drives out to the Old Folks' Home and helps with the music and so on. They have asked me to help some in the preparation school. I have joined the Girl Scouts and my brother is a Cub Scout.

We are having a big Fourth-of-July celebration, and next fall there will be a horse show. And, of course, I mustn't forget the reunion. There are no policemen here, and you can go most anywhere, night or day, without feeling afraid. Lots of people never lock their doors. I don't think there is anything bad here except maybe a little gossip."

Mother: (interrupting, letting sewing fall into lap) You know, that has worried me some.

Father: I grew up in a small town. My father used to say, a small town was a place where nothing ever happened, but what you heard made up for it. He also said for me never to believe anything evil I heard and only half of what I saw.

There is bound to be gossip everywhere, I guess. I think only a few people take part in the gossip here. You mustn't let it worry you or weaken your faith.

Daughter: Do you want to hear the rest of my letter?

Father: Of course, excuse me.

Daughter: (reading again) "I have had so much fun since coming here.

There is always something going on, and the town young people are friendly and I feel at home. Sometimes I think—suppose I had my choice and could either go back there or stay here, which would I do? It would be excruciating."

Mother: Do you have to use that word so many times?

Daughter: (firmly) I like it. (reads again) "But I want you to know that in all this wide, wicked, weary world, wherever I go, I shall never forget you—"

Small Boy: (rolling eyes, melodramatically) Don't tell me!

Daughter: Mother, make him quit. He can completely spoil any moment of beauty.

Mother: (smiling) Let's not interrupt again.

Daughter: (picking up letter and resuming) "And if you ever can come to Lamoni to live, I shall be excruciatingly happy." And now, father, is there something you want me to tell Mavis to tell her father?

Father: No, thank you. I prefer to write my own letters. (In more serious tone) I think I shall write him soon, however. I'd like to tell him there is a subtle difference and really a great one, in living here. Even when you pass a man on the street, there is the consciousness that he has the same aims and ideals you have. There is unity of purpose and feeling that colors everything.

Mother (thoughtfully) I think I am most thankful for the helps in family living. So many wholesome things for children to do and learn.

Small Boy: I'd like you to put something in your letter for me. Tell Mavis to tell Billy that I have a new friend here. His name is Dick, but we call him

Spud. He goes around with me. We play together all the time and we've had only three fights. We went to the last potluck supper together. Boy, what a meal! Fried chicken, pie and cake and ice cream and lots of other stuff and (with a satisfied grin) NO BEANS!

Castillo, which Manager Kenneth Graham informs us will be used as a frontispiece in the revision of Brother Hanson's book, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans.

Life fixes Mayan civilization as having begun in A. D. 317; does not speculate about it, but states definitely that it began in that year. It does not attempt to go back of that date. The article was written by Sylvanus Griswold Morley, who, Life says, studied the Mayas for forty-two years. He is an associate of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Says Morley: "It was a brilliant civilization, and it lasted through 1,100 years and two great empires. Yet for all its brilliance, the Maya civilization was unable to cope with the forces that brought it into decline and, finally, into collapse."

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT

At the recent conference of the New York District, the retiring district president, Dr. P. L. Weegar, gave one parting challenge to the district. Dr. Weegar had been district president for many years. Always enthusiastic and anxious to see the work of God taken to others, now that he no longer has the administrative burden of the district work, he is still ready to work. "I challenge anyone present here to tell more people about this church this coming year than I do." Very soon there was a response. Here and there were those who accepted the challenge to tell the story of hope and salvation to others. One young woman who attended the recent General Conference told of her experience with her relatives, how she had talked with her sister for a number of hours about the church, its beliefs, and its purposes, and her sister was asking for baptism before she left.

The church needs to accept the challenge. Let the army of witnesses increase in each locality, and we will be happily surprised by the number of those who will be won. How many will accept the challenge this year?

V. REVELATION—ITS UNITY AND CONTINUITY

When one studies the process of revelation in Israel against the background of history, he is amazed to find how clearly the prophets saw into and beyond the social situation in which they lived. While they had a Word of God for specific time, and from their own peculiar vantage points, yet they state the principles which have endured, and which have come down to us so that we today recognize them, at least nominally, as providing the foundation of all stable and enduring social life.

Turning from the prophets to Jesus, we find him taking his stand upon their message, although greatly enlarging and intensifying it. The more we study the saying of the Master, the more we are driven to the conclusion that he is more than the subject of their prophecies. He is, we feel, the author of them. Whatever greatness they had was made possible by and in him. And so, we conclude in our moments of deepest insight and devotion, that "before Abraham was, I am," was merely a statement of simple truth upon his part.

Christ does not attempt to argue or philosophize about the existence of God. He sets himself the more difficult task of revealing him to his contemporaries. The teaching of the prophets about Jehovah is out-distanced by Jesus, and carried on beyond the limits which they had explored. Jesus said Jehovah was a Father, and etched in history forever the type of Father Jehovah was by showing man the kind of Son the Father owned and vindicated. No finer expression of family fidelity has ever been conceived. Material things, as he showed clearly, including the physical body and the whole world of material objects, must be used by man as a stewardship brought forth by the obligation of filial love in the family association. Things must be used to promote fraternity and equality among all who are destined to be sons of God and brothers of Christ. Whenever love of things stifles the "enthusiasm of humanity" which Christ reflected and which endows man's true nature, ritualism and formalism become superstition.

The words of Jesus, we find, seemed to possess in them the power of association with man's conscience, correcting and enlightening and inspiring man and eventually lifting him above the sordid and the mean life he had inherited. In the lives of those who heard, the words of Jesus set in motion powers through which they could act toward each other as Christ had acted toward them. Charity, the great dynamic of the new order prophesied by those of old, is a fruitage of the revelation of Christ.

So deep and so abiding was this experience that Paul, a Jew skilled in Hebraic philosophy, and who, before his conversion, believed in one God beside whom there was none other, found no confusion in his own mind in ascribing to Jesus Christ the attributes of God. It did no violence to his monotheism to put Christ in the place of Jehovah. He could freely observe that "God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

VI. REVELATION AND CONSCIENCE

Revelation appeals to conscience. Conscience is that power within us which enables us to be grafted in to the life which flows from God. While the prophets claim that the word of God is given to them, and not created by them, they assume that there exists in mankind as normally constituted a faculty for recognizing the authority of their message—something akin to God himself. Conscience, that "stern daughter of the voice of God," is the "lamp of the eternal, flashing into man's inmost soul." Seneca speaks of conscience as "a holy spirit residing in us, the guardian and observer of our good and evil deeds." Conscience and reason both render man able to apprehend and recognize the voice of God when it is uttered. We must admit, of course, that conscience is a matter of education and environment, as well as representing deep-seated racial inheritance. It is possible so far to corrupt it that it becomes useless in the acquisition of the truth. But the normal man is impressed with the image of the Creator, and has the power, through conscience, of achieving the divine character, although the power be latent. This image comes to life, as it were, when exposed to the spirit of revelation and the latent possibilities become actual. In the Phaedo there is a moving passage, showing a friend of Socrates urging the paramount requirement that, in the absence of divine words, man should approach the truth as best he can with his whole reason and conscience. They were discussing immortality:

It seems to me, Socrates, as to you also, I fancy, that it is very difficult, if not impossible in this present life to have clear knowledge concerning such subjects; but that, on the other hand, it is the mark of a faint-hearted spirit to desist from examining all that is said about them in every way, or to abandon the search so long as there is any chance of light anywhere. For on such subjects one ought to secure one of two things, either to learn or discover the truth, or, if this be impossible, at least to get the best of human argument (words) and the hardest to refute, and relying on this, as on a raft, to sail the perilous sea of life, unless one were able, more securely and less perilously, to make one's journey on a safer vessel—upon some divine word.—Plato, Phaedo, 85 C. D.

Thus, while reason and conscience, unassisted, cannot find God, man does have the power to recognize him when he is revealed. In referring to ancient times, the Scripture has it that "Adam heard the voice of God from the garden." Cast out from the divine presence, man yet retains in his being a racial memory, derived from a common origin, of times when he was with his Creator.

"Ye were also in the beginning with God."

This fact, according to the prophetic point of view constitutes at once both the possibility for man's salvation and for his condemnation. Salvation, if he responds to the divine light, and condemnation as he fails so to do.

The nineteenth century prophet has given an exposition of this same truth in the following language:

And now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and everyone that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God, even the Father; and the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, which is confirmed upon you for your sakes, and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world: and the whole world lieth in sin, and groaneth under darkness and under the bondage of sin: and by this you may know they are under the bondage of sin, because they come not unto me; for whoso cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin; and whoso receiveth not my voice is not acquainted with my voice, and is not of me; and by this you may know the righteous from the wicked, and that the whole world groaneth under sin and darkness even now.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7.

Many years ago Augustine said, "Thou hast made us for thyself, and we are restless until we rest in Thee." The prophets assumed that man has within him the faculty for recognizing and responding to the voice of God; and that man has not done so, on the widest scale and in the long course of history, presupposes the doctrine of agency; which is also part of the prophetic faith, about which we shall have more to say later.

Trouble, in itself, is always a claim on love.

Presenting: Charles Johnson

The first in a series of personality sketches of Auditorium employees

By BILOINE WHITING

"Nursemaid to the Auditorium" might be the title for Charles Johnson, otherwise known as the building superintendent. Charlie, with his crew of ten men, keeps the Auditorium, Stone Church, Rest Haven, and other church properties in repair and good running order.

Under his supervision comes everything from a stopped-up sink to the roof of the Auditorium, which, he says, "is my biggest problem."

Charlie handled some big build-ings when he had his own construction business in Minnesota, but he had never worked on a building with the peculiarities of the Auditorium.

For instance, there's the leaking roof over the First Presidency's office.

"It's only because the building isn't finished," he said. "You see, there are expansion joints in the roof that allow for swelling in the heat, and . . ." Here he went off into the intricacies of the construction of the building that somehow escaped your reporter. At any rate, until the dome is finished, Charlie and his men must coat the roof every three months to keep the presidents' desks dry.

