NEW YEAR!

New Year! Happy New Year!
Innocent, sublime and sweet!
What of promise are you bringing
To our wandering, aching feet?
Have the legends of the ages
Shadowed your approaching race?
Are you fettered all unknowing;
Hampered on the course you face?

New Year! Precious New Year!
Cast aside thy hindering foe!
Break thy bonds and cast asunder
All belying hordes of woe!
Waken to your journey's questing;
Find the secret of the hour,
And declare a message Holy,
Bearing with the spirit's Power!

New Year! Gracious New Year!
Bring us CHRIST!

* God the Father

An error appears in the idea current among some religious people that God is both a father and a mother. They use the phrase "Father-Mother-God." In many places in the Scripture God is called our Father, or the Father. Nowhere is he called the mother.

God recognized the divinity of the principle of earthly motherhood in the manner of the birth of his Son. He selected Mary to be the mother of our Lord. There could be no higher recognition of earthly motherhood. If God had wished at any time to be a mother, as well as a father, this would have been the occasion for it. He did not so choose.

Some pagan religions, putting emphasis on sex to the point of obsession, present their followers with a hermaphroditic god. The main currents of Christianity have always kept free of this ideological taint.—L. L.

* The Coffee War

The Coffee War has been going on for generations, and from the appearance of things, it will not be finished for another hundred years at least. Like the ancient children of Israel, we cling stubbornly to our mistakes and sins; we will not let anything so mild as reason and common sense separate us from them. And sometimes we even defy an act of God.

The article by Apostle D. T. Williams, "Did God Mean Hot?" (November 9 issue of the "Herald") brought considerable comment and mail. If you read that article carefully, you must be sure that the answer to the question is "Yes!"

But several of our readers have asked another question: "Did God mean strong?" Brother Williams did not take up this part of the discussion. Of course, if the Word of Wisdom means anything at all, the answer to this question is also "Yes."

So much of the argument on the Word of Wisdom has centered around a definition. What is a hot drink? A hot drink is any drink that is heated to a temperature that is hot—this is the common sense answer Brother Williams gives us.

Now, what is a STRONG drink?

Let us try again to employ common sense. Is coffee a strong drink? It is strong enough to make many people a slave of a habit. It is strong enough to give people nervous tremors. If one who is unaccustomed to it drinks it in the evening, it can keep him lying awake most of the night, and no amount of counting sheep or jeeps will put him to sleep. It is strong enough to cause disorders of various kinds. The fact that some people can drink it, as others do liquor, with little appearance of harm, does not controvert the mass of evidence against it. Coffee is not as strong a drink as some alcoholic drinks are, but it is a strong drink. If it is not, you should be just as well pleased with a glass of milk or lemonade.

Hot coffee, then, is harmful on two counts: because it is hot, and because it is strong. Cold coffee is harmful because it is a strong drink.

Will this consideration reduce by one the aggregate number of slaves to the coffee habit? Will even one addict put aside his percolator or Silex with its Cory rod, and forego his weekly purchase of aromatic poison? We may never know. If this item causes one person to change, we should like to hear from him or her.

Isaiah asked, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?"—L. L.

* It is God's mercy that we don't know much about the future. So he lets us enjoy the fullness of today's happiness by shielding us from the shock of tomorrow's disaster.

Planning Our Work

In the HERALD for October 26, reference was made to consideration given by the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, meeting in September, looking toward well-laid plans for a more effectual ministry to our people, and administration of the institutions of the church in their behalf and in that of such as may come under ministry of the church.

In any material construction or creation, the need for a plan is clear. If the tailor turns to the making of a garment, he does not do so by laying hold of a piece of cloth in one hand, and of a pair of scissors in the other and begin cutting at random. Or a carpenter to the erecting of a house by sawing and nailing to no purpose. Or a farmer to the fencing of a field without thought of material or style of fence to be builded. Material construction calls for a plan.

Nehemiah understood this principle. He had set his heart on the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem. So it was he went out by night, thereby keeping the enemy in the dark as to his intentions, and took account of the damage done to the walls. And, accordingly, he gathered the required material and stored it over against the breaches in the wall to be mended, armed his soldiers against enemy attack, supplied his masons with tools, and put each to work at the time and the place previously assigned. And so built they the wall, "for the people had a mind to work" according to plan.

Now no material construction is an end in itself. All such are for man's well-being and growth in life, and for enhancing his powers with which to do good to his fellow man. If, therefore, planning is necessary in these lesser matters, how essential it is that ministry to his growing life and its increase in powers be well-planned and executed.

Every ministry of the church, local as well as general, should be planned, developed and executed with clear vision, high purpose, and enduring endeavor toward growing intellectual, moral, and spiritual life in the children of God.

Baptismal gains throughout the church have been quite encouraging of late. Recent comments from the Central States Mission, presided over by Apostles P. M. Hanson and A. A. Oakman, indicate that there have been thirty baptisms in the Springfield, Missouri, Branch during this year. The branch president, Elder Joseph Breshears, is a devoted and consistent missionary pastor, and much of the missionary enthusiasm at Springfield is due to his splendid missionary leadership. Seven baptisms have recently been reported from St. Louis and an equal number is expected there in the near future. Brother Loving has recently added some fine men to the church in his area where we were greatly in need of such support. Elder Victor Witte has baptized forty-five people in the Tri-Cities area in the past fourteen months, ten being won in association with Brother Hunker in the recent past. Equally encouraging reports come from Brother Davey and Brother Patterson.

Elder George A. Njeim reports that he has had encouraging success in starting some of the local brethren in cottage meeting missionary series. His ministry has also included a series at Long Beach, California, where attendance during the week never dropped below 100 and where four were baptized. Elder Alma Andrews, of Berkeley, California, is making a special effort to promote missionary work in that city through the cottage meeting method, and Brother Njeim is spending part of this month in this work in the Bay Cities area.

On the occasion of President Smith's recent visit to Chatham, Ontario, the Chatham News had this to say:

"Making his first appearance in this district, President Israel A. Smith, world president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, attended a special meeting Tuesday at the church when guests were present from out-of-town points such as Bothwell, Kimball, Blenheim, Wabash, Merlin, and Wallaceburg.

"Grandson of Joseph Smith, Prophet of the Restoration Movement and founder of the church in 1830, President Smith addressed the capacity audience at the church.

"He said, 'There are over 50 complete translations of the Bible, 149 translations of the New Testament, 64 of the Old Testament and 182 of the Four Gospels according to Simms' The Bible From the Beginning.'

"Claiming that this alone was confusing, he said that the writers of the Revised Version claimed they had to depend on inspiration where scholarship failed them. He added that it was no more presumptuous for Joseph Smith to make changes under the claim of inspiration than for those who compiled the Revised Version.

"He said the translation of the Prophet did not support his [the Prophet's] claims as much as it cleared up many errors in the translations of the Bible.

"The speaker emphasized the moral values of the Bible and the Book of Mormon in the condemnation of iniquity and polygamy. 'God is always against sin and so is his Word,' he claimed forcibly."

The Meaning of Revelation

WHEN A CHILD is in danger, a loving father does not sit idly by. His eye is on the child. His heart responds, he shows concern, he speaks, he moves to help. He is revealed as a father.

One wonders what quirk of circumstance and tradition has made many men of theology believe that our Heavenly Father is less paternal than this. The world on fire, and our Father God unwilling or unable to speak? Incredible! Yes, this is more incredible than to believe that he manifests concern and seeks to reveal his will for us.

A L.D.S. DISTINCTIVE

Revelation is the most distinguishing feature of Latter Day Saintism. It is our most distinctive characteristic because from it stems the other beliefs which are peculiar to our sect.

We will readily and eagerly admit that many others believe in revelation, at least in partial revelation. Every prayer that rises up from a troubled heart is at least a hope if not a belief that God continues to reveal himself, that he is able and willing to speak today.

Many people have felt the warmth which comes from communion with God. These know that prayer is more than a spiritual push-up. Those who have prayed from the heart know that he will inspire and enlighten all who earnestly seek him. How comforting this is, to know that we do not dwell in a cold and unresponsive universe.

NATURE POINTS TOWARD GOD

Many believe that God is revealed in nature, and so do we. Those who have seen the Ware Collection of glass flowers at Harvard University are lavish in their praise of the Blaschka family. Almost invariably one is led to exclaim, "You mean those are made of glass? They look real!" Without exception, each one who views these magnificent reproductions will pay tribute to the infinite patience and skill involved in their creation. The intelligence of the Blaschkas is revealed. Their affection for their creation is written into each flower. The Blaschkas died, and the secret of creation died with them; no more such flowers are being produced.

Patience, skill, intelligence, and love of greater magnitude is revealed in real flowers. How can one question the presence of a creator? And creation still goes on—the Creator is still at work. Our God is revealed in Nature. His love of man is written large in his gracious provision for our welfare. The earth is just the right distance from the sun. The moon is just the right distance from the earth. Vegetation and animal life provide us the requirements for sustaining life. The minerals contribute to our well-being. The God of the living is a living God.

HE IS SEEN IN WORLD EVENTS

Many believe that God is revealed in the course of history, and so do we. Sometimes we need to see beyond the headlines of the daily newspapers to detect him, but he is there. Beyond the day's headline of conflict over the veto is the fact that nations are meeting together in an endeavor to establish a type of world government. Beyond the present disturbance in labor-management relations is the fact that the dignity of the individual laborer is being recognized and his standard of living being lifted. The Edisons and Carvers take their places now. Justice is on the lips of more people today. We are beginning to understand the meaning of mercy.

By Reed M. Holmes

Even in chaos our God is revealed, first in his warning and counsel; and then, having failed to heed his counsel, we find him urging us in mutual helpfulness in the midst of danger.

IN THE PERSON OF JESUS

Many believe that God is revealed in personality, and so do we. There are many who have responded to the tug of the Infinite. Their motivation is love, their life is kindness. Especially is God revealed in Jesus Christ. In Christ we see the attributes of God. We see what life is like when it responds to the love of God. We see how great that love is in the nature of the life of Christ, and in the measure of his sacrifice.

In all these areas there are points of similarity in beliefs. There is denial, however, of the disposition or ability of God to reveal himself as Personality speaking to personality, or as speaking through any human agency. But, we believe that the church is the agency of revealing God's will to man now. The church includes in its structure the means of receiving and cultivating the gift of revelation. In the church is included a prophet—prophet, seer, and revelator. In the church is the custom and the technique of calling ministers through divine designation. There is not only belief in revelation but also there is provided the means of revelatory expression. Herein we differ from other churches.

THE CHURCH AS AN AGENCY

Revelation is the heart of our message. First of all, it is normal to the process of redemption. In Holy Writ God is always portrayed as taking the initiative to restore man to his sonship. Through the course of the Bible, there is no question as to the fact of his moving to reveal himself to man. Then, as indicated in the Scriptures, and in the very nature of modern history man had and has need for the counsel of the Almighty. Man has need of His church as an agency authorized to speak for Him in the spirit of prophecy, to give direction and to bring interpretation of the current scene in the light of God's wisdom. God willed that the church be restored. God selected the instrument of restoration.

This is as it should be. Revelation has characterized religion through the ages. Look at the prophets of old. They spoke to the needs of their day as they were moved by the Spirit of God. If we are to keep it in our spiritual heritage, we must believe in a God who reveals himself. We contradict the very nature of God and the redemptive process when we deny the fact of continuing revelation.

"TILL WE ALL COME IN THE UNITY OF THE FAITH"

Revelation is essential to the unity and vitality of the church. Note the confusion in the religious world. Note the multiplication of denominations and interpretations of Scripture. Note the sterility in much of the pulpit work of our day. Note the anemic faith of many of the seminary-trained ministry of our day. Note the lack of the spirit of prophecy. (This is the lack of the testimony that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God.)

In November of this year a young minister, graduate of a theological seminary, in accepting his first "call," addressed his new flock with the startling announcement that Jesus was not perfect, not infallible, and that he had made many mistakes in his life and ministry. In contrast, study the experiences of Joseph Smith in which he saw and bore witness to Jesus as the Son of God, the central fact of his experience, and the motivation for his potent ministry.

We need revelation. We need the wisdom of God to be brought to bear upon the perplexities and fears which are upon us. We need a living object of worship in which we may place our faith, and which shall help us to see ourselves as we really are, and give us strength to become as we ought to be.

LIGHT ON PERSONAL PROBLEMS

I need current revelation to augment my intellect, to open vistas of understanding and comprehension. I need the wisdom of God to help in solution of problems. I want to know what God is like. I have unanswered questions about life and death, and they are most disturbing.

When we are stumped, we automatically say, "God knows, I don't!" Yes, God knows, and we need a revelation, not only in a book, but in a living voice.

We are drawn by nature to him. We hunger for him. We are full of fear without him. We are ignorant without him. We lack control without him.

We need revelation. And, we have found it in the gospel, for the gospel is the revelation of God's will. But the gospel may be viewed in two ways, as a standard or as a guide. As a standard it is generally viewed as fixed, given once for all, something to which we measure up. As a guide it is unfolding, it is directly concerned with current problems.

A book on mountain-climbing which gives the experience of others is most helpful in preparing to climb Mount Rainier in the state of Washington. But the climb is never quite the same. There are storms to be met and new dangers underfoot to be overcome. A guide is much more satisfactory. It is the same with life. We need a Guide, not revealed once for all, but constantly revealing.

We have seen that revelation is the will, the love, the intelligence of God as expressed in nature, in history, and in personality. We have seen that revelation is the disclosure of truth by which we may come to solution of our problems. We see, further, that revelation is light in our darkness, that it is the persistent effort of a loving Father to project enduring values into our lives in place of the transient pleasures esteemed so important by the world.

TUNED TO STATION G O D

Revelation of that which is wisdom in the sight of God is much to be desired. It is exacting in its requirements, however. We must have eyes to see and ears to hear. There must be a disposition to receive on our part which shall match the disposition to give on the part of God. We must be receptive and this requires meekness.

If there is to be revelation, there must be faith. While revelation begins in the heart of God, it is never consummated until there is faith in the heart of man. We must believe in God and that he is. We must sincerely expect that he will reward those who diligently seek him. It was the faith of Joseph Smith which brought answer to his prayer.

For revelation to be continuous in our lives, there must be qualification. As we act upon truth received and grow in his likeness, we are enabled to perceive greater truth.

THE TEST OF UTILITY

We have touched on the meaning of revelation in terms of definition and significance, but there is another area of meaning which should be stressed. What does it mean to us? Do we explore, test, and authenticate in our lives the revelations already received? Do we live in anticipation of further revelation? Does it mean enough that we qualify for receiving the revelation of God? Do we understand that we are to reveal him?

The Lord of Creation manages the affairs of the universe with efficiency and precision. We might do as well with the affairs of human life if we were to accept him as

The Why of Tithing

By Lewis Landsberg

Lewis Landsberg is the bishop of Lamoni Stake. He has been under church appointment since July, 1943. A graduate of Kansas State College, he worked for the U. S. Department of Agriculture previous to church appointment. He is interested in the vocation of agriculture and its place in the program of the church, is a Kansan, formerly of Kansas City Stake.

THE QUESTION has been asked many times, "Why the tithe?" The inconvenience of making out the statement to determine the tithe, the effort it takes to keep accurate accounts, and the nuisance of being always conscious of every nickel that is spent, make it seem that some other method could be used in supporting the church financially. Why not just give an offering when it is needed or give to the church spasmodically whenever we feel the urge? The money will be used for the same purpose, and everyone would be more willing to give if it were easier to comply with the financial program, say some people.

THE INDIVIDUAL OR THE CHURCH—WHICH?

First of all it must be recognized that tithing is only a part of the stewardship which every man has with his Heavenly Father. It is a very important part however, and is necessary in building the individual's personality. It is a step necessary for disciples of Jesus Christ to take before they secure the burning testimonies of the Latter Day Movement. The tithe is important to the individual and is the means that sovereign. Desiring our welfare as his children, our Father awaits our decision to hear him. Any wall that is between him and us is a wall of our own devising.

The ability of our Lord to reveal himself is constant. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

God has prescribed for his development. It is a test for kingdom-building men in their stewardship.

In the days of the depression, the slogan "Keep the Law" was used to pull the church out of a very dark period. In many instances the emphasis was placed upon "The Church" rather than upon the individual's need for it. It was through sacrificial offerings and the tireless efforts of many faithful tithepayers that these days are history. Conditions have changed, and a new era is faced in the experience of the church. The income of the church is exceeding the expenditure and a surplus is accumulating. This new era has caused some to say, "Now we can rest from our labors, why continue the tithe?"

The motivating force of every generation of the church has been "Onward to Zion." The cry that "every man is a steward" has been the challenge since the inception of the Latter Day Movement. The Utopias that men have dreamed about are still unavailable to the world, and the surge continues to be onward and upward toward God.

OVERCOMING SELFISHNESS

The person who has developed an attitude which sees beyond the needs of himself and his family and forgets his small problems in concern for the needs of his brother finds an inward joy which he has never known before. The man who has never made an attempt to lift someone else cannot appreciate the value of the work. Likewise the steward that looks upon his economic possessions as an opportunity to participate with God in this great work knows that the details are not chores of church membership but steps for achieving a higher plane of life. Such a steward welcomes the end of the year, for then he fully realizes the blessings of his Creator.

As he goes to the sanctuary to worship, he is ready for the ministry that God gives, and he looks upon his labors as helpful in the movement. He has placed all he has before God and therefore can look in faith to him constantly for direction in all things.

GOOD BUSINESS METHODS

The annual statement to determine the tithe has other value also. Any business man knows that he must account for his income and expenses before he plans his business. He must analyze the inventory, look for unnecessary expense, and determine the leaks before he makes future plans and programs leading to financial success.

The individual wanting to improve his economic stewardship will use his past operations for future planning. If he is a father, he will want a home, save for retirement, and educate his children. If he is a younger person, he will plan for higher education, business, or marriage. The tithe determination will develop within the person the ability to obtain the things he wants most in life.

Perhaps the greatest value of the financial program is the peace of mind or wholesome attitude achieved by the steward. The counsel of God has been followed, and he is free to worship, pray, ask for administration, or participate in any sacrament of the church, feeling a worthiness in so doing. There is no barrier between the individual and his Creator but rather a sense of helping God in the cause of Christianity.

The world today is needing a plan of economic security before peace can become permanent. When unemployment is experienced in a nation, taxes are collected for relief funds to provide the necessities of life for the handicapped. This is done by compulsion rather than the desire to help. How different it would be if the needy could continue to produce for that society and have a feeling of security rather than accept the bare necessities as a gift.

A SILENT PARTNER

God gives us from the abundance, all the things we have or can earn for ourselves. He is a silent partner watching while we manage the business. If we take him into our confidence, he counsels and helps in the affairs and, while we may be successful without him, we can never receive the joy and satisfaction as when he is a working partner.

The determination of the tithe is an experience every person should have annually. It is not a duty or obligation. It is rather a step in our development, a privilege we have of working harmoniously with our Father of the higher kingdom. Through this relationship, we become a co-worker with him for the cause of Zion in our generation and thereby prepare for a life everlasting.

The New Year

BY ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY

*Another year! God grant it brings
A wealth of richer, better things.
More love to God and all mankind;
More open eyes that once were blind
To human woes and human needs —More loving words and kinder deeds.
To many souls 'twill bring release
From earthly cares, bring lasting peace
In that fair land beyond the sky
Where love and friendship never die.
We greet you, then, with hearty cheer
—Our gift from God, a bright new year.*

upon it. We noticed wherever there were high snowcapped mountains usually there were gathered about the bases of these mountains fertile areas of farm lands waiting to thrive on the melting snows of spring and summer.

While passing one of the largest of these mountains buried deep under a heavy blanket of snow, suddenly the mountain seemed to utter speech and declare the glory of God. Here are the words which the mountain seemed to say:

Go, tell your people the long winter of their failure to accomplish has been prolonged because of their lack of consecration, their coldness, and their indifference to the building of the kingdom. Tell your people, in the high places of the mountain of the Lord's House there is held in reserve enough of the eternal snows to water all the great valley of Babylon—the vast desert of sin and transgression; and if they will now climb to the high places, the Sun of Righteousness shall draw near, and by the warmth of his presence the snows of heaven shall melt and flow down. Then shall it come to pass, instead of the cactus of greed, there shall spring forth the vine of service. Instead of the vast bleak deserts of doubt and unbelief, there shall appear the verdant, pleasant land of faith covered with beautiful gardens of brotherhood and peace. In the places where the poisonous serpents of lust now lie in wait to destroy, the lambs of virtue and innocence shall gambol and play.

As I listened, the mountain seemed to continue to utter its speech:

Go, tell your people that before them lies the greatest opportunity of any generation since the days of Enoch. Before them stands the great mountain of the House of the God of Jacob, the church of the Restoration. If they will now mount up the heights of prayer and fasting and complete consecration, the God of their fathers shall return and draw near. Then shall it come to pass that the dews of heaven shall descend upon this thirsty earth; and men who now drink of the poisoned river of hate and strife and die, shall drink of the river of life and live; and multitudes of the good people of this earth who search and look and find naught but stagnant pools of selfishness, greed, and despair, shall find fountains of living waters.

Surely, the word of God not only does declare, but his works also declare—Zion is more than just a dream. Zion is more than a mirage of the mind or a phantom of the imagination. Zion is a living reality waiting, waiting in the tops of the mountains for us to come up and occupy.

Today's Lamanites

BY NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL

As a very amateurish archaeologist and habitual traveler, I have been quite interested in the relation between the Book of Mormon and the land as it is today. During a recent trip to Hill Cumorah, for instance, I wondered why we can find no trace of the great battle which took place there, destroying the Nephites. Why are there no visible remnants of this great fight, no stone axes, no arrowheads? Why have we found none of these? Certainly they would outlast the centuries which have passed.

A more pertinent question of today concerns the remnants of the Lamanites. What is the present status of the American Indian? What is his future, and what part can our church play in that same future?

To understand the Indian of today, one must know the Indian of yesterday. The Indian of today is a composite of many languages, many customs, and many beliefs. In the Latin American countries where segregation has not taken place, the population of the countries is a fusion of the Indian blood and their later alien conquerers. In Mexico alone there are still over 250 Indian dialects in use. The Indian of the United States has been placed in a specified tract, given certain limits of action, and strict governmental control. What is this status?

A DWINDLING GROUP

The numerical strength of the Indian is decreasing in general, with increases in only specific tribes which believe in the true colorline and which frown upon amalgamation of any other blood with their own. Note the following interesting statistics as published by the Indian Rights Association:

TRIBE	1920	1944
Apache	6,200	8,000
Cherokee	44,250	49,000
Chippewa	24,000	36,000
Choctaw	20,000	19,000
Navajo	32,000	52,000
Pueblo-Hopi	13,120	18,000
Sioux	30,400	38,000

The last census estimated a total Indian population in the United States of 370,580 persons.

Where are these Indians? The majority of them are west of the Mississippi, although a few tribes are scattered eastward. The best known of the latter are the Seminole of Florida, the Onondaga and Mohawk of New York, the Cherokee of North Carolina, and the Choctaw of Mississippi. The larger tribes (and reservations) of the West include the Navajo of New Mexico, the Ute of Utah, the Paiute of Nevada, the Blackfeet and Crow of Montana, the Sioux of the Dakotas, and the lesser known Athabaskan (Eskimo) tribes in Alaska. The state of Oklahoma has been designated officially as the Indian state and 98 tribes are represented in its territory.

CITIZENSHIP

All American Indians became citizens of the United States by Act of Congress in 1924, but States were allowed to define the conditions for the vote. In Arizona the "wards" of the state may not vote, thus no Indian suffrage. In New Mexico if they pay taxes, they may vote. A free vote is allowed in Washington and Colorado. The Indians could not vote, but they were drafted for war duty. Notice this—over 25,000 persons of Indian blood served in the Army, Navy, Marines, Wacs, and Waves during World War II. That is patriotism!

Every American knows the story of the subduing of the Indian, and such stories as "Custer's Last Stand" and others often place the Indian in the wrong. We forget that our white pioneers actually trespassed upon private property belonging to the Indian tribes. When this land finally was ceded by the Indians to the government, certain pledges of protection and education were made. So much graft and breaking of faith occurred through the following years that finally, in 1934, reform legislation was necessary. This Act planned to give not only political freedom but also economic freedom and necessary credit. An appropriation of five million dollars was made for a revolving credit fund and an additional six million dollars for outright improvements of conditions.

FOR IMPROVEMENT

In April, 1940, the Inter-American Indian Institute held a First Hemisphere Conference on Indian Life at Patzcuaro, Mexico. Its purpose was to furnish a means of interchange of ideas and co-operation among all the countries of America with the view of bettering the conditions of the thirty million Indians on the American continents.

The United States government maintains an Office of Indian Affairs under the Department of the Interior, operating under a yearly congressional appropriation. Their expenditures cover "Indian education and health, support and rehabilitation of the needy, subsidies for . . . schools . . . , payment of interest on Indian monies held in trust, reservation road construction and maintenance, irrigation, agricultural extension and stock-raising, administration of law and order, and the general administration of Indian property."

It is easy to see that this program is an ambitious one, and not easily administered. The educational program must be adapted in content and made adequate for all tribes. Doctors and hospitals must be made available. Agricultural and home extension facilities must be expanded. All federal laws must be modified to fit the tribal situation. It is interesting to note that prohibition is in force on all reservations at the request of the Indians themselves.

This, then, is the Indian. This is the Lamanite to whom we must carry the "stick of Joseph."

Following the Pioneers

By Rich Price

At a recent Communion service the Saints were told of the gallant struggles of the church's founders who pioneered the religious Restoration of 1830. The suffering of those who founded Independence, Missouri, with the promise that it should someday be Zion—and Zion it yet shall be!

They were told of the hardships of more recent pioneers—and it all seemed so glamorous—those happenings of the past, that it made one wish he could have been there to help make history.

Aren't we too prone to exult over the great deeds and heroes of the past, and too slow to make history ourselves? The pioneers are still marching on, "ever making something new." Those who have the pioneer's "urge" are certainly welcomed among the "faithful few" who are keeping the church alive. Pioneers are desperately needed in the church today to help bring His kingdom here, as well as in heaven. We can all be pioneers, even though it may not seem so romantic when we are close to realities; we can all build Zion homes and communities, even though we cannot build Zion by ourselves.

Let us then be pioneers, not just followers of them.

Prejudice is a form of doubt. Blindly held, it warps our judgment and hinders our progress; dissected and analyzed, it may reveal new and valuable truths.—James F. Keir.

Youth Speaks

BY BARBARA McFARLANE

Editor's note: In the following article, a young sister who was honored by the Kansas City school system by being selected from a large group of contestants, speaks of an experience she had in making an international broadcast. She and a teammate were paired with a boy and girl from London, England. We believe "Herald" readers will enjoy her discussion of this experience.

The international broadcast held during the teacher's convention in Kansas City was designed to give an exchange of ideas between Kansas City, U. S. A., and London, England, on the subject, "Are youth and the schools meeting their obligations to one another?" The question was one of vital interest, not only to the teachers present but to the students who participated. The two students from America were backed up by an aggregation of 100 boys and girls from Kansas City high schools whose duty it was to ask questions of anyone of the four speakers. To start the exchange of ideas, a week before the broadcast a 200-word statement from each of the London speakers was cabled to Kansas City and likewise, from the two in America, to London. This gave the two speakers from each country an idea of the stand taken by the foreign pair. It was interesting to note that the Londoners were quite harsh with the student element, while the Americans reserved criticism for both the teacher and the taught. Yet, during the actual discussion, the English girl stated that there was not much procrastination on the part of English students. This observation left Kansas City wondering just what was their secret of success, for the consensus in America is that our students are definitely "loafers." A definite need for teachers with broader vision was expressed. England is starting a crusade along this line with the objective of securing ex-servicemen who have traveled, as teachers because they would have a keener insight into the life of other peoples.

This experience certainly left me marveling at the wonders of modern communication. The ability to hear the voices of people so far away and the comparative ease with which connections were made gave me a feeling beyond description. It brought England as close as the headphones to Kansas City for the 45 minutes that the connection lasted. Then the actual exchange of ideas testified that English young people are not the stuffy, formal beings of repute but real people just like some of my friends. We asked Bella (the English girl) if she was nervous and when she said "a little," that put us on very common ground. A short time ago I received a very friendly letter from her and found her interests much the same as mine. I intend to continue the correspondence and would like very much to meet her personally.

Upon looking back over the experience, I find I have only one regret: that the discussion didn't last about 30 minutes longer because we were just "getting into it" when we had to stop. It was an event I will remember for a long time. Before the broadcast I was extremely nervous, so I made it a subject of prayer. I believe that the Lord answered that prayer to the extent that I felt I had something to depend on besides myself. Any measure of success which was mine on that night was due to that degree of inspiration for which I am deeply grateful.

Sin and Forgiveness

How far can we go and be forgiven? It is true our Heavenly Father says we should forgive seventy times seven and more if necessary. A good Latter Day Saint does not tempt Him. We pledge ourselves to the saintly life, and thus we try to live daily so that each deed is pleasing in the sight of God. If we repent and abide by our repentance, we are surely given another chance. No one is perfect but our Father.

I became a member of the Reorganized Church on September 29, 1946, after an unusual experience. I have walked through the valley of the shadow of death many times; medical doctors cannot understand how I have lived these last several years.

I was a member of the Disciples, or so-called "Church of Christ," being baptized by immersion at the age of twelve by an evangelist. It was extremely hard for me to become interested enough to even investigate this work, because I could not see why it was necessary for me to be baptized a second time.

A short time before I became ill, my twin daughters, now seventeen, became interested and attended all services and were baptized about one year ago by William P. Vickroy of Columbus, Ohio. On the same day, I received administration by him and our beloved Brother C. Ed. Armstrong as I lay in my hospital bed. I felt some better but had no immediate recovery.

I was a Bible student and read and studied a lot and listened to all radio sermons. Through the prayers of the Saints, my family, and friends, I finally was out in my wheel chair and could walk around my home.

One day I turned to my Bible and read John 3: 5, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." For weeks I turned to this same message, as indeed it was a message to me.

I tried to determine if I had been baptized by one ordained of God. One evening Brother Armstrong called on me, and as he sat beside my bed, I asked him many questions concerning this, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. I finally agreed to attend morning worship on Sunday, and my daughters took me in my wheel chair.

I seemed to absorb each hymn, Bible reading, and word spoken. I attended all services afterwards and I found each one more revealing.

I studied the Book of Mormon as well as my Bible, read all tracts, and some of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Finally, after being fully convinced that I had finally found the true gospel, I asked if I was worthy of being born again and renewing my covenant with God. The answer was, "You certainly are," so Brother Vickroy came to Mount Vernon and I was baptized.

I had the prayers of the Saints and offered up my own prayers. Even though the group on the river's edge was cold, to me the water was warm and I, an invalid, was born again.

My desire is to be always faithful.

Report on South Central Oregon

Brother Carroll and I went to Klamath Falls recently to meet with the Saints who are there; seven children and five adults were present. Although few in number, they wish to organize a mission. I sincerely believe if other groups had the faith of those two families, the cause of the church would go forward faster. Another example is that of the widow and elderly couple who worship together. They cannot do much by themselves, but if we can meet with them often enough, it may mean the beginning of another branch. The man has offered to donate a lot and help with the building of a church if a group can be organized. I learned a real lesson from those people; I have not met many in my travels who were as sincere and willing to help. If the snow doesn't prevent, I expect to continue my visits with them.

Need Continued Prayers

Some time ago we sent in a request for prayers to the Herald in behalf of our little grandson, Johnny Frisbee, who disappeared from his home last June 19. No trace has been found of him since.

I want to take this means of thanking all who so kindly remembered us in their prayers and also those who have sent letters. They have been greatly appreciated. Although Johnny is still missing, we feel it was the prayers of the Saints that gave us strength to bear our grief. We hope our friends will continue to remember us in their petitions, and especially do we ask them to pray for John's father. The strain of worry and grief has been very hard on him.

We are isolated and do not have church privileges, but we remain strong in the faith and get much comfort from the pages of the Herald and visits of the Saints.

A Testimony of Faith

I had always had a fear of taking an anesthetic, but when I went to the hospital on October 17 for an operation, I decided to make that passage of Scripture which says, "Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thy heart," my motto. Just before going to surgery, I repeated the twenty-third Psalm. After the first sensation of darkness, I seemed to see a glorious light and the Saviour standing beside the river of life. This same brightness continued throughout the operation. Although the suffering was severe in the days that followed, I found comfort in prayer. I pray God that I may live a life useful to him in some way. I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may soon be strong enough to take my place in the church again. I send greetings to all who know me. If any care to write, their letters will be appreciated.

What Is Your Dream?

By SADI ANKA MOON

—or do you have one? When you were younger, you said to yourself, "Someday I'm going to be a fireman, an explorer, or a mountain-climber." But those were the days before you realized the amount of energy that goes into being a fireman, an explorer, or a mountain-climber. Or anything else. And what are you doing right now? What will you be doing tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock? Something you want to be doing? Are you pleased with yourself and your job? Is this what you dreamed of doing? Is this the contribution you dreamed of making to humanity? Or did you get stopped when you were only part way up your mountain because you lacked equipment or because it was too hard climbing?

In testimony meeting you have said, or at least felt, "I want to do my part to further the work of the church." All right, are you satisfied that what you are doing is really pointing in that direction? If not, why not? What's your trouble? Come on now, you can't blame it on someone else!

When you took upon you the name of this church you assumed a real responsibility. Let's just throw out the big words and take a good honest look at what that responsibility is. First of all, if you believe that it is God's church, to help build a happier society where each individual has a right to his own self-realization, just what kind of an organization do you think that means? Do you think it means we're supposed to be trailing along someplace in the background of the social and physical sciences? Of course not. As President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., in the Graceland homecoming address, said: "We're to occupy places of leadership."

That is pointed enough. Now, let's make this personal. How about you? Forget all the others for a while. Yes, we realize that we are a bunch of "pikers," probably, but that isn't going to excuse you. In this analysis of you, we must start with what you have to contribute. No self-respecting human being will answer, "Nothing," to this probe. We have our hypothesis now; some thing, or maybe several things, which you have to offer the group. This thing is native with you, a talent. Now we go on to find out what you have done with it. Buried it? You must have—if you're like some of the rest of us—otherwise you'd be so busy and happy that you'd never worry about what to do with a rainy Saturday afternoon. Explicitly, what can you do to use that talent? Are you in a place where it can be used to the best advantage? Maybe your work, which you may merely have become addicted to because of the inertia of rest, the fear of moving on, is not at all conducive to your making your best contribution. Are you afraid of changing jobs or locations? This question is not pointed at those erratic few of us who, like a firefly, are never in the same spot twice when their light goes on. But, notice that I said few—come on, don't sit back in your chair. Most likely you aren't in that group. You're probably doing what you are, unpleasant or unsatisfying as it is, because of some vague sense of security. "I'm always assured of my three meals a day." Gee, you're afraid, aren't you? You don't have much confidence in your abilities, do you? A lot of people do have confidence in you, though, and expect much from you, even if it involves breaking out of that warm little cocoon you are methodically wrapping yourself in. If that is the case, you're too scared to be in this thing. That is enough on this subject of talent. You think it out from there.

Your work is interesting and satisfying, let us say. What about your extra-curricular activities? What books have you read recently on social philosophy, economics, psychology, or related subjects? If your church is to pioneer in the field, you, as a member, can't afford to be a wallflower. What contribution have you made in the form of leadership or participation? President Gleazer also said in his address, "The strength of the group is the participation of the members." You must, if you love this thing, be giving your personal support to your branch activities and your community civic affairs. If your church is to be a leader in the field of social welfare, you must be an active citizen in your community, city, and state. By the way, did you vote at the recent elections? Did you know what you were voting about? As a progressive church member, you should be able to answer both of these questions affirmatively. Are you doing some volunteer work in any of the now help-starved fields, Red Cross, Girl Scouting or Boy Scouting, city play clubs, community recreation, adult education, or hospital aid? Maybe you feel you are not equipped to contribute. Then get busy and learn how.

in the whole problem, and it's one of the key words of our movement: stewardship. Just go over some of those stewardships you used to recite in church school when you were in the junior or junior high department—time, talent, and money. Money—you especially, as a Reorganized Latter Day Saint, ought to have some active and growing theories and practices concerning your money. Right now are you keeping an expense account and paying tithing regularly? And here's a big one: What are you thinking about the economic theory of Zion? That's a problem we're all going to share in. We, as individuals, must be doing some thinking on the prob-

The Trouble-Shooter

League Service Or Gab Fest?

QUESTION: Maybe I'm being too critical, or perhaps I'm just old-fashioned—whichever the case, I am perturbed about the seeming lack of respect for the house of worship so often evidenced in League services. I suppose teen-agers, by nature, are restless and noisy, but surely they feel a need for reverence occasionally. I would appreciate suggestions from some successful young people's leader on how to deal with this situation.

ANSWER: By Dwain Miller, President of the City-wide League, Independence, Missouri.

Until the seeming lack of respect for the house of worship on the part of our young people annoys us enough to take steps to remedy the situation, I'm afraid we'll all have to remain perturbed about it for some time to come.

The author of the question wonders about the lack of respect evidenced in League services. Perhaps the reasons I give in answering this question could well answer the queries of those who wonder why there is such a lack of respect for the house of worship on the part of some adults.

Let us consider these adults for a moment. After all, what better place could we begin an analysis of the problems of the young than with their progenitors? The problem didn't arise in a day or two but had its beginning long ago in the home. So often children are blamed for something their parents failed to do. That is partially true in this problem of respect for worship services. Let me ask the parents a few questions. Have you ever taken the time to explain to your children why church is different from the circus or movies or a baseball game? Many grow up without knowing the real significance of church attendance. Do you have a family altar in your home? Have you taught your children the value of prayer? Have you made an effort to teach them to love and respect God? You can't expect them to honor his house unless they respect him. Children must have a reason for doing things, too. If they have to be quiet in church, they'll want to know why. Always the adult must be an example. Years of verbal teaching as to what's right and what's wrong may be destroyed by one careless action.

Another contributing factor to this problem is the type of Zion's League services we have. Many of these meetings are more like parties than a study hour or worship service. Some young people's leaders have the mistaken idea that they must stage an entertainment each Sunday evening or no one will attend. Such procedure is putting the cart before the horse. "As they sow, so shall they also reap." In such cases you'll find the young people coming to be entertained, and when there is a serious service, they're restless, noisy, and disappointed because it's not what they're used to or what they expect. They have the feeling that something's being put over on them.

Now about planning. Do you plan your League services in relative units for periods of three, six, nine, or twelve months, with each period designed to accomplish some definite objective? Or are your services just a series of episodes having no relationship to preceding meetings and no objective other than "filling in" the League hour? Is your program well-balanced? Does it meet the needs of young people?

I would like to make a few practical suggestions which, I believe, may help. Look around you. Survey your League for talents and aptitudes. Put everyone to work. Probably every fellow who is back from service has a store of interesting knowledge about other peoples of the world, their religions and customs. This is vital information to all young Latter Day Saints who seriously intend to do something about evangelizing the world. Interview your pastor and other church officials to find out how they came to devote their lives to the cause. Invite prominent men of the community to present their views on some current problem. Ask clergymen of other churches to explain their religious beliefs. Have debates, forums, and panel discussions on questions asked most frequently by young people. Visit other Leagues and exchange ideas. You'll be surprised at the bond of fellowship which will result. Plan some major project that will require work and sacrifice . . . perhaps the church needs repainting, or maybe there's room for a tennis court in the back yard.

I hope these suggestions will stimulate you to think of others. Because of limited space, I can only "scratch the surface." Just as this problem of disrespect didn't arise in a day or two, neither is it going to be solved in a short while. It is something that has to be worked at, and the time to start is now.

lem. We can't leave it all for Bishop DeLapp to do. If we consider our church a democratic organization, we owe it to the church to share in the formulating of our Zion's theory. That calls for working together and thinking together. What do you do when you form a young adult's class or have a get-together? Study the Book of Mormon? That's all well and good, but remember that what Evangelist Ray Whiting says is true, "a light is to see by and not to look at." Let's hang the lights of our church literature over our shoulders and start looking at the problems of living. Maybe you are in an isolated area or your work doesn't allow you to share the company of other thinking Latter Day Saints. Maybe there is an intelligent solution to your problem. Have you honestly considered doing something about it?

Lots of questions have been asked here. Questions are good for us. Don't be afraid to question your own motives, habits, and goals. You're in good company; there are many, many young Latter Day Saints who feel just as you do—we want to, but we're just a little afraid to. There's no room in our movement for the "inertia of fear." Put some wheels under that dream. Accept your responsibility of leadership in social progress. And remember, you cannot be limited by anything but those things you accept as limitations.

Consider Your Minister

BY RICH PRICE

Your branch president is a busy man. Some of his responsibilities are: Keeping contact with the branch membership, visiting the sick, reading for personal development, personal prayer and meditation, preparation of sermons, speaking to church and community groups, meeting with church committees, pastoral letter writing, weddings, funerals, and special events, personal conferences, and entertainment of guests—and making his own living in his "spare time."

Your pastor is your servant—your spiritual leader. You employ him, but you do not pay him. Most churches give their ministers an adequate salary and retirement security. Our branches cannot do this, but our ministers are still anxious to serve. They can serve best if we give them our full co-operation. Consider your minister by following his leadership and making his work easier.

My Longing

Beget in me
A sincere sympathy
For him whose earnest zeal abates,
Who fears and halts and hesitates,
About to lose his way.

Beget in me
Abundant charity
For everyone and all mankind,
That'll not retaliate in kind
When rude offenses come.

Beget in me
A magnanimity
That sees the good in foe and friend
And scorns the seeming evil trend,
Is blind to every fault.

Beget in me
Abounding industry,
A restless urge to do for Him,
To carry on 'mid sordid din
Ever unsatisfied.

Beget in me
A humble ecstasy,
A fear of weaknesses of mine,
But consciousness of help divine,
A joyous fortitude.

* The Greater Fact

Coming down the eastward slope from the Raton Pass through southeastern Colorado, the long Santa Fe train, "The Chief," gathered speed until it seemed like a bird in flight. Back there, silhouetted in the light of the setting sun, was a great table-topped mountain, majestic and beautiful, the last outpost of the Rockies we were to see as we entered upon the rolling plains, the little hills and gullies that were slanting us slowly downward into Kansas. The traveler, fascinated, watched it for a full hour as it receded into the distance.

Geologically, the mountain and the plain are two different worlds, and they carry a spiritual symbolism too obvious to be missed. The plains are practical; they speak doggedly material things—soil, crops, pasture—by which the body is fed, and its wants are supplied. The mountain is a denial of all that the plains have to say; it is an exaltation of the spirit, a proclamation of the glory of eternity, a touch of the hand of God. And yet the mountain has its practical uses, too: upon its sides the high clouds are squeezed like sponges of their moisture to water the plains below in rain and melting snow. The plain needs the mountain; the mountain needs the plain.

Like a mountain, the fact of immortality rises aloft to fix our attention upon another and more enduring world. It is a denial of all the so-called "facts" of our little materialism upon the plains of everyday life. The two worlds—the temporal and the eternal—need each other.

The mountain, though seeming fairylike in the dim haze of the distance, is as real as the plain. And immortality is as real as the soil, your vegetable garden, and your daily loaf of bread.
—L. L.

* Complaints

We'd like to complain a bit about Americans. In our towns, we think it good to widen the streets, put a building in every vacant place, pave every bit of land that is left, destroy every tree and eliminate every patch of green grass. When it is all done we don't like it, and escape to the country every chance we get. Yet we never learn, but go right on doing it. Will God ever forgive us for so disfiguring his world?

We build beautiful super-super highways, and we take them around the towns so that we can have country scenery and not disturb the townspeople. Then we let all the honky-tonks, shacks, and evil night clubs move out and clutter up the highway, so that the trouble and money are wasted. How will a future generation forgive us? We don't like it, but we go right on doing it.

We invented the worst cheese in the world. It was strong, bitter, and unpalatable. Then most of us decided we didn't like cheese anyway and refused to eat it. Only when importers brought us foreign cheeses did we discover how delicious this nourishing milk food could be. Now our manufacturers have a new idea, and are making some rather fair imitations—but still imitations. A few of us have learned to buy the new kinds. But most people who go to market and say "Gimme some cheese," are planning to use it to bait a mouse trap, or impart strength to a Friday dish of macaroni. Primitive people could use it to fend off evil spirits.

We have done a great amount of bragging in these years about "The American Way of Life." But not all of our ways are wonderful. Some of them need improvement. We could begin now. Not only would we all be happier: we could have something worth-while to show to the visiting foreigners.—L. L.

The McConleys to Europe

The European conflict brought about a marked curtailment of missionary effort in the European Mission. Apostle Oakman gave such ministry as he could under wartime restrictions; but it was largely limited to England after hostilities began, and he returned to America while yet movements of nonmilitary citizens were prohibited on the continent.

Since the war ended, relaxation of these restrictions has been slow, and especially delayed in the zones in Germany and Poland under the separate control of Soviet Russia, Great Britain, and the United States. Nevertheless, some important work has been done by Elder F. O. Davies, who has visited Holland and the Scandinavian countries at our request, and who reports quickening spiritual activity and deep gratitude for the food and clothing sent by the Saints in the United States, England, and Australia.

In order to build on the work already done, Apostle M. A. McConley has now been appointed to take charge of the European Mission. His departure will be delayed only long enough to secure needed passports when he will be en route. Sister Emma McConley will either go at the same time or join him as soon as necessary preparations for a mission headquarters can be made.

Brother McConley will not be new to work in our missions abroad. He entered the active ministry under conference appointment in 1910, and was sent to Hawaii. After four years there, he was transferred to the mainland; but in 1916 returned to that mission for another four years.

He was called and ordained an apostle in 1920, and in 1921 went to Australia. He visited America for the fall conference of 1923 and was reappointed to Australia with the late Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, for about two more years.

Since 1925 Brother McConley has served at different times as missionary in charge of Canada, the Pacific Slope, the Southern States, the Great Lakes, and the Central States.

In 1941 he went again to Hawaii, and he was back and forth for the duration of the war. He and Sister McConley were in Honolulu during the bombing of Pearl Harbor, and gave valuable ministry to the church and citizenry, our members of the military service, and to the general welfare of the cause.

Brother McConley is thus a veteran missionary whose devotion to the cause of the church has never flagged however hard has been the road. Sister McConley for many years has been prominent as a worker among the women, and is a member of the General Council of Women. They have two sons and a daughter, and three grandchildren. The daughter is Sister Alice McConley Johnson, the wife of Elder Glen Johnson, one of our able young General Conference appointees.

Brother and Sister McConley go on this important mission with our full confidence that they will render a satisfactory ministry to the Saints. We commend them to the church abroad and ask for them the united prayers of the Saints.

From Private Neville F. Cool, U. S. Army in Korea:

Dear Brother Smith: This is a Christmas greeting from a brother in Korea. I've been made Chaplain's Assistant here and hope in some way I can be an influence for good. These boys are starving for spiritual food.

Korean missionary work would seem to me necessary, also. It will be a hard task, but I'm sure, if God's in his church, nothing can stop us.

Letters addressed to Brother Cool in our care will be forwarded.

Apostle D. Blair Jensen reports that he officiated at the reorganization of the Chillicothe, Ohio, Branch on the evening of Monday, December 9. Much of the credit for the development of our work in Chillicothe goes to Elder Floyd Rockwell, President of the Southern Ohio District, and other Saints of the Limerick Branch. We are very happy to see the work in this area strengthened as our branches are built up in stable areas of population.

Planning for Editorial Work

Reference has been made in these columns to the need for long-range vision and well-laid plans towards the ministry essential to growth of life in our people. Looming large in these considerations is the pastoral function of ministry, towards the strengthening of which there is being issued from the office of the First Presidency The Pastoral Handbook for 1947 just off the press and made available to all pastors and supervising officers related to the pastoral ministry of the church.

In this handbook are found suggestions for special days and seasons, for sermon topics, prayer meeting themes, Communion talks, and remarks appropriate to the receiving of the oblation.

There is included also an appreciation of priesthood, with particular reference to the standing ministry, of the place of the church school in the work of the branch, of ministry to the family, of the fellowship of Saints, and of the kingdom of God in its wider reaches. And there is a discussion of general church finances, of church institutions, of the gathering, and of standards for stewards.

It will be understood of course this is in no sense an attempt at regimentation, but is suggestive only, as may be applicable to local situations at the discretion of pastors of the church. May, then, the lead given be accepted as intended—a contribution towards our expanding vision and consistent planning for the total pastoral functioning essential to growth in life of the Saints and the church.

The Iron Curtain

News from countries under the Soviet control is of paramount interest. It is not often we can get statements from one occupying the highest position in any of these countries. Zoltan Tildy, not only is president of Hungary but is also an ordained minister of the Reformed Church, probably the first Protestant clergyman to head a European State.

President Tildy said the religionists of the world could help by including Hungary in Christian good fellowship, and after peace treaties are effected, representatives from the churches will be welcome.

Tildy's message to Christianity is significant and is here reprinted from news releases:

It is my conviction that the restoration of world order and the conquest of the inner crisis of humanity are possible only by the help of the gospel. Neither for the individual nor for human society, peoples, and nations does there exist any other line of development to a true and decent peace than by way of the gospel.

Humanity yearns with tormented heart for peace and quiet. No matter what nation or society you consider, this longing is mirrored in its life. Even where the gospel message is not publicly proclaimed, the same endeavors toward a better and more perfect life and toward the peace which comes from constructive work can be recognized.

Never have the churches had before them a greater opportunity and a larger task than in these anxious times. Millions of avid men and women await the message that will show them the way and illuminate the path into the future. But the churches can only fulfill their task if they unreservedly confess the gospel and proclaim it, if they take upon

Blue Pencil Notes

Often the remarks and questions of children are amusing to adults, but we were reminded by one writer in the Herald that we better not laugh at their questions, rather take them seriously and answer as wisely as we can. At the same time we may learn something.

Years ago a little nephew of mine, Wallace Cochran, came to my home in Lamoni on an important matter. This was his question: "Uncle All-bert, you know those gum machines you put a penny in and push a button and out comes a stick of gum? Well, this is what I want to know: if you keep on pushing will the gum keep on coming out?" Now there was the wishful thinking of a lot of adults. How easy the problem of life if we could find a way to put in a small sum of money and keep on punching a button the rest of our lives and get what we want—and now some think the government should furnish the money and the machine and a man to press the button.

Again of an evening, when I had raked up a lot of rubbish in the backyard and had a big bonfire, Wallace came and contemplated it for a time and then said, "Uncle All-bert, did you start all that fire with one match?" James once remarked, "How great a matter a little fire kindleth." Just one match may start a fire that will burn up old friendships—perhaps burn up a branch or district of the church. The children of the kingdom should not play with matches.

One of our small L. D. S. boys came home from Sunday school. The theme of the lesson had been love. He was full of the theme. He swelled out his chest and announced to the family, "I love everybody. I love everybody in the whole world—some I do and some I don't." Even adults have reservations in their religious professions. At that, this lad's remark starts a train of thought.

We are to cherish good will toward all people. We are to avoid the spirit of intolerance and hatred against all races and peoples. Good will is the basis of love. And yet there are certain fellowships which are not all embracing. God loved the whole world. Jesus loved all people; yet rather obviously there were some for whom he had a fellowship into which the whole world could not or would not enter.

For those who had accepted his message, obeyed his gospel, shared with him his labor and companionship, for those the love of Jesus took on a richer and deeper meaning. John says that when Jesus knew that the hour of his departure was come, "having loved his own, he loved them unto the end." He gathered his disciples together for the last supper, and to them he said, "With desire have I desired to eat this passover with you." When he came to offer his closing prayer at this memorable meeting, he prayed: "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are mine." Jesus loved all men, but he had an especial love for those given him of the Father who voluntarily had become his brethren.

The fellowship of those of like faith, who have shared similar spiritual experiences is one of the most precious things that we are privileged to know. "The friends that most cheer me on life's rugged road are the friends of my Master, the children of God."

ELBERT A. SMITH

Few people are entirely free from prejudice. We owe it to ourselves to analyze our prejudices to discover how secure the foundations are upon which they rest. Truth, which is the essence of science, is the dissecting tool with which to work.—James F. Keir.

A Spur of Life

By Lorne F. White

EVERYONE is sentenced to death. That is a grim, blunt, and inescapable certainty. There was a time when we made too much of death. Now we make too little of it, exclude it from our calculations as morbid and gloomy. The latter is the more foolish course. The owl is a wiser bird than the stupid ostrich. Instead, it is preferable that we select a middle course, taking due, but not undue account of the fact of death, as one of the conditions involved in life. Therefore, I hope we can understand death in a new, sane, healthy, even cheerful interpretation of fact.

There are, in any intelligent view of death, certain limits it places on life. At first glance there is very little similarity between a picture frame, a rent day, the frontier of a nation, and the count in a boxing match. And yet each have something in common in that all form limits to something. Definite compression and focus is given a picture by its frame. The approach of rent-day forces the tenant to limit his spending. The jurisdiction of a nation is confined within its borders. And the counting of the referee forces the prostrate pugilist to an even more reluctant elevation. A game is definitely made by its rules. This is particularly true of the game of life. It has a definite time limit, and the fact of that limit supplies life with its salt and tang. What a nightmare of insipid and savorless vapidness would be the result in a deathless life. Unconsciously this knowledge of a time limit in life provides us with a constant urge, a pressure, and a spur to a greater and fuller life. Of all the points of life's rich economy, the fact of this limit consciousness is the least recognized and the most abused.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF A time limit, therefore, supplies to life a welcomed, zestful, and valuable intensity. This place and function of death in the economy of life is a spice, a pressure, and a spur, forming as it does the ginger of life. As one writer has rather pointedly said, "Who could endure life were it not for the hope of death and release?" I do not think the writer was displaying morbidity. Rather, I feel he was attempting to place some evaluation upon death as a force in living. Is it not true that the very forces which make death inevitable, make life possible? Death, far from being feared, should serve to give life beauty and meaning. Only the shallow and the lazy actually dread death. Some deep, innate instinct warns the empty life to fear death. Why should any normal person fear death when it cannot exist while he does?

Superficially, death is indicated as a murderer, when actually it should be profoundly honored as a creator. It has made more men than it ever destroyed. The dynamic of death has made civilization. How much of man's mastery and outdistancing of his rivals and competitors is clearly traced to this sense of urgency in the face of ever-decreasing time limit. Man knows the approach of death; animals, as a rule, do not. Hence we have an excellent example of one more point of evidence indicating man's superiority to mere animals.

IF WE ARE ALL agreed, then, in seeing and even applauding death as the sharp spur of the living, we can advance to the next step. The value of lives should be measured by yearnings, not years, by intensity of achievement, not the number of days. Man measures life by years. God measures life by the yearnings of the soul. To illustrate: George Bernard Shaw, several years ago, wrote a play, Back to Methuselah. In it he suggests that man's life should be prolonged from the present "three score years and ten," to three hundred years—a modest proposal, especially for Shaw. He complains that just when man is ripe in facilities, well-stocked in mind, purged in passions, clear in spirit, and mature in judgment, then he promptly dies. This ingenious amendment to the plan of God, overlooks one probability. What if man is thus fully prepared and equipped here in order that his spirit may find employment elsewhere? And also, with the prospect of three hundred birthdays, would the mind be more fully developed than in our present limitations? Or would the extension result in a gradual slowing down of the tempo of living?

It is evident, therefore, that the value of such an amendment is problematical. Extension of time would only slacken or diminish effort. Methuselah lived for nine hundred and sixty-nine years, but that is all we know about him. He made that record, but no other. On the other hand, the Apostle Paul, Martin Luther, Christopher Columbus, Joseph Smith, and countless others all died before their allotted time. And Jesus Christ died at the age of thirty-three. Their records will live forever.

The mere urge to survive is an instinctive animal ambition. The struggle to keep alive has always been the master impulse of the lower animal. And when we find that impulse predominant in man, it is a sure sign that he does not understand his birthright, that he still permits his affinities to the animals to dominate his thinking. He has failed to determine his relationship to nature and its forces. His reason and his entire attitudinal powers are colored by the animal urges which characterize the creatures appearing below them in the creative scale. This tragic misplacing of emphasis can be quite safely interpreted as the cause for much of our social upheaval and hostility.

THE SURE SIGN of regeneration in man is when he turns from this extension of life, to a concern over the quality of life. Fullness of life must become his chief concern. When we complete the transition from duration to intensity, then we are in sight of eternal life. One of the greatest fallacies adhered to in this age is that eternal life is an endless succession of years. What a horrible thought. What immature, unreasoning mind concocted such a dismal picture of what can promise to be the greatest gift of God to man. In this theory of endless days, many fail to sense eternal life as basically qualitative, not quantitative. It is divine efficiency coupled with an eternity of opportunity. It is not an idle duration of time, but rather a progressive knowledge. Life, itself, is endless, not because it is the infinite extension of time, but rather because it is the absolute antithesis of time. Time is superceded and transcended. The past and the future melt into a brilliant and satisfying now.

As a great summons, death comes to all. It is nonetheless certain for being unpredictable. It is cowardly and futile to whimper, foolish and impious to forget. Never to think of death is as foolish as to be always thinking of it. Think of it as a spur, not a nightmare; as a goad, not a ghoul. Therefore, in life as in every other game, only limited time is given for the test or examination. If we are to be the utmost that we can be, we must do the utmost that we can do. Jesus did not violate the veil that hangs before the future. He said very little about it. But he did insist upon the importance of earnest action. In fact, his parables of judgment vibrate with urgency. It matters supremely that our brief span of life be utilized to the utmost.

We all admit that in the lesser arts, discipline and practice are essential. In music, painting, sculpture, and athletics, training is absolutely necessary. Yet many believe the greatest of all arts, The Art of Living, manages itself. It never occurs to us that discipline and practice is needed here. When our time is called, will our hearts be craven with fear, our minds starved, and our record blank? On our honor, let no good cause appeal to us in vain, for in that spirit is understood the place of death in the economy of life. In his ability to adjust himself to whatever situation he finds himself in, is the measure of a good man. Whether in life or death, may we be able to make that adjustment, and above all view death as only a spur to greater life.

A Day of Sacrifice

By James F. Keir

I used to wonder just what was meant by, "Behold, this is a day of sacrifice and of the tithing of my people." It was difficult for me to understand the first part of this statement. How did tithing work a hardship upon us or call for any self-denial or sacrifice?

As tithing is taught by Latter Day Saints, our needs and just wants are supplied out of our income and only the one tenth of the residue belongs to God. This should be turned over to his authorized servants with which to carry on the Lord's work. It was not until I considered the purpose of God in requiring us to tithe that I found a satisfactory meaning to the text, "Behold, this is a day of sacrifice . . ." There is a reason back of everything that God requires of his children. He is interested, always, in their growth and development, and to accomplish this he gave us his law.

THE PURPOSE OF THE LAW

Giving is God's antedote for selfishness. It would have been unfortunate for us if God had failed to give us a law to help us overcome this human weakness.

Two things, at least, motivate us when we pay tithing:

1. We desire to honor God's law.
2. We want to share with others the blessings that the gospel has brought to us.

For the one who has an increase or residue, that's fine. But what about the Saint who has none? In what way may that one enjoy the needed help in overcoming selfishness? Though such may lack in material possessions, they also need this law to curb and overcome selfishness and have the joy of knowing that they are helping to carry the gospel to others, to feel the divine approval that comes to all who seek to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. Their opportunity to give is through sacrifice. By self-denial and sacrifice they, too, are subscribing to the law of tithing.

"Behold, this is a day of sacrifice and of the tithing of my people." For these reasons, the name of every member of the church should be found annually upon the Bishop's books, not as a matter of compulsion, but as an evidence of the desire of all to honor the law which God has given for our spiritual growth and development.

When I go down to the grave I must say like so many others, "I have finished my day's work." But I cannot say, "I have finished my life." My day's work will begin the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley. It is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight to open in the dawn.—Victor Hugo.

Practical Good-Doing Love

By J. A. Koehler

WHEN THE writers of the New Testament said that some people love pleasure and some love lies and other things, they implied that there is more than one kind of love, one of which is practical good-doing love.

When a mother is impelled irresistibly to protect her children from bodily harm, when because it affords her satisfaction to do so she foregoes things which are pleasurable to her that she may the better promote the well-being of those children, when she takes delight in providing the food and clothing and all such like which her children need—when a mother does that she is manifesting practical good-doing love.

If the Apostle John knew more about one thing than another, perhaps it was God-love. And this is part of what he said about that love: "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

What St. John meant, it seems, is that God-love—which is love of man—is not a sickly Hirohito "so sorry." It is not a pious "make-believe" which does not seek to do the good that needs to be done; God-love is effectual, practical good-doing.

I believe that is what St. James had in mind when he said: "What doth it profit, my brother," to say to a person who is "naked and destitute of daily bread . . . Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful for the body?" What good is that kind of love? Does it promote human well-being and happiness?

St. Paul said that, as we have opportunity, we should "do good unto all men," and especially to those who are of "the household of faith." We should seek the well-being and happiness of humanity. And that, said Jesus, is the love of God, who "maketh the sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

"Sendeth rain." That is practical good-doing, is it not? And that is the characteristic of God-love. The very first manifestation of that love was practical in its good-doing. I refer to the provision the Almighty made for the satisfaction of the vital needs of the whole human family when he created the earth. "It pleaseth God," it is a manifestation of his love, said the modern prophet, "that he hath given these things unto man."

It is the opinion of Jesus, as revealed in the parable of the sheep and the goats, that after all shall have been said and done the important question will be, was the love which we had for our fellows practical good-doing love? In that parable, which is recorded in the 25th chapter of Matthew, Jesus said that a man who does not love in that manner is an "unprofitable servant."

Moreover, in that parable Jesus affirmed the impartiality of true Christian love—which is God-love. It shall come to pass, said Jesus, that when those of us who do not love practical good-doing for the sake of doing good shall ask, "When saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?" the answer shall be, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these [all of whom are children of God], ye did it not unto me." That devotion to practical good-doing without partiality is distinctively God-love.

In most instances love is the practical good-doing of "persons," as when the Good Samaritan bound up the wounds of the man who had been waylaid on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho. But love may be the practical good-doing of "peoples," too. And that practical good-doing of peoples is the love in which my interest is centered in this talk.

God-love is the acceptance of responsibility by peoples as well as persons to do good to others. It is an irresistible impulsion, a passion, to do good. Suppose there were truly a "people" of God today. To what kind of practical good-doing would that people be devoted? That would be determined by two circumstances: (1) The kind of practical good-doing which only peoples have capacity to do, or the business to which only peoples may attend; and (2) the special need of the age; the thing that needs most to be done.

Now I do not need to tell you what the need of this age is, for it is the principal thing the world has to talk about. The business of peoples—which is the business of government—is in a mess. Because that business is in a state of confusion, and because in the business of government "we grope for the wall like the blind" and "stumble at noonday as in the night," as Isaiah expressed it, we get ourselves into all kinds of troubles—a calamity has come upon the inhabitants of the earth.

Surely you must know why there was a World War I and a World War II and why there may be a World War III. Surely you must know why, as a nation, we have our family quarrels. Surely you must know that every crisis through which our nation ever passed was the outcome of our way of conducting the business of living together. And if you know that, you must know the imperative need of the age.

In the nature of things, only some "people" can lead the way out of that mess. For only peoples have capacity for the business of government. The special need, the very desperate need, of this age is that some people shall spearhead a movement to reconstitute society and to save the race from further disaster by ordering its own government of its own internal affairs with "judgment" and establishing it with "justice."

That is the price that must be paid to promote human well-being in this age. That is the practical good that love needs to do. And if there were a "people" of God today, if there were a people motivated by his love—a "people" which had capacity and opportunity to govern its own affairs aright—that people would have its heart set on the practical good-doing which the age demands. It would have its heart set on an adventure in godly economic self-governance.

Even in our wildest flights of imagination, we cannot see such a people being formed except under prophetic leadership. Nor can we see such a people being formed except through the offices of a prophetic leadership which has a true social philosophy. For a concept of how peoples should govern their economic affairs is the very heart of any social philosophy. That, primarily, is what social philosophy is all about.

You can hardly imagine the formation of such a people except as composed of "persons" who nurture in their own hearts the love of God. If that be true, we must believe what "God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began," which is that the practical good that needs to be done in this age will be done by a religious people; a religious people motivated by practical good-doing love.

That is the call of the modern prophet to "The Elect," or to the moral elite, who are scattered throughout the world; and who, in their scattered circumstances, are unable to do the good that needs to be done. As persons, severally or separately, they do not have capacity for that good-doing. In later talks I will treat of the gathering of The Elect and of their adventure in economic self-governance.

What I wish to emphasize, in conclusion is that the practical good-doing of The Elect is a manifestation of the love of God in man. It is a willing acceptance of a very peculiar responsibility under God for the essential character of civilization. It is an irresistible impulsion to do the good that desperately needs to be done. And we believe that when it shall have been done, when the standard of government has been lifted up, that good-doing of The Elect will be, (as the modern prophet said) an implementation of a social philosophy. That implementation of that social philosophy will be a very consequential manifestation of practical good-doing love.

LETTERS

Two Spiritual Experiences

I have always read the church papers since my baptism twenty-four years ago, and have learned much from them. I especially enjoy the letter section of the Herald; it is encouraging to read of the experiences of others.

Several years ago when I was feeling quite depressed because I had not been able to accomplish all that I wished to, I decided to turn in my membership card and tell the pastor to take my name from the register. I lay thinking about it one night and had just resolved to go through with it the next Sunday, when the spirit came to me and I heard a voice say, "There is still hope." I knew, then, that God watches over our very thoughts, and is ready to help us if we are willing to try. I relate this experience, hoping that someone else who is discouraged may read it and profit from it.

Last summer I received another blessing which increased my faith. I had been in poor health since my youth and passed through many trials. While attending Erie Beach Reunion, I felt the spirit increasing in power with each service; the final prayer meeting was one long to be remembered. I went home feeling that the Master had an intimate understanding of my life, mind, and body. On the following Tuesday, while I was at work, I felt the spirit enveloping me and I was healed of my lifelong ailment. I am very grateful for this blessing, and I intend to continue striving to live a good life that I may be better able to serve my Lord.

An Interpretation of Scripture

I should be very selfish if I did not share with others the experience that came to me some time ago.

For a number of years I was isolated from the church. Since I was not privileged to learn more of the gospel from others, I studied all church literature. The Church History told how the Saints tried to live by the Word of Wisdom given through revelation in 1833. At a conference held in Kirtland in February, 1934, the high council reached the decision that "no official member in the church is worthy to hold office after having the Word of Wisdom properly taught to him, if he, the official member, neglects to comply with or obey it." In November, 1937, the Saints voted not to patronize stores or shops that sold liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco. The Church History states, "So the Saints were a peculiar people, for nearly all people used such things in those days." These were the things I studied, prayed about, and believed, so when we came to live with the Saints I was disappointed. They told me "hot drinks" meant only the drinking of anything hot, and that we didn't need to live by the Word of Wisdom because it was just a request and not a commandment. That did not change my mind, but I decided it would do no good to argue. For fourteen years I have prayed that the people would see the true meaning of these words. One day, as I read the Doctrine and Covenants, I prayed for God to show me if there were anything in the book to convince the Saints that he meant tea and coffee. The answer was revealed to me by the Holy Spirit when I came to the parable in Section 98, paragraph 6. It was interpreted to me as meaning that God wants us to build a high tower and put a watchman on it so we can see the enemy afar off. If we build our lives with every word Christ gives us to follow, we will have the high tower built and the Holy Spirit will be the watchman. We are all familiar with the history of the church—how, soon after the church was established, the enemy came and scattered its members. They had built only the foundation of the tower and then stopped.

Worship Suggestions for February

By Katherine H. Wilson

Theme for the Month

DISCOVERING GOOD

February 2, 1947

Theme: CHRIST AS A CHILD

Picture Setting: "The Workshop at Nazareth," Briggs.

Call to Worship:

"And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."—Luke 2:52, Inspired Version.

Hymn: "Fairest Lord Jesus," Saints' Hymnal, 23.

Scripture Reading: Luke 2:40-51 (Inspired Version preferred).

Picture Appreciation:

"The Workshop at Nazareth" is one of the sweetest pictures of the Christ in his childhood. As you look into his sunny, open face, you have the feeling that this is no ordinary child, but truly one "filled with wisdom and the grace of God." A divine loveliness surrounds him. Joseph shows a deep interest and concern for his holy child and seemingly has finished his work for the day, engrossed now in some reply to this questioning Son of Mary's. Do you not like to feel that theirs was a comradeship destined to grow deeper in love and understanding?

We would see Jesus, Mary's Son most holy,
Light of the village life from day to day!
Shining revealed through every task most lowly
The Christ of God, the Life, the Truth, the Way.

—Saints' Hymnal, 155.

Poem:

Did Mary make a birthday cake
For Christ when he was small,
And think the while she frosted it,
How quickly boys grow tall?

Did Joseph carve some foolish thing
From extra bits of wood;
An ox, a camel, or a bird,
Because the Christ was good?

Oh, sometimes years are very long
And sometimes years run fast;
And when the Christ had put away
Small earthly things at last

And died upon a wooden cross
One afternoon in spring,
Did Mary find the little toy,
And sit . . . remembering?
—Helen Welshimer.

Scripture References:

"Behold, ye are little children, and ye can not bear all things now; ye must grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. Fear not, little children, for you are mine, and I have overcome the world, and you are of them that my Father hath given me; and none of them that my Father hath given me shall be lost; and the Father and I are one; I am in the Father and the Father in me; and inasmuch as ye have received me, ye are in me, and I in you; wherefore I am in your midst; and I am the good Shepherd . . . the day cometh that you shall hear my voice and see me, and know that I am. Watch, therefore, that ye may be ready."—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 8.

"The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field; Which indeed is the least of all seeds, but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof."—Matthew 13: 30, 31.

"Now we will compare the word unto a seed. . . ."—Alma 8: 152-173.

". . . no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants. 11: 4.

Thoughts About Growth:

Someone taught and Jesus "grew and waxed strong in spirit." Christ, on several occasions, referred to his followers as "little children" and said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 18: 3, Inspired Version. As little children have the ability to grow and develop their talents and powers, so we have the opportunity and responsibility to grow "on to perfection" (Hebrews 6: 1) and into the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Ephesians 4: 13). Paul chose a lesson from nature when he said, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one; and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. For we are laborers together with God."—1 Corinthians 3: 6-9.

When we work in the soil and with things that grow, we are working with that mysterious principle of life that exists in all growing things, in the seeds we plant. Alma built a sermon about a seed. Jesus told a parable of a grain of mustard seed. These fine lessons in growth and development carry with them the principle of faith. That same faith we are to carry over into the work of the church—faith in God, faith in the church, faith in the divine word that Alma compares with a seed. "We are laborers together with God" and must "grow and wax strong in spirit."

"Train up a child in the way he should go and [even] when he is old, he will not depart from it."—Proverbs 22: 6.

Save a man, you save a soul; save a boy, you save a soul, plus a life.

God's first and holiest school is the home.

Theme: JESUS AS A FRIEND

Picture Setting: Sallman's "Head of Christ."

Call to Worship:

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John 15: 13.

Hymn: "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," Saints' Hymnal, 257.

Scripture Reading: John 15: 12-16.

Picture Appreciation:

"The picture you see is called 'Head of Christ,' and the artist is Warner E. Sallman who lives in Chicago. A friend of Mr. Sallman met him on the street one day and asked him to draw a picture of Christ that would portray a strong, manly face suggesting confidence in his mission on earth, in contrast to many pictures of Christ which show him as a rather weak and effeminate type. A concept of the desired picture came suddenly to the artist one night while sleeping. He arose immediately and made the charcoal drawing, which has become so well known."—Saints' Herald, May 10, 1941.

We see him depicted here strong in courageous strength and power, with the beauty of holiness shining from his face.

This God is the God we adore,
Our faithful, unchangeable friend,
Whose love is as large as his power,
And knows not beginning nor end.

Scripture Reference:

"And again, verily I say unto you, my friends, I leave these sayings with you, to ponder in your hearts with this commandment which I give unto you, that ye shall call upon me while I am near; draw near unto me, and I will draw near unto you; seek me diligently and ye shall find me; ask and ye shall receive; and knock and it shall be opened unto you; whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you; that is expedient for you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 16.

Inspirational Poems:

I am the place where God shines through
For he and I are one, not two;
I need not fret nor fear nor plan—
He wants me where and as I am;
If I'll just be willing and free,
He'll carry out his plan through me.
—Selected.

The Better Way

I'd rather see a sermon
Than hear one any day.
I'd rather one would walk with me,
Than merely show the way.

The eye's a better pupil
And more willing than the ear.
Fine council is confusing
But example's always clear.

And the best of all the preachers
Are the men who live their creeds,
For to see the good in action
Is what everybody needs.

I can soon learn how to do it,
If you'll let me see it done;
I can watch your hands in action
But your tongue too fast may run.

And the lectures you deliver
May be very wise and true,
But I'd rather get my lesson
By observing what you do.

For I may misunderstand you
And the high advice you give,
But there's no misunderstanding
How you act and how you live!
—Author Unknown.

Friends

'Twould never do for God to live across the street
Or in the house next door where we should daily meet;
So in his wisdom and his love, he sometimes sends
His angels kind to walk with us. We call them friends.

Just friends—one word, but these few letters can express
A wealth of sympathy and pure unselfishness.
One syllable, a single breath can form it—
friends—

But, oh, how much our happiness on them depends.

When trouble comes, or loss, when grief is one's to bear,
They come, our friends, with words of cheer our load to share;
How could we face defeat without a friend's caress?
Had we no friends to praise, how hard would be success.

'Tis not God's plan that we shall see him face to face.
Yet he would hedge us in with his abounding grace,
And so his messengers of love to earth he sends.
They're angels, but we now it not, and call them friends.

Theme: JESUS AT THE CROSS

Picture Setting: "Christ on the Cross," Rubens.

Call to Worship:

And how sweetly Jesus whispers,
"Take the cross, thou need'st not fear,
For I've tried the way before thee,
And the glory lingers near."

—Saints' Herald, Nov. 19, 1938.

Hymn: "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," Saints' Hymnal, 153.

Scripture Reading:

"And my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; and after that I had been lifted up upon the cross, I might draw all men unto me: That as I have been lifted up by men, even so should men be lifted up by the Father, to stand before me, to be judged of their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil; And for this cause have I been lifted up; therefore, according to the power of the Father, I will draw all men unto me, that they may be judged according to their works."—3 Nephi 12: 26-28.

"And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them, These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 9.

Picture Appreciation:

The anguish of this scene speaks for itself and in heart-rending accents thunders of the tragedy of Christ's death. His loved ones stand near, and listening have heard his cry, "It is finished. Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." With hopeless hearts, they are filled with sorrow, grief, and despair. They could not guess at that moment the great joy, the renewal of faith and hope that would be theirs after the Resurrection. Triumphantly, the pages of history have repeatedly told us, "Truly, this man was the Son of God."

I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And on the earth again shall stand;
I know, I know that life He giveth,
That grace and pow'r are in His hand.

—Zion's Praises, 3.

Inspirational Poems:

My Little Calvary

Lord, how trivial seems my Calvary
When I consider thine,
For only Simon helped thee lift thy cross,
But many carry mine!

I am not scorned, nor scourged, nor ridiculed,
And all along the way
Are many sweet unnamed Veronicas
To wipe my tears away!

There are no cruel nail wounds in my hands,
No thorns upon my brow,
And ministering angels walk with me,
To smooth the way.

But thou! How dare I think it,
Call it Calvary—
This sheltered life of mine—
Oh, broken, beaten, bleeding Lord,
When I consider thine!

—V. M. T.

"There are many times that the soul is prostrate at the altar of the heart."—Frederick M. Smith.

Now

Rise! for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming on;
The others have buckled their armor,
And forth to fight are gone;
A place in the ranks awaits you—
Each man has some part to play;
The past and the future are nothing
In the face of the stern today.

Rise from the dreams of the future;
Of gaining some hard-fought field,
Of storming some fairy fortress,
Or bidding some giant yield;
Your future has deeds of glory;
Of honor, God grant that it may!
But your arm will never be stronger,
Or the need so great as today.

Rise! for the day is passing.
The sound that you scarcely hear
Is the enemy marching to battle;
Arise, for the foe is near!
Stay not to sharpen your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last,
When from dreams of a coming battle,
You may wake to find it past.

Thoughts About the Cross:

Man heritage and destiny is to be with God and God with him. Sin is the consequence of straying from God and his laws. Sin denies that God's plan is better than ours. If the words of the Master, "as I have been lifted up by men, even so should men be lifted up by the Father to be judged" is the message of the cross; the way of life is set plainly before us. Jesus took all that wickedness and sin could do to him that we might know the great principles of love and obedience and salvation. We are asked, in turn, to reveal him—Christ must be lifted up in our lives that all men understand the nature of sin and beholding, might not die. The choice is ours.

Theme: JESUS AS THE CHRIST

Picture Setting: "Healing the Sick Child," Max.

Call to Worship:

Lovest thou me, more than these?

Hymn: "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult," Saints' Hymnal, 337.

Scripture Reading:

"Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. He that seeketh me early shall find me, and shall not be forsaken."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22.

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."—John 12: 32.

Picture Appreciation:

No other picture shows greater love and compassion than this one, which shows Christ healing the sick child. Christ's great ministry on earth of healing the sick, the afflicted, the blind, the deaf, and the lame was indeed a ministry of love! Always he proved his love by never departing from the wish of his Father. "I do always the will of him who sent me," and it was God's will that the great heart of Christ should demonstrate love. The face of the mother as she holds her child shows the expectancy of faith—surely, this Master of men would not fail her! We can picture the glad surge of joy, the exultation of praise and gratitude that was hers when her son could run and play in happiness again.

My Jesus, I love thee, I know thou art mine;
For thee all the follies of sin I resign;
My gracious Redeemer, my Saviour art thou;
If ever I loved thee, my Jesus, 'tis now.

—Saints' Hymnal, 12.

Jesus said, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14: 6. Love is the foundation of Christianity, the tie that binds God to us and we to him. Without love we are nothing. The principle was recorded in the heavens with the glory of God, and Jesus demonstrated this spiritual philosophy all through his life. It was God's love for man that he willingly gave his Son that the human family might be redeemed and return to his presence. This love of God reaches out to touch every man, woman, and child that has lived or will have lived upon the earth. Mutual love, if found in the hearts of his "children" will "draw all men to him" (John 12: 32).

Scripture References:

"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; who is willing to have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth which is in Christ Jesus, who is the Only Begotten Son of God, and ordained to be a Mediator between God and man; who is one God, and hath power over all men."—1 Timothy 2: 3, 4, Inspired Version.

"Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Inspirational Poem:

I think if I could travel
The way of life once more,
I would try to be more kindly Than I've ever been before.
For, oh, so many heartaches
Each one of us must bear,
And it lightens heavy burdens
Just to know that others care.

And so along life's journey,
With each declining sun,
I'd like to know that somewhere
A deed of love I've done:
So swift the "hours of morning"—
The noontide rushes by—
And then the "shades of evening"
Are greeted with a sigh!

We know that soon tomorrow
Will be here and called today—
It lingers, but a moment,
And lo, 'tis yesterday!
Now is the time for kindness—
Speak now the word of cheer,
For the sunset glow of evening
Will in every life appear!

The primary and kindergarten classes were given a Halloween party at the home of Eva Whitepost on Saturday afternoon, October 26. The Orioles held a masquerade party on October 30. Karen, infant daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wilfred Shute, was blessed by Dr. Evan Shute and Elder Alex Cadwell on November 3. Dr. Shute and Apostle D. Blair Jensen were the speakers on November 8. Several of the Saints motored to Hamilton to hear President Israel Smith speak when he was there. Mrs. John Hockaday, Sr., has been in the hospital since the first week in October; she is recovering from a broken leg.

A shower was held at the church recently for Mr. and Mrs. Jack James. Mr. James has returned from service with the R.C.A.F.; Mrs. James is from Ireland. President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., and Ed Browne of Graceland College were present and gave interesting talks. The young people were hosts to the entire branch at a Thanksgiving supper held in the lower auditorium of the church on October 14. They cleared $32 from a turkey dinner. On October 31, they held a Halloween party at the Miller home. Apostle D. T. Williams and Missionary Ernest Ledsworth were present for the annual district conference on November 22, 23, and 24. Clifford Taylor of Lulu Island Mission was ordained to the office of priest, and Samuel Clark, Jr., to the office of deacon on Sunday, December 8. —Samuel Clark, Jr., reporter.

A worker's institute was held at Butler, Missouri, on December 7 and 8 with District President William Patterson in charge. Dr. F. M. McDowell of the Department of Religious Education and Elder C. C. Talcott, church school director in Zion, were also present. A district officers' forum was held at 7 o'clock Saturday evening, after which slides were shown, illustrating how more effective religious education could be employed in the branches. Elder Patterson was in charge of the fellowship service Sunday morning; the theme for the service was "I Will Qualify and Work Where I Am." Dr. McDowell spoke at 11 o'clock on "Characteristics of the Master Teacher." Meals were served during the institute at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Ingram by the women of Butler Branch.

The Old Question . . . Dancing

QUESTION: There is no Reorganized Church in the town where I am attending college, so I have been going with friends to various other churches. I don't believe this will weaken my faith in any way, but it does present certain problems. Naturally, these people have no prejudices against dancing or card playing, and I have been asked many times to join them in these activities at their parties. So far I have "begged off" on some pretense or other, but my social life is going to suffer if I continue to do so. Although I grew up with the idea that cards and dancing are evil, this philosophy seems a little ridiculous now. Am I being "worldly" in thinking so, or has the whole Latter Day Saint attitude toward these activities changed?

ANSWER: By Dr. F. M. McDowell

Need I assure you of a sympathetic approach to your problem and a concern that I may help you, and thousands of other young people like you, toward a proper solution? I am not surprised that this problem has arisen. You are to be commended rather than criticized for facing and stating the issues involved so frankly. Such is always the first step toward any adequate solution.

Your problem is not a simple one, except perhaps to those who habitually answer such queries dogmatically on the basis of prejudice or tradition. It would require very little brain power on your part, or mine, to give a categorical "yes" or "no" response. But such decisions, at least for mature minds, are neither democratic nor Christian, nor yet is such considered to be proper procedure on the part of an adviser or counselor.

I shall, therefore, have to disappoint you—that is, if you are expecting me to reply, "By all means go ahead and dance and play cards with your crowd," or "Under no circumstances shall you so indulge." The factors involved are not as simple as that. Even if they were, it is ties, you will understand and perhaps forgive me.

Were I counseling you across the desk in my office, I would be inclined to talk very little and listen a great deal. If you did not talk enough, I would probably ask several questions.

What the Trend of Your Life?

For example, I would want to know much about your family and church background and to discover some evidence of the presence or lack of a firm rootage in what you call your "faith." What has been the general trend of your life as a young person? Do you habitually drift with the tide, or are you inclined to stand for that which you believe to be right? How often do you contact the church as a means of maintaining your moral and spiritual moorings? Have you set up some fairly definite goals or purposes for life? If you tend to drift with your crowd, will they not sooner or later make you feel "ridiculous" if you don't smoke or drink or become licentious with them? Just what do you mean by your comment, "My social life is going to suffer"? If there is any significance or justice in the charge that one is "worldly," such should be found in the general bent or trend of one's life over a period of years, rather than in any single action or activity.

The Church Seeks to Help

You speak of a possible change in "The whole Latter Day Saint attitude toward such activities." The most reliable indication of such a change may be found in certain General Conference resolutions of 1932 and 1934. We quote the latter in full.

Commenting upon this resolution, the Zion's League Handbook (Herald Publishing House, $1.00) has this to say: "In former years the church passed resolutions expressing disfavor of certain forms of recreation. Those about dancing and card playing and smoking were much quoted. New situations arose; the problem became insistent. Some wished to add more resolutions. The Seventy-Sixth General Conference finally passed a document presented by the high priests' quorum. It is one of our most advanced bits of legislation and should be studied by every youth of the church. It places the responsibility on young

Presented by the Quorum of High Priests and Adopted by the Seventy-sixth General Conference (1934).

WHEREAS the problem of the wise use of leisure time concerns human life and conduct ranging from questionable commercialized amusements to creative church service, and

WHEREAS the Seventy-fifth General Conference of the church, acting on the advice of the spiritual authorities of the church, adopted a document urging an educational and spiritual approach to this problem under the direction of the ministry, and

WHEREAS the members of the church have pledged by their baptismal covenant to follow Jesus Christ through good and evil report to the end of their days implying a wholly consecrated life in body, mind, and spirit, and

WHEREAS it is impossible to specify all the ways in which leisure time may be used not in harmony with the ideals of the church, and therefore the futility of attempting further to secure righteousness by legislative action,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED: That we urge the First Presidency through the proper channels of administrative and priestly authority, to direct and nurture, in home and church the Saints in more creative educational and spiritual use of leisure time, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED: That the pastors, members of the priesthood, and all others (especially parents) having direction of all the activities of the Saints reaffirm their belief in the wisdom of restraining our activities so as to exclude any and all forms of amusements and uses of leisure time which in any way tend to break down our moral standards, or which would hinder our spiritual development, and that we further be urged and trained to give special attention to developing creative interests and abilities which will lead to the realization of ideals of the church in the daily lives of its members.

for you and not for me to make the decision. The choice must be yours. If I can help you ever so little, I shall be most happy. But, I repeat, the choice must in the end be yours.

I am keenly aware, too, that any reply I make will be read by or reported to thousands of other young people, representing a wide variety of ages, environments, habits, backgrounds, etc. Hence, if in that which follows I seem over-cautious, or deal too much in generali-

New Horizons

Education, Our Destiny

By Barbara McFarlane

Is civilization tottering? Perhaps only time will answer that question, but the passive citizen of the world today may be waiting unsuspectingly for the crash. In February, 1946, Dr. Albert Einstein said, "The release of atomic energy has not created a new problem. It has merely made more urgent the necessity of solving an existing one." So we must find a solution. Looking about the world today, at Germany, Italy, and Japan, we realize more than ever before the importance of education—of shaping not only the individual but the destinies of nations as well. Here lies our greatest single defense against the impending crash.

Education must diagnose and see wherein we, as Americans, fall short, so that the educator will be able to prescribe the cure and then set up his goals.

What are some of the obstacles that must be overcome? The most successful formula for universal brotherhood in many cases has been abandoned in the policy, "I am an American first, a Christian afterwards." We still refuse to recognize the greater importance of international thinking and are intensely nationalistic, clinging to a slight hope of isolation. We talk and write, but our idealism in facing new tasks is without action. Our communities are notorious for racial intolerance. And our home life, upon which the nation is founded, has become secondary to many of the younger generation.

Now you're asking, "Can education be held responsible for these deficiencies?" The late historian H. G. Wells, said that it could—that modern life is a race between education and catastrophe. Does this mean that education has failed in its responsibility, for certainly the greatest catastrophe of all time is upon us now. What, then, are our goals?

The outmoded should be eliminated and practical methods of teaching substituted. Christian principles, if upheld, not as impractical idealism but as good sense, will promote universal brotherhood. The old barriers of nationalism must be uprooted without destroying our national cultural basis. Our idealism must be supplemented with action and a consistent philosophy of the employment of force. Racial intolerance must be eliminated through understanding. Our home life will become sound if we are cognizant of the fact that emotional control and education must be exercised for the good of the group.

These Herculean tasks do not lie wholly with the educator but with the educated as well. They are the responsibility that comes to all people who have received an education, and the anathema of strife will follow any group that fails in this obligation.

We have entered a new age of power. We have been entrusted with this power, which, in the hands of an ignorant few, can prove to be our utter destruction. Yet, we have the promise in Holy Writ that "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." That power is in our hands now.

Here Is the Writer . . .

Barbara McFarlane

Barbara McFarlane is sixteen and a senior at Northeast High School, Kansas City, Missouri. After graduation, she plans to continue her education at Graceland and Northwestern University in Chicago. She likes debating, public speaking, and drama; her ambition is to teach speech in high school. She is a member of the Englewood Congregation and president of the Zion's League. Lloyd Douglas and Marjory Rawlings are her favorite authors. "I'm not very adroit in sports," she says, "but I enjoy swimming, boating, and archery. I think these preferences were cultivated during four years at Oriole camp."

Indeed, the entire League program may be considered as a genuine endeavor to carry forward the spirit of this resolution, in that it moves definitely away from attempts to secure "righteousness by legislative action," toward providing creative leadership in a wide variety of leisure time activities, which will "lead to the realization of the ideals of the church in the daily lives of its members."

Evaluating Leisure Time Activities

Convinced that you sincerely desire to bring your personal choices in line with such a program, I recommend further the following, likewise quoted from the Zion's League Handbook:

"Leisure time is opportunity. Opportunity requires choice. And choice involves intelligent discrimination based upon one's aims, ideals and standards of conduct. And, finally, these aims, ideals, and standards of conduct involve consideration of one's deeper religious convictions in such matters as:

- The nature and purpose of God.
- The Christ-standard of character and conduct.
- The beliefs, purposes, programs, and standards of the church.
- The nature and needs of one's own being.

"In the following chart a method is provided for each individual to check given recreational activities, i. e., volleyball games, Sunday baseball, dancing, etc., against a certain standard or principle. It presumes that one of the basic guides in the choice of leisure time activities for each individual is: What does this activity do to me? We suggest that you try to use this chart. Perhaps it will help you choose the best each day and thus serve to make your leisure time creative."

A Standard and Check-list

"That activity which harms my physical body, injures my mental development, retards my spiritual growth, or lessens my influence for good in my community—that activity is wrong for me.”—John Blackmore.

We quote the chart only in part.

I. How does my recreation affect me physically?

	Positive	Neutral	Negative
Does it tend to build my health or destroy it?	—	—	—
Does it take me toward or away from my ideals for my physical life?	—	—	—

II. How does it affect me mentally?

Does it make me more or less efficient at work that requires mental alertness?	—	—	—
Does it leave me with clean imagery and happy memories?	—	—	—

III. How does it affect me spiritually?

Does it leave me more interested or less interested in the church?	—	—	—
Does it deprive me of the opportunity to engage in church work?	—	—	—
Does it take me forward or backward in my progress of building Christian character?	—	—	—

IV. How does it affect me socially?

What is the possible effect upon my influence with others and their respect for me?	—	—	—

Does it take me toward or away from my ideals of social life and social relationships? — — —

V. How does it affect me morally?

Does it leave me feeling that I am more of a man or less of a man (more of a woman or less of a woman) than before?	—	—	—
Does it leave me with greater or less respect for men (for women) than before?	—	—	—
Does it leave my mind enriched with symbols of right living or filled with the low, mean, and the vulgar?	—	—	—
Does it leave me popular with my better self—with my best friends—and God?	—	—	—

Another method of approach to such problems as you raise will be found in the pamphlet, Does It Make Any Difference? (Herald Publishing House, 50 cents.) Here again, there are no dogmatic answers, but rather guidance toward wise choices in such matters as smoking, drinking, sex and race relations and vocations.

I sincerely hope that the above will be of some help to you. While I cannot solve your problem for you, I can assure you of my willingness to spend any amount of time and effort necessary to assist you toward wise solutions. More than that, I can witness that as you endeavor to bring your life in harmony with the ongoing purposes of God and his church and lose yourself in its creative work, many of your personal problems will fade away entirely, and others be easily solved. May I remind you, too, that you are at all times entitled to seek divine guidance.

It is indispensable to the success of this work that the Protestant churches of the world establish a responsible brotherhood that is unshakable. They should become one family on this earth.

Such common endeavor, never abating in zeal, should by God's grace have the result that the things of the spirit will not fall behind in the onrush of civilization, but rather dominate the new developments. If that does not happen, catastrophe and immeasurable suffering await humanity; if it happens, the day of a better future will really dawn on this world.

Let us hope Christian influences may yet dominate for the good of such countries as Hungary.

The Unfinished Coat

P. S.

The interior of our beloved Stone Church is quite disappointing these days. The workmen who are installing the organ are taking their time—probably for good reasons that we do not understand. Big panels of unstained plyboard (that precious stuff you used to be able to get before the war) meet the eyes of the congregation as they return to their traditional church home to worship. It conceals an even uglier scaffolding. Many an old member is sick at heart at the appearance of things. The Stone Church will never look the same again; they think it has been desecrated.

Dr. Joseph Luff told a story of his boyhood that will help us here. One morning he romped in from his play and saw his mother at work on something. It bore a vague resemblance to a garment, but there were ugly corners sticking out, basting threads all around, and it looked like nothing he had ever seen. "What are you making, mother?" he asked. "I'm making a coat for you," she answered. "I think it's the worst coat I ever saw," was his criticism. "Son," she admonished him, "never judge a coat until you see it in the finished condition." It was a lesson he was never to forget.

When the choir stood to sing behind those unfinished wood panels, their voices came out rich, full, and melodious, as they had never done before in our memory of Stone Church services. If there is no other gain, this will make the change worth-while. And further, in these days of abbreviated feminine vesture, (this is the fault of the government, not of the ladies), the congregation will be spared the weekly exhibition of knees and nylons, which will be a considerable relief to the choir, even more than to the congregation. And other benefits will appear.

Here is an unfinished job. Few of us know how it will look when it is done. The best available skill has been employed for the work. Let us not judge it until it is finished.

* Cover Pictures

You have noticed and appreciated the beautiful cover pictures we have had for the "Herald" in past weeks. This new type of cover was planned by our staff planner and ideaman, Harold Sandy, who has given us so many good things. It has been carried on with the help and planning of Misses Mabel Holman and Ruth Midgorden. Do you like it? We do!

Now we need pictures—quality pictures—good pictures. Notice that we need vertical panels for this type of cover. If you are doing art work or photography, try to get them in the proportion of 4 units high to one unit wide. We like churches or parts of churches, whatever is artistic and possessed of meaning. Watch your composition and background. It should be something that shows well-defined detail in simple black and white.

Previous requests have brought us some good things we were glad to use, and some we could not. If our young people are alert to the principles of good photography and art, they can help materially.

We are working for a high standard. Will you help us?

* Ten Below

It was ten below zero a few days ago in Independence, and everything froze up practically solid. The foolish sparrows—those hardy little year-around tenants who build nests in anything eight feet above the ground—were quite disconsolate. Your breath froze tiny needle-sharp icicles in your nostrils, and you either tucked your ears in or got frostbite. And the whole earth was clad in a chilly robe of white snow. . . . But even nature can't stay bad forever. The snow thawed in patches, and little tufts of bluegrass show a faint blush of green. A soft drift of wind from the south gives us a preview of spring. The sparrows are sassy again. With an affectionate pat, the Editor is putting his big arctic coat away in the cedar closet, and resuming use of his top-coat.

* Wasting the Years

Are you wasting your years? You think there will be plenty of time to serve God, so you delay your baptism and membership in the church. Do you know how short that time may be, or just when you are likely to be summoned into eternity? You do not. You think you will have plenty of time together, so you postpone your marriage, and delay someone's happiness as well as your own. Do you know that your time together may be much shorter than you think? And when it is gone, you will regret the wasted years.

The Power Returns

It was storming in the night. Our city, a helpless small thing, cowered under the terrible fury of a summer tornado. Lightning flashed like a scimitar cutting across the sky, and seconds after it the earth trembled under the concussions of reverberating thunder. Rain descended in sheets, pounding the roofs in waves beating with almost rhythmic regularity at times. It was a night of violence, and even those who were not afraid sent up a little prayer.

Somewhere up the street, giant limbs were torn from a tall tree and flung like toothpicks across the power lines, breaking them down, and leaving the bare ends sputtering in the water. All the lights were out, and our part of the world was left to suffer through its agony in pitch darkness.

We lit candles, and sat up to watch as the storm wore out its rage upon us, finally grumbling away in the distance. Then we went back to bed. There was nothing else to do.

In the morning, we were awakened by the lights shining from all the electric fixtures we had vainly turned on the night before.

The power had returned.

On a recent Sunday evening a member of the Quorum of Twelve had just finished a splendid sermon. A gifted speaker, a man much dependent upon the inspiration that came to him in the pulpit, he had enjoyed even greater liberty than usual.

A friend who sat near me, said, "Our men are preaching with power again."

In my deepest need and hunger for comfort, every hymn in the congregational singing came to my ears with new beauty in its tones, new and greater meaning in its words; the people were putting their hearts and souls into these songs. Every feature of the service—anthems and prayers, readings and sermon—brought strength and hope. Our people were praying and singing in a new way.

Somewhere, Somebody has turned on the Light.

The Power has returned to the church.

Across the desks at the Auditorium, business flows in a steady stream. Volumes of correspondence is answered, decisions are made, answers to problems are diligently sought and found. There is harmony in the quorums, and every man is harnessing his full strength to the tasks of the church. There is a new hopefulness and expectation as men speak of the work that lies ahead of them. Strength is returning to them.

You can feel something vibrant in the air as you go about the headquarters' offices. The announcements recently given to the church relating to a resumption of foreign missions have had their effects among the home folk, the central staff of workers, as well as abroad in the church. Things that have long needed to be done are gradually getting done, and more is on the way.

Once again, a Power is manifested in men and events.

Our group was having its Wednesday night meeting in one of the homes. Something has changed in this little band of people—almost the same individuals week after week—that has transformed them. They had spent so many years letting escape now and then the wishful hope that "something might happen." Apparently, now, it is happening. The future is no longer a closed door. A lock has been removed, a barrier swung aside. There is a light shining on the way that lies ahead. Something has happened in the prayers and testimonies of the membership.

The Power has returned to many of the people, too.

Is it possible that the heart, leaping forward faster than the mind in response to some sudden liberation, some falling away of invisible shackles, goes too far? One looks at the calmness of the world, whether mantled in the emerald cloak of its greensward in summer, or blanketed in the white snow of winter; and one is pulled downward by reality and materialism; then he considers the radiance of the sunshine again, and his spirit rises on wings. It is the old antiphony between earth and sky, between material and spiritual, between man below and God in heaven. And yet the deeper searches find them all at one.

The spirit must ever be adventuring ahead, far ahead of the known fact, the statistical account. Reality is always in retard, must always strive to catch up with the ideal. Science arrives after something has happened, and, in its earnest, systematic, stumbling way, seeks to account for it in terms of what is already known, never admitting the existence of anything new until it has happened at least a thousand times, and endless laboratory tests have been made and graphs charted for it.

We already have some indications not only of a new spirit, but of new plans, policies, programs, and activities for the church. This is but a beginning, and there will be more to come. Power will soon find avenues of expression.

The Power has returned to the church. Perhaps the next year or the year after, statistics will note something about an increase in baptisms, and finance will record an upturn in the number of contributors.

But those who are sensitive to higher things will not be diverted. They already know far ahead of the material indications. Let us rejoice. Let us give thanks in prayer. The Power has returned to the church!

Editorial

Appreciation From Evangelist J. W. Worth

I am happy to say that I have arrived safely home in England and now look back on my eight month's visit to the U. S. A. and Canada. I feel I am greatly indebted to many of the Saints and friends who contributed to my comfort and the pleasant times I have enjoyed. I wish all to know that I have appreciated very much their helpfulness and the welcome I have received.

I would especially thank Apostle and Sister A. A. Oakman for all they did for me. I feel I owe them a great deal, particularly when I think of the wonderful trip out West to Salt Lake City, to the Grand Canyon, and then on through prairie desert to New Mexico. Our last stop was Cosseyville, before returning to Independence. High lights on this journey will never be forgotten.

I have also pleasant memories of the associations and hospitality of many during my journeys. My visit in Chicago was one long to be remembered. I was privileged to stay with Brother and Sister Lyman Jones of the First Chicago Church, with Brother and Sister Kent of Maywood, and Brother and Sister Tomlinson and their son, of Gary, Indiana; I shall never forget, too, Brother and Sister Joseph Baldwin and their son, Charles, and the many kindnesses shown me. Thanks for everything.

I visited with Brother and Sister C. Nikel of Cleveland and became acquainted with a group of Saints there whom I was glad to know, and found most helpful.

At Buffalo I was met by Brother Simpson, and later had the opportunity of staying with Brother and Sister Spilsbury. They, together with Brother Yates, made it possible for me to see the Niagara Falls.

My visit in Canada was very fine and the meeting with our relatives, Sister Clift and family, and Sister Newton and family, of Toronto, after many years, was the fulfillment of a cherished dream. I was made happy, too, to meet with Brother John Sheehy and wife, and the many Saints and friends of that branch, whose names are too numerous to mention, but with whom I had a thoroughly enjoyable time. Similar experiences were had in London with Brother Almer Sheehy and family, and during my stay with Brother and Sister Lott. At Hamilton, where I received many kindnesses from Brother Kennedy, the acting president. I was able to stay in the home of my niece, Sister Oliver, and met and worshiped with the Saints in that place. Next was Guelph, where, as the guest of Brother and Sister Hockoday, I was able to renew associations of many years ago, and to meet with a small but fine branch of the church. During my stay in Canada I was enabled to attend two reunions, the first of their kind I have ever witnessed, at Port Elgin and Erie Beach. The ministry of Apostles Gleazer and Jenson was outstanding and the whole experience will long be remembered.

I visited with the Chatham Saints and found a very warm welcome in the home of Brother and Sister H. V. Dent. Their pastor, Harry Engle was most helpful and I greatly appreciate his kindness.

To all who have assisted me in any way with my patriarchal work I am deeply indebted, and can say, "God bless you."

I cannot close without saying a word to the numerous Saints and friends in Independence who afforded me many very fine experiences among them, especially the Friday Night Fellowship Class, which I hope will carry on to greater heights of spirituality. May God bless the many who have to carry on there, including Brother Paul Kelsey, R. V. Hopkins, Brother Higdon and Brother Will Worth.

A very big "Thank You" to one and all, and may the New Year bring you much happiness, and success,

Sincerely,
John W. Worth.

Books

Among a man's most helpful friends let us make a large place for books. They are the tools of the mind. Their function is to increase the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. In the very highest sense, they are the true labor-saving devices. What the loom does for the fingers, what the engine does for the feet, what the telescope does for the eye, that, and more, books do for the reason and for memory. They hasten man's intellectual steps; they push back the intellectual horizon; they increase the range of his vision; they sow intellectual harvests otherwise impossible and reap treasures quite beyond the reach of unaided reason.

In the physical realm, tools have created more wealth in the past half-century than the world had accumulated in the previous eighteen centuries. And it is not too much to say that those intellectual tools named "books" have increased the sum knowledge gathered in the past century to an even greater degree than the increase in physical treasure.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

You must faint sometimes. But let your sadder times, your deepest struggles be known only to God. Gain there the strength and quietness which you need for life. But do not let men see the agony; let them see the peace that comes from God.—Anonymous.

Blessed Are the Meek

By REED M. HOLMES

THE CROWD pressed in upon Him, seeking the unusual and miraculous. His heart yearned for them. His heart ached, too, because of the shallowness of their desires. He was disturbed by their self-seeking, and realized the futility of mass ministry.

To escape the crowd He did a simple thing—he climbed a hill! Only the disciples cared to climb with him, to follow when exertion was demanded.

As we watch them climb, we notice they are not yet a unified band. There is good fellowship, to be sure, but there are undercurrents. Tempers are too close to the surface. Misunderstanding and lack of comprehension are still prevalent. Impatience and jealousy are in the eyes of the disciples. The Zealot would have had the Master win the crowd as a political gesture, looking toward establishing the kingdom. Peter notices with misgiving a strange bond of the understanding heart growing between Jesus and John. The Big Fisherman would have the place of honor himself.

A BLENDING OF HEAVEN AND EARTH

Personalities getting used to each other; rough edges grating against other rough edges; moments of poignant striving to love and understand—the Master views these followers with compassion and sees in them the type and forecast of our world's striving toward brotherhood. If he can unite them in service to others, if he can lead them to seek first the kingdom of God, then there will be hope that they can lead others in service and love. It is a small beginning, but perhaps it may be as leaven.

He bids them gather round him on a promontory where they will be conscious of the world about them. Then he teaches as only the Son of God can teach. He seeks to engender in them the attributes which would blend heaven and earth. Passionately desiring that all men shall find joy through abundant living, he instills in the hearts of his disciples the need for the virtues as the essential elements of fraternity. He helps them to comprehend that only in the achievement of righteousness can their long-hoped-for dream of peace and good will find fulfillment.

Point by point he stresses the enduring fundamentals of life:

Blessed are they who shall believe on me

Blessed are they who shall come down into the depth of humility, and be baptized in my name

Yes, blessed are the poor in spirit, who come unto me; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

And again, blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted.

And blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.

IN GOD'S IMAGE

Many men have sought to possess the earth by conquest, by pillage, or by purchase. But only the meek have ever really possessed and made it their own. For instance, many men have used peanuts for food, or have sold them to make minor or major fortunes, but it remained for George Washington Carver to inherit the peanut. Imagine a man, made in the image of God, standing before the peanut and asking questions about life. That is meekness devoid of pride. George Carver inherited the earth, and we have been enriched as the result of it.

Not the well-armed, nor the well-educated, nor the well-heeled, nor the well-intentioned; not the glamorous nor the mighty, but the meek shall inherit the earth. Let power-politicians take notice: the world shall be peopled ultimately by men and women who exemplify the humble spirit of Christ. It is the meek who are referred to in latter-day prophecy: ". . . the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

THESE ARE THE MEEK

How may we recognize the meek? Webster says they are "mild of temper, patient under injuries, long-suffering." The Old Testament goes deeper and says the meek are reverent and humble before God. The New Testament emphasizes gentleness and consideration. The Master promises the inheritance to those who have done good "unto one of the least of these my brethren." The inheritance goes then to the meek, for they are mindful of others.

Happy are the meek. Because they are considerate of others, they are heirs to friendship. Because they are humbly aware of their ignorance, they shall receive knowledge and wisdom. Because they are conscious of the love and laws of God, they shall become heirs to the enduring riches.

Prosperous are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth, literally. They are humble before the mysteries of nature's fruitfulness, and they till the soil with temperance and wisdom. The meek improve, the proud impoverish. The meek will not embezzle the gifts of God to achieve private ends. The meek, lending themselves to the spirit and purposes of God, will make of earth a paradise for all men.

AS IN THE DAYS OF NOAH

Perhaps the greatest service which meekness can render is to draw our attention outward and upward to behold the face of God. In Marc Connelly's fable, The Green Pastures, (depicting the Negro's simple conception of heaven and earth), the Lord becomes very disturbed with conditions on earth in the time of Noah. He comes to earth and walks in loneliness, seeking a good man. He falls into step with Noah.

After spending considerable time with this Stranger, Noah can't figure out who he is:

The Lord says, "Noah, you don't know who I is, do you?"

"Yo' face looks easy, but I don't think I recall de name."

God rises slowly, and as he reaches his full height, there is a crash of lightning, a moment's darkness, and a roll of thunder. It grows light again. Noah is on his knees in front of God.

"I should have known you. I should have seen de glory."

"Dat's all right, Noah. You didn't know who I was."

"I'm jes' ol' preacher Noah, Lawd, an' I'm yo' servant. I ain' very much, but I'se all I got."

"Sit down, Noah. Don' let me hear you shamin' yo'se'f, caise yo' a good man. I jest wanted to fin' out if you was good, Noah. Dat's why I'm walkin' de earth in de shape of a natchel man. I wish dey was mo' people like you."

Noah, in his meekness, answered the heart-yearning of his Lord. Because of his meekness, he rode out the storm and "inherited the earth."

We are reminded that in the latter days it shall be as it was in the day of Noah. Again it shall be the meek who inherit the earth. Only among the meek can there be peace and good will.

Prejudice never cements friendships nor creates good will. It is an enemy to tolerance and open-mindedness.—James F. Keir.

The Lord's Prayer

The Appointee Institute, held in Independence last August 28 to September 14, used the prayer that Jesus gave as a model prayer for a worship theme. Each morning a phrase of this sublime utterance formed the focal point of meditation. The Herald is able to share with its readers some of the many excellent thoughts which were brought to this worship experience. The following article begins this series. Undoubtedly our readers will wish to preserve the group for further use.

OUR FATHER

BY FRANK A. FRY

Among a people who had been traditioned for centuries to a patriarchal order in which the father was respected to the point of reverence, addressing God as Father was quite appealing. The patriarchs were sought out for their wisdom and blessings. To honor one's father was commanded in the decalogue—the first commandment with promise. Jesus took advantage of this psychology to portray God as an all-wise, loving, Heavenly Father.

The disciples of John the Baptist had learned a prayer which had made an impression on those who heard it. Though Jesus had taught the apostles many great truths, and they trusted him enough to leave all their possessions to follow him, yet they felt a need which could be satisfied only by a pattern of prayer. Therefore, they voiced this appeal to Jesus, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples."

The answer that Christ gave was simple but meaningful as he said, "Our Father." Undoubtedly each of the disciples had known what it meant to have an earthly father or to be one. "God," said Jesus, "in all his glory, majesty, and power can be approached as we would an earthly father."

I have not come to prove that God is our Father, but to bear witness that he is our father. Theologically we might discuss the fatherhood of God, but one moment in his presence makes such discussion unnecessary.

The parable of the "Prodigal Son" might well be considered as the parable of a loving, Heavenly Father. "When he was yet a long way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and fell on his neck, and kissed him." He put upon him the best robe, a ring upon his finger, and shoes on his feet. God is like that. He loves us so much that when we cease our wandering and make the attempt to return home, he rushes out to meet us.

Yesterday evening as I told my wife good-by I didn't need to tell her that I loved her. Communion of souls told us that. So it is when I sit in the presence of the Heavenly Father I have a similar experience, only this experience is many times magnified, refined, and enhanced.

God is our Father. He constantly seeks after us and has made ample provision for all our needs. With confidence, assurance, and faith, we can approach him in humble supplication as Our Father.

Soon after the close of the reunion season, Elders J. Charles May and William C. Haden held services at Marlin, Texas, and Brother May now reports that baptisms at that time and subsequently have brought the baptismal total for the year up to nineteen. The Marlin Branch is growing steadily. Elder James R. Allen, the long-time pastor is to be complimented on the gains achieved and on the neat and attractive chapel which the group has recently built. Brother May goes on to say that recently encouraging gains have been won as a result of series of meetings at San Antonio, Houston, and Dallas. More are interested at each of these points.

The Identity of Spiritual and Temporal Law

By J. A. Koehler

THE FLOWERS in your garden form their roots, stems, and leaves by taking food from the soil and the air and converting it into plant cells and tissues. They subsist and exist through the force or operation of the law of plant life, or the law of the vegetable kingdom. Plants exist by a law which may be likened unto what Restoration religion calls the temporal law.

That food-consuming activity, that law by which plants subsist, is at once the means by which they produce their blossoms. It is the law through the force of which blossoms come to be fragrant and beautiful. If, therefore, we call the tissue-forming processes the temporal law, and the processes by which blossoms come to be fragrant and beautiful the spiritual law, we would say, would we not, that the temporal and spiritual laws of plant life are identical?

Of course that is figurative speech. Spiritual laws and temporal laws are terms which apply properly only to human beings, for the reason that only man has what we call a "spirit" as well as a body.

WE DO NOT KNOW what that spirit is. We do not know what the stuff is of which it is composed. Indeed it may not be composed of any material whatsoever. We only know that we are conscious of its existence. So that when we say "The Spirit and the body are the soul of man," we mean by "spirit" the mind, the inner man, the self-conscious being, the "I" which says to itself This is my body. It is "I" who move these hands. "I" make my hands do my bidding. "I" make up my own mind. "I" have a will. "I" have capacities. "I" will cultivate my capacities. And so on.

Of this we are sure: the functions of your body and the functions of your mind exist together. You, the spirit, the mind, may see the beauty of the rose only through the functioning of your eye. You, the spirit, may smell the fragrance of the rose only through the functioning of your nose. The spirit gets its experience through the medium of its body—which is the instrumentality of your mind, or spirit.

There are then two sides of your nature. And you may talk about one side without saying much about the other side, just as you may talk about the beauty and fragrance of the rose without talking about the structure of the bush on which it grows, and with no thought of the vegetative processes by which the rose was produced.

But what you say about a rose, what you think about it, has nothing to do with the way roses grow. You may know nothing about its vegetative processes, but vegetation goes on just the same. So the beauty and fragrance of the flower arises as absolutely from the vegetative processes of the plant as if you knew all about it.

A plant does not come to be two separate things or existences because it has, besides its roots, stems, and leaves, the immaterial qualities that we call beauty and fragrance. Nor does a man have two unrelated natures, or two separate existences, because he has both a body and a spirit. His spiritual qualities are derived from his temporal activities as certainly as his bodily conditions, in some particulars, arise from the activities of his mind. And that means that there are spiritual and temporal laws of human life which are one. They are identical.

BUT CHRISTENDOM has talked about temporalities, or the things of this world, or of physical or bodily affairs, as if they are separate from, perhaps even opposed to, spiritualities. There are Latter Day Saints, even, many of them, who think they are obeying God's spiritual laws the while they are not obeying his temporal laws.

That notion, that there is no necessary connection between spiritual and temporal laws, that they are not identical, may be traceable to such passages in the Bible as "No man can serve two masters . . . Ye cannot serve both God and mammon." "Take no thought (therefore) . . . what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink," and so on. But whatever the origin of the notion, the outcome of conduct based on that belief witnesses that it is not true.

Of course, no true religion can have a "pig-trough philosophy." No true religion can treat of economic affairs, or of the industrial processes and all, or of temporal laws, as if their purpose is, so to speak, to "fatten hogs." The social philosophy of true religion must treat of economic affairs, or of soil-cultivating affairs, as related to the cultivation of the soul. For religion is man endeavoring to promote the welfare of his soul.

THAT IS WHAT Restoration religion does. It says that "the good things which cometh of the earth . . . are made for the use and benefit of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart. . . . and to enliven the soul," which is body as well as spirit. And then Restoration goes on to say that the things of this world (which are temporalities) must be used "in the manner designed of God," if the heart is to be gladdened and the soul enlivened. In other words Restoration religion prescribes the manner in which the affairs of this life ought to be conducted. And that prescription is what it calls "the temporal law."

Temporal laws, then, in the language of the modern prophet, are laws that are "given" of God. They should not be confused with the laws revealed through science. God's given temporal laws are not chemical formulas. They do not stipulate the manner in which seed corn should be drilled in the field, for example, in order to insure germination. They are not physical-world laws. They are rules of moral conduct. They do not reveal the manner in which cams, pistons, and triggers must be put together to build good engines. They reveal the manner in which man must be related to agriculture and manufacture, and all the rest, as a means of promoting human values, or as a means of enriching the soul. The temporal law of religion, in other words, has to do with the right ordering of human relations.

Those temporal laws say, for instance, concerning the natural creations, that "it is not given (of God. It is contrary to his will) that one man should possess that which is above another." They say that God's creations ought not to be used "by extortion." They say "You are to have equal claims" on God's bounties for the purpose of sustaining life and of promoting it. And that is why Restoration religion says that all temporal laws given of God are at once spiritual laws. That is why we say that temporal and spiritual laws are identical.

Restoration social philosophy does not say that "the life is not meat." It only says that life is more than meat. It does not say that "man shall not live by bread." It only says that man shall not live by bread alone. And Restoration explains what it means by that in its blueprint of rightly organized economic society.

JESUS SAID, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother." And if you wish to read Jesus' specifications of this necessary reconciliation, read the 25th chapter of Matthew. It is at once a spiritual and a temporal world reconciliation.

Jesus said precisely what Isaiah said over and over again. And what it all adds up to is this: there is one law of human life. Some of the specifications of that law pertain to the affairs of "earth" and some (so to speak) to affairs of "heaven." But "earthly" laws are "heavenly" laws. If they are God's laws they are spiritual.

The meaning of the whole thing is that the affairs of human society—particularly the economic affairs of peoples—must be conducted aright to attain the objects of true religion. And since no people can conduct its economic affairs aright as in the sight of God except through the implementation of a philosophy of social life, specifically of economic life, it follows that a true religious philosophy is at once a true social philosophy. It follows that true religion must explain its spiritual aims in temporal terms.

Every application of a temporal law—that is to say of a law given of God for the "conduct" of temporal affairs—is an action of the spirit. It has its effect in the mind. It is the soul cultivating itself effectually by cultivating the soil aright. It is through obedience to God's temporal laws that man shapes the destiny of his soul. And that is why we speak of temporal and spiritual laws as identical.

In Memory of June Whiting Lea - -

It will be difficult, if not impossible, to give adequate expression to my gratitude to the members of the First Presidency, to many other officers of the church, the Board of Publication, my fellow workers, to some hundreds of kind neighbors and friends both near and far, for their help, sympathy, and support in my time of trouble following the passing, on December 7, of my dear wife, June Whiting Lea.

Only those who knew her well can understand the extent of my loss. I am grateful to her for the sixteen years of our married life, and her friendship years before, during which she gave me the most complete happiness I ever knew. We often said that we could not expect any greater blessings in heaven than we already possessed in our home. She was unfailing in her support of my church work. Her invariable kindness and good humor, the richness of her personality, and the depth of her love made every homecoming an adventure in happiness.

Precious memories remain: of her last labors on some plays, before her final illness, for the church radio department; of the many artistic and beautiful things about the house—the products of her skill and love; of the long hours of toil she spent on talks and programs for the women's work, organizations, and the Music Club; of the efforts she made in entertaining to have everything just right; of seeing her kneeling at prayer in her room (she didn't know I saw) when I realized how truly she was God's daughter; of her way of saying "Come back soon!" whenever I left the house for work or trips; and a thousand other things.

The loss would be unbearable, were it not for the goodness of God in granting to three members of the family personal experiences and testimonies of her immortality, of the fact that her spirit lives on. These came first to me, then to her niece, and to her mother. We are all very grateful for this comfort.

The loss of loved ones is a common experience—none can escape it. Hard as it is, we must bear it as best we can. As this is written, a month has passed since she was taken away. Grief has not lightened. It is harder than ever to bear. Those who mourn are aged in sorrow. Loneliness presses on the heart like a cold stone. Now we know what others have gone through.

In times of bereavement, it is but natural for mind and spirit to venture out toward the borders of eternity in search of the one that is loved and lost, to seek further assurance and hope. I say nothing here of the perils of such a search. But after earnest prayer, I believe that, according to the best powers of mind and judgment I possess, I was blessed with some experiences of communion with her, that brought strength and help. In answer to a direct question I received this: "This is God's church. He does good through many organizations. But this is the true church." Again, in answer to a request for a message, this came: "Be faithful to your work. Be true to your trust. Never let anything separate you from it." These experiences are as real to me as a telephone call, or a letter from a friend. I am very thankful for them.

There is so much that could be said, and that for lack of space must remain here unexpressed. Eventually it is all summed up in an expression of thanks—thanks to God for the years of her precious companionship, thanks to her for all that companionship meant. We worked as a co-operating team on many a task; now her harness is empty, and the load remains to be pulled.

