The seventy then are to be men of action; ready to go and to come, full of energy and zeal, prepared at a moment's warning to follow the lead of the Spirit, to the north, east, south or west; proclaiming the gospel as they go, baptizing all who come unto them, laying their hands upon the sick in common with their brethren of the twelve, under no responsibility of presiding, but when the Spirit so directs, or exigency requires, they may preside by virtue of their right to officiate as elders in the church.

The law also contemplates the seventy as a legislative body, and a decision made by these quorums (if unanimous) is of like importance as a decision of the twelve.

It may also be concluded that any act which a high priest might do, while abroad as a minister of the gospel building up the church, might be legitimately done by one of the seventy; for in speaking of the difference between the two quorums, the law says: that those who belong not unto this quorum, neither unto the twelve, are not under the responsibility to travel, nevertheless they may hold as high and responsible offices in the church; evidently carrying the inference that this was an office in authority greater than the elder, and if an elder may, why may not a seventy, or an apostle preside?

It would seem that the matter of equality of authority, spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11, has its roots in these special commissions given to the twelve and the seventy. In the Jewish Church, the seventies seem to have been in close association with the presidency in matters of ministry and administration of government. There is very little revealed of the place in these fields the twelve patriarchs of that church may have occupied. In the time of our Master, the twelve were brought into close association with Jesus, being almost constantly with him. The seventies seem to have been assistants to him and the twelve as advance agents. In our day, it is clearly indicated that the seventy are not only to labor under the direction of the twelve, but are to spread out, carrying with them the spirit of the apostleship, in many instances, where the twelve cannot go. The equality referred to most likely is to grow out of the fact that they share according to this background in both prophetic and apostolic powers as special witnesses of the church.

THERE MUST BE, however, some limitations or restrictions on the assumption of equality. A careful reading of the paragraph setting forth the matter of their equality reveals some of these limitations:

The twelve traveling councilors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned. The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling; and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses or apostles just named. And every decision made by either of these quorums must be by the unanimous voice of the same; that is, every member in each quorum must be agreed to its decisions, in order to make their decisions of the same power or validity one with the other.

It is my opinion that the equality referred to in this quotation is limited or to be restricted more or less to council functions in governmental activity and does not necessarily reach into administrative and judicial matters. Referring to the quotation given from the late Joseph Smith, it would appear that he interpreted this counseling equality to apply to the legislative processes of our church government.

Wisdom is evidenced in the functioning of these councils which are included in those having, as we term it, concurrent jurisdiction in the variance of responsibilities and contacts of the men in the councils. The viewpoints of these quorums range from ministry that begins at the center place and the stakes and reaches to organized districts and finally into the far-flung areas into which the seventy may go. The idea of equality applies more specifically to the quorums mentioned as quorums rather than to individual members of these quorums. That is why the emphasis of equality is placed on council functions, and it is to be carefully observed that for decisions to be valid and receive divine recognition, they must be made by the unanimous vote of each of the quorums.

In reviewing the importance of this equality and its attending blessings when exercised in righteousness, we have noted the close association of the seventies in the Jewish Church. In the New Testament church, the twelve were in constant association with Jesus. The seventies, after receiving some training, went out as advance agents. In our day, these three bodies are set up in the law in important governmental affairs as being equal. What wisdom on the part of God! What strength he has provided for our day! And why not? This is the day of the building of Zion and the consummation of the kingdom which is to stand forever. In order to do this, the Church must be a perfect church. It must become that church in every respect of which Paul wrote:

Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

Correction

Two corrections should be made in the article by Harold I. Velt in the Herald of July 17, page 12.

The name in the middle column, tenth line from the top, should read, Alexander Campbell.

In the third column, beginning eleven lines from the top, the reading should be, "—the only God who took upon himself a human body like that of men, and that he was born of a virgin, but not in America."

Worship Suggestions for September

Theme for the Month: PREPARATION FOR GENERAL CONFERENCE

By KATHERINE H. WILSON

Theme Appreciation: This is the month prior to another General Conference, and it is fitting that our worship should center on preparation for this great event. God will bless and direct in the legislative business of the church according to the desires, preparation, and development of his people. Here it is that revelations, when received, are presented for consideration and approval. The "four P's of perfection—we prepare, we purpose, we produce, we progress—are values we should emphasize in these suggestions.

WE PREPARE—"PREPARE YOUR HEARTS UNTO THE LORD"

Worship Center: Picture, "His Presence," by Sallman. (Picture may be purchased at the Herald Publishing House, Number M4807.)

Prelude: "Come, O Come, Sweet Comforter," or "Come, Gracious Spirit," Saints' Hymnal, No. 194.

Call to Worship:

THE LIVING CHRIST

Turn your eyes upon Jesus,
Look full in his wonderful face,
And the things of earth will grow strangely dim
In the light of his glory and grace.

Turn your thoughts upon Jesus,
Think deep of his comforting love,
And the thoughts of sin and of self and strife
Will be lost as we think of that love.

Give your heart unto Jesus,
Cast each heavy burden aside,
And the joy and peace of his presence near,
Will enter and ever abide.
—Author Unknown.

Suggested Hymns:

"Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee,"
No. 283.

"O Jesus, I Have Promised," No. 298.

"Savior, Thy Dying Love," No. 302.

"Take Time to Be Holy," No. 322.

Scripture Readings:

A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good . . . for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.—Luke 6: 45.

Prepare yourselves; and sanctify yourselves; yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, that I may make you clean. . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 20.

Cast away from you all your transgressions whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?—Ezekiel 18: 31.

And now behold, I ask of you, my brethren of the church, Have ye spiritually been born of God? Have ye received his image in your countenances? Have ye experienced this mighty change in your hearts? Do ye exercise faith in the redemption of him who created you? . . . Can ye look up to God at that day with a pure heart and clean hands?—Alma 3: 27-30, 36.

Their hearts had been changed; that they had no more desire to do evil.—Alma 12: 176.

Theme Thoughts:

The Zion plan of the church is that we shall go forward, step by step, under a program of preparation; we must progress. What is the process of cleansing and purifying our hearts that we prepare them unto the Lord? The instruction to "purify your hearts" is aimed directly at the purification of the mind. It takes conscious effort to keep one's mind free from impurities. Everywhere about us salacious suggestions come from screen and stage, magazines, books, and radio, and only an individual whose heart is repentant, humble, and filled with honesty can attain purity. With deliberate purpose we must constantly "think upon whatsoever things are good." A mind occupied with thoughts of God and his kingdom and his service simply has no room for evil. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God," said Jesus.

Meditation:

Keep your heart free from hates,
Your mind from worry;
Live simply, expect little, give much.
Sing often, pray always;
Fill your heart with love, scatter sunshine;
Forget self, think of others, do as you would be done by.
These are the tried links in a Zion life.

When the heart is set right, then the personal life is cultivated; when the personal life is cultivated, then the family life is regulated; when the family life is regulated, then the national life is orderly; when the national life is orderly, then there is peace in the world.—Confucius.

Closing Hymn:

"Oh, come to my heart, Lord Jesus,
There is room in my heart for thee."—

WE PURPOSE—"THY WORD WE STUDY"

Worship Center:

Picture, "His Presence," by Sallman, with the Three Standard Books of the church beneath the picture.

Prelude: "Draw Thou My Soul, O Christ," No. 316.

Call to Worship:

The Lord I love went on ahead
To make a home for me. He said
He would come back again, and he—
Ah, gracious love—he wrote to me!
He knew I was so weak and blind
And foolish that I could not find
The road alone. He told me things
That all earth's wise men, and its kings
Have never guessed, yet I foreknew
If I but read his word. And, oh,
Such depths of love on every sheet!
My soul is trembling at his feet.
What would he think of me
If when I saw him I should say:
"I was too busy every day
To read what thou didst write to me;
I really hadn't time for thee!"
—Martha Snell Nicholson.

Suggested Hymns:

"O Word of God Incarnate," No. 402.
"Father, Bless Thy Word to All," No. 96.

"I Have Found the Glorious Gospel,"
No. 408.

"O God, With Thanks Unfeigned,"
No. 93.

Scripture Readings:

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—II Timothy 2: 15.

My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; Yea, if thou triest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; Then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. For the Lord giveth wisdom; out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.—Proverbs 2: 1-6.

Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

But to be learned if good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God.—II Nephi 6: 61.

Theme Thoughts:

In the church, all are called. The challenge of the church and God is to prepare by persistent study and service. We purpose to qualify as "approved workmen" by patterning our lives—our thoughts, our words, our deeds—after those of the Master. He is working with us today in whatever we are doing in his name.

Meditation:

NOTHING IS LOST

Nothing is lost that is done for the Lord,
Let it be ever so small;
The smile of the Savior approveth the deed,
As though 'twere the greatest of all.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Nothing is lost that is done for the Lord,
Let it be ever so mean;
Man may but count it as trifling indeed,
But Christ sees the motive within.

Nothing is lost that is done for the Lord,
He will approve and repay;
Oh, for a heart that is longing to serve,
And labor "while it is day!"
—A. M.

THE GOAL

To let no thought go unexpressed
That might give someone pleasure;
To say no word I might regret
In later hours of leisure;
To do the kindly, little deeds
That make life worth the living;
To overlook another's faults
Nor fail to be forgiving;

To strive to leave each task well done
And make a joy of duty;
Unceasingly to give God thanks
For life and love and beauty;
To honor God, and, loving him,
Love, as myself, my neighbor;
This, the high test of perfect love—
The goal toward which to labor.

"Soldiers of Christ, Arise," No. 217
"My Soul, Be on Thy Guard," No.
207.

"We'll Scatter Good Seed," No. 220.

Scripture Readings:

This is my gospel; and ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works which ye have seen me do, that shall ye also do.—III Nephi 12: 34.

Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.—I Thessalonians 5: 21.

He doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you, for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you.—Mosiah 1: 58.

Obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 12.

I am left to mourn because of the unbelief, and the wickedness, and the ignorance, and the stiffneckedness of men: for they will not search knowledge, nor understand great knowledge, when it is given unto them in plainness, even as plain as word can be.—II Nephi 14: 9.

Theme Thoughts:

What we do day by day determines what we become. Hour by hour we build our lives for better or for worse. Can we reasonably expect God to bless us if we cannot take even a few minutes a day to study his word and pray? "Thy word we cherish!" We do not cherish it except we know it. Jesus said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." He yearns for our love, knowing that through it will occur the miracle of righteousness (being right with God). Being right with God, we act his will by giving, and serving, and sharing—we produce gloriously because we love him.

Meditation:

Is life worth living? Yes, so long
As there is wrong to right,
Wail of the weak against the strong,
Or tyranny to fight;
Long as there lingers gloom to chase,
Or streaming tear to dry,
One kindred woe, one sorrowing face
That smiles as we draw nigh.
—Alfred Austin.

Say not, "I love the Lord," unless you find Within you welling up by day and night
A love strong, full and deep for all mankind.
—Family Circle.

Have," No. 201.

WE PROGRESS—"THY FURTHER WORD
WE SEEK"

Worship Center:

"His Presence," by Sallman.

Prelude:

"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations,"
No. 397.

Picture Appreciation:

In "His Presence," Mr. Sallman has
Christ. It depicts him as one who has fulfilled the mission on earth asked of him by the Father. He stands as the returned Christ at the portal of an earthly home ready to meet human need.
Radiant with glory, light, and truth, "a knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4) grace his being. It is not difficult to imagine him as saying, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John 8: 12).

We think of Christ as a living and abiding presence, for to his disciples he said, "And I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever . . .
I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you" (John 14: 16-18). We find him returning in "the spirit of truth and peace."

We appreciate the radiant message Mr.
Sallman gives in his portrayal; and our hearts are warmed by the promise of Jesus, "I go to prepare a place for you.
And if I go . . . I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:
2, 3).

"And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest" (Exodus 33: 14).

"My angels shall go before you and also my presence" (Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3).

Suggested Hymns:

"We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," No. 415.

"We Limit Not the Truth of God,"
No. 416.

"Now Thank We All Our God," No.

"Onward to Zion," No. 436.

Scripture Readings:

And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge;
And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.—II Peter 1: 5-8.

See that ye love one-another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfect-ness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come; behold and lo, I will come quickly, and receive you unto myself.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men . . . if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life.—II Nephi 13: 29, 30.

And again I speak unto you, who deny the revelations of God, and say that they are done away, that there are no revelations, nor prophecies, nor gifts, nor healing, nor speaking with tongues, and the interpretation of tongues
. . . . He that denieth these things knoweth not the gospel of Christ; yea, he has not read the scriptures; if so, he does not understand them. For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, today, and for ever; and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing.—Mormon 4: 66-68.

And in that day that they shall exercise faith in me, saith the Lord, even as the brother of Jared did, that they may become sanctified in me, then will I manifest unto them the things which the brother of Jared saw, even

Food for Thought

WHEN WE PLAN meatless and eggless days or talk of saving wheat, it is only natural that homemakers are concerned about the effect it may have on the health of their families. You will be happy to know that Dr. Henry C. Sherman, who is a member of the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council, was twice president of the American Institute of Nutrition and is generally recognized as one of America's foremost authorities on nutrition, does not believe that you have anything to worry about if you adjust your meal patterns to make "a wider and a wiser use of foods that are in good supply." In fact, according to the Citizen's Food Committee, Dr. Sherman is of the opinion that reducing our consumption of wheat, meat, and eggs, by the small amounts urged by that committee, should have a beneficial effect on the health of the normal individual.

"The American diet is so high in protein," says Dr. Sherman, "that reducing the use of meat and eggs by the amounts needed to conform with the food-conservation program would still keep the diet well within the bounds of good health requirements, as far as protein is concerned." On the other hand, Dr. Sherman points out, the American diet seldom meets much more than the minimal. "This makes it wise," Dr. Sherman says, "to compensate for what one relinquishes [in wheat, meat, and eggs] to the needy of Europe by generous additions to the diet of fruits and such green-leaf vegetables as broccoli, loose leaf-cabbage, collards, green leaves of lettuce, turnip tops, and water cress."

OUR LARGE CROP of fresh vegetables is really helping us out on our menu planning. Broccoli is our pride and joy. It gives us as much calcium weight for weight as milk (you'll get more calcium from milk,

By B. Mildred Nelson

however, for one serving of milk will weigh more than twice as much as a serving of broccoli). One serving of broccoli gives ten times as much calcium and half as much iron as you would get from the same size serving of meat; 3,500 units of vitamin A value as against none for muscle meats and 1,140 units from two eggs, almost as much thiamin (vitamin B¹) as lean beef and eggs, but only about one-tenth as much as lean pork; more riboflavin than most muscle meats; some niacin, and more than enough vitamin C to meet the daily recommended requirement for an adult, against none offered by meat and eggs. It will even add three and three-tenths grams protein (about one-twentieth) of your daily need) to your diet. That puts it out in front in all the things that Dr. Sherman says are most frequently lacking in our diets.

In addition, broccoli is one of our most flavorful and beautiful fresh vegetables. It will add color and quality to any meal. More than that, it's available at fairly reasonable prices. It grows well and may be stored by freezing. One of the nutrition specialists here at the college used the last from her garden for her Thanksgiving dinner!

OYSTERS, TOO, are one of those foods that can be eaten with clear conscience. Oysters don't eat grain. When you know how much they do help out in real food value, you may want to use them more often, if they aren't selling too high in your town.

If you use one pint of oysters, liquor and all, in a stew for four, you are serving to each person, from oysters alone, six to seven times as much calcium and about the same amount of phosphorus as you would get from the same size serving of meat. Liver is the only meat that will give you more iron. They will give you more thiamin and riboflavin than most cuts of beef, less thiamin than pork, but about the same amount of riboflavin as pork, and some niacin. Oysters, like meat, have no vitamins C or A to offer. They offer a good quality protein, but only one-third or one-fourth as much as lean meats. Serving them with milk in a stew adds much in the way of high quality protein, extra calcium, riboflavin, and other nutrients.

Other fish may or may not do as well for you—sardines, tuna fish, mackerel, and salmon furnish extra vitamin A; mackerel is a good source of thiamin and riboflavin—the others are not so good in thiamin but rate along with meat for riboflavin; tuna fish and sardines are especially rich in niacin while fish in general rank along with meats in this nutrient. Most fish give only about half as much iron as muscle meats, but offer two to seven times as much calcium and, in addition, iodine that is needed to prevent some types of goiters.

WE THINK WE have a hard time planning meals on our budgets, and we do if we keep costs down and still feed the family meals they enjoy and keep them healthy. If you really want a problem, though, take this grocery list for a week and try to plan meals that will have the family saying, "Gee, Mom, that was good!"

In July of 1947, the average worker in England had the following foods for the week, if the foods could be found:

- - - a home column feature - - -

27c worth of meat.
 3 ounces butter
 3 ounces margarine
 1 ounce cooking fat (2 level tablespoons a week. About $\frac{3}{4}$ of a level tablespoon of butter, margarine, and cooking fat combined for each meal to spread on bread, season foods, use in making breads and other baked goods, and all. Since cut to a little less than 1 teaspoonful a day.)

2 ounces bacon
 8 ounces tea
 4 ounces candy
 63 ounces bread and flour
 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ pints of liquid milk
 1 fresh egg if available

In addition, each could have one small can of meat a month or, as an alternate, one pound dried prunes, one packet dried egg powder, one can condensed milk, on points. Fruits and vegetables were not rationed.

According to the best information we have, since then the ration of bacon has been cut to one and one-half ounces a week; thirteen instead of twenty-seven cents worth of meat; and two ounces of margarine with the privilege of substituting one ounce of butter for one ounce of margarine every other week instead of three ounces of butter and three ounces of margarine. Potatoes have gone on the rationed list—three pounds per week for adults, one and one-half pounds for children under five years; the candy ration has been cut; and the milk ration now is two pints per week. Each has two ounces of cheese (one-eighth pound), and eight ounces of sugar (one cup) each week. One fresh egg per week is still the limit for adults—two for children.

It would take a vivid imagination to make that stretch far as appetizing food, don't you think? Is it any wonder that the English people feel frustrated after almost eight years of war, deprivation and rationing, to still be looking for worse instead of better food conditions? And England is much better off than Germany!

Reminiscences

By Mrs. Israel A. Smith

Father Smith was a man who really enjoyed his food. He was very fond of fish and asparagus. It was a pleasure to cook for him, for he enjoyed good plain food, not too rich or too sweet.

I remember at one time when the folks were coming to our house for dinner, he asked if I were having cake, and if so, to make it plain.
 He later telephoned, to remind me about the cake—"Little or no icing," he said.

I send you this recipe for a "White Pound Cake," taken from a cookbook which belonged to Father Smith's oldest daughter, Emma Smith McCallum. This book, Mrs.
Owens' Cook Book, was published in 1887, copyrighted in 1884.

WHITE POUND CAKE

1 c. fine white sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. butter Beat to a cream and add whites of two eggs, then beat ten minutes
 1 tsp. cream of tartar, sifted with 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. flour
 $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. soda
 $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. lemon
 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. sweet milk Beat all together 15 minutes. Bake one hour in moderate oven in a round basin

I am sure the round basin added greatly to its success. I can easily imagine that Emma baked this very cake for her father,

I was indeed extremely fortunate in having Joseph Smith for my father-in-law. My own father died when I was very young, so Israel's was the only father
 I ever knew. His wholesomeness, his camaraderie, his innate kindness, all sum up the qualifications of an ideal father.
 I treasure the memory of those last years when Father Smith continued to introduce me as his "youngest daughter."

ANNOUNCING A NEW PAMPHLET

The General Department of Women is happy to announce a new pamphlet, "NEW VISTAS UNLIMITED," written by Mrs. Alice Bolon, B. A.

This pamphlet is comparable to the one, "A Course of Appreciations," which Sister Bolon wrote about two years ago and which was so well received.

"NEW VISTAS UNLIMITED" contains eight lessons. The lesson topics are:

1. DISCOVERING A PHILOSOPHY
2. TO THYSELF BE TRUE
3. WHERE LOVE IS
4. BE HAPPY IN THINE HOUSE
5. THE CHILDREN'S HOUR
6. STUDY TO SHOW THYSELF APPROVED
7. LEARNING WISDOM
8. BUILDING A CATHEDRAL

In the foreword, Sister Bolon gives an idea of the theme of the pamphlet. She says, "The theme of the lessons is the search for 'something better' than the 'apparent good.' These lessons have grown out of my deep reverence for all beautiful, inspiring, good, and truthful things, which come to us either directly or indirectly from God. They have also come from my appreciation of the fact that a 'living religion' is dynamic, vital, and 'keeps abreast of truth' in all fields of general knowledge, and in terms of modern life problems and experiences that arise daily among people."

The lessons suggest that in the thoughts which arise in one, to govern his activities in the shifting scenes of "the passing show of life," that he "should listen for 'life's tone' to keep his sense of right direction."

This pamphlet costs fifty cents and is now ready for distribution. All orders should be sent to the General Department of Women, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Fisherman's Shrine

By Biloine Whiting and Josephine Skelton

WE LATTER DAY SAINTS call ourselves a peculiar people, but in many ways we are pretty ordinary—at least most of us are. Our churches are made of wood or brick and are located on quiet side streets. We work at farming or selling or housekeeping for a living and are generally tolerated by our neighbors.

The Latter Day Saints on Vinalhaven are ordinary people, too, or as ordinary as people can be who live on an island. Instead of farming for a living, they bring food from the sea; and instead of meeting in a brick church, they worship in an old sea captain's home set just out of reach of the spray.

An inscription on the carved, brass door hinges dates the house at November 8, 1876. The story goes that two old sea captains, friendly rivals, built their houses on opposite corners at the same time, and each tried to outdo the other in the beauty of his home. As a result, the house built by Captain Walker, and bought thirty years ago by the Saints for a church, is the town showplace.

Originally, the house had fourteen rooms. Downstairs the vestibule opened into a wide hall separating two parlors; from the hall, a staircase led to the other two floors. In the third floor, a ladder rises steeply to the crown of the house, a cupola, from which two pieces of the Atlantic Ocean can be seen.

But it was in the details of the interior that the captain put his heart. The woodwork is of a foreign design brought back from a voyage to India. Lions' heads are carved beside the doors, and rosettes are on the spindles of the staircase. Wood carvings of busts of George and Martha Washington are set in over the windows that close with indoor latticed shutters, and the vestibule is paved with colored marble.

When the Saints bought the building, they joined the two front parlors to make an auditorium. The bay window at one end became the rostrum and was separated from the auditorium by an altar rail fashioned from a section of the staircase railing. A lectern set on the magnificently carved newel post made a decorative pulpit, and soon the new church was ready for worship. In the spacious woodshed at the rear of the house, a former pastor, Archie Beggs, now of Springfield, Maine, built a recreation room for the young people of the church.

Besides using their building for a church, the Saints opened it to the Red Cross to use as a center during the war, and it is still used as a clinic whenever the mission ship, "Sunbeam," comes into harbor. Carrying a minister, doctor, and a nurse, the missionary ship serves the outer islands which have no other medical and spiritual care. For the various uses to which they have been put, the upstairs rooms have collected five sewing machines, five trunks, cots and a stretcher from the Red Cross, six organs, a stove named "Herald" in the upstairs kitchen.

IT IS NOT JUST THE church that is out of the ordinary, for island Saints are different from us on the mainland. In the first place, they call everyone by his first name. It is not Mr. Young who lives past two bridges and a dyke, but Floyd. People are addressed not as Mister or Misses, but as Minnie or Gladys, James, Richard, or Quincy.

Island women seldom do their own shopping in one of the four groceries of Vinalhaven. Instead, they make out the list of what they want, and when their husbands come back from the sea and go around to the wharf to gas up, they buy the groceries and bring them home in the boat.

Island Saints have a different way of talking from us on the mainland. Their speech is softer—as if they were tired from shouting in North Atlantic winds. They have a Maine accent that is almost Elizabethan, and a way of speaking that is nearly poetry. "Yes" becomes "E-yah," faucet is "faset," "town" is "ton," and "idea" becomes "idear." When the wind is rising to a mainlander, "the horn is blowing" on the island. Even the Lord's Prayer sounds unfamiliar as "Ouah faythah which aht in haven, 'allowed be tha naim."

ISLAND PEOPLE are the last stronghold of individual enterprise, for although the island is dotted with vacant rock quarries, fishing and lobstering are the only industries. Every man lives on the water so close he can drop a line and fish from his bedroom window or throw a rock into the high tide. The lobsterman is both labor and management at once. He makes his own traps, bending the oak and spruce limbs into crescents for his pots. His wife knits the elaborate "heads" for the traps and the delicate bait bags; and out in the shed, the lobsterman hews his own floats, carves them with his name, and paints them with his own identifying colors—as important to a lobsterman as a cattle brand is in the west.

At six in the morning, the lobstermen can be heard going out to tend their pots, the gasoline engines in the thirty-foot smacks sputtering on the cold mornings. A lobster boat is a sizable investment and is more highly prized than an automobile. Some smacks have a cabin, called a canopy, where the man can set up a stove when the temperature dips below zero and the front of his boat is hidden beneath the North Atlantic. There are no chairs aboard a smack, and the man stands by his wheel and watches where the water foams white against the rocks. When even salt water freezes and the ice cakes grind ominously against the prow, the lobstermen wait until the boat to the mainland strikes out, breaking a path through the ice, before they scurry in the wake like so many water bugs.

Water transportation is the logical way to get around on Vinalhaven, and the most convenient. When the Saints wanted to attend reunion at Brooksville on the mainland, all forty of them went aboard Andy Boyton's sardine sailboat. It had been condemned for carrying sardines, but as long as it was loaded with Saints, they felt it was safe to attend reunion. In later years, Robert Barton (a young lobsterman with a baby that all the missionaries like to hold because she reminds them of their own children back home), has loaded the Saints into his lobster boat and taken them to Stonington to conference.

Cars are scarce on Vinalhaven, perhaps because everyone has a boat, and then all cars must be brought two at a time from the mainland, out of sight on the horizon. So, despite his gray hair, the pastor rides his bicycle three miles to church every Sunday, and a few minutes later his wife begins the three-mile walk to church on a road through Maine woods and over two bridges and a dyke.

THE VINALHAVEN Branch used to be a large one, of at least sixty members, back when they bought the showplace of the town to use for a church. Then came the war and war plants where men could make more money building guns than by catching lobsters, so most of the Saints moved off to Springfield, leaving three members of the priesthood and twenty active laity.

Youngest is 20-year-old Richard Wall, who, between trips on his boat, mows the church lawn and takes charge of the church school. Then there is Elder James Barton, a lobsterman in a plaid shirt and a sou'wester hat to hide his gray hair. His son Robert is the young people's leader, and another son, James, is the pastor of the newly organized branch at Springfield. Pastor Floyd Young was born on the island and has followed the sea all of his life. Since 1943 he has held the group together, refusing to quit even after the Sunday he rode his bicycle the three miles to find that he was to sit in the church alone.

The most active group at present is the women's department. Under the direction of Mrs. Webb, the members make quilts in the winter and hold bake sales in the summer to raise money to paint the church and buy curtains for the windows.

Names like the Warrens, Youngs, Gustavesons, Walls, Lawrys, and Dickeyes appear over and over again on the church records as Saints who walk past the coldest spot of the island to come to church and bear their testimonies at the 11 o'clock prayer meeting and listen to Brother Floyd preach in the evening.

No one on the island is old enough to remember who founded the church on Vinalhaven. But they do know there used to be a settlement called Zion, and that somewhere on the island there is a lost cemetery of people who thought enough of their religion to have the fact that they were Latter Day Saints engraved on their tombstones.

At Home in Holland

By Twyla V. Scherer

HAVE YOU EVER WONDERED how a missionary and his wife feel when they are asked to take a mission abroad? What would you do and say? You'd probably say just what we did when we were asked last General Conference to come to Holland for three to five years. We said "yes," and then started looking at maps to see how far from Independence Holland really is. On a map it doesn't look far, but when we actually started on our journey, each day seemed to take us farther and farther from familiar things and places.

Those hectic weeks of preparation now seem almost light a nightmare. "What should we take with us, and what should we leave behind?" "What goods are available in Holland, and shall we take the teakettle or can we get one there?" These and endless other questions tormented us as we sorted and packed, then repacked our trunks again and again.

All too soon the time came when we had to say goodbye to our family and friends. We still remember the receptions held for us and the inspiring fellowship at Graceland when 600 students gathered to wish us "farewell and Godspeed." That was one experience which I shall never forget, for I truly felt that not only Graceland but the whole church was behind us with prayers and best wishes.

At last we boarded the boat and sailed from America. I can remember thinking, as we passed the Statue of Liberty, I wonder how I'll feel when we return and catch our first glimpse of the "Lady with the Torch."

It was a grand experience—our voyage on the "America." At least it was for those of us who didn't get seasick. We landed in England and stayed there for several weeks until we could come on to Holland. In London we did some sight-seeing—Westminster Abbey and the Parliament buildings, which were once only history, became real to us.

Then we were on another boat which would take us to the mission assigned us at conference. When I look back now at that cold morning when we landed at the Hoek van Holland, I can remember wondering, "Will someone meet us? How can I talk to these people? Will I find friends here as I had in America?" These and other unuttered questions were answered for me when we reached Rotterdam. Before we could even step off the train, the whole car was filled with our Holland Saints who had come to meet us; their arms filled with lovely flowers, and smiles of welcome for each of us. At that moment, I found the one universal language which overcomes all barriers, which makes strangers feel at home. It was a firm handclasp and a hearty smile.

This wasn't a "strange land"—this was home!

pare for the blessing. Or it may be at a conference or a reunion. The Order of Evangelists has approved a four-page leaflet, "The Approach to the Patriarchal Blessing," which is given to the one asking for a blessing and which suggests a period of meditation, prayer and scripture readings which are cited, and sets forth the meaning and nature of the patriarchal blessing, and the things that may or may not be expected from it.

In Conclusion

SOME SUGGESTIONS have been made regarding the order of services for the various ordinances. The Priesthood Journal for July, 1938, had outlines of programs, but it is understood that all these are merely suggestive. It is still the rule that the elders are to conduct meetings "as they are led by the Spirit, and according to the commandments and revelations."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9.

Our church ritual is simple; ceremonies as we have named them are relatively few and simple. Let us keep them that way and not develop complex formalism such as the Catholics and Episcopalians have. Let us avoid a too formal ritualism. Christ himself gave little of it. We are free to build around these ordinances a service characterized by simplicity and yet dignified and beautiful, with everything done decently and in order. Let us remember that we are handling heavenly things. We are acting in Christ's stead. Let us so speak and so act.

Remember the words in the song given by Brother Luff, "Unto honor he hath called us, honor such as angels know." Not even the angels have greater honor than to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation.

to the unfolding unto them all my revelations, saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of the heavens and of the earth, and all things that in them are.—Ether 1: 101.

Also, Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

Theme Thoughts:

One of our most distinctive beliefs in the church is that of continued revelation. Men have decreed that God ceased to inspire, that the Bible closed divine revelation. We have three sacred books—additional witnesses of Christ—others have only one. A church that believes the canon of Scripture is still open is a church of progress. Our purpose as a church is to build the kingdom of God as a pattern to all nations—Zion. When, as a people, we put knowledge to practical use, and steadfastly "go on to perfection," Zion shall be.

Meditation:

These things shall be: A loftier race
Than e'er the world hath known shall rise
With flame of freedom in their souls,
And light of science in their eyes.

They shall be gentle, brave and strong,
To spill no drop of blood, but dare
All that may plant man's lordship firm
On earth and fire, and sea, and air.

New arts shall bloom of loftier world
And mightier music thrill the skies,
And every life shall be a song
When all the earth is paradise.

—John Addington Symonds.

From Porsgrunn, Norway

Saturday noon, May 22, Brother Glen Johnson arrived. He came from Kragero, where he and Apostle McConley had held two meetings. It was intended that both of them, with Sister McConley, should come, but the day before, Brother McConley became ill and, on doctor's orders, was put to bed. Consequently, Brother Johnson had to leave them in Kragero.

We had rented a hall for all day Sunday and advertised in two of our city's papers:

Apostle M. A. McConley and Elder Glen Johnson from America will speak in Handverkesforeningens Hall Sunday evening, 6: o'clock. Subject: "God's Church at Work," illustrated with color slides. All heartily welcome.

Saturday evening, we held services at the home of Sister Marie Carlsen with about twenty-five present. Prior to the service, the brethren met in prayer for Brother McConley. The meeting proper began at 7:30 p.m. Brother Johnson gave a spiritual talk about phases of the church work, illustrated by color slides.

Sunday, at 9:30 a.m., a priesthood meeting was held. Brother Johnson, with Brother Fossum as interpreter, spoke of the duties, responsibilities, laws, and promises which God has given. Carl Carlsen, as representative of the bishopric, spoke briefly on the law of tithing.

At 11 a.m., Carl Carlsen was in charge of the Communion service in the hall. Brother Johnson, with Brother Fossum as interpreter, gave a spiritual talk.

At 2 p.m., dinner was served in the hall by the Porsgrunn sisters. Then we gathered to the Peise room [a room on one side of the hall], where we enjoyed visiting together and were served coffee and delicious cookies. At this time, Professor Halverson, head of the English department at the college in Porsgrunn, arrived. He was to be our interpreter for the evening. He and Brother Johnson engaged in a lengthy conversation. Brother N. O. Nilsen said, "Today we have received much good, both spiritually and temporally. It is almost too much at one time."

At 6 p.m., we held our last service. Singing, accompanied by mandolin, accordion, and guitar, was enjoyed. Brother Glen Johnson delivered an enlightening and stimulating sermon on the Apostasy and the Restoration. He likewise presented the difference between our church and the Utah Mormons. We were privileged, during the service, to see a series of colored slides which confirmed and clarified the talk. The sermon was accorded wrapt attention and was interpreted without error. As soon as Brother Johnson had uttered a sentence, the interpreter was ready to give the translation. All proceeded without hesitation or interruption, so it was a genuine pleasure to sit and listen.

After the meeting, the Saints served sandwiches and coffee in the Peise room, where we enjoyed association for a couple of hours, and all our conversation focused around the gospel. The Spirit of God was present in rich measure in all our meetings, and we had an unforgettable time together.

We have but few members in Porsgrunn, and we do not have all the privileges you have over there, such as our own church building, choir, young people's organizations, church papers, books, quarterlies, etc.

Consequently, when we are visited by missionaries and leading men of the church, our gratitude and joyous feelings cannot be expressed in words. For example, this time when we saw projector pictures in color of our many church buildings, the Auditorium, Graceland College, and some of our leading men, together with the splendid lecture by Brother Johnson, it was a complete enlivenment. It was as though we actually were present with you over in America. It is impossible to describe what we felt.

It would be of great assistance to us if we could have films and slides relative to our church activities, and of all our edifices throughout the world, for use in our services at various places in Norway. Carl Carlsen owns a projector for movie films of 8 mm. and 16 mm. size, but has no films of our work and points of interest over there. If any of the Saints have such films or slides to send us, we shall be very grateful. Projectors for slides are impossible to procure in Norway now, so if someone in America has a slide projector to sell at a reasonable price, we shall also be grateful for that.

Most of the people in Norway believe we are a small and insignificant organization, and in most instances believe that we are a part of the Utah Mormon organization. But if we could have slides and films to help in our meetings, we believe they will be a great help and benefit.

CARL CARLSEN.

BULLETIN BOARD

Golden Wedding Anniversary

An invitation just received brings us the information that Brother John W. Rushton, formerly of the Quorum of Twelve, and Sister Rushton are celebrating their golden wedding anniversary on Sunday, August 1, at their home, 14858 Gilmore Street, Van Nuys, California. They will be "at home" to their friends from two to six o'clock. We join their many friends in expressing our gratitude to them for their long and distinguished service to the church, and extending to them very best wishes for continued years of happiness.

Services at Greeley, Colorado

Services are now being held at the Seventh Day Adventist Church, 1230 Ninth Street, in Greeley. Church school begins at 10 a.m., followed by preaching at 11 and Communion on the first Sunday of the month. Malcolm B. Barrows of Denver is responsible for organizing this mission.

DEATHS

SAWYER.—Emma Elizabeth, daughter of John and Mary Nicholas, was born at Brigham City, Utah, on August 31, 1864, and died at Boise, Idaho, on June 4, 1948. She moved with her family to Idaho in 1867, and in 1903 was married to Hyrum Sawyer at Malad, where she resided until 1943. After that, she made her home in Weiser and Boise. She was an active worker in the Reorganized Church throughout her life, and was a charter member of the Violet Rebekah Lodge Number 39 of Malad.

Surviving are two children: Mrs. Edna Kerchisnik and Frank Sawyer; and five grandchildren. Priest Reginald Fritschle and Elder F. L. Dellenbaugh were in charge of the funeral.

JACKSON.—Thomas B. was born July 26, 1877, at McMinnville, Oregon, and died July 7, 1948, at Boise, Idaho. In 1898, he began working for the Boise Water Company as a laborer; advancing from one position to another through the years, he became president of the corporation in 1933. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1908 and served as an elder for many years.

Surviving are his wife, Rena Jackson of Boise; three stepsons: Harry Ellison of Portland, Oregon; George Ellison of Caldwell, Idaho; and Larry Haas of San Jose, California; two stepdaughters: Virginia Haas of Boise, and Mrs. Maxine Wight of Lamoni, Iowa; two foster children, Rolland Jarrett and Muriel Peters, both of Boise; and two sisters. Elders Cecil Gilmore and F. L. Dellenbaugh were in charge of the funeral services. Interment was in the Cloverdale Cemetery.

ROBINSON.—Christina, daughter of Peter and Christina Holz, was born April 2, 1896, and died July 21, 1948, at New Albany, Indiana. She leaves her husband, James L. Robinson; two sisters; and four brothers. Services were held at New Albany in the Leabrook Chapel. Evangelist Arthur Gage of Indianapolis and the Reverend James Keith, pastor of the Calvary Methodist Church in New Albany, officiated. Burial was in the Graceland Memorial Park Cemetery.

find a way to get the suit without selling the cow."

But Mary knew. John would almost work himself to death in the short time he would have at home. With cutting the corn, bringing in wood for winter, they would never get it all done before he had to leave. Then she thought of the potatoes stored in the cellar, onions hanging from the rafters, pumpkins and turnips still in the field; and wild game could be shot from the door. Plenty for her. John had to have the suit. The cow would be sold.

AUDITORIUM NEWS

HERMANN PEISKER, minister in charge of the Australian Mission, passed away about 6 a.m., Thursday, August 5, at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. On his arrival in Independence, he was not well, and mentioned his need of medical treatment. He was taken to the Sanitarium and operated on July 13 for a kidney stone and infection. His condition was far more critical than anybody realized until the operation took place. Every possible effort was made to save him, in consultation with specialists and the employment of all known medical resources. His body was not able to overcome waning strength and a deteriorating physical condition.

Sister Peisker arrived from Australia on July 27 to be with him, and has been with him as much time as possible since then.

In the time since his arrival, Brother Peisker had visited many places and congregations of the church, and had endeared himself to all church members by his kindness and friendliness, and by the good spirit that was present in all his contacts with people. Some will wonder why, since this was in store for him, he had to come all this way and be so far from his home. That will never be understood. But we know this: that he served in the cause that he loved to the last moment that he was on his feet, and that the good will he created for Australia will be long remembered here. We must always regret what he has suffered, but we shall also always be grateful for what he did and said.

To Sister Peisker in her bereavement, our deepest sympathy, and our admiration for her brave journey alone to be with her husband. To the Australian Saints, our deep regret at their loss of an able minister and consecrated spiritual leader. Our sole comfort exists in our faith that death of the body is not the end of the spirit, and that there is a work awaiting our brother in the Land Immortal, where he shall have no more pain.

Another statement from the First Presidency is expected for a later issue of our publication.

APOSTLE C. G. MESLEY brings home a fine report of two southern reunions. Bishop Lewis Landsberg of Lamoni Stake was with him at both places. At Bandera, Texas, a new reunion ground has been purchased on the Medina River, not far from the old Lyman Wight colony of the earlier days of church history. There is a tabernacle that will seat 400, a good kitchen and screened dining room, and all modern sanitary facilities. This summer a woodland temple was arranged, to the satisfaction of all who attended.

The reunion at Brewton, Alabama, had an excellent attendance, and a fine organization and program. There were baptisms at both reunions.

PRESIDENT ISRAEL A. SMITH is on a brief trip to the Northwest to visit the Silver Lake Reunion. President F. Henry Edwards has been visiting the reunion at Brooksville, Maine, and is expected home before long to continue preparations for the General Conference. President Garver has remained at Independence to take care of office work.

The Unity of the Faith

“And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul.”—Acts 4: 32.

“Till we all come in the unity of the faith.”—Ephesians 4: 13.

WHY are church members different? Should we expect “one Lord, one faith, one baptism” to produce a standardized kind of member?

Statistics almost skirted the field of humor recently, when the Christian Herald Annual Report on Religious Bodies in the U. S. (August issue), opened with the statement,

One should hesitate, if he be wise, before hazarding any sweeping judgment concerning the religious strength of this country from a qualitative standpoint. Just how religious we are in spirit and in practice may be open to argument—and usually is.

A FRIEND recently said, “When I was young, I thought all good Latter Day Saints were alike, and believed the same things. But since then I have been amazed at the variety of belief and conduct in our church. Some believe certain parts of the gospel, others believe other parts of it. And everybody lives up to the part he believes in!”

What an advantage it would be if the members of the church could be fully agreed on their faith, purposes, projects, and working methods. Some kind of unity—closer than we have yet achieved—will be necessary if we are to create the Christian community life—the ideal of Zion—which has been the purpose of the church since its beginning.

It should not be considered unduly critical to say that we need a general improvement in the quality of our membership to give us the building material for the kingdom of God.

IS THE CITIZEN of the Christian community to be a standardized product? Are all to think alike? Some communities have thought they could achieve unity by making everybody dress alike, live in the same kind of houses, eat at a common dining hall, etc. Such efforts failed, and such communities have taken their place in the footnotes of history, for they did not last very long. Today we have few illusions about such mechanical unity.

The Prophet Amos asked the question, “Can two walk together except they be agreed?” (3: 3). If two are to walk together, they must agree upon the road and the destination. And if we are to build Christian community life, we should agree on what we wish to achieve, and how we are to do it.

YOU CAN ALWAYS learn something by visiting the people. Last week there was a dinner for church workers in the home of a friend. It was beautiful, both for its arrangement and for the spirit of peace and happiness that reigned there. The children had the contentment and serenity that comes only from love and good care. The government in that home was both invisible and inaudible, and it did not worry anybody. Everybody honored everybody else, and refrained from imposing on others.

Yet everybody there did not think alike. There was room for individuality, original ideas, and personal viewpoint. The youngest, a charming blue-eyed girl, could not speak English yet, but still had her own baby language, which her parents understood clearly. With all their unity, the family preserved a fine freedom.

That family has a secret that would be good to impart to other families, and to all the church. They are agreed on some very important principles of home life. Yet they tolerate a lot of good differences among individuals.

PEOPLE of many kinds of culture, of many shades of belief, find spiritual sanctuary in our church. There is a great range of intellectual freedom, and we are rather tolerant of individual differences. We could do better, but we are doing fairly well now on this point. We have some who are strict fundamentalists; we have others who are strong liberals and modernists. We agree on a few important principles; we think it is not necessary to be alike in everything. We could be wrong. We hope not.

OUR UNITY should progress to higher levels of understanding, integration, and co-operation. We have not yet reached the level of Christian community life. We are not yet at the Zion-building stage. The kingdom of God is still a considerable distance in the future, as far as our development is concerned.

What must we do “to be saved?” We must overcome our compromise with the low ethical and moral standards of the world; we must be better people. We should find ways to reduce the number of divorces, broken homes, and neglected children. We must increase our spiritual strength and development. We must learn to keep the law of the church. We must be dedicated, willing to sacrifice for the social and economic ideals of the church. We have teachers, even now, who are pointing the way forward to our redemption; if we will listen to them and consider their principles, we shall have a chance of seeing some great improvements in our own time.

Sometime, somehow, we shall come closer to achieving a “unity of the faith.” Let us discriminate carefully as to the basic principles on which we should unite.

Deaver to the Sanitarium

The Presidency are pleased to announce on behalf of the Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital that, beginning on September 1, Brother A. Neal Deaver will occupy as Assistant Superintendent. Until nearly a year ago, Brother Deaver served as business manager of Graceland College. Since then we have sought an opportunity for the employment of his talents in the church work. Now the way has opened up for him to be in association with us in this very worthy project. We welcome Brother and Sister Deaver to Independence and look forward with anticipation to our association with them.

Memoirs of President Joseph Smith

During the closing years of his life, the late President Joseph Smith wrote his memoirs. These were dictated to his secretary for the time being and transcribed. As he had dealt at length with many of his eventful years, the result was quite a voluminous manuscript.

Under the direction of the late President Frederick M. Smith, his sister, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, made selections from this record, and in 1934 these selections were published serially in Herald columns.

Throughout the years, since the death of this leader in 1914, the question of publishing these memoirs in book form has been considered from time to time. They were printed in their abbreviated form in 1934 largely for the purpose of economy.

If the memoirs, as published, were put in book form it would make two ordinary volumes of approximately 750 or 800 pages each. But it is our opinion that by reducing to the essential and material things, the work can be compressed within 600 to 650 pages.

Believing, as we do, that there is much of this personal testimony that should be preserved in printed form for the church members present as well as those who will follow us, we think we should secure an expression from our members to help us in making a decision on the matter.

Therefore, will you who believe this record should be printed in book form, and especially all who feel they would purchase a copy, so inform us, by addressing a letter or post card to the First Presidency, or to me personally in care of Box 475, Independence, Missouri.

Across the Desk

From Elder Lyle Woodstock, July 22:

I have just returned from a month's missionary activities in southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois, where I had the pleasure of accompanying Brother James C. Daugherty. I wish to express my gratitude for this opportunity to gain experience and observe the ministry which Brother Daugherty is rendering.