One of his recent jobs has been revamping the electric wiring in the building.

"We arrange and wire the loud speakers every possible way to try to improve the acoustics for conference, but I guess that too will have to wait till it's completed. When the main auditorium is finished with acoustical plaster and tile, we should be able to hear very well."

Being completed now are six new restrooms, several offices, and a new library room, and the installation of a new boiler.

"That boiler should cut down the coal bill," he said. "We burn six carloads of coal every winter now."

Besides heating and caring for the offices, Charlie has as many as eleven banquets a month, scout meetings, and church school classes to prepare for.

The F. B. I. gave him a lapel pin for identification when President Truman spoke in the Auditorium. Charlie also says he enjoyed the visit of Ex-governor of Minnesota Harold G. Stassen.

When April 6 arrives, it's not the conference crowds that trouble him, he says, but the loose candy wrappers, chewing gum, and lost children.

"I don't blame the kids though, because when I first came, I couldn't get my directions straight. North will always be east to me in the Auditorium."

Before coming to Independence he had served as associate pastor at Minneapolis for six years and as pastor for four and one-half years. "We tried something when I was pastor in Minneapolis that might work here in the Auditorium," he said. "For months up there we had been trying to get the church basement finished. I gave pep talks and preached sermons about it, but the adults just weren't interested in repairing the basement. Then one Sunday I asked Lydia Wight, our church school superintendent, to move the children's classes upstairs and have the adults meet in that basement. You know, they didn't meet there more than twice before they started to finish it.

"I just wonder how that would work in the Auditorium."

Preparation for the Temple

By D. B. Sorden

Text: "And David said, Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries; I will therefore now make preparation for it. So David prepared abundantly before his death."—I Chronicles 22: 5.

THE THOUGHT of a holy temple erected to the Lord inspires men's minds. Although we are talking about Solomon's Temple, the man responsible for it was David. But David had done things against the will of God and was not permitted to build the temple. David had ordered a numbering of the men of Israel, that he might know how many fighting men he could count on in another war. This was displeasing to God who sent an angel of destruction to immediately reduce the number of these men. Many thousands were soon killed and David quickly and thoroughly repented, requesting God's vengeance to be turned on himself and his family. God ordered the destruction stopped, and on this spot where the deaths stopped, God commanded David to build an altar.

Some men always take life at its narrowest dimensions. They do as little as possible. Their constant thought is how little will suffice. But real saints and heroes are of another mind; their question is not how little but how much they can give. They take life at its largest and its best and expand it into uncommanded meanings. This was what David did, and so instead of merely an altar which the Lord commanded, David at once wanted to build a temple. He wanted to do more than was required of him. While God did not permit David to build the temple, the prophet of the Lord said to him: "It was good that it was in thine heart." David was near his grave when the brave words of our text were uttered: "And David said, Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So David prepared abundantly before his death."

I want to point out some truths found in this verse. First, there is a disabling power in past sins. David was a very successful man. No one would think of calling his life a failure. From being a shepherd to becoming the great king who had given incalculable service to Israel was quite a step. But, despite all of his success, his hands were stained with blood and he was forbidden to build the temple to the Lord. The plan that he hoped would crown his life was frustrated because of the sin of a past day. This fact was seen long before David's time, when, because he had grumbled and was impatient, Moses was not permitted to enter the promised land. His sin, like that of David's, was forgiven, yet crowning all of his service to Israel was denied him, and he never set foot in the Caanan of his hopes. The thing that barred his entrance was his past sin.

We know how sin can make utter ruin of a life. The best of men can forfeit much during the brief time when they neglect God. A second truth we want to consider this morning is that we must have lofty estimates of what we undertake. David said the house of the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and glory throughout all countries. Old age had not chilled the enthusiasm of David. It had not made him cynical or selfish. In his mind, nothing could be too splendid to be lavished on the house of the Lord, for which he was largely going to pay but not be able to build. David was taking no light or laughing view of his life's task. Others might build cheaply, but not David. Jesus always had a lofty estimate of his own calling. He was building for God. Deep in our hearts should burn the idea that we are builders for God.

Another thought worth mentioning found in the text is that true service may be unrecognized. David made magnificent preparations for the temple—iron, nails, fine gold, cedars of Lebanon. Without the labors and the wealth of David, the temple would never have reached its later glory. Yet no one ever called it David's temple; it was always known as the Temple of Solomon. When men came from afar to view its wonders, it was Solomon whom they praised, not David. The truly great service, that of preparation, may be unrecognized in the judgment of the world.

Perhaps we cannot all do great or glorious things, but we can all help prepare the way for these great things. There is not a good thing we do that does not prepare the way for something greater. There is not a cross we bear that shall not be of service after our work is done. Only, we must not be eager for applause. When the temple of the ages is completed, may we have had a part in its erection, though our names are not mentioned.

It is not marriage that fails; it is people that fail. All that marriage does is to show them up.—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

Busy Groups of Women Throughout the Church

The following report of activities of the women's groups of the Central Los Angeles Church was sent in by Halloween Liberto, secretary.

We have a number of working and faithful members in our women's department at Central Church in Los Angeles. At the present, there are four groups. The Fidelis Group is composed of young mothers who give programs, socials, and luncheons. The Myosotis Group is composed of business women. They recently donated new toys for the nursery. The Ladies Aid is composed of industrious workers who do many helpful things. The Prayer and Study Group visits and looks after the needs of sick members seeing that cards of cheer are sent to all.

Brother W. W. Powers, a very fine teacher, is in charge of classwork. At present, we are using Restoration, A Study in Prophecy by Brother Elbert A. Smith as a text.

All groups are busy sewing for the bazaar, and a number of articles are being collected for a white elephant sale. A display of dolls is also being made.

In four months, the penny drive has brought in $205, which will be used to purchase a new gas range. This will enable us to have more suppers at the church to raise necessary funds. The friendly visiting program is another highlight in our program.

We meet quarterly for business, luncheons, and a program of entertainment; the various groups take turn being in charge.

The nursery has been enlarged, beds, play pens, and linens have been donated by the women's department.

We have also adopted two families in Holland, which we supply with food and clothing.

With Sister Izetto Sletto as department leader, we are looking forward with anticipation to a richer, fuller year of accomplishments.

When Sister Harold Velt returned from the Central Michigan Reunion, where she had been teacher of women's classes two summers ago, she told me of the good work done by the women under the supervision of Mrs. Byron Doty, district leader, and of the almost unbelievable amount of money the ladies had raised at their bazaars. When Sister Doty attended General Conference the following year, I asked her to write an article telling how this was accomplished. She has kindly sent in the following details.

In October, 1939, at a conference of the Central Michigan District held at Coleman, I was chosen leader of the department of women. At that meeting, the annual Liahona Park Reunion bazaar was approved. After the conference, we visited the groups throughout the district, and all were in favor of the project.

Our first attempt was made at the 1940 reunion, at which time $121.62 was taken in. This appeared to be a very feeble beginning, but all concerned desired to make it better the following year. A total of $359.00 was raised in 1941. In 1942 the amount grew to $437.21. The money received during these three years was applied to the improvement fund. In addition to sewing for the bazaars, the women contributed the following for the missionary cottage which we were hoping to build: eleven quilts, sixteen sheets, two sheet-blankets, seventeen pairs of pillow slips, two bedspreads, one throw blanket, five pairs of pillows, eight rugs, eleven quilt protectors, fifty-seven bath towels, twenty-two wash cloths, and two dresser scarves.

In 1943 and 1944, it was decided the proceeds should be applied to a fund for the erection of a missionary cottage. Five hundred forty two dollars was raised the first year, and $802 the second year. The women also sent $300 to the Sanitarium for the equipping of a room, besides linen of various kinds. During the years mentioned, more women became interested, and more groups were organized.

Once again the ladies decided to change their objective, this time to the finishing of the main auditorium. At the 1945 reunion the almost unbelievable amount of $1,025.53 was counted.

In 1946, the objective went through another change; this time the amount raised was to help build a young people's auditorium. Because of the shortage of materials and other hindrances, the total intake was only $925.25.

We would not have the readers of this article think that money is our only interest. At each reunion inspirational classes were held for all women.

Many will want to know what articles were made to bring such results. Every member was asked to make something of her own choosing or to give money. Articles of every kind were made including the following: aprons, dresses for women and children, slips and panties for children, baby diapers, comforters, quilts, quilt-protectors, coat hangers, embroidery work, badges and bookmarks, crocheted articles, purses, flowers, aprons, edging for pillowcases, chair sets, vanity sets, rugs, cushions, souvenirs of shells and birch wood, knitted baby sets, booties, sweaters and bonnets, mittens for both adults and children, shoe-bags, dish towels, stuffed toy animals, and surprise packages.

In fact, anything that could be found at a bazaar anywhere could be found at our bazaars. Several groups at different times sent money instead of handmade articles; others raised money through dime books, while still others brought homemade ice cream to sell. The spirit of Zion was manifested in everything that was made and everything that was done.

If there are any questions, I shall be glad to answer them. Address me at 2010 Bay Street, Midland, Michigan.

A Need Fulfilled

Many of the more vigorous and capable workers in the church are found among the young married couples, who are often denied the privilege of making a specific contribution because of the demands of their families.

For some time there has been a growing demand for a Sunday nursery in Stone Church where children under kindergarten age might be cared for during church school and the 11 o'clock service.

To answer this need, one has been established at the corner of Kansas Street and River Boulevard under the able supervision of Mrs. Mae Lockhart.

To make it self-sustaining, Mrs.

The Essence of Life

Mrs. Mae Lockhart and daughter, Mary Beth

Lockhart is offering additional service to the women of Independence by operating it through the week on a pre-kindergarten basis.

A clean, shady yard has been fenced in for supervised play periods. The homelike appearance of the inside of the house lends a desirable atmosphere for mealtime and rest periods.