In the church services Sunday, I rediscovered the foundation on which our lives were built. Here were our brothers and sisters of the faith—our family; the church was our common denominator; she has passed to another field of labor, my place is here, my comfort, my companionship. She would have turned ever closer to the church had I been the first to go; so will I do now, in the hope that future years will find me faithful to my responsibilities and trust.

Prayer

Dear God—help me to keep this world beautiful

For Thy children.

Help me preserve the eagerness
With which they face each day.

Let my heart guard my tongue

That no words of mine

Shall shatter forever those illusions of youth

Which should not be illusions, but the truth!

Help me in my striving to teach them—

Gently and with wisdom—

That their respect for life and all its beauty

Be not dimmed.

Direct me, for mine is the responsibility

Of showing them that Thou art as a strong lifeline in adversity,

And as a dear friend

In time of peace.

Help me! Be with me, I pray,

Steady my trembling hands as I show them how to mold

Their precious lives;

So that, as they were gifts themselves,

They may be given back

To Thee.

No Zion Until . . .

In the past hundred years there has been a material development unsurpassed in the span of known history. With an ever-accelerating pace, the frontiers of knowledge and discovery are pushing into the unknown. Yet, after a hundred years of development, as a church, we have not become a particularly significant force in the field of human well-being. To initiate the scientific advance, it was necessary for man to adopt a mental outlook differing from that of previous centuries. Scientific development ushered in the era of experimentation and laboratory proof. People today accept less freely the concepts and ideas of others and counter with the question "Why?" or the challenge "Prove it."

The demand for realism brought with it a similar demand for efficiency and utility. In the scientific laboratory, a process or instrument which contributes nothing of value or which functions inefficiently is discarded. If society were a scientist's laboratory and our church an instrument in that laboratory, it is interesting to wonder whether or not we would be kept or discarded, considering not our potential, but only our utility to society today.

One thing is certain. People today insist on realistic religion that affects their lives materially and mentally, not in preparation for a next life, but as an influence in making life wholesome and satisfying now.

Man isn't waiting on a religion to carry out social reform and programs of general welfare. In fact, any organization that can do the job will suit him fine. God may not get tired of waiting on us, but mankind may. Mr. Average Man may decide to strike out on his own. If it is necessary for him to do that, we, as a group, should pack our bags and get out as quietly as possible. For look at what we have to work with! We are an organized group, and as many—not just one—we have a philosophy worthy, we maintain, of universal adoption. We have a definite plan for action that blends the spiritual and material aspects of life. To top it off, we contend that we have divine guidance. Something must be wrong. Is it with our organization? our philosophy? our plan? or is it a lack of divine guidance? No, no one of these fits the bill. The field is narrowed down until all that is left is you and me—we have not been concerned enough with our opportunity to do anything about it. The destiny of our group is in our hands, not someone else's, not God's, but OURS. We have been given tools to work with and can do what we want with them. We must decide either to make something constructive with these tools or to let them become idle and rusty through disuse. The first alternative will take work and spirit. The second will not. The choice is ours collectively.

If we choose (and we did when we entered the church) to accept the challenge to become a significant force for human well-being, it involves many areas of development. There is one that, in my mind, is fundamental and I want to discuss it particularly. It is this: until we individually and collectively develop beyond its present stage a genuine concern for the well-being of people, we cannot hope to be very effective. A genuine concern for the well-being of people—without it, our vitality is gone; with it, our capacity is unbounded.

Modern society in all its complexity has not succeeded in developing a feeling of group-responsibility in proportion to the degree with which all its phases are dependent upon each other. A century ago, in a largely agricultural society, most men were self-sufficient. It made little difference what one did in the broad pattern of that society because his acts had little effect on anyone other than himself, his family, and his next door neighbor. Not so today. The recent coal strike demonstrates vividly the interrelatedness of society in its modern, complex pattern, and the far-reaching influence the few may exert on the many. Society has become like an intricate watch. When one of the cogs or wheels stops, it disrupts the action of all its parts. The reason the watch of society isn't keeping good time or functioning smoothly is that there is still a tendency for the parts to try to act independently and irresponsible of each other.

Here is an interesting paradox. The complexity of society makes co-operation of its parts imperative, yet the very nature of society is based upon competition. It has developed a philosophy of survival of the fittest with little effort to insure that each person has an area in which he is fitted to happily survive. From early childhood, the emphasis is on self-development, not for the good of those around one but for oneself. One learns to look upon his neighbor, not as a friend but as a competitor—someone to be bested rather than helped.

Individually, one has little control over the development of this attitude. When a person is born, he is a physiological organism and very little else. His development as a social organism is determined by the complex interaction of the thousands of experiences which take place in his life after birth. One learns to form judgments by weighing the various aspects of knowledge and information at his command. His source of knowledge and information is the important consideration.

To promote a true concern for the welfare of humanity, the whole mental and psychological outlook of the world's peoples must change. A condition through the world must be promoted so that one will mature into adulthood with a sense of social responsibility firmly ingrained into his philosophy. If we, as a church, are going to play a significant role in the evolution of a more satisfactory society, we must begin attacking this problem.

No individual with a genuine concern for the welfare of other individuals could be satisfied to seek his personal happiness and do nothing to relieve the sufferings of society. And if, as a group, we were concerned enough, we would not be able to sit idly by, waiting for someone else to do the job. Since we are not getting the job done with any pronounced impact, we must begin to find ways to refine this motivating force to an extent that it will permeate all of our activities. Love and concern for people in general does not just happen in individuals. They are qualities that are developed as the individual matures. It requires the conscious effort of each of us and the constant concern of the entire group. There is no end of development in this channel, and we can only hope to instill in our children an outlook which surpasses our own, and in this manner draw ever nearer our goal. There is no definitized avenue of group approach to this problem. We can, however, keep the problem in mind and seek to develop a growing consciousness to it and reinterpret old attitudes and outlooks as we develop a greater feeling of responsibility and concern. Love of people comes through a genuine interest in their welfare. Zion will result from a concern for people. A concern for people will not result from Zion.

Unwilling Heart

By BETTY SANFORD

Ruth was terrified by the feeling of hatred which was welling up in her heart. She knew that if she allowed this feeling to take possession of her, she could never again lift her voice in praise to God with those who worshiped beside her.

God? Where was the Almighty God now? If it were true that he loved his children and watched over them, then why should they be made to suffer as she was doing now? She was not bad, and she knew it. Others knew it too. All her life she had been clean and good, yet at this moment when she most needed his reassurance, it was denied her.

She looked at those about her and felt only more bitterness at this thing called religion. Mr. Johnson sat in front of her. Poor old man! What had he to be thankful for? He was a cripple, maimed for life at the age of eighteen. There was Mrs. Webber who had just lost her last child in an automobile accident, yet she sat with head bowed in prayer to the Master. Mrs. Daniels sat with bowed head also. Her son was a worthless person; he had disgraced both family and church with his drinking. Old Mrs. Lee, suffering from an ailment doctors declared incurable, had come too; with her was her daughter who had given up the ambitions of her youth to be at her mother's side.

God? What kind of a God would let suffering like this exist among his children who had been faithful and trusting?

The torment within her grew. She was almost shaking with the storm of it when suddenly she beheld a light shining down before her, throwing its beams upon all those around her, yet not so much as touching the hem of her skirt. Heads lifted, eyes brightened, and the lines of suffering disappeared from the faces of those kneeling to pray.

Ruth was frightened. How often she had dreamed of this very thing. How often she had prayed for this light as a proof of God's Spirit watching over them. Yet it had come tonight—the night when she had made herself most unworthy of it.

Agony burned within her, and she strove to pray for forgiveness, but her shame prevented the words from leaving her lips. This could not be. Surely God would give her a chance. He could not be so close to her and yet refuse to hear her speak. She was as worthy as the others! She was as good as those who were being enveloped by his wondrous light!

She sank lower in her seat, and the lie she had uttered leaped up before her. She wasn't worthy! She had come only to tell God that she, for one, had tested him and found him false. She had not been in a spirit to receive the glorious revelation all about her but to make God realize how important she was.

Slowly she rose to her feet. This was no longer her house of worship and refuge; she no longer had the right to remain beside those Saints who were kneeling with her. This church was no longer her church, for God had come to claim it, and she was not to be included.

Her feet refused to move. It was as if a great chain were bound about her ankles. Her frightened eyes lifted, and she beheld the light, stronger and

And into her heart there entered a peace and calm such as she had never known before. As the light melted away, she realized that those about her had neither seen nor heard, but in her soul was an assurance of God's love which could never be shaken.

Before his death, he received three commendations for valor in line of duty from his commanding officer. The Bronze Star and Naval Citation were presented posthumously to his sister, Mrs. Clara Harrington of Independence, by Lt. T. V. Kelly of the Ninth Naval District. Mrs. Harrington has also received the Submarine Combat Insignia, the Commendation Ribbon for meritorious conduct and skill in action, and the Purple Heart.

The Drama Service Suspended

The current issue of Guide-Lines carries an article on drama by the late June Whiting Lea, with a list of plays and a statement that they may be obtained through the Drama Service. Mrs. Lea established and conducted this service for a number of years, to assist young people in the selection of plays suitable for church groups and programs.

Since her untimely passing from this life on December 7, this service will have to be suspended until some qualified and responsible person or agency can be found to take care of it.

Letters received by the Drama Service will be answered, and remittances returned, until a new agency can be established.

In behalf of Mrs. Lea, may I express thanks to all who have dealt with her in this work.—L. J. Lea.

Tribute to a Father

It is with loneliness and grief that I write this first day of the new year. My father, J. A. Wilson died November 26; my mother died when I was fourteen days old. Father cared for my two sisters, my brother, and me until we were grown; although he had much to do, he always took time to tell us about the gospel. He would kneel with us at the close of day for our evening prayer, and read to us from the Bible and church books. I was baptized at the age of thirteen, but after my marriage, I moved away from the church and lost all contact with it. I realize now that I made many mistakes; I joined another church and drifted with the world. Several years ago father came to visit us, bringing with him The Call at Evening. As I read the book, my heart was filled with longing for the church of my youth and a closer contact with God. I also wished that my companion might accept the restored gospel. Later, we were both baptized; my sister joined about a year ago. I am truly grateful that father was permitted to lead us to this better way of living before he died. He spent the last month of his life singing hymns, praying, and counseling those about him. He bore his illness so courageously that we did not realize the end was near; he always said that his afflictions were not as great as his job. Even while in the hospital he remembered his calling and, as long as his strength permitted, he talked to the other patients about the Latter Day work. Mrs. Fred Womack.

The Scars of Love

P. S.

The scars upon the body of Jesus are scars of love—his love for the human race.

Last year I stood in the chill wind of early morning, on the front steps of my home, ruefully considering more than forty bleeding wounds inflicted by our young pet cat. I had tried to rescue him from the assault of an older tom; he had mistaken me for the enemy, and attacked. I swung him around rather harshly in reprisal. We both made some bad mistakes. When it was all over, he snuggled in my arms, and we agreed to forgive each other and never mention the subject again. However, I observed to my wife, "Whoever loves a cat will carry scratches to his grave." I still have some of those scars. Now the cat and I love each other, and mutual respect restrains us from unwise interference in each other's quarrels. We, too, know something—if you can accept this with a smile—about the scars of love.

Whoever loves anything or anybody opens a new account in the double-entry bookkeeping of his spiritual life. On the credit side there is the great happiness his love gives him. And on the debit side will be listed the wounds he suffers because of that love. Yet the list of the benefits of love will generally always show more assets than liabilities.

Do you bear the scars of love—old wounds that have healed, but not disappeared? They are badges of honor. The deeper they are the more secretly you will hide them, the more gladly do you bear them. They become in time souvenirs of something precious life can never take away from you.—L.L.

* Donald Dunn,

Who has written some distinguished verse and prose for us, has an article about himself (sent by Walter Dean) in the "Rouge News," Ford company paper at the big plant:

"When Donald Dunn isn't working in the Motor Building, he is making plans for a second vagabonding jaunt on the Mississippi River. During his boyhood in Independence, Mo., he dreamed of taking a trip down the Missouri and Mississippi, but unlike most of us, he carried out his boyhood ambitions. With a friend, Norman Walters, Independence photographer, he voyaged in a rowboat from Independence to St. Louis. There, however, they gave up their oars in favor of a small outboard motor and continued the journey to Vicksburg, Miss. Dunn and his friend took many interesting pictures, and now Dunn lectures about his adventure."

When it comes off, we'd like to hear something of his latest trip on the river.

* W. Blair McClain,

In charge of our work in Detroit, formerly pastor of Second Church in Independence, writes this friendly note: "Your article in the "Herald" on the coffee war was very good. At least you have one letter back, but I am not stopping the coffee habit because I never acquired it, solely on the grounds that you have stipulated in your article."

* Her Philosophy

"I like to be able to see something accomplished for each day of my life," she said. She never sat idly in a chair, just resting. If her mind was tired, she did something with her hands. If her hands were tired she planned something with her mind. If both were tired, she took a nap, so that she could wake up and go to work again. So, in her short allotment of years, she accomplished a full lifetime of work.

* Learn to enjoy the little things of life, and you can have happiness every day. If you wait for big things, you may miss them altogether.

* The most beautiful things in the world are free to behold: the liquid gold of sunshine in a garden, the color of autumn leaves, children playing, and young people in love.

Are You Building a Home?

THERE ARE some pathetic stories relating to the housing situation, and a few of them get into the news. An old couple, the man unable to hold a job, the woman a chronic invalid, are ejected into the street, and don't know where to go. A veteran of the late war is losing an apartment because his wife is "expecting," and they don't allow babies in that apartment; if the couple were getting a pup, or a monkey, or a pet snake, they could remain; but a baby?—No! The newspaper carries a picture of a father cooking a meal over a charcoal burner in the fireplace, while his infant son looks on; their lights are furnished by a kerosene lantern and some candles; there is no gas nor heat; the landlady has fulfilled none of her promises on utilities, and she charges a king's ransom for the room.

If one tries to buy a home, he may be shown an old wreck unfit to shelter cattle—a life's savings demanded for it.

And if he tries to build! The lumber is so green it wets the hands, and one searches for months for fixtures, plumbing, windows, doors, hardware, and what not.

But the housing situation is nothing compared with the home-building problem. Read any newspaper, visit any domestic court, and see! It is almost necessary to check up on people by phone each morning to learn who is married and who is not.

Two women, old friends, may meet each other on the street and one say to the other, "Tell me, Dear—who are you now?"—referring to the legal surname, of course.

Or the other may inquire, "And how is your divorce coming along? I haven't seen the paper today!"

Meeting a woman on the street, one wonders, "Is she Miss, or Mrs., today?"

Despite shortages, there are many people building houses of one kind or another, out of whatever they can get.

But there aren't many people building homes—and I mean real homes. They have never seen a blueprint of such a home, and, poor things, they don't even know what materials to use.

You may be lucky enough to have a house already. But are you building a home?

In the movies, you can see a show any week on how homes are wrecked, how the character of marriage partners is corrupted, and how lives are ruined. How long is it since you have seen anything to give you help on how to build a home, how to make it stand firm under the breaking forces that are brought to bear upon it?

In the magazines you can find dozens of publications on the sins of New York and Hollywood, the breakdown of morals, and the loss of faith, for every single magazine devoted to personal and family reconstruction.

These are not materials out of which people can build homes. But, alas, it is all they get; it is what they choose; it is what they seem to prefer to all else.

Do you not reflect upon the state of intelligence of people who profess to seek happiness, and then buy only what will destroy it?

People of the nation, and of the churches too, need to think about what kind of material is required to build a real home.

The finest foundation of a good home is Christian character. Intelligence, educated and refined, is basic. There must be a strong measure of faith. Personal responsibility. Self-control and restraint. The determination to love one's partner and children more than oneself; willingness to love is not enough; determination, purpose, plan, are required. There are too many weak persons who consult their feelings to find out if they are in love; some morning they wake up and find out that they aren't, and that day a divorce begins. Happy is the man who has his emotions under intelligent control—who, having promised to love, does it, every day of his life.

Ours will be a happier world, a happier nation, when people devote more attention to home-building and not all of it to mere house-building. Our church members will be happier too, when this emphasis is more widely understood.

How tragic it is to see young people getting married who have nothing but their sex—nothing but the rude biological equipment possessed by any cow—on which to establish a marriage. Until the mind is filled with truth, until character is disciplined by moral principle, until souls are lighted by a spiritual ideal, people are not fit for marriage, are not equipped to build homes, regardless of how fine houses they may purchase. Homes succeed by virtue of the equipment of mind and spirit. Persian rugs, electrical appliances, modernistic furniture, indirect lighting, and radiant heat in the floor can furnish a good house. But it is only when an individual turns his mind to truth and his spirit to God that he can build a home.

Federal Council versus American Council

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has just concluded its biennial meeting of 1946 at Seattle, Washington. It marked the end of the two-year presidency of Dr. G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop. Doctor Oxnam has been freely charged with being a Communist, and has been called "the Red Bishop." In his farewell address, he took occasion to deny the charge, and in connection with his "rejection" of communism, gave his "formula" for meeting the present conflict with Russia. He said we should change our present free society to one of economic controls.

"The kingdom of God is a co-operative social order" and it "must plan to lead until it comes to a society fit to be called the kingdom of God."

Doctor Oxnam was succeeded by Charles P. Taft (son of President William Howard Taft), a layman, the first ever to serve as such who was not "of the cloth."

The Christian Beacon (Collingswood, New Jersey) espouses the cause of The American Council of Christian Churches, and crusades with considerable venom against the Federal Council. In its issue for December 12 last, it quotes all of a document put out by the Federal Council and "analyzes" it, objecting strenuously because the Federal Council fellowships with such churches as the Russian Orthodox churches; "with their largely Roman Catholic system," and that it "is an association of diverse and heterogeneous faiths." It seems to be the old "holier than thou" attitude: I and mine are regular and orthodox, you and yours are irregular and herodox.

The Beacon then challenges:

The Federal Council has now told us what it is and is not. Though there has been a very definite and apparently conscious effort to imitate in many ways the testimony of the American Council of Christian Churches, and though expressions and phrases have been used which are employed by the American Council in its testimony, nevertheless, such phrases as "new birth," being "born again," such phrases as "the precious blood of Jesus Christ," such phrases as "God's inerrant and infallible Word," such phrases as "diety of Christ," such phrases as "the blessed hope of the near coming again of Jesus Christ," such phrases as "a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness"—such phrases which are part and parcel of the whole Christian life and world view are absent.

Is this ecumenical community that the Federal Council is leading in world affairs to be the spiritual community for which our Lord prayed in John 17? Or is it to be the Babylon of Revelation 17? Belief and unbelief, all kinds of contradictory opinions and beliefs concerning Jesus of Nazareth—that is Babylon. God's cry is "Come out of her, my people."

In this same issue of the Federal Council Bulletin, again we are reminded of the exact number of people for whom the Federal Council speaks. Concerning the meeting of the Federal Council in Seattle, December 4, 5, and 6, we read, "The 400 members of the Federal Council who are called together every two years to direct the work of the Council in its effort to advance Christian unity represent a total constituency of 27,749,967 members." Remember, it would be only—966 if you were not in it!

For the sake of Christ, get out!

It is, of course, not our quarrel. Neither organization desires us; but we are amazed Christian gentlemen cannot get along with each other in peace!

For the encouragement of all who may be interested in similar situations, we wish to advise that the Presiding Bishopric is just now in receipt of the first installment payment on the funds advanced by the general church to the Cash, Michigan, Branch. This arrangement has enabled the general church to be of material assistance to a local congregation and has resulted in a considerable saving to those on whom the burden of local finances rests.

Brother L. E. Thompson, Independence, writes: "I believe our little DeSoto, Kansas, Mission was the means of bringing in the first two members of the church of this New Year: Wilmer Edwin Lane and his wife, Genevieve Ruth Lane." Congratulations.

New Creatures

If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.—II Corinthians 5: 17.

By Apostle Charles R. Hield

THE CAUSE OF religion suffered during the war and is still suffering in this reconstruction period. Christianity was unable to keep us out of war. It has been proved incapable of preventing exploitation, even in our own country. It has not established race tolerance. Our civilization still suffers from shocking poverty and sin. There remains much dishonesty and crime. Our penal institutions are full. Because of these and other factors, many people are turning away from religion, feeling that it is impotent.

To recuperate this loss, many of the churches are now attempting a method of family or a personal evangelism, in the hope of again filling their pews. An appeal is being made to people to join the church, much as they would a social club. Handbooks on this modern evangelistic method are being published. I read one recently in which an appeal is made to the laity to take part in this easy way to evangelize. An appeal is made for people to unite with the church because it is the patriotic, community-spirited thing to do. The argument is made that good citizens would not like a community without churches, and, therefore, they should go to church. Or, an appeal is made to the parents whose children are in Sunday school (although they may be taken to church in the neighbor's car). Would it not be a good example for the children if the father and mother joined the church?

THE CONVERSIONS of the saints in New Testament times were not so easily accomplished, nor so lightly undertaken. Today the churches are so eager to get a communicant that they seem almost to vie with each other to make joining as easy as possible. They practically "guarantee" that uniting with the church will not disturb one's established way of living. It is becoming increasingly impossible to identify a Christian when you see or talk to one of them, or deal with him in business. When a man joins the church, seldom do his fellow laborers in the factory, in the shop, or in the office, recognize any change in his life. His wife and children are not aware of a spiritual rebirth. His in-laws are not aware of any new creature who is attempting a more righteous existence. His neighbors notice no change. One can even wonder if God himself is aware of any change; and in many cases, there probably is no change.

Today church membership may also be terminated about as easily as it is assumed. Giving up church affiliation affects modern life about as much as losing a fountain pen. It may cause us inconvenience for a moment. Our standards after joining the church are, however, little different. Ordinarily no new friends have to be cultivated. We need not be surprised that so many of the articles in our magazines, even in religious magazines, are criticizing very sharply the present results of evangelization.

The question is raised, that even if a whole community should join our churches, would there be any difference in the political, the business, and the daily attitude of the people? These articles are saying that there would be about as much crime, as much drinking, as much dishonesty, and as much juvenile delinquency as before. Some of our commentators become very critical, even urging that the teachings of Christ be taken away from churches where they are being smothered.

We Christians may feel that these criticisms are unjust; yet, there is a kernel of truth in their analysis. Too many of those who unite with the church have changed but little from what they were before. Many are being urged to accept membership in the church as they would in an afternoon bridge club, a golf club, the Chamber of Commerce, the American Legion, or a hobby club.

TRUE CHRISTIAN conversion requires a whole new way of living. The Christian will be aware of the terrible ravages of sin, crime, dishonesty, and immorality. He sees the sordidness of the world as men exploit each other and go to war. Sick of world chaos, he turns to God, his laws, and his intelligence as the only hope for peace, harmony, good will and brotherhood. Carefully analyzing it, he finds that God's way is much the superior and more intelligent method. One who joins a church should join because he wishes to unite with a militant group of people who are not only fighting the evils of sin, but are seeking to live the Christian brotherhood in all phases of their lives. In true conversion one looks upon his past record and decides that it is unworthy of him; he is ashamed that he has not been more profitable to God and the building of his kingdom here upon the earth.

It used to be that joining a church was a soul-shaking adventure. It often meant a break with old habits, such as the former unwise use of time, money, and talents. It often required one to give up old associates and to seek new friends. Many times it demanded a change of job, such as selling liquor, tobacco, narcotics, or being engaged in any type of business which was harmful to personality and life. It used to be that the new religious convert felt his rebirth so strongly, he often sought a new environment. He would even cross the ocean, as did the Pilgrims, to a new land in order to obtain new surroundings and freedom to worship God. There they hoped to fashion their lives as they believed their Creator desired. Today only about fifty per cent of the people of the United States have their names on the records of any church, and only ten to twenty-five per cent of those who do have their names on the files of the church attend regularly. Joining the church used to grip people. It stirred them deeply. They had made The Great Discovery! They had found The Pearl of Great Price! Now, one can join a church and hardly feel it.

SOME OF OUR LARGE churches are accused of looking down with scorn upon the smaller Pentecostal or Holiness type of churches. Yet, study seems to indicate that the easy requirements for membership in some of our respectable larger churches are quite largely responsible for the growth of these smaller sects. These smaller groups claim that there is little or no change in a person who joins one of our larger denominations. These recently organized congregations are demanding a change in their people as an indication of their conversion. They insist that their members give up the use of liquor and tobacco. They may not dance or go to most movies or theaters. They look with scorn upon hilarity. They insist that their members maintain high moral standards. They often prohibit the use of rouge, powder, and lipstick. They preach against the use of costly finery and ornaments. Some even prescribe the type of clothes which their people must wear, insisting that it cover the body better than some of our modern styles. They are against card-playing and gambling, and will not take part in some sports. These are only some of the many reasons for the quick growth of this highly emotional type of religious organizations today. Their existence is a very severe criticism, at any rate, of some of our larger and more wealthy churches, for those people claim that they must have an organization separate from the larger churches because the people in these larger denominations do not exhibit changed lives. Nor can they fellowship with people who participate so avidly in the frivolities of the world.

It is true that Christ demanded that the people who resolved to follow after his pattern of life should change their hearts, their minds, and their lives. In Europe today, in Russia, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Rumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, etc., it is rather hard to tell to what nation an individual belongs. They wear arm bands in some localities in order to identify their allegiance, and this arm band is often changed from day to day, or month to month, in order to indicate that they have decided to support this or that type of state or government. Christianity and religion must be more than just changing arm bands. There is no real place for a church that is merely maintaining a sort of club house, even though it be sympathetic. Christ's church should be redemptive! It must use all of our powers to develop a God-controlled society, taking in every area of life, the home, business, education, politics, etc. Yes, the race problem and the economic problem as well.

WHAT THE WORLD needs today is a rebirth; a people with a changed heart; not only a changed mind, but a changed determination to live God's way. Today so many reformers urge some simple external panacea as the solution for our world problems. They generally single out some special group or principle for attack. Hitler singled out the Jews. Many people today are cursing capitalism or labor. Our problem is more than capitalism and unions. What our world needs, I repeat, is a people with a changed heart. There is no guarantee of new creatures even if a labor party were in control. (Labor has the support of the churches in its fight for justice, better working conditions, and a more equitable distribution of the fruits of their labor.)

When Christ came to the earth, there were already a number of religious groups functioning among the people in Palestine. Their religious leaders were advocating obedience to Jehovah, and the teachings of the ancient prophets. Their church and civil law insisted upon high moral and ethical standards. Christ did not have to come merely to tell people not to steal, not to kill, not to be immoral, etc. Do not misunderstand. He did call men to forsake carnal sins. He did urge his converts to follow his example of righteous living. But his ministry was also, first, a stirring call to civilization to develop a new type of world citizenship. Second, he organized a church separate from the other established orders, and placed upon the shoulders of his followers the responsibility of building a kingdom of God here on the earth. That theme was to be the burden of their prayers as well as their actions. Third, Christ expected his adherents to demonstrate a superior type of life, so that others seeing it might also be converted to his Father's program. The call of the Christ is the same today as it was in the first century.

EVERYTHING HAS A spiritual significance. We Christians should be better farmers because we see in our farms a means of furthering the purpose and intelligence of God's plan. We should be better neighbors; have more good will toward those among whom we live. We should produce the best mechanics. We should have people who are better in the service trades and in their stores. We should have the best doctors and the most efficient laborers. There has never been such an opportunity as there is today for the laboring man to excel. So many are dishonest in their business. There is so much excessive drinking with its inevitable next-morning hangover. Too many are lazy and inefficient in their labor. Christians should find it relatively easy to stand out from the rest of the world because of the very quality of their lives and personalities and the expertness of their labor. We should always seek to produce a better product than anyone else.

At a conference a church member came to me and said that he could not sing wholeheartedly one of the songs which we had that morning in our prayer service, "Let all my time and all my ways be spent and ended in Thy praise." After talking with the man awhile, we convinced him, I think, that he could spend "all his time and all his ways" in helping to build the kingdom. He could follow the plow, were he a farmer, knowing that honest labor is honorable. He is in a sacred position where he can earn money by raising wheat—this money to be used in the nourishment and the proper care of his family. Thus healthy, together in their home, they can learn to be profitable to God by the building of His truths and intelligence into their community; and, perhaps, someday they may find additional ways to participate in the building of the kingdom of God. The housewife in the kitchen can consider the care of her children as a happy and joyous responsibility, for she can train them to understand God's ways and to be in a position to give a worthy contribution to his kingdom. Whether a man is a storekeeper, a lawyer, or a barber, he can engage in his activity every moment of the day with gladness in his heart, as he realizes that through this endeavor he makes it possible for himself and his family better to serve God.

We are feeling the pinch of uncertainty in the world today. We are now again able to buy a few automobiles. The steel industry is increasing its output, but yet we do not know from month to month, and from season to season, whether we shall have coal or not; whether our electric light operators will go on a strike; whether the trains will run; whether we shall have a job next year, or whether we shall not. We are wondering whether we will have war in a few years, whether we shall have peace, whether the bureaucrats will control and dictate our every move in civilian life, or whether again we shall have to fight for freedom in the world. To what philosophy of life are you looking, to solve our present social and economic problems?

THE FIRST CENTURY saints cast their lot with God and his Son, the Christ. They lived in tough times, too, for the Roman government had control of Palestine, and paganism was the outstanding religion of the civilized world. They realized that it would be a long and desperate struggle to reach their goal. Yet, from the Christ and his disciples, they caught a vision of the things that Christianity could do for their world. It gave them new hope, new heroism. Christ's new kingdom was the only solution of the problem of their age. They had no fear of the final outcome and the victory of God's ways.

Because of this, they stood up straighter; they worked with new strength; they felt a new power surging through their veins; they sensed a new destiny, a commission to bring these truths to all of their brethren throughout the world. They indeed were new creatures. They felt new life. They had passed from bondage to freedom, from disease to health, from darkness to light. They were lost and now they had found themselves. They feared death, and now they had the promise of eternal life. They were weak, and now they sensed a new power.

People observing these early-day saints, wanted what they had. There was a strong Jewish persecution which drove them from their cities. Rome, the government of the time, was pagan, and, yet, these people, with courage and determination and through the inward power which God gave them, went out and conquered the world—not with swords and spears, but through the very quality of their living.

MILLIONS TODAY, however, are not looking to God, their Creator. Rather they look to the nation or the state. They look to some class or group, such as labor or capital. They give up freedom and accept the leadership of some master mind, some dictator. They rely upon money. Often they are fooled into feeling self-sufficient and their civilization crashes about their ears. They are confused. They are easily led by mobs to do things they wouldn't do by themselves. So many are weak and powerless; puzzled and bewildered.

Sometimes weakness is due to starvation. Recently I talked with a family and learned of the problems of their son who had been in World War II in the Pacific. He was captured and systematically starved by the Japanese. He developed beriberi. A boil on the back of his neck was left uncared for, and it finally drained down through his shoulder and out his arm.

Today so many exist in our world with a poor spiritual diet. They, too, have beriberi—beriberi of the soul. The young soldier was rescued, and after months of good American care and food has recovered his former health. Christ rescues the spiritually weak and sick. He gives strength to those who are profitable to him in building his kingdom. Spiritual nourishment can be ours every moment of the day.

During the rationing of meat and the O.P.A. regulations, there were many complaints about not being able to buy steaks, etc. There is no shortage of spiritual food for those who seek it. Christ found a great satisfaction in living according to the law of the universe, and teaching the truth which his Father had sent him here to proclaim. It was in Samaria that he sat down by the well while his followers went into the city to get food. While they were away, he engaged in conversation a woman who had come to the well to draw water, and when his disciples came back, he refused food for a while, saying to his followers, "I have meat that you know not of." Most active followers of the Nazarene can testify of receiving spiritual nourishment as they minister to the lives of needy people.

God always offers to his people the riches of eternity if they will serve him. During the war, we had shortages of things which we thought were essential to our living. Everybody searched through the stores for some article of food which he desired. Perhaps it was cooking oil, soap, or meat, sometimes coconut, pineapple, or again it was pepper or sugar or Jello. More often than not, one went to the store to purchase those articles and came away without them.

God's shelves, however, are always full. He gives to his people in proportion as they are willing to dedicate themselves to his kingdom. There is no place in the economy of the Divine Mind for the intentionally idle to eat the bread of the laborers. Those who are co-workers with God in building his kingdom are not left weak, afraid, discouraged, tired, and frustrated. He makes new creatures out of his people. He changes their dispositions and standard of values, as well as their desires.

Elbert Hubbard was right when he said years ago, "If your religion does not change you, you had better change your religion."

There is no short cut to the solution to our problems in the world today. A short cut, by the intervention of God, would but destroy our personalities. Yet, many people are hoping for a mass-production solution, somehow, of the political, economic, and moral problems of our civilization. Recently I noticed an advertisement for a kitchen machine which would do almost anything except carry food to the mouth. It extracts juices from the fruit and vegetables, grinds coffee, peels potatoes and apples; mixes drinks, shells peas, whips cream, polishes silver, grinds meat; purees tomatoes, rice, potatoes, and spinach; slices beans and cabbage, shreds vegetables, grates, churns butter, sharpens knives, freezes ice cream, opens cans, crushes ice, and yes, it will mix cakes. How nice it would be if we could find some master machine that would solve our social problems. The world will not be changed, however, until we have a change of heart.

To those who understand God's laws it is heart-rending, almost, to notice the struggle of people to emerge into true living. In Florence, Italy, in the Academy of Fine Arts, there is one corridor filled with statues of Michelangelo. There is his very famous "David," at one end of the hall. I shall never forget his unfinished statues called the "Prisoners," sometimes known as the "Slaves." They are figures half emerging from their block of marble. One shows two slaves straining, seemingly to get free from the restraining stone. The gestures of their faces, their necks, the muscles of their arms and their legs, the expression of their whole bodies is one of struggle, desperate struggle to free themselves. One figure is on the point of giving up; he seems to have struggled so long and so hard that he has become exhausted and lost courage. These prisoners, or slaves, fascinated me and remained on my mind for days. One almost wishes that he could return to the museum and free them! All that they need is the touch of the master's hand; the love and genius of their creator, in this case, Michelangelo. But those who are seeking to serve God see so many people who are prisoners of the habits of life, and the ways of our civilization. We go into many cities and find young people, young married couples, as well as old people, struggling hard to be free, to live. They want a chance to change, to be re-born! Under such circumstances you feel some of the spirit the Christ must have felt as he yearned to help people and to liberate them from their own self-imposed fetters and bondage.

In one museum is a very interesting coin with an image and inscription upon it. The inscription reads, "Tiberius Caesar, Son of the Divine Augustus." This Tiberius Caesar reigned as the emperor of Rome from A. D. 14 to A. D. 37. This is just the period of the mature life of the Christ. It may well have been one of these coins that the Christ had in his hand as he talked with the people about paying taxes, and whether they should give to God or to Rome. Some such coin as this he may have been holding as he said, "Whose is this image and inscription?" Suppose it were the same coin, the identical coin, which the Christ handled! How valuable it would be, then, to some people. Many, no doubt, would come long distances to see it, perhaps to kiss it and ascribe to it miraculous healing power. The touch of the Spirit of God, the touch of the hands of the Christ have always caused a change. The Christ touched the blind man, and he saw. His spirit came to Saul, the persecutor of the saints, and he was transformed into Paul, the Apostle. He comes to men who are discouraged, feeble, and weak, and he gives them power and inspiration. He comes to people who are deep in sin, and transforms their lives so that they become respectable and profitable members of society. The Christ, when he touches our lives, transforms them. Even our material possessions, when the Spirit of God rests upon us, we consider such as may be used for the furtherance of God's purposes in building his kingdom. The touch of the Christ upon our machine, and we find it has spiritual value. So also upon the plow, upon our education, upon our home, upon our office, and upon our store. The touch of the Christ causes all things to become geared to the great kingdom life, and we indeed become new creatures.

General MacArthur, as he dictated the terms of peace upon the battleship "Missouri," in Tokyo Harbor, no doubt was right when he warned us that God had given our civilization "another chance."

We are not left without an example because we see in Christ the possibilities of our nature, if we, too, would respond as he responded to the laws of God.

WHAT A VISION the Christ had of the kingdom of God way, and how he thrilled to declare that plan! He contacted anybody and everybody, anywhere. He talked to the disciples while they were fishing. He spoke to Matthew in his place of business. He converted a woman at breakfast, and a lawyer as he walked in the streets. No sect or group was outside his interest. He stopped to win the Pharisees, the Sadducees, the Herodians, the Zealots, the Greeks, the Romans, the Syrophenicians, and the Samaritans. His appeal went to the lepers. He talked to governors, kings, soldiers, the poor as well as the rich. He mingled with the people at the wedding. He loved little children and took them in his arms and blessed them. He conversed with beggars and wise men. He ate and talked with the publicans. He had concern even for thieves. His whole heart went out to people as he saw them living beneath their possibilities and content with lesser things.

The Scripture says he looked upon the multitude with compassion, and he wept over the city of Jerusalem as lost souls. He stayed out all night in prayer to God as he thought of choosing his twelve apostles. He won Andrew at an early hour, and we have the example of the heart-searching talk with Nicodemus late at night. He stopped eating, in order to talk with the Samaritan woman by the well, and he seemingly stopped dying on the cross in order to talk to the thief — a criminal!

TODAY the world waits for a people that can follow the life of the Christ and become a truly reborn people. Christ has asked Christians to be that people. I wonder if you can feel that challenge, that call, that destiny for the church? God waits for such a people, a people who are thrilled, happy, and joyous with courage and power, as they look forward to the adventure of building the kingdom of God here upon the earth.

I am happy to testify that thousands of people are receiving of this divine power as they move out under the impulsions of the Holy Spirit. They are becoming new people. They are determined to further their education—to become the best in their profession that the world has; and becoming the best, to dedicate those talents to the furtherance of God's purposes here upon the earth.

What a gospel we have! How happy we should be to move forward in furthering God's purposes by the building of his kingdom! Yes, the Bible is right. "If any man be in Christ, he is a New Creature. Old things are passed away. Behold all things are become new."

I look among my acquaintances in various spheres, business, literature, the stage, the bar, politics, and I see everywhere men, and prominent men, whose lives are obviously clouded and their careers impaired, if not greatly imperilled, by continual immoderate indulgence in drink.—Arnold Bennett.

The Fire-Bringer

They tried to bind him, Prometheus. They said the gods were afraid. He wanted men warned and fed and comforted by his little fire. But fire was strange. Who knew what might come of it? Man should not meddle with the world as it was made. So they bound the first inventor to a rock to make him stop his inventing. They did stop him for a while, but he got away. Just a few centuries ago he got away and began playing with fire again—all kinds of fire and the things that makes it fire, thinking his way into the secrets of the gods. And at last he got it. He found the combination that would unlock the atom. He tried it out the other day, and destroyed a couple of cities. Now he stands before the door of the atom, with the fate of the world in his hands. Who is to bind him now?

Prometheus himself is a good fellow. We call him the scientist. He has no destructive wishes of his own. All he wants is to find out. But he can be bought by people who want to use his power for their own ends. He was bought by Hitler. He was bought by his patriotic devotion to the United States. . . . But now he has an atomic bomb in his hand. Just a little one. Just a sample.

Prometheus is unbound. There is no other Prometheus to hold him in check. He can never be controlled by any other force. He is force. Prometheus must learn to control himself. He must now be educated. In our homes, our schools, our colleges, our churches, he must be educated. He must learn to be human and to live on terms of equality and good will with other humans, concerned for their good more than for his own, and ready to use his new-found powers not to control but to serve his fellows. We know how to do all this. It is high time we set to work.—Hugh Hartshorne, Research Associate in Religion, Yale University, in Religious Education, January-February, 1946.

To All, a Happy New Year

WE REALIZE the fact that wishing one and all a happy New Year will not insure that they will meet with only pleasant things along the road of 1947. Far from it; but the blessing comes to our hearts as we from our inmost being are able to wish all only the best for the coming twelve months. It is sweet to realize that in your inner being there dwells a desire that good may come to all and disappointment and sorrow to none.

Why should we not wish everyone well? To do otherwise would be thoughtless and un-Christlike, for when we remember that there is not a human being old enough to enjoy life with its manifold blessings, who is not also old enough to be touched with its sorrow and weighed down under its trials; therefore, we should not by our unkindly wishing, lay another straw upon the already burdened heart.

After all, the world needs our help more than criticism and, insofar as we fail to be helpful, we are feeding our selfish natures which in time will root out the higher and nobler instincts and principles, and we will be left poor indeed. The world deserves much credit for hiding its unpleasant experiences, for many a smiling face carries beneath it a broken heart, and smiles to keep others from sharing its burden. In this the world is kind, and it would be safe for us, as we go down the pathway of life, to treat all people as if they had sorrows and, if we were mistaken, the kindness, as a stimulant to more joyous living, would not be lost. The fact is, we never make a mistake by being kind; but how many would fain recall the hasty word, the unbecoming act, and the opportunity to give a cup of cold water in His name?

We never know the storms that may be raging within the breast of a fellow-being we meet from day to day, so we would study to make the way just as smooth as possible, for we may not know how soon we may be hiding a broken heart beneath a smile that is struggling to be glad in spite of the load that carries it.

Someone has said that politeness is doing the kindest things in the kindest way, and it is said to be the best investment in the world for the amount of capital required. Just be kind—that's all, and you will leave more sunbeams in your path than many disappointments can obliterate.

James Whitcomb Riley has a little poem entitled, "Just Be Glad," but we would urge our Herald readers to adopt as their motto for 1947, "Just be kind," and then you will be glad. At least, you will have no apologies to make for having opened wider an already bleeding wound, but perhaps have poured in a healing balm which will save a soul from despair. In doing this we shall be following the injunction of the inspired writer when he said, "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Guide me to those who need my help,
Teach me to see their need,
That I may speak the word that cheer
And do the kindly deed.

And if the work thou shalt appoint
Is what the world counts small,
Make me contented with my lot
And faithful in it all.

I Want Youth to Have the Right Start says Dr. Glenn Cunningham

As an athlete and teacher of physical education my advice to young people is to seek alcohol-free relaxation, regardless of what others may say or do. Your own responsibility toward your body and mind, your potential usefulness . . . and your possibilities in postwar achievement are all involved in the choice you make for wholesome fun and fellowship and against injurious, weakening, and toxic alcoholic drinks.

The more I see of young people, the more concerned I am that they shall have the facts on which to make right and healthful choices. In my work, I am responsible for employing the coaches. These men and their teams have been making an exceptionally fine record in schedules that pit us against a number of larger schools. Our wrestling team, for instance, defeated Minnesota. Whether we win or lose, we engage in competitive athletics on the basis of developing the players and fitting them for the successes and defeats of life.

Of course, we expect the men to abstain from drinking. That is a matter of course in any serious effort to bring a man to condition physically and mentally, in active sports.

We have been delivering men of this quality to the camps and schools of the armed forces. The Army and Navy depend on the colleges and universities—yes, and high schools—to send them men of fitness, men who can take hard knocks, who are tough and ready for physical action, and cool, collected, proficient in their mental and nerve control.

We of physical education ranks are asking only that the armed forces keep the men in this condition after they get them. It seems to me the American people will not quickly forgive officers who overlook this important element in conditioning men for arduous service—the element of wholesome habits, including enough respect for one's bodily and mental welfare to be and remain alcohol-free at all times.

I know some young people will say, "I am not an athlete, and I need not be bound by requirements that apply to success in athletics." I am thankful I do not come into contact with many young people whose thinking is so shallow and whose purposes for living at one's best are so flabby! It is hard for me to be patient when I meet or hear about boys and girls who do not value themselves highly enough to learn what practices will aid their health and fitness, and what practices injure them. Why, all the freedom of thinking and of choice is wasted on those who merely do, unthinkingly, what others do.

More and more I find young people determined to count for something, to leave an impress on their times, to live a life. Alcohol-free standards will help their progress!—Courtesy of The Classmate, Nashville. (The Clipseet.)

Spiritual Ends Through Temporal Means

By J. A. Koehler

Number 20 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

J. A. KOEHLER

I HAVE MORE than fifty varieties of gladioli in my flower garden, which I cultivate for the sake of the blossoms they produce. I want the blossoms because they please my eyes. When I make good use of those blossoms—for instance, when I use them to make sick people cheerful—they even gladden my heart and enliven my soul. The ends I seek to reach through the cultivation of gladioli are spiritual.

I also have fertilizers and disinfectants about the place. If it were not for the instrumental values of such things, if I could grow flowers without them, I would not have them about the place. But whether I derive satisfaction from pulling weeds and fumigating bulbs and adding fertilizer to the soil, and all the rest, or not, I must do those things. For they are the only known mean to successful gladiolus growing, which in turn is a means to spiritual ends. The truth is that the very practice of the art of growing glads is in itself, as a hobby, a soul-enlivening experience.

In common with all civilized beings I desire to live a happy home life. But happy home lives cannot be lived in the midst of poverty and filth and disease. So to reach that spiritual end—a happy home life—everyone must employ temporal means. He must take up the dirt from the floor. He must even provide sewerage disposal. Ugly things, are some of these temporalities—very ugly. But they are necessary things. They have instrumental values. Whoever desires to promote a happy home life must resort to those means to reach his spiritual ends.

THERE ARE MILLIONS of true mothers who have aspirations for their children. Their hearts' desires are that their children may come to be honorable, upright, intelligent, highly moral and, therefore, very useful human beings. That is the end—the spiritual end—which true mothers seek to reach through their devotion to their children. The ends of a true mother's care are spiritual. But by what means, through what measures and methods, must a true mother reach her spiritual ends? Can she do it without resort to temporal means?

No mother ever did, and no mother ever will, because it can't be done. In the very nature of things a mother must feed and clothe the bodies of her little children, she must wash them with soap and water, she must provide them with toys and crayons and paper, and ever so many other temporalities. In other words, she must have a care about the things that pertain to this world. For the nature of man is such that he cannot reach his spiritual ends without resort to temporal means.

THERE ARE MANY life situations which testify to the truth that spiritual ends in general may be reached only through temporal means. When you wish to converse with friends, for instance, when you wish to have spiritual communion with them, do you not use either pen and paper or telephone or radio or your vocal organs or what? Surely! You would be hard put to have a spiritual feast with friends except through temporal means. That is one of the reasons we have banquets and all such like.

How could you have that spiritual experience called appreciation of the beautiful in nature except through physical or temporal means? And as for the moral ends—which are spiritual ends—which all peoples seek to promote in general, they must be reached through temporal means, or through temporal adjustments. They must be reached through conducting economic affairs aright.

Reflect on this truth. It reveals in part why Moses and Jesus and many another wise and good man went into the mount—which is a physical thing—to commune with God.

But, I repeat, temporal affairs must be conducted aright if they are to be means to highly spiritual ends. Blocks and balls and pictures, etc., must be provided in suitable succession to satisfy the changing wants of growing children. The things of this world must be used aright if they are to be means to lofty spiritual ends.

SPIRITUAL ENDS must be reached through personal adjustment, through the activities of the soul itself, through the kinds of exercise that give rise to personal improvement. So a mother may not reach her spiritual ends without teaching her children to relate themselves aright to the things of this world. She must teach them to respect the rights of others, primarily their property rights. She must teach them to be industrious on their own initiative, particularly to fulfill their duties as members of the household without procrastination. In a word, to reach her truly spiritual ends, a mother must have a true philosophy of domestic life.

What a true mother seeks to do in home life is what true religion seeks to do in the life of the whole human family, in social life in its totality and unity, and particularly in the life of the community. In other words, true religion is a way of conducting the business of human living together which promotes its spiritual values or reaches its spiritual ends.

Those values or ends are either personal or social or both. The spiritual values promoted by true religion in persons are love of God and neighbor. When that love is defined, it will be seen that it comprehends about every spiritual value that religion may promote in persons. Even happiness—which is the feeling that accompanies the consciousness of having cultivated one's capacities and used his abilities to promote the well-being and happiness of others—even happiness arises from loving God and neighbor.

THE ALL-COMPREHENSIVE spiritual end which true religion seeks to promote in society is the peace, prosperity, and happiness of peoples. And we are coming to be convinced, at long last, that that end may be promoted only through pure government. Through government that is ordered with judgment, as the prophets say, and established with justice.

While true government—which is peoples governing themselves—is a spiritual activity, while it is an exercise in moral willing—specifically, moral social-self-discipline—it is nevertheless a secular affair; it is an affair of this world; it has to do with land and buildings and corn and hogs and every other temporality to which peoples must attend if they are to live prosperously, peacefully, and happily. No matter how the investigation proceeds, it finally establishes the truth that spiritual ends must be reached through temporal means. It all adds up to this: that true religion is an implementation of a true social philosophy in the temporal affairs of peoples—which are social affairs. And, as we shall point out in other talks, true religion is an applied social philosophy for the very reason that the personal values it seeks may be promoted only through social means.

JESUS SAID THAT the prayer of the heart should be "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth." And the testimony of religious history is that that means that the Kingdom must come through the doing of God's will in earthly relations, or through the proper conduct of temporal affairs.

Now that is the conviction of the genius of Restoration, which says that "all things which come of the earth . . . are made for the benefit and use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart, and to enliven the soul." That is to say that spiritual ends are to be reached through temporal means.

But that genius goes on to say that "unto this end were (those things given of God) to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion." In other words, as the genius of Restoration says, it is intended that the things of this world should be used "in the manner designed of God." The fruitage of that right conduct of temporalities is that man will be saved in the kingdom of God. It is that peoples shall prosper and that their lives shall be glorious. The fruitage of the right conduct of temporalities is spiritual—a truth which is affirmed by the genius of Restoration over and over again.

That is why the characteristic of Restoration is its social philosophy together with its plan of social action, or its way of implementing its social philosophy. If the essence of Restoration can be stated in one short sentence it is perhaps this: Restoration is a self-governing people—self-governing as respects their own internal economic affairs—using the things of this world in the manner designed of God. It is a way of promoting spiritual values in persons and peoples—in both at once—through the right conduct of secular affairs. The social philosophy of the modern prophet together with its practical plan of social action is a way of reaching spiritual ends through temporal means.

Patterns of Prayer

By Frances Hartman

THROUGH THE AGES no other spiritual activity has brought lasting comfort and peace into human hearts as has prayer. It is the one power recognized by all Christian people as the successful method of contacting supreme Deity, whether demonstrated by the words of skilled theologians or by children's simple utterances. Prayer is one subject to which Latter Day Saints can well afford to devote many hours of concentration as well as consecration.

We are blessed, as a people, with patterns of prayer which lead us into close proximity to our Heavenly Father and a consequent understanding of his divine will when we adhere to the outlines presented. The following of a pattern, or outline, might indeed be considered an art, and it is good to begin one's outline with the basic, or fundamental, principles.

THE FIRST pattern of prayer in Zion's homes should begin with early training of children. A well-rhymed prayer is easier for the busy parent to repeat to his children until their little minds can catch the artful flow of words, but it is important to the children's development that they be encouraged to form their own words into real prayers that arise from their heartfelt needs or joys or thankfulness under careful guidance of parents educated in the Lord's work. Youngsters reared in homes where the family altar is established and maintained have not only the ability, but the desire to "be about their Father's business" when the age of accountability is reached. This pattern is given us in the Doctrine and Covenants, 68: 4:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

In everyday living we must remember to do all things with prayer in our hearts. It is the medium through which we gain power, power to bring about the completion of the task before us—the task of building the effectual kingdom of God upon the earth. As we strive for perfection in all things, we should strive earnestly for humbleness and perfection in prayer. We should bring our best to the Master, following the patterns he has set for us, thus preparing ourselves to receive the great degree of abundance he wishes to bestow upon us.

WE ARE TOLD in the Scriptures to pray even though the Lord knows our needs before we ask. We are also told to share our joys with our Master as well as our sorrows. How better can we form our prayers than the pattern he gave?

Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.
Give us this day, our daily bread.
And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.

FRANCES HARTMAN

And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever, Amen.

—Matthew 6: 10-15, Inspired Version.

We are to understand from this perfect prayer that we are to address our Heavenly Father, recognizing his holy and exalted station. Jesus, however, addressed his Father only once, avoiding what might be called the "vain repetitions" we should constantly guard against. Those to whom comes the responsibility of offering prayer for any service would do well to consider that God gave the name Melchisedec to his holy priesthood so that his own name might be spared frequent use. A short, well-ordered prayer, into which the desires and thanksgivings of our hearts may be poured with simplicity, humbleness, and faith that it will be heard and deemed pleasing to the Most High should be our outline. Neither eloquent words, nor lengthy discourse has made the beauty of the Lord's Prayer live on through centuries, shining as a beacon of hope and light to millions of persons not daring to venture upon the mystic sea of their own faith! And, having given us the basic outline, our Lord instructs us further in the manner of prayer:

HOME COLUMN

This department is conducted for the benefit of homemakers and those interested in women's work by the General Women's Council of the church. Communications may be addressed to the chairman Mrs. Shankland Arnsion, The Department of Women, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. For individual replies, please send postage. Report of work, comments, and articles will be gladly received.

And again, I command thee that thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart; yea, before the world as well as in secret; in public as well as in private. And thou shalt declare glad tidings; yea, publish it upon the mountains, and upon every high place, and among every people that thou shalt be permitted to see. And thou shalt do it with all humility, trusting in me, reviling not against revilers.—Doctrine and Covenants, 18: 4.

How wonderful to be consciously aware of worshipping in a manner acceptable to and designated by our Heavenly Father! To him the prayers of saints shall ascend as with one voice, "Our Father who art in heaven." The mighty God becomes a gracious and loving Father to each of us, through his Son, for Jesus said: "At that day ye shall ask in my name." These are some of the patterns of prayer—how do we, as Saints, pray? What outlines do we follow?

Pray always and I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and great shall be your blessing; yea, even more than if you should obtain treasures of earth and corruptibleness to the extent thereof. Behold, canst thou read this without rejoicing and lifting up thy heart for gladness? or canst thou run about longer as a blind guide? or canst thou be humble and meek and conduct thyself wisely before me? yea, come unto me thy Saviour.—Doctrine and Covenants, 18: 6.

Finds Comfort in Submission

As I enjoy reading the experiences of others, I write this in hopes it may help someone else.

I was left entirely alone when my companion died twelve years ago. I didn't want to live, and I prayed that my life would be taken. I couldn't understand why God had not spared my loved one because I had fasted and prayed for him, and he had received administration in addition to the best medical care available. I was rebellious until one day I went to my Heavenly Father and in submission said, "If my work is not done and you are not ready for me, with your help I will do what you wish me to." When I finished that prayer, I felt like a new person. Since then I have had wonderful experiences and have enjoyed the best of health. As Brother Pitt so often said, "God has been good to me."

The New Year and Resolutions

By Pauline Arnsion

The custom of setting apart the first day of the calendar year for celebration is observed in almost every country; first by religious ceremonies, then by festivities. The Egyptians celebrated New Year the middle of June, for this was the time for the overflowing of the River Nile. Before the time of Christ, the Babylonians observed the new year's start in the spring, for this season brought forth new life to tree and plant, so they showed their joy for the returning life of nature by making festivals. Quarrels were set aside, differences reconciled, and friendships renewed.

In ancient Rome, where the year began in March, the day was sacred to Janus whose two faces were typical of the attitude of the people for the day which gave cause for reflection on the past and time for thought of the future.

In England, it was the custom to open all the doors of the homes at midnight so that the spirit of the old year might go out, bundling up all the bad habits and mistakes and taking these with him, that the spirit of the New Year might get in and bring a nice new resolution and promise that the coming year would be the best yet.

It was not until the sixteenth century when the Georgian calendar was adopted that January first became recognized as the New Year Day.

It would seem that the origin of the New Year's resolution must come from the customs of the ancient people who welcomed an opportunity to begin again. Our more modern poet, Tennyson, expressed similar thoughts in his poem, "Ring out the old, ring in the new, ring out the false; ring in the true."

There are various opinions held on the making of resolutions in the New Year, for it is said that they are only made to be broken; but in my opinion it is better to have a determination to try to do some things better in the future and fail, than never to try at all. Discouragement does come from repeated failures, but it is the courageous one who has the willingness and fortitude to start again. It is the human quality in man that causes him to fail, but the divine spark in him that prompts him to try again.

Even our Master gives his children an opportunity for a fresh start when he provides the Communion service, and those who are truly repentant are forgiven. God gives his children many opportunities; he gives the new day, the new month, the new year, bringing hope and courage and light.

When a serious resolution is made, it involves an obligation, and if this is kept in mind, success will be more certain. Determine to do at least one additional good thing in the coming year, and note the satisfaction and growth when this purpose is realized.

There are many major resolutions that the women of the church can determine to accomplish in the coming year, and their opportunity for service to the church and the privilege that is theirs to serve should be viewed seriously. First it is well to re-evaluate the Restoration message which is the gospel of Christ, and see how it affects the lives of the family, how it gives meaning and purpose to life. This can only be effective if women know what the church teaches, hence familiarity with the books of the church is vital.

Second, this message of life should be more diligently taught to the children, and they should be helped to understand that even though young they have a responsibility in their contact with other children, to show what kind of people the gospel of Christ can produce.

Third, every effort should be made to preserve the sacredness of the home, that love and mutual helpfulness can abound. A home with love is a little bit of heaven on earth, and in this type of abode, the best kind of loyal followers of Christ can be reared.

These are only a few of the resolutions that can be suggested, but there is an urgency in this period of time at the beginning of 1947. We cannot continue to give just a little thought and effort to our part in the work of the church. The opportunities are many and the responsibilities are great, but the rewards of service and consecration are greater. Let us pray that the women of the church can make and keep good resolutions this year.

"Who Art in Heaven"

In our attempt to understand the value of prayer, we look into the life of Jesus, who lived a life of prayer. We see how the power of prayer worked for him and are desirous to study his habit of prayer that we, too, might tap this source of power.

The study of the place of prayer in the life of Jesus reveals some interesting facts. He never sought to prove the reality and efficacy of prayer by cold logic. He never argued at length on the subject. He did something infinitely more helpful and impressive. He practiced prayer. He demonstrated its value by making constant use of it. He prayed without ceasing. He began his ministry with prayer. Prayer marks the entire course of his ministry. His whole life was lived in constant communion with God. When he was at the end of the way, his very last breath was a prayer, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." Yes, Jesus lived a life of prayer.

It was through his own life of prayer that Jesus brought his disciples to the realization of their past failures in prayer. As they saw Jesus at prayer, they learned how pitifully inadequate their own prayers had been. As they watched him pray, they not only became aware of their own past failures, but they became aware of their possibilities. They said to themselves, "That is the way we ought to pray." So they came to Jesus saying, "Lord, teach us to pray."

Jesus always addressed God as "Father." Therefore, when he started this prayer, he addressed God, "Our Father who art in heaven." All of us know the meaning of the word father. We know what qualities go together to make a good father. So in our attempt to know God, in our attempt to describe God, we think of God as a father. When we think of fatherhood at its best, we have a concept of God (though perhaps poor). Even with this concept, we find it difficult to describe God.

By Joseph E. Baldwin

One writer said that the words "Who art in heaven" describe God. They do not indicate a place, nor do they tell us where God lives, but they do tell us something about God. Heaven is a place of perfection. Jesus is telling us that God is perfect. He is not only our Father but he is a perfect Father. He is perfect in his knowledge of us and perfect in his dealings with us.

David said this about God, "Thine, O Lord, is the Greatness, and the Power, and the Victory, and the Majesty." He sensed some of the aweing characteristics of God. From our study of Christ and the prophets of old, we learn that God is powerful, we learn that God is majestic, we learn that God is victorious, we learn that God is kind, and that God is a loving God. Nature pictures God to us through his many creations. The mountain peaks towering high into the clouds proclaim the greatness of God. The wind, the rain, and the sea, whether boistrous or calm, combine to proclaim the power of God. The stately pine tree and the beautiful rose proclaim the majesty of God. All of nature, individually and collectively, reveal God to man.

During a heavy wind and rain-storm last summer, the corn was all beaten to the ground. After the rains stopped, the sun came out and drew the corn up straight again. This was God at work through nature.

This God of power, majesty, greatness, and love has been pictured to us by Jesus as "Our Father who art in heaven." He also pointed out that we can have heaven here. Therefore, we can have God here with us, too. When we have God in our lives, we have heaven. When we learn the principles of life by which Christ lived, we have learned the principles of the perfect life; and as we become perfect, we are in heaven.

When we learn to love God, we learn to love our fellow man. When we learn to love our fellow man, we have learned to love God and qualify as sons of God. When we have learned to become sons of God, we find the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God becoming a reality, and we have the complete triangle: God—Man—Brother.

Christ gave himself completely to the purpose of God and to the salvation of man. This is what he was trying to get his disciples to do. He tried to show them they could not do this without living a life of prayer. We, today, if we will become the sons of God, must learn to tap this power found only in prayer.

Utilizing Religious Visual Material in Religious Instruction

By John R. Darling

Visual aids in religious instruction today bid for utilization, and there is widespread support for the belief that the time has arrived for the church to go beyond a passive interest in visual methods of teaching—to recognize their value and to take careful but no less determined steps in their adoption and integration into the fields of religion.

By and large, visual aids in religious instruction reflect the same general definitions, include the same inherent values, and embrace the same potential dangers as exist in the field of secular education. As a "plus" element, they hold a unique and strategic position of recognized worth—that of presenting graphically those religious concepts and practices considered essential to developing a satisfactory philosophy of life.

Visual aids should be in the program of the church school for the same reason that their use is being encouraged in the public school, namely for the help they can give to the church school in furthering its goals and plans of procedure.

Perhaps at this point we might pause to consider the meaning of the term "visual aids." A commonly accepted definition implies that they are any means employed by which learning is accomplished through the medium of the sense of sight. It is generally agreed that they include the following: objects, specimens, models, flat pictures, slides, materials for opaque projection, maps, globes, graphs, charts, blackboard and bulletin board illustrations, silent and sound motion pictures. A visit to the museum, art gallery, or other type of excursion or field trip may also be considered as a type of visual aid.

We might ask ourselves the question: "When is visual material religious? No doubt we can agree that it will be material that helps people find God in all areas of human experience; material which stimulates a greater concern for the security, right of self-expression, and the adjustment and social integration of both individuals and groups; and material that encourages a positive responsiveness to the best that is known.

Their purposes as educational helps are to: stimulate pupil interest, increase understandings, develop good attitudes, introduce new or review materials, enrich appreciation, and encourage the learner to continue study in related areas.

A concrete visual experience is the result of blending the means and the purposes.

The general objective underlying the use of "visual aids" is to form the habit of learning in the pupil through a coordination of as many senses and associations as possible. The desired result is not a mere array of facts, but enriched experience, improved understanding, and better habits of attention. It should be remembered, however, that any devices used as visual aids are not separate methods in teaching. Rather, they are techniques that should be geared into the total work of the church.

Visual aids have won for themselves a definite place in religious education. This has come about through scientific research which has proved that their use does produce greater understanding. Subjective evaluation substantiates their worth as contribution factors in developing greater appreciations; and further observation notes the encouragement they give to the mastery of skills.

In order to use visual aids in religious instruction most profitably, it is important that we:

1. Discover what is available.
2. Determine the right pictures, materials, and desirable experiences.
3. Consider the appropriate time for presentation.
4. Investigate and adopt the best in techniques of instruction so that the use of visual aids will be a natural part of the procedure.
5. Be inquisitive in discovering, previewing, and trying out new visual materials, new devices developed for presentation, new procedures, and new techniques of measurement.

EARMARKS OF GOOD USAGE

Utilizing religious visual material in religious instruction requires not only knowledge and skill but clear purposes and careful planning. Do not rush into a program of visual education. Unless the aids are used to accomplish specific objectives, there is grave danger that they will become a boring experience or mere "show." It must be remembered that they are not an end in themselves, neither are they a substitute for the regular curriculum—they are a part of it. They do not take the place of the pastor or teacher; their purpose is to assist, not to replace.

Remember that it is important to investigate visual aids that are available, and to be familiar with sources from which new helps may be forthcoming. A general background of information is of material help in planning a study program and deciding upon specific aids which, by the way, should always be previewed before presentation.

AREAS FOR RELIGIOUS EXPRESSION

The major areas for religious endeavor are found in: worship, study, fellowship, recreation, service activities, and personal dedication to the Christian way of life. Thumbnail sketches of how visual materials, filmstrip slide and motion pictures have been used impressively and with at least some degree of success, are presented here for your consideration:

WORSHIP. 2 x 2 slide set—"All Thy Works Shall Praise Thy Name"

It was beautiful on Lake Doniphan, in Missouri, for the final day of the church retreat. All nature seemed to respond and reflect the glory of God as a group of children assembled in their log-cabin chapel for their closing service. This happy, enthusiastic group seemed to have caught the spirit of the day in the wholesome fellowship, recreation, and study.

For this final service, plans had been made to use the slide set "All Thy Works Shall Praise Thy Name" during the worship period. This set of slides emphasizes the beauty of nature—the majesty of God's creation. The singing of the hymn, "O Beautiful for Spacious Skies," created an appropriate background for the pictures, and as they were shown and the script read, a deep feeling of love and appreciation was experienced. Perhaps in the use of these slides at this time was illustrated a timeliness, for the entire setting was conducive to worshiping God in nature.

In a few places, it was necessary to adapt the script to the younger children's level of understanding.

2 x 2 slide set—"The Easter Story"

It was Sunday morning, and the children of the junior church department, which is held in the lower auditorium of the church, were anticipating the annual Easter program. There had been a build-up during the week for the celebration of Easter. The church school had devoted its attention to the Easter story and now during the Sunday church service two problems faced the leaders of this department: First, the subject had already been more or less exhausted during the church school period, so far as the interest span of the children was concerned; and second, any remarks that would be made might mean only an anti-climax which would defeat the spirit of the occasion. To counteract these problems, the leaders planned to use the set of Easter slides.

The desired worshipful atmosphere was created by the singing of Easter hymns, selections were read from John 17, and then the lights were lowered for the presentation of the pictures. God seemed very near that morning, and the attention of the group was excellent. In fact, as the lights came on following this major part of the service, we noticed tears in the eyes of one little boy whose hand went up, and his comment was "Jesus wants us to love him, doesn't he? He wants us to do things for him."

STUDY. Filmstrip—"Dollars and Sense"

The young people had been making a study of the topic "Does It Make any Difference if I Smoke or Drink?" The approach had been as scientific and free of emotion as possible, and the evening had arrived to consider the findings of the group. Preceding this evaluation, the leaders planned to stress personal stewardship and use of possessions for the furthering of ideals and worth-while living. The filmstrip prepared by the Women's Christian Temperance Union under the title "Dollars and Sense" seemed to be appropriate, and to fill this need. It was shown to this group of eighteen-year-olders and presented frankly, pausing from time to time to discuss points, and to receive the reactions of the group. A sane approach to alcohol education was evidenced in this meeting.

Sound film—"Using the Classroom Film"

Recently, at a Church School Workers' Conference a question of the use of visual aids, particularly motion picture films in church school work was under discussion. The Encyclopaedia Britannica film, "Using the Classroom Film," was used as an introduction to the problem. The group recognized the excellence of the film in showing how study films can be presented, developed, and evaluated. In this case the leaders definitely pointed out why they should be used. This public school film is easily adapted to training church school workers in use of films for the same methods and techniques are applicable.

FELLOWSHIP. Sound film—"Campus on the March"

It was fall and almost time for a large number from the Young People's Group to leave for college. Many would be leaving home for the first time, most of them going to the state university. In planning for their monthly fellowship meeting, the last to be held while the entire group could meet together, the question arose as to what could be done and said at this final service to express encouragement, appreciation, and concern that all would be well for them in their future endeavors without giving the situation a tone of moralizing. It was decided that the thoughts should be centered on the film "Campus on the March." This proved to be a very profitable evening.

2 x 2 slide set—"Adapting the Small Church for Christian Teaching"

The excellent set of slides entitled "Adapting the Small Church for Christian Teaching," was used in a Church School Leaders' Conference to call attention to certain needs and possible lines of improvement. The usual method of procedure would have been to limit the use of this set of slides to an introduction, screening, and discussion as a training project. However, our purpose was not only to follow the customary line of procedure but to add a "plus" element through an experiment in fellowship. Several of the scenes were used as a basis for creative dramatization, a re-enacting of what had been seen and heard. The group not only re-emphasized in their thinking the points which had been called to their attention by the set of slides, but equally important perhaps was the fact that they also became better acquainted as a result of sharing this experience of common interest. Such use of visual aids for developing wholesome fun or serious thinking has unlimited possibilities.

RECREATION. Sound film—"Ski Flight"

The young people's group had planned a skiing party at the Snow Bowl in Wisconsin Bluffs. This fine group of young people worked as a team in their support of the church. They enjoyed their association together. They truly "clicked" as a unit—but the skiing party, well! The majority wanted it if all would participate. The minority, those who had never skied, didn't desire to be "heels," but!

A solution to the dilemma was found. It was simple, but it worked. Even the solution itself was wholesome recreation; but that which it encouraged was even better. The film "Ski Flight" was rented from the University of Wisconsin. It was introduced as a recreational possibility, screened, discussed, and its teachings adapted. Those who could ski helped those who couldn't to perfect the theory of the film practice at the bowl. The result—a complete new area of recreational activity for the entire group.

Silent film—"How Stained Glass Windows Are Made"

An adult class of the church school had been given the responsibility of preparing a simple window decoration for the auditorium. This class, under contagious leadership, decided to get together and use this opportunity to become better acquainted. They agreed to do something a little different and, among other things, to construct a Gothic window from oiled paper. They realized that they would appreciate the project more if they had a greater understanding of church arts. A short study of the subject was followed by the screening of the silent film "How Stained Glass Windows Are Made." This is a process picture photographed in the studio of a prominent English maker of stained glass, and shows all the steps, from tracing the design through cutting, painting, and leading the glass. It closes with natural-color pictures of stained glass windows in old European churches and cathedrals. Needless to say, a lasting appreciation was developed, a more satisfactory piece of work was the result, and more fun in the doing came from a greater understanding of the "know how."

SERVICE. 2 x 2 slide set—"The Good Samaritan"

It was a cold December night that the John Doe family lost their house and possessions in a fire. The family was poor to begin with, perhaps not too energetic, perhaps not too careful. The officials of the church school which the family attended solicited help from the "good" members of the church, but the response was poor.

Perhaps it was just a coincidence that the story of the Good Samaritan was due for consideration. As a culminating activity for the classwork the following Sunday, the church school assembled in the Sanctuary to see the Church-Craft pictures under the title "The Good Samaritan." The script was preceded by remarks focusing attention on the words "and he was a Samaritan." The script was followed by attention being again called to the plight of the brother in the church and his family who had lost their possessions by fire. It was a learning experience for the church members. Help was rendered.

Silent film—"Reforestation of Waste Lands."

Scout Troop 18, of the church, was to help with the state conservation project of planting trees. Now, many of the fellows in Troop 18 were armchair woodmen. Maybe they feared that additional discomfort would be added to their growing pains. Anyway, the good pastor who, by the way, was chairman of the scout committee, was concerned. There was a general agreement, following an analysis of the problem, that there had been failure in preparing for this project by proper build-up. Something must be done, and done quickly.

An affirmative approach was made at the next Scout meeting. Approaching the boys in an attitude of taking for granted that they were interested and anxious to do a good job in the tree-planting project of the following Saturday, the troop was introduced to the film "Reforestation of Waste Lands." In the brief review that followed the picture, the beauty of the film, the privilege of helping to preserve something priceless, and the challenge of how Troop 18 could help the community in this service project were emphasized. The boys responded. The living memorials stand today as a testimony, in this instance, of what visual aids can do.

DEDICATION. Sound films "Camping Education," "Youth in Camps"

The Seminar in Camping had concerned itself with intensive consideration of the subject: The Improvement and Expansion of Our Church Program in Camping, and among other features of the program was the screening of the March of Time films on "Life Camps."

Frequently commitment to a cause is encouraged as a direct result of perceiving that something is missing from or minimized in what otherwise would be a most vital and worth-while experience. This is especially true when we feel that we have at our disposal necessary ingredients for enrichment and worth-while experience. This happened to us as we viewed these excellent films.

Yes, we saw camping defined; our appreciation grew for the people who have promoted so enthusiastically this means for wholesome recreation and fellowship; and we sensed the importance of skill in its relationship to accomplishment. Furthermore, that which moved us deeply was not so much what we saw, but the desire which was aroused to see in all camping that "plus" element which our church can and does put into our own program, i. e., vital worship experiences, growth in a greater understanding and appreciation of the gospel through the practice of theory, and frequent dedication to lives of service to God and our fellow men.

What a fine attendance at the little

Ancient America and the Islands of the Sea

By Harold I. Velt

Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1.

Nearly 600 B. C. the Prophet Nephi made a significant statement from ancient America as follows:

But great are the promises of the Lord to those who are upon the isles of the sea; Wherefore, as it says isles, there must needs be more than this; and they are inhabited also by our brethren. For, behold, the Lord God has led away from time to time from the house of Israel, according to his will and pleasure.—2 Nephi 7: 36-38.

It is of more than passing interest that when the resurrected Jesus visited the American continent in the thirty-fourth year A. D., he told his people there (descendants of Joseph through Manasseh) that they were of the other sheep of whom he spoke while in Palestine. Pursuing the subject he continued:

And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land [America]; neither of the church that Sunday evening one week before Christmas! The Zion's League had made careful preparation, and program arrangements were complete. In quiet anticipation the audience awaited the opening remarks and the showing of the pictures "Christmas Blessings," interspersed with special music.

In reverent dignity the service began and continued without interruption through to the benediction. The pictures were well received by the audience, and remarks indicated that several commitments were made that night to Christ and his gospel. The set of slides "Christmas Blessings" undoubtedly contribute to (1) crystalizing a more significant appreciation for the life of Jesus the Christ; and (2), emphasizing the fundamental importance of responsiveness to the best we know.

Truly, these simple illustrations help to confirm our belief that visual aids do justify their place of growing importance in the work of the church. Confidence in theory results from fruitful practice, and the unlimited possibilities and values which we see for tomorrow await our utilizing religious visual material in religious instruction today.

land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister. . . . but I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice.—3 Nephi 7: 24, 26.

RECORDS YET TO BE REVEALED

The Book of Mormon informs us that not only were there to be records kept of the ministry of Jesus among the Jews (the Bible) and among the Nephite and Lamanite descendants of Joseph in America (the Book of Mormon), but other tribes of Israel who had been led away would write of his ministry among them also; including some on the islands of the sea. Note the words of the Lord:

I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea . . . For I command all men both in the east, and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them.—2 Nephi 12: 56, 65-72.

AMERICA AND POLYNESIA—INTERESTING PARALLELS

In an article entitled "The Origin of the Hawaiians," the Herald, April 6, 1940, we referred to the striking language similarities between the Polynesian Islands and the American tribes. Research since that time has accumulated considerable confirmatory evidence. (See The Romance of Archaeology, page 205; Ancient Americans, page 66; The Kingdom of Hawaii, page 26; Origin and Migration of the Polynesian Nation, pages 162, 176, 234, etc.) Doctor Peter Buck, anthropologist of the Bishop Museum of Hawaii, draws attention in his lectures and writing to a remarkable fact. In Peru the sweet potato is called kumar, while in Cook Island and New Zealand, it is kumara. He says it is known from traditional narrative that the sweet potato had been carried to both Hawaii and New Zealand before Columbus discovered America. Seeing that America was the original home of the sweet potato, and that it was unknown to Europe and Asia before the discovery of America by Columbus, we here have a positive connecting link between Polynesia and Ancient America.

RELIGION AND CUSTOMS

In the Herald article before mentioned, we spoke of the evidences of Hebrew religions and customs in Hawaii. In addition to the cities of refuge, circumcision, sackcloth and ashes, temples and priesthood mentioned at that time, we might add their counting by lunar months, their regard for the seventh day, and in New Zealand especially, their keeping one year in seven as a sacred year; and their year of Jubilee at the end of 7 x 7 or 49 years when there was no sowing or even gathering of the products of the earth. Hohepa Te Rake tells us that this Jubilee year was ushered in by the blowing of the sacred horn (Pu-tatara, literally the horn of the he-goat). Captives were all liberated and land was restored in accordance with ancestral possession (Maori Symbolism, pages 79, 80).

CREATION AND FLOOD

Just as the stories of the creation and of the deluge were well known among the Indian tribes of America, so in the Polynesian Islands. Fornander says:

The Polynesian legend of the creation of man shows too remarkable an accord with the Hebrew account to be lightly passed over. The former says that "Kane," "Ku," and "Lono" formed man out of the red earth, and breathed into his nose and he became a living being. . . . In many of the Polynesian groups there still exist legends of a flood in which the majority of mankind perished, while only a few escaped. . . . All agree that the highest places were covered and the remnant of the human race saved in some kind of vessel which was at last left by the subsiding waters on Mbenga. . . . The number saved—eight exactly, accords with the "few" of the scripture record.—The Polynesian Race, Vol. 1, pages 71, 82, 86-89.

Albert P. Taylor tells us that by a strange coincidence the name of the Hawaiian Noah was Nu-u. That the latter, according to tradition built a large vessel, and a house placed upon it called "He Waa-Halau-Alii-o-ka-Moku," and that when the floods subsided the gods Kane, Ku, and Lono entered the "Waa Halau" of Nu-u and directed him to leave (Under Hawaiian Skies).

A TRINITY OF GODS

The reader will have noticed by the above that the Hawaiians and other Polynesians believed in a trinity of Gods—Kane, Ku, and Lono. This fact, together with the tradition that the Fair God Lono was expected to return to Hawaii, attracted my deepest attention, and especially as he was evidently remembered as in the form of a man, as was the case among the ancient Americans, for when Captain Cook landed in Kauai in 1778, they supposed that it was the promised return of Lono, their God. Concerning Ku, I have always associated that personage with the Holy Ghost, because of the similarity of the Indian name for the Holy Ghost, "Echuah." We would not have the reader understand that there were but three Gods in all Polynesian legend, for such is far from the truth. It appears that "Kanaloa" was "the evil one," the "prince of darkness," and he and many others were addressed by many appellations (not so much in Hawaii as other island groups); but among them all it is to be noticed, as S. C. Handy tells us, "The Polynesians had the conception of a supreme being, who was chief over all the others."—Ancient Hawaiian Civilization, page 41. The "Kane," "Ku," and "Lono" of the Hawaiians were elsewhere in Polynesia usually called "Tane," "Tu," and "Rono," "Rogo," or "Rongo"; and strangely enough Rongo and Tane are at times found to be associated together in one word, representing the idea of a combination of two Gods in one; thus: "Rongo-ma-Tane" or "Rogomata-ane" and usually translated "Rongo and Tane." It is to be noted that some objection was made to this translation by one writer (see Journal of the Polynesian Society Vol. 17, page 108); but I have found support for the learned Maori's translation objected to in Tuamotuan Religion by Frank Simpson, page 78, and footnote, page 123.

"Rongo" is said to be looked upon as the origin, personification, or tutelary deity of peace. The word Rongo (Lono in Hawaiian) is said to denote peace (Journal of the Polynesian Society, Vol. 12, page 108.)

MAYA AND MAORI SYMBOLS AND WORDS FOR DEITIES

Hohepa Te Rake, an Arawa Maori chief from Rotorua, N. Z., in his book Maori Symbolism makes the following interesting observations:

Copies of blocks given in the British Museum Guide to the Maudsley Collection of Maya sculptures are reproduced on page 146. These Maya carvings can easily be interpreted by any qualified Maori carver or any Maori noble having a special knowledge of Maori carving. . . . the meaning is as follows:

GOD ALMIGHTY: The carving is a representation of God Almighty. It is the figure of a Bird-Man. The Bird is divine and the Man supreme. Strength, valor and humanity are indicated. He is all-powerful, reigning over all the land. He is all-seeing and all-hearing. He is all-wise.

2. The meaning is GOD THE GREAT SPIRIT:

This carving represents a Bird, a Man-Spirit, and a Serpent. The Bird is divine and supreme; the Man-Spirit is dependent upon the Bird; the Serpent denotes Earthly Wisdom. Thus Divinity, Faith and Wisdom are in combination. . . . —Maori Symbolism, page 149.

The same writer continues:

When the Maori words for deities are compared with the Maya words, the identity becomes still more striking, e. g.,

Challenge of a New Year

I feel I am privileged to be associated with people who belong to this church of God, which possesses all the gifts and blessings that the original church did. I have a great desire to do as our Lord has commanded. I often wonder if our sins of omission will not outweigh the actual sins we commit. I believe that every crisis can be met by a godly home; if each member of the family is devoted to his religion and obedient to the laws of God, every problem can be successfully solved. I trust that the new year will find everyone rejoicing that he still has time to improve his way of life.

Letter From Holland

As we do not see our way to write letters to all the Saints who have been so kind as to send clothing to Holland, we think it right to seize this means through the Saints' Herald to extend our heartiest thanks to all our brethren over there. We assure you that the Dutch Saints highly appreciated this gesture and that everything you sent was very welcome. Again we have found out that, though scattered all over the world, we Latter Day Saints form a great family and each member of this family is interested in the needs of the other.

Five years of war have almost ruined our country and reduced us to one of the poorest nations of the world. However, the spirit of our people is unbroken and Holland is working to make good the damages. Our bridges (of which seventy per cent were destroyed by the Germans) have already been reconstructed for the greater part. There is still a shortage of raw materials, houses, clothing, and food, but we are courageously moving on. Yes, Holland hopes to reassume its former place among the nations. It relies on the help of its allied friends to do this, for it depends on them for materials.

Our church, too, had to suffer from the war. Due to the blackout, air raids, and curfews, it was nearly impossible to hold meetings on working days. We were cut off from headquarters of our church and lacked the instruction we needed so greatly. The difficulties we had to overcome were manifold. But now the war is over, we are striving to retake our pre-war growth. In March, three English elders visited our branches and we were strengthened much by their ministry. During their stay at Rotterdam, we began an organ fund; already we have been able to buy a good organ which will make our meetings more successful. At Zwaagwesteinde, our branch in the northern part of Holland, the Saints are intending to erect a church building of their own; the ground has already been bought. We shall do our utmost to spread the true gospel in this part of the world. However, just as Holland needs the help of its friends for the reconstruction of the country, we are in need of your help. We need your ministry, your good suggestions, and your prayers. We are sure you will be glad to help us this way.

Once more we thank you very much for your kind gifts. May the Lord bless you for your goodness.

For the Dutch Saints,

A. J. MOSTERDIJK, Pastor.

A Letter From North Dakota

I am writing to express my gratitude to two of our ministers who recently visited the Saints in Minot and Bantry. Apostles Charles R. Hield came in October to minister to these small congregations, and Missionary J. H. Yager conducted services from November 12 to 17. While at Bantry, Brother Yager baptized the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Tiffany, and officiated at the blessing of the baby of Mr. and Mrs. George Crawford. We are looking forward to the return of these two men.

I am an elder in the Bantry congregation and have organized the church school for 1947. I will meet with the Saints in Minot on January 5 if the roads permit.

Would Appreciate Correspondence

I wish to express my gratitude to all who make the Herald possible. It has been a real blessing to me, keeping me in touch with the church and its work even though I am isolated. I especially enjoy the articles containing material which is helpful in explaining the gospel to others.

I have been a member of the Reorganized Church since I was eight years old, and have received many blessings. My heart goes out to those around me who are groping blindly through life, without Christ and without hope. God has been very good to me. As a boy I was permitted to witness a divine healing which has always served as a reminder to me that God does hear and answer prayer. I have been warned of approaching danger, and once I was inspired to pray for one who was very ill. It is wonderful to know that God speaks to his people, but even more wonderful to know that he can and does help us when we are in danger or dire need. I have enjoyed good health most of my life, but a year ago I was confined to my bed for six months with rheumatic fever. Now I have completely recovered, and I am truly grateful to my Heavenly Father for this most recent blessing.

Since coming to Meadow Lake I have had a strong desire to see the Restored Gospel introduced here. There are many good citizens in the city, and numerous young people who, I believe, would welcome the message of the church. Pray for me that I may always be a good influence wherever I live. I would be glad to exchange letters with any young Latter Day Saints who care to write.

From a Willing Worker

Again we are entering a new year, and I am hoping for much progress in the church. My daughter had a notice in the Herald some time ago asking for old issues which she could give to non-members. She received hundreds of them, and we are distributing them to friends, relatives, hospitals, libraries, jails and depots. A hospital here has sent a card of thanks; the Heralds will be used in the reading room. One lady in Minnesota wrote that she had read the papers and handed them on to her neighbors.

In unity is strength. We are not waiting on the Lord; he is waiting on us. What we need in this church is willing workers, not people who are looking for entertainment. May we all abide in the faith and heed the commandments.

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all my church friends who sent cards and letters at Christmas. It is wonderful to share in this friendship which exists in the church. I enjoy reading the testimonies of the Saints in the Herald; certainly they are worth telling to the world. I hope many will write their experiences during the coming year so that we who read them may be strengthened.

Challenges -

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

Mildred Seydell, author of Chins Up, autographed one copy with these words, "Don't be blue, leave that to the sky." I have often wondered why a person whose spirits were low would say that he is blue. My favorite color is blue, and God must have loved that color, for he painted his wide sky with this soft hue. This same sky extends above all firmament, and no person is denied the sharing of this gift. Blue is the color of loyalty—you know of the slogan "true blue." Blue is the color of love, the shade of remembrance. Bluebirds sing a song of happiness. Rememehr this the next time you say you are blue.

I recently revisited Stone Mountain, located near Atlanta, Georgia. Five years ago I first viewed this spot and marveled at the partially-completed carvings of the Confederate generals. I wondered at the magnitude of the undertaking and the colossal size of the actual carved figures, hewed from solid granite. I thrilled at the story of the breakfast party held on the shoulder of General Lee, when from the point where I saw it, that same shoulder seemed only inches wide. Surely this would be a truly wondrous monument to the past of a great South.

So this summer I revisited the spot. No longer do the workmen clamber along the sides; the steps have fallen in, and weather (wind and rain) has dulled the sharp outlines of what had been completed. Instead of finding a complete and glorious monument, I found only a forlorn and crumbling mountain-side. The original creator now is dead, and his successors threw over the job in a huff over wages and publicity. There is no one to finish the task, and Stone Mountain remains only a giant piece of granite,

I was sad as I looked at this mountainside, and still more sad as I remembered other mammoth tasks begun but not completed. An empty marble building at Geneva marks a now forgotten attempt at peace. Man too often begins something, then it lies unused or incompletd through disinterest or neglect. Stone Mountain stands now as a monument, not to the heroes of the South, but to humanity's inclination to leave unfinished the tasks it has started.

One of the necessities of all travelers is the periodic stop at a filling station. One of my pet peeves is having to go to the proprietor to ask for the key to the rest room. I have made several trips along National Route 40, and always make it a point to stop at a little filling station in a small town in Indiana. Whether one buys gasoline or not, the owner smiles and has a cheery greeting. The rest room is scrupulously clean, and on a small stand is a glass which contains sweet pease or roses. A small hand-printed sign says, "Ladies, take a flower." The supply of blossoms must be as enduring as his smile, for every time I have been there the bouquet is fresh and inviting. That little man not only sells gasoline, but dispenses good cheer.

"Little minds are too much wounded by little things. Great minds see all and are not even hurt."
—La Rochefoucauld.

I was riding in a bus on my way to Mexico City, and had already spent two days and one night in this cramped position with little time to stretch my aching muscles. In Oklahoma, a young soldier boarded the bus and sat directly across the aisle from me, next to a nice looking young lady. Soon he was in conversation with her, punctuating each sentence with a click on his cigarette lighter. Click, click . . . in uneven intervals, and my nerves soon began to jump at every click. Normally, I probably would not have heard that little sound, but now I was travel-weary and on edge. Click, click . . . and I thought I'd scream with just one more click.

And then I remembered the saying, "You're only as big as the thing that gets you down." Certainly I had more control of myself than a cigarette lighter. Surely there was more to hear in the world than a mere click-click. Assuredly this irritating sound would sooner or later stop. So I decided to use that click-click and make it mind. I began to think of all the things which could make small noises, the winding of a watch, a key in a lock, and the closing of a drawer. Soon I was so interested in my mental list of noisemakers that I no longer heard the click-click of his nervous fingers on the lighter. And a minor crisis of my own nervous system was averted. A tiny noise could thus have ruined an otherwise pleasant trip.

Often our mental attitudes are disturbed by little remarks. Several months ago I was quite lucky to find an excellent 35 mm camera for sale in a pawnshop. That same shop also sells photographic equipment of all kinds and has a large supply of film available at prices lower than those of other shops. I have been able to save several dollars by purchasing my film in this store. I have told some of my friends about it, and they too have made savings in this way. The other evening a good friend of mine offered to let me ride to town with her. There were others in the car also, and among them a girl who (by choice) has few friends. I remarked to the driver, "You can just let me out at the pawnshop." Then the other rider, with no intent to joke said, "Well, I'm not going to a pawnshop. I haven't sunk that low."

That remark did not bother me, for I considered the source. Actually it amused me, but I heard a gasp from the other occupants of the car. The next day they all hastened to tell me that I must not be hurt.

But since then, that remark has bothered me—not what was said, but the attitude of the girl that said it. For some reason she had made a remark with obvious malice. Something was wrong with her mental attitude right then. Luckily the remark did not wound, as obviously intended, but its very utterance did harm to the speaker and lowered her standard in the minds of the hearers.

Last March 6 one of the world's great philosophers, Antonio Caso, died at his home in Mexico City. One of the newspapers said: "As a man, Dr. Caso distinguished himself for a particular feature: he had no enemies. And this was no accident, but due to his earnest determination not to have any. Therefore, he had to be an extraordinary man."

That is indeed a wonderful thing to be said, a fitting epitaph for a truly great man. This reminds me of a headstone in a cemetery in Independence. On the headstone of Emma Burton is carved, "She Lived Her Religion." No finer tribute could be paid.

"In Maori" he explains, "there is no 'L'; this letter changes to 'R.'" No two consonants come together—a vowel always comes between two consonants, and at the end of every word. We-tiara-Ko-Atara (the Man-Bird or Bird-Man) is the form in which God Almighty is always represented by the Maori. In Maya, Kukul means "The Divine Bird." Maori Kaka-ra is also "The Divine Bird" (kaka or kuku, Bird; ra God). Kan in Maya is said to be "Snake," kana in Maori is snake.—Ibid. page 151.

Such observations are of startling interest to students of ancient America who have learned to associate the virgin-born, fair God Quetzalcoatl (or Kukulcan) with the resurrected Christ who indicated he had "other sheep" in the islands of the sea, who also were of Israel. I believe that the Rev. J. D. Lang of Sydney, Australia, was not merely guessing when he wrote,

The Indo-Americans and Polynesians are one and the same people, sprung from the same primitive stock, and connected with each other by the mutual ties of parentage and descent.—Origin and Migrations of the Polynesian Nation, page 139.

It would appear indeed that many of the Polynesian peoples are of Israelitish origin—that their Lono or Rongo or We-tiara-Ko-Atara was Jesus the Christ, the Creator of the world whom they once knew. Of any written records that may at any time have been kept by them or other lost tribes except in America, we have no knowledge; but should we not look forward with great anticipation to the time when

The Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews. And it shall come to pass that my people which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one.—2 Nephi 12: 72, 73.

Has Old Publication to Give Away

It has been some time since I wrote for the Herald, and I should like to begin the new year by adding my testimony to the truthfulness of this gospel. When I was just a child, my mother became very ill. While we stood at her bedside, expecting any minute to be the last, I was inspired to pray. I went to my room and asked God to spare my mother's life. My prayer was answered and mother lived many years afterwards. I have had numerous prayers answered, and am truly grateful to God for these blessings.

If there are any who want old Heralds, Stepping Stones, Zion's Hopes, or quarterlies, I shall be glad to share my collection with them. There is so much spiritual food in them I think they should be given a chance to serve double-duty. I also have scrapbooks of greeting cards which I shall be glad to send to children who would like them—especially those children who are ill or shut-in.

Enfield, England

The bazaar held October 12 attracted a large crowd of visitors and friends as well as church members. Bishop A. T. Trapp of Gloucester opened the function, and a play, "The Voice of Kirtland," by Sister A. A. Oakman, was presented under the direction of William Judd. Sales and donations totaled seventy-five pounds; this money will be used to defray the cost of a new floor for one of the classrooms. An attractive display of produce was arranged at the church on October 20 in celebration of the Harvest Thanksgiving.

Teacher Jan de Mik of Rotterdam, Holland, visited Enfield and addressed the Saints on September 8; his faith during the days of German occupation provided an inspiring example to those who heard the address. Brother Mik delighted all with his mandolin solos in the afternoon.

Elder Percival Judd of Australia, in England on business, was the speaker on Sunday, November 10; he based his sermon on the text, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Masters Geoffrey and Brian Judd, who were baptized in July, were confirmed at the November Communion service by Elders F. W. Judd and R. Schofield.

The ninth anniversary of the organization of the Zion's League at Enfield was celebrated in November, and the major objectives of the League were emphasized in the programs. On Sunday, December 8, the League arranged an anniversary service, at which the hymn composed by Sister Merle North (now attending Graceland College) was sung for the first time.

On Saturday evening, November 30, a musical concert was presented under the direction of Dover A. Judd. The women's department gave an evening program on December 12. Pastor D. A. Oakman addressed the women on the subject of "Zion." Refreshments were served following the presentation of two plays.

Forum subjects and speakers during the past four months have been as follows: September, "Reverence," Albert Worth; October, "Teaching," D. A. Oakman; November, "Fasting," Dover A. Judd; and December, "The Presentation of Our Message," Sister L. Oakman.

The return of Patriarch J. W. Worth in December brought joy to the Saints in Enfield. He was the speaker on December 15, basing his sermon on the challenge of the gospel.

For the first time in many years, a service was held on Christmas morning. The church was made seasonally attractive by the use of a manger scene model made by Phillip Maloney and Harold Copping's picture, "Come Unto Me." On the following Sunday, Pastor D. A. Oakman, Elder F. W. Judd, and Sister N. Wicks reviewed the work done in Enfield Branch during the past year. Books for the study library have been contributed by Brother Hailstone of Basingstoke. Another fine gift to the branch was a harmonium from Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Lawrence, two of the oldest members of the congregation.

Janine Elizabeth, daughter of Elder and Mrs. F. W. Judd, was blessed on October 13 by Bishop A. T. Trapp.

They have as a project the raising of sufficient funds to remodel the church basement so that it can be used as a meeting place. Six new members were baptized following a missionary series by Eugene Theys and Loyd Adams.

The Gardener Who Nurtured a Church

This isn't a parable or a story with a moral; it's about a real man who had a very real garden, as anyone who lived in Tampa, Florida, a few years ago can tell you.

Once there was a Frenchman who had a garden. (Perhaps it should be said that a family had the garden, because whenever the weather threatened, the whole family would run out to cover the spinach.) The Frenchman's name was Chevalier, and he had the most beautiful vegetable garden in all of Florida. His twenty-seven acres of beans and carrots and lettuce were kept as clean and free from weeds as a window box, so it wasn't surprising that housewives driving past used to stop and buy their vegetables, garden fresh, from him. People began stopping at the garden as far back as 1924; they posed a peculiar problem to Chevalier because he couldn't speak English. He laughs about it now and says, "All I could say then was, 'one, two, tree,'" but when the women stopped to buy from him in the garden, back in 1924, he would smile and spread his arms expansively for them to help themselves. As the months went by, more and more people stopped at the Chevalier garden, partly because it was such a show place, and partly because they liked the smile on the face of the barefoot Frenchman with the tangled eyebrows, who was gradually learning that it was just about as easy to say the English "crop" or "harvest" as it was the French moisson, and people understood him so much better. Watching "Pop" Chevalier struggling over the syllables in rutabaga with his customer-tutors was "Mom" Chevalier, who kept their four children and the small home at the end of the garden as spotless as he did his turnips. Mom Chevalier, though Belgian herself spoke good English. "When Daddy was in the garden I couldn't help him. He had to learn by himself," she relates. And Daddy, looking out over his land says, "Garden business is the best thing I ever do in this world. It even teach me English."

"Garden business" sometimes became a bit too all-absorbing to Pop to suit Mom, especially on the twenty-ninth of July—the Chevalier wedding anniversary. Dates, to Pop grew on trees and nowhere else, so when Mom started hinting about the date late in July, it fell on barren ground. Finally, in desperation, she came out with the flat statement, "Today is the twenty-ninth." "By golly," exclaimed Pop, "the day I sow my celery bed."

When Edgar and Arthur, Jr., and Lois and Katheryn filled the house by the garden, there arose the problem of language and religious education. The question of which language to use at home was settled when Pop said, "English they will learn in school; French they will forget if we don't keep after them." The first-grade teacher at the public school had almost the equivalent of a year's study in Paris by the time she had taught the mother tongue to four little Chevaliers who hadn't had even their Father's English vocabulary of "one, two, tree." The religious education problem wasn't handled so agreeably by the taxpayers. The Chevaliers had joined the Reorganized Church soon after their arrival in Tampa from Pennsylvania, and they wanted their children to grow up in the gospel. Since there wasn't a branch within days of them, they decided to hold their own services. Mom wrote to the Herald Publishing House for quarterlies; Pop and the four children spelled out the three books; and every Sunday morning and every Wednesday evening the throne of God was petitioned in mingled French and English by the six Chevaliers.

Tampa, five miles away, was a growing city, and St. Petersburg across the bay was adding more and more green benches, so it was inevitable that other Latter Day Saints should move to Tampa. Soon they heard about the Chevaliers, and the group became larger on Sunday mornings. Pop bought some folding chairs, and Mom shoved the piano closer against the wall. The General Church finally heard about the little group that was meeting so faithfully at the Chevaliers, and appointees traveling through Florida made it a point to stop at Tampa and visit their services. It was then that Mom and Pop conceived the idea of a "missionary room." "Missionaries might be able to stay a little longer if they could be sure of a place to sleep," Mom reasoned, so she moved their bedroom suite into the east bedroom that has an artist's view of the sunrise, hung an old French motto on the wall, planted jasmine and hibiscus outside the windows, and waited for the ministers to come. And come they did. The roll-call sounds like something Saint Peter might read at the judgment day. The Chevaliers kept no list, but as near as they can remember the men who have occupied their missionary room are: N. L. Booker, Joseph Luff, J. C. May, D. T. Williams, C. R. Hield, Paul Hanson, John Grice, F. A. Smith, F. G. Pitt, W. D. Bullard, — Fitch, Myron McConley, A. H. Parsons, H. P. Kelly, and Ray Whiting. And where do Mom and Pop sleep? As Pop said proudly, "We got enough, a room for the missionary and the porch for us."

The Chevaliers like to sing. Neighbors smiled when La Marseillaise drifted out of the vegetable garden in Pop's deep bass. Mom, Pop, and the four children early learned to harmonize, but that wasn't enough for the Chevaliers. One day they took a chance and invited in the neighbors for an old-fashioned sing. At first the neighbors were embarrassed: they couldn't sing! But after Pop had rumbled through, Semons des que brille l'aurore (Sow while the day breaks) they guessed that maybe they could after all; that first song fest lasted far into the night with French, English, and German songs, relieved every so often with Mom's punch and cookies. The Chevaliers have had many "sings" since that first experiment, and each time the little house is packed with friends and neighbors, some of whom came back on Sundays and Wednesday evenings.

Christmas Eve at the Chevaliers recreated a scene from an old country greeting card. Pop and Mom Chevalier stood on their hibiscus-fringed doorstep to sing, Noel, Noel, Noel. L'entendais vous (Do you hear) chimed in Arthur, Jr., from the background. Ecoutez dan la nue, they replied, and the trusting eyes of the Chevaliers seemed to be seeing "in the clouds the angels of the Lord."

Sunday, December 15, 1946, was a big day for Tampa. Oh, 99 and 44/100 per cent of the people didn't realize it—they were lolling on the beaches in loincloths, absorbing their share of the sun into skin that already resembled the leather in a worn-out billfold. The percentage

The Questionable Service

QUESTION: I frequently have the opportunity to invite nonmember friends to church, but because the services are so often disorganized and the sermons not too creditable, I don't usually extend the invitation. I would rather they never attend than have them come and be disappointed. I could ask them only to those services which I know will be appealing, but sooner or later—if they become genuinely interested—they'd go on their own to one that would spoil their first good impression. Am I being unfair with my church in maintaining this attitude, or is it better not to disappoint these people?

ANSWER: By Glaude A. Smith, Pastor of Stone Church.

We should invite our nonmember friends to church. He that is warned should feel it is a wonderful privilege to warn his neighbor. The primary question is not one of unfairness to the church but to our friends. God has given to us the fullness of the gospel of Christ, in which is found "the power of God unto salvation" by everyone who believes. The consequences of our invitation, or failure to invite, will be felt in this world and in the world to come. If we labor all our lives in trying to bring our friends to Christ and succeed in bringing only one, our joy will be great with that one in the kingdom of God.

Anything which lessens our joy in inviting our friends to church is regrettable. Under adverse conditions, however, it is not good to just ask, "Shall I, or shall I not, invite my friends to church?" We should seriously consider the reasons for the existing objectionable conditions; then actively, but always affirmatively, set about to change them. The pastor should be concerned about making all services and sermons well-organized and interesting to both members and nonmembers. Perhaps he should be visited first, and the whole problem discussed in the friendliness of the Spirit of Christ with him. One of the best ways to assure him of our own sincere desires in the matter would be to offer our own help and suggest that we will also try to get our friends to help in any way possible. When the pastor, the priesthood, and the members of a congregation unite themselves to use all of their talents and abilities, not forgetting to earnestly ask the blessing of God upon their efforts, many fine things can be accomplished in a short time. Why not make a try in this way to get better-organized services and more creditable sermons in the branch?

No pastor dares to ignore the impression which is made upon the minds and hearts of those who attend the services of his church. Those who come regularly should find satisfaction: the earnest seekers-after-truth who come for the first time should find something so appealing that they will want to return. This does not mean we should expect immediate perfection in services. We are all striving toward that. It does mean, however, that the pastor has the primary responsibility of seeking out and developing those who have the best talent to organize and take charge of services, to speak, to sing, to read Scriptures, to usher, and to care in every possible way, for the comfort of all those who attend, in addition to providing spiritual ministry. The first responsibility for the conducting of good services rests with the pastor and those associated with him who hold the priesthood. It is the pastor's first duty to call to his support and organize all the members of the congregation who can provide the best that is possible in services and sermons and all other activities in the branch. There should always be plans for the development of individuals and groups which will help them to do increasingly better work. Only our best is good enough for Christ. It is not Christ, however, but our nonmember friends who may be the first to judge and be influenced by what we do in the services of the church.

Let us not, however, make the mistake of deciding that the pastor and the men of the priesthood alone are responsible for all the failures to raise the branch standards. Perhaps the one who has the vision to see and question the defects in the services and the none too creditable sermons has a more definite responsibility than he realized. It is all too easy to ask why someone else doesn't do something about it. Perhaps someone else does not see; perhaps he sees, but cannot do the job alone.

An actual example will best illustrate this point. I once knew a young man with an attractive personality who was reared in a Latter Day Saint home. His intelligence quotient was above average, and he received a college education. He was successful in business. Because he was a good speaker, he was given a job in radio. This young man complained about the services and sermons at the local church. He did not realize that part of the trouble was due to the fact that he and others like him who were talented and able to serve, were not participating. Each of us should throw our talents into the balance to lift as high as possible the standard of services in our local congregations—and, who knows but that in inviting our friends, we may lead one of them to accept the gospel. This convert may become a member of the priesthood and grow to be that gifted speaker who is so much needed. Or he may someday be the director of music, the pianist, or young people's leader. Need we go on with listing possibilities?

We belong to a great church with a wonderful message of salvation for all mankind; but it is the responsibility of every member of the church to help make it great in its outreach and influence for good in each community. God desires that we bring our friends to him through the church. As we are able to see the needs that exist in our own branches, let us offer our help in making the services as appealing as possible.

of tourists who gaped at all this anatomy before they too stripped and found a place in the hot sand was about the same as the previous Sundays. In fact, nothing rippled on the surface to indicate that anything unusual might be taking place, especially not in a shabby civic hall in North Tampa. A visitor there that Sunday might not have been too impressed by what he saw: a few resolutions were passed, a hymn was sung, and a young man called Arthur stepping forward to take charge of the meeting. What Arthur was taking charge of was the first meeting of the first Reorganized branch in Tampa, Florida. The branch wasn't ten minutes old when someone got up to make a presentation . . . "In recognition of your untiring efforts . . ." It wasn't a surprise to anyone but Mom and Pop; they hadn't done anything to warrant the presentation of a corsage and a boutonniere right in front of the church. Nothing except to nourish their own belief and sustain the faith of their neighbors until it bore fruit in a branch.

Mom and Pop Chevalier are still living on the edge in the garden in Florida, and the missionary room is in waiting for its next occupant. If you sit down to talk to Mom, it won't be long before she will offer you some gallett—Belgian cookies that look like cold waffles; and if you stay around a few days, you may be able to persuade her to cook you some "rabbit a la France," a combination of bunny, prunes, vinegar and Mom's "know-how" that will be well worth your effort. To get the rabbit you may have to bargain with Pop, who has stopped gardening to care for his rabbits, goats, and "Daisy," the mule. Daisy doesn't do any work now, for as Pop says, "Daisy, she work hard for me for seven long years. I no can sell her now. I give her a pension."

The Chevaliers have worked hard for the church for almost seven times seven years, but far from having a pension, they are still setting up the folding chairs in the living room on Wednesday nights. Mom still occupies her seat by the kitchen door and every once in a while Pop can be heard praying in fervent, melodious French to the Great Interpreter above.

Be Assured, It Helps!

P. S.

* Meet an Old Friend!

There is a general notion that when death enters a home, nothing can be said that will help the survivors.

"Words mean nothing," good people will say, "but I want you to know I'm thinking of you." Or, "Nothing we can say will help, but we are remembering you."

Please be assured. At times like this, a few words—the right words, and not too many of them—are a real help.

The very fact that someone cares enough to speak about it, regardless of what he may say, and however humble the words may be, so that they are sincere, is a help.

The garrulous man can easily inflict more pain. The person who makes you a weeping post every time he meets you becomes anathema. But the sincere, thoughtful friend who drops his word of sympathy and goes on to something else in a kindly, practical way is appreciated.

When death takes a loved one away, there is a great void and emptiness in your life. The shock is like what happens to a tree or bush when a storm pulls it up by the roots. Here is a great hurt area of isolation in one's life. Only friendship can help fill it up.

Some people tend to withdraw from the bereaved person because they feel awkward and unable to help. This only increases his isolation.

Do not hesitate to speak a kindly sympathetic word. Make it brief and sincere. It really helps.

Roscoe E. Davey, President of Seventy, caught in a characteristic genial mood in this photograph contributed by the Iris Palmer Studio of Independence.

Faith

By LOIS ERNSBERGER

I wonder at His faith in me, And hope that I may grow to be Strong; That I may teach this child of mine, The way of loving God divine.
I marvel at His faith in me, To send me one—but glory be, He must indulge in humorous whims To send me next— A set of twins!

Joint Council Lays Plans

IN THE HERALD for October 26, there appeared a reference to considerations engaging the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, meeting in September, "with a view to well-laid plans for strengthening of the church towards a fuller and more effectual ministry and administration of its work."

In sessions immediately following the turn of this year, the council proceeded to a further discussion of some of these and other considerations, to a fuller understanding, and the effecting of plans by which to work towards accomplishment of goals ahead.

Adverting to the September session, it is noted that among the things then engaging the attention of the men of the council were the need for programming the work for branches; for adequate housing for branches; for integrating the work of the departments with branch, district and stake programs; for advancing the gathering in the interests of the church and of all affected thereby; for pursuing the missionary work of the church in domestic fields with vigor and in harmony with local programs to be adopted; for strengthening and stabilizing mission work abroad and for vigor and continuous concern in the selection, appointment, training and supervision of ministers who can lead in achieving these goals.

OUR MORE RECENT discussions brought up for further consideration in one form and another each of the above interests, and in addition thereto drew attention to the need for administration of local finances towards the best spiritual returns; for general church and regional gatherings for the inter-conference period following the conference of April, 1947; and for ways and means by which to improve the spiritual quality of the ordained ministers of the church local as well as under appointment of the church.

The conclusion of the council was that branches should be financed by intelligent and adequate budgeting, with clearance of any indebtedness, and the building of reserves where such is practicable as should be in all larger and well-directed branches. General, regional, and local gatherings were agreed to and rather well definitized for the inter-conference period, with a view to scheduling them as to time, and servicing them as best may be done with the available man power. And a number of very good suggestions were forthcoming in the direction of improving the spiritual quality of our ordained ministry.

AS TO BRANCH PLANNING, it is the intention to conduct surveys in conjunction with local officers, with an eye to selecting those presenting themselves as centers for virile missionary endeavor, and for outreach to adjacent branches in need of their help; the surveys to include also a consideration of needs as to housing and facilities adequate to the work to be undertaken.

For integrating the work of religious education with local programs, a closer collaboration between general church officers and the department of Religious Education is to be sought, and branch and district officers are to be urged to assume full responsibility for administering the work of the departments.

It is, of course, to be understood there is no disposition on the part of the council or general church officers to encroach on branches or their presiding elders. The desire, however, is to be helpful, and church officials find themselves under propulsion to make available every help of which they are capable, in full measure of their responsibility as related to our local churches.

The discussion with reference to the gathering stressed the need for co-operative endeavor, with a view to strengthening the centers gathered to, as well as benefiting the Saints coming in to them; and at the same time avoiding the weakening of outlying centers where our work should be maintained, by holding to them key ministers and families essential to their maintenance.

A FIVE-YEAR PROGRAM was set up looking towards the rehabilitation of the European mission so sorely depleted by the late war, and its establishment on a stable basis. Announcement through the HERALD has already been made of the appointment of Apostle McConley to this mission, and additional plans for its strengthening and the prosecution of the work there shall be made, and as made announced to the church.

Let it be kept in mind these assignments taken together present no easy task. Here is a long-time and an arduous work. As we lay well our plans for it, however, and give ourselves to it as a people in good heart and mind and growing life and proficiency of ministry, it shall be done to the credit of the church and the glory of God who has called us to the work.

An excellent spirit characterized the council throughout its deliberations. The understanding of the men as to their common problems was enlarged, their vision in some things cleared, and the groundwork was laid for a more proficient ministry to be addressed to tasks ahead. And it is anticipated that results growing out of plans laid shall in due time be realized in centers and areas in which the church may be privileged to function to the ends desired.

To Visit Central America

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and Charles R. Hield and Elder Harold D. Smith, of Fort Madison, Iowa, left Independence January 11 to visit ruins of pre-Columbian civilizations in Mexico and Central America. They plan to go by auto to Mexico City, and from there make their way to places of special interest in southern Mexico, Yucatan, Guatemala and Honduras.

These brethren have for years been interested in American archaeology and its relation to the Book of Mormon. Brother Smith is a professional photographer. The purpose of the visit is to study the ruins and take kodachrome pictures for the benefit of the church now and in the future. The trip also provides an opportunity for observing and mingling with the native races.

Believing as the church does that the Book of Mormon is a record revealed of God of ancient nations in America no one should be more interested than the church in American archaeology. It is important to have pictures, also, of the ruins before work of restoration has been done on them. It is hoped that pictures may be secured and placed in the possession of the church.

Among the ruins it is planned to visit, in addition to notable places in and around Mexico City, are Oaxaca, Chichen Itza, Palenque, Yaxchilan, Tikal and Copan. Some of these ruins are rarely visited and certain of them never have been visited by members of the church.

The brethren will be away about six weeks.

THE BURNING BUSH

By Apostle Blair Jensen

This is one of a series of talks delivered for Morning Devotions on Radio Station KMBC in 1944.

Now, Moses kept the flock of Jethro, his father-in-law, the priest of Midian; and he led the flock to the back side of the desert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb. And again, the presence of the Lord appeared unto him, in a flame of fire in the midst of a bush; and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed. And Moses said, I will turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not consumed. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I. And he said, Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. Moreover he said, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.—Exodus 3: 1-6.

In this story of Moses' burning bush, we have a picture of the ideal and satisfying life. It is a life with a consuming purpose—"the bush burned with fire." Life must have such a purpose. There are many people of whom more might have been made. There are others of whom too much has been made. In this latter group is to be found the man who drew his bow on an impulse, released the arrow without aim, and killed a king. There have always been men who have taken foolish and unlawful liberties with their unharnessed power and unexpected success. Every day, in this great battle of life, men say, there is no need to take aim, just draw your bow at will, aim at nothing, release your arrow, and you may hit a worthy mark. And again you may not.

The man who aims at nothing usually is successful in hitting nothing. He quite probably will not hit anything else. The successful life is the life which is lived for a high purpose and is dedicated to deep devotion and is enriched by stanch endeavor. Look into your own soul this morning and seek the answer to these important and searching questions: What am I living for? What am I expecting to get from life? What reward am I expecting to gain at the end of my day? What place am I aiming to reach? Your answers will be interesting. They will reveal to you whether your life in any reasonable sense is worthwhile.

Mathew Arnold in "Rugby Chapel" has aptly painted a word picture of life as it is so often experienced when he affirms—

Most men eddy about,
Here and there—eat and drink,
Chatter and love and hate,
Gather and squander, are raised
Aloft, are hurled in the dust,
Striving blindly, achieving Nothing; and then they die—
Perish—and no one asks
Who or what they have been.

Our Offering

By Robert J. Miller

MAN HAS probably always sought a satisfactory solution to the mystery of God, creation, and life itself. He has probably also sought the truth regarding his beginnings, his spiritual and physical nature and their inter-relations, the reasons for his existence, and his probable ultimate end.

In the course of this quest, as one question or problem resolves itself to a logical conclusion, it but serves to give birth to another question—a bit deeper and more profound. Thus, the search for fundamental truth goes on.

The seeker soon learns that the mysteries of God, creation, and existence cannot be solved in a single life-span by himself alone, no matter how diligent he may be in his quest; for he comes early to a realization of the magnitude of the task, and the boundaries of his limitations. Man soon discovers his impotence, and knows the best he can hope to contribute to the answer is exactly what God in his wisdom sees fit to reveal to him in the light of his faith, humility, and sincere, honest devotion.

The pattern of truth from the beginning is like a huge tapestry of exquisite design, depicting existence itself; made of millions of tiny threads tightly interwoven, of different color, quality, and size; each contributing to the purpose of the Creator, and becoming a part of his handwork.

Full appreciation of such a work can only be had by the power of God, revealing to man its beauty; only thus can he comprehend the depths and values that are represented in the threads of truth in the picture.

WE WHO are disciples of Christ, believe him to be the Only Begotten Son of God, the messenger of salvation, by whom God has revealed his secrets to men. We therefore, accept the Word and revelations he has given through his Son as the possible bound of our knowledge of the full measure of truth. And we look to God for the blessings of continued revelation and gifts of the Spirit essential to their comprehension.

It is extremely doubtful if the Word and revelations we now have of God are fully comprehended and appreciated. For if they were, we would no longer be challenged by innumerable questions concerning scripture that appears to be contradictory—nor would there be prophecies we fail to understand.

However, it is obviously the wish of God that we know and understand. For one cannot conceive of God revealing truths in riddles to confuse and mislead,—scripture does not teach us that this is so. But rather we are assured that prophecy and the Word are given for our guidance, instruction, and salvation.

Probably the most definite statement regarding this assurance, with the requirements necessary for fulfillment, is to be found in the Doctrine and Covenants 90: 3: "I give unto you these sayings that ye may understand and know how to worship, and know what you worship, that you may come unto the Father in my name and in due time receive of his fullness for if you keep my commandments you shall receive of his fullness, and be glorified in me as I am in the Father: therefore, I say unto you, You shall receive grace for grace."

You will note that our Lord tells us quite plainly the purpose of God's revelations to man namely: that we may understand and know how to worship; that we may know what we worship; and that in due time we may receive a fullness, and be glorified in Christ (the Spirit of truth) as he is glorified in the Father (of the Spirit of truth). But this fullness is to be ours only on condition that we obey his commandments, doing the will of God.

As we consider the fact that God has spoken through his Son and the prophets many times since the dawn of creation down even to the present, and that of this record much is still a mystery, we are impressed with the realization that what we have gained in understanding and knowledge has been largely the result of the prayers, meditations, and labors of love by countless thousands of Christians who have preceded us down the long avenues of time. We have their testimony and the knowledge that their patient seeking has brought forth.

They, too, desired to know the mystery for their spirits, like ours, testified to the fact that they were of God's creation, and were potential heirs of his kingdom. It was instinctive for them, just as it is instinctive for us to seek to know God and his Christ.

In the face of these facts we are forced to the conclusion Paul reached long ago (I Corinthians 3: 1-11) that we are not sufficient unto ourselves; but that our work is to do the will of God, adding our bit upon the foundation Christ has laid—contributing to the fund of knowledge and the social advancement according as God has given us grace. We perform our labors as we feel led—but God giveth the increase.

What then shall we do? Go our separate ways and hoard our experiences with God? This should not be. We have received a heritage that must be added to and passed on to future generations for thus it has come unto us out of the past. The stream of life goes onward and upward, lighted in the way by the Word of God.

The light must shine through us to brighten the path which leads upward (Matthew 5: 16). But it will only shine through us in exact ratio to the quality of our lives and the quality of our love, as we live purposefully in harmony with the word.

Each of us, with God's help and in the name of Christ, can contribute something to add luster to the light. And as God so blesses us, it becomes our duty to share with others our blessings and our experiences. "Therefore let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 18.

"Twixt God and Brother Man"

By Reed M. Holmes

ONE DAY A stalwart young man walked along the Sea of Galilee. His eyes were alert and piercing, his face bronzed by sun and wind. Strong arms commanded respect and signified acquaintance with hard work. His bearing revealed at once determination and friendliness, purpose and poise.

This man of vigorous personality, of sure and unfaltering step, strode down to the boat and nets of Simon and his brother Andrew. In his youthful vigor was the promise of companionship. In his eyes were understanding and an impassioned appeal for help in a great mission. He would make them fishers of men.

Thence he went to James and John, the sons of Zebedee, later to be called the Sons of Thunder. They responded, too. Jesus addressed his appeal to a man of business. He walked into the life of a man of medicine. And there were others.

Jesus sought men acquainted with life—men who understood the motives which drive men to care for their families, men who had come to grips with the specter of hunger and privation, men who were proving their strength and ability, men eager to grow and to accept responsibility.

Here were men of diverse backgrounds and opinions, men of Galilee, quick to act and to speak, sometimes hotheaded and rash—men of strength and will. They remained towers of strength, but their rashness, hot tempers, and quick words gradually disappeared. And they were thus made the stronger.

Through three years Jesus taught them, sought to unify them, provoked them by insisting that they understand and love. Continually he led them to an appreciation of that which is of infinite value, above that of food, shelter, and possession of material wealth.