Most of the month was spent in Beloit branch where Pastor Harry Wasson had arranged cottage meetings. Much visiting was carried on during the day and regular meetings were held each Sunday evening in Beloit. On Saturday, June 18, a fine group of about ninety-five Zion's Leaguers met in Madison for an afternoon of fun and an evening Restoration Festival banquet. It was my privilege to address this fine group of young people as their speaker at the banquet and again meet with the Madison congregation at the 11 o'clock service on Sunday.

I consider my time in Wisconsin very well spent and expect to profit much because of the experience. I am thoroughly convinced that the cottage meeting of the type experienced here is a most efficient and desirable form of missionary endeavor. I shall look forward to opportunities to use this method wherever I may be.

Elder W. J. Breshears, from Pensacola, Florida, June 30, 1948:

You will note that eighty-five baptisms were reported by the district during June, which brought the total for the year to one hundred twenty-two. Last December while President Edwards and Apostle Draper were in the district for the annual priesthood institute, they asked me to accept a goal of one hundred and fifty baptisms for the district for 1948. At the district conference in February, the district voted to adopt the goal as a quota and each branch and group was asked to accept quotas.

At the half-way mark, the Mobile Branch has made just half of its goal of fifty. Escatawpa and Vancleave in Mississippi have both already realized their full quotas. Ocean Springs and Pascagoula in Mississippi, Pleasant Hill Branch of McKenzie, Alabama, Flomaton and Janes Mill Groups in Alabama, Bellevue Group of Pensacola, Florida, and the Pensacola Colored Group have exceeded their quotas. . . . June is possibly the best month for baptisms, and we should be ahead of schedule at this time. I feel certain, however, that we can exceed our quota during the next six months.

Of the one hundred twenty-two baptisms reported, I have had the happy privilege of being the officiating minister as fifty-seven were inducted into the church through the waters of baptism. Two other decisions were gained during series that I have conducted, but the persons were baptized by other elders. This baptismal record has resulted from eleven series of meetings held since February 1

I have been happy in the work The greatest thrills I have experienced have been as the baptismal waters have been kept disturbed. ISRAEL A. SMITH

Two Reunions Canceled

The First Presidency announce that the Western Iowa Reunion has been canceled on account of a prevalent polio epidemic, and the Kirtland Reunion will not be held as announced because of failure of the contractor to complete sanitary installations.

Our Civic Stewardship

By Bishop G. L. DeLapp

(Transcribed by Rosamond Sherman)

LESS THAN A YEAR ago, I visited several countries across the sea in company with the other brethren whose responsibility it was to visit our missions abroad. As I came in contact with our own church membership, and as I rubbed elbows with some among the millions of people, there came to me day by day a greater sense of the responsibility resting upon our government and the Church of Jesus Christ.

So I have chosen as a Scripture reading, paragraph eight of section 128 of the Doctrine and Covenants:

The Spirit saith further: That these organizations contemplated in the law may be effected and the benefits to be derived therefrom be enjoyed by the saints, in such enjoyment they cannot withdraw themselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors surrounding them as to be entirely free from intercommunication with them; yet it is incumbent upon the saints while reaping the benefits of these organizations to so conduct themselves in the carrying into operation the details of their organizations as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.

and the text that I would like to choose from that passage of Scripture is,

... to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men

IN THESE CRITICAL DAYS, when the terrible tragedies of the recent World War are still vividly impressed on the minds of thinking men everywhere, and when at the same time there is apprehension and deep concern that the sacrifices of the past may be lost because of our inability up to the present time to realize the assurance of peace, it seems well to me that we should review the progress of our nation and attempt to face squarely the responsibility which this present crisis imposes upon us. There may be some in the world who do not look on these times through which we are passing as days of crisis. But one who reviews history knows that in almost any epoch there are days of crisis and trouble; I presume that the determination of whether or not this is a day of crisis can be only as we examine it in relation to the days which are past, and as we attempt to see into the future and, in that foreseeing, to evaluate our present. This we do in the hope that we may see therein the realization of all that was planned since the beginning of time, that we may see the realization of what was in the minds of those who founded our government, and then appraise the events of the present to ascertain, if possible, whether we move toward or away from the goals established in the founding of that government.

When we are so freshly close to a great world conflict—when we are attempting to evaluate the results of that conflict—perhaps we do not see too clearly, and what we may think of now as the day of crisis may not seem so important in the centuries in the future. But so far as we are concerned, so far as we have the ability to see and to think, these are momentous times through which we are passing; these are indeed days of crisis.

We need only to turn to some of the enactments which are recorded by the last Congress of the United States; in the reading of those enactments we see evidence of the fact that these are indeed days that should concern us. We can read the newspapers and periodicals; so, as a nation, as citizens, there is little excuse for us not to be reasonably well informed. Our Congress approved the first appropriation of over five billion dollars for the Marshall Plan, which ultimately calls for the spending of some thirty-five billions of dollars, the purpose of which is not only humanitarian and just, but which is to the end that there may be established a bulwark of friendly allies with our democratic world, and that there may be a prevention of infiltration and control of Communism. So what was enacted has this twofold purpose: it is humanitarian in the sense that it extends a helping hand to nations abroad, to nations that are in distress, to millions of people who have been impoverished and are in want. Because that helping hand is extended, I believe what has been enacted is in harmony with the divine will and serves to set up a line of defense to help conserve our democratic way of life.

WE FIND FURTHER EVIDENCE revealed in our diplomatic relations with Russia. We have watched closely the actions of both governments, because we realize that this "cold war" is filled with hazards. We have been particularly concerned recently as we have watched the events transpiring in that once great city of Berlin; we have observed with interest the development of a tense situation and have been concerned as to just what might take place. We observed with interest, because it affects the lives of all of our young men and possibly our young women, the enactment of the law calling for the drafting to military service of the youth of our country to a greater extent than has ever before been experienced in the history of our country. This has taken place at a time when we thought, or when we would like to have thought, that we were in a period of peace.

We also find ourselves launched on a program of expenditures that will require, beginning July 1, 1949, an annual appropriation of thirteen billion dollars. Of course, there are those who say that a few billion dollars these days are relatively insignificant. When we think of our total income as around 250 or 260 billion dollars, and when we spend thirty-five billion dollars to come to the aid of those sixteen countries in Western Europe, that amount seems relatively insignificant if, in its spending, we can be assured of peace and the development of brotherhood among the nations of the earth. And so it is, but we should keep in mind that the expenditure of these sums of money will throw upon our government and its citizens a program of taxation which will be carried down through the generations ahead of us.

IT IS BECAUSE of my deep sense of personal concern in this day of crisis that I have chosen to speak on the subject, "Our Civic Stewardship," and while the principles which I wish to discuss in the broad sense may be applied to all citizens of our great nation, I think there is a special responsibility which we as Latter Day Saints have because of the fact that our church was founded, organized, and permitted to grow and function due to the inherent rights secured to us in the very foundation of our government, its Constitution, and its Bill of Rights. As we look back through the years and try to think of the tremendous growth that has taken place within our nation, we like to think that there has been some progress made since the year 1830 insofar as our church is concerned. While, undoubtedly, that growth is not comparable, it is nevertheless in a sense parallel; the growth of the church has been steady and consistent, and progress has been made despite the opposition and persecution and the tragic events of our early history.

Looking back, one can understand at least in part that there would be times when justice and the liberties which our Constitution assured us would not be fully effectuated in the lives of all men, for there is always a gap between the profound enunciation of the principles upon which life is to be built and the realization of those principles. We find that realization can come only through the slow process of education. Thus liberty and freedom of the human race could not be perfected with the same degree of simplicity which characterized the thinking of those few men—Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and the others who were responsible for the Declaration of Independence. If we would commemorate this in the true spirit of our responsibility to God, we would do so with prayer and thanksgiving. Appreciation of this Constitution with its Bill of Rights which grants to our people the greatest freedom ever enjoyed by any nation must be developed through the personal experiences of all of us as citizens of this nation.

Today we are learning that we must earn that freedom and liberty over and over again. There are inherent rights that accrue to us because of the sacrifices of those who have preceded us, but those inherent rights give to us only the opportunity to perpetuate what they provided for us. From time to time in our experience as a nation, it has been necessary for our people to re-earn that which was promised in the very founding of our government.

WHAT ARE THOSE RIGHTS that mean so much to us, that were provided in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights? They guarantee freedom for individual enterprise. There are those today who feel that this right of individual enterprise has been abused. Undoubtedly it has been, but whenever there is taken away the right of individual initiative, the right of individual enterprise, there will be taken from us one of the choicest possessions given to any people in the history of the world.

There was given to us the right to own property; yet there are those in the world today who would take the position that the individual does not have the right of individual ownership of property, and that all property should be owned in common. Such a philosophy is not in harmony with the fundamentals that were revealed to this Church of Jesus Christ and which came to us as a part of the Restoration Movement. The right to build our own businesses by our own initiative and by our own capital is a God-given right, and the church imposes upon those of us who are its members the right of acknowledgment to God for the manner in which we use that capital and exercise that initiative.

There was given to our nation the right of trial by jury; the right of freedom of religion; the right of freedom of speech; and I know of no people in the world today who should appreciate more this choice possession than Latter Day Saints. We should appreciate, too, the right of assembly, the right to gather here tonight under the canopy of God's own heaven, and speak whatever we feel like saying, turning our faces toward God to worship him according to the dictates of our own conscience and experiences.

We have also the right of protection from search and from seizure.

All these are the rights which accrue to the citizens of our great country, but when we examine our own history, how choice are these possessions to us who believe in the Restoration Movement!

It is true that there has been miscarriage of justice. But such deviations are slight when compared to the total benefits which have accrued to men everywhere who have lived under the protection of the Government of the United States.

THE RESTORATION of the Church of Jesus Christ could take place only in a land of freedom where such blessings as I have enumerated are enjoyed. One sees more clearly the implications of prophecy as recorded in the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah which points to the land of America as the "land shadowing with wings," a land in which there is to be cast up an ensign pointing the way to the building of the kingdom of God. Believing this, we who are Latter Day Saints have a special responsibility in paying tribute to and supporting a government which has made our existence possible.

It is interesting to note, as Brother Edwards has pointed out in the Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, that as early as 1835 a document was written and adopted by the General Assembly of the church. On August 17 of that year, the order was given that it should be printed in the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, section 108A:14. This document was later published to express the political sentiment of the church by the General Conference of 1863, which, as you will recall, was during the Civil War. A few excerpts from this not only evidence our attitude, but set the pattern of our thinking as a church, and indicate the attitude of members in respect to the relationship of the church to the government. The following paragraphs are from this section, which is not a revelation but an enactment of the church:

We believe that religion is instituted of God, and that men are amenable to him and to him only for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinion prompts them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; but we do not believe that human law has a right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion; that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul

We believe that every man should be honored in his station: rulers and magistrates as such—being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror: human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man, and divine laws, given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker.

We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied.

I have quoted the fourth, sixth and ninth paragraphs of Section 112. This, I think, sets forth rather clearly the relationship and attitude of the church toward government. We set forth affirmatively those rights which we think are ours, and we pay due tribute and respect to government.

WITH THE GROWTH of our history, man's liberty and freedom have been continually expanded. Labor conditions have been consistently improved. At the end of the Civil War, the average work week was seventy hours, as compared with the work week today of forty hours. Scientific and mechanical developments have eased the burdens of labor to such a point that where, in ages past, man was the slave, he now has hundreds of mechanical devices to serve him. He now has at his command, instead of the one-tenth horsepower of which man in and of himself is capable, almost inestimable horsepower to be used according to his needs and purposes. In addition to the development in the scientific and mechanical fields, progress has been made in the areas of health and welfare. Man's life has been extended insofar as years are concerned.

It is not my purpose to review all the progress made in the course of our nation's history. To the few suggestions which I have made, each of you could add hundreds more. We touch on them briefly only to stimulate our thinking. To the extent that progress has been made in these various fields, it has been made and accomplished under the guiding protection of a government of free people, the government of which Thomas Jefferson spoke in his inaugural address on March 4, 1801, when there were those who questioned whether or not the Republic could stand. Jefferson made this statement:

To you, then, gentlemen, who are charged with the sovereign function of legislation and to these associated with you, I look with encouragement for that guidance and support which may enable us to steer with safety the vessel in which we are all embarked amidst the conflicting elements of a troubled world.

It was a troubled world in those days, and Jefferson attempted to look down the avenue of time and build hope, confidence, and assurance in the minds of those with whom he was associated.

He went on to say:

I know indeed that some honest men fear that a republican form of government cannot be strong, but would the honest patriot in the full tide of successful experiment abandon a government which has so far kept us firm and free on the theoretic and visionary fear that this government, the world's best hope, may possibly want energy to preserve itself? I trust not. I believe this, on the contrary, the strongest government on earth.

In that same address, as he

OUR LITTLE WILD NEIGHBORS

AS A YOUNG MAN, I was interested in Ernest Seton Thompson's studies of wild animals. His book, Wild Animals I Have Known, I cherished and rebound in morocco in the days when I was a bookbinder.

The fiercer wild creatures that chose to fight mankind have been exterminated or driven into the wilderness. They were swifter and stronger than man, and they were courageous, but they could not fight against the lethal weapons his inventive genius contrived.

The wild animals and birds that surrendered and yielded themselves to domestication became beasts of burden or meat for the slaughter house.

In later years, I have been intrigued by the lesser creatures that refused to flee from the advance of civilization, refused also to yield themselves to captivity and servitude. They have lived in spite of man and even at his expense. Probably these creatures have always interested the thoughtful observer. Solomon wrote:

There be four things which are little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise: The ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer; the conies are but a feeble folk, yet make their houses in the rocks; the locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands; the spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces. —Proverbs 30: 24-28.

MOTHER RABBIT

ESPECIALLY INTERESTING are the small creatures who live among us but are not of us, who retain their wild ways and their independence. This summer, for example, I found in our garden the nest of a wild cottontail rabbit. It was cleverly concealed among bushes and vines. The mother rabbit had scooped out a shallow bassinet in the earth, lined it with soft fur from her body, and in it had cradled her naked newborn babies.

The little, carefully concealed nest had served its purpose and she and her youngsters were gone. She had moved into town from the prairies. She bought no lot, paid no taxes, searched for no apartment (no children allowed), patronized no grocer, lawyer, doctor, or dentist. She lived in town and gathered her food from my garden and lawn but was free and independent.

BR'ER RABBIT, JR.

SOME WEEKS LATER, at the home of our son Ronald and his wife Vera, in Pittsburg, Kansas, I saw how some of these little creatures learned to take care of themselves. Of the evening and morning in the edges of the garden and lawn, we would see a little wild rabbit. His mother had brought him into the world, given him care for a few days, and now he was on his own. There he was, a block from an interstate highway, two blocks from a state college, living his life after the way of rabbits. He was pint sized, and looked helpless and defenseless, but he was doing very well by himself. He enjoyed the clover of the lawn, forage in the garden, and seemed especially fond of poppy leaves and buds. He ate them in the evening, perhaps as a sedative.

This juvenile rabbit appeared so tame I could come almost within hand reach of him; and yet he was so wild that if I reached out my hand ever so swiftly or slowly he was gone in a flash and had lost himself in the grass and shrubbery. He was as quick and clever and wild as his great-great-grandparents who had lived on the wide and wild plains of Kansas long ago. Perhaps they moved in close to Indian villages and yet knew how to keep themselves free and hide themselves cleverly. Tame as they seem at times, it is practically impossible to domesticate the wild cottontail rabbit—he lived too many centuries in the wide open spaces to take to hutches—but he does like some of the advantages of civilized life—taken on his own terms—and hands off!

ROBIN, JR., LEARNS TO EAT CHERRIES

RONALD AND VERA related an episode in a robin family that they observed from their window. One of the young robins was literally out on a limb. He was not yet able to fly, and the mother was feeding him according to her formula—bugs and worms. Apparently that day she decided that he needed a mixed diet. She flew to her favorite cherry tree, selected a juicy cherry, and brought it to Junior. When he opened his mouth wide she gave him the cherry. Either he didn't know how to handle it, or, like human babies, he did not take to something new and strange, for he dropped the cherry and it fell to the ground.

Mother Robin promptly flew down and retrieved the cherry, brought it back and put it in young hopeful's mouth, only to see it rejected. There was a repeat performance. Then, according to Ronald, Mother Robin returned once more with a certain determined gleam in her eye, such as mothers sometimes have. This time, when Junior opened his mouth she jammed the cherry down his throat so far that he was obliged to swallow it. He had learned his lesson. He knew how to swallow a cherry. Mother knew best.

MR. WREN SELECTS A HOUSE

I HAVE BEEN WATCHING a family of wrens. There were two wren houses on the side of the garage, ready for occupancy. Jenny Wren and Jack were examining them. Jack was much interested in the larger white house. Jenny seemed to prefer the smaller brown one. Her husband flew about excitedly, singing his lungs out trying to sell her on the one of his selection. Finally he began to carry straws and twigs into the white house to build a nest. Eventually his wife was won over and they set up housekeeping in the white house.

Was that what happened? No, my dear brother, even as you and I, he had his mind changed and soon Mr. and Mrs. Wren were "at home" to their friends, in the little brown cottage, as happy as any young married couple looking forward to a "blessed event." I must say that Mr. Wren acted very much the gentleman, and I suspect that Jenny said, "You are the very best Wren in the whole world and I love you." That always works.

Numberless are the stories that might be told about the courage and resourcefulness of the animals and birds that neither flee from, nor surrender to, man's civilization. The robins, wrens, bluebirds, cardinals, the rabbits and squirrels live with us and among us but in their own way.

The song birds delight us with a flash of color and a burst of song. But it is not in payment of rent. They own the place, including berry-bushes and cherry trees.

RED COMMUNIST

THE RED SQUIRREL who has moved in from the forest owns the place, too. When out of sorts, he scolds me in unprintable language. I do not understand his words, but there is no mistaking their meaning. Perhaps he is like my old Swedish friend in Iowa who spoke fairly good English but swore at his horses in his native tongue out of respect for his neighbors. This red squirrel finds it safer in town than in the forest, so he has taken over the premises—in fact the entire street.

He gathers walnuts from the neighbor's trees and buries them one by one in my front lawn, back yard, and garden. Like Solomon's ant,

"he prepares his meat in the summer." With his own stout heart to warm him, and no artificial heat, he rides out the long, cold winter in his treetop nest—eating when he can and fasting when he must. He seems tame; but he is wild. Better not try to put a hand upon him. His teeth can cut through a hard-shelled walnut. No hand may hold him.

WHAT HAVE HUMANS TO LEARN?

WHAT MAY WE human creatures of lofty intellect learn from these lesser ones. Solomon said, "Go to the ant, consider her ways." We think they do not think, yet they seem to have a wisdom we cannot understand. We are baffled by the highly complex social and industrial organization of a swarm of bees. Who plans the summer's work? Who gives the orders and how? Who taught them to build the cells of their honeycomb after a geometrical pattern? to manufacture wax? to distill honey? to ventilate a hive? Who tells them when a new swarm is to leave the hive? Who determines which bees shall go and how many? Who details the scouts to precede the swarm and "spy out the land"?

These lesser creatures, birds, beasts, insects, seem at times to be directed by an over-all intelligence that neither we nor they understand. There is the difference—they do not try to understand. The human mind forever tries to understand—even God. They cannot reason about abstract principles and perceive moral and spiritual values: honesty, chastity, duty, justice, the hope of immortality, the reason of things.

They are free, but their free agency to choose right and reject wrong is void for lack of comprehension, even as ours is limited. Man has a breadth, a depth, a range of thought godlike by comparison. He has a depth of human emotions that may be godlike.

The little rabbit and the little robin that I wrote about were loved for a short time. Their mothers warmed and fed them. But as soon as they were able to fend for themselves, they were forgotten. The mother and the father redbreast of the little robin would feed him for a few days. They would protect him and give him a few lessons in flight; perhaps tell him about cats. Then he would go his way and they theirs. He would be just another robin. Human fathers and mothers may and do have a love that defies time and distance, even death, and looks forward to the resurrection.

TRANS-CONTINENTAL AVIATORS

SOME OF THESE wild creatures abide with us the year around. Others are summer tourists—world tourists. The tiny ruby-breasted hummingbird that darts about my garden like a flash of light and has been called "a buzz bomb from fairyland" builds a nest described as a jewel of construction. Few have ever seen that nest. She and her sisters, as far north as Labrador, are at that task. As Autumn draws on, she and all those sisters, at a time of their choosing, take leave on their own power—a hummingbird's heart must be such a very small engine! Yet they fly all the way down to the Gulf States and some of them cross over into Central America. What a flight for so small an aircraft!

Other migratory birds take longer flights. The arctic tern is said to fly 11,000 miles to spend fourteen weeks nesting in the Arctic—then 11,000 miles back to the Antarctic.

Winged creatures like the hummingbird have no chart, compass, radio, or radar. How they set and keep their course, neither we nor they understand. They seem guided by an over-all wisdom or an inner light which neither we nor they comprehend. But they trust it. It does not fail them. We, too, may be guided by an inner light—if we trust it as confidently. The poet Bryant, watching a lone wild fowl taking its uncharted flight across the evening sky, exclaimed:

He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the air thy certain flight
In the long way that I must tread alone
Will guide my steps aright.

America in Prophecy

BY C. J. HUNT

ful. (See article by Elder C. Ed. Miller in Zion's Ensign, September 3, 1931.)

IN RECENT YEARS a few prominent writers representing Protestant and Jewish organizations either have adopted some of our published interpretations of the verses quoted or, from their own study, are strongly corroborating the definitions given by us for the past one hundred years.

The Reverend Doctor R. C. Shimeall, a noted scholar of the Presbytery of New York City, treating upon the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah, says in his book, The Second Coming of Christ, page 305: "This passage instead of 'Woe to' should read, 'Ho! the land of shadowing wings,' etc. This prophecy refers to that nation which shall hold a maritime preeminence over all others, and which can refer to none other so emphatically as to the United States of America." Reverend Shimeall, a prominent writer and historian, is the author of eight or more literary works.

We now present a clipping from the Saints' Herald for September 1, 1897, which is of special worth in this connection:

A Word in a Fit Place

A copy of the Armory, published in Boston, Massachusetts, by H. L. Hastings, for August, has been sent us by some friend of the cause. In it is an article from Israel's Messiah, entitled, "A Refuge for Persecuted Jews." From this article we quote the following: "Rabbi Isaac Leeser, of Philadelphia, the translator of the Hebrew Bible, says that the prophecy in the eighteenth chapter of the Prophet Isaiah, 'Ho, to the land with spreading wings, which is beyond the river of Cush, that sendeth on the sea ambassadors, and in vessels of gomeh messengers over the face of the waters,' is a prophecy relating to America.

"Standing where the prophet stood and looking 'beyond the rivers of Cush,' or Ethiopia, the first land we strike is the western world. And this land—the very name of which was then unknown, with its emblem, the eagle with 'spreading wings,' whose ambassadors are sent by sea, in the swiftest ships, has opened to the sons of Israel such a refuge as no other land afforded for 1,700 years. Into this land the teeming multitudes of earth have poured at a rate unexampled in history; and in this land was first enunciated the grand doctrine that all men were created free and equal; and that Jews as well as Gentiles had 'a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' Some other nations have since ceased to persecute the Jews, but the statute books of the United States of America have never been stained with laws against the exiled sons of Israel; and here for the first time since their dispersion was an asylum opened where the Jewish wanderer could find rest, justice and right."

The International Encyclopedia locates Ethiopia, the biblical Cush, as "originally all the nations inhabiting the southern part of the globe, as known to the ancients; or rather, all men of dark brown or black color were called Ethiopians. Later this name was given more particularly to the inhabitants of the countries south of Libya (see general history) and Egypt, or the upper Nile, extending from ten to twenty-five degrees north latitude, forty-five to fifty-eight degrees east longitude—the present Nubia, Sennaar, Kordofan, Abyssinia."

More Notes on Fulfillment

IN A HEAVENLY VISION, the Prophet Isaiah saw a "land shadowing with wings." The land was "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," and North and South America in the Western Hemisphere fully answer his description and location. Some

THE PROPHET MORONI was a witness to the value of Isaiah's prophetic writings. This is also true of all members of the Restoration Movement of 1830, and these Scriptures will continue to be prized and taught by them until the millennium.

Many Bible scholars regard Isaiah as one of the most devout and richly blessed of Old Testament writers. His inspired visions, when rightly understood, awaken in the student serious thoughts of the past, present, and future. One of Isaiah's great visions and prophecies is recorded in the King James translation of the Bible as follows:

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled! All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye. —Isaiah 18: 1-3.

I believe that the fulfillment of the foregoing is in perfect agreement with the geographical location, the eventful period of history, place of origin of our church, and the manner of travel of our missionaries from this country to people of foreign lands. For these assurances, Latter Day Saints should be grate-leading journals have published maps of the Americas representing a great bird with spreading wings, and as the foremost nation of the western world stands the United States of America with its emblem, the American eagle, used officially in many ways.

In this connection we present excerpts from a splendid editorial by Estella Wight in Stepping Stones for July 4, 1943, on "Our Nation's Bird." Of the eagle, as a symbol in use one hundred fifty years, she says:

Popular acceptance and official recognition have placed him there, and so on seals, coins, stamps, etc., his likeness today appears. So well established has this great bird of the air become, that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to dispossess him now of this honored position.

Here the editor quotes a noted writer as follows:

At no time in our long and colorful history as a nation has the real significance of our selection of the American or bald eagle been so forcibly brought home to us as at the present in the midst of our nation-wide program to arm for defense. Fierce and defiant and a master of the air, he is a fitting symbol of our national effort to achieve air supremacy that the American democratic way of life may be preserved and perpetuated.

In praise of the bird, another writer is quoted as saying that this symbol is a model of morality and loyalty to his family: "The American eagle is neither bigamist, polygamist, nor philanderer. It mates for life and consistently remains at its own hearth until one of the pair meets a natural or a violent death."

The Universal Airport at Burbank, California, displayed the first official government air-mail flag in 1930. In the center of the flag, the globe is represented, and attached to it are two large wings of an eagle. These extend nearly the full length of the flag. Planes carrying this emblem signify that they are equipped to receive and dispatch mail. Now, another new symbol to be worn by honorably discharged service men of World War II has been provided. It is a lapel button, the design displaying the American eagle with spreading wings in a circle. To me, these later symbols serve as additional reminders of that prophetic description of the land with "shadowing wings."

FROM THIS SPECIAL LAND was realized the "sealed book" of Isaiah 29: 11, the Book of Mormon, and of our National Constitution the Lord said in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10: "For this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose." The inspired prophet, Isaiah, further describes, in chapter eleven, the Western Hemisphere as the place where the "ensign" (the church) should be "lifted up" (organized). This was done in 1830, and "ambassadors" (missionaries) to be sent as "swift messengers" upon the waters, were dispatched to many lands by this Church of Latter Day Saints. Now it has an even greater missionary force in prospect.

Our interest in the above is increased when we recall that Christopher Columbus in 1492 was ten weeks crossing the ocean with three little sailing vessels, the largest only one hundred sixty-three feet long. Over three hundred years later, in 1819, the first combination steam and sailing vessel, the "Savannah," crossed the Atlantic from the United States to England in twenty-nine days. The large, all-steam ships soon followed, crossing the same ocean in about five days, and until the present war restricted civilian passenger travel of the oceans, such gigantic liners as the "Normandy" and the "Queen Elizabeth" carried thousands of travelers to and fro with speed and in comfort. Swift sailing indeed, but now this is far outclassed by air travel.

The "nation scattered and peeled" to which "ambassadors" should eventually be sent is Israel, or the Jews, who are now gathering back to Palestine. As a people they have been "trodden down." I am pleased to say that God's gospel "trumpet"—the Restoration Movement—has sounded, and the blessed message is being proclaimed to several of the nations by ordained ministers of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A Nation Meted Out and Trodden Down

IN THE SECOND verse of the eighteenth chapter of Isaiah, the statement, "A nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled," is better appreciated when we note that the word "rivers" is sometimes used to mean "peoples, nations, and multitudes" (Revelation 17: 15), and that "spoiled" can well be interpreted as "spoil of them for a prey."—Esther 3: 13.

Histories of New Testament times inform us that the Roman armies in 70 A. D. marched upon Jerusalem, conquered the Jews, and took their wealth as a spoil. Of this event, Dr. Robert Young in his Analytical Concordance (1893), page 1100, says the Jerusalem Temple "was sacked, pillaged, burnt, and utterly overthrown, so not one stone of the temple proper was left upon another, as foretold by Christ."

In the vision of Isaiah, the destructive armies looked like rivers of men pouring in upon the capital city, Jerusalem, laying it waste, driving the Jews from their homes. For centuries thereafter Palestine was not inhabited by a progressive people.

A similar description of the United States soldiers was given by General John J. Pershing as he watched them marching from ships which landed in France in World War I. The general's published pictures of the swiftly moving men were accompanied by his heartfelt expression: "Great floods of American soldiers begin to pour overseas when the Allies realize the danger of disaster." They helped to save the nations and, in a measure, cooperated with other countries in giving

Substance of a lecture presented at the Convention of Twelve and Seventy, Kansas City, Missouri, January 3 to 9, 1948.

FOREWORD.—A considerable portion of this article is a composite of material and ideas written by several specialists in the field of interest covered by this theme. Principles and materials have been gathered and readapted in the endeavor to fit them to our particular needs as missionary ministers for Jesus Christ. Some of the original matter may have been written chiefly from a mercenary motive. Effort has been made to winnow out such principles of truth as are applicable and adaptable to the augmenting of our understanding and the enhancing of our skills in "personal approach" for a cause whose basic and ultimate purpose does not eventuate in monetary profits but in spiritual values that endure.

The compiler desires to give due credit to the material of others, either by reference or by quotation marks. He has combined with this material some of his own observations and conclusions.

Some items, gathered from group discussion and elsewhere, are added at the end of the article for such help as they may provide for the readers, in the hope that the entire article will prove beneficial.

PART I

HERBERT SPENCER, English philosopher, in one of his books makes this assertion:

If a visitor from Mars should examine our school and college textbooks, he would ask with astonishment, "Where are your books for teaching people how to get along with each other?" (Chapter entitled, "What Knowledge Is Most Worth-while?")

It is a question that should make most parents and educators red in the face. Very few school and college graduates have ever heard of any laws or rules for getting along with people. If they learn them at all, they have to learn them in the "University of Hard Knocks." Many never do learn them, yet they are far more important for success in life than all school studies combined.¹

It may be entirely within the bounds of truth to say that a person without an eighth grade education, who has developed the art of being a good neighbor, who has consideration and tolerance for the faults of his fellow men and genuine sympathy for others, is making a greater contribution to the well-being of society than the person with several doctorate degrees who has not developed the traits of brotherliness, charity, virtue, self-control, patience, kindness, and humility.

According to the clear-cut statements of revelation and the personal commission of Christ, the Quorum of Twelve and the Quorum of Seventy bear the major responsibility for keeping alive and in motion the missionary emphasis of the church. One purpose, if not the basic purpose, of missionary work is to attract and win people to Christ. The conversion and regeneration of souls is prerequisite to building of the kingdom of God on earth, as well as fitting us to occupy that kingdom in eternity.

SUCCESS in winning men to Christ requires diligent study of the principles involved in building up confidence in men and the ways of gaining that confidence so the ministers of God can find access to the friendship and hearts of others. We must know, either by inherent gift or by persistent study and practice, how to pierce the armor of spiritual indifference and effect the opening of locked doors of souls to the point of their listening to and possibly accepting the gospel message of salvation. It is to be observed that some men are by the proportions of inherited traits, by early training and example in the home, or by both, more adept at meeting people and making congenial acquaintance than are others. But it is likely that virtually every man called to represent God as a witness and missionary has within him the potentiality of acquiring this art by intelligent and persistent effort.

Physically, man is motivated by certain basic urges and hungers. There are, too, certain spiritual parallels. Because spirit and body are united in a human entity, these basic impulses and hungers affect both the physical and the spiritual nature in man. It is well, then, that we study the great hungers of the human soul, so that we may know what things souls normally desire.

It is my conviction that if we can and will identify the primary appeals to the hearts of men, we shall find in the gospel that which is fundamental, appropriate, and essential to those appeals. Deity has always been intelligently cognizant of and passionately concerned about man's nature and primal drives. There is that in the spiritual provision of life which has been made adaptable to man's greatest spiritual needs, just as truly as every physical need is provided for in the abundant production of nature in its proper state.

The American Association for Adult Education and the United Y. M. C. A. Schools, after a two-year survey that cost $25,000, concluded that the prime interest of adults is health. The second interest is in developing skill in human relationships and learning the technique of getting along with and influencing people.

Dealing with people is probably the biggest problem you face, especially if you are a business man. . . . Investigation revealed that in even such technical lines as engineering, about fifteen per cent of one's financial success is due to technical knowledge and about eighty-five per cent is due to skill in human engineering—to personality and the ability to lead people. When dealing with people, let us remember that we are not dealing with creatures of logic. We are dealing with creatures of emotion, creatures bristling with prejudice and motivated by pride and vanity. . . . Freud asserted that "everything you and I do springs from two motives: the sex urge and the desire to be great." Dr. John Dewey puts it as the "desire to be important." . . . Almost every normal adult wants: (1) Health and the preservation of life. (2) Food. (3) Sleep. (4) Money and things money will buy. (5) Life in the hereafter. (6) Sexual gratification. (7) The well-being of our children. (8) A feeling of importance.²

THE FIRST ITEM to be met in this matter of winning people is the type of approach and demeanor that will establish acquaintance and friendship. One writer lists six rules for this achievement of getting people to like you. He emphasizes the fact of other people's self-interest.³

Rule 1. Be friendly.

Rule 2. Smile.

Rule 3. Remember people's names.

Rule 4. Be a good listener.

Rule 5. Talk in terms of the other man's interests.

Rule 6. Make other people feel important—and do it sincerely.

These rules for approach to and entrance into the hearts of people are vitally involved with another important item, the art of conversation—the ability to talk with others after acquaintance and friendship are established.

The December 1947 Reader's Digest contains an instructive article entitled, "The Delightful Game of Conversation." Ten points are presented, as follows:

(1) Avoid all purely subjective talk. (2) Don't monopolize the conversation. (3) Don't contradict. (4) Don't interrupt. (5) Don't abruptly change the subject. (6) Show an active interest in what is said. (7) After a diversion, bring back the subject. (8) Don't make dogmatic statements of opinion. (9) Speak distinctly and deliberately. (10) Avoid destructive talk.

So far as possible, without compromising Christ or his work and truth, we should profit by such points of principle. Most of—if not all—the above points can many times be adapted to our personal work. There are times when we may be forced to state definite opinions and facts, but we can learn to do so kindly and graciously.

Along with the items of making acquaintances, developing friendships, and employing conversation skillfully, there is combined another very important matter—that of getting along with people in such a way that the acquaintance is cemented in a lasting friendship of respect and confidence, a friendship that will wear well and serve the purpose of God. In this connection, another writer has stated that there are at least two ironclad laws of the mind for getting along with people, and six ironclad rules for applying them that are as fixed as the laws that guide the stars.¹

Law No. 1. You dare not puncture the other fellow's ego.

Law No. 2. The human mind may not be a machine, but it acts like one.

The most basic rules for applying these two laws for getting along with people are:

Rule 1. You must be absolutely sincere.

Rule 2. You must make the other fellow believe in you.

Rule 3. You must believe in other people.

Rule 4. You must overestimate the other fellow's point of view.

Rule 5. Don't try to achieve superiority by making the other fellow feel inferior.

Rule 6. You must strive to enrich the lives of other people.

PART II

THE STATEMENT has been given to you that man is motivated by certain basic urges and hungers. These essential capacities in man are the gateways to his attention and interest. Properly utilized, they are the gateways of approach to his soul. The principles or laws by which these gates may be unlocked are the keys. Our primary hope in and through this article is to set forth some basic ideas and principles that can and will be used to increase our skill in making approach and appeal to those responses most susceptible to the arousing of interest in the gospel of Christ, with the view of winning men to him and his way of life.

With this in mind, questions were submitted to the members of the quorum of seventy nearly three years ago. They were requested to study the matter and to submit their conclusions. Nine of the brethren sent articles in which they presented their opinions as to the manner in which they felt the best possible approach could be made. A brief summary of these replies may prove of help as well as of interest.

Of the nine replies, eight agreed on (1) the sense or desire to be of worth and importance to others—the law of self-esteem and self-importance; eight, on (2) the desire or hunger for spiritual security, variously expressed as (a) assurance of the reality of God; (b) assurance of support and help through faith in times of distressing situations; (c) assurance of spiritual justice and equality; and (d) assurance of the reality of the hereafter, with justice and equality; five on (3) the innate desire for happiness, otherwise expressed as desire for (a) mental and physical well-being; (b) harmonious family relationships; (c) release from sin and its burdens; four on (4) the desire for economic security; three on (5) the desire for living evidence of the worth and power of religion in practice (this may be associated with number 2); two on (6) the desire for social improvement and regeneration of the social order (which may well tie up with 2 and 4); and two on (7) the desire for adventure or of delving into the vast unknown.

Traits that should characterize the message bearer, the missionary, were mentioned. One statement was: "No effective approach can be made if the prospect does not see Christ in the messenger."²

SUMMING UP the personal traits which serve as the most effective keys for the minister's entrance into the interests and souls of men, we present: (1) friendliness; (2) courtesy; (3) knowledge about the cause or proposition he represents; (4) studiousness to acquire knowledge of methods of approach, presentation, and persuasion; (5) logicalness; (6) tact; (7) affirmation without argumentation; (8) numerous personal contacts; (9) perseverance and persistence; (10) work, work, work; and (11) ability to create in others a desire for what we represent.

To make these above listed traits effective and lasting, blend them with the following liberally and continuously: (12) desire to serve others; (13) love for others; (14) consideration; (15) sincerity; (16) frankness; (17) kindness; (18) humility; (19) prayerfulness; (20) patience; and (21) honesty.

Combining the similar elements of the three separately stated groups of principles or rules, and considering them in more detail, we find some helpful ideas.

First: Be friendly. Become genuinely interested in other people.

Do you want to make friends? Then be friendly. Forget yourself. Think of others. "People are not interested in you. They are interested in themselves. You can make more friends in two months by becoming interested in other people than you can in two years by trying to get other people interested in you."

Second: Smile. Many times when we smile sincerely along with what we say, we elicit an entirely different reaction than if we evidenced a different attitude. "Brother, smile when you say them words," has a great significance in our western country. A Chinese proverb declares: "A man without a smiling face must not open a shop."

Third: Remember people's names. A man's name is to him the sweetest and most important sound in the English language. Jim Farley can call over 50,000 people by their first names. People are charmed and sometimes flattered when we remember them after having met them once.

Fourth: Be a good listener. Encourage others to talk about themselves. "The royal road to a man's heart is to talk to him about the things he treasures most. Talk about things that interest and please others. Make yourself agreeable."² And here we can utilize the principles involved in the art of conversation previously referred to. Three things turned an angry man into a good customer: (1) listening to his story from beginning to end without saying a word; (2) seeing things from his point of view; and (3) admitting not knowing the cause of the trouble and asking the man what he would like to have done. Good listening is one of the post-preferable arts. "The ability to listen seems rarer than almost any other good trait."²

Fifth: Talk in terms of the other man's interests. This rule, along with the others we have been discussing, involves the law referred to by Albert Edward Wiggam: The human mind may not be a machine, but it acts like one.

Human conduct is predictable. Try it and see. Approach people in one manner of speaking, call them liars, accuse them of malign, and see what happens. Speak to them kindly, sympathetically, reasonably, patiently, and see what happens. Try to handle an angry person with anger, and what happens? You know. "Like begets like," and that spells trouble. "A soft answer turneth away wrath" is one of the wisest statements of all psychology. It works as automatically as pressing a push button for starting an electrical machine. Everybody knows this, and yet half the troubles for the world come from the failure to put it into practice. . . . You must not get up any absurd notions as to what the other fellow ought to do. Your business is to watch exactly what the other fellow does do in response to what you say or do, and act accordingly. You will be amazed at the result.¹

Sixth: Make other people feel important . . . and do it sincerely. "We nourish the bodies of our children and friends, but how seldom do we nourish their self-esteem. We all crave honest appreciation and long for sincere praise. And we seldom get either.” Referring again to Albert Edward Wiggam’s statement of Law Number 1: “You dare not puncture the other fellow’s ego.” A ten-year research completed in 1944 by eight psychologists at Yale University, brought this conclusion: Anything and everything that frustrates the individual in preserving his ego produces aggressive conduct. Unless wisely guided, it will always be destructive conduct.

The late J. David Houser, pioneer in developing methods for polling public opinion, showed that neither business executive, nor workers in strikes, are fighting for pay, but to preserve the dignity and importance of the individual ego. So we must remember that in dealing with people whose souls we want to win to Christ, we must help them to sense that they are of worth to others and to Christ. People may be humble, but to maintain self-respect and the drive to achieve, they must feel that they are wanted—that they belong to the group. In this we must be understanding. We must not cause the other fellow to feel inferior; therefore, we must guard against feeling and acting superior. “The unvarnished truth is that almost every man you meet is your superior in some way. And in that, you can learn something from him, if you are humble.” Wiggam says: “You must be absolutely sincere.” Then he goes on to assert, “Probably no one ever achieves absolute sincerity. Why? Because of the innate tendency called ‘rationalization’—the urge to give excuses for our conduct instead of reasons, in order to preserve our egos.” (Andrew Carnegie once said that a man always has two reasons for what he does, his spoken reason, and the real reason.)

Conscious intentional hypocrites are rather rare. But the way we fool ourselves and give excuses for our failures, instead of reasons and facing the facts, is a powerful tendency to make us all unconscious hypocrites. . . . If we do not watch, it will lower other people’s estimate of our sincerity and dependability, and decrease the get-along-ability of our entire personality.¹

Almost all of our missionaries and administrative men, who at times have to deal with cases of transgression committed by either members or nonmembers, have seen them use the defense mechanism. Sometimes, in a sudden moment, they have seen them break down and confess their guilt after previous vehement denial of that guilt.

As ministers of God endeavoring to win others to Christ, we have to bear in mind this powerful tendency on the part of humanity and watch it in our own reactions. We should also try to understand it as it operates in the reactions of those with whom we deal. For to become skilled in dealing with it gives us a key to the souls of men. “Philosophers have been speculating on the rules of human relationships for thousands of years and out of all that speculation, there has evolved one important precept. It is not new. . . . Jesus summed it up in one thought—probably the most important rule in the world: ‘Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.’”²

Seventh: You must create confidence. You must make the other fellow believe in you. No matter how sincere you are, the other fellow must believe you are sincere. He must feel that he can trust you; his trust must be regarded as a sacred thing, not to be toyed with nor to be used against him, to outwit him, or to outmaneuver him. Once he sincerely believes in you and can trust you, you have a decided advantage in getting into his heart. You must be honest and aboveboard. It is better to take a longer time in winning someone, rather than “high-pressure” him into a hasty decision when the element of confidence is involved. If truth about some items may be a delaying element, it is, in my opinion, better to let him think his way through than to hide some unsavory facts that he will likely learn later and be shaken in his trust in the church and its ministry. You must believe in other people. The hardest people to get along with are those who are always looking for hidden meanings in what you say or do. In counseling married couples about their troubles, it has been observed that about the hardest ones to get together are those who say to each other: “I heard what you said, but I know what you meant!”³

Eighth: You must overestimate the other fellows’ point of view. Dr. Werner Wolff, after years of experiments on human personality, has found that only about four out of five would recognize themselves if they should meet themselves coming down the street. Very few persons, when judging personalities of others from specimens of handwriting, photos of hands, or records of voices and style of telling stories, and having the investigator slip in, unbeknownst to them, samples of their own records made on previous occasions, recognized these records of themselves. Even though each individual was unaware he was judging himself, he instantly made much more favorable judgments of these records of himself and the kind of personality they represented than he made of the records of other people. Another thing of prime importance was that when a person realized he was judging his own records, he usually “caught himself,” so to speak. His sense of modesty prevailed and his judgments were lower, or he was non-committal. The point of all this in getting along with other people is that if we do not deliberately overestimate the other fellow’s point of view, we are almost certain to overestimate our own. You must overestimate other people’s points of view if you wish to get along happily and effectively with your fellow men.⁴

Ninth: You must endeavor to enrich the lives of other people.

Dr. Adler asserts that:

Striving for superiority is common to all men; but those who try to achieve superiority by domination or boastfulness are striving on the useless side of life. Striving for superiority is behind every human creation, and the source of all human achievement. It is the stimulation of the desire to excel. But in the end, the only individuals who can meet and master the problems of life, no matter how great may be their worldly achievements, are those who strive to enrich all others, who go ahead in such a way that all their fellow men are benefited.⁵

Jesus gave us the golden key when he said:

Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you; but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.⁶

“The rare individual who unselfishly tries to serve others has an enormous advantage.” — Anonymous. “Co-operation is the great shared commonplace of the human race. The ideal person is one, all of whose actions and traits of character tend toward human co-operation.”⁷

Tenth: Be considerate.

“It takes character and self-control to be understanding and forgiving. Try to understand. A great man shows his greatness by the way he treats little men.” — Carlyle. To be able to put oneself in the place of other men, to understand the workings of their minds, will secure the future for oneself, said Owen D. Young. “Always avoid the acute angle.” — Dale Carnegie. Be careful about argument. “The only way to get the best of an argument is to avoid it.” As far as possible, avoid telling a person he is wrong. Few people are logical. Most of us are prejudiced, biased, blighted by preconceived notions. When we are wrong, we may admit it to ourselves. And if we are handled tactfully and gently, we may admit it to others, but not by having it rammed down our throats. Benjamin Franklin learned to avoid making dogmatic expressions and statements after he had made himself thoroughly disliked earlier in life. He became a great diplomat. Prof. James Harvey Robinson in his book, The Mind in the Making, looked down the avenue of time, he reminded them that we possess a "chosen country with room enough for our descendants to the thousandth and thousandth generation."