Mrs. Lockhart has had previous experience in day nursery work in Kansas City, having served in the University of Kansas hospital day nursery, The Plaza nursery, and the Westside nursery. In addition to this, she has had one year of training at the Kansas City Teacher's College.

The nursery is a nonprofit, self-supporting institution designed primarily to enable young parents to participate in the work of the church, both as students and as teachers.

It is operated by a board of management and is sponsored by the women's department of Stone Church.

For as one star another far exceeds,

So souls in heaven are placed by their deeds.—Robert Greene,
A Maiden's Dream.

If death is the ultimate end of all men, as some believe, then it would seem there is no purpose in the creation of man and that, perhaps after all, creation is but a series of accidents rather than design in the evolution of matter.

But we who embrace the teachings of Christ, believe there is too much wisdom in the order of things throughout the infinite reaches of space to doubt the fact that back of it all is a wise and intelligent Creator whom we call God. We believe there is a wise purpose in all the acts of creation. We believe man was created for a definite purpose—and we are interested in that purpose, because WE ARE MAN. We are interested in the intrinsic values of this life, as well as in the life to come. We seek to comprehend God's purposes in us, because therein lies the solution to objective living.

We of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints believe man to be the finest creation of God, predestinated by him to become his sons by adoption through Jesus Christ (Ephesians 1: 3-5); and that they who overcome (Revelation 21: 7) will dwell in his presence and be the Church of the Firstborn (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4). We believe "to overcome" means the refinement of character and the true exercise of the laws of love as taught by our Lord.

We further believe that such as can overcome will be given the powers of sonship, and will "see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fullness and of his grace"; and that these "he makes equal in power, and in might, and in dominion." (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7) THIS IS THE ESSENCE OF LIFE FOR US.

A Vital Religious Philosophy

Number 34 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

By J. A. Koehler

IF SOMETHING should obstruct your breathing for even a minute, your body would make its hardest fight to get air in and out of your lungs. If you were denied fluids for any great length of time, you would cry out for water! Deny any normal person the things that are absolutely requisite to life, and he will begin (at least his body will) to put up a fight for life. For self-preservation—which means the preservation of life—is the first law of nature.

Vital affairs are not the concern of only some categories of human beings; they are the concern of all. For the nature of all men is such that their lives depend primarily on the satisfaction of vital needs. Religious man or not, if he has a normal mind and a healthy body, if life is desirable to him, he will have a care about vital affairs. Whatever the differences in men's views respecting vital affairs, they are the primary necessities of all, religious man or not.

In the beginning of man, the struggle for life was probably a struggle with natural forces—with wind and wave and weather. It is still necessary to resort to natural forces to sustain life. But the great problem of life today lies in the social world. As civilization marched on, people became more and more dependent on social arrangements for the preservation and enrichment of life. To order social relations aright has come to be a very vital problem.

You see evidences of that truth on every hand. Labor unionism—which is an endeavor to improve the relations of employers and employees; which are social relations—is part of that evidence. Go on up the line of human relations until we come to the business of the U. N. A., and from beginning to end we see evidences that vital affairs have come to be social affairs.

Now, that is simply to say that we satisfy our vital wants today through the conduct of social affairs. The truth is that industry, matrimony, and government—which are the primary vital affairs—have been the first concerns of man ever since there were any peoples. Industry is a social affair because "human" life cannot be promoted except through social arrangements. And that means that social affairs are at once vital affairs.

From the point of view of Latter Day Saints, it is significant that the first interests of the genius of Bible religion—of prophetic Judaism and Messianic Christianity, that is; which, to us, is the true religion—it is significant, we say, that the first interests of true religion were and are vital interests. The first requirement of that religion was then, as we believe it is now, to conduct the primary affairs of all peoples—which are industry, matrimony, and government—in accordance with the will of God. It is required of God that vital affairs shall be grounded ethically, righteously; otherwise economic endeavor—which is vital endeavor—will not be efficacious. Jesus said that our first concern in the conduct of economic affairs, or in our endeavors to satisfy vital wants, should be the "righteousness" of God's Kingdom; which means the righteousness of human living together, the righteousness of economic life. The social philosophy of true religion is a vital philosophy.

I said that the normal man wishes to preserve life. But while all have a care about this life, the man who really has faith in true religion has a care about the next life, too. And this care about what the condition of man shall be in eternity, if there were no other reason, makes true Christian philosophy a vital philosophy. What is the reason? Simply this, that what the future has in store for us depends on our conduct of the vital affairs of the present.

Food, medicine, and all such vital affairs—these, said Jesus, are the affairs in the conduct of which we shape the future. And that is what the modern prophet said: "If ye will that I give unto you a place in the celestial Kingdom"—if you will, that is, that the future life shall be to your liking—you must conduct the vital affairs of the present life aright as in the sight of God. Like prophetic Judaism and Messianic Christianity, Restorationism is a vital religious philosophy.

"The sting of death is sin," said St. Paul in his epistle to the Corinthians. Not the sin, especially, of having given a sick person arsenic instead of quinine, through ignorance or want of caution. But the sin of making money a god, and such like, so that in vital affairs generally we do what is morally wrong; we choose to live by "bread" and refuse to live by "every word of God." We choose the unrighteousness of imperialism and bureaucracy and government by proxy and the rest, rather than the morally right way of governing industrial affairs—which Jesus called "the righteousness of the kingdom."

The time of death is a matter of comparatively little concern to the believer in true religion who has conducted himself aright in vital relations. What is of comparatively much greater concern is that, in the next life, because of the immorality of this life, there shall be "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth," or "everlasting punishment."

The philosophy of true religion is a vital philosophy, because the ends of true religion may not be reached except through devotion to "right" doing in vital relations. That end is personality. Call it the perfection of the moral nature or the sanctification of the soul or "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" or Christian manhood or whatever you choose to call it. The history of man abounds in evidences that the manner of conduct of vital affairs, the ways in which persons and peoples get their livings, or sustain life and seek to enrich it, has a direct bearing on personality or the cultivation of the soul. There is no question about it, we know positively that the instincts of man tend to manifest themselves in accordance with the stage-setting of the individual's life. That stage-setting is society. And the principal affairs of men in society are vital.

From what many persons call "practical" considerations, it is necessary that there should be a vital religious philosophy. Look over the political records of even the best men you know, and you should see indications that only religious convictions and sentiments of righteousness in vital relations have power to restrain persons generally from yielding to temptations which bear heavily on the vital interests of peoples.

Who will deny that the proper way to live this life—the proper conduct of vital affairs—is the way which promotes man's well-being and happiness here? And that promoting of human well-being here is the only guarantee there can be that religion is the way to secure the interests of the hereafter. Religion can have no way of demonstrating its capacity to promote the eternal life except by making this temporal life an implementation of a vital religious philosophy.

There are no evidences that a religion which is not a philosophy of vital interests accords with the requirements of man's nature and being. There are no evidences that such a religion is a true religion.

What Are Your Assets?

By L. W. Hastings

What would anyone of us have left were our material possessions swept away?

Explosions, tornadoes, high waters, fires, and transportation wrecks have left quite a few people destitute of this world's goods in recent weeks. Some have lost loved ones, too. For these reality is harsh.

What remaining assets do they have? That depends largely upon their objectives. What are yours? Strictly material? Or do you give some thought and time to being a genial, helpful neighbor? And do you consider the Master, Jesus, and his philosophy of life of any importance?

A few years ago, a dairyman was caught in the wake of the Ohio River overflow. From his youth, this dairyman had been raising and improving a choice strain of Jersey cattle. In his early fifties, his herd had an estimated value of forty thousand dollars.

Into the improvement of these choice animals he had invested years of scientific study, planning, work, and a part of his heart. Now the product of his work was swept away. He was very much depressed. What was the use?—he must have thought. It might happen again.

In his hours of grief, he had overlooked his remaining assets. He hadn't, of course, counted on drawing from this treasury. Perhaps he wasn't even conscious that he had built up security with which to meet that terrible day.

The dairyman's land and buildings had lost little of their previous value. But their worth was minute in comparison to his other assets. Having imparted a portion of his heart to his home and another portion to his community, he was in good standing with his companion and his neighbors. As a believer in God and Christ, there is no information available.

His appreciative, helpful companion stood by to give help and encouragement. The wealth of good will he had built up hadn't been washed away. Nor had his wealth of knowledge.

The dairyman's purpose in cultivating friends was not for material gain nor financial security with which to meet disaster. It was a joy to him to labor for the good of the community. The quality of his business was a center of pride to his community. Let a man of his character and mental stature sink? Never.

His friends included the unprosperous as well as the prosperous. Quite a number of these were spared from the flood. And before the waters had subsided, his friends made plans to raise funds to replace his loss in highbred Jersey cows. These plans were completed.

What are your assets today? Do they represent material things only? Cash, a car, a house, land, or a few head of livestock?

The Master has admonished us to "Lay up treasures in heaven." Treasures in heaven will not rust, he tells us. Neither can they be swept away in a tornado or washed away in a flood.

Laying up treasures in heaven, according to the Master (Matthew 25), consists in part of building good will among your fellow men; giving meat to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, haven to the worthy stranger, etc. This done to the best of your ability, have no fear of the tornado, flood, earthquake, or an accident. These evil forces cannot demolish such high quality assets.

vital religious philosophy is to be seen in the turns of events in matrimony as well as in industry and government. The whole human family faces a crisis in all moral relations. Only when religion—true religion, I mean—has functioned as the all-inclusive interest of man has there been deliverance from such evils as distress men today.

We have had enough of speculation about eternity. We have had more than enough "vain babblings" which "increase unto more ungodliness." It is time, high time, past time, to reground the vital affairs of life in a vital religious philosophy; in a true philosophy of social life.

Well, that is what the social philosophy of the modern prophet is. It is a vital philosophy. It is a system of ethical principles in which the vital affairs of peoples should be grounded. The crisis of civilization, which arose out of the misconduct of vital affairs, is reason enough for the advent of the modern prophet with his vital religious philosophy.

Are You "Sifting" Someone?