Today, Jesus goes to men of diverse backgrounds, calls them, urges them to grow, to give, to pray, and to love. As in the day of his own earthly life, he urges development of life in service. He requires the same loyalty. He requires the same meticulous attention to integrity. He strives for the development of the same spirit.

THE MESSAGE IN OUR LIVES

They who represent Christ must truly represent him. They who are his ministers must be representative of him in purpose. They are to be representative of him in character. The kingdom of God must take first place in their affections. They will seek to establish his righteousness—to bring forth Zion—in their own lives. When Jesus said, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," it was—in him. His ministers also must guarantee its nearness.

The function of the minister of Christ, whether he be high priest, Aaronic priest, or deacon is aptly characterized in the following poem:

Twixt God and brother man I stand
And reach to each my outstretched hand.

If I to one my hand refuse,
Then each one shall the other lose;

While I lose both and my poor heart
Be parched for streams of life it could impart.

Lord, take my hand, and make it e'er
A channel, not a barrier.

When one is called and ordained to minister in the stead of Jesus Christ, it is his function to stand "twixt God and brother man," there to reveal and interpret into life the love and will of God.

In this day of crisis and adventure, a stalwart young man walks along the highways of our land. His eyes are alert and piercing. His heart aches for those who live in fear and suffering. He looks to us with a hopeful smile. He voices an impassioned appeal for help in a great mission. He would make us fishers of men. He would have us build the kingdom of God.

Shall we respond and represent him?

Shaping the Future

In the Present

By J. A. Koehler

Number 22 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE CORN CROP which the farmer harvests in the fall is shaped by what he did in the spring and early summer. If his seed was good, and if he tilled his soil, sowed his seed, and cultivated the field in proper manner (provided, of course, that the weather man was not unkind to him), the farmer harvests a good crop of corn. If otherwise, his harvest is bad. Every farmer knows that he is always shaping his future by what he does in the present.

In this talk we are concerned especially with the future which we call "the next world." We cannot demonstrate the actuality of a future life. Only the future can demonstrate itself. But we may believe in the future life. We may have ideas of what that future is to be like. We may, indeed, have assurance of future things hoped for, and evidences of future things not seen. Or, as St. Paul put it, we may have faith in the actualities of a future life.

We do not say that everything everyone has said, and which has been written in a book, about the future life is true. Our only aim in this talk is to establish the fact of a relationship of the things which are done in the present to the shape of things in the future, whatever that future may prove to be.

To do that we may use either reason or memory or both. That is to say, we may either set forth rational grounds for our expectations or we may quote scripture, or, as Leonardo da Vinci said, adduce authority. In this talk we shall do both.

MAN MAY REASON about his future only in the light of his experience of the present. If we discover that the principle which applies to the farmer and his corn harvest applies also to man's every endeavor to reach an end, we may draw some rational inferences concerning the relation of his present conduct to the shape of his future estate. We may, in reason, say that man shapes his future in the present.

Christendom says that there is a future life. If that is true, the life of man is a metamorphosis—a passing from one state of existence to another. And if the life of man is a metamorphosis, surely we may reason about the shape of man's future in the light of what we know to be true of metamorphoses universally.

It may not be dignified to drag an ugly caterpillar into a religious discussion. But it seems an effectual way of illustrating what we hold to be true respecting the relation of man's present to his future.

There are three stages in the life cycle of a caterpillar—or is it the life cycle of a butterfly? Call them the eating stage, the resting stage, and the perfect-life stage. Or call them the larva, the pupa, and the imago. Those stages correspond to the present life of man, his grave or resting place, and his resurrected or immortal self. You know the story very well, so I will come directly to the point I wish to make, or the truth which I wish to illustrate.

A caterpillar may have a future life—it may come to be a butterfly—or not. I put the butterfly last because it has more of the feel of what the future life of man promises to be like. But whether a caterpillar shall evolve into a butterfly or not depends on what happens in the present—especially what it eats. If it eats poison, or in other words, if it behaves improperly so that it dies an unnatural death, its future will be very different from what it would be if it lived a normal caterpillar life. In other words, the caterpillar shapes its future by what it does in the present. And that is the whole point I wish to make.

I DO NOT KNOW whether a caterpillar has something comparable to man's soul or not. All I know is, I am sure that man has a soul. He has a spirit as well as a body. What is more, I am sure that it is the present "spirit" of man—his present state or temper of mind which governs his present moral life—rather than or more than the food on which he subsists, that shapes his future. Say what a man's present spirit is, or what the character of his energy is, and you say what the form of his future self—which is a form of energy—is to be like.

The scriptural statement of the case, found in the 8th chapter of Romans is, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you [if you live aright in the present], he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit which dwelleth in you" or which characterizes your present life.

If you need the clear-cut testimony of Jesus on this question, you may find it in the 25th chapter of Matthew. I refer to his parable of the sheep and the goats, which are symbols of future conditions of man. The separation of the sheep from the goats, the determination of the future, is to be made on the basis of the conduct of the present. To the sheep, the King shall say, Inherit the good things prepared for you from the foundation of the world: "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison and ye came unto me." In other words, This is your future, because that was your past.

The testimony of the Old Testament prophets is not so pointed. They were concerned about the present because they believed man has capacity to make good in the present, and because it was their settled conviction that it is the good-doing of the present that will be recompensed in "the resurrection of the just."

IDEAS OF THE future, as I intimated, are very different. Some of them may be wholly untrue. All may be partly untrue. But even if we had no opinions whatever respecting the future of man, we might still know that, whatever it shall prove to be, it is shaped by the present. Every important turn of events in the life of man, every alternation of fortunes, that has ever occurred witnesses that truth.

The modern prophet said that the day shall come when the Lord shall "recompense unto every man according to his work, and measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow man." That is the personal side of the issue. He said also that peoples, nations are sure to be recompensed according to their works. That is the social side of the question. And then the modern prophet related the personal and social sides of the question each to the other. He said that as the conduct of persons shapes the future of peoples, so does the conduct of peoples shape the future of persons. He said that "If you [personally] will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, [or if you desire that the shape of your future shall be glorious; if you will attain to the "butterfly" stage of life] you must prepare yourselves [in the present] by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you." He said that the present conduct of peoples bears upon the future estates of persons.

DO YOU NOT SEE, then, why the message of the modern prophet is essentially a philosophy of social life? Do you not see why he maintains that it is the duty of persons to master the true philosophy of social life? Peoples are composed of persons. If peoples, then, are to set the stage of personal life so that each individual may shape his future in the manner in which God intends by doing the things in the present that perfect his moral nature or refine his spirit, the persons who compose peoples must have a true philosophy of social life.

That philosophy is not only an appreciation of human nature, it is also a statement of the means of attaining human values. If a caterpillar could have a philosophy of life, it would pertain wholly to "meat and drink." It would be Epicurean. For it is only the meat and drink of a caterpillar that determines whether its future shall be that of a butterfly. But the true philosophy of human life cannot pertain wholly to the man's bodily wants. It must pertain at once to the wants of the spirit. It must treat of man as of a soul, or as of a being whose bodily life must be correlated to the life of the spirit. Or, as Jesus put it, the true philosophy of life must be concerned with the "righteousness" of the whole business of human living together, which is called the righteousness of the "Kingdom."

I said that our reasoning about the bearings that the conduct of the affairs of the present life has on the shape of man's future, must be based on what we know about the present. We know that the future corn crop of the farmer is shaped by what he does in the present. We know that the future of the caterpillar or of a mosquito or of any other being that has a life cycle, is shaped by what is done in the present.

We know that the present condition of man was shaped by what he did in the past. What is even more to the point, we know that the "meat and drink" affairs of the present—science and the practical arts and so on—must be conducted aright, they must be grounded in ethical principles, or in the science of the morally right, if they are to lead to a happy future. We know that positively—"and how." And in the light of that experience we are driven irresistibly to the conclusion, not only that the condition of man that the future life is shaped by what he does in the present, but also that it is the "righteousness" of the present on which almost everything that pertains to man's future depends. We know that the ends of true religion may be reached only through an effectual implementation of a true philosophy of social life.

Eternal Life

RENDEZVOUS WITH ETERNITY, by Howard Lincoln Stimmel. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1947. 123 pages. $1.

This is a book of great value to all those who have lost loved ones by death, and who feel the need of fortifying their belief in the immortality of the soul, and of assuring themselves of the survival of the individual. The author really believes his message, allows no platitudes, generalities, or evasions of the facts. He faces the issue squarely in a way that will help all those who need it. The author bases his claims largely upon the Scriptures (citing for convenient reference some of the finest and most inspiring), on common sense and reason.

Only one other book of comparable value has appeared in this field, and that was Upon This Rock, by Emile Cammaerts (Harper, 1943), which enjoyed a wide popularity. When this reviewer first read that book, he greatly appreciated it, but there were some parts he did not understand. Now experience has given him a basis for a better understanding, and a vastly increased appreciation.

From experience, we can say that these books are true, and that there are no illusions in the comfort they bring to the bereaved.

Church Memorials

LIVING MEMORIALS, by J. Randolph Sasmatt. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 192 pages. $2.50. Illustrated.

This volume is a useful handbook for those who desire to leave to the church some memorial for a loved one who has been taken in death. It provides an abundant list of suggestions from simple memorials that anybody can afford to the most impressive and costly. Moreover, it contains useful information as to the forms and techniques to be observed in giving, along with cautions that may save the donor some regrets. For those who are giving anything of consequence, and need information, this book should be a required first step.

UNDERSTANDING THE CHRISTIAN FAITH, By Georgia Harkness. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1947. 187 pages. $1.75.

A foremost woman religious writer and teacher has here produced a work that should be very helpful to modern people, especially to the younger and mature educated part of the population, who have a sincere interest in religion, but need some practical guidance in understanding it. It will not help the older or fundamentalist type of reader who already has his opinions set.

As generally found in works produced by this publisher, this book achieves a fine balance between science and reality on one side and faith and revelation on the other. Recommended especially for college readers, and those in the thirties to fifties.

Pulpit Stories

SERMON NUGGETS IN STORIES, by William L. Stidger. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 150 pages. $1.50.

Some preachers prefer their stories and illustrations to be their own, and pick them up as they go along, right out of life. This requires considerable alertness, keen observation, and the privilege of moving about where things happen. Not all people are so fortunate. They have to depend on secondary sources. For this latter group, the stories collected by Dr. Stidger, a nationally prominent clergyman of radio fame, will be helpful. Some men have a gift for putting over a story which others do not. Nobody can say whether these stories will fit the needs of any particular minister.

Suggestion: If the minister's wife, or his congregation, is tired of his small stock of old stories, it might be a good idea to make him a present of this book.

Prayers for Public Use

THE LECTERN: A BOOK OF PUBLIC PRAYERS, by Carl A. Glover. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 224 pages. $1.50. Pocket size, pulpit black binding.

Here are formal prayers for all general purposes in the church worship service. The quality is excellent, although it seems impossible for any book of published prayers to avoid a certain orotund quality that comes from paying more attention to the congregation than to God. However, any student of worship should be a careful observer of good prayer forms, and should enrich both his prayer vocabulary and his idea forms by careful study of good models. This book furnishes an abundance of such good models.

That is not to say that any minister of our faith should carry such a book into the pulpit, or use the prayers. Our people think they are against the use of written prayers, though actually they would oppose any deviation from the Lord's Prayer, or the prayers for the consecration of the emblems of the Lord's Supper. So, we are not as absolute on the subject as some think we are.

The language of good prayer is a special kind of address. Its style is heightened, but not too far from earth and reality. Young ministers would do well to read, but not to memorize the kind of material found in this book. What the minister needs is the tools of prayer. Then, conscious of the needs of the people and the love of God, let him pour out what comes readily into his heart and mind. The book will help sharpen his tools.

The Search for Happiness

THE SEARCH FOR HAPPINESS, by William Peter King. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 182 pages. $1.75.

Whoever opens these pages will find himself in a rich pasture of good thoughts derived from clear, practical thinking, wide reading, able ministry, and effective authorship. Part Three, "The Conditions of Happiness," points to a better life in ways that ordinary people can understand. If you are unhappy (and not definitely psychopathic), this book should give you help. If you are happy, the book will give you some good thoughts for helping others. And you will enjoy reading it anyway.

Ensign of Peace

By MILFORD HOWARD DOWNS

"For, behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven."— Doctrine and Covenants 64: 8.

As never before in the history of the world, our Latter Day Saint ideal of Zion holds the only key to peaceful relationships. On every side we see the degradation of human associations. From the degeneration of modern family life to the collapse of permanent, effective international co-operation, the moral conversion of man has become an obvious necessity. What underlying factors have created these evils in modern society?

There is in man a fateful free agency that sends him into the world of civilization. What characterizes man, as distinct from animal life, is his free will. To a large degree, therefore man is able to control his own life and to strive for "self-improvement." However, here is the danger that he will get off the true course of rationalism and as a result, bring more evil than good into life and society. And this is precisely what has happened.

Man, left to himself, has some natural concern for his fellow man as well as the interest in his own existence, for compassion is a natural result of man's free agency combined with the use of his reasoning processes. It is present as a moderating influence upon anger and thoughtlessness of others. In the family this compassion is focussed on the persons close to man who become objects of lasting affection, and all this stabilizes his life. He may develop greater egoism than before because he now has more that he calls his own, but this egoism is balanced by his stronger sentiments of love for those other persons. Thus the nature of man stays balanced and harmonious in both these levels of experience.

But in contemporary civilization the condition is appalling. Here man is busy with industry and commerce, competing with others for all sorts of exclusive advantages and indeed his very existence. Out of necessity he develops an undue egotism and selfishness without any enlargement of his affections; in fact, they are suppressed. He becomes absorbed in his desires for gain, position, power, and exclusiveness. This is a person who is willing to be inhumane. Man is worse in this state than he has ever been. He is al-

When Jesus near the conclusion of his ministry, charged his disciples by saying, "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another," he was presenting the only key to peaceful human relationships. This same principle holds true in respect to the field of economics.

The institution of property-ownership is another evil inherent in our present system because of its creation of inequality. We certainly do not object to the natural differences of man. There are genuine distinctions that exist which make some men better qualified to do one kind of thing than another.

These variations do no harm. We definitely do not desire to repress industry, initiative, and talent purely for the sake of equality. But this is the difficulty; the existing order does repress ability by giving undue advantage to those who possess rank, wealth, social eminence, or political power. These fixed advantages for some and disabilities for others, regardless of the merits of the men who have them, are the inequalities that are wrong. This throttling of the good in people is an evil of the existing social and political institutions.

And social equality cannot be achieved by governmental control of property. The bureaucratic dictatorship of Russian Communism proves that political control is not the way to correct unjust economic and social inequalities. But rather, it must come through the will of the people—voluntarily sharing what they possess with their fellow man. Political control alone is not the way to a lasting peace. Once the political state with its military power exists anywhere, it becomes the universal type of human society because all other peoples must, in self-defense, organize along the same lines. History has shown that as long as there are sovereign political units existing in the world, they are bound to clash. War is the inevitable consequence of this political and social system. Man's "will to peace" takes on new importance as it becomes the only means to international co-operation.

Here Is the Writer . . .

He was graduated from William Chrisman High School in Independence, Missouri, in 1946. Because of his high school record, he was presented a four-year tuition scholarship to Depauw. His main interest has been in forensics, and he is planning a career in this field. He is a member of the Englewood congregation, of which his father is pastor. On September 6, 1946, he was ordained a priest.

Thus, world salvation requires a radical change in our entire society. Man, the individual, must undergo a moral conversion. The unbalanced, egoistic, selfish individual must be made into a moral person.

Apostle Paul foretold:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.—II Timothy 3: 1-4.

It is a just and thoughtful Lord who has provided means of achieving our salvation in the latter days. Truly our aim of Zion does provide an "ensign of peace" to the rest of the world. For it, being founded on the principle of love and service to fellow man along with stewardship of temporal goods, furnishes the means of correcting the evils of our present social system.

Therefore, with the realization that the "ensign of peace" must first take root in the heart of the individual, we must consecrate our wills to the work that lies ahead.

The Trouble-Shooter

League of Many Ages

QUESTION: My husband and I are members of a small congregation. About a year ago a League was organized, but since then some of the members have moved away and others have lost interest and quit coming. We have very few young people and the ages vary greatly. The group consists of a thirteen-year-old boy, two girls—ages sixteen and eighteen, a young man of twenty, and three young married couples—ages twenty-four to thirty. We are anxious to organize another League but are uncertain about what to study or what type of recreation to choose because of the age differences. We shall appreciate any help you can give us. We want to outline a program that will not only keep our young people happy but attract nonmembers as well.

ANSWER: By Sylvia McKeage

Your problem is much the same as that of any other small branch. It is a question to know just what to do where there are so few members of such varied ages. Probably the boy of thirteen does not enjoy the same activities as the man of thirty, but I feel confident there is something that can be done about it.

The ten workers in your group, with the variety of ages that you have, should furnish a nucleus for a successful Zion's League in time. As the number of young married couples is the greater, perhaps it would be best to concentrate on them. If any of the men are members of the priesthood, they can serve as teachers and leaders.

You can have meetings which the teenagers will want to invite their friends to attend. Help them to feel that they are just as important a part of the League as the older members. Give them something to do. See that they develop a sense of belonging.

A part of the evening should be spent in study. Begin by selecting study materials which will be interesting to both the "teeners" and the young adults. One study course which would supply this need is the booklet, Does It Make Any Difference? It contains many thought-provoking questions and stimulating ideas for wide-awake young people.

As your League grows, the class should be divided so that more people will have a chance to participate in leadership and teaching. There are several interesting study courses on training for service in the different departments of your branch work. These training courses would make very good projects to work on, as every branch needs trained leaders and teachers. I would suggest that you get the latest Herald Publishing House Catalog of Supplies for Church and Church School. You will find many helps, as well as study materials, there.

Recreation is an important part of every League program. There are many good Bible games that are educational and can be fun for all ages. They can be ordered from the Herald Publishing House also. These are good for Sunday evening recreation. Sometimes the simplest kind of a game—"Bringing Home the Bacon" or a bean relay—will prove highly entertaining.

Refreshments always bring people out to League meetings, especially when they are asked to bring something. As a rule, nonmembers like to be invited to help supply the refreshments—it makes them feel that they are a part of the group. They also like to be asked to help in program work.

Get as many nonmembers among your friends as you can to help plan good, clean entertainment. The important thing is to get people to come to your gatherings; then you can go on from there, keeping your eye always on the objectives of the League.

Classwork should start and close with a prayer. And don't forget to use your hymnbooks. Most everyone likes to sing. Make song fests a part of your recreation. Pick out good lively tunes, especially those that are distinctively Latter Day Saint. Nonmembers will soon be able to sing along with you, and once they learn them, they'll like them.

Get a Zion's League Handbook from the Herald Publishing House; read pages 45 to 73, 105 to 109, 117 to 143, and 216 to 222. These will help you to get started.

To live like that is not to live at all. To live like that, at best, is but to exist. Any beast of the field or forest can live like that. A man must face life and all it means and ever affirm and cry aloud, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world." And yet, it is not enough for a man to know that life has a purpose and to affirm it by word of lip. Life must have a consuming purpose, an all-consuming purpose. The lives of far too many of us are like the burning of wet wood—a great deal of smoke, much indeed of spluttering—an occasional burst of sparks—perhaps once in a while even a red glow appears. Such a life never bursts into flame. It never gives light and heat. A life to achieve its worthy object, and aim, and purpose, must be prepared to blaze and burn and to be consumed for God.

Most of us are too careful of ourselves. We conserve our strength. We withhold our time. We hoard our money. We are not extravagant for the great causes. We are not filled with fire for God. And yet it is only the man who gives all, who risks all, and who dares all, that achieves those things that are most worth-while and eternal.

Down from the Middle Ages comes the story of the artist who found a rich and wonderful color. It was a red which gleamed and glowed and burned upon the canvas. His fellow artists sought in vain to discover the secret. They mixed their colors with costly and rare pigments, but they were dull and heavy and dead along side his. When the artist died they discovered the secret of his success, for as they examined his body, they found around his heart a number of old punctured wounds. He had painted his pictures with his life's blood. Around the world from the East there comes a companion story of how a man sought long and in vain to put a perfect glaze upon porcelain. At last in an awful agony of despair, he cast himself into the furnace fire. When they drew the pottery out there was upon it the perfect glaze in whose quest the potter had spent and given his life.

It is not likely for a moment that these stories are literally true. But they are spiritually true. When we paint the pictures of our lives with our blood, then and only then do we get the perfect colors. It is only when we feed the fires with our own lives that we really achieve success. As St. Paul would have it, we must be fervent in spirit, literally boiling in spirit. It is when we are boiling in indignation and anger that we do not stop to count the costs or evaluate the risks. Instead we put our all into it.

It is only when the water in the boiler is heated to a boiling point that power is generated. Machinery cannot be run with cold or even lukewarm water, and so also with the machinery of your life. It cannot be run with lukewarm emotions, lukewarm enthusiasms and lukewarm purposes. Life must have an all-consuming purpose. Only then can it be as a "bush burned with fire," attracting and drawing aside from the rough pathways of life those who are careless and thoughtless and indifferent. The life which is filled with an all-consuming purpose becomes the burning bush which testifies of the presence of the living God in man and witnesses of the divine purpose of our residence upon this earth.

From a Tithpayer

I appreciate the Herald very much. I have been reading the comments on tithing and Word of Wisdom with interest. I pay tithes because it is a part of the gospel plan, and because it is one way I have of showing that I am thankful for the blessings God gives me. When I collect any money for produce or labor, I put one tenth of it in a box until I get a certain amount, then I send it to the bishop's agent. I am isolated from all church privileges, but recently was permitted to visit Independence. I would truly love to live there as I always enjoy meeting with the Saints.

A Need Have We

P. S.

ANOTHER Lincoln great and good,
This is our country's need;
To stand for love and brotherhood
Against the power of greed.

To strike the shackles from the poor,
And touch the rich man's heart;
To bind with bonds of peace a world
That war has torn apart.

If there's a man in Joseph's land
Who fills this want,
we pray
That God's own hand will raise him up,
And speed him on the way—

To purge and make our nation clean,
That we may once again
Unfurl the flag of freedom
Before the eyes of men.

—Ermina Perkins Kearney

* Amana Pines

A pleasing story is connected with our cover picture for this week. Mrs. Laurine Clark took her copy of the "Herald" to work and had it on her desk in a Cedar Rapids, Iowa, office (the Shepard Insurance Agency). Her employer, Mr. J. J. Shepard, saw it and noted our interest in cover pictures. He remembered some of Mrs. Shepard's photography, and as a result we received the fine print of "Amana Pines."

Mr. Shepard gave us this account: "A number of years ago the children in the Community, looking for a project by which they could contribute their labor to the betterment of the Society, set out this pine grove. It is now about forty years old; all the trees are planted symmetrically; there is a deep carpet of pine needles, and while it is little known, it is a beautiful thing to see."

The straight lines of the trees represent something of the spirit of one of the most interesting and remarkable communities in our country.

* Pie

Just to let you know how kind people are. My neighbor telephoned this morning: "I'd like to borrow a pie tin from you."

This mystified me. I know she has plenty of pie tins of her own. Why should she need one of mine?

Experience has taught me to do what a neighbor asks, and find out the reason later. So I paddled over with a glass pie dish.

"I'm making a pie for John today," she said. "I'll make you one. What kind do you like?"

The lady has a reputation. Tonight there will be a warm pie waiting for me, of an excellence that you will find in few homes, and in hardly any bakeries.

* When you face the multitude of the day's tasks, you may think you do not have strength to do all of them. However, you will find that you have strength to do one. Do this one, and you will feel better. Then go on to the next, and the next, and by the time the day is over you will be surprised at what you have accomplished. Most of our lives have to be lived, one task at a time.

* DUST never broke anything. Dusting frequently does.

Man is his own star; and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man

Commands all light, all influence, all fate.

Nothing to him falls early or too late.
Our acts our angels are, or good or ill,
Our fatal shadows that walk by us still.

Lifting the Iron Curtains

Missionaries

It was a missionary home in which our little group had gathered. There were the souvenirs of missionary travels, of long sojourns in distant lands. There is something about Brother J. Charles May and his companion that makes you feel how they keep always in mind that their stay at home is a leave of absence, and that they hear in spirit the voices of distant friends of other races calling them to come and help. The dedicated missionary, especially the foreign missionary, has something special about himself that distinguishes him from other men. It is something noble, and it draws a tribute of respect from the hearts of others. Home for a season, Brother and Sister May have the light of tropical skies still shining in their eyes.

Guests of honor in the May home on this occasion were Apostle and Sister M. A. McConley, with a fine record of overseas service to their credit, and very soon to depart for the European Mission. Splendidly equipped by experience, strong in physical and spiritual resources, motivated by an active capacity to love "all kinds and conditions of men," firm in their convictions and deeply grounded in the gospel, and above all possessed of an unshakable trust in God, this valiant couple goes bravely forward into the world's most difficult missionary spot. They will try to reconcile and unite in a common bond of love peoples who have lately struggled against each other for life and death, who have felt hate and fear, danger and suffering in a degree that most of us in America cannot imagine. Such people are our missionaries.

Help Wanted

Brother McConley spoke with feeling of the tremendous need of the peoples to whom they are going. He also spoke of the need of the prayers, the support, the funds, and increasing help to carry on the work that must be done. He realizes keenly that the people have been crushed spiritually and intellectually as well as in military and economic power; and that they need the gospel to give them new hope and plans for a better life.

People who live in comfort and security in the Americas cannot comprehend the want and need of their brothers and sisters of the Old World. But, in all Christian grace, we must try the best we can to comprehend it. And understanding alone is not enough. The purpose of understanding is that something practical and intelligent shall be done about it. From our insularity we must emerge, opening the doors of love and resources to save those who must perish unless we help.

The Iron Curtains

More than one iron curtain has walled the peoples of Europe into small, prisonlike hells in the past few years. The iron curtain was not invented by Stalin, nor built in Russia. There have been many others, and are yet many others. The iron curtains were built, ready and waiting, when Hitler clanged the doors shut in 1939. People could not escape, except by death; they could not alter the situation in any degree; they were not allowed the possession of their minds and spirits, let alone of their bodies.

More horrors of cruelty and suffering, more man-made misery, more diabolical barbarity have been revealed than the mind can grasp. Only those who had to endure some phase of it can understand even a part.

Relief does not come immediately with the lifting of the iron curtain. Agony continues among the survivors as they contemplate not only their personal miseries but also the ruins of their cities and countries and the graves of those who perished. It takes a long time to heal wounds like these, and even generations yet unborn will feel their effects.

So, long after the conflict, the iron curtain of war is still raised in parts of Europe, and people still live under war conditions. But it has been lifted in some places, and will be lifted in others. Into these areas, the forces of mercy and reorganization must go from lands that knew little of the blight of war. Into these areas, the missionaries must go to bring relief to suffering minds and spirits, even as others go to bring relief from famine, cold, disease, and want. The diseases of mind and spirit (as those who know often have reason to reflect) are quite as serious as those of the body.

Mercy

Surely, there is no person so poor but that he can do or give something to this cause. We cannot take our help in person. But we can give the means and the supplies to those who are designated to give this help. Let no day pass when we do not remember our unfortunate brothers and sisters in our prayers; let no day pass in which we do not strive ourselves to be instruments in God's hands for the fulfillment of those prayers!

All over Europe, all over the world, iron curtains—of war, of censorship, of barriers to trade and culture, to the free exchange of thought—must and will be lifted. The dead hand of dictatorship cannot last forever. Freedom will assert itself. Some are gone now. We must be ready to do our part in helping the nations to heal the wounds of war and build a better world.

The Conference Choir will be made up of singers throughout the church who are in attendance at the conference. There will be two regular rehearsals scheduled in the regular conference program. The choir will sing on the last Sunday of conference at the two morning sessions. All singers who plan to come to conference should plan to sing in this choir. It will not take you from regular conference sessions, but it will be a way for you to materially contribute to the success of the conference.

Local choirs throughout the church are urged to secure the conference music and use it locally between now and April 6. The music is excellent and not difficult and worthy of a place on any worship program.

Individual singers who do not belong to a regular choir are welcome to sing with us.

The conference list follows:

- "Come, Thou Almighty King," Alfred Whitehead, SATB @ 15c, published by Carl Fischer, No. CM602.
- "Let All the World in Every Corner Sing," E. T. Chapman, SATB @ 15c, published by C. C. Birchard & Co., No. 1189.
- "Sing Praise to God, the Almighty," Russian-Whitford, SATB @ 15c, published by C. C. Birchard & Co., No. 344.
- "A Festival Prelude," Bach, SATB @ 25c, published by C. C. Birchard & Co., No. 316.

Prayer

By Arthur A. Oakman

So set with the compass
By forgiving grace divine
Of comprehensive vision,
Apotheosis of time,
I reach with eager spirit
To grasp what lies within
The veil that hides th'Eternal,
The flesh—and reign of sin.

This exaltation's earnest
Came many years ago,
It lifted, chastened, cleansed me
And set my soul aglow.
'Twas providential stirring,
Incarnate Christly power
Quickening flesh and spirit
In service hour by hour.

Forth glorious creation,
It told with beauty rare
Incipient Zion heralded,
New heaven, new earth were there.

Eternal worlds unfolded,
Their courses held by love
Of God to man remolded,
By Christ's redemptive move.

From holy converse turning
I view my state with shame,
I cry for reassurance's
Renewal, quickening flame
Of ministry reascent
Empowered by vision's rood
In flesh made clean, resplendent—Crucifixion's amplitude.

his simple faith in God by asking him, "If God loves you, why doesn't he take better care of you? Why doesn't he tell someone to send you warm shoes and some coal and better food?" The little fellow thought for a moment; then, with tears starting in his eyes, said, "I guess he does tell somebody, but somebody forgets." Without knowing it the boy touched the "sore point" in the church's history—A. Bernard Webber.

Thoughts on Immortality

By Roy A. Cheville

This beautiful message was given at the memorial service for the late Mrs. Verne Deskin (Bertha Robinson) of Lamoni, whose passing leaves a great vacancy in that city and in the ranks of the faculty of Graceland College. Dr. Cheville's message will bring comfort and hope to all who mourn the passing of loved ones.

CROSSING OUR CONTINENT has become a common experience. Every day travelers set out from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific Coast. They take a diversity of ways. Many go by rail, on the northern, southern, or "overland routes." Many hurry across by air, others choose a course to their liking, going leisurely by car. Occasionally some turn the trip into a long hike, stopping at will and traveling as luck comes along. Diverse, indeed, are the experiences along the way. For some, crossing the continent is a monotonous journey as they long for their trip to come to an end. Others find it to be a sequence of thrills and delights, with each section contributing its scenic wonders. Out of New York City the traveler drinks of the beauties of the low, wooded Appalachians. The corn fields of the mid-west wave in rhythmic ripples. The bluffs along the Missouri fascinate with their unusual geologic formation. The plains of Nebraska stretch in appealing invitation to where they meet the sky. The Rocky Mountains rise in grandeur, seeming almost artificial as the traveler comes upon them. On the western shores, palm and eucalyptus trees await the journey's end.

THROUGH THE LAND OF THE LIVING

Each of us crosses the continent of life, journeying through "the land of the living." Some of us have a long excursion often beyond the classic "threescore years and ten." Some have to hurry along, completing the life trip in teens or twenties. In our moments of clearer vision, we see that it is not the time spent that matters so much; it is what happens to us en route. We come to learn that the log is not chronicled in passing of days.

We live in deeds, not years,

In feelings, not in figures on the dial:
We count time by heart throbs:

He lives most who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

In this outlook we ask not, "How long did he live?" but rather, "How much did he live?"

In this life journey over the continent some are bored with it all. They find no connection between the events that come one after another. They converse with themselves as did Hamlet:

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable,
Seem to me all the uses of this world.
Fie on't, ah fie! 'tis an unweeded garden that goes to seed,
Things rank and gross in nature possess it merely.

Such as they do not have a planned or unified tour. Each day's sun smiles on whatever happens to be going on at the moment. Some hasten on in order to have more time in which to be bored after arrival at whatever place they chance to stop. Then one day they come to the journey's end, never having arrived anywhere, for they had neither objective nor sense of direction.

Others find life one high adventure in pressing forward from the rising sun. They do not foresee all the scenes that await. Such prevision would take away the thrill of coming upon new faces and places. But they do have sense of direction. No temporary stay will chill their ardor. Paul in a Roman prison could write to the Philippian congregation: "I press forward towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Even though incarcerated, the journey was still going on.

SEA OR ISTHMUS

One day each comes to the terminal city that marks the end of his journey. For centuries this has been visioned as standing on the life-ward bank of a river or sea. This marked sharply the boundary between life and the hereafter. The Greeks brought mortals to the River Styx. There old Charon ferried them to the beyond. It was a gloomy passage to a drab land of spirits. The Hebrews brightened this for us, as we have come to liken death to crossing over Jordan into the Promised Land, after the way they entered Canaan. At least the country was inviting, and there was promise of providential guidance.

There is another picture of this terminal city. It stands not on the edge of water that divides the here from the hereafter, but at the beginning of an isthmus that connects two lands. Such a pattern speaks of the continuity of life. Life moves on across the isthmus; it does not stop at a stream and then start over again. This view squares with the divine process of growth everywhere operative in the universe. In this process one step emerges out of its predecision and evolves into what comes after. Eternal life becomes a going on existence with continuing unfoldment, not a sudden creation through magical power.

Some never see the isthmus, clouds hang over their terminal city, and no neck of land connects with the country at its celestial side. Adelaide Love has caught the soul of the fog-clouded traveler.

"Death is a sea," the doubter cried,
"Wherein are drowned love, hope, and strife."
"Ah, no, an isthmus," I replied,
"Linking two continents of life."

WE BUILD FOR THE LARGER CONTINENT

At best, our continental journey is a short century; an elephant outlives an eagle a century and a half. Our time falls short of that. There is so much to see, so much to discover, so much to understand. Very little can we round out with maturity. William Cowper once wrote that even our associations cannot achieve fullness: "There is not room enough for friendship to unfold itself in full bloom in such a nook of life as this." Such hungers rise of conceptions of eternal life as qualitative rather than quantitative. We may assume that one of the requirements for eternal life is the sense of an infinity yet scarcely touched, linked with a pull to continued contact with this untapped future. If the journey of life is dull here, why should one long for an eternity in which to be bored. God calls us to a future of high adventure of creating with him. The continent across the isthmus becomes a land of promise for exploring the vastness of our universe.

WE START FROM WHERE WE ARE

In fancy we have thought of some fairy power that could lift us from our mundane surroundings and transport us to an ethereal place more to our liking. Not infrequently death has been interpreted as a means of escape. By a wave of the hand of God, all unpleasantness and weakness of the past is to be blotted out. There is no foundation to such fancies. Certainly it does not square with the orderly procedures of God everywhere else in his world. The words of Revelation 22:11 may be taken as descriptive as well as condemnatory: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still, and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still." No magic stream will bring instantaneous transformation. What a challenge such a view brings to make each day's journey a progression beyond each yesterday! It prompts us, too, to realize that everything that happens to us conditions our eternal happiness. In recent years we have been seeing how the set of childhood affects youth and adulthood. The unhappy child is likely to become an adult whose life is tied in knots. Likewise each present day conditions the long-time set of the soul.

AT THE POINT OF THE ISTHMUS

Lives that retain their youthful spirit find zests in adventures of travel. We can picture the glow of expectancy of a friend about to set out on a journey. There is likely to be a bit of apprehension, but there is also a thrill in meeting new scenes. The itinerary is to be charted and the belongings packed. Very assuring is it if we can have the service of a competent travel agency or an experienced friend. Some of our modern au revoir's carry the healthy spirit of leave-taking. This may be colloquial, but it is wholesome, "So long! I'll be seeing you!" It is to be regretted that we do not read more of this spirit into our farewells at death. I fear we do an injustice to our children when we lead them to think of death with shrinking and rob them of adventure into the next continent.

This relaxed leave-taking comes with spiritual maturity. Some twenty years ago my roommate and I parted as we left Graceland. When we separated at the station and my train went on, it seemed that for a while the bottom dropped out of my world. I had to learn that there was possible a kind of invisible communion with those with whom I had been walking. I had to learn, too, that some of that buddy of mine stayed with me, and I presume a bit of me went with him. How many times, since then, my friends have crossed over the isthmus, and I have had to keep alive the comradeship I knew so well! Sometimes I could expect that paratrooper shot down in the Battle of the Bulge to walk into my room and start up a conversation just as he used to do. That air pilot who crashed into the Pacific seems just outside my door ready to enter. This friend, whom we memorialize today, seems yet with us, so we shall almost expect to meet her in the hall and exchange cheery greetings.

Across the isthmus are those who wait to live with us in the expanding life of the new continent. "Mother Robinson," who took Bertha into her home was one of those "mothers in Israel." I can imagine her saying "I've been waiting for you. You've been pretty tired. There's so much we'll want to talk over."

WE KEEP TRAVELING ON

Those of us who remain on this side of the isthmus will keep to our journey. Each day's journey will be colored by the thrilling future in a

With Reference to The Gathering

The following discussion referring to some phases of the gathering and other related matters, in the form of a letter of inquiry by Roy Weldon to Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and the Bishop's answer, will be of interest and may be read with profit by a considerable number of our people. The correspondence is accordingly given place in the Herald, for the wider circulation thereby made possible.—THE EDITORS.

The Question:

Route 5
Warrensburg, Missouri
December 9, 1946

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp
The Auditorium
Independence, Missouri
Dear Brother DeLapp:

I greatly enjoyed your presentation on problems of the gathering, to the Central Missouri Stake High Council, at Lee's Summit three Sundays ago.

Your statement that one of the greatest problems in your office comes from prophecies which come from various sources on disasters, calamities, etc., interested me greatly. I believe this problem has a positive as well as a negative aspect, and that it has grown to such proportions as to warrant some very careful consideration, and perhaps action.

I have become personally involved in this question of "What of the Future?" In the Saints' Herald for April 29, 1944, there appeared an article by R. L. Amsberry entitled "What of the Future?" In this article was a quotation, or quotations, from impressions about the future which my wife gave at the Northwestern Iowa reunion at Woodbine, Iowa, in 1943. Her impressions were that 1946 would usher in forces (inflation) that would bring a series of disaster years. We had no foreknowledge that this was to be published, and to say the least, we were greatly surprised when it appeared.

You might be surprised if I told you just how much mail and how many people have contacted me since that time, in respect to the possibility of disastrous times immediately at hand. Many of those perturbed and concerned are not just crackpots, but are good stable Latter Day Saints. I believe the problems have reached such proportions as to warrant action looking towards clarification.

The problem has several aspects:

I. Prophecies and statements in the Herald:

A. Saints' Herald, June 22, 1932, by Joseph Luff, Prophecy on plagues, droughts, famine, war, panic, etc.

B. Herald for March 16, 1941, by Charles Fry, under President F. M. Smith's authorization, warns of desolations: "Nearer comes the danger, nearer, Will ye bide the day?"

C. Herald for January 6, 1940, by Eldora

Emerson, "Sleeping Zion" warns of desolations, etc.: "Ye have walked too long with Babel, with her also ye shall weep. Sorrow yours how sore ye know not, if her ways ye longer keep. Zion, Zion! sleeping! sleeping! Will ye just slumber on? The sands of time are in my keeping and those sands are nearly gone."

D. Saints' Herald—"We stand on the threshold of a great change."

You were present when this was delivered at a young people's convention in Berkeley, California, in November, 1939. You were present when Brother Rushton asked me to write it down so he could send it to the Herald. It was later published in the Herald under President F. M. Smith's authorization. It contains the following statement in regard to the great storm or upheaval:

"When the great day comes, the day of the great storm, the day when the waves of social upheaval and human passion shall well mountain high and the fierce winds and the hurricanes of economic collapse and social commotion shall sweep across the great ocean of human life and the very elements shall rage and war. In that day the great ship of modern civilization shall wallow helplessly in the seas and it shall list, and it shall lurch and sink beneath the waves never to rise again: but in that same day, the sturdy little ship of Zion shall pass through the storm and safely land on the shores of time."

E. In the June 8, 1946, Herald, in the editorial Israel A. Smith writes on the "Signs of the Times," here are a few sentences:

"From the inception of the Restoration Movement there appeared prophetic indications of a great and dreadful day of the Lord."

Comment is made upon Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4: "The calamity which should come upon the face of the earth."

"The present dispensation rapidly approaches what? Either a Utopian world or a condition of chaos and anarchy never before witnessed. How shall we resolve it? Shall we out of wishful thinking believe there will be the universal peace attempted through the United Nations? Or shall we recognize as almost immediately threatening the terrible conditions foretold by the prophets of all dispensations?"

F. Herald, April 29, 1944, "What of the Future?"

As before mentioned, this article contains my wife's impressions regarding 1946 being a year in which there would become manifest those forces (perhaps inflation) which would eventuate in extremely disastrous conditions of desolation, famines, etc. The article itself bolsters the above predictions with a great deal of economic data, etc.

As before mentioned, this article as well as others printed in the Herald, and above mentioned, have stirred up considerable interest. Some have apparently written the Presidency about these things. President Smith published a letter and his comments on the same anent the Amsberry article and the year 1946.

II. Prophecies by church officials:

A. "Admonition," Joseph Luff:

"The restraining gates my mercy led me oft to interpose

Shall the devastating currents fraught with woe no more oppose?

Whoso will may bide the hour, naught can harm whom God protecteth."

B. Prophecy at Walnut Park before the war closed:

"Following the war very difficult times will come. There will be an economic collapse. This country will be laid desolate as are some of the countries in Europe.

III. Central Missouri Stake Reunion, 1946, a High Priest:

The prophecy in Daniel about the last days, "there shall come a time of trouble such as has not been known since there was a nation," is about to be fulfilled. Saints warned to stand on holy ground. God will preserve those who are righteous, etc.

IV. Another High Priest, outside the stakes, but in the region round about, prophesied that this area would be laid desolate like a desert.

V. Prophecies have been coming from official church officers, members of the Twelve, District Presidents, High Priests, etc., of famines, plagues, and desolations near at hand. I have notations (not copies) on about 30 of these.

It appears the church, in official capacity, is making an uncertain sound on the trumpet of the future. The church, through its official organ, the Herald, is publishing prophecies and statements about catastrophe, and many of its higher officers are prophesying the same at reunions and conferences. At the same time, there are coming from the Herald and from the pulpit, warnings and declarations against prophets of catastrophe and doom. I quote from one of these warnings against prophecies of disaster (Saints' Herald Editorial, June 29, 1946):

"This postwar period is providing a field day for the prophets of doom, the apostles of despair, and the predictors of catastrophe. The quarrels of the victorious United Nations, and particularly of the Big Three, gave them a good start. The atomic bomb gave them a strong argument, and they are making the most of it.

"False Prophets

Lately, younger members of the church have been disturbed by unguarded talk of older members in which the apocalyptic literature of the Bible has figured strongly, along with current predictions of disaster for the world. This is very discouraging to the young who must prepare for careers, build homes, and plan for the future. People who predict disaster mean well; such people always arise in times of danger and uncertainty, and their influence is detrimental.

All this has happened before, many times. It would be hard to find any period since the time of Christ when somebody was not predicting the end of the world by fire, collision with other planets, war, tidal wave, or something. These prophets have always been wrong, and the world has always gone on in its course.

"We should say to people: Do not let them frighten you; God is in charge of his world; His purposes will not fail; his work will be done."

Brother DeLapp, I submit these facts to you:

A. The church itself, through its official organ, the Herald, and through its official personnel, has been the chief and major source for the promulgation and spreading of prophecies of catastrophe, doom, and disaster. For darkness, woe, and pessimism, some of the prophecies published in the Herald since 1930 can scarcely be eclipsed or equaled by anything from any other source.

B. At the same time the church in official capacity has been spreading these prophecies of doom from press and pulpit, it has also from press and pulpit been issuing warnings and declarations against prophecies of catastrophe, desolation, and doom.

To say the least, the trumpet is making an uncertain sound. If a great day of visitation and disaster is at hand, surely the Lord ought to give us warning through the proper channels (the church in official capacity). Our people have been taught to discount manifestations from outside or from local sources, and to give heed to that which comes through ordained and official channels. Brother DeLapp, I submit to you this question: "Which shall we give heed to, the prophecies of disaster, or the warnings against the prophecies and propbets of disaster?" The church in official capacity seems to be sponsoring both.

Now I proceed towards the purpose of this letter. Our people are widely perturbed with apprehension and concern over the uncertainties of the immediate future. This state of "nerves" and uncertainty seems to arise from three sources:

A. Prophecies and manifestations official and unofficial (already discussed).

B. Prophecies of disasters, plagues, catastrophes, etc., to take place in the last days as found in our Three Standard Books.

C. Economic and political predictions from leading economists, educators, and statesmen.

Since the war ended, there has been a decided shift away from optimism towards pessimism. Statements of commentators and persons in authority have been growing less reassuring. I list a few of these:

A. Kansas City Star, October 16, 1946, Dr. Virgil Jordan, President of the National Industrial Conference Board, predicted to the Union League Club in Chicago, "The United States is at the brink of a deep economic depression." Dr. Jordan suggested that if the Republican Party is returned to power in 1948, it will be crushed in another turn of the economic cycle.

B. Kansas City Times, May 20, 1946, Law or Chaos:

Our government is on the brink of economic chaos that may turn to civil war. Let's not take this lightly. When constitutional government fails, then we face Communism or Fascism. Let's keep our America.

Kansas City's Own Merchants.

C. Kansas City Times, May 13, 1946, Bowles Fears Disaster if Controls Are Dropped:

Washington, May 12—Chester Bowles, economic stabilizer, addressing a citizen's rally in New York today by telephone, declared that if price and rent controls are dropped, or if we are forced to weaken in any way our efforts to hold them down, we shall face a national disaster, and inflation that would surely end in collapse.

D. Philip Murray, head of the C. I. O., is freely predicting a terrible financial collapse.

Kansas City Star, December 14, 1945, Philip Murray, C. I. O. President, charged today that vital economic data is being concealed from the American public even while the nation is heading with "terrifying speed" towards a financial crash.

E. Roger Babson, famous economist and expert on business, who is credited with accurately predicting the Wall Street crash and subsequent depression in 1929, is and has been making some most gloomy predictions. Within the last month he has purchased two farms and an old brick building in a small Kansas community. He declares he is moving all his valuables from New York to this Kansas community.

"Bury a few drums of oil, cache a liberal supply of canned and dried foods and other essentials which would be hard to obtain in the event that agriculture, manufacturing, and distribution break down."

F. Mormon Church—reports have come from members of the Mormon Church that they have three years' supply ahead of food and clothing in anticipation of a time of unparalleled depression.

St. Joseph News-Press, November 20, 1946, has an article, "Church to Expand Its Welfare Plan." Leaders of the Latter-day (Mormon) Church Welfare Plan today embarked on their most ambitious project after church officials warned of "hard times ahead." A 50 per cent production hike from 1947 was authorized by the church plan which was formulated during the 1930's to insure the church membership of almost one million, with food, clothing, and other essentials of life.

In the past few years I have talked with many people about the immediate future. The most fearsome thing in the minds of many of the people seems to be "economic collapse." Many of them have told me they feel sure that it is coming. It is predicted by all three agencies above listed—prophecies printed in Herald, prophecies delivered by church officers, predictions by Bowles, Babson, Murray, and others, and statements in the Three Standard Books. A prophecy by Christ in the Book of Mormon contains terrible implications:

"Yea, we be unto the Gentiles except they repent [all classes of social ill, divorce, juvenile delinquency, crimes, consumption of tobacco and liquors, etc., have been growing progressively worse] for it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Father, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee [all mechanical power measured in terms of horsepower] and I will destroy thy chariots, and I will cut off the cities of thy land and throw down all thy strongholds."—3 Nephi 9: 101.

The implications of cutting off our horsepower and therefore destruction of our chariots by an economic collapse or otherwise is a sobering thing to contemplate.

A. 130 million people depend on the chariot for their food, clothing, heat. About 90 per cent of our food is produced by means of tractors, combine harvesters, etc.

B. 100 per cent of our food depends upon the chariot (trucks, railroads, etc.) for transportation to market and for milling and processing.

In case of an economic collapse and subsequent cessation of all business and transportation, what would happen to our cities? According to Babson, they will have to empty themselves. It would be a situation of chaos, famine, and difficulty without parallel. In his book, If Inflation Comes, Babson advises that if inflation comes, money should be spent for the welfare of others and yourself. Thus it all brings us face to face with the big question: Are we as a church flying blind? Are we sure what the morrow may or may not bring? Is there an economic collapse around the corner? If so, are we ready for it? I know, from my own experience, that many of our good people are afraid the church would be disastrously affected by an economic collapse. They are afraid all the money the church has in bonds and in the banks will be a total loss. They are afraid the only values that will survive an economic collapse will be those in lands and real estate. They quote the advice in Doctrine and Covenants to buy lands. They are also afraid the church has no program of aid and welfare to meet an emergency where the cities would be forced to empty themselves in search of food and warmth and succor. It has been said, about half of our people live in cities, and are dependent totally on our present economic system for everything. They are unprepared for a sudden emergency which requires their living to come from agriculture. If an economic collapse is in the offing, should we as a church do as the Mormons are doing and make preparations in food and clothing reserves? In such an emergency the Saints who live in the cities would apparently have to be taken care of by our people in agricultural districts who have foods and means for warmth at hand. An economic collapse with social chaos would cut off food, clothing, and all public utilities from the cities. This would render the large cities untenable, thus fulfilling the Book of Mormon prophecy. The church was flying blind when the last depression overtook us. Our own bank in Independence was caught unawares. The present Bishopric was not responsible for that debacle. The present Bishopric has made a historic contribution to the Restoration Movement by leading us out of that difficulty. The present Bishopric can make a more historic contribution by correctly gauging approaching conditions and making the necessary preparation to meet those conditions.

The above questions are being discussed by our people. Many are apprehensive and perturbed. I am free to admit that I am myself apprehensive. The facts and reasons for apprehension are too voluminous and come from too many authoritative sources to be passed by lightly.

If our stocks and bonds and money in the bank and in industrial enterprises were all we stood to lose, it would be less perturbing. The financial loss, however, would be a small item in a condition where some predict that due to economic chaos food would be unobtainable and in the great metropolitan areas people would perish in vast numbers. This question is more than one of money. It is a question of life to the half of our people who are not living in agricultural districts.

I think it is time for all of us to lay our cards on the table. Too much is at stake. I admit freely, I don't know the answer to all this. I am a firm believer that the Lord called the men who now lead the church. I believe if you as presiding bishop do not know for a surety what the future will bring, that the Lord will reveal it to you. I for one would be willing to go the limit if the church would set a period of fasting and prayer for light and guidance as to what should be done in preparation for the future.

My last check of this current year was by far the largest I ever tendered to the Bishopric. I am a shareholder in what happens to the church. My energy, my time, and all I live for is invested in it. I am anxious for the church.

My letter is getting too long, I want to sum up the issue:

A. Substantial per cent of our people are in a state of uncertainty as to what they ought to do to prepare for future conditions. For my own benefit, as well as for the benefit of others, I ask the following questions:

1. Do you, as presiding bishop, believe that an economic collapse with subsequent chaos and loss of life by famine, etc., and loss of finances invested in stocks, banks, industry, etc., is possible in the near future?
2. Do you believe that conditions are sufficiently uncertain as to warrant encouraging our people, especially in agricultural districts, to accumulate and maintain food reserves in preparation for supplying aid and succor in case of untoward developments critically affecting our membership in cities? (I have 700 hives of bees and 160 acres of land. I could easily maintain a reserve of tons of honey as well as several hundred bushels of wheat, beans, etc.)
3. If, as Babson and others predict, the present inflation ends in economic collapse and financial crash and chaos, does the church stand to lose any money invested in securities, stocks, and industrial enterprises? If so, how much would be the approximate loss?
4. In case of total financial collapse and economic chaos, would the church's ministerial reserves be available to render relief to the missionaries, as planned?
5. Why does the church publish both prophecies of woe and warnings against prophecies of woe? Is it because some church officials are pessimistic in their outlook while others are optimistic?
6. Does either the Presiding Bishopric or the Presidency have sufficient light on future developments to know for a surety that the measures the church has adopted will best meet whatever the future holds in store?
7. If the Presiding Bishopric and the Presidency have the light and divine assurance that they are taking the measures that will best meet future requirements with minimum loss and maximum good to the church, why not dispel the uncertainty and anxiety that exist among the membership? An authoritative declaration from those whom God has called and in whom the membership have greatest confidence would do much to quiet troubled waters and restore confidence.
8. If the Presiding Bishopric or Presidency feels they need more light in order to be completely and unquestionably assured that they are following the best procedure to meet the future wisely and well, why not call for a period of fasting and prayer throughout the church that the Lord may give the light and direction necessary to meet the uncertainties of the future? (Why could this not be done in preparation for the next General Conference?) I could exercise myself in such an effort with no small degree of confidence that light and guidance would be forthcoming sufficient for our requirements and which would bring a sense of confidence and trust and security that some of us now need.

In closing, I want to say, Brother DeLapp, that I have written with the greatest frankness because I have confidence in you, and that you will not misconstrue my motives. I have the greatest sympathy for you because of the problems and responsibilities which are yours. I am offering no criticism whatsoever. I am anxious for the church. I hunger for assurance that as a church we may have divine guidance to face the future. The Lord is my witness that many times I have held up both you and President Smith for divine blessing.

I apologize to you for burdening you with such a lengthy letter. At your convenience, I shall look forward to an answer.

Very sincerely yours,

ROY WELDON.

The Answer:

December 26, 1946

Mr. Roy Weldon,

Route 5

Warrensburg, Missouri

Dear Brother Weldon:

Your letter of December 9 has been read by me with a great deal of interest, and I appreciate very much the fine spirit in which you have written. The question that you raise as to policy and the comments that you have made relative to certain articles and statements having to do with prophecies which have appeared in the Herald have been very carefully studied and considered by me, and I am glad to give you my thinking and my reaction to the comments you have made.

I was also glad to have had the opportunity of discussing the subject of the gathering before the Stake High Council of the Central Missouri Stake, and I am, of course, interested in your reaction to the statement that I made relative to the effect upon the gathering that comes from ill-advised statements under prophetic guise.

Speaking of such statements in a general way, it seems to me that there are positive approaches that can be made, and it has been my concern that there has been so much emphasis on that which is negative—even undue emphasis given to the disasters and calamities that are coming upon the earth. It was because people have moved on the basis of fear and, in many instances, have moved prematurely without having made due preparation (without, in fact, having complied with the laws of the church) that I raised the question, and I continue to raise the question of the adverse effects that such dire prophecies have on the future movement of the church.

In my opinion, it does not take a prophet to sense the imminence of disastrous events. In the last two decades our world has passed through adverse conditions and is continuing to pass through conditions which were foretold in Bible prophecies. These conditions have been apparent to even the most casual student. The positive side of the prophetic message needs more emphasis.

You refer to a number of statements that have been made in the Herald; time will not permit discussion of all these, and I am referring only to the one to which you make reference, captioned "We Stand on the Threshold of a Great Change." This article was published in the Saints' Herald on February 3, 1940, and it is not, in my opinion, negative. It is, in fact, affirmative, for there is therein recognized the danger inherent in our world, and it points to the even greater social upheaval; but there is also much in it which is definitely affirmative and reassuring.

You quote but two paragraphs of the article in your letter to me; I would like to quote just a little bit more preceding the paragraphs you quoted, and one paragraph following, and I would like to place special emphasis upon the affirmative declaration that is made therein. To do so, this has been underlined:

To you this morning who shall leave this young people's convention to go forth on the great seas of life to get aboard the little ship of Zion, to you who shall give your time, your talents, your energies, and your life to the work of this church, to you also I prophesy—instead of defeatism you will find realization. Instead of futility, you shall find a high and holy purpose. Instead of despair you will find hope, life, and exceeding great joy; and instead of death you shall find birth.

Then when the day of the great storm comes, the waves of social upheaval and human passion shall roll mountain high; and the fierce winds and the hurricanes of economic collapse and social commotion shall sweep across the great ocean of human life, and the very elements will rage and roar.

In that day the great ship of modern civilization shall wallow helplessly in the seas and it shall list, and it shall lurch and sink beneath the waves never to rise again; but in that same day, the sturdy little ship of Zion shall pass through the storm and safely land on the shores of time.

Let us then be strong and of a good courage and let us lay hold on the great work of the church, for before us lie the open seas, the highroad to divine romance, to spiritual adventure, to great opportunities, to such opportunities as no generation of youth has ever known even since the days of Enoch.

If you will re-read that, it would seem to me that even your own apprehensions should be allayed. It is true there may come personal difficulties and trials and even the possibility of social revolution, but the promise is given that Zion shall continue.

In fact, this affirmative declaration is in harmony with some experiences that I had following my assuming of responsibility in the Presiding Bishopric. One particularly was at the time that the banks closed and with them came the tying up of all the funds of the church. Our creditor liabilities were of such magnitude, including those of current character as well as those of longer maturities, that the church's situation seemed hopeless; and yet, in response to prayer there came to me the definite assurance that the church would recover from its condition and that there would be established a sound foundation upon which the church could build more safely and carry on its program of evangelization and the establishing of Zion.

It was because of that assurance that it was possible to carry through those trying years; and, frankly, I have every reason to believe that the church shall continue to move forward in its great mission, despite the conditions which surround us and despite those dangers which we see in the immediate future. The field of prophecy is so vast that it is impossible to cover it adequately, but it should be kept in mind that while the prophecies given scripturally foretell of untoward conditions, there is also the admonition given by Jesus upon different occasions that we would not know the time of his coming.

And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked.—Matthew 24: 32.

. . . . and what I say unto one I say unto all men; watch, therefore, for ye know not at what hour your Lord doth come.—Matthew 24: 49.

Specifically you refer to certain points which you list under "A" and "B," which you state:

A. The church itself through its official organ, the Herald, and through its official personnel, has been the chief and major source for the promulgation and spreading of prophecies of catastrophe, doom, and disaster. For darkness, woe and pessimism, some of the prophecies published in the Herald since 1930 can scarcely be eclipsed or equalled by anything from any other source.

B. At the same time the church in official capacity has been spreading these prophecies of doom from press and pulpit, it has also from press and pulpit been issuing warnings and declarations against prophecies of catastrophe, desolation and doom.

I am not in any way attempting to reconcile the positions that are taken by others who have written in the Herald, sounding a note of pessimism and warning. In my discussion before the Stake High Council, I explained that there were those who acted upon purported prophecies of doom given in certain cities by leaving those cities and moving to the central areas. I did not in any way minimize the fact that bad conditions exist in large metropolitan areas, and in my opinion they will continue to exist. I did emphasize the need for people to comply with the law, making adequate preparation before moving to the central areas and that they should not make moves based upon fear.

I also pointed out that the same conditions which exist in other great cities exist also to a large extent in the metropolitan area in which Independence is located. Therefore, movements made by individuals on the theory that a geographical change will get them into the inner circle where they will be protected is working on a false premise. Our task is a task of education, and it means that people should prepare in harmony with the law.

I think the point of difference lies in the fact that purported prophecies advising people to flee to the central areas because of conditions which are existing in their particular area are the ones against which the church is declaring itself—not against any well thought through or prepared statement describing the conditions within the world today.

In specific reference to your question which you submit (which is, "Which shall we give heed to, the prophecies of disaster, or the warnings against the prophecies and prophets of disaster?"), I would reply that we should give heed to whatever utterances are made which are well founded and which point to events both to come and events which are happening which are detrimental and in conflict with the mission and program of the church.

The solution to the problems which create these conditions is not, however, to be found in ill-advised moves of our people to the central areas. The fact that such conditions exist should stimulate us to improve our economic and our spiritual condition, complying with the law of the gathering and making those moves which have been approved by the General Church officials.

The church, in fact, is not contradictory in its position. The church is opposed to individuals speaking in prophetic guise and in such manner directing the movement of our people, which movements are not in harmony with the law of the gathering. In answer to this question, then, we can but say that all of our people should be aware of the untoward conditions which are in the world today and prepare themselves for conditions in the future which may be even more critical.

In your letter you state, further, "Our people are widely perturbed with apprehension and concern over the uncertainties of the immediate future," and point out that this uncertainty arises from the three sources: (A) Prophecies and manifestations, official and unofficial (already discussed); (B) Prophecies of disasters, plagues, catastrophes, etc., to take place in the last days, as found in our Three Standard Books; and (C) Economic and political predictions from leading economists, educators, and statesmen. You state that since the war there has been a decided shift away from optimism toward pessimism, and that statements of commentators and persons in authority have been growing less reassuring; and then you proceed to quote from a number of different sources. If you were to take the time, you could quote from others who contradict these same authorities and speak quite optimistically relative to the future of our country.

It is my personal opinion that conditions are not favorable, nor can we expect immediate recovery either nationally or internationally in the economic and political fields. I am not taking the time to comment upon all of the references you have given, but will just make brief comments regarding the position taken by Roger Babson: I have read the book to which you refer If Inflation Comes, quite carefully; you state it was published in 1937; the copy that I read is a revised edition which brought the book up to date. I also noticed a comment in the paper the other day in reference to the statement he made relative to the purchase of land in a small community in Kansas. Many of the suggestions that he has made are, in my opinion, quite far-fetched, and a careful analysis will, I am sure, show that they are not feasible. In one place in the book he advises people to move on the farm; and points out in another place in the book that farming is not a profitable vocation and can be considered only as a subsistence or food-supplying occupation. From the standpoint of big business such as he is engaged in, perhaps farming may not be considered too profitable, but the fact still remains that there are thousands of farmers throughout the country who farm not only for a vocation, but as a definite business. In fact, farming is becoming more and more of a business, scientifically managed and operated. It takes more than the desire to farm, and for individuals to move on any mass scale to the country to engage in the business of farming would, in my opinion, be disastrous to our total economy.

Following the last World War, there were those who moved to the farms to get away from the other problems of life and to find the easier way of living. The result was that within a few years abandoned farms by the hundreds were on the market, abandoned by those who had had no experience, training, or background necessary to make farming a success.

He also admits that if a catastrophe such as he pictures as a possibility (which is in fact a revolution) and the leaving of the cities by millions of people occurs, they would immediately overrun the farming population in their quest for food and sustenance. This being so, there would be little security to be found in the business of farming.

In other places in his book, he makes other recommendations. Refer to pages 214-215; you will find this statement, which immediately follows his discussion of farming:

... the ideal situation is to have a profession or trade or small store in connection with one's farm; under such condition, one can depend on the farm for security and sustenance in an emergency. It also serves as a splendid training ground for the children, yet one would be able to get his cash money from a vocation, trade or little store. To be a real hedge against inflation, however, such a farm should not be too near a city.

He goes on to say, however, "It is true that the world is gradually getting better, but only gradually." He of course is attempting to discuss the question of inflation and the effect it would have on our economy. Even he does not take a position relative to a long-time condition of disaster.

On page 173, he makes certain conclusions relative to investments that should be made based upon what happened in Europe. This is summarized in the following statement:

All the above means approximately as follows: "Invest 20 per cent in useful real estate and commodities; 20 per cent in very short-term bonds which are sure of payment at maturity; 60 per cent in a carefully selected list of common stocks."

In a statement of policy which I will make later, I will refer to our policy, which would avoid investment in common stocks.

We could go on perhaps at great length in a discussion of this book. I think there are some good suggestions in it and others that are based pretty much upon speculation.

Your reference to the Mormon church I have read with interest, but frankly feel that we do not have authoritative information on which to base judgment as to the success of their plan. In any event, it seems to be limited pretty much to the state of Utah. From reading some of their own literature, it seems they are still faced with the same problems that confront the rest of the world and which have not been solved up to the present time.

In regard to your reference to 3 Nephi 9:101; this is in harmony with other prophetic utterances which have been recorded in the Scriptures and points to conditions of the present day. But again Scripture has not been explicit in respect to the exact date of the coming of Christ.

What you say regarding the dependency we have on horsepower is true, and will be even more true in the years which are ahead of us. Total economic collapse can come only when Government no longer exists. The American people have been able to adjust themselves and to adjust Government in time of stress and need to meet the situation, however critical that situation may be. I still have confidence in the ability of the American people so to do, and will continue to have, because I believe that the establishment of Zion is dependent upon the continuance of a Government in the United States (the Land of Joseph) to bring about the consummation of God's eternal purpose, which is the establishment of Zion.

Now again referring to economic conditions, and you refer again to Babson, stating that if inflation comes money should be spent for welfare of others and yourself; and you raise the question, Are we as a church flying blind? Are we sure what the morrow may or may not bring? Is there an economic collapse around the corner? If so, are we ready for it? You state that you know from your own experience that many of our good people are afraid; further, that they think the church would be disastrously affected by an economic collapse; they are afraid the money the church has in bonds and in banks would be a total loss; they are afraid the only values that will survive an economic collapse will be those in lands and real estate. They quote the advice in Doctrine and Covenants to "buy land." They are also afraid the church has no program of aid and welfare to meet any emergency where the cities would be forced to empty themselves in search of food, warmth and succor. We feel that there is an answer to all of these questions. Definitely, in our opinion, the church is not "flying blind."

In 1931 we adopted a financial policy which was aimed not only to alleviate the immediate situation, but which was to govern the church in the administration of its business affairs in times of prosperity as well as in times of adversity. Our economic history since the founding of our country has been one of economic recessions and economic prosperity. We have gone through tremendous changes. These changes have become more accelerated with the growth of population and the expansion and growth of business and industry. It is our opinion that there will again be a period of depression and, furthermore, that it is absolutely vital to our well-being that we have liquid resources with which to meet the operating expenses of the church. We have gone even further than that—this same policy could well be applied to the individual, for it is a policy which, in our opinion, is based upon sound principles and, furthermore, the experiences of past centuries prove that it is a good policy; so at least we are not flying blind.

Are we sure what the morrow may or may not bring? No one is sure of what the morrow may bring; this has also been true down through the ages, but out of the experiences of the past we can judge reasonably accurately the trends that will take place in the immediate future. If history repeats itself (and there is every reason to believe that it will) there will be deflation. As to total economic collapse, it is very difficult to envision what would be a total collapse. Would one say that the collapse of 1929, followed by the depression in ensuing years, was a total collapse? It was not; but it was a very severe deflation—one of the worst our country has ever passed through. An economic deflation in the future will undoubtedly be more severe than the last one that we passed through.

There is every reason to believe from statistical data that is available that it will be more severe, for our inflation has been greater, and we have just passed through the greatest war in the history of our civilization. The aftermath of this war has left nations in political and spiritual turmoil. Resources have been utilized to the point of impoverishing many countries. Morale has broken. Millions of people are homeless. The most important step necessary to bring about improved economic conditions is the building up of the spiritual and social morale of these people, fitting them to become productive members of society again. This will take time and in the meantime it seems very likely that business conditions will decline. And as has been the case in the past when deflation starts it, too, will have a downward cycle which undoubtedly will be rather rapid.

In the event of deflation, liquid resources are necessary to carry on the work of the church in all of its departments. There is little likelihood of a total economic collapse with total loss of all Government securities and money. If such a condition existed, lands too would be of little value, for it would mean world revolution and the control of the farms in the hands of those who might become mighty.

At the last General Conference action was had authorizing the Presiding Bishopric to make investments in farm lands from Ministerial funds. The Bishopric has proceeded cautiously in making investments of this character, but some farms have been purchased. We use the word "cautiously" advisedly because we have known of personal fortunes lost in land speculation and in ill-advised farming enterprises; and good judgment is essential to success in our land purchase program. The farms we have purchased have been purchased on the basis of their productive record and their usefulness to us in our gathering program. The purchase of lands necessitates a program as to their use, and such a program is being developed and will continue to be a long-time policy of the Presiding Bishopric, both in respect to land purchase and to its use.

In this respect, we have to think of the maintaining of our missionary force, for the church has been commissioned to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ unto all nations. And in a period of deflation, if this objective is to be attained, we will require liquid resources, or in other words, cash, for missionaries in distant fields cannot be supported from the products raised on lands in the central areas.

If the conditions pictured by you were to take place within the next few years, we would be in a relatively strong position to meet the needs of all of our people. The policies we are pursuing will eventually bring economic strength to our people as a whole, and it is imperative that we continue a teaching program showing the responsibility of individual members to the attainment of the objectives of the church as a whole. It is advisable that reserves be set up by the individual members of the church. As economic organization is achieved, storehouses will be established, but concurrently with the establishment of storehouses, individual members of the church should set aside food-stuffs and have other household inventories adequate to run them for a period of a year. This program should be related to the program that every individual should set for himself the goal of acquiring an inheritance (a home or its equivalent).

You refer to the condition which existed when the last depression struck. You state the church was flying blind at that time; but you agree that the present Bishopric was not responsible for that debacle. I will not go into an analysis of the trends which led to that condition, but suffice it to say that I do not think the previous Bishopric was responsible for it either. We appreciate this expression of confidence; we have attempted through the years that are past to set the church upon a safe and sound financial base. There is no comparison between the condition of the church today and the condition that existed in 1931. At that time we were in debt, with no liquid resources to carry us through a period of depression. In the last fifteen years, the church has been freed of indebtedness, and in addition to that has set up substantial reserves in its Operating Fund, in its Ministerial Reserve Fund and its Missionary Reserve Fund and Relief Fund, and has also set aside funds for building needs for the Auditorium, Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

If we should lose every dollar that we have in the banks today, including our Government bonds, we would still be in a much stronger position than we were when we faced the last depression. These reserves that are set up are reasonably adequate for the present, but the program of establishing Zion, expanding our missionary force sufficient to carry the gospel message into foreign fields, will require even greater resources than we have at the present time.

There is ample opportunity for the investment in additional lands in the immediate years that are ahead of us. The Bishopric has given consideration to the organization of a land-purchasing trust. This will, without question, be consummated and will provide for the mobilization of funds for this purpose. The funds that we have on hand seem to most people to be large; measured in the light of the great needs of the church for functioning in all of the fields, it is not more than sufficient.

You express a belief that the Lord called the men who now lead the church; further, that you believe if I, as Presiding Bishop, do not have a surety what the future will bring, that the Lord will reveal it to me. If I did not feel that the policy which has been adopted by the church and which has brought the church out of its condition of debt had divine approbation, I would not have the assurance that is mine as to the rightness of this policy. I am confident that the policy is sound, and this assurance has come out of the experiences of the years in which I have served.

I feel, further, that the Lord will give us direction and guidance adequate to meet the problems that confront us from day to day. The policy that has been adopted is a policy which, in our opinion, will continue to govern throughout the years which are ahead, and will, if complied with by individuals of the church and by the church itself, pull us through conditions of adversity and prosperity.

Replying specifically to the questions you ask at the close of your letter: (1) I think that a condition of economic collapse with subsequent loss of life by famine and loss of finances invested in storehouse, banks, and industry, is possible, but that the possibility is very remote, and certainly not of an immediate character.

(2) I think, as stated above, that our people should be encouraged to accumulate and maintain food reserves adequate for their needs for a period of a year, where such is possible; and, further, that it is possible for us to work in groups to achieve this for a large number of our people by working co-operatively together.

(3) The church's investments are in cash, in Government bonds, and in lands. Practically no investments are made in stocks or industrial enterprise. If there were a total collapse, the amount of losses would be unpredictable, for there would also be losses in lands, in our opinion, as well as in securities. Common stocks are not, in our opinion, a good investment for funds which we consider trust funds. It is our opinion that the same rule should apply to the investment of our funds as applies to trust funds handled by banks and other institutions of like character. This is not to suggest that there are not common stocks which are excellent investments, but the value of common stocks is dependent upon management. The value of Government bonds lies back of the ability of the people as a whole to carry the economic load of government. The total loss in Government bonds could result only from a total collapse. We have already stated that it is our opinion that a total collapse is a very remote possibility.

(4) In case of total financial collapse and economic chaos, the church's Ministerial Reserves would be available to render relief to such missionaries as could be provided for in this area if lands were sufficiently productive and control of such lands could be maintained. But as indicated, our policy does not contemplate that provision can be made to meet all emergencies if a total collapse should take place.

(5) Undoubtedly the individual personality concerned has some bearing upon the type of so-called prophecies or warnings issued. My own feeling is one of confidence and assurance that the church will pull through the years which are ahead and achieve its goals. For those who are more pessimistic, I cannot speak.

(6) This question has been answered previously; I am confident that the policy that the church has adopted will enable us to meet our future needs.

(7) The Presiding Bishopric has spoken with assurance and with definiteness of purpose for some fifteen years and continues to assert that compliance with the law and adherence to our financial policy will bring the desired results and assure us of reasonable progress in meeting our temporal needs.

(8) This perhaps is already answered. We appreciate very much the expression of your confidence and co-operativeness in respect to pledging yourself to a period of fasting and prayer for direction and guidance, if such were called by the Presidency of the church between now and next General Conference.

In closing, let me suggest that I, too, have written with complete frankness and I assure you that I do not in any way misconstrue your motives. I think that you are intensely interested in the church, devoted and loyal to it, and that your questions arise out of your deep concern for its welfare. Whether that which I have written will give you the needed assurance is something that you alone can determine. As far as I am concerned, I move forward with faith in God, in the church, in its members, and in the ultimate establishment of the kingdom.

Yours sincerely,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DeLapp.

Over the Isthmus

larger land. We cannot waste an hour in idle contemplation of the hereafter or in lazy surrender to the times. Each day lived to the full constitutes the best foundation for a rich eternity.

As we go along we shall build monuments to those who have gone ahead. In some youth camps memorials to all the camp have been raised as each camper has tossed a rock on a pile of stones, then others as he was inclined. This day we start such a monument to our friend and co-laborer whom we memorialize. Someone tosses a stone as he recalls her cheerfulness, another her love of beauty, another the bigness of her sympathetic heart, another for the faith, little spoken of, but deeply felt. Such a monument will point us and all who follow on the good course of our continental journey.

CROSSING THE NARROW NECK OF LAND

Some skills are best effected when we focus our attention on something outside the self-centered business at hand. Jesus kept reminding us of this in the business of living. Losing ourselves was set forth as the best way of realizing ourselves. The crisis of crossing the isthmus to the other continent is not otherwise. In Ian Maclaren's Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush he tells of the passing of old Dr. McClure. He assigns it the appropriate title "The Doctor's Last Journey." The old practitioner had given himself without reserve to the common folk of the countryside. Neither inclement weather nor inability of his patients to pay had ever held him back. He was a bit apologetic about tardiness in church attendance; he never seemed to have time. On this cold winter's night he dreamed of going out on his last sick call, riding his old horse, Jess, his companion through the years. He soliloquized: "We'll soon be home now—We're ready for our beds, Jess—Many a mile we've had together—Yon's the light in the kitchen window." Those of us who let our souls go out for others will find a light guiding us across the isthmus. The outreach of the heart will supply the beacon for the eye of the soul.

Some day will come to each the call that came to Abraham: "Get thee out of thy country, from thy kindred, and from thy father's house unto a land that I will show thee."—Genesis 12: 1. At the terminal city we shall press on into a great adventure of travel—on into the land of the larger life, beyond the isthmus.

The Imperativeness of the TEMPORAL LAW

By J. A. Koehler

Number 23 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

THE ROSE produces its blossoms and becomes fragrant by taking plant food from the air and the soil and converting it into flowers. In other words, to paraphrase the language of the modern prophet when speaking of man, the rose prospers "spiritually" by abiding the temporal law. The rose can have no way of becoming fragrant and beautiful except through the operation of that temporal law. That temporal law is imperative. The rose must abide that law "or else." Or else it will return to the dust from which it came. Or else it can no longer be a rose.

The temporal law, which is the essence of the social philosophy of the modern prophet, is the moral law in accordance with which people must conduct their economic affairs, if they are to promote the welfare of the soul. The temporal law, as we said in a former talk, is at once the law of spiritual life. And when the prophet said that "In your temporal affairs you shall be equal," when he said that the economic or temporal affairs of the people must be grounded in the moral law, "otherwise the abundance of the manifestation of the spirit shall be withheld," he proclaimed the imperativeness of the temporal law. He said that his people must abide the temporal law "or else." Or else, as in the case of the rose, human life shall not be, so to speak "fragrant and beautiful." Or else evil days shall come of which people shall say "I have no pleasure in them."

To some that may seem like a new doctrine. But it is as old (older, even) than Jesus. It is as old as man. Read the parable of the sheep and the goats (Matthew 25), if you do not remember it, and you will see that Jesus, too, said that the prosperity of the soul may not be promoted without obeying the temporal law. He said what the modern prophet said, in what seems to be almost unkind language (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2), that any person who will not abide the temporal law "shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell." And that means that obedience to the temporal law is imperative.

Our legislators enact many temporal laws—income tax laws and inheritance laws and what not—which are not imperative. We could fare better without some of those laws. There is nothing in the nature of man which says we must obey such laws, for no evil befalls the man who is ignorant of them or even the man who evades them because he does not believe in them, unless he happens to get caught.

BUT THE temporal law of the modern prophet is not like that. The person or the people who will not abide that law does not need to be caught, he is caught. For that temporal law represents the moral order of the universe which, like gravity, blesses or curses automatically. Neither persons nor peoples who obey that law require to be blessed; they are blessed. In the very nature of things, the people that will fulfill the temporal law, which is the heart of the social philosophy of the modern prophet, will prosper and become very glorious and great. The soul of that people shall prosper as surely as the rose becomes fragrant and beautiful by abiding, so to speak, its temporal law.

I do not know of a nation, I do not know even a people, that has fulfilled the temporal law proclaimed by the modern prophet. Not one has grounded its economy in the principle of the distinctive stewardships and the rest which are the essence of the social philosophy of the modern prophet. All have misconducted the business of industry and government. It seems, almost, as if they have disobeyed that temporal law deliberately, willfully, persistently.

Nor do I know—do you?—of any people that has not fallen upon evil days through their disobedience to the temporal law or their misgovernment of industry. Of course not. For, as I have said over and over again, the principles of the temporal law—which is nature's law—cannot be violated with impunity. The temporal law must be obeyed if the soul is to prosper. The temporal law is imperative.

The temporal law is the pattern according to which the economic affairs of "the people" must be governed or in accordance with which the economy of "the community" must be formed. It is the pattern—the moral pattern—for the organization of economic life. And the depth of the conviction of the modern prophet respecting the imperativeness of that temporal law may be judged by this passage from his message to his people: "It must needs be that they [the people of the modern prophet] are organized according to my laws [my temporal laws], if otherwise they shall be cut off." They shall not be "my people" if they will not obey the temporal law.

mentions a truth which applies to the temporal law. He said that "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, [as the scribes and the Pharisees did] he is guilty of all." He is a transgressor of the law of human life. He is like the rose which yields to the rays of the sun but which does not stretch its roots down to the necessary supplies of water: The rays of the sun which might promote life destroy it. The soul cannot prosper by keeping only part of the law of life.

The truth is that the temporal law is a system of moral principles. As in the case of your automobile, for illustration, if the principle of carburation, for example, is not combined properly with the principles of ignition and the rest, the thing just will not run satisfactorily. The whole law of auto operation is made ineffectual by not keeping a part. Or, to put it in another way, the truth is that the temporal law is a philosophy. It is not a mass of fragmentary ideas about economic life which may be combined or not at will in any manner whatsoever. It is a body of truths none of which can have their full values except as they are joined properly with all the rest.

Now there are temporal laws which are distinctively personal and there is "a" temporal law which is distinctively social. The law, for instance, which says that "all saints who remember to keep" the temporal law which enjoins the eating only of foods which are good for the body, and the rest, shall have good health is distinctively personal or individual. That is to say, it respects personal-individual conduct of temporal affairs.

But the temporal law which says "You are to have equal claim upon the properties" of your people for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, and so on, is distinctively social. That is to say, it respects the conduct of the economic affairs of "the community," or the temporal conduct of "the people"—the whole body of persons who compose the community.

There are also laws respecting tithes and offerings for the support of the Church which it is fatal to confuse with "the temporal law" that is the heart of the social philosophy of the modern prophet. Tithes and offerings are not the weightier matters of the laws of Restoration. True, such laws cannot be disobeyed willfully without loss to the soul. But at the same time, they may be obeyed without fulfilling the temporal law of Restoration—the law which conditions the peace, prosperity, and happiness of "peoples." Let us not confuse the ecclesiastical aspects of temporal laws with the temporal law of civil communities; the law of economic life.

The temporal law of the modern prophet—which Latter Day Saints call the temporal law of "Restoration"—is in effect a "civil" or an economic code. It is a pattern of an economy. It is a blueprint of an economic society. That law cannot be obeyed without redeeming Zion.

Nor can Zion be redeemed without obeying that law.

The principles of that temporal law apply universally. But the applications of those principles to the affairs of the peoples of the prophet are somewhat different from the applications which the nation would make, if it were won to the standard of economic self-governance to be lifted up in the economic community which Latter Day Saints call "Zion"—which, I repeat, cannot be built up except through the application of the principles of that temporal law.

We Latter Day Saints have our Church laws, some of which are temporal; and we have our law—which is one law—of economic life. That law is as definitely spiritual as it is temporal. It is the temporal means which Restoration employs (or which it proposes to employ) to reach its spiritual ends. It is "the law of the celestial kingdom." And we say that that temporal law is imperative because we believe, as did Jesus and the prophets, that to promote the well-being of man's soul, that law must be obeyed. We maintain the imperativeness of the temporal law.

Personality Termites

By Jeanette Hield

IN THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT, Christ commanded his disciples, "Be perfect even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect." As followers of Christ our duty is plain—we are expected to develop perfection or personal righteousness.

Perfection is an individual goal, the reward of which is salvation. We become perfect by eliminating sin from our lives. If we are to perfect our characters as Christ instructed, we'll need to keep before us a vision of Christ. Many times we have a false sense of security because we measure ourselves by the lives of those around us, but this feeling of smugness disappears when we raise our eyes to the perfect example. We need also a vision of our own imperfections or sins, for only as we know our faults can we hope to correct or eliminate them.

Did you ever visit the Ghetto in Chicago? The Ghetto is the Jewish quarter where the Jews live and do business. Here they have their own customs, holidays, festivals, schools, and synagogues.

Chinatown in San Francisco is quite similar, I am told. Here the Chinese conduct their own elections for mayor, councilmen, and other city officials. They even have their own switchboard and telephone operators. Chinatown is a highly organized foreign society within a city organization.

Maybe you think it dangerous for our government to allow this type of freedom, and maybe it is, but not more dangerous than the unchristian areas in our own lives. These areas are simply bad attitudes and bad habits which we have encouraged by constant repetition. They are areas where the Golden Rule is not in operation—where the fruits of the Spirit are not in evidence. These are areas that need Christianizing. In most cases we think of these sins as petty, insignificant, and trivial because they are so common among us; but don't be misled—they are insidious, destructive, and dangerous because they often undermine one's whole personality.

I often think of these common sins as termites—termites of the personality. Termites, you know, are little antlike creatures that live in wood. They work in the dark and, like the petty sins, they attack from within and carry on their work of destruction under cover. It will take courage to see ourselves as we really are, but we can never rise to our best unless and until we can face our worst. Suppose, then, we turn the searchlight of truth inward and throw on the screen of reality the many little sins we are all guilty of in more or less degree.

MOTIVES

At a club meeting some time ago, I heard one woman laughingly remark that she had "gift-buying down to a science." She explained that all through the year she bought different articles at various prices which she, herself, could use. When a package came for her at Christmas time, she opened and appraised it, selected a gift of similar value from those she had on hand and mailed it at once. Another woman bragged that she had "even a better system." It seems that she keeps all the gifts she doesn't like until the following year when she gives them to her friends. (I was particularly amused at this confession, for it explained perfectly how I happened to receive a gift from her last year which I had made and sent her the year previous.) Now I ask you, does the spirit of Christ—the Christmas spirit—motivate this kind of giving?

Please don't misunderstand me. Giving gifts to friends to express our love and affection, or to meet a need is a lovely gesture, but gifts should be made or purchased with the needs and personality of the recipient in mind. I am afraid, too, that some of our giving is motivated by a desire to receive. Christ gave to those in need, and from whom he expected nothing in return. We can give to our friends all through the year—on birthdays, Easter, and other special days. I wish we could celebrate Christ's birthday by following his example. Look around for a family in need of food, clothing, love, and understanding. Adopt them for Christmas. Make them feel a part of your family for one day. Let your children help plan and make the gifts for the family, and I can promise you a happy Christmas.

Wrong actions are not always the result of wrong motives, but wrong motives seldom result in right actions. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." If we keep our hearts pure, with an eye single to the glory of God, our motives can't be far wrong.

DISHONESTY

Are we honest in all of our relationships—honest with God, with ourselves, and with others with whom we come in contact? Shakespeare makes much of being true to ourselves when he says, "To thine ownself be true, and it follows as the night, the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

How do we respond to a call for help from our pastor, the choir director, church school superintendent, or the visiting committee? Do we make excuses and let it go at that? Is that being quite honest? If we are really interested in our church, we'll give up other less important activities in order to serve when needed.

Some things should have first place in our lives, and the church is one of them.

Do we bear false witness against others? One of the most difficult things in a court trial is to get the truth from the witnesses. We see things in the light of our own experiences, and our experiences are all different. Then, too, our emotions become involved, and our sympathies color our interpretations. I don't believe we actually intend to injure others, but most of us are certainly careless with the truth.

In Holiday in Mexico, Jane Powell, who plays the daughter of the United States Ambassador, stretches the truth on several occasions in order to appear more important. Each time she catches herself, she drops her head, hesitates a moment, then lifts her head with a determined gesture and corrects herself. We could do that if we had the courage. Acknowledging and correcting our error every time would certainly help us to overcome the tendency to misrepresent the truth. Our creed is "All Truth," but it can't mean much to us unless we try to live up to it.

A certain woman of my acquaintance was told in her patriarchal blessing that God loved her for her integrity. Isn't that wonderful? Integrity can be developed—it is something we all can have.

GOSSIP

Gossip is another thing we women need to watch. Let's not say unkind things about people. Even though a story is true, we need not repeat it. I am reminded here of a story told by Dr. G. Stanley Jones. It seems a mother opened the door one day to a friend who was seeking advice and counsel concerning her son who had been charged with stealing. After the friend had left, the mother realized that her small daughter had heard the story. Calling her daughter to her, she said, "Alice, if Mrs. White had left her purse here we'd not give it to anyone else, would we?"

"No, of course not," answered Alice.

"Mrs. White has left with us something much more precious than her purse," the mother went on to say, "she left a story that would make many people unhappy if we gave it to anyone else. So let's remember, dear, that the story isn't ours—it belongs to Mrs. White." If we all felt that way about gossip what a lot of suffering we'd avoid.

CRITICISM

There is entirely too much criticism abroad. Constructive criticism is one thing, and quite desirable if given to the party concerned; but there should be no place in our lives for destructive criticism. Do we go home from church on Sunday criticizing the pastor, his sermon, the choir, Brother Blank's prayer, etc. Many of us do and it's too bad. We are forever scapegoating—blaming other individuals, other groups, when things go wrong. "Judge not that ye be not judged" is still pretty good advice, for we can't possibly have all of the information necessary to judge righteously, and any other judgment brings condemnation upon ourselves.

JEALOUSY

Jealousy is the result of fear—fear of losing something that we hold necessary to our happiness. We are afraid of death, of growing old or becoming ill. We are afraid of losing a job, friends, or prestige. All fear is self-centered. It is paralyzing to effort as well as disease-producing. When we become Christ-centered, we lose our fears and have no more occasion for jealousy.

ANGER AND RESENTMENT

Anger and resentment are emotions that develop when we feel frustrated or blocked in our desires. Like steam, these emotions serve a worth-while purpose only when controlled. When anger or resentment are in command, we act completely out of character and say and do things that wound and injure others. Resentments justified or unjustified are disastrous to the individual. If love is made the theme song of life, resentments and anger will fade away.

HATE

Hate is a canker that slowly strangles one's happiness. We can't afford to let the attitudes and actions of others influence or determine our behavior to the extent that hate is aroused. We can dislike things people do without hating them for doing it. There is so much good in everybody. If we look for it we'll find it, and finding it, we'll appreciate the person for the good in him. I believe it was Lincoln who said that the best way to get rid of an enemy is to make him a friend.

FLATTERY

Flattery is insincere praise, and psychologists tell us there are two reasons for it—both of which are selfish. First, to have sport at another's expense. Second, to get something for himself that he can get in no other way. Flattery is cheap and contemptible.

Let us not confuse flattery with sincere appreciation and praise for the sake of encouragement—these are desirable if not used to excess. Overpraise makes one egotistical and creates a wrong motive—self-aggrandizement—for achievement. Only those who are humble and full of love can assist with the building of the kingdom.

RIDICULE

Ridicule is always deliberate. It is used by people who enjoy inflicting embarrassment and pain upon others. It is hostile, malicious, and degrading, and can have no place in the life of a Christian.

There are three levels of living: First, the pagan level where one returns evil for good. Second, the Old Testament level where one returns good for good and evil for evil. Third, the Christian level where one returns good for evil. We are Christians and have covenanted to live on that level.

Christians may be divided into four groups. Those in the upper group are prophets, the twelve, and other great spiritual leaders through whom God can reveal himself. The next group includes those who are really converted and working at their religion—those who are interested and active in bringing about the divine purposes of God. These are kingdom-builders. The average Christian attends church on Sunday when convenient. Maybe she sings in the choir or acts as hostess on occasion and attends the parties, but on the whole she feels just as good as the next person and that is enough. The last group are those who are content with just being baptized. They have entered the door of the kingdom but have no enthusiasm for further development or progress. What is your Christian rating? What is mine?

While we haven't covered all of the different breeds of termites, I hope we have gone far enough to stimulate a desire to rid ourselves of these sins which hinder our personal development. It is not by chance, you know, that our finest violins are made from timber-line spruce. A tree that lives at that elevation develops both strength and beauty because of its constant fight with the elements. The same is true in character-building—it's the overcoming of sin and the successful solving of our problems that increase our wisdom and knowledge and develop the Christian character.

I think it would help to make a list of our own particular termites and tack it up in the kitchen where we could see it several times a day. This will keep us conscious of these areas that need Christianizing.

What we need from here on is repentance. First, being sorry for our sins. Second, make full restitution. Third, turn away from our sin. And forth, do good instead. Only as we follow these steps in repentance can we expect forgiveness and strength to overcome.

There is a big sign in Denver which reads, "Prayer changes things." I am not so sure that is true—that prayer changes THINGS—but I am sure that prayer changes people, for prayer is the means by which we tune in on the Spirit of God. Alignment with his Spirit will bear fruit—love, joy, peace, long suffering, goodness, gentleness, faith, meekness, and temperance. With these active in our lives, the termites will disappear.

So for the coming year, let us get the spray gun—fill it with equal parts of conscious effort, prayer, and the Spirit of God, and go after these little insidious, destructive termites which undermine and destroy our effectiveness. There is no future in sin. It's up to us to develop the personal righteousness expected of those claiming the name of Christ.

Good luck to you, and in the words of Tiny Tim, "God bless us, everyone."

"And this is mine everlasting covenant, that when thy posterity shall embrace the truth, and look upward, then shall Zion look downward, and all the heavens shall shake with gladness, and the earth shall tremble with joy;

"And the general assembly of the church of the first-born shall come down out of heaven, and possess the earth, and shall have place until the end come. And this is mine everlasting covenant, which I made with thy father Enoch."—Genesis 9: 21-23, Inspired Version.

PRAYER

Prayer is work, dost thou believe it?
Prayer is power, wilt thou receive it?
Prayer the path the Saviour trod,
Prayer the touch that links with God.
Make thy life a daily prayer,
He will answer—here and there.
—Author unknown.

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour," Saints' Hymnal, 314 (verses 3, 4).

A Testimony of the Result of Prayer: (In three or four minutes tell the story in own words.)

(As Brother Luff's wife was leaving to visit her folks) . . . as the train left, jokingly I remarked the next I expect to hear is that I have a "Mormon" wife. . . . I then advised her to listen carefully (still jokingly) to what the Saints had to say, and if she became satisfied that they were right, to join them, without delaying a moment on account of my feelings. In a few weeks she wrote asking consent to her baptism. After the counsel I had given jokingly, I could not refuse. . . . My answer advised her to be sure she was right, then act; my Methodism would never cause an interference with her convictions. . . .

When she was confirmed, she was told that her partner, who was then preaching another gospel in Toronto, would yet preach the everlasting gospel to the world. . . .

Of course the news reached me quickly by letter, and provoked a smile and considerable criticism. . . . In one of my letters I had recklessly challenged them to use their faith to bring me among them by a certain day, which I named. I told them it was impossible for me to get there, but their faith ought to laugh at impossibilities and produce any kind of miracle. . . . It passed from my mind. . . .

My health was breaking. . . . physician told me I must get away. . . . told him impossible. The presiding Methodist minister noticed my sickness; told me to go. (Left for London where his wife was still with her parents), . . . and when within about a rod or two of the house, met by my brother-in-law, who gave me to understand that their faith in miracles and prayer was not weakened in the least by my arrival, as that was the very day I had so carelessly named in my bantering letter some time before. . . .

At a prayer meeting, Brother Luff says he mentally commended his case to heaven. . . . and to answer him that night if his church or not. . . . I asked that the answer might be given through my wife's brother, a lad of ten. Brother Luff promised obedience if satisfied as to God's will. During the testimonies, Robbie, as he was familiarly called, stood, his face became waxen and the tears started from his eyes, and flowed profusely down his cheeks, and turning till he faced me, he raised his hand and said, "Verily, thus saith the Lord God unto you, O son of man, Go now and obey my gospel, for this indeed is my church. It is my will that you shall be baptized at the hands of one of these my servants, for you have received of my Spirit, saith the Lord." Here was what he had asked for and through the channel he had asked God in secret; God had answered. He desired to be baptized that night without delay.

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour," Saints' Hymnal, 314 (verse 5).

Poem:

HEED THE VOICE

Oh, my people, heed the warning
I am giving you today;
Buckle on the gospel armor,
You will need it for the fray.
Take my truth as your protection,
Consecrate your hearts with prayer
And I'll give divine direction,
I'll be with your everywhere.

Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Heed the warning voice today;
Young and old and middle-aged,
From the call turn not away.
Can you still withhold your offerings
And your tithing fail to pay,
And expect a Father's blessing
While you walk your selfish way?

Oh, my people, heed the message
I am sending you today.
Every worldly thought and action,
Every evil cast away;
Build anew your family altars,
Read my word from day to day;
Come to me and I will guide you
In the new and living way.

Oh, my people, come up higher,
Heed the Spirit's voice today;

The Christmas story, "Holy Night," was portrayed in song and drama in the evening. Clara Thumm directed the choir, and Mervine Benson was in charge of the play. The church school Christmas program was presented on Wednesday evening, after which Santa gave a gift to each child. A part of The Messiah was given on December 22 by the choir; Clara Hoxie was the accompanist. Pastor Carl Muir spoke in the evening, and Dolly Lewis sang, "O Holy Night." Dolly has been appointed junior choir leader for the coming year.

Edna Stone, daughter of Lon Stone, was guest soloist at the morning service on December 29. Ruth Didricksen, Joseph, Edward, and William Piedimonte, Graceland students, were home for the holidays.

Theme: TEACH US, O LORD, TRUE BROTHERHOOD

(Personal Responsibility)

Prelude: "Send Me Forth, O Blessed Master!" Saints' Hymnal, 214.

Call to Worship:

PRAYER

In this hour of worship
Grant thy presence, Lord!
Here, the world forgotten
Feed us on thy word.
From our sins and sorrows
Here we seek release;
Of Thy love persuaded,
Find the path of peace.
—Author Unknown

*Hymn: "Send Me Forth, O Blessed Master!"

*Prayer: For our personal responsibility in serving others.

Scripture Reading:

"I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me. And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but they understood not; and see ye indeed, but they perceived not. Then said I, Lord, how long? And he said, Until the cities be wasted with inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate."—Isaiah 6: 8, 9, 11.

Hymn: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," Saints' Hymnal, 213.

Talk:

This may be based on the experiences of David Patten, who felt a keen personal responsibility for sharing the gospel with others (See The Story of the Church, pp. 141, 142). Conclude with: The building of the kingdom is not a matter of deciding what we want to do and then asking God to bless us in the task. It is finding out what God wants done, dedicating oneself to it, and then asking divine help to do it God's way. He works with us only to the extent that we do what he wants done, and in his way.

*Hymn: "Rise Up, O Men of God!" Saints' Hymnal, 210.

*Commission:

"Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

*Prayer: Help us to give joyful service in thy work.

Hymn: "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour," Saints' Hymnal, 324 (verses 1, 2, 3)

Talk:

Tell the story of Nehemiah as found in Nehemiah, chapters 4, 5, 6, and of the building of the Kirtland Temple as found in The Story of the Church, pages 202-206. Just as they were able to complete the building up of Jerusalem and the Kirtland Temple, so if we have a mind to work today with God, Zion will be built up.

If I can do some good today,
If I can serve along life's way,
If I can something helpful say,

If I can cheer with smile or song,

If I can make a burden less,
If I can spread more happiness,

Testimony of Healing

At the request of Mrs. E. H. Mellor I am writing this letter for the Herald.

About a year ago Mr. Mellor had a severe irritation in one of his eyes. The doctor thought it should be removed; although medicine helped, it brought no permanent relief. Two elders from Fairview, Montana, administered to him, and he received the blessing asked for. Six weeks ago, however, his eye became sore again, and the doctor said that this time it would have to be taken out as the pain could not be alleviated without its removal. The date for the operation was set, and Mr. Mellor was taken to the hospital. The day before he was scheduled to go to surgery, he received administration again from Elders Vernon Ditton and W. R. Hillman of Fairview. When the surgeons looked at him, they said no operation was necessary and prescribed only medicine for him. After two days treatment, he said, "My eye is all right. Why do I need medicine when my eye doesn't hurt any more?"

Truly God does watch over us in tender mercy and help us in our times of need. We are thankful to him for this kindness and to his ministers who unflinchingly answer the call for administration even in the most disagreeable weather.

MRS. CLARA ADDICOTT.

Williston, North Dakota

Chicago, Illinois, District

District President, Joseph Baldwin

During the past two years the workers of Chicago District have consistently aided the Saints of Maywood Mission until they could maintain their own local staff of officers. On Sunday, December 15, Apostle Arthur Oakman, District President Joseph Baldwin, High Priest Lyman Jones, and Missionary James C. Daugherty organized Maywood Mission into a branch. Elder A. V. Webb, previously ordained to the office of elder, and other elected officers were installed to preside over the group. An original prayer hymn, "Bless This Branch, O Lord," was sung by Elder John Wight, and Apostle Oakman gave the morning sermon. Dinner was served at noon by the women. At 1:30 p.m., a baptismal service was conducted at the First Chicago Church. As a result of four weeks of missionary work in Maywood, Elder Daugherty baptized fifteen new members. The confirmation and consecration service, in charge of Apostle Oakman, was held at 3 o'clock in the chapel room of the Masonic Hall where the Maywood Saints worship. In response to the challenge, "Are you willing to receive the precious gift of God?" each baptized person arose to signify his desire. Following the prayers of confirmation, Apostle Oakman pronounced a blessing on the hour. A brief testimony service was held at the close of the meeting.

A Christmas reception for all members of the district concluded the day's activities. District President Joseph Baldwin was presented a Christmas purse by the Chicago Saints.

Randall and Ronald, twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. Rex Ryan, were blessed on December 8 by Elders John Pettersson, A. O. Skinner, and D. M. Wiesen. At 2:45 in the afternoon, a district-wide youth rally was held; every member of the Zion's League was given a chance to help plan the year's activities. The following week the League presented a floral offering for the rostrum in memory of Lyle Mahoney, a former League leader who was killed in the war.

A Christmas entertainment and party for the children of the branch was given on the evening of December 22 under the direction of Buren Lenox. Donald Mee sang Gesu Bambino, Reno Ricker gave a reading, "Why the Chimes Rang," and a moving picture, "Bethlehem to Calvary," was shown.

Kitsilano Mission

Acting Pastor, C. Bruder

The women's auxiliary, under the direction of Margaret Peterson, held a successful bazaar at the Canadian Legion Hall. Net receipts totaled approximately $200; this money was donated to the mission building fund. In view of the fact that the women's department has an active membership of only six, it is felt that the results of this endeavor were extremely gratifying. Many nonmembers attended the bazaar. Five hundred letters of invitation to householders in the immediate vicinity of the hall were delivered on the eve of the bazaar, and posters were placed in local shops.

The church school sponsored a Christmas concert and tree on December 19; 100 members and friends were present. Following an amusing program, presents were distributed to children under fourteen. Bags of candy, nuts, and fruit were given to everyone; this was made possible by business firms donating $65 in cash and merchandise. Ellen Hopen and Charles Bruder did the soliciting for donations after W. A. Fisher, superintendent of the church school, sent out letters stating the day the canvass would be made. All but one firm co-operated. Contributions varied from two to ten dollars and the donation exceeded expenditures by twenty dollars. This surplus was applied to the building fund.

On January 16, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Stanbridge left for Nassau, British West Indies, for an extended visit with their daughter, Thelma. They plan to return via Independence in April in order to attend General Conference.

ADVENTURES IN LATTER DAY SAINTISM

For Young People

Helps for Your League Study of Does It Make any Difference How We Manage Our Personal Finances

By Mary B. Hill

Listed below are a number of suggestions which can be developed to provide a month of programs, illustrating that it does make a difference how we manage our personal finances, use our time and talents. These are in addition to the suggestions listed under "Why Not Try This?" pages 33-35 of the booklet, Does It Make Any Difference?

1. Budget night. A bishop, bishop's agent, or adult well versed in the financial law and budgeting problems, may outline model budgets for various wage levels, and discuss financial problems of the student, wage earner and homemaker. Charts or black-board demonstrations would be an interesting feature of this meeting.
2. Hold a supper meeting, culminating in a debate. The league may be divided into two groups, with each group holding preliminary debates to determine the members who will make up the final debating teams; or each group may simply choose two members to participate at this supper meeting. The losing side may fete the winning side in some way. Suggested subjects:
 - (a) Resolved, that the highest development of man cannot be attained except through compliance with the law of stewardship.
 - (b) That I can save as much money without budgeting, as I could if I budgeted.
 - (c) That the condition of the world today is mainly due to the lack of recognition and compliance with the stewardship law.
 - (d) Zion can be established and maintained without strict obedience to the stewardship law.
3. Bible baseball meeting. The league is divided into two sides, and each side elects a captain and catcher. The members take their turn in the order chosen. Two neutral parties act as pitcher and umpire, respectively. Four spots are marked off as bases, and the captain of the first side "up to bat" stands at home plate, with the catcher of the opposing side behind him on the catcher's plate. The pitcher asks the first contestant a question, and if he answers it correctly he walks to "first base," while the second member of the team takes up position at home plate. When four members of the side at bat have answered correctly, the first contestant will have proceeded to second, third, and home plates, and a run will be counted for the side at bat. If, however, a contestant is unable to answer a question, it will revert to the catcher, and if he is able to answer the question, the unsuccessful contestant will be out. The opposing team comes up to bat when three members are out. If the catcher is unsuccessful in answering the question, a foul ball is called, and the contestant is asked another question. Four foul balls constitute a walk to first base. When the answer is doubtful, it is referred to the umpire for decision.

In holding a Bible baseball meeting, it is wise to announce it at least a week in advance, to give some time for study of the subject.

This could be an interesting way of asking practical questions on the Youth Income and Expense Record, filing an inventory and financial statement, scripture quotations to uphold the stewardship law, etc. Some suitable questions are listed on pages 34 and 38 of the booklet, Does It Make Any Difference? and also below.

4. Question-box night. A group of questions are numbered in order, folded, and placed in a box. Each member is requested to draw one. If there is a large League, and only time for a limited number of questions, a number of the papers may be blank. Each member must then briefly answer the question asked. It is more interesting and successful if the questions are distributed at the previous meeting, allowing time for research.

The following are some additional questions to those listed on pages 34 and 38.

 - (a) Enlarge on the following statement, "It is the great stewardship of life for each of us to help make the world a better place in which to live." See "The Doctrine of Christian Stewardship," by A. B. Phillips, Saints' Herald, December 28, 1946, page 16.
 - (b) What is the difference between inventory and financial statement?
 - (c) What substantiation have we for paying our tithing on one tenth of the increase instead of one tenth of the gross income?
 - (d) What is the relationship between efficient stewardship and character growth?
 - (e) Does the amount of income determine whether or not one shall comply with the financial law?
 - (f) Does the stewardship law apply to all members of the church no matter what age?
 - (g) Why are time and talents considered a part of our stewardship?
 - (h) It is said that "character building starts around 7.00 p.m." Explain.
 - (i) Why do we "rob God" when we neglect to comply with the financial law?
 - (j) Am I complying with the financial law when I pay money which I call tithing, without filing an inventory or financial statements?
 - (k) Why would you say that by complying with the stewardship law we do more for ourselves than for the church? Do you agree?
5. Present the playlet entitled "Shall I Comply?"
6. Choral consecration service. This service may be held as the climax of a stewardship project. The League may launch a drive to enlist all members to comply with the financial law, using as a theme, "What Hast Thou Given For Me?" By posters, special meetings, personal letter or visit, or class study, the importance of obedience to the financial law may be stressed.

Give of your best to the Master,
Give of the strength of your youth;

Into the battle for truth.
Jesus has set the example;
Dauntless was he, young and brave;
Give him your loyal devotion,
Give him the best that you have.

Give of the best to the Master,
Give him first place in your heart;
Give him first place in your service,
Consecrate every part.
Give and to you shall be given;
God his beloved Son gave;
Gratefully seeking to serve him,
Give him the best that you have.

Give of your best to the Master;
Naught else is worthy his love;
Your money, your time, and your talents,
Are his who reigneth above.
He gave his life without murmur
From sin all the world to save;
Kneel now in full consecration,
Give him the best that you have.

Lord, keep me thine alone.

Oh, blissful self-surrender,
To live, my Lord, for thee!
Now, Son of God, my Saviour,
May thy light shine in me.
Henceforth to build thy kingdom,
My aim in life shall be,
O may my footsteps never turn
O Lord, from following thee.

Prayer:

Help me, O Lord, to keep my pledge unbroken!
Guard thou my ways, my thoughts, my tongue,
my heart;

Help me to trust the word which thou hast spoken,
That from thy paths my feet may ne'er depart.

Help me, O Lord, when sore temptations press me!

Oh, lift the clouds that hide thee from my sight!

Help me, O Lord, when anxious cares distress me,

To look beyond where all is calm and bright.

Help me, O Lord! My strength is only weakness;

Thine, thine the power by which alone I live;
Help me each day a greater vision of thyself
To gain; in fuller consecration, give. Amen
—F. M. Crosby.

Shall I Comply?

PLAYLET

Lloyd: Are you folks going to the skating party tonight?

May: I'd like to, Lloyd, but if I don't stay home and complete my financial statement tonight, I don't know when I'll get it done.

Lloyd: Listen to the girl! Passing up a skating party to work—and something that doesn't have to be done at that.

Don: Oh, you're wrong there, Lloyd. It is work that has to be done, one of the most important duties we have.

Ellen: What in the world are you talking about? Financial statements—goodness sakes, May, when did you get into big business?

May (laughing): It's not the kind of financial statement you're thinking about. Accounting for our personal expenditures and paying a tithe of one tenth of our surplus is one of the important laws of our church.

Don: Unless we are complying with this law, we are not fulfilling the covenant we made at baptism to serve Christ, nor can we expect to be blessed materially.

Lloyd: Well, I'm not worried about it. I'll start paying tithing some day, I guess. Why bother about those things when you're young? Someday I'll have nothing else to do but sit at home with a pair of glasses on the end of my nose and count my money.

Ellen: If you have any money to count.

Lloyd: You said it. I'm going to have a good time. We're only young once, and I'm certainly not going to sit home wasting my youth while I've got the money and health to have a good time.

Ellen: That's what I like to see—somebody with some pep and gumption. There's enough trouble in the world without young people becoming prematurely old.

Don: Yes, there is enough trouble in the world, but for a different reason than yours, Ellen. I think it's because the young people have not analyzed world conditions and resolved to carry out the only solution.

Ellen: What's that?

Don: Obedience to the stewardship law, of which keeping personal accounts and paying tithing is a part. If all the youth of our church did that, the kingdom of God would very soon be a reality among us, and the world would have a tangible solution to its problems.

May: Besides, when we neglect the financial law, the Bible tells us we rob God.

Lloyd: Oh, it's too deep for me. I still don't see what difference it makes. I'll think about that some other time.

Voice: Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me.

SCENE II

Enter Ellen and May.

May: Thanks for asking me, Ellen, but I've been to the show once this week, and I really can't spare the time.

Ellen: Can't spare the time! What in the world do you do with it all? I'd die of boredom if I didn't get around any more than you do.

May: Oh, I get around plenty, even if I don't see you in the process.

Ellen: I haven't seen you for weeks. You've missed the parties the gang has had, haven't seen half the hot shows, or been down to Casey's lately or anything. If you've been around, I'd like to know where.

May: Well, I belong to the Badminton club, and I have my Zion's League work and Blue Bird group and choir work in addition to my school and music studies. Oh, yes, and I forgot to tell you, I've got a job now three nights a week after school.

Ellen: Whew! What a dull program. What in the world do you do for fun? I'd go crazy on that schedule.

May: I like it.

Ellen: Did you know I had a full-time job now?

May: No! Have you quit school?

Ellen: Of course! What's the use of going to school, that doesn't get you anything.

May: But now you won't be able to be a dietitian, as your folks wanted you to.

Ellen: What does that matter? I want clothes and, oh, lots of things. I'm sick and tired of doing without things I want.

May: But Ellen, we're not in this life to do the things we want to do, entirely.

Ellen: What on earth are we here for?

May (slowly): To make good use of our lives, to use wisely the things God has given us, so that our lives and the lives of others may be enriched as a result.

Ellen: Is that what you intend to do?

May: Yes. I believe that we are accountable to God for our money, our time, and talents, and I want to plan my life so I will be a wise steward of all that God has given me.

Ellen: What have you got planned, then?

May: Well, I've decided to attend Grace-land College for two years, and then go on to a university and graduate as a teacher. One of the reasons I'm working after school is to get a little extra money to help me do this.

Ellen: You're too ambitious for me. Where'd you get those ideas, anyway?

May: Our church teaches that one of the important doctrines of Christ is the law of stewardship. Only as we obey that law and use our money, time, and talents wisely, in his service, can we be really happy.

Ellen: Oh, I remember now, that law of stewardship 'again! Don't worry, sister, I know how to be happy, and I mean really happy. Not any of that long-faced stuff you're trying to kid yourself with. My motto is have as much fun as you can today, tomorrow comes soon enough. I'm going to get all I can out of life. What difference does it make?

Voice: Let no man deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me.
Curtain.

SCENE III

Enter Lloyd and Don.

Lloyd: I thought about going to Grace-land, too, but if I did that, I'd have to live a whole lot more economically than I do.

Don: Well, is that such a hardship?

Lloyd: Brother, it is for me! The girl friend likes things classy.

Don: I guess you'll have to get yourself another girl friend. I can't afford too much of that sort of thing.

Lloyd: Ditch Ellen? Not on your life. She's more fun than three other girls. Pretty hard to keep up with, though.

Don: Glad I don't have to keep up with her. May's fast enough for me, and not hard on the pocketbook, I might add. Of course May is saving up to go to Graceland, too, so she understands.

Lloyd: Why don't you get a job, like me? We could have great times together. Ellen and I have been getting around lately.

Don: No, thanks. I have too many other things I want to do.

Lloyd: What, for instance?

Don: Well, I want to be a school superintendent, so I have to study pretty hard this year. Then, too, I have my League and scout work, so I couldn't spare the time if I had the inclination.

Lloyd: What's the sense in all that? Where's the fun in it?

Don: I'm not looking for fun only, Lloyd. At least not the kind of fun you mean. I get a lot of pleasure out of my activities in a different way.

Lloyd: What are you looking for?

Don: For the best use to make of life. I want to be a wise steward of my money, time, and talents. Someday, if I'm faithful, I may be called into the ministry, and then I can devote my full time to the church. I believe our church has a great future, Lloyd, and I want to be a part of that future. The only way I can do that is to comply with the stewardship law consistently.

Lloyd: I suppose I could do that if I tried hard enough, but who wants that kind of life? Eat, drink, and be merry, that's my motto.

Voice: Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me.
Curtain.

SCENE IV

Ten years later. Don, May, and Ellen meet. (Ellen is dressed loudly and her make-up is heightened.)

Ellen: Hello, folks, fancy meeting you here!

Don: It's pretty hard to believe it's nearly ten years ago since we last met.

May: Is Lloyd in town with you? I heard you were married.

Ellen: Heard we were married! I thought the grapevine worked faster than that. We're married and divorced, kid.

Don: Divorced! But—

Ellen: Doesn't the preacher look horrified!

May: How did it happen? I thought—

Ellen: Yeah, so did I. Well, the whole sad story is this. Lloyd quit school you know, to go to work, and when he got out of a job, every place he applied harped about his not having enough education. Finally he got a low-paid job, but who could live on that? We hadn't saved any money because we always had a pretty good time, you know, so it was just too tough going. I worked, too, but we always had rows over who spent whose money, and neither of us ever had any. Lloyd always blamed me for spending too much on clothes, but after all I couldn't go around looking like a rag. He spent plenty too at his club. We just couldn't stand it any longer, so we agreed to dissolve the partnership.

(Ellen looks away from Don and May, and continues.) Perhaps if we'd had something to work for, something to aim at . . . (looks at them again.) But tell me, what have you been doing? You look happy and healthy.

May: It's pretty hard to tell you everything, Ellen, so much has happened, but briefly, I went to Graceland as I planned, then on to the university and became a teacher. Later I took a post graduate course in music and taught high school till three years ago when Don and I were married.

Ellen: What about you, Don?

Don: I did pretty much as I planned, too. I'm pastor of our branch up in Northern Michigan now, and May is my right-hand man. What I'd do without her help in the church school and music departments, I don't know.

May: What are you going to do now, Ellen?

Ellen: What is there for me to do? Pick up another man, I guess, or drift someplace and take what luck comes.

Don: Perhaps you and Lloyd could— well—

Ellen: Not a chance. I don't even know where he is now. I heard he'd landed out west some place. He always said he might have been successful if I hadn't dragged him out nights and spent all his money. But, as I always told him, he needn't have done it if he hadn't wanted to. You know, I've thought quite a bit lately about those talks on stewardship we had when we last met. Perhaps there is something in it; anyway, I'd like to get together sometime and talk over a few things with you. Perhaps your church has something after all.

Voice: Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me.
Curtain.

Crossroad

(A PANTOMIME)

(This would be more effective if colored lighting were used. In pantomime the gestures are pronounced and sustained longer than in ordinary drama. Do not drop the pose assumed till it is necessary to make another movement. Never make any movement without a reason. This should be rehearsed a number of times with the narrator to ascertain pace and co-ordination of movement and narration. Smoothness is essential in effective pantomime. The narrator should not be seen.)

Quartet: (The following may be sung to the tune of "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," Saints' Hymnal, No. 153, or Christian Service Songs, No. 289. All singing should be done from the wings.)

Give of your best to the Master;
Give of the strength of your youth;
Throw your soul's fresh glowing ardor
Into the battle for truth.
Jesus has set the example;
Dauntless was he, young and brave;
Give him your loyal devotion,
Give him the best that you have.

Give of your best to the Master;
Give him first place in your heart;
Give him first place in your service,
Consecrate every part.
Give and to you shall be given;
God his beloved Son gave;
Gratefully seeking to serve him,
Give him the best that you have.

Give of your best to the Master;
Naught else is worthy his love;
Your money, your time, and your talents,
Are his who reigneth above.
He gave his life without murmur
From sin all the world to save;
Kneel now in full consecration,
Give him the best that you have.

(Youth and Wisdom enter during the singing of this hymn, and stand, center, till it is finished.)

Youth: But I have so little to give. Surely the Lord is not interested in the little bit I have to offer. Let those who have lots of money to spare do the giving.

Wisdom: Perhaps the Lord himself can show us out of his word just how he feels about that. Let us stand aside, and watch. (Withdraw towards right rear.)

(In the following, the priest, rich man, and rich woman should walk with dignity, while the poor widow should walk slowly and humbly. Each should be dressed to represent his station in life, with the widow in black with black headdress. It is not necessary to dress in Biblical costume, although this would add interest to the pantomime.)

Narrator: And Jesus sat over against the treasury (priest enters slowly and deposits offering) and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury. And he said unto his disciples, "Beware of the scribes which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market places, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feast: Which devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive the greater damnation."—Mark 12: 38-44. (Exit priest, slowly.)

And many that were rich cast in much. (Enter rich man and woman, who make their contribution, slowly and deliberately.) Then said Jesus unto his disciples, "Verily, I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." (Exit rich man and woman.)

And there came a certain poor widow, (enter widow) and she threw in two mites which make a farthing. And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, "Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury. For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living." (Exit.)

Quartet: Hymn No. 302, first and third verses.

Saviour, thy dying love
Thou gavest me,
Nor should I aught withhold,
Dear Lord, from thee.
In love my soul would bow,
My heart fulfill its vow,
Some offering bring thee now,
Something for thee.

All that I am and have,
Thy gifts so free,
Ever in joy or grief,
My Lord, for thee;
And when thy face I see,
My ransomed soul shall be,
Through all eternity,
Something for thee.

(Youth and Wisdom have walked slowly to center during this number.)

Youth: I see. It isn't so important how much we have to give, but the spirit in which we give it. Does it make any difference if we do not comply with the whole stewardship law? There are a lot of things I would like to do. Perhaps it would be enough just to pay my tithing? Life's too short to pass up the excitement of youth.

Wisdom: Perhaps your perspective of life needs to be analyzed. Life is not short, it is of never-ending duration, and the happiness gained by worth-while living endures through the whole of life and eternity. Look. (They withdraw again to former position.)

Narrator: For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods. (Merchant enters and sits at desk. Three servants take up positions before him.) And unto one he gave five talents (first servant steps up and receives package, bows and step back), to another two, and to another one; (each of the other two servants steps forward, receiving respectively smaller packages, bow, and step back) to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. (Merchant rises and exits right.)

They Need Not Walk Alone

"THERE!" MARJIE HEAVED a sigh. Her tired eyes smiled a little proudly as she glanced approvingly at the desk covered with neatly arranged sparkling glassware. The laboratory was all set up for another day's work tomorrow at eight. The noisy clanging of the janitor crew putting buckets and mops into the closet down the corridor indicated it must have become later than she had suspected, but then, she had not anticipated repeating that last determination!

A last careful check assured her all equipment was set for the night—windows were closed, lights were out. A quick dash to the dressing room to exchange uniform for campus clothes, and Marjie stepped out into the night.

Halfway through the massive front doors she halted, poised as a bird resting in mid-flight. How beautiful the night! Strange that every night should be so different, yet each so very beautiful. She should have learned by now to expect it. Had not she been stopped thus breathlessly every night she had worked late for the past eight months? And late nights had become increasingly frequent. But every day the work of the laboratory proved so absorbing she always forgot until the great doors swung outward at evening and revealed another world.