THOMAS JEFFERSON, with all his foresight, his prophetic insight, would have been amazed could he have actually foreseen what has taken place since the day he uttered those statements. We are, in fact, the generation toward which he looked, and I wish to re-emphasize that if this freedom and progress is to be assured to the oncoming generations, there must be an assumption of responsibility on the part of those now in a position to evaluate their heritage properly. In this evaluation, we must assume the responsibility of our civic stewardship. Those fundamentals of life which tend toward the development of Latter Day Saint character are the same fundamentals which build good citizens and which have been set up by the church as standards for one who accepts his stewardship responsibility to God. They include the development of personality—those traits which include basic integrity, moral soundness, clean personal living, honesty, a concern for the welfare of others, humility in relation to God and in responsibility to his fellow man. They include, as well, personal practices and habits such as the active support of and attendance at church; a growing understanding of church doctrine, and the support of the church program; an appreciation and an outreach for further understanding of the philosophy of stewardship and the building of the kingdom of God.

There must be this acknowledgment of one's stewardship responsibility in giving financial support and living and working in harmony and compliance with divine law. Industry, working to the end of developing a record of honorable dealings in business, is important in this day in which we live. The word of a Latter Day Saint should be as good as his bond. There must be the making of the application of all these principles to the building of one's home.

RECOGNIZING OUR responsibility in civic stewardship, a real Latter Day Saint is interested in his community and spends his time and his energy in addition to carrying his church responsibilities to bring about a spiritual betterment and physical improvement among his neighbors. No Latter Day Saint can turn from this if he believes the Scriptures which I have quoted. We have a responsibility to our fellow men, the responsibility of community building that our community may be improved in every respect. This civic responsibility cannot be discharged in whole if we keep aloof from the problems of community life. It is our responsibility as a church to encourage participation on the part of our members in good government, in politics, and in community building.

I noticed in some announcement that the young people were going to discuss the question as to whether or not the church should engage in politics. I think our record is quite clear in this respect; the church as an institution should keep itself entirely free from politics; there should be no institutional politics, but members of the church, as such, should assume the responsibilities as citizens and engage in the art of politics. Only in so doing can there be given the contribution to the building of a better community that I believe it is our responsibility to give.

May I reread paragraph nine of section 112 of the Doctrine and Covenants:

We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied.

In our special responsibility as a church, we have that of the coordination of our economic life. What does it mean? It means the building of the kingdom of God, the establishment of our Zion. Recently I have been reading some rather severe criticisms of our philosophy in respect to Zion. I have been interested in them, because they are criticisms which are in fact without foundation, for the ideals, the philosophy, the objectives of Zion, if pursued by any individual regardless of creed or politics, cannot help but bring a better world and a broader interest in one's fellow man. I read these criticisms with little concern, because I have examined our philosophy in the light of the needs of the world as I see them today, in the light of the needs of people. For millions of people across the seas there can be no solution to the problem unless nations work together to the building of a better world. The great hope and the eternal purpose to which we are directing our efforts are those which are in harmony with the divine mind and which can be consummated only when the kingdom is established.

In the discharge of our civic stewardship responsibility, may we as citizens, as honorable men and women representing the Church of Jesus Christ, participate in the building of Zion. Throughout the entire world are those who are interested in the improvement and betterment of man; working side by side with them, may we bring the kingdom of God here upon the earth.

By ZEALIA JENNINGS

THE CHURCH was quiet except for the soft strains from the organ. Lydia, a busy mother with a growing family, came down the aisle and slipped into a seat. She glanced at the faces of those around her. Some were old friends, some she knew by name, but all were familiar to her. These were her brothers and sisters. She looked at the front wall. The picture—it was gone! How often during the meditation period before worship she had glanced up at the picture and felt closer to Him because of his likeness hanging there.

She recalled how she had first learned to know this Friend. As a little child, she had memorized her prayers and said them faithfully, but it wasn't until she was about twelve that she really began to know Him.

All the churches in the small mid-western town where she lived got together and built a big wooden tabernacle. Then they brought a very famous and successful evangelist to preach. He had spoken with passion against the sins of humanity, but the thing that impressed her most was the way he continuously quoted scripture. For every situation he related in his sermons, scripture and reference fell readily from his lips. They were fiery, impassioned pleas, and the converts "came forward" by the hundreds. Lydia had been very timid about approaching such an experience. She had gone home after a particularly impressive night and asked her mother for a Bible of her own. She wanted to see and read for herself those things of which he had spoken. The next night she was back again with paper and pencil to take down all the references he mentioned.

bed, she hunted for the quotations. They were there—every one of them. Quickly she went from one to another and found in them a wealth of knowledge. There was something there to fit every problem of life! After she had read and reread them, she turned off the light and crept out of bed. There she knelt and sought to know this Friend.

Day after day she read that wonderful book. Night after night, an earnest little girl with her hair in braids looked up at the soft night skies dotted with stars, and felt an awakening within her heart of a deep love and admiration for that Friend whom she had so recently met.

Her mother helped her find important passages that wrote indelibly on her mind some of the requisites of a true Christian. Some of the passages indicated what would be found in the church that Christ built and left here on earth to be a guiding light for the footsteps of man. Then she began to single out favorite quotations. The first one that burned itself into her memory was the beautiful words of the Psalmist: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."

The meetings finally came to an end, and the evangelist left town. She had signified that she was a candidate for membership in one of the churches. Not the most popular, but a church that fitted at least one of the requirements of Christ's church. Days and weeks went by, and nothing came of it. No one called or wrote to her. However, the experience lingered and she would never be the same girl again, because she had met this Friend and walked with Him day by day.

YEARS PASSED and she attended different churches in the town.

She grew to young womanhood, a new pastor came and spoke to packed congregations in the church where she attended Sunday school. The cold logic of his sermons appealed to the young and old alike. He explained away all the miracles of the Bible. No need to wonder about them anymore. Classes of fifty or more joined the church week after week. Lydia and her older sister often went to hear the man and were impressed by the message he brought, but her mother never went. She had her hands full straightening out the warped ideas Lydia brought home from her visits to the church.

On Good Friday, Lydia and her sister were stopped on the street by the new pastor and asked if they would like to have their names among those of the class that was joining on Easter Sunday morning. He pointed out some of the secular advantages of being affiliated with a church—any church seemed to be all right. Why, he wasn't even a member of the church for which he was preaching! Her sister would soon be out of business college, and Lydia would be ready for a short business course—then a job. Applications would look much better with a definite church preference stated on them—especially if the church were a popular one. Flattered by his attention, they shyly decided they would like to join.

Their mother took the news with her usual quiet manner. Just after dark on Saturday night, a heavy snow began falling. Before bedtime, a strong wind came up and was howling wildly around the corners of the house. Lydia piled on more blankets and crawled into bed, confident that the storm would be over before morning. All night long the wind shook the doors and windows. Morning dawned cold and damp with the snow still blowing. Nothing was said by either Lydia or her sister about braving the storm to go to church and be with the class that was joining.

SPRING WAS filled with extra work preparatory to graduation. After school was out, they moved to a near-by city. Father found a house for them, and Lydia would be able to go to business school. But the thing that her mother was happiest about was the fact that in the city there was a branch of her church.

They took the streetcar across town on a hot Sunday morning and walked up the steps of a modest white building. Little was promised from the exterior, except cleanliness and privacy. But to Lydia, in this place, came the most wonderful experience she had ever had. The speaker that morning was not one of great prestige and renown, yet while she sat there listening and watching the pattern of light and dark cast on the wall from the trees outside, a spirit touched her heart, and she knew that here was the church she could join and find a place for herself and her Friend to work together.

That night as she sat by her window and looked at the canopy of heaven, thinking of the peaceful experience of the day, she dropped to her knees and buried her head in her arms praying fervently, "Oh God, let me be of service in that little white church where I went today." A goal had been set, and her Friend had helped to set it. Later, she stood on a hill between earth and sky with her face raised to the heavens, the wind whipping her skirts around her, and said with conviction, "I will look unto the hills, from whence cometh my help."

YEARS AFTER HER marriage, she knew the choice of a companion had not been his and hers alone to make. This Friend had helped in that way, too. She was grateful to Him for his selection, and like Joshua of old she said, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

There had been times of great need in her life, but He had always been there. When her son was so very ill, and she had done all that could be done, but it wasn't enough, her Friend had seen her need and brought him safely back to her.

Her father's last illness was such that she had prayed constantly for his release to be without pain. It had been that way, too—an unheard of occurrence in such cases. But she knew from whom the blessing came and thanked Him deeply.

There had been times He had helped with small problems, too. They were none the less important even though they were small. When the littlest guy got bold and said, "I'm not going to Sunday school today. I'm staying home," she was stunned and didn't know what to say. A short supplication to her Friend soon left her able to talk quietly to the little fellow. Then she went about her preparations. Soon he came to her and said, "I want to get ready for Sunday school, too."

She remembered the cold and snowy morning last winter when she answered the doorbell to find a man begging for a job shoveling snow to earn something to eat. She glanced at the thickly falling flakes and thought it would be useless to shovel the snow at that time, but down in the basement were some ashes to empty. She suggested this to him and he gladly accepted. He had only one glove, and she rummaged around and found another for him while he stood by the furnace and soaked up the heat. As she prepared thick sandwiches and laid out cookies and fruit to go into a paper bag, she seemed to hear the voice of her Friend saying, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Joyfully she gave the package to the beggar.

It seemed her friend was taking a part in everything she did anymore. Maybe that was because she had drawn closer to Him as the years went by.

A few weeks later, they had finished redecorating the church and the picture was back in place, but it hadn't really made any difference. Her Friend had been there all the time.

Singing Missionaries

A great many people can remember the beloved missionary and evangelist, F. G. Pitt, who used to sing, "God is so good to me." If ever I reach the good place he has gone, I plan to ask him to sing that song again with an angel chorus humming in the background.

But why live always either in the past or anticipating the future? Today, Brother Herbert Lively sings, "Trust in Him." Have you listened with your soul rising to the point where you can trust absolutely while Herbert sings it?

Home Remedies

At this season of the year, thousands of persons suffer keen discomfort from the bite of the common "chigger." Quick relief can be obtained by rubbing the inflamed spot with household Clorox, in a dilution from ten per cent to pure strength, according to the tenderness of the skin. Care must be taken not to get the liquid on clothing, as it is a bleach, and will leave white spots on garments. Do not use it near eyes.

For some types of irritation of the skin, ordinary castor oil has a healing quality. Rub gently on the affected area once or twice a day, wiping off excess. It is good for hot weather chafing and irritation of the feet.

Learning and Teaching

in Church Work

By Ermina Erickson

1. The Teacher Must Be Humble

WHEN WE ATTEMPT to teach others, it is generally supposed that we know more about the subject than they do, which may not always be the case. We may know our subject thoroughly and yet have no understanding of the people we are seeking to instruct. Our attitude may be wrong; we may feel superior or frightened or even antagonistic. We may be somewhat "puffed up" by having been asked to teach, or again we may feel unequal to the task. Whatever the attitude, we may learn much from the experience. We have learned a great deal the hard way, and we still have a long way to go. We need not be too discouraged, even if we have trouble occasionally, because we have been too autocratic or didactic in our assertions.

If we are to become good instructors, we should learn always to be receptive to information and knowledge; a "know it all" attitude is fatal. The moment we limit our knowledge, we are lost, but we must not become so full of "facts" that wisdom can find no place in our mind. We may become "too smart to learn" and press our little understanding upon others with so much vigor that it will bounce off, leaving them confused.

2. The Foundation Built on Love

There is an art in teaching, an art whose foundation is love—an impersonal and understanding love.

"Love of what?" someone may ask. We have learned that there are several answers to that question. Love is, to many persons, a very limited experience, consisting for the most part of the love of parents, brothers, and sisters, or the love of wife or husband and children, and a few friends. Some even go a little further and admit, timidly, perhaps, that they love God. However, this love is considered a duty, something they were taught as children but never understood. Lots of folks claim to love God, but, at the same time, hate or contend with other people, so the love of God is not in them. If we aspire to teach, we realize that this love should be understood in a broader sense. Love is not something that can be commanded, it is something that grows from the heart. The little love we have is not always large enough to include many. When Jesus said for us to love our enemies and to bless them that hated and used us despitefully, he was not telling us to do the impossible. It was a big order, and one which we have to grow into. It requires a lot of cultivation to bring that kind of love into fruition, but it can be done, because God loves us.

We do not love very much, nor love many people; but there is some love in us, and it can and will grow steadily and surely once we open our hearts and allow it. Most of us are afraid of love. Isn't that odd? We are taught that God is love, and yet we are afraid to let ourselves love or express a kindly attitude towards others for fear that someone may take advantage of us.

If we develop a consciousness of divine love, we will know it is a positive protection for us and that no one can take undue advantage of us. No one takes advantage of God. In fact, because we love impersonally all things both great and small, all things unite to protect us from harm. Let us meditate upon this ocean of infinite love and learn to live in it and become the vehicle through which it can express itself. This is the love upon which the foundation of all the art of teaching rests. All that we will ever be able to teach to others is that which we ourselves are.

3. The True Teacher

Who are the teachers of humanity? We all are in some capacity or other. We are either learning or teaching practically all the time, some professionally and some by the example they set in doing their daily tasks.

Those who make a profession of leadership or teaching will sometimes find that persons will lean upon them and copy even their mannerisms, going so far sometimes as to affect a similarity of speech. This is carrying "hero worship" too far. The teacher has a great responsibility when he has attained to a place of power. He may find persons clinging to his personality rather than to the principles he is teaching. Those who lean and try to draw sustenance from the leader must be shaken loose, for their own good as well as the teacher's. If we allow ourselves to follow a person because of his attractive personality, we may be led far astray. It is necessary that we use discrimination and weigh the thoughts and ideas that are presented.

If we allow others to do our thinking for us, we are sure to come to a blind alley. We can find many instances where people have followed personality and the leader himself has become so proud that he lost his way and his followers with him.

4. The True Student

We who are being taught have our responsibilities as well. We need not burden our teacher by unnecessary demands, neither should we develop a maudlin sort of affection for him, or a fawning attitude, nor lavish compliments, slyly seeking some bit of praise for ourselves. All responsibility is not upon the teacher. We are told to "bear one another's burdens"; also we are told to "bear our own burdens," and these two statements are not contradictory.

5. The Benefits of Criticism

The teacher should rejoice when he is sharply questioned, and even rejected. It is to his benefit. Praise may be sweet to the ear, but wisdom is the reward if we can stand criticism. Yes, if we are to teach, we will learn that strength is attained through trials and experiences. It requires of us that we develop a supreme reliance upon the Holy Spirit and maintain equilibrium and harmony, irrespective of what our message may be. If we are to become good teachers, we must first be good students. Any person who is willing to put forth the effort to think is a good student. Any person who can either by example or precept inspire in another a desire to seek learning is a good teacher.

6. "Know Thyself"

The individual first reaches out into the external world for knowledge through books, lectures, sermons, and observation, but finding himself still unsatisfied, he turns to look within his own heart and mind to find the revelation of his divine self.

We know so very little about ourselves. We are not aware of the potential powers of our minds, nor do we know much of the psychic forces and how they influence us. We allow thoughts to sweep through our minds uncontrolled; however, we do try to control our emotions and succeed to a point when, perhaps, someone will say the wrong thing, and away goes balance; anger rules and sometimes ruins. We have wondered if anger and disappointments were not fundamentally the cause of liver diseases. Anger heats the blood, disappointment lowers resistance, and the heart has extra work to do. Emotional upsets can have no good results in the body or the mind. There are many things we should know about ourselves. There are certain schools of scientific thought that consider self-knowledge as stemming almost entirely from sex understanding; that, however, is a one-sided approach. From this school of thinking, and it is a popular idea, we have the materialist, the exhibitionist, the fighter, and the agitator. There is no real peace in them; they are today's world. There are, of course, unbalanced persons who have been restored to normal life through psychoanalysis, but we refer to those who have only a superficial knowledge of a very deep subject and have considered what little they know as an excuse to do whatever they wanted to.

IF WE TRY to teach another to understand himself, we find that we, too, must understand ourselves; we must be able to reason as to how we would solve a problem if we were in his place. We might be able to figure it out, but unless our understanding became a part of his consciousness, it would be of no use to him.

The recognition of the godlike self, our better self, the new man in Christ Jesus that Paul speaks about, is an individual experience. There is no priest, teacher, philosopher, or psychiatrist who can tell us that or give it to us; it is an unfoldment that we obtain from the Infinite through the spirit of truth, when we are willing to make the effort.

For example, we have all known persons who have recognized the bad habits and faults in themselves and have joined the church with the idea that their faults would vanish in the waters of baptism, their idea being that some force outside of themselves would make them godlike. They have been disappointed and have said that religion never did them any good. It never entered their heads that they had to do anything; they believed that all would be done for them. One should be so converted and so thoroughly filled with the desire for the good life that all his faults would have no more hold upon him; then he would have little difficulty and could say truly that religion had redeemed him. We must join our forces with God if we are to be blessed.

There is nothing that can help us either to teach or to learn unless we have faith enough in it to put it to work.

In the ancient wisdom teachings, the question is asked: "What is that learning which man knowing, knows all?" and the answer: "Man, know thyself, and thou knowest all." It has been whittled down for us to the "Know thyself," of Socrates. He was accused of corrupting the youth of Athens because he was trying to teach them to understand themselves; for this he was condemned to death. There are many people today who are as fanatical about allowing youth to learn life's deep lessons. In fairness to all people, it is credible that Socrates was condemned by a small majority of Athenians.

ing the Jews greater opportunities and privileges in their promised land.

ENLARGING UPON our former explanation of "the land the rivers [armies] have spoiled [pillaged], we note that in World War II, leading daily papers described the movements of soldiers from the United Nations as "a third stream of soldiers, pouring in on the enemy from America, in battle in Italy"; the "battle is continuing, with United States and British warships pouring more men and artillery"; "Canadian troops pour into Africa by thousands"; "Russian troops are pouring into Poland"; "the Allied Army pours troops through Nazi lines."

Therefore, in the light of the foregoing, we should feel assured that North and South America are "the land shadowing with wings"; that the United States of America is especially favored above her sister countries; and that Jerusalem and Palestine are "the land the rivers [Roman armies] spoiled," A. D. 70—not by rivers of water, but by well-organized, armed soldiers as was seen in that heavenly vision by the Prophet Isaiah in 697 B. C. (chapter 18, verses 1 to 3). The two special lands were not definitely named by the prophet, only described.

NOTE: In the foregoing, the writer assures the reader that the "land the rivers have spoiled" refers to Jerusalem and Palestine, not to North and South America with their destructive over-flowing rivers of water, that the "people terrible from their beginning . . . a nation meted out and trodden down . . ." refers to Israel (the Jewish people) not to the American Indians (Lamanites).

This Is Life

REFLECTIONS BY NORA B. MOSER

AT EASE

“ONE DRINK puts me at ease with people to whom I feel inferior in social situations,” declared a refined and intelligent young man when the subject of drinking came up. He had received a better than average upbringing and education and came of a fine family. He had risen rapidly in his profession and had a bright future before him. Yet, somehow, when he met his business associates at social affairs, he felt he lacked their sophistication, and he took a drink to put himself at ease. You will say you know the rest of the story—soon he took two drinks, then three, and he became a habitual drinker and ruined his career and his family. No, nothing like that has happened yet, and I don't think it will, but the young man is acting on a fallacy.

It is true that a drink will put one at ease, but let us examine the mechanism. From earliest childhood, an individual is continually developing self-control. The baby learns to focus his eyes, guide his arm movements, walk, talk, and control his bodily functions. Gradually he learns to suppress fear and anger. He acquires a conscience and the ability to be embarrassed. He tries always to act in the socially approved manner and is sensitive to the opinions of those about him. All these developments are controlled by the higher centers of the brain.

Alcohol is popularly regarded as a stimulant. It is not. Its effect on the nervous system is depressing, as any doctor will tell you. The reason alcohol appears to act as a stimulant is that it depresses the highest brain centers first; the layers of self-control are gradually stripped off. When the highest brain centers cease to exercise control, natural impulses begin to have free rein. The drinker becomes less sensitive to the effect he has on others and loses some of his ability to be embarrassed. This is what makes him think he is more at ease. He gives less consideration to what he is going to say and is likely to become gay and talkative. Apparently, he is stimulated, but actually normal restraint is weakened

Here Is the Writer

Nora is a graduate of Graceland (class of '45) and the University of Chicago. She is now employed as a mathematician at the Army Map Service, Washington, D. C. Lest her profession seem too incongruous with writing, she cites a year's experience editing the "Graceland Tower."

Her ambition is for a home and two careers, all at once. The other career—community service.

and instinctive behavior is let loose. With more alcohol, more nerves are depressed and more layers of control are removed. The brain gets to the point where it can no longer manage coherent speech or even locomotion. The depressant action of alcohol finally results in sleep, just as opiates and other narcotics cause sleep.

THE FALLACY of the argument is in applying a physical palliative to a mental situation. The state of not being at ease is a mental state.

Dulling the sensibilities with a drink has no effect whatever on the cause of the mental state. It is not a remedy at all, only a way of sticking one's head in the sand. Suppose a difficult situation arises and no drink is available. He, or she, who has come to rely on alcohol will be doubly at a loss.

The only line of treatment which will give real results is the discovery and removal of the cause of the feeling of inferiority. There may be a simple tangible reason such as inappropriate dress. It is usually possible to ascertain beforehand what kind of dress is to be worn at a social affair. If one feels deficient in manners, conversational ability, or other social graces, all these can be improved with practice. The most glamorous, rich, "important," or powerful people are still altogether human, having the same parts and passions as the rest of us. To recognize this fact is the key to the achievement of true poise in any circumstances.

WANTED—CAMP HELPERS FOR ZION

PLANS FOR A scientific expedition into China were being made. The list of personnel described at length the requirements for the scientist, radioman, cameraman, and even the cook. The last item was very short. It read: "Camp helper—normal intelligence, common sense, ability to get along with others under adverse conditions, co-operative. No special skills are required." Perhaps no special skills in the technical sense were required, but the human skills of co-operative-ness and getting along with others are special skills which need continuous cultivation and practice. Who of us can claim to be a master or even a journeyman in these trades? Where is the trade school in which they are taught? A person of normal intelligence and common sense can readily learn a technical skill. If he has these human skills, he is also the kind of man who will make a Zion.

New Horizons

MORE IMPORTANT THINGS

PEOPLE ARE ALL that matter, and all people matter.

Mrs. Barnes was proud of her eighteen-year-old daughter, Shirley, who had been out of high school only a few months and was now a stenographer in a law office. It was Thursday afternoon, time for women's meeting at the church, but Mrs. Barnes was too busy to go. Shirley had mentioned that morning that she would spend the evening washing her blouses and hose. Mrs. Barnes decided to surprise her by having them all done. A young girl ought to be able to go out evenings and have a good time with her friends. Mrs. Barnes washed and ironed all afternoon, cooked supper, and then was too tired to go when Shirley offered to take her to see a long-awaited movie.

"Darling, remember those nights last summer, before we were married, when there was a moon like this and a breeze like this? We would walk in the park and talk about our plans. Let's do it tonight!"

"Yes, Jim, and the most wonderful thing is that we have been able to carry out all our plans so far, but tonight I was going to bake a cake for your birthday tomorrow."

"Helen, I'd rather have you tonight than ten cakes tomorrow. Let's go."

"O. K. You talked me into it. The supper dishes can just wait, too. We have more important things to do."

There was company for dinner. That meant a clean tablecloth and the good china. It meant extra work in the kitchen for Martha. She called to Mary to set the table, but Mary didn't answer. Finally Martha went to see why Mary didn't come and found her absorbed in listening to their guest. The guest was, after all, an old friend and frequent visitor. Martha complained to him, "Don't you care that my sister has left me with all the work to do? Tell her to come and help me."

But he said, "One thing is needful and Mary has chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

Mothers naturally want to do everything possible for their children. In babyhood there is little that can be done other than caring for the child's physical needs. This continues to be a large part of an average mother's work until the grown sons and daughters have left home. Education is delegated to the public schools, in which the child is placed as early as possible. Recreation is turned over to organized activities outside the home, to reading, to radio, or anything which does not require the attention of the mother. Mother is left free to be a Martha, who imagines nothing is more important than keeping the house neat, cooking, sending her husband's clothes to the cleaner; in general, making life physically smooth for the rest of the family. Not to be overlooked is the prevalent modern Martha who works outside the home.

There is no virtue in the mother's performing tasks that the children can do for themselves and need to learn to do for themselves. There is no virtue in spending time on household duties to the virtual exclusion of association with the rest of the family. Too many mothers and wives play the part of Martha to their families about ninety-five per cent of the time and are Marys only five per cent. Martha's part will be taken away as soon as the children are in homes of their own, but Mary's part will not be taken away. If it is cultivated properly it will grow stronger all through life.

p. s. Being a Mary is a lot more fun.

FRICITION

WHY IS IT that the people who are closest to us have the greatest power to irritate us? If the neighbor down the street makes a fool of himself in public, we can smile tolerantly, but if a member of our own family makes a slip, which probably no one else notices, we are mortified. It is those closest to us with whom we most often become angry, whom we criticize, and whom we try to reform. The underlying principle is the same as that of friction in a machine. There is no friction between two parts of a machine which are far apart. People about whom we know or care little, who are emotionally far from us, have little power to bother us. Friction is much more likely to arise between us and those to whom we are closely bound emotionally. In the machine, friction occurs where two parts move against each other. Proper selection and finishing of metals and the use of a suitable oil will reduce the friction in the machine. A sense of humor and proportion, along with the oil of good manners, will smooth relations between people.

But some friction is inevitable and also necessary. The belt of the machine must have friction to grip the pulleys. The tire must have friction on the road. A smoothly polished surface is the result of a lot of friction. Friction between people is not altogether bad, either. It is an important factor in the shaping of personality. A well-adjusted person is one who has acquired the polish which enables him to operate smoothly in the social machine, of which his own family is the heart.

Fear or Faith

Fear and faith are never friends
But bitter enemies.
Each seeks control of human hearts
And human destinies.

Faith and fear will never dwell
Together in the mind;
One crowds the other; thus the heart
Doth peace or chaos find.

Fear and faith are worlds apart
Man has free agency
Deciding which shall rule his life
And make him bond or free.
Leona Hands.

wrote: "We sometimes find ourselves changing our minds without any resistance or heavy emotion, but if we are told we are wrong, we resent the imputation and harden our hearts." Ridicule and abuse do not bring about a change of mind, so be considerate. Think of how you would feel if you were in the other person's place. Show respect for the other man's opinions. If you are wrong, admit it. When you are at fault, it is frequently disarming to admit it quickly, even though one of the hardest things for a man to say is: "I am wrong." A man traveling in the mountains of Tennessee where people were very poor, came upon a rude slab in a lonely Tennessee graveyard. On the slab, possibly carved out crudely by the hands of a wife expressing the total tribute of her life to the man she had loved, was this epitaph: HE WAS CONSIDERATE.

Conclusion: Remember that, after all, getting along with people is not only a matter of mechanics and techniques, but a thing of the spirit. William James said, "The human relations are the main thing." Happy human relations are a spiritual achievement. And finally, I know of no better way to sum up the whole matter of the Gateways of Personal Approach than to quote, first from Paul: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law";⁵ and secondly from Peter, "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."⁶

Bishop Wayne Updike reports that in a lecture delivered by Dr. Leonard Harrington to a group of our youth the statement was made that the more recent conclusions of psychologists are that the basic human urges are now thought to be fairly well identified by four divisions: (1) Desire for recognition; (2) Desire for security; (3) Desire for adventure; and (4) The response reaction.

While the above article does not so definitely classify these urges, it does include them in the various treatments accorded to the principles involved.

In our discussion period, following the lectures, inquiry was made as to some practical suggestions for improving our faculty for remembering names. A brief summary of the suggestions is herewith submitted:

1. When introduced to a person, listen carefully to the pronunciation of the name. If necessary, ask for a repetition of the name, and if not clear, ask for a spelling of it. When opportunity affords, look at the person and associate the name, recalling it several times while it is fresh in memory. Practice this consistently and definite improvement in ability to remember persons by name will be noted. Combine this with a deepening, genuine interest and regard for people for the best utilization of our native and acquired skills.
2. Some business men contrive and develop a set of symbols with which they identify and associate people and names. They find this greatly increases their ability to remember the names of customers and acquaintances who are prospective customers. If business men are willing to do this through the profit-motive urge, we should be the more willing to respond to the challenge to do it through the Christ-service-motive.
3. It is true that some persons, by inclination and inherited proportion of gift, have better memory than others. But there is in virtually every normal person sufficient capacity for memory to enable him, by persistent practice and intelligent application, to improve his ability and power of remembering to a remarkable degree.

Young People's Camp at Gardner Lake

A successful season of girls' camps has been reported for this year at Gardner Lake in Clay County under the supervision of church officers in Zion. There were two Oriole camps of eight days each from June 26 to July 3 and from July 3 to 10. There were also two camps for Blue Birds of two days each on July 12, 13, and 14. On July 11 there was a leaders' camp. The total attendance for all of these activities was 424 persons. A fine staff of church workers, both full time and volunteer, served these camps. The girls report a keen enjoyment of their experiences, despite some adverse weather conditions. There were study and activities in pioneering, outdoor cooking, recreation and sports, religious instruction and devotion. The devotional theme was, "We Will Go a Little Further," with daily themes including the following: "Sharing the Gospel," "Helping Others," "Serving in Our Homes," "The Light of the World," "Citizenship," "Prayer," and "Service to Christ."

A daughter, Charlotte Lorraine, was born on July 17 to Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hastings of Hickman Mills, Missouri. Mrs. Hastings is the former Frances Maurine Miller, who attended Graceland in 1945-46.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Skillicorn of Cleveland, Ohio, announce the birth of a son, Wayne Alan, born June 23.

A daughter, Leslie June, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Don Armstrong on July 5 at the Foderbery Nursing Home in Manilla, Iowa. Mrs. Armstrong was formerly Verdine Pearl of Dow City, Iowa.

DEATHS

NESS.—Harriet E. was born February 1, 1861, at South Bend, Indiana, and died July 16, 1948, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. D. Cobb, in Independence, Missouri. As a child, she moved with her parents to Stanberry, Missouri, where she grew to womanhood and married Robert M. Ness on June 2, 1878; seven children were born to them. She and her companion joined the Reorganized Church in 1892 at Haigler, Nebraska; although isolated from the church at times, they taught the gospel to their family, friends, and neighbors. Missionaries were frequent guests in their home. Mr. Ness died February 12, 1933, at Denver, Colorado, and a son, Roy, died on March 3, 1944. Since February of 1946, Mrs. Ness had made her home with her daughter in Independence.

She is survived by three sons: Samuel J. and Archable J. of Denver, and William M. of Independence; three daughters: Ethel M. Cobb of Independence; Blanche A. Conklin of Denver, and Mary J. Cousins of Moberly, Missouri; fifteen grandchildren; thirteen great-grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. Ida Armstrong of Grand Island, Nebraska; and two brothers: James Dowling of Los Angeles, California, and Hezekiah Dowling of San Bernardino, California. Elders Glaude A. Smith and Donald V. Lents conducted the services at Kopley Funeral Home. Final services and interment were in Denver.

LUKE.—Nancy, daughter of the late Tomas and Louisa Taylor, was born September 21, 1865, in Indiana and died at her home in Hillsboro, Oregon, on July 19, 1948. She was married on September 8, 1895, to John N. Luke; eleven children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1902.

She is survived by her husband, four sons, seven daughters, and one brother. Services were held at the Donalson and Sewell Funeral Home in Hillsboro, Elder R. E. Anderson officiating.

DeTRAY.—George Eli was born August 25, 1878, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on July 19, 1948. He united with the Reorganized Church as a young man and remained a faithful member throughout his life. On April 8, 1902, he was married to Agnes Fern Griffiths. They moved to Independence in 1904, where he founded the DeTray Plating Works. He managed the business until 1942, when he sold it to his sons and retired. He was a kindly man whose insight and patience won him the love and respect of many.

He is survived by his wife, Agnes, of the home; two sons: Donald E. and Robert M., both of Independence; two daughters: Mrs. Dorothy Carter of the home, and Mrs. Emily Inouye of Independence; two brothers: Frank DeTray, San Diego, California, and Raymond DeTray, St. Louis, Missouri; eleven grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Elders W. F. Bollinger and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PLATTER.—Sarah Ann, daughter of W. H. and Sarah Jane Myers, was born September 5, 1860, at Jerseyville, Illinois, and died July 20, 1948, at Shidler, Oklahoma. On March 17, 1878, she married Lemuel J. Platter; ten children were born to them. Mrs. Platter had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 5, 1927. Her husband and five children preceded her in death.

Surviving are two sons: George of Drumright, Oklahoma, and Charles of Gorman, Texas; three daughters: Mrs. Alice Gilmore of Baxter Springs, Kansas; Mrs. P. A. Hancock of Newcastle, Wyoming; and Mrs. L. L. Burrows of Shidler, Oklahoma; two brothers: W. H. Myers of Tonkawa, Oklahoma, and Alec Myers of Perry, Oklahoma; a sister, Mrs. Nettie Spurgin of St. Louis, Missouri; twenty-one grandchildren; and nineteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Baptist Church in Shidler, Elder L. W. Kohlman officiating. Burial was at Vinita, Oklahoma, Elder Orien Adair concluding the services at that point.

BRUCE.—Clarence Lester, was born at Princeton, Indiana, on June 20, 1905, and died July 8, 1948, at his home near Oakland City, Indiana. At the age of twenty-two, he was married to Irma May Lytle. On September 10, 1944, he united with the Reorganized Church and became active in the work. He was responsible for the organization of a church school in his home, through which several persons became acquainted with the Restored Gospel and were later baptized.

He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Beulah; his mother, Nellie Giesleman of Princeton, Indiana; a brother, Rolland Bruce of Detroit, Michigan; and three half-brothers:

Dean Giesleman of Indianapolis, Indiana; and Owen and Billie Bruce, both of Richmond, California. Funeral services were held at the Plymouth Baptist Church, High Priest H. W. Burwell and Elder Chester Metcalf officiating. Burial was in the church cemetery.

CRABB.—S/Sgt. Arthur C. was killed in the explosion and crash of a B-29 bomber over Saudi Arabia, on May 11, 1948. The ship exploded shortly after its take-off from the Saudi air field en route to its home base at Salina, Kansas. Sgt. Crabb entered the Army on November 20, 1942, and served on volunteer rescue missions in the South Pacific. After receiving his discharge on December 26, 1945, he re-enlisted, planning to make a career in the Army. He was married to Elinor Jones of Denver, Colorado, last February. As a member of the Reorganized Church, he had a keen interest in the work and was ever valiant in its defense and testimony.

He is survived by his wife; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Crabb of Sandpoint, Idaho; three sisters: Mrs. Ethel Gill of Spokane, Washington; Mrs. Mary Ann Branson of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; and Mrs. Clara Galoway of Greenacres, Washington; four brothers: Herman of Coeur d'Alene; Gene of Spokane; Bob and Ralph of the home; and two grandparents: John Crabb of Sandpoint and Mrs. Mary Jenkins of Vay, Idaho. Services were held on July 10 at the Moon Funeral Home, Elder Ralph Briggs officiating. Interment was in the Seneacquoten Cemetery. A memorial service was also held at Furstenfeldbruck, Germany, on May 18.

CRAMER.—Charles Anson, son of John H. and Cedora Cramer, died at his home in New Philadelphia, Ohio, on May 6, 1948, at the age of seventy-eight. One of the six charter members of the New Philadelphia congregation, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church when he was sixteen. He served in his local branch as a teacher, priest, and elder.

CRAMER.—Minnie, died May 12, 1948, six days after the death of her husband, Charles. She served the church as a teacher and branch secretary for many years.

Brother and Sister Cramer are survived by two daughters: Mrs. Bruce Angus of Gary, Indiana, and Mrs. Quay Briggs of New Philadelphia; four grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. Brother Cramer also leaves three brothers and two sisters. Services were held at the Kaserman Funeral Home, Elder William Goudy officiating. Burial was in the Evergreen Cemetery.

JONES.—Rachel Jane, was born June 7, 1871, at Malad, Idaho, and died July 1, 1948, at her home in Malad following a paralytic stroke. She was married to William P. Jones on January 14, 1891; four children were born to them. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 7, 1920, and was an active worker in the Ladies' Aid. She was also a member of the Oneida County War Mothers.

She is survived by her husband; one daughter, Mrs. Mae Pieper of Walla Walla, Washington; a son, William Jones of Malad; three grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. Two children preceded her in death. Elder Arthur Stoff of Salt Lake City gave the funeral sermon, Lawrence Budge and E. E. Richards assisting.

* HELP WANTED!

This is an appeal to church writers—to people who have resolved to dedicate a part of their time and talents to the service of the church through the medium of writing.

Our principal need at the present is for a particular type of script that we call a "lead article." A good lead article occupies a prominent position in the publication. It should be from two to four "Herald" pages in length (from six to twelve typewritten pages, double-spaced). It should be serious, thoughtful, and of good literary quality, of a type that can be understood and enjoyed by all readers, and at the same time merit the attention and appreciation of cultured and educated people—the students, teachers, and professional people among our readers. If we can have at least one such article in each issue of the "Herald," we feel fortunate indeed. We like to have each issue of the "Herald" contain something that members can show to their best friends and be proud of it.

We have a constant need of other articles of many kinds and lengths, on many subjects. And we appreciate every publishable article, story, or bit of verse that is sent to us.

Because the "Herald," like some other religious publications, does not pay for manuscripts, we have some difficulty in keeping up the supply and filling our pages with good material. It takes a lot of asking. No business manager ever had to beg for donations of paper on which to print the "Herald." No foreman would expect to get anything if he asked for free type or metal, or a new machine. But the manuscripts—the one thing without which there could be no publication—must be obtained as donations. The editors must beg for them. Well, when begging is a part of your job, you have to keep industriously at it. And here we are!

Seriously, our publications are as dependent on the help of dedicated volunteers as any local congregations and churches are. This is a task in which something more and better is wanted than we could get from paid professional writers. People who write professionally, for all publications, could not simulate the quality of church members who know the doctrine and the church, and feel as our people do. People who write for us do so because they love the work; they would not write for pay because it would not be worth their time.

This is not a comfortable or easy time of the year for writing. People are too warm, or are away on vacations, or at reunion. But the pages must be filled, and articles are needed to fill them.—L. J. L.

* THE FOUR LIGHTS

They have installed, over the editorial desk, at considerable expense, one of those modern fluorescent illumination units that are supposed to do marvels for the eyes, the personality, the mood—and for everything, including the shoe-laces. It takes only four tubes, four feet long each, to do the work of an old-fashioned filament bulb three inches across. Such are the achievements of science. But if one doesn't work some morning you have the other three.

When you push the button, do you get light right away? No, you do not. You wait and wonder. Then you repeat the ancient words, "Let there be light." The Editor has named them in the order that they come on. First is Eager, bright as a big smile. Ten seconds later, Willing shows up. Ten minutes later, Reluctant, flickering dourly, adds his bit of pallid glow to the ensemble. And, with good luck, Stupid comes on about nine-thirty!

How Is Your QRM?

IN RADIO COMMUNICATION the operators have a language of their own—the “Q” signals. QRM in the interrogative means, “Are you being interfered with?” You cannot successfully hear more than one station at a time. One is always interference, or QRM.

A former radio man, I have often thought of QRM when, as a dinner guest in a Christian home, I have seen the difficulty when the blessing is said at the table. Too often, the radio is blasting forth soap operas, hit parades, tobacco auctioneers, and the latest jive at just about that time. Even the guest nearest the one offering the blessing finds it difficult to hear that prayer. I sometimes wonder if God hears it. It doesn't show much respect to him.

So I have been working lately on a device that, when the “Head of the House” puts his elbows on the tablecloth to say grace, will cut the radio off for the duration of the prayer, or at least diminish the volume so that the pious will not be disturbed, and the others will not lose the program.

Unfortunately, I have not yet been able to perfect a device that will operate for every individual at other times in his daily life. There is a great deal of QRM these days so far as God is concerned. In fact, he is having a hard time “getting through” to us. After so many repeated attempts on his part, there is little wonder that he may not at first hear us when we do decide to set up communication (QSO) with him.

There are times when it would be good for us to turn off the radio, and all other forms of QRM, to attend to our more serious business of talking—and listening—to God.

AUDITORIUM NEWS

PRESIDENT J. F. GARVER and Sister Garver have made their home for many years in Lamoni, where their children grew up and where they took a very active part in the life of the city. Brother Garver's work at the Auditorium has required him to be away from home much of the time, which has caused him considerable inconvenience. He and Sister Garver have temporarily established their headquarters in Independence, while retaining their home property in Lamoni. The Independence address is the Wood Haven Apartments, 307 West Kansas Street.

TSUNAO MIYAMOTO, Bishop's Agent for Hawaii, is in the United States for a visit to church headquarters and to some of the reunions. Sister Miyamoto is with him, and they have visited the Zion Reunion and the reunion grounds in Michigan. At present, they are in Lamoni. Their plans will not permit them to remain for General Conference.

EVANGELIST ALBERT CARMICHAEL will celebrate his eighty-fifth birthday on September 14. He has spent considerable time in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital as a result of a bone fracture. Friends are planning to remember him with a shower of birthday cards or greetings and letters.

GULF STATES DISTRICT has had a notable record of baptisms for the first six months of 1948, a total of 121. In addition, there were five more baptized at the district reunion at Brewton, Alabama, July 9 to 18, and one more at Lone Star, Alabama, making a present total of 127. Of these, W. J. Breshears, district president, baptized 65. City records are as follows: For Alabama: Mobile, 25; McKenzie, 8; Flomaton, 6; Robertsdale, 3; Janes Mill, 3; Bay Minette, 2; Birmingham, 2; Bayou la Batre, 1; For Mississippi: Escatawpa, 15; Van Cleave, 13; Ocean Springs, 13; Pascagoula, 11; for Florida: Pensacola, 9; Belleview, 6; Pensacola (colored group), 4.

AUTOGRAPH PARTY. One of our contributors, Geraldine Wyatt (Mrs. Roy A. Wyatt of Independence), who has written articles, stories, and a book, “Dawn of Peace,” for church publications, is having a book published by Longmans, Green and Company, which will be issued on August 25. On that date, from 3:30 to 5:30, the author will be present to review her book, “Buffalo Gold,” at our Herald Bookstore, 227 West Lexington, Independence. Sister Wyatt is currently working on an article for the “Herald,” on another book, and other projects. In the Middle West, she is being asked to make a number of trips to meet authors, publishers, and the reading public. “Buffalo Gold” is written for teen-age readers and will also be of interest to older readers, since it deals with the story of the pioneer development of this area, its locale being in Kansas. She will autograph copies of the book for purchasers who would like her to do so.

EUGENE A. THEYS, President of the German and Swiss Mission, sends a report dated August 5: “The work in the German Mission is going in leaps and bounds. Already this year we have baptized 153. I believe it is reasonable to say that we will easily baptize 200 fine people this year. We have started three new missions since the first of the year, and one of them has baptized twenty-three persons.”

The Gods of War and the Prince of Peace

IN THE GREAT DEMOCRACIES of the world, people have the freedom to be useful citizens, or to make nuisances of themselves. With all the distresses and inconveniences that result from that freedom, we think it is worth-while because of the happiness and welfare it gives us.

A few months ago, millions of good people were feeling rather impatient with a prominent national labor leader for the trouble he was making. Some wished for a dictatorship so that he could be simply and effectively liquidated, without a lot of fuss over legal technicalities. Fortunately, these people did not have their wish, and nobody now feels any great antipathy for him.

The troublemaker is not always a labor leader. Sometimes it is a capitalist, sometimes a bad politician. The responsibility is about equally divided. What the general public does not realize is the fact that back of every such disturbance there is some genuine problem or trouble afflicting a large group of people, and they are seeking relief. They do not always have an adequate means of informing the general public of their complaint, and they are often misunderstood.

LET US TURN our attention back to that labor leader. We can learn something from him, so that when trouble comes again, we may see it in a clearer light. That man was a symbol of the freedom and independence of the ordinary private citizen. He was, in a way, representative of all of us. He held no political office. He had no military rank. The only power he had was that of the common man, the everyday voter. The only rights he had were the rights that all of us enjoy. Yet the strongest government in the world was not able to intimidate him, silence him, regiment him, nor incarcerate him so long as he obeyed the regular laws to which we are all subject. He could stand and answer congressmen without fear of chains or reprisals, and, when his rights were invaded, he could defy them. The chief executive of the land was restrained by law from taking any but certain prescribed and permitted actions against him. As an ordinary citizen, the labor leader had all that power. Is not that citizenship a very wonderful thing?

Now if our government were like certain other governments, that labor leader would either be in charge of all of us—an indubitable misfortune—or he would be resting quietly in the earth beneath some brief memorial inscription—equally a misfortune, for the reason that all our liberty would be buried there with him. You can't make a prisoner or a slave out of another man without doing the same thing to yourself. Force is a chain with two ends, and it is attached to humanity at both of them. The fetters that bind the slave are also fixed upon the master. Booker T. Washington said, "You can't hold a man down in a ditch without going down into the ditch yourself."

YET ALL OF US RECOGNIZE that in the present time of the history of the world we face grave danger, and that every internal dissension, whatever its character or source may be, weakens us and threatens the freedom that all of us cherish so much. Industrial warfare is a foe, and we could come into bondage by it. The gods of war are as dangerous on the industrial front as they are on any military front. The Prince of Peace is needed to bring order and harmony into all our national relations. If we could ever learn to ask enough and not too much, fair settlement of all troubles would be easier to attain. But when both sides are determined to give as little as they can, and to take as much as possible, peace is hard.