By Jessie Heide

What you do so thoughtlessly and independently may be putting someone else out of the church. Had you thought of that? The author discusses frankly and realistically some of the common faults that send other souls astray.

IT SEEMS TO ME that we consistently underestimate our influence over each other; we don't realize what a profound effect even our thoughts have over our associates. Despite the good advice "keep your thoughts to yourself" often passed out, I do not believe that it is possible to do such a thing. "As a man thinketh, so is he."

Good thoughts can be cultivated. It is more difficult for adults to cultivate them than it is for younger people. For that very reason older people should work hard to do so, because they are the ones who have the real influence over younger, more malleable minds.

During the economic depression of the early thirties, many drifted away from church influence, and people said, "This is the sifting time." Then the high wages of the war years produced such a feeling of overconfidence, that many turned to trust the arm of flesh only, and people again said, "This is the sifting time."

ALTHOUGH I WAS too young to understand (and, anyway, we were fortunate in the little, "out-lying" branches that we didn't hear much about it), I presume that people said, "Surely this is the sifting time," during the crisis of 1925. I know little about it, except sketches I have read. Events seem stilted when viewed even twenty years later. But one outcome of this "shake-up" isn't at all cold or impersonal; it's alive—terribly alive: that is the loss of thousands of souls. Oh, I know there were only a few hundreds who "dissented," or "protested" enough to leave the church and most of them returned in their hearts even though many could not sacrifice their pride enough to return literally.

Those whose pride was not brittle enough to break and allow them to return lost not only themselves, but their children and grandchildren, and even their great-grandchildren. Even many of those who did return lost their children, their most beloved, to the church. Many of them have their names on the church records, but many more are not even listed among the membership. What's worse, some who remain are disgruntled and "picky."

THE LOSSES sustained from this episode of our church history are as nothing when compared to the countless thousands (literally!) who have been sifted away by the insidious crumbling caused by the placid indifference on the part of some of us all the time and by all of us part of the time. The inertia of this carelessness at times seems to nullify the hard-won gains of our missionary force.

I don't want to hurt anyone's feelings, I merely want to cite some examples whereby we may draw up some guidelines for our future actions: We must think before we do things which are contrary to the ideals of the organization with which we are affiliated.

We should think, "Whom am I 'sifting'?" We often hear this philosophy expressed: "If I choose to forsake the ways of righteousness, whose business is it? Surely 'they' shouldn't worry about my soul's salvation if I don't. And I'm doing nothing wicked anyway." Perhaps not. But do we think of the persons that we influence? They may take our negativism and carry it much further than we—even to the destruction of their own happiness.

We do not need to do such a startling thing as leaving the church to create havoc in some young mind. A flagrantly indiscreet or unconventional act is frequently the deciding point for a doubtful youth—particularly if it is committed by one of his current heroes in the church. Some say, "If he is weak enough to waver or be so strongly influenced by other people, he may as well be sifted out. He never will do the church much good anyway." Now, is that fair? He can grow only by learning the answers to his problems. Besides that, did Christ value a soul by what he could do for the church? It seems to me he was concerned mostly with what the church could do for each individual.

I know of a young man whose wife and friends worked to convert him and he was seriously considering being baptized when he went to work in a place where a church member in good standing persistently repeated bad stories, with much blasphemy. Needless to say, that man decided that he could find finer associates outside the church membership. It was the turning point for him.

I once knew a woman who left her husband and children, setting an unrighteous example before her brothers and sisters. Soon her mother followed her example and broke up her home. Could we be influencing our parents as much as they influence us?

Another thing which appears to be hindering some young people is the failure of priesthood members and others with influence to give a concrete "Yes" or "No" answer to questions which are put to them. It is well and good to let one decide little problems and temptations by himself if he has his philosophy and his ultimate goals well defined in his

In praise of

THE OSTRICH

Or, How to save your sanity, in one easy lesson

PEOPLE WHO refuse to face the facts of life are often lampooned and compared with the ostrich, who is supposed to stick his head into the sand at the approach of danger.

Whether the ostrich really does poke his head into the sand seems to be a debatable point. Have human observers seen him under all conditions in which he must live in his wild state? We can't be sure.

It is known that some other inhabitants of the desert flatten themselves to the ground for protection when the terrible sandstorms, blown up by high winds, pelt them with rocks and sand so fiercely as to kill any animal that does not know how to protect itself. The camel, for instance, is said to lie close to the ground, and has the power of con-mind. But most persons don't have these things clearly figured out until late adolescence or early adulthood. An occasional, "Yes, that would be a wise thing for you to do," or a "No, I wouldn't do that," with good reasons explained, is in order for the average busy young person. They all feel disappointed to think that they are regarded as so unimportant that their questions need not be considered; the more intelligent ones often draw the conclusion that "Brother or Sister So-and-So hedges and evades an answer because he doesn't know what the Scriptures or church ruling says on that phase of life." Could the young people be correct in this feeling? Or are we merely condoning ourselves that we want them to develop their set of values by themselves, when really all we are doing is shirking our responsibilities?

It seems to be impossible to sift just one person. Our influence reaches too, too far.

tracting his nostrils so that the sand cannot get into his lungs.

Perhaps the ostrich is wiser than those who laugh at him, and sometimes saves his life by putting his head (which is conveniently small for the purpose) down into the sand. Standard reference works say nothing about this, but such works are written at desks, which are poor places for research in natural history. Few men know all that is to be known about the life of any wild creature.

The ostrich is no coward. He can kill a man, if aroused, though he doesn't do it for fun or in malice. He can outrun a horse, though he may prefer to save his dignity by fighting. Only when he is confronted with overwhelming danger does he become an escapist. With his vestigial wings, he cannot fly. So, like a poet, he escapes with his imagination!

But the ostrich gives us something more than a ridiculous picture, head in the sand, plumes waving in the breeze. He gives us a philosophy. If it is true that he sometimes saves his life by thrusting his head into the sand, we can learn something from him. The ostrich does not suffer from nervous breakdown. None of his kind go to the asylums. He does not drink coffee, nor smoke, to steady his nerves or shatter them. Has anybody ever seen a hysterical ostrich? He may be a veritable cartoon of a creature, as chinless as Andy Gump, as foolish as a goon, but he knows how to take care of himself. No ostrich ever became a prophet of gloom, none ever spread tales of terror or disaster to frighten the multitude; they do not commit suicide.

Ostriches are better equipped by nature to survive the dangers of the atomic age than men are. Applying his mythical principle of self-preservation, is it any worse to refuse to see dangers that exist, than it is to persist in seeing dangers that do not? If you have ever been in a tornado, you know you must close your eyes and cover them with your arms to save your eyes. You must get under something to save yourself from the fury of the storm. You must hide. It is no time to be facing facts. When the storm is past, you can come out and look around.

The ostrich may or may not stick his head into the sand. If he does, he is a wise bird, and praise to him for the good sense to do what people have not the wisdom to do. If he did not, it would be a terrible indictment of ostrich intelligence.

Perhaps it is time to organize, for the benefit of less intelligent humans, an Ostrich International with a chapter in every city. Emblem, an ostrich plume; initiation, dunking the head in a tub of sand; dues, an egg; world headquarters, a sand dune. Who will start the first chapter? This great organization may save us from the prophets of gloom, disaster, and despair. Thousands now living will not have to die; they don't have to be frightened to death. Overcrowded conditions in our asylums will be reduced. Psychiatrists can take a vacation. Doctors will be relieved of prescribing for imaginary ills, and can devote their energies to those who are really sick.

Nobody can calculate what a debt of gratitude we will owe to the ostrich! —P. S.

I Was A Buddhist

The testimony of a girl, who, despite the protest of her family joined the Reorganized Church in Honolulu.

By Edith Toda

Church membership and the effects of going to church have brought to me a conception of God's manifold works and mighty power, as well as the realization of a better way of life. The experiences of my youth were varied. As a child, I associated church attendance with the receiving of Biblical cards and stories Sunday after Sunday with special gifts and candies on holidays. Regular attendance was no inconvenience for me as we lived just a block from the church. However, as an older child, I sought something new in the churches of our environment. Still too young to think very clearly, I was greatly influenced by my grandmother who was a staunch Buddhist.

There is a great contrast between the Buddhist Church and the Christian Church. It was compulsory that we attend services there, especially on designated occasions. Our language school was governed by the beliefs of the church, just as Graceland is influenced by Latter Day Saint ideals. In Christian services, prayers were uttered spontaneously by people who were seeking aid and inspiration from God. In the Buddhist Church, prayer was replaced with a very formal reading of unknown words, which meant nothing. It was hard to bear at times, but as I learned every word by heart, I was able to tolerate those long, tiring services. Only the songs and stories were comparable to those of the Christian Church. They, too, eventually became boring, and I stopped attending any church. At the outbreak of the war, the Buddhist temples and shrines were seized by the government. This was rather fortunate for me, as I dreaded going back.

Then came the time when I found no significance in keeping the Sabbath Day holy. Sunday was just another day of the week. Much of the laundry, housework, cooking, and mending became a part of Sunday's chores. Three years elapsed without my attending church, and I was graduated from high school. I was entering into womanhood, but I was not satisfied with my mode of living. Something was lacking. I had to find that something, and thus my quest for a new philosophy of life began.

One of my co-workers and I were discussing religion and its effects on life one day at work. After a while, I accepted an invitation to go to church with her. At first, it was merely formal attendance in seeking some change and relaxation from daily tasks. But as I went week after week, I made new friends and began to feel a sense of belonging to this group of congenial people. After a year, I felt I had found the thing for which I was seeking. My decision to become a member of the Reorganized Church was solemnized in baptism on June 13, 1943. It was during my confirmation that I sensed the friendship of God. I soon learned of the obligations which I ought to fulfill, and, realizing my duty, I participated in various church activities. That service brought me the greatest happiness I had ever known.

Church membership has meant more to me since I've had the opportunity to attend Graceland College. Now, more than ever before, God has become an active force in my life. He is with me every hour of each day and aids me in time of need.