Other nights it had been driving rain that greeted her. Rain that washed clean the sculptor's children at play on the edge of the fountain. Rain that made the lamps along the walks peer through the darkness, looking ridiculously funny in their apologetic efforts to light even the most shallow of the puddles awaiting the unprotected feet that passed, little knowing what shimmering loveliness they lent the sheets of rain that shrouded and embarrassed them.

Sometimes it had been a thick, fluffy blanket of snow that covered the vista, making friendly ghosts of the playing children. Then the wet snows clung to trees and buildings, turning the whole campus into a fairyland. Then, too, the lights were partially hidden by jaunty snow-caps and swirling flakes, but they blinked cheerfully as if it didn't matter, looking for the world like Christmas cards come to life.

There had been the night the northern lights were so spectacularly displayed! Another time, Jack Frost had surprised a gentle rain and dressed all the trees in tinkling silver. That night the walks had looked like silvery ribbons and felt like very slick ice!

Tonight the stately ivy-laced front columns framed still another picture—a picture so vibrantly alive that Marjie once more caught her breath. It didn't seem right to intrude upon a masterpiece like this, certainly not without asking permission!

The whole campus seemed to have come alive. The childish fingers, held out to the fountain stream, fondled the silver ribbons that rippled into the basin below, where dozens of stars danced merrily in the pool. Past the fountain and its circling hedge, the lush green carpeting stretched to the border of trees that skirted central campus, broken only by the network of walks that patterned it. To the right and to the left stood dignified buildings, dark now except for rooms in which a few like Marjie had not yet finished the day's work.

Tonight the lights along the way could rest. A greater light made every detail in the paths plainly visible. Half asleep, they seemed to be comfortably nestled atop their posts, knowing full well their work was being shared.

And the man in the moon seemed tremendously pleased with himself. Slipping from behind the campanile, he winked knowingly at Marjie as much as to say, "It is good to be alive tonight, isn't it?" And Marjie smiled back, barely repressing an answering wink.

As if his winking or smile or maybe his thinking had disturbed it, the campanile suddenly broke the silence with first a great chiming, then a resounding bonging as it struck the hour. Eight-nine-ten. Marjie started as one suddenly awakened from a lovely dream. Eleven! No wonder the buildings were so nearly deserted.

Marjie released the heavy door, surprised to find she had held it all the while, and sped lightly down the steps. Great breaths of fresh air met her, and she stood straight and tall to make extra room for them inside. Her feet seemed scarcely to touch the familiar walks. Her glances danced quickly, loathe to miss a thing among changing campus scenes—changed by the shifting shadows and her own swift motion, and the blue, blue sky above with its myriad stars and friendly moon.

"Father, it is good. Each one seems more beautiful than the last. It's so very friendly this way!" Marjie had quite naturally slipped into conversation with The Artist who had caught step beside her. "I'm terribly glad you have helped me to learn to enjoy it and love it, You and mother. I have to shake myself periodically to be sure I'm really here to enjoy it."

"But what are you doing about it?" came the rejoinder.

"Doing about it? Why I—I—What should I be doing about it?" "Look."

Marjie glanced aside just in time to see another student slip wearily out the side door of a building close by and start slowly across the campus, looking neither to the right nor to the left, nor up, apparently quite unaware of the artistry of which she had become a part.

"She looks lonely!" There was pity in Marjie's voice. "It's too bad someone could not have waited and walked with her tonight!"

There was no answer.

"There are so many lonely people in this world!" Marjie spoke half to herself. "There was Don

Here Is the Writer . . .

Mildred Nelson

You've heard doctors called pill-pushers. Well, Mildred Nelson might be called a vitamin-shover. She's a nutritionist with the Iowa Agricultural Extension Service and works out of the Iowa State College office. Guilford, Missouri, is home town to Mildred and Northwest Missouri State Teachers College at Maryville was her first College G-Day (graduation, of course). But Iowa State went Maryville one better and granted her a master of science degree after long hours of study and patient research. She likes people, out-of-doors, travel, horses, home, and music—in fact, almost everything but jellied pigs' feet and big intangibles such as man's inhumanity to man and willful disobedience to Good.

Bratcher with his witty cynicisms in a crowd but so terribly alone much of the time, and Ruth Stoner, and even Dr. Glutch. That wistful way in which he looks at everyone he meets makes one think of a puppy begging for a friend. They all need friends to walk with them."

"You had no one wait for you tonight."

Just what was The Artist meaning?

"Oh, but I don't need anyone," quickly protested Marjie. "I'm not alone! Come to think of it, I don't remember that I've ever been really alone."

"Do you know why?"

There was a long pause. Then thoughtfully Marjie replied, "I think I'm beginning to see. You mean if they knew You, too—"

Again there was no reply.

Marjie became aware of the turn in the street. The lights in the apartment showed that the others had preceded her home. She started to search through her purse for the key. "Yes, Father, I think I see. They need not walk alone, either! I'll try to help!"

New Horizons

Then he that had received the five talents went and traded the same, and made them other five talents. (First servant exits left.) And likewise he that had received two (second servant exits left) he also gained other two.

But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money. (Third servant proceeds to rear left corner, stoops down, covers package, then exits.)

After a long time the lord of those servants cometh (enter merchant who again sits at desk) and reckoneth with them. (Enter first servant with a larger package, which he lays on the desk.) And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, "Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents, behold I have gained beside them five talents more." His lord said unto him, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, (merchant rises and takes servant's hand) enter thou into the joy of thy lord." (Servant bows and exits right.)

He also that had received two talents came and said, "Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents, (second servant enters with a larger package which he lays on desk) behold, I have gained two other talents beside them."

His lord said unto him, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, (merchant rises and takes servant's hand) enter thou into joy of thy lord." (Servant bows and exits right.)

Then he which had received the one talent came (enter third servant slowly, takes package from corner and stands before the desk with bowed head) and said, "Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not scattered, and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth. Lo, there thou hast that is thine."

His lord answered and said unto him, "Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not scattered, thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. (Merchant takes package and proceeds to tie the packages of the first and third servant together.) I will take therefore the talent from him and give it unto him which hath ten talents, and cast the unprofitable servant into outer darkness. (Merchant stands and points at arm's length to left exit.) There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Servant exits left, dejectedly.)

Quartet: Hymn No. 201, first and fourth verses.

A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify,
A never dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky.

Help me to watch and pray,
And on thyself rely,
Assured, if I my trust betray,
I shall forever die.

Youth: We are accountable to God then for what he has given us. Since he has given us life and everything in it, we must be accountable to him for the use we make of his gifts. Oh, well, that seems sensible enough. I'll have a good time for a few years, then I'll settle down and see what I can do about it. Wisdom: Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. Look again.

Narrator: (Luke 15: 11) A certain man had two sons, (enter father and sons) and the younger of them said unto his father, "Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me." (Father gives small bulky bag to son. Older son remains in the background, looking on till his father beckons to him, then he comes forward to receive a similar bag.) And he divided unto them his living. (All exit.)

And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country. (Younger son enters, loaded down with belongings, and crosses to opposite exit.) There he wasted his substance with riotous living.

And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country, who sent him into his fields to feed swine. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat, but no man gave unto him.

And when he came to himself, he said, "How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! (Re-enters, and stands just inside the exit.) I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son, make me as one of thy hired servants." Starts walking slowly.) And he arose, and came to his father. (Enter father who stands for a moment, then walks quickly towards son, taking his hands in welcome.) But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and greeted him. (Exit right.)

Wisdom: Which brother would you rather be?

Youth: The elder brother, of course. He still had his inheritance intact. His body and mind were still healthy and wholesome, and he had no regrets. You know, I've just been thinking—

Wisdom: Yes?

Youth: Since I have only one inheritance from God, I can never regain it if I lose it or impair it.

Wisdom: No.

Youth: Then perhaps I had better look into this question of stewardship and see if it is better to spend my youth doing those things which bring enduring happiness and preserve my inheritance, or in those pursuits which bring fleeting excitement, and lasting regret.

Youth and Wisdom stand together in center during the singing of the following hymn. If the music is not available, read it as a poem.)

Quartet: "Living for Jesus" Christian Service Songs, No. 158.

Living for Jesus a life that is true,
Striving to please him in all that I do,
Yielding allegiance, glad hearted and free,
This is the pathway of blessing for me.

Living for Jesus who died in my place,
Bearing on Cal'ry my sin and disgrace,
Such love constrains me to answer his call,
Follow his leading and give him my all.

Living for Jesus wherever I am,
Doing each duty in his holy name,
Willing to suffer affliction or loss,
Deeming each trial a part of my cross.

Living for Jesus thro' earth's little while,
My dearest treasure, the light of his smile,
Seeking the lost ones he died to redeem,
Bringing the weary to find rest in him.

REFRAIN:

O Jesus, Lord and Saviour,
I give myself to thee,
For thou, in thy atonement,
Didst give thyself for me.
I own no other Master,
My heart shall be thy throne.
My life I give, henceforth to live,
O Christ, for thee alone.

Travel Notes . . .

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman kindly issued an invitation to accompany him on a trip to Taylorville, Illinois, where the Central Illinois District recently held a priesthood institute, February 1 and 2. This proved to be an experience so happy and so rich in spiritual benefits that it seems worth special comment.

Springfield, Illinois, is the heart and center of the old Lincoln country. The beautiful level prairies are still among the richest farming lands of the country. The fine old homes and business structures of the city give evidence of how well and solidly the early builders did their work. In both winter and summer, the tall trees show careful tending, and lend beauty to the scene.

Taylorville is pretty, homelike, friendly, and busy. Our church there is in the northeast part of town, and one drives past a remarkable and beautiful mansion and other good homes to get there. The church is very attractive, has a good auditorium, basement, dining room, and class facilities. Upstairs they have made a fine arrangement of curtains and archway for use with the baptismal font, which also serves to provide indirect lighting for the picture of the head of Christ that all the congregation can see. They have installed fluorescent lighting for the main auditorium, which is easy on the eyes.

Arthur Henson is district president, and is also prominent in business circles, owning a large Oldsmobile agency and repair shop, and a Firestone store. In his lovely home he turns the second floor over to visiting ministers, with study, bedrooms, and everything needed for rest and preparation for work. Downstairs, his gracious companion presides, setting a table second to none anywhere, and taking pleasure in her contribution to the church service. Their son Ronnie, aged five, is very charming, and it would take a tough and callous heart not to fall in love with him immediately. He is equally willing to play his pieces on the piano, or to play games for the entertainment of the visitor.

Evangelist John Grice leads a busy life, not relenting his pace as the years accumulate. When his work becomes heavier, he just adds more equipment to speed it up. He carries almost full office equipment in his car: a folding table, portable typewriter, and a Sound-Scriber that records the blessings as he gives them, which he later types and mails. Wherever he is, he finds a small space and sets up his headquarters for his work. He turns his attention to whatever labor needs to be done, and enjoys a splendid spirit of co-operation with other church officers.

Apostle Oakman carried the weight of responsibility for the organization and success of the meetings, employing the talents of all officers who attended, so far as possible, in some way. The result was a rich ministry, characterized by leadership, instruction, and light, that proved highly beneficial and brought many expressions of appreciation.

The pleasure of meeting all the fine people, both residents and visitors, of hearing their testimonies and other contributions, was very great. The blessings received during the visit were much needed and deeply appreciated. The occasion was a happy and memorable one.

Central Illinois district is historic ground, and one finds families here that have been prominent in the history of the church, both formerly and recently. —L. J. L.

* Englewood Church

Our cover picture this week presents the new Englewood Church, on the west edge of Independence. Its architecture is adapted from the beautiful Georgian colonial style, also found in the Independence Jackson County courthouse, and derived from many fine examples in Virginia and elsewhere. In using this excellent style, the church has shown a high standard of good taste. It has been considered beautiful for at least three hundred years. We may be sure that future generations will continue to find it good. This picture was taken by Marvin McDole, head of our Visual Aids department.

* Youth

Time develops in us a deep appreciation of the generosity and kindness, the response and thoughtfulness of younger people. As we grow older, the burdens of life increase, and the strength to bear them wanes. Friends and loved ones are taken away, and to avoid increasing isolation, we must reach out with mind and heart toward others, offering the little bit of help we can give whenever we see they are in need. Unless we do this, we are soon very lonely. And because our own generation is on the way out, an increasing source of friendship must be sought among those who are younger than we are. It appears true that one of God's richest ways of blessing his world is steadily sending new life into it, and we learn to love the young, from earliest infancy to glorious manhood and womanhood. They brighten the world with their smiles, take up its tasks with their strength, and give it new hope.

* TRUE LOVE is about the only kind of game people play, in which both sides can win. In false love, both sides lose.

The Ideal and the Real

The Struggle

In our "striving upward toward the light" to improve ourselves and to make some contribution toward the forming of a better world, we find many conditions in need of remedy, and many people not living up to their possibilities of usefulness and happiness. As most of us are objective in our outlook, we find ourselves somewhere near the center of our little worlds of thought, and view other people more or less removed from that point. We see faults in them that we cannot see in ourselves.

Have you ever thought that what you consider faults in other people are simply problems that they have not yet succeeded in solving? These are the questions for which they have not yet found the right answers, the troubles for which they have found no cure, the burdens for which their strength is inadequate, the dark path they must walk in the night lighted only by stars which are for them too dim and distant while they hope for the rising of the morning sun.

Problems

In every human heart and mind there is some concept of an ideal of life. Under wrong conditions it becomes dim and weak; and under the contact with divine sources of light and strength, it is refined and developed. Disparities develop between this ideal and the real life that we lead from day to day. Whether conscious or unconscious of the cause, we are often distressed and unhappy by the contradictions existing between body and spirit. We try to find solutions and ways out, and we are not always successful. Indeed, few of us are ever very near success. Problems develop, and other people see the strains and stresses in our lives.

Wherever there are people, there are problems.

Even the hermit who abandons the world is not free from them. He leaves behind him the difficulties of adapting himself to the eccentricities and personalities of other people. But he carries with him all the problems of his own personality, all his individual needs, all his hunger for human association. And when he is sick, there is nobody to help him.

Make it absolute: wherever there is even one person, there are problems. And, more people, more problems.

It is almost impossible to visit in any home without becoming aware, sometime before the evening is over, of one or more unsolved problems, or sometimes a point of discomfort needing adjustment among members of the family.

The visiting minister, going into any congregation, may be almost sure that problems are there. People and problems are inseparable in this life. Should we be surprised that church membership does not immediately produce peace and perfection?

Jesus was aware of this normal human situation. On one occasion (Mark 2: 15-17) he was seated with his disciples eating. Many who were publicans and sinners, being also interested in the new prophet and his gospel, came to the place and sat eating too. This disturbed the perfectionists, and they criticized him for permitting it. Jesus was not disturbed. He said, "They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

Jesus saw that people's problems could not be solved by forbidding them to hear the gospel, and that they must be tolerated and helped.

Perfection

No intelligent person will pretend to be perfect. If he does, the Scriptures have an answer for him. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."—I John 1: 8.

However, it is the weakness of many people to think that they are doing rather well; the best they can, in fact. When trouble occurs, the fault and responsibility are always to be found in others. Never in us.

No problem can ever be solved in that way. When trouble occurs, it is a wise thing for every person to ask himself, "What did I do that was wrong? How could I have prevented this?" A solution is always much easier to reach if the parties will try this approach.

The desire to absolve ourselves from blame is human and general. It must be seen for what it is, and avoided. No solution to any problem lies in this way.

It is a normal mistake that while we do not aspire to perfection in our own lives, and accept no responsibility for reaching it, we expect it of others. This comes out so many times as people move to the central regions of the church, do a lot of criticizing, and have little to show for themselves. There is no place in the gospel for the "double standard"—one for ourselves and a harder one for other people.

All great improvements take time. The course of history reveals that. Progress is sometimes rapid, sometimes slow. But the great gains of culture and civilization are distributed over centuries. And many of the gains we fondly think we have made for ourselves (taking credit for them) were begun and developed by our ancestors. It requires patience, a far-sighted view, and the labor of many hands to lift the standards of society. Patience, and faith.

Trees

"Out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food."

Barren indeed would be the earth without trees. They delight our eyes with their beauty and strength, speaking to us of God in the symmetry of their pattern and design. Where we see design we know there is a designer, and so the tree points us to God—for "only God can make a tree."

I have loved trees, in groves and forests and singly as individuals. They are of almost infinite variety, for God is limitless in imagination and infinite in execution. There is the tall and slender poplar—very feminine—watching her diet to keep her figure graceful. The lordly oak, living lustily, very masculine, spreads abroad great arms and is the Samson of the forest. The majestic pines, always seeking higher ground, marching up mountain slopes to the summit to catch a vision of distant valleys, perhaps the ocean, have a language of their own as night comes on:

Their language is the language of the seas,
Soft, deep, melodious, and grave;
The far-off wave
Has taught it them upon the evening breeze.

Some of our trees that dress most modestly during the summer, grow weary of green and in the fall put on a gorgeous fashion show, better than any Paris ever dreamed of, even in her royal courts of old. The sugar maple, beloved of the Canadians, outdoes them all in rich scarlet, gold, orange, bronze, and softer blendings of shades. It is the sugar in her veins transmuted into color—literally so.

Live Oak, at home of Sylvester Garner, Sunland, California

The quaking aspen clothes herself in a golden dress as Autumn comes on; her leaves are so delicately balanced that a breath of air keeps them all a tremble. There is a tradition, I believe, that the Cross of Christ was made from an unwilling aspen tree, and so the tree trembles always at the remembrance. We have our own American elms, graceful and as typically American as the statue of liberty. The list is almost limitless. Trees are our friends; they minister to those who will see and hear:

"The mountains and hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands."

I have loved individual trees: A pine, high up in the Rockies, by the side of a great boulder almost as big as a church building, where I have worshiped. An old maple tree on the farm where I was a boy. I went back to it before I married and carved on its trunk two sets of initials, as young men do. Time passed and the tree covered the carving with bark and took the secret nearer to its heart. There are those big elm trees along the north border of the old church lot in Lamoni. Herman C. Smith and I saved them years ago when some automobilists were bent upon hewing them down, because, alas, they shaded the muddy street in the springtime and prevented the soil from drying out. Now the street is hard surfaced and the trees still stand. It takes even God years to develop a majestic and beautiful tree—a man may chop it down in an hour.

What inspired this sermon on trees? A picture lying on my desk, and memories it aroused. It is the picture of a giant live oak at the home of my long-time friends, Sylvester and Cora Garner, of Sunland, California. The live oak is a very beautiful tree. Live oaks do not huddle together and gossip as some forest trees do. With dignity they stand a little apart, each by itself, for they must have room to spread their great branches. This particular tree, an old friend of mine, has a spread of ninety-five feet, the trunk is six feet in diameter; and I am told that tree experts estimate its age at twelve hundred years. Also they have pronounced it one of the most symmetrical and beautiful trees in Southern California.

The Garners have lived with that tree for thirty years and own the lot on which it stands—but they cannot be said to own the tree. It belongs to the ages. On a day in last

A Great and Marvelous Work---Zion

By Bishop D. O. Chesworth

One year before the day the church was organized in New York state, two young men were blessed by the Lord through a revelation which was to become increasingly significant with the passing of years. The opening statement of this revelation declares, "A great and marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."

Two and one-half years after this initial instruction pertaining to Zion had been given, "The Lord's Preface" was revealed; it states: "Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world . . . that mine everlasting covenant might be established." In addition we read in Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5, "Before the great day of the Lord shall come . . . Zion shall flourish upon the hills."

Zion is a term which has great significance to Latter Day Saints and indeed connotes a great and marvelous work, even a marvelous work and a wonder. We have sung about it, and our hearts have thrilled as we have joined with others in singing, "O may His coming be not delayed long." Our orators have swayed assemblies in speaking about this unique subject as they, backed by fifty-eight revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, have preached powerfully but alas, Zion is not yet, and the first revelation is still urging us to "seek to establish."

Zion in its comprehensive sphere, may and does appeal in degrees to varied types of people, but it cannot be stripped of some particular features, namely: sacrifice ("Verily it is a day of sacrifice" Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5), tithing ("It is a day for the tithing of my people"), and stewardship ("For it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and eternity."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1). Stewardship will be the term used to incorporate these features of Zion for this presentation.

Jesus asked questions on many occasions. "How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship."—Luke 16: 2. Perhaps there have been times in our lives, probably today, when we have wasted the goods entrusted to us or tended more and more to measure the results of our discipleship in terms of success and popularity. It was on such an occasion that Jesus gave his listeners the parable of the steward. Our Lord came teaching stewardship, using the words steward and stewardship on many occasions to enable his followers to get a clear picture of their privilege and responsibility as recipients of the gifts of God. There is the stewardship of opportunity, service, time, talents, business, possessions, money, truth, prayer, courage, heritage, and the gospel. A sermon could be preached on each of these.

Having preached this philosophy for a century, we have been pioneers in a very important field, but with universal acceptance of many of the features of the Restoration we learn today, regretfully, that many religious institutions have surpassed us in their presentations of stewardship. On one occasion, a young man suggested that we use the word consecration instead of stewardship since it carried greater meaning. Perhaps we may be among those lacking appreciation for the term. Helen Keller, who was told by her remarkable teacher that God was very near —her "unseen Father" who loved her and would not let go her hand either in life or in death, said, "I have often felt him. He comes like warmth, but I did not know before what to call him!"

John Wesley showed his powers of discernment when he said, "Christianity has in it the elements of its own destruction. When a man becomes a true Christian, he becomes industrious, trustworthy and prosperous. Now, if that man, whilst he gets all he can and saves all he can, does not give all he can, I have more hope of Judas Iscariot than of that man." Horace Bushness said, "One more revival—only one more is needed, the revival of Christian stewardship, the dedication of the money power to God." Do you remember Peter's saying to Ananias, "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? While it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou has not lied unto men, but unto God."

The Father's business is stewardship and is best realized in the life of the Son on earth, which began in Bethlehem and ended in the supreme tragedy at Calvary. Palmer is remembered for this statement, "Self-sacrifice is an everyday affair. By it we live. Without it society could not go on for an hour I mean by self-sacrifice any diminution of my possessions, pleasures or powers, in order to increase those of others . . . the greatest conceivable sacrifice is when I give myself."

Many believers who are truly conscientious stewards began with the acceptance of the principle of the tithe. Some exceptional persons may grasp the truth of the personal ownership of our Heavenly Father all at once, but most absorb truth by degrees and it probably is true that the task is to get the average individual to feel the stewardship of property by some beginning of systematic and proportionate support of God's program for the kingdom. The tithe is such a beginning and has a great historical and spiritual background. The tithe (tenth of the increase) as a beginning serves to test the honesty of purpose to accept stewardship as a life philosophy. There is little hope of combating the covetousness of the human heart, or of supporting the kingdom until men are ready to set apart at least the tithe of their increase. There need be no mystery about it, it is a fair expression of the sincerity of our stewardship. Compliance with this scriptural principle has often marked the beginning of a new era in the lives of people who have come to practice it. The payment of tithing is a recognition of Deity. We do not give God a fraction of that which we possess, but we loyally acknowledge his sovereignty over the whole.

An analysis of income tax returns of a group of seventy-nine men revealed an average income of $4,100 a year. Seventy-seven could not record a deduction for gifts, with a possible exception of a dollar or two to Red Cross or Community Fund, to make their departments 100 per cent represented. One other gave $2.00 a week to his church, while his three children gave twenty-five cents a week making $2.75 a week out of $106 weekly income. The last man, from the southern mountains, had an income of $4,200 and gave $420. "You see," he explained, "we were brought up to give a tenth [in his case a tenth of income] to the Lord. We couldn't do less than that, could we, and be good Christians?" Seventy-seven did not respond to the divine call to recognize money as a sacred trust from God. Someone asked Daniel Webster what thought was the most solemn that ever entered his mind. "The answer is my personal accountability to Almighty God." A recent survey (December, 1946) conducted by a Buffalo, New York, pastor of a congregation of 360 members indicated that a majority felt that the Christian way of life can be practiced in business or industry. They generally favored giving at least 5 per cent of their income to the church.

Today, in the Restored Church, we have a golden opportunity to teach our members the plan of stewardship which includes the inventory, tithes, surplus, and offerings. Today, as ever, we need disciples to witness for Jesus regarding stewardship. During the past seven months in the North Atlantic States Mission a host of witnesses have given assurance that we shall be triumphant in our presentation of Zion. One newly-converted, business man said, "I made a tithing payment since joining the church, but now I want to pay tithing the Lord's way and file my inventory." This attitude has been repeated many times during this year and will be represented in results through out the next two or three decades. A Zion's League priesthood member testifies that he has been paying tithes for several years and has been abundantly blessed. He has money all the time, while his friends who receive more seem to be without so often. An eighty-year-old couple filed a new start inventory, after a lapse of many years, and are happy in the joy of stewardship. In one branch where we had eighteen people filing annually we now have sixty and hope soon to report 100 filing or 40 per cent of the branch enrollment and practically 100 per cent of those in attendance. Many instances like these could be reported. Readers may be surprised to learn that twenty-five years ago many of these people complied with the law, but in recent years they have felt that there hasn't been enough preaching and class instruction on the subject.

One particular emphasis of our work is with juniors in stressing junior stewardship. Our best results in this age bracket have been achieved in Jonesport, Maine; much of the success there can be accredited to the work of the pastor and solicitor. If we would only specialize on this age, we would have our adult task lessened greatly. Zion's Leaguers have yet to sense deeply, in an organized manner, the urgency of stewardship with its features of accounting and tithing.

Our procedure in this area is to have pastors and solicitors enrolled, then concentrate on the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood members, and ultimately launch a crusade among our membership. Blessings come to individuals who comply and who belong to the active Zion-building church. Consequently we need to have more people receiving these blessings and testifying. There should be more than 30 per cent listed among the annual tithepayers. If we always remember to contribute our tithe each and every year, we can increase that figure.

Read these testimonials taken from letters received:

From a pastor: "I have just completed making out my duplicate copies of inventory and will file same at an early date. Our solicitor is expected to make out his, and I am encouraging all the Saints to do so. I trust we shall lead all in compliance, showing the way to other districts and fields."

From a solicitor: "I've been able to sell all the Family Budget Books but am having some difficulty in getting the young people interested in the others. When you were here I should have had a talk with you regarding the inventory blanks. I'm a poor example for a solicitor, as I have never filed mine, but frankly, I never knew just how to go about it."

From a priesthood member: "Here is our annual statement with accompanying check for tithing due. We do hope many will respond to the invitation of stewardship."

From a member: "Here is my annual statement. It may help to fill it out for you now. It should have been done the first of the year but I did not have inventory blanks."

THE BURNING BUSH

By Apostle Blair Jensen

This is one of a series of talks for Morning Devotions on Radio Station KMBC in 1944.

2. Endurance

Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian; and he led the flock to the back side of the desert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb. And again, the presence of the Lord appeared unto him, in a flame of fire in the midst of a bush; and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed. And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not consumed. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I. And he said, Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. Moreover he said, I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.—Exodus 3: 1-6.

In this story of Moses' burning bush, we have a picture of the ideal and satisfying life. It is a life with a continuing and an enduring purpose, "the bush was not consumed." There are a great many people today who have a sense of purpose. It is comparatively easy to find men and women who are good starters. Today our problem is to find men and women who are good stickers. Our great lack nowadays is that of staying power. A good beginning may be half of the battle, but it is the last half of the battle of life which really counts. While we cheer the first score of the game, yet we all realize that no game is won until the final whistle has blown. It is then that we make the final tally of the scores that have been made. It is the same with the great game or battle of life.

The questions we put to you are: Can you persevere and endure? Can you end well? Know this for a certainty, there never was a worthwhile thing accomplished except that it was finally attained by men who suffered disappointment, who endured desertion, who reckoned with defeat, and who found failure. Worth-while attainments are achieved by men, who in spite of all adversity, keep hoping, keep believing, keep striving, and, above all, remain steadfast and confident.

*The lives of men and women of today hold great possibility and large opportunity. The future of the world is in their hands. They are not only responsible for the work which under ordinary circumstances would have fallen to them, they have to do the work and carry the burden of those countless numbers who in the global warfare have been withdrawn from the ordinary patterns of living. Truly, life for men and women of today must burn with a great and enduring purpose, the bush burning but not being consumed.

So many lives are like the prairie fires when the long grasses are burned off the meadows at evening hour in early springtime. There is a wild beauty to the magnificent blaze as great golden banners flaming heavenward are tossed about upon the black of night, and then just as suddenly all is quiet and still, a few flowing embers, and then the darkness again. The grey light of early dawn reveals but a few handfuls of soft ashes for the day winds to scatter. Such a life equally fails of being worth-while. It is a restless, a never satisfied search for pleasure. At best it is lived badly and spent extravagantly. Its end is discontent and nonsatisfaction.

No splendid thing is easily gained. Every great success has been snatched from the precipice of failure. After Valley Forge came the dawning light and finally freedom with victory. The way of the world's progress is stained with bloody footprints. The stakes at which martyrs were burned are signposts all the way. Calvary's cross stands in the midst of a sea of crosses upon which mankind's saviors and leaders were crucified unto death.

Wyclif did not find it easy to preach in his day, nor Savorola in his. It was not easy for Luther to affirm his great convictions. George Whitfield was driven to the open fields for his pulpit. It was not easy for Wesley to canvass three earthly kingdoms for the sake of his Lord, and this in the face of persecution and despising. It was not easy for Joseph Smith to proclaim divinely revealed truth and this to a martyr's grave. To such leaders as these, immediate success did not come. Prophets are never popular in their own day and to their own generation. After they are gone, another generation builds monuments to their memory. Men who are matched to soft jobs are soft men. God calls rugged men to the rugged and eternal tasks that are his. Of such a one sings Margaret Elizabeth Sangster in her immortal "Abraham Lincoln":

Child of the boundless prairie, son of the Virgin Soil,
Heir to the bearing of burdens, brother of them that toil;
God and Nature together shaped him
to lead in the van,
In the stress of the wildest weather, when the nation needed a man.

The work that God has for you to do will try your faith and patience and hope to the utmost limit and then some. The work for which you were created is like toiling all night and catching nothing, oftentimes it will be like preaching to men who are hard and unresponsive as stones. It may be the casting of pearls before swine. It may mean, at long last, the dying in faith, never having received even the promise. Of this be assured, it will always be worth-while for

ARE YOU READY FOR

A Full-Time Pastor

By Nora Moser

OUR CHURCH is moving away from the tradition of volunteer, unpaid local ministers. Many branches in cities such as Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City, and Los Angeles now have full-time, church-supported pastors, and the demand from other branches much exceeds the supply of available men. It is too late to discuss whether or not the change should occur. It has.

Supporting a pastor means a substantial increase in the branch budget and the necessity of dependable, regular contributions by the members. Other churches furnish residences for their ministers. If your branch is asking for a full-time pastor now, can a place for him to live be found in your community?

Because of our past, we don't quite know what to do with a full-time pastor when we have one. We have always been proud of offering a variety of speakers for our services from the local talent. We don't want to give that up and be just like other denominations. The priesthood still has its responsibilities. The most important questions in changing to a full-time pastor are: How much can he do? How much should he and his wife be expected to do? How many of the people who have been doing the work of the branch can now sit at ease in the congregation?

WITH A PAID MINISTER at the head of the branch, the final responsibility for all the work is somehow felt to rest on him, rather than on the individuals who have been elected or appointed to the several posts. When new vacancies occur, the tendency to dump jobs in the pastor's lap is very strong. Thus the pastor may officially be the branch president, young people's leader, and teacher of a class, and in effect also the church school director and branch clerk. His wife is probably head of the women's department and leader of the choir.

A branch which makes or lets the pastor do everything is losing, not gaining, on the deal. The branch as a whole is paying out an increased amount of money. From a purely mercenary viewpoint, the branch should be receiving all the ministry it had before, plus the services of the pastor. The only exception would be the relief deserved by persons who had been previously overworked. A full-time pastor, if he is not saddled with running the whole branch singlehandedly, can devote his efforts to regaining indifferent members, making new converts, and expanding the activities of the branch. This will result in time in the need for more volunteer workers, not fewer.

A MINISTER'S WIFE has a hard time at best. She must manage on very little money. Her every action and those of her children are watched and judged by the members of the congregation. Her husband's full time, not just forty hours a week, is spent on his work, and he is always on call, like a doctor. Therefore she has more than the ordinary woman's share of family responsibility. Should she in addition be expected to do her husband's secretarial work and one or two major assignments of church work?

When the minister does it all, the people in the branch have no chance to grow. Those who have abilities and desire to use them will find outlets elsewhere. Persons who find they can be relieved of responsibilities they had held in the branch will then allow other things to take up their time. Later on, if they should be called on for church work again, they may be unable or unwilling to break their outside commitments. When a new minister comes, serious disruption results if most of the activities of the branch must adjust to a new personality and new policies. Continuity and stability are lost.

There is little doubt of the financial ability of any sizable branch to support a minister in times like the present. But can your branch also support him with willing workers? If the full-time pastor must do all the work, the branch is on the downgrade and he is, at best, a stopgap. The church cannot afford to expend its man power there. The men are needed where the best use will be made of them.

This generation urgently needs the message of stewardship. The breath-taking advance in technical knowledge the past fifty years has concentrated ever-larger privileges in the hands of individuals, and there is always a duty in privilege. Unless there is a widespread consecration of all of life to our Heavenly Father and a recognition of the need to use life as a stewardship, this generation will fail. As stated by E. B. Pusey, "Whoso neglects a thing which he suspects he ought to do, because it seems to him too small a thing, is deceiving himself; it is not too little, but too great for him, that he doeth it not."

Increasingly we shall be searching into this "great and marvelous work" known to Latter Day Saints as Zion. Since it is so important to our Lord, it must therefore be vitally important for us to continuously "seek to bring forth and establish" the great cause.

The Father Relation of God to Man

By J. A. Koehler

Number 24 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

IT IS A UNIVERSAL custom to address personages in terms of the relations which they sustain to us; as when we say, for example, Mr. President; or as when the Prophet Daniel said, "O King." There is in truth a very good reason for that custom.

The first words of what we call The Lord's Prayer are "Our Father." I believe, and so do you, perhaps, that those two words—(1) "Our" and (2) "Father"—reveal Jesus' conception of God's relation to man. Jesus had a reason for addressing God as "Our Father." And that reason is, as all Christendom has come to maintain, that God is related to man as the universal Father. He is related to "us"—to us regarded as a family—as "our Father."

True fathers are related to their sons, or children, as persons who love them, that is to say, as persons who appreciate them, who delight in them, who desire their presence, and who seek to promote their well-being and happiness. We say, therefore, that "God [who is truly "our Father"] is love."

WE SAY MORE. We say that God is a father who not only knows how to love us, but who also has ways of making his love effectual. In other words, God has power to do all that the "heavenly" Father may do to promote the well-being and happiness of man.

You may have known one preacher or another who used the relations of our earthly fathers or mothers to us to depict the relation of the "heavenly" Father to all men severally and to the human "family." But I shall use a less common illustration. I will represent the Father-relation of God to man in terms of a lily grower's relation to her lilies. You should be able to guess why I do that.

Last year I sent a half hundred lily bulbs, plus some bulblets, to a distant niece, who is a lover of all flowers. That niece wrote me that she had planted even the smallest bulblet "with loving care." She exercised care to do what all experienced lily-ladies do. So this is the essence of her "loving care." She selected the location best suited to the needs of her lilies. She endeavored to prepare the soil, or to put into her lily beds everything that her lilies required. She planted—at least she intended to plant—each bulb the proper depth. And now her eternal purpose is to maintain the conditions that are favorable to the growth and blooming of her lilies. That is the essence of a lily-lady's "loving care."

Build up now in your mind, sketchily and hurriedly, of course, the Father-relation of God to man. Recall the story of that "loving care." Was not and is not God related to man in precisely the manner in which that niece intended to relate herself to her lilies? Was not his first act of love to provide a good place for man to live his life?—a good "lily bed," so to speak? Did he not put into that bed—which we call "the earth"—everything man needs to draw upon to live his life? Everything that makes it possible for man to "blossom" as do the lilies? Did he not place man in that garden as the lily-lady places her lilies in their beds, and is it not God's eternal purpose to do what he may do to maintain or promote the conditions which favor the enrichment of man's life? Is not that the essence of the Father-relation of God to man?

THERE IS A great difference, of course, between lilies and man. Lily relations to the soil are purely physical, chemical, and biological. It is true that lilies, like men, may prosper and become beautiful and fragrant, only through their own responses to their environment; only through what, in the case of man, we call the cultivation of their own capacities for responses to their environment. Lilies themselves must do something to live. Lily living is lilies doing something on their own.

But one of the fundamental differences between lilies and men is that the responses of man to his environment—the responses which shape his destiny—are social or moral or spiritual as well as physical. In other words, one of the great differences between men and lilies is that man is dependent upon a social environment for the prosperity of his soul; or, to use our lily terminology, for the beauty and fragrance of human life; for peace, prosperity, and happiness.

Another great difference between lilies and man is that, whereas lilies do not need to "know" anything, in the sense in which man knows; and, whereas lily environment must be created for them; man must know; he must know "himself"; and his social environment, instead of being created for him, must be created by him. That is why, having provided man with a physical environment suited to his needs, the Creator said to man, "And have dominion" over the things God has made.

There is no difference between having "dominion" and creating a social environment. They are one and the same thing. And I repeat—for this is the reason for the appearance of the modern prophet with his social philosophy—man must create his own social environment. Not even God can create that for him. There is something, however, which The Almighty may do to help that creation along. He may do whatever is possible to do to help man take hold of the true idea of how human society must be constituted if his soul is to prosper.

In the case of the lilies only the lady needs to know the lily cultivating business. Her lilies do not need to apprehend what she knows. But as respects the soul-cultivating business—which is the business of man under God; and which is an activity of the moral will, or of the spirit—it is not enough that God should know how to conduct that business. It is necessary also that man should know.

I say nothing now about the processes by which or the ways in which God helps man to do his own knowing. I do not treat on this occasion of the means which the Creator has ordained for the enlightenment of the mind of man. I only say that whatever the Almighty's part is in the unfoldment of the truth—which is a philosophy of social life—that that is the essence of his father-relation to man—to man as a spiritual or moral or social being. And when we pray, "Our Father," which art in heaven, when we seek to engender the spirit which guides men into all truth—all moral or spiritual truth; not the truths of crop rotation and all such like—when we pray that we may know the truth, we mean—if we understand that prayer—precisely that. We mean that God is related to man as a father teaching his children the philosophy of life; and as seeking irresistibly, or as he loves, to win man to the purpose and to assist him in making a successful or effectual implementation of that philosophy of social life. That is a "loving care" which, in the very nature of things, the lily-lady cannot bestow upon her lilies.

God is "Our" Father. He gives "us" this day our daily bread. By what means surely you must know. God makes his general provisions for the sake of the race. And we begin to see that "Our Father" means that the human race is intended to be a brotherhood—an intention which cannot be frustrated. The "father-relation" of God to man means that the culmination of human endeavor is to be a true brotherhood. It is to be a society grounded—as the modern prophet in particular has said—in the truth which represents God; yes, in a philosophy of social life, which represents the highest conceptual development of man.

No endeavor is in vain;
Its reward is in the doing,
And the rapture of pursuing
Is the prize the vanquished gain.

After all it is the game that matters and not the applause that comes after; the work, and not the dead silence when you expected applause; the work, and not the stories of criticism instead of praise. To know that at days' end you did your work and did it well; played the game and played it straight, if you can live like that your life is filled with an enduring purpose and has become the burning bush that never burns out. Such a life blazes and burns without end and witnesses that it is rooted in love divine and eternal.

With Ignatius Loyola we seek the Divine Mind, praying—

Teach us, good Lord, to serve thee as thou deservest;
To give and not to count the cost;
To fight and not to heed the wounds;
To toil and not to seek for rest;
To labour and not ask for any reward
Save that of knowing that we do thy will.

Blue Pencil Notes

July, as many times before, (this time with members of my family) I enjoyed the hospitality and friendship of Brother and Sister Garner in their home. Then we adjourned to the lawn and admired the great tree. What changes has it seen? The Nephites, Lamanites, Indians, Spanish conquistadors, Father Junipero Serra and his Franciscans building missions up and down the coast, the forty-niners seeking gold, their grandsons planting orange orchards and building cities. From the ox-cart to automobiles, streamlined trains, rocket planes roaring overhead! From the bow and arrow to the atomic bomb! And yet this venerable giant stands, strong and erect, to testify, "Out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight."

Need for Missionaries

Since we do not live near a branch of our own church, I have been taking my children to the Methodist Sunday school. At home, we find the lessons in the Bible and read the full chapter so that we don't miss out on anything. Last week we attended services held by a Baptist missionary; with him was a Chinese lecturer who spoke about the conditions in his country. He said that China's greatest need was for Christian workers who could help rebuild the country spiritually. He also stated that they were not asking for college graduates but for men and women who had a knowledge of the Bible and experience in the service of God. He said China has scholars who can challenge American workers in any field except religion. Certainly we, who have the fullness of the gospel, could do much for these people. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may do all in my power to speed the building of God's kingdom on earth.

From a Polish Saint

Many thanks for your kind letter of October 14 and the minutes of the 1946 General Conference. I have read the reports of the business sessions with great interest, especially the two revelations received at the Conference. The news about the selection and appointment of Brother Israel A. Smith as prophet and president I have read with great joy. It is very encouraging to know of the Spirit of God, the excellent wisdom and unity which accompanied all the sessions and assemblies of the last Conference. I must testify to the strong conviction I have that God's almighty hand is yet with the Reorganized Church and its people, and that he leads and directs his work wonderfully.

Our material situation remains unchanged. As I have already reported to you, we have lost our citizenship in Poland. In consequence of this, we have lost our houses and fields, our inventory, clothes, linen, and other accommodations. We must work mostly as farm servants and maids. I am working as scavenger at the highway; the wages are very low.

Brother John Land of Independence wrote to me some weeks ago that our church members of Zion are willing to send used clothes and linen to the poor and needy church people in Europe. There are at Czarnylas five needy members (two brethren and three sisters). I would request the clothes be sent to my address if possible. I understand Brother Land has already given the addresses of the needy church members of Makosyce to your office.

Your desire to send missionaries to the war zones is very praiseworthy. The deranged and heavily afflicted nations in Europe need much of spiritual sunshine.

Hoping that this shall reach your office safely, I remain with best wishes and kind regards,

John Stebel.

Tribute to a Friend

I should like to express my appreciation of the life of a beloved sister in the faith, Mrs. J. W. Stringer, who passed away last August. This good woman was loved by all who know her. She was devoted to the church and was always ready to help financially when money was needed. Once, when we were talking about the church and our experiences, she said, "I wish I could speak in public; I feel that I am not doing anything for my religion." "You are doing more than most of us," I told her, "your donations help provide for the ministers' families so that they are free to preach the gospel." She said she had never thought of it that way.

Sister Stringer's life was a real inspiration, and the Saints of Davidson Branch feel it a great loss to be without her.

A Letter of Gratitude

I have been thinking about the past year and the many blessings which I have received. Above all, I am thankful for the gospel which has brought so much happiness to me. I am grateful that I can still attend services most of the time; when the weather is bad, I listen to the sermons and beautiful music over the radio. There is beauty everywhere if we can only tune our hearts to receive it.

The First San Antonio Branch is fortunate in having Seventy H. E. Winegar as leader. He and his wife are always ready to help, regardless of what the project may be. My sympathy goes out to all isolated members who do not have the privilege of meeting with the Saints. I receive much pleasure from reading the letters and many splendid articles in the Herald. The announcement that Apostle and Mrs. McConley are going to Europe came as a surprise. They will be greatly missed by the members in San Antonio and other districts where they labored.

Has Son on U. S. S. Franklin D. Roosevelt

The Herald is certainly a welcome visitor to my home each week. Since I am isolated, it is my chief source of spiritual strength. God has been good to me and blessed me in many ways. I am truly thankful for this gospel and often think how wonderful it would be if all professed followers of Christ were united in one faith.

My youngest son is in the Navy and is assigned to the "U. S. S. Franklin D. Roosevelt," CVB42. If anyone reading this letter knows of any other Latter Day Saints on this ship, I should appreciate hearing from him. My son would like to find a friend of his faith.

Desire of a Mother

My desire is to be a good Latter Day Saint. I want to live my life so that others not of this faith can see the light of the gospel through me. I have my weaknesses, but feel that the Father knows the desires of my heart. I am thankful that I was permitted to have parents who believed in this church; I have witnessed many blessings in my family, and have been shown the truthfulness of the gospel through the spirit. I love the church and all that it stands for. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be a good wife and mother and help in the redemption of Zion.

Request for Prayers

In one of our western states there is a thirteen-year-old boy with a big problem in his heart. We can't give you any particulars, nor can we give you his name. . . . he didn't send it. But names and particulars really don't matter; God knows his name and his heartache. Surely we all have room in our prayers for a boy who is our brother.

Graceland At Last - - - but no Guy Fawkes!

One of the most important events of my life occurred just a short time ago when I awoke one morning to realize that I had slept in my bed for the last time and that very day would find me waving good-bye to my family as I left the shores of England to sail—oh, such a vast ocean, in a Swedish boat bound for America.

I seemed to have awakened from a long dream. The past two years of waiting, as I reached out to attain my goal, had come to an end. I was going to Graceland. Yet there was nothing dreamlike in the long, weary months of hoping, working, and praying as I endlessly cut through tape of a bright red hue, so even this miracle did not just happen. It took time and effort on my part—as I have discovered anything worth-while does.

By ALICE FOLKES

During the sixteen days of sea voyage, I had ample time to review some of the procedures of preparation. Thoughts of such necessities as passports, visas, letters to this government department, letters to that, being referred one to the other, all flitted hazily through my mind, and I passed them quickly from me; I did not wish to dwell on them too long. Instead I liked to remember the joy I received from preparing for the two years ahead. While packing my trunk, I had looked at the list of needed items in the Graceland Tower and said, "I wonder what bobby sox are?" and "I've never heard of jeans or 'formals' before." (The word "formal" was misprinted, and I would never have guessed anyway!) "Do you think a sweater means a jumper?" (It did.) And so on. All these little things and many more merged into a delightful whole—something big to discover—a grand feeling of looking forward.

I wondered what the American girl would be like. How did she do her hair? What style of clothing did she wear? Did she think the same way? Did she speak a very American accent? And then I wondered how I would appear to her. Always it seemed that tomorrow would never come, always it seemed just around the bend—but then, I did arrive.

During the war a number of American and Canadian servicemen and women visited our church at Enfield and often testified that it was wonderful to come thousands of miles from their own home branch and still find the same spirit of unity, the same beliefs in their faith, the same feeling of friendship in another place. To be able to experience that for myself was an added testimony to me. It is wonderful. I shall never forget the unspeakable joy my friend and I experienced when we first met the Saints in this country and what warm welcome we received on arriving. Nor shall I ever forget the many friendships we have since made, both inside and outside the college. Many times we have been overwhelmed at the generosity of our new friends, who are to be our companions for the next two years—these people who are more than willing to share their lives with us and who seem happiest when creating happiness for others, these kindly folk—these Americans.

Each day brought a new discovery. Traveling across the ocean to another country was an education in itself. Speech presented a few difficulties at first (and occasionally still does). Having become somewhat used to the varied American accents of my college chums, and they to mine, the trouble now lies in the difference in expressions of everyday language. Who would think that such little words could carry totally different meanings? I was often shocked at some of the things my American sisters said until I was enlightened that they too were slightly shocked at some of the things I said!

member of the Oriole Circle, and a worker in the Zion's League. She came to America in August, 1946.

She lists her special interests as singing and dramatics . . . and then adds, "I have no particular gift, but I love anything from making children's toys to watching sunsets."

Alice Irene Folkes is twenty-two years old. She was born in Enfield, England, completed her high school education at the age of fifteen, worked as a secretary until 1943, and then served as a creche nurse (she admits a fondness for children) until the end of the war. At church, she taught the kindergarten class, was a

The Trouble-Shooter

Of Man Or God?

QUESTION: When a need exists, God occasionally expresses himself through the "outward manifestations" of the Spirit in prayer service. I am young, both in years and in experience with this.

At rare times people have been disillusioned when a prophecy that seemed to coincide with past revelations and also gave new light proved later to be untrue. Probably the man through whom the "prophecy" came was not acting under the impulses of a false spirit, but rather was moved by his own strong desires as he visioned the needs of an individual or a group. These infrequent incidents have occasioned a bewilderment in the minds of some of us and we ask, "How shall we know whether it is God speaking or not?" Sometimes we have changed the course of our lives to follow the instruction given us through prophecy. Should this prove unwise, we might lose opportunities to serve God in a more effective way.

By what criteria shall we judge prophecy to determine if it is divine?

ANSWER: By President John Garver

The question, "How may one young in years, in church membership, and in experience know the genuine from the unguenuine utterance laying claim to Divinity when expressed in our congregations" cannot be answered satisfactorily in the space here available—or in any amount of space, for that matter.

Here is a field in which it would be well for one to be possessed of experience and judgment and understanding and wisdom and discernment adequate to the occasion and import of the statement or statements made. When such is not the case, young Saints and others of like immaturity must resort to "helps and governments" available.

In point is the provision of the law requiring that the elder presiding shall judge the genuineness of expressions purporting to be of divine origin. Here again, however, the protection desired and needed is only within the range of the ability of the elder to judge.

What, then, is one to do, who himself is not competent to judge, and who is without guidance of adequate administrative functioning—or who hesitates to yield himself to the discernment of the elder presiding, even though the elder be a man of some judgment in such matters? In such an instance one should seek counsel of church officials regarded as competent to pass judgment.

In no case should one change or order the course of his life along lines indicated by a "thus saith the Lord," only as he does so with deliberation and in the light of counsel competent to judge, not only as to the genuineness of the message, but as to timing the desirability of undertakings outlined and the probability of success.

Wisdom and revelation combine to give lead in the direction of ones preparation for and engagement in the work of his life, and the presumed "good word" should be subjected to every test and reasonable consideration.

If this be regarded as extreme, or as a cloud on the word of God, let those who so feel advert to the course the church is required to take in comparable matters affecting its life, and the life of its ministers and members. If it be indicated through the prophet to the church that John Doe should be ordained an apostle, what is the prescribed course? The word given is to be submitted to the quorums and General Conference, and, if found sound, the brother on vote of the quorums and conference is to be ordained.

If, in some lesser movement, Deity is said to have spoken, let the message be submitted to comparable, or competent scrutiny; and only as it stands up under the test, is one called upon to yield himself to its implications.

And let judgment be divested of emotionalism, that it may be calm, clear, deliberate, searching, satisfying, and therefore conclusive.

To be sure, one is to rely on spiritual propulsion and discernment. Let him have a care, however, that in all things else as in these, he has called to his aid the best in himself and in others to whom he may have turned for help; then he may feel that, having done all, he can put trust in the judgment and conclusion reached.

The life of the English girl differs very much from her American cousins in many respects. The average English girl leaves school at an earlier age and goes out to work—usually at fourteen or fifteen years of age. Even so, I think I would be correct in saying that the American miss grows up more quickly insofar as she dresses in a more sophisticated fashion, makes up her face, perms her hair, and paints her nails before leaving school—an almost unheard of procedure in England!

Many times we laugh with each other over our differences. Despite the accent, the expressions, the hair-do's, the clothes, etc., not once have I felt myself a stranger among my new companions, for they have widened their circle and I have been made to feel one with them.

It is unfortunate that in England very few elementary school children have the chance to attend high school, so that comparatively few ever have the opportunity of attending college, for I think that college days are one of the richest times in a young person's life. It is not only the studying of sciences and textbooks, but learning how to live together and sharing the same experiences with others in dormitory life, church services, and social functions as well as the classroom.

The American home is quite different, both in the outside appearance and the rooms inside. I would say the average American family has a home which is far more comfortable (as regards heating) and better equipped than the average English family can afford. I am glad that I have had the opportunity to visit several homes here, for I feel I am getting to know the Americans more as I catch a glimpse of their family life. I love the American home.

Another difference that has been interesting to note is the celebration of holidays. I really think that Halloween should be celebrated in England. What we have missed! On the other hand I have a tendency to sympathize with the Americans that they have never produced a Guy Fawkes, if only to celebrate November 5! The same Christmas spirit prevails all the world over, and I was happy to find that celebrations here were very similar; including the carol singing, the decorated Christmas tree (not to mention the stocking) and the turkey. I felt a wave of homesickness only when I surveyed the laden table in vain for mother's Christmas pudding. I must send home for a recipe before next Christmas!

Yes, there are some things I have missed. I have missed the green of the grass in wintertime, but on looking up, I have discovered instead a deeper blue of the sky. While missing my home branch, I seem to have rediscovered my own church. I find here an active group, and a youthful one with many promising young members of the ministry.

Coming to America has been a new horizon for me. It was one that has been before me for a long time, but on reaching it, I found that the many disappointments I received during the time of working for it slipped away into insignificance. Although I can only live each moment as it comes, endless opportunities present themselves. Graceland College offers these same opportunities to all young people. As it is giving so much to me, I hope that in return I can give something to Graceland. I also hope that I can take with me some of this thing called the spirit of Graceland to the people in England when I return home.

Conscience On Stage

Harold Ehrensperger

PEOPLE have an inborn love of drama, and the church can and should develop it as a part of religious living, believes Harold Ehrensperger, a leader in religious activities of students who is also an authority on drama. In this book he sets a high ideal of purposeful drama and explains the methods for attaining or at least approaching it. He shows how the average church can best use available assets, both human and material, in producing drama that grips participants and spectators alike with the recognition of truth. $2.00

My Dear Little Son

By Merva Byrd

Today we are going home! That cannot have much meaning to you other than a changed environment to which you will quickly become accustomed, for you are only eight days old. But it is a joyful occasion for us, who brought you into the world.

As I look into your small face I wonder what the future holds for you, and I feel a deep sense of responsibility for the years that will bring you to manhood. Little son, you have come into the world for a purpose; you are here because you have a part in our loving Father's divine plan for his children. And we, your father and I, have been entrusted with the happy task of teaching you and guiding you through the years to maturity. I pray God that we may be blessed with the wisdom and love, patience and strength to do this unflinchingly.

This, then, I believe to be your rightful heritage;

- a loving family; happy together;
- a peaceful and prayerful home, where we can grow together in experiencing the abundant life;
- a growing understanding of the gospel;
- a closer relationship with God and godly men;
- a work to do in the building of Zion—work that will require the best of your talents and energies and all of your life.

Yes, baby, we are going home today—you, your father, and I; but it is neither the beginning nor the end of anything. Your life and training, your ideals and faith have already begun. The one prayer I make for you now, little son, is that you be filled with God's Spirit to guide you and keep you all the days of your life, and beyond.

P. S.

* Mt. Rushmore

Our cover picture this week is another view from the capacious files of Marvin M. McDole, our staff Visual Education Director. It was taken in 1941 when the scaffolding was up, and the work still going on. The suave and polished Jefferson appears to be having a moused eye treated, and T. R. has something on his mind that doesn't belong there, as he sometimes did in life.

Appropriately, Washington stands out clear and strong, and Lincoln is still emerging into the light of a greater appreciation. Our issue falls on Washington's birthday.

Do not let the name "Black Hills" deceive you. These mountains are of a ruggedness, a richness of beauty, a picturesqueness unsurpassed anywhere. To visit them once is to love them always. In the very heart of them a granite mountain was found that was well suited to the purpose of making this national shrine. The right of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln to a place there will be disputed by none. As for the fourth—well, any great work of art is entitled to one flaw.

We didn't like the messy effect of the thousands of tons of debris in the picture, so mortised it to make room for the title. A Paul Bunyan would be needed to clear all of it away.

* Two Colors

The use of two colors in this issue of the "Herald" is rather a notable event. Only special circumstances make it possible. Reader opinion on this feature will be of considerable interest to all departments that produce the paper. If you feel like writing about it, we would be glad to hear.

The same experiences break some people and build others. It all depends on what they do with their experience.

Important!

Attention of readers is especially directed to the official statement, "General Officers in Missions Abroad," page 14, which came too late for inclusion on the regular page, but required publication in this issue.

The Birthday of a Friend

Washington

He stands foremost in the group of figures carved in the granite of Mount Rushmore. It is appropriate that he should. In eminence, in power, in judgment, in dedication to the cause of freedom and order, he was the first and greatest friend of the republic he helped to create and establish. Americans would do well not only to honor him on his birthday—they would do well to remember the principles for which he stood, and which he expressed so well for his countrymen.

February 22 should always be a notable day in our national calendar. Amid the many special events, from National Apple Week to whatever little thing they are trying to puff into artificial and transient importance, you should not allow this holiday to be pushed aside and forgotten. This would be a good day to read his messages again, to consider the historical setting in which they were written, and think of those parts which are of enduring value.

Mount Vernon

Some years ago we visited Mount Vernon, Washington's estate near Alexandria, Virginia. We admired the beautiful gardens laid out (we were informed) under the direction of Martha Washington, and maintained in the same condition today. It was a pleasure to go inside the historic house, look at the antique pieces with which it has been re-furnished, and imagine how Washington enjoyed his life there. Even more impressive was the majestic view from the hilltop home overlooking the Potomac—a residential site unrivaled for beauty in America. It seemed our visit was nearly over—we had seen about everything important.

The tomb? Well, we might take the time. There was a narrow grass-grown path leading down to it, a shabby little place, a kind of crypt partly imbedded in the earth and partly overgrown with vines. What could the tomb hold of the great man who had once wielded such power in our country? Visiting it, one felt, would be a time killer. What are tombs but receptacles for dust? However, we walked down the path.

As we approached the tomb, a complete change of attitude took place. A feeling of awe and reverence overcame us quite without our expecting it, without our desiring it. The hand was automatically reaching for the hat even before the colored guard requested it. Here, one felt, was a place to stand bareheaded in respect to the man that God had chosen for a great work in establishing a country where freedom of faith, among other freedoms, would find its home. Certainly the unimpressive little tomb could not explain the spiritual presence there. We left it after a few moments that were like prayer, humbled for our unbelief, exalted by what we found there. Surely, after that, it was possible to see in Washington more than the general, more than the statesman, more than the president. He was, as truly as the prophets were, a servant of God.

The President

It is a remarkable thing that, in the history of the United States, our first president should also be our greatest one. Few will dispute that. He was not a party man, as so many of his successors have been. It can never be said of him that he was so greedy for power that Congress found it necessary to pass a law limiting the number of terms a president may serve to two. He voluntarily limited himself, an example that still stands to reprove and admonish all who have been inclined otherwise. Other men—a few of them—have been able to some degree to rise above the party spirit that elevated them to office. Washington never descended to it.

The Country

Such an experience as that recorded above can be had in but few places in America. Go to Lincoln's tomb in Springfield, Illinois, and you will find something of the same spirit there, in nearly as great degree. Elsewhere, a tomb is only a musty smelling shelter, too drafty and damp for comfort, and a bit unpleasant. The tomb of Washington, like that of Lincoln, is on sacred ground. These were God's men, and they did God's work. The spirit one feels there testifies of it.

What of the country Washington started on its way? Truly, a visit to Mount Vernon, and especially the tomb, increases vastly one's feeling of love for his country and devotion to it. If the divine Power was so concerned in the founding of it, he is equally concerned in the preservation of it for a great purpose.

The cynical, the materialistic, the careless, will pass this by as they do other things that touch the heart and soul. Perhaps one needs to be something of a mystic and a dreamer to sense the deeper invisible realities that are more important and enduring than all physical things. Americans need to turn again to their founding fathers, and learn once more of the great principles which those men endeavored to build into our country as their contribution to a better world for their children.

Accommodations at General Conference

The Housing Committee requests that all visitors to Independence during the General Conference who can make private arrangements for rooms do so as early as possible. This will assist the Housing Committee and will avoid much correspondence. Those who desire the Housing Committee to make arrangements for rooms should mail their letters to the Housing Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The following details are required:

1. Number in party.
2. Rooms required.
3. Day of arrival.
4. Length of stay in Independence.
5. If alone, whether willing to share a room.
6. Whether a delegate to the Conference.

As a word of caution, may we suggest that persons arriving for Conference without reservations for sleeping accommodations will find it difficult to secure rooms in or near Independence.

From Palenque

THE FOLLOWING letter has been received from Apostle Paul M. Hanson:

Palenque, Mexico
January 26, 1947

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
Independence, Missouri,
Dear Brethren:

Well, here we are, at the ruins at Palenque. How wonderful they are! Exceeded my expectations. We stayed the night before last at the home of Ernest Ratuke, a man with whom I had corresponded for about twenty years. A fine man, and had a very restful home.

We arrived here yesterday morning horseback—six miles from the village of Palenque, through a jungle trail of mud and stones, at times like going through a tunnel.

I will not take time to write at length.

Last night we slept on a cot, in a hammock, and on the floor. For supper we had tortillas, boiled eggs, and sun-dried beef broiled.

We plan to leave here about 11 a. m. for Zapata (formerly known as Monte Cristo) via the village of Palenque, where we plan to take the plane tomorrow for Tenosique. We will not know until arrival there whether we can reach Yaxchilan—if not, we will take train from Tenosique to Merida, Yucatan.

We have had fine weather here—very much favored, as there had been frequent and heavy rains. Sultry today.

We are all well—everything favorable thus far.

Regards,
Paul M. Hanson

P. S. Have written on my knee—no table.

BROTHER HERMAN PEISKER of Australia writes of the Tiona reunion:

Tiona Reunion has become history. There was a wonderful spirit of co-operation on every hand. I feel that the fact that we lacked the administrative leadership of a member of the Apostolic Quorum was a challenge to both priesthood and leaders, as well as members, to rally in co-operative support of the program and myself. The result was the maintenance of the high plane on which the reunion began and a daily increase of interest and spiritual blessing.

Beyond Pantheism

INTRODUCTION

By Apostle Arthur A. Oakman

In the previous article an attempt was made to formulate some of the conditions in which a rational approach to the question of sane beliefs about God and human destiny could be made. This effort is directed toward an inferential analysis of certain aspects of reality corresponding to the sense of truth, beauty, and goodness which dwells in mankind. It is not possible to give credit to all the writers who have influenced this approach, but one should mention the Bampton lecturers, Illingworth, Gore, Liddon, and Freemantle; Lord Samuel, whose little book Belief and Action is a gem; and the poets—Wordsworth and Tennyson especially. There is nothing new in this approach, nothing original. It simply sets forth very briefly a point of view, which the writer believes is sound, and does no violence to any respectable intelligence.

Our generation is very proud of its achievements. In fact, since 1492, or thereabouts, the "Gospel of the Kingdom of Man" has been consistently proclaimed. But the systems constructed by man, especially the "natural theology" improperly so called, which misreads the signs of the times, will have nothing to do with the principle of revelation as we understand it. In this connection the words of Augustus Hopkins Strong come to mind as very meaningful. He says: "Faith is God's measure of a man. Why should I doubt that God spoke to the fathers through the prophets? Why should I think it incredible that God should raise the dead? The things that are impossible with men are possible with God." This attitude is in sharp contradistinction to so much of the proud nonsense disseminated from so-called seats of learning. The sole question at issue, now, and for all time is the question of the person of Jesus Christ. These studies look toward a rational foundation for belief in him as God Incarnate.

I. ATHEISM, DUALISM, MODERN GODS

MANY YEARS ago, the Roman Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, saw clearly the consequences attendant upon atheism as fundamentally opposed to theism. He said:

The world is either a welter of alternate combination and dispersion, or a unity of order and providence. If the former, why do I care about anything else than how I shall at last become earth? But on the other alternative I feel reverence, I stand steadfast, I find heart in the power that disposes all.—Meditations vi: 10.

To be an atheist one must disbelieve in the existence of God, and fail to see in the universe anything which corresponds to mind or spirit or purpose which indubitably exists in man. There are not many atheists. Atheism is extremely difficult to maintain, and leaves more questions unanswered than does any other view of the universe. Theism, or belief in a rational purpose and a spirit which "rolls through all things" does not answer all questions which the brooding mind of man naturally asks, but it is much more satisfying than atheism. For most of us the question is not whether we believe in God or not, but "In what kind of a God do we believe?" In some sense we must all be agnostics, we must all reach the point where reason and knowledge fail and where awe and wonder, while not robbing us of the conviction that God is, cause us to say we do not know what he is.

Long ago people believed in many gods, or in two principal powers, the one good and the other evil, which struggled for the mastery of creation. This latter notion, called dualism, seems to fade with so much of human experience that it is constantly reviving in one form or another. But polytheism and dualism are not rationally possible for us today. Science has demonstrated the absolute unity of nature and enunciated clearly the principle of the universality of law. Good and evil, right and wrong, matter and spirit, the world of moral purpose, and the sphere of material things are knit together and are the results of one system of intercommunicated law. Spinoza (1632-77) asserted that the universe was one, and (in some sense) of one substance. But long before his day Irenaeus, one of the early Christian Fathers, had affirmed that no fundamental antagonism exists between spirit and matter, and that the method of God in creation and redemption is one of gradual progressive advance. The idea of the unity of nature and the one-ness of God, then, is not new; but it has been reinforced immeasurably by the conclusions which have been based by scientists and philosophers upon observations of phenomena in the material world.

Mr. H. G. Wells claimed to speak for "modern thought" in matters of theology and declared complete agnosticism in the matter of "God the Creator, and . . . entire faith in the matter of God the Redeemer." He cannot bring the two ideas under the same term "God." He uses the term "God" therefore for the God in our hearts only, and the ultimate mysteries of the universe, which cause "complete agnosticism," he lumps under the heading of "Veiled Being." Whether man is mortal or immortal, whether the God in our hearts is a Son of, or a rebel against the universe, he declares, makes "no difference to our righteousness." Mr. Wells has no "appetite for separate immortality." Thus, according to this view, God is very far from being the Creator and Sustainer of all that is. He is not the spirit of the universe. The power behind the world is inscrutable—it might be cruel or unconscious. The “modern God” of Mr. Wells is simply not almighty, although he may become more powerful as we identify ourselves with him.

Such a view cannot result in a rational religion. If God is merely a name for the aspirations of men, and not, as Tertullian said, the “persistent energy of all things” then God lives so long as men aspire. He is a dream, a myth. But if he is “in all things, and through all things, and round about all things, and is the law by which all things are governed,” then there can be no effective rivalry against him. There can be room for no other God. Of course, there may be other spirits, spirits which are dependent upon him, who derive their power and intelligence from him, and who live in him and move in him, and in him have their being. But these can never overthrow him. He maintains his supremacy, and his all-embracing power. We cannot accept the God Mr. Wells represents as belonging to the “modern mind.”

II. BY INDUCTION TO THE HIGHER PANTHEISM

A. The Epistemological Argument

We believe that the God of nature is the God and Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ. The “veiled being” which causes “complete agnosticism” in the “modern mind,” is in Christ, made abundantly manifest, and in him shown forth to be not such a one as to excite rebellion but to win our devotion. In him all things have their consistency. He is, we feel certain, the “Ruler of Nature.”

The greatest of nature poets, William Wordsworth, justly pointed out how exquisitely the external world was fitted to the mind:

My voice proclaims—
How exquisitely the individual mind (And the progressive powers perhaps no less
Of the whole species) to the external world

Is fitted:—and how exquisitely too—Theme this but little heard of among men—
The external world is fitted to the mind;
And the Creation (by no lower name Can it be called) which they with blended might Accomplish.

If we attempt to analyze the most elementary kind of knowledge, we discover, perhaps to our surprise, that the external world, the world of sense and touch, of tables, chairs, books, and other objects is not presented to us ready-made through our senses of taste and touch, sight and smell. In order to perceive an object in a world of objects, there is needed a perceiving, correlating, remembering mind. Mind is primarily necessary for the constitution of a world of things. I perceive an orange. The word “orange” connotes a spherical object, yellow in color, yielding somewhat to the touch, and imparting a peculiar odor and taste which I have come, through experience, to associate with the word. All these factors together are presented to me. They are not made by my mind which functions in subordination to the materials supplied to it through the senses. As the various stimuli are perceived in their relation to each other, recognition dawns upon me. So it comes about that the thing in itself (as it is apart from my mind, or from any mind other than that which created it) makes its own impression, and as that impression accords with the nature of the orange, I come to a knowledge of the truth about it. Only for a mind, then, can an orange exist. It is reasonable to infer from this that for the whole structure of the universe, its multifarious ramification, its myriad evolutionary and creative aspects, including man and his life and purposes, there is needed a Mind to hold it in order, in sequence, and purpose. This great encompassing Mind, which ensouls Great Nature, we call the mind of God. It is the “Spirit and the motion which impels all thinking things, all objects of all thought.”

It is the “law by which all things are governed.”

Our reason is the offspring of this universal reason and is that within us which demands order and sequence in things. It resents disorder. Whatever wisdom or mechanical genius we may have is borrowed from and used in subordination to the great Mind which is in all things.

Ever since the days of the ancient Greek philosophers men have been reinforcing this argument, namely, that you must interpret the material world in terms of mind, and not mind in terms of mechanical forces or chemical reactions. It is mind that has the making of things, and without a creative sustaining mind, they could never be. It is foolish to suppose that the brain secretes thought just as a liver secretes bile. The mind of man is a spiritual entity which ensouls and endows the nervous system with power to act and to create. If an interpretation of an orderly universe is sought, and according to science, orderly it certainly has proved to be, then mind is the only answer. “The universe,” says Jeans, “appears to be the work of a great thinker.”

The foregoing argument from the analysis of knowledge (called epistemology) does seem irresistible. As I come in contact with a world of objects, an ordered world, I am in communion with a mind. An atheist was once challenged, after he had made the best case he could for his view that the universe came by chance, to take his watch to pieces, place it in an empty barrel and roll it down a very long hill as many times as he cared to. Thus he might prove that the universe which moved to judge the operation of his watch had come into working relation by chance. Set a dozen monkeys strumming indiscriminately upon typewriters for a million years. Could any reasonable person say that sometime one of the monkeys could type off a Shakespearean sonnet? As well suppose the universe has no governing mind! The epistemological argument is valid. Celsus said, “We are the offspring of God." Celsus was speaking the truth. The universe which produces and sustains mind and reason, must have those elements within it. When Joseph Smith under divine impulsions said, "and with him that cometh I will reason as with men in days of old," ascribing that language to the Creator, we were strengthened in the conviction that we are made in God's image.

B. Beauty

A haze on the far horizon
The infinite, tender sky,
The ripe rich tint of the cornfields
And the wild geese sailing high—
And all over upland and lowland
The charm of the golden-rod—
Some of us call it Autumn
And others call it God.

It is difficult to believe that nature is beautiful without any intention of so being. How shall we account for the beauty of the inorganic world—the glory of the sea, the majesty of the mountains—for the purple hills in a delicate and exquisite sunset? "All the time that nature is working as a machine," says Mozley, "it is also sleeping as a picture."

To me, the meanest flower that blows doth give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

Thus the spirit of beauty in the universe conveys itself to us, and we are ennobled by its impression. Truly "earth is crammed with heaven, and every bush is aflame with God." But there are those who believe, with the idealists, that the mind of man is the maker of the world. "Stop to analyze a sunset," they say, "and you will find that it is but a diffusion of certain rays of light with varying frequencies playing upon the retina of the eye. The beauty is in you, not in the sunset." This argument is constantly reviving in one form or another. C. S. Lewis addresses himself to it in his pamphlet, The Abolition of Man, and says that such a point of view develops men "without chests." It is an intellectual attitude which depersonalizes the universe, and if we are to meet it, we must proceed along something like the following lines. There are three familiar aspects under which the world may be viewed. They are (a) the aspect of ordinary life, (b) the aspect of physical science, (c) the mental or psychical aspect. Thus:

(a) To the ordinary man, the rose is red and has a sweet odor, fire is hot, and ice is cold. Men are subject to chance and change and have their own free will. Time is one thing, space is another.

But (b) to the physicist the world is made up of molecules and atoms, protons, electrons, and neutrons. It is made up of rays, X rays, gamma rays, etc. "The whole universe is composed of waves (radiation). The unbottled waves we call light, and the bottled waves we call matter." Thus in this sphere the rose is not "red." The rods and cones of the human eye are simply affected by the rose in such a manner that a peculiar impulse is sent to the brain which results in a sensation we call "red." The rose does not smell sweet. All it does is to emit continuously a cloud of particles which, when they penetrate the olfactory apparatus cause a sensation in the brain known to us as "sweet." Heat is not a quality of fire, nor is cold a quality of ice. Fire simply emits radiation of particular wave-lengths which when met by our bodies cause us to feel "hot." The sun does not rise and set—and so forth. In the universe as seen by physical science there is no separation of space and time, it is one continuum: space-time. And, there is no such thing as chance. Every effect has an antecedent cause, and the laws of causality and of the uniformity of nature execute themselves everywhere and always. This second aspect of the universe is materialistic.

Again (c) there is a third aspect—it is the mental aspect. It was thought some years ago that the materialist view would come ultimately to reign in all departments of life, and that life and mind also would be dominated by it. But such thoughts have now passed away. "Biology has become less and less materialistic." "A material thing," says Professor Wildon Carr, "say a billiard ball, is what it is in such a place at such a moment; it is altogether present whenever and wherever it is. A living thing, a germ or a seed, an animal or a person, is never all that it is in any place at any moment. Its reality is not its actuality, but its potentiality. At every moment it is more than it actually is at that moment. An acorn is the potentiality of an oak-tree, even though it may be crushed under foot and never develop its nature. The most exhaustive description of the constituent molecules, atoms, electrons, and the completest history of their assemblage, will not express the reality of the acorn. The chemist in his laboratory might conceivably assemble and fit into their exact order all the actual constituents of the acorn, but to synthesize a real acorn, he would need to create its past and endow that past with a directing power to determine its future. This is the great distinction between the living and the nonliving; there is no more in the nonliving than its actuality; in the living there is more than its actuality; its reality is its potentiality."

No one can explain the cogitations of a chess player, as he pores over the board for half an hour before he makes his next move, in the same terms that describe what takes place when a needle jumps to the point of a magnet suspended over it. The player is exercising a mental power not present in the needle.

Biology tells us that living things come about by the division of cells. Embryology tells us that the single fertilized germ cell divides, proliferates, and then branches out into different ways to form the muscles, tissue, bone, skin, heart, and lungs of the adult organism. That is not a chemical process. Life has entered into chemistry and as Samuel Butler says, a mental process of some kind is at work; "there is an element of memory, inherited from all past ancestors and crystallized into habit, which determines the action of the germinating cells." Sir Arthur Thompson agrees with this.

There must be, one cannot help thinking, some evolutionary urge or nisus, elan, or impulse, rather subtler than has been yet analysed into either mechanical or chemical or biological terms. I mean nothing mystical, but something more than tendencies to aggregate, to colloidify, to incorporate, to grow, to multiply, and so on, with all the involved catalysts, hormones and organizers—I mean a psychical urge, the subjective side of endeavor.

Again he wrote elsewhere,

It is difficult to think of a germ-cell, of a higher animal at least, as being without its psychical aspect. Unless we think of "the mind" as entering in at a later stage in development, the germ-cell must have a dim primordium of the subjective, the promise and potency of mentality.

Is one view of the world less real than the other? The wall may be solid for us and not solid for the radio waves which come through it to my receiver on the desk. Light rays easily pass through a glass window, but the bee which buzzes against it finds himself resisted when he would feast on the honey at the breakfast table. The cells of which man is made up are not more real than the man. And the beauty which we experience in nature is not less real than the physical mechanics which go in to produce it. Nature is seen under different aspects. The sun is round, the sun is hot, the sun is heavy and all the time sacrificing itself as it works. But it is one body with different aspects. So it is with the world, as Spinoza says, "there is not a world of thought opposed to and interfering with a world of things. . . . Nature is One as well as uniform."

The beauty is just as real as the waves which stimulate the rods and cones of the eye and the olfactory nerves in the nose. There is, authentically dwelling in nature a sense sublime

Of something far more deeply inter-fused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting
suns,
And the round ocean and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man—
A motion and a spirit, which impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.

Before we pass on to the questions and inferences to be made from the moral conscience of mankind, one word needs to be said about beauty. Darwin accentuated the belief that beauty had a survival value in the process of sexual selection, and is therefore a by-product of that process. But this argument falls down when applied to inorganic nature, and the process by which beauty came to survive in the animal world is incidental to the main argument, namely—that beauty is a constituent element in creation.

C. Conscience

Keats called this life "a vale of soul-making." Under conditions of trial, according to him, we are supposed to develop character. Keats was right. In spite of appearances to the contrary, we are impelled to believe in moral purpose, that this life is given us for the development of moral character. "Our wills are ours," says Tennyson, "we know not how, our wills are ours to make them Thine." How did the conception of morality begin? When did man first feel there were some things he ought to do?

The history of the rise of the moral sense is very obscure. It may have had rude beginnings. We shall not discredit it because of this, any more than we shall discredit medicine because of the superstitious ideas which prevailed in that field many years ago. Perhaps the selfish instinct of individual preservation was somehow crossed by the group instinct, which is altruistic. We do not know. But we do know that the highest expressions of duty have come from the highest specimens of our race. Men have loved right because they have felt it is right. "God tested me," says Milton, "to see if I durst stand, and I found that I durst." Wordsworth's "Hymn to Duty" wherein he calls conscience the "stern daughter of the voice of God," evidences a consciousness of man being in the presence of something not himself, an eternal Presence and Power which wills righteousness, and claims his deepest devotion. When this sense of duty comes in conflict with personal interest and when personal interest wins the battle, so strong is the moral conscience that remorse follows the choice of the second best. Remorse is simply a darker name for free will, and free will is the ground of morality. "It is incontestable," says Charles Gore, "that the glory and dignity of humanity depend upon, and are bound up with, the recognition of the supremacy of the moral ideal or law at a point where it has risen above, or distinguished itself from, social exigencies or personal advantages."

We men are "organic to nature." Ours is a "personality producing" universe. Truth, beauty, and goodness, which are qualities in the very nature of things in themselves, bear their counterpart in the reason, in the sense of beauty, and in the moral conscience. Let us suppose that all began in a "fire-mist and a planet," and in a "jelly-fish and a saurian"—in the slime and mist primeval. Even then the whole process of creation must be judged in light of its endings, not in light of its beginnings. Aristotle rightly discerned that the essence or real meaning of anything is only manifest when it has reached its full growth.

Said the Scientist to the protoplasm,
"Twixt you and me there is a mighty chasm,

We represent extremes, my friend,
You the beginning,—I the end."

The protoplasm made reply,
As he winked his embryonic eye,
"Well, when I look at you, old man,
I'm rather sorry I began."

You must judge the beginning in light of the end, not the end in light of the beginning. "I see," says Bergson, "in the whole evolution of life on our planet a crossing of matter by a creative consciousness, an effort to set free, by force of ingenuity and invention, something which in the animal, still remains imprisoned, and is only finally released when we reach man." Science bids us contemplate an age-long process of evolution which began in some but dimly perceived elements and conditions. Emerson sums it up thus:

The book of nature is the book of fate. She turns the gigantic pages, leaf after leaf, never re-turning one. One leaf she lays down, a floor of granite; a thousand ages, and a bed of slate; a thousand ages, and a measure of coal; a thousand ages, and a layer of marl and mud; vegetable forms appear; her first misshapen animals, zoöphyte, trilobium, fish; then saurians,—rude forms, in which she has only blocked her future statue, concealing under these unwieldy monsters the fine type of her coming king. The face of the planet cools and dries, the races meliorate, and man is born.

Suppose all this is true; shall we interpret the spirit in terms of the material? Shall we say that the mind and spirit of man is nothing more than material force and chemical change? Is it not rather that the fruit and flower of nature disclose the secret of the seed? Must we not rather say that the ends and purposes of creation center in personality with its spiritual, mental, moral, and aesthetic aspects? Other spheres there may be beyond our ken, inhabited perhaps by spiritual beings of a higher order and existing in different dimensions from our own. Science knows nothing of them, neither can know. But within the sphere of science, taking into account what it does know and having regard to the areas in which it must frame its conceptions, it is in man and in man only that nature finds its interpretation. As Protagoras says, "Man is the measure of all things." Man finds in nature a meaning and a content in co-operation with which he gains power. Man finds in his own nature tendency towards an ideal for which "the whole creation groaneth" and believes that if he can intelligently co-operate with Great Nature he can in some measure be blessed thereby. "Nature never did betray the heart that loved her."

The reason in us responds to the order in the universe. The glory of nature kindles a sense of beauty; and we discover ourselves in the presence of an eternal righteousness. Truth, beauty, and goodness are thus disclosed as qualities of the created order about us, and although the line of reasoning here pursued is pursued but very briefly, it is, we believe, sound.

III. LIMITATIONS OF HIGHER PANTHEISM

The poets, philosophers, artists, and men of moral vision open our eyes to the evidences of God in nature, and the "natural" religion thus disclosed to us, we can, with their help, make our own. We have reached the "Higher Pantheism" and seen that it is reasonable. But it leaves many questions unanswered. Thus:

(1) Is the "Spirit of the universe" personal? Is God a person? Is beauty, truth, and goodness merely the resultant of inscrutable forces beyond our poor reach of mind, like the "idle froth amid the bounding main"? Or are these qualities the impressions left upon His handiwork by the Creator? If the latter, then can God enter into personal communion with each man? Can he hear and answer my prayers?

(2) Is God dependent upon the world for expression and realization of himself? Is the universe the body of God, or did he exist prior to and apart from it? Is Emily Bronte right when she says,

Though earth and man were gone,
And suns and Universes ceased to be
And Thou wert left alone,
Every existence would exist in Thee?

Or, is the universe a special kind of a machine which goes by itself, thus making God simply the world as "viewed from within"?

(3) Is the universe friendly? Is it good? The vast bulk (if we are any judge of size) seems to be utterly indifferent to our welfare, it is neither good nor bad. What assurance is there that right will eventually triumph and God is good?

(4) Kant remarked that there were two things which filled him with "ever-increasing admiration and awe," the "starry heavens above" and the "moral law within." The first, he said, was presented to him through his senses. The second he perceived was within him, a constitutional necessity. He discovered it by self-analysis. As we think about this world within, we might well ask, "Is the sense of freedom, of agency, and the right of choice real, or is it an illusion? And, should my sense of freedom be real, am I in the image of God? Is God a free creative Spirit?"

(5) As we think about how the spiritual life in us seems so dependent upon the body, and the relation intimate which exists between soul and body, the one affecting the other so profoundly, the question we ask is, "If a man die shall he live again?" Is immortality possible or is it certain? The natural religion which we have been discussing and the grounds for which we have so briefly outlined here leave us without any comfort. We hope; desperately do we hope, but have no assurance.

These five cardinal questions then, seem to remain unanswered by the "Higher Pantheism," and leave us unsatisfied. Of course, if we could be certain that God is a person, and that he had revealed himself in the world of man and nature to give us assurance on these importunate questions, all would be well. But we shall have to seek an answer to that.

The Inadequacy of Philosophy

Apart from the answer Christianity has given to the question of divine revelation does philosophy satisfy us on these problems raised by the "Higher Pantheism"? Philosophy had its rise in ancient Greece, but according to Professor Haldane, the Greeks did not take sufficient account "of the infinite value of human personality, humble as well as great. That was where it laid itself open to the criticism of Christianity, a criticism which subsequent reflection by degrees assimilated and found justified." In Greece there was no acknowledgment of the unity of nature. The philosophers of ancient Greece, like those of modern times, were content to think of "God" as an object of intellectual contemplation rather than a person to be loved, sought after, and responded to. When Greek philosophy declined, Christian thinking took the field, and tended to reason a priori from a revelation "once delivered." But when the abuses of the church drove men to again reason for themselves, "profane" philosophy had a renaissance. Descartes "proved" the existence of God as a personal creator, apart and distinct from all his creatures, but Spinoza who was greater than Descartes affirmed that the universe was one substance. He was charged with atheism by his Jewish contemporaries and expelled from the company—and not without some show of reason, since he denied in effect the transcendence of God as existing in his own proper person prior to and apart from creation. To Spinoza, matter and spirit are two aspects of the same substance or reality, and God could not be God and be personal in the sense of the term as we understand it. Even modern theists believe that the idea of God as perfect, necessarily excludes by him all particular choice of things or persons. He may love men in the mass, but not individually. It will at once be seen that this conception rules out the idea of a miraculous self-revelation of God either for the race or for individuals in the race.

Philosophers who are not necessarily in the Christian tradition cannot give us any clear hold on a transcendent personal God. Neither do they have to offer any assurance about the character of God. The world, according to them, is a mixture of good and evil, necessarily so; and there is no assurance of the ultimate triumph of right or of personal immortality.

This is as Paul long ago perceived. "The world," he said, "by its wisdom [or by its philosophy] knew not God, and so it pleased him by the foolishness [foolishness to them] of preaching to save them that believe." Men were put here according to the great apostle, to seek God that haply they "might

What Is My Sea?

Jesus walked upon the stormy waves
And only by faith could that be,
So what I'm asking myself today
Is, "Just what is my sea?"

I try to be faithful to the right I know,
But I wonder if maybe I fail
To see that I'm sinking beneath the crest
When up on the top I could sail.

What keeps pulling me down is what I must know
Before I can walk above.
Do I shirk my duties? In others find fault?
Or is it a lack of love?

Am I too impatient? Not kind enough?
Have I an unforgiving heart?
Do I harbor grudges? Am I often cross?
I wonder just where I should start.

I'm afraid that a little of each of these Prevents my being what I might So I pray for the strength and the courage
To walk on the Sea of Right.

Then if, like Peter, I start to doubting
That my footing is secure
I'll reach for the ready hand of my Saviour
And then of success I'll be sure.

find him," and his eternal power and "godhead were plainly visible, clearly being perceived through the things that are made." Even after Nature has testified to us that God is, it is reserved to him through a special self-revelation, to assure us as to what He is.

This revelation the preacher apprehends. He does not create it by philosophy. He does not "think it up" and "prove it" by logic or induction or argument. He causes men to "believe" the message by testifying about what he has experienced. Many years ago Job observed that we cannot "by searching" find out God. "It is," says another, "the glory of God to conceal a thing." He conceals himself in the very act of disclosing his nature in creation, that mankind might seek him the more diligently and be led thereby to anticipate the greater self-disclosure made in Christ.

This does not mean that reason must be set aside and revelation presented to us as opposed to reason. Rather it means that revelation will supplement our best efforts and come in quietness and expansive power saying, "this Spirit of the universe, known through my work as beauty, truth and goodness, is gathered up and made perfect in me." What baffles us when we run into the moral ambiguity of nature is resolved in the revelation given through Christ. But this will have to wait for further exposition.

We may sum up this study in the prayer of the German poet, who after expressing gratitude for the multifarious beauties of nature as manifesting aspects of the creative artistry, says:

Through the World, great God, I trace Wonders of thy Power and Grace.
Write more deeply on my heart,
What I am, and what Thou art.

This prayer comes instinctively to our lips and braces our minds for the inquiry which follows: "Has God given any special revelation of himself apart from, or other than that given in nature?"

A New Temperance Front

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT in Missouri has had its face lifted.

The operation was performed by a score of dry leaders summoned to the capital city of the state on February 4. Good teamwork and dynamic leadership set in motion a movement that ended by putting the many dry organizations of the state under a single head for the purpose of bringing about legislation known as "Home Rule." "United Drys" they called themselves.

After choosing the Reverend Doctor Harvey Throop of St. Louis as president, the group set themselves to the task of completing their organization and determining their legislative course for the current legislature. Besides the Missouri Council of Churches, the W.C.T.U. and the Anti-Saloon League were represented. Several of the legislators from various counties were present also.

This was not a gathering of anemic supporters. Carrie Nation may have possessed much of red, fighting blood in her day but a similar type of fluid seems to have been in the veins of these pioneers last week even though it found expression in entirely different ways. Numerous points of interest were discussed. Latter Day Saints, while perhaps being as dry a people as there is anywhere, have also done about as little by way of organized temperance work as any similar organization that you can name. Here are a few of the more important things to be considered.

1. There is need of an entirely new approach to the temperance question. A new name with new purposes and new and dynamic leadership is necessary to meet the need. The growing threat of the liquor traffic in Missouri to young and old alike, both at home and on the highway, challenges the best that everyone has.

2. Much of the so-called temperance work of the past has been good for its day, but its day has passed. Many good, dry people almost rebel at the tactics of some organizations even though they pray for their success. Archaic, super-sentimental and exaggerated attacks on the liquor traffic are worse than fruitless. Approaches today must be sound, sensible, and appealing to good people.

3. Legislation must begin where it can get started. The desire of most drys is that of national prohibition. Many give no support to anything less than that. In many ways we are of the same frame of mind toward the liquor business that we are towards Zion. We want Zion. We pray for Zion. We talk about Zion. But it never occurs to us that between here and Zion is a long road filled with a lot of little turnings. We don't like to be bothered with these small things, so we just go on clamoring for the thing that is impossible until we do take an interest in the lesser things.

National prohibition, if properly supported, would be a fine ideal. State option would be good, too. County option is the least that most people will think about. Yet in the state of Missouri a county option bill, as supported by the Anti-Saloon League and others, has failed for three years to even get reported out of the committee. Now comes this new movement asking for "Home Rule." By this method, local groups will be enabled to vote on the matter of whether or not liquor should be sold. Townships, precincts, etc., make up the unit of determination. Not as good as a larger unit would be of course—if the larger unit could be had. However, under this plan a number of States have been able to make the greater portion of their areas dry. Oklahoma, Ohio, Kentucky, and

About the Author . . .

The writer was one of four ministers of the state called in to represent the Missouri Council of Churches at the organizational meeting of the "United Drys." Of the score of men and women who met in the First Baptist Church in Jefferson City on Tuesday, February 4, representation was about evenly divided among the Missouri Council of Churches, W. C. T. U., Anti-Saloon League, state legislators, and state church leaders of various denominations. Specific plans were made to keep in touch with the present legislative program of the State Legislature. Future meetings are planned and dates tentatively set. In church circles, the author is President of Central Missouri Stake.

Texas are outstanding examples. "Home Rule" seems to be the logical starting point.

4. Any legislation must be backed by good educational processes, else it will fail for lack of administration. Churches especially carry the moral responsibility of furthering this education among its members. Other organizations can and do do much to help out. The lack of any liquor consciousness on the part of many parents is accountable for much of the delinquency. The fatalistic attitude that the task is so great there is nothing that we can do as a church or as individuals plays directly into the hands of the liquor interests.

5. There is need of active support of legislative efforts. When a bill is coming up for consideration, it needs support—not just moral support but active support. When a bill comes before a committee or the legislative assembly, the liquor interests send in the best men that money can hire. No stone is left unturned to defeat the measure. Oftentimes the dries refuse even to write their senators or representatives about it. Mimeographed cards, form letters, and general petitions are of doubtful value. Personal letters, telegrams, phone calls, etc., do play an important part. We need to know our legislators and to see to it that they know us.

6. The movement will be financed primarily by freewill offerings from congregations, individuals, and other organizations. Not much is expected by way of large donations to the cause.

7. In the creation of "United Dries" in Missouri, the dry interests are simply getting in line with a movement that has already proved itself in many other States. Younger leadership, carefully chosen from among prominent, professional, and business men and women, assure the movement of a new front, that, if properly supported by the God-fearing dries of the many communities of the state, will bring results.

"United Dries" will be heard from in Missouri. Latter Day Saints, many of whom are members of the W. C. T. U. and the Anti-Saloon League and other organizations, should remember that this is the united voice of all dry organizations pleading for support for the sake of not only the present but also the future generations of the race.

When the representative of the liquor traffic in Hollywood asks a producer not to mention Bourbon or Scotch or rye when the drink is to be followed by crime, he serves his retainer well.

The cocktail-holding mannequin in the store window tends to increase drinking and consequently, alcoholism.

MINUTE MUSINGS

H. V. Morton is one of my favorite writers, a man whose books are based on his own experiences. He tells the story of happening upon an old man sitting on his doorstep in a small village in England. The patriarch was carving out lovely wooden bowls, but the process was quite a tedious one. Mr. Morton asked, "How much money do you make at this business?" The old man looked up and calmly answered, "I am not making money, I am making bowls."

Our church is like that. Often we become impatient when we fail to see a great progress. But our job is the saving of souls—and like making bowls, it is a very slow process.

I dreamed a strange dream. I was in a huge furniture store. The tables, chairs, and other items were arranged in an attractive display, but I sensed that something was wrong. Then I looked at the price tags. A tiny lamp was labeled $900.00; an easy chair was marked 25c; and a large divan was priced at 2c. Obviously this was not correct. Other labels were as sadly mixed. All the values were wrong.

I believe this is what has happened in our world today. The values we have placed on things do not tally with God's values on those same things. It all goes back to the proposition of placing first things first. I know people who place a far higher value on a card game than on a prayer meeting. Others would rather dance than pray. I'll not now go into the old debate as to the right or wrong of smoking, drinking, dancing, or the other so-called vices. However, just stop and think, have those activities assumed an overvalue in your life?

A certain church school class was having a discussion on the subject, "Why Go to Church?" This provoked an unusual amount of interest and everyone excitedly expressed his opinion in a loud voice. Then the teacher suddenly remembered one member of the class who was deaf and dumb, and he wrote out the same question and handed it to the man. The whole class hushed and waited for his answer. These are the words he wrote: "To show which side I'm on."

If by coming to church we silently say, "I choose to be on God's side"; then by staying at home you, even more loudly, proclaim, "I choose not to be on God's side."

principles and methods of using drama in the church

Conscience On Stage

Harold Ehrensperger

PEOPLE have an inborn love of drama, and the church can and should develop it as a part of religious living, believes Harold Ehrensperger, a leader in religious activities of students who is also an authority on drama. In this book he sets a high ideal of purposeful drama and explains the methods for attaining or at least approaching it. He shows how the average church can best use available assets, both human and material, in producing drama that grips participants and spectators alike with the recognition of truth. $2.00

"A Service Institution"

OUR TRUE HERITAGE

By Allen J. Breckenridge

Missionary, Southern Indiana District

“AND I, GOD, said, unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and it was so. And I, God, said, Let them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.”—Genesis 1: 27-29 Inspired Version.

Sometime ago a man unexpectedly fell heir to a fabulous sum of money. Needless to say he was surprised and greatly pleased. We can only anticipate or imagine our delight in such a circumstance. And yet is it possible that we have overlooked our own inheritance? Let us in a time of quiet meditation permit our minds to rest upon the awe-inspiring truth: “created in the likeness of God.” This is our true inheritance.

In the moment of recognizing this basic truth, we also perceive another, unless we are unmitigated egoists: we are living far below or have not yet obtained this inheritance. It is not difficult for us to ascertain what we might be, for it is in Christ that we see the relationship God desires with man. Christ exemplifies what we may be in spiritual power, “unblemished purity,” and “never failing love,” as well as how rich may be our heritage in abundant life.

Be honest! We have all, like the prodigal son, gone astray (Luke 15: 11-24). Having taken the heritage that God has given us, we have more or less willingly lived beneath our best possibilities. Like a true Father he must permit us to live our own lives in order to develop independence of spirit even though it may break his heart and wreck our lives. He awaits with divine passion the day, when motivated by the best that is in us and the best that he can give us, we as the prodigal son “come to ourselves,” arise and move toward him who holds within himself our heritage.

You will note that I say, more or less willingly live beneath our possibilities. It is not alone our own fault, for we are a result of everything our ancestors passed on to us as well as our environment. This does not leave us with legitimate excuse, for only as we build upon what is ours to start with can we hope for personal redemption and for the world social redemption, the kingdom of God. Don't be afraid! Move out with faith to take these three steps in your life.

First, let us look at our pattern. This man Christ is the fullness of what we may be. It is to his way of life that he is directing us when he says, “Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.”—Matthew 5: 48.

Peter puts it very aptly, “Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps.”—I Peter 2: 21. It is only as we pledge ourselves to his likeness that we can ever hope to inherit our rightful relationship with God. So again, I repeat, our first step is to so pledge ourselves to his way of life.

Our second step is to be found illustrated in one of the very beautiful and thought-provoking parables of Jesus: the parable of the talents.—Matthew 25: 14-31. Jesus recognized that we do not inherit the same things from our forebears. Some are inclined to be tall, others short, some homely, others attractive, some intelligent, others feeble-minded, some inclined toward righteousness, others indifferent or negative minded in this regard. What the Lord requires is a building upon that which was ours at birth. At the time of judgment, the question will be asked, Have you built upon and improved your inheritance? Yes, even we average one-talent people are expected to improve upon and use our lives for God. The second step is not hard. It just calls for honest evaluation of our lives. Be honest! Admit your weaknesses as well as your abilities. Determine to do something about them both.

Finally, everyone has a duty to mankind. Our greatest obligation is to pass on to our progeny a better heritage than we obtained from our ancestors. In this way eventually all mankind will stand in the perfect likeness of the Only Begotten of the Father—their true heritage.

CONGRATULATIONS to Brother A. W. Sheehy, London, Ontario, who is to make the commencement address at the Port Huron, Michigan, High School. It also speaks much for our standing in Michigan.

From London, Ontario, Church Bulletin:

ERIE BEACH REUNION GROUNDS

London and Chatham Districts are “collaborating” on a new venture. At a cost of $18,800 we have decided to buy the Erie Beach Reunion Grounds. In all, this extends over 11 acres and includes the pavilion which is already erected. In addition to being used as the reunion grounds, it is planned to make this the site of week-end retreats and summer youth camps. Some far-sighted plans also indicate that future Ontario Youth Conventions will be held at Erie Beach instead of in London. From all reports it would appear that this will be a worth-while addition to the real estate holdings of the church in western Ontario.

General Officers in Missions Abroad

In harmony with discussions which have been held over an extended period, representatives of the presiding quorums are to visit the missions outside the land of America following the General Conference of 1947, with a view to the formulation of long-time policies for firmly establishing the work in these lands and for extending the work of the church into new fields from the bases already established.

The most immediately pressing need is in Europe, where some excellent work has already been done but where further investigation and administrative direction are necessary in order to re-establish the nuclei where our work was flourishing before the war, to build stable foundations for the future, and to administer such relief as will meet the physical needs of the Saints. With this in view Brother McConley has already been assigned to Europe, and he and Sister McConley will sail from New York on the morning of February 20. It has now been agreed that Elders F. Henry Edwards, of the First Presidency, E. J. Gleazer, of the Quorum of Twelve, and G. Leslie DeLapp, of the Presiding Bishopric, will join Brother McConley in Europe sometime in June.

The work in the Australasian field has not been disrupted by the war as it has in Europe, but there is, nevertheless, urgent need for the ministry of representatives of the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric to supplement the good work recently done under the direction of Apostle Mesley. It is therefore anticipated that Elders J. F. Garver, of the First Presidency, and Walter N. Johnson, of the Presiding Bishopric, will visit Australasia late in 1947. The brethren will probably sail sometime in September, and will visit the Hawaiian Saints en route and, if shipping arrangements permit, will call on the South Sea Island Saints on their return journey.

The brethren have accepted their assignments to these missions with sobriety and with deep concern for the important responsibilities thus committed to their care. This feeling is shared by the general authorities most intimately concerned. We feel that the revival and strengthening of our missions abroad are major concerns of the church. With this in mind we are announcing the foregoing appointments and are asking the prayers and the support of the Saints in every land.

BOOKS

THE RIVER, by Rumer Godden. Little, Brown, 1946. 176 pages. $2.00.

Rumer Godden is an English novelist who writes with a fine sense of feeling. The way she tells her stories is charming and delightful as is shown throughout her books. This is outstanding in that she does not use cheapness to gain her effect. She has a tender way of telling the story that is much what the child is thinking but still is not sentimental. Her writing is keen, and there is magic and life in her words.

This is a story about Harriet, a girl about 13 years of age, living with her family along the edge of a river in India. It could be any family. But to Harriet, life is a wonderful thing, something she feels so deeply, something that she sees her sister is not feeling, something she sees other people do not feel, or maybe she catches a glimpse of what they feel and think and that makes her a little more special to them. Her understanding is keen, and she wants to become great because she feels it is within her. She likes to write.

"During a brief Indian winter, as inevitably as the river that flowed past the house of her family in Bengal, Harriet knew death, birth, cruelty, kindness, retribution, and the shadow of love."

There is the garden, the corkwood tree that is Harriet's own, to which she goes with her sorrows, her joys, and her poems. Captain John, the wounded soldier, becomes such a friend of Harriet because at times her understanding of life is fully as great as his, and they feel the same about a good many things. Her family includes: Bea, her sister whose beauty will cause her to miss out on a great deal of life; Bogey, her little brother, who is so quiet and lives within himself so much of the time; and mother, who is so wonderful, who understands so much and is able to give life to a baby; and father; then there is Nan, the old nurse who feels deeply anything that is happening in this family that she loves and has been with so long, and Victoria, the little sister that is so matter-of-fact and honest. Then, the river, that flows so steadily past the house, the cobra, the hurt in people's lives, and the people who don't care.

The River is a deeply moving book as well as an exquisitely written one.

Niemöller in Concentration Camp

DACHAU SERMONS, by Martin Niemöller, translated by Robert H. Pfeiffer. Harper, 1946. 97 pages. $1.50.

Martin Niemöller is well known as the German U-boat captain in the First World War, who became a minister afterward, a strong leader of his people, and a courageous opponent of Hitler, who threw him into Dachau concentration camp, where he was barely given the means to remain alive. Even in prison, he remained a powerful spiritual force in Germany.

All over the world interest is keen in this man of iron courage. His sermons, therefore, will speak to Christians of all lands.

Helping Yourself

WHY WE ACT THAT WAY, by John Homer Miller. Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1946. 222 pages. $1.75.

This is a "help yourself" book with an urban viewpoint and a university and literary background. The chapter titles are provocative, and honestly indicative of the quality and merit of the book: Some of them follow: "What You Want Most of All," "Don't Be Ashamed of Yourself," "It's All in the Way You Look at Life," "Making Yourself Fit to Live With," "Don't Belittle Your Dreams," "You Can Have Power to Burn," "Winning the War Inside Yourself," and "How to Behave in a Crisis." Appeals to thoughtful "white-collar" people.

The JUBILANT YEAR

● CHESTER WARREN QUMBY

This volume was written from sheer delight. The author, from his firm conviction that "the whole earth is full of His glory," never ceases to marvel at nature's forms. To begin his chapters on each of the 12 months, he talks about the elements of nature which that month particularly suggests. He shares with the reader the beauty of the element and discusses something of its scientific background. He then turns to the Bible to see how the element appears there. Quotation and illustration are skillfully used to emphasize the spiritual qualities to be found in nature. $2.00

The Wind-Swept Harp ● Grace Noll Crowell

A new volume of Crowell poetry touching common things with new beauty, yet never profound but easily understood. $1.00

The Fallow Land ● Constancio C. Vigil

Here is a book which contains bits of wisdom that so often seem to be needed to sustain and animate the human spirit; a book of parables, proverbs, epigrams and short meditations, originally appearing in Spanish, by a prominent South American philosopher. $2.50

The Story of Jesus in the World's Literature

● Edward Wagenknecht, Editor with illustrations by Fritz Kredel

Imagine a fine editor who has the opportunity to select from the greatest writers of all countries and ages their best work on the greatest subject in human history.

The result is such a book as this. Big, beautiful, and perfectly organized here are the stories and fiction, the poems and plays—all the literary forms through which the great masters of literature have expressed themselves on the life, the work and the influence of Christ since He walked the earth almost 2000 years ago.

The book is divided into nine sections: His Coming, The Hidden Years, Legends, His Work on Earth, The Social Gospel, The Passion Drama, Christ as Redeemer and Saviour, Afterwards, and Christ Universal. These sections are in turn divided into chapters, all of which fit into the compiler's plan to give the story logical continuity.

Thus, the volume is unique. Designed for the sheer delight of reading, its appeal is universal and timeless. $5.00

The BIRDS of AMERICA

● JOHN JAMES AUDUBON

Introduction and Descriptive Text by William Vogt.

Audubon was probably the greatest of American naturalists and undoubtedly the greatest of all bird painters. During the major part of his life he traveled through the then frontier country of America painting birds in their native habitats. Now, over a hundred years after their original publication, these superb illustrations are reproduced in a single volume and at a new low price. 435 full page illustrations. $6.95

The World's Great Scriptures ● Lewis Browne

Here at last is an anthology of the world's holy literature so arranged and presented that the average reader can share a delight confined until now almost entirely to scholars. This is an ageless book because it contains the richest treasures of all the ages, and the reader will find it an inexhaustible mine of truth, solace, and inspiration.

The emphasis throughout is on the ethical rather than the theological or ritual scriptures, for as the editor explains: "What we need now more than ever is a keener awareness of the kinship between all religions. . . . Men may differ grossly in what and how they worship, but not in why or how they should behave." $5.00

How to Read The Bible

Across the Desk

We were fortunate to have High Priest Adolphus Loving of Brisbane to organize the priesthood attending the reunion for camp ministry. Tent-visiting, personal evangelism, stimulation to attend class sessions, and a personal example in attendance and punctuality at all services contributed much to the success of the reunion. The prayer services each morning for the four age groups, adult, young adult, young people and seniors, all reached high levels of participation and spiritual experience. On a number of occasions messages of consolation, counsel, approval, warning, instruction, and guidance for the future were given to individuals and the congregation as a whole. Attendances were higher than ever.

Classwork was a source of gratification to the leaders this year. Attendances were very high in relation to the number in each age group, and the response to the urge for organization of tent and camp life and work to enable all to attend, was pleasing. "Sunset Reflections," "Evening Preaching," and "Even song" still draw the same large attendances as usual and the high standard of previous years was maintained. A new evening feature this year was a special service at the preaching hour for children. At this session, lantern lectures and other extremely interesting activities were arranged by Elder Frater.

Not only were we amply repaid for planning the late Tiona Reunion well ahead, but the leadership given by the priesthood and responsible young people of both sexes made it one of the most orderly and self-disciplined we have experienced. We feel that this year has been one of the quietest and most peaceful in camp life and conduct. Even nonmembers visiting with us for years past have remarked on it.

While I have personally carried the responsibility of the spiritual administration, High Priest D. A. Alberts has been responsible for the efficient and smooth running of the physical side of the reunion. He supervised everything from the organization of working bees, to the regular supplies of food, light, water, etc., as well as cared for the work of the Bishop's department. He is a capable organizer and one to be depended upon at all times and in any emergency.

We are happy to have the unstinted support of an increasing number of local men and women who have achieved prominence in the field of education, music, arts, etc., in various centers, and look forward to their future contribution raising the general status of the church work.

We appreciated the arrival of greetings to the reunion both from your department and also from Apostle Mesley, in time to be read at the last session on New Year's Eve. It was a real climax because your wishes and prayers for God's blessing and an outstanding spiritual uplift had been realized. Tiona 1946-1947 will be long remembered by those present.

Letter From Germany

A LETTER received by the Presidency and addressed to the church, has been received from Germany, and will be of general interest:

With the writing of today, I would like to give you a report of our little branch here at Elmshorn.

Of our five members which gathered here together to learn of the word of God, I was the youngest one. As we had no ordained man among us, we were forced to go to Uetersen in order to get the Communion. We used to leave here on Saturday evening and come back home Sunday nights. But as later they stopped running the trains, we went on foot for two and one-half hours to get the Lord's Supper. During the week we had our devotional and study periods in our home. In the year 1944, I took a position in the automobile center. It was here where I met Sister Meta Sass who hired me. One day as I listened to one of her telephone conversations I recognized her deep faith in God. With this I saw my opportunity to tell her about the true gospel. Through her I then got acquainted with Alexander Sissojew, who is a Russian and resided here with his father and mother and also worked in this automobile center. Alexander, who is only twenty years old, also showed a great faith in God and separated himself from the things of the world. He is quite a talented boy and speaks different languages—especially a very good German. He could do what very few men could do, that is love his enemies in spite of the hate and trials he had to pass through. Since at that time we were not allowed in private life to mingle with foreigners after the slogan, "Enemy stays enemy," so we had to meet in secrecy. A whole year I worked with these two people which brought to me great strife but also great joy. The hours I spent with them were indeed marvelous so that many times we could not even be disturbed by the alarms which were sounded when we were attacked by airplanes. We were so happy in our faith and trusted in our Heavenly Father, and on March 30 and April 3, 1945, both were baptized at Uetersen. In May, 1945, Alexander had to return to Russia with his parents, but shortly before he left he was ordained an elder in the church. He now wants to translate the Book of Mormon into the Russian language. May God bless him to complete his work; I ask your prayers in his behalf. Wouldn't it be wonderful if some day we were permitted to hear of a branch being established in Russia? At the beginning of 1946, Brother Albert Semmelhaack returned from three years as a war prisoner and soon was ordained to be a priest. He is twenty-eight years old and indeed a true servant of the Lord. Soon after Easter we had the privilege of baptizing two more. So you see the Lord blesses our little branch and we are united in deep love and harmony. I am so glad that since we have an ordained man here I don't have to lead our discussions any more but can listen to our beloved Brother Albert who is teaching us now. My husband has also returned after three years as a war prisoner in a camp in Illinois, U. S. A. He used to be quite active in politics but, through the grace of our Heavenly Father, came also to the knowledge of the truth. So all my work was not in vain and today we are permitted to go the way of truth together. He was baptized on September 29, 1946, and is now a teacher in our branch. Today we are fifteen members here who rejoice in the gospel. We rejoice in the faith and hope of the great redemption of our Lord, for we are sure that the promises of the Lord shall be fulfilled. We have one shepherd who is watching over us and who never forsakes his own and if it gets unbearable, he takes us home or brings us over to you loved ones in Zion. But we still have a lot of work here to do and, with God's help, we shall endure. We want to be patient as members of his body for his is all the power and might.

In true love do I send you this report of our little branch. EMMA LENTFER. Elmshorn, Germany.

The Brotherhood Relation of Man to God

By J. A. Koehler

Number 25 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

WHEN I SPOKE last Sunday of the father-relation of God to man I said, incidentally only, that man is related to God as objects of his loving care. Today I wish to speak of the "brotherhood" relation of man to God. And, as you know, the suffix "hood" here means the condition of being a family of brothers, just as motherhood means the condition of being a mother.

One of the facts of human nature is its gregariousness, its need of association. The first proclamation of the truth that human life cannot be lived except as men live it together—the first proclamation recorded in the Bible, that is—is found in the second chapter of Genesis. There it is said that God said, "It is not good [it is bad, that is] that man should live alone." So the story goes on to say that God said, "I will make him [the man whom he had created] an help meet for him." And that "meet for him" means an help suited to his nature and kind. That means that man is a gregarious animal. His nature is such that its requirements cannot be satisfied except in and through association.

The kind of association which the prophets of the Bible say man was made for is called "the brotherhood of man." And, from one point of view, that brotherhood is the theme of the message of the prophets. Beginning with the first commandments of God to man—the commandment to "Be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it; and have dominion"—the crux of the prophetic message is the duty of man under God to live together on this earth aright. To live together as brothers.

In the early days of the human race, as in the days of Abram, the days of household economy, that brotherhood question was very simple. But you do not need to be told that in these days it is bewilderingly complex. It is so baffling that we have mussed up the whole business of industry and government in particular. Because we have made a mess of that business, a great calamity has come upon the whole race. And our hearts fail us for fear of the greater calamity that seems to be in the making—all because man has not related himself to God as a brotherhood.

We say—the Church in particular says—a great deal about brotherhood. But we do not seem to mean what we say. And one of the reasons we do not seem to mean what we say is, in part, that we do not even know what it is we intend to say. If we were pressed for a blueprint of the brotherhood relation which man must sustain to God, to promote the well-being of his soul, few would know how to draw the first line of that pattern of human society. Much less would they know how to complete the drawing. Their heads would be in a worse whirl than they are when they try to depict the administration of the affairs of our nation.

I have made a blueprint of the brotherhood relation proclaimed by the modern prophet, as I understand it. And when I think the time is ripe, I intend to speak very specifically about that plan of human society. But in this talk my only aim is to say what I believe to be the essence of that brotherhood relation.

In one of our societies much is said about "How good and how pleasant it is for men to dwell together in unity! . . . for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forevermore." There are few passages in the Bible which state the essence of the brotherhood relation so well as this. For brotherhood means precisely that: dwelling together in unity.

When we wish to give an example of that way of life we usually refer to the manner in which the affairs of a domestic household are conducted. I mean a household in which love is the motivation and common interests the solidifying force. We give, that is, the best example of a life of mutual aid. A life in which the interests of persons are not in opposition. A life in which the whole business of living together is ordered with judgment and established with justice. A life in which justice is tempered with mercy. A manner of life which we know by actual test commands the blessing of God. When I say "we," I mean the persons who have actually put the law of human life to the test. The rest of us may have the knowledge only of the looker-on.

If there is one passage in the message of the modern prophet which portrays the brotherhood relation more than any other isolated proclamation, it may be this (I paraphrase to conform the language to the pattern of this talk; but I state the principles involved truthfully); this is the proclamation:

You are to be equal. In other words, you are to have equal claims on the common properties of the household for the purpose of performing your several functions in the family. Your several claims shall be based both on your wants and your needs, provided that your wants are just. And all this that the whole family or household may prosper. As a family you shall honor these rights of all the members so that each may have opportunity to improve his talents and make his maximum contribution to the increase of the total. And now I quote verbatim: "Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor [or of the other members of the household] and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God." That is dwelling together in unity. That is the principle of brotherhood applied to the family—as it is intended to be applied to the community.

The brotherhood relation, then, from the point of view of the prophet, is a relationship of corporate implementers of the will of God in the institutions of human society. The brotherhood relation means, in the language of the modern prophet, "Using the things of this world in the manner designed of God." And that means to govern industry aright as a responsibility under God and in honor of him; as the only means of promoting the welfare of the soul; as the only means of promoting the prosperity and happiness of all and of ushering in the reign of peace.

There are some elements of brotherhood even in our present world situation. There are some circumstances in which one person or people or nation does not seek to have the advantage of others. In some circumstances there is some sacrificing by some for the good of others. But so long as we fuss eternally about prices and wages and taxes and political controls and many more things—so long as that state of affairs exists, we know we have some fundamental changes to make in the constitution of human society before we shall have even approximated the brotherhood relation of man to God.

The essence of the brotherhood relation of man to God is comparable to the relation of a symphony orchestra to a great composer, whose mind is revealed in the score of a musical composition. The brotherhood relation of man to God is a social symphony performed by the persons who compose the community. It is men living together "in unity."

The brotherhood relation of man to God is nothing more nor less than the Kingdom of God, which is peoples doing the will of God—the will of God as it respects the vital affairs of all peoples, especially the affairs of economic life. The brotherhood relation of man to God is peoples ordering their government with judgment, as the Prophet Isaiah put it, and establishing it with justice. The essence of the brotherhood relation of man to God is "The City" out of which our God shall shine in process of building. The essence of the brotherhood relation of man to God, as the modern prophet put it, is a people bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion. And that means conforming economic life to the moral order of the universe.

The brotherhood relation of man to God, then, is grounded in a social philosophy which represents the will of God respecting the constitution of human society. No people can promote the brotherhood relation of man to God, unless it is a master of that social philosophy. For any concept of rightly constituted human society, any conviction with respect to the manner in which human relations ought to be ordered, any plan or pattern of a family of social institutions, any blueprint of the business of human living together, represents of necessity a social philosophy. And if we know that, we should know why, in this time of trouble, the essence of the message of the prophetic genius, especially in these modern times, is a social philosophy.

Anonymity

Somebody writes ye editor a long screed, making numerous unfounded statements, and finishes by charging us with cowardice. And refuses to sign the letter! Think of that for an example of forthrightness! Israel A. Smith.

Tithed, Not Burned

By James F. Keir

This statement in Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5, "He that is tithed shall not be burned, [at his coming]," might to some people seem threatening and hard to reconcile with the fact that God is a God of love.

It is not a threat, for God does not solicit obedience born of fear. He invites, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest."

He sets before us the better way and asks us to make a choice. Deuteronomy 11: 26, 28, "Behold I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing if ye obey . . . a curse if ye will not obey." He is merciful in pointing out the consequences of neglect or willful disobedience, but he has made it clear that acceptable obedience is sought on the basis of willingness on our part and not because of the fear of consequences.

"And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Revelation 22: 17.

"For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath."—II Corinthians 8: 12.

We find equally strong language used by the Saviour in pointing out the importance of his claim as the Son of God. John 3: 18, "He that believeth on him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."

Such statements should be considered, not as threats but as statements of fact. They are reminders that point out the price of neglect.

It is doubtful that the burning is literal, for these words follow the text, "This is speaking after the manner of the Lord." Mental anguish, shame, and sorrow caused either by misdeeds or our failure to improve our opportunities causes

The Laurel Club's Forty Years

By Mrs. J. A. Holsworth

Laurel Club Historian

ON MAY 10, 1906, six young women met at the home of Mrs. John D. White to organize the Laurel Club. Those in attendance were Miss Eva Bailey (later Mrs. Ellis Short), Mrs. John D. White, Mrs. M. T. Short, Mrs. William Pitt, Mrs. Reese Wells, and Mrs. R. Etzenhouser. These ladies are now deceased, with the exception of Mrs. Etzenhouser who has not been associated with the club for many years. The purpose of the Laurel Club at the time of its organization was to raise money for the Independence Sanitarium and the Children's Home in Lamoni, Iowa. Large sums were given directly to the Sanitarium funds. The entire equipment of the dining room and kitchen, including furniture, curtains, linens, dishes, silver, and cooking utensils, was purchased by the Laurel Club. A patient's room was also furnished. When pledges were requested, there was always a good response; on two occasions over $900 were contributed. The records are not complete, but there is a notation that from June, 1906, to December, 1908, more than $1,200 was donated in cash to the Sanitarium fund.

WAYS OF RAISING MONEY IN EARLY TIMES

Many social evenings were sponsored at the homes of Laurel Club members. Each woman brought her share of the refreshments, and an admission fee was charged. George Washington and St. Patrick's Day parties were held annually. Early members owned Martha Washington costumes. Rummage and bake sales were held frequently. At the regular meetings, articles were made for sale at suffering equal to any physical suffering that might be inflicted.

Every law, whether human or divine, has its penalty. How unfortunate it would be for us if God had not made clear to us the penalty of neglect.

Obedience to every requirement of the law of God is the pathway of safety, the way of increased peace and joy, the gateway to eternal life.

the annual bazaar, which was usually held in December along with an oyster supper. These were held in the old dining hall, now known as the Stone Church annex. Booths were erected on both sides of the hall and trimmed for the occasion; prizes were awarded the most artistic booths. In the "good old days," local merchants donated cartons of canned goods, vegetables and fruits; this merchandise constituted the "country store," which was one of the busiest of all booths. Mrs. Jennie Campbell and Mrs. Charles Koehler were in charge of this project.