THROUGH THE YEAR, articles and pictures have appeared relating to the troubles in Palestine. Hundreds of people have been slaughtered on both sides. Millions of dollars of property has been damaged or destroyed. Both Arabs and Jews are poorer and more distressed. It appears now that both sides are heartily sick of the warfare. It has brought no real solution to the problem.

From the time that Joshua led the hosts of Israel into the land across the Jordan, with an order to destroy or drive out all native inhabitants, what we call the Holy Land has been the scene of repeated experiences of bloodshed and violence. War has solved some problems, it is true, but it has always left the greater problem—of how people are to get along with each other—unsolved.

THE GODS OF WAR have no brains, no heart, no principles, no honor. They stir up strife by repeating a part of the facts, and concealing others, mixing them with propaganda, and serving them up in a dish of hate and fear. Who can tell what is true and what is false in the mass of material we are reading and hearing? Not until the war was over did we begin to learn the extent to which we were the victims of deception from the highest and most trusted of officials of state.

The Prince of Peace has not yet been given a full hearing in our present dangers. He has not been heard by either side. The war spirit is a bad thing wherever we find it. We may have to fight to defend ourselves, but we are very foolish if we start the trouble or provoke it. There is a peaceful, Christian way to solve all the problems and settle all the troubles in the world, if people on both sides can be fully informed of the truth and will work together for the right. Elder Peisker Passes

It is with regret beyond words that announcement is made of the demise of Elder E. A. H. Peisker at the Independence Sanitarium on August 3, 1948.

Elder Peisker and Elder Donald Alberts, general church appointees to the Australasian Mission, were in the United States for benefit of the observations, experiences, and associations incident to such stay, their visit here to be terminated with the General Conference in early October.

It was in the midst of his journeys and labors, July 6, to be exact, that our brother, after former and lesser attacks, was stricken by one of extreme severity. The professional opinion and statement available to us and confirmed by a post mortem examination was and is to the effect that Brother Peisker had for some indeterminable time sustained a serious kidney disease, far advanced on his arrival in the States. A kidney stone more recently developed necessitated operation for removal of same. This kidney was totally destroyed, and the other so badly affected it could not carry the load, so death ensued.

Every attention and care known to the medical and nursing professions were given him, but to no avail. The earnest prayers of the Saints, and daily administration of the elders, were, however, answered in bringing reasonable freedom from distress to our brother and comfort to his devoted wife who arrived in Independence on July 27 and was in constant attendance until his passing. The church, therefore, as does the family, bows to the inevitable in the confidence that the grace of God still abounds, and that his will is being worked out in the experience of our brother and in the cause he so faithfully served.

Services were conducted at Walnut Park Church in Independence, on Saturday, August 7, and inter-

A Day of Fasting and Prayer

In view of the urgent need for divine guidance in all the work of the church, and particularly in the forthcoming General Conference which will convene Sunday, October 3, we ask as many of the Saints as are so minded to join us in fasting from the evening meal Saturday, September 4, to the evening meal, Sunday, September 5, or such part of this period as may be wise, and in remembering the Conference, the Church, and the Kingdom in earnest prayer during that day.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

Israel A. Smith

ment, as desired by Sister Peisker, was in Mound Grove, the church cemetery here, in the midst of many of his brothers gone before, and with whom he had labored in a common cause.

So has gone to his rest a good man. Noble in character, dependable and diligent in service, Elder Peisker enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all with whom he had lived and ministered during the thirty years of his endeavor as a representative of the church in Australia and New Zealand.

We extend sympathy to the bereaved and express confidence our brother's fellow workers throughout Australia and New Zealand shall close up the ranks there and go forward in "the work entrusted to all."

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By J. F. Garver.

Thanks From Sister Peisker

Sister Florence Peisker wishes to express her sincere appreciation for the many kindnesses she has received from the Saints on the way to Independence and during her stay there, and also for the kind expressions of sympathy she has received since the passing of her husband, Brother Hermann Peisker, at the Independence Sanitarium.

BRING IT BACK

---Alive!

By Verda E. Bryant

I STOPPED TO TALK a moment with a neighbor, who casually remarked that her teen-age daughter had just returned and "brought reunion back with her." I could not help replying that it would be wonderful if each one who had attended Zion Reunion could have truly brought it back home.

For nine days at Gardner Lake, men and women, boys and girls, the rich and poor, the learned and the unlearned, mingled Zionically under the spirit of the reunion. Together they lived, worked, played, worshiped, and had fellowship one with another, and God walked with them.

From all reports and my own observation, the classwork was of an unusually high quality, stressing the down-to-earth needs of people today, as the theme, "We Lay the Foundation for Zion," was unfolded.

The prayer services brought us daily to a closer walk with God. Under the powerful influence of the Holy Spirit, the word of God came to the aged, the young married people, the youth, and those from the islands of the sea; with it, a wave of determination and dedication swept over the group. Person after person, from the aged to the very young, bore testimony of his devotion. One child of twelve summers testified that many times she had felt a desire to serve her Master, but now she knew that she must do so.

UNDER THAT influence, Zion could be built tomorrow if each person there could bring the spirit of the reunion home, keep it alive in his heart, and evidence it in his every action.

But what happens when the reunion is over? We talk about the wonderful experiences, our desires to follow Jesus, and express our appreciation for his many blessings; but just before we reach home, we drift back into our pre-reunion routine. Day by day the spirit of the reunion sinks farther and farther into the recesses of our minds, and we do little or nothing about it.

One person, who found it necessary to return Saturday evening, remarked of being very tired after the strenuous week and of an intention to sleep till noon the next day. How can one, who has so recently sat under the power of God's Holy Spirit, fail to desire to worship with his fellow Saints at the usual Sunday service? We forget so casually. I wonder that God has patience with his faltering children.

WHAT CAN WE DO to keep the spirit of the reunion alive? Let us analyze what at reunion aroused our desires to follow in the footsteps of the Master.

First, we attended two classes daily—that's study. We certainly can't attend two classes a day, throughout the year, but we can spend some time in the reading of God's word and meditating upon it.

Second, we spent over an hour each day in prayer, meditation, and singing praises to the Lord. We can't devote that much time daily to concentrated prayer, but we can pray, sing, and think as we work. Scrubbing, ironing, and dishwashing take only brawn—not brain power.

Third, we fasted with a purpose. The united fast brought definite results as the prayers of all were consolidated. Have we learned the value of this method of worship so as to apply it in our own personal devotions?

Fourth, we expressed the desires of our heart, before God and man, to serve at whatever task came to our hands. Was this merely lip service, or did we really mean it? Will we be willing to prove it when something needs to be done?

Fifth, we visited with each other and became really acquainted. We tasted the sweet fellowship of those of like faith and were strengthened. Need we stop after coming home?

Can we, from now on, live in such a way our Savior will be so reflected in our lives that others will wonder what makes us as we are? Will our lives cause them to want to investigate the gospel so they might have for themselves that which we reflect to the world?

What does it avail us to have attained the mountaintops if we allow ourselves to sink back into the valley?

IF WE KEEP alive the spirit of reunion from day to day, and renew and revive it by church attendance, consecrated service, and fellowship, the perfect plan will be established first in our hearts, then in our families, communities, and country, and the establishing of Zion will be hastened.

Yes, whenever we have been influenced by the Spirit of the Lord—whether at reunion, district meeting, prayer service, or conference—let us make an effort to bring it back—alive, and fan the flame to keep it burning in our hearts.

What Are We Waiting For?

A father was telling his young son about Zion, picturing to him the wonderful condition that will exist when Zion is a reality. He ended by saying that we must all work together so that someday we can have Zion. The boy looked up at his father and asked, "Well, what are we waiting for?"

It is stated in the Doctrine and Covenants a number of times that Zion will be redeemed. The prophets in Bible times also spoke of the reality of Zion. Those Book of Mormon leaders who looked down to our day, spoke with much assurance of a Zion in the latter day. It is good to have a strong faith based on such assurance, but it is also well to remember what Paul said, "Faith without works is dead."

What is Zion? This is Zion: the pure in heart; a spirit of brotherly love in which we love our neighbors as ourselves. We must recognize the time element in the building of Zion. Growth takes time, and there must be a continuous development.

I came across a statement in my notes but do not recall who made it: "It isn't always clear just what we are waiting for, but we persist in waiting so chronically that life slips by, finding us still waiting for something that has been going on all of the time."

Zion is in the process of being established right now.

This is our day, and it is passing. What are we waiting for?

"Blest Be the Tie That Binds"

BY MARIE GOSLINE

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA is predominantly Roman Catholic, and the community in which I live is composed mostly of Catholics. It is a good community—it is the sort of place where, as soon as one has moved in and become settled, the neighbors each bring some little gift and come to call. One of the first "neighbors" who made his appearance at my door was the parish priest. He came to find out if we were Catholics or Protestants. He is a good sort, and I liked him at once.

Loving your neighbor is a simple matter when you live among those of like faith, or at least among those who speak the same language—or is it so simple? You and I both know there are times when even the best of us don't really love our neighbors. But what if that neighbor were a Jew instead of a Gentile, or a Catholic instead of a Protestant, or a heathen instead of a Christian? I keep telling myself that since we Latter Day Saints are so few in number, since we are in the minority, we can't all live within a stone's throw of each other. But is less expected of me because I live outside a branch? No. Jesus expects me to keep my lamp trimmed and burning. He expects me to love my neighbor as myself. And believe me, that's a pretty big order. Sometimes it is almost too big a pill to swallow. I must always remember that Jesus didn't select only a chosen few for my neighbors. He didn't pick a certain half dozen for me to love. When he said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," he meant for me to love everyone with whom I have any dealings—everyone with whom I come in contact.

JUST HOW STRONG is the "tie that binds"? Is it strong enough so that it can hold only my own circle of Latter Day Saint friends? Or is it big enough and strong enough that it can hold all my neighbors? Because of that tie, is my lamp the brightest in this little corner of God's world? Because of the "tie that binds our hearts in Christian love," am I more brave, more courageous? Or am I, simply because I cannot go to my own church every Sunday, a "weak sister"? Does the "tie that binds" make me a better neighbor, an easier person with whom to live? Does it put a real smile each morning upon my lips? If it doesn't, it isn't very much of a tie.

It is well for me to remember that Jesus came to all peoples. He came to save my Jewish neighbor on the left, and my Russian neighbor on the right, just as he came to save me. Simply because I am a Latter Day Saint does not make me any better than they are. But, if being a Latter Day Saint makes me a better neighbor, a truer friend, and more Christlike in my dealings with my brother, then my feet are treading in the right direction.

"The tie that binds" is made of elastic. It can hold within its grasp anyone who calls upon the name of the Lord. It is also magnetic. It draws all people and holds all people securely within its reach.

How strong that tie is—how many it can hold within its reach—depends upon me—one dim little candle burning in this corner of God's beautiful field.

Shades

I cast a shadow on the ground—
Ephemeral it seemed,
For it was only lasting
While the sunshine beamed.

I cast a shadow on a heart—
Eternal, it did last,
For it remained thus heavily
As years of darkness passed.

Experiences in Church Work

Selections from the autobiography of

J. W. A. BAILEY

PREFACE

I WAS BORN at Staunton, Virginia, in 1877, on the thirteenth day of May, which day has since been designated by the government as "National Indian Day."

My father's name was John W. Bailey; he was born in the state of New York. His father's name was William Bailey.

My mother's maiden name was Adelaide Utzler; she was born January 21, 1858, in Rockingham County, Virginia. In 1890 she was baptized by Elder F. G. Pitt.

My mother's father was Christian Utzler; he was born in England. He fought in the "War of 1812" under General Jackson at New Orleans. He died at the age of one hundred four.

When I was about six years old, my mother and father separated, a thing I have regretted very much, but in spite of this unfortunate affair I was brought in contact with the church—the Restored Gospel.

In the summer of 1884, my mother, my grandmother, Mary Ann Utzler, and my little brother, Vernon Hayes, came to Aullville, Missouri, to the home of my grandmother's sister, Mrs. Sarah Grimm Logan.

My mother met a man by the name of Samuel B. Davidson to whom she was married some time later. My stepfather had lost his first wife, leaving him with several children. I baptized Jesse G., the oldest, and his wife years later at Warrensburg, Missouri.

Though my stepfather never united with the church, he respected our faith and always treated me kindly.

After my mother married Mr. Davidson, we moved to Marshall, Missouri. There I went to school for a few years.

Early Experiences

DURING MY CHILDHOOD DAYS at Marshall, I had several dreams or night visions, most of which dealt with great wars, such as are spoken of in the Bible, that were and are to take place before "the end." The war dreams were very impressive and have never left my mind. Since becoming a minister I have made special study on the "last great wars." These wars serve as an index to the end of time.

When I was about ten years old, I had a wonderful dream. I saw a great highway with many people working on it. As far to my right as I could see, this highway looked very smooth and fine, but where I was standing there were people working on it, removing stones and stumps. To my left I saw that it was being built through a great forest. I saw men felling trees and taking out stumps and stones; others were smoothing the ground. While I was looking on, a messenger clothed in white appeared and commanded me to work on the highway. I said to the messenger, whom I took to be the Master himself, "I am too young to do this work." And he answered, "If you do not work on this highway, you cannot have eternal life." The dream then closed.

Years later, after I had united with the church, I attended a reunion at Washington Park, now known as Mount Washington. President Joseph Smith presided. At one of the prayer services I briefly related this dream, adding that while I did not know what it meant I had been greatly impressed by it.

As nearly as I can remember, President Joseph Smith said to me, "If you are faithful, you will be called to work on this highway."

At that time I had no thought of ever being called to preach the gospel.

Moved to Independence

IN 1889 we had moved to Independence, locating on West Maple Avenue, almost due north of the Stone Church.

Here we first heard the gospel. An elderly man, Joseph Chester, was distributing tracts. He came to our place and asked if he could leave some tracts and call later to answer questions. My mother, a liberal-minded woman, said she would read them.

One evening Brother Chester came quite early. He talked about the Book of Mormon, trying to prove its divinity from the Bible. I was not old enough to understand much of what he read. When nine o'clock came we young folks were told to go to bed. My two stepbrothers went to bed, but I lay down on the floor with my head over the stairway so that I could hear what Brother Chester said. He was still talking about the Book of Mormon, quoting and reading passages from the Old Testament. When he quoted the tenth to twelfth verses of the eighty-fifth Psalm and explained it, the Spirit said to me, "That is true . . . It is the Book of Mormon." When I arose from the floor, I was determined to unite with the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church.

I would like to say a few words about this Brother Chester. He was the city pound master. He was the only man I have ever seen "turn the other cheek," when tried. Once he had a case up in court over some animals he had picked up. After the trial was over, the man who lost the case walked up to him and struck him a hard blow on the cheek. Brother Chester then turned the other cheek, but the man did not strike this man of God the second time.

Baptism

IN 1890 my mother was baptized by Elder F. G. Pitt. On January 25, 1891, by grandmother, Mary Ann Utzler, one of my stepbrothers, and I were baptized in the old font in the yard of Elder F. C. Warnky on West Lexington Street by Elder Pitt.

Shortly after being baptized, I lost contact with the church. I regret very much this loss of time.

On August 18, 1896, I married and settled at Warrensburg, Missouri. Shortly after this, Elder M. T. Short was sent there to answer several Utah Mormon elders. I attended Brother Short's services.

It was after this that I can say I received the baptism of the Spirit. It came to me like a living fire, burning within me, so much so I shall never forget it. For months, even for several years, I was impressed with the idea that I would have a work to do in the church, but, being uneducated, I tried to dismiss the idea from my mind. Later Elder Mels Abrahams, president of Pleasant View Branch, suggested to me that I might be called into the ministry. I told him that while I was willing to do what I could for the Lord's work, I did not believe I could serve in the ministry, not being educated for such work. He then said, "If you are willing to do your part, God can and will use you in his work." This I little understood at the time.

Study

WITH A BURNING DESIRE in my heart to know more about the work of God, I set about to study. I read in Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5 that I should "study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books." I immediately began to collect a library of good books and read them, but in spite of all I could do I felt very much discouraged. For those who feel as I felt, I wish to say that I believe in education, in all that one can absorb and use; for the finer the training, the finer the work performed should be.

I have greatly regretted many times that I was not permitted to get an education. What little I did get, I had to dig out the hard way. However, I thank God for his divine guidance in this matter. Often I received interpretations of important points of the Holy Scriptures by the Spirit. In fact, it was by the Holy Spirit that I was enabled to coordinate the Scriptures on a number of important subjects, the greatest of all being the mystery pertaining to the divinity of Christ. In studying this all-important subject, I discovered that the Scriptures were written double—one in script, the other in symbols. The script can and has been changed at times, but the symbols have remained the same from the beginning of time. In studying these symbols, I discovered that there are a number of mysteries or hidden points pertaining to Christ's divinity. (See Matthew 13: 46; Philippians 3: 7-10; Colossians 1: 26, 27; Romans 16: 25, 26, and Luke 10: 23, Inspired Version.)

I have often felt that if God could use such an unpolished, uneducated man as I, then his work must be divine. And here I wish to say, "Thanks be to God of Israel for his divine guidance, for his unfolding of the Scriptures to my spirit's understanding." To me this God is all in all.

When I was a little past twenty-six years old, I received my patriarchal blessing through Patriarch Henry Kemp. This blessing foretold of my work in the church, and it has been a comfort to me all during my life. I felt the Spirit when it was given and every time I read it. During this time, we attended Pleasant View Branch; services were held in the Pleasant View schoolhouse about seven or eight miles northwest of Warrensburg. I was the superintendent of the church school, a task I much enjoyed.

Warrensburg

ABOUT A YEAR later I was called to the office of priest. A short time afterwards George E. Harrington, president of the Independence Stake, asked me to make an effort to establish the work in Warrensburg. In doing so I had a wonderful experience. Apostle J. F. Curtis, then assistant minister in charge, visited our group. On May 30, 1909, the branch was organized by Apostle I. N. White, President George E. Harrington, and Bishop R. May. I was called to the office of elder through Apostle I. N. White and was ordained by Apostle White, G. E. Harrington, and R. May. I was then appointed branch president.

An experience came to me at the first service we held after I had been ordained. It was at a prayer service. I asked Brother A. H. Johnson, a priest, to take charge. He had been my assistant for several years and had never refused to do anything asked of him. He said, "I think you ought to preside tonight," which I did, asking him to assist. When I took my place in the stand, a very strange feeling came over me. I felt as though someone had put an extra coat or cloak on me, and in a flash I was given to know that I was acting under greater authority than I had before. I was also made to feel the responsibility of this new office.

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world . . .

Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. . . . While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light.—John 1:6-9; 12: 35, 36.

WITHOUT A DOUBT, one of the greatest of God's physical gifts to man is the sun. Besides being the center of the universe, it is the source of life-giving light—light that characterizes day from night. When each dawn breaks, light bursts forth to give generously of its blessings to all men. The word "Light" itself has come to mean free from that which encumbers.

When the sun sets in the west and darkness covers the earth, many of us wait expectantly for a new dawn. If we are engaged in an important task at eventide and the light slowly fades, how necessary is the light of day for the completion of our work! It is true that we have developed artificial light to aid in our endeavors, but it is beset by imperfections that may at any moment disrupt its usefulness. Only the light given by God is sure and true.

As the sun is the transmitter of light, it is also necessary for receivers to be tuned to that light, or it goes without fulfilling its capabilities. A blind man may spend his entire waking hours in the light of the sun, but, discounting its other benefits, it gives the blind man no more than the dark of night. If we go into a closet and close the door, the sun cannot reach us, even though it sheds its ray of light to all the hemisphere.

While we may walk in light or darkness, there is a middle ground as well. When walking through the Homestead at Nauvoo the other day, I glanced out the window to see only a tall, straight elm tree grotesquely represented through the pane of glass. It was in the light of day, but that light was misrepresented, not by the transmitter nor by the receiver, but by a medium. A medium may also diminish the brilliance of light. Many times the noonday sun has seemed dull and lusterless by clouds that veiled the sky. God's gift of the sun contains, then, the perfect physical light, but it can be altered or lessened in brilliance even to complete darkness by the receivers or the medium through which it has to travel.

HOW LIKE this physical light is the spiritual light given by our Lord, Jesus Christ, who said, "I am the light of the world."—John 8: 12. The light of the gospel through Christ is God's greatest spiritual gift to mankind. As the sun is the source of all physical life, so also is the gospel in its fullness the source of all spiritual life. The degree to which we receive this light may be due to our own receptivity or to the medium through which it has had to pass, but the source of light, Jesus Christ, is always emitting its fullness to all who will receive.

In years past the gospel has shone forth in its fullness, but those blind with the material have been unable to receive. Others have been eager to partake of the blessings of light, but the medium of time and idolaters had changed and distorted the light so that it was unrecognizable as the radiance of our Lord.

Speaking to Nicodemus, Christ said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3. Christ, the Son of God, gave us the way by which we can receive the light of the gospel to its fullness without the distortion of time or medium. We must be born again. A mere plunging under water can do more physical than spiritual cleansing; however, through Paul, the disciple of Christ, these necessary requisites and prerequisites are given:

1.—Faith. As faith is so commonplace in everyday affairs, we sometimes fail to realize its importance. What would happen if we should suddenly lose faith in the knowledge of our doctor, the skill of our telegrapher, the honesty of our grocer, the efficiency of our banker? We could be unwilling to cross the street without faith that automobiles will obey the traffic lights. We could not visit our druggist for fear he would not know poison from medicine. Truly, our community life could not be without faith.

Paul tells us in his letter to the Hebrew nation that faith is the assurance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen. By faith that the knowledge we have at our disposal is correct, we can go on to even greater knowledge. John Rush-ton puts it this way: "Faith is adventure into the unknown in the light of what you know." By faith, farmers plant crops in the spring, believing they will harvest their livelihood in the fall. By faith, men follow road markers, believing they will be led to their destination.

We have seen that faith cannot be passive; it must be active. "Faith without works is dead."—James 2: 26. We may have the greatest faith in the skill of our doctor, but unless we call him to our bedsides, we may die still believing his skill could have saved us. We may have the greatest faith in the science of aeronautics, but unless we step into an airplane and experience the thrill of skimming over mountains and valleys, we can never really know what that faith in other men has brought about. We may have the greatest faith that we can learn to play the piano, but unless we strive to master the keyboard, we can never produce music. Faith is the motivating force of all creative endeavor.

Can we not apply this faith in the spiritual realm as well? Before we can partake of the light of the gospel which will lead us to closer communion with Divinity, we must have faith in God, the Creator, and in Christ, the divinely appointed revelation. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me."—John 14: 1.

Juan Valera sums it up for us in the following statement: "Faith in an all-seeing and personal God elevates the soul, purifies the emotions, sustains human dignity, and lends poetry, nobility, and holiness to the commonest state, condition, and manner of life."—Dictionary of Thoughts, page 164.

2.—Repentance. Or as the Apostle Paul tells us, "repentance from dead works."—Hebrews 6: 1. With faith in God and his eternal purpose, we can turn our hearts toward repentance, not only repentance from those things that are degrading but also repentance from those things that do not aid us in our quest for the better life. Repentance is turning away from a sinful course of action. We cannot be truly repentant if we are merely sorry that we were caught in a sinful act. We are repentant when we turn completely away from that course of action. This repentance will cause a man to "cease to do evil" (Isaiah 1: 16) and "learn to do well" (Isaiah 1: 17).

Brother Elbert A. Smith has stated the two objectives of repentance as to get right with God and to get right with one's fellow men. It is a necessary step toward the doorway that leads to eternal light. There is ever present in this world the forces of good and evil. As long as man's free will allows him to choose the way of evil, there is a necessity for repentance. Even Paul complained that evil was ever present with him when he would do good. "For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do."—Romans 7: 19. The very fact that we are subject to good and evil allows us to choose so that we may learn by choosing. Sometimes the choice is incorrect and the necessity of repentance arises. If this repentance comes, we continue to grow.

Repentance is, then, one of the first steps toward God, and only through faith and repentance can we ever hope to partake of the blessings of the light of the gospel.

3.—Baptisms. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5. Baptism is the doorway through which we enter into the glorious light of the gospel. If we have faith in God and repentance in our hearts, we know that through his Son he has set baptism into the church as the way by which we can place ourselves in a position to receive the abundance of the blessings of the gospel.

Some have said the mode of baptism or even baptism itself is not important; it is what happens in our heart that counts. It is true that what happens in our heart counts, but it is also true that throughout the struggles of man, symbols have become a necessary part of his existence. Christ, our elder brother and our example as the Son of God, led the way by being baptized as a symbol. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead . . . so also we should walk in the newness of life."—Romans 6: 4. "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins."—Acts 22: 16. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Romans 6: 5. In the act of baptism, we tell our Heavenly Father that we are placing ourselves in a position to receive divine help.

But that is only half of the doorway. We must be baptized of the water and of the spirit. Again Christ has placed the symbol in his church by which we can comply with his law. When the people of Samaria received the gospel and were baptized with water, Peter and John were sent to them—"Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost. (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)"—Acts 8: 15, 16. It is interesting to note that only certain men were authorized to officiate in the laying on of hands for the baptism of the Spirit. Peter and John were sent to the people of Samaria, as Philip had only the authority for baptizing with water. With baptism in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and with the authority of the priesthood performing these sacraments, we can enter in and receive the fullness of the light of the gospel without distortion or diminished brilliance.

CHRIST HAS SET the pattern in his teachings. We must only "open our eyes and behold." Let the light shine through. By the principles outlined, the distortion of the true light by way of the medium is done away with. Only as receivers is the light misrepresented. Let us wash the windows of our soul so that the full brilliance of the light of Christ may shine in our hearts.

"While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be children of light."—John 12: 36.

The Gracious Way

The famous Madame Récamier said that she always found two words sufficed to make her guests feel their welcome. Upon their arrival she said, "At last!" and when they took leave she said, "Already?"—Mrs. Burton Kingsland in Ladies' Home Journal.

THE LIVING CHRIST

In Religious Education

This article was written by Mrs. Glenn L. Bishop of Ashtabula, Ohio, as a part of the assignments in the Leadership Training Course No. 131, "Exploring the Church," taught by Mrs. Dorothy Davidson of Madison, Ohio. The course is furnished by the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

By SHIRLEY BISHOP

ALIVING CHRIST was one of the unique facets of the Restoration Movement. It was the first prophet of the Restored Gospel who bore witness: "And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him [Jesus Christ], this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him; even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

It was the same prophet who records seeing the Living Christ in answer to his first spoken prayer: "I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head above the brightness of the sun; which descended gradually until it fell upon me. . . . When the light rested upon me, I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other) This is my beloved son, hear him."—Church History, Volume 1, page 9.

These messages and testimonies were a great beginning to "a marvelous work and a wonder" that God gave to the children of men—a living Christ to direct his Restored Church in the religious education of the world.

This was a most unique and arresting thought for the church in the day of its founder to introduce and with which to convert the hundreds and thousands who heard its doctrine. It is just as effective a challenge and factor in the missionary efforts of the present prophet and his followers to use in the conversion and religious education of the world today.

Making the living Christ a vital factor in religious education is a prime necessity in the establishment of Zion, for Zion is the practical embodiment of the principles of life as he lived it. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father and I will love him and manifest myself to him."—John 14: 21. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 35. Unless we have this love of the living Christ, we can in no wise assist in the building of his kingdom. To those seeking to qualify as Zion builders, the fact of the living Christ must be more than a faith, it must be a knowledge; it must be more than a belief, it must be an accepted fact.

Wise sayings of the ancients are good to hear. They make fine sermon texts and may be used as springboards for high resolves, but a living friend and savior who sees and knows your every trial and temptation, your every effort and failure, is easier to follow, easier to emulate.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, say the teachers and leaders, must begin before a child is born. A mother, believing in a living Christ, reads, studies, ponders the work of God in her heart that it may nurture the soul of her child as she supplies strength for the growth of its body. Religious education to the child for the first several, highly important years of his life is almost solely the work of the mother. Sometimes the father helps and most certainly the atmosphere of the home life is of great importance, but it is the mother who teaches the child his first lessons in religion. Love, faith, charity, reverence, kindness, cleanliness, and obedience are all Christian virtues which, to be most lasting and effective, should be instilled in a child during the first years—the first months of his life.

The best method of teaching is example. Don't just tell your child that Christ lives and sees and understands all that we do; live so that you can show the child by your example what Christ expects of him in obedience and love. Have pictures of the ministry of Christ in your home, so that your child can become familiar with his face. Talk often about him; talk often with him. Make daily prayer a natural habit—a welcome quiet interlude—not something forced upon your child with such insistence and in so stiff and commanding a tone that he learns to resent it and dread the pious singsong announcement, "Now we'll have prayers." Tell stories of Christ as a child to your child (Mark 2: 40-52). Tell how he loved little children, how he took them in his arms and blessed them (Mark 10: 13; Book of Mormon, Nephi, chapter 8, page 649). Tell how he would do it if he were here, if the children were good, if they kept his commandments.

Make this keeping of his commandments important because of his great love—because it is such a happy feeling to know you deserve his love and have done nothing to hurt him or make him unhappy in his love of you. Help your child to know and understand this.

Teach your child early the meaning and significance of the sacraments of the church. There's a story I've heard of a little girl who was very ill. Her parents were worried because she was a frail child and thought of sending for the doctor. But the child, not quite three years old, solved their problem: "Send for Uncle Billy [their pastor], Mommy. Tell him to put Jesus' oil on my head, and I'll be just fine." They did as the child asked, and she was healed instantly. So little children can know and love him as a living Christ, a living friend, and religious education thus launched is far-reaching for good growth and Christian character.

MANY YOUNG PEOPLE believe that because Christ died a bachelor, the temptations they know in their teens were never experienced by him. I wonder if they stop to realize that one of the most beautiful of the women of his day tried to tempt him, sought him out to see what manner of man he was. When he saw her, he understood her motives and, even though he recognized her purpose, he sought to save her by rebuking the evil powers that had taken possession of her soul. She was a harlot and adulteress, but she became a good woman, loving and beloved of all who knew her and the first to see the Savior upon his resurrection (Luke 7 and 8; John 20). Christ lived as we live, loved and was tempted as we have loved and been tempted, was crucified and overcame death and temptation. He did it to show us the way. "Whither I go ye know and the way ye know. I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me."—John 14: 4, 6. And because he lives, we too shall live.

See that your young people learn to keep the living Christ as their confidant and friend in the painful processes of growth that are so puzzling and full of pitfalls.

Let us as adults get to know this man Jesus, once called by Bruce Barton, "The Man Nobody Knows." Learn to know him and love him, that you "might keep his commandments" (Doctrine and Covenants 22). Learn of his teachings to the Israelites (Matthew, chapters 5, 6, and 7). Learn of his appearance to Nephi and his followers, in the Book of Mormon (Nephi, chapters 5 and 6, pages

By SEVENTY F. EDWARD BUTTERWORTH

IT WOULD BE VERY DIFFICULT indeed to point out two identical personalities in the posterity of Adam. Even so-called identical twins invariably differ widely in tastes, loyalties, and emotions.

It is, therefore, impossible to form a rigid policy to govern procedures in closing with prospects. Procedures may vary widely, even as personalities differ.

There are, however, certain fundamentals of approach which can readily be inculcated into every aspect of missionary endeavor. We will do well to consider seriously the following fundamentals:

Spiritual Equipment of the Missionary

Faith is the most important weapon with which one can be armed—a faith developed through prayer and fasting. Paul says, "Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the adversary."—Ephesians 6: 16. But it is also necessary to have one's "loins girt about with truth," "having on the breastplate of righteousness," with "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."

We cannot lay too much stress on the words "preparation of the gospel." It is not the gospel which needs preparation, but the bearer of this good news. After sufficient preparation, one feels better equipped to fight the good fight of faith. The gospel then becomes to him a "sword of the spirit." Summing up, Paul strikes the perfect chord by his exhortation, "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit."—Ephesians 6: 13-18.

If we have put on this "whole armor of God," we are then ready to execute procedures in closing with prospects.

Physical Equipment

Slides, pictures, and charts for home use can be effectively employed if the material is of standard quality and relevant to the purpose of the visit.

The home of the prospect should not be a testing ground for slipshod or ill-prepared equipment. Moving pictures of doctrinal importance in relation to our own church beliefs should be developed by our younger priesthood members or informed laity for future use. Wire or tape recorders should someday be a part of the missionary equipment of every branch.

Personal Appearance

It goes without saying that one must be neat in his appearance, clean in his dress and person, and carry himself with dignity, but not appear exalted or superior. First impressions sometimes hinder final decisions.

Virtues of Ministry

1. Know the Scriptures and be able to unfold their mysteries with clarity.

2. Be fundamental, following closely former teachings found in books or tracts previously authorized by the church. (Some of these may have found their way into the library of the prospect.)

3. Listen patiently to the prospect, without cutting him off in the middle of the sentence, having anticipated his thought.

4. Do not dominate the conversation, but encourage the prospect to express himself. This benefits you in two ways. First, you have a clearer understanding of his problem, which will save time; and again, he will feel obligated to listen to your answer when you finally speak.

5. Look straight at the prospect and listen as he speaks. Do not, however, stare at him. If there are several in the room, show respect to all of them as equally as you possibly can.

6. Be affirmative and positive in all your commitments before the prospect. Do not criticize nor apologize for the teaching of your church. Above all, do not attack nor mention disparagingly any other church, for you may unwittingly injure the faith of the prospect.

Suggested Procedures

1. It is my personal opinion that general church representatives should not be expected to spend several weeks in a given branch doing house-to-house contact work in preparation for a church series. This should be done by members of the local priesthood or standing ministry.

A. A general man should give a general ministry. Localizing him lessens his prestige in some localities; in country or rural communities this is not so likely to be the case.

B. We do not mean to imply that this should be followed religiously throughout the church. It could work effectively only in large branches and fully organized districts or missions. New openings and struggling branches could benefit greatly by the localization of a general church representative. This, however, impedes the progress of the church at large and suggests a lack of man power or weakness of policy.

C. Neither do we mean to imply that a general representative should not engage in cottage meetings, but that these cottage meetings should follow the formal church series. The missionary then could be asked to contact first those whom he has reached during the formal church series. If he has sufficient time, he could contact others of the community.

2. The formal church series has established the minister and made the first indirect approach to the prospect. The prospect will be honored by the minister's visit in his home. He can then answer any questions which may have arisen in the prospect's mind during the series.

3. Avoid suggesting questions in order to have something to answer, but answer confidently every question propounded.

4. If you cannot answer the question at that moment, be frank to admit it, and promise an answer as soon as possible; then fulfill the promise.

5. Be sure that the prospect is ready, then give him a personal invitation to join with you in your faith. This is a deepening of your friendship and a climax to your efforts in his behalf.

6. Remove all fears and doubts from his thinking, and show him the advantages of membership in the church.

In Conclusion

Remember that you are touching your prospect's life in a moment of great decision. Be careful not to disappoint him. Be sure that he is converted to the church and not to you.

Let the Spirit direct you in all of your contacts with him, and carry him on your heart. Pray frequently for him in your private devotions.

If these foregoing suggestions are followed closely, you should not need to memorize other rules governing procedures in closing with prospects. This personal preparation augmented by the Spirit of God is sufficient to cope with any combination that may confront you in missionary work.

OAKMAN • JENNINGS

Here are games, puzzles, and projects teaching the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. It is distinctly Latter Day Saint with a Zion-building flavor, and is written to provide recreation and training in the Three Standard Books for tiny tots, children, Leaguers, and adults.

It will be helpful for use in homes, at church, in classes, and in reunion work.

Correction

We wish to request our readers to make the following changes in the article by Harold I. Velt published in our issue of July 24.

Page twelve, eighth line of first paragraph should be "telling" instead of "selling."

Second column, nineteenth line from bottom should read "literally," not "liberally."

After number seven, second column, the reading should be, "The other sheep referred to by Jesus were not of his fold in Palestine." A new paragraph should begin with the words "From archaeology," etc.

"The crucifixion is recognized" should read, "That he was crucified is confirmed by the association of the cross in connection with his worship by the ancients."

Page thirteen, last column, second paragraph should have the word "that" inserted before the word "what."

Be Still - - -

By MRS. RUTH WALLER NELSON

THE VALUE of being still is realized generally and, when practiced, its benefits are recognized. For at the quiet heart of things, there is a power and direction only contacted in moments of communion or quietness.

How necessary, then, for everyone to take time out from the manifold duties and stress of days to follow the command, "Be still and know that I am God." Especially can this be a blessing in the lives of mothers and homemakers, harrassed as they are at times with problems needing answers and solutions which seem beyond human wisdom. How many vexations and difficulties can be smoothed away by the peace which comes by being quiet and hearing the still small voice that speaks to us when we are calm and attentive. Too often we pray and miss the answer or blessing because we fail to be quiet and meditate and receive the leadings of our Father.

We read of the lives of great men and see how necessary they found it to withdraw themselves from noise and confusion and think quietly. A general, for instance, seldom goes into the thick of the battle, but remains where he can "listen" to the intelligence which has shaped his plan of action. The Bible contains many exhortations to stillness. There is the experience of Elijah who heard the words of God not in the whirlwind, nor the earthquake nor in the fire but in the "still small voice" which followed these storms. Christ went alone into the wilderness to pray and commune with his Father. Paul, after his conversion, went into the quiet of Arabia.

THE DISTRACTIONS about us are wearying, but in silence comes calm, tranquillity, peace and strength—all pleasant words of fruitful meaning. How often we have wished for these after a sharp or hasty answer which we would give much to recall, but there is no power that can do so. Sometimes a poem, verses from a favorite book, or a picture can help us to become calm and relaxed.

How much more our church services could mean if we entered the sanctuary—which it truly is if God meets us there—and sat silently listening to the prelude of music which too often is unheard because of the noise of whispering or the arrival of latecomers.

I am reminded of a little church built deep in the heart of a Tyrolean valley. It was crudely built and without windows because of the scarcity of glass; the only openings in the walls were apertures near the roof for ventilation. The villagers who attended the services carried lighted lanterns, and as they took their places, the little church became bright with light, the only dark places being where lanterns had been forgotten or where members were absent. How bright and uplifting our churches could be if everyone brought the Spirit of God like a lantern lit in the heart, together with the spirit of peace and quiet.

WORDSWORTH SPOKE of beauty as that emotion recollected in tranquillity which, if we are so gifted, we can shape into poetry. One of the greatest musicians was not able to hear even the rhythms of

PRESENTING THE AUTHOR

Mrs. Nelson is the second of six children of Patriarch Gilbert J. Waller. She was born in England when her parents were on a visit to their homeland. Her birthplace was in the Lake District known as "the home of the poets," as Coleridge, Cowper, and Wordsworth lived there. Her childhood and youth were spent in Honolulu, T. H., where she lived at Waikiki Beach and enjoyed swimming and boating. There were trips to California and England, and later she studied music and languages in Leipsic and Paris and traveled in many lands.

She was married in 1912 to John H. Clegg, who was injured in World War I and passed away a few years later. She was baptized in 1916 and has been active in church school work and the Department of Women. She is also interested in dramatics and has helped several young groups in the church put on plays. In 1946, she married Edward W. Nelson, an elder and pastor of the Golden Gate Branch of San Francisco.

Mrs. Nelson has been one of the most active members of the General Council of Women since its organization in 1934 even though she has not been able to attend meetings. Her ready response to requests for material and for suggestions as to policy have always been appreciated and helpful; her sincere devotion to the cause of the church is evidenced in every letter she has written to headquarters. The church should call to its cause the finest type of people who are willing to add to their abilities and obtain true culture and then give these to the Master in service to others. Sister Nelson is one who has done this, and the Women's Council is fortunate to have her as a member.

Food Nutrition

Physical Cause of Poor Appetite

By Mabel McKeiv, R.N.

A. Disease

The digestive tract is composed of the mouth, tonsils, pharynx, esophagus, stomach, intestines, pancreas, and liver. The mucous membrane covering the tongue is the only part of the alimentary canal visible, and indicates the condition of the mucous membrane in the lower digestive tract. In health, the tongue often has a light uniform coat, which upon indication of indigestion, catarrhal conditions, and fever becomes heavily coated. There is also a characteristic appearance of the tongue in several diseases which, along with other symptoms, aids the physician in his diagnosis.

It is well to follow in detail the instructions of the physician when appetite is lost, inordinate or perverted, due to disease. It may mean a temporary withdrawal from food, but liquids—unless otherwise indicated—should be kept up freely, as ordered by the doctor. The return to food should be slow and gradual, using first easily-digested food and increasing amounts as indicated by satisfactory assimilation. Regularity of eating when habits are again established is important.

B. Hygienic

Lack of fresh air, sunlight, exercise, and sleep will have a detrimental effect

God" is one for which every Latter Day Saint woman should strive. It would give that poise and influence in our lives which is so much needed today—which would flow from our lives into the lives of others and pervade our homes as a blessing to all who enter through our doors. Such homes are needed more now than ever so that those who are tired from the contact with the world can stop a while and rest, then return to their labors refreshed and cheered with new hope and inspiration. What greater challenge can a Zion woman have than to live her best by study, prayer, and the enduring spirit of the Christ who calmed the storm and reassured his disciples in a floundering boat with his "peace, be still."

upon the processes of digestion. All of these essentials depend on one another for normal growth. Improper diet may cause a child to sleep poorly. All small children need a daily nap.

Exercise is the body's method of utilizing the energy produced by the assimilation of food; when taken out of doors, exercise is more beneficial. The fresh air provides adequate oxygen, which is often missing in crowded, close quarters; sunshine, besides being pleasant, furnishes Vitamin D and is effective in destroying bacteria.

The food that the child has eaten is used to supply energy for play and other activities while he is awake. His activities are cut down to almost nothing when he is asleep, and his food can be used to renew the tissues that have been worn out by the day's play and to build new tissues.

C. Dietary

Too short intervals between meals or piecing frequently may cause bad eating habits and diminish the desire for adequate nourishment. If the child has been ill and requires additional food, include it at a regular hour each day besides the regular meals. The normal healthy child will find regular mealtimes sufficient if his diet is balanced, attractive, and served in pleasant surroundings.

Overfeeding in general or with any one food should be avoided. This does not mean to keep an adolescent on the same diet that was sufficient at nine or ten years of age. Growth makes new demands for which increased portions of food should be supplied. If the tendency should be toward too much of one food, i. e., milk, the meal might be served first, then include the milk when the meal is partially eaten. By this time, a good portion of other foods needed will have been consumed.

Too much of foods rich in fats slow digestion. Lack of vitamins, food idiosyncrasies, a constipating diet, or too much sweet or starchy food may be the cause of lack of appetite.

It is the parents' responsibility to see that the food is procured and prepared, with regular mealtime habits established from infancy. This takes planning and effort and the mutual co-operation of both parents, but is well rewarded with the benefits derived in health and happiness to the family. As a child grows older, he can share in the responsibilities of meal planning and preparation, thus helping to ease his parents' burdens; at the same time, he will develop knowledge and skills that will be beneficial throughout life. Children can learn to assist with such tasks as setting the table, preparing vegetables and fruit, taking out the garbage, shopping, placing chairs at the table, doing dishes and numerous other tasks essential to family meals. As they grow older, they may be allowed to prepare the main portion of the meal, later including the desserts. This is not only educational, but helps them to evaluate the effort and time needed for the proper preparation of meals. It is human nature to appreciate more the things we have to work for.

Psychological Causes of Poor Appetite

A. In the Child

Negativism, desire for attention, attempt to obtain desires, interest in other things, and the desire to go out and play all have a part in the battle for good nutrition habits. Mealtime may be the one time when parents give the child too much attention, either positive or negative, and often he doesn't mind which it is, just so long as his need for attention is being met.

Naturally, we want co-operation, so it is well to set the stage early for pleasant, harmonious relationships at the table. Adults do not enjoy being "nagged" about their eating—neither do children.

B. Attendants

Too many attendants, each with a different method, are confusing to the young mind. Haphazard methods used by those in charge are soon contagious, and the spirit of "lack of purpose" is catching.

C. The Technique of the Meal

Forced feeding may cause an antipathy or dislike for food, not just because it is a particular food item, but because of the undesirable association of being made to eat it. At the Children's Hospital the general rule was, "First course eaten, dessert to follow"—no arguments, no fuss! The fact was made clear in a kind manner, and when the first course wasn't eaten, the dessert was withheld.

An over-solicitous, hovering attitude is caught by the child. Are you comfortable when eating when someone is eternally passing or pressing food upon you? No! Well, neither is he.

Unpleasant surroundings at meals, too much talk about eating habits, emotional strain at the table or before eating, too much time allowed at meals, too much

Learning and Teaching

in Church Work

By Ermina Erickson

7. The Mysteries

If we can learn the mystery of our own being, we will then be able to understand something of the mysteries of the Bible. Paul refers often to the mysteries in his letters, but we understand that he was writing to those who were familiar with the Kabbalistic teachings of the Hebrews. Paul himself was taught by Gamaliel and was familiar with those mystic teachings, and there is nothing in his writings to indicate that he no longer believed them even though he had accepted Jesus as the Great Master. The real reason for the crucifixion of Jesus was the fact that he was teaching the people to understand what is now referred to as the mysteries. Paul's writings are a curious combination of the Kabbalistic and the common views held by the people of his time. A person might now go to the library and ask for a book concerning the Kabbala and get a book on numerology and the like—something entirely foreign to the true Kabbala, which is not written. One might be able to obtain a copy of the Sepher Yetzirah, called the "Book of Creation," which is more or less a book explaining the Kabbala.

If self-knowledge be the great knowing, we may ask why, then, all the ramifications of science, religion, and philosophy—why not some simple way to this superior knowledge? It all depends upon the individual who is seeking truth, or the understanding of himself. For some, only a scientific explanation of things will suffice to reveal the causes and purposes of existence, while another may find out more concerning himself and humanity through the philosophical approach. Still others learn to draw near to the Divine Self through the heart or religious feeling. This is the mystical revelation, the way of simplicity taught by Jesus. (John 14: 6.) Any teaching becomes simple to the understanding after the proper steps have been taken that lead up to the point.