Although my sisters are devoted to me, we have had some heated discussions concerning our churches' aims and beliefs. I found it disadvantageous being the only Latter Day Saint in our family, and, many times discouraged, I thought I would submit and join the others. But then

Here Is the Writer . . .

Edith Toda came to Graceland from Honolulu, Hawaii, where she was a member of Kalihi Branch. A graduate of McKinley High School, she attended Phillips' Commercial School and Honolulu Business College before coming to the States. Her greatest interest is in people, and she was elected a Crescent at the close of college this year. She is spending the summer in Oregon.

WHERE ARE THE ISOLATED?

To date we have received exactly NO letters in response to the June 28 request. Can it be that there are no isolated members? If not, we shall unfurrow our brows and cease to worry about their problems. But if there are, we'll give them one more chance . . . suggestions are still welcome.

New

I would remember the words which the elder spoke in confirmation: "If you are faithful even unto the end, you will some day be a shining light in the kingdom." Now, I do not feel that I shall ever weaken. I am encouraged by my classmates who are working with me toward a common goal—that of building Zion, a city of citizens with "one heart and mind," dwelling in righteousness.

I feel my responsibility to God as a member of his church. If I live up to the best that is in me, I must make constructive use of my time. Regular church attendance will bring me continued inspiration and strength. I must be diligent in my school work, as I have only a limited time for formal education and schooling. By assuming responsibilities, I shall walk further along the road of spiritual understanding. Standards of honor, which I am bound to maintain in fellowship, are clear thoughts and a clean life. As a spiritual pioneer, I must not only retain my love for God, but share that love. As a church member, I hope to fulfill my obligation of imparting to others what I enjoy myself.

Men are influenced by friendship—especially friendship with God. Through it they gain confidence in themselves and acquire a consciousness of the good in those about them. The church provides an opportunity for such development. Those who seek to serve God can begin only by serving humanity.

Membership in the Reorganized Church has meant new purpose in life for me. If I live up to the challenge it offers, I cannot help being a better person.

How God Helps in Making Choices

QUESTION: Is it right to expect God to reveal in a patriarchal blessing what profession the recipient of the blessing is to train for or which person he is to marry?

ANSWER: By Patriarch Ray Whiting

God is concerned about the affairs of his children. He wants to direct in the choosing of a career, and in the selection of a life's mate, and in every other phase of one's existence. God, however, seldom if ever, makes decisions for people. He wants us to arrive at our own conclusions after giving due consideration to all the facts.

A patriarch is not primarily a revealer of coming events; he is not a medium, or a fortuneteller. He is, first of all, a spiritual father, an adviser, and counselor. More directions might be obtained in regard to a vocation or marriage from an hour's conversation with the patriarch than through a patriarchal blessing. In fact, I feel that counseling is perhaps the patriarch's chief function rather than the giving of blessings.

The purpose of a blessing is: first, the rededication of the one to be blessed. He who comes for a blessing should be as completely resigned to the will of God as is possible. Such an attitude will, of itself, result in a blessing. And second, the blessing is a blessing. It is the invoking of direction and protection and such spiritual forces upon one as he may need. Blessings more often give direction than decision.

To illustrate. A young unmarried woman came to a patriarch for her blessing. She had opportunity to marry a man not of the church and who wasn't much inclined toward religious matters, yet who was a good man. She wanted direction that she might make a decision. The patriarch was unaware of her desire. Yet in the blessing he was definitely led to advise her to make choices that would keep her in touch with the church and its people, and not to make choices which would take her away from her work and place in the kingdom. A promise was also given that if she would keep in close fellowship with the church, doors of opportunity would open to her in the future which would permit her even more fully to enter into the work of the church.

After receiving this advise, she thought the matter through again and realized that to marry this man would most likely take her from the church, therefore she did not accept the offer. A very few years later she was married to a Latter Day Saint and is now happily engaged in church work.

Direction in choosing a vocation or in marriage should come mostly as the result of daily prayer, meditation, the weighing of all the factors involved, and a life dedicated to the purposes of God more than through a definite "yes" or "no" in a patriarchal blessing.

Horizons

Meetingitis

By NAOMI RUSSELL

THIS IS NOT written in defense of the late sleepers nor the voluntary victims of Morbus Sabbiticus. I'm wholeheartedly in favor of everyone's putting on his best suit and—despite funnies, radio programs, and the urge to go fishing—being at church by nine-thirty each Sunday morning. It's a good habit and, once formed, a fairly painless one. I don't believe, however, in soliciting church attendance via tears or bribery . . . or the threat of eternal damnation. It's a decision every person must make for himself, and the odds are against anyone's deciding to attend regularly if somebody insists on making up his mind for him.

Let me illustrate. Jane, a Latter Day Saint, and Bob, a Baptist, were married four years ago. Before they were married, Bob always attended services with Jane and so, quite of his own will, was exposed to the "gospel message." He liked what he heard and decided to make Jane's church his church. Three weeks after the wedding, Bob was baptized. Everyone was proud of him—especially his in-laws . . . that is, until he was put on the night shift. When Bob started working the twelve to eight, he went to bed on Sunday mornings instead of going to church. Jane's family couldn't justify that . . . they thought he was getting weak in the faith, and they told him! They said if he couldn't stay awake a few hours for the sake of God's work, he'd better get another job. And then Bob told them.

Jane tried to get her folks to apologize, but they held their ground. Consequently, Bob doesn't go to church any more, and Jane goes only occasionally.

Too often church attendance is regarded as an "end" rather than a means to an end. A man's character is frequently judged by the number of times per week he is seen at church, not by the use he makes of the knowledge gained at church. Sometimes an entire family suffers from meeting-fatigue. Mr. B., a member of the priesthood, hasn't observed Sunday as a day of rest for years. He goes to an early prayer service, thence to church school, thence to preaching, home for dinner, back to church at 2 o'clock for a priesthood class, (after which he visits the people who won't come to church), home for supper, and then back to church for the 7:30 service. He doesn't see much of his family all day, and, by the time the last meeting is over, he's too tired to see much of them at night. On Monday evening, he attends a Book of Mormon study class; Wednesday night he goes to prayer service, and on Thursday, the Men's Club. Mrs. B. is a never-miss-a-meeting-er, too. She teaches a class on Sunday morning, sings in the choir, is president of the women's department, and project chairman of the Needle Club. She spends a lot of time reading and reporting to other mothers on the latest techniques in child-training. Unfortunately, she seldom finds opportunity to employ them in her own home. Neither she nor Mr. B. can find time to enjoy their children. The only place the whole family goes to together is church. . . . Sunday picnics in the country are "out" because both parents are exhausted by what they believe to be their religious obligation. Eight-year-old Jim and eleven-year-old Mary are getting pretty fed up with it and have solemnly promised themselves that, as soon as they grow up, they're not ever going to church again.

Every church should provide, under the leadership of a good pastor, a full range of services, programs, and activities to meet the needs of all the members of the congregations: the children, the youth, the mature, and the aged. People are so varied in their interests and requirements that they separate into many classifications, and the good church must take account of all of them.

No one person can attend all of these services and activities and do any creative work. Only those who "just sit" can manage it. And frequently they feel very righteous because they succeed in sitting out so many meetings a week. They then turn their attention to others who must work in certain departments, requiring much time and labor for preparation. "He doesn't attend our meetings!" they complain, and gossip, and criticize.

Go to church as often as you can, but reserve some time to put into practice the things you learn when you go. Unless church attendance inspires men and women to live better lives and build happier homes, it is failing its God-intended purpose.

"If an honest man is the noblest work of heaven, a worthy and happy home is the noblest work of earth. Certain it is that such a home is one of the greatest blessings to the world and to those connected with it. If life in the family circle is satisfactory the members of that home can face almost anything undaunted. If it is unsatisfactory, particularly if it is marked by dissension and strife, everything else in life, for those involved in that strife, is undertaken under a handicap.

"The achievement of a satisfactory relationship in homelife, therefore, is a consummation worthy of any sacrifice." —From the Foreword of The Fine Art of Living Together, by Albert W. Beaven. Here is a new edition—completely revised for our day and generation—of this standard book on family life. Because of its spiritual insight and its practical wisdom this is an ideal book for those just married or contemplating marriage. $1.60. Geraldine Brindley, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brindley, became the bride of Wilson Benjamin, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Benjamin, on May 3, at the Reorganized Church in West Branch, Michigan. Pastor Ben H. Ouderkerk performed the ceremony. A reception was held in the community building following the wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin are making their home in West Branch.

Norris-Thomas

Ella Jo Thomas, daughter of Mrs. Mary Thomas of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Danny Jack Norris, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Norris of Sheffield, Illinois, were married June 17 in the Tulsa Reorganized Church. Seventy Glen Johnson performed the double-ring ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Norris will spend the summer in Tulsa, returning to Graceland this fall where both will be sophomores.

Phinney-Hardin

Alberta Lee Hardin and Walter Phinney of Springfield, Missouri, were married June 6 at the home of Elder and Mrs. Francis Bishop, Elder Bishop officiating.

Hield-Millman

Faith Millman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Milton R. Millman of Plymouth, Massachusetts and W. Wayne Hield, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Hield of Detroit, Michigan, were married June 28 at the Reorganized Church in Somerville, Massachusetts. Elder B. W. Leland performed the double-ring ceremony. Both bride and groom attended Graceland College. They will make their home in Berkeley, California, where Mr. Hield will attend the university.

Bryan-Innes

Betty May Innes and Marlin W. Bryan were united in marriage on June 28 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Innes of Castle Shannon, Pennsylvania. Elder T. A. Dershimer officiated at the double-ring ceremony.

Gamet-Williams

Lillian M. Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Williams of Rock Island, Illinois, became the bride of Raymond G. Gamet of Portland, Oregon, on May 30 at the Reorganized Church at Rock Island. Apostle D. T. Williams read the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Gamet are residing in Rock Island.