CONFERENCE MUSICALE

One evening during General Conference the Laurel Club used to entertain the delegates and visitors with a musicale, which was usually held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Smith. Although the Smith home was spacious, it was necessary to send out invitations to limit the number of guests. Refreshments were always served at the close of the entertainment.

PLAYS

One of the most interesting means of raising money was the plays sponsored by the Laurel Club. The cast was selected from members of the club.

On November 21, 1912, "The Old Maid's Convention" convened in the dining hall, and was repeated by request on November 26. The long exhortation delivered by Mrs. Guinard on that occasion was an outstanding piece of oratory. The "Deestrick Skule" was presented in 1913.

STONE CHURCH

At the June meeting in 1911, the Laurel Club voted to work entirely for the Stone Church with the aim of freeing it of debt and providing necessary equipment. A total of $650 was given to the Bishop; $5 for lights; $503.75 for carpets and mats; $25 for branch expenses; and $600 for the dining hall. In 1912, the club allotted $150 to the church budget, and in 1925 contributed $100.

COMMUNION SERVICE

In 1915 a committee from the Stone Church congregation was selected to provide individual Communion glasses. The club donated $125 for the first Communion service, and purchased all additional trays and glasses for several years afterward.

SARCOPHAGUS

The Laurel Club contributed $500 from club funds to be used in purchasing a sarcophagus for the late President Joseph Smith at the time of his death. Once the fund was started, contributions were received from other groups; $2,400 were eventually collected for this purpose.

LIBRARY

Mrs. M. T. Short was serving as librarian in 1918 when the need for a set of International Encyclopedia arose. The Laurel Club purchased the set, and for many years financed the year book at a cost of $7 a year. In addition to this, other donations were made to the library.

WORLD WAR I ACTIVITIES

During the first World War, members of the Laurel Club assisted in Belgian relief work, knitted for the soldiers, and helped in Red Cross projects.

BEAUTIFICATION OF INDEPENDENCE

A general movement was made in 1923 to beautify Independence. The Laurel Club was divided into groups, and each group assigned a specific location to develop. Assisted by the Independence Chamber of Commerce, the women supervised the landscaping of Triangle Park. In 1932, they contributed to the improvement of the Auditorium grounds.

CAMPUS BUILDING

By 1917, the Laurel Club had outgrown the accommodations of private homes and was meeting in the Women's Building located at the northeast corner of West Walnut and River. Large sums of money were spent for furniture, dishes, stoves, rugs, and other necessary equipment.

The "campus" had been purchased by the church in the meantime, and in 1924 the Laurel Club moved from the Women's Building to the institute building. Again it was necessary to purchase furnishings for the new meeting place. All money raised from projects given here was turned in to Bishop J. A. Becker. The "konference karnival" was sponsored by the club in April, 1926; $401 were cleared from it. In June of the same year, the women conducted a "trip around the world." Starting at Union Station (Stone Church), travelers were taken to Spain (Watkin's home), then to Holland (George Gould home), Ireland (James' home), Japan (Yingling home), and back to America (the campus) where a pageant was the featured entertainment. Refreshments were served in each "country." A total of $137.96 was obtained from this project and given to the Bishop.

On July 4, 1923, the Laurel Club sponsored a fair at the campus. The local Chamber of Commerce co-operated by collecting $300 from the merchants to purchase fireworks. Fifteen thousand persons attended; net proceeds from the fair amounted to $564.71.

GRACELAND COLLEGE ENDOWMENT FUND

When the Graceland College Endowment Fund was started in 1925, the Laurel Club members contributed $500.

INDEPENDENCE CENTENNIAL

The centennial celebration in 1927 is also recorded in the Laurel Club history. The women were in charge of "Old Settlers' Day" and entered a float, "Service," in the parade.

HARVEST HOME FESTIVAL

For several years the harvest home festival was an annual event at the Auditorium. During the celebrations, the Laurel Club served meals and refreshments. Most of the income from these projects was used to assist needy families in the community.

PORTRAITS

No refreshments were served in 1925. The money that would have been used for this purpose ($250) was spent for oil paintings of Presidents Joseph and Frederick M. Smith.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS

In 1931-32, $3,500 were contributed by the Laurel Club to the General Church. A notation in the records shows that $100 was given to the consecration fund and $100 as Christmas offering. Smaller amounts were contributed to other funds.

BRICK WORK AT AUDITORIUM

At the suggestion of church officials in February, 1938, the front and wings of the Auditorium were filled in with bricks from the old Columbian School. This made possible the completion of more offices. The cost of this improvement ($4,500) was handled entirely by the Laurel Club. Part of this money was raised through the sale of Jello, silver polish, stain remover, and game boards.

PERMANENT QUARTERS AT AUDITORIUM

On February 16, 1926, a committee from the Laurel Club was appointed to confer with the building committee at the Auditorium about establishing permanent quarters for the club in the Auditorium. The present spacious dining hall and all equipment has been paid for by the club and represents an investment of many thousands of dollars. Six hundred persons may now be served at one time in the dining hall.

PLAYS AT THE AUDITORIUM

In 1927, the play, "Restoration," was presented by the Laurel Club; proceeds totaled $755.69. A Book of Mormon pageant, "Remember Cumorah," was financed by the club and produced by the White Masque players; net proceeds of $184.24 were divided by the two organizations. In 1928, the same arrangement was worked out by the club and players in presenting "The Glory of 1830." This play cleared $449.83 for the two groups. Part of the money was given to the Bishop.

TITHING

Until recently tithing has been paid to the Bishop at the end of each year.

PRESIDENTS

The following presidents have directed the Laurel Club activities through the past forty years: Mrs. Eva Bailey Short, Mrs. Reese Wells, Mrs. William Bartholomew, Mrs. Arthur Crenshaw, Mrs. Joseph Sturges, Mrs. T. J. Watkins, Mrs. Hazel Criley, Mrs. Reginald Loosemore, Mrs. D. O. Cato, and Mrs. Flo Burton, present presiding officer. Most of these women served only a short while; Mrs. Sturges, however, was president for twelve years and Mrs. Watkins for nine years.

RECENT PROJECTS

In 1945, the club purchased large deep freeze units and electric refrigerators. In 1946, $500 was donated to the Stone Church organ fund and $300 for the furnishing of a patient's room at the Independence Sanitarium. Fluorescent lights have been installed in the dining hall at a cost of $350, and the balance on the cost of enlarging the hall has been paid. The establishing of a permanent dining room has been selected as the project for 1947. Much money is expended yearly for the replacement of equipment.

SPECIAL DATES

are: Organization Day, May 10 (1906), Founder's Day, May 13 (1924), and the annual feast, January 21, (instituted in 1931). The latter event was celebrated for several years as President Frederick M. Smith's birthday party. He was always guest of honor at the dinner and was presented a gift each year.

TWENTY-FIVE YEAR SERVICE GROUP

Thirteen of the present members have been active workers in the Laurel Club for twenty-five or more years. They are Mrs. Jennie Campbell, Mrs. C. Ed Miller, Mrs. Myra Brackenbury, Mrs. Fred Dunne, Mrs. Nell Goodrich, Mrs. Hazel Criley, Mrs. J. A. Holsworth, Miss Della Criley, Mrs. Alvin Knisley, Mrs. Ida and Mrs. Anna Williamson, Mrs. J. A. Becker, and Mrs. R. V. Hopkins.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel L. Jones celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on October 13 in South Pasadena, California. Elder Lewis B. Shippy officiated at the ceremony in which Mr. and Mrs. Jones repeated their wedding vows. Mrs. Jones was attended by her daughter, Mrs. June Hicker, and was escorted to the altar by her son, Morgan. Two other sons, Edwin and Theodore, served as attendants for their father. Barry Jones, a grandson, played two violin selections during the ceremony, accompanied by his mother, Iona Jones. LETTERS

A True Experience

In the year 1890, when I was twenty-one years old, my brother and I were living in a boarding house in St. Joseph, Missouri, while my father was away on a mission. During this time, I contracted typhoid fever. After I had been ill for several weeks, I had a wonderful experience. I saw a ray of light come through the ceiling of my room. I went up in this ray of light and could look down on my body upon the bed. I ascended in the ray to three different strata; then the ascension stopped, but I tried to go on. I heard a voice say, "Not yet. There is a work for you to do." My spirit then returned to my body, and I remember catching my breath. The next morning my brother said he was certain I had been dead, that for twenty minutes I did not breathe.

The Shining Light

Though I am isolated from church privileges, the Herald enables me to keep close to the church, its work, its design, its purposes. The many inspiring articles have been a real inspiration to me. Best wishes to you that this may be a prosperous year for you and the church. And may this light continue to shine brighter and brighter that many who are now walking in darkness may find this light shining for them.

GEORGE F. ABBOTT.

Has Heralds to Give Away

I am an isolated Saint and seldom get to attend my own church. I do enjoy reading the Herald, especially the letter section. I was touched by the tribute Leonard Lea paid his wife and by the letter from Alice Skinner in the January 26 issue. I was left alone on August 19 when my companion died and was resentful because I could not see why he should be taken from me. Now I ask only that He show me what to do and give me the faith and courage to do it. I am praying that I may find another woman to share my home with me, as it is hard for me to live alone.

I try to help my church by sharing the Heralds. I have copies of some of the 1943, '44, '45, and '46 issues I will be glad to send to anyone desiring them.

Mrs. Jennie Gebard.

Healed Through Administration

I was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1922 by Elder John R. Grice. Although I have not had the opportunity of attending church as I would like, God has permitted me to receive spiritual blessings in reading my Bible and the Saints' Herald.

Two years ago I was told by my doctor that I would need an operation. I had faith, however, that I could be healed without surgery, so I called for Elder Tennyson Summers of Port Huron, Michigan, to administer to me. I was greatly relieved, and the doctor recognized the improvement in my health. The second time Elder Summers administered to me I was healed instantly. I shall never forget the feeling of peace and joy that came over me with that administration.

I have had many trials but have always found comfort in my patriarchal blessing. I am glad to belong to a church in which Christ's Spirit is still present. Pray for me; my prayer is that God will bless his people everywhere.

Correction

The dates in the letter written by Mrs. Mary Honeywell which appeared in the January 11 issue of the Herald, page 8; should be 1834 and 1837 rather than 1934 and 1937.

Now What

By BERNIE FLEEHARTY

Every Christian individual has recently passed through a period of time in which he has commemorated the birth of Christ. All did not celebrate in the same way, but each emphasized the part of the holiday season which appeared to him to be the significant. Some endowed institutions with great sums of money. Others gave expensive gifts to those they love and admire, or have made personal sacrifices, or have spent hours of time and patience making something to be presented to his neighbor, friend, or relative. Many spent the holidays in concentrated formal worship and thanksgiving. A few were able to do creative work; they planned services in order that others might receive the Spirit of Christ. Each year the same attempt has been made to start anew with a life more characteristic of Christ's life. This is altogether fitting and proper, but NOW WHAT?

Having passed through the period of rekindling and thanksgiving, what shall be our contribution to the rest of the year? Christ showed his gratitude for the privilege of birth by excelling in a life of service. What better way is there to appreciate both the birth and life of Christ—which is the perfect example—and your own life? We, as Latter Day Saints, are commanded to excel. We must accept the challenge which society gives us. We must excel in personalities and characters. We must excel in homemaking, for to homemakers is entrusted the destiny of tomorrow's church. We must excel in each of our particular positions and professions, for the eyes of the world are waiting to be shown the way to Zion. We must study more, think deeper, appear neater, and work more efficiently, for to us is given the continuation of Zion-building. We must make a worthy contribution.

No two of us have risen to the same heights in maturity, nor do we think alike. Therefore, we must first determine for ourselves where we stand on the ladder of life, then say to ourselves, fairly, "I have accomplished this, and this, and this, to my satisfaction, NOW WHAT?"

In thinking out this question, we may wish to start with an evaluation of our inheritance. How rich has been that inheritance! The very act of being born entitles us to the use of millions of miles of pavement on which we may travel to places of interest, beauty, historic importance, and the homes of persons we care to be with. For this there is asked no fee. We may wish to travel by train. If so, we have inherited miles and miles of railway tracks also. Think of the conveniences of the radio and the telephone—another part of our rich inheritance. It has been a source of reverence to me as I have walked into the quietude of large libraries and have observed people earnestly appreciating and benefiting from the stacks of books and magazines which have been placed there for them. All this would not have been possible except that individuals have yearned to make a contribution in their lives to their posterity. Former generations have been good to us. We have vast opportunities today because of it. We too have done some things during our generation which will call out moods of appreciation from generations to come, but NOW WHAT?

Do we know how best to use our inheritance? I made a rather interesting observation a few months ago which I should like to share with you. I entered a small city bus en route home one evening after work and unconsciously seated myself opposite a young mother with a small boy. The boy appeared to be about two years of age. To him had been given his first double-dip chocolate ice-cream cone. The way he handled the cone would indicate to me that he had managed single dip cones before but this was a special treat. He finally finished the cone, but not before every lady on the bus had contributed her last cleansing tissue to the cause. The small boy was literally covered with chocolate ice cream. He had been given something which was too large for him to cope with. This experience had a lesson in it for me. I began to see how individuals may or may not be big enough to handle their inheritance. I saw too that, while society would say the small boy made a complete failure in his attempt to eat his cone, he enjoyed it thoroughly and was successful, in his opinion, because the cone diminished in his hand and it was very tasty. But, what is more important, he had gone beyond his immediate accomplishments and had had his first double-dip ice-cream cone. His mother was dreadfully embarrassed.

Our first attempts to push back the horizons of our experience may prove embarrassing to others, also, but to us is given the encouragement to try. We had no fear when small, and collectively we have no fear now. Especially do we have no fear when we hear on every hand, almost in an audible voice, the younger generation looking to us and saying, "Our inheritance is great, God has given us life, Christ gave us a pattern for a happy life, latter-day generations have given us a church, and the books of the church, together with a promise of Zion. What is going to be your contribution to our society?" Many of us today are ignoring the challenge thrown at us—that of establishing Zion—but our ignoring it does not lessen the challenge.

We must realize that beyond our immediate environment—in politics, in religion, in economics, in industry, in medicine, in homemaking and branch strengthening, there lies untold riches. We need only to push back the horizons of immediacy and discover our own potentialities, along with our weaknesses; discover God's complete plan for a more abundant life, using the experiences of subsequent generations; discover new plans, new ideas, new allegiances, new abilities, new talents, new concepts, and new personalities.

Do things, even though you may find yourself covered with chocolate ice cream at your first attempt; you will have started your learning process. Work diligently and untiringly. Tackle the things which now seem too large. Stumble and fall, if necessary, but get up and start over again with a new determination. Make your influence felt in your work, your home, your community, your nation, your church, and in the world. Then look into the eyes of the younger generation and say, "Here is my contribution." Be sure you are able to say with God, "It is good." Then, to the youth, say, "What will be your contribution? It must be better than mine. It must be of a quality to assure a growing Zion, or you will disap-point your forerunners in this important project for which we have given a greater portion of our lives."

To this challenge they will respond, because we shall have handed down to them the torch of enthusiasm, wisdom, and promise which our forefathers handed to us.

The Trouble-Shooter

Fine Points of Tithing

QUESTION: There are several points on this matter of tithing that are not quite clear to me. For example, why should gifts given to other people be tithed when they are not an increase? Why should a savings account be tithed when very possibly the money will be used for necessary living expenses? And why should one's home be tithed when it is a just want and need. Money spent for rent is not tithable.

I'm not trying to find a way to "beat the Lord," but these particular issues have me puzzled.

ANSWER: By Bishop H. L. Livingston

"Why should gifts given to other people be tithed when they are not increase?"

Because gifts are purchased out of increase, it is necessary to understand how increase is determined in order to see why it includes gifts given to other people. Increase is the amount left after deducting necessary living expenses from income for the year. It is not necessarily actual cash on hand at the time of accounting but is the difference between the annual income and the deductible expenses which are necessary living expenses. Naturally, gifts, which are not considered deductible expenditures, accordingly are part of the increase subject to tithing.

"Why should a savings account be tithed when very possibly the money will be used for necessary living expenses?"

The Lord, by his law, provides for an annual accounting of one's stewardship. The intent of this provision is quite clear that our responsibility to the church is periodic and according to the prosperity we have enjoyed; otherwise, the church would not have a regular income to meet its operating costs. If in the course of a year's time we have been blessed with increase, we owe tithing to the Lord, but if in that period we have not enjoyed an increase, we do not owe tithing. It does not mean, however, that if we have not had increase we cannot help the church, for we can make an offering. Savings, therefore, which are a part of our increase would be subject to tithing at the accounting date. However, there may be instances where people save for specific needs and at the accounting time may have not as yet made the purchase. It would seem to us, in this event, that the matter of tithepaying would largely depend upon the desires of the individual. In these cases where only a matter of days is involved and the intent of the contributor is clear, we are inclined to give the contributor the benefit of any doubt. On the other hand, the accumulation of money in a savings account without a specific need would represent increase and be subject to tithing.

The Man Who - - Was Always Wrong

P. S.

From my early youth there comes back to me today the memory of a remarkable personage—the Man Who Was Always Wrong.

No matter what question came up, he would get on the wrong side of it. He opposed the whole world with an intuitive personal irrationality that never failed him.

A man can be wrong most of the time and win no fame. He is just one of millions, an average dunderhead, barely saved by the intelligence of an irate wife. But to be always wrong—that approaches genius; in reverse, of course. He was unique. I never met another who could equal his record. But there have been many times when other people have made me remember him.

How could he do it? The cause was his theory of life, his philosophy of the universe. If you admitted his basic assumptions, all the rest was logical, systematic, inevitable. But if you were a normal person, his foundations were preposterous, an insult to intelligence, a phantasmagoria, an illusion concocted in some neon-lit corner of perdition for the deception of fools.

In every business, church, group, or organization, there is someone who is often wrong. He outtalks everybody, wins the arguments by sheer stubbornness and unreasonableness. The minutes of societies are cluttered with his resolutions, put there against the will of a sane but less determined minority.

How careful we must be of our basic philosophy. How we should strive to know the truth. If our foundation is wrong, our whole structure of life is in danger when the dark waters come flooding up around it, bringing ruin. If our foundation is right, we have a chance of survival no matter how fierce the storm.

We must often ask ourselves, "Am I wrong?"

* Spring

The March wind grabs my skirt
And tugs until I follow willingly.
He beckons 'round the corner of the house
Like some small boy with a secret knowing.
And now I see—
Two carved-white crocus cups
Present their spikes of gold dust to the sun.
I kneel to worship beauty
As young wind, secret shared,
Runs off to play.

* Australian Visitors

Independence members of the Stone Church had the pleasure of meeting a distinguished member of the church from Australia Sunday morning, February 16. Elder Perce E. Judd, Sister Judd, and three children, Brian, Perce R., and Beryl, were met by Apostle C. G. Mesley. Numerous members shook hands with them after the service. The previous Sunday they had worshiped at the Balmain Church in Australia. They left on Wednesday and arrived Saturday, proving the world to be very small. Brother Judd has left for New York, where he will be International Commodities Exchange Officer for the United Nations Organization. He is a graduate of the University of Adelaide, has been a university professor for some years, and has served his government at the capital at Canberra.

* A Convert

You may remember a little item in this column (January 4) entitled "The Coffee War," in which we said, "If this causes one person to change, we should like to hear from him or her." The volume of correspondence indicates that "The Coffee War" is still going on merrily. But, believe it or not, that little item won a convert. As usual, it was a lady who came out ahead of the gentlemen. Sister Hazel R. Pumphrey, 629 S. W. 24, Oklahoma City, writes: "I haven't touched a cup of coffee since I read your article. Before that I drank from two to three cups a day. I wanted you to know you can put one person on your list that quit." . . . Many thanks for reporting. You will be rewarded with pleasant sleep and steady nerves, a more comfortable feeling in the stomach, and a conscience free because now the Word of Wisdom means something more in your life than a page in a book.

* Books

"These modernistic bookcases that put the books down close to the floor would be all right," says Uncle Joe, "if a man could have a swivel in his spine."

* Sometimes the difference between success and failure is the ability to make just a little more effort.

A Good Report

You may belong to that vast throng of people who have only a vague comprehension of figures and hate statistics. Regardless of that, you will like the Presiding Bishop's "Tentative Report of Income for the Year 1946" which is contained in this issue. Compare all items with the same items for the year 1945, and you will probably draw some favorable implications regarding the church and its people.

People will contribute to a succeeding cause. "Nothing succeeds like success," says an old proverb. We like to belong to a "going concern." Beginning with a splendid performance in the liquidation of the church debt, our church fiscal officers have gone on to an equally good record in the building of reserves and resources for the future of the church.

It is natural for people to give under these circumstances. They know that the use made of the money will be good, that the management will be competent, and that the funds will be at work for years to come instead of being dissipated immediately. The church is benefiting by receiving interest on its money instead of paying interest. That is, accumulated resources are working for us. People like that sort of thing, and as long as we go ahead in this way, we can expect increasing confidence, devotion, and generosity.

Do not worry that the money will be idle. In due time the church will have a program ready in which it will be given proper employment.

Church Needs

The following significant note was received in a report to the First Presidency by Bishop D. O. Chesworth, who eight months ago entered upon an intensive new career for the church:

Standing out above everything is not what we have achieved, but our great problem and need of more full-time missionaries and pastors, particularly those who have had several years of pastoral experience before accepting appointment, with some maturity in their decisions. . . . As I travel and see the great need of pastoral ministry, I long and pray that the church will call more men to this gigantic task of ministering to hungry souls.

Brother Chesworth himself made a splendid record in pastoral, administrative, and supervisory work. He is one who knows what he reports.

Surely the call of needy humanity will find a response in the minds and hearts of many young men and women of the church, who will devote some of their time not only to preparing for careers, but who will desire to consecrate their lives to the work of Christ, and who will show their sincerity by using their own time and means to prepare themselves for church service.

The General Conference

This month the church turns its attention to the coming General Conference. It should be discussed in sermons and made the subject of petitions in our prayers, both private and public. The General Conference is the heart of the church organization. So much of our welfare and progress depend upon its actions, decisions, and feeling. Because many of those who come to participate in the work are located in places remote from headquarters, and so are not always closely in touch with affairs, more than human wisdom is needed to direct the sessions. No conference could possibly succeed in its work without prayer, and without the presence and assistance of the divine Spirit.

Our people therefore are requested to remember the General Conference, the church leaders, and all concerned in their prayers. Please remember also last week's official announcement which appointed March 30 as a day of fasting, in which members are to omit the morning meal and offer special prayers for the conference.

U. S. Responsibility

Some great nation has always taken the lead in organizing world politics, giving civilization its character, keeping belligerent parties under control, directing international relationships, throwing its influence in one direction or another in all general problems and situations. Some advantages accrue to such a leading nation, beneficial to its commerce, military position, and cultural influence. Smaller nations learn to speak the language of the great nation, read its books, trade with it, visit it. Responsibilities also develop, and there are expenses too. Terrible wars are fought to challenge or maintain this leadership.

American journals are making considerable comment on the decline of the power of Great Britain in the fields of international politics and commerce. Our role heretofore has not been so good. The United States News for February 21, says:

It's been wonderful for the last 100 years or so to let Britain try to keep order in the world, to sit back in U. S. with a small Army, a smug feeling and a free license to indulge in armchair sharpshooting at British imperialism. . . . Troubles in Britain are beginning to force U. S. to recast its policy in relation to the outside world. . . . To the extent that Great Britain is forced by events to give up her old role of world leader, U. S. is to be forced to assume that role, unless willing to let it fall by default to Russia.

There you have it. Do you want to live in the kind of world that Stalin wants to make of it? If not, we must do something with our strength besides enjoy it; and we'd better be intelligent about it, too.

The decline of Britain would

Editorial

mean the loss of a great and powerful friend of America. The British Commonwealth of Nations may be able to resurrect the great strength once enjoyed by the Empire, but nobody can be sure of this. We have faith in this great group of peoples, and they need our help now.

The United States has made many mistakes in isolationism. Hitler Germany could have been controlled, and the Second World War prevented. We were selling oil, scrap iron, and pacifism, clipping our coupons and enjoying life. So Hitler took charge of the world. Would you like to let Stalin do the same thing? He is embarked upon the same route.

Sometime, this country ought to grow up. Now seems to be the time for it. Now we have a great need of statesmanship instead of politics, of world leadership instead of world exploitation, of intelligence instead of selfishness and profit-taking.

The United States can only become great as its individual citizens become better informed, achieve higher ethical standards, sympathize with the needs of other peoples, and take up their responsibilities for world leadership.

FOLLOWING THE good work done over a period of several years by Apostles D. T. Williams, Charles R. Hield, and M. A. McConley, the church in the Southern Mission has grown steadily until this has become one of our most promising missionary areas. There are many opportunities for extending the work in the South, building new churches, assigning new missionaries, and making a stable contribution to a growing number of communities.

Elder Ray Whiting, of the Order of Evangelists, has just returned from a brief mission in the South, and he reports enthusiastically on

OFFICIAL

Tentative Report of Income for the Year 1946

While we are in process of closing our books, we think that it will be of interest to the Saints to know the amount of income received in 1946, as compared with 1945. The following statement shows that our income held up remarkably well.

	1946	1945	Increase over 1945
Tithes	$ 971,805.63	$ 950,818.52	$20,987.11
Offerings	23,504.34	26,295.05	2,790.71*
Christmas Offering	49,855.50	49,654.19	201.31
Total General Fund	$1,045,165.47	$1,026,767.76	$18,397.71

In addition to the General Funds listed above, a comparative statement of Special Funds is submitted:

	1946	1945	Increase over 1945
Oblation	$ 80,667.02	$ 73,636.77	$ 7,030.25
Bequests	17,736.74	11,924.35	5,812.39
College Day Offering	20,697.01	3,607.77	17,089.24
Men's Dormitory, Graceland	562.06	10,036.77	9,474.71*
Independence San. & Hosp.	1,241.21	10,425.68	9,184.47*

It should be noted that the College Day Offerings for 1946 amount to $20,697.01; this should be compared with the combined figures of $3,607.77 and $10,036.77 for the College Day Offerings and Men's Dormitory contributions for the year 1945, as two offerings were taken up in 1945 for the purposes mentioned.

In 1945 a special effort was made to raise money for equipment for the prospects opening before us. During Brother Whiting's trip, baptisms were secured in various centers, a rather large number of patriarchal blessings were given, and the work was strengthened in many ways. After a brief rest in Independence, Brother Whiting is to leave for Ohio where he expects to be busy until General Conference.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital; a similar effort was not made in 1946.

F. H. E.

ELDER FRANK A. FRY, pastor at Des Moines, writes in his monthly report:

A four-week missionary effort was just concluded at Boone last Sunday. Three persons were baptized as the result of the effort of Brethren Daugherty and Conway, and it is felt that the next effort, contemplated for early fall, will produce much better results in the number of baptisms.

If I discern correctly, there is a fine spirit of expectancy and devotion prevailing among the Saints of this area, and I feel that progress is being made.

While we are happy to receive information concerning baptisms, we are particularly impressed with Brother Fry's statement concerning the "fine spirit of expectancy and devotion" prevailing among their people. This is a first-class combination.

Saints' Herald

By SUE SMITH

It comes into our homes each week,
A banquet table spread
With food for hungry, seeking souls;
And multitudes are fed.

It reaches out to scattered sheep;
To some without the fold;
Bringing to all the Bread of Life,
Its value more than gold.

And so for those who nobly serve
Let's offer up a prayer,
And share our heartfelt gratitude,
By doing each our share.

THE MEANS OF SURVIVAL

By Apostle E. J. Gleazer

A sermon delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, January 5, 1947

INTRODUCTION

Last Sunday morning, with many of you, we listened to Brother Oakman talking on the theme, "Prophets of Gloom." I was stimulated by that service—not that we rejoiced in the message, not that we could say that we enjoyed it—but it confirmed in the mind of your speaker the truth of the great Restoration Movement. Brother Oakman did not deny that this is an hour of crisis; he was not denouncing a message of warning; but he did bring to our attention that while we have heard from time to time warnings of the great calamities that are now on the earth, and of those which are yet to come, still he attempted to bring to us that there is another side to this question. He did not have time last Sunday morning to do that.

I am not attempting to supplement his message, but use this opportunity as a means of carrying on and sharing with you some of the ideas that he stimulated in my mind during that service.

It is very difficult for me to name a subject, because I find from time to time that I have a change of mind; and as I attempted to give consideration to the message of this hour, I found there were other thoughts that impressed themselves upon me. If I do not say too much regarding "The Means of Survival," it grows out of the fact that I want to discuss also with you something of this period of judgment that is now upon the earth.

I WISH TO INTRODUCE first several verses of Scriptures from the third and fourth chapters of Malachi. I think Latter Day Saints should give special attention to this prophet, for you will recall that in the very dawn of this great Restoration Movement the angel of God gave reference to this Scripture. You might refresh your minds by reading the history of that event when God, speaking to the young man, Joseph Smith, through an angel, informed him regarding this day and this period. In the third chapter of Malachi, beginning with the first verse, we have this language:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.

But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. (Inspired Version)

"Who may abide the day of his coming?" I believe that question should challenge everyone of us who has been baptized into this church; and if there are those present who are not yet members of this organization, they, too, should be challenged. Great emphasis was placed upon the second coming of Christ when this Restoration Movement was first initiated. There have been periods in our history when we have seemed to overlook that great event. I think that has been a sad mistake. It is definitely related to the hour in which you and I now live. It is certainly associated with this great work of preparation; and that is why the gospel was restored and this church established, that this period of preparation should take place. A people must be prepared for Christ's coming.

There are many prophecies that may come to your minds which indicate a great light should be made manifest during this dispensation of time; and if there are any of us who have ever doubted the divinity of this work and the words of the Latter Day prophets, we certainly should be confirmed in that which has been transpiring in the fields of science and invention. No wonder the prophet, Malachi, inspired by the Spirit of God, cried out, "Who may abide the day?" I join with the prophets of gloom in this point of agreement that "The old world is a thing of the past." Men cannot live as they lived twenty-five years ago, or fifty years ago, or seventy-five years ago. A new situation has arisen; a new way of life must be found.

MALACHI WAS NOT only concerned about the wickedness that should be made manifest previous to the coming of Christ, but he was greatly concerned in the new life that would be made manifest. Who could abide this new way of life? Who would be capable of making the adjustment? For unless we adjust, we perish. Brother Oakman brought to our attention last Sunday that the way of survival was that of adaptation, that all nature reveals that it must adapt or perish. However, if one adapts himself to an unwholesome environment, he perishes with that environment; Brother Oakman, if he had continued his discourse, would have brought that to your attention. He made it clear that with the ushering in of the kingdom of God (the only kingdom that could abide this day and hour), man, adapting himself to God's way of life would survive, while those who refuse to correspond with that way of life would perish; and, of course, perishing, all they could see would be what they experienced, and what they experienced would be disaster.

Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap.

I have given considerable attention to the reference "refiner's fire and fullers' soap." It is really a simple reference, and yet it is language that most of us are not in a position to comprehend. We have often heard the reference to "refiner's fire"—we used to sing a hymn in this church, "Through the furnace, through the heat, there beneath the hammer's beat," and so on, which suggested only the dross would be burned or destroyed. Who may abide this period of refinement? Who shall be capable of passing through the refiner's fire?

If that which is within us is representative of God, if that which is within us be refined, we have no reason to fear any experience such as passing through a refiner's fire. Of course, I am not speaking literally; this is a symbol; this is symbolic, but I am satisfied that you can appreciate that we can have experiences in our life similar to that which transpires as metal experiences the processes of refinement through fire.

Most of us know something about soap. We were very "soap-conscientious" a little while ago when it became scarce. The only ones who rejoiced were the little boys who hesitate to wash their faces. It was difficult to secure, but we know that soap is utilized to cleanse, to make clean; and hence this great prophet, touched by the divine Spirit, brings to our attention that there shall be a period previous to the coming of our Lord, Jesus Christ, when we shall be purged or cleansed, as we use soap to cleanse our garments and our bodies.

"He shall be like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap." Have you ever been embarrassed by finding yourself out of place? Most of us have had that experience. Maybe we have not been dressed for the occasion, and we have not enjoyed the meal because we are conscious of the fact that it is a formal affair. I have never had that experience very often, but know people who have; they did not enjoy that which was prepared for them, for they felt they were out of place. It is an embarrassing situation to be incapable of adjusting oneself to the right environment. I am putting my emphasis on the word right. It is an embarrassing situation not to be able to adjust oneself to the right environment either by behavior or appearance, and unless we are accustomed to adjusting ourselves, it will require a struggle; and when we are struggling for adaptation or adjustment, we are not going to enjoy ourselves.

Well did the prophet assert that previous to the coming of Christ there was going to be a period of refinement, a period of cleansing; those willing to be cleansed would survive, but those who would not submit themselves would surely perish. These are the people who see nothing but gloom and destruction. In other words, we are to have a period of judgment before the coming of Jesus Christ. I know that most of us postpone judgment until after physical death and resurrection. Judgment is a principle of life. You can take my word for it, this is the hour of judgment referred to by the angel recorded in the 14th and 18th chapters of Revelation. There are other references which can be used to understand this period in which we now live.

In the fourth chapter of Malachi, this hour of judgment is characterized by these words:

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.

Here again is simple language—very, very descriptive: "Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven." Again, I am not thinking of a literal burning of your body and mine. There is an up-to-date way of saying it, perhaps a slang expression; you hear it when someone is greatly upset or disturbed or temporarily out of place. You hear the expression, "That burns me up." You can rest assured that this day of judgment previous to the coming of Christ, or the period of judgment, is going to be of such a character that folk who insist on going their own way and living their own manner of life, who disregard God and his purposes, are going to be "burned up." They are not going to like the changes that are taking place; they are not going to be comfortable, for the old world (the world they knew—the world wherein they waxed fat by virtue of their wickedness) is passing, and a new environment is coming into view. They are going to find it difficult to adjust themselves to the new. They are going to be "burned up."

Don't let anyone try to tell you to "take your ease." Don't let anyone suggest that we should not be concerned, for this burning up is going to do more than merely cause us to be mentally or physically disturbed, for the individual who fails to adjust himself to the new way of life is literally going to his destruction.

I heard, incidentally, on the radio, a talk by a professor of Yale University, in which he was discussing the question of trying to control the use of alcohol. He mentioned the fate of three million souls, and he was not talking about individuals who occasionally indulge, for he took the conservative attitude; he did not take the attitude of total abstinence, such as we do, but this man was not a Latter Day Saint, and he was thinking of individuals who have lost all self-control, who are slaves of alcohol. He was a sociologist, not a minister, but one who has an interest in society. He was pointing out that society ought to do something because of the tremendous cost involved in the loss of life in these three million souls, and all the problems that center in these people because of their over-indulgence in alcoholic beverages. This man was concerned by what was happening to three million; I am wondering what is our concern now, when we recognize that not only are men and women losing their souls, "bodies and spirits" in over-indulgence in alcohol; but we could add to that disease many others that are known to us, growing out of the fact that men and women have not learned to submit their ways to their Lord. I am confident that we should have a great concern in what is happening to individuals who are disregarding the way of life. Are we going to think about these people seriously? If all that we see is the results of evil, then we, too, shall become prophets of gloom, and I am afraid the same evil will happen to us; we may become victims of that type and kind of environment.

I HAVE OBSERVED in our own organization, where men who have meant well have been compelled to engage so frequently in dealing with people who are lost in sin, who are becoming castaways and departing from the truth, that sometimes these individuals have permitted themselves to respond to the same environment, and they, too, have been lost.

I am not for a moment saying we should gather our spiritual garments around us lest we become contaminated by individuals who are indulging in wicked practices. If it is necessary to go down into the depths of sin and despair in order to raise some soul out of that condition, you had better not stay there too long, neglecting the source of your spiritual strength and power; even the Son of God found it necessary from time to time to seek communion alone with his Father, and to seek communion with those who were so closely identified with him in this great work of reclaiming those who were lost. I think some of us who profess the name of Christ sometimes permit ourselves to linger too long on those levels of life not conducive to our own spiritual growth and development. If all we can see is the results of sin, then we too shall become despondent, and we shall feel that God has failed. And our next conclusion would be:

"There is no God."

But if you will notice, these Scriptures I have read to you suggest another picture. They not only reveal that which has been described by the so-called prophets of gloom; they not only indicate the destruction which comes as a result of sin and transgression; but they also indicate the way of righteousness and the survival of those willing to abide the law of life.

In the second verse of the fourth chapter of Malachi we read this promise: "But unto you that fear my name, shall the Sun of righteousness arise." Now I think we should look upon that word fear for a moment. It does not mean we should fear him as cowards, but we should have respect for that name, we should have regard for that name, we should rightly regard it, recognizing the name of Christ as an authority.

But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings.

We must not overlook this. Haven't you witnessed that in your own organization? I reverently thank my God that I have been an eye-witness to the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ in bringing to pass regeneration in the lives of men and women that I have been privileged to observe. I can truthfully say, with many of you, that this gospel works—that it is the power of God unto salvation, for I have witnessed its power in the transformation of human life where men and women, exercising their agency, which is their right under God, have chosen to heed the counsel of God and to walk in his ways and observe his statutes; these individuals have demonstrated the power of this gospel.

I WISH THAT the hour were here when we could give a larger demonstration than that to which I have referred, and I am hoping as our church moves out into wider fields of missionary endeavor, which your Joint Council is proposing to do, that we shall be in a position in one or more communities to demonstrate that the gospel of Jesus Christ not only makes itself manifest in the individual lives of men and women, but collectively—in our collective life, in our social life, in our community life—that same power can be observed; and I believe that this is even now possible within the church.

"Unto you that fear my name"—who have respect for God's name, who have confidence in his name, who have a belief that in that name can salvation really come—"shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings," with this great promise—"and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall." Some of these illustrations may mean more to you than they do to me. I have spent a very few hours on a farm; I don't know too much about it. Some of you may differ from me, but I am of the opinion that the calves of the stall have an opportunity to be healthier than those which may be born out on the prairie who have not had the same attention and care as those under more favorable environment. ". . . and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall."

Referring again to the third chapter of Malachi and continue reading there with the third verse. While speaking of the coming of our blessed Lord, and the work that should precede his coming, this great work of preparation (and if this church is anything else, I don't know what it is; it is the means of preparing a people for living with him) we talk about building a temple, and many people are wondering why we don't build one. I regard a temple as a means to an end, and I think the temple will play a part in preparing people for Christ; but the temple that you and I should be concerned about is the temple of purified and sanctified souls of men and women, a place where Jesus Christ can be at home, a society through which Christ can express himself to the nations of this earth.

And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

WE TALK about an authorized priesthood, we talk about a divine call. I know, and you know, that God has called men in these last days to represent him, and these men have authority to speak in his name and to administer before his altars. I recognize that, and with Brother Oakman I am confessing something else; I am confessing that in addition to this legal authority there must come a greater authority in personal righteousness. There must come an authority of a life that will make itself manifest in our ministrations. I hope the days are here when this is taking place. As one minister in this church, I want to yield myself to this kind of work; I want to submit myself to this refining power that I may become a greater authority for God. I am not satisfied with any power that has been bestowed upon me by a divine call or by an official ordination. Our brother who offered the invocation did not know I was going to talk about it, but in his prayer he prayed that in addition to this authority there would come the authority of the Spirit. This is the authority we need in this ministry. I am not alone in that great need. Listen!

He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi.

I am not going to enter into any argument. Some may say that refers to the Levites, et cetera. I am of the opinion that some of us are Levites in that respect, for we are doing the work of the Levitical priesthood.

... he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver.

LET US pause there for a moment. Your Presiding Bishop recognized that something must be done for the Aaronic priesthood in the Center Place, and he and his associates have been having classes, lectures, and other activities. Our bishops sense that unless this priesthood becomes more effective in going into the homes of the people and helping them in developing lives of Christian virtue, that we could sing and talk about Zion to the end of time and never realize it. I think Bishop DeLapp is engaged in a good work. Most of the time when we think of Bishop DeLapp, we think of him in connection with the material work of the church. Thank God he has concern in giving leadership to the Aaronic priesthood so that they in turn, going into the homes of the people may fit and qualify these people to render unto God an offering of righteousness. That need is not limited or restricted to those of the Aaronic order. Without any exception, Presidency, Twelve, High Priests, Seventies—everyone of us needs to be better qualified, needs to have greater powers spiritually if we are to preserve and keep our people from the destructive forces that are now sweeping this world.

Let me put it affirmatively: If we are to assist our people to make their adjustment to the new way of life, or adapt themselves to the Christ environment that is coming, as surely as you and I are in this church now a preparation is needed. I believe that already this work of preparation by God and by spiritual forces is taking place in the ministry of this church, and I am anticipating as a consequence of this work that you shall see greater power manifest through your ministers than you have ever witnessed before. And that is the kind of authority that is going to count in preparing men and women to live as God would have them live. That is the kind of authority that is going to call sinners to repentance. That is the kind of authority that is going to reveal the righteousness of God.

He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

What do you think that "offering in righteousness" is going to be? If it is anything else than a righteous people, I confess I do not understand the Scripture. Again let me say, the whole purpose of this Restoration Movement is to prepare a righteous people for the coming of the Lord, Jesus Christ. That is why a church organized after the divine pattern, that is why our ordinances and doctrine, that is why this legal authority of priesthood. Note this beautiful promise:

Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old.

And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.

What a significant verse. "I will come near to you to judgment." After this work of preparation, when righteousness is made manifest in the lives of those to whom he ministered, when there shall be a people on the face of the earth who have adapted themselves to the Lord's way of life, "I will come to you to judgment and I will be a swift witness."

How are you going to reveal who is telling the truth and who is telling fables—merely by proclaiming against it? There has been a tendency in our own church because certain individuals speak in the name of God, when they have not been moved upon to speak in his name, to suggest this solution: Let us keep the people from getting into that attitude where the gifts are made manifest lest we be deceived. I think the way to distinguish between false and true gifts is to see to it that the voice of God is heard, and any sensible person will be able to distinguish between the false and the true.

All the power that is necessary to guide your life and mine is made available through this church, if we live in harmony with the law of God, we will receive that power for our guidance when we are determined to use it for his purpose. But when are we going to reveal the false? When we manifest the truth.

We would not be confronted with the divorce evil in this church if we had more of the power of God, and if ministers for Jesus Christ utilized that power of Jesus Christ on behalf of our people. The members would be capable of making more adjustments in their homes and in their family lives that they are not capable of making without the power of God; and they could make wise choices under this power that they are not capable of making without the power. When are we going to stand out as swift witnesses against divorce and the evils of divorce? Only when we reveal in our society that men and women can live in the holy bonds of matrimony, in that blessed union, throughout their entire lives. That is as it should be in the church of the living God.

When shall we speak up with power against the adulterer? I listened to Brother Sorden's radio address, on the ten commandments. How are we going to make such teaching effective? Merely by preaching on the ten commandments? We not only should be preaching about them, but should be doing something else. We should be able to reveal in our experience that virtue pays. We have heard a great deal said that crime doesn't pay and sin doesn't pay. For God's sake and for the world's sake, when are we going to reveal in practice that virtue pays dividends?

When are we going to learn something of the sanctity of the human soul, the worth-whileness of man himself? We must demonstrate that it is God's business and his purpose to promote the welfare of mankind and all else must be used as a means to that end. What an opportunity this church has to reveal to labor God's way of life. What an opportunity this church has to reveal to men of industry, who are sick and tired of strikes, sick and tired of disorder, who must in their heart of hearts be afraid of a day of violence what an opportunity we have to point out to these great industrial heads God's way of conducting business.

I believe that God has given me additional time in this world and I have made a new resolve in my soul that regardless of what others think or believe, I am going to do my best, both by example and precept, to bring to pass the purposes of my God in the land of the living.

I was hoping a number of us would be so impressed regarding the sermon on "The Prophets of Gloom" that we would not go back and take our ease. I am glad our brother prayed that I would not merely bring you comfort. I want to say to you that this church faces its hour of judgment. This church is passing through a period of judgment, and this church must demonstrate the very purpose of its birth. This church is going to survive.

Last night I dreamed I was preaching (not this sermon). I was calling attention to the captives in Babylon who wept when they remembered Zion and who "hung their harps on the willows." I was trying to tell our people, "Don't do that. We haven't accomplished what God wants us to accomplish yet, but this is the only church under heaven that is capable of bringing to pass the purposes of God." I said to that people last night even in that dream, "This is the means God has instituted to bring to pass the establishment of righteousness on the earth." I not only dreamed that, I believe it.

I have taken my ease more or less. I have looked too much on this other side of life. I, too, have wondered what we could do about it, and I am going to try to do something about it. I know we have men and women in this church who are going to do something about it. I don't mean they are going to be fanatics. We don't need to be fanatics. It is not our business to point out gloom; it is not our business to show the results of sin and destruction. It is your business and mine to proclaim that the hour of the Lord has come. This is your opportunity, my opportunity, God's opportunity. It is your business and my business to declare the way of the Lord. It is your opportunity and my opportunity to demonstrate the way of life, the means of our survival is our adaptation to God's way of life.

Brother Oakman called your attention last Sunday to this statement of the Lord:

"My people will I preserve."

Let me read what goes with that. This conversation took place between Enoch and God.

Wilt thou not come again upon the earth? for inasmuch as thou art God, and I know thee, and thou hast sworn unto me, and commanded me that I should ask in the name of thine Only Begotten; thou hast made me, and given me a right to thy throne, and not of myself, but through thine own grace; wherefore I ask thee if thou wilt not come again on the earth?

And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah. And the day shall come that the earth shall rest. But before that day the heavens shall be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth. And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve: and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of mine Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead.

The day of judgment is a day of gloom for those who know not the Lord. The day of judgment is a day of opportunity for those of us who know the Lord and are desirous of seeing his way of life made manifest.

May God bless us that we may be faithful to our calling and hold up the ensign of right living to the distressed nations of the earth is my prayer.

Zion's League Tenth Anniversary, 1937-47

By F. M. McDowell

ZION'S LEAGUE was born during the Youth Conference of June, 1937, held at Lamoni, Iowa. Its birth by no means marks the beginnings of youth work in the church. According to the official handbook, these have several interesting chapters in this story:

A youth society organized at Nauvoo in 1843.

Zion's Religio Literary Society organized in 1893.

Title changed to department of recreation and expression in 1925.

Unified program of religious education set up in 1930 with provision for young people's division.

Due to the depression with its curtailment of man power and depleted budgets, branches and districts were left largely to themselves in planning youth work.

Accordingly various local or regional organizations were set up, i. e., O. B. K.'s and O. T. Z.'s.

Demand for a unified, enlarged, and expanded youth program became articulate at General Conference, 1936.

On May 5, 1936, the First Presidency made provision for the general supervision of a church-wide youth program.

In 1937 at the youth conference in Lamoni, Iowa, this general youth movement was christened "Zion's League."

The General Conference of 1947 therefore provides an opportunity which must not be overlooked or neglected. Indeed we propose to celebrate. But—

HOW SHALL WE CELEBRATE AN ANNIVERSARY?

Once I read of a remarkable creature known as the Wang-Wang bird. It seems that this bird always flies backwards because it is more interested in where it has been than where it is going. In celebrating, we are often tempted to do just that.

But there is also the Bird of Promise which always flies forward because it is more interested in where it is going than where it has been. Here then is the clue for our anniversary celebration.

HERE'S HOW

Instead of one great mass meeting, more noisy and glamorous than helpful, we propose a week of earnest thought and prayer devoted to a frank and realistic appraisal of the first ten years of Zion's League and to the acquiring of that open-eyed vision and genuine courage essential to the planning and building of a more fruitful decade of work for Zion's League.

THE GENERAL LEAGUE COUNCIL

Accordingly each stake and district in the church has been asked to appoint from two to six delegates (according to its membership) to constitute the General Zion's League Council. This council will meet daily during the coming General Conference. Composed of representative youth leaders and young people and representative of every conceivable size and kind of branch and district, the council will face frankly and realistically such problems as:

- (1) Merits, points of strength, and successes of the Zion's League organization and program during the past 10 years.
- (2) Limitations, points of weakness, and failures of the Zion's League organization and program during the past 10 years.
- (3) Unique experiments and experiences which should be capitalized upon in improving the organization and program of the Zion's League.
- (4) Lines of improvement:
 - a. Improvement in organization of the League.
 - b. Improvement in administrative relationships—better integration with the total local and general church program.
 - c. Improvement in program-planning and promotion.
 - d. Improvement in materials made available to assist League workers.
- (5) Presentation of tentative program plans for 1947-1948.
 - a. Critical evaluation of proposed program.
 - b. Suggested improvements, additions, and deletions from the proposed program.
 - c. Suggested methods of procedure and the distribution and use of such program materials.
 - d. Suggested essential supplementary materials which should be available to youth leaders and workers.

MATCHED AGAINST THIS HOUR

Zion's League, "The Youth of the Church United in Action for Christ," is seeking to live and to function within the church of God and thus to fulfill its purpose in what is undoubtedly one of the most challenging hours in the history of mankind.

Such an organization or program as the League proposes should be continually evaluated in terms of the purposes of God and the needs of men. It will not content itself with childish purposes and procedures or with slipshod methods. Members of the League are first of all members of the church of today. Joining with their elders, they are building the church of tomorrow—indeed the kingdom of God of tomorrow. League members will desire, expect, yes, demand a rich fellowship of work and of play, of worship, of study, of service, of sharing. A fellowship which while enjoyed to the full contributes to the growth of each potential citizen of the kingdom of God. The strength of the church awaits the quality of men and women which can and must be developed through an improved, greatly enriched, and far more effectively functioning Zion's League.

We urge the delegates appointed to the League council to give serious thought individually and collectively to the problems and purposes, the successes and failures of the League. When and as they do so, they will not need to be urged to pray most earnestly to the end that in this our day Zion's League shall not be recreant to its trust.

PART ONE - WHO ARE THESE JUNIOR HIGHS?

The Adolescent and His Needs

"This group includes roughly the boys and girls of ages 12, 13, 14, and 15. In grade school this runs about seventh through ninth. At first glance we see biological maturity taking place. But social growth is also happening. A larger social world brings conflicting standards, social complexity, insistency of group loyalties—a host of influences that are enough to tax the strongest. There are decisions to be made in a score of fields: associations, recreations, expenditures, vocations, etc. It is a time of adventure and activity. Sometimes it appears to be an age of revolution and reversion to barbarian independence.

"Yet this is an age of need. Branch leaders need to see these boys and girls sympathetically, not with feigned interest, but with friendly concern. Co-operative living, companionship, imagination, and activity are essential. Those who work with this age must not be depressed by cynicism, whimsical ideas and notions of big adventure. They must see topics of conversation and questions in the important light in which the adolescent views them. On the face of it, leadership sounds exacting. Frankly, it is, in both time and energy. But that leadership must be forthcoming if our branches are to survive. Our men must live with our boys, our women with our girls. The returns pay for the effort."

—"Branch of Today and Tomorrow."

Pages 54, 55

Consider How They Grow

PHYSICAL GROWTH

"The most striking and early observed characteristics of this age have to do with physical growth and changes—this causes unco-ordinated movements and clumsiness of the junior high child. Appetites become irregular to the point of causing parental concern.

SEX EDUCATION:

"The adolescent should be instructed in the nature and function of reproduction and should be interested in adequate terminology in this field.

BEHAVIOR PATTERNS:

"The early adolescent is not very self-responsible and is likely to form an inconsistent behavior pattern. This causes discipline problems.

MENTAL DEVELOPMENT:

"This is an age in which children begin to find themselves mentally, and divergences in mental development become a distinct problem—it is important that they be given adequate guidance in this field.

SOCIAL RELATIONSHIPS:

"Probably the most trying development to both the parent and child is the keen desire for freedom of action and emancipation from home controls—the early adolescent needs to begin to live his own life and make his own choices. At this period, friends of the same age and sex count for much. Frequent shifting from one friend to another is common. The early adolescent is constantly comparing himself with others of his own age—they are easily pained by minor social hurts. It is the age of greatest differences between the sexes—active antagonism between them. Adventure is the keynote of the period. Early adolescents are gregarious—gang tendencies find themselves expressed in the activities of the boys especially—most misdemeanors and mischief of this age result from a desire for excitement and are nonmoral. Behavior problems are likely to reach their peak of aggressive behavior, disobedience, daydreaming, failure in school, and failure to cooperate."

—Summarized from "The Child Grows Up in Home and Church."

We Try To Understand

He is old enough to begin to understand his own bodily functions and to look ahead to safeguard his own health through hygienic living.

EMOTIONS:

"At no time in life is the child more suggestible and more anxious for social approval than during adolescence. He is subject to profound emotional experiences. These center primarily in social situations. Though attachments between the sexes in adolescence are rare, this is an age of "crushes" between those of the same sex and hero worship on the part of the child for an older person.

This Little Man . . .

. . . is putting his contribution to New Horizons into the mailbox. That's why his face is beaming brightly. In two or three days, that letter will lie in the editor's basket . . . then the editor's face will beam brightly. Then the editor will knit her brows, read it carefully, make changes and send it to the printer.

The printer will set the article into type, and later in the week it will go into the pressroom and be run off the press. Out will come the "Herald," with New Horizons, and then your faces will be beaming brightly. So all is sunshine.

Then the article will be thought about, and another young person or two or three will say, "That gives me an idea. Maybe it's been said before. Maybe the editor won't think my idea is any good. Maybe she'll send it back, but I can try. Because if this person's ideas helped me, my ideas may help someone else. Maybe I can start a thought train chugging, too."

Then more articles will come into the desk of the New Horizons' editor, more church young people will have benefited—from reading and from writing and so from thinking—and eventually the church will benefit because thinking people make a thinking, growing church. So, all is sunshine.

Tips for Travelers

When a person gets into an automobile, he usually has a destination in mind. A successful trip must be planned carefully. The operator of the vehicle must have an adequate knowledge of the machine he is using. From his past experiences, he knows he must watch for flat tires and blowouts. He knows there will be other vehicles on the road, and out of consideration for them, he will keep to his side. In the course of his journey, he will plan for an occasional checkup. He may find it necessary also to detour or alter his formerly planned journey.

The journey through life should be even more carefully planned and executed. Proper preparation saves untold losses and disappointment. We are the operators of our respective vehicles, and for adequate management of them, we shall need a fundamental knowledge concerning their operation. This body and mind we have to take us through life are the gifts of God. It is part of our preliminary preparation to evaluate our physical and mental capabilities in relation to our aims and desires. Unless we can recognize these and live up to them, we cannot reach the full measure of our creation. One responsibility will be for us to keep them fueled with healthful material—and this applies to the mind as well as the body.

We must be constantly on the lookout for a flat tire, but we shouldn't become discouraged if, at first, we lack sufficient knowledge to change it. Too often we say, "Oh, what's the use!" and pull to the side of the road where the rubber rots and the engine rusts.

As well as needing an occasional checkup "under the hood," we should take a look at the outer man, too. Sometimes we need a "wash job" to reveal what the inner fellow is like. This is apparent in our social relationships—perhaps we aren't giving the other members of society a chance to see the other side of us. We get so "splashed up" and concerned with the little things along the way, we spend our time worrying about getting stuck and how we'll make it through the day ahead of us.

Perhaps we decide to change our destination. This necessitates a re-interpretation and re-evaluation of our goal in the light of past achievements and a possible alteration of our ideas and attitudes. As we make progress, we come to think in different terms; our ideas and attitudes differ, and we get a new conception of what we are working toward. This is the time to ask, "Is this goal worthy of my best efforts? Is my physical and mental equipment adequate to attain this goal? Am I on the right road for the accomplishment of my purpose? Is my preparation sufficient?"

We live in a world governed by orderly forces; we need, therefore, to plan our lives in a regulated manner. A lot of us live haphazardly because it seems the easiest thing to do. It is only, however, when we live by an orderly plan that life becomes easy and purposeful. The church gives us such a pattern to follow. It is our duty to live by it and help others to discover it. If we are as concerned as we should be about those we meet along the road, we will take every opportunity to inform them of this unique way of life. This contact with our fellow travelers gives us added strength, but we need to keep in touch with God, too.

As we proceed on our journey, we must try to achieve an identity which is distinctive and representative of what we are working toward. We can progress quickly only if we keep our eyes on the road ahead. It is easy to have a collision, take the wrong road, or run into telephone poles if we lose sight of our destination.

—And remember, keep traveling. Don't stop in the middle of the road. Take time out for an occasional checkup and a look at the map . . . then get going.

ister of another church gives public acknowledgment that you regard that church's sacraments and ordinances as valid.

If you continue in this relationship, both you and your children are some day going to be invited and urged to join in full fellowship with this other church. What will your answer be, and how will you explain to your children that you do not believe their baptism is valid, when your acts have expressed acceptance and approval of their authority to administer in the other ordinances of Christ's church?

If I were in your situation, I believe that I would go to the minister of the church I had chosen to attend, and in a kindly and frank and friendly way explain my position, so that there need be no misunderstanding. I would assure him of my willingness to participate in all the activities of his church which did not necessitate a compromise with my beliefs, and also of my willingness to assume my share of the burdens—financial and otherwise—which my enjoyment of these church privileges entailed. I should keep constantly before my children the attitude that we owed first allegiance to our own church, though we had much in common with the one where circumstances forced us to worship.

To make sure that your children are trained in Latter Day Saint philosophy and tradition, and that they know the differences between their own church and others, I suggest that you have a weekly class of your own at home, in addition to your church and Sunday school attendance. Perhaps you could invite some of the neighbor children who are friends of your own children to join you in such a class. We have many branches—now flourishing—which were started with just such an activity as this. With the blessing of God you might be able to convert first some children, and then their parents; and then with the help of a good missionary, establish a branch where you could worship as you desired.

To my mind, this would be a far superior course to assuming the protective coloring of the crowd by which you are surrounded. Show your true colors; stand by your beliefs that matter; make friends with as many as you can and let your life be an example to them; and God may use you as a humble instrument to spread his kingdom, and bring many others to greater light and truth.

The Trouble-Shooter

Communion in "Other" Churches

QUESTION: I am married and the mother of three children. We recently moved to a city where there is no Reorganized Church. Because I feel that the children should continue serving and worshiping God in his house—especially on Sunday—we have been attending another church.

Communion is observed in this church once every two months. Everyone who attends the adult service partakes of the bread and wine. Is there any reason why the children and I (who have all been baptized) should not accept the emblems in churches other than our own?

ANSWER: By Evan A. Fry

Your problem is one which confronts a great many members who are isolated from the church. They desire to be friendly and co-operative with their Christian neighbors; they feel the need of the church and its ordinances for themselves and their children. They fear that refusal to join in the Lord's Supper will bring charges of narrowness and self-righteousness, which may alienate them from those they would like to know as friends.

I fear that it would be difficult for adults, and impossible for children, to partake of the Lord's Supper in another church without growing into the belief—or at least the attitude—that one church is as good as another. And that, no true Latter Day Saint is prepared to admit. We need not be disagreeably superior, or self-righteous, or smug about it; we simply believe that the authority of the priesthood to function in God's name was lost in the apostasy, and restored again through Joseph Smith exclusively to this church. We need not disparage or belittle the good that other ministers and other churches are trying to do when we affirm our belief. It is stated in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3, that "in the ordinances thereof [of the priesthood] the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh." The acts of even godly, learned, wise, and good men have no validity without authority. The judge, the postmaster, the notary public, and the governor must be commissioned and have authority, or their acts have no validity, regardless of how good or wise or well prepared to function in that office they may be. Yet your acceptance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper from a min-

The congregation joined the choir in singing at appropriate intervals. A party was held in the lower auditorium following the program.

On Sunday, December 22, the club sponsored a pageant, "Why the Chimes Rang"; it was presented at the Grand Rapids Women's Club building. At the conclusion of the pageant, $650 were contributed for the building fund. A total of $5,400 was raised by all departments of the branch during the year. The basement church was sold last spring to the American Legion. A choice site of three corner lots has been purchased in a strictly residential area. The former owner of the lots canvassed the neighborhood to see if the residents wanted a church built there; the result was most encouraging. An amount of $14,000 cash was paid for the lots.

The main congregation is meeting at the Grand Rapids Women's Club building on Sunday mornings only; all other services are held with the Galewood Mission group.

The Answer of the Cross

A Pageant for Easter Week

By Marie Graham

An Easter Pageant which may, or may not, be used in connection with the observance of the Communion service.

The script and music reveal the intensity of each episode. For this reason the small congregation, where there may not be a profusion of dramatic talent, will find it as suitable as the large church.

Price 10c each; $1 a dozen

The Open Mind

By Evan A. Fry

P. S.

Nearly all of us will grant the necessity of keeping an open mind. But all too few of us have an open mind. We think we have. Laziness, lethargy, inertia, comfortable habits, the fear of social ostracism, and the jeering of the people who know it all already—all these help to intimidate us into keeping our minds closed when they should be open.

But even with open minds, there are two dangers. One is the danger of having a mind open at both ends, so that nothing sticks on the way through. Such minds can read and read, learn and learn, and take in prodigious quantities of information, but they never change. Nothing makes any impression. Nothing is ever mentally digested or assimilated.

The second danger is that some open minds are open to anything. There is no process of selection, no proving, no testing, no screening out of the poisonous or the dangerous or the useless trashy ideas; no attempt to discern error and truth. It is just in this screening of selective process that we must often close our minds, however. We prejudge according to our prejudices. We screen out and select without open-minded examination. Let us receive with readiness of mind, proving all things, and holding fast that which is good.

—From "The Open Mind," Morning Devotional, KMBC.

* Wasted Space

Some of our readers have written their regret of the wasted space on the back page of our publication. An explanation may help. We are still working to transfer from the old stencil addressing system to the new Addressograph system. Some of our lists are on the new system, some still on the old one. Our workers are making the new plates as rapidly as they can, but it takes time. When the job is finished, the space at the lower left will be eliminated.

* Good-by, Goldy!

Goldy's nine lives were not enough to save him when a speeding car crushed his beautiful little body. He lay on a blanket, breathing heavily and crying in pain for twenty minutes before he passed away. It is strange and wonderful how deeply a little creature can become involved in the affections, how one learns to understand their simple language, their desires and moods. And when they are gone, what a vacuum there is in the atmosphere of the home. It is then so easy to decide, "I'll never let myself love another cat. I don't want to be hurt that way again!"

But yesterday was chilly, and there was a small derelict on the doorstep—cold, hungry, and in need of a friend. He needed me, and I needed him. Loved ones may go, but the need to love something remains forever. Nature had played a mean trick on him, for he was ugly as sin, and the less attractive things of the earth have a very hard time winning friends and influencing people. He did not know he was ugly, and he lapped up the warm milk gratefully. Then he purred nicely as any pretty cat, and his little body curved upward to a gentle touch. Who knows? Perhaps we shall be very good friends.

Beauty, it seems, is not essential to love. It helps, but you can get along without it. And here is a lesson of life: you may lose some things you love very dearly, but you can keep the capacity for loving things that need you until the very end.

* A LITTLE OIL goes a long way. Put some on the bearings, and it makes things run well; spread it too far, and it gets in everything else. . . . There was sleet and soft snow today, and the big city bus sat at the stop, wheels spinning, trying to get in motion. Around it, smaller cars spun in dizzy circles trying to apply their brakes. It takes a little grit to make traction. . . . When you begin spreading oil to ease up human relations, remember it is a lubricant, not a paint.

* KINDNESS is never lost. Its reward may be long in coming, but it is sure. The April rains do not bring the flowers until May and June.

* There is one thing worse than having a button fall off your coat. It is having half a button fall off.

* "You wouldn't understand" is the alibi of those who are not competent to explain.

* ANY MARRIAGE is a failure, if a wife can't wheedle a little information out of an unwilling husband. And after she gets it, they both feel a little better.

Many a person has experienced a complete change of life from the reading of some single great book. Seek and read such books. They will change you.

Buying a thing is only a part of the cost. After you get it, you begin putting some of your life into it. Do not devote your life to inferior things.

Participation in General Conference Legislation

Deep concern has been felt during recent years over the lack of participation from the floor in the business sessions of General Conference. This concern has been shared by both general officers and members of the body, although the reasons for their concern have been widely different.

The general officers know from experience that mere legislating is not enough. To fulfill its purpose, legislation must lead to vigorous action, and unless the delegates and ex officios have a sense of participation in the business of the General Conference, their voting is likely to be perfunctory and to fail to commit them to vigorous and enthusiastic action in the branches and districts.

Some of the ex officios and delegates, on the other hand, are concerned in the working of democracy in the business sessions of General Conference because they feel so many matters are "cut and dried" before they come to the attention of the body and that, once they are there, these matters tend to be "railroaded" through to a vote. This concern is not satisfied by pointing out that the presiding officers make a special point of waiting for those desiring to speak to claim the floor, or that—in the nature of things—the Conference has a right to expect the leadership of the general quorums in fields where the general officers have special experience and responsibility, or that extended and repetitive debate itself tends to destroy the rights of the body. Despite all explanation, there still remains a feeling that members of the body should share more freely in the shaping of legislation than they now do and, fundamentally, this is right.

What can we do?

(1) The enactment of General Conference legislation is a joint problem. The general officers responsible, especially the members of the Presidency, must see to it that the clearest possible explanation of proposed legislation is made available to the body, and that ample opportunity for discussion is afforded. And members of the body must give careful attention to the Conference reports and other information available to them, with a view to making any necessary contribution of which they are capable, and they must see to it that this contribution is actually made.

(2) The simple fact that recommendations are presented by the Presidency or the Joint Council gives these recommendations great weight in the Conference. This is as it should be. But such recommendations should not be received and approved as a mere matter of loyalty to the general authorities. Our loyalty is to God, to the Church, and to the best interests of the Church, before it is to any quorum or group of general officers in their official status. Conference members opposed to recommended legislation should therefore express their views freely, and presiding officers should and intend to be especially alert to recognize any who seek the floor and whose questions or contrasting points of view may lead to wiser or better-informed action.

(3) It is not always possible to give advance notice of impending legislation, but where this is done, it is quite in order for members of the legislative body to give to the presiding officers prior notice of their desire to be heard in regard to any action. Members of the Presidency will welcome such cooperation.

(4) Sometimes a question is much more helpful than a speech.

(5) We are all brothers and sisters in Christ. No one should hesitate to express before the family of Christ his deliberate judgment in matters of concern to the family. And, certainly, no member of the family should be scornful or derisive when a brother fails to express himself well because of inexperience or stage fright.

(6) The affairs of the Conference are important to the whole church, but especially important to those who take their Sainly duties seriously. The best preparation for constructive participation in the General Conference business sessions is constructive participation in branch and district affairs.

Approach to General Conference

Here at church headquarters a spirit of hope and good will seems to prevail as we consider the approach of the General Conference in April. This is not something that can be made the subject of statistics, of course. But, in its way, it is the background out of which statistics will later emerge. While the church is unified in a spirit of hope and good will, we may be sure that there is a favorable atmosphere in which all church goals become more easily accessible, and toward which it is possible for all church activities to move more readily. This is the general feeling, the mood, the morale of the body.

There are problems before the church, "it is true; but we have the confidence to believe that, as time goes on, the means of solving them

Mother

You can buy houses and mansions with the material things that belong
But you can't buy the smile she gives nor pay for the lullaby song.

You can gather her the most beautiful flowers and weave a garland gay
But you can't buy the touch of her hand or the love she gives away.

You can search for pearls and rubies and pay to the highest extent
But her love and her smile and the touch of her hand will never cost you a cent.

Sanitarium Needs Today!

Once more we ask the people of the church to help the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. An appeal in behalf of this church institution is an appeal in behalf of our sick, our missionaries and their families, local citizens, and the many members who come here from distant places to receive medical care under conditions that give them faith in the final results.

We have not asked the help of our people in vain heretofore. They have always responded. Sometimes they could not go as far as we had hoped; but they have always gone as far as they could. We have the fullest trust that they will do so now.

This time, skilled, trained help is needed. Somewhere among our membership there may be the kind of workers that are needed. If readers do not possess these qualifications themselves, or cannot come, they may know of others who should apply. It would be a service to bring this need to the attention of those who meet the requirements.

F. HENRY EDWARDS.

In the article below, Miss Gertrude Copeland, R. N., the superintendent, gives a specific statement of personnel needs.

Have you ever thought how many people it takes to keep a hospital functioning for the best good of the most important individual therein—the patient? Most hospitals have a ratio of one employee to each patient. At present the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, our church institution, at Independence, Missouri, filled to its capacity of 173 patients, including babies, most of the time, employs 160 people besides its 86 student nurses. In addition to this, the hospital has an active medical staff of 34 competent physicians and surgeons to diagnose and treat these patients.

Right now the hospital is in desperate need of a Registered Hospital Dietitian and a Registered Medical Technologist to facilitate service to the patients. Any person qualified in either of these spheres and interested in serving in the church hospital, should communicate with Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, R.N., Superintendent, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Independence, Missouri.

Frequent publicity has been given to the opportunity for nurse education through the combined facilities of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, and the Sanitarium School of Nursing. At the present time there are offerings in other health fields open to interested young people of the church through a similar arrangement. They are listed below:

SUGGESTED COURSES TO BE TAKEN AT GRACELAND COLLEGE:

X-RAY TECHNICIAN—1 Year—Physics, Chemistry, Biology (Anatomy).

MEDICAL TECHNOLOGIST—2 Years—Chemistry, Physics, Biology.

RECORD LIBRARIAN—2 Years—Typing, Shorthand, Medical Shorthand, Dictaphone, Medical Terminology, Biology.

HOSPITAL DIETITIAN—1 to 2 Years—Physics, Chemistry, Biology, Foods and Nutrition, Hygiene, Purchasing.

EDUCATION AFTER GRACELAND COLLEGE

X-RAY TECHNICIAN—1 year at hospital in x-ray department under recognized Radiologist.

MEDICAL TECHNOLOGIST—Courses in Anatomy and Physiology, Bacteriology, Parasitology at some college or university. 1-1½ years in a hospital pathological laboratory under a recognized Pathologist.

RECORD LIBRARIAN—3-5 years in the record department of an Approved Hospital or 1 year in an Accredited Record Librarians' School. Courses of Study in Anatomy and Physiology, Microbiology, Medical and Surgical Diseases.

HOSPITAL DIETITIAN—Complete work for a B.S. degree in hospital dietetics at some university. Experience in commercial purchasing. 1 year's internship in an accredited hospital diet kitchen.

NECESSARY EXAMINATIONS:

National Examinations of the Registry of—

X RAY—American Board of X-Ray Technicians to become a Registered Technician (R.T.)

LABORATORY—Examinations by the Board of Registry of Medical Technologists to become a Registered Medical Technologist (R.M.T.).

RECORDS—Examination by the Registry of American Association of Record Librarians to become a Registered Medical Librarian (R.M.L.).

DIET—Credentials examined by the American Dietetic Association to become a Certified Hospital Dietitian.

These fields are open to men and women of good character and high ideals. There is great opportunity for personal advancement, humanitarian service, and good salary. The prospects are that these provinces will not be overcrowded for years to come. In all of these phases of health work there is chance for vocational contact with sick folk and with the medical and nursing professions, as well as other hospital personnel. Any one of the above health openings offers pleasant work in the hospital environment, requiring special education and knowledge as well as technical skills. The fields are continually expanding along with the development and growth of medical science.

The church hospital desires to help educate enthusiastic young church people to carry on in the health field and to employ them after such education is completed.

Wandell Leadership College

Named in memory of Charles Wesley Wandell, pioneer missionary to Australia for both the early church and the Reorganization, Wandell Leadership College held its first sessions at Newcastle, Australia, in 1946. Wandell expresses the aspirations of Australian youth to train for church leadership. Its ten days of class instruction, worship, and fellowship now are scheduled annually at the mission cottage in Newcastle. The majority of the students live together for the period, the young men camping on the grounds, and the ladies using the home for a dormitory. High Priest C. A. Davies, Conference appointee pastor, is organizer and principal of the school.

The 1947 sessions, under the mission Department of Religious Education, co-operated in planning the studies which were offered for credit.

On the faculty of Wandell for 1947 were:

Keith McLaughlin, M.A., who is taking classes on (a) History of the Christian Church from A.D. 1-1800; (b) "History of L. D. S. Church," A.D. 1800-1947.

Edith McLaughlin, B.A., "Comparative Religions."

John Magennis, B.A., "Child Psychology."

A. S. Frater, accredited schoolteacher and full-time missionary in charge of Department of Religious Education, (a) "Worship"; (b) "Teaching Methods."

C. A. Davies, accredited schoolteacher and one-time High School House Master, "Christian Personality."

Herman Peisker, Minister in charge, "Philosophy of Church Doctrine and Social Teachings."

Elder Herman Peisker wrote recently: "We have 21 students resident and catered for in the Mission Home here. They have come from three of the five Australian States, also New Zealand. All of the students live in, but five work in the daytime and are only able to take the night lectures. We feel that in association with the work of the Department of Religious Education, we are beginning to lay the foundations of a more stable and consistent leadership in this mission in coming years."

Junior Young People's camps in Victoria, Nairne, in South Australia, and Morningside in New Zealand are youth camps with somewhat similar objectives for a younger age group.

Flowers in February

My neighbor brought them to me today. I was busy with the Saturday's work, my mind and hands occupied with the endless tasks and duties of a homemaker, and I somehow hadn't had time to think of anything else. But when she came bringing a lovely bouquet of flowers, the room came alive with their beauty, and I felt a thrill of gratitude. The babies admired them, too, and sniffed the fragrant carnations delightfully.

There were white carnations and lovely pink snapdragons; and small clusters of tiny yellow blossoms to fill in. Combined with the varying shades of green in the foliage, the colors stand out vividly. A fresh, lovely bouquet to gladden the heart any day of the year!

How blessed we are to live in a world in which our Heavenly Father has planned so thoroughly for our happiness. He has provided beauty in such abundance and in so many varied forms, that we would have to blind ourselves entirely if we failed to respond to it. And especially am I fortunate that my neighbor's appreciation of beauty is such that she is inspired to share it with others. We truly felt refreshed and uplifted by the flowers in February and the thoughtfulness of our neighbor who brought them.

MERVA BIRD.

Deceased

Mrs. John L. Cooper, mother of Marion and John Cooper of Chicago, and only surviving sister of Bishop James F. Keir, passed away on the morning of February 23.

Elder Thomas Newton of Independence, 87 years of age, was killed by a motor car while attempting to cross a traffic artery here on Sunday evening, February 23. He was a well-known and widely loved missionary. He suffered ill health for a considerable time during his latter years. Many people will remember his gracious manner and kindly spirit, and will regret the accident that cost his life.

Details will be expected for our use in obituaries to be published later.

It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.—Matthew 18: 14.

IN A TIME OF WAR as well as in our present reconstruction period, many people are asking the question, What is the will of God?

Most of us watched very carefully the news of Sergeant Jim Newman of New Mexico. He was a prisoner of the Japanese and on the Bataan death march. Finally he was rescued and brought back to the United States in a dying condition. The United States government and its medical authorities did everything possible to save Sergeant Jim's life, but he died, and the nation bowed its head and seemed to say, "God, thy will be done." I am wondering if it is God's will that men die in war. Or we might better say, is it God's will in the first place that we have war, or is it not rather his desire and will that we solve our problems by peaceful methods?

A small child was killed recently in Kansas City. The mother was backing her car out of the garage, and the little girl in the back seat opened the door and fell out, and the automobile ran over and killed her. Are we to say that that was God's will, or should parents learn to watch over their children and prevent such accidents? Safety councils assure us that practically all accidents can be prevented.

THE WILL

Today many die of disease, yet not nearly as many as used to die from this cause. We think of the Black Plague in Europe years ago, and the smallpox scourge which killed so many. In recent years doctors have learned to vaccinate people and have quite largely overcome many of the dreadful epidemics of diphtheria, as well as pneumonia, etc. In 1800 the average life span was thirty-eight years; in 1945 it was sixty-six years.

GOD'S WAY may be divided into three phases:

First, his primary or intentional will, hopes, and desires for us.

Second, his will when his creations refuse to obey his laws and violate eternal principles.

Third, the ultimate purposes or will of God in the long run can never be frustrated.

God's purpose is to win men's allegiance. The whole work of God and his Son, the Christ, is to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

There are several facts that are obvious as God seeks by his intelligence to win us to his ways:

First: God allows the laws of the universe to operate, century after century, unchanged. The laws of gravity, the laws of fire, the laws of electricity, the laws of aerodynamics; in fact all of the laws, as far as man knows, have always been in existence and always will be as long as the world lasts. Alexander the Great or the Caesars could have used radar and the atomic bomb had their scientists discovered the methods. Due to our belief in the unchangeability of God's laws, we buy automobiles, feeling confident that the laws of nature will continue to operate and our car will run next week, next month, and we hope for years to come. Likewise we purchase refrigerators, radios, and have plumbing installed in our homes in the belief that the laws of God which are functioning today will function down through the years of the future.

Being a Christian does not excuse one from obeying the laws of God. A true Christian should so well understand the rules of eternal living that he does not even attempt to violate eternal principles. I knew a pastor of a large congregation who almost cut his thumb off in an accident as he was constructing a cross to be placed back of the altar for Easter. It was to be made of frosted glass with hidden electric lights and was to be surrounded by flowers. Some thought that God should have protected their pastor who was fashioning an Easter Cross. Even ministers must obey the laws.

Second: God has decreed that man shall have his agency, his own free will. He may choose to obey, or not to obey the pleadings and the commands and desires of God. It was Satan who offered to come to the earth and teach men eternal principles. He would have been a dictator and made us his slaves and puppets. We probably would have been like so many automobiles coming off an assembly line, all alike; or all mechanical robots, run with electric buttons, phonograph records, electric tubes, etc. But God refused the plan of Satan and accepted the offer of his Son, who agreed to come to the earth and try to teach men to understand the intelligence of eternal living. God could have made us like so many bottles, sitting out in the rain, each bottle even a little different than the others, some white, some black, some yellow, perhaps some tall ones, some short ones, some longnecked ones, perhaps some pot-bellied ones—but bottles. Thus we could not gossip about each other, we could not steal from each other, we could not go to war against each other, we could not break another's heart. But God does not want robots around him in the hereafter. How uninteresting that would be! He wants throbbing, pulsating personalities. Therefore he leaves us our agency.

OF GOD

A transcript of a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri

Third: God has decreed that he will allow men to live together. That is dangerous, because then they can hurt each other. God has decreed, therefore, that we must learn to co-operate and to harmonize our likes and dislikes and understand the intelligence of stewardship and the economic laws of living together. When we do that, he knows that we will develop a superior type of personality. Animals live quite largely by instinct, but God has granted man reason, and he hopes that men will learn to acquire knowledge and wisely use this knowledge for the benefit of world brotherhood. Trees and stones, typewriters, rocks, etc., seem unable to co-operate with each other, or to have any affection one for the other. God has allowed man to commingle—a very dangerous privilege.

WITH THESE THREE things in mind, we must realize that man has considerable to learn. In proportion as he learns the intelligence of God's laws and co-operates with these laws, does he live harmoniously and without trouble and accident.

Our newspapers are full of accounts of people who are violating the laws of God, some intentionally, others ignorantly. Huge hotel fires in Chicago and San Francisco are examples. Almost every day we hear of fatal accidents in the home; or of a child who gets burned playing with fire, or scalded by boiling water. One thousand five hundred children are unintentionally smothered to death every year. Many die because of accidental electrocution. Our medical profession and psychoanalysts are telling us that much of our illness is due to sin, worry, hatred, resentment, fear, a feeling of guilt, etc.

I cannot believe that our Heavenly Father is desirous that our lives be snuffed out by wrongdoing, whether death comes intentionally or unintentionally. War is the result of our wrong living. We have wanted things that we cannot have without war. I feel sure God would much rather have the world learn its lessons in more peaceful ways, such as mutual co-operation in love and justice. His hope for us is that we develop a society where equality and good will may be had among communities, as well as the nations.

IT SEEMS CLEAR that God knew that the Christ would be crucified. There are passages in the Old Testament which seem to indicate a foreknowledge that the Son would go to the Cross and die for the sins of the world. I cannot believe, however, that God forced his Son to suffer crucifixion—that it was God's primary and intentional wish and hope that our sinful world should kill his Son. The Christ was well trained, however, in the intelligence of eternal living. Knowing the Son as he did, God knew what the Christ would do when he ran up against the hateful ways, prejudices, and lies of the religious and political leaders of his time. I think God the Father, loves much like an earthly father.

I have seen parents, during the war, at the railroad station as they came to say good-by to their son as he went away to war. The mother sometimes would cry, but the father generally would be quite stoical. Often I have noticed him embrace his son in a final farewell, telling the boy that he is proud of him; the nation has given all citizens protection and the right of freedom, labor, etc., and that it is his duty to go and fight for his country. I think you all will agree with me, however, that it was not the primary wish, or desire, or intention of these parents when that boy was born, and during his early formative years, that when he grew up he should go to war and be killed. Their original wish and hope for him was that he would grow up to be a doctor like his father, or a farmer, perhaps a storekeeper, perhaps a laborer in the steel industry, or on a cattle ranch, a builder, or a manager of fruit groves. But under the circumstances of war, when mad leaders seek to force their wills upon peaceful civilizations, it is the honorable thing for the boy to go to war. Most fathers can foretell almost exactly what their sons will do if they are confronted with emergencies upon some of the far-flung battlefields of the world. Many a parent is proud of his son even though that son lost his life; for the boy was true to his early teachings and when confronted with danger and even death, he did his duty. As a member of the team, he fought and died with the hope in his heart that his home, his parents, his relatives, and his civilization might be spared.

I THINK THAT, more or less, too, is the mind of God the Father. I cannot believe that God forced his Son to die, nailed to the Cross. God knew that his Son, trained as he was, being whom he was, and knowing what he knew, when confronted with willful sin, would meet it in the heroic and sacrificial way he did. During the war many gold stars were placed on the service flags in the windows of homes where a son or a daughter had lost his life in service to his country. If God were to have a service flag in his window, it, too, would have a gold star, for God lost a son in a war against evil, killed by the enemies of heaven. I think that God was "well pleased" with that courageous sacrifice, although he was grief-stricken and would much rather have had it another way. Christ came to the earth with the hope and the intention that men would follow him, not kill him. It was man's sin which created the emergency which made necessary his sacrifice. By killing Jesus, men frustrated temporarily the will of God, that is true. But only for a short time. In the long run God can bring progress even out of momentarily frustrated events.

Can we so sharply condemn Judas for betraying the Christ if he was doing the foreordained wishes of God? Are we to blame Pilate and the scribes and Pharisees for bringing the Christ to trial and condemning him if they were fulfilling the will of the Heavenly Father? No, the Christ came here with the hope that people would follow, not crucify him. Yet, I repeat, I think that God foresaw the sinfulness of men and that they would kill his son when he came to assist them. God knew the response Joseph would make in the prison in Egypt. Our Creator no doubt was sure that Moses, having been taught the laws of his ancestors by his mother, would give up the throne of Egypt in order to help the children of Israel. God could depend upon Daniel in the lion's den not to deny him. He could be sure that the Apostle Paul, even though he was beaten, stoned, shipwrecked, and finally beheaded, until the end would remain firm in his testimony of the intelligence of divine ways. And so God could be sure, because of the training and the personality and character of the Christ, that even though people would not accept his teachings, the Christ would die in that attempt.

God refused to stop the laws from operating even for his Son. Every act of Christ's was in accordance with divine laws, and yet the Father refused to take away man's agency or set aside the functioning of natural laws even to protect his Only Begotten at the time of his persecution and death. Judas was allowed to betray Christ. The rope which bound our Lord's wrists was allowed to hold. The whip was permitted to raise red and bleeding welts upon the back of the Christ. The thorns pierced his brow, and the blood ran down his face. The nails, under the blows of the hammer, pierced his hands and his feet. The blazing sun, pain, and thirst tormented him as he hung upon the Cross.

SIN IS THE misuse of good. It is God's will that everything be used for a good purpose, and it can be so, if we would learn that purpose and obey God's will. Sin, therefore, is a challenge to the divine will.

Some seem to think that the will of God is frustrated by war. No, not for long. All wars may cause a momentary frustration and stoppage of the progress in the development of man. In the long run, we generally learn something from war, and a wiser civilization emerges. We are like little children playing in the streets. We dam up the flow of the water during a rainstorm with a small dirt construction, but soon the water washes out the dam, and the drainage continues as before.

We can but marvel at the patience of God as he looks upon his people who grow so slowly spiritually. Yet we parents, too, have a similar patience with our children. They may seem to defeat temporarily our will for them, but we, too, learn that as the years pass they will grow and overcome many of the things that caused us concern while they were young. We all have seen a small child carry his food to his mouth with his hands, even though the parents try to teach him to make use of a spoon and later a knife and fork. At times you have observed, as I have, a child not content with feeding itself with its hands, but with fingers covered with food, run those fingers through its hair or wipe them upon its clothes. I presume all children write upon the walls of their homes. But as the years pass, parents learn that their children improve this method. Finally they learn to play ball, to sew, to play the piano, to build radios and bridges, or drive huge flying fortresses. Then we are proud of their development and accomplishments.

GOD HAS A great deal of hope for us and our future, too, even indicating that he has many things to say to us but that we cannot bear them now. (John 16: 12.)

It is difficult for us to understand, sometimes, the working of the divine mind, as I presume it is very difficult for some children to understand the working of the parental mind. I well recall my boy, who came home one day with a thorn in his foot. In spite of the tender pleadings of his mother and the more stern orders of the father, the boy still refused to remain quiet so that the thorn could be removed. Finally, I had to take the boy down on the floor and sit on him while his mother removed the festering thorn from his foot. Now, many years later, he understands the reasonableness of the wish of his parents to have that thorn removed. It was a case of different perspective.

So often we do not have the same perspective as God.

It is God's will to win us to his way of thinking. We may reject his pleading, we may be headstrong, we may frustrate momentarily his will, but being the loving God that he is, he persists. I like to believe he will win us in the end, whether it be in this life, or down through the years, centuries, or the eons of time in eternity. Some may not agree with this continued patience of God, but I like to think of God, somehow, winning at least a huge majority of his creations to his way of existence.

WE ALL HAVE seen the pictures of the terrible prison camps in Germany during the war. Trenches filled with starved bodies. Piles of little baby shoes taken off their victims before their bodies were cremated. Can we maintain God desired such horror? Can we believe that it is God's will that thousands of our airplane crews lose their lives over Germany, Africa, Italy, and the islands of the Pacific? Is it God's will that thousands and thousands of people starve to death in Greece, Poland, India, and China? The newspapers told us recently that one hundred seventy-five French children had been killed by hidden mines left by the Germans on the beaches of France. A larger number of Dutch children have been blown to bits, also, by hidden mines and booby traps placed in their streets and fields by the Central Powers, hoping to defend these areas from Allied invasion. Are we to believe that the children of the United States are entitled to play, to eat, to laugh, to have fresh air and sunshine and plenty of food, and that it is God's will that the children in other parts of the world die such horrible deaths? Let me read for you again the text: "It is not the will of your father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

This passage would seem to indicate that it is not God's primary will, not his original intention, not his hope or wish that we create a society which breeds war. It is, I repeat, a dangerous thing for God always to allow the laws of the universe to function and allow men to have their agency; for man so often chooses individual and mass greed, pride, selfishness, etc. People choose to kill and disregard the sacredness of personality and race.

God would much prefer, it would be his wish and desire, that we always use fire to bless mankind, not to destroy homes or wipe out cities with the atomic bomb. We have learned many of the laws of aerodynamics and to fly at tremendous speeds in jet-propelled planes. We have developed sulphur drugs and penicillin, D.D.T., etc., to protect us from dangerous bacteria and insects. We have learned to man boats under the water. Our fields produce food in abundance. It would be God's wish that we use all money, all property, all intelligence, and all talent to live together in harmony, in peace, in justice, in righteousness, and equality. But if we will not, God still decrees that these laws shall function. He still grants us our agency and allows us to choose.

I cannot believe that disease and sickness are the primary will of God. Is cholera and starvation in India the primary will of God? Last summer we had an epidemic of polio in the United States, and many of our cities were forced to close their theaters, their schools, and prohibit all public gatherings. It is God's will that we understand the laws of hygiene, diet, and the laws of friendliness, kindness, and brotherhood which would save us from so many of the epidemics which we suffer. There is the case of a child who choked to death on a marble. Friends called a doctor but he arrived too late, the child had died. The doctor, however, shook the body of the child by the heels and the marble fell from its obstructing position. The mother was grief-stricken, of course, and through her tears she sobbed: "Oh, if the doctor had only come a few minutes earlier he could have saved my baby." If it was God's will that this child should die that way, it is not sacrilegious for the mother to say that the doctor could have frustrated the will of God by coming earlier? I believe God expects mothers to keep marbles away from the mouths of babies!

Christ always fought disease as a part of the philosophy of the kingdom of evil. It was to the woman who had been sick eighteen years that he said, "This woman whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years." (Luke 13: 16.)

WE ARE SO SLOW to learn God's will and follow it! Man pays a terrible price for his indifference to God, and his disregard of divine pleadings. We see the result of man's disobedience and his refusal of eternal principles in our slums, in war, dishonesty, race hatred, immorality, pride, modern slavery, poverty, drunkenness, greed, selfishness, exploitation, etc. Christ fought these sins, yet the only thing that he could do and leave our personality sacred, was to demonstrate the perfect way, and keep on loving us, hoping that someday we would understand better the will of his Father and obey his laws. Eternal life is more a quality of life than a duration of time.

Christ healed people, restored sight to the blind, raised the dead, cured them of leprosy, etc. Are we to believe that Christ, in performing these miracles was frustrating the will of God? I cannot subscribe to the theory, therefore, that sickness, hardships, war, and hunger are necessary punishments which God wills that we suffer in order to make us better people. Suffering does not always make a person better—very often it makes one bitter. It may, however, reveal the capacity which we have, for courage and perseverance. No one would maintain that God will have to have evil, war, hunger, sickness, and heartaches in heaven in order to keep people there righteous. If sickness is good for people, the Christ should have gone around cursing people with cancer, blindness, twisted backs, and widowhood. Man can rise above sickness and infirmities. Many people have the personality and the courage (and some receive divine help) to surmount these obstacles and do succeed in developing a godlike personality. This is in spite of handicaps such as disease and pain, not because of them. Certainly we cannot say that Christ would have been more righteous had he learned his lessons by being lame, diabetic, or tubercular!

In the conquest of the great Northwest, we read of how the wolf packs or a bear would come out of the forests to kill a child and carry it away. The danger of wild animals still terrifies many parts of India and Africa. The adult citizens generally organize and seek to capture this killer in order that future raids may not be made upon their homes. No one would say that it is the will of God that these wild animals kill people. Neither would having their agency.

God expects and depends upon us Christians to build a righteous kingdom here upon the earth. Christ taught us so to pray: "... thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." Evidently the Christ and God anticipated the growth of a Christian people who so understand the will of the Father that they gladly devote their lives to divine principles: a people who, with the Christ, are sure that God's way is the only way.

Heaven is a place where the people have learned of their own free will and choice to obey the intelligent, beneficent, yet challenging ways of eternal living. There they no longer are indifferent, headstrong, and rebellious. Today Christianity comes to you and to me and urges us to learn these laws here upon the earth, that a kingdom of godly people may be built similar to the one which we anticipate living in in the hereafter.

Christ pleads with us to obey his Father's will. We are happy to note that thousands and millions of people are wholeheartedly responding to that call. They see the intelligence of eternal living, and the utter stupidity of trying to resist and frustrate the laws of God in the universe. They realize that we can only have peace and harmony by obeying the laws of the Prince of Peace. I am hoping that the time will soon come when Christians will not merely bow their heads at catastrophe like a whipped dog and murmur, "God, thy will be done," but that the words "Thy will, O God, be done!" will be a battle cry of all Christian peoples. These words could well be placed upon our church flags. With head high, we say, today, that when our health authorities organize to stop the raids of the deadly germs of polio and tuberculosis that we are frustrating the will of God.

During the war a mother came to me deeply concerned over the safety of her soldier son. I understood her anguish because at the time, her son was in grave danger in the Battle of the Bulge. With the anguish which only a mother can have, she cried, "Why can't God stop the war?" I had to assure here that I was positive God had it within his power to stop the war if he wanted to, but always allowing the laws of the world to function and never denying us our agency, he would not stop the war. If he were to stop the war, he would have to take our agency away from us. That he will not do! He wants us to be, I repeat, throbbing, pulsating personalities, and he sent us the Christ to teach us the ways of peace, love, unity, and helpfulness, the ways of brotherhood and justice.

Christ grieves over the disobedience of his creations. It was the hope of Christ that people would listen to his teachings and follow the laws which he gave them from his Father. One time he looked out upon a whole city and wept: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matthew 23: 37, 38.) This would indicate to us that the Christ would have liked the people to have responded to his teachings. It would have been to his liking, it would have been his will, it would have been his wish; but they would not. With firm step, with resolute minds and hearts, with Christ as our Leader, we must move forward to build a society where God's will will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. It is the greatest challenge of this age.

Hello, Morning!

Hello, morning!
The dew still clings reluctantly
Like tears you shed
For yesterday's regrets.
But soon the sun will bid them go.
A new day's here,
New opportunities as well—
And new horizons wait.

will come to us. We are growing stronger, not weaker, as we exercise our strength and put forth our efforts. The work that the church is doing now is like the training of an athlete for a race, not like the progressive exhaustion of a swimmer in a heavy sea.

We believe that there is beginning to emerge in the church a nearer approach to unity of understanding concerning our mission and our responsibility. We believe that the church is supporting and will continue to support the emphasis on missionary activity, both domestic and foreign. We believe that the establishment of a Zion character of community living is becoming better understood, and that when church people see alike on it, harmony of action will be assured.

To one who has been here, actively associated with the work of a number of conferences, the spirit of hope and good will seems very real. We are grateful for this condition that promises so much in the way of unity and harmony for the coming General Conference.

Apostle and Sister M. A. McConley Sail to Europe

A prophecy of the mission of this church was fulfilled in the farewell gathering of Saints held at the Brooklyn Church on the occasion of the departure of Apostle Myron A. McConley and Sister McConley for their European mission. Since it was their last evening in the United States, it was considered appropriate by Pastor LeRoy Squire of the Brooklyn Church to hold a farewell prayer service at which Apostle McConley would speak. It proved to be a very fine experience for all who attended.

The mission of the church is to gather from all nations those who would hear the message of Christ. At this farewell prayer service, there were represented the following nationalities, either native sons or those descended from these nations—four Germans, six Australians, one Chinese-Hawaiian, two Italians, Canadians, and many Americans. The Americans represented the deep South, Michigan, California, Missouri, Iowa, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York, and other States. It was truly an international service which brought together in the fellowship of Christ these many different peoples. How truly "the tie that binds" was made more significant as in testimony different ones pledged their total support to the work of the church abroad as well as at home. The meeting presaged the anticipations of success of the McConleys and of the church as one and all move out to accomplish the task that belongs to him in the building up of the kingdom of God on earth.

A small group of Saints (some had come from as far as Philadelphia) went to the vessel, the "Queen Elizabeth," and saw the McConleys comfortably settled in their cabin, ready to sail at dawn next morning.

Thus begins, with their sailing, not a new, but a continued chapter in the work of the church as it takes up the responsibilities of ministering to the peoples abroad. May God bless the work to which we now give ourselves.

On a Visit to Rosary Chapel

(One of oldest in Mexico)

The cherubim fly clumsily across the vaulted dome;

An ancient master painted well,
His works hang dusty but robust,
What lusty stories they could tell.

The sunlight seeps through windows there aloft;

Deep, vibrant mystery fills the air.
This is not my usual worship spot,
And yet I, somehow, deeply care.

A Puebla lawyer, a ragged, barefoot Indian lad,

Each enters silently and genuflects now,

A kindred faith, serene and deep,
And then I humbly make my vow.

I need no rosary, no outward, open sign;

I need a faith, a hope untrod.
No dusty past my cathedral door,
Where I am—there is my God!

Evolution in

RELIGIOUS CONCEPTION

By J. A. Koehler

Number 26 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

UNTIL RECENT YEARS the Darwinian theory of evolution was very unpopular in religious circles. Fully as unpopular was the idea of an evolution in religious conception. Still it is recorded in the gospel according to St. John that Jesus said to the first apostles, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." For the present, or in the circumstances, they are beyond the reach of your minds. Howbeit, said Jesus, "When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." In other words, said Jesus, You will go places in your thinking; for nothing can be guided that is not going places. And going places in religious thinking is evolution of religious conception.

Within a few years after Jesus said that, there occurred a conspicuous evolution in religious conception. In the first days of his ministry, Jesus said that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." And in the last days of his ministry, he said "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth [or "whosoever" believeth, as he said in the first instance] and is baptized, shall be saved."

IF YOU ARE A student of the Bible, you know that the truth expressed in those words did not carry over. It was not until one extraordinary thing happened in the house of Cornelius, and another on the housetop where Peter was praying; that the truth which Jesus sought to teach his disciples was unfolded to their understanding. It was only then that (in respect to "who may be saved") St. Peter went places in his thinking. That is a conspicuous, a classical instance, of evolution of religious conception.

Evolution of religious conception has been going on throughout the ages. From the idea that if a burnt offering is to be acceptable to God the lamb must be without blemish, Israel went on (at least the prophets of Israel did) to the idea that "a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise," even though the white lamb on the altar is only a black sheep.

From the idea that "Jehovah is God," believers in the Almighty went on to the idea that "God is love." And since medieval times in particular, the idea of "God is love" has come to have a much richer meaning. We begin to see what "God is love" means in terms of economic relations in particular. There is evolution in our religious conception.

THERE HAS BEEN in the past, and there is even today, in respect to some religious truth, also devolution. There have been and still are perversions in religious doctrines. To illustrate: Seven centuries before Christ, Pythagoras perceived that the earth hung in space, and that it revolved around a central fire. He saw that the moon was lighted by reflection. Pythagoras and a few other geniuses apprehended a physical world truth.

But ere long that truth was lost to the race. There was devolution of astronomical conception. After Christ, Ptolemy came along and, before he went away, he did the world all the damage he could. He said that the earth stands still; and, that instead of the earth revolving around the sun, the sun and even the stars revolved around the earth. Aristotle said that, too. And everyone believed Aristotle. That was devolution of conception. And that illustrates what happened in religion.

MOSES AND the other great Kingdom prophets apprehended the truth that man may rise to God only through his own mastery of the business of human-living-together. Moses especially apprehended the truth that to govern that business aright is man's business under God; he apprehended the truth that man must work out his own salvation through learning to conduct that business aright. But Jesus, who sought to underlay that truth with another truth that is even more elemental—the truth that that business cannot be conducted aright unless the spirit in man is holy—Jesus, I say, had been gone but a few years until Christendom lost its grip on that truth (if it had ever gripped it). It perverted that truth; it changed it into a lie. That is religious-conception-devolution. That is a darkening instead of an enlightening of the religious mind. It is a backward instead of a forward movement of religious thought.

VERY FEW MEN have capacity for new thought movement or for creative vision in any field, especially in religion. Even after basic religious truths are brought to light, as in the careers of Moses and Jesus, the religious mind, instead of being activated so as to unfold their implications, tends to become stagnated; or, what is worse, it sometimes tends to retrogression.

The principal obstacles to the unfoldment, or development, of religious truths, or to the evolution of religious conception, are mental laziness—contentment to accept religious ideas secondhand without critical examination; a belief that there is “no more beyond” or belief in the finality of religious inspiration; a propensity to preserve traditions that serve almost no purpose but to glorify the past; unholy emotional attachments; bigotry; fear of the consequences of intellectual adventure; and reliance upon what is called “faith” so as to banish reason. In a word, thought movement in religion is sluggish because man is not a disinterested, hungry searcher after religious truth.

IN ONE OF HIS communications to the Church, the modern prophet gave a new version of the prophecy of Jesus recorded in the 24th chapter of Matthew. In that recital he represents Jesus as having said to his disciples that, in this day of warfare and human misery, “a light shall break forth . . . and it shall be the fulness of my gospel.” He said, in other words, that this would be a day of evolution in religious conception. And in saying that, he mentioned that which was characteristic of him in the first part of his career. For the modern prophet had an insatiable appetite for the refinement of old religious concepts and the discovery of new.

One is hard put to find a religious leader in whom the conviction was more deeply ingrained—the conviction that it is not only possible, it is necessary to go places in religious thinking. The idea of coming to an understanding of the revealed truths of religion through experience, through faith, and through study, is everywhere to be seen in the messages of his early ministry. It seems that the idea of a religious conception ne plus ultra was to him almost a curse.

THE GREAT PROPHETS of the Bible were concerned primarily or principally with the needs of their times, notwithstanding all looked forward to the Kingdom of the future. The need of our time, which is the meaning of the recent emergence of “the social gospel” in the thinking of the Protestant world, is a new social philosophy; a social philosophy grounded in “religious” truths or principles. The need of today is a new concept of the “righteousness” of economic affairs in particular, rather than another surge of industrial “goodness.” And to provide that social philosophy was the avowed mission of the modern prophet.

Latter Day Saints think it should be noted, it is highly significant, that the message of Restoration, which is the message of the modern prophet, is both a recovery and a correlation of the basic truths revealed in the ministry of Moses and Jesus—whose messages were designedly complementary. The modern prophet combined the Mosaic concept of “the Kingdom” with the Messianic concept of the only foundation upon which it may be built. And the product of that combining is to us the “light” which Jesus said should break forth in the day of universal warfare and tribulation. Of course, Restoration represents that truth revealed through Moses in its modern, not in its ancient, application.

I said that to reach out for new light is a characteristic of Kingdom-building prophets. I wish I could say in truth that it is a characteristic of those who call themselves Kingdom-building peoples. But we know it is not. For the common run of church men have appetites, if not for the commonplace only, then for something that is merely different and as a rule, very superficial. In truth, the “sheep,” the whole flock, may be that way for the very reason that “shepherds” of flocks try to make novelty and variety substitutes for progression—both conceptual and institutional progression. And that is something which, actually, no one can possibly do.

No celebration of any kind, no pulpit-trumpeting, no surface-skimming in study classes, no mulling of old dogmas, no confirmations of old convictions, no anything that does not lead to institutional progress—not in our church at any rate—can by any possibility be made a substitute for evolution in religious conception.

A Thought

By Wilber C. Hewitt

Once it was said, “Don’t say it. Write it.”

An idea or a thought, contemplated, is very good; but if it is written, how much more valuable it is.

When it is written, someone else may read it, but if it is only said, it is very likely to be forgotten and the wind blows it away. If you only think it yourself, no one else but you knows anything about it.

One has said, “Thoughts are things.”

A thought is like the wind. It happened; so did the wind. If we have a good thought, we should write it, then we could see it again and maybe add something to it. If we only say it then we might hear of it again. If we only think it or it comes into our mind and we don’t write it or say it, it is very often forgotten never to be heard of again.

If we have a good thought and write it down, we get another thought; by so doing we enlarge our intelligence.

When you have a good thought, don’t only say it; write it; that will make it more valuable.

Idle thoughts are like idle moments; they never amount to anything.

You can use your brain to good advantage or you can let it rest. If you let it rest, nothing has been accomplished. If you use it to good advantage, no one knows what may be accomplished within yourself.

Remember good thoughts and make the best of them. Try it.

A thought is like a wave on the water; it comes and goes. Very often that thought is gone forever. But, like the wave, there are many others coming to take its place. A wave is no good, but a thought may be worth an untold amount.

Think of a large city. How many thoughts and ideas have been taken to build it, not by one person, but by many people. Many buildings, many people, many thoughts. To build Chicago or New York, at the rate of one thought or working day at a time, would take a time as endless as eternity.

Everything we do is thought of first, and then put into action. It takes a great deal of thought to accomplish a great thing.

Spiritual Reality

By Maurice L. Draper
President of Seventy

A radio talk on Station WALA, Mobile, Alabama

IT IS QUITE popular nowadays to take the attitude that religion is for old men, women, and children. There has come about an unfortunate attitude that a young man, whose life is full of adventure, work, and he-man living just doesn't have time for religion and spiritual things. As a result, many men in their twenties and thirties, during the prime of their physical lives, and approaching the peak of their intellectual maturity, are turned aside from faith, and place their trust for achievement in the arm of flesh, only to find in later years that there are some things that the flesh cannot provide—that there are some achievements which are possible only by the exercise of an abiding faith in God and in his eternal purposes of lifting men above their selfishness and mean pettiness to a level of spiritual brotherhood.

Perhaps one of the reasons why so many men in the period of their greatest capacity for productive living feel inclined to ignore spiritual things is the fault of a popular religious fallacy. There appears to be widespread support in the religious world for the idea that we must draw a line down through our lives, separating secular affairs from religion. On the one side of the line we have prayers, sermons, hymns, spiritual ideals, and on the other side we find our business practices and ethics, our politics, recreation, social expressions, community and civic life; and only in the vaguest way do we permit any association between the two phases of our experience. Religion, we say, has little to do with our margins of profit, our elections and policies of government. Recreation, social life, community planning, if they are touched by religion at all, are affected only vaguely through the borrowing of ideas, and certainly not by the suggestion of specific forms of behavior in these fields of experience. On the other hand, much religion has not concerned itself with the other aspects of life either, for isn't religion designed to offer us comfort in our sorrows, encouragement in our tribulations, and to save us in heaven when we die? People think that religion is supposed to do these things, but when such thoughts are suggested, I often think of a statement by one of our prominent church leaders: "Jesus came to the world, not only to save the child from drowning, but to teach it how to swim." These are simple, but eloquent words. Jesus came not only to save us from sorrows, distress, and death, but to teach us how to live in such a way that these difficulties would not occur in the first place. And this idea was not new at the time of Jesus. As we read the Scriptures, we learn that this was apparently the aim of God from the very beginning. If we can once grasp this thought, we can see that religion dare not back away from the world because of fear that it will become contaminated by sordidness of life. Religion is life, life as it is intended by our Heavenly Father, and as it was revealed in the experiences of Jesus Christ, his Son.

In the first chapter of Genesis, we read the story of creation. Then in the second chapter, we read that creation was not complete, that God was not satisfied until his purposes had been worked out in the physical world. Thus, we read that he created every plant of the field before it grew, and every herb before it was in the earth, and even man, before he was made of clay, to have the breath of life breathed into his physical tabernacle. It was not until man was given a physical body that God finally pronounced him a "living soul." So far as God is concerned, therefore, spiritual ideas are incomplete and incapable of proper expression until they are clothed with physical substance.

Even before he became a physical being, man was commissioned to achieve certain ends. Another way of saying this is what God intended in the beginning of his work concerning the earth and man, that men should be created for certain purposes, and be directed to achieve certain goals. Thus God said, "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth; and subdue it; and obtain dominion over the fish of the sea and the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that creepeth upon the earth." Note the spiritual purpose behind this great commission. Man, a spiritual being clothed in physical substance, is ordered to obtain control over all other physical creations. Man is made to subdue the earth—that is to learn how to control its resources, its iron, coal, oil, copper, gold, its rivers and oceans, the tides and winds, its electrical forces, the powers and processes of chemistry, and all things. Further, the intelligence of man should be used to direct the use of all other forms of life. Now, this is not a modern business man or scientist speaking. These are the words of God, spoken even before man became a physical being.

Against the background of these ideas, what happens to the popular belief that religion is only to save us when we are dead? What happens to the weak and colorless faith of the philosophy which withholds itself from life because it is fearful of contamination? The greatest of all utterances of the spiritual purposes of God are concerned not with the afterlife, but with this life. They are concerned not so much with the vague, mystical concepts of religion apart from life, but with life in the raw, the use of forces and powers of natural origin, the control of beasts, and the wresting of the secrets of its existence from the heart of the earth itself.

God said to let man obtain dominion over and subdue the earth. Does this sound like waiting until life after death for the achievement of salvation? NO! Salvation after death is the natural consequence of discovering and obeying the spiritual realities of this life. And by the same token, eternal damnation is simply the natural result of denying the reality of the spiritual purpose in the present life of food and clothing, lands and houses.

The words of the latter-day prophet, Joseph Smith, sounded a ringing challenge to the manhood of today when he said, "Behold, all things unto me are spiritual, saith the Lord, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, nor carnal, nor sensual. All things unto me are spiritual." God does not give us laws of property, of financial adjustments, of personal relationships, which are separate and apart from his eternal purposes. But the laws he does give us are not weak, powerless ideas about suffering in silence the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, but of taking up arms against the causes of outrageous fortune, and by waging war against the sin which gives it life, thus destroy it.

This, then, is at least a part of the meaning of the terms used in the original commission to man, to obtain dominion over and subdue the earth. This is the great spiritual purpose, but to obtain its full benefits, we must discard the out-worn idea that religion and daily life will not mix. We need to catch the significance of the revelation of modern times through the modern prophetic ministry of the church, that God is concerned with business and industry. He has an interest in the wages of the laborers, in the conditions under which they work. He is interested in the profits of the management of business. He has our problems of housing, of crop production, of international welfare upon his heart. He wants us to be great astronomers, great chemists, progressive farmers, intelligent workmen. He wants this, because only by achieving these goals can we accomplish his purpose in our creation.

But we cannot do this unless we are willing to recognize the reality of spiritual truth. It is real because it has to do with real things. The doctrines of Christ are not imaginary, dealing with mystical or unreal situations, but they are the very real principles by which we live, or by which, if we ignore them, we die.

Man is incomplete without his body; it takes both body and spirit for him to be a "living soul." So does the whole achievement of the purpose of God depend upon the physical expression of His spiritual ideas. He has commanded us, after creating us in His own image, to obtain control over material things, and to use them by our intelligence to grow into his likeness. This means that material things are but the expression of the spiritual purpose of God in terms of substance, and are sacred to the achievement of his eternal purpose. Let us, therefore, sanctify our physical and material possessions by consecrating them to the achievement of the kingdom of God.

Grateful for Gospel

(Editor's Note: The following letter was received from J. W. Blume of Denmark. It is the translation of a letter sent him by Meta Lass, a member of the Elmsborn group in Germany.)

You don't know how much joy your letter from Denmark brought to us here. Right from my heart I thank you for it. I must admit that I cannot quite read it. I have received many letters from America because my letter to the Herald was published. But I am sorry that I could answer them only in German.

Now I will first tell you about our church. Here in Elmsborn we are only fifteen members, but we are united in a heartfelt love and so beautiful a harmony so we think it could never be better than among us. Our priest, Brother Lemmelhaack, is twenty-eight years of age. He comes to us every Sunday from Neumunster. His faith is so strong, and it is good to belong to his congregation. We meet every Sunday and Wednesday in a sister's home. It is glorious hours we have in this fellowship. How great and richly has God blessed us when he gave us his beautiful gospel. It makes us happy to feel the deep sympathy and love which speaks out of all the letters. All want to help and comfort us, and therefore we do not feel our sufferings so bad. We see, hear, learn, and know that all which His word promises us will surely be given. Therefore, our hearts are not filled with worries about the future, but with a happy certainty and joy because our salvation is near. What does it matter if the body shall suffer here on earth a short time? An eternal life in joy and glory is coming to us if we stand faithful and true to the end. What a grace of God that he gave us this certainty. We can already, here in Babylon, taste the peace and happiness in him. We will work in these latter days and exercise love more and more so that we may be prepared for Christ's coming. May God give us power to do all that is good and his love tie us firmly together.

Now a little about myself. I am forty-six and not married. I work as a bookkeeper in the Elmsborn Automobile Centrale. In March, 1945, I was baptized. In April, 1945, I lost my parents and my home in an air attack. My heart was not sorry but full of praise and thanks to the Almighty who took my beloved ones to his glory. Father and Mother were at any time ready to leave this world. It is wonderful to know that they are in God's good care.

In the home of relatives I have a small room upstairs. I am so overflowingly happy in the Lord as a person could be. To you and your wife and all sisters and brothers I send greetings. Praise, honor, and thanks to our Heavenly Father for all his mercy.

We and They

Our Place in Civic Life and Service

By Ward A Hougas

President of Central Missouri Stake

EACH YEAR at Christmas time we generally dig out a few stock texts for the occasion and talk about peace and good will as though they were something that could be found on the bargain counter at any department store. Perhaps the choice text from the lot is that one which reads, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men."

The text readily suggests that it offers implications that reach far beyond just a good feeling or something of a superficial atmosphere created for special seasons or occasions. Peace and good will depend on actual relationships. It is one thing to talk about peace and good will and quite another thing to so live that peace and good will become the natural result of what we have done.

It is not at all uncommon in many areas to find that our church influence is almost entirely neutralized by the activities of one or two individuals or families. It is difficult to build up church influence in the face of short checks, poor fences, short days of work, unreasonable charges for work done or services rendered, merchandise prices that are out of line, unneighborly acts, slovenly housekeeping, ill-timed statements, careless personal appearances, poorly kept properties, unpainted churches, etc. In your community the peace and good will that the church is to enjoy depends on YOU.

A few years ago we had the privilege of visiting a well-known colony of people who had attempted to build some sort of Utopia. They had failed because they had not realized the importance of building good relationships among themselves as well as with their neighbors. Their unpainted buildings and aloofness from others still stand as mute testimony to their radicalism and their narrow-mindedness.

Emerson is credited with the suggestion that what we are speaks so loudly that no one can hear what we say. Yet it is our specific task to "warn our neighbor" and to "bear witness as we go."

AS CHURCH MEMBERS, what is our relationship to the community? In the light of what has been written, what do we owe the community? This is not just an abstract question. It is a personal question that has its effect on every church and church family in the world. When we speak of our relationship to the community, it simply means how are we going to act towards our neighbors, business associates, customers, friends, relatives, enemies—in fact everyone is included within the scope of its influence.

The Apostle Paul made a suggestion or two while writing to the Roman saints. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law," he said on one occasion. A little later he added this suggestion, "Let everyone of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." He apparently was deeply concerned as to how the newly won saints were going to fit into the community of which they were a part.

In discussing this same matter with the founder of our church, the Lord gave considerable help in Section 128 of the Doctrine and Covenants. After having discussed the relationship at some length, the Lord said, "They cannot withdraw themselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors surrounding them as to be entirely free from intercommunication with them. . . . Yet it is incumbent upon the Saints . . . to so conduct themselves . . . as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord."

When I discuss with people what they think about when we talk of Zion or Zionic communities, I find a variety of ideas. Two extremes generally stand out with about as many varying degrees between the two poles as there are people to answer. First we find those who look to Zion as a "place of safety" and with but little of other good qualifications. Such often wish but little from the world and prefer isolation in some very primitive manner, living on food and wearing clothing such as marked life several centuries ago. The outgrowth of such a situation seems to be a sense of sacrificial living and rejection of the world.

On the other end of the arc we find the spirit of consociationism which rapidly gives way to the idea of a glorified modern community. No aspect of segregation is to be found in this life. A full and complete utilization of any and all utilities, services, and advantages of the community is demanded. No attempt is made to grow into any type of life which might be called distinctive or essentially different. The difference, if there is any, must be found in the hearts of men as they look upon their own acts and possessions.

Section 128 does say something about the Gentiles assisting in rebuilding the waste places of Zion and this is interpreted as meaning that we should become and remain a definite part of their economy.

IF WE "cannot withdraw so completely," or if we cannot be "entirely free from intercommunication" there must be some measure of withdrawal. Yet that withdrawal must be limited at present at least so that we will be "in" the world and yet so live that we will not be partakers "of" it.

Perhaps the keynote is to be found in the two suggestions made in the latter part of the section which reads, "Living and acting honestly and honorably," and the further suggestion, "using the things of this world in the manner designed of God." That's why we suggested the relationship of short checks, poor fences, slovenly house-keeping, uncouth personal appearances, etc., to the matter of building good will. As we face our responsibility to "warn our neighbor," we are made to realize that we do not convert those who don't like us. An analysis of many baptisms confirms the suggestion that a prospect first becomes a friend then a member. How many people in your community are you closing the door on because you deprive them of the friendship that should be theirs because of the way you live or the things you do or say?

We do have a debt to the world. Practically everything that I possess not only in real or personal property but in education as well, I have received from the gentile world. The clothes I wear, the typewriter I use, the light by which I read, the office in which I work, the car which takes me around my field of ministry, the years of college which I enjoyed, most of the literature that I read—in fact most every thing that I possess either tangible or intangible is the product of gentile hands. Does "living and acting honestly and honorably" allow me to walk out on this responsibility entirely? Do I not owe for the goods that I receive?

ON THE OTHER hand I owe an allegiance to my church. This is not merely an ethical allegiance. I really owe it something. I have received from it and therefore am in debt to it. I received my baptism from it and that baptism demands a response on my part. I was baptized physically as well as mentally. It is so easy for me to overestimate the value of my mental "yes," forgetting that "Faith without works is dead." And yet when I begin to respond to the church in the physical field, I find that I have made so many mental reservations that my physical response often becomes a mere token response.

There must be a spiritual response to my church also. This spiritual response is based on the six principles. My response will have value just to that degree that these principles find place in my pattern of life. We need to place our religion on this basis of principles. Whenever good is being accomplished, it is because of the operation of these principles. Whether in or out of the church, in the community or in a foreign land, peace and good will are generated by the operation of these fundamental principles. Sometimes I am tempted to base my religion on the gifts so-called. This I can do, but if I overlook the operation of the principles, I find that I can enjoy a false sense of security in the name of religion and yet live so carelessly that I create anything but peace and good will among my friends and neighbors.

THE GENTILE world is using the fundamental principles as a standard by which to live. Just to the extent to which they apply them to life, to that extent do peace and good will exist. That's why we sometimes fail to raise the standard of a community when we move in. That's why we sometimes actually lower the standard of a community by our presence.

The solidarity of the gentile movement depends for its permanent stabilization upon the leaven that the church should be able to offer. It may sound prosaic to say that the fate of democracy hinges upon our ability to grapple with this community relationship successfully. Prosaic or not, it is still true. And if we fail not only will the gentile civilization crumble but the followers of the kingdom of God way of life will also fail. This is true simply because it is true.

Our relationship to the nation and to our more closely related units of government is such that we are foolish to feel that we can ignore it. Occasionally some misguided, but well-meaning soul suggests that we would be better off without our government, etc. Careful thinking reveals that God has been a long time in the process of building governmental protection for us. According to our own books, this parental care went back long before the days of Columbus. It found expression in his activities and continued in the personnel of those raised to build the Constitution. In other words these communities of which we are a part represent, to some extent, at least, the best that God has been able to do for us so far in the matter of our neighbors. Why not, then, recognize them as such and look well to our relationships with them?

WITHOUT QUESTION our first relationship to the community that we should check is that of personal living. "Honestly and honorably," said Divinity. Any wise man or woman can interpret that in terms of living and not miss the little details. Here again every minor thing that enters into our relationship with the world is up for consideration. If the operation of the fundamental principles in my life won't challenge me in this field, it won't help much to speak to me in tongues and tell me to keep my chickens off my neighbor's garden.

As individuals and as an organization, we owe a measure of allegiance and support to what might be termed the "uplift movements." Community hospitals, our local schools, scouting, civic clubs, peace movements, temperance activities, and many others represent a field to which we owe something and in which we find many opportunities to further the work of our own institution.