8. The Way to Wisdom

A great many persons prefer to wander through the mazes of many experiences before they seriously consider any searching for wisdom and understanding.

We learn by teaching that we cannot allow ourselves to be limited to one narrow line of reasoning; we need be cognizant of the one religion and the many avenues of approach to it.

Through teaching, we learn that truth is of more value than anything in the world of contradiction and materiality, though many problems and difficulties may assail us, seeking to turn us aside. Anyone can sometime be mistaken or deceived, but if he learns a good lesson thereby he is the better for it. It is only the person who has the same difficulties over and over again who is not getting the lesson that the experience holds for him.

No one should hold himself in continuous condemnation for mistakes, neither should he allow others to scold or browbeat him for them or remind him frequently. That only establishes a consciousness of the wrong and leaves nothing to build rightly upon; it is a knocking-out of the props. We learn as we teach, and we teach as we learn; if we can profit by the mistakes of others, so much the better. That gives us no right, however, to condemn them; rather, we should bless.

It is not just the weak who need sustaining; any one of us may come to the place where we need the helping hand of friendship, the compassion of our associates. It is so very easy to slip into ungodlike ways if we are not alert, or if we get to thinking we are about the best there is. "When ye think ye stand, take heed lest ye fall," is good advice.

9. Reciprocal Benefits

It is a common fault to belittle others for things done or undone. No one seems to realize that he is helping to fasten these failures upon others more firmly by criticism; he is also preparing fertile ground within his own consciousness for similar faults to grow. Talking never cut the weeds in our garden; they seem to grow faster if we talk about them. We are cultivating our friends' weeds when we talk about them, and are keeping the seeds of their mistakes alive long after they should have been forgotten. The talk we send out about others is a picture of our mental house; if this is destructive, we should quit in our own interest.

We learn a great lesson when we realize that all good, all progress, all development and reformation begin with the individual. Everyone who sincerely begins to unfold himself into the Christ pattern has an urge to help others find the light. The expanding process of his individual development reaches out to others. His consciousness of the needs of his fellow men, his desire to have them share the same happiness, keeps the spirit of brotherhood alive. It is the answer to the query of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Each individual works out his own salvation, but in so doing he assists others. In reality, we have only that which we share; what we do is returned to us. It is the law of compensation constantly working for us, and we do not know it. The process of salvation is individual and, at the same time, a collective enterprise.

10. Self-Reliance, and the Open Mind

In our study, as well as in our teaching, we learn to discriminate between those who are worthy of our help and those who merely expect something for nothing. There are in this world, sad to relate, those who have no desire to do for themselves; they blame all of their "hard luck" on others, or believe that the rich should care for them, or that whatever organization they may join should shoulder the responsibility for them. They expect others to do for them, even though they are able. We learn that the only real help anyone can render to others is that which will help them to help themselves. We are not doing right when we do for others what they should do for themselves, we are only "spoiling" them and making them weaker. Our responsibility ends where another's begins, and we should never overstep the mark, no matter how much we would like to do for them. We rob others in this way many times. This is a mistake parents so often make; the child becomes dependent because it has been denied the right to grow into responsibility.

We can learn from anyone, but not all can learn from us. The mind of another may have reached its capacity and be closed and unable to receive, but we need not allow that to happen to us. The mind can be kept pliable through use; age has little to do with it. If we go among the wise, we shall not be able to contain all they have to teach us; if we go among the ignorant, we may see our own reflection. Do we resent the less-informed or the better-educated? If so, we need to examine ourselves. What does a stupid person call to mind—contempt, humor, or compassion? This is the test of our

Supports Mission's Abroad Program

After reading the Bishop's report on the Mission's Abroad program, I wonder if we have realized the wonderful opportunity that was placed before us. Can we afford to let such an opportunity pass? How happy we were when someone made a sacrifice to bring the gospel to us! How many times we have been blessed by its power! Then we realize how the people in other countries might feel to have someone make a little sacrifice by sending ministers to tell them the gospel story and bring them the joy and happiness that we ourselves have felt. To me, this is one of the greatest opportunities that could be offered to anyone. There are many of us who are not qualified to do the job ourselves, but we can give of our money and our prayers.

It is true that this project was given to the young people, but I don't feel they should be expected to do it entirely alone. If they succeed, it will be because we who are older have stood behind them and helped them. This is a project every one of us should be interested in. There are branches that do not have an organized young people's group, but the members could make a contribution for the branch as a whole. I do not think we have forever to accomplish this work. The opportunity is now, and if we don't do what we can, the opportunity may be taken from us and given to a people who will make the effort. I am sure that if we try to do our part, God will help us.

Sister Vol Roster and I are the only two Saints in Rogers, Arkansas. We were baptized in 1913 by James M. Smith at a series of meetings held in the Pine Log school. When I heard the gospel message, I knew it was what I had been looking for. I have tried to live as a Saint should, but it is difficult when there is no church of our faith to attend. We sincerely hope the Latter Day message will again be preached in our town.

learning. How do we regard the dirty "down and outer," the sinner? That is the test of our hearts. It takes a lot of compassion to be able to see all people as Jesus saw them.

If we find it past our little ability to instruct them, we have no more to do than to leave them in the care and keeping of God.

11. Home as a School

Almost everyone agrees that education is the answer to all our problems, both civic and private, and that is more or less true. It is not so much that we lack education, but we are educated to be ignorant of what is most worth-while. We leave much to the school and church, but more is left to the street, and it seems that the street is teaching us more about life than any other place. All things pour into the street—from the schools, the factories, churches, dives, and so on. All these influences are fused and return into the home, there to be evaluated for the development of the oncoming generation. That is all the education we ever get if we remain one with the mass of humanity.

Experience teaches us that the home is the starting place for the good life; it is the hub of our existence, and we should live well. Life is to be lived, not sacrificed in a mad scramble to get more of the world's goods. Living should be a pleasant experience, but we will have to make it so. Children should be the flower and fruit of our living and not a trial or problem. They are not problems unless we make them so. The child who grows into a problem is homemade and doubtless has been denied the sustenance of understanding love. Love does not produce unlovely things.

If we desire to teach, we can look to the home and parents as the most logical points of contact. The greatest desire we have in our efforts to teach is the desire to awaken in parents and others the realization of their duty and opportunity. Children are not so stupid that they cannot see our faults and failures; but if we take them into our confidence and explain that we do not know everything, they are quite willing to help us to help ourselves. The child is a wonderful teacher, and the home is more or less a communal affair. I have never seen a child yet who, if he understood that his parents were struggling to be better people, would not help himself in his efforts to help them. The child needs and likes a certain amount of responsibility; however, there are parents who, on learning that they have a willing child, sometimes overburden him. Above all things, a parent should have common sense. One of the best methods of helping a child to control himself is to allow him to help you control your fits of temper and discouragement. If you want the love of your child, let him do things for you and not always be doing for him. Your child likes to do things if he receives a measure of appreciation; he won't hate work unless you give him the idea. He is reflecting you for a long time; he loves as you do, and hates as you do. The best way to balance his emotional life is to balance your own. In your teaching you can learn to face life courageously, and he will know it and do the same. Remember, the child came into your home from choice to learn the lessons you could provide for him. He is your instructor, and you are his, so it is up to you to make the most of your opportunity. As parents, we are the child's first teachers; if we are quarrelsome, we can expect our children to be the troublemakers of the neighborhood. If we are living suppressed and unhappy lives, our children will reflect that attitude among others. We can never hide ourselves as long as we have children; they proclaim us from the housetops. The blessing of it all is that they are so often better than we are.

12. Freedom in Learning

Nothing comes into our lives unless we create the need or cause for it. Perhaps we need a certain lesson, so some great difficulty arises. We often resent things which, if properly evaluated, would add considerably to our understanding. We very often learn more by giving out what we have experienced than our students can learn from us. We learn early in our work that it is quite impossible to put knowledge into the mind of another. We all have, thank God, the privilege of receiving or rejecting whatsoever we will. It is the exercise of this faculty that brings to our knowing all that we have, both good and bad.

The Master has gone ahead of us and has given us many precepts which, if we be wise enough to use, will make the journey more pleasant and far more interesting. The best we can do is to inspire others to seek learning, for in wisdom there is life.

We may ask many questions as to the desires of the individual, or again we may say sharp things to sting his mind into activity. It does not matter much how one is encouraged to learn, if he will only get to work on it—if he will just take time to think. We need to know enough about the other fellow to see from his standpoint and enough about ourselves to understand the situation. We encourage the timid and direct the bold. We all should consider the fundamental quality of impersonal love and the wisdom of self-knowledge.

Ascent to the Summit of Mount Fujiyama

By WILLIAM VANDEL

William Vandel, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Vandel of Kansas City, Missouri, attended Westport High School, Kansas City Junior College, and the University of Kansas, where he majored in architecture. After receiving his degree, he worked for a while as an architect in Kansas City, and then accepted a civilian position with the War Department. While stationed at San Francisco, California, he began the study of Japanese, as he knew the Army needed men who could speak and read this difficult language. After an interview with Army officers, he was sent to the University of Michigan to complete his study. Two years later, he went to Japan where he served with a counter-intelligence unit in Shizuoka. After a year and a half, he received his discharge from the Army and returned to San Francisco. Then government officials asked him to accept a position as architect with the Far East Air Forces, so he and his wife, the former Ruth Kolb of Rolla, Missouri, are now living in Tokyo.

"The Ascent to Fujiyama" is an account sent by Mr. Vandel to his cousin, Alice Vandel Bolon of Davis City, Iowa, who submitted it to the "Herald" for publication.

IF YOU HAVE ALWAYS HAD a secret ambition to climb to the summit of some famous mountain, then come along with us as we make the ascent of Mount Fuji, the sacred mountain of Japan. There are many mountains in the world which are higher and more difficult to climb, but there is probably no single peak as beautiful as this almost perfect cone rising to a height of nearly 12,500 feet above sea level.

One sunny afternoon, five of us—Edward Osten, Alvin Ching, Theodore Kitchen, Jim Graeff, and I—gathered at the CIC house in Shizouka, loaded up the jeeps with food and rations, water, warm clothes and a miscellaneous collection of impedimenta which we thought would be useful for the climb.

The drive of fifty miles from Shizouka to the base of Mount Fuji passes through valleys in which new crops of rice are growing, along the sea coast where the breakers rolling from the Philippine Sea crash against the rocks of the shore with great explosions of white spray, into a beautiful valley down which cascades a rapid mountain stream, and thus to the town of Fujinomiya, headquarters for mountain climbers who are undertaking the ascent from this southeast or less-used side. Most climbers start from the east or north and follow the most accessible path from the town of Gotamba.

In Fujinomiya, we picked up the guide whom we had previously requested—a small, wiry Japanese man with a weather-beaten face, carrying a huge pack on his back and looking very worried about guiding his first party of Occupation Army Soldiers. He relaxed a little when he found that some of us could make ourselves understood in his language—and a few American cigarettes put him in an almost jovial frame of mind.

Leaving the center of town, we threaded our way in second gear through the narrow streets teeming with children, shoppers, cart-pullers, and Japanese trucks, past the typical tree-shaded shrines and out into open farming country, climbing all the while. Fields of vegetables, corn, tobacco, and rice bordered the road. Occasionally it was shaded by tremendous pine trees growing on either side and forming a cool, green tunnel.

Hiking along the road toward this same objective were numerous bands of Japanese pilgrims dressed in white and carrying wooden staffs and large knapsacks. Lacking transportation, they had to start the climb from the railroad station in the town, which added about fifteen miles to the journey.

We continued climbing, now in low gear as the road became steeper, rougher and narrower, until we came to the forests which clothe the lower slopes of the mountain.

AFTER A LONG PERIOD of quiet, our guide—who had been crouching on the tip of the back seat of the jeep and holding on for dear life—suddenly came to life and said we were at the beginning of the climb, the first station—actually a small Japanese inn.

Out popped the proprietor, his wife, and a maid; they carted our gear into the little straw-roofed building where a kettle was singing over the small charcoal fire. Soon we had our beginning cup of a long series of cups of Japanese green tea—we drank tea all the way up to the summit and all the way back, until we automatically thought, as we approached each rest station, "More tea, more hot tea." But we really did need it for the water it supplied, since we could drink none of the untreated water at the stopping places.

Here at the first rest station of Ichi-come, as it was called, we opened and ate our supper of K-rations, changed into warm clothes and boots, parked the jeeps in a safe place, stored our extra "junk," bought long octagonal staves to use for the climb, and bade good-by to the proprietor.

The sun was just setting on this Saturday night as our party of six entered the dark, narrow tunnel of trees over the mountain foot trail and started the weary way up.

Loose sand, gravel, rocks, roots, and water, all at an angle of about forty-five degrees, made the trail difficult to navigate; soon it was quite dark, and we were using our flashlights. For what seemed hours, we struggled through the quiet dark woods on and up, stopping often to rest; only the heavy breathing of the members of the group broke the eerie silence.

At the next rest station—a rough shed spanning the trail—we caught up with a party of Japanese. These pilgrims did not rest long, but soon shouldered their heavy bags and were off like big birds up the trail.

THE MOON CAME OUT and a little of the moonlight filtered down through the heavy forest. This stretch of trail seemed endless, and two of our group—Al and Jim—began to find the going pretty rough.

About midnight we came to a clearing and saw the immense bulk of the mountain looming over us, the summit seemingly as far away as when we had started. This decided it for Jim and Al, with their blistered feet becoming more painful at each step, the only sensible thing for them to do was turn back. At the next rest station we consoled them, saw them safely into the little hut where they were to spend the rest of the night before being guided back to the jeeps, and bade them good-by, wondering which of us would be next.

On and on . . . up and up . . . sliding back . . . stumbling over rocks . . . we saw the woods beginning to thin out; there were vistas of the moonlit valley below and the mountain above.

At one o'clock on Sunday morning, we stopped at the fourth rest station and entered the low smoke-filled room where many Japanese climbers were bedded down under the thick quilts in rows on the matting floor. Here we broke out more K-rations and had our midnight supper; we even ate the coffee sugar in hopes it would produce some quick energy.

Off we started again in the bright moonlight, drawing our jackets tighter around us and shivering even when we were doing the violent exercise of climbing. A couple of hours before, we had been dripping with perspiration and gasping for breath in the hot, damp woods of the lower slopes of the mountain.

Now that we could see the summit of the mountain and realize the task yet remaining for us, we began to fight a mental battle, trying not to think of the long hike ahead, but just setting our goal for the next rest station. Though we were tired, we knew that climbing would be even more difficult as we went higher and higher into the thin air.

ALL TREES AND VEGETATION were left behind and the path began to zig-zag in hairpin turns through the desolate wastes of volcanic lava and ash. We could have been on a cold, blue planet, but we had only to turn and look backward to see civilization—the lights of the valley towns twinkling, the airplane beacons on distant headlands flashing their regular warnings, the vast sea with its wide path of silver moonlight.

We passed a number of rest stations, stopping at each to drink hot tea, warm ourselves at the fire, rest a while and push on.

We were above the drifting clouds as the moonlight began to rim and a very, very faint glow in the east announced the coming sunrise. We had neither met, passed, nor been passed by other climbers for several hours. Our guide would stand solidly and rest on his wooden staff when we sat down on the lava rocks bordering the trail to rest. He could gallop up to the top in high gear, I believe.

The path became even steeper as we reached the break in the profile slope of the mountain, which is about even with a place called Hoeizan. This, at close range, proves to be a little mountain in itself, but from a distance it appears as only a hump or bulge—the only break in an otherwise perfect conical profile. It is the result of the last eruption of Mount Fuji about two hundred years ago. Contrary to popular belief, Fuji is a volcano and could at any time start violent action again. We couldn't help wondering how it would feel to be crawling as ants if the earth began to tremble.

IN THE EARLY DAWN, we could see the big area of snow above Hoeizan which, our guide told us, remains throughout even the hottest part of the summer.

We reached the eighth station, Hachigome, to drop down on the wooden benches by the door and lean back against the rough lava walls. The skies had long been pink and gold and purple, and suddenly the sun was above the horizon, flooding the world with color and light and warmth. There is an old proverb which the Japanese like to repeat: "It is impossible to describe the sunrise as seen from Mount Fuji, so you must see it for yourself." And that just about covers the subject.

At 6 o'clock, we went into the rude hut and, unmindful of possible fleas (the Fuji fleas are the healthiest in Japan, being a cross-breed of the best fleas from all over the Islands), we rented a space on the matting floor for a few yen and flopped down with the mob. Before passing out into a deep sleep, I remember being amused that the proprietor was looking down at Ed and shaking his head, for the small comforters would not cover his feet. We all three went to bed with our clothes and boots on.

At 8 o'clock, we pulled ourselves up after two wonderful hours of sleep and prepared our K-ration breakfast to the usual routine of sitting around the small fire, jabbering with the innkeeper, his family and some other Japanese who were also guests. They were most curious about us—our equipment, our clothes, our food, and our speaking Japanese. Ed, being on the large and heavy-built side, got a good share of the attention, and we heard some of the people in the back rows murmuring what translated means, "My, what a large body!" The people on this side of Fuji had seen very few American soldiers, so even at this late date in the occupation, we were somewhat of a novelty. The guide made his usual apologies to the innkeeper for our party being so slow in climbing the mountain. He said we were "botsu-botsu-ing"—in other words, dilly-dallying. The Japanese think of the climb as a pilgrimage, push themselves to the limit of endurance, and enjoy the pain. After breakfast, we left our little haven of comfort and continued our climb. At this point, we had the sensation of great height. We could see islands out at sea which we knew were sixty or more miles away. All this area of Japan lay below us like a gigantic relief map. Fleecy white clouds floated away below us around some of the lesser mountain peaks.

WE PASSED A WOMAN CLIMBER, who, I would judge, was about seventy years old. She made her way slowly, even though two men, probably her sons, pushed her from the rear, foot by foot, up the trail. We wondered what elation she must have felt at being so near the goal she had set for herself.

After four more hours of climbing, we passed under the white shrine gate which marks the end of the trail, stretched our aching leg muscles, took a deep breath, and walked the few steps to the lava stone buildings which form the summit settlement.

We visited the simple but beautiful shrine. The deity of Fuji is a woman—a goddess who bestows blessings on all who reach her sacred abode.

We walked a hundred feet further and looked down into the vast crater of the volcano. Here we saw the perpetual ice which sweeps from the rim to the bottom of the cavity. What an upheaval of nature it must have been when this was formed! We did not make the circle tour of the crater rim, but we studied its jagged outline with our field glasses. The distance around it is three miles.

Workmen repairing the stone walls on one of the buildings told us that the buildings we saw a short distance away on the edge of a sheer drop into the crater, were formerly used to house the units of the Japanese Army which specialized in mountain warfare. Near by were large, wooden frameworks which we learned were left from the radar equipment which searched the skies for American planes only a little over two years ago.

ED AND TED were changed men; the long silences of the climb gave way to animated discussions about every detail of the interesting sights on and from the summit. I was in a cheerful mood, too, and browsed happily through the souvenir shop, picked out several paper fans and had the woodblock crest (which signifies achievement of the summit) stamped onto the back of them along with the date. We all took our wooden climbing staves to the proprietor who burnt a crest into the wood with a hot branding iron. Then we drank more tea! We had our pictures taken by the photographer who operates a shop near the shrine. Resting in the cool but brilliant sunlight, we began to think of the trip down!

With one long, last look at Japan from the summit, we literally plunged down the path on the return to the bottom of the mountain. Our staves were indispensable, for they kept us from slipping and falling in the loose lava ash of the trail. Muscles in other parts of us began to ache from this reverse action.

Most of the sleeping forms we observed in the rest hostels the night before had apparently revived, for a steady stream of Japanese climbers passed us on their way to the top. Most amazing of all were the porters or load-bearers who carried up the next few days' supply of wood to burn in the huts, the food and water for the innkeepers, their families and staffs. These load-bearers had unbelievable quantities tied on their backs. Even on the level, it would have been difficult to walk with such a mountain of weight, but they trotted up the path, chanting a climbing song and greeting us loudly as we passed.

We went down into a cloud layer and the mists swirled around us, blotting out everything but a few feet of the path ahead. We rested very seldom on the descent, for it was mainly a job of keep-

What of Japan?

By DAYLE BETHEL

YES, WHAT OF JAPAN and the Japanese so recently our enemies? Are they the kind of people we believed them to be when we were at war with them? Are they the treacherous and inhuman race we envisioned when we chanted "Remember Pearl Harbor"? Is there any reason why we should be interested or concerned about them? Did God include the Japanese when he said, "And this gospel shall be preached as a witness to every nation, kindred, tongue and people"? I believe I found the answer to some of these questions during the two years I spent in Japan with the Occupation Forces.

All of us have heard of the cruelty and suffering inflicted by the Japanese soldiers, but not many of us have heard of the Japanese medic who paused to give first aid to a wounded American soldier and lost his own life as a result. Not many of us have sat in a prayer service and listened to a Japanese Christian mother tell of her son who was killed in the war. He had been a good son; his one desire had been to serve Christ.

It was my privilege to make many friends among the Japanese. One of them, a young fellow about twenty years old, I first met in a little Japanese church. All his life he had been under the influence of the militaristic clique which gained control of the Japanese government in 1930. As soon as he started to school, he began to receive training under a program which aimed at eventually making every Japanese school child a part of a mighty military machine. But, in spite of this background, he has today as many of the qualities and virtues of a Christian gentleman as I have found in any man. After graduating last year with honors from the Doshisha College of Economics at Kyoto, he found employment with the Foreign Trade Office in that city. He will figure prominently in the economic future of his country and looks forward to the day Japan will take her place among the peace-loving nations of the world.

ANOTHER FRIEND WAS a young girl, also in her twenties. She was employed as a clerk-typist and journalist in the American Military Government. I first noticed her because she was absent from work for several days, and, since she held a responsible position, it was difficult to find an adequately trained person to replace her. Upon investigating, we found that she was very ill from malnutrition and exhaustion—and little wonder! Her home was five miles from the office, and it was necessary for her to get up at 4 A. M. in order to be at work on time. Her breakfast consisted of a scant ration of rice and fish which was the only food she had until late at night after another exhausting five-mile trip to her home by walking or riding slow, crowded busses or streetcars, when there was another ration of rice and fish. We did what we could for her, and an English missionary contributed welfare food until she regained her health.

Later she told me that during the war she had believed the things taught by the government, but her mother told her it was wrong, that the Americans were good and would win the war. She realizes now that she was mistaken and is doing everything she can to further the aims of the occupation. At one time she said she wished very much there were a Latter Day Saint church in Japan so she might become a member of it.

These two young people are typical of many of the youth of Japan today. There is a general feeling among them that the militarists led their country on the wrong course, and they are willing and eager to assist in making democracy work.

CHRISTIANITY is well established in Japan, in spite of the setbacks received during the war. There is one little Methodist church which will always be very near to my heart. In it I have been thrilled often as I listened to my Japanese friends singing the good old gospel songs in their own language.

At another time I was invited to attend a Christmas service at a Japanese church. It was one of the most beautiful and inspiring portrayals of the Christmas story I have ever witnessed. With tears streaming down my face, I listened to the sweet voices of Japanese Christians singing the songs of the Christmas season. In my heart I thanked God for such an experience, and I was made to realize that Christ came to all people regardless of race. Once again there burned within me the desire to see the message of the Restored Gospel presented to these people. What Latter Day Saints they would make! They do not accept things halfheartedly. If they believe in a thing, they believe in it with their whole heart and soul.

AT THE PRESENT TIME and for a limited number of years to come, there will be an excellent opportunity for missionary work in Japan. It seems to me that, as a church divinely commissioned to carry a message to all nations, this should be of vital interest to us. It may be many years before another opportunity such as this presents itself.

New Horizons

There will be, of course, numerous problems to face in attempting to establish our church in Japan. The nature and character of the people of the Orient are such that conventional methods of missionary work generally used in other countries would be inadvisable and unprofitable. In my opinion, it can best be accomplished by personal contact over a period of years. The Japanese people will not be converted by sermons and orations but by actions and lives. Perce R. H. Judd made this same observation concerning the Chinese people in a recent letter to the Herald.

One method used by some denominations which has proved very successful in Japan is the missionary-teacher. I made the acquaintance of several of these people. They were there not merely to spread their religion but to teach and help the Japanese people as well. Everyone of them is dearly loved and highly respected by the natives.

One such person is Doctor John Young of Doshisha University, whose patient teaching and seemingly unlimited knowledge of the Orient were of invaluable assistance to me in my attempts to understand Japan and her people. He has spent most of his life among the Japanese and Chinese, and today the people of these two nations who love, respect, and almost worship him number in the thousands.

Some such plan as this offers us the best opportunity to establish the Restored Gospel in the Orient. During the next few years there will be a demand for American teachers in the schools and colleges of Japan. I was personally acquainted with the manager of one college of some 3,000 students. He is very anxious to employ a number of American teachers for his school when it becomes possible to do so.

What possibilities this opens to us if we have within the church men and women who have come to love the Japanese and are concerned about them, perhaps through contacts and experiences while serving in the Occupation Forces or in other ways, and who at the same time are so filled with the spirit of the Restoration Message that they long to share it with those who have not heard it.

A serious shortage of trained doctors and nurses offers another field of service. If such qualified persons will spend their lives in Japan and enter wholeheartedly in serving the needs of her people, they will in time draw many to the church.

THE JAPANESE, like many of the other people of the world, are finding it very difficult to keep their standard of living above the starvation level. The average Japanese is able to earn only about 2,000 to

Here Is the Writer

Dayle has spent most of his twenty-five years near Lamoni, Iowa, where he is an active worker in the church. Since 1943, he has held the office of deacon. In the spring of 1946, he was inducted into the Army and assigned to the American Military Government in Kyoto, Japan. During his stay there, he observed "first hand" the conditions about which he has written.

Of the future, he says, "For years I have dreamed of attending Graceland, but always before it has been impossible. This year that dream is coming true, and when school opens on the hill this fall, I'll be there."

2,500 yen per month, while the average family can exist on no less than 5,000 yen per month. The price of a pair of shoes, for instance, is 2,000 yen. A hearty meal such as we in the United States are privileged to partake of every day would cost a Japanese family nearly an entire month's earnings.

This situation is not expected to improve for at least two years. During the winter months the lack of food and clothing will become extremely serious. One of the leading missionaries to Japan told me shortly before I left that the only way many of them could escape extreme hardship and suffering would be through relief packages from the churches and welfare groups of America.

I have the names and addresses of thirty Japanese families that can be considered prospective Latter Day Saints. Some of them are studying our church literature. If there are any individuals or young people's groups who would care to correspond with one or more of them or send relief packages, I shall be very glad to furnish their names. Send your request to me at Lamoni, Iowa.

Trouble Shooter

Concerning Church Membership

QUESTION: If a member's name is removed from the records of the church by choice and he later wants readmission, may he gain it? If so, is he rebaptized? Also, if, without asking to have his name removed from the record, he becomes a member in another church, does he lose membership in this church?

ANSWER:

BY PRESIDENT JOHN GARVER

Provision has been made by General Conference action for the removal of one's name from the church records on his persistent request and the recommendation of a proper church court. In such a case, one may be readmitted to membership in the church and his name recorded, without rebaptism, on the recommendation of a proper court.

Membership in another church does not lose one his membership in this church. The only way by which membership is withdrawn is as above cited, at one's own request or by legal proceedings initiated by an aggrieved member, or by the church, on the findings and recommendations of a court having jurisdiction.

630-667). Only by study and understanding can we come to a full knowledge of this living Christ. Tell his stories over and over again in your own words to your friends and neighbors until you understand him and his philosophy and why he spoke and lived as he did. Seek and you shall find the more abundant life.

Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.

discipline—especially stressing of manners—are poor techniques to employ at mealtimes. This, however, does not mean that the proper amount of attention should not be given, or that good manners should not be taught. (Good conduct on the part of adults goes a long way in teaching manners.) Encourage respect for the rights of others—dawdling when others, servants or parents, have other work to do or engagements to fulfill are evidences that children lack a sense of fairness in this respect. It is also essential that children develop this sense "of the right of others" by coming to meals on time, thus not making already prepared food unpalatable for others.

In the best of regulated families, "of which there are but few," it is difficult at all times to eliminate many or all of the factors which are predisposing causes to poor appetite. With careful management and a thorough appreciation of the benefits to be derived from good nutrition, both in health and freedom from sickness, the voting power and effort should be in the positive direction, both in technique of methods and spirit at the mealtime occasion, for "the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (I Corinthians 3: 17).

We are encompassed with much advertising to make our homes attractive, clean, up to date, and furnished with conveniences. This makes living much more comfortable. Is it worth our time to give some attention to the importance of food and nutrition which is basic in maintaining our temporal bodies which are "the homes of our spirit"?

To appear unconcerned when you think your child is going to starve himself to death is anything but easy. But regular, adequately prepared meals, patience, poise and calm cheerfulness will do more toward establishing good mealtime habits or correcting poor habits than any amount of punishments, rewards, scolding, coaxing, or similar methods. Family co-operation is important. Perhaps the desperate mother who says, "I have just tried everything!" is the trouble. She may have failed to do the simple things, that of developing a spirit of calmness and an attitude of expecting co-operation.

All good habits must be started early and have a spirit as well as a technique. Combine both for pleasant, satisfactory results.

ing from going down too swiftly. We did revisit some of the rest houses, however, and bought a few of the many picture post cards of Fuji which were on display.

WE PICKED UP various odds and ends of equipment and clothing which we "checked" at certain spots on the way up. Then we re-entered the woodlands and went slipping, sliding, and running down the path which the night before had seemed so endless.

Five hours after leaving the summit, we caught sight of the first station through the trees. Soon we were packed and loaded into the jeep. As the entire family and staff stood in front of the building waving farewell, we bounced off down the rocky road.

We reached the town of Fujinomiya, settled with our guide for the trip, dropped him off in the center of town, and headed for Shizouka.

Driving through the brilliant moonlit night, in a couple of hours we were back in Shizuoka telling the rest of the "gang" how much they had missed by not climbing Fuji.

Jim and Al had returned safely but footsore and weary about noon of the same day.

After an enormous supper, we went to bed with kaleidoscopic dreams of sunrises, sunsets, mountain summits, slipping, falling, climbing, clouds, trees, hot tea, snow, home, and loved ones.

Briefs

KENNETT, MISSOURI.—The annual Southeastern Missouri District conference was held at Kennett on July 10 and 11. Elders William Patterson and William Guthrie were in charge. An election for district officers was held, and Elder J. A. Phillips was elected president. The conference was well-attended by members from all parts of the district.

TEXARKANA, ARKANSAS.—District President T. B. Sharp baptized Charles Ode Ramsey and Dan W. Davis on July 4 at the close of a series of missionary meetings conducted by Pastor Harold B. Schultz. They were confirmed on the same day. The group has another membership gain in the transfer of the Frank Owens family from El Reno, Oklahoma.

GULF STATES REUNION.—The annual Gulf States Reunion was held July 9 to 18 at Brewton, Alabama; theme for the reunion was "Thy Kingdom Come." A play, "The Solid Rock," was given by the Mobile Thespian Club as the opening feature. Fellowship services were under the direction of Apostle C. G. Mesley, assisted by members of the priesthood. Mrs. Maurine Crownover was in charge of the children, with Mrs. Lewis Landsberg and teachers from the district assisting. General classwork was supervised by Apostle Mesley and Bishop Landsberg. Elder A. O. Crownover taught the young people, and Mrs. Ben Jernigan, the women. Special classes were held for the men and members of the priesthood. Mrs. A. D. McCall was in charge of music, and Mrs. Clyde Hastings represented the Herald Publishing House. Others who assisted were Van Jernigan, concessions; Sister Crane, registration; A. O. Crownover, Mrs. Eunice Sellars, and Mrs. W. J. Breshears, cafeteria. One of the high spots of the reunion was Evangelist A. D. McCall's sermon on revelation. District Officers and General Conference delegates were elected at the business session. W. J. Breshears is president of the district.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—Since its re-establishment in 1940, Peoria Branch has had the understanding co-operation of district officers and the services of well-qualified leaders. At present, Elder Raymond G. Wrigley is pastor; Dr. Herbert Dutton, church school director; and Elvin Duke, young people's leader. The outstanding branch goal is the attainment of sufficient funds to erect a church building. The women have sponsored various projects to raise money for the fund.

BULLETIN BOARD

Northwestern Iowa District Conference

The Northwestern Iowa District conference will be held August 29 at Missouri Valley, Iowa. Activities for the day will include a general prayer service at 9 a.m. and a business session from 10 to 12, at which time the annual reports will be read and district officers and delegates to General Conference will be elected. The conference will close with a sermon by Apostle D. T. Williams at 2:30 in the afternoon.

RUBY ADAMS,
District Secretary.

Rich Hill District Conference

The annual Rich Hill District conference will convene on Saturday, September 11, at 8 p.m. in the Rich Hill Church and continue until Sunday afternoon, September 12. Classes will be conducted on Saturday evening. Reports and communications should be sent to Dale Crown, 22½ South Hill, Fort Scott, Kansas.

WILLIAM PATTERSON,
District President.

Spring River District Conference

The Spring River District conference will be conducted at Webb City, Missouri, on September 18 and 19. Lectures and classwork will be arranged for Saturday evening. Statistical reports and communications should be sent to the secretary, Mrs. C. E. Wilson, 610 East Belmont Street, Springfield, Missouri.

WILLIAM PATTERSON,
District President.

All-Day Meeting in Ontario

An all-day meeting for the Saints of Sault Ste. Marie District will be held August 29 at the church in Little Current. Theme for the day will be "Our Responsibility," and activities will begin with a fellowship service at 9 a.m. Eastern Standard Time. Patriarch Benson Belrose is expected to be present.

W. A. BUSHILA,
District President.

Brush Creek Reunion

Brush Creek Reunion will be held August 20 to 29 at Zenith, Illinois, nine miles south of Xenia. Apostle Arthur Oakman, Dr. Roy Cheville, J. S. Menzies, William T. Guthrie, Mrs. Blanch Green, Mrs. T. W. Bath, District Presidents Arthur Henson and C. L. Archibald are to be present. A new dormitory has been built for the girls; boys will have similar accommodations in tents. Cost, $1. Beds, but not bedding, will be furnished. Applications may be sent to W. W. Colvin, Mt. Vernon, Illinois. Season meal tickets are available for $12 (all over twelve years) and $8 (children). Tents rent for $6 each; orders are to be placed with Rufus Rockett, Mt. Vernon. Those who have them may bring their own tents or trailers. Water and lights are furnished. Campers may do their own cooking or eat in the reunion dining hall.

WILLIAM GUTHRIE.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Joanna Drader of Bantry, North Dakota, asks the prayers of the Saints that her daughter, Laura Williamson, may be healed if it is God's will. Medical doctors have been unable to diagnose or help her case.

Mrs. Anna Petty, Reedy, West Virginia, requests prayers for her son that he may be relieved of a nervous affliction, and for the spiritual welfare of her family. She will appreciate receiving letters from any who care to write.

Lucy Brown of Johnsonville, Illinois, requests prayers for her husband that his health might be restored.

Mrs. E. B. James, 112 McMillian Street, Evergreen, Alabama, requests prayers for her husband that he may receive physical and spiritual help.

Mrs. Harve Williams, Nowlin, South Dakota, asks prayers for her aged mother, Mrs. Eunice A. Shepard, who is suffering from an eye infection.

ENGAGEMENT

Geraldine Elaine Graham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Graham of Dallas, Texas, and William Norwood Marshall, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Marshall, also of Dallas, were married at the Reorganized Church in Dallas on July 17. Elder H. E. Davenport read the double-ring ceremony. The Marshalls will make their home in Dallas.

Bottomley-Bond

Marion Florence Bond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl R. Bond of Cranston, Rhode Island, and Kenneth H. Bottomley, son of Mrs. Helen Bottomley, also of Cranston, were married July 31 in the Reorganized Church, Elder Reed M. Holmes officiating. Following the reception, they left for a honeymoon in Canada.

Price-Davis

Pamela Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Kirksey of Independence, Missouri, and Rich Price, son of Mrs. Walter Price of Gooding, Idaho, were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Angus Dair in Richland, Washington, on July 6. Elder Steve Bowerman performed the ceremony. The Prices are making their home in Hover, Washington.

Young-Pratt

Shirley Pratt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Pratt, Shenandoah, Iowa, and Ronald Young, son of Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Young of Fargo, North Dakota, were married July 25 at the Congregational Church. Dr. Young read the marriage vows. Both are graduates of Graceland College, and this fall Mr. Young will enter the University of Minnesota as a pre-medical student.

BIRTHS

A son, David Harry, was born on April 17 to Mr. and Mrs. Max Anderson at Des Moines, Iowa. Mrs. Anderson is the former Norma Subbrook of Flint, Michigan. Both parents are Graceland graduates.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn L. McDole of Moorhead, Iowa, announce the birth of a daughter, Glenda Lorraine, born July 15. Mrs. McDole is the former Leona Ralston of Long Beach, California.

A son, David Allen, was born on May 20 to Mr. and Mrs. Allen J. Breckenridge at the Independence Sanitarium.

A daughter, Jenny Lynn, was born on July 15 to Mr. and Mrs. George E. Wright of Iowa City, Iowa. Mrs. Wright is the former Nellie Hunt. Both parents attended Graceland College.

Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Zuber of Hardy, Arkansas, announce the birth of a daughter. She has been named Pamela Ann.

* ENTERTAINMENT

For years, as a boy, I had heard of the famous puppets, Punch and Judy, and of the comical and entertaining show given with them. I had always wanted to see and hear it. Not until I was grown did I have the chance. Then I learned, to my disappointment, that Punch was a vicious brute, and Judy a shrill-voiced harridan, that they were married, and hated and distrusted each other with good reason. The whole show consisted in their shouting at and beating each other. I haven't seen a Punch and Judy show for years, but I hope some day to see a better version of it.

The other day, in a moment of innocence, I turned on the radio, hoping for good music or something interesting. In the suds opera that was occupying the air channel for that quarter hour, a husband and wife were screaming at each other in language that would have embarrassed a stevedore. I turned it off, feeling worried about what such shows are doing to the American people. How many a husband, coming home, finds his wife disturbed and angry because she has identified herself with the troubles of the woman in the story, and how many a divorce is started, no one can tell.

Then it occurred to me that the suds opera is just the modern version of the old Punch and Judy show. It is changed, but it is not improved. And there is the real trouble with our country and its people—getting angry and screaming at each other, like hysterical furies.

Wouldn't it be a fine change if we could seek our entertainment in peaceful and beautiful things? Let us give up being amused by contention and argument, by people fighting. I would enjoy a program in which the people are happy and pleasant and decent and in which their merriment makes me feel better toward my fellow man.

* DON'T TELL ME

Don't ever tell me again that "Clothes make the man." I know the real truth: "Clothes conceal the man." That is, until he gives himself away. Usually when he talks.

The wildest radical I know looks like a conservative business man; the sanest philosopher I have met sometimes looks like a migratory laborer just after a long ride on the coupling between two freight cars. The bravest man I know looks like a brother of Casper Milque-toast. One of the finest preachers I know looks like a battered pugilist, or an ex-Marine home from the war. One of the most beautiful characters I have ever met, I thought was homely when I first saw her, but I have long ago given up that notion, because so many people know she is wonderful.

If you are discouraged by what you see when you look into the mirror, quit looking at the mirror. Look into your soul instead, and try to find all the best of you that is there. Nature gave some of us poor press agents. Our faces are simply bad pieces of publicity that misrepresent us.

The prettiest face can turn ugly in a moment if it is made a facade for bad or unworthy thoughts. And a plain face can be transformed into beauty by a noble mind.

When Kathleen Norris, the novelist, returned from a trip abroad, she wired her husband, Charles G. Norris, that "I am bringing you a map—an old map I got in Paris." When it arrived and Charles opened it, he found an oil painting of Kathleen, done by a fine artist. Her little joke was clever, but years of happy association and love made the portrait beautiful to him.

Advice for Someone Loved

Plans for Daily Conference Herald

REPORTERS WANTED

As in former years, the "Conference Daily Herald" will need a large number of writers and reporters to cover the events of the General Conference so that the maximum benefit may be given to those who cannot attend the Conference.

Every person who can write among the Conference visitors will be needed, and should offer his or her services. If possible, writers will find it helpful to bring portable typewriters to assist in this work.

For every class that begins its work on Monday morning, every discussion or lecture, there should be an able reporter appointed to make a report for the "Daily Herald." Reporters should be ready to go into action immediately, as the time to organize is short.

In our experience, the best reporters are those who are interested in the class or activity already and know something about it. That is why, in every case, we would like to have a reporter appointed from the class or group.

HOW THE PLAN WORKS

To avoid duplication of effort, we wish to ask every teacher, group or discussion leader, or lecturer, to appoint somebody as a reporter at the very beginning of the first class on the first Monday morning. This is important so that valuable time and lecture notes shall not be lost.

Those who are interested in reporting should speak to the instructor or leader, and ask for an appointment as reporter for that subject.

In some free period of the day, or early evening, the reporter should summarize the story of that morning in about 300 words, or one page, double-spaced, typewritten, or an equal amount of handwritten script. Reporters should turn in their reports if possible that same day to give us the evening to get the stories set for next day.

It is planned to have a pressroom in a convenient place, where reporters may deposit stories in the "Daily Herald" box.

If possible, the substance of the course should be summarized and complete by Thursday and should be in that evening.

Very important: Reporters should be appointed and go into action on Monday!

COVERAGE

We are going to try to make this "Conference Daily Herald" as fine and as complete as possible. It will contain all the General Conference reports. No other publication will contain them. This will be official. This includes the report of the Presiding Bishopric. There will be summaries of the principal sermons, lectures, classes, and activities. The General Conference Minutes will also be a part of the "Daily Herald." In addition to this, the "Herald" staff will furnish a running story of the Conference, with explanatory comments and information that will give a good representative picture of all the main events.

It is possible to accomplish all this only with the assistance of the many writers who attend Conference. We ask for the help of each one.

In every General Conference, there are many spontaneous, charming, human interest events that cannot be scheduled, and that must be described and shared by eyewitnesses. Everybody can help with these, and add much to the interest and value of the publication.

We know we can make this a most successful report of the General Conference if everybody who can help will try to do so.

Bow low to summer joy and autumn thrush.
Hold close each season's change our Lord has made.

And when life's winter comes, serene and still,
Welcome him in where drowsy crickets sing,
Knowing full well that past one lone white hill Awaits eternity's young dew-dipped spring.

Problems in Human Relations

WE WERE VISITING a small branch. There was a fine little church, a congregation of good people, a well-organized program. The whole situation seemed excellent, and it did not occur to us to suspect that there was anything to detract from the apparent perfection of the situation.

However, it would be hard to find any group of people, anywhere in the world, without its "problems." We will refrain from calling them "troubles." This is no mere euphemism, because when a solution for a problem is found, it is no longer a trouble. If we can approach our troubles as problems, we have a chance to deal with them.

This little branch was no exception. A succession of men had come and gone, and the group was acquiring, whether justly or not, a reputation for being a "problem congregation."

A member there was talking with me and seemed to sense the unspoken thought that was turning over in my mind. He remarked, "This really isn't a problem congregation. Our trouble is that we have suffered from a succession of problem pastors."

It is only reasonable to admit that some problems originate in the congregations, and some in the officers.

But it takes more than this admission to find a solution for the problems. And when the effects of these problems upon the lives of the members are considered, we have great reasons to intensify the search.

MOST OF THE PROBLEMS of our branches and congregations seem to find their origin in human relations. People find it difficult to get along with each other and understand each other, even when they wish sincerely to do so. Somebody is always trying to use his authority to impose his will upon somebody else, or upon the group. And there is always resistance.

What is the solution for this problem?

LET US GO BACK to the very beginning of our history. The time had come for the ordination of elders to be the leaders of the church. The divine command had been given for the ordinations to take place. An additional order was given. In the words of Joseph Smith:

We were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such times as it should be practicable to have our brethren . . . assembled together, when we must have their sanction to our thus proceeding to ordain each other, and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept us as spiritual teachers.—History of the Church, Volume I, pages 60, 61.

Later the same principle was to be placed, by the divine will, in the law of the church, for all members and all officers,

And all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith.—Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.

Here is a principle of church government and management that has the power to solve a great many of the problems which arise in local affairs. God reveals his will, but he also wants the people to make their own choice. That rule was practiced with the Children of Israel under the leadership of Moses. The law was not imposed upon them. They accepted it in a covenant with Jehovah. And when they were true to their promises, they were blessed. So will modern people be blessed when they obey God's law.

EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY is occasionally invoked as a short cut to the solution of a problem in a local congregation. When such authority comes into conflict with the will of the people, difficulty is encountered. In a volunteer movement, you cannot order people to do anything. Their consent must be won, or everything fails. When consent is won, leaders and followers get along harmoniously.

Common consent is based upon the love and respect that members have for each other. The common consent that Joseph Smith was directed to observe required a vote and the approval of the people.

However important common consent may be, it is not enough by itself. We need something that will weld us into closer unity than majority rule. Any plan will go better when everybody concerned is in favor of it. The Law of Love has its essential place in binding us together. "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care"—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Whenever executive authority runs counter to common consent, the work of the church is brought to a standstill. But when the two work together, they can accomplish marvelous things.

Some very conscientious and able leaders may forget the importance of common consent. Zealous to accomplish much good, they begin to tell people what they must do. They issue orders and instructions. Resentment is felt, which later turns into opposition. Church leaders can often accomplish much more by asking for help and co-operation. The whole world can be moved by people working willingly together. The kingdom of God can be built in no other way.

Church work is unique in one respect. In all other kinds of work we are dealing with the business of men. Church work is the business of God. Let us do it in his way, and his blessings will attend our efforts.