Paterno-Johnson

Betty Theresa Johnson and Kenneth Dal Paterno were married June 26 at the Reorganized Church in Omaha, Nebraska, by Pastor John Blackmore. After a visit to Independence, Missouri, they will make their home in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Reed-Williams

Jackie Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Williams of Escatawpa, Mississippi, and Private Sinclair Reed of Kessler Field, Mississippi, were married recently.

Parker-Barnes

Ivon Barnes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Barnes, and Melvin Parker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Demey Parker, both of Escatawpa, Mississippi, were married June 7, Elder A. O. Crownover officiating. They are making their home in Escatawpa.

BIRTHS

A son, David Paul, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Otto Paul Logeman of Independence, Missouri, on June 13. Mrs. Logeman is the former Eldene Peer of Buckner, Missouri.

A son, Gary Don, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Donald Everhart at Los Angeles, California, on January 5. He was blessed on Sunday, June 22, by Elders A. H. DuRose and H. J. Simons at Flint, Michigan. Mrs. Everhart is the former Louise Putney.

A daughter, Diane Kay, was born January 31 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Gillaspie at St. Joseph's Hospital in Centerville, Iowa. She was blessed on Easter Sunday by Elder John Boden.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Hudson of Bussey, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, Marcus Duaine, born January 7. He was blessed on January 22 by Elders John Boden and David Taylor.

A daughter, Joan Adele, was born on June 25 to Mr. and Mrs. John G. Wight of Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Wight is the former Leola Brady.

A son, Terry Scott, was born May 23 to Mr. and Mrs. George M. Douglas of Denver, Colorado. Mrs. Douglas is the former Ruby Lee Spillman.

Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Martin, Jr., of Escatawpa, Mississippi, announce the birth of a son, Richard Havens, born June 6, at the Jackson County Hospital.

A son, Dennis Vesper, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Vesper Yandle of Portland, Oregon, on June 13. Mrs. Yandle is the former Irene Koenig.

DEATHS

BELROSE.—Burton Alexander, son of Benson and Edith Belrose, was born May 2, 1912, at Owen Sound, Ontario, and died June 1, 1947, in the General Hospital at Sarnia, Ontario, of injuries sustained in an automobile accident on May 29. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 11, 1921, and was ordained a deacon on July 9, 1939.

He is survived by his wife, Marjorie; two sons: Bob and Dan; his father; five brothers: Irvin of London; Harold Wilbert, and Elgin of Owen Sound; and Lorne of Toronto; and three sisters: Mrs. Rollie Reid, Mrs. Harry Bowers, and Mrs. Bruce Small, all of Owen Sound. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Ellwood Smith and E. S. Phillips.

PAUL.—Wilbur B. was born on March 31, 1871, in Dorr, Michigan, and died May 27, 1947, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was first married to Estlyn Harper, who preceded him in death in 1924. On June 30, 1894, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church at South Boardman, Michigan. On May 6, 1900, he was ordained a deacon, on November 3, 1912, a priest, and on September 16, 1919, an elder at Lamoni, Iowa, where he made his home for a number of years. He moved to Independence, Missouri, in 1921, at the time the Herald Publishing House was transferred there from Lamoni. Until three years before his death when he suffered a stroke, he was employed as a pressman by the publishing house. In 1926, he married Mrs. Bina Nesbitt Scott. During his residence in Independence, he was a faithful worker in the church, serving part of the time as pastor of the Sugar Creek congregation. He was assistant pastor when he became ill.

He leaves his wife, Bina, of the home; and a brother, Wallace, of Flint, Michigan. Elders Amos T. Higdon and Ephraim Brown were in charge of the funeral; Patriarch Roy V. Hopkins gave the sermon. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni.

ARCHIBALD.—Theda Mae, daughter of William Harry and Jean Duckworth, was born September 5, 1891, in Pittsburg, Kansas, and died June 5, 1947, at her home in Centerville, Iowa. On April 8, 1911, she was married to Russell Archibald; two daughters were born to this union. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

She leaves her husband; two daughters: Mrs. Charles K. Baker of Woodward, Iowa, and Donna Archibald of Kansas City, Missouri; a sister, Mrs. Clarence Cosner of Centerville, Iowa; three brothers: William H. Duckworth of Clovis, New Mexico; Phillip H. Duckworth of Duncan, Oklahoma; and George Duckworth of Centerville, Iowa; and one grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Johnson Funeral Home, Elder John Blackstock of Lamoni officiating. Burial was in Oakland Cemetery in Centerville, Iowa.

FRIESE.—Nellie Evelyn, was born April 24, 1908, in Nebraska City, Nebraska, and died in Lincoln, Nebraska, on May 21, 1947, following a long illness. She was married to Charles H. Friese on December 15, 1934. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 20, 1917.

She is survived by her husband; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Orval Preston of Nebraska City; and one brother, John Preston of Salt Lake City, Utah. Funeral services were held at Lincoln with Elders Earl Oehring and Francis Schrunck in charge. A brief committal service was held in Nebraska City with Elders Floyd Hirst and Earl Oehring officiating. Interment was in Nebraska City.

PIPHER.—Mossie May, daughter of Timothy and Melissa Bruels, was born May 11, 1882, in Markham Township, Ontario, and died in the Red Cross Hospital at New Liskeard, Ontario, on April 24, 1947. On July 1, 1909, she was married to Hiram Pipher, and on March 24, 1912, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church. To her friends in the church and community, she was affectionately known as "Aunt Mossie."

The funeral was held at the George Reid Funeral Home in Toronto. Elder E. H. Hewitt officiating. Burial was in Dixon Hill Cemetery, near Toronto. Surviving are her husband, six sisters, and one brother.

LANGDON.—Roger Friend, Jr. was born July 4, 1926, in Independence, Missouri, and died May 4, 1947, at Wasilla, Alaska. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at Mt. Washington.

He is survived by his parents and a brother, J. Philip Langdon, all of Wasilla. Since no minister of the church was available, funeral services were conducted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Burial was in Anchorage, Alaska.

BROWN.—Joseph M., was born June 16, 1879, in Ontario, Canada, and died June 3, 1947, in Des Moines, Iowa, where he had resided for the past forty-five years. The original account, which appeared in the July 5 issue, stated that he died in Mt. Ayr, Iowa.

 Choral Music

Now, at an interminably long last, this editor knows how choirs are built. They shanghai them.

Last night at reunion, after becoming footsore and weary exploring the reunion grounds, the editor reached the Bia Tent and dropped down on a bench. Apparently it was the wrong bench. In a little while the choir, assuming he was just another singer, sat down around him. Someone thrust a package of music into his hands, and from then on it was too late. Nobody would take the music back; nobody would listen when he said he couldn't sing; and they didn't budge when he tried to get out. "I don't care if you can't sing," said the assistant director. "You look like a basso profundo, and that is qualification enough. We are desperate for help."

After that it was easy. The editor picked out a nice baritone near by and imagined it was his own voice he heard. What a pleasant way to prepare for an evening service!

 Abbreviations

Although an abbreviation is a convenience to the writer, it is a source of trouble to the reader or the editor. Because the writer either selects or creates it, he knows exactly what it means. But to the editor it may resemble several words or names, and he may have difficulty in choosing the right one. The abbreviation that saved seconds to the writer costs the editor minutes.

And doesn't it seem sometimes that an abbreviation is a slight discourtesy? It is so hurried, and implies to the reader, "I haven't much time for you!" Nobody wishes to make that kind of impression on a friend or acquaintance.

Be careful of the abbreviation. It is like a temptation—it may play a mean trick on you!

Good Government a Fundamental Concern

The writer has had the experience of serving in two state legislative bodies: a representative in the thirty-fourth General Assembly of Iowa from 1911 to 1913 and a delegate in the Constitutional Convention of Missouri which convened in September, 1943. I am sure I never cast a vote in either body where I was controlled by partisan considerations. My best judgment, though possibly not always the best, controlled my vote.

I believed, as a Latter Day Saint, that I was honoring our best traditions in taking part in the work of good government and in trying to secure good laws. I believed I was honoring the word given to the church in the ninety-fifth section of the Doctrine and Covenants in which the Lord said:

And now, verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justifieth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these, cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil.

We are reminded also that the church in an early day took a stand on good government:

We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man, and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, either in making laws or administering them, for the good and safety of society.

We believe that no government can exist, in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate as will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life.

We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same, and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people (if a republic), or the will of the sovereign.

We believe that religion is instituted of God, and that men are amenable to him and to him only for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinion prompts them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; but we do not believe that human law has a right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion; that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul.

We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments, and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgment are best calculated to secure the public interest, at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience. — Doctrine and Covenants 112: 1-5.

Some of the civil divisions of Missouri have been operating under patterns adopted when it became a state in 1820. This is especially true of county government. It has long been apparent that the present-day needs of the most populous counties are not and cannot be provided by the old law, although passably adequate for most rural counties. Thus, it was that the section on county government in the new Missouri Constitution included a provision that the most populous counties from 85,000 and upward could, by a method therein set out, establish for themselves a special or charter form of government. I am sure this provision is one of the best among the very many outstanding improvements in the new basic law of the state.

As I write, a movement has already been inaugurated to secure, by the legal steps required, a charter form of government for Jackson County, the home county, as it were, of the church, where we have the most members and where we have our greatest interests.

For the benefit of some (including, probably, a few of our own members) who, unfortunately, cannot discriminate in such matters, I wish to make it clear that this movement is not partisan and is not politics in any objectional sense of the term. In my opinion it is one which challenges the best thought and consideration of our members who live in Jackson County.

At the present time, the whole matter is one of investigation and exploration, and without going into details of procedure, the question to be decided by the electorate, eventually, is: Can a system of government for Jackson County be evolved that will be superior to the present plan? It is obvious to me that every taxpayer and voter should become actively interested in helping rightly to resolve this question.