As members of a community, we have no moral right to turn our backs on any legitimate forward-looking movement. True it is, there must be maintained a proper balance in the division of our contributions. Some tend to lose themselves so completely in some local movement—which in itself is probably good—that they have nothing left for more important challenges such as come directly from the church. As a part of the community, we do owe a debt to our school system, to our elections, and other governmental needs. Scouts, teen-ville, adult education, community services each have a right to our proper attention. We have no moral right to absorb from all of these institutions and then to withdraw ourselves so completely as to give nothing in return.

WHAT DOES THIS all mean? It means that our baptisms once more are made alive and functioning, self-expressing, bearing witness of the rebirth that has actually been ours. It means further that our confirmations are bearing record in the patterns of our lives. I have always been rather puzzled by the claim of one protestant church that baptism is not essential to salvation but is essential to church membership. Is it possible that we too do some things merely for the sake of our church membership and not because it is of eternal quality and directly related to our salvation?

You are a part of your home community. Does your presence and the presence of your home and property build good will and peace? Are you actually "in" your community in such a way that you are benefiting it because of your presence? And do you maintain such a high

Overcoming Grief

By HAZEL NAPIER

NOTHING OCCASIONS AS much sadness as the loss of one dearly loved. To overcome such grief, you must overcome self, for though sorrow has its roots in love, it is nourished by self-centeredness. When you eradicate thoughts of self, you attain victory over distress.

This has been my experience. When my infant daughter died, I grieved to the extent that the doctor feared for my life. "She is taking it too hard," he told my husband, "it may kill her."

One day I went to bed with the desire never to get up again. I forgot the work I could do in the church, my young son, my husband, my friends—everything but my sorrow. Frightened by my appearance, my husband rubbed my hands and face and called my name until he roused me from this dangerous lethargy. Later, he told me about a bereaved mother who made no effort to overcome her grief. As a result, her mind became deranged. With the spark of sanity left to her, she realized what was happening. Making a valiant effort, she slowly emerged from the darkness of her condition. Although she no longer grieved for her dead children, she was never happy. The rest of her life was wasted on selfish grief.

standard of life (remember, everything from runaway pigs to unpainted houses) that you are not "of" it but that others look to you as an example of the expression of the principles of faith, repentance, etc?

And are you "using the things of this world in the manner designed of God?" Community relationships are a responsibility. They are also a privilege. "That the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord."

THAT STORY REMINDED me of Anna Doyle, a young pianist who was so talented that she might have had a career in music had she so desired. Her music and the man she was to marry were so inseparably linked in her life that one without the other was unthinkable and unbearable. When her fiance died, she closed her piano and vowed never to play again.

"It is selfish of you not to play for us any more," a child who loved music told her one day. That evening Anna played as she had never played before. As the music soared in great swelling chords depicting victory over struggle, the neighbors listened with tears in their eyes. They knew that though Anna's heart would be sad and heavy for a time, by giving joy to others through her music, she would find happiness.

From Anna my thoughts went to an elderly couple who live in a nearby town. About fifteen years ago six of their seven children were killed in an accident so terrible that their bodies could not be identified. Nevertheless, these parents are sweet and unembittered. They are happy and busy in the work of the church and have reared their son to be a minister of the gospel.

"If others can be victorious, so can I," I said with determination. Today, seven months after my baby's death, with God's help I have gained mastery of myself and am well on the way to happiness. Let me give you the benefit of my experience.

THE FIRST REQUIREMENT is the dedication—or rededication of your life to God and your fellow men. If you have musical ability, use it to benefit others and glorify God. One woman not only offered her services to the church but also gave free music lessons to poor children. If your talent is writing, use it to comfort, strengthen, and uplift others. Any talent can be put to this good use.

As you serve, your interest in people, especially the unfortunate, will grow. Thinking of their problems, you will forget your own. By work or deed, try to make life more pleasant for those about you. Make "I live for others" your motto, and you will be living for God.

Read, study, listen to the best radio has to offer, memorize or write down thoughts of value. When you meditate, enlarge upon those thoughts and clothe them in your own words. The importance of meditation cannot be over-emphasized. It restores calmness, rebuilds the sense of the rightness and fitness of things, and aids the inner development. Concentrate a few minutes each day on the beauty that is in the world and in the hearts of men. Dwell on thoughts of courage, truth, immortality, and divine love. Never let your thoughts be of yourself. Think, rather, on the meaning and glory of life. You can gain control of your mind by discarding the undesirable and uninspiring—by inviting and assimilating the constructive and beautiful. On the wings of pure thought, you can ascend to the proximity of God's throne.

EQUALLY AS IMPORTANT as meditation is physical exertion. Never nurse your sorrow in silent apathy. When the ominous cloud of lethargy hangs over you, dispel it with activity. Try washing windows. Pretend that the glass is your life and that you are rubbing away the smudges of woe that prevent the brilliance of the sun from shining through. Take a walk every day. Walk fast and hard, imagining that your sorrow is under your feet and you are stamping it clear through the sidewalk. When you return home, you may be tired, but you will be easier in mind, and happier.

Be out-of-doors as much as possible. This induces tranquility of mind. You can find alleviation from sorrow in the sights and sounds of nature—in the music of the birds and wind-stirred trees and rock-filled streams. There is beauty in leaf and petal, in the star-bright nights and dewey-fresh mornings. Regardless of time, season, or place, there is always something beautiful to behold. It rests the soul to walk in a wooded park, to stand still in the sun, to touch the fragile softness of a flower.

HUMAN CONTACT will give you rest also. If, for some reason, your friends do not visit you, go to them if you are able or talk to them over the telephone. Seek the company of happy people who love life. Above all, attend church regularly. It is comforting and restful to worship with people you love.

You need, also, a daily worship period alone or with your family. You should tell God your troubles, but not during this service. Let praise, not supplication, fall from your lips—praise God for his goodness, mercy, and might. Thank him for his blessings, for the spirit that upholds you, for the love that envelops you like a glowing mantle. Since hallelujahs and lamentations cannot proceed simultaneously from the heart, you will forget self in praising your Creator, your Father, and Friend.

As you conquer self, you will find joy in the knowledge that your lost loved one is safe. When tears come, they will be born of tenderness and undying love, not sorrow. Once your grief is overcome, you will find yourself better and stronger, the possessor of priceless peace.

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all who wrote to me. I am sorry I cannot answer each letter individually. May God bless and heal all who are in need of him is my prayer.

Letter of Commendation

I am thankful for the Herald and am strengthened in spirit by its uplifting contents. I was impressed by the articles "A Talk With God," and "The Fruits of the Spirit," which appeared in a recent issue. I also enjoyed the report of Silver Lake Reunion—truly, it was a spiritual feast. These mountain peaks of spiritual experience cause us to desire to strive more diligently to do God's will and help in the establishing of Zion.

At the first prayer service of General Conference last year, the Spirit rested on me in power, and I knew I must bear testimony of a statement that had been made several years ago by a young sister. She said her brother long ago heard Israel Smith spoken to in prophecy and told that the time would come when he would lead the church to victory. This occurred at Graceland College.

We were happy to hear of the advancement of Edmund Gleazer, Jr., to the position of president of Graceland. We shall always remember the reunions at which his father, Apostle Gleazer, presided.

I was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church over thirty-five years ago. I was told during my confirmation that as I had received a little ray of light, I would rejoice as never before in Christ, my Saviour. At that time I did not comprehend the full meaning of the statement, but now I can say in all sincerity, "There's peace and contentment in serving the Lord."

Thankful for Gospel

I have found great satisfaction in being a part of the latter-day work. I was born a Catholic, but became dissatisfied with my faith and began investigating other religions. I fasted and prayed about the matter after I heard of the Reorganized Church and was told three times by a divine voice to be baptized for the remission of sin; the following day I became a member.

God has helped me through many trials. It is my one desire to adjust myself to his will and be able to honestly say, "Thy will, not mine, be done." President Edward's book, God, Our Help, has been a real inspiration to me.

Last August I moved to Independence. Here I have heard many wonderful prayers and testimonies and challenging sermons. I am truly happy to be here.

WORSHIP SUGGESTIONS

APRIL 13, 1947

(Final Day of General Conference)

Theme for the Month: New Life Through Jesus

By Iola Tordoff

APRIL 6, 1947

Theme: THE RESURRECTION

Call to Worship:

Sing, soul of mine, this day of days,
The Lord is risen!
Toward the sun-rising set thy face,
The Lord is risen!
Behold he giveth strength and grace
For darkness, light; for mourning, praise;
For sin, his holiness; for conflict, peace.

Rise, O soul, this Easter Day!
Forget the tomb of yesterday,
For thou from bondage art set free,
Thou sharest in his victory,
And life eternal is for thee
Because the Lord is risen.

—Author Unknown.

Quartet: "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," Saints' Hymnal, No. 256.

Suggested Scriptures:

"I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—John 11: 25, 26.

"He came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. (Other portions of this section may be used also.)

Theme Talk: (May be based on some of the following thoughts.)

The story of the resurrection according to Matthew 28, showing that as a result of this resurrection, we must teach the gospel to others. A deep conviction calls for positive action, with no negative shadows.

This is a testimony given by J. A. Koehler, Easter, 1930: "I saw Jesus—not Jesus the man but Jesus the Way, the Truth, and the Life crucified upon a cross of gold. I saw Jesus lying in a tomb of acquisitive customs. I saw the sepulcher closed with the stone of selfishness and sealed with the authority of private interests. I saw Saints turning their faces to the world and their backs to the kingdom, saddened, grief-stricken, and dismayed, for this Jesus had been to them the hope of their salvation.

"And I saw a great commotion among the men of the church, and I saw the angel of God, in the person of men of the church, come to the tomb and roll away the stone of selfishness. And I saw Jesus re-embodied with the authority of the priesthood in institutions of mutual helpfulness and of social justice—I saw the Word made flesh in the city of Zion.

"And I heard the proclamation: 'HE IS RISEN.'

"Some Saints were slow of heart and could not believe. Others hastened to proclaim the tidings of this resurrection.

"And I saw the eyes of the nations turn toward Zion; and, transfixing her towers of glittering truth, beholding her ramparts of justice and marveling at her glory, I heard their hallelujahs saying, 'HE IS RISEN.' And because he lives, we too shall live."

Suggested Poems:

EASTER THOUGHTS

One thinks of mothers on Easter Day,
Of mothers who weep, mothers who pray.
One thinks of the things that sin has done
To mothers since the world was begun.

One thinks of fathers on Easter Day,
Strong, silent fathers who toil and pray.
One thinks of the pain sin caused to One,
When men crucified his own dear Son.

One thinks of our Lord, who loved each one
So much that he gave his own dear son;
And our faith is strong! Our purpose sure!
Right shall yet conquer! Truth shall endure!

—Guide-Lines to Leadership,

April-June, 1943.

EASTER

When Easter sings across the world,
I think that every sea
Reflects the blue that danced upon
The waves of Galilee.
I think that every bit of sky
That holds a hint of shower
Is like the sky that grieved above
Gethsemane in flower!

When Easter sings across the world,
I like to think men build
New dreams in memory of One Whose dreams were never killed.
I like to think that kinder words
To weary folk are said,
Because Christ toiled up Calvary,
With tired, down-bent head!

January-March, 1944.

Suggested Hymns: (All in Saints' Hymnal)
Numbers 164-196; Also, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," No. 12; "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee," No. 283.

Consecration:

THE RISEN CHRIST

Aye, the lilies are pure in their pallor,
The roses are fragrant and sweet,
The music pours out like a sea-wave,
Pulsing in passionate praises,
That Jesus has risen again;
But we look for the signs of his coming
In the hearts of the children of men.

Wherever a mantle of pity
Falls soft on a wound or a woe,
Wherever a peace or a pardon
Springs up to o'ermaster a foe,
Wherever a soft hand of blessing
Outreaches to succor a need,
Wherever springs healing for wounding,
The Master is risen, indeed.

Wherever the soul of a people,
Arising in courage and might,
Burst forth from the errors that shrouded
Its hopes, in the gloom of the night;
Whenever, in sight of God's legions,
The armies of evil recede,
And truth wins a soul or a kingdom,
The Master is risen, indeed.

Theme: THE CHURCH

Call to Worship:

The Church of Christ is calling you
To join the glorious throng
Of those who raised in former years
The Christian marching song.
Within those ranks are myriad youth
With face toward Zion's land,
Of consecrated heart and mind;
Would'st join that chosen band?

The Church of Christ is calling you
To rise up for your day,
Evangelists of a Faith Restored
In God's own primal way.
It offers to the searching youth
A testimony sure
That God is ever working
And his gospel will endure.

The Church of Christ is calling you
Not to some fancied dreams,
But to life of deepening growth,
Led on by All-Truth gleams.
No soul is dwarfed, no talent lost,
On whom the spirit falls;
An open door is waiting you.
Wilt answer to these calls?

Suggested Hymns:

"The Church's One Foundation," No. 359
"Come, Gracious Lord, Descend and Dwell," No. 88

"For the Beauty of the Earth," No. 18

Suggested Scripture:

"Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Theme Talk:

What kind of a church would this church be, if every member were just like me?

Doubtless you have heard these lines before, but somehow they make us stop and take a look at ourselves and see just what kind it would be. Are we bringing any new life to our church at all—or are we even alive? Everything alive is growing and expanding at all times. Can it be said of us, as it was of Christ, "and the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom and the grace of God was upon him." Our physical appearance may remain much the same, but our minds must not remain the same at the close of each day; they must constantly increase and be filled with wisdom, love for our fellow men, and a desire to help them.

There are two short paragraphs in one of Roy Cheville's quarterlies that are as follows:

"Often we refer to men and women as 'pillars of the church.' The next time you hear it, look at the ones mentioned and notice what there is about them that sets them apart from others. You will discover that they are the ones the church would not want to lose. When we think of the church as a building, we think of the supports that hold it up.

... In our own Auditorium are pillars all around the main room. On these rests the great dome. The pillars rest on solid stone—deep down in the earth. They make up the very skeleton of the building. The church has to have pillars, too. What kind of members make the pillars?

"When the church does not seem to be getting along any too well, it may be needing some strength in the pillars."

Poem Help:

If you want to have the kind of a church
Like the kind of a church you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing really new.
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your church;
It isn't the church—it's you.

When everything seems to be going wrong,
And trouble seems everywhere brewing,
When prayer meeting, young people's meeting, and all
Seems simmering slowly—stewing,
Just take a look at yourself and say,
"What's the use of being blue?"
Are you doing your bit to make things hit?
It isn't the church—it's you.

It's really strange sometimes, don't you know,
That things go as well as they do,
When we think of the little—the very small mite—
We add to the work of the few.
We sit, and stand around, and complain of what's done,
And do very little but fuss.
Are we bearing our share of the burdens to bear?
It isn't the church—it's us.

So, if you want to have the kind of a church
Like the kind of a church you like,
Put off your guile, and put on your best smile,
And hike, my brother, just hike
To the work in hand that has to be done—
The work of saving a few.
It isn't the church that is wrong, my boy;
It isn't the church—it's you!

Challenge:

"Sometime ago I rode from St. Louis to Kansas City on the train with one of our church officers. In the course of our conversation, I questioned him as to whether or not he felt that the church had made the progress that it should have over a period of the past twenty years. For the remainder of the trip he dwelt on the progress of the church and pointed to evidence in support of his enthusiastic belief that the church was forging ahead.
His enthusiasm was contagious, and when I stepped off the train, I expanded my chest just a little and thought to myself, 'It's a wonderful thing to belong to such a growing church; we're really going places.' That taught me a lesson—if you want other people to be enthusiastic, you've got to be enthusiastic yourself."—From Pastor's Notes, Stone Church Bulletin, March, 1946.

Theme: RECONSECRATION

Call to Worship:

Today, dear God, we need you here;
We desire to feel you near.
Our strength, our power comes from thee,
And now thy path we wish to see.

Sometimes the way seems dark and drear;
But with thy light, it must be clear.
And so we wait humbly—with love
Asking instruction from above.

And when direction we receive,
In thy greatness may we believe.
Give us courage to carry through
Thy strength in everything we do.

Suggested Scriptures:

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans 12: 1.

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"—Micah 6: 8.

"Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your bodies, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Wherefore, seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6: 28, 38, Theme Talk: (May be based on some of the following thoughts.)

A minister had been holding a series of meetings. At its close, a small girl presented the minister with a large bouquet of lovely flowers. "Why do you give me these?" he asked.

"Because I love you," came the quick reply.
"But do you love Jesus?" asked the minister.
"Yes, of course I do."
"What do you give him, then?"

The little girl smiled happily and replied,
"I give him myself."

Our reconsecration must be on the same level. We must give our whole selves, and not just a part here and there whenever the notion strikes us.

When a young man is trying to build a new business, he puts everything back into that business that he receives, in order that it may grow and become successful. So it must be with our investment in our stewardship of our lives to Christ's Way of life.

Poem:

The bread that giveth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears.

Beauty for ashes may I give away.
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away.
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith,
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.
—Ellen H. Underwood.

Consecration:

"And now, because of the covenant which ye have made, ye shall be called the children of Christ, his sons, and his daughters: For behold, this day he hath spiritually begotten you; for ye say that your hearts are changed through faith on his name; therefore, ye are born of him, and have become his sons and his daughters."—Mosiah 3: 8, 9.

Benediction:

Draw thou my soul, O Christ,
Closer to thine;
Breathe into every wish
Thy will divine.
Raised my low self above,
Won by thy deathless love,
Ever, O Christ, through mine
Let thy life shine.

Lead forth my soul, O Christ,
One with thine own;
Joyful to follow thee
Through paths unknown.
In thee my strength renew;
Give me thy work to do:
Through me thy truth be known,
Thy love made known.

Not for myself alone
May my prayer be;
Lift thou thy world, O Christ,
Closer to thee.
Cleanse from its guilt and wrong,
Teach it salvation's song,
Till earth, as heaven, fulfill God's holy will.

Theme: EVANGELISM

Call to Worship:

Poem:

Hold high the torch!
You did not light its glow—
'Twas given you by other hands, you know.
'Tis yours to keep it burning bright,
Yours to pass on when you no more need light;

For there are other feet that we must guide;
And other forms go marching by our side;
Their eyes are watching every smile and tear
And efforts which we think are not worthwhile,

Are sometimes just the very helps they need,
Actions to which their souls would give most heed;

So that in turn they'll hold it high
And say, "I watched someone else carry it this way."

If brighter paths should beckon you to choose,
Would your small gain compare with all you'd lose?

Hold high the torch!
You did not light its glow—
'Twas given you by other hands, you know.
I think it started down its pathway bright,
The day the Maker said, "Let there be light."
And he once said, who hung on Calvary's tree—

"Ye are the light of the world." . . . Go!
. . . . Shine—for me.

Special Number: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," No. 397.

Suggested Scriptures:

"Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshipped him; but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28: 15-19, I. V.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house. Therefore, let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 16-18, I. V.

"Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

"Let no man be afraid to lay down his life for my sake; for whoso layeth down his life for my sake, shall find it again, and whoso is not willing to lay down his life for my sake, is not my disciple."—Doctrine and Covenants 100: 6.

Theme Talk: (May be founded on these thoughts.)

Lives are not meant to be hidden, they are meant to be lived for others' benefit. If a candle is lighted, it is not placed where it cannot be seen, but is placed where it will do the most good, "on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house." Street lights are placed on the darkest corners and in the dreary in-between places. Have you noticed how dark and uncertain your own familiar street becomes when the street light goes out? So it is with our lives. We must be lights that others may see the way, for if we hide our lights "under a bushel" they will go out from the lack of oxygen. Any flame goes out when it is smothered, as will the gospel of Christ, if we do not spread it to others.

Fires need constant rekindling if they are to burn, for soon the old fuel becomes only ashes, and unless new fuel is constantly added, the flame becomes only glowing coals, then dead and useless ashes. We should be constantly seeking new fuel, for brighter lights.

A program for evangelism must include three general aims, according to the

Zion's League Handbook:

1. To convert to the church those capable of participating in its mission: To ADD members.
2. To develop members through engaging in an evangelistic program. To RETAIN members.
3. To re-enlist members who have lost their zeal or enthusiasm for the church: To RECLAIM members.

Poem:

There's a sweet, old story translated for men,
But writ in the long, long ago;
The Gospels according to Mark, Luke, and John,
Of Christ and his mission below.
You are writing a gospel, a chapter each day,
By deeds that you do, by words that you say;
Men read what you write, whether faithless or true;
Say, what is the gospel according to YOU?
You are writing each day a letter to men;
Take care that the writing is true;

The Unforgivable Sin

By Josephine Shelton

Once upon a time, maybe not so long ago, there lived a very good man. His name has slipped my mind just for the moment, but I shall call him Mr. Blanding for the sake of convenience. Perhaps Mr. Blanding lived next door to you or around the corner in that little frame house with the blinds drawn. I know he lived very close to me.

As I said before, Mr. Blanding was a good man. He was very, very good. As a matter of fact, he practiced goodness as a not-so-secret vice. I remember once, when I was a child, I threw a baseball—quite by accident—through one of his windows. He came out immediately, but he wasn't angry. Dear me, no! He came out and looked at me where I stood frozen with terror, on his front lawn.

"You are a wicked little girl," he told me firmly. "Breaking windows is an unforgivable sin. Mark my words now, you will come to a bad end."

That's the kind of man Mr. Blanding was. To him all sins were equally unforgivable. It might be said of him that he spent his life trying to find a forgivable sin, and he died believing that there was no such thing.

It is because of this incident in my own experience with him that I know this story is true.

Mr. Blanding was very rich as well as very good. He used to say that goodness beget riches of the pocket as well as riches of the spirit, but I always felt myself that sharp business acumen had more to do with it than a knowledge of David's Psalms. Yes, he was very rich, but he never gave away any money. After all he had worked hard for it and other people should, too. One day a young girl came to his little frame house in answer to an advertisement for a maid. He could have afforded three maids—but why hire three when one would do? Anyway, this girl, hardly more than a slender, finely-made child, came to apply for the position. Unfortunately, she had committed another one of those unforgivable sins, and her wrong was very apparent. Actually, her only sin lay in that she had not been true to the best in herself. She had made an age-old and disastrous mistake. Mr. Blanding did not hire her, and she went away with drooping shoulders, her young face blank with hopeless despair. Next day they found her in the river wedged in between some blocks under the pier.

"Disgraceful," said Mr. Blanding almost indignantly when he read it in the newspaper. "Taking one's own life is as unforgivable as—well, the other thing."

He never thought of blaming himself.

Mr. Blanding was what the good books call a "pillar of society." He would never dream of shirking jury duty. It was an unpleasant obligation, of course, but if conscientious citizens were not willing to sacrifice a little of their time in order to protect society against criminals, then what was this country coming to? Mr. Blanding always sat down in the jury box with two deep moral convictions firmly fixed in mind. One, everyone accused of a crime was guilty, otherwise what was he doing dragged up in court? Two, if the case was between a white man and Negro, or a Gentile and a Jew, the white man and the Gentile always won. It was clearly a matter of genetics—Mr. Blanding's genetics, that is. Mr. Blanding was an admirable juror and an admirable citizen.

He was a good citizen in many other ways, too, and joined worthy organizations by the dozens. He held office as noble grand protector in the Prevention of Cruelty to the Lowly Earth Worm Society (Local Chapter 77-B), and could talk for hours on the worth of the worms as cultivators of the soil—they burrow holes, it seems. Yet I have known him to put out a plate of poisoned meat for cats who disturbed his sleep, and to shoot dogs who buried bones in his pet petunia patch.

He was active in good works and civic affairs. One spring he canvassed the whole suburb where we lived to get signatures on a petition to the city council, asking to have the water main extended to our neighborhood. Of course it happened only by the merest chance that in the plans, as he proposed it, the main ran right by his own house. He had, we were assured, our welfare at heart.

In addition to all his other interests, (the music club, art club, church group, drama league, and Temperance Union) he was an ardent member of the Literary Guild, serving for twenty years as its intrepid, crusading vice-president in charge of morals. Any book banned in Boston, and many that were not, was sure to be banned by Blanding. The shelves of the local library were full of books about Elsie Dinsmore and Dr. Algernon P. McGillicuddy (missionary to the Ubangi Islands in 1870) and very little else. Yet, he avidly ate up every sensational news story of crime and lust which the daily papers carried in full, gory detail.

Mr. Blanding was a renowned educator. He was chairman of the Board and was secretary of the Home and School Club for years. When I was in the seventh grade, our teacher was a fine and gentle woman with a talent for teaching. We loved her, and, what was more important, we respected her—an unusual and unbeatable combination in scholastic circles. Unfortunately she was also a Catholic. When this regrettable fact became known, Mr. Blanding's tight, little mouth became tighter and his pale eyes gleamed, but he said nothing. Next term we had a new teacher, a raw-boned, horse-faced woman with a heavy hand on the reins.

"Unthinkable," said Mr. Blanding in a loud voice which was as close to anger as he ever allowed himself to get. "A Catholic teaching Protestant children, indeed! Unthinkable."

Mr. Blanding was a good Scotch

Presbyterian, himself—or was it Latter Day Saint? I can't quite remember.

Yes, Mr. Blanding was a good man. He was a good church man. He was a good citizen. When he left this mortal coil several months ago, he planned on going more or less straight to heaven. I feel sure that, at this very moment, waiting for Judgment Day in his own private limbo, he is dreaming confidently of his just reward. Naturally, Mr. Blanding had his own idea of heaven. It is a place where he can go on being foreman of the jury and chairman of the board forever and ever,

Here Is the Writer . . .

Josephine Skelton, who makes her home at 382 Burwell Street, London, Ontario, is known to her friends as "Little Jo" and "Pixie" (which, she says, probably means something but she wouldn't know what).

Her interests run the gamut from writing poetry—which seldom rhymes, to horseback riding, which she does on the average of once a year. Her favorite sport (she says) is evading all forms of athletic endeavor, and she is happiest when "scribbling." Her idea of heaven is a place where it doesn't matter if she has ink on her fingers.

The Trouble-Shooter

"Must Haves" for Mission Teachers

QUESTION: Protestant and Catholic denominations establish schools in foreign lands just shortly after their missionaries have made friendly contacts. I am a young teacher interested in the possibilities of such a program within our own church. If such plans are being considered for the not-too-distant future, how can I best prepare for such a service? What specialized skills will I need other than those I have acquired in my academic training?

ANSWER: By Pres. F. Henry Edwards

In the European field and in Australasia the opportunities for academic training are generally parallel to those available in the United States and Canada. Preparation for service in such a school as is proposed, would therefore be concerned with matters of religious education and social service over and above your Bachelor's or Master's degrees. Languages might also be of importance, although we expect to draw appointees, so far as possible, from the countries in which we labor.

In Hawaii the situation is very closely akin to that in the United States. This field is important as a jumping-off place for the Orient, but a great deal of work needs to be done before any extension beyond Hawaii is attempted. Our chief need here, in addition to those elsewhere, centers in the Chinese and Japanese languages and in a knowledge of comparative religions, particularly Buddhism.

In the Pacific Islands, the appropriate languages and fundamental academic training are important and, in addition, a good grounding in hygiene, home nursing, and music.

While the foregoing covers the ground very generally, I suggest that you write to the First Presidency, giving particulars concerning yourself and your preparation and indicating the field or fields in which you might be interested. This letter can then be referred to those able to give you the most specific guidance.

No doubt it will come as a great shock to him when the High Court of Eternity offers him a position considerably less exalted. I hope he asks why.

The voice of the Supreme Judge will be a little sterner than usual, I think, when he hands down the verdict of the court.

An Old Letter

P. S.

The editor sometimes goes prowling, between tasks, in the wilderness of the middle drawer of his desk. He finds queer things there—mementos of forgotten incidents, incunabula of a sort, or a reminder of an outworn trouble.

Recently he found an old letter, one that was never sent. It stirred his memory. It was written to answer an angry correspondent, full of defense and vindication, "righteous indignation" (if there is any such thing), and rather short of Christian feeling. Qualms of conscience kept the editor from sending it. He put it away and soon forgot it. Later the trouble was healed. How fortunate the letter never went!

Yesterday there was another unhappy letter in the mail. It contained sharp language, unjust and injurious; but back of it was misunderstanding and a hurt heart. It was only human—too human—to write a bristling reply. But again conscience intervened. So the editor called his assistant to read it. "Please tell me," he said, "if there is anything I should cut out."

"What would happen," she asked, "if you didn't send it at all?"

Clock wheels whirred in the region where an editor is presumed to do his thinking. What would happen? Nothing! Consider the unfortunate things that wouldn't happen—the added hurt, the harsh rejoinder, the lost friend, the bad feeling.

Sometimes you cannot help writing an angry letter. But there is no law that requires you to send it.

 Idaho Woodland Trail

Thanks to Imogene Morse of Vay, Idaho, for the beautiful cover picture. A good camera, an understanding of composition, an eye for beauty, and the result is beautiful. Is there anything more appealing, even in the snow, than a path leading away through the woods like an invitation to adventure?

Even the stump has its place in the picture. It reminds one of the explanation Paul N. Craig, with the understanding of the true artist, made for one of his paintings: "Death is a part of the cycle of life. You see it everywhere in nature. Each flower has its fallen petal, each forest its stumps, each field its dry grass of a past summer that serves as a bed for the grass of the summer that is here." Nature heals its wounds and goes on with the business of life.

Every good piece of art contains many fine thoughts; if you take the trouble to understand its language, you will find much to learn and enjoy.

 Do You Want the News?

Continued scarcity of paper, continued reduction of pages in our publication, have made it difficult to maintain a balanced program of articles. Under the conditions, we have been asked to examine every type of material and consider its usefulness in comparison with other types.

The local branch news has been subjected to more frequent questioning than any other kind of material we publish. Despite its popularity with some readers, we must now face the question as to whether it should be retained or not.

The use of these pages for news has taken space that might have been used for inspirational and informative articles. Which would serve the church best? Which is most desired by our readers?

We would like to hear from our subscribers. The letter need not be long. Simply state whether you would rather see that space devoted to good articles, or to news. And we would appreciate it if a good many of you would write. We depend upon you for this decision. Will you help us, please?

* UNCLE JOE complains that he is having stomach trouble. "I'm always putting too much in it," he says. And, if you read the papers, you come to the conclusion that all the world is having stomach trouble. Here in America we suffer because we put too much in it, while over the rest of the world millions of people have too little to put in it. Remember this when you are asked to give, or to divide up with others.

* A LESSON in international relationships. If you begin by loving your fellowman, your chances of success are improved. If you begin with suspicion or dislike, you have very little chance. All human affairs boil down to something like this.

* VENTURE a pleasant word to a stranger, and the chances are you will be rewarded with a smile. Of course you will meet an occasional determined sourpuss. But most people respond readily to any form of kindness.

* WRITING is measured by column inches in a printer's business. He may appreciate the quality, but his big question is always, "Does it fill the space?" And that's why this paragraph is needed.

* BE CAREFUL with a sharp knife and a sharp tongue. Either of them can cut the person who uses them.

The Missionary Task

Norman Corwin

Whether it is a bad mark on my record, or a good one, I must admit I do not listen much to the radio, and thereby miss many good things as well as mediocre ones. Listening to Morning Devotions is automatic with me; newscasts I take when I remember them in time; for the rest, it is all by impulse.

So it was a most fortunate accident (or does some power of fate intervene occasionally?) that made me turn on the radio at the precise instant that the Norman Corwin program began on the evening of March 4. Corwin is the winner of the first "Wendell Willkie Around-the-World Flight Award," given this year. He took sound recording equipment on his trip, and instead of interviewing leaders as Willkie did, tried to interview the common man. It was a most revealing experience.

Egypt

In Egypt Corwin saw the most pathetic squalor next to examples of luxury. We heard the speech, in halting English, of laborers, one of them sixteen years old and the father of three children, who support families on a wage of sixty cents a day. We heard a man who was going blind from an eye infection that could have been easily cured, say as he pointed to heaven, "If it is the will of Allah that I be blind, why should I try to avoid it?" We heard people talk who didn't know the meaning of "communism," who didn't know the war is over, who didn't know Hitler is dead and think he will win the war. But apparently there are people in both Germany and America who think the same thing, so that should not be surprising. We heard a sick man say, when advised to visit a clinic for his disease, "But that will take money. I have no money." We heard young men say, when questioned about democracy and freedom, "I take no interest in such things. Why should I take an interest in them? I must think of food and clothing."

India

There was rioting between the Moslems and Hindus in India, as all who know anything of that unhappy land would expect. So it was not possible for Corwin and his group to record statements from the lower or middle class natives there. But he did record an interview with Jawaharlal Nehru, the eminent Indian Nationalist leader. This man saw ahead for the world as well as for India a period of trouble from contending groups based on racial, religious, political, and other divisions. He saw as principal causes of the world conflict, Russia and the United States. "If these two great countries will not reconcile their differences, how can they expect others to do so? You can't ask other people to do what you are not willing to do yourselves," he said. And when something was said of the bitter treatment Hindus and Moslems give each other, he spoke of the treatment of Negroes in the United States, "I cannot see that you are doing any better than we are."

The Meaning for Evangelism

We would be dull indeed if the meaning of all this in relation to a world-wide missionary program should escape our attention. This is the kind of world into which the missionaries of the future will go. They will go into areas where ignorance, prejudice, want and disease are the dominant factors of human existence. They will face situations in which words and ideas will be important, but in which words and ideas alone will accomplish nothing. They will meet people whose physical and economic needs are so great that no attention can be given at first to spiritual and intellectual needs.

They will go among people so poor that, no matter how humbly they come, they will seem like capitalists and plutocrats to the natives; they will realize how a well-fed, well-clothed missionary, no matter how shabby he might appear in America, is an offense to the poor native. They will have no common language of want and suffering, no common experience.

What should be the training and equipment of missionaries to the lands of want and pain, to the underprivileged homes and people? An answer was given in a splendid book by Dr. Mary Cushman, Missionary Doctor, who went to Africa to combine the services of a medical practitioner and missionary. This seems to be the most desirable, the most necessary kind of combination. But how many young men and women of America are willing to pay for the long and expensive training required, to turn down pleasant and lucrative practices at home in return for the sacrifice of ministering to disease-ridden and poverty stricken people who can never pay for the help they receive?

And yet, ours will never be the "One World" that Christ demands and that Wendell Willkie imagined, unless hundreds and thousands of young people go forth to do exactly this kind of work. The preaching of the gospel must go along with the application of real remedies to human ills and needs.

But it must never be thought that medical skill alone will redeem the world from suffering. All salvation, all real permanent improvement in human affairs, must begin in the area of mind and spirit, must deal with ideals, motives, purposes and hope. This is the area in which the gospel accomplishes the will of God.

Missionary Fields

Not all missionary fields, of course, will present the problems

Editorial

found in Egypt and India. But even where civilization has lifted people from depressing conditions, war has caused a tragic return of suffering that reminds one of medieval times at their worst. The McConleys going to Europe will encounter many a situation in which human suffering cannot be met by the printed and spoken word alone.

The point is that we cannot and must not wait until we are fully equipped and ready for the full extent of service that will ultimately be required. Missionary work must begin and go forward now, with the personnel and equipment we have at hand. And moreover, experience itself adds to the qualifications of those who serve.

There are many fields, too, where economic and social conditions are fairly near adequate standards. In such fields the missionary who teaches and preaches the gospel can give splendid service. This is a type of work we can carry on while we are preparing for the more extended service in backward lands.

Let us return to the words of the Great Commission which Christ gave to his disciples. The field is "all the world," the object of our labor is "every creature." Nothing less is worthy of the fullness of the gospel of our Lord. This includes the teeming millions of China, the turbulent numbers of India, the sickly populations of Egypt, the war-ridden people of Europe, and even the agnostic multitudes of Communist Russia.

Did not the heart of Jesus go out to all people? So let our hearts and labors be extended to them. If he could die for them, as he died for us, we can at least love them, work for them, and live for them.

In addition thereto, classes which will be of particular interest to branch presidents and their associates of the Melchisedec Priesthood have been arranged. Classes will be of the seminar type, with a view to securing the freest possible exchange of ideas that have worked. They are divided as follows:

The Small Branch (below 125)—Elder D. T. Williams.

The Established Rural Branch (125-350)—Elder Ward A. Hougas.

The Established Urban Branch (124-350)—Elder Charles R. Hield.

The Large Branch (Above 350)—Elder E. J. Gleazer.

In these classes we will discuss such matters as Long Time Considerations in Setting up the Branch Program; More Immediate Considerations in Setting up the Program; Budgeting, Finances, and Church Building; Preaching; Priesthood Visiting; Departmental Organization and Administration; Prayer Meeting Administration and Worship Planning.

At a later class period, Elder A. A. Oakman will lead the elders in a discussion of "Our Basic Message," and at the final class session of each morning, Elder Glaude A. Smith will lead the discussion on "Our Basic Ministries."

CLASS FOR THOSE INTERESTED IN APPOINTMENTS

Elder George G. Lewis, Secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, will conduct a daily class for those who are interested in possible appointment.

The class will be directed toward the specific needs of those who attend, but it is expected that interests will center in such matters as the spiritual factors in the call to full-time ministry, the financial considerations in appointment, academic preparation before and after appointment, the health of the appointee and his family, the fields of appointee ministry, etc.

VISUAL AIDS

Methods of using Visual Aids in Religious Education will be demonstrated in the various classes under the direction of the Department of Religious Education. A special class in Visual Aids in the field of evangelism will be offered daily under the direction of Elder Maurice L. Draper. In addition to presenting approved materials, Brother Draper will lead the discussion of other materials with a view to determining ways in which we can use visual aids most effectively in furthering our missionary program.

THE KING'S FERRY

by President Israel A. Smith

A consideration of the Christian hope of immortality for the season of Easter

THE PASSING of our beloved sister brings to mind two sayings. Both of them are very old, and both are as true as they are old: The first is:

"In the midst of life we are in the midst of death."

And the second is:

"Death loves a shining mark."

As it were almost on yesterday, or the day before, or the day before that, Sister Lea was here, in our midst, going about her numerous activities, with her usual smile and cheerful manner, ministering to her husband and neighbors and friends, and in the "twink of an eye" or "the draft of a breath" she has passed from the height of her intellectual and physical powers into the shadows of death.

How eloquently this speaks warning to all of us ever to be prepared—as we feel she was—to meet our Maker.

As the early evening shadows fell on last Saturday, we learned she was passing through her Gethsemane of physical suffering and pain; yet hope, which "springs eternal in the human breast," denied to Brother Lea and others of us any anticipation of an early dissolution. A few fleeting moments, a hurried call for husband, mother, sister, and her spirit had taken its flight, as if it were impatient of further earth-bound restraint, claiming, at last, the freedom of the angels of her presence.

Sister Lea was a "happy child of God," joyous in her pilgrimage. She drank deeply of the waters of real living. She was very able and accomplished, having many talents which she gave freely to the church, to friends, to neighbors, to her husband and home.

We of Group 20, where she has lived so long, will ever hold her in grateful memory for her cheerfulness and her readiness to be of assistance in every worthy cause, and for her devotion to her husband. Fortunate indeed is the man whose companion is a true helpmeet to him; but to us, here was an ideal marriage, a true partnership, each one sharing in the ambitions and aspirations, the labors and studies of the other. Certainly Brother and Sister Lea were the perfectly happy man and wife of the community.

So death has indeed searched out and stricken down, at the height of her powers, a most gracious personality, one whom we could not spare, especially our beloved and esteemed brother.

Some unknown poet has said:

We know when moons shall wane,
When Summer's birds from far shall cross the sea,
But who shall teach us when to look for thee,
O Messenger of Death?

IN OLDEN TIME, the Egyptians, whose civilization reached its zenith long ago, and whose culture and refinement flourished, gave evidence of their wisdom, because at every banquet table there always was, at the chief place, a silent guest: "He neither ate nor drank nor spoke." It was a veiled and shrouded skeleton, ever present to remind the guests that in the "midst of life they were in the midst of death."

And so today, upon the occasion of this tribute of love to our sister, may it not be well to consider briefly death and some of its implications?

We turn to the great philosophers of the world, and we find that from the very earliest of recorded time, men have speculated about life and death—the mystery of life and "the riddle of the universe" asked by Job, Is the soul of men immortal? or as he put it: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

From the "shores of time" it ever has been, and ever will be, unto the shores of eternity, men—millions and millions of them—will wonder, and in the absence of a living faith, never will be satisfied, yet ever consumed with this most natural desire for eternal life.

A world conqueror, dying, said to those with him:

"Do you suppose when I have left you I shall be nowhere and no one? Even when I was with you, you did not see my soul, but knew that it was in this body of mine from what I did."

The greatest of philosophers said it was a "pleasant faith" that "does not believe what it believes, for want of courage to disbelieve it;" and that there were but few men so obstinate in their atheism but when danger presses will not acknowledge a divine power.

Wordsworth said:

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The Soul that rises with us, our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar.

Emerson turned in thought to the promise of Christ and found that His name had not been so much "written" as "ploughed" into the history of this world.

Burns, the celebrated Scotch poet, said:

The voice of nature loudly cries,
And many a message from the skies,
That something in us never dies.

One of the greatest modern thinkers said there was "no error more powerful in leading feeble minds astray from the straight paths of virtue than the supposition that the soul of brutes is of the same nature with our own."

And Voltaire, whose very name suggests atheism, admitted that "faith commands us to believe the soul to be immortal."

We doubt not that these brief observations and conclusions would appear to our departed sister commonplace and obvious, so assured was she of eternal life, a child of the covenant all her life, an heir of God, and a joint heir with Jesus Christ.

But ever when death strikes down a loved one, we who remain are prone to canvass the idea of immortality—not so much because of devastating doubt as a grasping at something—anything—once again to rescue ourselves, from fears born of our deep love and concern for our departed dead.

And thus we see the wise and great men of the world reach by various processes for what we of the church possess through faith in God and in his promises.

Even the unbeliever, the atheist, the agnostic, in time of trial and sorrow tries to exercise faith. It is told of Robert Ingersoll, one who scoffed at Christianity, that at his brother's graveside he said that at such a time hope could almost see a star and hear the rustle of an angel's wing.

IN A STORY told long ago in Second Samuel, there is a brief intriguing statement about King David, who had come to the River Jordan:

And there went over a ferry boat to carry over the King's household.

Only a dozen words, but what a message!

Surely, if any among my neighbors and friends could be counted as a part of the King's household, it was this sister whose memory we honor here. We believe our Lord and Master did come for her as one of his household. No craft of human invention or devising could do it. Help must come from the other side, and so the King sent over his ferryboat to transport her to the heavenly shore.

Paul's dissertation on the resurrection comes to mind, and I have a desire to read this classic on the death and resurrection of Jesus.

In no place in Holy Writ has the case of the unreserved believer in the resurrection been better stated than it was by Paul in I Corinthians, chapter 15.

After recounting the testimony that Christ had been resurrected from the dead, he made this "logical marshalling" of those evidences, then his arguments, and then conclusions therefrom:

For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures; And after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some have fallen asleep. After that he was seen of James; then of all the apostles.

Now that all was hearsay evidence to Paul—and then—

And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time.

For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.

And now comes the argument:

Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

And his final conclusion:

IF IN THIS LIFE ONLY WE HAVE HOPE IN CHRIST, WE ARE OF ALL MEN MOST MISERABLE.

But—the thought unbearable—

But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

—the grandest hope ever held out to mortal man!

Pending this great consummation, what condition?

I should like to present for our consideration what Alma has said in the Book of Mormon, which is inspired Scripture, with respect to the condition of the soul between death and the resurrection, and I quote from Alma, 19th chapter:

Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life.

And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, etc.

That our righteous sister has now been endowed with such an estate

www.LatterDayTruth.org

we confidently believe. We mourn not as those without hope.

I am reminded, too, that the Lord, according to Isaiah, made a similar promise seven hundred fifty years before Christ's appearing:

When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they will not overflow thee for I am the Lord thy God.

I know it is poorly or hardly consoling—but some of us know from experience that Time only can cure the sorrow now crowding upon this stricken family. "It is yet early," and that happens to be the name of a poem by Grace Noll Crowell, from which I quote:

They could not see—the garden was too dim

(Tears are so blinding, grief so hard to bear!)—

Yet, in the shadows that were holding Him,

The Lord was standing there.

Here in the garden of your grief and mine,

It is yet early—long before the day.

There is no sun or moon or star to shine

Across the darkened way.

Yet, O my friends, perhaps for you and me

The dawn will bring some joy we thought long dead,

And that which seems but shadows now, may be

The risen Lord, instead.

And yet we who have lost loved ones, ever and anon, in the words of Tennyson, can but say,

Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand,
The sound of a voice that is still!

Let us take comfort from the many Christian excellencies of our sister. Of whom could we better liken Sister Lea than to the great soul referred to by Bryant in his immortal poem, "Thanatopsis," who

. sustained and soothed

By an unflinching trust, approached his grave

Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch

About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Yes, a bright soul has left us, has gone out into the effulgence of a brighter life, and for us who remain, may I advise, "Sit closer, friends," for has not the King sent "over his ferry boat to carry her of the King's household"?

SCRIPTURE READING AT THE GRAVE

Ecclesiastes 12: 5, 6, 7: Because a man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets:

Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern.

Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was;

And the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

Rev. 14: 13: Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.

Now the Christian's task is o'er;

Now the battle day is past;

Now upon the farther shore

Lands the voyager at last.

Father, in Thy gracious keeping

Leave we now our Sister sleeping.

Needlecraft

The church-wide Needlecraft Society in Independence, Missouri, is in receipt of some fine contributions of needlework which will be on display and for sale during General Conference. Room 5 in the basement of the Auditorium has been assigned to this department for its location and exhibit.

If we are to exceed the sum raised last year, we shall need many more contributions, and we feel sure that all local sewing societies or individuals, where it is possible, will want to help increase the missionary fund of the church.

Send donations to Women's Center, 1034 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri.

The Dominion of God

By J. A. Koehler

Number 27 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

FROM THE very beginning of Bible religion to this very day, God has been regarded by many as the "Almighty" one, who not only has power to do "the impossible," but who personally exercises supreme jurisdiction over everything and everyone at will. God has been and still is regarded as a personal "ruler" who makes things go at will as he wishes them to go. So all-inclusive is his dominion believed to be, that men even pray to him to give them clean hearts—which means to possess their souls.

If God has dominion, even over everything "human," and if he wishes that human affairs should be conducted in accordance with his will, how does it happen that they are conducted contrary and even in open opposition to his will? How do people who attribute such dominion to God, and who believe that he is "love," account for the hatred that exists even in the hearts of those who call themselves his people?

The answer may be that he could do it if he would; but he won't. How do they know he could? Well, that is a question which even those who know everything about it cannot answer.

THE MODERN PROPHET, after having drawn a rough verbal picture of the universe, and of the solar system in particular, said that "any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power." I am sure he did not mean to see the moon with the eye of a cat, but with the eye of human understanding. I think he meant that whoever sees how the universe works sees at once how God exercises dominion.

Part of the ground of that belief is the preceding statement in the same message that, "All kingdoms have a law given; and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom where there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions." The substance of that whole proclamation (than which there is no other more profound) is that God exercises dominion through the operation of law. We call it natural law.

The Psalmist David, even though he was at a disadvantage in the discussion of the question, seems to have had in mind the truth proclaimed by the modern prophet when he said, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth forth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth forth knowledge." And that means what the modern prophet said, does it not? that "any man who hath seen [these things] hath seen God moving in his majesty and power," or exercising dominion.

I do not know any more about the coming into existence of the laws of nature than anyone else does—which means that I know precisely nothing about that. All I know is that in the physical world things go precisely as God wishes them to go; or, if you prefer, as in the very nature of things, they must go; or, if you prefer, as God ordained that they should go.

WHEN WE CONTEMPLATE some of the mechanical inventions of our age and observe how they perform certain functions even better than human hands can perform them, we may be seeing something that is comparable in some degree to that which the Almighty did when he created the earth. We see something that works by law. On a small scale, we see even man exercising some incidental physical-world dominion within the general scheme of things. We see man doing some of the things he needs to do to work out his "salvation."

But when we do see the mechanical creation of an inventive genius, do we not see that genius itself "moving in his majesty and power"? Surely. We see the implementation, or if you prefer, the extension, of the human mind. In every light bulb in our homes, we may see Edison's creative spirit. We see man exercising physical-world dominion. We may not see something that is "from everlasting to everlasting"; but we do see something which is astounding to some of us while it does last.

God's physical world dominion is eternal. It is absolute. The rotation of the earth on its axis and its movement around the sun goes on "from everlasting to everlasting." And the whole human family can do nothing to limit that dominion. The will of man has nothing to do with God's physical-world dominion. And that is fortunate, isn't it? For some of the smart things man would do, if he could, would upset the whole scheme of things. They would defeat the very purposes of man's existence.

Some men don't like the weather. That is to say, they don't like the way God exercises dominion. They would like to take over and be "the boss" themselves. One infidel said that, if he were exercising physical-world dominion in the place of God, he would make health, instead of disease, catching. I suppose "that would be glory for me." Or would it?

THE MODERN PROPHET said, "the glory of God is intelligence." And I think he had reference to the intelligence of man, because he was discussing man. Here is the complete sentence: "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one." Surely that refers, not to God, but to man.

I believe God glories in the attainments, the conquests, the accomplishments of his sons, as certainly as any earthly father glories in the achievements of his sons. I believe that it is the "light and truth" in man—the light and truth that forsakes evil—that is the glory of God.

What development would man ever have made if God's manner of exercising dominion had fixed everything up for man so that even health would be catching? And yet I have seen preachers of what they called "the gospel" get down on their knees in times of drought and plead with God to do a different and better job of exercising dominion.

It is true that the modern prophet said that man should pray over everything, including his crops. But he did not say that man should pray with the idea that he could persuade the Almighty to change his way of having dominion. Man should pray to bring about changes in his own way of exercising dominion. For that is what the whole scheme of things is all about. It is, as the modern prophet said, "To bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

LIFE IS function. It is adjustment. It is correspondence with environment. Human life is willing obedience to the laws—especially the moral laws—of the universe, or the laws which are in force in the very nature of things. We call them the laws of God. When God shall have won man to his way of doing things, when he shall have reconciled man to his dominion, he will have brought to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

I believe that to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," in the light of truth, is to endeavor to become reconciled to God's physical-world dominion. For it is evident that man must answer that prayer himself through conforming his own behavior to the ways of the earth in which alone the supply of "daily bread" is to be found.

I know that in the Bible there are testimonies of occasional exercises of sovereign powers by the Almighty, so that "daily bread" was supplied through acts of providence. I have read the story of Elijah and the ravens, the story of the loaves and fishes, and the story of the manna which was sent from heaven when Israel journeyed through the wilderness. I do not deny God's willingness to do some things for man on some occasions; things, however, which do not defeat his purposes in man. Nor do I see in those acts of God any contradiction of the idea that God exercises dominion in the natural world through the force of law. What I see is testimony of a capacity to exercise physical-world dominion which does not reside in man.

But while this discussion involves such questions, they are incidental to my purpose, which is to differentiate the dominion of God from the dominion of man. What I am trying to do today is to lay part of the foundation for what I wish to say in the next article, when my subject will be, "The Dominion of Man."

I believe in the absolute sovereignty of God in all physical world relations. I believe he could decrease the quantity of "loaves and fishes," or "of daily bread," as easily as he can increase it. At the same time I believe there is a sovereignty which is absolutely man's; a dominion which God not only does not take over on any occasion, but which in the very nature of things he cannot take over. And it is of that sovereignty that I shall speak in my next article. And, as you should see, if you are a regular member of this radio audience, that concept of man's sovereignty is the very ground on which rests the social philosophy of the modern prophet.

Our Zion's League

How is it Doing?

By F. M. McDowell

Zion's League represents a most earnest and conscientious attempt to provide for the youth of our church. It is uniquely our youth program. Its central idea and motivating ideals are splendidly summarized in a subtitle which reads:

"THE YOUTH OF THE CHURCH
UNITED IN ACTION FOR CHRIST"

Zion's League is of, for, and by
YOUTH

Zion's League is of, for, and by the CHURCH

Zion's League is YOUTH UNITED

Zion's League is YOUTH IN ACTION

Zion's League is all of this centered in CHRIST

OUR UNIQUE PROGRAM FOR YOUTH

As set forth in the official Zion's League Handbook, Zion's League is more a program than an organization. Organization is provided in the official administrative set-up of the church. The program of the League presupposes young people sharing now, individually and collectively, in the life and work of the church. The League has no worthy purpose or mission separate from the purpose and mission of the church. Apart from the church it has in reality no identity or justifiable reason for existence.

SURVIVES THE WAR

The League is now ten years old. During those ten years occurred the worst war in the history of the world. In that war our young people were, as were youth everywhere, called upon to carry the brunt of its tragic burdens and sacrifices, our younger young people in the local churches were, year after year, also deprived of adequate leadership and counsel. All of this made any systematic youth work most difficult.

IN EVERY VARIETY OF LOCAL CHURCH

Too, the League has been called upon to adjust itself to an infinite variety of conditions, needs, and problems. It has sought to carry on in branches small and large; branches rural and city; branches with qualified and responsible leadership, and branches almost totally devoid of such; branches with suitable buildings and rooms for the use of young people, and branches without such. All of this is a world which competes for the time, the energy, and the devotion of young people—competes relentlessly for everything they have to give.

EVIDENCES SIGNS OF STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS

We should not be at all surprised, then, to find that a program with such high ideals in such a church as ours, endeavoring to carry on during such difficult and trying years, amidst a variety of conditions—good, bad, and indifferent—evidences many signs of strength and weakness. Indeed, the absence of such evidences would indicate a useless and dying organization rather than a live and vital one. What better time, therefore, than on the tenth anniversary of the League to make an inventory of its assets and liabilities, to mark out new trails, and to establish new goals? What better time to pause for a moment and, looking backward and about us, seek to gain that new vision, new courage, and greater skill essential to what we are determined shall be more productive efforts in the to-morrows.

The women of Calgary Branch are working on parcels for needy Saints overseas; Mrs. E. Innis is the leader.

Missionary James Menzies spent two weeks in Calgary giving a series of illustrated lectures. On January 22, he presented "Whence Came the Red Man" in the South Calgary United Church. A large number of nonmembers expressed their appreciation and several voiced their disbelief. Other lectures include "Life After Death," "Did Jesus Visit Ancient America?" and "Did Jesus Build One Church or Many?" Elder Menzies was called home suddenly to be with his wife who was ill. Reports are that she is much better now.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Pastor, Robert H. Atkinson

Christmas was observed with a program on Sunday morning, December 22, in charge of the church school director, Madelyn Hartman, and her assistant, Roberta Garrett. "The Christmas Story," with flannelgraph illustrations, was given by Mabel Atkinson. Each class in the church school was represented, a pantomime of "Away in a Manger," being given by the kindergarten class, a candle exercise by the primary class, and recitations and dialogues by the juniors. The senior class presented a short play, "Given to Hospitality," by Lily Bishop, Roberta Garrett, Carrie Grotts, and Florence Ourth. A solo, "Christmas Lullaby," was sung by Tot Stevenson, and Madelyn Hartman told the beautiful story, "The Unexpected Guest," just before gifts were brought to the altar by each member of the congregation. Treats were then distributed to the children, and Pastor and Mrs. Atkinson were presented a lifetime Shaeffer pen on a marble standard. In the evening, the Christmas story was dramatized by members of the Zion's League, directed by Arnold Ourth.

Members of the Zion's League, who meet every Tuesday evening under the direction of President Edith Fusselman, hold two class periods each month. They are studying Smith's Exploring the Church, with Arnold Ourth, director of young people, as teacher. One prayer meeting and one social are held every month, also. All the holidays have been observed with parties. In addition to these activities, the young people have met with the Burlington and Fort Madison groups for skating parties.

On Sunday evening, February 16, the church school and Zion's League presented a program under the direction of Madelyn Hartman, on "Friendship." An organ prelude by Edith Fusselman and songs by the congregation preceded the program, which consisted of stories of friendships taken from the Bible. Darrell Tripp, Joan Klingelmueller, Nicky Ourth, and Mary Lou Etheridge told these stories. Elbert and Cheryl Tripp each offered prayers and Joan Klingelmueller sang a solo. At the close of the program, Roberta Garrett presented a quiz in which each one present could check on his own friendly attitudes.

The Lucy Mack Circle meets every second and fourth Thursday in the month for a worship service and lesson on the home. A Christmas party was held at the Bishop home, and gifts were exchanged.

Now that the debt on the church is paid, plans are being made to improve the interior so that there will be adequate classrooms and needed conveniences.

Central Texas District Conference

The midwinter Central Texas District Conference was held in Houston on February 7 and 9. The conference began Friday evening with a sermon by Seventy Roscoe E. Davey, after which the Houston Zion's League entertained the young people with a bowling party.

On Saturday morning, the general prayer service was in charge of District President J. E. Wilder. Elder Davey followed with a class on the virtues of Zion-builders.

At 2:30 the business session convened. Conference-goers voted to accept the recent action of the Joint Council, resetting the boundary lines between the two Texas districts so that Austin, Corpus Christi, and the Valley now come within the province of the Southwestern District. As a result of the change, the resignations of J. E. Wilder, district president, and Wayne Jackel, young people's leader, were accepted, and new officers elected to fill out the unexpired terms of office. W. P. Odom of Bryan was elected district president, and Lillian Maxwell of Dallas, young people's leader. The resignation of Harvey Spiller of Ft. Worth as district church school director was also accepted and Charles Mitchell of Bryan was elected to succeed him.

Other business included the approval of the following priesthood calls: Raymond Brown, teacher; Clayton Walker, deacon; Norman Sikes, teacher; and Harvey Spiller, elder. Delegates to General Conference were also elected.

At 6 o'clock the young people met for a steak fry at Lindale Clubhouse, under the supervision of Mrs. E. C. Davis. Games, songs, and movies were features of the evening. The high spot of the evening was the showing of pictures taken at the youth retreat last Labor Day.

At the church a round-table discussion was conducted by Seventy J. Charles May.

The young people met on Sunday morning for a prayer service in charge of J. E. Wilder and Wayne Jackel. Regular church school classes followed for the various age groups. Elder May taught a general class on the use of the Three Standard Books and the Saints' Herald.

The 11 o'clock service was preceded by the ordination of Harvey Spiller to the office of elder by Earl Moore and C. W. Tischer, spokesman. The Houston choir, under the direction of Mrs. Beulah Bobbitt, sang "The Holy City." The morning sermon was delivered by Elder Davey. Pastor Frank Freeman invited the congregation to lunch.

Brother Odom presented the names of C. W. Tischer and Earl Moore as counselors to the district president, after which the conference was adjourned.

Houston members opened their homes to conference visitors. Mrs. Lon Mitchell was in charge of housing accommodations. Mrs. B. Funk and an able corps of helpers were responsible for the meals which were served in the church annex.

Great Polynesian Voyages

By Andy Scott

Some of us wonder at times whether the Book of Mormon account of the great sea voyages undertaken by the Jaredites and the Nephites in their respective migrations are not a little far fetched because of the vastness of the oceans covered in comparatively small vessels. It was hearing such a view as this expressed by some of my Graceland colleagues upon leaving Dr. Cheville's Book of Mormon class one Sunday morning, that prompted me to write an account of the daring voyages of the ancient Polynesian peoples of the Pacific.

The Polynesians are a race of handsome, tall, light brown, cheerful, dignified individuals occupying what is known as the Polynesian Triangle, which has the Hawaiian Islands as the apex, the Tahitian, including the Tuamotu Islands as the eastern base, and New Zealand as the western base. They are a race of navigators, not only because of being island dwellers, but because their ancestors before them were navigators, and for this reason they have ever shown a fondness for travel.

The voyages of their ancestors seem to me most interesting, especially those of Hui-te-rangiora about the year A. D. 650. In his pahi, or great canoe, named Te-Ivi-o-Aotea, he managed to explore a great part of the Pacific Ocean, these voyages extending from the islands of Avaiki-tautau (the ancient name for New Zealand) to the Hawaiian Islands, a distance of about 3,200 miles; from the New Hebrides to Easter Island about 4,000 miles, as well as an expedition back to legendary Avaiki in Melanesia, an even greater distance.

Hui-te-rangiora even ventured down into the Antarctic regions as is recorded in the history of another great voyager, Te Aru-tanganuku. This history says, "The desire of the Ariki, Te Aru-tanganuku, and all his people on the completion of the canoe was to behold all the wonderful things seen by those of the vessel Te-Ivi-o-Aotea in former times. These are the wonderful things: The rocks that grow out of the sea in the space beyond Rapa (the area approximately 1,200 miles south of the island of Rarotonga); the monstrous seas; the female that dwells in those mountainous waves, whose tresses wave about in the waters on the surface of the sea; and the frozen sea of pia, with the deceitful animal of that sea who dives to great depths—a foggy, misty, and dark place not shone on by the sun. Other things are like rocks, whose summits pierce the skies; they are completely bare and without any vegetation on them."

Here is a graphic description of how these dusky mariners found the Antarctic. The rocks growing out of the sea, the objects piercing the skies, bare of vegetation, are icebergs; the female dwelling in the mountainous waves whose hair lies on the surface of the water is probably their imaginative description of the long sea kelps; the deceitful animal is probably the sea lion or even the whale; pia is arrowroot, a tropical plant which when scraped resembles snow. Thus the snowy wastes were compared with the white substance most familiar to them.

Tangi'ia, an ancestor of the Rarotongans, made many known voyages totaling over 18,000 miles, and from this total the longest, the one to legendary Avaiki and back is omitted as we cannot trace the exact location of this mysterious land. However his longest single voyage on record is from Fiji to Easter Island about 4,200 miles. After the famous voyage of Kupe from Hawaii-iki (Tahiti) to Ao-tearoa (New Zealand) about the year A. D. 950, intercommunication between these islands, covering a distance of 2,400 miles, was common in ocean-going canoes. These voyages are surprising in their extent, but their vessels were by no means insignificant objects usually associated with the name canoe. Their single canoes could carry about a hundred men and were up to 108 feet in length, and their double hulled canoes were up to 150 feet in length and could carry as many as 400 men. All ocean-going canoes were equipped with triangular sails woven from palm fronds.

Their fascinating method of navigation involved the use of a taba or calabash which resembles a combination of compass and sextant. It consisted of a coconut with the top sliced off which had four equidistant holes drilled in it. Water was poured into the taba to the level of the holes, forming an artificial horizon, and upon examination, the angle made at the eye-hole by the artificial horizon and the rim was 19 degrees. On a voyage from Hawaii to Tahiti and back, the taba was filled with water to the level of the holes and an observation made of Huku-paa (the North Star) and the instrument was "set" for Hawaii. By leaving Huku-paa directly astern, the voyagers sailed due south, and when they arrived at Piko-o-Wakea (the equator) they lost sight of Huku-paa, and the guiding star of the south was Newe. The return journey was just as simple. Newe was their astro-guide, and after crossing the equator again, Huku-paa was constantly checked, and when this star took its position over the rim of the calabash in the correct place a westerly course was taken, landing them in Hawaii. It is interesting to note that the Hawaiian group lies on both sides of the twenty degree parallel of latitude north.

Charts were also used. Two in particular are known which consisted of a network of sticks and another made of native twine. Even if an island sailor were out of sight of land and did not know the course his canoe had taken, he could still indicate the direction of land by setting his "chart." Unfortunately the principles governing the operation of these crude charts are now unknown.

Perhaps the words of the Maori anthropologist, Te Rangi Hiroa, are significant, "Of all the Polynesian exploits in the Pacific none can appeal to us more than the thought of Neolithic man boldly making a voyage of nearly two thousand miles, crossing the line, and finding his position for the run home by taking a shot at the North Star through the holes in a calabash."

We acclaim as remarkable the accomplishment of Columbus in crossing the much narrower Atlantic in 1492, yet, many centuries before his time, the Pacific was explored and colonized by these dusky Polynesian adventurers who traversed far greater distances in ocean-going canoes. Surely after reading of these feats one will find it much easier to comprehend the great migratory voyages as recorded in the Book of Mormon.

Before you whip out that Parker 51—or that prewar Remington with the broken tabulator—and start putting your sentiments down in black and white, stop and check the following list. It may save both you and the editors an embarrassing moment.

1. Do you really have something to say? Or have you only a vague idea that's apt to get lost when you try putting it in words?
2. Will young people be attracted to your idea? "New Horizons" has been designed especially for readers in the eighteen-to-thirty category.
3. Can you write interestingly? A good idea may be spoiled by the wrong

When You Feel the Urge to Write

- presentation. A light touch and plenty of illustrations make even weighty subjects "readable."
4. Are you writing with the idea of helping someone? Or are you trying to "settle an old score" via the printed word? If you've a personal grudge, don't try to use the official church publication as a means of getting someone "told."
5. Are you being fair? Biased opinions, smugness, and prejudice are taboo with "New Horizons."
6. Can you "say it" in the allotted space? Articles longer than four double-spaced, typewritten pages make too much carry-over. Articles less than three pages long present an even greater make-up problem.
7. Is your idea timely? Or is it just a rehashing of some controversial matter that was popular fifty years ago?
8. Will your idea interest a large group of readers? Or will only a few be affected by it? An article on how to raise kohlrabi would prove helpful to possibly only a half-dozen readers. Suggestions for personal development or an analysis of the young Latter Day Saint's place in the Zioniac movement will be read by many.
9. If you are writing an exposé on some doctrine or practice, can you suggest a remedy? Don't say, "This is wrong," unless you can add, "but here's what can be done about it."

There are too many new problems arising each day for us to waste time on past issues.

If you can chalk up a score of nine affirmative answers, we suggest you get that idea of yours on paper immediately. It should be just what we're wanting.

Peace in the Narrow Way

By C. J. Lant

Here in America, unhappily, we make a pastime of debunking our heroes, inventors, and writers—the great and the near great. We amuse ourselves by belittling anything that smells of goodness.

And yet, right here at home, we learn that what America needs most today is a return to the simple goodness of the old-fashioned home, where fathers and mothers will teach their children more about character and things that build character.

I am not much concerned about whether religion is founded upon a myth or a miracle. But I am deeply concerned about what it is that has done so much to change the lives of a number of men I have known. At one time or another they were nearly as low in the scale of human standards as they could possibly be. But, due to their contacts with men, women, and children who were endeavoring to live lives in harmony with the teachings of Christ, an awakening took place in their lives and they became an inspiration to hundreds of others.

None of us can deny that there are two ways of life: the broad way that becomes wider the farther we follow it, wide and "liberal" enough to admit anything, and leading to all the sorrows and degeneracy in the world. The other is the narrow way that excludes sin and unrighteousness, but there is room in it for all the finer things of life, beautiful homes, children who give us all the loveliness in the world. Here dreaded social problems can be cut down to the size of the weak and helpless. Here "A little child shall lead them," and we can find true peace.

* Hymn of Life

The beautiful poem used on our cover is by Aleta Runkle, who is now professionally engaged as an instructor of public school music in the Independence schools. Among her achievements is included a Master's Degree in the Department of Music at the University of Iowa. She writes excellent prose as well as verse, and has contributed to our "New Horizons" department for college young people.

* Veteran Employment

A fine thought-provoking talk was given in Independence recently by Lyle Woodstock on the employment of partially disabled veterans. Brother Woodstock was a lieutenant in the Navy, southwest Pacific theater of operations, during the recent war. He presented a film which was shown by Brother Marvin McDole, our visual aid counselor, who was also in the war.

The point that Brother Woodstock made was that these so-called "disabled veterans" mostly have minor handicaps, that even those with major handicaps maintain records of faithful service and a high rate of production, and that the employer is under no added insurance risk, or any other kind of disadvantage, for hiring the veterans. And generally, these men have less absenteeism than other workers. They are more devoted to their opportunity than most.

Veterans do not ask for sympathy, pity, or special consideration. They are trained to get along, even when handicapped, with the ordinary tools and equipment of business and industry. Their record is that they do the same job as well or better than the next man.

At the same time, we need to be sold on giving the veterans a chance. They saved our country, didn't they, so we could go on enjoying it? They helped us when we needed help. Now let us help them.

Next time you have a vacancy in your employee list, why not ask yourself, "Isn't there a good place here for a veteran?" Veterans employed at our plant are making a fine record. We are proud to have them, and they pay their way in production all the time.

* EVERY NEW TASK has its point of maximum difficulty. It is like a hill: there is a steepest point where you must throw all your reserves of strength into the pull to make the grade. Once you pass that, all the rest of the way is easier. If you fail at that point, the whole task fails. Only after experience and observation will you learn where the point of maximum difficulty comes. You must be ready to meet it at any time.

* "GIVE THANKS in all things," is the Scripture's recipe for happiness. If you can find something to appreciate, something to be thankful for, your personal entrance to heaven is not far away.

* It is easier to save money than to recover it after it is gone.

* If you borrow, you pay the interest. If you lend, somebody else pays.

* Never ask a friend to stretch the truth to help you. If you do, he will be less your friend than he was before. And you will lose more in friendship than you gain in any other way.

The Whole Conference

In an excellent sermon at Stone Church on a recent Sunday, the pastor, Glaude A. Smith, presented a theme that should be of benefit to the whole church at this time. We hope sometime to have his discussion of the principle of "common consent" for publication. It is his thought on divine guidance that we wish to use at this time.

Divine guidance, said Brother Smith, is not confined to the message given through the President of the church, even though it may be of a prophetic character. Divine guidance is sought and obtained in the quorum sessions of the priesthood, in the meetings of the Joint Council, in the work of religious education, in the meetings of the women workers and leaders, in the prayer meetings, in the young people's sessions, and many others.

Therefore, he continued, those who concentrate upon some one single event at the conference miss a great deal. Those who "take it easy" at conference and miss the more serious sessions, going only to those that interest them for spectacular reasons, do not get much good out of the conference.

Jesus had to deal with people who were interested only in seeking a sign, as when certain of the scribes and Pharisees came to him (Matthew 12: 38-50), and told them, "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign." And it must be admitted that there is a considerable amount of "sign-seeking" among modern people. What would these pseudo-pious persons think if they realized that they are under condemnation?

The General Conference of the church is a whole plan; it has unity and design, purpose, development, climax, and effect. No one can take a part of it without losing a great deal in neglecting all the rest. No one utterance or statement can contain all the inspiration and wisdom that is developed in a conference. People who come should not be diverted by other things, but should give all their efforts to the conference.

Conventions are a part of the American way of life. Increasing numbers of organizations are finding values in them. People interested in the same kind of business, profession, social or religious service, gather to discuss their common problems, exchange notes on ways of doing things, and go back to their work with new ideas and enthusiasm. The convention is a great place for the exchange of facts and helpful information. Recognized experts and leaders give lectures. And not the least of the values to be gained is the friendship and understanding that comes with personal contact. We have learned that nothing can take the place of personal contact in any line of human endeavor.

General Conference is a very special kind of convention. It has particular qualities not shared by others. But it also retains many of the basic characteristics of the convention. We do not say this to make it seem common, but to relate it to normal human needs and experience.

Independence is experiencing all of the problems of the modern convention city. For years the housing program has been halted. Population has increased rapidly due to the proximity of business and industrial areas. Overcrowding has increased until people are living in any small space that will contain the barest essential equipment for living, and many people are tolerating inconveniences that would have appalled them before the war. If the outrageous costs of supplies and home construction are ever overcome, there will take place a building expansion that will be truly remarkable.

But this promise of future building operations does not help the present situation. Day after day, anyone who owns a house receives the most urgent telephone calls and letters appealing for living space. And the normal reply is, "I'm sorry, but my family are coming to conference, and we will probably all be getting under each other's feet," or, "The people who stayed with me last conference reserved their rooms then."

The other day, just as I was preparing my income tax report, I received through the mail from the church offices a very neat accounting sheet showing all the donations I had made to the church through the use of the regular envelope system. Naturally, the loose change I had thrown into the collection plate on days when I forgot my envelope was not shown there. But the envelope habit has grown on me in the last year. Now I think this fine accounting sheet has clinched the case. It has completed the sale. Hereafter I shall use the envelope all the time. When I think of all the trouble it has saved me on the income tax, I am glad for it.

This system is democracy in an envelope. The poor person making his donation is not embarrassed by the smallness of his offering. The rich man is relieved of any suspicion of ostentation or pride in giving. All the envelopes look alike. The widow's mite is as honorable as the merchant's donation. Statements of Tithing Paid

At the present time, our Tithes-payers Service Department is in process of mailing a "Statement of General Church Contributions" to all members who paid tithes and offerings during the year 1946. This procedure has been contemplated for several years, but the office facilities and organization for a task of this magnitude have previously been lacking. It is planned that an annual statement of General Church contributions shall be mailed to every contributing member in the United States and Canada from this time forward.

Attention is called to the fact that the statement indicates only those contributions which are paid to the General Church. All tithes and offerings paid through the duly authorized solicitors, agents, and bishops throughout the stakes and districts should be evidenced by an official receipt which the contributor should keep in his possession. The duplicates of these receipts are forwarded to our office, and the amounts shown thereon are posted to the contributor's ledger sheet, and it is made a permanent church record. The statement now being mailed is a replica of the contributor's ledger sheet for the year 1946.

It can readily be seen that in such a process some mistakes are likely to occur. A steady improvement in the quality of receipt writing and reporting has been noted, and with the issuance of these statements by which every contributor is enabled to compare his record with that of the Presiding Bishopric, we feel sure that mistakes can be reduced to a minimum.

All discrepancies from the contributor's record of contributions and receipts should be called to our attention without delay. The best way to do this is to write a letter setting forth all details in the clearest manner possible. Receipts which are unrecorded on the statement should be fully described by supplying the following details:

1. Date of Receipt.
2. Number of receipt.
3. Name and address as it appears on the receipt.
4. Amount contributed.
5. Where contributed.
6. To whom paid.
7. Any other pertinent facts which might be helpful in correcting the error.

If a statement shows payments incorrectly credited to the addressee, it should be returned to our office without delay, with any information which may be helpful in making the necessary adjustments.

General Church contributors of 1946 who do not receive a statement should check the address shown on the latest receipts of the year. If the address shown there is incorrect or insufficient, our office should be notified of the correct address. Every effort will be made to secure missing addresses, but such statements will be delayed until solicitors or the contributors concerned supply the needed information. We ask the patient co-operation of our membership in this matter with the assurance that the quality of this service will be improved greatly by additional experience.

Our sincere appreciation is expressed to the many loyal and devoted members who participate financially in the ongoing work of the church and to our faithful solicitors, agents, and bishops who represent the General Church in this important aspect of our work.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By W. N. Johnson

There are all too many of us who have settled our lives into the task of merely doing chores—small tasks that are unworthy of us so long as we have within us the desire and ability to do bigger ones. The small chores are essential for us all, but we should graduate from them—climb higher and get a better vision of what is demanded most from us. After all, the small chores are mere accessories, not things at which to while away a life!—George Matthew Adams.

The McConleys Arrive

Good news comes to us in a letter from England:

170 Gravelly Hill,
Birmingham 23, Eng.

This is to advise you that we arrived safely in England on the afternoon of the 25th. We remained all night in London and came on to Birmingham the next afternoon and are safely housed at the Mission House at the above address, which for the time is being shared by us and the family of Brother Fred Davies.

We just got out of New York ahead of a 13-inch snow, and a blizzard just preceded our arrival in England. The countryside between London and Birmingham is blanketed with a good coat of snow, and it looks real wintry. The last two days it has thawed, but today we are getting a little snow again.

We have been duly registered, etc., and through the kindness of Brother and Sister Fred Davies, are being introduced to the routine of rationing, etc.

Over the week end, Brother Davies has arranged for an official "get-together" here of the bishop, the patriarch, the district presidents and the pastors of the mission, and the two missionaries. This should enable us to get off to a good start on a mutual understanding of the situation and of the program of rehabilitation on which the general church wishes to join hands with them in accomplishment.

After this week-end gathering, I will report officially on the contacts made in Washington, D. C., and in New York relating to relief in Europe and also on the situation here to date.

Will also take up with the Presiding Bishopric the method by which they will finance our stay here. Many war regulations are still in effect which I will explain.

We are in good health and are enjoying our work. So far, the situation from its outward aspects reminds me more of Australia than of any field in which I have labored hitherto.

We trust the work in America continues to go forward, and we can hardly realize that we are not there ourselves.

Praying that God's peace and blessing may be with you and soliciting the continued interest of your prayers,

In gospel bonds,

M. A. McConley

Co-operating With God

REPENTANCE

By Apostle Charles R. Hield

“. . . except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.”—Luke 13:5.

THE REFORMATION started as a protest against false or inadequate conceptions of repentance. Jerome, secretary of Pope Damasus (A. D. 382), had translated the Greek word for “repentance” into the Vulgate as poenitentian agere, which, translated into English, means “exercise penitence,” or “do penance.” Thus the principle early became involved with church discipline, and the ecclesiastical doctrine of penance, confession and making some satisfactory physical discomfort-offering for sin. Examples of this in history are the famous cases of kings who stood in sackcloth and ashes before the early ecclesiastical leaders. The belief in penance still persists, and many people sincerely believe in the efficacy of self-inflicted mental and physical suffering as reparation for past misdemeanors.

When Melancthon, professor of Greek in Wittenberg (1518), showed Luther that “do penance” was a wrong translation, and that the Greek word really and etymologically meant “change your mind,” the movement of the Reformation began, although accompanied by the Inquisition, killings, and religious wars.

“Penitence,” etymologically, signifies self-inflicted pain, grief, distress, etc., rather than a change from unworthy thoughts and actions to a life dedicated to good and righteous endeavors. Thus Latin Christianity stresses as man’s primary need the grief over sin, rather than abandonment of sin and the return of the sinner to God’s ways. “Re” in the Latin means “back again.”

This “return to God” of which the turning from sin is the negative aspect, was taught by all the prophets of the Old Testament as well as by Christ and his disciples in the New Testament. Man’s destiny always has been, is, and always will be, to be with God, as well as God with him. Not only is it his destiny, but it is his duty, responsibility, and opportunity. All through the Old Testament, the teaching of the prophets of God was that sin is the consequence of straying from God and his laws.

In the New Testament, repentance obviously was expected to result in a change of conduct. From being unfruitful they were to bear fruit. They were to bring forth works meet for repentance.

To repent we must be convinced that we are not living as God desires and intended for us to live. This living beneath our possibilities, God classifies as sin.

Dwarfed character and distorted vision are always displeasing to God. Force, power, poverty, greed, as well as the other ills of our civilization are the result of unrepentant pride of our world in human values and human methods. We expected the peace after World War I to usher in a Utopia. Such was not the case. Now after World War II, people are deeply concerned, fearful lest again we fail to obtain an abiding peace.

It is to be hoped that our civilization this time will not make the mistakes it did after the First World War, for there can be no lasting peace without righteousness (conformity to God’s laws). The world is not being punished for its sins, but by them. It is well known that when man obeys the laws of gravity, electricity, fire, etc., he may use these God-given powers to make life more secure and pleasant. Similarly, man must learn to obey the great spiritual laws of love, unselfishness, service, honesty, charity, good will, etc., if he would live “abundantly.” When man is indifferent and disregards the eternal and everlasting laws, he soon develops hatred, fears, selfishness, pride, egotism, etc., resulting in great world-wide calamities and tragedies. Those who refuse the rule of God, wound or kill themselves on the truths of his ways. In both world wars, the American people have been very fortunate not to have their cities destroyed. We have developed a false sense of security, so far from the horror at the battle front. We have been able to look at the pictures in our magazines of the ruins in the great cities of Europe and Japan with little concern or perturbation. Nor has the American public been particularly shocked at the loss of life on the American side during the war, for each year we lose more people through accidents at home, in industry, auto wrecks, etc., than we did as actual war casualties. In the next world war, scientists are telling us, one hundred jet bombs directed by radar could destroy one hundred of the main cities in the United States and leave us almost crippled. Some of the people in Bible times were congratulating themselves upon their not being killed in one of Pilate’s purges, and Jesus spoke to them reprovingly when he said: “Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish.” That admonition is still good today. Unless the people of the world turn to the laws of God and obey them, they also face possible extermination. When we plant potatoes in our gardens, we raise potatoes, not roses. Man has thoughtlessly gone through life believing that he could reap a civilization of peace, security, and good will when he has been sowing greed, selfishness, class hatred, force, etc. We have wanted the things in this world that we cannot have without war.

God rejoices, as does an earthly parent, when one of his children grows and develops as he longs for him to do. To God a wayward man is like a lost coin, a lost son, or a lost sheep. He thinks of us as plants that can grow and be profitable to the world. We have the capacity to grow and blossom as the lilies. We are not made to be inanimate like a stone wall. God thinks of us as fountains, and not as cisterns.

We all have the capacity to grow and to choose rightly. It was Plato who said that we have a potential faculty, everyone of us, to distinguish the lesser from the higher good, and the equally important capacity to renounce the former for the latter.

So often Christians misunderstand humility. It is not groveling in the dust but rather having a fine teachableness—an eagerness to grow and improve. We know that any improvement in the field of mechanics is accomplished by discarding some method which has been used in the past and accepting a new and better way. This has always been a recognized principle of growth. It was Socrates who said that only by a preceding conviction of ignorance can a man obtain knowledge. Therefore we must realize that all progress requires some form of breach with the past. In its broadest sense, therefore, repentance describes the act (of the soul) in breaking away from its unworthy past.

The repentance most stressed by Christ is one in which our minds, freed from less worthy actions, soon fix themselves in courageous action upon higher goals. It is more a "change to," rather than a "change from." Certainly the First Century Christians effected a definite break with the paganism of their past, and after their conversion, flung themselves wholeheartedly and unitedly into life-absorbing activity, that others might enjoy with them their new found freedom.

A knowledge of sin is possible without a turning from it. One may even leave off his evil ways for several reasons: because of a dread of punishment; because of a threatening opposing force, or fear of loss of friendship, etc. That is not true repentance. The Apostle Paul, after his conversion, not only stopped persecuting the Christians, he devoted his whole life to furthering the program of Christ. He lived courageously and dangerously a higher type of existence. His conversion caused him to be intellectually aware of the need of building the kingdom of God on earth, and he realized that if he was to fulfill his destiny, he must take some part in it. That is the destiny of all Christians throughout all ages. It is your destiny and my destiny. Repentance is not just pulling up the weeds and leaving the garden bare. It is also planting and cultivating a productive crop to drown out the weeds. We must "be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

Repentance is consciously seeking every day of our lives new and higher paths. To make progress purposefully today over yesterday is one of the highest forms of repentance. Many people do not like to admit faults. This belief in personal infallibility is one of the things which causes so many homes to break up in divorce, and is a big contributing factor to the loss of friendships. It is always good advice for any husband or wife, or for any business partner, sometimes to admit mistakes and say, "Well, I may be wrong." It might work in politics also. Carlyle spoke a great truth years ago when he said that the greatest of all faults was to be conscious of none.

Repentance is examining our own lives and deciding that our past is unworthy of our nature. We see the beauty, the blessedness, as well as the reasonableness and intelligence of God's ways, in contrast to the ugliness and wretchedness of sin. We determine to change our direction in life and to assist Christ in building a society governed by his laws. We look at the way of the world with its selfishness, greed, hate, pride, classes, passions, poverty, war, crime, and heartaches, and decide that God's way is a much better way.

Repentance is an acknowledgment that God's way is better than our way. Few people like to admit that, but such an admission is generally a healthy sign of progress. A true scientist is always humble and teachable. He never tries to dictate to God. He spends months and years, as did Edison, humbly seeking to discover and harness the laws of eternity. When one experiment failed, Edison humbly admitted that his plan was wrong, and he courageously set about trying a different method. Many a scientist has failed because he has sought to dictate the method by which he should discover things.

Repentance, therefore, is one of the steps in growth. It is one of the noblest qualities of man. What a confusion our lives would be if we could not change our past methods for better ones!

I well recall students at the university coming to me after class and asking me how they stood in the course. What was their grade? Sometimes I would have to inform them that so far they were not receiving a passing mark. I found a few willing to admit that they had not been studying hard. I always tried to encourage them, assuring them that better grades could be earned. As they left, sometimes a fellow would say: "You watch my smoke. I'm going to change my methods. I'm going to give up some of those nights at the movie; I'm going to cancel some of my engagements with the gang and the girl friend." Generally such a student did change and passed the course. That also is repentance. He determines that his past record has been unworthy of him, and he decides to buckle down and make something of himself.

Repentance, therefore, is changing our minds about continuing the type of life which we have been living. It is rejecting past unprofitable and sinful methods and determining to be a co-laborer with God and the rest of the Christian-living people in building a new, God-controlled society. Repentance is not merely accepting a historical Christ and continuing in sin. It is primarily the beginning, and then continuing, of a better and higher way of life. It is seeking to think and act in the way that God and Christ think and act. As Isaiah so well put it, it is ceasing to do evil and learning to do well.

Once a man really grasps the vision of the Christ—when he really comprehends the purposes of God—he is ashamed (he regrets the slow growth) of his past life and his past contribution. He is not satisfied with the status quo, either of himself or of the age in which he lives. He develops an all-consuming passion and faith in God's ways. He moves forward, confident that he and the world can be progressively better as together they follow the divine pattern. He acquires the zeal of a great inventor, a great experimenter. He is sure that a better way of life can be proved.

Repentance is a deep-seated sorrow because of the discrepancy between what we are and what God would have us be. It results in happy activity and positive determination to build God's will into our own lives and into the lives of others. As a man who finds that his watch is not keeping correct time sets it by the sun, not the sun by his defective watch, so the repentant man sets his life by the laws of his creator. When one looks at the ignorance, inequality, divorce, greed, hatred, hunger, exploitation, etc., in the world, even now when the world is hoping to build a new peace, it should not be difficult to see the far superior intelligence of God's ways over that of the world and Satan. Repentance is changing to the way of the Lord. Christians should feel some of the urge that John the Baptist felt when he called the people of his day to repent and prepare the way of the Lord.

The whole ministry of Jesus may be described as a ministry to change the direction of people's lives. ". . . I am not come," he said, "to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." (Matthew 9: 13.)

Repentance is not some one supernatural cosmic catastrophe, ushering in the kingdom of God. It is a series of adjustments that we make as long as life lasts. Repentance is not merely one of the rounds in a ladder; it is more like the uprights that extend the whole length of the ladder. We must be daily aware of our faults and shortcomings and bear them impatiently—bear them until the faults are changed to virtues. Nor does our greatest glory consist in never falling, but rather in rising every time we may fall. A person who admits his inferiority (that he is not living up to his best capacity) and then consistently does something about it, develops superiority. One needs to make a conscious effort at spiritual growth, just as one does to become an aviator, a surgeon, or a radio expert.

By joining Christ's church, and with due regard to his laws, God gives us power to become (not by one single act) "a little lower than the angels." (Hebrews 2: 7.)

Repentance is to stop doing anything that will not help build the kingdom! Christianity is a call to stop carnal sins, but it is also a call to build a godlike society. The Christian standard of the Christ is not only are we good or bad, but his test is, are we helping build the kingdom of God? Jesus regarded the piety of his age as fundamentally perverted. I wonder if he does not do so today. "Repent ye," was a summons for man to build on new foundations. Following the Christ and his teachings, one should gain new attitudes on everything. Life takes on different values and hues as one comes to a better appreciation of what friendship is, the meaning of love, pity, sympathy, co-operation, justice, right, duty, service, brotherhood, stewardship, etc.

Our Lord asks us to repent, not to shame us, but to make us realize our heritage, our rights, our responsibilities as his children. In the Christ we see a demonstration of the possibilities which we partly have within us, also. A person who really grasps the beauty and intelligence of God's ways can no longer be stolid and indifferent to sin. His intellect will function constructively. His emotions will be aroused, and he will be given power to live better and to act more righteously.

Nor does repentance require a withdrawal from life, shutting oneself up in some cave, or in some cell, there to inflict mental and physical torture upon body and soul. It is primarily substituting higher values for lower ones. It is allowing the fulfillment of God's purpose in us, and that purpose can only be fulfilled as we go out into the world and minister to other people. It is not so much a surrender of things, as it is a surrender of some of the worldly standards which we have falsely thought were desirable. It is as Christ said, like being "born again." Many young Russians are going "all out" for Communism. The truly repentant Christian goes "all out" for Christianity.

God, like a good parent, takes the initiative, also, in pleading with us to see the reasonableness of the higher values obtained through living his laws. He sent the Christ to us in order to share with us his knowledge; in order that we, too, may have the opportunity to live more "abundantly." A divided personality means loss of happiness and loss of our highest effectiveness. Not to be friendly and to work with God is to be at war with our own souls.

The call to repent, to change our present life for better ways, should not be sour news but good news. Just as we are being urged, in this reconstruction period, to budget our income and not to spend too lavishly in order that later we may spend it more wisely upon the things that we most need and want, so similarly God asks us to repent, not to cramp our style or our development, but in order that we may live more happily and more effectively later on, in a truly God-controlled society.

There is a place for godly sorrow, like regret for a wrong done to a kind and loyal friend, or regret that one has not given more of his time and talents to build God's program into our society. As in the case of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16: 19-31), it is regrettable that this sorrow may not come until after death. One can hardly agree with Virgil, however, who said to Dante, speaking of sins, "One glance at them and then pass on." Yet excessive remorse and grief over past behavior may often end in phantasmal fears or morbid imaginings. This type of sorrow may often turn to despair, and it may even paralyze the moral energies and can hurry its victim into irreparable disaster, as it did Lady Macbeth and Richard III in Shakespeare's plays. Nor should we completely disavow regret, for that causes some people to go to the other extreme, as demonstrated today by some of our cults. The Apostle Paul distinguishes carefully between a sorrow that ends in death, and godly sorrow that results in a repentance; resulting, then, in a new, higher, and happier type of existence. Conflicts, poverty, war, moral and criminal sins are caused by wrong attitudes. Repentance asks a change in that attitude, that the sinful life may be no more desired. In our complex civilization today, one cannot rightly say, as some do, that he will live only to himself and for himself. This type of individual tries to maintain that he is committing no sin and therefore will not take part in the struggle against evil. Christ, however, is most critical of people who are neither hot nor cold to his program. He says, "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot."—Revelation 3: 15. Our God is a God who takes sides, and he also expects us to do so. A man cannot be indifferent to God's plan for the universe and be right. Our task is to learn better continually the will of God and to build that will into our world. One can hardly expect admittance into a heavenly society, without having learned to be firm and positive in his obedience to God and his ways here upon the earth.

Repentance cannot be imposed from without. It is what must be done in man and not for him. No one can repent for us. At Pentecost the people cried: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts 2:37.) They did not say, "Who will save us?"

We need a realization of what the new life will do for our loved ones, our homes, and our communities—the happiness we confidently hope to see in a clean, intelligent, righteous, and peaceful community.

If we follow Christ, our lives, now so foolish, wasteful, frivolous, unprofitable, unfruitful, and self-satisfied, will be changed. We will resolve to join with Christ and other good people to build his kingdom here upon the earth. No truly repentant man will accept the gift of God and refuse to work with him. True repentance transforms man into a dynamo for good. It reinforces the will with boundless energy, it lifts the eyes to new visions of ethical and social achievements.

Many Christians today act as if they were doing God a great favor to join a church. They give grudgingly a sort of mental assent to participate in future rewards. Discipleship to Christ's followers should always be a state of becoming, not of being. It should be a state of attaining, not of attainment. Suppose the remaining eleven apostles (Judas being a suicide), after they had lived with Christ and worked with him, had gone back home and again resumed their former occupations. Would they have won the approval of their Heavenly Father? Yet thousands of people, Christians, some of them, today spend their time indifferent to the type of life and program urged by the Christ. They do not accept much of Christ's standard of living. They deny that God's program will work and refuse to cooperate with God in bringing it to pass. One wonders how, upon death, many of these people anticipate that they will then suddenly become content, happy, and satisfied in a God-controlled society. They were positive in their conviction that they could not be happy here in this life, assisting in building the kingdom. Paul tells the Philippians that they should "work out" their salvation. This would seem to indicate that approval by God comes as the crowning achievement of a life lived in accordance with God's laws. Salvation extends into eternity, but we need not wait until death to enjoy many of the fine benefits of eternal living. Eternal life is not primarily a life in which God meets our every need, but it is one in which we join him in his task.

No formal, ceremonial, racial, or ancestral claims guarantee salvation. One cannot come to God by proxy. We can expect citizenship in heaven and an opportunity to share in its glories, only if made fit for it in character, ideals, and conduct here.

From the call to repentance, none are exempt. When we stand up and measure ourselves beside the spiritual stature of the Christ, we see how far short we are of our possibilities. No man is completely righteous. "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." The truly repentant person can never be complacent and satisfied with his present status or the status of the spiritual growth of our world.

Repentance means changing from not co-operating with God, to co-operating with him. It means a decision to change from not being a contributing or productive member in time, talent, money, etc., to an allegiance with a group of people who are dedicating their lives to divine purposes. Without this definite resolve, repentance is like a man putting out to sea with full sail and no destination.

The repentant person will not let anything call him back to the old selfish methods of life. Unless there is constant growth for the better, there will be no kingdom of God. "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" has been the call of Christ's followers through all ages. Man must be changed if we are to have lasting peace and harmony here upon the earth, and also if we are to enter into God's kingdom in the hereafter. Our biggest immediate responsibility is the right, the privilege, and the duty to build that society here.

God, as the loving Father, is always ready to help those who will mend their ways. With God, as with our earthly parents, to forgive without repentance would be immoral. If we are not repentant enough to work in love and peace with Christ, and with others seek to carry out God's plan, we are not repentant enough to be forgiven.

All have the capacity to be just and to be wise stewards. We all can learn to be obedient, kind, temperate, merciful, tolerant, patient, virtuous, and long-suffering. All are entitled to happiness, but happiness is the achieving of something good.

Some think that sin and selfishness rule the world. No, this is an existence where, in the long run, selfishness, greed, force, and power always fail. Our World War II is another proof of this truth. The American eagle is fast disappearing, and the peaceful turtle dove continues to multiply. Lions are not nearly as numerous as they once were, while our wild rabbits may even become pests in some areas because of their large numbers. The dinosaur is already extinct, as are the great mastodon elephants, while our domestic horse and cow are among the mainstays of human work and food. The wolf and the fox are being hunted down by man and exterminated, while if one is to judge by the dogs and cats on most of our city blocks, these little domestic pets are increasing rapidly.

We are living in a great age! No greater opportunity ever came to any people than comes to Christians today to change their lives from what they are to what God would like to have them be. The people of the future, our children, and our grandchildren, will be vitally affected by our decisions and acts today. If future generations are freed from a third world war, if they have an opportunity to live, develop, and grow in a righteous society, it will be quite largely because we, today, have heeded the admonition of Christ to follow him. Repentance, let us repeat, is a pleading call by the Christ to his followers to change from a life of non-co-operation to one of co-operation.

We were all thrilled during World War II when Winston Churchill spoke to the world, and particularly the British people, at the time of the blitz and the impending invasion of Great Britain. He urged them to stand fast, to demonstrate to the world that this was their greatest hour. If the British Empire lasted down thousands of years, the future would look back upon this time, the days about which he spoke, as some of the most fateful and courageous days of the world's history.

The world may well look back to this reconstruction period after this Second World War with much the same appraisal. If our world will repent, turn to Christ and build his kingdom, these years will be the most fateful and determining ones of all civilization. We cannot, we dare not, fail in this challenge of our Lord and Master!

Do not attempt to do a thing unless you are sure of yourself, but do not relinquish it simply because someone else is not sure of you.—Stewart E. White.

Tribute to Margaret Wilcox

In the passing of Margaret Virginia Wilcox on January 17, the Washington, D. C., Branch lost a loyal member. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in the summer of 1919 at Deer Park, Pennsylvania, by Daniel McGregor. Always, she gave generously of her time and talents to the church and its members. In life she was a beautiful and shining example of the fruits of the gospel.

Many tributes in the form of flowers, messages of condolence, and letters were received by her family at the time of her death. These were greatly appreciated, but as it is impossible to acknowledge each one individually, her husband, George H. Wilcox; mother, Mrs. Rebecca Froyd; and brother, Lawrence Froyd, take this means of expressing their gratitude for these remembrances.

A Member for Forty Years

The Herald is a great comfort to me as I do not get to attend church often. I do desire to be faithful to this true work of God; I rejoice in the restored gospel, which I accepted forty years ago. I have never regretted having done so.

God has helped me many times when I was in need. I am trying to repay his kindness to me by doing as many things as I can that he asks his people to do. Recently I was healed of a strep infection through prayer and the use of consecrated oil. I am glad to again testify of the Master's goodness to me. Surely there are blessings for all who obey and serve him.

Grateful to Friends

I wish to thank all of my friends for their help, encouragement, and direction. Because of them, I have received many blessings from God. I am seventeen and have not had many spiritual experiences, but I have learned much from the testimonies of my elders.

On Sunday, March 2, I am to be ordained a deacon. Pray for me that I may fulfill my duties in this great work.

Human Nature and Society

By J. A. Koehler

Number 28 in a series of radio addresses on the subject:
"The Social Philosophy of the Modern Prophet"

WHY DO BIRDS build nests? The only answer we know is, To rear their young. That may be repetitive, since a nest is a place prepared by a bird for the rearing of its young, but it is nevertheless the answer. The truth is that that is about all we need to know about nest-building; for birds would get along very well with their nest-building even if we did not know that much.

Why do acorns send roots down into the soil and leaves up into the air? They do it because that is the only way acorns may come to be oaks. They do it because they are constituted to do that, and only that. That is the only way acorns can live their lives.

We have learned that all living things just naturally reach out for or try to do that which is requisite to their existence. All living things include man. Man reaches out as naturally as does a bird or an acorn or any other form of life for the things upon which his existence depends.

One of these things is society; which, as human affairs develop, or as civilization marches on, comes to comprise most things that are requisite to truly "human" life. And by "society" we mean more than mere association; we mean more than family life; we mean organized community life.

Everyone knows that laws and customs are necessary to the preservation of the life of a group of human beings. In truth the codification of laws or the setting up of standards of conduct for men in association is the very beginning of society, in the sense in which we now use the word. And wherever there is evidence of the existence of civilized man, there is evidence of group life, or of association based upon codes of laws or rules of conduct for men in association—we find evidences of some grade of society.

Horses like to rub noses even though they are in want neither of food nor anything else that is requisite to their existence. The gregariousness of horses, as of some other animals, is not an impulsion to co-operation in the sense that human society is. For human society, or the society of truly civilized men, is voluntary co-operation through specialization, or through the division of labor.

Civilized men help each other through group life in quite different ways from what buffaloes do when they take positions to repel the attacks of wolves on their herds. Human society on its advanced levels is a conscious endeavor to grow, or, as Jesus put it, to "become," through the sharing of individual or personal experiences. Besides economic efficiency and protection against enemies, human society on its higher levels is formed intentionally because there are forces for the enrichment of personal life that do not operate except in society, or in social organization.

"How is it then, brethren?" asked St. Paul, that it is "when ye come together" that certain spiritual forces do their work. The Church is a kind of society. It is "the habitation of God through the Spirit." It is designed to be a stage-setting for the operation of forces that enrich human life.

But electricity, for illustration, cannot, so to speak, manifest itself effectively through improperly formed apparatuses; when these apparatuses are constructed of bad material or lacking parts or what. The vital forces in our own bodies do not work effectually in some cases of organic disorder. It is a common thing for the mind to be sluggish because bodily conditions are bad. So it is as respects society. It must be properly constituted if the forces that enrich human life are to have free play.

Man is related by nature to two worlds: the natural or physical world and the social or ethical world. His ability to produce food and clothing and medicine and other things required by his nature and the circumstances of his being is conditioned first in his mastery of the forces of the natural world. But we are discovering, at long last, that physical world masteries must be made effectual for human life enrichment through social masteries; through the right conduct of the business of the community or of organized society. And out of that necessity and conviction there have come our modern social philosophies.

In the early stages of civilization, we groped rather blindly for a pattern of rightly constituted society. We tried and we erred. We kept on trying. And we tried because there is no way to abundant life except rightly constituted human society. In the course of human events, many forms of society have come into existence. But, as we see quite clearly in these times of calamity, these modes of society, without exception, are inadequate. Not one accords with the absolute requirements of human nature and being. Some may fatten the body, but none enrich the soul.

So this is pre-eminently the age of social philosophy. Our social inventions testify of our belief in our capacity to achieve a society that is adapted to the purpose of enriching human life. And that capacity, together with the imperative needs of the times, is the explanation of our present interest in social philosophy. For no society can be formed so as to enrich human life except through the implementation of a true philosophy of social life.

I said that a truly human society, a system of social institutions, is formed voluntarily; by an act of free moral will—since any truly human society is grounded in considerations of the morally right. If a religion is true it is because it accords with the requirements—especially the moral requirements—of man's nature and being. If religion did not accord with the requirements of man's moral (which is his spiritual) nature, it could not satisfy his requirements; it could not enrich his life. It could not save him in the Kingdom of God.

It is for that reason that the genius of true Bible religion, from beginning to end, has had for its sphere of action human society. It is for that reason that religion is, in the very nature of things, the all-inclusive interest of man. Its purpose is to conform personal life, family life, industrial life, political life—life in all its phases—to the principles of the morally right. And that means that the purpose of true religion is to conform human society to the will of God.

In later talks I will endeavor to set forth clearly the means, measures, and methods through which Restoration religion hopes to institute or inaugurate or found or originate the mode of society in which it maintains that human nature can best fulfill itself. I will discuss society as the means of cultivating the soul, society and personality, society the stage of moral action, and kindred questions.

Restoration, as we say in another talk, is the modern phase of the religion of which prophetic Judaism is the first. In the very beginning, the genius of that religion said, "It is not good that man should be alone." It adventured outright in society planning as the necessary means to its ends—which is the enrichment of human life. It maintained continually, almost constantly, that human society must be an intentional embodiment of the moral order of the universe, if man is to be saved in the Kingdom of God.

As in the beginning, so in the end, the genius of that religion regards the family, the Sabbath, the State—it regards human society in its totality and in its unity—as its field of action. And it makes life in society—its prosperity, its peacefulness, its happiness and all—the test of its truth. As Moses and Isaiah said, so says Restoration: the glorious social estate that is the goal of human endeavor is to be a religious achievement.

Is it not evident that such a religion must explain itself by revealing its concept of rightly organized human relations or of rightly constituted society? Is it not evident that the philosophy of that religion must be at once a social philosophy?

That is what Restoration is: it is an explanation of human society (necessarily) in terms of human nature. It is more than that. It is an adventure in the mode of human society that accords with the requirements of man's nature and the present state of his being. That is the essence of Restoration, the theme of which is human nature and society.

Feels a Responsibility

Commenting on "New Horizons," Mrs. Lavella Minter, Aledo, Illinois, writes:

"I couldn't sit back and enjoy it every week without telling you how wonderful I think it is. Some people always turn to the illustrated sections of the daily paper first. I'm that way about the 'New Horizons' section of the Herald. It may be that I'm anxious to see if some of my Graceland friends have written articles for that particular issue. I was graduated from Graceland in 1937. The class of '36-'37 gave such outstanding men to our church and to the Graceland faculty. I'm very proud to be a member of God's church and pray that I will never do anything to disgrace its name. Best wishes to the Herald for its continued success."

The familiar quotation, "Clothes make the man," is both true and untrue. The purpose of this article is to prove that clothes do make the man or, at least, help to do so.

When we have an important task to perform, it helps greatly for us to have the feeling that we are properly groomed for the occasion. The appropriate dress engenders confidence, poise, and liberty of expression and action. If we feel like "a nobody," we're defeated before we begin. The personality of a child may be spoiled if he is forced to wear improper clothes; he must dress in keeping with the style of those his age to feel comfortable.

In the same manner as we are affected emotionally and psychologically by the type and style of our clothes, we express our personality by the appearance we make. A girl in overalls or slacks unconsciously assumes an "overall" gait and posture. Recently, I sat in a balcony awaiting a Rubinoff concert. The school-girl ushers wore formals, and it was a pretty sight to watch them in action. One girl was particularly attractive—until she walked. Her gait betrayed her; it was evident that she was more accustomed to slacks than an evening dress.

Dr. Floyd McDowell has said that every person must eventually find the answer to his own problem, but a good criterion by which to decide is this: "Will my decision in any way affect my influence for good?" It is my observation that women appearing in slacks and abbreviated sports clothes before reunion assemblies as leaders of services do not command the respect and attention that they should have to put their message across to the listeners. Those who are leaders should wear clothes that express poise, refinement, and dignity.

It's a Good Life . . .

By LOUISE SCOTT WRIGLEY

I recently overheard a conversation between two collegiates. They were discussing the fact that the world was "going to the dogs," and there was little but disappointment in life for anyone.

My heart ached for them—this young man and woman to whom all life's treasures belong—and I wondered if college could be making them bitter.

"No," I told myself, "these two are not typical of church youth. Most young people go to college and learn to enjoy the richness and fullness of everyday living with all its experiences. This knowledge does not spoil their zest for living and their faith in the beauty of personal experiences with nature and their fellow humans. College strengthens them in their purposes and enables them to see ahead more clearly and plan happier lives.

Yet, I could not get these two out of my mind. They were so young—and they were so bitter. Possibly they were not speaking of what was in their hearts, but how else could I judge them? They were so serious—and so disillusioned. They sounded as if they were talking in loud voices to cover the secret fear in their hearts—to reassure themselves and to dispel that sick longing that lay like a cold stone in their stomachs. What a tragedy that youth should know this fear!

These two who cried out against life and could find nothing good in it lacked security within themselves—and tragically enough, they are not alone. They have many counterparts. Too often we dismiss this attitude among young people with the excuse that "they'll grow out of it," but many carry the same attitude all through their adult life.

We complicate our own lives—God doesn't do it. Why can't we be an appreciative people and enjoy a lovely sunset, a beautiful day, or an unexpected blessing? Why must we be "sophisticated"? It's a lot of trouble, and we usually look silly to the people who understand our motives possibly better than we do ourselves. It's like covering a bald spot with a toupee. Take the false hair off—nothing there but a big, shiny, conspicuous empty spot. Wouldn't it be better to get busy and "grow" something there which would be sturdy and alive and part of us? A false manner, like false hair, is apt to slip.

We pray for those who are physically ill, of course, but what about those who are confused and whose senses of values are distorted? They are just as deserving of our prayers. They need help just as surely as if their distress were physical.

Man is essentially creative. God went that far to make us like him, but there are more kinds of creation and creative hobbies than are commonly thought about. We all have some creative ability—possibly not in art or drama or music—but what about the delectable lemon pie fresh out of the oven? What about the carefully laid gardens that add so much to this earth's beauty? What about the nurse whose care enables a patient to build back a strong, normal body? What about the simply expressed personal note of sympathy that goes out to a friend? And what about the apple-cheeked, charming little girl who is a delight to all who meet her? Her mother and father have been "creating" her for all of her seven years.

I know a woman who has a meager widow's pension to live on and four young mouths to feed. The children aren't dressed beautifully, but they are warm and clean and well-loved. This woman figures she had "a good life" because none of her children lie pale and white in a hospital bed with some child-maiming disease. There are those who would tag this woman as too ignorant to know any better. Actually, isn't it rather that she's taking it all mighty well and keeping her countenance cheerful? She's wise enough to count her blessings and be thankful for them.

And the blind lady who lives near me—her appreciation of life is amazing! When a group of blind people with which she is associated meet at her home, the whole house rings with their laughter. Currently, they are planning a play to be given for the group of women who have "adopted" them. Here is a special brand of courage which enables them to get up on a strange stage and carry through such a stunt. They eagerly accept the challenge it offers. Their eyes are sightless, but their hearts can see.

How lovely life is! God didn't choose a few and shower all the good things on them. The wide, green country lanes are free. The cascading, musical notes of the birds fall upon any listening ear. Cherry

The Trouble-Shooter

--of Business and Religion

QUESTION: Why are the business ethics of Latter Day Saints no higher than the ethics of other people? Many of our members rationalize their thinking until they accept standards denounced by the teachings of Jesus Christ. Nonmembers shrug, "Sure, it's an admirable plan [Zion], but you Latter Day Saints don't live up to what you say you believe."

ANSWER: By C. B. Hartshorn

The assumption of the question covers a broad field. We hesitate to answer for all Latter Day Saints, for really we know so few. Our recollection is that in some communities and with certain people the Saints are held in high esteem. The humanity left in those "called to be Saints" has left a stain on the name we bear among others. The direct charge that sets off our members—whether merchants, farmers, or simply buyers of goods and services—in contrast with all nonmembers in the whole wide world is not susceptible of proof. It is in the realm of opinion and prejudice.

But let us accept the challenge as made in good faith and examine our defense. This we know: to the extent that this charge is true, we have betrayed the church of Christ and the counsel of his Word. We need to preach more repentance and less of baptism and Zion till this condition is corrected among us. For as we face life with this stigma over us, we need to be reminded that except our righteousness shall exceed that of worldly pharisees, we shall not enter the kingdom.

A part of facing life is to acknowledge that socially we are an immature and impatient generation. One of the tests of maturity is the ability to work for more distant goals. Children want what they want now and will have it or else. To get a vision of the ideal society of brotherhood means a call for action. Each Saint must "leave all" which inhibits the ideal life and follow the new light of the gospel unwaveringly. Such a hope has come to all who have been converted. By this old-fashioned term, "converted," we mean love God with all our heart, soul, and mind, and our neighbor as ourself. When the unreality of actual conversion—humanity with its wavering, vacillating, irregular progress—comes to those who are reborn hopefuls, it is depressing and at times overwhelming.

The truth seems to be that many of us have been nurtured on the faith that baptism is a miracle-working formula. That the love which filled our hearts then will permanently replace greed, lust, and hate, to which even the eight-year-old child is not a stranger. This type of transformation was never promised nor intended. Even those whom Jesus healed or raised to life were still subject to the law of death. Latter Day Saints are likewise subject to the law of growth. Normal growth does not take place in the life of the unweaned, sheltered, and domineered child.

The best advertisement for any business is the product itself. The finished product of the tavern condemns it. The church also is known by its fruits. Zion cannot be redeemed except by compliance with the law of the celestial kingdom. In business acumen, we should be able to match the best the world has to offer. Our excellence should be in the quality of our fairness, justice, mercy, and other human-interest concerns. Every Latter Day Saint who turns a shady trick in a business deal, who uses deceptive or hard methods for financial gain, lets down every other member of the fellowship of Christ. We feel betrayed.

Our confidence in the church and in religion is shaken. But Zion is based on divine principles, and God is true though every man be a liar. Our aim should be higher than the target we expect to hit to compensate for the pull of gravity on the flying arrow. Believe in the reality of the coming kingdom for we are saved by hope. It may seem delayed, but it cannot be destroyed nor God's Word made void.

Yes, Zion is an admirable plan. It is a blueprint of the ideal life—the brotherhood of man. Many have failed to catch the vision, and without vision the people perish. Some of those who saw the light have lost their grip on the rod of iron that leads along the river of life. Many need training, opportunity, and leadership to manifest the better way of life. Large bodies move slowly. Great institutions need much support. Our impatience should be with our own progress not with our collective or potential strength, for that we cannot measure.

Satan is trying hard to discourage us, asking, "Where is the promise of His coming? All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." The Prophet Elijah succumbed to this discouragement when he said, "I, even I only, am left and they seek my life." Then the Lord in compassion showed him that there were 7,000 in that little community who had not bowed the knee to the god Baal.

Let us honestly admit that there is too much truth in the question at the head of this article for us to ignore. Nonmembers may shrug their shoulders at the failures of some Latter Day Saints, but in all fairness let us call them to witness that the trouble is not in our teachings but in spite of them. The conduct of some is not the final test of gospel merit. If the principles we teach are divine, and if they will help thousands along the narrow way to life eternal, then it will do the same for every other man or woman who will apply them. Therefore, with the Psalmist we can proclaim:

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

"But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

It's a Good Life

picking time and "one in your-mouth-for-every-one-in-the-basket" isn't anybody's special privilege. Anyone can get a "noseful" of pure perfection when he strolls by a heavily laden, perfumed lilac bush, and feasts his eyes at nature's riotous hodgepodge of gay color and delicate pastel in the spring garden, or experience the fun of coming unexpectedly upon a clump of pussy willow bushes and gathering an armful to take home.

Anyone can enjoy the lackadaisical swaying of bright tulip-heads in the April breeze, and know the fun of holding a tiny, wiggly ball of fur that's all eyes and tail and answers to "Puppy." Anyone can feel the warmth of a friend's smile or see a sermon in a lovely, old tree. There is personal wisdom for all in a church service, and each may find peace on his knees before his God.

Life may not be a bed of roses, but let's pick the ones that do grow for us, drawing their beauty and perfection into our hearts to be with us always.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Benson of Independence, Missouri, wish to express their appreciation for the many cards, gifts, and remembrances they received on their golden wedding anniversary.

More Than Eggs and Bonnets

By Lillian Maxwell

Saints Herald

Volume 94 March 29, 1947 Number 13

TO MOM it means a perky flower-bedecked bonnet, to Junior a hunt for rainbow-colored eggs, to Dad a prophecy of spring fishing to come. In a nutshell, that is the extent of the observance, thought, and commemoration Easter receives from many an American family.

It is difficult for the human mind to project itself back some 2,000 years and suddenly know of assurance that the resurrection really happened, that it was as real as tomorrow's dawn. Through the years the holiday, Easter, has become so enshrouded with tradition, myth, and modern fashion that we recognize but dimly the powerful event it signifies.

Celebration of Easter is synonymous with the return of Spring. This is as it should be. Both indicate the return of life to a dead winter world. Even the most harried city-dweller feels a thrilling surge of joy at the giddy sweetness of fresh peach blossoms, at the provoking warmth of spring sunshine.

Yet were Easter celebrated only for the recognition of Spring's return, it would be only a gay festival time, devoid of meaning and hollow. But Easter is more than a festival. It holds at its heart's center the awful triumph of life over death. It is certain that no one saw the physical regeneration of Jesus, but therein lies the challenge to Christian faith. In the event lies the constantly renewed hope of mankind.

Even more important, Easter serves as a yearly reminder that a life can possess qualities which render it immune to destruction even by death. Jesus succeeded in living so abundantly that death was impotent to affect it.

The call of Easter is an urgent one to Latter Day Saints. The entire Restoration Movement is caught up in the simple but powerful words, "This is my beloved Son, hear him!" Joseph Smith heard them as a youth of fifteen in his experience in the grove. That ringing statement makes our church a Christ-centered church. It demands that our first loyalty be to Jesus Christ. As youth pledge allegiance to him, Easter, which epitomizes His immortality comes as a renewed challenge to live lives of a quality that cannot die.

* Cover Picture

When Arthur Beverage sent the picture used for our cover cut this week, he did not give it a title, nor specify any particular use. It seemed so appropriate, however, to the time of General Conference, that we felt there was an immediate place for it. Conference is a meeting ground of both history and contemporary events. Here at the Auditorium will be gathered, not only people from every part of the country and from other countries, too, but also the spirit of the past. Nauvoo Temple, Kirtland Temple, the modern Nauvoo Chapel, and silhouettes of other churches go into the attractive montage the artist has created. This is a representation of the spirit of gathering in which our people come to our greatest reunion, the General Conference.

* Every road has its pleasant level stretches, rough spots, steep hills, dangerous curves, and many changes of scene; and it must be traveled in all kinds of weather. So it is with life: you cannot always have what you wish, but you will be wise to make the best of what you get.

General Conference Reports

EARLY PUBLICATION of the General Conference reports has been requested by numbers of members who expressed the belief that it would be beneficial to give them sufficient time to read the reports before time to vote on them. The First Presidency has made an effort to meet this request, but found circumstances prevented the preparation of many reports in time for publication in a single issue of the HERALD.

Accordingly, it has been considered best to print in this issue the reports that are ready at the present time. With a few exceptions, those given in this issue consist principally of textual matter. The tabular material, reports of the Quorum of Twelve, and some others, will be planned for the issue of April 5.

Thanks are expressed to all who have co-operated in making these reports available. With increased effort, we trust it will be possible to have all reports on hand for early publication for future conferences.

VISITORS to the General Conference who arrive without reservations for rooms are running a risk of disappointment and discomfort. Housing officials are frank in admitting that they have reached an inelastic limit in attempting to find rooms to fill all applications. They are unhappy to see so many people disappointed, but the situation cannot be remedied at present. There is no lack of the old-time hospitality; what is missing is the old-time space.

THE AUDITORIUM is a silent petitioner for its own completion. Who can behold its massive walls and not long for the time when they will be clothed in beauty? The dignity of the people, the prestige of the church, our responsibility toward ourselves, all call for it. It must not be hastened out of due time; the means should be gathered in advance; the work should be done when maximum results can be obtained for investments in material and labor. But the project should never be far from the thoughts of the people.

IDENTIFICATION is important, and we look for signs and symbols on great buildings to mark them. In this respect, especially, our Auditorium needs something. There is no religious symbol on it. To the casual visitor, it might be a secular structure of some sort. And when he goes inside, he finds no reminder of the Christ to whose work and mission it is dedicated. Is this as it ought to be? Some think not.

What religious symbol should be on such a building as the Auditorium? What should proclaim to the world its special and sacred purpose?

For such a need, symbolism is indicated; but when symbols are selected, care must be exercised. The Cross is the symbol of the Christ, but it has been so much used that it is regarded by some as the identifying mark of Catholic, Episcopalian, and Lutheran churches; however, it is not their exclusive property.

Among the Hebrews, the use of the triangle in connection with the name of God goes back to ancient times; and two interlocking equilateral triangles form the Star of David that appears on many synagogues. Jews very early used a circular radiance, indicative of his endlessness, around the consonants JHVH of His Name.

Looking through the sources, one finds nothing adequate to symbolize the name of God. The trefoil is used in minor decoration as an indication of the Trinity, and other devices.

But should it not be possible to go back to the very beginnings of God's dealings with Israel, and find something that the world has all but forgotten? Certainly one of the greatest and most effective symbols for divinity ever devised (or manifested) is described in Exodus 13: 21,

And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light.

Moses established the tabernacle at a distance from the camp of Israel, but in a place where every man, standing at the door of his tent, could see it. And before the door of the tabernacle burned the perpetual flame that appeared as a pillar of smoke or cloud by day and as a beacon of light at night. Some passages of Scripture describe it as a mystic fire, like that of the Burning Bush that Moses saw; and others would leave the modern reader to believe that wise Moses kept a brazier burning before the tabernacle as a reverence to God and a reminder to the people.

The dramatic power of that symbol of God captured the imagination of Israel. It was the sign of their liberation from Egyptian bondage. It was the witness of the divine love and the hope of the Promised Land. It was the presence of Jehovah.

And the light of that pillar of fire has shone down to our own time. For who can sing,

Let the fiery, cloudy pillar
Guard us to that holy home without a feeling of the eternal pilgrimage in his heart, and nostalgia for the celestial homeland of the soul?