Cyril E. Wight Passes

Cyril E. Wight, for many years a devoted volunteer in church work, passed away in Temple City, Los Angeles, on Sunday, August 15. For a number of years he had suffered from heart trouble, and was under a physician's care. Apparent improvement was made; he was able to preach so recently as last winter and participate in other ordinances of the church. He was once president of Lamoni Stake, and for a number of years served as president of Kansas City Stake, before his removal to southern California. He was a son of John W. Wight, a member of the Quorum of Twelve. His wife, Sister Louella Wight, who has given fine service in church music, survives him. Brother Wight was an able speaker and had a wide circle of friends in his church work.

Dr. Percy L. Weegar

A veteran church worker, Dr. Percy L. Weegar, has been honored in the June 25 issue of The Stilletto, alumni publication of the Kirksville College of Osteopathy and Surgery, with a picture and biographical sketch. Since 1907, Dr. Weegar has practiced in Buffalo, New York, where his excellent contribution to church work has centered. The author of the article, Jean Ringland, pays tribute to Dr. Weegar as a leader in his profession. Congratulations to Brother Weegar for his service and achievements.

A Call to Prayer

The Layman's Movement for a Christian World has issued a Call to Prayer for Sunday, September 19, 1948, and is asking churches to ring their bells for five minutes beginning about 11:55 a. m. on that day, for each time zone. "Silent and audible prayer to be offered for world leaders who gather in Paris for the General Assembly of the United Nations, and for the peoples of the world." A Day of Fasting and Prayer persons reading the church seal. In this way we are able to give these people something to read when they leave. Almost every time I return to the car, I find that some of these tracts have been taken by passers-by.

In view of the urgent need for divine guidance in all the work of the church, and particularly in the forthcoming General Conference which will convene Sunday, October 3, we ask as many of the Saints as are so minded to join us in fasting from the evening meal Saturday, September 4, to the evening meal, Sunday, September 5, or such part of this period as may be wise, and in remembering the Conference, the Church, and the Kingdom in earnest prayer during that day.

We excerpt the following from Elder Gene Theys' latest letter:

I am happy to inform you that we have reached one hundred and fifty-three baptisms to date. We have eighteen more that I know of to be ready, and the way our work is growing, it is reasonable to say that two hundred will be obtained long before December 31. We are not out for numbers, as you know, but people who are truly converted to Christ and his message.

Brother Theys sends us a number of pictures: included are one of former missionary, John Smolney, and one of Alfred Urban, recently appointed; also the group at Ahlum, Germany, and some showing Brother Theys and the mission car. The car carries a large reproduction of the church seal. He says:

I hope you will give special note to the church seal on the car. We have received a thousand dollars' worth of free publicity from this feature on the car. I have made a box just large enough to hold our tract, Epitome of Faith; when I park the car on a busy street, I hang this box out of the window so that people can take one of the tracts. I have come up to the car many times to find a dozen

The Blessing of the Earth Is Toil

For thou shalt eat the labor of thy hands; happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.—Psalm 128: 2.

By JERRY C. RUNKLE

IN THIS COUNTRY, we celebrate Labor Day on the first Monday in September. It is a national holiday in the same sense as other holidays which we observe during the year. The Congress of the United States, in 1894, declared the first Monday in September a legal holiday and called it Labor Day.

The concept of work, like many other terms, has been interpreted in various ways throughout history. Even today, the terms "labor" and "work" have many definitions, depending upon the point of view. This concept has been treated lightly and seriously. The former is illustrated in these words of Jerome K. Jerome: "I like work; it fascinates me. I can sit and look at it for hours." On the other hand, the importance of work is indicated in these words of Calvin Coolidge: "All growth depends upon activity. There is no development physically or intellectually without effort, and effort means work. Work is not a curse; it is the prerogative of intelligence, the only means to manhood, and the measure of civilization."

The Scriptures seem to uphold Mr. Coolidge in his interpretation. In order to appreciate the real function of work, however, it is necessary to give it careful consideration. We wish, therefore, to direct attention to the quotation from the Psalms at the beginning of the article.

Labor—A Law of God

The first part of the statement, "Thou shalt eat the labor of thy hands," is a command. There is another that we associate with it, "Six days thou shalt labor." It is often emphasized that God rested the seventh day, and that we are to rest from our labor on the seventh day. But it should be kept in mind that rest cannot be without work. If it is the will of God to rest the seventh day and keep it holy, then it must also be his will that the other six days be kept holy for work.

It has been so from the beginning. Even in the perfect state in the Garden of Eden, there was work to be done: "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it."—Genesis 2: 15. There was no hint of a curse connected with this original assignment of work that was given to Adam. Only after Adam and Eve had sinned was the earth cursed, and it was sin that brought a curse to labor because of disobedience. Work itself was not cursed. God himself worked to make the earth, and then rested: "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested." Christ said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." When one views with wonder the majesty, beauty, and discipline of the earth, it is easy to realize that much work and patient effort were given by the Creator. Yes, labor is a law of God.

All nature works. Sometimes in considering the statement of Christ, "They toil not, neither do they spin," one may wonder. He did not mean that lilies do no work. They do, but it is done quietly and without worry. Charles E. Hughes once said, "I believe in work, hard work, and long hours of work. Men do not break down from overwork, but from worry and dissipation." One would be blind if he spent any time out-of-doors and failed to be impressed with the tremendous amount of work that nature is continually doing. People think of the labor that went into the building of the pyramids, but what of the work required to build the mountains? We look with awe at the skyscrapers of our large cities. A few days ago, I stood beside the "big trees" of California. These trees are thousands of years old; they have endured the attacks of pests, disease, and fire many times, yet still have roots deep in the rocks, and they tower hundreds of feet high. Think of the labor necessary to accomplish this which entitles them to be known as the oldest and largest living things on the earth today! The coal we find in the earth has been lying there for centuries, but work has been necessary for the transformation. The work in our furnaces is only the release of work stored up through the ages.

The work of nature is increased by man's direction. Man's unusual gift, intelligence, enables him to use the work of nature for his benefit. So he speaks to the sea, and the sea shoulders him and his cargo and carries them. The lightning takes his messages on its wings. The wind obeys his command and furnishes power. The soil conforms, also. It seems that everything is brought under the universal sway of labor. The law runs from the bottom to the top. Man, too, must work. Nothing is done without work. It is a law of the universe.

Labor—the Law of Happiness

The last part of the reading from Psalms, "Happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee," indicates happiness in labor. Man is the only part of God's creation that can appreciate the blessing of labor. Other forms of life cannot know how much happiness there is in work. Man can record the fact that all he has he owes to labor. It is work that gathers the grain and sends it to millions of hungry persons. It is labor that builds a shack in the slums, as well as the most beautiful home in the city. If there is a curse, it is idleness, not work. Work is constructive; it furnishes a cure for bereavement; it is the blessing of earth.

A Lesson From Nehemiah

The story of the reconstruction of the walls of Jerusalem told in the Book of Nehemiah is probably referred to in relation to the subject of work more than any other section of the Scriptures. Chapter four is especially a record of work. It indicates clearly some of the attributes of work. Perhaps the first requisite is included in the sixth verse in the words, "The people had a mind to work." When people have the proper "mental set" for work, results seem to come rapidly and easily. George B. Cortelyou once said, "The greatest asset of any nation is the spirit of its people, and the greatest danger that can menace any nation is the breakdown of that spirit—the will to win and the courage to work."

Another attribute of work revealed in this chapter is that labor always involves difficulties. Nehemiah was faced with numerous obstacles and even the stoutest grew weary. Nevertheless, the work advanced slowly and surely. It is like that with all of the best work.

A third characteristic of work is prayer. The Book of Nehemiah is not only one of building, but also is one of prayer. Luther pointed out that to labor is to pray. Prayer and work must go together. Without prayer, we cannot work, and without work, we cannot pray.

Lastly, this chapter in Nehemiah reveals that true work is accomplished with the spirit of a "soldier for Christ." Christianity is perhaps the most militant movement on the earth today. Its constant warfare is against evil. God is marshaling his army to build a city—the kingdom of God.

Thus, on this Labor Day, as members of the church meditate and ponder its meaning, a renewed challenge emerges. It has been said, "We have too many people who live without working, and we have altogether too many who work without living." The purpose here has been to emphasize the fact that work is a part of the divine plan for the happiness and eternal salvation of man. Whether this is the result or not, depends upon us. Given political freedom and equal opportunity, the question remains, "Will the result be warfare or unity?" It is well to remember that the goal of the church and the salvation of mankind—the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth—requires obedience to the command, "Thou shalt eat the labor of thy hands."

Religious Beliefs and Practices of College Students

BY G. N. BRIGGS

President Emeritus of Graceland College

A RELIGIOUS SURVEY of colleges and universities recently conducted shows the following: "The average college student neither prays nor reads his Bible very much. A study of religious beliefs of Catholic and Protestant students shows that two thirds of the students never read the Bible. One third of the students never pray, never attend church or feel 'the nearness' of a deity."

In reading this report, I am struck with the conditions as found generally in the colleges of the country as compared with the conditions prevailing in Graceland, our own church college. Here practically all the students attend church regularly, have their own church school classes and a midweek prayer service.

The following courses in religion are offered and attended, in most cases, by the maximum possible enrollment:

1. Introduction to the Christian Religion
2. Youth in the Local Church
3. History of Latter Day Saintism
4. Introduction to the Bible
5. Religions of the World
6. Scriptures of the World

This last course includes a thorough study of the Book of Mormon along with the literature of other denominations. General church officers visit the college during the course of the year, thus enabling the students to make their acquaintance and hear them in the presentation of matters of importance and interest.

Annually, we conduct what is known as Religious Emphasis Week when students, faculty, and general church officials have an opportunity for conferences, lectures, and discussion.

Leaders of other religious denominations frequently visit the campus for lectures and conferences, thus giving our students opportunities for discussion and comparison.

No one familiar with conditions at Graceland will feel that the situation found as a result of the religious survey recently conducted in other institutions prevails on our campus.

This is as it should be and under the administration of the college officials and faculty, the church and parents can rest assured that this condition will continue in an ever-increasing effort to meet the religious needs of our students.

I have long been disposed to judge men by their average. If it is reasonably high, I am charitable with faults that look pretty black.—Ed Howe.

Our Dwelling Place

By Reed Holmes

vided by the Lord, was all right. But the tenants have abused the place. They have hurt themselves, the dwelling place, and their Father.

In a universe of precision, of law and order, it might be expected that the occupants of earth should submit voluntarily to some laws relating to their tenancy.

In a world where flowers grow according to fore-ordained laws, it is no wonder that man, too, needs to be regulated in his behavior. The church endeavors to state some of the laws governing our conduct. The gospel is the phrasing of the laws of God for man. Just because we have our right of personal choice is no sign that we are immune from the laws which govern our human relationships. They are as definite as the laws which govern our physical growth. We may choose to ignore them, or live in contradiction to them, but they operate nonetheless, and we are subject to them.

IN NATURE, we can predict an outcome, knowing that the laws in operation produce a given result. A ball thrown in the air will return to earth, because of the law of gravity. That is a law of God, not of man. Man simply phrased that which he found in operation. We turn this law to our use. The rain falls, and we direct its flow for purposes of irrigation. Ink in our pen always flows down. We pull a stopper in the sink and the water drains away. The law of gravity is a blessing, in spite of the fact that we sometimes fall down and hurt ourselves.

The moon will eclipse the sun, and we can trace in advance the path of its shadow across the earth. The ebb and flow of the tide can be timed in advance. We know where to tune in certain stations on the radio. When we adhere to the operation of natural law, prediction is possible, and our welfare is secured.

Laws are a blessing. The Lord designed that our lives should be subject to law in order for us to have that longed-for sense of security. As we come to understand those laws and live by them, we may predict even peace and be assured of achieving it.

IN THE GOSPEL, the Lord has inspired good men to phrase the laws which relate to human life. Just as there are laws which govern the functioning of the physical heart, so are there laws which determine the relation of your heart to mine. One of those laws is "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." That's not just good policy—it is an inexorable law which must be followed if we desire a certain result.

When men live according to the laws stated in the gospel, that certain result may be predicted. If they do not live by these laws, another result may be predicted. Prophecy is at once the discerning of the law, the statement of the law, and the prediction of the result, if we follow the law.

You and I would like to be able to predict peace and good will for this year and forever. But any man is a false prophet who predicts peace while the people are still disobedient to the laws of God. Peace is no nearer and no farther away than the character of the people justifies. Peace is the combination of certain elements of character in proper proportions.

Suppose we want to produce salt. We take two elements—sodium and

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER has provided a wonderful dwelling place for us. Think of the earth upon which we live—its vegetation for food, shelter, raiment, and the very breath of life. Think of the satisfaction of a glass of cool water. Think of the store of wealth in our natural resources by which our lives are enriched. Think of the animals for food, for labor, for companionship. Think of the view, with windows open wide to the universe. Truly, our hearts fill with gratitude when we think of our Father's bountiful provisions for our welfare and happiness.

This dwelling place of ours is excellent. It is proof of our Father's love for us. But the tenants . . . "ay, there's the rub!"

The other day we looked at a house. It must have been lovely when built. The timbers were sturdy. It had a sort of beauty to it. But the house had had no care for nearly a half century—no upkeep nor improvements. Many of the shingles were worn paper thin. The interior was dirty and deteriorating. The broad lawn was in terrible condition. The house had been all right to begin with, but the tenants had let it run down. There had been no respect for the regulations which might have conserved the place.

So it has been with our dwelling place. The original structure, prochloride—which by themselves are apt to be dangerous. We combine them in proper proportions under proper conditions, and we have table salt. But don't expect salt if you use other elements.

Water is simply H²O. There's no use objecting to the rigid law which decrees it thus. Be grateful that it is not left up to chance. Be grateful for the law which decrees that rain is water and not sulphuric acid.

We can choose not to combine the proper elements, but we cannot have peace if this is our choice. It has been our folly that we have tried to achieve peace by combining the wrong elements.

The beauty of earth is the result of obedience to the laws of God. Elements are combined in right proportions and under certain conditions and you have a rose, or a pine tree, or a billowy cloud, or a diamond. The result can be predicted because of the laws in operation.

THE BIBLE SAYS, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If I plant petunia seed, I get petunias, granted proper soil and cultivation. I'll never get begonias, nor tulips, nor cactus. If I plant orange seed, I get oranges, not apples. I'll never get apples.

I'm grateful for that law. It would be most confusing and disconcerting if we had to plant, not knowing what the crop would be. Pity the wheat farmer who would get radishes.

If we want peace, we must plant the seeds of peace. Then, granted proper amounts of cultivation, we'll get peace.

The laws of life are steadfast and sure. When God said, "I am the Lord thy God, I change not," he was commenting on this whole business of the laws governing our lives.

He has provided us a house in which to dwell. He has provided "enough and to spare" for all of us in our dwelling place. In these provisions he manifests his love for us. But, my friends, his love is manifested in his laws as well, for obedience to them is the pathway to peace. If we desire beauty of human relationships even as there is natural beauty, then we need to heed the laws designed for our welfare.

Peace

A "Between You and Me" Feature

By Kathryn C. Metz

PEOPLE HAVE been talking "peace" since Abraham shook the Ur-of-the-Chaldees' dust from his feet, and it is still over the hill and around the corner.

Why?

Probably because we have been "talking" instead of "working."

Peace is more than a word. It is more than a sound on our lips or a combination of letters on paper. Peace is love and understanding, courage and humility. It is open-mindedness and level thinking, a way of living and a way of listening.

Peace is common sense, a thoughtful silence instead of a noisy clamor. Peace is sanity in action, a co-operative effort, a helping hand at the cross roads. It is "do unto others."

Peace is rising above jealousy, planes, and tanks; it is being above disputes and arguments, threats, and discords. It is the silver lining of the dark cloud of distrust, the evening star of the soul.

Peace is brotherly love in action. It is pulling instead of pushing, an open hand instead of a clinched fist, a smile instead of a frown.

Peace is labor. It is everybody's job, and it requires the expenditure of a maximum amount of effort. It must be done by you and me, not the men in Washington or across the seas. It is an investment in all men, a labor for the comprehension of truth.

Peace is vision. It is looking forward to happiness instead of over the shoulder at despair. It is planting seeds that will blossom for us and bear fruit for tomorrow's children. Peace is growing wise.

Peace is march. It is making progress a steadfast and durable world, walking toward ideals and freedom. It is the onward stride of God through man.

Ah, yes, peace is faith. Faith in the potential goodness of all races, creeds, and peoples. It is faith in the greatness of men and in the future of mankind, faith that His "will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Peace is within ourselves. It is the proper result of the Christian spirit. And finally, peace is patience. It is bearing and forbearing, working and waiting.

The Distant Harvest Field

Seventy F. Edward Butterworth

I was standing in the middle of the row, watching a brother pick over his well-tended tomato patch. As he filled his wicker basket with the luscious red tomatoes, we fell into conversation about the distant mission in which I have a particular interest at present. Evidently, my strong desire to return to that distant field touched off the following interrogation: "Why is it that the church sends its missionaries to such far-distant fields, when the heathen here at home have not yet been converted?"

His question did not startle me, because I have heard it many times before, but never have had a satisfactory answer. Christ answered many of the difficult questions put to him by asking a question in the form of a parable.

Like a flash from the regions of inspiration, I was impressed to ask him the following question, which, by the way, was a quite sufficient answer for him: "Why do you gather tomatoes from the distant corners of your patch, when the tomatoes nearest the house are not yet mature?"

Cottage Meetings

The Reason for Cottage Meetings

COTTAGE MEETINGS are to build the church into the home and the home into the church. The home is the church at work, so if you can take the values of the church into the homes, you build strong homes as well as strong churches. In this day, with our lives so full of activities, it is almost impossible to get people out to church for ten or twelve services of a missionary series. However, most persons will give at least one night a week in their homes for religious instruction. Even if they are indifferent at first, they know, deep in their hearts, it is needed. Often this is the only night of the week all members of the family are together. After a period of time, they realize the value of it to their home life. Frequently their attitude changes from one of indifference to one of warmth and friendliness. When their attitudes change, their lives change, and the church has a deeper meaning for them.

There are some basic steps which should be considered in approaching cottage meetings. Church membership is always the direct result of other desires. One must approach a cottage meeting much as an artist does his canvas; he has in mind the final results, but knows they can be realized only when he has fulfilled the basic requirements.

Where the Cottage Meeting Begins

The cottage meeting calls first for a plan, then a foundation, and finally the rearing of the structure according to the plan.

The Plan

There is a saying common among salesmen: "Plan your work, then work your plan." All labor is useless unless performed in harmony with a fixed purpose. In starting a cottage meeting, we should ask ourselves, "What do I wish to accomplish in this home? How can I create a desire within the members of this family to become better acquainted with God?" Knowing that they will never accept anything better until they have the desire within their hearts to see, we should ask, "What good thing can I bring them which will cause them to want to see?" The plan should be for their best good and not merely to build a record for the church or a name for ourselves.

The Foundation

There are two things which will pave the way into the hearts of those you wish could see. Few persons can resist prayer and sincerity. These two factors are the best tools any minister can use in converting people. Prayer will show you their needs and furnish the necessary strength you need to move them to conviction. You must carry their needs in your heart and continually petition God in their behalf. You cannot do more for anyone until you have prayed for him. Service must find root in the soil of prayer and sincerity before it can become effective.

Sincerity is the companion of prayer. You cannot pray effectively for a person without being sincere about him. People cannot help being interested in those who are interested in them. Conversion is the result of prayer and sincerity. We must remember this is more than a job; it is helping someone find the way of life.

Rearing the Structure According to the Plan

All plans are useless unless we work them. We can lay the founation, we can draw the plan, but unless we work that plan, we'll not get the desired results. Build the structure as you go along, from night to night, as you understand more of the individual's needs. Ultimate success depends on working the plan.

Obtaining Prospect Lists

(Homes for Services—Prospective Attendants)

The first thing to do is to call your priesthood members together and lay before them your desires and plans. See that at least one man goes with you each night. This will help him and it also helps tie the family to the local ministry. The priesthood should be united in prayer and give full co-operation to the endeavor.

The second step is to get the officers and teachers of the branch together and lay before them your plans. Suggest that they canvass each department for nonmembers (not outsiders), and put their names and addresses on a card. If they are children, it presents an excellent opportunity to contact the parents and ask if they would like to have one of our ministers come to their home and explain the program of the church to them—they should know what their children are being taught. Each department, then, can go to work on its group for prospective homes in which to hold meetings.

The third and most important way to locate prospects is through the branch records. These furnish valuable information of the condition of the congregation. I would suggest going over the records with officers and teachers for any prospective members—husband, wife, children, father, mother, or in-laws. I copy the names of all nonmembers I find in the records, and even though I do not find a class in each home, it furnishes a good visiting list.

a. If a branch hasn't had any children blessed in several years, it is a fair sign that it is dying. Our natural increase should come from children being blessed. A special day should be set aside for this purpose; Easter is an excellent time. You often find prospects in the homes of these babies.

b. If, in checking the branch records, you find that one half or more of the membership is forty years old or over, you can be sure that most of the prospects will be about the same age. One should inquire about the children and make a special effort to interest them. Cottage meetings can do that.

c. The priesthood affords another way of sizing up the needs of a branch. If no young men have been ordained for a number of years, the branch is on its way out. Each congregation is dependent upon its young men for future leaders. Unless they are developed and called into the priesthood, the branch will become stagnant and eventually die.

d. Check on families that have moved to other branches and suggest they be transferred in harmony with general church policy. Encourage promptness in transfers and keeping records up-to-date. This will lower the percentage of membership loss in moving. Another help in locating families that have recently moved is to make transfers in duplicate. One is sent to the statistician and one to the new branch. This gives the pastor an opportunity to call while the transfer is being made.

e. Check the number of divided homes. This is an important item in all branches. We should keep in mind that every home united makes the branch stronger and the family happier.

The fourth way to obtain prospects is to have each member of the branch hand in two names of their closest nonmember friends. Each member should have at least two nonmember friends who would open their homes to a cottage meeting. Or, if the meeting can't be held in the friend's home, the member may hold it in his and invite the friend in. (Limit the number in attendance at each meeting to the member who is doing the asking and the nonmembers who are invited.) I have found these four methods the best in obtaining homes for cottage meetings.

Advertising Methods

The best is always personal advertising by word of mouth. Get the people talking about the church by inviting their friends to each service at the church. The women can help by inviting nonmember women to their meetings and letting them know what is going on. Let them know that the service of the minister is available at all times.

A personal letter from the pastor to each member, informing him what is being done and asking him for his co-operation and prayers for the success of the meeting is good publicity. Another way to advertise is to mail bulletins to each member for a period of weeks. This should be included in your original plans.

Tracts are always important. I find it helpful to present a tract on the subject being presented during the series. The Call at Evening is one of the best missionary books we have. Make the nonmember a present of it; give it—don't loan it.

The best advertising is the minister himself, and the first impression is vital. If nonmembers can feel at the very first that you are interested in them and their needs, they will respond. Never leave the impression that you are visiting them to convert them. You are there only to help them. Be happy and cheerful, but don't overdo it. Be sincere and honest in your observations. Avoid controversial questions. Try to understand the other person's problems and never embarrass him. Give him credit for what he believes, and never belittle that belief. Conduct yourself toward him as if he were your personal friend.

A telephone committee can work very effectively by calling members and friends to remind them of the services to be held.

Type of Service

Cottage meetings should be very informal. By that, I mean there should not be a song and prayer as in the church service. I never start a meeting with prayer until I have visited in the home several times. A cottage meeting is not church; it is a place of instruction. Some people refuse cottage meetings because they think it means singing, prayer, and other religious formalities.

I use slides in conducting my cottage meetings; however, I think flannelgraphs, cards, charts, and chalk talks can accomplish the same results. The reason for the aids is to help in the introduction of a subject or point of discussion. The real reason of the service is to get the listeners to talk. If they have a problem in mind, let them present it and then help them solve it. This is the difference between a cottage meeting and church. Very few times will anyone ask a question after a sermon, but many feel free to express themselves in an informal cottage meeting.

In answering questions, I usually suggest that people use their Bibles, and we check the Scriptures together. I try to impress on them that the truth is in the Scriptures, not just what I personally think. The Bible is our standard of measure. Remember, you will never convert a person unless you can get him to talk. If you find one who does not talk readily, then end your conversation with a direct question. Unless he is extremely stupid, he will answer your question.

Nature of Attendance

(Members, Nonmembers, Family Groups, etc.)

Limit the group to the very minimum, keeping in mind that people will not express themselves when there are too many present. Don't be discouraged if only one or two come at times. This is an asset to your plan. It is better to hold a larger number of meetings than to hold a few with large attendance.

Subject Matter and Arrangement

Your plans for a cottage meeting include certain results. If it is in the home of nonmembers, you are concerned about their becoming better acquainted with Christ. For them to do that, they must know something about the Church of Christ, not Latter Day Saints. Everything that is presented must have Christ as its central figure.

I start my meetings with a lecture on archæology as it applies to ancient America. I attempt to accomplish two things in this first lecture. I try to make it educational and use it as a means of getting better acquainted with the people who come. I say nothing at which they can take offense. Then I bring out the fact that Christ did come to ancient America, and that it was his influence which caused the people of that time to become cultured and powerful. I explain that they became degenerate when they refused to follow the teachings of the Good Shepherd. I do not mention the Book of Mormon at the first meeting.

The second lecture is on the life of Christ. In it, I "build" the Church of Christ, not Latter Day Saints. The church is the center of influence.

In the third lecture, I point out that the original church passed through a period of darkness because of the hardness of men's hearts. While in the first talk, I built the church in the life of Christ, I now show that it was torn down in a period of darkness.

The fourth lecture deals with the Church of Jesus Christ restored, not Latter Day Saints. It is different from any other because of its restoration. Man and God again work together. At this time, I talk about the Book of Mormon, explaining that it came forth with the Restoration. At this point, I have had three weeks in the home, and friendships have been made, confidence has been established, and my listeners are receptive to my message.

I believe that nonmembers can get a better over-all picture of the church and its purposes in these four lectures than by any other method.

Life after death is another excellent lecture in which most all people are interested. Our interpretation meets their questions better than any other theory. It gives them faith, hope, and confidence in the future. It makes God a being of love rather than vengeance.

Obtaining Decisions

Getting decisions is the most difficult task of all. You will have to be very careful in your approach, or you may undo everything that has preceded it. You should be patient, prayerful, sincere, firm, and understanding. Remember your job is to change the thinking of people to new channels. This means they may have to change their lives, their habits, their attitudes, and their thinking. It calls for all the wisdom you have accumulated plus additional wisdom from God. You are acting as the middle man; you stand between God and those you want to see God.

In getting their decisions, you are committing them to a new way of life, new vision, and new responsibilities. Your plan for them at the beginning of the cottage meetings must be completed in the decision. Your desire for them to see Christ as you see him must materialize. In their decision, all this is realized. It is the climax of not only four lectures but also eight or ten sermons and hours of thought, prayer, and friendship. It may mean the realization of the prayers of friends or companions. The decision is the most important part of the whole meeting. It has to do with their lives. You are introducing them to God. You are helping them to see that they are not working for him, but with him.

In getting decisions, you must develop the art of thinking through them. Put yourself in their place, environment, background, and thinking habits, then ask yourself, "Why change? What benefits will such a change bring? It will mean making new friends, adjusting business habits, a different use of leisure time, and seeing things differently."

If you can give good enough reasons for the change, you can get their decisions. In other words, learn to see through their eyes and feel through their hearts. Always keep in mind that you are tying them to the Church of Jesus Christ—not man. It is Christ's Church they are identifying themselves with.

If you don't get their decision, leave them as good friends.

Ministry of Little Things

It is a good man who can bring to the doing of little things all the dignity and enthusiasm of the doing of big things. There is something about the man who can find joy and satisfaction in humble work which enhances his personality and increases his worth to the church and society. Of course, a man cannot be expected to be forever deprived of big tasks. To be continually engrossed in little things might well lessen his ability to do the larger service, but certainly the humble doing of less noted duties of the church service is a rich course of inner development. Too often we crave for the sensational, while the "little things" cry out for our intelligent and sympathetic attention.

Let us thank God for the ministry of little things and sense it as an avenue of growth in Christ.

Children and Music

By BLANCHE NEAL SHIPLEY

MUSIC IS THE NATURAL HERITAGE of any child, whether he be born in hovel or mansion. Like speech, it is a language. Through it all races, all creeds, all diversities of thought and vocation come into a common channel of understanding and appreciation.

Fortunate is the babe whose mother is not too busy to cuddle him in her arms each day and sing him to sleep. This, too, is the heritage of any child, and a mother who deliberately robs her baby of such an experience is robbing him of some of life's most precious memories. Not only that, she is robbing herself of a personal contact with her child that means more in the forming of good habits and character than all the books on discipline can give her.

A baby who is sung to every day will soon imitate the sounds he hears. At first only in one-note or one-syllable sounds, then in groups of two or three; finally he will delight you with a full phrase of the song you sing to him. Don't worry if it is off key. Some children seem to have perfect co-ordination, and their first efforts at singing are melodious and in tune; others are not so early equipped by nature to do so. They seem to be making only a happy noise, which is all right. Don't suppress or ridicule these first attempts; there is ample time for the development of pitch and tone, but there is never time for a crushed spirit in the musical experience of a child. Keep a wholesome attitude toward his singing efforts; always believe that someday he will sing. The thing most important is to see that he develops happy mental associations with his singing. Never tell a child of any age that he cannot sing. Satis N. Coleman in Your Child's Music says, "Discouragement is the greatest handicap that can be placed in the way of singing. You may challenge a child to put forth muscular and mental effort to overcome some obstacle or attain some goal; but the voice doesn't function that way. Effort and strain are the greatest enemies of voice production. Singing in tune must come first through free and spontaneous imitation; later on, self-confidence (which has been built up through singing experiences and happy mental associations with his singing) and thoughtful attention to the sound will help. A crushed spirit is deadly to the singing voice, as many adults know from experience."

CHILDREN DIFFER WIDELY in the age that they first sing. Some can carry a tune of several measures when only two years old, while others do not attain this ability until they are five or six. Don't be alarmed if your child has reached that age and still cannot sing in tune. Few children are monotones, but if your child is one of the few, his is not a hopeless problem at all. Unless some physical defect makes it an impossibility or former experiences have caused inhibitions in personality, your child, with proper training, can learn to sing.

My two daughters have sung since they were big enough to make a noise. Sometimes at church when they were tiny, they almost broke up the congregational singing by their eagerness and volume, but now they keep their voices modulated to suit the occasion. After the girls found that they could sing songs alone, they begged for a "music lesson" practically every day. The lesson idea originated when a neighbor girl began coming to our home twice a week for piano lessons. They were so eager to sing with the piano accompaniment that I played the melodies for them for several days until the novelty wore off, and they were willing to take their "lesson" at any time, anywhere. As long as they want to call it a lesson, I'll allow them to do so, but a small child's singing experience should never be limited to formal "lessons"; it should be free and easy, during play hours or rest times. Did you ever see a youngster laboriously practicing at the piano, his eyes sad and his mouth drawn into a grim line of defiance? Have you ever visited in a home where a child was forced midst tears to sing or speak a piece for "company"? Never do that to your girl or boy. Let their baby years be filled with happy music associations, free of inhibitions; later they will reward you with pleasing public performance and poise. In no sense of the word is a normal child of two to four years physically or mentally equipped for "cut and dried" music lessons of any kind. Satis N. Coleman so ably emphasizes this point when she says, "To try to force the immature power of a child is to blight it."

E. Mildred Nevill of London University says further upon the point, "Forced development is always to be deplored.

Those who drill their children up to a standard which they cannot reach without strain, may be considered good teachers by some, but they are not only poor psychologists but also poor educationists."

CHILDREN ALSO DIFFER widely in the age that they want to "settle down" to a conventional tune and not go rambling off in an imaginative melody stroll all their own. This reminds me of my sister's distress a few years ago when she tried to teach her four-year-old daughter to sing a song all the way through.

"But I want to sing it this way, Mummy," the young cherub would say without fail. "I like it this way much better." And away she would soar into unknown realms, leaving her mother in mental depression.

"Can't you do something about it?" my sister asked me one day. "Do you suppose the child will ever stick to one song long enough to sing it through?"

"Leave her alone," I advised. "She'll come out all right when she gets a little older. After all, four-year-olds are not emotionally settled to 'stay put' too long at a time. Her musical experience is much like her muscular activity in that it must be free, expressive, variable, and above all, happy. Let her sing, and sing with her; gradually she will mature to the stage of 'staying put.'"

And she did.

Almost any mother can sing sufficiently well to sing to and with her children. The quavering qualities of the opera singer are neither necessary nor desirable for young children to imitate. Quite as taboo are the "nosey" tones of many radio singers. Keep your voice natural if you want to preserve the natural qualities in your child's voice. And this is the very thing you want to do. Vocal exercises are harmful to immature voices and should not be indulged in even though you have reasons to believe your child is very talented.

NOW COMES THE PROBLEM of when to start the child on an adult instrument. In this, too, the ages vary, but most authorities agree that it should not be too soon—perhaps between seven and ten—or the child will be pushed ahead of his normal development; this often results in discouragement, loss of interest, establishment of poor working habits, and sometimes resentment against all things musical. A wise parent will consider carefully not only the possible talent of the child, but also the nervous temperament, physical health, and general intellectual ability and maturity as well. A congenial talk with the family doctor, the kindergarten instructor, and a reputable music teacher may prove beneficial.

In connection with this, again let me quote from Satis N. Coleman in Your Child's Music: "Even if your child is very talented, don't be in a hurry for him to make technical progress. Let him first establish his place in the world with a healthy physique, well-adjusted in his relations to his family and fellows; secondly, fill his young life with joyous musical experiences on the childish level, and when he is ready for technical work, he will more than make up for the delay, in both musical progress and physical health."

Perhaps you're saying, "But my child doesn't sing at all, and isn't interested in music of any sort." Cheer up! Formerly, if a child couldn't sing in tune, he was considered unmusical; but now we know that to many children the sense of rhythm comes first. Maybe your child is going to be a drum major or baton twirler! Give him a chance to use his hands and arms, his legs and feet, in fact, all his body in rhythmic expression. Don't be alarmed at any awkwardness he exhibits at first. Keep on singing to him, and let him hear good music on the radio. Encourage him to make up songs of his own, about the birds, the trees, the sky, the sunshine. Ask him a question in song, and perhaps he will answer you in the same manner. If not, don't criticize his nonmusical responses. Keep it on a playful, companionate level if you want good results. Tap tunes with your hands, play "echo" with your voices, imitate animals in the way they walk or jump in both song and rhythm.

Then, if after all your efforts, the little fellow still seems to be unmusical, be consoled by the fact that there must be some onlookers as well as sharers in the musical world. In all probability, as he matures normally, he will respond to the many varied musical experiences in school; don't let over-anxiety cause you to create unwholesome attitudes within the home. There is a certain sacredness attached to the latent powers of a child. Let us not, as mothers, bring misery into a little one's life by forcing development in a way contrary to the plan of the Creator. A normal child living in an atmosphere of love and understanding with ample musical experience will, in due time, respond favorably.

It's "On the Record"

By Floy Lorene Bennett

IN OUR LAST COLUMN under this title, we discussed the advantages of good phonograph records in helping to entertain and educate children. This time we shall describe two more albums which would make suitable additions to the children's library of recorded music and drama.

The Prettiest Song in the World

"What is the prettiest song in the world, Mother?" Sandy asked. He had heard his mother sing at her work, and his simple question grew into a big curiosity—as sometimes happens with little boys. Sandy's mother did not know the answer, but he would not give up. He would search all over the world until he found the answer himself. As told by Dame Mae Whitty, with the assistance of an orchestra and several soloists (RCA Victor, Y332), one may follow with interest the exciting but almost fruitless wanderings of the small boy. Sandy found the cowboy and listened to his song. He heard the song of Tony, the vegetable man. The music of the big train intrigued him for a while, and the song of the birds was very pretty, too. None of these measured up to his ideal for the prettiest song in the world, however, so he traveled wearily on until he met the river. He enjoyed its lazy song, and he was interested, also, in the loud, harsh song of the city. But after the very funny circus song, he was discouraged and gave up the search. It was late when he returned to his mother. "I couldn't find the most beautiful song in the world, Mother. I heard many pretty ones, but none of them was most beautiful. I'm so tired." As Mother tucked her little boy in bed, she sang:

Lullaby, close your eyes and dream away.

Lullaby, tomorrow is another day,
Lullaby, the stars will fill your room with light.
So lullaby, close your eyes and sleep—good-night.

Sandy closed his eyes and just as he was falling asleep, he murmured, "That's it! My mother's lullaby. That's the prettiest song in the whole world. Thank you, Mother. G-o-o-d-n-i-g-h-t."

Pee-Wee, the Piccolo

In our efforts to develop an appreciation of music, especially instrumental or orchestral music, we may be greatly aided by giving the child "Pee-Wee, the Piccolo" (RCA Victor—Y322). Unless the child is precocious, perhaps it would be better to wait until he is four or five years old before introducing him to this particular record, but it is an excellent selection for pre-school and primary-age children. Woven around the story of the unfortunate Pee-Wee who lost his solo just before a big concert was to be played, is a cleverly designed program for teaching the child to recognize the various instrument voices in the orchestra. They are played singly and in choir groups. Every tone from the orchestra artfully helps to tell the amusing story of poor Pee-Wee who searched everywhere for his solo before he finally found it in the possession of an owl. The owl was reluctant to give it up, but finally he was persuaded, and Pee-Wee proudly carried his solo back to the concert hall where he was greeted with grateful enthusiasm by the rest of the orchestra.

Another record which has been prepared for the same purpose—that of teaching in an entertaining way the voices of various orchestral instruments—is "Rusty in Orchestraville." In addition to furnishing variety in listening fun, using both records will stabilize learning and further appreciation by presenting similar material in different settings.

Love

Love is the benevolence attributed to God as being like a father's affection for his children; also, men's adoration of God. Love is strong liking, fondness and good will.

Our lives are influenced as we read of God's only begotten Son, a precious gift of love to us. His purpose in giving us Jesus Christ was that we might have life more abundantly. Jesus taught us to love, to develop, mentally, physically, and spiritually, and to ponder over noble thoughts. We are bound to have trying experiences while traveling over life's pathway, but with our hearts open to him and with prayers on our lips, we shall do our task triumphantly. Many people owe what they are now to the problems they overcame yesterday.

Are we interested in the welfare of European people? Do we read of their sufferings and possible catastrophes without love and concernment? We should love all of God's children, even those not of this fold, because love is portrayed by our interest in one another. To maintain even a portion of our Heavenly Father's love, we must spread the gospel by living, loving, and teaching in a Christ-like manner.

Selections from the autobiography of

A Mission

WHILE I WAS ATTENDING the General Conference of 1911, Apostle J. F. Curtis spoke to me about taking a mission. I gave him my application, and at that conference I was appointed to labor in the Eastern Oklahoma District. Shortly after I was notified of the appointment, I began to make arrangements to go to my mission. I resigned as branch president, and the congregation elected Elder J. T. Hacket, who had recently moved into the group, to be president.

At the close of the service, Brother Abrahams said to several of us, "How long do you hold your services?" and, looking at his watch, said, "It is now twelve o'clock." I said to him, "You are mistaken about the time. It is only nine o'clock." Brother Abrahams then left for his home which was about ten or twelve blocks away, but he did not reach his home until the early morning. He had had a cerebral hemorrhage. His wife hearing a noise at the front door went to see about it. There she found him lying on the porch. Sister Abrahams sent for the doctor who said the chances were against his getting well.

About three months later, Brother Abrahams was able to be up and around. When I heard this, I went home and made appointment to meet Bishop May at Brother Abrahams' home. As I still held several offices in the branch, including the chairmanship of the building committee, I wanted to resign in favor of Elder Abrahams, but he would not then accept any of these offices. I here must confess that I was trying to help to fulfill the prophecy. That was the human side of the matter; but God did not need my help. Sometime later, Brother Abrahams became quite active and really did a fine piece of work, the best he ever did. He was a good man, honest and upright. It fell to my lot to say the last words about him.

Oklahoma

As previously stated, I was appointed to the Eastern Oklahoma District. On May 6, 1911, I left home for Wilberton. I preached there for about three weeks. At the time I closed my services, Elder H. R. Harder, the district president, asked me to go to Haileyville, which I did. I was met at the train by the pastor, John S. White, who took me to his home. As I was entering the house, the voice of the Spirit impressed upon my mind the following: "My servant lives here, and if you will abide here and be contented, you shall be blessed in your work." The first thirty days I was there, I preached ninety sermons and baptized eighteen or twenty people.

A sectarian preacher by the name of Nailor announced that he would lecture in his church against "Mormonism." For that evening, we adjourned our services and a number of our people attended Nailor's lecture.

He used the old bombast against Joseph Smith, making many false statements. When I tried to ask a question or so, I was ordered to keep still. Just a while before he finished his lecture, he made a statement against our church at which I arose to say a few words. Mr. Nailor asked the deacon to take me out of the church. When the deacon started back to where I was seated, a large man stood up and said to him, "Don't you touch that man." The deacon turned around and went back to his seat. I then arose and walked out of their church. Several others, both members and non-members walked out with me. When I reached the outside, I went to the opposite side of the street so that I would not be on their property; and when the people came out, I announced that I would reply to Mr. Nailor's false statements the following evening, on the streets down town. A number of people gathered about me to express their sympathy. When Nailor came out, he ordered me away from in front of their church, but I informed him that I was not on their property. At this point, a fine-appearing man came and stood by me and said, "Stand your grounds." A little later he said to me, "I think you ought to go home with me tonight." I told him that I would let him know in a few minutes; meanwhile I asked Brother White about the matter. Brother White said it would be all right, that this man was a United States deputy marshal. I went with him. His name was Smith. After visiting quite a while, we retired for the night. About 11 o'clock or a little later, there was a knock at the door. I started to get up when Mr. Smith came into the room. He said, "Lie still, it is only a friend at the door." However, I arose. The man that had knocked came in and said that his lodge brothers had just voted to grant me the use of their hall in which to answer the Reverend Nailor. I told him that I had announced I would answer Nailor on the streets. He then said, "I believe it will be safer in the hall." But according to my announcement, I used the streets. A large crowd turned out. The Presbyterian minister hired a large dray wagon for his family and friends to be seated in.

While I was making my reply, a man standing on the sidewalk called me a liar. Just then a man standing back of me, said, "Sit down; you folks have had your say." Then the man said to me, "Go ahead with your preaching." I looked back to see who it might be that stood for us. It was the man who knocked at my bedroom door the night before. There were several others with him. From the looks of these men, they meant to keep order.

After that I baptized several of Reverend Nailor's members. The above account is only a brief of what happened at Haileyville. (See the Saints' Herald, Volume 58; pages 759, 760.)

Wagoner

Sometime later, the district president asked me to stop off at Wagoner to see what could be done there. Early one summer morning as I came out of Kansas City, I stopped at Wagoner. It was not yet daylight when I got off the train. Not knowing as yet where to go, I stood on the station platform, waiting for daylight. I met M. L. Newland, a priest and a real Latter Day Saint. With his assistance, we were able to establish the work at Wagoner. By permission of the city mayor, we preached on the main streets. About a week after I started preaching and putting out tracts, one of the policemen ordered me to stop, but having a written permission from the mayor, I refused to quit. The policeman then threatened to arrest me, but the chief of police came up and said, "Keep on with your services; pay no attention to him."

We continued our services on the streets and in private homes. During our street services, I met Major Ed. M. Main who had commanded the Third United States Colored Cavalry during the Civil War.

After he had heard my sermon on "Joseph Smith the Prophet" and my reference to the "War Revelation," he asked me for a copy of that revelation for which he gave me five dollars, saying, "According to what you have read, I helped to fulfill that revelation." Major Main became very friendly to us.

On the corner of the main street where we were holding our services, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Ketch had a popcorn and peanut stand. They had a much larger gasoline torch than the one I had. When the wind blew quite hard, my torch would go out. So I asked Mr. and Mrs. Ketch if they would permit me to use their torch to read from. I had two purposes in using their torch. Besides giving me a better light, it gave me an opportunity to get our message across to these good people, and it worked. In a short time they were baptized. As late as the fall of 1944, I met them in Oklahoma City, and they were still in the faith of the Restored Gospel, for which I am thankful.

In my work at Wagoner, I baptized twenty or more people and made many friends to our cause. I baptized a fine family of the Utah Church by the name of Bristow. I also baptized a very large man, six feet six, named C. W. Almgren. He was quite wealthy.

While preaching at Wagoner, I obtained two lots, free, from a man who was laying out a new addition to the city. These lots were given us for a church site.

As we continued to preach and baptize, Apostle J. F. Curtis, associate minister in charge, came and organized this group into a branch. For a time the branch flourished, but in a short while, M. L. Newland, the leading man, died.

Texas

While laboring in Eastern Oklahoma, Elder E. A. Erwin and I held a series of services at Dalby Springs, Texas. Brother Erwin went from Wilberton by train, while I went with Dr. Dalby, his wife, and little son, in their car. When we were about twenty miles from Paris, Texas, we ran into a sand bed, and stripped the differential. Brother Dalby got a man with a team of mules to pull the car about a mile to higher grounds to a crossroad corner beside a rail fence. There the car was parked for about thirty-six hours. Dr. Dalby got a place in a near-by farm home for his wife and son to stay, while he and I stayed with the car until it could be repaired. That evening a man came by with a lot of fresh fish. We bought several nice ones and had a fry. That night we spread out blankets and slept on the sand. The next day about 10 a. m., I said to Dr. Dalby, who also was an elder, "How would you like me to give you a chart lecture?" While I was only joking with him, the doctor said, "I am game; if you are willing to preach, I am willing to listen." I took my big chart and fastened it on to the brush in the fence-row. Dr. Dalby got a box and seated himself in front of the chart. I had hardly got started to talk about this chart when a man riding a mule came by. He stopped and asked if he could stay. I said, "Yes, sir." A few minutes later a man, his wife, and several others drove up. They too joined our audience, and before we had talked twenty or thirty minutes we had quite a crowd who stayed through the service which lasted about an hour. When I finished my talk, a man asked if we would preach that evening at his home, which was about a mile or a mile and a half away. We agreed to do so. This man had several lanterns hung up in the timber so we would not miss the way. To our surprise, we found quite a crowd gathered at a nice old-time Southern home. Besides preaching for an hour or more, we put out hundreds of tracts. We were asked to stay a while and hold a series of meetings, but we could not as we were on our way to a reunion being held at Dalby Springs.