Word From Europe

Air mail service brings us a message from President Edwards which we are pleased to present to Herald readers without delay:

Mid-afternoon
July 10, 1947

We are about 500 miles from Shannon, and expect to get there in about a couple of hours. This may be too late to go on to England tonight, but we can complete our journey by tomorrow. So far the flight has been smooth, pleasant, and uneventful. Time has been divided between sleeping, eating, reading, and talking. It is still a little difficult to realize that we will be at work on our assignment so soon and at such small cost in time and effort.

We were greatly heartened by our send-off at Chicago. It happened that Bishop Livingston could be there between trains, and we were naturally, especially happy to have him there. Lawrence Brockway was also in Chicago en route by air to an eastern destination, and we were very pleased to have him in the group. Then, too, there were Joseph Baldwin, who helped so much with our visas, and Fern and Chucky; Tom Worth, with affectionate messages for the Saints in England; the Lushas, Steve Lester, Sr., Mrs. Steve, Jr.; Marion Cooper, Harley Morris, Ray Zinser, Dorothy Mills, Bess Blair, Faye Burke McDonald, Hattie K. Bell, Dave Weisen, the Wilfred Winholtz, Frank Shank, and others whom we were delighted to see.

When we came to earth at Detroit, we were surprised and pleased indeed to find Blair McClain, Bishop Carlson, Stanley Russell, and Eldon Osborne waiting to wish us well.

All of these good people have been friends of ours for many years, but we felt that any merely personal elements in their greetings and good wishes showed but a tithe of their deep concern in our mission. We left Detroit very happy and at the same time quite soberly determined to do our utmost to make a worthy contribution.

Everyone was distressed that Brother Gleazer is not with us. And, of course, so are we. We had counted on his partnership. But since conditions are as they are, everyone understands that he could not leave at the moment. We hope he will catch up with us before long. In the meantime, we are remembering Sister Gleazer in our prayers.

We feel that good preparatory work has been done in Europe by Brother McConley and that the practical interest shown by the Saints who have sent parcels from the United States, Canada, Australia, Hawaii, and elsewhere cannot fail to ease our burden; so that we are now anxious to get on to the job.

We will report further at the earliest opportunity and in the meantime solicit your counsel and prayers.

things for which one has striven have lost their importance. One's work is done, or he has not his former zest for it. Indeed, it may be his duty to sit on one side, and alone. He, however, need not be lonely. Memory is his. And, if with memory he has retained sweetness, the fellowships that have been his are his to the end; all the more cherished in that, of the things which remain, these are the more enduring and satisfying of this present life's experiences and the more reassuring as to the relationships awaiting him in the life to come.

And, finally, it seems appropriate that we think on these things at this time. Our people are in the midst of another reunion season. Such gatherings are rich in fellowship. They head up in the direction of the gathering and Zion, and, with other influences and ministries, condition our people for these wider movements. It is well that reunions are available to so many of us for this purpose.

All these things being true, it is a matter for congratulation that there is growing among us a fellowship to be remarked about on every hand. May we, one and all, contribute to its continuance and development to the full.

J. F. GARVER.

The Fellowship of Saints

"The fellowship of Saints" is a phrase often used among our people, lightly sometimes, . . . sometimes with a sense of its deeper meaning. And full fellowship of its people at life's higher level is one of the goals of the church, for its own sake, as well as for theirs.

The word "fellowship" connotes friendship, comradeship, companionship, a community of interests.

A fellowship, then, is an association of persons drawn together by common interests, inclinations, ideals, and purposes that may be held together in a common cause. It may be an association of good and wise men for altruistic purposes, or of fools and knaves for carnal purposes. The fellowship of Saints is definitely of the former class.

Fellowship among its members and ministers and councils is basic to the progress of the church. Neither the Spirit of God nor the spirit of this movement can find place among a discordant people. And the closer and more refined the accord, the fuller sway have these essential propulsions in the direction of the purposes of the church.

And fellowship is a heritage of saintly life. Mutual respect and regard, concern and affection one for the other bring people together to the blessing and satisfaction of each. For us who are in the church—such are so associated as to share and share alike in the blessings of a common cause, and to labor together in extending its benefits to others—here is a fraternity of the first magnitude.

Fellowship, furthermore, is an expanding experience and state of being. This one learns with the passing of the years, and the longer the association, the richer the fraternity.

Nor is any blessing to be cherished above that of fellowship. Life glides by until all that is left of it, as to time, is old age. Material

The First Presidency has received and accepted the resignation of Elder James S. Menzies as president of the Northern Saskatchewan District and has appointed Elder J. A. Gendron of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, as district president subject to the action of the next ensuing district conference. Brother Menzies' assignment as a general church appointee takes him into another field of labor.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards

Independence, Missouri
June 21, 1947.

Out of Obscurity

By Bishop D. O. Chesworth

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others that they should proclaim these things unto the world . . . and after having received the record of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., might have power to translate, through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon; and also those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness.
—Doctrine and Covenants 1:4, 5.

FERVENCY AND FIDELITY NEEDED

TO THIS GREAT missionary task we must apply ourselves with fervency and fidelity. Our ministry must preach the gospel until it has become a "spiritual dynamic" in the lives of men. Power was promised to those who would receive these commandments to enable them to bring the church out of obscurity. If this condition is to be attained in our day, it will be done when the world is in a critical condition according to quotations from the Chief Executive of the United States and the Secretary of State.

Today, one reads much and hears excessive conversation about power — especially atomic energy — but there doesn't seem to be much attention given to the power of the Holy Ghost. Quoting William James, "As a rule man uses only ten per cent of his power and lives far within his limits." Kierkegaard, a great Danish thinker, states that there are drivers and drifters. Many are creatures of custom, fashion, convention, and fad, doing what others do, saying what others say. It is a great day when man accepts himself and sets about to make life an expression of his ideals. We used to call it conversion; now we call it an "adjustment to life."

Delivered at Stone Church during General Conference.

Fervency is needed so much. This is illustrated in the reference to a businessman who commented on the young men he employed, loved, and studied. One per cent reached the top, four per cent attained some degree of leadership, but ninety-five per cent remained in the ranks of the defeated. Few scale to the peak, more stop on the slope, and many walk on the plateau. Again ninety-five per cent see the obstacles, four per cent see the objective, but only one per cent sees through the obstacles, reaches the objective and finds success. One should never give up until he has released and used all his power. A single kindled spirit can set others on fire, as experienced by the Prophet Abinadi. It is that kind of faith which defeats failure. It is that fervency and fidelity which were possessed by John Paul Jones when he replied, "Surrender? We've just begun to fight." This is the type of fervency which will assist in bringing the church out of obscurity.

A TWENTY-YEAR PROGRAM

In 1930, this church launched a twenty-year program. We have three years to go, but there is still some emphasis required in behalf of goals still unattained, such as (1) more missionaries, (2) better and more representative church buildings throughout the world, (3) completion of the Auditorium, and (4) development of individual and group stewardship. The attainment of goals will assist in bringing the church out of obscurity. We need to have the best methods and a consistent approach, not arguing incessantly about philosophies and theologies but "teaching" what has been given to the church.

We need a plan of action. Our challenge is to think creatively, make a plan of action, and follow through. So few follow through to bring the Restoration out of obscurity.

EVANGELISM IS VERY IMPORTANT

Two hundred years ago in Great Britain, it meant helping people into an experience of conscious salvation in Christ. Religion was soul-centered, preaching was soul-seeking. Aware of the social and economic perversions, of political corruption, moral and religious degeneracy, nevertheless, attention was focused upon the "heart." Society needed new souls more than new laws. Repentance, faith in Christ, and forgiveness of sins were essential to salvation. For over fifty years, the spotlight was kept right on the heart, and men found the way by that light, which was a healing light for the cancerous growths in them. Moral and spiritual power was restored. These powerful ministers were not remaking the church but struggling to restore its life and its power in bringing experience to men. They were not assailing the church, nor making light of it, nor injuring it. They wept over it, because it lacked life—spiritual life—genuine religious life. Suffering from heart weakness, it had failed to exhibit religious power. Evangelism was emphasis on experience, rather than the method of acquiring it. There has been much more improvement in science than in “living.” The burden of the toiler and his beast of burden is eased, but the toiler hasn’t been released from many inherited beliefs as to his origin and destiny. Progress in living must increase and this will come about when the hearts of men are touched.

Mr. Clarke in his book, Ten Great Religions, states: “It is true that the great missionary work of Christianity has long been checked. It does not now convert whole nations. Heathenism, Judaism, Brahmanism, and Buddhism stand beside it unmoved. What is the cause of this check? How do we reply in terms of our participation in the great Restoration.

Encouragement is noted in an editorial in the January 18 issue of Saints’ Herald, which reported “Our men are preaching with power again, somewhere, somebody has turned on the light. Power has returned to the church. There is new hopefulness and expectation, strength is returning to them. Power will soon find avenues of expression. Perhaps 1947 and 1948 will note increases in baptisms, and finances will record an upturn in increased number of contributors.” Power, we trust, which will bring the church out of obscurity.

Our evangelism since 1930 has been deterred many ways. Passing through a terrible financial panic, we were plunged into a second world war. As a result of the shortage of man power, baptismal results were decreased. In 1921, the missionary spirit was strong, and we recorded 5,500 baptisms. Again in 1929 and 1930, there was a registration of 8,800 new members, but the 1946 total was less than 2,700. During the last twenty-five years—the span of my membership in the church—we have baptized 80,000 members, but only one out of four contribute to the general church to promote our evangelistic effort to convert. This pace will not bring the church out of obscurity.

APOSTOLIC WARNING OF 1944

The 1944 apostolic greeting to the General Conference advised the church to avoid obscuring the vital principles of our message by things of secondary importance and concentrate upon qualities which have stirred the souls of men and caused them to do exploits. These are: (1) fatherhood of God, (2) brotherhood of humanity, and (3) realizing the kingdom of God, which is the very heart of the Lord’s Prayer. It continued, “These are days which try men’s souls. The destiny of our race is in our hands. As never before, we must earnestly lift up the warning voice, and call attention to these evils which have encroached upon the church.” Unless the Restoration keeps paramount in its presentation the Spirit of Jesus, his life, his sacrifice, his daring faith, we will fail to bring the church out of obscurity. Courage, patience, and an undaunted faith will be demanded.