It is possible—yes, usual—to combine elements in symbolism. Perhaps some artist, employing the ancient conventions, can create a new figure, including the ascending spiral of flame, the radiance of holy light, the circle eternity, with some suggestion of the Cross of the Son.

General Conference Communion Service

In order to preserve the dignity appropriate to the occasion, it is of major importance that there should be the least possible disturbance during the General Conference Communion service, which is being held at the Auditorium, Sunday, April 6. We are therefore asking that those intending to participate in this service shall be in their places by 9 a. m., or as soon thereafter as they possibly can. Preliminary music will begin at 9 a. m. The presiding officers and serving ministry will take their places at about 9:20, at which time all doors will be closed. There will be no standing room. An additional Communion service has been arranged for the Stone Church at 9:40 a. m., and the order of service will be as nearly identical with that at the Auditorium as conditions will permit.

We feel sure that in view of the very earnest desire for the blessing of our Heavenly Father which is shared by all who expect to participate in these services, those concerned will be in their places in the Auditorium in good time or will attend the Stone Church service without resentment at their exclusion from the larger gathering.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

European Relief

Conference visitors are urged to bring with them various gifts of clothing for the relief of Saints in Europe.

Addresses of these needy members are now becoming available, and the Presiding Bishopric has arranged with Elder L. R. Holmes, the ladies of the Campus Shop, and other Independence helpers to sort, wrap, and send all suitable clothing which may be contributed. For the convenience of this group, the clothes should be delivered directly to the Campus early in the conference.

Later, it will probably be possible to organize this relief work so that direct contact will be had between groups in the United States and the Saints in Europe, but for the present our best means of giving this urgently needed aid without undue duplication is by joint effort at conference time.

We greatly appreciate the splendid help which has already been given, and we earnestly solicit your further aid.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The Church Seal

Having occasion to look up our records as to the Church Seal, I find that on April 8, 1874, a "committee of three was appointed to draft a style and form of church seal"; that "on the same day the committee reported a design for the church seal, with legend, date, and motto as follows:

"Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Emblem, a lion and a lamb lying down at rest. Motto, "Peace." "Incorporated 1872." The report was adopted, and the committee empowered to purchase the seal.

In 1917 General Conference Minutes, we find:

Adoption of the following was moved and seconded:

Moved to amend as follows General Conference resolution No. 163, referring to the church seal.

Third paragraph, second line, insert, "a child" after emblem, and cross out, "lying down at rest," following the word "lamb."

Third line same paragraph insert "and 1891" after, "Incorporated 1872."

Paragraph as amended will read, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Emblem, a child, a lion and a lamb. Motto, 'Peace.' Incorporated 1872 and 1891."

A motion to refer to the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric with power to act, was adopted.

We have not found anything to show what the quorums named did under their "power to act," though we may suppose that the design used now for many years was produced by them.

The church was incorporated in Illinois in 1872. That corporation still maintains perpetual legal existence. In 1891 the church in Iowa was incorporated in that State. And it is obvious that the leading men were of the opinion that the second (Iowa) incorporation superseded the former (Illinois). That may have been the intention of the church administrative officers, though there have developed many legal difficulties since then, not essential to explain in this article.

The Iowa corporation, being limited to fifty years by its terms, as also by the law of that State, it became necessary to reincorporate in Iowa in 1941, which was done.

It is apparent that at some more recent time the seal now used on our letter heads has been modified, as it obviously does not comply with the specifications set out in the action of the church in 1871 or in the proposed action in 1917. The present seal was not intended apparently for use as a corporation seal, but simply as a "church seal," although there is no record of the seal of present design ever having been adopted by official action.

"Ecumenical Movement"

Reverend Henry Knox Sherrill, lately installed presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, recently is quoted as saying, that "the formation of a single church of Christ is the only way in which the great spiritual problems of our time can be met." The Christian churches have not been able to supply the leaven which would have resolved the world's political problems.

At his installation Bishop Sherrill "urged all Christians to exchange their evident complacency for a courageous and realistic facing of present stern realities," a generality in which all can concur, we are quite sure.

He Did Not Want to Die

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

EVEN BEFORE his birth, Christ knew the mission which he must fulfill. In all likelihood he knew of the physical end which would come to him. For thirty years he grew, for three full years he labored—to arrive at an ignominious death. And Christ did not want to die!

Three years were too short to accomplish the entire task of saving men, of bringing “life more abundant,” of building the kingdom. He was leaving so much unfinished work!

Three years to finish an eternity of work. No man likes to leave a task uncompleted, and Christ had to leave this greatest commission of all unfinished.

All around him there was physical pain and suffering, and the greater pain of oppression and sin. The power of his hands, and even the hem of his garment had cured bodily ills, and his comforting love had healed broken spirits, but those who had come under his power were only a fraction of those who needed his ministering.

As he looked around, he saw his friends, loyal and as understanding as it was possible for their young intellects to be. These were the men who had been his close companions, who had shared his adversities and his triumphs. They were losing their saviour, but he lost his friends.

And there was his mother, whose loving hands had cared for him and whose loyalty was firm in spite of the fact that she could not fully understand this man whom she called “son.” His tragic death would torture her, and the kindnesses of those other beloved women could not erase the terrible scene from her mind. He did not want his mother to suffer so.

For over thirty years he had walked these roads, trod the temple courts, and watched familiar scenes. These places were a part of his very existence, so familiar that he called them his home on earth. He would remember these scenes with endearing thoughts.

“O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt.”—Matthew 26: 39.

Yes, and his enemies now thought they had won. This man was dying. He suffered the taunts of an aroused rabble, and his “friends” had deserted him. Now he and his influence are erased from the world—another would-be-leader removed from the public eye. He knew they were wrong, but they did not know.

He was going, and in his place he left men, human frailties and good intentions. There was so much to do, so few to do it, and he could have done so much more.

Yet, he must die! He did not want to leave this earth behind, but “nevertheless not as he willed, but as his father willed.” So he died—for the one reason—that his death was the one method by which a sinful world could be warned and raised to God’s own standard.

THE UPPER ROOM

By Robert J. Miller

WHAT TRANSPIRED in the Upper Room where Christ partook of the Passover with his disciples for the last time, made that occasion one of the most glorious and dramatic events of all time. The writer believes it to be the greatest for the following reasons: Here Christ finished his work of atonement, the most vital work in connection with man's destiny; partook of the Passover with his disciples for the last time (Luke 22: 15-17); instituted the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (Luke 22: 19, 20); prayed for his disciples and presented his work to the Father (John 17); and gave his life for the world.

We of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints believe in the power of the atonement; we believe Jesus is the Pascal Lamb, offered to atone for the sins of man; we believe Christ came for the very purpose of affecting a means for our deliverance, that we might come again into the presence of God. Consequently, we believe our salvation depends upon Christ giving his life for us, that we, through his Word, and his blood might have eternal life. (Ref., Gen. 6: 61-65; Rev. 5: 9; John 5: 24, 25.)

From the physical viewpoint, it is quite probable that Gethsemane and Calvary stand out above every other occasion in Christ's life. For there we see the tragic culmination of fear, hate, jealousy, and other passions expressed in violent action. We see blood spilled; and the anguish of pain and sorrow written plainly on the faces of those who loved Jesus. We also see the bestial and gloating countenances of those who feared and hated him. We see greed and avarice written on the faces of those who cast lots for His garments. Yes, from the physical approach, Gethsemane and Calvary hold the center of the stage.

But in the mind of Christ, the Upper Room must have been the scene of the greatest hour in his earthly life; for Christ was not concerned with the physical but the spiritual aspect. His teachings and manner of living proved that conclusively. And because the spiritual transcends the physical and marks our eternal course, the spiritual climax must also supercede the physical in importance.

Some of the events incident to the conclusion of Christ's work, portended the death of our Lord. The raising of Lazarus from the dead (John 11: 1-44) was a similitude of his own resurrection, for it was accomplished by the same Spirit, and proved the power of the Spirit over the grave. The fame accruing to him because of that miracle preceded him into Jerusalem, giving the chief priests and scribes warning of his coming, and opportunity to plot against him. Six days before the Passover, Mary anointed Jesus unto his burial at Bethlehem (Matt. 26: 5-10; John 12: 1-7). Shortly following his entry into Jerusalem, he made a statement to Philip and Andrew that apprised them of the nearness of his hour of glory and subsequent death, "The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified. . . . Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."—John 12: 23, 24.

The rite of washing his disciples' feet (John 13: 1-16) was a lesson in humility and service meet for the conclusion of his ministry; for he expected his disciples to carry on, and this lesson was vital to the accomplishment of the task.

Let us now envision Christ, if we can, as he sat at the table, partaking of the Passover with those with whom he had labored and loved. It is probable that the disciples hardly appreciated the importance of the hour, nor sensed the impending tragedy. They probably comported themselves with the serene composure one might find at any gathering of churchmen in our day. Jesus, however, knew his hour had come, and that the sands of this life were running out for him.

As they sat at meat, Jesus must have drawn within himself in deep meditation, weighing the work of his life, the purpose of his mission; and considering the work yet to be done. His entire life had been given to God's will. He had met and overcome all temptation. He had given the law as God commanded. He had perfected himself in righteousness that he might be a worthy sacrifice. He had given all the days of his life in service to God and man. Now, he must go farther—he must give his life.

He knew his days of service were over, for he had told Philip and Andrew, "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified." But Christ also knew that no man could take his life from him, except he willed it, for he testified, "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of the Father."—John 10: 18. It was now God's wish that he should make the sacrifice—pay the price. Would he be obedient unto death—or would he avail himself of the prerogative that was his, and not surrender? These are some of the thoughts that may have entered the mind of Jesus in that Upper Room. Being in the form of man, clothed with flesh, we can believe his temptations were comparable to man's.

The stage was set for the betrayal, and plans were already laid for his destruction. Judas had bargained with the chief priests and scribes prior to the feast of the Passover, and awaited a favorable opportunity (Luke 22:1-6). But only Christ could grant that opportunity.

Christ had been tempted shortly after his entry into Jerusalem, for we hear him say, "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father save me from this hour."—John 12:27. Yes, he was tempted; but immediately he rejected the thought, and in the same sentence, yes—in the same breath he avowed his purpose, "but for this cause came I unto this hour. Father glorify thy name."

"Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it [in the victorious life of my Son], and I will glorify it again [in Christ's death and resurrection]"—John 12:28. "Then Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes."—John 12:30. God, too, was concerned about the disciples and wished to reassure and encourage them.

So it is here in the Upper Room that we witness his greatest triumph; it is here that he perfects himself in righteousness and takes his last step "from grace to grace," here is his hour of great decision, here his opportunity to prove worthy to again receive that "glory he had with God before the world was" (John 17:5).

His victory was assured before he gave the sacrament, for he had determined within himself what his course would be. He could not have instituted the sacrament then had he not made that decision. For the sacrament was to be in remembrance of the sacrifice. So "he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood which is shed for you."—Luke 22:19, 20.

Then Jesus was "troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. And truly the Son of man goeth as it was determined; but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed" (John 13:21; Luke 22:22). "Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake" (John 13:22).

"Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved. Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake. He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto him, Lord, Who is it? Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon. And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly. . . . He then, having received the sop, went immediately out; and it was night."—John 13:23-27, 30.

It is one thing for a man to lose his life against his will—it is quite another thing for one to give his life freely. Many die in battle and are accredited with having given their lives; but how many freely give their lives because of noble desires springing from a heart of love? At Calvary, Christ's life was taken from him because he had consented to it—but he gave it in that Upper Room.

It is the belief of the writer that this particular incident in the life of Christ was the greatest single event in the entire history of mankind. For it was at this moment when he gave Judas the sop and commanded him, "That thou doest, do quickly," that he irrevocably cast the die of his own fate. It was then he released himself from the divine protection of God to allow Satan's fury to be spent upon him. Here he exercised his "power to lay it down," that he might later overcome death by the power of the resurrection when he would "take it again."

Here he surrendered his life as a testimonial to all men of the great love of God and Christ for mankind (John 3:16; John 15:13). Through the power of love the atonement was wrought. Christ gave his life and sealed the testimony with his blood.

There is sound proof to support this reasoning. Immediately after Judas departed, having received the sop, Jesus said "Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him."—John 13:31. In that memorable prayer Christ gave, wherein he presented the work to the Father and prayed for the disciples and "them also which shall believe on me [Christ] through their word" (John 17:20), he makes these statements: "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee; . . . I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was . . . And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee" (John 17:1, 4, 5, 11). This prayer was undoubtedly uttered following Judas' departure and after Christ had given the admonition, counsel, and assurance contained in the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth chapters of John. (See John 18:1.) Note that he says, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do . . . and now I am no more in the world, . . . and I come to thee." Do not these statements bear out the fact, that though he was still among them, his work of atonement was ended? Do not the first and fifth verses indicate that now, having fulfilled his end of the contract in this work with God, he asks his rightful restoration to his former glory? Did he not gain the spiritual victory in that Upper Room?

But we may ask, What about the resurrection? Does not that have a vital place in the work of atonement? How could he have finished his work when he must still rise from the dead? In the physical sense the play was not ended—the climax not yet reached, but the victory of Christ was already complete in a spiritual way. He had met the temptations of Satan; “The kingdom of heaven had suffered violence,” and the violent were about to take it by force (in the physical sense) (Matt. 11: 12). But Satan never won a single victory from God, in the person of Christ, during his ministry here on earth. The powers of darkness were overcome before Christ’s death, the power of the grave nullified before Christ died. In fact Christ was already purified (sanctified), and in the spiritual sense death was already defeated. And the day had come “when the violent shall have no power” (Matt. 11: 13).

Yes, it is true, Gethsemane and Calvary capture our imaginations and stir our emotions; it is also true that Christ sweat, as it were great drops of blood in the ardency of his love for man and pity for his condition. But as we pass by that Upper Room in our meditations, let us pause and think upon the spiritual significance of its history. Let us try to reason with Christ, and feel the emotions that possessed him there. For it was in the narrow confines of that room that he partook of the Passover with his disciples for the last time; instituted the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper; gave his disciples needed counsel and assurance; gave his life for the world in his final sacrificial act of atonement; and prayed unto the Father for all those that believe on his name—presenting the work to the Father for his blessing and approval.

The Upper Room is a synonym for Victory.

The Business Man as a Christian

By D. B. Sorden

(A “Morning Devotions” talk on Radio KMBC. An interpretation of the parable of the Good Samaritan. —Luke 10: 25-37.)

Many people consider the field of business as neutral territory so far as religion is concerned. When they think of their Christian life, they think of the times when they attend church or are in the act of worship more than they do the hours devoted to their business or profession. But it is in these latter ways that their religion counts the most. Our hours of worship may indicate what we might do, but our daily tasks indicate what we really are.

For several years Jesus himself lived his life in the affairs of the business world. I cannot imagine him as ever turning out a piece of shoddy work or beating anyone out of a penny. He was a carpenter before he was a minister for God. And I like this story in our morning lesson very much. Jesus makes the hero of this story, not a cloistered priest, but a business man. For that is just what the Samaritan was, a trader, a commercial traveler. When all is said about the perils of business life, let it never be forgotten that it was a business man whom Jesus selected to be the pattern and example for the Christian centuries of religion in active operation.

Not only so, but it was actually during the course of his day’s business and not in his off-duty hours that he fulfilled so well what Jesus said was the better half of true religion. We are not told anything about the Samaritan’s prayers or services attended, although these doubtless had their place in this good man’s religion and, so, in the formation of his character. We are shown the good fruits of these in his daily life. Here was a man who worked hard, gave much thought to his business, and tried to make money and was, at least, somewhat successful, and here was a man who was quick to help where he saw a need.

Yes, there are other ways of serving God during the day than by having a prayer meeting in our office. There may not be broken bones we can help bind up or pay for having done frequently in our business lives but there are broken hearts and hopes and prospects about us in plenty, and there is misfortune and suffering and sadness. To play the Good Samaritan in any possible way is also to serve God, is also true religion in as acceptable a way as to pray in the most elaborate of temples. The nature of our business takes the most of us at some time or another out onto the Jericho road where our Christian discipleship can be put to the test.

As if to make this story very clear, Jesus deliberately contrasts the spirit of this business man, giving himself wholeheartedly to a brother in need, to the frigid failure of two conspicuous religious professors. The priest and the Levite were not vicious men but slaves of a conventional system of religious routine in its times and seasons, and they were not willing that their routine be disarranged. If these men had been headed towards the temple with their thoughts on the services they were to give instead of away from it as apparently was the case, with their time of service in the temple over, it would have made no difference. Here was human need by the roadside, and Jesus gave his wholehearted approval to the way the Samaritan met that need. Even if the temple service would have had to have waited, here was the more pressing need. This was how God was asking to be served and worshiped at the moment.

Surely here is a lesson which all Christians should often take to heart and prayerfully consider, lest perchance, with all of our routine, we, like the priest and the Levite be failing, when tested by our conduct on the hard road to Jericho in our daily business. On this road, Jesus surely

REPORT

General Council of Women

By Pauline James Arnson

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

Once again we are pleased to report the activities of the women of the church since the last General Conference in April, 1946. Although the period between reports has been shorter, still we believe that the past year has shown marked improvement in the type of work done, clearer comprehension of women's place in the work of the church, and greater consecration of leaders everywhere, and we are gratified that we see evidences that the women's work is keeping step with the increased tempo which conditions in the world make imperative.

We meet this year with thankfulness for past blessings and with a prayer that all members will continue to have an increasing comprehension and appreciation for the great gospel plan and that more than ever before we may put forth sustained effort to do our part in the building of Zion.

The past year has been a time of re-adjustment for many of the women of the church. Some lost dear ones in the great conflict of nations and during the war years were torn with grief and were unable to make any substantial contribution. They needed help and comfort, and this we tried to give by preparing and sending out material which would aid them. In our contacts with such women during past months and recently, we have been pleased to see how they have turned their thoughts outward and have given their strength and efforts to help others in many avenues of service, and in many cases are working most successfully in the branches and districts. This is a testimony of God's love for his children and his willingness to help his children re-adjust their lives.

The classes for women which were held last April were of a high standard, and we felt that those who could not attend should be given an opportunity to have this material in their hands. Requests were made to invited speakers to prepare their lectures for printing; this was done and two pamphlets, "A Functioning Women's Department—Women's Work in the Branch" and "The Latter Day Saint Woman Meets Today's Problem of Living" were issued and sent out during the year for study. Extra copies of a talk, "Up to the Minute Technique for Women in Evangelizing" given by D. O. Chesworth were mimeographed, and these have been used widely by women's groups throughout the church to help them assist in the program of missionary endeavor.

A splendid study course called, "A Course in Appreciations" by Alice V. Bolon, B. A., has had great appeal to both young and older women. It is a homemaking series, and the author says in her introduction that "it is a quiet attempt to portray 'Our Philosophy' at its best, culturally, intelligently, and with gladness of spirit." The great demand for this type of material is a good indication that women are again turning to their homes and are endeavoring to make these abodes places "Where every eye reflects the altar flame, where each deed is sacramental unto the Holy Name."

It is anticipated that other courses will be prepared during the coming year with the needs of the young women in mind. Steps have already been taken in this direction.

The Home Column, women's page in the Herald, has appeared at too infrequent intervals. Paper shortage and lack of the time to oversee and promote it has contributed to this condition, but the outlook for the coming year is brighter. Mrs. N. Ray Carmichael has consented to assume this responsibility, and we have had offers of help from other sources which should strengthen and vitalize this column and make it meet the needs of the readers. We would like to impress the fact upon the minds of writers however, that we welcome contributions and ask that whenever good material is prepared for local use which would be of general interest to women and to the home, that a copy be sent to the Women's Department in care of the Auditorium, and if possible, it will be used. We also invite the help of the pastors and other men of the church who in the past have sent in usable articles which we have appreciated.

The members of the General Council have worked well and faithfully. The bond of friendship has been increased by close association together in the interest of the women of the church, and I pay tribute here to their loyalty and willingness to do what ever is asked of them. The council has been strengthened by the return of Sister Blanche Mesley who has earned a church-wide affection by her consecration to the work, and also by the addition of Sister Helen Skinner, whose talents will be helpful to our work in the future. Sister Edward Parks of Sidney, Australia, has been made our Council Representative in the Australasian Mission for the tenure of her office, and we are glad to have this close connection there and are looking forward to the correspondence which will help us become better acquainted with our sisters.

We shall miss Sister Emma McConley from our ranks for the next eighteen months, but are happy that the women of the European Mission will have a chance to know and love her and be instructed by her during this period. We expect her to gather information that will draw us closer to the women of England and Europe and which will help us know better how to help them.

Sister Mildred Grabske has been in California for the winter with her husband, Dr. Charles Grabske, who is taking further instruction in his field. Although Sister Grabske is missed by the group here, we know she has made friends wherever she has been, and we expect her active participation next year.

Several members of the General Council who have allowed their names to remain on the membership list since the organization have relinquished their places because they feel that they can make more effective contributions to the church in other lines.

After Brother Israel Smith was made president of the church last April, Sister Nina Smith was invited to become an honorary member of the General Council.

We have appreciated the splendid help which our council members, who do not live in the center place have given through the years by correspondence. We know it is difficult to keep in touch with the trends when one is away, but we look forward to the time when all members can meet together for a pre-conference period to outline policies for the women of the church.

Most council members attended reunions last year at the invitation of the Apostles in charge and district officers. Sister McConley conducted women's classes at four reunions, and Sister Velt conducted the women's work at three. Members have also been guest speakers at district institutes in many States. Our efforts in the teaching line have been augmented by several women who are not members, who have graciously accepted the invitation to conduct classes at reunions, and we wish to express our appreciation here for their good work, as well as to district women's leaders who have carried on the classwork when no general church representative has been able to attend.

For general information and to answer several requests for the names of General Council members, a list follows:

Mrs. Benj. Anderson, 5020 California, Omaha, Nebr.

Mrs. Frank Hoecker, 630 Ohio, Lawrence, Kans.

Mrs. George Mesley, 2009 E. 29th St., Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. Sanford Fisher, 12 Manor St., Winter Hill, Mass.

Mrs. C. C. Peterson, 7401 Wyoming, Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. Jay McCormick, 1432 W. Walnut, Independence, Mo.

Mrs. Chas. Grabske, 1315 W. Van Horn, Independence, Mo.

Mrs. Harry J. Paxton, 3129 Benton Blvd., Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. S. A. Burgess, 707 Proctor Place, Independence, Mo.

Mrs. H. I. Velt, 127 S. Crysler, Independence, Mo.

Mrs. C. A. Skinner, 1910 Drumm, Independence, Mo.

Mrs. B. F. Moats, 54th and Brookside, Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. S. S. Arnson, 890 W. Waldo, Independence, Mo., chairman.

As usual many hours have been spent in preparing the conference program for women. In fact, this is an important part of the General Council's responsibilities and a difficult one, because of the great number of women who attend who have diverse background, training, and interests, and because two phases of women's work must be discussed at each conference session. It is imperative that information be given out to new leaders and workers each year which will assist them to carry on the women's work in their branch when they return home; and at one period, the organization, scope, interchurch relations, programs, reunions, and institute work must be discussed. This we plan to do at the third period of the day from 9:45 to 10:45 a. m. Several teachers will have charge, and we invite all women who are workers or who are potential leaders to attend and participate.

The next period from 11:00 to 12:00 daily will be devoted to women's place in the gospel work, with a discussion of Christ's purposes from the beginning and an attempt to assist women to have an increasing knowledge of the doctrine of Christ and how it can be put into their lives and homes. The great goal which the Women's Department desires always to keep in mind is that women have a divinely imposed task to be homemakers and to develop Zionite homes and families. Sister Blanche Mesley has consented to conduct this class and try to point out to the women of the church some of the enduring convictions which will help them realize the importance of the work in which they are engaged and stimulate them to feel that it is a privilege to have a part in the establishment of a secure home based on mutual love, helpfulness, and reciprocal respect of rights. For a detailed listing, we call your attention to the Conference Program, and to the reception for registered women. At this function the Independence women will be hostesses.

The General Department of Women has appreciated the assistance and support of the presiding general officers of the church during the past year. In every instance a careful study of the problem presented has been made and help has been given speedily.

In December a request was made to us by the Presidency for some specific statements about what we would like to see accomplished this year and these suggestions were presented:

1. "Give the young ministers going out into the field an over-all picture of the women's work; its objectives, and how it functions in the branch in relation to other departments." Women's Handbook is the source of some of this information, and we shall be glad to furnish additional information whenever requests are made to our department.

2. "The same information should be had by the pastors, district presidents, etc." In the Handbook the district leaders and local leaders are instructed to contact and be guided by the counsel of the men in charge; hence it is necessary for the men to consider the women in their plans.

3. "Reunion committees should have information regarding the necessity of having a class for women with subjects pertaining to the home and interests of the family. If local leaders are not available to instruct this class, those in charge should know how a woman's worker is obtained." A woman's worker for a reunion is obtained through the Apostle in charge and through the district president. The request should be made to them by the district women's leader and if they have suggestions about whom they would like to serve, this should be communicated to the General Department of Women at the Auditorium at an early date, and if possible the one desired will attend. There are a very few council members able to respond to this call, but there are other capable women who can be used and are willing to come if given the invitation. Let us emphasize again that the reunion committee plan for a morning period for women's classes.

4. "An opportunity for the young women of the church to attend some of the classes for women. Often the schedule of classes planned for them allows no time for this, and they are the ones who should have this material before they establish their own homes."

5. "Celebrate Woman's Day in each branch of the church at some time convenient to the local authorities. The purpose of this day should be:

a. To familiarize the members of the branch with the work being done in the department.

b. To stimulate the women to greater effort by presenting the importance of their task.

6. "A Missions' Day throughout the church. What are the Latter Day Saints of other nations doing, under what difficulties do they labor, how many branches, their order of service, etc. We need to have an interest in and become internationally minded." Sister Mesley handed in a complete mimeographed report of her work upon her return to this country after an absence of seven and one-half years. She made several recommendations, two of which are included here. Although she referred particularly to Australia, her suggestions are applicable to all the foreign missions.

"A feeling of isolation easily develops in a country as far from headquarters as is Australia. This country is further handicapped by the fact that the seasons are exactly the reverse of those in the Northern Hemisphere, so that Christmas falls in midsummer and Easter in the autumn. To overcome this tendency, especial efforts should be made to bring the two countries closer together in understanding and achievements. I would therefore recommend:

"1. That a Department of Overseas Missions be encouraged in every local. Just as throughout the church an established Graceland College Day is observed, so throughout our locals at least one meeting a year should be devoted to a better understanding and appreciation of our work abroad. This should be the minimum. A longer session could be most interesting.

"The present time seems to be opportune in as much as so many of our boys have been overseas and have opened up interests in peoples of other lands.

"2. That our members be encouraged to 'Adopt a Sister' abroad. This is a warmer and deeper development of the former 'pen friend' idea. 'My sister in Holland' or 'My sister in Australia' carries a closer personal interest.

"During the war years, we have seen the strong power for building and maintaining morale that letters from home have proved to be. In the same way "homey" letters from one sister to another can dispel isolation and make for understanding and solidarity of purpose."

One of our further aims for 1947-48 in the Department of Women, is to have more missionary minded homes among our people, so we are hoping to emphasize the need for knowledge and understanding of other nations and races. I have appreciated the letters from the Edward Butterworths who, along with the Vivian Sorensens, represent our church in the Society Islands. These letters have given us a true picture of the worth of the Island Saints. A box containing samples of articles which we make to sell at our bazaars was sent from our department, and the members there were so happy to feel that we had an interest in them and expressed their appreciation by sending us a gift of three pearls which the women themselves had dived for. Truly we must begin to realize that our gospel is not meant for us alone but for all peoples.

At the last Conference the women's paper for the city of Zion was distributed to conference visitors. It had a greeting from the late President Frederick M. Smith which proved to be his last official message to the women of the church. In the fall, at a meeting of the Stone Church women, Sister David Krahl suggested that the communication be preserved and incorporated in the annals of the church, and the following motion was made: "Moved that this assembly petition the General Officers of the Women's Department to preserve in some appropriate, permanent form, the last communication of President Frederick M. Smith to the Women's Department as found in the recent issue of the Women's Magazine." This motion was seconded and carried.

In line with this suggestion, we have asked Brother Paul N. Craig to arrange this message on a motto type sheet which can be printed and which will be suitable for framing. We hope to have this ready for distribution in the near future. We have also sent a copy of the message to the Church Historian, Brother A. B. Phillips, who will file it for safe keeping.

During the past year, the women's groups throughout the church have been active in many avenues of service. Most of the local organizations have had a varied program of activity and have tried to follow the counsel of the general department to find something of interest for every woman of the church so that each woman can make a contribution commensurate with her ability. Most groups meet at least twice a month, have classwork in church doctrine, in subjects pertinent to the home and family for those who wish to study, handwork for those who can work with their hands, and devotionals to set the tone of the meeting. Some of the additional activities engaged in were selected from a typical report sent in by a district leader. These furnish us with a picture of what is being accomplished and what additional service the women of the church can give.

Most groups are active in carrying out the visiting program to newcomers in the neighborhood, to old, to ill, to young mothers. Some sponsor a social evening once a month for the entire branch, put on dinners, bazaars, sales, give book reviews for building funds, or to provide additional space for the church. Many quilt and crochet, and many groups have sent clothing and food to the Saints in Holland, Germany, and England.

Most districts have had a Woman's Day where the work of the women was discussed, or a week-end Institute. An all-day women's meeting was held at the Santa Ana, California, Branch which is typical of many meetings planned. The leader reports:

"We spent a great deal of time, thought, and prayer in preparation for this day, and our efforts were certainly rewarded by the genuine response given by the women of the entire district. We took for our theme 'Women Share in the Work of the Church.' Our text for the day was 'See then that ye walk circumspectly, redeeming the time because the days are evil.' As we gathered for early morning prayer service at 8:30, over 90 women were already present to participate. At the 9:45 church school hour, I conducted a class on 'The Latter Day Saint Home.' At this class and the morning preaching service at which time Brother J. W. Rushton was the speaker, we had 160 women present. The Santa Ana folks served us a delicious luncheon for only 50c per plate at the noon hour. At 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon we met again for a forum. At this time we had one of our sisters from the Long Beach Branch talk to us about the organized visiting program, a sister from Pasadena talked to us on the organization and helps for bazaars, I discussed the organization of younger women's circles to meet the needs of this particular group, we talked of our project of sending assistance to our European Saints, and had a question box. It had proved such an inspirational and worthwhile day that when 3:30 came, the ladies were reluctant to leave. The consensus of opinion was that it had been so profitable that we should make it a yearly affair, and we are so planning now. Personally, I feel that it met a definite need, for sociability, for instruction, for exchange of ideas, and for the creating of enthusiasm for our work. I certainly felt very grateful and very humble for the inspiration and direction received from it."

In October, the Zion city wide organization of women held a three-day institute at the Stone Church which was an outstanding success, with an average daily attendance of 500. Sister V. D. Ruch was invited to be the special speaker for the afternoon classes, and the morning lectures were given by Brothers William Patterson, John Darling, and Charles Graham.

The daily prayer services were directed by Brothers Amos Higdon, R. V. Hopkins, and Glaude Smith.

Each lady was asked to bring her bag lunch so that all women could attend the services and not have to prepare lunch, and the noon hour was devoted to visiting.

It is planned that this Institute will be a yearly event.

In December a request was made to the district leaders to send us the average number of women actively engaged in women's work, and out of the sixty-six districts which have district women's leaders, forty-five reports were received. In some reports the total number enrolled was given and then opposite the number those who were active. In many places the percentage of active attendance was good. In other reports, the number of active regular members listed showed much room for improvement, and I am sure that when they see the figures that have had to be set down, they will have an earnest desire to improve the percentage for the coming year.

From our compiled report of the forty-five districts, we have approximately 10,000 women enrolled. The average percentage attendance of active members is 56 per cent.

The encouraging message that the figures tell, however, is that the church has a wonderful group of woman power which, if directed in the proper channels and if cognizant of their obligations and privilege, can make a mighty contribution to the progress of the church. This is a challenge to the leaders that they see to it that proper counsel and leadership is given in the light of the goals of the general church, and it is with this feeling of responsibility and also sensing the privilege that is ours to assist in this work that we go forward in company with the hundreds of willing women workers to hasten the day when Zion will be a reality. To this end we ask your prayers.

REPORT

The Order of Evangelists

By Elbert A. Smith

(January 1 to December 31, 1946)

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

Attached please find consolidated ministerial report from the Order of Evangelists for the year ending December 31, 1946.

At this time there are 33 members, 2 of them being located in Australia, 1 in England, 5 in Canada and the remainder in the United States. Reports from 28 of these members show the following activities:

- 1,061 Sermons preached
- 5,105 Services attended.
- 1,058 Patriarchal Blessings given
- 1,891 Pastoral visits made
- 59 Baptisms
- 107 Confirmations
- 47 Ordinations
- 98 Children blessed
- 50 Marriages solemnized
- 1,992 Administrations to the sick

In addition to the above, there have been many cases of Saints being counseled and ministered to by members of the order.

Additions to the order since April 6, 1946, are as follows:

- Richard H. Jones, Chatham, Ontario
 - Benson Belrose, Owen Sound, Ontario
 - John E. MacGregor, London, Canada
 - Benj. H. Hewitt, Toronto, Canada
 - John R. Grice, Port Huron, Michigan
- The Order has lost one member through the death of John B. Cato, April 25, 1946.

The figures shown in the itemized report do not reflect all of the activities and ministry rendered to the Saints such as counseling, comforting, and strengthening them from time to time. Many of their reports contained interesting comments on the work in their territory and a firm faith in the ultimate realization of our goal, the establishing of Zion. Many are offering prayers for divine guidance at our coming General Conference, that the Spirit of unity of purpose may continue and that we may have God's Spirit to be with us.

Yours in Gospel Bonds,
ELBERT A. SMITH, Presiding Patriarch

REPORT

Graceland College

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

March 4, 1947

The following report, showing the activities since the last General Conference, including a condensed balance sheet, at a meeting of the Board of Trustees held at Independence, Missouri, on the fourth day of March, 1947, was adopted and made the report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College to the First Presidency and General Conference.

VERNE L. DESKIN, Secretary.

To the Board of Trustees, Graceland College

The first year of what aptly has been called the "national educational emergency" is coming to a close for Graceland College, and problems of greatly increased enrollment, personnel changes, and limited space and equipment, appear to have been survived. Credit must be given to a student body which largely was characterized by maturity of purpose and control, and a faculty and staff demonstrating ability to meet new needs and a willingness to carry unusually heavy responsibility. The year has been one of transition and in some respects of experimentation. In five areas, developments are of special interest: enrollment, physical plant, program, finance, and personnel.

ENROLLMENT

It became apparent early in the fall of 1945 that Graceland College must institute measures in common with other institutions of college rank to cope with the unprecedented demand for higher education by veterans and recent high school graduates. The demand and four year backlog created by the war were seen as superimposed on a rising demand for higher education by high school graduates. Part of the increase evident is of long-term origin. College enrollments almost doubled in the period 1920-30 and increased another fifty per cent in the decade 1930-40. The extent of the problem faced becomes clear when it is noted that during the 1939-40 academic year the total full-time enrollment of colleges and universities was 1,494,000, while 2,080,000 sought admittance successfully to institutions of higher learning last fall.

College officials conferred with general church officers as applications for admission were received in unprecedented numbers, and it was agreed that as a matter of policy, planning should be done on a basis of an enrollment pattern of five hundred students. As even greater numbers of requests for admittance were received, the responsibility of the college to church and nation seemed clearly to be the acceptance of as many students as could adequately be included within the limits set by the financial strength of the college, the availability of classroom space, and the necessity for maintaining the type of college life which continue to promote the welfare and participation of each student.

There is a very vital issue as to whether or not the increased enrollment of the next few years will continue after veteran enrollment begins to decline. Some decrease likely can be expected as veteran's programs expire, but there is every indication that college enrollments will remain rather permanently at a figure substantially greater than that of pre-war years.

The following table indicates a steady increase in enrollment since 1937 for Graceland with the exception of the war years, although the number of women in attendance increased even during that period.

PROGRAM ADJUSTMENT

The enlarged student body necessitated many adjustments in the campus program. Classroom periods were increased, with classes being scheduled during the noon hour. Laboratory sessions extended into Saturday. Assemblies and fellowship services formerly held in the chapel were held in the gymnasium. The size of classes was increased and cafeteria service considerably expanded. A major change was in the administration of religious life. The Coliseum in which college students have worshiped with the Lamoni congregation for many years, was no longer adequate in size for morning services of both town and college. Sunday morning services for students were therefore held in the gymnasium, and the responsibility for organizing and directing religious activities on the campus expanded into an assignment requiring the professional services of staff members equivalent to nearly a full-time assignment. The former "Religion Club" became four, centering in certain interests such as World Fellowship, Camp and Kit, Zionics, Missionary. Classes were scheduled at 9:15, preaching at 10:15, classwork at 11:30, while religion clubs met Sunday afternoon. The evening service was with the Lamoni congregation. The older average age of the student body resulted in a student priesthood group of more than seventy. Ordinarily about twenty members of the priesthood could be expected in the student group.

ALTERATIONS IN PLANT

To accommodate six hundred students, a number of alterations were necessary in the physical plant. The purchase and remodeling of a downtown bakery building provided dormitory facilities for sixty men. Classroom and faculty office space was gained in the Administration Building by transferring to Marietta Hall, formerly a dormitory, studios and practice rooms for music instruction. Partition work in Briggs Hall made available increased library space and another classroom. It became clear, however, that present educational housing is adequate for a student enrollment of approximately 300. The educational plant can be overloaded for a short period of time, but there are hidden costs accruing which can be expected to eventually demand attention. A student enrollment of more than 300 will necessitate additional educational buildings in the immediate future.

The following table presents significant data regarding buildings now being used by the College.

Housing has been provided in downtown homes under college arrangement for 175 men. The contract for this type of rooming accommodation is entered into by the college and homeowner and provides in effect an extension of the college's dormitory facilities. It can be noted that only 120 students are now housed in a dormitory of modern construction. Only one building has been expressly constructed to serve as a dormitory facility. It is advisable to consolidate women's housing as rapidly as means becomes available. A number of the buildings listed can, at the best, serve only temporarily as residence houses. Moreover, with the exception of Walker Hall, the houses are comparatively small and widely scattered, thereby giving rise to problems of high cost of operation and maintenance, administrative complexity, and some inconvenience to the student.

PLANS FOR CONSTRUCTION

The General Conference at its last two sessions has appropriated a total of $250,000 toward the construction of a heating plant and dormitory. Preliminary drawings are being completed for a men's dormitory which will house 150.

Drawings are being submitted for a heating plant and shop. The present plant is not capable of meeting needs beyond those now existent. Construction date will probably depend upon the development of more favorable conditions for building.

In recognition of the need for a student center building, the conference last year authorized the spending of $60,000 to be contributed through College Day offerings, toward the erection of this type of building. Plans for the structure have not been drawn, although an inventory of its functions has been made. It will house the activities generally found in Student Union buildings on other college campuses, viz., a recreational area, post office, bookstore, student and faculty lounge, student government offices, small dining room, and other services essential to the student life. The building has been designated a memorial to the young men and women throughout the church who served their countries during the recent war. In appreciation of this purpose, the Alumni Association has adopted as its project the contributing of funds above the $60,000.00 in order to insure a building of utility and quality which will memorialize appropriately. There has been received up to this date $22,364.00 from this year's College Day offerings and $3,366.00 from the Alumni Association.

Needs for additional space in educational buildings are in areas which require construction uniquely adapted to that particular activity, such as laboratory science, music, auditorium, and library.

FINANCIAL CONSIDERATION

Increased enrollment with consequent staff, equipment, and building needs involves financial consideration. Income for operating the college is derived from three general sources:

1. Student fees
2. Endowment
3. General church appropriation

The following table reveals the percentage of income received from each of these sources. Especially noteworthy is the high percentage of income from student fees in relation to interest on endowment and General Conference appropriations. While national income is high, the percentage of income from student fees can be relatively high, but the desired trend is to bring about a condition whereby a greater proportion of income is received from sources other than student fees. Generally, financial income to colleges from fees paid by students is sufficient to pay only a por-

OPINION

I have examined the balance sheet of Graceland College as of June 30, 1946, have reviewed the system of internal control and the accounting procedures of the College and, without making a detailed audit of the transactions, have examined or tested accounting records of the college and other supporting evidence, by methods and to the extent I deemed appropriate. A detailed report of examination has been made to the First Presidency.

In my opinion, the accompanying balance sheet presents fairly the position of Graceland College at June 30, 1946, and the results of its operation for the fiscal year then ended.

LLOYD L. BLAND, Church Auditor.

tion (roughly one half in most schools) of the total expense of education.

PERSONNEL

The year has seen several changes in personnel and consequent realignment of responsibilities and functions. Resignation of Dr. Lonzo Jones was received by the Board of Trustees with subsequent appointment of Dr. Lawrence O. Brockway of Ann Arbor, Michigan, to fill the unexpired term. Installation of a president of the college, May 31, 1946, relieved Dean A. R. Gilbert of some of the responsibilities which he had been carrying so ably as acting president for two years and permitted him to take up more fully his work as Dean of the College. After having served for thirteen years as Business Manager and contributing in many ways to the growth of the college, A. Neal Deaver resigned March 1, 1947, in order to accept opportunities which promised valuable business experience. Edwin Browne, formerly Director of Public Relations at the University of Kansas, accepted a similar post at Graceland and was named also to function as Chairman of the Student Selection Committee, and Executive Secretary of the Alumni Association. In addition Velma Ruch, Walter Barker, William Graves, Ned Jacobson, Richard Carter, Ruth Ralston, and Iola Kaestner, have been appointed to the faculty.

AN APPRAISEMENT

There are problems to be met and solved. These are days of change, and frequent evaluation and adaptation is necessary if Graceland College is to meet the significant needs of succeeding years. Costs are involved, economic and human. But a sensitivity to the potential power of youth seeking to qualify itself for lives of competency and service brings the conviction that, in the proper relation to the total needs of the church, here is a price that properly can be paid.

E. J. GLEAZER, JR., President.

REPORT

The Historical Department

By A. B. Phillips

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

The somewhat sudden or unexpected death of our late President Frederick M. Smith, after more than thirty years of continued service in that office, brought its distinct impact and sense of loss to the church on March 20, 1946. He had been ordained President of the High Priesthood of the Church on May 5, 1915, by virtue of which he became also President of the Church by its sustaining vote. In accordance with church law and its usual procedure, his brother, Israel A. Smith, was chosen and unanimously appointed by vote of General Conference on April 6, 1946, as his successor, being ordained on the following day. Pursuant to a revelation submitted by the President and adopted by the priesthood and the church on April 10, John F. Garver and F. Henry Edwards were respectively chosen and ordained as members of the First Presidency of the Church. Thus was this high office and quorum reorganized and filled as the law directs. During the conference year, the church has repeatedly and in various ways manifested its approval, faith, and confidence in the work thus done.

HISTORIC MATERIAL ACQUIRED

During the year the Historical Department of the Church has acquired a number of old branch records and miscellaneous documentary material of considerable historic value, thus adding materially to our collection in these classifications. Various inquiries along several lines have reached this office, some of which we could not answer for want of sufficient data. We earnestly request members having valuable old documents and other valuable material they are willing to part with to let us know what they have which may be of use to this department. We have a fireproof vault in which such material is kept.

From Sister Clyde F. Ellis and several others, we have also acquired a considerable number of valuable reference works. Among recent additions of this kind is an original copy of a History of all Religions, by I. Daniel Rupp, published in 1844, and containing an "Epitome of the Faith" as written by the Prophet Joseph Smith, and similar to that published in the Chicago Democrat in 1842, found in the Church History, Volume 2, pages 569, 570. This epitome very definitely repudiates changes made by the Utah Mormon church to which Joseph's name was presumptuously added without any right whatever.

DISTRICT AND BRANCH HISTORIANS

A considerable number of district, branch, and mission historians have been appointed and some changes made during the conference year, the latter due in some cases to the fact that those appointed did not enter upon their work, or were appointed to other activities. It is highly important that all stake, district, and branch presidents be fully aware of the value of local history in the color it lends to general church history, when properly recorded and filed in the Historical Department of the Church where it will be available for adequate and interesting presentation when needed.

With the stresses caused by the recent war, office help of the kind required has not been available to this department most of the time. This increases the need of local historians who will compile the proper district and branch data in historical form that will be available in our department files. Considerable indexing and arranging in order become necessary also, so that the kind and scope of material on hand may be quickly noted. Our circular on "Writing the Church History" will help the local historian to select such material as will be of interest and value to the church. We would also suggest that the historians of the districts and branches meet together when practicable and hold round-table discussions of their respective experiences and problems in historical work.

DEPARTMENT HISTORIES NEEDED

Some years ago the church by General Conference action requested the various church departments and leading quorums to provide the office of the general Church Historian with their written histories and to supply these each year for the benefit of the church. Many have apparently forgotten this action of the church, hence much of their history is lacking in the files of the Historical Department. It will be much appreciated if all stakes, quorums, and church departments will see that their histories are written and a copy furnished the general church historian annually, or oftener if more convenient. We need these to make our historical work more complete.

It is desirable that each department and quorum compile a careful history of the origin, organization, administration, and activities pursued year by year from their beginning. There is much interesting data of this kind involved in their work, and it should not be lost to the church. We appreciate very much work of this kind that has already been sent to the historical department. Members of the First Presidency and the Twelve have caused some valuable material to be sent in for our files, as have several other of the administrative officers. Outstanding is a Survey of the Australasian Mission in five volumes nicely bound, also the Stone Church Programs for several years, in bound volumes.

RECORDS, DOCUMENTS, AND DATA DESIRED

Among the older branches and districts of the church there are still some whose history should be compiled from such material as is available and sent in for our files. Any old records that are not now in use should also be sent in, as some of considerable worth have, so far as we can ascertain, been mislaid and lost. Data on the origin and work of the various local departments should also be compiled before they are lost or forgotten. Interesting events of church importance are sometimes noted in local publications, and we would appreciate having copies of such material, always with the name and date of the publication in which it appears.

We would also like to gather much more material dealing with social experiments, both moral and economic or industrial. If anyone has any such works or documentary material vital to the problems involved that he is willing to devote to the files of the Historical Department, kindly inform us and describe their nature. A considerable number of social or co-operative communities were attempted during the early part of the century in which the Restoration Movement began. Nearly a score of these were started in the forties, and from them and others we should be able to learn much in attempting to solve some of the problems involved in our own social philosophy. Any material bearing upon these societies would be of value to our Historical Department as source material for study.

PREPARING FOR FULLER CHURCH HISTORY

Our four-volume History of the Church is out of print. Our shorter history by Sister Davis is invaluable, but of course it cannot include all of the many letters, documents, and records that comprise our complete history. Such a record would probably involve seven or eight volumes to cover the past century and a quarter of time. But to one who needs to be fully informed, a thorough compilation of all important material should be in printed volumes with a thorough index to facilitate rapid research work by students and other investigators. We hope the church will find it possible to begin such a work before many years go by, for it would be of great value and convenience. Such a work cannot be rushed, if well done, but will involve the gathering and arranging of a vast amount of material, some of which may not as yet be in our own files. The New York library and some others have material we should carefully examine with such a work in view. We want to gather as much as possible, and hope those who have any such material will make it available for our use.

REPORT

The Herald Publishing House

By C. A. Skinner and
Kenneth L. Graham

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

We are submitting herewith a balance sheet of the Herald Publishing House for the year ending May 31, 1946, to which has been attested the signature of the church auditor, Lloyd L. Bland. It will be noted that the net increase to surplus continues to be a substantial amount. The surpluses are being set aside in the forms of cash and government securities to provide reserves for the replacement of equipment and machinery as the need may arise.

Since the last General Conference, the Publishing House has striven to expand its service by increasing its personal contacts to the districts. Representatives from the staff took displays of books and supplies to eleven out of the thirty-five reunions. Not only did this prove of benefit, but it helped build a mutual understanding between the Publishing House and the people we serve.

The Book Steward program, inaugurated about two years ago, has consistently grown so that we now have representatives in well over a hundred branches. The co-operation and interest on the part of these Book Stewards has helped the Publishing House render a more personal service to the local congregations.

Since the relaxing of the shipping regulations to the Pacific, it has been possible to send a number of large car-

OPINION

I have examined the balance sheet of the Herald Publishing House as of May 31, 1946, have reviewed the system of internal control and the accounting procedures of the house, and without making a detailed audit of the transactions have examined or tested accounting records and other supporting evidence, by methods and to the extent I deemed necessary. A detailed report of examination has been made to the First Presidency.

In my opinion, the accompanying balance sheet presents fairly the position of the Herald Publishing House at May 31, 1946, and the results of its operations for the fiscal year then ended.

LLOYD L. BLAND, Church Auditor

goes of books and supplies to our Australasian headquarters in Sydney from where they are distributed to the various branches in Australia. We have also sent shipments to New Zealand. It is just now possible to send large shipments to England, and from there we can extend our services to the European Mission. We carry a reserve on our accounts in these countries, and we anticipate soon being able to transfer funds to liquidate them.

Immediately following the Conference of 1946, a Department of Visual Education was established, and some progress has been made toward making equipment and supplies available in this field. Some work has been done in the production of missionary materials, and we hope that within the next year, we will be able to offer several slide sets for rent and sale. The Publishing House has very recently become a member of the Religious Film Association and within the near future will be able to offer a complete rental program of all good religious films, both in slides, silent and sound movies.

During the past few months, we have expanded our service to the community of Independence through the enlargement of our bookstore, and we are happy to note that bookstore sales have increased materially since the store was first opened in 1942.

Supplies of paper stock continue to be our greatest concern. Actually many types of paper are harder to obtain now than at any time during the war. We have been particularly handicapped in the production of books, most notable of which has been the Saints' Hymnal. We are happy to report, however, that we have now been able to purchase paper for this and finished copies should be available in the early summer.

Throughout the war and the periods of increased costs, we have been able to hold most of our prices down. Recently, however, it became necessary to make some minor adjustments in book prices, and effective April 1 we have announced a 25c increase in the annual subscription rate of the Saints' Herald. We have attempted to keep the amount of these increased prices as low as possible and do not anticipate additional ones unless production costs increase more rapidly than can be foreseen at this time.

*Because of war conditions, we have no accurate figures for the European Mission outside of the British Isles. It has been impossible to obtain any information from Germany and Poland, but we have received reports of baptisms from Holland which cover the period of the war and up to May, 1946. We have had reports from Norway, and have had contact with Denmark and Sweden although our reports so far are fragmentary. There was a gain of 16 on Denmark but this is really a correction of an error on the total membership which has carried through a number of years.

REPORT

Church Architect

By Henry C. Smith

To the First Presidency and
General Conference:

The architect for the church has the honor to submit his report for the conference year 1946-47.

This is the first full year of peace for some time, and we had hoped that economic conditions would have permitted our construction program to have become organized and to a degree, started.

"When we build, let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for present delight nor for present use alone. Let it be such work as our descendants will thank us for, and let us think as we lay stone on stone, that a time is to come when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them and that men will say as they look upon the labor and wrought substance of them, 'See! This our fathers did for us.'"—John Ruskin.

There are no successful building programs undertaken by organized groups without a vision for the future. This requires the co-operative efforts of the best talents available. As a church which could be a beacon, we must give due consideration to these principles when undertaking our building programs. The co-operative efforts of scientists, industry, and government in war efforts accomplished marvels, and Great Britain's hope for recovery is based on this plan. Co-operative effort is equally vital in the church.

Since many of our branches are contemplating building improvements as evidenced by the correspondence received this year, I take this opportunity to suggest that I think the time has come when we should have more uniform design and appointments in our church buildings.

We are a democratic group, and everyone has a right to his opinions, but in building our churches, if we could adopt a more uniform style, we would experience more harmony in our branches. With slight variations in details, each group could still maintain its own individuality. At the same time, by respecting precedent, our regular type of service would not be disturbed.

In planning for a church building from the beginning of group worship, generally, the meeting place was given a setting equal to the best that could be provided. The meetinghouse was placed in an open space near the center of the group to be served. For instance, at the point of intersection of two principal thoroughfares on a slight elevation, or a parked area properly located. It is recognized today that no one should find it necessary to walk farther than one-half mile to their social center. This places the church buildings approximately one mile apart, which is the case in some instances in Independence. Our churches must be in locations where property values have been studied, and not in the path of undesirable industrial expansion or slum growth which we cannot hope to control.

If our building is to be really "The House of the Lord," true architectural expression must recognize the character of the real owner. In all its features the building structure must be honest. We cannot use imitation materials such as asphalt coated paper brick or stone when building for the Lord. We must not choose our materials with regard to price alone, but must give due consideration to service and durability. In other words, we build for eternity.

We were given instructions for the Kirtland Temple, and we can do no better today than to follow its general character as may be adapted to our needs, utilizing present-day methods and materials for building the most fitting expressions of our faith.

It would seem that there can be no hope of a permanently satisfactory church unit where there is wasted space, misused materials, or lack of conveniences and comforts which are reasonable to expect for our spoken service and schools. In planning for our principal service, the pulpit and appointments should be given first consideration. The preacher cannot speak to a divided audience with complete success. The congregation should be seated within the visual angle of the speaker, which is about 60 degrees without distracting units either to the front, back, or sides, with all lines of design directing attention to the focal point. This may be most simply done by a central pulpit framed by a neat background with a choir space arranged at a lower level starting at the main floor and building up gradually, similar to the arrangement at Kirtland Temple.

In our very large buildings there are additional details to consider; for instance, in the Auditorium where provisions must be made for hearing as well as for seeing. There is no mystery in the science of acoustics. In large auditoriums with a volume such as ours of approximately 1,300,000 cubic feet, the most satisfactory vibratory period must be determined, which will possibly be between 1.3 to 1.8 seconds, and then use sound-absorbing finishing materials to produce that result. We have large surfaces to finish which may be treated to absorb from .17 to .96 of the total sound striking them. We are all well aware of the contrast in acoustical variations between an empty room and one that is furnished with floor coverings and furniture. In finishing the Auditorium, this will be no exception.

As I once heard Daniel H. Burnham say, "Make no little plans; they have no magic to stir men's blood and probably themselves will not be realized. Make big plans; aim high in hope and work, remembering that a noble, logical diagram once recorded will never die, but long after we are gone will be a living thing, asserting itself with ever-growing insistency. Remember that our sons and grandsons are going to do things that would stagger us. Let your watchword be order and your beacon, beauty."

Yours sincerely,
HENRY C. SMITH

REPORT

Presidents of Seventy

By E. Y. Hunker and
R. E. Davey

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

The report of the Presidents of Seventy to the 1946 General Conference was submitted some weeks prior to its convening. Some important work accomplished in sessions held immediately prior to the conference were not included in the report. Mention will here-with be made of such work, as well as of subsequent work.

On April 1, 1946, the council met and began the completion of arrangements for the Seventy sessions during the time of the conference. The plans were especially intended to be applicable to the nature and scope of the calling and duties of the Seventy, adapted to present-day problems and needs relating to the missionary work of the church. At the same time the Presidents of Seventy gave serious consideration to the selection of men for the office of Seventy. Six men were subsequently ordained seventies, and we are happy in the addition of these young and consecrated ministers to the Quorum of Seventy.

While the General Conference was under way, the Presidents of Seventy held council sessions daily. This was in addition to their active participation in the Quorum of Seventy sessions, and the business and other meetings of the conference. There were also at least two council meetings after the conclusion of the conference.

The Presidents of Seventy again convened in council work from December 10 to 15, 1946. Serious and prayerful consideration was given to the problems with which both the Council and the Quorum of Seventy are confronted. We believe some measure of progress has been made in clarifying our lines of work and duty, and in beginning the rebuilding and rehabilitation of the Quorums of Seventy. We are, however, keenly aware of the seriousness of the problems still before us.

One of our major desires and objectives has been to define more accurately the work of the Seventy in relationship to the total mission and work of the church. We feel that it will be of profit and blessing to the entire church to attain to a clearer understanding of the proper functions of its quorums. For every man to learn his duty and to labor therein in all diligence has been a divine command. The same principle applies to the quorums. When we learn our proper relationships, and function accordingly, the law of God will be honored, the ministry will be more richly empowered, and the faith of the membership will be enhanced and strengthened.

A seventy is primarily called and sent forth to be a special witness for Christ. In an important sense, this is likewise the mission of the church of Jesus Christ. It is vital, then, that men of deeply moving convictions as well as of intelligence shall be sought out for this specific work that is so vitally a part of the very spiritual lifeblood of the church. In emphasizing this, we are not desirous of merely focusing attention upon the Quorum of Seventy, but rather upon the need and work of the church, as the body of Christ, to function in its divinely designed mission and ministry to the world.

The Presidents of Seventy feel deeply the weight of the responsibility of their work. Without divine guidance we cannot rightly direct the work we are called upon to perform. We, therefore, sincerely request of the other quorums and of the entire church membership their support in faith and prayer as we seek to advance this arm of the ministry, until the Seventy can and will function in the mission and councils of the church as Deity has intended.

For many years the Council of Presidents of Seventy has been without its full quota of seven men as the law prescribes. Last year we experienced the joy of the addition of one more to our number, which increased us to six men now in the Council. We feel that Brother M. L. Draper's coming into the Council will be of much help to us, and we welcome him with his youth and vigor. We are looking forward hopefully to the day when our council will be filled. Our present goal is that we shall be able to continue our work in building up the Seventy until we shall have at least one strong and well-qualified quorum filled. To this end we shall labor, continuing to seek for his light who is the Author of the cause to which we all are committed. And may God bless all the other quorums of ministry, and the members, in their efforts to advance the work of Christ.

Fraternally,
THE PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY,
E. Y. HUNKER, President
R. E. DAVEY, Secretary

REPORT

Australasian Mission

By Hermann Peisker

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

The long-delayed departure of Apostle and Sister Mesley and Gordon for America in May, 1946, and the appointment from General Conference, brought the responsibility of caring for the needs of the largest organized territory of the church—the Australasian Mission—to me.

It was disappointing that Apostle Mesley was unable to bring the Australasian Mission visually, statistically, and vocally before the 1946 Conference, but we trust all plans and labor invested in preparing the exhibit will come to fruition this year, and that the church, at Conference, will have a better understanding of this mission than mere reports can convey.

GENERAL CONFERENCE APPOINTEES

Seventy A. V. Robinson has cared for the pastoral and missionary needs of the work in the lower Manning River area, and has acted as pastor of the Tuncurry and Wingham Branches. Seventy W. J. Vaughan has labored in Western Australia. Both of these men have served in a restricted capacity because of health conditions.

High Priest C. A. Davies has acted as pastor of the Greater Newcastle Branch, High Priest S. Jacka as president of Victoria District, High Priest A. S. Frater as Mission Director of Religious Education, and High Priest D. A. Alberts as Mission Bishop's Agent. These men are making a constructive contribution in their respective spheres of administrative responsibility in the church in Australia.

Elder Floyd Potter, Missionary to South Australia, and Elder A. R. Gunning, Missionary in charge in New Zealand, have both made a fine contribution to the progress of the work of the church in their fields in leadership and service.

Elder D. P. Mawby served with devotion as locally sustained pastor and missionary in the John's River area of Northern N. S. W., up to the end of 1946.

Each of the superannuated men: High Priest A. J. Corbett, who serves as pastor to the isolated Saints and in other capacities; High Priest W. J. Haworth, active in secular interests and church work, and Seventy E. H. Davies at Westgarth, Victoria, have made devoted contributions as health and energy have permitted. Their influence and examples are powers for good.

The work and progress of the general church in Australasia is only made possible by the fine co-operation and support of district and branch officers, department leaders, and church membership.

MISSION HEADQUARTERS WORK

The work of the bishop's department has been efficiently cared for by High Priest D. A. Alberts, who has also acted as chairman of the board of directors of Tiona Reunion Grounds Ltd., and chairman of the board of publication. Bishop's tithing records reveal that 1946 has broken all records, the income being £6564—for 1945 it was £5300. Sr. Valda Poole has acted as secretary and bookkeeper for the Mission President and Bishop's Agent. High Priest A. S. Frater has served as mission director of religious education, statistician, and managing editor of the Standard. He has also traveled and labored in Victoria, Southern and Western Australia in the interests of our religious education program. Sister Valerie McLaughlin has acted as executive-secretary of the board of publication, and besides handling the sales, correspondence, and bookkeeping of this department, has published and issued a number of brochures to meet the needs of the church and departments. Brother Les Dalziell has made a fine contribution as leader of young people and Sister Nance Parkes as mission leader of women. The co-operation and loyal support of the mission personnel has been largely responsible for the progress and fine spirit existing in all parts of the mission.

There have been, during the year, 54 baptisms reported to the statistical department and the mission enrollment now stands at 3,280.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Tiona Reunion at the Christmas-New Year period 1946 was one of the finest experienced. The 650 campers comprised priesthood and Saints from every state in the mission, including New Zealand. Attendances at services, class studies, educational and worship activities were records. All activities were on a high spiritual level. During the same period a second mission reunion was held at Marysville, Victoria, with 70 campers from several states. Activities, directed by High Priest S. Jacka, both spiritual and educational and recreative, were also of the highest character.

Several youth camps have been held during the year at Tiona, N. S. W.; Marysville, Victoria; and Nairne, South Australia. Two others at Tiona and Newcastle had to be abandoned because of floods. Summer and vacation church schools have been conducted at various centers. In Adelaide, a Day Kindergarten has been established, sponsored, and carried on by the church women with full recognition by civil authorities.

"Wandell College" organized at Newcastle, held its second leadership and teacher-training school in January. At its sessions a group of church youth took intensive studies for accredited work in various fields.

MISSION HOMES AND CHURCHES

The acquirement of mission homes in capital cities of the Australian states is a sign of progress as well as the satisfaction of a long-felt need. We now have three ideally situated good mission homes, at a total value of more than £4,000, and with less than £400 still owing on them. This objective has been achieved in just six years.

The building of churches at Guildford, and Bulahdelah, New South Wales and Carnegie, Victoria, is at a standstill at the moment because of permit, building material, and other problems. We hope these will soon be solved. New Zealand has £500 in hand towards a new church at Auckland.

REUNION GROUNDS

The year 1946 is a landmark in the history of the Australasian mission, because the long-anticipated transfer of this wonderful reunion grounds to the church was provided for. For many years, the fact that this property had to be handled in trust for the church by a company, made all the profits resulting from voluntary labor subject to heavy taxation. The secretarial work also became an almost impossible task for voluntary workers. The securing of the property and bringing its administration under direct church management is a big forward move.

The Victorian District also has a campaign under way for the purchase of a reunion grounds in the picturesque Marysville District and plans are well-advanced. Several reunions and youth camps have already been held in this district.

GENERAL

The work in Australia moves steadily ahead. The local and district activities in the mission are being cared for, in most cases, by men of vision who are alive to the world challenge to the church, and who plan ahead to meet the needs of the church in relation to herself and her "evangelism" program. In some cases men have not responded to the call, and the burden of local work has fallen upon the shoulders of general church men. During the year, calling to priesthood has come to a number of young men in all parts of the mission. Some have already been ordained, and others will soon join them to carry on the work.

One of the gratifying features of 1946 is the way in which so many of our young men who have returned from active service, have assumed their responsibilities in the church with renewed vigor and consecration.

Evangelists C. A. Dickinson and W. Dyke have cared for the patriarchal work in the mission, although Brother Dyke has lately been restricted by ill health. Brother Dickinson has traveled extensively, and both branches, districts, and the conference and reunion gatherings have profited by his wise counsel and evangelistic ministry.

The future of the work in the Australasian Mission is a tremendous challenge to the limited number of men under general church appointment, to even begin to meet the needs of the church. The harvest is great, the territory to service is vast, and the laborers are all too few. Most of the men are heavily engaged in administrative and departmental work, and the work of expansive evangelism is limited. Intensive planning for missionary efforts by branches and districts seems to be the great need at present.

The fine spirit of toleration, co-operation, and understanding which has characterized all conferences and business sessions of districts and branches during the year augurs well for the future.

With all good wishes for a successful conference,

HERMANN PEISKER.

REPORT

Music Department

By Franklyn S. Weddle

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

We are pleased to report the activities of the Music Department for the inter-conference period.

The church choir list has been expanded and is available to all district and local choir directors upon application. Our mailing list is constantly growing, and the departmental correspondence is becoming more and more heavy as the services of this department are becoming known by the membership.

We have organized the music work in Zion by the appointment of Miss Aleta Runkle as General Supervisor, to the end that our churches here might be better served and the music programs be more integrated and effective.

The organs at Stone Church, Walnut Park, and the one to be installed shortly at Englewood have taken a considerable amount of our time and energy during this past year. The one at the Stone Church is a beautiful instrument and one of the best in the Middle West. A Hammond organ installation has been ordered for the Auditorium to be used until we are ready for a pipe organ installation and also to be used as a utility instrument because of its portability.

Music for the Annual May Festival in Independence was arranged for by us with a Church Choir Festival which will be repeated and enlarged this coming May.

The Independence Little Symphony is doing four regular concerts (one on Tuesday evening during this Conference), and accompanied our 30th annual singing of the Messiah on December 20, 1946. Due to conditions beyond our control the Messiah was not broadcast nationally. We hope to be able to broadcast the 31st annual performance.

The Symphony has grown in stature and quality this year and is becoming accepted by the Independence community as one of our best cultural assets.

We again this year assisted in securing music instructors for youth camps, institutes, Campus services, club programs, reunions, etc.

In co-operation with the First Presidency, we have activated a committee to look into the project of a Youth Hymnal. Meanwhile we are continuing with the collection of material for a new Saints' Hymnal, a matter which we feel should be taken up in a not too distant future.

We still envisage a continually improving quality in the music we use for the worship of Almighty God. We solicit the suggestions and prayers of the Saints in behalf of the work of this department and pledge to serve to the best of our ability in the accomplishment of our endeavor.

Respectfully submitted,
FRANKLYN S. WEDDLE,
Director of Music

REPORT

Graphic Arts Bureau

By C. Ed. Miller

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

By action of the General Conference of 1946, the Visual Aid department formerly carried on by the Bureau, was transferred to the Herald Publishing House. Orders for projectors, slides, etc., should no longer be sent to the Graphic Arts Bureau.

In the vaults in the Bartholomew Hall building, are stored the following framed large oil paintings: Joseph Smith, the martyr; Emma Smith, Joseph Smith III, Oliver Cowdery, Oliver Cowdery's wife, Oliver Cowdery's father, the organization of the church, the Last Judgment, Frederick M. Smith, and a framed pastel of the Ascension of Christ. Also copies of oil painting of Jacob Whitmer and wife, and portrait of Jacob Whitmer and David Whitmer. We have several oil paintings by David Smith. There are two fine reproductions of the Martyr in oil, one of these we think should be placed in the Kirtland Temple. We have actual photographs of Joseph Smith and Emma Smith in daguerreotype. We have a copy of a daguerreotype of the Nauvoo Temple; from this and other material we have on hand, a splendid oil painting is now in the Mansion House in Nauvoo.

There are negatives and prints of nearly all the pioneers who helped establish the church. I hope in the not distant future to photograph these, as well as places and buildings of historical interest, on sensitized canvas and then have them painted in oil.

Possibly places can be found for the most valuable of these oil paintings on the walls of the new library rooms. They should not be permanently stored in a vault.

My assistant, J. W. Stobaugh, has now completed in a most methodical manner, the cataloguing and filing of our large collection of photographs, etc.

REPORT

Department of Religious Education

By F. M. McDowell and John R. Darling

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

We are pleased to submit the following summary of the activities of the Department of Religious Education covering the, all too brief, interconference year 1946-47 and to bring to your attention certain trends and needs which appear to us to be of vital significance to the church as a whole.

HIGH LIGHTS OF THE YEAR

In our report to the General Conference of 1946, we stressed three most urgent needs. These briefly stated were:

1. The development of more uniquely Latter Day Saint curriculum materials.
2. Clarifying of the goals and place of religious education in the ongoing program and work of the church.
3. The more widespread adoption and use of materials and programs now available.

In the matter of developing uniquely Latter Day Saint curriculum materials, we may report significant progress, i. e., graded lesson materials for summer vacation schools, a prebaptismal manual, and the "Light of Life" award program. (See also below under "The Current Quarterly and New Curriculum Materials.")

To the matter of clarifying the place of religious education in the work of the church, we have, with and under the direction of members of the First Presidency, given considerable attention. This has served to clarify administrative relationships and provide encouraging assurances of more effectual, because more unified, religious education throughout the church.

Perhaps the most significant work of the year has been that of the instruction and inspiration of key leaders and workers in selected regions, stakes, and districts of the church. (See "Field Work" below.) This educational endeavor has had as its purpose the development of an appreciation, understanding, and use of our educational materials and programs with more and better religious education in mind.

Progress in the educational field does not lend itself readily to tangible measurement. That which follows represents the painstaking, sustained, and devoted endeavors of the members of the staff of this department throughout the year. Endeavors, which we hope and pray, have born fruit in the lives of church members young and old throughout the world.

Our staff during the year has consisted of the following:

F. M. McDowell, Director
John R. Darling, Associate Director
Thelona D. Stevens, Director of Leadership Training
Edna Easter, Secretary, Director of Girls' Work, Camping
Alta Witte, Secretary (part time)

These, together with many volunteer workers and part-time helpers, have without exception, co-operated happily and willingly in a year of most intensive and, we believe, fruitful work. We gratefully acknowledge our indebtedness to all who have thus served.

THE ADVISORY BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The status and membership of the Advisory Board of Religious Education remains as presented in our report to the conference of 1946. The contribution of the Board as a whole has been limited somewhat by the difficulty of calling together busy persons whose own responsibilities are many and exacting. We have, however, felt free upon many occasions to consult members of the Board with a view to securing their advice and help. We definitely expect to set up ways and means of making more profitable use of the Board, both individually and collectively, during the next interconference period.

FIELD WORK

During the year, members of our staff have actively participated in a large number and variety of church gatherings—regional, stake, and district, including conferences, institutes, reunions, training schools, youth retreats, conventions, etc. In this way we have served, we believe helpfully, representative officials, leaders, members (key workers) of 37 stakes and districts representing more than one half of the stakes and districts of the United States and Canada.

This we feel has been the most systematic and fruitful field work we have ever been able to perform in the interests of religious education generally.

AREAS OF ACTIVITY

Significant developments and plans in each of the various areas or aspects of religious education under our supervision are briefly summarized as follows:

Church School

In all our contacts throughout the year, we have sought definitely and consistently to foster an increased efficiency on the part of our church schools. To this end, the Church School Yearbook containing standards and norms for church schools has been widely distributed and its consistent use sought. A revision of this Yearbook containing more helps for its effectual use is contemplated and should serve as the central emphasis for our church school program over a period of years.

Zion's League

The year has witnessed a somewhat systematic experimental study of a modified plan of organization and functioning for local Zion's Leagues. Results of this study will undoubtedly be incorporated in materials now contemplated.

Through the Saint's Herald and Guide-Lines to Leadership, program helps have been furnished throughout the year under the general heading, "Adventures in Latter Day Saintism." Worthy of note also is the manual, Does It Make Any Difference? which has been widely used as a basis of study and activity by local Leagues and as a source book for regional and district youth conventions and institutes. Plans for next year include providing under one cover a round-the-year program of study, worship, recreation, and service under the title, "Youth Exploring," for youth leaders and young people generally.

Leadership Training

The past year marked a new high in leadership training. More students have registered for classes and correspondence work than in any previous year in the history of the department. A growing number are evidently planning to become "specialists" in certain areas of leadership and are choosing their courses according to this plan. Apparently for more of our leaders than ever before, systematic study has become a habit. There is abundant evidence, too, that increasingly those profiting by such training are being chosen to occupy key positions in their respective branches as leaders and teachers.

We fully expect to continue systematic promotion of our training program, improving our materials and methods at every opportunity.

Girls' Programs

The most significant achievement of the year in girls' work has been the preparation and publication of the "Light of Life" religious award program for girls. This uniquely church-centered program is now available for junior high girls in any of the following organizations: Orioles, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, 4-H Club girls, etc.

During the year, the Oriole Girls' Handbook has been completely revised and the new edition published, crystallizing the results of more than a quarter of a century of work and experience. Our future course in this important field seems clear. This excellent material must receive far greater acceptance and use among our local churches generally.

Boys' Program

The high light of the year, of course, was the Court of Honor held during the General Conference of 1946, at which time fourteen Boy Scouts were granted the "God and Country" award. This marked genuine pioneering not only for our church but also for Protestant churches in the Middle West.

Throughout the year we have sought to promote the appreciation, understanding, and use of this uniquely Latter Day Saint program for boys. This we expect to continue to do since the materials now available may well serve for many years.

Camping

The year has evidenced a marked development of our camp program in the number and variety of camps held. In all, eight youth camps were held, serving 570 campers under the direction of 127 staff members. A consistent endeavor has been made to discover and train potential camp leaders. The prospects for camping are most promising.

Summer Vacation Church Schools

The year has witnessed a gradual but healthy growth of interest and activity among our branches in the field of Vacation Church Schools. Most significant again was the school held in Independence participated in by 1,200 children and 120 leaders. The many weeks spent in intensive training by these leaders and teachers in advance of this school is most significant. Significant also was the preparation and use for the first time of uniquely Latter Day Saint curriculum materials. Directly and indirectly, this experience and these materials have assisted many other church workers in launching similar programs.

For many months now a committee of workers has been busy in Independence preparing for publication a variety of program materials for all age groups for summer vacation schools and reunions for the coming year. The department has supported these activities directly or indirectly at every opportunity and expects to continue so to do.

Visual Education

We have been happy to witness a marked progress toward the realizing of our anticipations of a year ago in regard to the development of a unified program for the production, distribution, and use of visual aids in all fields of church endeavor. To this end, a member of our staff has served actively as a member of the Visual Aids Council of the church.

This department expects to be alert to the availability of such materials and to promote the proper use of same as a most promising method of religious education in any and all areas under our supervision.

Guide-Lines to Leadership

The publication of Guide-Lines to Leadership has continued. Our staff has made a sustained effort to improve its quality and effectiveness. We sincerely wish the subscription list could be doubled, since we believe such a publication to be indispensable to leaders in all areas of educational endeavor. An examination of the Table of Contents of issues of the past year reveals that a somewhat surprising variety and wealth of helps have thus been made available. Again we urge for Guide-Lines the united and sustained support of church workers everywhere.

The Current Quarterly and New Curriculum Materials

We are indebted to C. B. Hartshorn, editor in chief of church school literature, for the following statement:

"During the year we have the following new or revised quarterlies: kindergarten, primary, junior, and junior high. The senior high B course has been reprinted with a new format but only minor content changes. Next fall we are anticipating a new course for the kindergarten, The Child and His World; junior, Telling the Gospel Story; junior high, Gospel Witnesses; and senior high, The Young Latter Day Saint Looks at His World. Authors are now working on these courses.

"Small committees have been assisting in the development of curriculum materials during the past year. Their function is to advise with the editor on the quality of the material to go into the quarterlies. The members of these committees are local workers in the headquarters area who have had much experience in the particular departments they are serving. They have also helped in selecting the supplementary texts which are recommended in the catalog of church school study materials. Some very excellent work has been done by these committees, and many of them have spent hours in serving the church in this capacity."

Trends in Religious Education and Their Possible Implications for Us

One who has his ear to the ground today may readily discern certain rather significant trends in the field of religious education among religious peoples generally. Some of these trends together with a few of their possible implications for us are very briefly suggested below:

1. The establishing or re-establishing of sound theological foundations for religious education.

Possible Implications:

Shall we not be required sooner or later:

- (a) To formulate some workable statement of our unique theology to serve as a basis and guide for the work of religious education.
 - (b) To evaluate in terms of the above the very best that we know concerning tested educational theory and practice.
 - (c) To translate all of this into materials, methods, and procedures which are uniquely our own and which shall constitute a program of religious education which likewise is uniquely our own.
2. The establishing or re-establishing of the home and family as the first and primary center for religious education.

Possible Implications:

Shall we not be required to give much more attention to such matters as:

- (a) Premarital education and counseling.
 - (b) Parent education and counseling.
 - (c) The church program for young adults.
 - (d) Religious instruction in the home.
 - (e) Church-home co-operation in religious education.
3. Growing concern because of the extent to which public education has become secularized.

Possible Implications:

Shall we not be required to give serious thought to and come to some decision concerning such matters as:

- (a) The revamping of our total church school setup.
- (b) Weekday religious education
- (c) The possible establishment of our own parochial schools.
- (d) Possible co-operation with interchurch endeavors to foster the teaching of religion in the public schools.

4. An increasing conviction that religious education is in, for, and by the church—that it is the legitimate responsibility of the whole church and not a portion thereof.

Possible Implications:

Shall we not for example be required to give more attention in both theory and practice to the concept that the branch in its total program is in fact a school of spiritual growth? This will mean that religious education is not to be treated as "an unfaithful adopted child" but rather have priority in both the administration and functioning of the church program as a whole. As one example of the far-reaching import of this point of view, we cite the increasing practice of considering all that the church teaches as well as all the activities shared by its members as constituting the real curriculum and program of religious education.

5. Growing co-operation among the Protestant forces of the world in and for religious education.

Possible Implications:

Shall we not be forced to come to some decision as to just what our attitude and practice shall be in relation to such co-operative endeavors? Shall we disregard them, remaining entirely aloof? Shall we get all we can from them and give as little as possible in return? Or shall we join wholeheartedly with such movements? If we are determined to walk alone in religious education, how shall we be able singlehanded to work out adequate solutions to the problems involved?

6. It is apparent that leading religious denominations are viewing with increasing concern the very definite responsibility of religious education in the church in its relationship to the many pressing social problems of the day.

Possible Implications:

Shall we not be required sooner or later to give most careful attention to the contribution of religious education in its relationship to such problems as:

- (a) Juvenile delinquency
- (b) The increasing use of tobacco and alcohol
- (c) The breakdown of moral standards
- (d) Vocational education and counseling
- (e) Race relationships

Needs and Recommendations

In the light of these trends and in consideration of the next steps in the work of religious education throughout the church, we have brought to the attention of the First Presidency and Joint Council certain recommendations. Briefly, we have recommended:

1. The appointment of a full-time church supported general director of youth work.
2. The appointment of a full-time church supported director of religious education for the city of Zion.
3. The appointment of a full-time church supported director of youth work in the city of Zion.
4. That early consideration be given by the administrative quorums of the church to the matter of providing for research in the whole field of curriculum planning, i. e., the planning and building of curricular materials which are distinctly Latter Day Saint.
5. That administrative quorums give early consideration to an experimental approach to ways and means of expanding our religious education program in such areas as experimental church schools, weekday religious education, the advisability and possibility of establishing experimental parochial schools, and the like.
6. That early attention be given by the First Presidency and the administrative officers involved to the selection of certain centers and areas of the church for special concentrated and sustained endeavors in the work of religious education.

We wish to acknowledge with grateful appreciation the increasing co-operation of administrative officers and church appointees generally. Included here also are the thousands of more or less unknown and unheralded volunteer workers scattered among the congregations of the church without whose loyal and faithful support the work of religious education would have very little prospect of success.

REPORT

The North Atlantic States Mission

By George G. Lewis

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

A review of activities during the past year in the North Atlantic States Mission reveals some definite progress. This report will cover some of these as well as suggestions for the improvement of the work in this area.

My efforts have been largely directed towards organizing the Saints, stimulating them, and urging them towards a revival of the missionary spirit—the spirit of testimony—for thereby only can the Restoration Message be carried to the many millions of people in the territory of this field. At least one and sometimes two or more visits were made to nearly every branch and mission in the assigned territory.

STRATEGIC SITUATION

Attention should be drawn to the important strategic situation of the North Atlantic States Mission. Over 30 per cent of the population of the United States, or 40,000,000 people, live in this area. One third of the cities in the United States over 100,000 population are to be found in the North Atlantic States Mission, 12 of these cities with over 300,000 population; 6 cities have over 1,000,000 people each. The missionary possibilities are large. In many of these cities the church is established. But for this vast population only four men have been assigned to serve full time. If we are to succeed in this field, additional help must be given to lead and direct the Saints in their endeavors. Many of the Saints are ready.

LOCAL MINISTRY

Much of the success achieved throughout the area is due to the loyal and devoted service of ministry and members, who, in spite of the press of daily vocations and family responsibilities, have carried on commendably. Local pastors and district presidents have been called upon to travel hundreds and in some instances thousands of miles in their work. Devotion like this will surely not go unheeded by our Heavenly Father. I wish to register my deep appreciation for their support and co-operation.

The church is strong in any given area, according to the strength of its local ministry. Our endeavor, therefore, has been and is to build up and strengthen the local priesthood by means of Priesthood Institutes fellowships, classwork, and special emphasis upon some phase of priesthood work in reunions. Two Priesthood Institutes were held in October, 1946, one at Philadelphia and one at Boston which nearly 150 priesthood attended. President F. Henry Edwards was the special guest instructor for these. Benefits are still felt from the widening vision and fellowship enjoyed by the priesthood.

MINISTRY OF APPOINTEES

Four appointees labor in the North Atlantic States Mission. These men have been loyal and hard working in their ministry. The total endeavor has been to revive the missionary spirit, and some success is being achieved in this direction.

Practically every branch or mission has received one or two personal visits from the minister in charge as well as from Bishop Don O. Chesworth so that contact has been maintained. Besides spiritual results accruing, the financial response to the law of tithing has been excellent, while the numbers of inventories filed and contributors have increased considerably.

High Priest Reed Holmes has served as President of Southern New England District and as President of Boston Branch. In conjunction with Seventy Albert Scherer, a missionary policy has been followed which is beginning to bear fruit. Several branches should benefit from the labors of these brethren over a period of time. One branch (Brockton) has been revived, new members are being added to it, and its church building has been dedicated in the past year, while another branch (Dennisport) is developing very well since help has come to it through the moving in of Priest George Armeson and wife. Other branches in this area are showing good signs of reviving interest. This coming year should see further growth if provision is made to give some impetus and instruction to priesthood through institutes, etc.

High Priest Carl Muir entered into his appointment as pastor at Philadelphia, Pa., in September, 1946, and has been well received. Missionary expansion is contemplated in this area under his leadership.

Seventy Don Harvey spent ten weeks in Buffalo and Niagara Falls with appreciable success, while Seventy Eugene Theys has labored successfully for one month in climaxing the missionary series in Southern New England District.

Newark, New Jersey, was organized as a branch in June, 1946—the only organized group of the church in New Jersey.

PROSPECTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

After surveying possibilities for growth and development, it is my conclusion that the work in Maine can be revived if given some help in the near future. Very little continuous help has been given to the work of the church in Maine in the past fifteen years. The church is deeply indebted to Elder Newman Wilson and other local workers for maintaining ministry to the Saints in Maine during these years of isolation. We ought to render assistance at once.

The metropolitan areas present their own peculiar problems requiring general church assistance. New York City, Baltimore, Washington, Buffalo, etc., have membership scattered over a wide territory, making it very difficult for the local ministry to serve as well as they wish and as adequately as the needs of the Saints require. It is surprising that the Saints receive as much care as they do. Missionary opportunities are large in these places but await full-time help. This would be welcomed.

It is important that the church be suitably and adequately represented in Washington, D. C., the National Capital. A very active branch, drawn from all parts of the country, is to be found here. Their meeting place is in a hall which is totally inadequate to their needs. It is also unrepresentative of our work in a city that tends to be the World's Capital. The building of a suitable church edifice to meet the situation is beyond the ability of the Washington Saints. They have and are raising a sizable sum towards a church building, but the general church will need to give generous assistance in this direction before long if our work is to function more fully. A church building in Washington will serve more than the local branch.

The year's activities have been encouraging. The Lord has blessed us in our ministry and his Spirit has been wonderfully felt, for which we give grateful acknowledgment. The prospects for advancement are good. May we all continue to receive of the grace of our Lord as we seek to minister and to serve.

In gospel bonds,
Fraternally yours,
GEORGE G. LEWIS

REPORT

The Great Lakes Mission

By E. J. Gleazer and Blair Jensen

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

The Great Lakes Mission consists of the following territory: Michigan, Ontario, Ohio, Northern Indiana, Western Virginia, and Western Pennsylvania. In this area we have eighteen districts: eight in Michigan, four in Ontario, three in Ohio, and one each in Indiana, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. In these districts, as of the statisticians's report to the last General Conference, slightly more than 28,000 members resided. Under General Conference assignment and giving ministry to this membership were four Seventies, four high priests, and nine elders.

The major activities in the territory have been the seven reunions held at Port Elgin and Eric Beach in Ontario, at Kirtland in Ohio, and the Blue Water, Sanford, Cash, and Park of the Pines in Michigan. Each of these reunions has developed a rather marked numerical strength which calls for considerable planning upon the part of the general church and district officers concerned, and also involves a considerable yearly cash outlay in addition to the heavy permanent investment in land, improvements, and equipment.

We have attempted to co-operate with the First Presidency in holding district and regional activities to a minimum, thus conserving general church man power, financial outlay, as well as endeavoring to overcome trends which tend to interfere with normal branch and district functioning.

It has been our endeavor to strengthen the centers, to develop the ministry, to encourage the Saints, and to stimulate missionary activity throughout the entire field. In this we have had the full wholehearted co-operation of the church appointees and of the branch and district presidents. There has been an encouraging increase in church attendance, an excellent record in tithes and offerings, and all of this despite reconstruction programs, labor strikes, etc. We rejoice in the fact of a ten per cent increase in baptisms over the previous year, and yet we believe that with encouragement and proper direction a greater increase is possible.

We are happy to announce the organization of a branch at Chillicothe, Ohio. We believe that wisdom will direct at proper time that other strong mission groups will be organized into branches. The large Central Michigan District was organized into two districts for the purpose of more effective functioning.

We have also visited Ottawa, the capital of Canada, to investigate the possibility of establishing our church relationships there on a more permanent and representative basis. We feel that the time is most opportune to attract more favorable attention to this principal city of the Dominion of Canada. We concur wholeheartedly in the present efforts to strengthen the church abroad, but believe that Canada, with its ready accessibility, at the present time presents a more fertile field for the extension of our work than any mission either at home or abroad. Today in the Canadian Provinces, approximately 9,500 Saints reside. The Canadian immigration policy is making it possible for many worth-while European immigrants to come to America, thus affording a fruitful field for the presentation of our gospel to peoples of many nationalities and tongues.

We have enjoyed our association in jointly administering this mission, and we wish to express our sincere thanks to the ministry and membership for their prayers and sympathetic support.

Society for Archaeological Research

By Charles R. Hield

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

The Society for Archaeological Research has met several times during the Conference period. These meetings have been devoted to discussions of how we can best serve the church by making available additional material in proof of the Book of Mormon.

The Society is interested in any and all articles, books, or pictures dealing with ancient ruins which may be connected with the Book of Mormon. They have been asked to assist in the editing of texts to accompany approved lectures to be used with archaeological materials.

Two of the society, Paul M. Hanson and Charles R. Hield, accompanied by Harold Smith, made a trip to central and lower Mexico in January and February of 1947 to obtain colored slides of additional ruins, particularly the large and important Maya ruin at Yaschilán in the state of Chiapas. Other places never photographed by church members were also visited on this trip. Many new pictures were taken of recent discoveries and excavations at sites visited in years past. On this trip the following archaeological areas were visited: Cholula, San Juan de Teotihuacan, Tenayuca, Tula, Palenque, Yaschilán, Mitla, Monte Albán, Teopanzolco, Malinalco, Cuicuilco, Copilco, and Zochicalco. Pictures were also taken in several museums. The Mexican government was most helpful to us on these trips.

Lectures using archaeological slides demonstrating how the Book of Mormon may be proved true will be shown in the choir room each weekday afternoon at the General Conference. Harold I. Velt and Roy Weldon of the executive committee will be the speakers.

We are also hoping that a number of other church members may become so interested in the goals of the society that they will be willing to devote some time and effort in this research.

First Quorum of Seventy

By Maurice L. Draper

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

At the time this report is submitted, reports from the members of the quorum number twenty-one, with five from those who were serving in the quorum at the time of retirement or superannuation. It may be that additional information may be received in time for reporting to the Conference.

Information at hand indicates that the work of the Seventy is being pursued in a manner which prophesies its increasing effectiveness in the coming years. The Seventy have been declining in numbers for a considerable time, but the situation as regards man power and spiritual effectiveness looks hopeful. The present personnel is widely varied as to age, including some men who would no doubt have been superannuated had they been under active conference appointment over the years, and others in their twenties, newly ordained. Studies are under way at the present time relative to the proper adjustment of quorum membership regarding the numerous factors which enter into the work of the Seventy, such as age, conference appointment, etc.

Reports reveal the following statistics for members of the Quorum:

Sermons preached	2,538
Times in charge of services.....	767
Times assisted in presiding.....	615
Other services attended.....	2,727

REPORT

The Quorum of High Priests

By Ward A. Hougas

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

During the conference year which is now drawing to a close, the activities of the Quorum of High Priests has been continued on about the normal basis. Because of the fact that the members of the quorum are widely scattered over our entire church-world, activities are quite generally limited to the conference period. In very few localities do we have sufficient numbers of high priests to make local meetings advisable or possible. This limits the work of the quorum in the conference interims to that which can be done by correspondence. The officers of the quorum have met together frequently in the caring for the needs as they have arisen.

Several general news letters have been published in which we have attempted to keep the quorum members informed of quorum happenings. The program for the coming conference period has been the center of much interest, and is now nearing completion as the conference opening date draws near.

Our membership reaches out into most of the more important administrative posts and scarcely a district or stake or large branch functions except under the leadership of a competent high priest. We recognize a definite need of a fuller understanding of our place in the total church picture. We also believe that there is need of a more perfect understanding on the part of the membership as to the work and place of the high priest in the affairs of the church.

During the conference period, we will meet for two periods each forenoon at which time we will attempt to further our own understanding of the privileges offered us for greater service by virtue of our calling.

A number of our stalwart men have been claimed by the grim reaper during the past year. This always challenges us as we realize that these great warriors have preceded us into a greater field of activity, there to continue their work with the quorum eternal.

The past year has been one of utmost satisfaction as we have attempted to feel our way into the work of a new administration. The events of recent months have given us great faith as we face the rather uncertain periods which probably confront us in our work in the kingdom.

It is our hope that, as a quorum, we may be depended upon to give that kind of continuous support to the needs of the work as will be of most assistance at the time. To this end we pledge ourselves and work ever for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to our care. WARD A. HOUGAS, President of the Quorum.

Central States Mission

By Paul M. Hanson and Arthur A. Oakman

The territory covered by the Central States Mission, outside of Independence and the Stakes, includes Wisconsin, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa, with a total membership of 24,753. The baptismal percentage increase for the entire field was 2.23, or 550 persons for the year 1946. This is a little higher than the general church level. While this percentage increase is encouraging, it is still below the computed subsistence level, which is 3 per cent. Only two districts baptized more than 3 per cent, while nine districts baptized between 2 and 2.86 per cent. In other words, eleven districts were above the general church level and nine districts fell below 1.99 per cent.

In studying these figures, we have recognized that the baptismal gains are directly related to the numbers of missionaries in the districts and the energetic prosecution of their work. This fact points to the importance of increasing our missionary force and placing them at points of vantage to strengthen the weak places. We shall endeavor to emphasize the work of evangelization so as to realize, if possible, a 5 per cent increase in baptisms for the coming year.

Since the last Conference there has been an increase in missionary activity, and the results are encouraging as have been set forth, and with the continuation of the co-operation which has been freely given by ministry and members alike, we can expect that the future will hold rich promises for future missionary gains. There has been a large increase in the calls for missionary work, and in this our people are evidencing a very healthy attitude, since the missionary spirit is the very foundation of our work.

During the summer of 1946, reunions were held at Brush Creek, Illinois; Columbus, Kansas; Woodbine, Iowa; Des Moines, Iowa; Aledo, Illinois; and Nauvoo, Illinois. Unfortunately the reunion at Chetek, Wisconsin, was canceled, owing to the threat of polio.

Members of the Quorum are not only serving as missionaries, but in certain instances approved by the Presidency and the Minister in Charge are also serving as pastors, district presidents, and in special assignments. Many report activities such as class lectures, preaching, and administrative work in reunions, institutes, and conferences. Some have served as Auditorium guides, and as guides at Nauvoo, where opportunities have been found to tell something of the beliefs and history of the church to thousands of tourists. Other special duties by members of the quorum include lecture work at the Appointee Institute in September, and editorial work in visual education.

The class sessions, forum discussions, and other features of the educational program of the Seventy at the last Conference were well organized, efficiently conducted, and added a great deal to the information and inspiration of the men present. Special studies are in progress relative to the distinctive work of the Seventy, and assignments have been made nearly a year in advance in preparation for the next sessions.

Reports have been received from men who were serving in the office of Seventy at the time of superannuation or retirement, and they indicate that these men carry on in the spirit of the Seventy as health and opportunity permit. While these men are not enrolled with the Quorum since their superannuation, their work partakes of the spirit and nature of the office, and their continued activities are therefore reported here.

The work of the Seventy is onward. The demands are great, the opportunities plentiful, and we heed the divine command in praying that the Lord will send more laborers to join in the harvest of souls.

Respectfully submitted,

MAURICE L. DRAPER,

Secretary, First Quorum of Seventy.

In numbers of places plans are under way for the erection of churches and the alteration of existing structures, so that more room can be found to accommodate the increasing attendance.

During the months of January and February, Brother Hanson, in company with Apostle Charles R. Hield and Elder H. D. Smith, president of the Nauvoo District, visited pre-Columbian ruins in Mexico; and the results of this trip will in due time be brought to the attention of the church.

The spirit of fraternity which exists all over the Central States territory is truly encouraging, and we look forward with high expectations to the months and the years that are before us.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

We are submitting herewith a Comparative Balance Sheet of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital as of December 31, 1945, and December 31, 1946, which Balance Sheet has been attested to by Lloyd L. Bland, Church Auditor.

In a report to the last General Conference, attention was called to the fact that the Balance Sheet did not reflect the increases in Net Worth covering construction work that was in progress but not completed as at the close of that year. The attached Balance Sheet now shows the increase in Net Worth arising out of that work. Contributions covering the cost of this were received from the sources indicated.

It is to be noted that the net income for the year 1946 amounted to but $2,498.27. The only liabilities outstanding are those of current trade accounts paid in the ensuing month.

The contributions from the Government, the Jackson County War Chest, the City of Independence, and other sources, and also the appropriation by the General Conference, provided additional facilities very much needed. Those funds, together with others appropriated by the general church, available but not yet expended, have made it possible for our institution to render an ever-expanding service.

Respectfully submitted in behalf of the Board of Trustees,

February 24, 1947

I have examined the balance sheet of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital as of December 31, 1946, have reviewed the system of internal control and the accounting procedures of the hospital and, without making a detailed audit of the transactions, have examined or tested accounting records of the hospital and other supporting evidence, by methods and to the extent I deemed necessary.

Costs of construction of the new unit and reconversion of the old unit, and the related income from grants and contributions have been recorded as of December 31, 1946.

In my opinion, the accompanying balance sheet presents fairly the position of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital at December 31, 1946, and the results of its operations for the year then ended.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital

By Gertrude E. Copeland, R.N.

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

When we made our report to the Conference of 1946, we had expected our sixth floor would be finished by the time conference convened, but our hopes did not materialize and it was on May 29, of last year that we admitted our first patient to that floor, which will accommodate eight fracture patients, eight children, has a four-bed ward for student nurses, and an additional 14 beds for general surgical and medical patients. Many compliments have been received about this floor from our staff physicians and patients who have occupied beds in this department. We can now accommodate 136 adult patients, eight pediatric patients, and have 36 bassinets for newborn infants.

In our X-ray department our G. U. room was completed and the equipment installed in May, 1946. Our deep therapy room was finished and equipment costing around $10,000 installed in January of this year, and open house was held on January 24 to give the people of Independence an opportunity to see this modern equipment. A dinner was given to the medical staff in honor of Dr. O. H. McCandless, our former radiologist who left us a year ago, handing the department over to Dr. John F. Bowser, a most competent radiologist. Fifty-five persons attended the dinner. They included members of the Board of Trustees of the hospital, physicians on our hospital staff, and radiologists from Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas. This department is one that we can never consider completely finished, because there are always new types of scientific equipment being built which we will want to secure from time to time to replace other equipment in order to take advantage of the latest developments in that field.

We still have some needs which we hope can be taken care of in the near future. Our staff of physicians is asking for radium and a physiotherapy department. Another department that we are badly in need of is a laundry and workshop. Of necessity these must be housed in a separate building. When this laundry and workshop is made available, we would then have our present unfinished seventh floor which is now used as a workshop, to use for the accommodation of patients as soon as it could be finished.

Our cafeteria equipment arrived in June and has been a great improvement. Service is quicker, and our nurses and personnel feel they enjoy their food in the manner it is now prepared and served. Salads are kept cold, and the hot food kept satisfactorily in the steam section. The equipment is stainless steel and fits in very well with the grey background with large, yellow flowered fabric wall covering, so this room is very attractive at the present time.

The East building, which is now the Nurses' Home, has a large reception room on the first floor, a small recreation room and sandwich room on the second floor, and a pressing room where three nurses may press their clothes at the same time. A Bendix washer has been installed in the laundry room in the basement where the students can do their personal laundry in an easy and satisfactory manner.

In the early fall, work was started on the third floor of the Nurses' Home to modernize six rooms, narrowing the halls so that closets and bookcases for each room could be built in.

On January 8, just four years after we moved the first patients from the East building to the new hospital, we moved 16 students from the Nurses' Home at 1215 Van Horn, a house which had been used by the School of Nursing to house students for 28 years. We feel this is a big improvement for the School of Nursing, as now our students are all under one roof and are happier in one building together.

There were 31 student nurses graduated from our School of Nursing in 1946, and a class of 35 will graduate this year on Monday evening, April 7, in the Auditorium. All conference visitors are cordially invited to attend the graduation exercises.

The following statistics for the year 1946 may be of interest.

Daily average of patients	120
Patients admitted	5,741
Days care given	44,013
Babies born	1,079

Any young man or woman with two years of college who would like to further their education, working under a competent radiologist and pathologist, with a small income while learning, may consult the superintendent of the hospital in reference to work in our X-ray and laboratory department. This is not only an opportunity to learn a specialized type of work, but it is also an opportunity for some of our young people to serve the church through one of its institutions.

Respectfully submitted,

GERTRUDE E. COPELAND, R. N.
Superintendent.

Radio Department

By Evan A. Fry

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

The Radio Department has labored under a handicap during the past conference year because of the extended illness of the Radio Director, which began in February, 1946, and continued for seven months. To meet this emergency, and to provide for necessary expansion, Elder Dan Sorden was appointed to assist in the radio work, under which appointment he began service on June 1, 1946, and since has rendered a valued and increasingly useful service. Appreciation is also due to the many people who assisted in the emergency before Brother Sorden's arrival, by keeping up the regular schedules of music and radio sermons. Special mention should be made of Sister Edna Wood, who supervised things in the office, and of Arthur Rock, William Worth, Jr., L. F. P. Curry, John Darling, Garland Tickemyer, Glaude A. Smith, J. A. Koehler, Walter N. Johnson, Leonard Lea, Lloyd Bland, Chris B. Hartshorn, M. A. McConley, John T. Conway, J. D. Anderson, and J. C. Stuart who contributed radio sermons.

Brother Sorden is now conducting Morning Devotions at 6:30 a. m. each weekday morning, on alternate weeks with the Radio Director. He is also writing and delivering the Sunday morning radio sermon at 11 a. m. Ralph Freeman and Beatrice Mengel are heard each Sunday morning at 7:45 in a poetry and organ program, "Thoughts for the Day." At 5 p. m. each Sunday, a service of music, unified and connected by scriptural meditations, is presented as a service from "The Wayside Chapel." A feature of the past two years has been the production in dramatic form of In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage, and its sequel, The Vineyard Story. The scripts were written by Lea Black, and productions directed by Stephen Black. At 9:45 each Sunday evening, a doctrinal type sermon is presented with suitable musical background. At that hour we are currently engaged in a series on "What Latter Day Saints Believe."

A brief survey prior to the holiday season indicated that almost three hundred people had been used on our radio programs during the past year, serving in music, chorus, dramatics, script preparation, or preaching. Regular programs are scheduled from the Stone Church Choir, the Clematis Chorus, the Cantarina Chorus, the Clef Ensemble, a girls' trio, the Reoladasa Quartet of girls' voices, the Wayside Chapel Male Quartet, besides many soloists and organists. Without the help of these consecrated people, it would be impossible to keep our program going week after week.

During the past year we have given much study to the selection of new studio and control room equipment, and after consultation with Mr. Kenneth Krahl of KMBC, and Mr. Russell Resch, who is now employed as a full-time radio technician by the church, we now have on order a long list of radio equipment, which the last conference authorized us to purchase. This equipment includes a new control console, two recording turntables, and two play-back turntables, with necessary accessory microphones, amplifiers, speakers, rectifiers, etc., suitable for equipping our own sound recording studios and laboratories. There have been long delays in getting this equipment, and we do not anticipate delivery on some essential portions of it before July or August of this year, but it is definitely on order. When it is installed, we shall be in a position at last to do our own recording, and to supply records to branches desiring radio programs, to missionaries or others desiring to use recorded sermons in cottage meetings. We hope to co-operate with the church's visual education program in supplying sound for visual education slides or films. We shall also be prepared to make "documentary" recordings of historic events, of conference proceedings, and of the voices of prominent church men. We are still waiting to place an order for either a wire or a paper tape recorder. Neither type is completely satisfactory as yet, and development is coming so rapidly in this field that we hope by waiting a while longer to find something better and cheaper than anything now on the market. Two of these portable wire or tape recorders are definitely in our plans for the future.

With the conclusion of the war, we expected a drop in our mailing list, which had supplied the boys overseas and at camps in this country with weekly envelopes of radio sermons. But as the boys returned, we found an increasing number of people in this country who wanted to receive the radio sermons each week. So, the list remained between 250 and 300 names. This permanent mailing list was never advertised; it was a natural outgrowth of numerous requests that radio sermons be mailed on some kind of regular subscription basis. Unsolicited contributions approximately took care of the postage, leaving labor and paper costs to be met by budget appropriation. A check by returnable post card approximately every three months kept the list up to date, and free of names of those who no longer cared to receive the weekly mailings. On the recommendation of the First Presidency, and Presiding Bishopric, who felt that the labor and money involved could be better spent on some more representative presentation of the radio sermons, we discontinued this mailing list on September 1.

We have been affected in several ways by the re-negotiation of the church's contract with KMBC, which was announced in the Herald for August 10, 1946, and which clarified several issues that had never before been determined.

The Radio Department has followed somewhat impatiently the progress of the new organ installation in the Stone Church, which we anticipate will be of great usefulness in the future radio programs. We have been without a pipe organ, except for the small studio reed organ with two manuals and pedal board, since the first of December of last year. The new organ will lend much to our radio services, and has been planned with radio use in mind, as well as church services.

The studio and control room space in the Stone Church will be inadequate for any very ambitious program of recording. Besides that consideration, there is the ever-present fire hazard in the old building, where even a minor fire could irretrievably damage thousands of dollars worth of equipment. For these reasons, we are still looking forward to the day when studio and control room space can be completed in the two top floor rooms on the north side of the Auditorium Building.

We wish to go on record again in favor of a complete and unified sound system in the Auditorium, to be designed and installed by a competent engineer, with the needs of public address, sound movies, radio, recording, and possibly television services in mind. Wiring should be so planned (and completed before final plastering operations) that speech or music could be picked up in any portion of the building, and sent to any other part or parts, without unnecessary shifting of unwieldy equipment. The efficient use of the Auditorium not only for church events, but for community events as well, demands that such attention be given to the sound system and wiring for broadcasting, press wire services, etc.

The Radio Director has made it a policy to attend one or more "Radio Conferences" each year, for the sake of getting acquainted with radio people and other religious broadcasters, and hearing their discussions of current radio programs. Perhaps the best of these, held under the sponsorship of the University of Ohio at Columbus, it was impossible for him to attend last May because of illness. He has since attended a smaller conference at Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., and one at the University of Oklahoma, at Oklahoma City and Norman.

Through these conferences, the trade magazines, and members of the industry, we have tried to keep abreast of developments in Frequency Modulation radio. Mr. Charles R. Denny of the Federal Communications Commission said on last October 23, before the National Association of Broadcasters in Chicago: "The Commission has expressly authorized me to say to you again that it is our opinion that FM is the finest aural broadcast system attainable in the present state of radio art. FM is not coming; it's here. And it is growing fast."

On last October 23, as Mr. Denny spoke, there were 66 Frequency Modulation stations in operation in the United States. On January 10, 1947, 136 FM stations were in operation—an increase of more than 100 per cent in less than 90 days. On March 1, there were 161 FM stations in operation, and 568 more had been authorized, and were only waiting for equipment and the completion of construction and installation work. Men in the radio industry who a few months ago were somewhat skeptical about the competition which FM offered to AM, are now beginning to admit that in from two to five years time EVERYBODY will be listening to FM, rather than to the old style AM radio.

There is still a need for closer co-ordination between the radio work and the pastoral and missionary arms of the church, and for some closer co-ordination which will utilize the many radio sermons in some way whereby they may serve more than the limited numbers of the radio audience. Our transcription services, when established, will help to extend this circle; but the radio sermons in printed form could be made to serve a much wider field of usefulness if they could somehow be made available to people outside the range of KMBC.

Again we express our thanks and appreciation to the many people who have helped in so many ways to keep our church radio programs on the air, and to the many people who have listened faithfully and give us their encouragement and appreciation and criticism by card or letter, and in person.

Sincerely,

EVAN A. FRY, Radio Director

Anna Samuel, State Home, Lapeer, Michigan, requests the prayers of the Saints. She would appreciate visits from the members of Flint congregation, and is anxious to receive administration. She also would like to have a Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants.

Lucy M. Rushton, Rural Route 1, Parrshoro, Nova Scotia, asks the prayers of the Saints that her health will be restored.

stands watching the passersby as well as where two or three are gathered together in prayer service. I think that he estimates the worth of all our formal services by the effect that they have on us as we journey on the road to Jericho. We must not leave a wounded brother lying there on the road.

It is proper, it is right; it is God approved that in our regular assemblies, we meet and sing praises and give thanks and worship him. God needs true priests and Levites, and he has blessed and owned their good labors with abundant recognition. But there is a great need in the world today for more Good Samaritans.

Love at Prayer

I once saw a young mother kneeling beside her small son, listening to him say his evening prayer before he went to bed. His eyes were closed as he repeated the words she had taught him. But her eyes were open, and she was watching him with a look of love and tenderness; and one could see in her face and her whole manner that she, too, was making a prayer for the boy.

Ever since then that memory has remained a symbol for me. Love prays with its eyes open. That is, the right kind of love does. It takes account of all the factors in a situation; it keeps in mind all the great values of life, and the circumstances that affect them. Above all, it keeps in mind the great value of the human life it loves.

There are only a few enduring things we can love. If we love money or property, we lose it when we die, and it goes to others. If we love the popularity of the world, it is soon forgotten because nobody is ever remembered by the public more than a few weeks at a time, and some new idol comes along to worship. People pay a high price for the transitory love of the world. But if we love God, or some imperishable human soul, our love is attached to something enduring that will not be taken from us to leave our hearts empty and desolate.

Love prays with its eyes open. It sees mistakes and sins, and forgives them. It sees beneath the surface faults to the lasting virtues and enduring values. It is not unaware of the imperfections, but it does not regard them as of primary importance. Love attaches to the better parts of personality and character.

Love that prays with its eyes open is the most wonderful thing in the world.

Easter Morning

The blossoming of purity
Glow in each troubled heart,
And fire with hope the one who seeks
The truth it does impart.

The quiet grace of love and peace
Fills all the weary earth—
The signs of death are pushed aside
When nature finds rebirth.

The Easter season, time of joy,
Eternal life made known!
Reconsecration to the Lord,
Through ages, rich has grown.

The fastened stone is rolled away
From souls, with sorrow dumb—

New life has dawned, old fears retire,
The risen Lord is come.

Now gone the cross, but shadows stay
To gather up the dew
And turn each drop to sparkling things:
Old promises made new.

* THANK YOU! To the many people who wrote answering our inquiries on the problem of "News and/or Articles," we express thanks. Most of the letters were very interesting and well-written, indicating a keen and intelligent grasp of the relative values of the material and of the general situation.

Your General Conference

●

YOU may never have thought of it in that way—but it is your General Conference. In a very real sense it belongs to you. It is by you, for you, and about you—you, and all the many thousands of others who now make up the membership, and who should be coming into membership in the immediate future. You have paid the tithes that make the church, as well as the Conference, possible. You will occupy the seats as delegates or as spectators. You will participate in class sessions, discussions. You will offer your experience and understanding, and share them with others. Whatever success the church attains in coming years will be due to your efforts. Never forget that your work and contributions are important and necessary for the great final achievement toward which we all look expectantly.

THE GATHERING finds a symbol in the General Conference. Here, for a little while, we build our own small, happy society of friends—brothers and sisters in the faith. Here we participate in a homecoming of those who sympathize and participate in common ideals, and who share in a common work. The spirit of fraternity and good will prevail. Here for a little time we enjoy a foretaste of Zion, and of the great and beautiful experiences it will bring to us; we make a concerted effort to solve some of its problems, we share in its blessings, we rejoice in its hope.

Another aspect of the Conference is our effort to understand clearly the magnitude and complexity of our work, to teach ourselves the new techniques and practices that will aid us in our work of social and spiritual reconstruction. This is primarily educational.

People can do things together that they could never do alone. Isolated individuals attack problems with their own solitary strength, their own ideas, their own limited understandings. But when they come together, leadership and organization become effective, the best ideas and ways are shared with all, and the power of the group is many times greater than the separate powers of individuals.

Why is a General Conference important? It increases our power. It increases personal power as well as group power. It adds to the incentives to work and achieve. People always go home from a Conference with much more than they brought with them when they came; that is an almost universal testimony. While the gathering may be costly, it creates values far more important than finances.

PEOPLE have already arrived, as this is being written some days before the first meetings begin. They come in hope and expectation. They come in a spirit of good will. Something fine is bound to grow out of such a gathering. It could not be otherwise.

ONE FACT gives great encouragement. It is the steadily increasing number of members in the church who appreciate the true problems of the building of the kingdom of God. There is a trend toward practical considerations, plans, and measures. The social and economic factors, as well as the religious, personal, and spiritual ones, are receiving more and more consideration. At the same time, we believe that the devotion and dedication of our people, their willingness to give of their time and means toward a great cause, are as strong as ever. When one becomes really well acquainted with younger church members, he finds in them all the splendid qualities of character and personality that made a strong generation of their parents. The church has as good people today, we believe, as it ever had; and the younger folk have the advantage of better training for their tasks.

●

THE CHURCH continues always, and always will continue, to hold up the old ideals, to call men and women to the task of making a new world of righteousness and peace upon the ruins of an old world of sin and sorrow. Once more, following this General Conference, the church will send out missionaries, will issue the invitation, will sound the call. And we trust that there will be an ingathering commensurate to the effort we make.

What if we have failed in the past? What if the walls of the eternal city are still far away? In our time we have traveled our day's journey, have carried a burden; and, though we may not reach it ourselves, we leave the children closer to the goal.

Some have been discouraged and fallen away; some "walk no more with Him." They have sought their heart's desire in other places, only to reap disappointment and frustration in the end.

This we know now: if the church of Christ does not have the answer to the world's need, there is no answer. If this program does not lead us to the eternal city, no program will. If this is not the hope of the world, there is no hope. But faith teaches us that beyond the far horizon is the place where we shall find the fulfillment of our hopes and dreams.

Church Dedicated

The writer was honored in being asked to witness the dedication of a new church in Independence on Sunday, March 16. Bishop DeLapp and I were present and took part in a most profitable service.

Eden Heights, starting as a mission in 1941 under the sponsorship of the Walnut Park congregation, grew rapidly into a separate unit. Once a decision to build was made, the members swung into action: a suitable site was secured, and ground was broken in 1943. Today, through their consecrated and united labors, an appropriate and well-appointed church stands complete and wholly paid for. They are to be congratulated. Seldom have we seen such an example of what a "willing hearted" people can do.

Their present pastor is Elder Fred A. Fry, who presides with quiet dignity.

We shall not attempt further history; but trust the group historian will send a history which we may use in Herald columns.

A New History of Nauvoo

Nauvoo the Beautiful

By E. Cecil McGavin

We are in receipt of a complimentary copy of a book entitled Nauvoo the Beautiful, by E. Cecil McGavin, published by Stevens and Wallis, 36 Richards Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. This is a book of 370 pages, and having sixty-three illustrations of buildings and places of historic interest in Nauvoo. The book is handsomely gotten up in printing, binding, and illustrations. It sells for $3.00, and may be obtained at bookstores or ordered from the publishers.

We are of the opinion that this work deals more fairly with the widow and descendants of Joseph Smith than any other book that we have seen coming out of Utah. The author pays some fine tributes to Emma Smith, and to the sons of Joseph and Emma who became prominent in the work of the Reorganization: Joseph, Alexander, and David. Very naturally we appreciate this generous and friendly attitude.

E. Cecil McGavin is a popular and rather prolific writer of the Mormon church. Considering his religious beliefs and historic background, it is not surprising that some of his conclusions are quite different from our own; and also we cannot accept some of the statements that he submits as historically correct. A case in point is his statement, "Though Hyrum had been ordained to succeed his brother as president of the church, he deliberately refused to let him go alone to Carthage—and to death."—Page 120. We know of no reliable evidence that Hyrum was so ordained, and if he were, there would seem to have been little light and inspiration in the matter, since Hyrum died before Joseph.

A major difference of opinion has to do with what happened after the break-up at Nauvoo. The author of Nauvoo the Beautiful represents the church as moving westward, under the leadership of Brigham Young, to establish a Zion in Utah; while we hold that under the banner of the Reorganization and the leadership of the sons of the Prophet, the church took the road back to Zion in Missouri, and as soon as possible established headquarters in Independence. This was in fulfillment of the divine promise given in December, 1833:

"Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4. (Utah edition, 101: 17, 18.)

We have seen that promise fulfilled. We have had part in it, and we look for a continuation and unfolding of the riches of blessing promised.

Despite these differences, which we may accept in good temper, it is very evident that the book under discussion represents a great amount of research, and a great many items of interest concerning the history of Nauvoo are gathered together, organized, and written up in a readable and informative manner. The student of church history will find the book well worth reading.—ELBERT A. SMITH.

Young Adults in Des Moines

Brother Frank A. Fry writes hopefully of a recent effort in his field:

In recent months we have inaugurated a Young Adult movement within the Des Moines Branch. In a survey conducted, we discovered more than 125 young adult couples. As a part of the program to reclaim and interest these people in the church, we secured the services of President John F. Garver as guest speaker on February 23. The good spirit accompanied his ministry and the day's activities were climaxed with a baptismal service in the evening. Six young adults and three children were baptized. As the result of these baptisms, three more homes were united in the church. I feel that the young adults of the Des Moines Branch offer the greatest possibilities that we have in Des Moines, consequently this group will receive a great deal of attention within the year.

Religious Census

Enclosed is a copy of one of the blanks that are being sent out to the pastors of the various branches of our church in this country, and we have a letter from the Chief of the Population Division in which he writes as follows:

You may be interested to learn that the schedules for the 1946 Census of Religious Bodies have been mailed recently to the individual churches of your denomination. In order that your denomination may receive in the 1946 Census the representation to which it is entitled, the pastors, or clerks, of your churches should be urged to fill out and return the schedules promptly. We shall appreciate very much anything you can do to help in this matter.

It might be well to issue a statement to pastors, urging that they give proper attention to filling out the form in order that the church may be fully represented in the census.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS
By C. L. Olson.

Sorting Out

The secret of successful living is to be found in a man's ability to be a sorter. Failure to realize this leaves a man as baffled as a child on Christmas morning; among so many things he touches this and that, occupying himself with nothing in particular. It is further necessary that we sort out the demands of life carefully. Samuel Johnson once described his undermaster in school as "a man very skillful in his little way." The wise man sorts out the opportunities of life; then to those things of great worth he gives himself fully, and to small matters he gives himself sparingly. Like Socrates at the Athenian fair when he remarked, "There is so much here that I do not want," a man must discard the useless and put first things first.

Discovering the Old Testament

GOD

THE OLD TESTAMENT lying open on my desk has 968 pages of very fine print. The marginal notes say that the historical period covered is from 4004 B. C. through 397 B. C. I turn those pages and see long tables of law, genealogies records of battles, biography, and even poetry. What a mass of material! Yet out of this apparent chaos, with very little effort one may gain a view of the huge panorama of man's struggle toward a better way of life. When the pieces fall together one by one, the student or even the casual reader soon sees life in its development. And anyone who loves and understands mankind will love the Old Testament and its rich offerings.

There are sixty-one books in the Bible, thirty-nine of which are in the Old Testament. Those books were written at widely separated times, in situations as different as the poles, and by people as contrasting as their names. Yet there are several ideas which have carried through men's minds along centuries and are reflected throughout the sacred writings. One of these is the idea of a Supreme Being, a God.

As soon as man realized that there were things in his universe which he could not explain, he gave that power a name. It is interesting to note that the majority of such names, in any language, seems to be associated with the number 4, with four letters in each name. Notice:

LORD-English	JHVH-Hebrew
DEUS-Latin	DIEU-French
DEVA-Sanscrit	ODIN-Scandinavian
ZEUS-Greek Mythology	AMON-Egyptian
AGLA-Cabalistic	NEBO-Chaldean
ADAT-Assyrian	GODT-Dutch
GOTT-German	GODH-Danish
ELAH-Aramaic	DIOS-Spanish
TEOS-Greek	THOR-Viking
PAPA-Inca	ILLU-Syrian
BRAM-Aryan	SORU-Persian
ALLA-Mohammedan	RAMA-Hindu
BAAL-Phoenician	HAKK-Hindustan
AMIR-Arabic	ADNJ-Canaanish
	SHIN-Japanese

By Norma Anne Kirkendall

Two of those names have special meaning in the study of Old Testament history. There were no vowels in ancient Hebrew, and the unprouncable JHVH has been translated into our JEHOVAH. But wait, that name must not be uttered by common people, the "likes of you and me."

The Hebrew "Jahveh" was a distinctly sacred name. Even the scribes hesitated to repeat or use it, and they washed their hands before they even wrote it. The word "Adonai" was translated largely as "Lord" and only by combining its vowels with the sacred "JHVH" did the common man find it possible to use their word.

The patriarchs made much use of another name of God—Elohim, which means Lord of Hosts. The "El" is seen often in other words, as Bethel and Israel, and it reflects the plurality of God's nature.

Although the books of the Old Testament are definitely not arranged in chronological order, it is interesting to note that God holds the main idea of the very first verse of Genesis. The creation story begins with, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Genesis 1: 1). The writer of Genesis felt no other explanation was necessary. He says there was a beginning, but he wisely does not mention any measure of time, for we could not fathom that measure of creation. We have too much trouble interpreting the "day" mentioned in later verses.