Before going to this reunion, I heard that there were some rough troublemakers there. This proved to be true.

Brother Erwin and I had not preached many days until someone

Rich in Love

HE SAT ACROSS the small, dimly lit room from me, talking about the past. He looked tired. His white hair, his faded shirt—even his worn house slippers looked tired. He spoke slowly, “You know . . . it’s times like this . . . evenin’ . . . when we seem most alone. I hate to see the days gettin’ shorter. I keep busy days, but nighttimes I can’t do much but think.”

“Would it help if I brought some books or magazines?” I asked. “Maybe if you read in the evening you wouldn’t feel so lonely.”

“Don’t read much,” he confessed. “Didn’t get much of an education when I was young. Alice, there, used to read to me a lot when she could talk. She had a nice voice. Used to be one of the best teachers in the state of I-o-way.

“She was a smart one. After we married and she quit teachin’ reg’lar, she’d substitute sometimes. Once she substituted for a rithmetic teacher. There was a boy in her class that never could understand long division, and the other kids called him dumb. Well, Alice couldn’t stand that. Instead of gettin’ all impatient with him ’cause he couldn’t get his problems, she set right down with him after school and showed him how to do it. He never did have any trouble after that. His dad told me he learned more in one day when Alice was teachin’ than he did in a year with the other teachers.

“She was a real worker, Alice was. Didn’t just help out at the school and keep house for me. That wasn’t enough—she went around helpin’ other folks in their homes. If there was anybody sick, she’d go right to ’em and do what she could. She didn’t wait to be called on; she’d just walk in and offer to clean up the house or cook for ’em or whatever needed to be done. She liked to grow flowers, too, and take ’em around to the neighbors. I wish you could of seen our back yard up in I-o-way . . . why, it was just like a flower garden—the whole thing. She had roses and sweet peas and daisies and ever’ kind of flower that grows almost. I’ll never forget the sight of our home up there. Fixed it up ourselves and made it one of the prettiest places in the county.”

THE TIRED LOOK was gone as he spoke. “She was beautiful, too. Here, look at this picture of her. Had it taken just ’fore we was married.”

“She was beautiful,” I agreed, looking at the photograph he handed me. Then I looked at the Alice who lay on the bed, breathing with an irregular, choking sound as if each breath were a painful struggle to keep alive. The dark curls of the picture were white braids now, and the once bright eyes were closed except for a fraction of an inch through which she could see nothing. As long as I watched her, she neither opened nor entirely closed them. Beside her lay her hands, as pallid and motionless as if they had been made of wax and placed there. Only the rise and fall of the covers as she breathed, and the unceasing gasping and choking sounds identified her as a living being. I shuddered a little as I looked away.

“She’s been like that for nearly eight years,” he said, answering my unvoiced question. “At first . . . when she had the stroke . . . she couldn’t walk. But that wasn’t so bad; she could still tell me what to do, and she could read to me. It was after she lost her voice that . . . the nights seemed so long. I don’t mind taking care of her; the good Lord knows I love her, and I’d do anything for her. But this way it’s bad, because she can’t even tell me if she’s comfortable or hurtin’ somewhere.”

I noticed how stooped his shoulders were as he walked over to the bed. He sat down, picked up one of the limp hands and patted it gently.

“I don’t know much about . . . religion,” he said falteringly. “Alice told me about the church, and I joined it. She was always doing something for the branch up in I-o-way, and she seemed happy doin’ it, so it must be good. Sometimes the elders come and administer to her, and it seems to help—I think God hears their prayers. I think he hears mine, too. Someday,” he spoke to the wax-like hand he held, “I believe this hand is going to move again. Someday, Alice is going to open her eyes and look at me—just like she used to. She’s going to walk again . . . and talk to me . . . and we’re not going to be lonesome anymore . . . ever.”

I TURNED AWAY as he kissed her hand. “God,” I whispered, “surely such faith and devotion merit a blessing.”

And then I realized He was blessing them—not physically, perhaps, but with a love few mortals ever know. I felt none of the pity for them when I left that I felt when I came. In spite of the drab little room, the faded shirt, the unseeing eyes, and the loneliness, I knew that they were rich. I thought then of the foolish poor who inhabit the earth—the poor of heart and soul who live their whole lives without ever knowing this kind of faith or love.

“God, help them,” I prayed silently as I walked home. “They are the ones who suffer most.”

(This sketch is about two very real people—William and Alice Hussung. Alice is the daughter of J. F. Minton who served the church many years as a missionary. They live at 1032 West Waldo, Independence, Missouri.)

A Trip to Kirtland Temple

A year of fasting and prayer by the Liahona Class—and painstaking planning of the most minute detail by our teacher, High Priest J. L. Prentice, that we might know the joy of having all things prepared ahead for us—had its culmination in our visit to Kirtland Temple on the week-end of May 22, 23 and 24 (Victoria Day).

The thirty-eight members and friends who were privileged to make this memorable trip, together with well-wishers, assembled in the church for prayers under the leadership of Elder Fred Long, before entering the bus at 8 a.m. In the bus, the driver, genial Brother Charlie Hill, welcomed each and instructed us in the most comfortable methods of traveling on an extended trip.

The "Liahona Holiday Extra" was delivered before we left the city. There were song sheets, also, which played a conspicuous part in the program arranged by Brother and Sister E. Clark.

On Saturday night we arrived at the Parmley Hotel in Painesville, Ohio, which became our headquarters. Nine o'clock Sunday morning saw us again united on the bus, where prayer was led by Brother James Wilson. Inspired by the beauty of the countryside, we sang the songs of Zion as we wended our way to the Temple, which was about a twenty-minute drive from the hotel.

We were greeted at the door by Pastor Ray Ashenhurst and the hostesses.

We entered the Temple with full hearts and mingled emotions to the melodic strains of the organ. Again we were welcomed by Pastor Ashenhurst, who announced that this was "Toronto's Day" and that the services had been so arranged that members of our own priesthood would participate in the various meetings. Then followed an address by Brother William Rimes of the Temple, who spoke of brotherly love in a Zion world where brotherhood would be the dominant factor.

At the church school service which followed, we again enjoyed the class discussions and interchange of ideas.

At the 11 o'clock service, High Priest J. L. Prentice, with Brothers Ashenhurst and Long entered the sacred pulpits as the gifted organist played, "He Shall Feed His Flocks Like a Shepherd." It was felt that the ministry of music added much to the dignity of the service and the liberty of speech granted to the speaker.

At the conclusion of this service, the women's department of the Temple served us a chicken dinner, complete with all the "fixins," in the dining hall opposite the Temple.

Replete with good food and good fellowship, we made the most of the facilities of the recreation room to visit with the Saints. It was particularly heart warming to renew our acquaintance with our beloved brother, Gomer T. Griffiths, who spent the entire day among us. We rejoiced that he still looked forward to completing a century of living.

Later in the afternoon, Pastor Ashenhurst conducted us on a tour of the Temple, graphically pointing out those architectural features, the perfection of design, and the exquisite attention to detail that astonish the modern architect. To the Latter Day Saint, gazing upon the structure and touching with reverent finger the sparkling particles of pottery on the outer walls, it is a hallowed place and a challenge to prove God by prayer, fasting and sacrifice.

It seemed altogether fitting upon returning from the upper rooms to the lower auditorium, to assemble together in a service of praise, prayer, and testimony, under the guidance of Elder Long and Brother Bailey.

A song service, led by Brother Jack Sanford of the Temple and his gifted choir, prepared our minds for the 7:45 p.m. service which concluded our day. The speaker was Elder James Wilson, assisted by Pastor Ashenhurst and Brother W. J. Bailey.

As darkness fell, we bade a reluctant farewell to the Temple and to the many kind Saints who came on board bus to wish us Godspeed. As the bus got under way, many a nostalgic glance went back to the Temple which stood illuminated in the dusk.

A parting service was rendered us by Brother Brown, who preceded the bus in his car over the old trail used in the earlier days by the Saints on their journeys to Painesville. Here we rested until our return home on Monday.

Looks Forward to Daily Herald

I am glad there is to be a Daily Herald during General Conference. I have always taken it when it was available. In recent years, I have eagerly awaited the regular weekly Herald for news of the Conferences, but it has never been as thorough as the daily.

My father and I have taken the Herald since 1872. I was seventy-nine this June. My health is almost perfect, and many people believe me to be much younger than I am. I attribute my good health to a strict observance of the Word of Wisdom.

HERMAN D. SMITH.
Canal Point, Florida

A "Hard to Get" Convert

Through the years, the young man sought with varying degrees of sincerity for light concerning the true church of Jesus Christ. At the age of twenty-one, he felt impelled to study for the ministry in a church of the "reformation" and entered high school, having for classmates youths seven and eight years his junior.

By the time he had graduated from high school and completed two years in college, his perusal of Scriptures had convinced him that the churches of his acquaintance were largely based upon and propagated by the creeds of men. Having come to this conclusion, he was easily induced by the financial difficulties of the "depression" to discontinue his preparation for the ministry.

At about this time, he became engaged as a salesman for a food distributor and called weekly at a grocery store owned by the pastor of the Decatur, Illinois, Branch. This pastor relates that the first time this salesman entered his store, the voice of inspiration said to him, "This young man can become an efficient worker in my church." As the salesman returned week after week, the pastor had confirmed to him many times this same wisdom and admonition. Yet each attempt he made to interest the prospect in the church met with indifference.

The pastor invited the salesman and his wife to the services of the church, but got no response. Unabashed at this seeming rebuke, he placed tracts and other church literature—including the Book of Mormon—in the hands of the prospects, although without any apparent success. Still knowing his cause to be right, the pastor was not too embarrassed to proceed when, after four years of continual effort, he was assured that further efforts to awaken interest in behalf of the Latter Day Saint Church would be fruitless, because any organization that had a tingle of "Mormonism" about it was not only unacceptable but also distasteful. Having a statement of particular objection, the pastor was able to plan an intelligent program to enlighten the minds of the prospects; after that, he gained a more ready audience when he ventured upon matters of religion. The social gatherings of the Saints were used as a means of introducing his new friends to the type of life of the members of the group. Here he was able to introduce men who were under general church appointment to the prospects and arrange for a visit in their home.

When they were received and welcomed into the home, the pastor was so encouraged that he asked for the privilege of giving them a subscription to the Saints' Herald. About this time, Seventy E. Y. Hunker preached a series of missionary sermons in Decatur, which the young man and his wife attended with regularity; they were impressed by the humility of this missionary. Particularly, was the ministry of the missionary and the pastor effective when they visited in the home and bore personal testimony to the goodness of God to them and of his desire to manifest himself to man today. This personal visit and reading the Saints' Herald were the two outstanding influences upon the young couple up to that time, for they soon attended the adult class at church school and after a few weeks remained for the morning worship service. President F. Henry Edwards ministered in his capacity as the apostle in charge and mightily influenced the thinking of this young couple in favor of the teachings of the church. Finally, after more than five years of almost constant prayer and effort, the pastor was overjoyed to have the "salesman" ask for baptism into the Reorganized Church.

As you likely guessed, I was that salesman. From the joy that is in my heart, born of six years of happiness in this church, I want to bear testimony to the prayerful diligence in kingdom-building of my former pastor, Elder O. C. Henson. The tenth part of his missionary effort is not here recorded; yet it is my hope that there is sufficient to encourage the members of the priesthood to renew their efforts to win some "hard-to-get" converts. We must not lose sight of the value of the Saints' Herald as a missionary medium nor neglect the office of prayer in planning our "cottage ministry." It may not be amiss to report that three years later my wife was baptized into this church, thus completing the original task Pastor Henson began eight or nine years before.

May God bless all who contended in prayer for our enlistment in the cause of Christ.

Tribute to a Church Member

I am an old cowboy who is not able to ride at the rodeos anymore, so I travel about keeping track of the show stock. I don't meet many of your people, but I try to meet them as I can, and I always read the papers and books they offer me.

About twenty years ago, I was riding in a roundup in Wyoming, and I met a very fine boy called Jack Dempsey. He had come from Iowa, so some of the men called him the Iowa Cowboy. This boy was a nice looking fellow and you would think that he had lived in the west all his life to see him riding the range. He was well muscled and had blue eyes and a smile that would hardly come off.

The first time I talked with Jack, he learned that my bed roll was missing, so he offered me part of his until mine was found. He had a rather baby face, so I called him "Kid," which seemed to please him. He would smile and call me "Dad."

The first night we slept together, a kind old shepherd walked into our camp to help forget his loneliness by talking to the cowboys around the campfire. The old herder had a beautiful sheep dog that was his sole companion and pride. In those days the cowhands and herders were not on the same social level and, before we knew it, a couple of the boys pushed a homesteader's bulldog on the sheep dog. The bulldog soon had a death grip on the other dog's throat and would have killed him in front of the old herder if Jack had not rushed in and pulled it off by its hind feet and thrown it into a water hole.

When this was suddenly over, the owner of the bulldog was onto Jack with the same suddenness that he had started the dog fight with the help of the two cowboys. To everyone's surprise, it was another David and Goliath affair, and the righteous walked away unharmed and seemingly undisturbed.

Before we rolled in for the night, Jack and I sat on a high rock and had a long visit, as we did for several nights after that. I told him that I knew he must belong to some church, and I asked him a lot of questions. He seemed to have just the answers I wanted. I told him that I would like to pray and didn't know how. He offered to pray with me, and I'll never forget the joy it brought me. How a man could fight like a demon one minute to protect an old man's dog and the next minute could pray with a sinner like me was a miracle. He didn't pray for this life alone, but for our lives in eternity. The first time we prayed, I forgot to put out my cigaret or take off my hat, but Jack didn't complain as he must have known that a hat goes off and a cigaret goes out when God walks in.

In a few days, the Iowa Cowboy left for the ranch with some throw-backs, and I have never seen or heard of him since. It was at crack-of-dawn he rode over to the bed wagon to bid me good-by. He rode a large grey horse and, as he reached down to shake my hand, he slipped a pocket Bible in my shirt and said, "Take good care of that, Buck; my mother gave me that back in Iowa when I was in the service."

Since that day I have been on the go without hitting the same place twice, but I have never forgotten that boy. I have read his little Bible many times, and I have tried hard to educate myself in religious and business ways. A young fellow here gave me some more of your reading material, and I will go to your church when I can. I understand that you have a lot of men in your church like the Iowa cowboy, and I'm always glad to meet them and shake their hand. I love people who walk fearlessly and proudly through life as the Master did.

I hope to meet you people at your home office and to obtain more books and to someday meet that boy that everyone loved on the Wyoming range—the Iowa Cowboy.

Baptisms at Nuneaton

Nuneaton is the youngest branch in the British Isles, yet we have our own place of worship. On Sunday, July 4, six children of the church school were baptized. The parents of these children are not members, yet all were willing for the baptisms to be performed. We look forward to the day when, because of the faith of these little ones, their parents will join with us. On July 18, another baptismal service is to be held, at which time five adults will unite with the church. Four are members of the women's group. To those who are laboring in this part of God's vineyard, there comes the joy of work well done and a greater determination to work harder for the Master.

We are happy to have Brother Frank Fry and his wife, Zeta, living in Nuneaton. We have learned to love them, and we appreciate the great help they have

It was here that so many of the American and Canadian forces used to spend their leaves; to them, we send our best wishes. That God may bless and strengthen us in his great work is our earnest prayer.

A Glimpse of Zion

As we pass through this mundane existence, we catch only glimpses of life's true beauties. But we do anticipate a time when we shall be able to behold fully the beauty God has in store for his obedient children.

The Texas Reunion which we attended in June gave us a glimpse of what will be when everyone feels that he is his brother's keeper. The peace we felt as we worshiped, worked, and played together was truly Zion. As one who has attended many reunions, I can testify that this one has not been surpassed by any previous reunion I have attended. There were no outward manifestations of the spirit—no prophecies or tongues—but the peace which pervaded the grounds was enough for us to know that God was very near.—“I do not ask to see the distant scene, one step enough for me.”

That we may all be faithful until we behold the fruition of Zion is my humble prayer. Ruth Harp

Louisville, Kentucky, Gets a Church Home

This is the story of a miracle—a miracle so wonderful and far-reaching that it has awakened a branch of some two hundred Latter Day Saints to a new vision and meaning of this Restored Gospel.

This is the story of how the faith and perseverance of a few finally were rewarded, bringing joy and a blessing to many. For a long time, the Saints in Louisville, Kentucky, had been hearing about a new church. All too long they had met in an inadequate basement, the only Latter Day Saint Church in a city of half a million people.

There were those whose dream and desire was a new church with necessary facilities, but the Saints lacked courage, and, yes, faith to move forward in the face of obstacles. The faithful few made the best of this small basement, and talked and dreamed of the new church. The day came, however, after many years, when the people's hearts were ready for the task. The building fund grew by leaps and bounds; money-making drives were launched with vigor and success. A building committee was elected, plans formulated, blueprints drawn and submitted to the general church. These were returned with several corrections.

More determined than ever for a new place of worship, a dire necessity by this time, the Saints kept at it. Apostle Maurice L. Draper, in charge of the Southern Mission, and Bishop Henry Livingston were invited to visit the Louisville Branch to see the possibilities and to advise. To build over the present basement would not be very satisfactory. A new building would cost far more than the Saints in Louisville could ever raise, even with help from Independence.

Sunday, May 16, was the day set aside for Apostle Draper and Bishop Livingston to arrive. There were changes in plans. The church seemed a remote impossibility. The outlook was dark indeed. The Saints prayed earnestly and fervently that God would lead and direct.

Then it happened! A mother of one of the Saints, herself a nonmember, pointed out to the pastor a very beautiful lot for sale on a desirable corner in the southern end of the city. When he went to see the lot, he immediately noticed a building which was also for sale. He could readily foresee the possibilities of remodeling this building into a church which would meet the needs of the Saints to perfection. Upon further investigation, he found the price within the means of the branch. All this was discovered only several days before Apostle Draper was due. Bishop Livingston was unable to come at this time. When Brother Draper was shown the building in question and told the cost of remodeling, he endorsed it wholeheartedly. Time was important, since another Protestant church group was after it, so a call was put through to Bishop Livingston to obtain the sanction of headquarters. This done, the pastor felt assured that God was leading, and the enthusiasm of the Saints was renewed at seeing their dream almost realized. The pastor bought the property himself until the branch could hold a business meeting.

The next Sunday was open house at the building. Those who came and saw the possibilities were overjoyed. There was a peace and quiet about the place, as if it had been waiting to fulfill its purpose. The rest of the story is simple. The branch voted to accept the building and the plan was approved by general officers. Remodeling began on August 10, and the Saints hope to be in their building by fall.

Nothing miraculous about that? The Saints here would tell you differently. It was a miracle which led them to the building; it was an act of God giving wisdom to the men who decided to buy it; it was an overwhelming evidence of faith and love and sacrifice justified, a guarantee to the fact that when man reaches his extremities, God takes over.

There are no happier people anywhere now than in Louisville. They have a revived knowledge that this is the Church of Christ, an unwavering faith in God, and a distinct unity of purpose which will enable them to overcome any difficulty and move forward with surety and humbleness to finish the task God has given them—to have a better place of worship that men may more fully and clearly see the light that shall one day draw all darkness from the earth.

Arab Territory

The articles in the Saints' Herald are all very interesting, especially the story of the Book of Mormon, "Other Sheep I Have Which Are Not of This Fold." I've been particularly impressed with the statements regarding the present condition of things in Jerusalem, starting in 1830. Would it be possible for one of the priesthood to give us an article on the territory the Arabs will occupy? Isaac, when blessing Esau after discovering the deception of Jacob, designated certain places where his descendants were expected to dwell.

Continues to Study

It has been fifteen years since I left my home in Independence and came here for medical treatment. I enjoyed the out-door work, which I did for nine years, and my work in the occupational therapy department. I have regained my health and am able to study in my spare time. I have completed three Spanish and two French textbooks, and have been a regular reader of newspapers, the Saints' Herald, and the Scriptures. I have tried to let my light shine, and, through the grace of God, I expect to remain true to the covenant I made at the water's edge when I was baptized fifty-three years ago.

Knowledge, Beliefs, and Desires

By Robert Brackenbury, Ph.D.

I HAVE RECENTLY COMPLETED a thesis concerning the knowledge and beliefs of high-school seniors regarding labor unions and management. Among other things, I wanted to determine whether today's seniors agreed in their beliefs more with union leaders or management leaders. Thus, it was necessary for me to determine the issues upon which union leaders and management leaders disagreed. In the attempt to do this, fifty business and labor leaders were asked to indicate their beliefs by marking a test containing sixty items. One of these items will indicate the nature of the test:

(a) The open shop is more democratic than the closed shop.

(b) The open shop and the closed shop are equally democratic.

The business and labor leaders were instructed to indicate with which of the two statements they more nearly agreed. All of the labor leaders who marked the above item chose (b), while all but one of the business leaders chose (a). Thus, there was almost a complete disagreement between business leaders and labor leaders concerning this matter.

It hardly seems likely that this disagreement could have resulted from differences in knowledge between these two groups. Surely both labor leaders and business leaders know what the "open shop" and "closed shop" are, and certainly both groups are acquainted with the term "democratic." It may be that labor leaders have a different conception of "democracy" than business leaders, but surely the difference is not so great that it accounts for the disagreement between these two groups. How, then, can this disagreement be explained?

It would seem that the wishes or desires of these groups might account for the disagreement in their belief. Labor leaders, on the whole, approve of the closed shop and, hence, would like to believe that it is as democratic as the open shop. Business leaders, on the other hand, are often inclined to oppose the closed shop and would like to see it regarded as undemocratic. Thus, of the knowledge, facts, and information available to both groups, each selected that which supported what it wanted to believe.

MY STUDY was limited to the field of industrial relations, but other studies in other fields have also revealed that the wish, rather than knowledge, is the basis of belief. Might this hold true also in the field of religion? Or more to the point, do we Latter Day Saints base our beliefs on our wishes and desires rather than on knowledge? Far too often, I fear, we do. The following example might serve as a concrete illustration of this point.

Shortly after our entrance into World War II, a member of the church arose in a prayer and testimony meeting and spoke to this effect: "If your sons are righteous, have no fear for their safety. God will protect them." These are not his exact words, but they tell, in effect, what he said. I do not doubt that this brother had the best of intentions, for he obviously was trying to allay the fears of parents whose sons were likely to be called to the colors. Nor do I doubt that he sincerely believed what he said. Had he been called upon to prove his belief, I'm sure he could have recited many instances in which a righteous person was in great peril but had not been harmed. What he failed to acknowledge, however, was the many times righteous people had not been spared and the many times unrighteous people had been spared when in great danger. This brother so wanted God to be the kind of deity that protected the righteous that the only evidence he would accept was that which supported his desire.

BUT WISHING does not make it so, and we can't make God into the sort of being we think we would like him to be. I am not suggesting that our wishes should have no relation to our beliefs or that they should be suppressed or rejected. Alma, when speaking to the Zoramites, said, "But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a particle of faith; yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words." Alma seems to be saying that the first step in believing is desiring to believe and that our beliefs originate in our desires. Indeed, this may be true. But let us not forget that Alma first said, "But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words." And we are told elsewhere in the Scriptures to hold fast to that which is true. Experimenting upon words and holding fast to that which is true implies rejecting that which is untrue. Thus, my plea is not that we ignore our desires, but rather that we use them as starting points and go on to build our beliefs upon a foundation of knowledge.

Ode to the Pacific

I walked by the sea,
Savoring the sting of salt spray
Flung by white-capped jesters
Laughing at me.
In merry mood, the sea
Frolicked 'round the rocks
In frothing swirls
Free.

I walked by the sea,
Lured by the surging beat of breakers
Lashing the rocks.
In mutinous mood, the sea
Strained to be free
Of the unseen leash that held it
Tide-bound.

I walked in the sea,
As restless as the rhythmic swells
Closing in on me.
And in musing mood, I yearned to be free
Of my short-sighted shackles that hold me
Earth-bound. —Aleta Runkle.

The Trouble-Shooter

The Problem of Politics

Question: With politics in the present terrible condition, how can a Latter Day Saint vote intelligently? What attributes must one look for in a candidate running for office, both local and national?

Answer: By Leonard Lea

1. The voter should realize that party is important. Some people say, "I never vote for the party; I vote for the man." The intention is good, but the idea is mistaken. The party stands for certain political principles and purposes. The voter should determine which party principles come nearest to his own convictions and best represent him. Consider not the campaign promises but the record.

2. The voter should not necessarily be anchored to one party for life. Some people are more loyal to their political party than they are to their country. This inevitably leads to bad citizenship, and will betray the country to its ruin. We must be loyal to the welfare of our country above any party.

3. The voter should try to examine the record of the candidate as a man and a citizen. The candidate should have a clear personal record; he should be morally clean and honorable. He should be one who has paid his debts and conducted his business honestly. He should be intelligent. If he is one who has worked for good government in the past and has voted right on important issues, he can probably be trusted in the future.

4. The good church member should not support any corrupt political machine that is fattening itself by robbing the people. Of course, the member must decide for himself what is, and what is not a corrupt political machine.

5. The church member may wonder if the church should give him guidance or tell him how to vote. The church can only admonish its members to be clean and honest in all their political activities. It can ask all members to do their duty in voting. It cannot safely try to make a "voting block" out of its people, nor can it try to get them to support any particular candidates, without a risk of danger. In the early days, political activity brought persecution. Today, it could bring great harm. The church can favor civic improvement, good schools, and good government. The church has members in both major political parties, and in some of the minor ones, and it cannot favor some without going against others.

6. When we speak of corruption in politics, we should be aware of the total condition of our country. The corrupt politician or machine that buys votes is not more dishonorable than the thousands of citizens who sell themselves for a dollar or a job. The politician is a reflection of the very sorry condition of our social and political life. To have better government and better politics, we need better citizenship.

wrote on our pulpit, "We give you twenty-four hours to leave." When we read this, Brother Erwin said he thought we had better do so, and he left soon, but I remained for about a week. (Dr. Dalby had left some-time before.) When I left, I joined Brother Erwin at a little railroad town about fifteen or twenty miles away. I had hardly got settled down for a few days when Brother J. N. Cox of Dalby Springs drove up. He said, "I want you brethren to return to Dalby Springs. The Baptists have started an arbor meeting since you have left, and they are telling all manner of falsehoods against our church. I want you to answer them."

Brother Erwin would not go, and he tried to persuade me not to go, saying, "They may kill you." They would have done so had it not been for one of our brethren (a deputy sheriff) who caught the knife that was aimed at my back. In spite of this, I stayed about another week, preaching in our old brush arbor. Before I left, I baptized several more. (Continued in later issue.)

Graves of the Martyrs

The Pony Express for July, 1948, a publication devoted to "Stories of Pioneers and Old Trails," published a historical note sent by President Israel A. Smith, along with a picture of the graves of Joseph, Emma, and Hyrum Smith at Nauvoo, Illinois. This item was presented with an article on Abner Blackburn, a western pioneer. President Smith is thanked by the author of the article for contributing information concerning the "Battle of Haun's Mill" in Caldwell County, Missouri, which is given considerable treatment in the Blackburn diary. Blackburn also gave a brief account of events at Nauvoo at the time of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The publication of the diary will be continued in a subsequent issue of The Pony Express.

The Fagans are making their home in Stewartville.

DEATHS

LUND.—Hilmer Gerald, was born November 10, 1919, in Independence, Missouri, and died December 20, 1942, on a bombing mission over Dieppe, France. A graduate of William Chrisman High School in Independence, he was active in Boy Scout work and served as assistant scoutmaster at the Walnut Park Church. He entered the service on March 20, 1942, and went overseas in September of that year. At the time of his death, he held the rank of staff sergeant.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Lund; two brothers, Frank and Robert Lund; a sister, Mrs. Kenneth Turner; his maternal grandmother, Mrs. F. W. Jobe, and his paternal grandmother, Mrs. John A. Lund. His body was returned to the States for burial on July 26, 1948. Services were conducted at the Roland Speaks Funeral Chapel, Elders Harry G. Barto and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GREGG.—Frank Albert, was born January 6, 1884, at Santa Ana, California, and died at his home in Long Beach, California, on July 25, 1948, following a year of painful illness. For about thirty years, he was engaged in business in Long Beach; his cheerfulness, integrity, and devotion won many friends for him. He served his church as a deacon in Long Beach branch, and was also a member of the Masonic Lodge.

He leaves his wife, Hazel; a son, J. Oliver Gregg of Long Beach; a brother, Harry of Los Angeles, California; and two sisters: Mrs. Tracy Mayse of Azusa, California, and Mrs. Margie Dickey of Parker Dam, California. Funeral services were held in the Christensen-Pino Chapel, Pastor J. P. Davis of Long Beach and J. W. Rushton officiating. Interment was in Inglewood cemetery.

BARNES.—Frances Isabell, daughter of Larasia and Manley Nobles, was born August 30, 1866, at Vancleave, Mississippi, and died July 24, 1948, at the home of her daughter in Ocean Springs, Mississippi. On April 19, 1885, she was married to David Barnes; seven children were born to them. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1902 and was a faithful worker throughout her life. Mr. Barnes preceded her in death in 1932.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. A. G. Miller of Ocean Springs; Lula and Bertha Goff of Vancleave; Mrs. Frank Miller and Mrs. Clyde Tillman of Mobile, Alabama; two sons: A. N. Barnes of Escatawpa, Mississippi, and John D. Barnes of Vancleave; thirty-one grandchildren; and forty great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by High Priest Franklin Steiner, assisted by J. L. Barlo and D. W. Sherman. Burial was in the Latter Day Saint Cemetery at Evergreen.

FROYD.—James, was born October 27, 1874, at Ravenwood, Missouri, and died July 14, 1948, at Maryville, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1885 at Bedison, Missouri, and was married to Maud Winslow in 1915. Five children were born to them. Mrs. Froyd died in February, 1944.

Surviving are three sons: James, Ronald, and William; two daughters, Mary Ethel and Ruth Alice, all of Las Vegas, Nevada; and one grandchild, Elder W. E. Peak conducted the funeral service at Price Funeral Home in Maryville. Interment was in Highland Cemetery at Hamilton, Missouri.

SIMMONS.—Joseph Kelley, was born February 1, 1891, at Oscar, Oklahoma, and died July 25, 1948, at Anadarko, Oklahoma. On May 7, 1922, he was married to Lila Pearl Peck of Blackgum, Oklahoma. He was a member of the Reorganized Church.

He is survived by his wife; six sons: Roy, Floyd, Joseph, Glen, Paul, and James, all of Anadarko; two daughters: Mrs. Lois Johnson of Blackgum and Mrs. Lavenia O. Davis of Anadarko; three brothers: W. H. Simmons of Anadarko; and Floyd Simmons of Madera, California; two sisters: Mrs. Garland White and Mrs. Lula Skinner of Hartshorne, Oklahoma; and three grandchildren. Elder L. W. Kohlman of Tulsa conducted the funeral service. Burial was in the Anadarko cemetery.

YORK.—Olive Ellen, daughter of Jasper D. and Lucinda E. Flanders, was born June 24, 1866, near Cameron, Missouri, and died July 15, 1948, at Stewartville, Missouri. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in her youth and remained a firm believer in the Restored Gospel. On April 25, 1886, she was married to Joseph N. York at Stewartville.

She is survived by her husband and three sons: Claud L. of Drumright, Oklahoma; Earl D. of Los Angeles, California; and Lloyd B. of Omaha, Nebraska. Services were held at the Lyon Funeral Home in Stewartville. The Reverend Vane Miller of the Methodist Church was in charge, and Elder F. L. Hinderks gave the sermon. Interment was in the Stewartville cemetery.

GARRISON.—Susan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ingersoll, was born September 28, 1875, in Atchison, Kansas, and passed away July 23, 1948, at St. Joseph, Missouri. In 1891, she was united in marriage to William Garrison, in Leavenworth, Kansas. For twenty-three years they made their home in Leavenworth, moving in 1914 to St. Joseph. On February 27, 1938, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. She was happy in her church relationship, and her faith brought her many blessings. She did much to help others, especially caring for the sick. She was preceded in death by her husband, who passed away November 2, 1941. She is survived by three sons: Walter and J. W. of St. Joseph; and Charles of Phoenix, Arizona; one sister, Martha Boyles, St. Joseph; two brothers: Henry Ingersoll, Leavenworth, and Walter Ingersoll, St. Joseph; thirteen grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder R. Melvin Russell. Interment was in Memorial Park Cemetery in St. Joseph.

KINDER.—Ollie Myrtle, was born April 22, 1880, in Hatfield, Missouri, and died at her home near Eagleville, Missouri, on August 1, 1948. She was married to Clifford Kinder and nine children were born to them. On May 25, 1919, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Hubert Case. Her entire life was spent in the vicinity where she was born. Three of her children preceded her in death. She is survived by her husband and six children. Funeral services were conducted by L. G. Holloway, assisted by Paul Campbell, at the Lone Rock Church. Burial was in the Lone Rock Cemetery.

ANDRICK.—Damon Earl, was born August 2, 1948, at Indianapolis, Indiana, and died at birth. He is survived by his parents, William E. and Beulah B. Andrick, and his grandparents, Albert and Bonnie Thompson of Salem, Indiana. Services were conducted at the Smith Funeral Home, Evangelist Arthur W. Gage officiating. Burial was in the Salem cemetery.

HAMLIN.—Henry Fremont, son of Samuel and Maria Hamlin, was born December 16, 1856, in Erie County, New York, and died July 16, 1948, in Denver, Colorado. He spent his youth in Cherry Grove, Minnesota, and on August 17, 1881, was married to Emily Sweet. Mrs. Hamlin died on June 22, 1926, after which he made his home with his daughter, Myrtle Bennett, in Denver. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 30, 1891; his kind disposition and fine character won him many friends. On Father's Day, both in 1947-48, he was the oldest father in Denver Branch.

Surviving are three daughters: Myrtle Bennett of Denver; Cordelia Anderson of Albin, Wyoming; and Ethel Sheldon of Buhl, Idaho; two sons: Fred E. of Vallejo, California, and Raymond W. of Golden, Colorado; ten grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. One daughter, Fern, former wife of Apostle Myron McConley, died in 1931. Funeral services were held at the Moore Chapel in Denver. High Priest E. J. Williams and Elder Merle Howard officiating. Burial was in the Crown Hill Cemetery.

HAVLISCH.—Percy L., was born April 18, 1915, at Olympia, Minnesota, and was killed April 8, 1948, in a violent explosion at Fresno, California. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1942, and was a devout member until his death. During World War II, he served with the Air Corps in both the European and South Pacific theaters.

He leaves his wife, Genevieve; a son, Hal Bryant; his mother; and nine sisters and brothers. Elder Frank Enix conducted the funeral service. Interment was in the Mountain View Cemetery.

General Conference

The General Conference is the highest legislative body of the church, and in its deliberations, every member, branch, district, and stake are directly or indirectly represented. In legislation, enactments of the conference are final. They set the pattern for the work of the church in every field.

To the conference come the reports of all the general quorums, institutions, and officers. Here inspired communications for the guidance of the church are considered and approved. Here over-all policies are determined, immediate goals set, and budgetary appropriations authorized. The general ministry are sustained and the fields of appointee ministers approved.

The fundamental principles underlying General Conference action are divine guidance and common consent. The two are intimately related. Divine guidance should come to the body through the presiding quorums according to their several responsibilities. It should also be experienced directly by individuals, by quorums, and by the body in widely and warmly pervasive inspiration. The measure and the quality of the divine guidance we actually enjoy in conference are directly related to the devotion and preparation which we make as individuals and as a group.

Common consent is not just common assent. It involves free agreement after reasonable explanation and discussion. It also involves leadership which commends itself to the minds and hearts and consciences of the Saints, and so merits their warm approval. Yet again it involves an earnest disposition to "assemble together to agree" (Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1), knowledge of the "church covenants" (27: 4) and "much prayer and faith" (25: 1) on the part of the ex officios and delegates in order that they might rightly weigh the proposals advanced. And, finally, it involves willingness to abide by what is determined until further rightful opportunities for discussion occur (125: 16).

In view of the foregoing, the First Presidency asks that every member and every branch make earnest preparation for the 1948 Conference, remembering the church and her mission and her needs in earnest prayer before the Throne of Grace. —F. H. E. in The Pastor's Handbook.

THE REUNIONS have been the main news at Auditorium Headquarters for the past three months, absorbing the attention of church officials, and requiring a great deal of travel and speaking, especially of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric.

In a sense, reports from all the reunions have a great similarity, which is as it should be, since reunions generally are serving people whose lives, homes, problems, needs, and spiritual hungers are much the same.

This year, there is a very general satisfaction with the fine quality of the reunions, with the people attending, and with their response to the church program. Now that the season is over, we have many reasons to be glad for what has been accomplished.

CHURCH OFFICIALS are arranging their schedules and itineraries to converge upon Independence, where efforts to complete arrangements and organization for the General Conference are being intensified. And already, too, they are looking far beyond this conference, working with plans so that there will be a full program for conference to consider. Conference itself is not a busier time for them than the weeks and days immediately preceding it.

APOSTLE MYRON A. McCONLEY and Sister McConley arrived in Independence at the Missouri Pacific station, Saturday evening, August 21, at 8:30. They were happily surprised to find a group of about fifty persons there to greet them, including members of the Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, other church officials and friends. Thus they completed a long and arduous work and journey in England, Holland, Germany, and the Scandinavian countries. Their home in Independence was made ready for them by Brother and Sister Marvin McDole. They will have a period of rest and time to prepare for the General Conference.

DR. F. M. McDOWELL, Director of Religious Education for the church, has returned from a summer of study and research at Columbia University, New York City. He is back at his office, working on the department report to General Conference, to plans for classes and program, and on work to follow during the later fall and winter. More details of plans will be given later.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS, according to information received by the Presidency, has successfully withstood the effects of an operation, and is apparently on his way to recovery. Brother Griffiths was formerly President of the Quorum of Twelve, and has always been active in the General Conferences and work of the church.

APOSTLE BLAIR JENSEN reports on the fine work of Merle Guthrie, in a series of services at Stokes Bay, Ontario, in the Owen Sound District. There have been three baptisms and one promised, and much good has been done in encouraging and strengthening the members there. They have been at work on their building for three years, and although there is work yet to be done, they have moved into it, and can use it now. They have paid their way as they went along, and what they have is free of debt, and will be free of debt as long as they pursue present policies. Congratulations to those devoted, hard-working church people.

Looking Both Ways

THE PRESENT GENERAL CONFERENCE INTERIM draws to a close. October of 1948, in April of 1947, appeared to be far distant. And now we take a brief backward look, a resumé of what has been accomplished, noting, however, only the high lights. Adopting the formula (though not the exact words) of Ecclesiastes (11: 6) we feel we may say generally on behalf of all the priesthood, especially those under General Conference appointment: "In the morning we sowed the seed, and in the evening we withheld not our hand, not knowing what should prosper, either as to this or that, or whether they would be alike good."

We believe our united labors have been abundantly "prospered."

Pursuant to a program adopted in 1947, surveys of the work in European and Australasian Missions were conducted. President Garver and Bishop Johnson spent many weeks in Australia and President Edwards and Bishop DeLapp covered, as best they could under existing military restrictions, the situation in England and in countries on the Continent where our members are located.

Upon the return of the latter and acting on the recommendations of these brethren, the Joint Council took steps to re-establish the work in war-harassed Europe. Apostle McConley, already in Europe, had assisted in the survey, and soon he and Sister McConley were joined by the following brethren and their families: High Priest Frank Fry, Seventy Glen Johnson, Elders Albert Scherer, and Eugene Theys. All these brethren, under the direction of Brother McConley, have taken hold with vigor, and we are receiving reports of their continued success.

Our members in England, Scandinavian countries, Germany, and Switzerland have been encouraged, and their numbers have been considerably augmented.

In following up the excellent work of Brother McConley, who is returning home, the Presidency have appointed Apostle Jensen to take charge of the missionary work in England and Europe. Brother Jensen and his family will leave for England soon after General Conference.

As a result of the work of President Garver and Bishop Johnson, steps have been already taken with respect to the Australasian Mission: Two of the ministry in Australia, Herman Peisker, a seventy, who had been acting as mission president, and Elder Don A. Alberts, were brought to America, in order to bring about a closer co-ordination of effort, and Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, by appointment of the Presidency, with his family, is to proceed to that far-off mission immediately after General Conference.

Brother Peisker, a man of sterling character, whom everybody loved, as you have already been apprised, became ill soon after his arrival in this country and has been called to his reward. He rests from his labors in Mound Grove Cemetery at Independence.

THE MISSIONARY and local work in the United States is undoubtedly onward, especially wherever the Saints have received apostolic ministry. As a result, there have been marked increases in the number of baptisms, and reports from district meetings and reunions are to the effect that the Saints have been spiritually fed: the comment is frequently heard that reunions held this year have been the largest in attendance and the membership revived as never before.

One unailing index to the spiritual condition of the Saints is their response to the temporal law. Under the wise administration of the Presiding Bishopric and the bishops operating under their direction, the Saints have continued to honor the law, as reflected in the reports published from time to time by the Bishopric, thus enabling the church to carry on its beneficent objectives without any slowing down of effort because of many disturbing factors, the aftermath of World War II.

Thus we can look forward to the approaching Conference with gratitude because our labors during "the morning" and "the evening" have been so greatly blessed, and with confidence can we contemplate the coming Conference interim (to April, 1950) having the assurance that if we continue "to sow" and "withhold not our hands," the work will continue to receive the favor of the Founder and Finisher of our faith.

A Warning

I cannot close, however, without a solemn warning that the Saints should not become complaisant. It is possible that the world may soon be plunged into another devastating conflict. We need not dwell on the probable results of "all out" or "total" atomic warfare. They are too horrific to speculate upon. However, it may be more than a possibility. Let us ponder the following facts, as reflected in the latest report (May 17) of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council of the United Nations: Here is the startling beginning:

The Atomic Energy Commission reports that it has reached an impasse.

In almost two years of work, the Commission has accomplished much and has succeeded in making clear the essentials of a plan for the control of atomic energy, Nevertheless, it considers that it cannot now prepare a draft treaty

The difficulties which confront the Commission were first evidenced when the plan under consideration by most of the Governments' members of the Commission was rejected by the Soviet Union, "either as a whole or in its separate parts," on the ground that such a plan constituted an unwarranted infringement on national sovereignty.

From all indications, as I write, other impasses may be reached at any time unless Russia demonstrates—as she has not yet shown—a real desire to co-operate in a movement for peace. And so long as international relations are so seriously disrupted, war, to speak conservatively, is possible, and it may be probable. Then, if it is to be war—may God forbid!—and atomic bombs are used; who but the Infinite can foretell the results?

Robert Hutchins, President of Chicago University, whose words ought to have weight, says:

Our problem is not that of progress that we may live better, but of survival that we may live at all.

This age may, if we are clever enough to survive, be known as the great age of atomic energy turned to peaceful pursuits; or it may be known in legends left for creatures who follow us, as the age of atomic destruction and the extinction of the genus homo.

So what of the future? The times are tremendously portentous. What see you, my readers, in the "signs of the times"? I would like to be optimistic, but must be realistic.

However, our work calls us to go "with forward face and unreluctant soul."

So let the way wind up the hill or down,
O'er rough or smooth, the journey will be joy.

Yes, with our story of high adventure to tell the world, with the message of true Latter Day Saintism,

Our hearts will keep the courage of the quest
And hope the road's last turn will be the best.

And as "each morn is the world made anew," let us "sow in the morning" and "in the evening withhold not our hands." God will give the increase. ISRAEL A. SMITH

OFFICIAL

European Mission

Apostle M. A. McConley having completed his work in the European Mission, Elder Frank Fry of 40 Highfield, Nuneaton, England, is hereby appointed Acting Minister in Charge of the British Mission, pending the arrival in Europe of Apostle D. Blair Jensen.

Elders Theys and Scherer are in charge of the German and Dutch Missions respectively. They may be reached at Concordia Avenue and Annastraat, Rotterdam, Holland.

Apostle D. Blair Jensen is expected to reach England on or about October 27, when he will take active oversight of the European field.

We take advantage of this opportunity to express our deep gratitude to Brother and Sister McConley for the able and devoted ministry which they have given in Europe under very exacting circumstances. It will be a pleasure to renew association with them at the forthcoming General Conference.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
President Israel A. Smith

European Relief

Attention: Sponsors of Relief for European Families

A word of caution has been received from our representatives in Europe, regarding shipments of clothing from individual sponsors to European families. Apparently some sponsors have been sending more clothing than is necessary and, in some instances new articles have been sent on which the recipient was required to pay a high duty. For instance, it has been reported that one sponsor sent twelve dresses to one lady, also that several white handbags were sent to one elderly couple. The handbags required payment of duty and were of no particular use to the recipients.

We suggest that sponsors send only serviceable used garments and that good judgment be exercised in the amounts and types of clothing sent. In almost all instances, this office has provided the sponsor with the original clothing requests of the "adopted" family, and it is our suggestion that after these original needs have been filled, the additional amounts sent be limited to replenishing originally requested garments at proper intervals, and additional specific requests direct from the family. We sincerely appreciate the excellent contributions and co-operation the many individuals and groups are making in connection with our sponsorship program.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

White Masque Presentation

The play presentation of the White Masque Players again this year will be "Family Portrait" with Stephen A. Black as director. The limited capacity of the Little Theater prevented many from gaining admittance last year, therefore, by popular demand the players are repeating this fine play which was so well received last conference. The Conference Bulletin will give complete details on how visitors from out of town may be assured of a seat on the night of their preference. Friday and Saturday nights preceding conference week will be reserved for Independence patrons, and the week nights of conference, except Wednesday, will be open for out-of-town visitors. There will be no admittance charge, but, an offering will be taken.