In our missionary effort, we must determine who we are and what we are trying to do; we should consult our origins: (1) To evangelize the world, to bring men to a knowledge of the gospel and to persuade them to comply with the conditions of the plan of redemption, was the early object of the church. This is still our primary function, unceasing duty, and great aim. (2) Our most important hope from the very first was to build Zion as a result of this type of organization.

PROPOSALS TO ASSIST IN BRINGING THE CHURCH OUT OF OBSCURITY

1) A greater desire is needed to “save souls.” We should be constantly reminded of the worth of souls to Jesus (Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3, 4). We need a great emphasis on the value of winning souls rather than winning position, and a certainty of conversion rather than quantity of baptisms. Many baptized members are lost in the first five years, undoubtedly because of “uncertain” conversions.

2) We would profit by a fuller enlistment of local departments and priesthood toward missionary participation with general church assistance, utilizing modern methods and materials.

3) Let us participate in “rotating visitation” to all members enrolled in the branch. This can be enlarged to include tracting, missionary preaching and winning, rather than occasional “injection or spurt of enthusiasm.”

4) The Saints’ Herald might, to great advantage, carry “success stories,” probably in testimonial form. These reports could include the methods used to help others who have limited ability in this field. “Nothing succeeds like success.”

5) There is merit in the re-establishment of a publicity department which was lost in the depression. The church might give consideration to a research department like the Presiding Bishopric had for a while in the services of Bishop W. N. Johnson.

6) We need a re-analyzing of duties outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants and a great appreciation of the duties of others. There should be a place and specific duties for all quorums divinely instituted and for every priesthood officer.

7) We need an increased appreciation of “priesthood.” In Doctrine and Covenants 110: 20, we read, “what do we hear? Glad tidings from Cumorah! The voice of Peter, James, and John, in the wilderness . . . declaring themselves as possessing the keys of the kingdom, and of the dispensation of the fullness of times." There is very little recorded of one of the most momentous events in the world's history, the restoration of the Melchisedec priesthood to earth after having been withdrawn because of abuse and neglect. On an unnamed date, sometime in June, 1829, in an unknown place, an event occurred which has affected and will continue to affect this entire world as long as human beings inhabit the earth. Oliver Cowdery said, "these were days never to be forgotten." If the Lord had a work for him to do, he was firmly determined to do it. That same spirit must grip our hearts today.

8) We might well publish an up to date and more comprehensive Voice of Warning, for that is still our message as suggested in the "Lord's Preface" from which the scripture reading was selected.

9) A working Zion will attract many who are needed in the great Restoration and will work miracles among our own membership. Certainly it will aid in helping to bring the church out of obscurity and probably cause greater attraction than the eight previous aids.

CONCLUSION

The Lord said that those who received these commandments would have power to lay the foundation of this church and power to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness. Furthermore he said, (Doctrine and Covenants 42) that inasmuch as we shall find them that will receive us, we shall build up the church. We are to teach the children of men the things which he has put into our hands by the power of his Spirit.

Here in the United States there are great opportunities among many peoples. There are over 1,000 dailies, weeklies and semi-weeklies printed in thirty-eight languages other than English, with a combined circulation of over 7,000,000, and an average of two and one-half readers per copy. Council Bluffs Branch Sponsors Building Fund Dinner

By V. D. RUCH, Pastor

ON MARCH 7, a very successful building fund dinner was held by the Council Bluffs Branch. The date for the dinner was set last fall by the women's department, which sponsored the project. Each of the twelve women's groups began working to raise money to be donated at the dinner, and several earned money privately, which they called their "talent fund." Tickets for the dinner were sold for $5.00 each.

The financial goal for the project was set at $10,000. We thought that was plenty high and some of us doubted that we would ever reach it. One day, a businessman (a member of another branch) met me on the street and asked how much we planned to take in at the dinner. When I told him the goal was $10,000, he belittled the idea and said, "Why don't you raise $25,000?" I said I thought it couldn't be done, but he insisted that it could and challenged us with this proposition: "If you will raise $24,000, I will give you the other $1,000."

To make a long story short, we accepted his challenge and really went to work. We sold 448 tickets and cleared over $2,000 on the dinner itself. The women's groups and some of the departments in the church school made liberal contributions. The women turned in their talent money. After all of this money was in, Elder Charles F. Putnam was asked to take charge and solicit individual donations from the more than 400 people present. The contributions began pouring in, ranging in amounts from $1,000 down to $5.00. We kept that goal of $25,000 before the people all the time and didn't give up. When all donations were in, they amounted to $25,336. About $8,000 of this was pledges to be paid by the end of this year. The other $17,000 was cash. Our treasurer called the police to escort him down to his office where the money could be put in a vault until morning. A nonmember businessman from Omaha gave a pep talk at the dinner and contributed $100 besides.

Prior to this, we had nearly $24,000 in the building fund. After we announced at church the following Sunday morning that we would have $49,000 in our building fund when all of the pledges were paid, someone suggested that we raise the other $1,000 from people who had not contributed. In a few weeks, we had that $1,000 also. By the end of this year, we shall have more than $50,000. Besides that, we have a new church site (in which we have about $11,000 invested) already bought and paid for. Our new church will cost at least $100,000. We don't intend to start building for two or three years, when materials should be more plentiful and cheaper. We need a new church badly, as we are crowded in our present quarters. We feel that God has opened the way and richly blessed us in raising our fund to the amount it now is. There is every indication that he still has a great work to do in this place. We hope to be worthy instruments in his hands to accomplish that work.

The cautious seldom err.—Confucius.

Dealing With the Erring

1. OFFENSES

IT IS THE divine intention that men should be free. One of the gifts of most importance to men who look purposively toward the kingdom is the gift of rights and the freedom to exercise them without restriction, so long as there is no trespassing upon the rights of other men or upon rights retained by the Creator. An example of the latter is found in the apostolic pronouncement: Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord.¹ Anyone who takes upon himself the task of getting "even" is, therefore, infringing upon the rights of God and taking over one of the functions that he has purposely retained unto himself. When the exercise of one's freedom carries him beyond the point where the rights of God or of other men begin, we say an offense is committed.

Such infringements of rights may be of many kinds, among the most common being:

1. Offenses against the physical body.

Such as striking with the fist or with some weapon, kicking, projecting a missile toward a person by the hand or with some instrument such as a gun, pistol, sling, etc. . . . causing pollutions to contaminate the air, water, or food which others use, or any other act or failure to act which results in injury to another. The offense may be caused either by intention or by negligence.

2. Offense against one's feelings and peace of mind.

Such as threats to do physical harm, to take life, to injure or destroy property, making disturbance by unnecessary noise; unnecessarily endanger one's life; the life of his wife and children, or the safety of his property; threats to injure one's reputation, to expose one's misdeeds; insults, especially before others. These and many more, would destroy peace of mind and cause anguish of spirit.

3. Offense against one's property rights.

Such as stealing, housebreaking, defrauding, refusing to pay debts, carelessly allowing stock to enter another garden or field, trespassing, etc.

4. Offenses against the reputation.

Such as originating damaging reports which have no foundation in fact; enlarging upon the faults or sins of another in retelling; telling of another's faults or sins to persons other than provided for in the law of God; implying that which is not said, but which gives an unfavorable opinion of another, also writing or publishing matter which injures one's standing in the estimation of others.

5. Offenses against society or the church.

Such as laziness, uncleanness in body or mind, needless ignorance, immorality, extravagance, pride; also disputings, quarrelings, covetous striving for property in division, drunkenness, profanity, etc. . . . Some acts which may be considered as offenses, and which are more strictly against the church than against individuals are teaching false doctrine, heresy, refusing to attend services, violating church articles, refusing to abide by lawful decisions of courts. All these are but a few of the many offenses that may arise, but these are sufficient to show their variety and nature.²

Individuals and the church are protected from infringement upon their rights by both civil and divine law. Under a perfectly functioning system, the aggressors are restrained, and protection is guaranteed to the innocent. Since some transgressing is caused by innocent desire to seek one's own rights, it is necessary also for the law to define the rights of individuals and groups. No man living under the law is altogether justified in being ignorant of it. The civil law has its origin in humanity and defines men's rights as humanity has understood them. The law of Christ, being of divine origin, is perfect. It includes all civil law within itself and goes beyond it. "Let no man break the law of the land for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."³ For this reason, offenses against the civil law by members of the church are to be referred to the civil courts, and the offenders are to "be delivered up unto the law of the land."⁴ The church is nevertheless under the necessity of dealing with such transgressors, unless they repent, confess, and forsake their transgressing, and in dealing with such, the record of their trial and conviction in the civil courts may be taken as evidence if it will prove helpful in arriving at justice.

Rarely do church members deliberately plan to give offense or violate the law. Stress of circumstances, temptation, the sudden impulse springing from some inborn evil propensity, the gradual leadings of selfish desire without controlling intelligence, are often dominant causes of man's infraction of the law. Much of the damage done by such error could be avoided, however, if men would, upon finding themselves in error, seek to follow the law of repentance and confession. The procedure often followed, however, is to seek to justify oneself. Because this is true, the civil law has evolved to the point where its purpose is to convict and punish. The purpose of the divine law is to save the wayward one from his transgression. Officers in the church, whose responsibility it is to apply the law to transgressors, are specifically charged with the task of doing all that is possible, not only to allow a man to save himself but to help him to do so. It is his duty to see to it that all things are done which can be done to restore the offender to right relationships with his fellows and God, and thus deliver him from his own error. Such effort to restore a man to right relationships after some particular offense has occurred is known in the church terminology as "labor" and will be dealt with later under that title. Only when a member persistently refuses to forsake his wrong and be saved from it, can he rightfully be subjected to the punishment allowed in the law. Even then, the purpose of inflicting penalty is only to protect the rights of others or of the group. In the operation of that part of divine law which has been given to men for administration, punishment has been given no place.