An Irish Archbishop, named Ussher, in the 17th century worked with genealogies and came to a personal conclusion that the creation story occurred about 4004 B. C. Geologically this is impossible, as we now know geology. But that is not the important point to me. I can accept the date of 4004 B. C. and use it as a steppingstone to locate my Biblical characters. The exact number of years is so very unimportant in relation to the other truths the Old Testament contains. Personally, I believe the use of the word "day" was used to show a state of planning, rather than a twenty-four hour or a thousand-year period.

Thus in early Genesis you get a picture of an omnipotent being who created and controlled all natural elements. This word was law, for He said, "Let there be light; and there was light," (Genesis 1:3) and, "Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place . . . and it was so" (Genesis 1:9). God's idea was already planned out—there was no hesitation or indecision. This was a God who knew his own mind. He directly administered the affairs of the earth and gave one of his creations, man, his agency in order that He might have help. He made man from the dust of the ground and thus gave him a natural birth. Then he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and gave man a spiritual birth.

Then followed the episode of the Garden of Eden—a much discussed situation. Once again I have no desire to arouse controversy. I do not deny you the right to believe the apple-serpent story. Nor would I question your interpretation if you chose another. To me the important thing is that man sinned—and thus separated himself from God.

And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden . . . and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.—Genesis 3: 24.

And now God was to be feared—because he insisted on strict obedience from his creations. Now came the first hint of a God of Vengeance.

Then man multiplied, and saw his responsibility for supporting himself and his family. The males became farmers and shepherds. No code of conduct was as yet recognized or organized. Polygamy was practiced, and even murder reared its head. Man developed an individual personality. Jabel became a gypsy, while Tubal-cain became a blacksmith and taught the art of working with brass and iron. “Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord.”—Genesis 4: 26.

The next important figure to come forth was Enoch, who “walked with God” (Genesis 5: 22). The King James translation says that this did not occur until Enoch’s son, Methuselah, was 300 years old. Then it says that Enoch lived to be only 365 years old. Leaving time for his own growth to manhood, this would indicate that Enoch “walked with God” only a short time, again forgetting whatever might have been meant by years. But he was so close to God that he was translated, and his city with him. Meanwhile the rest of the world grew in wickedness, “And it sorrowed the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.”—Genesis 6: 6.

The old favorite stage and movie production, Green Pastures, portrayed the God of Noah as a very human being, who walked sorrowfully among his children, unnoticed since they were so full of sin. Only one man, Noah, had enough faith in what he believed to be the will of God to do something definite. Then followed the Great Deluge, not only true Biblically but scientifically. This God was determined, intent on preserving only righteous men on this other creation of his, the earth. Noah remained faithful, and instead of cursing the tumults of water, he built an altar of rejoicing as soon as the waters disappeared. And this understanding God saw his faithfulness and made a promise that no more would he force his will upon all men. Henceforth, man might work out his own destiny, be it good or evil. (Genesis 8: 21.)

And the days were both good and evil. There are many generations named with no mention as to their attitude toward God. The tower of Babel found a world of one language and speech and intent, but an evil intent. So God once more thwarted the sins of man, “And from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.”—Genesis 11: 9. With a new language, and, he hoped, a new purpose.

Once more generations go by, with only mere names to mark the passing. Then suddenly we find a man full worthy of description in these pages—Abram, who rose from the role of common shepherd to the place of patriarch of a mighty tribe. Not only the Bible tells of this period, for archaeologists have found many truths concerning the civilization of this period. We know, for instance, that a cuneiform writing was used, and men counted in multiples of 60 and 10. As astronomers they were familiar with Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn, the signs of the zodiac, phases of the moon, and use of the lunar and solar years. There were 282 recognized laws, such as those mentioned in passages like Exodus 22: 18; 21: 28, 29, and Deuteronomy 18: 10-12. There were cabinet makers and metal workers. Jewelers fashioned shell ornaments and buttons, bronze hair pins and combs, earrings and necklaces, and bronze razors. The women even used cosmetics.

There was even a plenitude of gods. Nannor, god of the moon, was popular; but even more familiar were the myriad of household gods dedicated to the family ancestors buried under the floors of each permanent home. But Abram (later called Abraham) remembered The God, and His presence was so personal that Abram nearly sacrificed to God the life of the beloved son, Isaac, in strict obedience to God’s wishes.

The Bible is silent concerning many of the details of life in those ancient times, yet it is possible to see in the lofty character of Abraham a personality which resulted not only from a long tradition of generations of men, but also from a direct influence of God’s power upon those same men.

Now names abound, but the next really dominating figure is Joseph. This same man progressed from the role of shepherd boy to viceroy of Egypt, and the path was that of a destiny which was certainly God-guided if any man’s could be. Next to appear of great import was Moses, and who could deny the hand of God in his life? This God was concerned with everyday events and he waged a vigorous war against the enemies of his beloved. Plagues, famine, and death of the first-born were examples of his power to destroy as well as to save.

Once more I say, I don’t care whether you believe that the waters of the Red Sea parted for the safe journey of the Israelites or not. Even if all of these stories are figurative or allegorical, you cannot but see the power of this God that they worshiped.

Now we know much more of the next era. We read of the trade of Phoenician crafts plying the Mediterranean. The Ethiopians ascended in power. Nomads became city dwellers and a social transformation occurred. Caravan trails ribbed the topography, and whole chapters of cruelty, fire, rape, murder, piracy, kidnapings, wars, get-rich-quick schemes and false gods follow. This was the world of the sweet-singing but oft-sinning David and his illustrious son, Solomon. The God was an established practice but only by a minority.

From there on our story is of degradation and exile. The Macabean period, ignored historically by the King James Version (recorded, however in the Apocrypha) re-

Easter Means More to Me

BY EDNA EASTER

Staff Member, Department of Religious Education

EASTER SUNDAY always shall be doubly sacred to me as it marks the date of my baptism. This Easter is my tenth anniversary in the church, yet my earliest memories of attending our church dates back to the days when I was one of a class occupying little red chairs in a corner of the single room church. About twenty-two or twenty-three years later I finally got around to becoming a member. I am not exactly proud of that record. Quite to the contrary.

I have always attended our church except for a four-year interval when we were living on a farm and it was impossible to get into town. Perhaps I should modify that statement to say I always attended church school, because I attended very, very few church services during all that time. In fact, I doubt that I averaged hearing over one sermon a year until I was a member of this church. The only prayer service I remember attending before I completed high school was quite by accident. We children were so anxious to get started to Sunday school again after moving back to town after the four years' absence that we arrived at the church during the middle of the early morning prayer service—but we continued to skip church services flected another attempt to bring man back to God. The religion of the common man became only a ritual and a rite, and the sincere man mourned and prayed for an Isaiah-promised Messiah. This then was God's status—far from man, when he found it necessary to send his Son, only beloved Son, to draw the world back to himself.

Thus the Old Testament is a saga of the rise and fall of God's popularity among men. Notice that I said "popularity," not "power"; for man's own agency has been the determination of his closeness to his God through all the ages.

regularly! The first Communion service I witnessed was when I partook for the first time. As I remember now, I believe I witnessed two baptisms up to that time.

SOMETHING WAS amiss, it is sure. I won't try to analyze whether it was with the priesthood, the church school teachers, the home, my extreme timidity, a combination of all these, or just me. I won't place the blame anywhere except on myself. If I had wanted to become a member of the church sincerely enough, I would have. In justice to myself, however, I will say I don't believe I was a problem child in any sense of the word. I loved school, went year after year without missing a day or being tardy, stood near the top of the class; and don't remember of complaining too much about helping with gardening, ironing, mending, or other housework, not even washing dishes if it was "my turn." I always admired good and hated evil, but through it all somehow missed becoming a church member. Sufficient to admit, I was an adult long before I was a church member.

I feel sorry for those adults who want to become church members. It is one of the hardest things in the world for them to do. I know. I have been through it. Where an eight-year old would accept church membership as another adventure and a logical step, we adults have hundreds of questions to answer and hundreds of hours of meditation and prayer, hour after hour and night after night.

One of the biggest things we have to consider is, are we big enough for membership, worthy of it? Membership to us isn't just asking that our names be added to the list. We know that membership is a stewardship over all of our life that is yet to be, an acknowledgment before God and Christ that they are to be considered first all the rest of our lives. We understand far more fully what is meant by "keep the commandments," and ponder if we are big enough even to begin to do that acceptably unto ourselves, let alone unto Christ. We are familiar with the "first and great commandment": "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and the second like unto it, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "With all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." We cannot be satisfied with being "as good as" or "better than" others around us. We cannot compare our lives with any others. We can accept only one comparison—the pure life of Christ—and realize that we can never expect to approach that.

"With all" doesn't mean with half or almost all, it means just what it says. We must set our standards on the basis of what we know, not on the basis of what another person does, not on the basis of the behavior of the average church member. The standards we set for ourselves are higher than the standards we demand of others. We are our own most severe critics.

OUR MODEL is the Perfect Example and in so far as we fall below his standards, we fail. "Love thy neighbor as thyself." We have read and heard it many times, but now we must analyze its meaning and estimate our ability to live up to it. "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you," doesn't mean loving only those who love us, "fo. sinners also do even the same." "Lend, hoping for nothing again," "be merciful," "judge not," "condemn not," "forgive," "give." A child understands on a child's level, but we must understand on an adult level, and know the simply worded commandments are intended to be obeyed completely, and not hurriedly read with our fingers crossed behind our backs while we continue to live a selfish life. "Bless them who curse you, and pray for them who despitefully use you and persecute you." Hard? Yes—until we believe "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

I heard a very good friend of mine ask a member of the priesthood one day, "Why do people who come into the church as adults seem to be more consecrated than those coming in earlier?" I will answer her now—they have to be! Lukewarm persons just don't join the church as adults, they continue to stay outside. Adults join the church, not because of any pressure that has been brought to bear upon them, but because they want to become brothers of Christ and accept their rightful stewardship responsibilities over all of life and over all lives, because they want the fellowship of the church, and because they can't risk staying out any longer!

Yes, we must admit there are some adults who become church members almost by accident it seems, but they are in the minority.

And Thomas, that good disciple who was called a doubter, didn't even begin to doubt. One example only from all of these: I couldn't understand the reason for baptism until after I had experienced it. Of course I had read about it, heard about it, and believed it was necessary because it was in the Scriptures, and I was willing to obey; but as the child obeys his mother when he is told to drink his milk, I still didn't know the "why" of it.

MY FEELINGS were not antagonistic nor rebellious, but the problem was just one of those things that came along and had to be studied through. I couldn't blend the human and the physical element, the actual ritual, with the spiritual. I couldn't see how walking up, being immersed and walking out again could be a spiritual experience. I didn't mean to be contrary to that which was written or spoken. I was earnestly seeking. I didn't straighten out my thinking until after I experienced baptism, and more fully later during confirmation when the minister prayed "may it be as a gate through which she will never return. . . ." It was just that to me, a turning point, a gateway to a new life, a ritual, but a significant ritual, a spiritual experience. It was the laying down of the old and the taking up of the new, a death and a resurrection. From that day, I have had an entirely different appreciation of baptism. Since then the same or greater problems and trials have faced me, but there has been a new peace and joy and growth through having met them.

I realized later, another big factor in my hesitancy in making the decision. I had been trying to get complete knowledge first—when even Christ himself "received not of the fullness at first, but continued from grace to grace . . ." In all areas of life it seems I have too often tried to ignore faith and begin with knowledge. I still do in great measure. That is one of the problems yet confronting me. I am seeking proof of some of the things the average church member accepts through faith. I do not mean to doubt. I do have faith to believe that these knowledges will be given me when I am worthy and pay the price of receiving them, when I am big enough to accept the stewardship of those knowledges, and when I satisfy the other wise requirements of our Heavenly Father. I am willing to work and wait.

Therefore, because of the experiences through which I have passed, to you adults who are outside looking in, we urge no hesitancy in accepting this greatest of all privileges, this opportunity of sharing Christ's life and the acceptance of an inheritance through his great sacrifices in our behalf, and, what we should appreciate deeper, an opportunity to share in his work. There will be no regrets, rather there will be immediate and continual gain. No matter how hard the steps may seem now in prospect, they will be easy in reality and joyful in retrospect.

To you who are parents, we say urge your child not to wait until he is grown to make his own decision on the basis of the knowledge he is acquiring through the years, rather help him step by step that he will choose at the proper time. Would you withhold physical food from him until he is old enough to understand food values and choose the proper balance of vitamins, calories, and the other necessities?

I KNOW I missed too much during all those nineteen years between the time I should have become a church member and the final date when I did. Anything could have happened. I am most humbly thankful that our merciful Father held his protecting hand over me all those years. I feel that he did, even though I did not deserve it. This was just another evidence of his love for all mankind.

There are not too many years left in this life to show my appreciation, but I am trying and shall continue to try to the best of my ability and knowledge. To make up for some of those lost years, I cannot take time for anger, petty differences of opinions, destructive criticisms, following selfish paths of pleasures, cannot think too much of what I would selfishly prefer doing, cannot be concerned with the lesser things—there just isn't time.

I shall strive to put first things first. I will try to be open-minded, giving due weight to the other persons' opinions, yet keeping my own convictions when I feel they are aligned with Christ's ways. I shall

GENERAL CONFERENCE REPORTS

The Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric

To the First Presidency and
General Conference of 1947:

In submitting our report to the General Conference of a year ago, we made comments relative to the financial condition as covered in the report, and also outlined a statement of policy. We are not at this time attempting to restate either the policy or the aims of financial administration that were covered in that report. We do, however, commend its reading to those who are especially interested in this phase of our church work. The subjects covered in that report are as follows:

1. Financing the church in its ministerial and departmental activities
2. The gathering
3. Financing the institutions of the church
4. Extending assistance to the worthy poor
5. Assisting the individual to attain certain standards of stewardship
6. Developing a program of instruction for the Aaronic priesthood
7. Teaching the financial law
8. Improving our houses of worship

These continue to be the specific aims of the Bishopric. The activities of the year 1946 have touched all of the phases of the work outlined, and we are encouraged by the fact that we have made progress in all of these fields of endeavor.

In one of the closing paragraphs of that report, we made the following statement:

"We are now experiencing an inflationary period which has caused our expenditures to rise and which will require larger appropriations than it was thought would suffice at the time of our report to the General Conference of 1944."

The conditions that were outlined in that report substantially carried over into the year 1946, and in the future we see a continuation of these inflationary conditions.

Income and Expense

Our total income of tithes and offerings for the year 1946 amounted to $1,066,988.59, as compared with $1,039,114.04 for 1945. Our Net Income amounted to $565,863.72 for 1946 as compared with $629,157.17 for 1945.

The decrease in Net Income was due to increase of expenditures in 1946 over 1945.

The total expense, exclusive of Other Income, etc., for 1946 amounted to $523,536.98, compared with $429,637.56 in 1945. (The details of income and expense are shown under "Exhibit B" of the schedules attached hereto.) The bulk of the increase of expenditures arose in ministerial family allowances and elders' expense, administrative expense, and increase in the appropriation to Graceland College. Our expenditures were within the authorized appropriation of $545,806.36.

In view of the increase in anticipated expenses for 1947, it is indeed fortunate that we are having a General Conference to give consideration to current budgetary needs.

Balance Sheet Assets

Substantial changes have taken place in the General Fund Balance Sheet as of December 31, 1946, as compared with that of December 31, 1945, due to the allocation of cash assets to Special Funds, as authorized by the General Conference of 1946 and as shown by the increase of resources in those funds. However, attention is called to the fact that we show Cash on Hand and in the Hands of Bishops and Agents totaling over $600,000.00, which will provide for other allocations as recommended elsewhere. The bulk of transfers made to other funds was in the form of United States Government bonds and securities and Canadian securities.

An increase of over $60,000 in Real Estate (Other Properties) represents additional investment in farm lands. The increase of approximately $20,000.00 that shows in Furniture, Fixtures, and Equipment arises out of adjustments in inventory accounts and increase in inventory of farm and automobile equipment, and seed.

Liabilities

The liability of $98,404.74 represents amounts not transferred as at the close of the year, that should have been transferred to other funds. Liabilities captioned Radio Fund represent the net amount received from an adjustment in the contract with KMBC, for which recommendations are being made to set up this fund, together with other funds received from the sale of KMBC, into a special Radio Fund account.

The item of $27,563.90, captioned

Reserve for Foreign Exchange, is the amount previously deducted from the face value of Canadian securities, which securities have been transferred to Special Funds. This fund will be transferred as an increase to the surplus of the General Fund, due to the fact that the General Fund was charged with this exchange in past years, and recent establishment of the Canadian dollar on a par with the United States dollar makes this reserve unnecessary.

Other liabilities, such as Accounts Payable and other payables, are current accounts as at the close of the year, for which payment is made in the ensuing month.

Agency Fund

As stated previously, it is our policy to try to keep this fund as small as possible, for the resources included therein represent deposits made by individuals with the church which, for reasons that to us seem adequate, have been retained by us as a service to the individuals concerned. The resources are kept liquid so that complete payment of all obligations of this fund is provided for.

Consecration Agreement Fund

As has been our custom in the past, we are continuing the policy of segregation of funds which are received which entail liabilities present and future to individuals. These funds, for the most part, represent property consisting of cash, bonds and real estate turned over to the church, wherein the church agrees to meet certain obligations during the lifetime of the individual. It is our intent to keep this fund liquid, and accumulation of capital will be left in the fund until it is obvious that there is more than enough to meet all obligations; at which time it will be permissible to transfer excess capital to the General Fund.

Houses of Worship Fund

As stated in previous reports, this fund does not truly reflect the resources of the church invested in houses of worship. Due to circumstances beyond our control, we have not been successful in getting this information brought up to date. As will be noted from the Balance Sheet, these investments are kept liquid to enable us to meet obligations owing to congregations or districts. While these funds are recorded on the books of the General Church, those that have not been definitely turned over to the General Church are considered as trust funds, and are so treated.

Houses of Worship Revolving Fund

At the last General Conference, an appropriation of $300,000.00 was made for this fund. Some loans have already been made, and as of December 31, 1946, the total of loans made to congregations was $25,500.00. Additional loans have been made in 1947, and quite a number are in process, amounting to almost $100,000.00. This has proved to be most helpful to congregations needing loans to complete their buildings. This is one of the funds for which resources were transferred from the General Books in harmony with the action of last General Conference.

Details relative to this fund and its administration were published in the Herald of August 17, 1946.

Ministerial Reserve Fund

This fund has been quite fully discussed in previous reports of the Bishopric. Current appropriations are made as men are appointed, adding to the capital of this fund.

Australian Ministerial Reserve Fund

The same policy is being carried on in Australia in regard to setting up funds to meet the retirement costs of our ministerial personnel, as is practiced at headquarters.

Missionary Reserve Fund

This fund was set up in accordance with General Conference action of April 6, 1944. The purpose of the fund is to provide for the support of missionary endeavor in the years which are ahead; to provide funds for the appointment of men between conferences; for the maintenance of a school of instruction; and for the preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages.

Oblation Fund

This fund has increased in recent years and has been segregated to provide for the needs that arise in the extension of aid to worthy individuals, and in some instances for their rehabilitation. It is from these resources that the Homes for the Aged are maintained and such help as may be deemed necessary extended to church members in foreign fields.

Operating Reserve Fund

This is another fund set up for the purpose of assuring us of financial strength, the aim being to have enough in the fund to provide for the operation of the church for a period of at least one year. It will be necessary to make additional appropriations in the current year because of increased operating costs.

Stewardship Endowment Fund

This represents the value of the Atherton and Spring Branch Farm lands, which were hypothecated for the Graceland Endowment bond issue. This was approved by action of the General Conference of 1944.

Subsidiary Institutional Funds

This represents funds set up by the authority of General Conference to provide for institutional building needs.

Statement of Capital

The Statement of Capital, "Exhibit C," reflects the changes that have taken place during the year, and shows the consolidation of all funds. This makes a total as of December 31, 1946, of $6,787,230.24. In this exhibit one can see at a glance the status of all of the funds that have been set up during recent years through the segregation of General Church funds.

In our opinion our financial condition is excellent, but as we have done in previous statements, we wish to point out that there is much work yet to be done involving the expenditure of large sums of money. The expansion of our missionary force, the reaching out into missions abroad, the strengthening of our pastoral arm everywhere, involve increased budgetary appropriations. In addition to this, we have unfinished projects such as the Auditorium and additional institutional needs at Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. It is therefore imperative that a consistent program of teaching the financial law be carried on.

For the first time in a great many years, we have found it possible to send statements to General Church contributors, showing the amounts contributed during the year 1946. This involves a great deal of work, but we have felt for several years that our members are entitled to receive such statements of their contributions; but because of a lack of personnel, we were unable to get these made up and mailed.

Our records for the year 1946 show that we had 25,549 contributors, of which number 18,902 were continuous contributors; there were 7,610 contributors who made contributions in 1945 who did not contribute in 1946; and 6,647 who contributed in 1946 who had not contributed in the previous year. Therefore, when we realize that there were but 25,549 contributors for the year 1946, it appears that there is a great deal of room for increasing our income through adding new contributors to our lists.

We wish to express our thanks to God for the many blessings that we have received as a church during the year 1946, and our appreciation for the fine cooperation and support given by the Saints throughout the church.

Respectfully submitted,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
 March 25, 1947.

Church Auditor's Reports of Examination

By Lloyd L. Bland

To the First Presidency and
 General Conference:

I have examined the fund balance sheet of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as of December 31, 1946, and the related statements of income and expense and surplus for the year ended on that date, have reviewed the accounting procedures of the church, and have examined their accounting records and other evidence in support of such financial statements. My examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards applicable in the circumstances, and tests were made to the extent I deemed appropriate. The following comments apply to the balance sheet at December 31, 1946, and to the transactions for the period.

GENERAL, LAND AND INHERITANCE, AND TEMPLE FUNDS

Cash in banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and reconciliation. Cash in the hands of bishops and agents was verified by reference to reports and was traced into subsequent bank deposits.

All bonds and stocks were examined. U. S. Government and Canadian Government bonds and securities are stated at cost. Other stocks and bonds are carried at cost or nominal value.

Real Estate contracts and notes receivable were verified by examination of the original papers. Accounts receivable were verified by reference to the individual ledger accounts.

Real Estate—Other Properties in the depreciated amount of $303,181.01 includes land, residential and business properties carried in the name of G. Leslie DeLapp as Trustee in Trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and in the name of the Central Development Association. Additional investment in real estate for the year amounted to $74,836.65, and represented eight properties. Contracts to purchase three additional properties were pending at December 31, 1946.

The Beneficial Interest in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund represents the difference between the value of Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands and the amount payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund.

Additions to furniture, fixtures, equipment, and libraries were examined and depreciation in the amount of $1,500.00 was charged to operating expense.

The amount of $44,593.31 titled Australasian Mission represents the net worth of the mission as of October 25, 1946, in accordance with a report received from the bishop's agent in Australia. The net asset is composed of cash, accounts receivable, furniture and fixtures as assets, and liabilities which cannot be paid due to international regulations. All Australian transactions in recent years have been recorded in the accounting records at the exchange rate of $3.90 U. S. to the Australian pound.

The assets, liabilities, and net worth of the Central Development Association and the Real Estate Department have been consolidated in the accompanying balance sheet and statement of income and expense of the General, Land and Inheritance, and Temple Funds.

Changes in the surplus accounts are detailed in an accompanying schedule.

The Agency Fund was created in the year 1942 to segregate from the General Fund and other funds all liabilities which for some reason could not be paid. It also acts as a depository for cash and bonds held for safekeeping for individuals and church organizations.

Cash was verified by direct correspondence with the depository and by reconciliation.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

The Consecration Agreement Fund was set up during the year 1942, to record the assets and liabilities relative to certain agreements entered into by the Presiding Bishopric and certain individuals.

These agreements arise out of a desire of the individual to make a contribution to the church and at the same time provide for themselves some security for the future. These agreements, as detailed in the accompanying schedules, are described as follows:

Class B: This class represents the type of agreement wherein the individual turns over to the church, cash, bonds, or other negotiable assets as a consecration, in consideration of which the church agrees to pay the individual a regular amount every year, with the possibility of additional amounts to be paid in the event of need. The total sum of such additional payments is not to exceed the amount of the original consecration. Furthermore, when such additional amounts are paid, the amounts of the annual payments are reduced proportionately. The regular annual payments do not reduce the maximum amount of liability.

Class C: Under this type of contract, the individual gives cash, bonds, and in some cases real estate as a consecration. There is no provision for regular annual payments, but the additional amount provision, as in Class B, is included. Some of these contracts provide for the payment of last sickness and funeral expenses. Where real estate has been conveyed to the church, the contract and the asset have been recorded at a nominal value. The liability in such cases is limited to the amount which is realized from the sale of the property. Some of these parcels of real estate are, however, carried on the Real Estate Department's books.

Class D: This represents contracts where there is a definite amount payable per month or per annum, but no additional payments are required.

Class E: This class represents non-negotiable notes, payable to the individual, which contain a provision that they shall be canceled in the event of the death of the payee.

Class F: This class represents bonds payable, at the death of the payee, to the church, and both the liability and the asset are carried at nominal value.

Cash was verified by correspondence with the depository and reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined.

Notes receivable, none of which are past due, were examined. These notes arise out of sales of real estate or formed a part of the original consecration.

Real Estate investment represents the nominal values, plus additional costs of acquisition and improvements, of real estate consecrated under an agreement. Some of these consecrations of real estate provide for a life estate to the consecrator.

An asset in the form of an assigned, matured life insurance policy and the related liability are carried in the amount of one dollar.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

The Houses of Worship Fund is divided into two sections. The Restricted Building Fund section consists of cash, accounts receivable, bonds, and other assets which have been acquired by contributions from local congregations or from the sale of houses of worship which were no longer in use. It has been the policy of the church to hold the receipts from the sale of houses of worship in this fund, restricting its use to the acquiring of property in the vicinity of the congregation from which it was acquired. If it is found inadvisable to utilize the asset in the immediate vicinity, it is to be used somewhere in the district in which the branch was located.

Cash was verified by correspondence with the depository and by reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined and are stated at cost.

Accounts and notes receivable are in the most part due from local congregations. A large percentage of these receivables originated prior to 1932, and it is my opinion they are of doubtful value.

It has been the practice of the Presiding Bishopric to issue notes to certain local congregations covering contributions to the fund. These notes are shown as liabilities, but they differ from other receipts of the fund only in that a note payable has been issued as evidence of trusteeship.

The Real Estate Investment Section represents the portion of the fund invested in buildings and grounds used for local congregations, reunion grounds, and properties having historical value in connection with the history of the church.

stated at the amount carried in the General Fund at December 31, 1941, plus the cost of subsequent construction.

Chapel accounts A, B, and C, represent church buildings, reunion grounds, and historical properties respectively. I was unable to verify the amounts stated as investments due to the inadequacy of the records. A reserve for depreciation in the amount of $38,500.00 to cover depreciation up to December 31, 1929, has been provided, but there has not been any additions or deductions since that date.

Mortgages payable in the amount of $1,754.10 represents a liability of this fund to the General Fund (Real Estate Department).

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND

A revolving fund of $300,000.00 was established in 1946 as a means of assisting branches by way of loans for the construction of houses of worship at a nominal rate of interest.

Cash in the bank was verified by direct communication with the depository.

U. S. Government and Canadian Government securities were examined.

Loans to congregations in the amount of $25,500.00 were verified by reference to notes receivable.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

The Ministerial Reserve Fund was created in 1937 and has been increased in subsequent years by appropriations from the General Fund and by income on investments.

The requirements of this fund are computed by the Church Statistician and are based on the life expectancy of those appointees now covered. The assets of the fund are held to cover retirement costs, death benefits, and other continuing costs relative to future needs of appointees. This fund does not accrue for the benefit of any one minister or his dependents. The annual transfers of cash, although based on individual cases, build up a fund which can be used to provide the necessities of life to the appointee and his dependents after his retirement or after he has reached the age of seventy. The fund balances are carried separately on the books according to the purpose for which each is intended.

Cash in the banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and by reconciliation.

U. S. Government bonds were examined and are stated at cost.

Real Estate represents an investment in Missouri farm lands.

STEWARDSHIP-ENDOWMENT FUND

General Conference action of April 6, 1944, authorized the segregation of the Atherton and Spring Branch Farm lands as collateral for the bonds issued to the Graceland College Endowment Fund. The net difference between the real estate investment and the payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund is designated "Beneficial Interest-General Fund" and appears in the General Fund as an asset.

It is the expressed opinion of the Presiding Bishopric that "the net income from these lands is to be made available for improvements as may be necessary and required for the further development of the lands segregated." The capital account of this fund is the net earnings from operation of these lands.

The bonds payable to the Graceland College Endowment Fund matured January 6, 1946.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUND

This fund was created by action of General Conference on April 6, 1944, and subsequent action. The funds are held subject to disbursement in accordance with the requirements contained in the appropriation.

OPINION

In my opinion, the accompanying fund balance sheet and related statements of income and expense and surplus present fairly the position of the funds of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at December 31, 1946, and the results of its operations for the year then ended.

REPORT

The Northwestern States

By Apostles D. T. Williams and Charles R. Hield

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

The past year has manifested more enthusiasm on the part of the Saints in general throughout the Northwest Mission than any year in our experience here. This feeling of confidence seems to have germinated in the last General Conference and spread out to the branches and districts throughout the church. The Northwest garnered its share of this increase of faith and moved forward on the basis of the stimulation of spiritual power thus generated.

This is not to say that our problems have all been solved. It does, however, indicate that we have attacked them with more resolution and with a determination to make what gains are possible under the current conditions. These conditions are by no means the best imaginable, since the moral and ethical breakdown of social standards are such as they are. It seems that the line of demarcation between good and evil is being more sharply drawn each year, and the Saints are finding the demand within themselves more insistent that they take their position on one side of the line or the other.

OUR MISSIONARY EFFORTS

Our missionary efforts have been more or less fruitful. But in no instance can we assert that they have all that we would have liked. Evangelist J. F. Curtis, though advancing in years, still retains much of his youthful spiritual vigor and still gives considerable time to active field endeavor, though he has officially been superannuated through Conference action. We have been gratified by this continuing manifestation of care for God's church and his people on the part of one capable of doing much good for the cause.

Elder Phillip Moore has located his family in Boise, Idaho, at our suggestion, and from there he prosecutes his missionary work in the Idaho and Spokane Districts. Brother Moore reports many points of contact open to our work in this region and is busying himself in filling the opportunities thus presented.

Elder Ernest Ledsworth, at the conclusion of the last General Conference was appointed to our three west coast districts, namely: Portland, Seattle, and British Columbia. In these points of interest, he found plenty of space to occupy his time and talents and also discovered there many opportunities to interest good people in the things of the kingdom.

Elder Arthur Gibbs, being returned to the mainland from Hawaii, was asked to engage in missionary work in the Portland District from the time of his arrival here until the meeting of General Conference. This responsibility he accepted with pleasure and has done well in the number of baptisms accruing from his labors.

Elder Joseph Yager has served a vast field composed of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Western Montana. Any one of these States might well claim the full time of a General Conference appointee. We commend Brother Yager for his willingness to attempt such a coverage.

Elder Paul Wellington has taken a firm grip on the pastoral work of the Seattle Branch. The Saints of Seattle have accepted him to fellowship as well as to the responsibility of the congregation in such a manner as to greatly encourage him in his work. We are looking forward to substantial progress in this quarter.

Elder James N. Kemp has accepted with courage the responsibilities of pastoral work in the Spokane Branch. His labors have brought considerable progress to that congregation, and we are looking forward with hope to the future of this spiritual contingent as a working force. In his labors Brother Kemp has nurtured a missionary outlook which should prove fruitful in the future.

REPORT

Independence and the Stakes

By Apostle C. G. Mesley

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

In the large area of the Prairie Provinces of Canada, Elder James Menzies has rendered a fine ministry. The winter has been most severe, with huge snows hindering missionary work, but the Canadian Saints have a vision of the goals of the church and are working hard to be more and more profitable to God.

Elders Houston Hobart and Herbert Scott make a good team in Colorado—Brother Hobart in the district, and Brother Scott in Denver. Their fine ministry has been felt in all the branches and groups, and the Saints are looking to the future with eagerness to help build the kingdom. Several places are planning on building new churches in the spring, or expanding their present facilities.

Elder Arthur Stoft, often in spite of poor health, reports a growing interest in the message of the Reorganized Church in Utah.

Nine reunions are held each year in the mission. Last year we had two youth camps. In 1947 four such camps are planned. The reunions at Silver Lake, Washington, and Colorado Springs, Colorado, are two of the best known in the whole church. The reunion period for all the Saints of the mission is fast becoming a "must" among their yearly activities. It is at the reunions that we learn to live together as God's children, and where we give and also obtain spiritual nourishment for another year.

LOCAL CONTRIBUTIONS

In this connection we call attention to the many and able contributions made by our local forces. These consecrated men and women give unstintedly of their time, talents, and means that the church might make progress in every district and branch throughout this large territory.

We cannot speak too highly of their willingness to co-operate and of their desire to spend and be spent in the service of the Master. What would we do without them? This question must have forged to the fore in every mind bearing responsibility for the progress of this church.

It is our prayer that God will bless them as we trust, too, he will bless those giving full time to the service of the kingdom.

It is our desire to continue to be helpful in the labors of this ministry and commend ourselves to your prayers before God's throne that we shall not fail him to whom we owe all our time and talents.

D. T. WILLIAMS,
CHARLES R. HIELD

On July 2, 1946, we concluded an eight-year appointment to the Australasian Mission and landed in New York City. Shortly after, we arrived in Independence to begin a new supervisory appointment to that city and the stakes. Three stake reunions, several priesthood retreats at Gardner Lake, Stake Conferences for Central Missouri and Kansas City, three Joint Councils, Religious Emphasis weeks at Graceland, Independence, and Kansas City; the Appointee Institute, several surveys and a host of preaching engagements, committee meetings for visual aids, house hunting, etc., have filled the months since our return to U. S. A. The tone of the church work in the stakes is healthy, and it has been a pleasure to have the full-hearted co-operation of the appointees to Independence and the stakes and of the local leaders in these vital areas.

INDEPENDENCE has had the over-all supervision of High Priest Charles V. Graham, who has had the co-operative support of Bishop Stanley Kelley, Amos Higdon, Glaude Smith, and since November of Donald Lents. Location surveys have been made and looking toward a more closely integrated program of church activity in Independence, a vast amount of spade work has been done.

The extensive missionary opportunities of Independence are to be explored further by a team of sixty local men who are taking special training for this endeavor. Independence stands in need of more and better church buildings, of community centers, and of far more adequate facilities for religious education.

Full-time missionary and youth leadership is an imperative necessity for Independence.

CENTRAL MISSOURI STAKE functions under the experienced leadership of President Ward A. Hougas and Bishop T. Beck, with Loyd Adams developing a sound missionary program. An extensive stake program of activities for young people, young adults, priesthood training, high council leadership and for the development of the congregations in the area is consistently administered. General church finances in the stake have reached an all-time high.

A large church building to serve for stake gatherings and the Warrensburg congregation has been purchased in that college town.

FAR WEST STAKE comprises twenty-four congregations under President Emery Jennings and Bishop Earl Higdon. An extensive five-year program of development has been adopted, covering all fields of church endeavor. It is being administered with diligence. Melvin Russell is city pastor at St. Joseph and Eugene Theys has done effective work as Stake Missionary. In all their work these general church officers have had the co-operation of a fine body of local priesthood.

LAMONI STAKE has faced more changes in personnel than is desirable for stable stake governments. This unfortunate and unavoidable condition faces President Robert Farnham who is building soundly toward a long-term administration. Bishop Lewis Landsberg is his able teammate, and since January 1, John Blackstock has given full-time general church appointee service to the branches in the northern counties. The large student enrollment at Graceland necessitated the planning of Sunday services at the Campus. Roy A. Cheville and President E. J. Gleazer, Jr., plan this student activity. Priesthood from the college are co-operating in furnishing ministry to the neighboring congregations.

President J. D. Anderson is the new leader of KANSAS CITY STAKE. With steady purpose and devotion he is planning for the missionary and spiritual development of the stake. Bishop L. Wayne Updyke continues in capable service, and Seventy Tom Worth has conducted appreciated missionary services at several centers. Plans have been inaugurated looking toward better church buildings for some congregations and for the location of new congregations in the greater metropolitan area.

The church faces great opportunities for missionary expansion and for the orderly and lawful gathering of our people in the stake territory. The meeting of these opportunities is dependent on full-time men with the ability to organize a considerable body of devoted local priesthood for missionary endeavors.

Building on all the creative and eternal work of the past, we shall look forward to the progressive development of the work of the Church of Jesus Christ in this area.

C. G. MESLEY

REPORT

The Southern Mission

By Apostle M. A. McConley

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

FORTUNATE ASSIGNMENT

It was my good fortune to follow Apostle Charles R. Hield, in the supervision of the Southern Mission. He left a complete set of files for my guidance, which was very helpful. I recommend this as an established practice on men being transferred.

During the thirties, I spent four years in the Southern Mission, as it was then constituted, including all the south as far west as the Mississippi River. Returning to that field was like "coming home," and it was indeed heartening to receive the warm welcome extended.

But I had the States of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana to get acquainted with. Here also, the kindly and sympathetic spirit manifested by both officers and members made me feel at home. And again I appreciated "the tie that binds" Latter Day Saints.

TEXAS

This is a great state, both in size and outlook. Texans must be known to be appreciated. To equalize the membership, and to improve facilities for administering district work with local officers, changes long contemplated were made in the district boundary lines of Southwest and Central Texas Districts, this spring. And a large area was thrown into unorganized territory for which, in due time, some provision must be made for ministry to the members scattered throughout such area.

SOUTHWEST TEXAS

Under the new lineup, The Valley Branch and Austin, together with many nonresident members are associated with San Antonio and Bandera.

First San Antonio has taken on new life under H. E. Winegar, a veteran Seventy, and now contemplates enlarging its facilities. Austin, accelerated by the young people in attendance at the University of Texas, becomes a strategic point for training leaders for tomorrow. The Rio Grande Valley challenges Brother J. E. Wilder and assistants as an ideal place to develop stewardships. And Bandera, surrounded by the open country and beautiful hills made famous for dude ranches, has complete equipment for housing and feeding youth retreats, priesthood institutes, and such gatherings. Altogether, Southwest Texas offers promise of great development.

CENTRAL TEXAS

Though reduced in size, it is still as large as several average districts, and includes the cities of Houston, Ft. Worth, Dallas, Waco, and Galveston. Elder W. P. Odom, the new district president, lives in the center of the field and should be able to service it to advantage. The day is not far distant, however, when in fields like this, the district president will travel in his own plane from branch to branch.

Houston, the metropolis of the state, has the largest branch, which has in its personnel able business and professional men and women, for whose devotion and consecration we are deeply grateful. They have outgrown their present quarters, and we hope the way may now open up to establish ourselves in other sections of this great city.

Dallas, one of the fast growing cities of the southwest, is fortunate in having one of our G. I. university students, as a pastor, Elder Clyde Hastings. A new church is much needed and means to that end are under way.

Ft. Worth, with its rail contacts with the great grazing areas of the west, has a good branch and offers fine possibilities for the future. These, together with branches and organized groups in smaller towns and cities, give us a good coverage of this vast area. And they present missionary opportunities which challenge us to send some of the best men we have to that area. Elder J. Charles May has done splendid work as a missionary the past year, but one man cannot cover Texas.

OKLAHOMA

For administrative purposes, the panhandle of Texas is associated with Oklahoma, making a tremendous area in which much faithful missionary work has been done.

WESTERN DISTRICT

As a result we have many small branches and groups and isolated members scattered over thousands of square miles. Adequate ministry under such conditions is impossible. But a noble effort to minister to their people has been made by the district officers who traveled over ten thousand miles to carry out a program of scheduled meetings in branches and groups during the year. In addition Elders Johnson and Haden made a trip through the field, holding services for two nights at a place.

To make administration more feasible, this spring the southern boundary of the western district through Texas was brought north, throwing a strip of country 90 miles wide and 300 miles long into unorganized territory.

To further strengthen the work and safeguard its future, an educational program encouraging nonresident members to move into branches or selected centers is being undertaken. Strategic centers are being selected in both Texas and Oklahoma to this end. Such a program might well be initiated in many of our sparsely settled western states.

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA

This is yet a new country, and with its natural resources still in process of development, it has attracted thousands of people of initiative and daring to dwell within its borders. With a membership of about 3,000, including congregations in some of our leading cities and many of our smaller prosperous towns, the foundation for a great work has been laid.

From Tulsa, Oklahoma City, and other well-established centers, our work should reach thousands and gather a bountiful harvest.

OUR APPOINTEES

Elder Glen Johnson as state missionary, assisted part time by Elder William C. Haden, has held missionary meetings successfully as time and opportunity permitted. And an effort has been made to organize the local forces for missionary work, with some degree of success. In addition to his pastoral work at Tulsa, Elder Kohlman has co-operated in missionary work and in the youth camp and reunion work.

ARKANSAS-LOUISIANA DISTRICT

The organized work lies mostly in Arkansas, with a little of Texas and the northern end of Louisiana. There is a progressive government with good roads and a modernized educational system. And in no district of the church, have we branches located in centers offering such varied backgrounds as does this field; for instance, Hot Springs, one of the leading health centers of the country. If we will but establish a modern city church, it has great possibilities of reaching people of wealth and culture from everywhere. Bald Knob is the center of the strawberry industry, Fisher the center of rice growing, Caraway one of the best cotton centers anywhere to be found. Our district president is a sawmill man at Winthrop. At West Monroe, where a new church has been built this last year, they have a large mill which makes that rare and much needed commodity—paper. And Texarkana is one of the leading rail centers of northeastern Texas.

For a given amount of labor, this field should give missionary returns equal to any field in the country. Elder William C. Haden and Elder Glen Johnson have worked here part time during the year.

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE

Our work centers in western Tennessee, centering at Paris, where we dedicated a church last fall. It is well located and with further refinements which are planned, will make a representative base from which our work can be serviced in surrounding area.

Many of our church buildings are located in the country, some on poor roads. A program of moving country churches into town where possible, and always out to a good highway has been initiated, and under the leadership of Elder Jerry Fitch and his assistants, better days are ahead in this field.

Memphis, the metropolis of the state, has a good branch, but no building of their own. We trust this may come in time. Nashville, at the other end of the district, has but a small mission but offers promise of growth.

SOUTHERN INDIANA

We have good branches in Indianapolis and Louisville, the two leading cities, and from them the work is being nurtured in smaller groups round about.

Also Evansville and New Albany have good branches. But Louisville must have a new church to properly care for the work, and Evansville also needs a church very much.

PERSONNEL

We have some able consecrated men and women who carry on the work in the branches and district and some good young men are coming on.

MISSIONARY WORK

Elder Allen Breckenridge divides his time in missionary work between the Kentucky-Tennessee and the Southern Indiana Districts. To meet the need, we must have a full-time man in each field.

GULF STATES

This is the largest district in the mission with 3,400 members. And for location, its branches and organized groups are the most cohesive. The economic trends brought about by the recent war have turned vast industries southward. And the cities on the Gulf and the Florida coast have profited therefrom. This is especially true of Mobile and Pensacola. Through industry moving south and the attraction of its climate, the state of Florida increased over 5 per cent in population from 1940 to 1943, by people moving in from elsewhere.

Our members have benefitted financially, and many newcomers offer added opportunity for missionary work.

Mobile Branch under the leadership of Elder Orlin Crownover has outgrown its present church, and an extensive development program is under way. Pensacola members, too, are only waiting until building materials are more accessible to begin the erection of a new church. Building programs are on also at Brewton, and Montgomery. McKenzie plans to erect a new modern church in town, replacing their country church. Elder Maurice Draper, as district president and missionary, aided by a corps of able workers, has contributed much to the success in this field.

STATE OF FLORIDA—UNORGANIZED

Only the panhandle of Florida is in the Gulf States District. The rest of the state is in unorganized area. Miami has grown with the war years and has a nice branch which needs a new church in a better location, and a program to secure one is under way. A branch was organized last December at Tampa, with 46 charter members and a building fund of around $3,000. We have a nice group of members at Orlando and in the surrounding country. A small group resides at Jacksonville.

All we need to develop a good district, is some consistent missionary work. Until we can spare man power for a year-around effort, I suggest we transfer some of our missionaries each winter from some of the colder areas to Florida. I believe such a program would be successful. Elder Ray Whiting did some fine work on such an appointment this winter.

REUNIONS

The reunion has become a part of the church life of a live district. And with the many types and locations we may choose from, I believe every family should plan to attend a reunion annually.

During the year 1946 successful reunions were held at: Brewton, Alabama; Pawnee, Oklahoma; Mitchell, Indiana; Paris, Tennessee, and Camp McCollough, Texas. This year in addition to these we hope to have a reunion for the Arkansas-Louisiana District.

YOUTH CAMPS, YOUTH RETREATS, PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTES, ETC.

Where it is considered advisable to hold them, youth camps have proved a great help. Two such camps were held during the year, one at Brewton, Alabama, and one at Pawnee, Oklahoma.

A fine youth retreat was held at Bandera, Texas, a fine priesthood institute in southern Indiana and several institutes of various kinds were held. Many parts of the field have students at Grace-land.

FORWARD

As the church goes forward, the Southern Mission will be found to be keeping step with the progress made elsewhere. May God's peace and blessing be with the Saints of that field is my humble prayer. Respectfully submitted,

M. A. MCCONLEY.

Birmingham, England

P. S.—As I left the field in February to come to England it was a comfort to turn the work over to such an able man as Elder Roscoe Davey. I am sure the work has gone forward under his supervision.

REPORT

Hawaii

By Apostle D. T. Williams

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

In the early part of the month of May, 1946, President F. H. Edwards reached me by long distance telephone at Spokane, Washington, inquiring in behalf of the Presidency as to my availability for an inspection tour of the Hawaiian Islands, with a view to such recommendation as I might see fit to make in connection with the furtherance of our work in that part of the world. The telephonic conversation was concluded with the suggestion that I prepare to sail as soon after July 1 as may be possible.

In keeping with this assignment I left San Francisco by steamship July 15, and arrived in Honolulu four and a half days later. My reception by the fine Saints of that city and others who came in for the occasion was beyond my fairest dreams. Leis of every description, with all the fondest "Alohas" which go with them, were placed upon us at the wharf—forty-seven in number. But that night more were to be added as the gifts of love and appreciation were extended the visitor from the mainland. May God bless all those who so thoughtfully received the newly-arrived church representative.

Brother and Sister Miller and Brother and Sister Gibbs were conspicuous with their cameras among those present, and the many members of the local priesthood and of our lay church fraternity were there to greet us. That day of arrival in Hawaii will forever be a red-letter day in my experiences—a day always to be cherished as representative of a universal demonstration of the brotherhood of all races of mankind. That was a day to give new meaning to Paul's epochal statement on Mars Hill: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell upon all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek after the Lord, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us."

I found the work prospering in a number of ways in these lush islands. While there are just a little more than 700 members of the church in the four branches and the four or five missions and groups, they are persistent in a vital missionary program which might well prove a challenge to us who are of Zion or near Zion.

Brother and Sister Miller in Honolulu and Brother and Sister Gibbs in Hilo and their many efficient helpers in each case have been conducting religious education classes in the public schools of their home cities. Resulting from these efforts, somewhere in the neighborhood of 100 students—young people and children—attend our church schools on Sundays. Many of these are members of Buddhist families, which gives our proselytizing a keener missionary flavor than any work we are doing on the mainland to date.

It is our feeling that the work should be encouraged with the possibility that missionaries may be developed to labor among their own peoples in these same islands. We have a number of young men and women of promise in Hawaii. This is evidenced in the fact that there are now from this small district of 706 members, 21 students in Graceland. I think I am justified in saying that no other district in the church of like size or double the size can say they have done as well in this connection.

It is our suggestion that for the present, at least, our policy should be to do our work, with such talents as may be developed among our island Saints, among the island populations. There we have 67,000 who are either pure blooded Hawaiians or have Hawaiian blood in their veins. Again we have approximately 160,000 Japanese and about 30,000 Chinese. These account for only about one half the population of Hawaii. But this is enough to set up the principle of home missionary work.

All of these people, with the possible exception of a few older ones, speak the English language and have attained the backgrounds of our political philosophy and history. In fact, many of them are as proficient as we ourselves in many such matters.

To do missionary work in Hawaii among the Japanese or Chinese would, as you can well see, be a much simpler matter than to start now, at this writing, in the Orient, with all of its festering tumult of defeat and revolution. However, let us not overlook the fact that we can now be preparing by generating in Hawaii the kind of a situation and the character of spiritual behavior and power which will be the springboard for a missionary conquest in the Orient in the years ahead.

Brother Miller, Brother Gibbs, and the undersigned have tried to keep the Presidency informed concerning the developing situation in the island district. We are convinced that whoever are given future responsibility there will likewise seek to keep headquarters advised as to current conditions. It is good to know that President Garver and Bishop Johnson are to visit Hawaii on their way to Australia. We know they will be very joyously received and lovingly cared for while in these islands. This will also give the Joint Council a new view of the island situation which prospect should be of value to the thinking of each of the brethren.

D. T. WILLIAMS

REPORT

The Southwestern States

By Apostle J. W. Rushton

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

Report of the Minister in Charge of the Southwestern Field; including California, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico.

After the adjournment of the conference, I returned to this field and resumed the customary detailed work, which involved administrative matters besides preaching, teaching, etc. Owing to changes made by the Joint Council and the General Conference, some adjustments had to be made which were more difficult because of the prevailing conditions; particularly in the problems of housing. However, despite the general housing shortage and other challenges, with patience and accommodation on the part of all, these have been effected to the near satisfaction of all.

Among the changes resulting from action by the Conference, Brother G. E. Tickemyer appointed to the pastorate of the Los Angeles Central church, vice

John A. Blackmore, who was appointed to Omaha, Nebraska; and he took over his work in September. His grasp of the situation together with the weight of experience gained in his several pastorates especially in Independence, Mo., together with his gifts and talents as leader, preacher, and singer have made his ministry very acceptable, and his assiduous devotion to the multifiform demands of this large and complicated congregation has won for him the confidence and support of the ministry and members of the church in this metropolitan area.

Elder Russell Ralston who was appointed to the San Francisco area was elected to the pastorate of the First Church, and has assisted the work in Golden Gate Church, bringing fine stimulation to the work in this very important city; besides, he was elected to be the leader of the Young People's Department of the Northern California District. The results of his fine ministry are much appreciated.

Elder Alma C. Andrews continued his work in the pastorate of the East Bay Church together with supervision of the Mission in East Oakland, and besides this he has served as one of the counselors to the district president. Altogether we feel that the work done in this part of the field justifies the investment made by the church.

In the Southern California District, Elder P. S. Whalley has continued his pastorate of the San Diego Branch and is seeking to develop mission activities in two places; Escondido and National City. This branch is always difficult because of the fluidity of the congregation and the inadequacy of ministerial help. Reports of Brother Whalley's work are very encouraging, and the stimulation he brought to the work of this city is indeed encouraging.

Elder George Njeim who was appointed missionary to the state of California has taken hold of his work with energy, intelligence, and extraordinary ability. His experience has given him rather unique qualification to minister as a missionary, and his technique based upon the personal contacts together with his systematic methods of "following through" already have produced results in baptisms. The response to our brother's ministry wherever he has been is promising of still greater returns.

Owing to illness Brother Larmour was not returned to Arizona, hence we have had to rely almost exclusively on the efforts of the local ministry. Phoenix and Tucson have kept up their momentum; Bisbee its status quo, while Douglas is in a rather flickering condition, despite all the efforts made by the local people.

In Nevada we have but a few members scattered from Reno to Las Vegas, and we have to thank Brother William Dawson (evangelist) and a few helpers from Sacramento for their interest in these excellent people who continue to hold school and worship as best they can.

New Mexico is in a similar state, we have a few families scattered over a wide area but no organized groups of any kind. H. I. Velt was the one who recently at least, sought to minister to these scattered people and to lay foundations for their official care. This was followed by the efforts of Brother Larmour together with what correspondence could be afforded to sustain their interest in the work. This year, accepting the generous offer of two young people, Brother (Elder) and Sister Sheffer, (husband and wife), who have made two extensive journeys and contacted a number of our members in this state, we have secured an up-to-date register of names and addresses with necessary details so that we have a fairly good idea of whom and where we have possible nuclei. It may be that we can work out some method of contacting and ministering to these scattered members. The results so far have been encouraging, and we are grateful to Brother and Sister Sheffer.

Three reunions were held in this field; one at Pacific Palisades, another at Asilomar, near to Monterey, for the Southern California and Northern California districts respectively; and one at Granite Dells, near Prescott, Arizona. All were well attended, characterized by an excellent spirit and the splendid help by the visiting ministry which included Dr. F. M. McDowell, Bishop C. A. Skinner, and Mrs. M. A. McConley. The educational and spiritual quality of their ministry was of high order and the effect upon those privileged to be in attendance was uplifting and enduring. All were grateful for the church officials in appointing this staff to help us.

We take advantage of this opportunity to mention the fine work done by Evangelist Albert Carmichael, whose personality, long and varied experiences, and devotion to the ideals of the work have endeared him to all who know him and we express our gratitude to him.

This year also we have been privileged to enjoy the companionship and ministry of the church physician, Dr. Chas. F. Grabske who despite his heavy work in his specialization, finds time to preach and lecture and counsel in his efficient manner.

I am impelled to pay tribute to the fine services of our good friend who for many years served as the church physician, Dr. Ambrose W. Teel. Few have ministered so continuously and unobtrusively to so many as our brother, both as physician and minister professionally and spiritually. Throughout this mission particularly, Dr. Teel has sustained a rich ministry, and his name is immortalized in the hearts of many who have shared the richness of his contribution.

In conclusion it affords me great pleasure to acknowledge the constant, uncomplaining and sacrificial work of the many local men and women who have given of their time, energy, talent, and support in many ways. Perhaps no one knows so well as the supervising minister how much our church is indebted to these unsung heroes who day and night place themselves at the call of all who need them. Were it not for such in the district presidency, the local bishopric, the branch pastorates, and the several offices needful to the organized work of our church, it would soon become anemic and languish. We are grateful beyond expression to each and all and feel sure that they will be numbered among, and have high place, those to whom the invitation will come: "Come ye blessed of my Father, ye have been faithful in that which is little, ye shall be rulers over that which is great."

We now give grateful thanks to Almighty God whose providence and grace have been unailing in all of our needs. May we be ready for the coming revival of the interests of men and women among all peoples in religion of which the signs are very clear and strong.

LETTERS

Publicizes His Religion

I read with much interest Brother Weldon's letter to Bishop DeLapp and appreciated the frank answer accompanying it. I have never doubted the gathering and have tried to tell the story of the Restoration whenever the opportunity presented itself. On the signs on either side of my station, I have painted "L. D. S." When customers ask me what the letters stand for, I tell them about the church.

I have been a member for sixty-four years. I try to live my religion as best I can and have abided by the Word of Wisdom. I have witnessed many healings and was healed once myself when the doctor said I was dead. My call to the Aaronic priesthood came through Brother J. H. Lake by the gift of tongues. I pray God will help us all to unite in the faith and redeem Zion.

God's Answer to Prayer

I was a member of the Church of England during the first forty-five years of my life; then, through prayer, I found the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. My prayer, at that time, was "Open Thou mine eyes that I may behold the wondrous things out of Thy law."

My belief was that all denominations formed one church and that it did not matter which church one attended so long as his worship was sincere. The words of Christ to the woman of Samaria, "God is a Spirit and they who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth," were sufficient for me. I was a member of the Church of England because my parents were. When the time came that I desired to investigate for myself, I had no idea how my prayer would be answered. I know now that he sent his servants to instruct me. I was told "He that is of God heareth God's words," and "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God, for God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him."

My testimony is that the Reorganized Church is of God, that its priesthood is endowed with his authority to preach and officiate in the ordinances of his church. This knowledge led me to accept the gospel and be baptized. Christ said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God"; now I can truthfully say that I see.

Time has passed quickly and thirty-seven years of my life have been spent in the Reorganized Church. God has been merciful to me and blessed me abundantly through those years. I've had my share of grief and sorrow, but he has led me gently. At times I have been greatly humiliated because of my failures, but he knows my heart and comes to me with the promise that my sins will be forgiven. This has caused me to rejoice and has renewed in me the joy of my salvation. My days on earth may be few, but whether few or many, I should like them to be spent acceptably before him so that others may benefit by the good work he shall have performed in me.

Wants Correspondence

Several years ago, I was told that only an operation would save my life, but two days before I was scheduled to go to surgery, Seventy Maurice Draper administered to me. Medical examination the following day revealed that the source of my illness had been completely removed, and the operation was not necessary. It was truly a wonderful blessing. I have had many trials and heartaches, but I have learned that God is always with me. When our young son died five years ago, I found consolation in praying, "Father, thy will, not mine, be done." I want to live a life that will make me worthy to be called a child of God. Please pray for me.

I would like to hear from the Saints everywhere. That God will bless each one is my daily prayer.

Wants Christmas Story

I am trying to locate a story that I read in the Herald some years ago about a woman who prayed one Christmas Eve that Christ would visit her home. When he came the next day, she was totally unprepared for him; there was no place at the table nor gift for him. If anyone remembers this story and has a copy of it, I should appreciate getting it.

I should also like to get other short stories with a moral. I am collecting them for use at reunion next summer. I have a few I shall be glad to share with any who might want them.

Easter Means More to Me

not and do not want to do the spectacular things, but will try to be concerned only with the essential things. One by one, these may seem very small—building courage in a four-year old by helping him bravely and tearlessly through a badly cinder-cut knee—maybe just slowing down my pace to walk from town with an eight-year old girl, a total stranger, who is almost bubbling over with the excitement of Christmas shopping alone and who wants to tell someone about the surprises she had purchased for her family. Through all these little experiences there is ample opportunity to help this new generation live the quality of life our generation has not found possible because we do not want to pay the price.

I shall fall far short of my possibilities, of God's desires for me, but I shall strive to use wisely the great stewardship he has given me. I am deeply thankful we have a God, all loving and all powerful; and Christ, his Son who bridged and is eternally bridging the gap for us that we could never bridge alone; and for his Holy Spirit that interprets both unto us and leads and directs us through all of our lives. May we strive ever to be more worthy of his love.

And Also by Faith

By R. Edwin Browne

Saints Herald

Volume 94 April 12, 1947 Number 15

A young man is striding toward you down a campus walk. He smiles and says "Hello" as you meet and pass.

You have met a new kind of frontiersman: "We," like Whitman's pioneers, "detachments steady throwing down the edges, through the passes, up the mountains steep, conquering, holding, daring, venturing as we go the unknown ways."

He is conquering—with his test tube and his microscope. He is holding—with his textbook and his slide rule. He is daring—with his platform and his pen.

He is venturing.

It is a venture with a new kind of reality: "We, the youthful sinewy races, all the rest on us depend."

He is beginning to believe that; the war, too, has been a schoolmaster. And he seeks more learning. He seeks learning "even by study," as a prophet has recommended. But he knows other tools which the prophet mentioned.

He seeks learning by study—"and also by faith."

This is adventure.

It is a faith which helps him reach from the understood to the unknown. It is a faith which reminds him he cannot be alone. It is a faith which warms reason. It is a faith which demands the deepest manhood of his creative soul. It is a faith which sends his reason to the high plateaus where the multitudes await him.

This also is learning.

He enters an open door.

You remain still for a moment. You turn. And you walk on. But you will return. And you will enter the open door.

P. S.

* You Will Be Interested

"And Also by Faith" was contributed by R. Edwin Browne, head of the Public Relations Department of Graceland College, to go with the cover cut used for this issue. Since the theme for this month in church work is "Church Institutions," we have chosen Graceland College to be featured for the present week.

The sketch, "And Also by Faith" is adapted from a booklet of the same name which gives general information to prospective college students and their parents. Sixteen pages of pictures and interesting copy tell about Graceland College—the courses of study, costs, student life, housing, sports, part-time employment, loans and admission requirements. The booklet is free and may be had by writing to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

* An Odd Fact

That you may understand the strange and mysterious ways of publication, we feel it necessary to explain that this issue of the "Herald," although dated for April 12, near the close of the General Conference, is actually being completed on April 4, before the Conference begins, in order to get it through the presses and into the mails to reach you in time.

So we have nothing to report on the Conference, except that preparations are made, so far as humanly possible, and every officer has reached the point where he has done everything he can remember and wondering what he has forgotten, to turn up and embarrass him later. We have had several days of saturating rain, and this morning's sky looks wet as a sponge, ready to drip at the slightest suggestion. Cheerful visitors are already in town, and the greetings of friends are in full tide.

posed of so many visitors, that he reached for the hand of a neighbor and exclaimed, "Shake hands with a native!" It brought a jolly laugh. On almost any corner the natives are in a minority.

The cries of the roomless—the hapless folk who came without reservations, expecting heaven to perform a miracle for them—have not yet arisen; but they will probably be heard before Sunday afternoon. But we trust, as we have trusted before, that all will somehow find a place to stay. It may not be what they want, and much too far away, but they will be lucky if they are not like the Son of Man, Who had not "where to lay his head."

TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE, GREETINGS:

It is with pleasure that we render an account of our stewardship as Presidents of the high priesthood during the past year, and indicate the lines along which we believe the church should advance in the immediate future.

First of all, we wish to give heartfelt thanks to our Heavenly Father for the grace and mercy he has extended toward us and for the patience with which he has led us in spite of our many shortcomings. We also acknowledge with deep gratitude the kindness with which our immediate associates and those more distant have received our ministry, sustaining us in many ways and adding their strength to ours in order that the work committed to all might go forward through the strength and devotion of many. In making this acknowledgment, we have particularly in mind the comradeship of the Presiding Patriarch, who served in the Presidency before us, of our brethren of the Twelve, our most immediate associates; of the members of the Presiding Bishopric, who have done so much to garner and safeguard the material resources which reflect the quality of our spiritual devotion, and of Elders Charles V. Graham and Glaude A. Smith and Bishop Kelley, and our other associates in the work in Independence. We have in mind, too, the Standing High Council, the High Priests and Seventies, the Bishops, Evangelists, and Pastors, the leaders of our departments and the directors of our church institutions, who have served in their several places with loyalty and steadfast purpose. Our hearts also reach out beyond this smaller circle to the growing thousands whose faith and works combine to prophesy the triumph of the kingdom.

ADJUSTMENTS

The year has been one of adjustment, but we believe it has been one of adjustment forward. As all know, the transition from war to peace, and from a world of isolation to a world of universal converse and responsibility, has imposed new and exacting demands which the church has not fully escaped. The fundamental truths at the heart of the gospel are eternally valid, but the circumstances under which these truths must be proclaimed are changing from day to day. We are indeed fortunate that the church is so well adapted to serve in such an age, and that our natural hungering for security is balanced in the best of us by a spirit of courageous enterprise and our eager desire for Zion is paralleled by wholehearted concern for our missionary task.

A major effort of the year has been toward strengthening branches and districts as centers of spiritual life and evangelistic power. This should continue. The success attained has required the steadfast devotion of many hundreds of local ministers and many supporting sacrifices on the part of their families. Without such ministry, the church could not go forward. It has involved, also, a vast amount of planned missionary activity; but such activity as builds in and near nuclei already established, and so enriches our fraternity, conserves our strength, and prepares the way for the gathering.

As part of this stable growth, we have been very pleased to note the many branches which have recently acquired church homes, and the many more which plan to do so when the building situation permits, and where they are raising funds in the meantime. No branch is fully organized until it has a suitable church home. Through your past generous observance of the financial law, and the wise guidance of the Bishopric, general church funds have been and are available to assist in necessary and well-planned building projects.

INTERNATIONAL CONDITIONS

The distressing plight of the Saints in Europe has called forth a quick and warm-hearted response from Saints in the United States, Canada, and Australia, and very substantial relief has been forwarded to Europe from each of these countries. Already many expressions of gratitude have been received, and we feel that the ties of Saintly fraternity have been greatly strengthened. In an endeavor to co-ordinate this relief and to re-establish the work of the church which has been seriously impaired by the war, Elder F. O. Davies has visited the European missions open to him, and he has given needed counsel to the ministry and has sent back valuable information to the general authorities. Following this, it became necessary for the Joint Council to be more directly represented in Europe, and we were all heartened by the ready and sacrificial response of Apostle M. A. McConley and his good wife. Brother and Sister McConley are now in England, and Brother McConley's reports are already coming in. He will be joined by Elders F. Henry Edwards, E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and G. L. DeLapp as soon as transportation facilities permit, and these brethren will recommend long-time plans for the work in England and on the Continent. In the meantime, supervisory ministers for the various missions are being appointed, and their names will be presented to you later in the Conference.

Advance Through

By President Israel A. Smith

MY FRIENDS of the church, I extend to you my personal greetings as well as the best wishes of myself and my associates in the First Presidency.

I fervently hope what I present may bear the impression of sufficient wisdom, if not of inspiration, to bring to you something of encouragement; for in spite of conditions in the world which in and of themselves hold naught but warning of disaster, there is yet the silver lining, yet the rainbow of promise, as I view it, for God's covenant children. We still believe as a church we are in his keeping, that he built the house and that he still "keepeth the city."

In contemplating the marvelous progress of so-called civilization, we are reminded of the story of Naaman in the 2nd Book of Kings, where we read:

Now Naaman, captain of the host of the King of Syria, was a great man, but What followed was of supreme importance. It very much outweighed Naaman's greatness:

. . . . but, he was a leper.

Across this man's greatness immediately fell a great shadow—it was tragic.

THE UNITED STATES, England, Canada, Australia, France, Russia, are all great nations. But there is a terrible blight over all of them.

Through science, man has achieved a mastery over heretofore unknown but powerful forces, forces never even dreamed of until within recent years. Knowledge has increased, and we can do many, many things that were impossible a few years ago.

Medical skill has surmounted hurdles thought to be impassable; has almost doubled the average span of life since America was founded.

Man can fly, and within recent days has flown 5,000 miles in 15 hours.

All this wonderful progress, and more, yet facing a revolution—possibly social disintegration and world-wide anarchy, because of man's un-wisdom and selfishness: capital, slow to learn that the worker's interest is its own welfare; workers only now learning that they can go too far in their demands on capital; laws which were acclaimed as ushering in a new era, when adopted, now condemned as the direct cause of many present ills of the body politic and economic now indivisible.

Yes, great nations, great peoples, great civilizations are threatened by cancerous growths that endanger the existence of all orderly government. Many panaceas are offered, but only one will prove effective and that is the development of a world brotherhood—if it is possible.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Anglican Church, recently said:

We won't become brothers by force. We must believe in, pray, and work for world brotherhood.

John Nevin Sayre, secretary of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, just back from Europe, says, "Europe is tired and losing hope."

In my work, I see the official publications of certain ecclesiastical organizations. Here is a statement found in one of them:

One year has elapsed since men laid down their arms and firing ceased, but peace was never so far beyond our reach. The dreams of a warless world have been rudely shattered. It would seem that we are surely nearing the end of the age. THIS CRITICAL WORLD SITUATION MUST BE UNDERSTOOD BY GOD'S PEOPLE. THE ISSUES ARE SPIRITUAL—it is truth vs. falsehood; law vs. anarchy; God vs. Satan; Christ vs. anti-Christ. Let us stop living in a fool's paradise, dreaming that the world will right itself. This world order is doomed. Man's day is drawing to a close. The second Psalm will be enacted as the closing drama of human rebellion against God and his anointed.

SURELY the world has come through storm.

After a storm, when morning breaks and clouds have been dispelled, the wise and energetic mariner looks about him, once more gets his bearings, and sets sail again for his destination. After the recent world holocaust, can anyone look about him undismayed? Can anyone but the most optimistic believe that the attempt to direct the world into peaceful channels will be permanently successful? Where do we go from here?

In the prophetic words of our song, in these things we "see the workings of contending powers." We witness conflict of irreconcilable ideologies. The world is gradually setting the stage for a war to the finish between Communism and free government now represented in America and some other democracies—perhaps at last it will be the real Armageddon.

Lenin, sainted by the Soviets, whose remains are on display in Red Square in Moscow, said the Soviet system could not exist in the world with imperialism, as some of the disciples of Marks choose to call the present capitalistic system. That "all events of world politics are inevitably concentrating on a struggle of other ideals against the Russian Republic." That world conflict approaches is obvious.

An apologist for Communism in a recent magazine article says:

What we have been witnessing from afar is the carpentry [making] of a new world, "where a revolution is being completed," which began a hundred years ago in France.

IF THIS RESHAPING of government ideologies did begin with the French Revolution and has continued to date, we must admit that during the intervening years, progress in civilization as we understand it, and in what we Americans have and do cherish as our inalienable rights, has been the most remarkable since the world began. And this advancement has grown from the influence of the Christian church, the Christian religion, more particularly noticeable in the Americas, Great Britain, and the western nations of Europe—Christian nations.

Thus we have indisputable evidence of the efficacy, the endurance and persistence of the principles set forth by Jesus in his wonderful gospel and the social application of the Christian religion. Christianity has survived the storm pretty well.

We witness the attempt to secure world peace by contractual arrangements. They of course are no stronger than the morally weakest of the signatory powers. And I am convinced that howsoever many watchmen, armies and navies, international forces are set upon the walls of our civilization and however vigilant and wakeful all of them are, enduring peace and security can never be obtained, unless and "except the Lord keep the city."

But the history of Christianity is one of long advances through storm. Notwithstanding the fact that through the centuries governments were overthrown and replaced by others and they in turn disintegrated, the church of Christ, whenever and wherever its banners have been carried by true disciples, has always persisted.

When Jesus made his humble entrance into Jerusalem, he said:

The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified . . . and I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

And John makes plain the meaning by adding that Jesus was signifying the manner of his death. And "this man Jesus" whom we recognize as the Son of God, the founder of true religion, was lifted and nailed upon the Cross.

This tragic event, foretold by the prophets, ushered in the beginning of the Church of the Lamb. And notwithstanding that its adherents were hounded from city to city through a literal ocean of blood, it finally stood triumphant, the accepted state religion of the Roman Empire which covered almost the entire known world.

The world indulges in speculation as to the mysterious causes of this victory which came after centuries of travail; but to those who believe in the gospel of Christ, it was a literal fulfillment of his promise that he would draw men unto him, a promise that still persists. I have always noted the word draw, not drive. To us, also, it was the fulfillment of what the prophets had said about his mission work.

While other religions in the Roman Empire met persecution, none ever faced such relentless and bitter resistance and none ever achieved such remarkable victory.

The persecutions inflicted on those early Christians both weakened and strengthened the church. Serious schisms were experienced, but the church emerged stronger because of suffering. Those who braved martyrdom even to be baptized could not easily be persuaded to deny the faith.

LET US GO BACK to the early church and consider briefly the conditions and how it grew in numbers and spiritual power: We read in the first chapter of Acts that, after the ascension of Christ, his disciples repaired to Jerusalem and there in an upper room they continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, 120 in all, and on Pentecost, under the divine afflatus, and after a sermon by Peter, about 3,000 were added to their number, and as they continued "with one accord" in the temple, "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Then came greater persecution, when the name of Christian was anathema, and the followers of the Lord Jesus lived in caves and catacombs like hunted animals. And this persisted for a period we can hardly comprehend, we who live in a country not yet 200 years old. But at last a Roman Emperor was converted and Christianity became by imperial edict the religion of that far-flung empire. Historians give various causes for this phenomenal growth of an unpopular and novel religion, with an organization which declined to live in "complacent tolerance" of other beliefs and customs, and which in fact threatened traditions greatly cherished by the Romans as well as the Greeks.

Why did Christianity win among the numerous philosophies in Greece and Rome, though it met with opposition, greater than that of any others? Why did it surpass them all? In the course of three hundred years, a religion which stemmed from an obscure Jewish sect with no support in high places, effected an organization second only in extent to that of the Empire, and forced Rome to come to terms with it. Within another two centuries it became the one mighty state religion, with the nominal allegiance of the great majority of the peoples of the Mediterranean basin, and then survived the Roman Empire itself. It was the only Jewish sect which achieved a permanent place among other races. And strange, indeed, was it that the Jewish people, from which it sprang, of all the religious groups in the Roman Empire, have proved the most resistant to this day to the new faith.

To questions raised by these interesting facts, no single answer can be given with assurance, but a number of factors undoubtedly contributed to the result, one being, of course, the endorsement by the Roman Emperor Constantine. Had he been a weak ruler or had his reign been limited, the result might have been different.

Another factor, and I wish especially to call your attention to this, was the condition of society in general, and from this recent writer I quote:

Another factor appears to have been the disintegration of society. From at least the time of Alexander, the Mediterranean world had been in a state of flux. The passing of the old was hastened by the wars which culminated in the founding of the Roman Empire and was further accelerated by the Empire itself. The construction of a universal state could not but dissolve the barriers which divided people from people. In the consequent intermingling of individuals and ideas, old cultures, with their religions, were weakened. In the great cities especially were thousands of deracinated individuals [we call them "displaced" persons now] some of them slaves, some freedmen, and some merchants, who had been separated by force or voluntarily from their hereditary milieu [surroundings]. Often insecure, [and who today are more insecure than the millions in war-torn Europe?] subject to oppression from the powerful, presumably many of them welcomed the fellowship afforded by the strong Christian organization and the security which the faith promised for the life to come. The disintegration of existing cultures had become especially marked in the hundred and thirty years between Marcus Aurelius and Constantine. The disasters of these decades had weakened the established order, had made it less able to resist the in-roads of a new faith, and had started many men on a quest for the sort of security which an authoritative religion seemed to offer.

All these conditions are paralleled today.

The third cause for the remarkable growth of the early Christian church was the excellent organization which it had developed, since none of the rival sects ever acquired so coherent a structure, a tribute to divine organization.

A fourth reason has been ascribed to the fact that the gospel attracted all races and classes and discriminated against none, whereas Judaism never shook off its racial narrowness. It remained self-centered, fixed—inert. But Christianity carried its appeal to all—Jew and Gentile, Greek and barbarian. The philosophies, as always, appealed to the intelligentsia, but, as when Christ was here, the unlettered multitude accepted his message more readily: "The poor heard him gladly."

Again, it appears almost that the whole world was then looking for something new in religion and philosophy. Christianity's high ethical standards appealed to an age when many were seeking moral improvement.

However correct this speculation, it is apparent that at the very beginning of the Christian church, as one has said, there "must have been a vast release of energy unequalled in the history of the white race." Unless this happened, it is admitted that the course of the church is unexplainable. The early disciples themselves ascribed this power to the founder of their faith. Paul in his letter to the Thessalonians, reminded them that the "Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

The crucifixion and the assurance of His resurrection and the living presence of his Spirit were the primary causes of their success.

All these are the judgments of historians (who should be neither partisans, idolators, or detractors) who hesitate to ascribe divine inspiration to the church, who themselves perhaps never caught and therefore could not be expected to be true to the "heavenly vision." We remember with interest, however, and I have always believed what Paul wrote when he said, in reference to the progress of the church, that Paul "planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase," so that the Spirit of God was the vital factor in the growth of the early church.

IT IS SAID that when Henry Ward Beecher began his ministry, he was disappointed with the results of his preaching. His hearers did not respond. "The chariot wheels dragged." One day the thought came to him, "There was a reason why, when the apostles preached, they succeeded; I will find it out." That brought satisfactory results.

The early apostles did not present a theory. They did not make arguments. Basically it was quite different: They heralded certain concrete facts of history. Their keynote was "that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you."

These historic events were carried far and wide. Two facts—in reality but one: "Christ died for our sins." That was fundamental. They preached Jesus and the resurrection. "So we preach," wrote Paul to the Corinthians, "and so ye believe." When he was indicted before Festus and Agrippa, it was this persistent witness to the resurrection which formed the charge brought against him. All the trouble revolved about "one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive." They declared that in these two marvelous events, now seeming to be one, the kingdom of God had come in with power.

They presented no abstract scheme of salvation. It was the startling news that the Son of God was mighty to save.

I would not recount the long story of the great apostasy which came to the early Christian church, the resulting blight under which the woman, representing the church, went into the wilderness, and our assurance that the Church of God was restored in latter days through Joseph Smith the prophet, except to present my hope and expectation that once again the church, our church, can and will ride safely through the approaching storm—indeed the storm which is already upon the world if we rightly interpret the signs of the times.

In this connection may I quote from a well-known ecclesiastic, Dr. Adolph Keller of Zurich, Switzerland:

We are entering into an era of deep conflicts, controversies, and dilemmas. No whole is left—everything is disintegrating. The end is perhaps not so much destruction as such, but disruption, dissolution of our civilization into its ultimate conflicting elements.

The world cannot save the world. Man cannot save himself. It is the task of the church and the ministers as His prophets to open the people's eyes so that they may see that all the evils and ills in the world find their end in God's judgment and in his grace. Here the new world begins.

If so, then here the old one ends.

Dr. Paul Hutchinson, managing editor of The Christian Century, has just returned from a tour through Japan, China, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, Switzerland, the Scandinavian countries, and England. He states in an article in Life Magazine that peoples of these countries are raising the "most profound questions the human mind can ask"; that by increase of knowledge man has only developed the means of his own destruction. He calls attention to the fact that the man the United Nations has selected to head its educational, financial, and cultural division, Julian Huxley, boldly declares he "does not believe in God;" that the idea of God has ceased to be of any help. This represents the spirit of anti-Christ which the Book of Mormon said would appear in the last days.

In England recently, certain of the higher educational institutions combined to publish a book written by a reverend gentleman of All Souls Church, Oxford, in which he stated, "The idea of God has been rendered superfluous." Yet Dr. Hutchinson finds in his travels among these peoples a reaching out after God, a revival of religion in the individual man. "Everywhere, among all races," he says, "in all cultures, men's searching hands are reaching out to touch the portals of a new world of faith." Values always heretofore championed by the church are given importance, but the authority of the churches is being denied. Church men in England admit the men who fought the war and their children are not found in the churches. Churches in Russia (once again legalized) are filled but not by the young. Even in Palestine where Zionism sways with Jewish mysticism, few communal settlements witness any "formal religious observance,"—strange to say, is it not?

Davis Lawrence, editor of the United States News, deals with the church and the present world order. He says the proper role of the church is to "be the mediating and healing influence. May it never become an economic partisan."

Epitomizing, here are the world issues of today:

Christianity believes certain things about the nature of the universe and man and his destiny, the nature of morality and the basis of ethics, and the primary goals of life. As to all these, Communism—which to me represents the spirit of anti-Christ—believes exactly the opposite.

IF RELIGION IS responsible for the character of world civilization today, then the churches have obviously failed most ingloriously. The influence of institutional religion is waning universally, and Hutchinson sums up the situation with this "universal paradox": that men are living in such terror of the future that they are "turning with a new openness of mind to a spiritual interpretation of life, while the churches are less and less able to command the active loyalty of the masses."

If our boasted civilization is not to disintegrate, political institutions will have to be brought into conformity with the moral order of Christianity. Can that be done?

And religion assumes its rightful place, and we are today justified, in a day threatened with social disintegration, when the church declares that unmovable moral standards do exist, and all human organizations and institutions must strive to bring political forces into harmony with them.

The battle line is forming: The Pope, spiritual head of the greatest of the so-called Christian organizations (greatest in numbers), calls Communism "the greatest enemy of the soul."

Thus, as Doctor Hutchinson adds:

Communism and Christianity become the great rival faiths of this desperate time. Theirs is a struggle for men's souls

The world offers the opportunity. What then is our duty? What is our hope, as men engaged in a religious movement?

OUR DUTY has been told to us, and told in terms not difficult for any to understand. We are engaged in a movement begun a hundred years and more ago under divine direction. If other things given to us from 1828 on, through the Prophet and Founder of the church, are to be heeded, are we free to discard and ignore other things? Let us consider what conditions would obtain—sometime—if prophecy of the Doctrine and Covenants be true.

In Section 1 we find:

3) The voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear; prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon, the great, which shall fall.

4) Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world;

6) And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and willet that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.

Again, Section 34: 3, 4:

The time speedily cometh that great things are to be shown forth unto the children of men; but without faith shall not anything be shown forth except desolations upon Babylon, the same which has made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And there are none that doeth good except those who are ready to receive the fullness of my gospel, which I have sent forth unto this generation.

Wherefore, I have called upon the weak things of the world, those who are unlearned and despised, to thresh the nations by the power of my Spirit; and their arm shall be my arm, and I will be their shield and their buckler, and I will gird up their loins, and they shall fight manfully for me; and their enemies shall be under their feet; and I will let fall the sword in their behalf; and by the fire of mine indignation will I preserve them. And the poor and the meek shall have the gospel preached unto them, and they shall be looking forth for the time of my coming, for it is nigh at hand; and they shall learn the parable of the fig tree; for even now already summer is nigh, and I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph;

Also Section 85: 24, 25:

For not many days hence and the earth shall tremble, and reel to and fro as a drunken man, and the sun shall hide his face, and shall refuse to give light, and the moon shall be bathed in blood, and the stars shall become exceeding angry, and shall cast themselves down as a fig that falleth from off a fig tree.

And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people; and angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of our God is come: behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.

Some American statesmen saw the possibility of these conditions. Daniel Webster at Bunker Hill said:

We wish that in these days of disaster which, as they come upon all nations, must be expected to come upon us also, desponding patriotism may turn its eyes hitherward, and be assured that the foundations of our national powers are still strong.

And in his last public address, he said:

Unborn ages and visions of glory crowd upon my soul, the realization of all which, however, is in the hands and good pleasure of Almighty God; but, under his divine blessing, it will be dependent on the character and the virtues of ourselves, and of our posterity. . . .

And let me say, gentlemen, that if we and our posterity shall be true to the Christian religion . . . we may have the highest hopes of the future fortunes of our country. . . .

But if we and our posterity reject religious instruction and authority, violate the rules of eternal justice, trifle with the injunctions of morality, and recklessly destroy the political Constitution which holds us together, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us, that shall bury all our glory in profound obscurity.

Within recent days, Doctor Hutchinson, to whom I have referred, has warned from Honolulu:

Men and brethren, the nations are rushing toward destruction, and the time is short . . . the churches do not yet give the impression that they are in deadly earnest about their use of the time that remains.

And I ask, "Are we in deadly earnest about our duty in the premises?"

We have an organization admirably prepared to face any storm, if early history is a criterion. Latter Day Saints are unique among religious organizations in that we have a priesthood fashioned after the church of Christ in his day, which was a prominent factor.

We believe and allege we have been authorized to represent God and to speak in the name of Christ. Then should not our special witnesses, our Apostles and our Seventies, as well as our standing ministry, and our members, valiantly and with confidence testify to the outstanding facts of the gospel, the death and resurrection of Christ, the very things that made the early church gloriously victorious and triumphant? Let all this vast army of witnesses bear their testimony that God has re-established his church under circumstances which make it a "marvelous work and a wonder," for the purpose of evangelizing the world.

In other words, what the world needs, and what our duty demands of us, is for us to bear testimony of Jesus Christ. This testimony is ably supplemented by the Book of Mormon.

What if Hutchinson and Wells and other world thinkers are "prophets of gloom"? What if social organizations—what if all civilizations so-called are decaying and disintegrating? God in the shadow still keeps watch over his own. It will be a vindication of the claims of Joseph Smith; it will be a demonstration of the fullness of times, and in spite of possible disaster, destruction by bombs, or by other means discovered by men and used by those who know not God, who deny him and revile him, yet will it be a confirmation and justification of our cause, the cause of Latter Day Saintism. Then we can raise our heads and rejoice at the salvation of our God. Then we will know and understand the parable of the fig tree, referred to in Section 34 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

My counsel to you is no different, it is neither more nor less, than what has been delivered to the church through Joseph Smith, the founder of the church, who spoke with the warning voice and whose work is being verified in a marvelous manner.

In the words of the song, "we see the workings of contending powers"; but the church will be triumphant and "the Lord will have dominion over his Saints." We can and will, as the church did in the early days and since 1830, through trial and persecution and adversity, "advance through every storm" if we but carry on our appointed task with singleness of purpose.

May God continue to bless us with his power in increasing measure, to do the unfinished task, is my prayer.

Life, or Death?

By Lynn Weldon

How do the long years ahead look to our very young people? Here is how it looks to one of them. The author is sixteen years of age, a deacon, president of Zion's League, a Junior in the college high school. He is a son of Roy Weldon, whose articles have appeared in our pages.

A passenger train rushes through the blackness of a moonless night. Far down the track the engineer sees a danger signal. A rampaging river has washed out the bridge ahead. He applies the brakes. The train rushes on—it is traveling too fast to be stopped. Pullman cars are tossed about like toothpicks. Groans and screams come from the buckled cars as they disappear under the swollen surface of the wild river. The black water continues to lap at the twisted tracks.

A smaller train comes down the same track. A bright light illuminates its path. Its engineer sees the danger signal and, by using the train's powerful brakes, stops short of the danger point. Those aboard the smaller train rescue the survivors of the wrecked train who are clinging to pieces of wreckage floating near the edge of the dark river.

The nations of the world are speeding through the darkness of ignorance, down the track of time. The great men look ahead and see the danger signal. They attempt to stop the mad onrush of civilization to the precipice of self-destruction, yet the ignorant masses push on until they all fall into the dark waters of war and destruction. The survivors cling to bits of the wreckage of our economic system. War and sin have drowned the rest.

The second group traveling down the track of time are not moving forward blindly. The light of Christ's teachings illuminates their path. The prophecies of Isaiah and Joseph Smith warn them of the pitfalls of our civilization. Taking Christ as their example, they are able to repulse the lusts of the world and are able to save many from their sins.

We are living in the time of the fulfillment of the prophecy in the second chapter of Daniel, in which all the kingdoms of the world shall be destroyed and the kingdom of the Lord shall be supreme. Those who travel on the train of living below their possibilities shall find themselves destitute at the great judgment day.

Now is the time to choose. Are you traveling on the train of the world on its way to self-destruction, or the Christian train on its way to peace? Are you aboard the suicide special, or the train of a fuller life? "Ye cannot serve two masters . . . choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

"Woe" to the Land Shadowing With Wings

Requesting A. B. Phillips, the Church Historian, to look up Isaiah 18: 1, I received the following about "Woe."

"The same Hebrew word is used in Isaiah 29: 1, 15; 30: 1: Strong's Exhaustive Concordance renders it, "oh! ah, alas, ho, O, woe." It is akin to owy, and has something of the sense of an exclamation or an interjection, sometimes of lamentation, or crying for or desire; hence has a rather wide use, as such terms at times have in English usage. The Hebrew version of the Masoretic Text renders the word "Ah," as does the American Revised rendering. Some have rendered it "Ho."

Dr. Shimeall, in his book The Second Coming of Christ, says this Isaiah 18: 1 text "can refer to none other so emphatically as to the United States of America."—Page 305.

GENERAL CONFERENCE REPORT of The First Presidency

In the absence of Apostolic direction in the field, Elder E. A. H. Peisker has presided with distinction over the church in Australasia. This mission will be visited by Elders J. F. Garver of the Presidency and Walter N. Johnson of the Presiding Bishopric during the forthcoming inter-Conference period.

The Society Islands Mission has been under the guidance of Elder F. E. Butterworth, with Elder V. C. Sorensen as associate. Brother Butterworth will shortly return to the United States after completing his difficult assignment to the Islands.

ON THE GATHERING

The movement toward the Center Place continues. We are happy in this. But we find it necessary to repeat and emphasize counsel which has been given many times during our history, that those who expect to gather should first consult the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. There is good reason for this. The general authorities indicated in the law are concerned both with the immediate and the more permanent well-being of those who gather; and also in the influence of the gathering on the branches which lose members as well as on the stakes which gain them. Experience indicates that the most desirable additions to our strength in Zion and the stakes come from those who gather as a deliberate step in a carefully planned life program, a program which entails careful weighing of all the factors involved, and adequate and timely consultation with the spiritual and temporal officers concerned. Specifically, and with kind but insistent emphasis, we deplore the attention sometimes given to misguided persons who presume to direct others in this matter on the basis of alleged spiritual manifestations which are in violation of the law. Prophecies of impending doom form a poor background against which to urge the gathering, and fear, of itself, is a totally inadequate motive for obedience to the kingdom law.

It is not infrequently true that persons who otherwise might well move to Independence or one of the stakes will make a better total contribution by staying where they are until others have been found to take their places.

The gathering is primarily a spiritual enterprise. It should be initiated in our already existing homes and branches, where the principles of Zion living can be practiced until they become second nature. This becomes crystal clear when we reflect that the gathering is to Zion not merely from somewhere else. It is toward a Zion point of view and standard of values. It is in the direction of a divinely guided expertness in the use of temporal means for spiritual ends. It is to an inspired revulsion from "goodness" which does not bless, and "wealth" which forgets to share, and "success" which mocks the purpose of our creation. Let us remember these things. Wise and prepared gathering to Zion, and the regions round about is basic in the program of the church; but this involves much more than physical gathering. Every advance toward spiritual excellence is an advance toward the kingdom, and every failure to live up to our best understanding is a retreat from the kingdom. These facts are significant for all of us no matter where we may live.

PRIESTHOOD TRAINING

United and enlightened advance toward the kingdom requires the coordinated leadership of many ministers whose deep affection for each other is rooted in their common devotion to our great Cause. Some of these ministers labor under general church appointment. Others are self-sustaining. All need the strength which comes from worshipping together and studying together and working together. As an approach to satisfying this need, the general authorities concerned sponsored an institute for appointees last August. Such educational activities as this are now being built into the regular framework of our church life. We expect that as opportunity permits the church will establish approved training courses for all new appointees and refresher courses for those who have been under appointment for longer periods.

The lecture outlines used at the August institute were published and will be of value in numerous local study groups. Regional institutes for members of the local priesthood are being planned for the next inter-Conference period, and supporting publications are in process of preparation. It is anticipated that such regional institutes for the local priesthood will become part of the regular program of the church, and that the Priesthood Library will be steadily augmented.

While we are thus deeply concerned in the specialized education of the members of the ministry, we feel led to point out that some of our best training is done in actual ministry under guidance. Young members of the priesthood should enter on their appointed tasks with humility but with a sense of the sustaining grace of the One whose commission they carry. They should learn by doing, and their leaders should teach by showing.

CO-ORDINATION OF QUORUMS

In our administrative relations with the Quorum of Twelve, we have sought to carry into effect the spirit of a working agreement unanimously adopted by a Joint Council of the Presidency and Twelve on April 26, 1943. This agreement grew out of a careful study of the law and enactments of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 104:12; 120:4; 123:23; G. C. R. April, 1884, April, 1894) and recognizes that the Twelve has "active supervision and presidency, under the First Presidency," over the work in branches, districts, and stakes. Our intention to recognize this principle of organization was communicated to the members of the high priesthood and other district and branch presidents by letter and in personal conferences, and is mentioned here for the sake of information and emphasis. We believe that this agreement is particularly important at this time, since the church is now confronted with insistently urgent demands that existing branches shall be strengthened and that the work shall be planted in new centers at home and abroad. These two demands are not disparate but complementary to each other. A major purpose in branch organization is more concentrated and more effective missionary testimony, and a major purpose motivating missionary activity is the firm establishment of stable centers of vigorous church life. In view of these facts, we hope and expect that clear recognition of the rightful interest of the chief missionary quorum of the church in all phases of church endeavor will lead to the widespread quickening and wise direction of our missionary testimony.

RATE OF BAPTISM

We call attention with some concern to the comparatively low baptismal increase reported by the statistician. This is in large measure due to a deplorable tendency to regard evangelism as a specialized function of certain appointee ministers, and to the consequent pre-occupation of the vast body of the Saints with activities which are excellent in their rightful places but which become menacing when they consume energies which ought to be devoted to individual and corporate testimony. Nothing brings greater personal joy, and nothing adds more richly to the sense of life and power in the body, than inspired missionary testimony. We call this to the attention of pastors and priesthood and Saints alike. In particular, we urge that those responsible for ministry among the young direct more of the study and activities of these young people into missionary channels. Within the next few years Zion's League should give to the church scores of young people with good academic training and a passionate interest in ministry at home and abroad.

HOME LIFE AND DOMESTIC PROBLEMS

The members of the Standing High Council have applied themselves during the year to searching judicial inquiry into a number of cases of transgression with a view to determining the specific issues involved, and contributing at the same time to clearer understanding of the fundamental ethical requirements of sainthood. In the work of the Council, the breakdown of home standards becomes tragically apparent, while the superlative value of the Zionite home is set forth in sharp relief. We, therefore, turn with marked satisfaction to the good work being done under the direction of the Department of Religious Education, the Council of Women, and elsewhere to build into our young people those life qualities which form the best possible preparation for marriage, and that love of beauty which finds its most creative expression in home and family associations.

EDUCATION AND LEADERSHIP

The work of the Department of Religious Education has been more clearly defined as a result of correspondence and personal conferences with Brother McDowell and his associate, Elder John Darling. With their full co-operation, it has been agreed that activities of any nature, conducted anywhere in the church, should be administered under the authority of appropriate administrative officers; if they relate to the branch, then by the authority of the branch president; if they relate to the district or stake, then by the authority of the district or stake president; if they relate to a still larger area, then by the Apostle or Apostles in that field. This reaffirms the role of the departmental officers in local organizations as a supporting ministry inseparably connected with the spirit and purpose of our total endeavor. It also frees general departmental officers for their major task of training leaders and preparing study and activity materials. And, yet again, it emphasizes the obligation of the spiritual authorities, both general and local, to become the shepherds of the entire flock, concerned about the needs of every age group, integrating ministry in the departments with the total ministry offered, and building for both present and future needs and service.

LOCAL PROGRAM AND ORGANIZATION

The strength of the church as an organization is rooted in the alert stability of her branches, the wise and vigorous outreach of her testimony, and the devoted and skillful development of her Zionite enterprises. We therefore propose that in the years immediately ahead special effort be made to build toward carefully pre-determined goals in our local and missionary and Zionite endeavors, checking our advance from time to time and revising our procedures in the light of our experience.

Specifically, we propose to work with the responsible general and local ministers to:

1. Set up immediate and long-time programs for branches and stakes. In large and important centers, these programs will be the fruit of the labor of as many of the general officers as are necessary and can be available.

2. Pursue our missionary task in harmony with the branch and district and stake programs adopted, and in addition thereto strengthen and stabilize missionary work at home and abroad; underwriting the work in distant lands as experience, necessity, personnel, and finances indicate and permit.

3. Advance the gathering with vigor while yet doing our utmost to

Worship Suggestions for May

By Sylvia McKeage

Theme for the Month: "JESUS THE GREAT PHYSICIAN"

Worship Center:

Use the same setting for each Sunday of the month, with the exception of the change of one picture. A few inches above a table, place a large picture of Christ. At one side on the table, place a picture which represents the theme for the week. The first week, "Faith," the second, "Mother's Day" or Love," the third, "Repentance," the fourth, "Prayer." Opposite this, place a tall, lighted candle. These smaller pictures may or may not be sacred. Other appropriate ones may be used.

THE HEALING POWER OF FAITH

Instrumental Prelude: "The Lord Is My Shepherd," Saints' Hymnal, 124.

Call to Worship:

The healing of his seamless dress
Is by our own beds of pain;
We touch him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again.
Oh, Lord and Master of us all,
Whate'er our name or sign,
We own thy sway, we hear thy call,
We test our lives by thine.

—Author Unknown.

Hymn of Worship: "Oh, for a Faith That Will Not Shrink," Saints' Hymnal, 240.

Prayer Thought (to be followed by a prayer):

Great Spirit,
Who art the life of all our living,
The light of all our seeing
The strength of all our striving,
The love of all our loving,
Who are invisible;
Yet round about us all and within us each,
We would open our hearts and minds,
Every door and window of our being
We would open to the intaking and the out-giving of the breath of life, Until it shall seem that each one of us is born anew,
And that this place is filled with thy mysterious and mighty presence.

—Robert French Leavens.¹

Scripture Reading: II Thessalonians 1: 3-12.

Vocal Special: "Strong Son of God," Saints' Hymnal, 290.

Thoughts for Meditation:

Although I do not know God's wondrous ways,
Yet I believe from out life's puzzling maze
I shall be brought—He knows.

I do not ask to see the journey's end,
For he walks at my side just like a friend,
So all is well—He sees.

I would not be my own guide, if I might,
But rather trust in his unerring sight
To lead me on—He guides.

I could not guard myself, for that were vain,
Yet this I know: He faithful will remain,
And keep me safe—He guards.

—Selected.

The Worship Message:

"Faith is the will to face life on the assumption that God is love. In that sense, it is a disposition and an attitude. Faith exercises itself in prayer, and love expresses itself in fellowship. Faith is the Godward thrust of life. Consequently, it never rests on its oars; as long as it lasts it never ceases to expect visions and revelations of the Lord, and, what is more, it finds them.

"Faith is creation born of vision and work. It is dynamic, for it moves to action. It is prophetic, for it lifts the veil of the future. Faith is the specialist who diagnoses the 'wholly impossible' to be otherwise. It is the searchlight which reveals the trail to God. Faith is the mother-womb that shelters potentialities while they grow to be realities."

Hymn of Worship: "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," Saints' Hymnal, 281.

Prayer:

THE HEALING POWER OF LOVE (Mother's Day)

Instrumental Prelude: "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art!" Saints' Hymnal, 133.

Call to Worship:

"Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him."—I John 4: 7-9.

Hymn of Worship: "Thou, to Whom the Sick and Dying," Saints' Hymnal, 111.

Prayer:

Scripture Reading:

"And yet I will show you a way that is better by far:

If I could speak the way of language and men,
of angels, too,
And have no love,
I am only a rattling pan or a clashing cymbal.
If I should have the gift of prophecy,
And know all secret truths, and knowledge in its every form,

And have such perfect faith that I could move mountains,

But have no love, I am nothing.
If I should dole out everything I have for charity,

And give my body up to torture in mere boasting pride,
But have no love, I get from it no good at all.

Love is so patient and so kind;
Love never boils with jealousy;
It never boasts, is never puffed with pride;
It does not act with rudeness, or insist upon its rights;
It never gets provoked, it never harbors evil thoughts;

Is never glad when wrong is done,
But always glad when truth prevails;

It bears up under anything,
It exercises faith in everything,
It keeps up hope in everything,
It gives us power to endure in anything.

Love never fails;
And so these three, faith, hope, and love endure,

But the greatest of them is love."—I Cor. 12: 31; 13: 1-8, 13. Williams.²

Thoughts for Meditation:

O beautiful this Mother's Day

The world in which we live,
We thank our God for every gift
Which he doth freely give.
We thank him for the greatest gift
E'er sent from heaven above,
To teach us, help us, lead us on—
The gift of mother love.

O beautiful this Mother's Day
On which we honor thee,
Our constant friend, our loving guide,
May we more loyal be!
We'll live in faithfulness and truth
Be worthy of thy care;
Bring joy to thee by deeds of youth
Our love may they declare.
—Hazel Harker.

Vocal Special: "O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go," Saints' Hymnal, 285.

Theme Talk:

"Behold thy mother." The last words spoken upon the cross to the disciple whom Jesus loved, and whom he desired to have reach the goal of perfection, was, "Behold thy mother."

No man can come to the place in life that God would have him occupy until he has come to properly behold his mother.

"This have I found," said a great philosopher, "that a man can have but one mother." In this there is a similarity between her and God. No one else can quite fill her place.

In the Scriptures we have such examples of motherhood as Hannah who consecrated her son Samuel to God and to the service of humanity.

In the Latter Day work we have the example of Emma Smith, the elect lady, who gave her husband and her three sons as well as herself to the cause of Christ and his church.

Mother love is closely associated with the love of Christ, for she gives all for the purpose of extending life to others. She will sacrifice to the uttermost for the welfare of her children. Mother love has healed many a broken heart, and helped the feet of erring youth to climb the upward way. Mother love has nursed the sick back to health and mothers' prayers have kept them in the narrow way.

Most of the beautiful things of life come by twos or threes, by dozens or hundreds. There are plenty of roses, stars, sunsets, rainbows, brothers, sisters, aunts, cousins, but each of us has only one mother in all the wide world.

Prayer:

THE HEALING POWER OF REPENTANCE

Instrumental Prelude: "Father When in Love to Thee," Saints' Hymnal, 152.

Call to Worship:

Open the door with shame if ye have sinned;
If ye be sorry, open it with signs,
And take him in that comes to sup with thee;
"Behold," he saith, "I stand at the door and knock."
—Jean Ingelow.

Hymn of Worship: "Oh, for a Closer Walk With Thee," Saints' Hymnal, 313.

Prayer Thoughts:

"Almighty and most merciful God, we acknowledge and confess that we have sinned against thee in thought, and word, and deed; that we have not loved thee with all our heart and soul, with all our mind and strength and that we have not loved our neighbors as ourselves.

"We beseech thee, O God, to be forgiving to what we have been, and to help us amend what we are, and of thy mercy to direct what we shall be, so that the love of goodness may ever be first in our hearts, and we may follow unto our life's end in the steps of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

—John Hunter.¹

Meditation Poem:

O Saviour Christ, our woes dispel;
For some are sick, and some are sad,
And some have never loved thee well,
And some have lost the love they had.

And none, O Lord, have perfect rest,
For none are wholly free from sin;
And they who fain would serve thee best
Are conscious most of wrong within.

O Saviour Christ, thou too art man;
Thou hast been troubled, tempted, tried;
Thy kind but searching glance can scan
The very wounds that shame would hide.

Thy touch has still its ancient power,
No word from thee can fruitless fall;
Hear, in this solemn morning hour,
And in thy mercy heal us all.

Scripture Reading: Alma 19: 10-13, 19, 20, 114. Also, last half of Alma 17: 3, beginning with words: "For I do know..."

The Worship Message:

Zeezrom lay sick at Sidom, his face was flushed, and his lips were parched. This man was suffering because he supposed that he had been the cause of the death of two men of God. And this great sin, and his many other sins, kept going over and over again in his mind until there seemed to be no release.

Someone placed a hand upon his fevered brow. He opened his eyes and feebly whispered the name of Alma. A voice spoke to him. Can it be true? Yes, he caught the words, "Amulek and Alma are in town." "Oh, please," he said, "send for them!"

A messenger was sent immediately, and soon Alma was standing over the bed of the sick man. Zeezrom opened his eyes and there, indeed, was the man whom he supposed was dead because of his wickedness. He tried to raise himself up from the bed, but he could not. Tremblingly he reached out his hand and begged to be healed.

Alma took the sick man by the hand and said to him, "Do you believe that Christ has the power to save you?" Zeezrom looked up into his face and answered, "Yes, Alma, I believe all the words that you have taught."

Joy welled up in the heart of Alma. He eagerly bent forward and said to him, "If you believe in the redemption of Christ, you can be healed."

The light of hope shone in Zeezrom's eyes as he answered, "Yes, I believe."

Alma then placed his hands upon the sick man's head and lifting his voice to God, prayed, "O Lord, our God, have mercy on this man according to his faith, which is in Christ."

When Alma said these words, Zeezrom rose up out of his bed and stood upon his feet, and began to walk. All the people of the household marveled at that which they had seen. Zeezrom said to them, "I have repented of my sins and I have been healed by the Lord."

And he was baptized, and began from that time on to preach the gospel of Jesus to the people.

THE HEALING POWER OF PRAYER

Instrumental Prelude: "Ere You Left Your Room This Morning," Saints' Hymnal, 327.

Call to Worship:

"If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sins, and will heal their land."

Poem:

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed—
The motion of a hidden fire
That kindles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear—
The upglancing of an eye,
Where none but God is near.

Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try—
Prayer the sublimest strains that reach
The Majesty on high.

—Selected.

Hymn of Worship: "O Thou God, Who Hear-est Prayer," Saints' Hymnal, 323.

Prayer Thought:

Father,
We thank Thee today
For the simplicity of this relationship
Between our souls and Thine:

Ourselves, foolish, inconsequent, feeble,
Thyself, wise, stable, omnipotent,
How can one have converse with the other?

Yet Thou hast taught us—
As a little child depends upon its mother,
So we depend upon Thee:

We know with certainty, complete and irrefragable,
That here in Thee
Are power, patience, wisdom, grace
For all our need,
And love that joyfully receives, redeems, uplifts, and purifies.

O Father God,
Here we once again, a worthless gift,
We give ourselves to Thee, Thy happy, grateful children,
Eager to do Thy work for Thee this day.
—J. S. Howland.

Vocal Special: "To God Your Every Want," Saints' Hymnal, 321.

The Worship Story:

In the valley of ancient Helam there nestled a small city, where a people of God lived. They had come there to build up their city because they had to flee from their home land. They had left the din and the clamorings of the great wicked city behind. Here in the seclusion of the hills and the forests, they could worship God in their own manner. The land was fertile, too, and here they hoped to remain and build up a civilization to the honor and glory of God.

But one day the unexpected happened. While the workers were out in the fields tilling the soil, they saw men approaching far away in the distance, many of them. They saw their swords glisten in the sun and knew that it was the army of their most dreaded enemy.

In fear they left their fields and ran with all their mights to their leader whom they loved dearly and knew to be a man of God. The whole city soon became frightened and panicky. "What will we do? We have no arms with which to fight the enemy," they said. Crowds quickly gathered in the main square, willing to do something, but what? They were so few in number compared to the great enemy.

Alma, for he was their leader, saw their fears and silently asked God's help. He went among his people and said to them, "Do not be afraid. We will remember the Lord our God, and he will deliver us."

A quiet hush fell over the people, and they fell to their knees in the street, praying to God that their lives might be spared.

Their lives were spared but they were made prisoners of war and put under bondage, being cruelly treated, having heavy burdens lashed upon their backs and being whipped if they slackened in any manner. They unitedly raised up their voices to God in prayer for release from this very trying situation.

The taskmasters grew tired of hearing these people pray as they were being forced into their labors and forbade them to pray more, under threat of death. This did not stop the people from praying. They did not open their mouths, but in their hearts was a prayer to God all the day long.

God heard these prayers, for he healed their bodies and made them strong so they were able to bear their burdens, and he visited them in all their afflictions.

So great was their faith and patience, and so diligent were these people in remembering the Lord that he made it possible for them to slip out of their little city one night as their guards lay sleeping at their posts.

Happy indeed was this band of weary pilgrims, for they knew the great healing power that comes from the Heavenly Father through faithfulness in prayer.

Defying gravitation, water will shortly be flowing out of the Colorado River and into Southern California. The Colorado River Aqueduct, now in construction, will take water from above Parker Dam, lift it more than 1600 feet, carry a billion gallons a day over 242 miles of almost uninhabited mountains and deserts, and distribute water at the Southern California end through 150 miles of subsidiary conduits. Since the water level in Parker Dam reservoir is lower than the major portion of the area to be served, and much lower than the highest portions of the desert crossed by the aqueduct, five separate pumping stations are necessary along the route. Power for the first of these will be generated at Parker Dam. Power for the others will be brought from Boulder Dam, taking 36 per cent of all the energy generated at that dam. The aqueduct has been called the greatest domestic water supply system in the history of engineering.—N. Y. Times.

retain in points distant from Independence those ministers and members whose services are necessary in the development of those centers.

As necessary means to these ends, we further propose to:

4. Make persistent efforts to elevate the standards of home and family life throughout the church.

5. Call, train, supervise, and trust local leaders. The emphasis here will be on development of local leaders and workers so as to free general officers for their distinctive tasks.

6. Give departmental work distinctive Latter Day Saint significance, and integrate it with the programs of the branches and districts and general church.

7. House our branches in adequate, attractive, well-located and debt-free church buildings. This should be a significant part of every branch program.

8. Seek out and minister to the poor in the spirit of mutual aid, looking toward their material and spiritual development.

9. Build literature, visual aids, and approved techniques as quickly as opportunity and personnel will permit.

10. Direct the functionings and growth of our supporting institutions in such a way that they shall show the church in action on a high level of service.

11. Promote and minister both local and financial programs in such ways as to advance our spiritual purposes.

12. Give immediate, major, and continuous concern to the selection, appointment, training, and supervision of ministers who can lead our people in achieving the foregoing.

This program has been adopted in principle by the Joint Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric and is already being put into effect as quickly as circumstances permit. The activities of this Conference will be pointed toward its further approval and implementation. But beyond all that might be done in Council or in Conference lies the fundamental need indicated in the admonition given to the church many years ago: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."

REPORT

Church Physician

By Charles F. Grabske, M.D.

*To the First Presidency and
General Conference:*

During almost the entire year since the General Conference of 1946, I have been absent from my duties in Independence and at work in medical studies at the University of Southern California's Graduate School of Medicine. There is very little to report of activities in the office of your physician.

The church has been set on a course which appears designed to augment the individual health, vigor, and capacities of its membership. It has been enlightened in such a direction on more than one occasion during its brief course of a little more than one hundred years. It should be clear that the implication of these advices be received with full consideration and that we devote thought and time to already given instructions and to promises accompanying them. Saints should aspire to sounder health and to more vital living and "by study and by faith" we may learn how this more abundant living may be achieved. There is a great deal of literature extant this day bearing on this subject, some of which is sound and trustworthy, much completely worthless, even dangerous. Therefore discrimination and good counsel should be employed before accepting as authority that which has been written on these matters. I stress this because probably there never has been a period in which there has been such a gale blowing every "wind of doctrine" as we experience now in our time. Again, one who has learned the laws governing the way of health, has but embarked upon the voyage of its attainment. Nowhere is it more true than here, that without works, knowledge and faith are dead, and to have abundant health, we must actually live from day to day according to rules of health.

I should point out that along with our project of self-improvement there should go along attention, forethought, and activity in our group enterprises. Sanitation in our homes is a prerequisite to individual well-being. Sanitation in our houses of worship should have the careful attention of our leaders and the glad co-operation of each one of us forming a component of the group. Particular thought should be given to our larger gatherings, our district conferences and reunions, as here, lack of forethought and procrastination may, and often does, result in illness and far-reaching unfortunate consequences. This truth extends with even greater validity to larger conferences such as the General Conferences of the church.

Our Sanitarium has now matured to imposing size and beauty. Of its administration and supervision and of its professional and technical staffs, we are truly and justly proud. Our nurses during the past war served with distinction throughout the entire world. We are glad indeed that the conflict is over and that they are again home to do their services of goodness and mercy to the civilian peoples of our land. We hope that many more of the young women of the church may see the opportunities in this field and join with us here at the Sanitarium in preparation to such a calling. The Sanitarium finds itself at this moment especially in need of young people to be trained in the technical services of the hospital, in the laboratory and in X ray. We therefore invite our congregations throughout the church to call the attention of their young people to these needs in nursing and in technical services at our Sanitarium in Independence.

We congratulate the church that through the many years of the administration of our late president, Frederick Madison Smith, we have had here at the center place such a trustworthy guardian of the best interests of its Sanitarium. With clear vision he always gave careful first attention to its broader objectives, yet giving meticulous oversight to its details. The Sanitarium absorbed his attention through many years of his association with its development. The present stature and opportunity of this institution can, in large measure, be attributed to the persisting watch care of our late leader.

Though the Sanitarium be at the center of the activities of the health department, the health department envisions its full task and responsibility to reach out to branches, wherever they be and to each member and his program of building for himself a sounder body and a more vital, abundant and vigorous life.

CHARLES F. GRABSKE, M.D.

President Israel A. Smith Presides Over Iowa Assembly

An interesting episode in the life of the president of the church is related in a news item published in the Independence Examiner of March 18:

For a brief session last Wednesday a resident of Missouri found himself in the position of temporarily presiding over the General Assembly of Iowa.

Israel A. Smith was in Des Moines last week where, as president of the Pioneer Lawmakers Association of Iowa, he participated in special meetings.

This association is made up of ex-members of the Legislature and ex-state officials whose services date back at least twenty years. Mr. Smith was elected president four years ago, the first non-resident of the State of Iowa to be so honored, and because of travel restrictions no session was held when the General Assembly of Iowa met in 1945, thus necessitating that he serve for four years although elected for two.

The association met on Wednesday morning in the historical building where two oil portraits of Iowa notables were unveiled and Wednesday afternoon the veterans were the guests at a joint session of the Iowa Legislature.

At this meeting Mr. Smith, as president of the Pioneer Lawmakers, was presented by Lt. Gov. Evans and presided over the session, although a unique situation.

Mr. Smith gave an address in the morning, at the suggestion of other officials of the association, on the subject: "Making of a Modern Constitution." This subject was of much interest to the members of the association and to representatives of the judiciary of the state, two of those present being members of the Supreme Court of Iowa.

Note of Thanks

I wish to take this means of thanking all our friends who have made life so pleasant for my mother by their visits, letters, cards, flowers, and gifts. I also wish to thank them for their prayers in her behalf.

Result Not Expected

An interesting phase of the fight of the Catholic Church to participate in public funds to carry pupils to their parochial schools has developed. Says The Protestant Voice: "By a five to four decision of the United States Supreme Court, control of all Catholic parochial schools has been handed over to Protestants—if they have courage to seize the opportunity."

Further excerpts from the Voice follow:

If tax money is used for Roman Catholic parochial schools, the taxpayers—all of them—are empowered to control the spending of that money. This is basic American doctrine.

The taxpayers . . . can demand and enforce that nothing be taught in schools aided by tax money which reflects upon or builds any barrier between Americans.

Wherever tax money is sought or used for school purposes, rigorous scrutiny of the books used in such schools becomes the right of all taxpayers. . . .

This means that the teaching of the Roman Pontiffs in regard to democracy must be rigorously excluded from Roman Catholic schools where tax money is used for school buses.

No man can read the teachings of the Pope without admitting that their doctrine is in violent conflict with the principles of freedom as Americans understand it.

This will not be a disservice to the parochial schools. It will help them. In the November 2 issue of America, a magazine published by the Jesuits, public admission is made of the intellectual bankruptcy of Roman Catholic schools.

That magazine states that only three Roman Catholic institutions of higher learning in the United States have been able to qualify for financial assistance offered by industrial companies as grants in aid for postwar scientific research. . . .

If the dead-hand grip which has stifled these colleges were removed by sharp Protestant criticism, the black blindfolds which have checked and hampered their scholars would be lifted; and they would be free.

Portland, Oregon, District

Portland District Conference

Portland District Conference was held in the spacious church at Salem, Oregon, which is located only five blocks from the State Capitol. The first activity on Friday evening, February 21, was a program of special interest to young people. Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs showed colored slides taken in Hawaii. Saturday began with a prayer service, followed by classes for the priesthood, church school workers, women, and young people. Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop Monte Lasater, Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, Roycie Chapman, and Elder Harold Carpenter were instructors. A feature of the afternoon was the missionary project introduced by Brother Gibbs. He called for volunteers to distribute invitation folders to the missionary series starting in Salem the next evening. Thirty-six responded and delivered 450 folders in an hour.

The ordinations of Earl Wilcox to the office of priest, George Speed to the office of teacher, and Brother Boatright to the office of deacon, were approved. Delegates to General Conference were appointed.

Three Branches Organized in Portland District

Salem, Oregon

Pastor, Charles H. Asher

Salem mission was organized as a branch on January 19, with Elder Charles H. Asher as pastor. Elder Asher served for a number of years as pastor of the mission. The Saints worship in a lovely church building near the State Capitol in the heart of the large Willamette Valley.

Salem mission originated through the efforts of the Ames family. Several years ago, these people requested that a missionary be sent to them. Elder Marcus H. Cook came and, after holding a series of services in the John Zulkie home, several were baptized, including the present pastor of the branch. With these and the old members then residing in Salem, a group was started under the leadership of the district presidency. Meetings were held in halls until the members, assisted by Apostles Clyde F. Ellis and D. T. Williams, obtained their present church building four years ago. The church has been completely paid for.

District President J. L. Verhei, Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, and other district officials were in charge of the organization service.

Camas, Washington

Camas Branch was organized January 26 by District President J. L. Verhei, Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, and the district officers. Elder Leonard S. Rhodes was elected pastor. Except for two years, Elder Rhodes has served as pastor of the group since 1935, when it was organized into a mission. Previous to that time, another mission was started in 1926 with Elder Robert Chapman as pastor, but two years later, it was disorganized and the members met with the Vancouver Saints. This interruption was due to lack of leadership as Elder Chapman was called to other duties. However, several missionaries visited Camas and the members continued to be faithful and look forward to better organization. The first meetings in recent years were held at the Ernest Webberley home by the district president and Elder Mark Yeoman. They later moved to Camas and Elder Rhodes was appointed leader; meetings were then held in the I. O. O. F. Hall. This group has purchased a lot and construction of a church will begin as soon as building material is available.

Sweet Home, Oregon

Pastor, Andrew Duval

Sweet Home Branch was organized on February 9 with District President J. L. Verhei and other district officials present. This is the oldest group of Saints in the West. Migrating from Missouri, the Ames and Morris families established a branch in the early sixties which continued for a number of years. All of the early missionaries to the West visited this branch. There yet remains a remnant of descendants of these early people from which the new group grew. The mission has been under the leadership of Elder Andrew Duval for several years. Brother Duval is serving as the first pastor of the new branch.

Woodburn, Oregon

Pastor, George E. Omans

On February 9, 1947, Missionary Arthur F. Gibbs baptized thirteen people in Woodburn mission. The confirmation was conducted by District President J. L. Verhei, Elder Miles Whiting and Pastor George E. Omans. This has become one of the most outstanding groups of Portland district in that there are so many young people attending church. The first meeting in Woodburn was held on July 16, 1944, at which time Brother Verhei was called to baptize Max Omans, son of Pastor George Omans. For some time, services were held in the Odd Fellows Hall, but after a year the Saints were able to obtain a nice church building. Other baptisms followed. Brother Omans has since been ordained to the office of elder and Herbert Hawley to the office of priest.

Oregon City, Oregon

Pastor, Clark Livingston

On March 2, 1947, Elder Clark Livingston was assigned the pastorate of Oregon City Mission. Services are held each Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. in a church on Mollala Avenue.

The group has been cared for in the past by Elder and Mrs. Harry Fry, who have now taken over the work at Ballston, Oregon.

Ballston, Oregon

Pastor, Harry Fry

Under the leadership of Elder Harry Fry, a new group has been started in Ballston. The members meet in the Community Church each Sunday. The work was first started by the Bowmans who have resided in Ballston for a number of years.

On February 24, Apostle D. T. Williams spoke to a gathering of the Saints and their friends. Several members from Portland also attended.

Baker, Oregon

Elder and Mrs. W. T. Ferguson have been holding services for the different groups of Saints in this vicinity and report very good response.

Wallowa and LaGrande, Oregon

Priest Earl Wilcox has organized church schools at these two locations and reports favorable progress.

Ashland and Klamath Falls, Oregon

Priest Z. Carroll has been assisting the Saints at Klamath Falls, driving sixty-five miles each Sunday to be with them. Attempts will be made to organize missions at Ashland and Medford.