Turn of the Centuries' Conference

The General Conference of 1900 was a "turn of the Centuries" Conference. The Nineteenth Century, which saw the dawning of the Restoration Movement, had given way to the Twentieth Century with its on-rushing events. It was at the end of the horse and buggy era and the beginning of the age of rapid transit—with the atomic bomb foreboding a possible rapid exit. The Conference met in the old Brick Church in Lamoni, Iowa.

Echoes from the General Conference Gavel

PHYSICAL SETUP OF PAST GENERAL CONFERENCES

IN THIS AGE of supersonic speed, people come to General Conference by train, bus, automobile, aeroplane. As a small lad, I went to my first General Conference in a covered wagon. That would be a unique experience now, and it appears unique in retrospect, but it was not unique at the time. Everyone who attended that conference came in some sort of horse-drawn vehicle.

The setting of that conference seems unique, more like some of our later-day reunions. Visitors lived in tents or covered wagons, brought most of their provisions with them, and cooked over campfires or sheet iron wood stoves. The assembly met in a big tent in the midst of a natural grove of native trees known as Gallands Grove, in Shelby County, Western Iowa. (This was in 1877.)

The most important event of the Conference for me was meeting my uncle, President Joseph Smith, for the first time in my memory. The picture remains quite vivid. He came down from the speaker's stand at the close of a preaching meeting and walked down the center aisle, shaking hands right and left with the people. I have a memory that they addressed him as "Brother Joseph." Looking back, I recall few people who habitually addressed him as President Smith. They spoke to him and of him as "Brother Joseph." He called most of the people by their first names. He was a fine looking, dignified person, obviously of a strong and balanced personality, and the people respected and loved and trusted him. Presidents Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair presided, with Henry Stebbins as secretary. Among the notables reporting were James Caffall, Charles Derry, T. W.

By Elbert A. Smith

Smith, Jason W. Briggs, E. C. Briggs, John H. Lake, William H. Kelley, D. S. Mills, Columbus Scott, J. J. Cornish, and Gomer T. Griffiths.

Scanning the minutes of the conference, I note in passing an event of some interest. A gavel made by some of the Texas Saints and conveyed by Elder D. H. Bays was presented to President Joseph Smith. This gavel will be mentioned later as it is the one President Smith surrendered to the church at the General Conference many years later, in 1909, feeling that his ministry was soon to terminate.

Another item of business of importance: a committee previously appointed to locate a place of settlement for the church headquarters reported that Decatur County, Iowa, had been selected. The report was adopted. At this conference a move from Plano, Illinois, to Iowa, culminating in the location at Lamoni received official sanction.

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS our General Conference was rather peripatetic, without fixed abode. As a rule, each annual or semi-annual gathering at its close named the time and place for the next one coming up. The fall conferences ordinarily met in Western Iowa, until discontinued. The spring conference, convening as a rule on or near April 6, met by irregular turns in Plano, Kirtland, Lamoni, and Independence. Gradually the contenders for the honor and work of entertaining the gathering narrowed down to Independence and Lamoni. These two alone had the facilities to house the congregation and lodge the visitors. Finally, the last conference to meet in Lamoni was that of 1919.

Almost from the time of his installation as President of the church, President F. M. Smith pressed for a permanent site for the conference, at church headquarters, convenient to church offices and church records, and with an adequate auditorium.

Thus in my memory, the conference moved by rather slow stages from a big tent in a grove in western Iowa, in the lumber wagon era, to its present setting in the big Auditorium in Independence in the era of jet-propelled planes, radio, radar, and the atom bomb.

Back to Amboy and the Memorable Conference of 1860

LET US TURN BACK now a long way beyond my own memory to the historic conference of 1860. Early in April, a group of Saints were assembling for a conference to be held in Mechanic's Hall in the town of Amboy, Illinois. They had come with great expectation in answer to prayer and long and anxious waiting. They had trusted the promises in the book of Doctrine and Covenants; they had trusted the promises in the revelation given to Jason W. Briggs in November of 1851:

In mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of the church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather, and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith; after many days shall all these things be accomplished, saith the Spirit.—Church History, Volume 3, pages 200, 201.

In the meantime, on the morning of April 4, Joseph Smith and his mother, Emma, began their journey to Amboy, first in a small boat rowed by their friend, Captain Gifford, as they crossed the wide expanse of the Mississippi from Nauvoo to take the train at Montrose. There was a storm with wind and rain which kicked up considerable waves, making the trip disagreeable and at times dangerous. Emma remarked that it had ever been thus in her lifetime, when the Lord had a work for her to do, the Evil One always intervened to make it difficult.

Arriving in Amboy, Joseph and Emma to the surprise and delight of the assembled Saints came into a prayer meeting at the home of Stephen and Experience Stone. As they entered the little gathering, everyone present, not by command but by common impulse, arose and stood weeping with joy.

The morning hours of the conference on the sixth of April were devoted to organization and preaching. At 1:30 in the afternoon, Joseph Smith, the third, came forward and was introduced to the conference by Zenas H. Gurley, Sr. After the introduction, Joseph delivered his address, telling of his experiences, his feelings, and his plans. We may well turn back and read it if we wish. It is found in the Story of the Church by Inez Smith Davis and in the History of the Church, Volume 3.

WE CAN ONLY IMAGINE the deep emotions that stirred the Saints at this conference. Many other things were done of importance, but the coming of Joseph and his ordination which followed his address were the important things which stand forth from that memorable conference. At the close of the ordination, Zenas Gurley, Sr., said, "Brother Joseph, I present this church to you in the name of Jesus Christ." The young man answered with his usual simplicity and sincerity, "May God grant in his infinite mercy I may never do anything to forfeit the high trust confided in me. I pray that he may grant to us power to recall the scattered ones of Israel, and I ask your prayers."—Story of the Church, page 407, edition of 1943.

The star of the Reorganization was beginning to rise and shine. The "dark and cloudy day" that followed the murder of the heads of the church was drawing to a close. Young Joseph, as he was called for years, was in his twenty-eighth year. His father, not yet twenty-five, had presided at the organization of the church in 1830.

Ahead of this young man ordained president of the high priesthood, prophet, seer, and revelator to the church in Amboy, 1860, stretched long years of growth in wisdom, experience, vision, and service. The Saints could not know that he was to keep their trust faithfully and preside over the church with distinction for fifty-three years.

Israel L. Rogers as Presiding Bishop

ISRAEL L. ROGERS came to the conference from Sandwich, Illinois. He was delayed on account of a severe illness; however, he was healed instantly in answer to his prayers. He said that when he entered the room, he found Joseph already seated in the chair, presiding over the conference and, to his great consternation, learned that he himself had been chosen presiding bishop of the church. He said to himself,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"This will never do. I am not the man for such a responsible position."

The next day Brother Rogers came back to the conference, fully determined to refuse and with a speech well worked out in his mind. Elder E. C. Briggs, the first full-time missionary appointee of the Reorganization, led in prayer. He was greatly blessed in the prayer, and the whole congregation was stirred. Israel Rogers forgot his little speech and his resolution and said, "The Lord's will be done."

Immediately after the ordination, a sister approached Bishop Rogers, handed him $10 and said, "I want to give this money to the Lord." This was the first contribution to the church Bishop Rogers received. Thus, under the leadership of the new president, Young Joseph, the prayer of the first missionary of the Reorganization moved the first bishop of the Reorganization to accept the assignment, and a sister in the congregation was moved to be the first to pay her tithing.

No one can be the first to pay tithing now, but who should wait to be the last?

The Conference of 1873

IN THE History of the Church, Volume 4, page 11, the statement is made, "This was one of the most important conferences ever held by the Reorganization and marked an epoch in the development of the church, especially as regards quorum organization."

As indicated in the preceding quotation, the chief event of this conference was the further development, under divine revelation, of the strength of the quorums. The conference met at Plano, Illinois, April 6, Joseph Smith presiding and W. H. Kelley, Duncan Campbell, and Alexander Smith acting as secretaries. On the ninth, President Smith surrendered the chair to Jason W. Briggs, President of the Twelve, who read to the conference the revelation which had been given to President Smith on the preceding March 3. This remarkable revelation is Section 117 in the book of Doctrine and Covenants.

In this revelation the organization of the Presidency was completed by the calling of William W. Blair and David H. Smith to be members of the Presidency and counselors to the President of the church. The Quorum of Twelve was strengthened by the additions of William H. Kelley, Thomas W. Smith, James Caffall, John H. Lake, Alexander H. Smith, Zenas H. Gurley, and Joseph R. Lambert.

The promise was made "if these my servants will henceforth magnify their calling in honor before me, they shall become men of power and excellent wisdom in the assemblies of my people."

Fall Conference of 1882 on the Road Back to Zion

THE SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE of 1882 met in Lamoni, September 20. Evidently the meeting was in a temporary tabernacle. The conference minutes chronicled a motion of thanks to the citizens of Lamoni for the use of lumber loaned for the purpose of building the tabernacle.

This was the last of the fall General Conferences and, the first, as I believe, to be held in Lamoni, it was in some ways a memorable gathering. The church was on its way back to Zion. That was the beginning of the promise, "Zion shall not be moved out of her place . . . they that remain and are pure in heart shall return . . . they and their children."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4. Lamoni was entering upon her role as a distinctive rallying point, a center of gathering, the place where the church was to gain strength, the place where many of the future ministers of the church were to grow up, to be trained, and to be sent forth to lives of service and distinction, which work still goes on there, particularly in the training of young people in Grace-land College.

Our First Conference in the Kirtland Temple

THE CONFERENCE of 1883 convened at Kirtland, Ohio, in the Temple on April 6. This was an occasion of great rejoicing to those assembled in that sacred building. It was the first conference to be held by the Reorganization in the Temple. Title had come to them through court decision, and they entered into their own under the leadership of President Joseph Smith, who called the meeting to order and presided over the conference. He remarked that he had been born in Kirtland, almost in the shadow of the Temple, fifty years before the gathering.

This conference had one other item of distinction. It was our first delegate conference. President Smith closed his address of welcome and charge to the ministry with these typical words: "In all our deliberations and work we should observe strictly the decorum of brethren and remember he is strongest and wisest who is actuated by the kindest spirit."—Church History, Volume 4, page 414.

The Conference of 1896 Ending on a Tragic Note

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1896 was held again in the Kirtland Temple, beginning its devotions on Sunday, with a sermon at 11:00 o'clock by President Joseph Smith, assisted by President W. W. Blair. This was one of the last times these two, so long associated in the presidency, were to stand together in their ministry.

During the conference, President Blair was taken quite severely ill and en route home by train at the close of the conference, he passed away, evidently from a heart attack. This ended a long friendship and official association between President Blair and President Joseph Smith.

The partial disorganization of the presidency effected by the death of W. W. Blair was taken care of by its reorganization in harmony with the revelation presented to the conference of 1897. The provision was rather unique. Alexander H. Smith was called to be not only the Presiding Patriarch but also a member of the Presidency; and Bishop E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop, was named as counselor to the President.

Conference of 1902—Frederick M. Smith Called Into Presidency

THE CONFERENCE of 1902 witnessed a further reorganization of the presidency in accord with the revelation calling Frederick M. Smith and Richard C. Evans as counselors to the president and the release of Alexander Smith and E. L. Kelley from that office to give attention to the duties of their respective offices.

This conference was marked also by the addition to the Quorum of Twelve of stalwart men, Frederick A. Smith, Francis M. Sheehy, Ulysses W. Greene, Cornelius A. Butterworth, and John W. Rushton.

The Conference of 1900—at the Turn of the Century and the Beginning of a New Era

TO ME, the conference of 1900, held in Lamoni, was memorable for several reasons. In the first place, it marked the turn of the century. The nineteenth century had come to an end, and the twentieth century was just getting under way. It dawned with such bright hopes that, under the clouds of today, we can scarcely remember them. In a way, too, the conference marked the end of one era and the beginning of another. Pictures taken of groups in front of the Brick Church at Lamoni at that conference show horse-drawn vehicles exclusively. But the end of the horse-and-buggy day was at hand. The mechanized era was just beginning.

Secondly, the conference was memorable to me for personal reasons. At the close of its sessions, I received my first General Conference appointment, as did also Paul M. Hanson.

For the first time, we sat on the edges of our chairs waiting to hear our assignments read.

The Conference of 1909

THIS CONFERENCE also is memorable to me for personal reasons. Elder T. W. Williams and I were the press committee and sat at a table at the front of the audience. We were quite close friends at that time and Brother Williams was a man that I had always admired. While I could never agree with some of the positions he would take, I liked him very much.

He had a sparkling personality. He was a brilliant orator, though not a logician. He could carry himself and the audience along to conclusions that he had not always thought out. He was an animated and volatile person in preaching, addressing the conference, or in private conversation. With ready smile, dancing eyes, and fluent speech, he was a charming person, considering himself a radical and rather delighting in making startling statements. One day he closed an address during a conference in the Brick Church with the characteristic declaration, delivered in his own manner: "I am a radical!" As he came down from the stand, I shook his hand and said, "Tommy, that was the most conservative statement I ever heard you make." My quip pleased him immensely, more than any compliment I could have paid him. And yet, he was a man at times given to spiritual intuition.

On the occasion I started to tell about, during an afternoon business meeting, Brother Williams wrote a letter, signed it, and sealed it in an envelope and gave it to me with a whispered instruction that I was not to open and read it until he gave me permission. Some days later the revelation contained in Doctrine and Covenants 129 was presented by President Joseph Smith. However, it went first to the quorums for their action. I met with the High Priests Quorum in the Methodist church and listened to the reading of the revelation the fifth paragraph of which dealt with me and presaged a radical change in my ministry, as follows:

The Spirit saith further to me: To fill the vacancy caused by the releasing of Counselor R. C. Evans, present the name of my servant Elbert A. Smith, the son of my servant David H. Smith, who was taken and who awaits his reward, to be chosen, appointed, and ordained as counselor to my servant Joseph Smith and to be one of the presidency. —Doctrine and Covenants 129: 5.

As I left the assembly of high priests, T. W. Williams touched my arm and said, "Brother Elbert, you may read the letter now." I opened it and still have it in my files. This is what he had written:

Lamoni, Iowa, April 16, 1909

My dear Brother Elbert: I had a singular experience this a. m. While in conversation with another your name coming up I was given to realize that the time was near at hand when you would be called to fill the same position in the church which your father occupied. It may come at this conference. If it does, and I am not to say now whether it will or not, it will give you comfort to know I have received this.

With confidence,
your brother in Christ,
T. W. Williams.

I was ordained under the hands of President Joseph Smith and Apostle W. H. Kelley. The next day after my ordination, at the beginning of the business session, President Frederick M. Smith thrust a gavel into my hand and said, "Take charge of the business meeting. Father and I have a committee meeting." I would have preferred a more gradual induction. However I got by as well as could have been expected, excepting for one thing: not being accustomed to wielding the conference gavel, when I called the meeting to order I brought the gavel down on the desk with a bang that gave me a tremendous start. The meeting came to order! And there was a good laugh at my expense. The gavel had a real echo.

With more pleasure, I recall some other incidents, for example, the first evening I was seated with the presidency in a joint council meeting, President Joseph Smith, the aged prophet, reached forth his hand and put it upon my knee, apparently as a gesture of affection and encouragement, one of those silent acts that say more than words.

I remember, too, a statement made to me by President Frederick M. Smith. As he was bidding me good-by at the close of the conference, he said, "Elbert, we always seem to understand each other without too many words." I recalled then that he had come to me before time to talk over some matters of importance in church work, and it is true that neither he nor I liked to talk interminably about a given problem, but preferred to come directly to the point.

IT WAS BECOMING increasingly obvious that so far as the presidency was concerned, we were in "a period of transition." President Joseph Smith was growing old and weary and was gradually shifting the burdens of administrative matters to other shoulders.

The Conference of 1910 was called the "Jubilee Conference" though it had its melancholy features. It was in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of President Joseph Smith's ordination to the office of president of the high priesthood and prophet, seer, and revelator to the church. Sunday, April sixth, was devoted to an elaborate program of speeches and music and addresses epitomizing the work of Brother Joseph over his fifty years of presidency—historical events, his contribution as administrator, editor, song writer, and jurist, and his personal characteristics.

In his response, Joseph said that there were only three persons in the assembly who attended the conference at Amboy fifty years earlier, himself, E. C. Briggs and Davis Rogers.

Apostle Joseph Luff offered the prayer, which revealed his singular felicity in approaching the Throne of Grace in a public assembly. Most of us, when we pray publicly, are too conscious of the human audience. Brother Luff seemed to forget the human audience and talk directly to God.

It was toward the close of this "period of transition" that Brother Joseph wrote his hymn, "Lights on the Other Shore," the tune being composed by his long-time friend, Norman Smith. The theme was suggested by words he had remembered as being uttered by his uncle, William B. Smith, when he was growing old and remarked, "The lights are growing brighter on the other shore."

Joseph's Parting Benediction

THE CONFERENCE of 1914 was the last one in the administration of President Joseph Smith. I recall that he pronounced the closing benediction, President Frederick M. Smith being in the chair. These are the closing words of that benediction:

We ask thee that thou wouldst help us one by one to faithfully observe the covenant that we have made with thee, to do that which is right according to our understanding thereof, neither to swerve to the right nor to the left by the inducements or enticements of the Adversary nor the seductions of the world.

Into thy hands we commend us, as a people, as a church, as an association, all officers and members in a common cause, asking thee for a continuance of the care which thou hast had, lo! these many, many years over this cause which we represent; and thus we ask all in Jesus' name. Amen.

These, I believe, are the last words President Joseph Smith ever uttered in our General Conference. When the gavel fell and its echoes resounded down the corridors of time as adjournment was announced, we were to hear him no more in our conference assemblies. May the spirit of that benediction abide with us yet.

Housing for Conference Visitors

The following suggestions are made for the benefit of visitors to the General Conference:

1. Do not rely on the housing committee for reservations if you can make private arrangements.
2. Give the number in your party, the names of each, and the number of rooms required.
3. State whether you are arriving by auto or by public conveyance.
4. Give the date of arrival and length of stay in Independence.
5. If alone, are you willing to share a room?
6. After making reservations, do not cancel without early notice. Cancellation will cause much inconvenience.

Housing assignments will be made after September 1, and each applicant will receive notice as soon as rooms can be located.

Needlecraft Conference Notes

This has been a good year. We have had many things that people in other lands have not been privileged to enjoy. They need our help, and we must share with them our blessings.

The Needlecraft Society will need the help of the women of the General Church to aid these people spiritually and financially, and help send missionaries to countries still devastated by the war. It solicits the help of all women in the church for contributions of articles suitable for a bazaar, such as aprons, quilts, towels, all kinds of crochet and embroidery pieces, children's aprons and dresses. Needlecraft will appreciate finished quilts. Independence women are very busy, and help to finish the quilts in time for conference is difficult to obtain.

Send all parcels and contributions to Needlecraft Society, Care of Women's Center, 1034 W. Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri.

General Conference Classes

This is a general preview of the classwork to be offered at the General Conference, October 3 to 10. Further information will be found in the "Conference Program," and in the "Conference Daily Herald," which will be issued later.

The Word of God and Our Approach to Him

All true worship is induced primarily by a movement of Deity toward us. Our sinful nature has distorted our conception of the requirements acceptable to him, and thus our faulty notions must be corrected by the spirit of revelation. There is no true worship unless it is initiated, guided, and fulfilled in the spirit of revelation.

Order in the Worship Experience

Certain attitudes and dispositions of character are always evoked in the presence of God. These follow a pattern process which can be readily harmonized with the six fundamental principles of the gospel. The position is taken in these lectures that the worship life of our people can be immeasurably enriched as this process is known by the Melchisedec priesthood and related to the selection of worship materials. There need be no finalized, inelastic, liturgical forms. The pattern of worship is the pattern of life itself, which is not always amenable to logic.

The Ordinances, Revelation Allied to Priesthood

Where there is no calling of men, there is no authority; no heavenly message, no authoritative preaching. To bring the life of God into the souls of people, our Heavenly Father has devised certain basic ordinances which are more than drama, more than symbols, more than an outward form of inward grace. They are the means or the vehicle through which divine life is bestowed. Where there is no priesthood, there are no ordinances; no ordinances, no salvation. This is the unequivocal position of the Restoration Movement.

The Worship Experience and the Moral Law

The most significant result of the spirit of revelation is fraternity. Sin destroys fraternity, because it hardens the heart, and men lose the capacity to love each other. The moral law of the church is given with its provisions and practices to safeguard the spirit of revelation and its most significant fruitage. In this lecture, the relationship between the visiting officers of the branch to the co-operate worship experience will be discussed.

The discussions of the ordinances will occupy two sessions, possibly three, lastly, orders of service and materials for worship. Worship settings will be briefly discussed, the relation of the church plant to church philosophy, the selection of materials, hymns, scriptures, psalms, poetry, special music, the function of the choir and branch officers, such as the organist and chorister will be discussed in this last lecture. It is hoped this discussion will lie within the compass of the average branch function. It is not expected that perfection will be reached, but that we shall do the best we can with what we have.

Ministry in Metropolitan Areas

APOSTLE E. J. GLEAZER, Instructor

This class is for those who have particular concern with the organization and administration of our larger city branches. It is to be conducted as an open forum with several of the leading pastors presenting the problems and possibilities peculiar to the work in metropolitan areas. General discussion will follow each presentation with the intent of gaining broader understanding and reaching helpful conclusions.

Our Missionary Program for the Local Branch

APOSTLE D. T. WILLIAMS, Instructor

This class will have as its purpose the encouragement of a universal missionary program throughout the church, which will mean a total all-out attack on the problem of winning the world for Christ. It will have as its motivation, every member a missionary, and as its goal, the spiritual development of those within and the winning of those without—"Let him that is warned warn his neighbor."

Administering the Urban Branch

APOSTLE CHARLES R. HIELD in charge of the class.

Class for Pastors and Leaders of Urban Branches

The instructors this year have been selected mainly from among a number who have achieved outstanding success in active participation in local branches. They will explain how they were able to make it work in their branch.

October 4—"Missionary Effort in the Branch," George Njeim.

October 5—"The Forming of City Missions," Garland Tickemyer.

October 6—"Religious Education in the Branch," Glenn Holmes.

October 7—"Women's Activities in the Branch," Mrs. C. W. Slasor.

October 8—"Branch Finances," D. O. Chesworth.

October 9—"Priesthood and the Branch," Charles R. Hield.

Administering the Town and Country Church

WARD A. HOUGAS, Instructor

This course will deal with the administrative problems of the churches in towns of 2,500 or less, (also larger towns that continue to have a rural viewpoint) and the open country church. Only in recent years have the churches of the nation begun to recognize the need of special administration for these churches. This course will bring the best that has been developed in other church organizations as well as in our own. It will be of special interest to all leaders of small-town and country groups. The sociology of the "rural" church will be given consideration as will the relationship of the small-town and open-country church to the community. Latter Day Saint administration will be interpreted in the light of the peculiar needs of this ever-increasing group of church-goers.

Religious Education

Clarifying and Enriching the Church School Improvement Program

On Monday and Tuesday, October 4 and 5, a general assembly for church school workers will be held. Wednesday to Saturday, October 6, 7, 8, and 9, five seminar groups, each concerned with two of the church school standards, will meet.

Working With Children

Each of these classes will meet daily:

The Children's Division in the Church School
Children's Work at Reunions Vacation Bible Schools
Junior Church
Preparation for Baptism

General Zion's League Council

Project: Evaluating the work of the League for the past year and a half, including the Annual, Mission's Abroad Project, Restoration Festival, and organization and function of the commission system. Objectives and programs for the next inter-conference period will be outlined.

This is for certified delegates representing the various stakes and districts of the church.

Department of Music

The Music Department classwork this year will have two emphases, and the group will divide three days of the week for separate interest groups. On the three days that the class divides into two sections, one section will be for those interested primarily in organ and its use in church, and the other section of the class will be for those who are not primarily interested in organ.

In the organ section we plan to have demonstrations on the two main electronic organs, the Hammond and the Baldwin, and also a consideration of the pipe organ. The art of service playing on the organ will be discussed and demonstrated, and ample time will be provided for round-table discussion. We plan to have several authorities in this field to lead these discussions.

On the three days that these organ discussions are going on, the other section of the class will take up a consideration of "How to Use the Hymnal," led by Evan Fry; Music for the Congregation," led by Herbert Lively; and a discussion of "Church Music and Architecture," by Franklyn Weddle.

These class sessions should be of interest to pastors as well as to those who play organ and those who have the responsibility of guiding the musical work of the local branch and the district.

To the branches that contemplate the purchase of an instrument for their church, the section on organ should prove exceptionally profitable.

Those who attend these classes will also find the daily organ recitals at 1:00 p. m., in the Stone Church particularly helpful.

General Department of Women

General Goal: "Building Zion's Homes and Families."

Conference Theme: "Abundant Living."

First Period: Women's Work in the Branch.

"Objectives and Organization,"

Mrs. S. S. Arnson

"Balancing Our Program," Mrs. Frank Hoecker

"Worthy Conversations," Miss B. Mildred Nelson

"Adventures in Home Decoration," Mrs. T. B. Franklin

"Introducing the Church to Our Friends," Independence Program of Friendly Visiting—

Mrs. C. A. Skinner and Mrs. Roscoe E. Davey

"Expanding Appreciation of World Service," Mrs. Myron E. McConley

Second Period: My Task Through the Years.

"Building Enduring Foundations," Mrs. C. G. Mesley

"We Mutually Agree," Apostle C. G. Mesley

"Bending the Twig," Mrs. S. A. Burgess

"Insuring Mental Health," Dr. G. Leonard Harrington

"Venturing With Our Youth," Mrs. F. Henry Edwards

"This Crowns My Task," Mrs. Leslie Wight

White Masque

NINA MALONEY, Chairman

The White Masque Players are offering a series of classes for the workers in drama for the small groups as well as the large ones. Classes are as follows: The Actor's Viewpoint and Problems, Mrs. Pauline Fowler; The Director's Viewpoint and Problems, Mrs. Bea McNamara; The Art of Make-up, Mrs. Pauline Fowler; Helpful Hints on Costuming, Mrs. Florence Belcher; Problems of Staging, Mrs. Bea McNamara; Selection of Plays, Mrs. Arlene Cackler.

The Battle Hymn of the Church

IF YOU are a regular General Conference attendee, you are looking forward to the first business session of this year's conference. President Israel A. Smith will probably announce as the opening hymn the well-known "Redeemer of Israel."

Last year, President Smith referred to this first hymn as "the battle hymn of the church." Although the words of "Redeemer of Israel" do not express a crusade in a literal sense, it is a battle hymn in that it expresses complete confidence in the ultimate triumph of the righteous cause of the kingdom. Notice this in the last stanza:

As children of Zion, good tidings for us,
The tokens already appear;
Fear not and be just, for the kingdom is ours,
And the hour of redemption is near.

It is the first verse which is especially fitting for the opening of General Conference. Petition is made for a blessing from "Our King, our Companion, our All."

Redeemer of Israel, our only delight,
On whom for a blessing we call;
Our shadow by day, and our pillar
by night,
Our King, our Companion, our All.

Have you ever noticed how suitable the tune is for these words?

Hum it over to yourself. Notice the simple and straightforward style. It's easy to sing—it's within the range of the average voice. No one has to strain for the high tones or growl to sing the low tones. Unlike many more flighty hymn tunes, this one gives itself well to the solemn dignity of the opening exercises of General Conferences.

OF COURSE, "Redeemer of Israel" hasn't always been used in this conspicuous place. Some of the hymns which held this place during the early conferences of the Reorganization wouldn't be recognized by most of us. Back in 1878, "Let all the Saints Their Voices Raise," was used. This hymn is unfamiliar to the present generation. We could sing one of the favorites of early conferences, however, without the aid of a hymnbook. This hymn was, "Guide Us, O Thou Great Jehovah."

Although there is no great value in being able to identify "firsts," it has been interesting to trace back and find the first uses of "Redeemer of Israel" in connection with the opening of General Conferences. Early conference minutes merely state that the conference was opened with "singing and prayer." Then, for a number of years, the name of the hymn was not recorded, only the number of the hymn was given. Hymn number 720 was sung for the opening of the 1874 conference, for example. Presuming that the Saints' Harp was being used at this time, since it was published in the early 1870's, we found that number 720 is "Redeemer of Israel." A close examination of even earlier hymnbooks might disclose an earlier use of this traditional hymn, but without such extensive research, 1874 appears to be the date of the first conference opened with, "Redeemer of Israel."

From 1874 on, the hymn was used often. By 1890 it was in regular use. It is said that it was a great favorite of "Brother Joseph." Occasionally we find some other hymn was used. Here is a complete list of the General Conferences which began their business sessions by singing "Redeemer of Israel"—

1875 semi-annual	1903 to 1905
1878 2nd hymn	1910 to 1922, 2nd hymn in 1911
1881
1882	1925 to the pres- ent date.
1885

The exceptions to the use of this hymn were in:

1900, "Hail to the Brightness of Zion's Glad Morning"

By HERBERT C. LIVELY

1902, "Praise Ye the Lord"
1908, "God Speed the Right"
1909, "The Morning Breaks" 1923, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet"

For those who are statistically minded, out of forty-six General Conferences since 1891, "Redeemer of Israel" has been used thirty-seven times as the first hymn and once as the second hymn. Information regarding the hymns used from 1891 to 1923 was taken from an analysis printed in the Journal of History, Volume 17.

AS A CHURCH, our interest in this noted hymn goes back much further than its first use at conference. It probably helped to sustain the Saints many times during the early years. Back in 1832 The Evening and the Morning Star printed by the Saints at Independence carried the words to "Redeemer of Israel," under the caption "Hymns selected and prepared for the Church of Christ in these latter days." The following verse was included which is not printed in our present hymnbook:

"The secret of Heaven
The myst'ry below,
That many have sought for so long,
We know that we know,
For the spirit of Christ Tells his servants they cannot be wrong."

W. W. Phelps, the hymn-poet of the early church, is credited with writing the words. Some of his other contributions to our hymnody are, "O Jesus, the Giver of all We Enjoy," "Earth With Her Ten Thousand Flowers," "O God, the Eternal Father," and "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning." We owe to him a debt of gratitude for giving us a hymn worthy of the tradition of opening our General Conferences with its singing.

General Conferences of the Early Church

Prepared by the Herald Staff from notes by President F. H. Edwards, and from church historical reference material.

THE FIRST GENERAL CONFERENCE of the church is described in the language of Joseph Smith for Times and Seasons and is found in History of the Church by Heman C. Smith, Volume I, page 87:

On the first day of June, 1830, we held our first conference as an organized church. Our numbers were about thirty, besides whom many assembled with us, who were either believers, or anxious to learn.

Having opened by singing and prayer, we partook together of the emblems of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. We then proceeded to confirm several who had lately been baptized, after which we called out and ordained several to the various offices of the priesthood.

A pentecostal spiritual experience came to the members of the church on this occasion, and there was great rejoicing. The account given here does not mention the transaction of business of any kind.

The second General Conference of 1831, is described by Joseph Smith:

On the sixth of June the elders from the various parts of the country where they were laboring came in, and the conference before appointed convened in Kirtland, and the Lord displayed his power in a manner that could not be mistaken. . . . It was clearly evident that the Lord gave us power in proportion to the work to be done, and strength according to the race set before us; and grace and help as our needs required. Great harmony prevailed: several were ordained; faith was strengthened; and humility, so necessary for the blessing of God to follow prayer, characterized the saints.

Such a summary would be a wonderful statement to be made of any conference.

Numerous special conferences were held, often wherever Joseph happened to be among church members, in the interest of the work. Some of these gatherings would be called "meetings" or by other names today. The distinction between a general conference and other meetings is not always clear from the language used, so it is difficult to estimate the number of general conferences held in the early church. Conferences of the priesthood were often held.

As the work of the church was being organized and developed, many such conferences were held all through the year.

The last conference in which Joseph Smith is recorded to have taken part before his death was held October 6, 1843, at Nauvoo, and had two principal matters of business: the examination of Sidney Rigdon, counselor to the president, with reference to his standing in church work, and the work on the temple.

IN THE INTERVAL between the martyrdom of the church leaders, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in June, 1844, and the coming of "Young Joseph" to the presidency of the Reorganization, there were some conferences that had great historical importance.

On June 12, 1852, a conference was held at Beloit, Wisconsin, with Jason W. Briggs chosen to preside. It proclaimed a series of resolutions that may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. The conference repudiated the claims of a number of pretenders to leadership who were in charge of factions.
2. It declared that the president of the church must be a descendant of the founder, Joseph Smith, Jr.
3. It asserted that "as the office of First President of the church grows out of the authority of the Presiding High Priest . . . no person can legally lay claim to the office of First President of the Church without a previous ordination to the Presidency of the High Priesthood." (This eliminated all the pretenders.)

4. It recognized the validity of ordinations of those who had continued to act within the limits of their authority.

5. It recognized the authority of three books—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

6. It refused to recognize any stake appointed by any pretended authority for the gathering of the church.

7. It called for a proclamation of these principles wherever members of the church could be contacted.

Another interim gathering of importance was the semi-annual conference which was held October 6 to 10 on the farm of Israel L. Rogers in Kendall County, Illinois. Z. H. Gurley, Sr., presided, and James Blakeslee and William W. Blair were appointed clerks. A notable event of this conference was the resolution that "this church should publish a monthly church paper and continue it for six months." Under this resolution, The True Latter Day Saints' Herald was begun, and The Saints' Herald of today is that same publication, somewhat changed in format, and in frequency of appearance.

The emphasis in many early conferences was on spiritual things—prayer, testimony, songs, and the gospel message. Reports entered into their records were more likely to list the blessings enjoyed in their meetings than the resolutions that they passed. People met to strengthen and encourage each other, and to rejoice for the gifts that the great Restoration had brought them, as we do at our reunions.

For outstanding General Conferences from 1860 onward, the reader is referred to the article by Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith.

The Evolution of the Conference Program

THERE IS QUITE a difference!

When you register for General Conference this year, you will be handed an Official Conference Program of about fifty pages printed in book form. In it will be scheduled about two hundred services, meetings, and classes, as well as other detailed information about the conference. Obviously, this is too much for any one person to attend in one week's time. You will have the privilege and problem of choosing the meetings and classes you wish to attend.

Choosing was no problem in the 1860's, however. Then, you would have come to a General Conference which met as one group throughout the length of the conference. You would have started right in at 9 o'clock the first morning with the business to be handled, and, after a recess for lunch, you would have probably continued to do business all afternoon. The evenings would have brought you the variety of a preaching service or possibly a prayer meeting. Occasionally, there would be preaching or prayer meetings during the day.

The conference agenda in those days seems to have been flexible and, to some extent, spontaneous. During the 1870 General Conference, the following item was recorded at the close of the afternoon business session: "Resolved, That Brother Josiah Ells occupy the desk for preaching this evening."

The program doesn't appear to have been crowded for time in those days either. An earlier conference recorded, "Elder James Blakeslee spoke upon the first principles of the gospel for about two hours, to a very large and attentive audience."

By 1888, however, an order of meetings was set, and that order lasted for quite a number of years:

9:00 a. m. Prayer meeting.
10:30 a. m. Preaching.
1:30 p. m. until 5:00 p. m. Business meeting.
7:30 p. m. Preaching.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS had crept in by 1916. Although the program for the day's activities was about the same as it had been, one now had to make a choice as to where he would go during the evenings. Here is the 1916 Conference Program:

9:00 a. m. Prayer meeting.
10:45 a. m. Preaching.
2:00 p. m. Business meeting.
7:45 p. m. Preaching in the lower auditorium and a special program in the upper auditorium.

Special programs:

Monday—Session of Women's Auxiliary for Social Service.
Tuesday—Session in the interest of the Sanitarium.
Wednesday—Session in the interest of Graceland College.
Thursday, Saturday and Sunday—"The Messiah" by the General Church Choir directed by Chorister A. N. Hoxie.

In the 1920's, classes invaded the day-time schedule. In 1926, there were morning classes as follows:

Religious Education taught by Walter W. Smith
Heredity and Eugenics taught by Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser Stewardship taught by C. E. Wight.
Personal Adjustment taught by M. A. Etzenhouser

After this, the practice of conducting classes at General Conference grew by leaps and bounds. At the big Centennial Conference in 1930 there were thirty-seven different classes from Beginning Conducting to Science and Religion.

WHERE DO WE STAND today? Here is a sample program taken from one day of the General Conference to convene next month:

Apostle Paul M. Hanson

World traveler, author, archaeologist, missionary, and church officer—these are the careers that Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve, has crowded into one busy life.

In travel, some of the major points included in his journeys have been the British Isles, many European countries, the Mediterranean, Palestine, the Near East, Mexico and Central America, and many other places, including nearly every part of the United States.

In the field of archaeology, his excellent book, Jesus Christ Among Ancient Americans, dealing with the countries and remains that relate to the Book of Mormon, has been selling steadily and has received wide appreciation. He has prepared the manuscript for a new work, dealing less with archaeology and more with modern cities, peoples, and experiences in the same lands. This work will be more of a popular and less technical character, and is now in line for publication. Throughout the years, Apostle Hanson has contributed many articles to church periodicals.

Naturally, his visits to many countries have been concerned with missionary work, and he is today at the head of the quorum which is chiefly responsible for our expanding missionary program in all the world.

Following the death of President Frederick M. Smith, the General Conference had the task of choosing a successor. With Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith, Apostle Hanson shared the responsibility of directing the conference at the time President Israel A. Smith was brought into office.

Christians in the U.S.A.

The Christian Herald's Annual Report (1948) on Membership of Religious Bodies in the United States (issue of August, 1948), reveals a number of interesting facts:

At the end of the year 1947, the total number of members of religious bodies, Protestant and non-Protestant, was 77,386,188. This was a gain of 3,713,006 over 1946.

This brings our national percentage of religious people up to fifty-three per cent, which is the highest in the history of our country. If we mourn that only half of our nation is even nominally Christian, let us take comfort in looking back to the year 1890, when only twenty-two per cent of the people were on church records. This will also cure any tendency to go harking back to "the good old times."

Of the 223 Protestant denominations, Christian Herald lists the ninety-eight largest bodies, and taking them in order we stand at number thirty-five in the list.

Protestant membership totals 46,149,676. Roman Catholics claim 25,286,178. Protestant gain in one year was two and six tenths per cent, while the Catholic gain was three and five tenths per cent. Religion is not making a rapid gain in the country, but a rather steady progress.

A few other figures will be of interest. Jewish congregations now include 4,641,000 members; Russian Orthodox, 300,000; Greek Orthodox, 300,000; International General Assembly of Spiritualists, 150,000; Buddhists, 70,000; two other bodies of Spiritualists, 23,347.

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith

Brother Frederick A. Smith was Presiding Patriarch and Evangelist from 1913 until April, 1938, when he was appointed by President Frederick M. Smith as President Emeritus of the Order of Evangelists. He was a member of the Quorum of Twelve from 1902 until his ordination as an evangelist. Prior to that, he had served as a seventy from April, 1894. He has been an elder since 1891, a priest since June, 1890, and a deacon since July, 1882.

In his appointments, he has served as a pastor in Omaha and its suburbs, and in St. Louis, and as Apostle in charge of missions in Canada and in a large part of the United States. As Presiding Evangelist, his responsibility extended wherever the work of the church did.

Brother Smith has fifty-five years of continuous church work under appointment to his credit, counting his present appointment. He continues to labor as time and strength permit, and his health is good. In all his service he has manifested a steadiness and faithfulness to his responsibility that give a worthy example to younger men.

Resort to sermons, but to prayers most;
Praying's the end of preaching.
—Herbert Temple, The Church Porch.

Those Who Have Presided Over the Conferences

J. W. BRIGGS presided over all the conferences of the Reorganization from the special conference of June, 1852, until and including April 6, 1857. And he again presided at the two conferences of 1858, making thirteen in all. Z. H. Gurley is reported to have presided at the semi-annual conference of 1857, and the special conference of 1859, the semi-annual conference of 1859, and the Amboy, Illinois, conference of 1860. Samuel Powers presided over the General Conference of 1859. This gives us a total of eighteen conferences from 1852 up to and including that of April, 1860.

Joseph Smith, after he became President of the church, presided over every conference, annual and semi-annual up to and including the General Conference of 1897, except for the semi-annual conference of 1896, when Charles Derry presided, and the semi-annual conference of 1876 when W. W. Blair presided. This made a total of fifty-eight conferences presided over by President Smith.

After 1897, all the General Conferences have been presided over by the First Presidency, either designated as the First Presidency or as "President Joseph Smith and his counselors" (until 1914), or a similar form used for his successors. There have been two exceptions. In 1915, even though President Frederick M. Smith was ill and unable to be present, Gomer T. Griffiths, President of the Quorum of Twelve, moved that he be named to preside over the conference, with Elbert A. Smith. Brother Elbert requested that he be given help in the work of presiding, and G. T. Griffiths and F. A. Smith were selected by the conference to assist him.

Two years later the situation was reversed; Brother Elbert was absent through sickness, and President Frederick M. Smith presided.

In 1946, the President of the Quorum of Twelve, Paul M. Hanson, was associated with the members of the First Presidency in presiding over the conference. This was because of the necessity for reorganizing the First Presidency because of the death of President Frederick M. Smith.

THE NEXT GENERAL CONFERENCE will be the one hundred seventeenth of the Reorganization. It therefore appears that President Joseph Smith was associated in the Presidency of the General Conference seventy-eight times; President Frederick M. Smith, twenty-three times; Elbert A. Smith, twenty-three times.

By way of explanation, it should be noted that the semi-annual conferences were General Conferences. The first of these was October 6, 1852, and the last was September 20, 1882. In the Reorganization there have been sixty-seven annual conferences, thirty-one semi-annual conferences, and the two special conferences of June 12, 1852, and June 10, 1859. This brings the total to exactly 100 in 1920. Since 1920 we have had conferences at varying intervals, although the underlying principle is that they shall be held biennially. The 1922 conference came after an interval of two and a half years, 1923 was a year later, 1925 a year and a half later, 1926 and 1927 were at yearly intervals, 1928 was held in October, giving a year and a half between it and the preceding and succeeding conference. Since that time and up until the death of President F. M. Smith, conferences were held every two years. The 1947 conference was held one year after the preceding gathering, and the 1948 conference is expected to divide evenly the time between April, 1947, and April, 1950.

Where the General Conferences Have Been Held

Although General Conferences are now invariably held at church headquarters at Independence, Missouri, this has not always been so. They have been moved around, for various reasons, particularly in the early days of the Reorganization.

In the pre-Amboy period, most of these conferences were held at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, and in regions round about. Later, western Iowa became a center for semi-annual conferences, while many of the annual gatherings were held in or near Plano, Illinois. Later, Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri, shared the honor of entertaining the annual General Conferences. Nowadays, all General Conferences are held at Independence. In 1920 the place for the General Conference was fixed at Independence.

For the number of annual General Conferences, Independence leads the list with thirty-two. Lamoni is second with fifteen; Plano, Illinois, third with fourteen.

Still in the list of annual conferences, Zarahemla, Wisconsin, had six; Amboy, Illinois, four; Beaverton, Illinois, one in 1859; Mission, Illinois, one in 1862; Keokuk, Iowa, one in 1867; St. Louis had two, in 1869 and 1872; and Kirtland, Ohio, had several, 1883, 1887, 1891, 1896, and 1904.

In the list of semi-annual conferences, Council Bluffs, Iowa, had twelve; Gallands Grove, Iowa, six; Zarahemla, Wisconsin, six; Lamoni, Iowa, one in 1882; Union Grove, Iowa, one; Pottawattamie, Iowa, one; Sandwich, Illinois, two; Kendall County, Illinois, that of 1859; Yellowstone, Wisconsin, that of 1852.

A very important special conference was held in Beloit, Wisconsin, in June, 1852.

General Church Finances

As the church approaches General Conference, we believe it wise that the membership be informed about the problems pertaining to the management of its economic concerns. It is imperative that we continue to conduct our affairs by basic principles of sound finance.

Any successful program will depend upon regular and continued income guaranteed through church-wide compliance with the financial law. The church will be strong spiritually in just the proportion that it is supported financially.

If we use wisely our financial income and resources so as to increase and develop our ministerial personnel, to aid our educational and service institutions, and to support our social program, we have reasonable expectancy for growth.

Tithes and offerings are used in accordance with appropriations made by the General Conference, the procedure being as follows:

A. Budget request forms are sent out to all departments of the church so that they can submit an estimate of their needs for the period to be covered by the budget.

B. Preparation of budgetary estimates by the Presiding Bishopric, for review and action of subcommittee of the Board of Appropriations, consisting of one of the First Presidency, one of the Presiding Bishopric, and one of the Quorum of Twelve.

C. Review and action on the recommendations of the subcommittee by the Board of Appropriations, which board consists of members of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Order of Bishops.

D. Presentation of the recommendations of the Board of Appropriations to the General Conference for its consideration and action. After the conference acts, the budget adopted is administered by the Presiding Bishopric in respect to its total provisions. The heads of departments and stakes are responsible for the administration of the budgets relating to their own departments or stakes. Items of general church character are administered by the Presiding Bishopric, subject to the rights and responsibilities of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and other officers concerned.—The Pastor's Handbook.

The Profession of Nursing

From the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital there has come to the editorial offices a copy of the excellent new illustrated booklet and catalog concerning the School of Nursing.

Girls who have finished high school or who have had some college training should consider the advantages and opportunities of nursing as a profession.

Training at the School of Nursing of the Sanitarium is a contribution to church work, as this institution serves not only the local community but also church people from many parts of the country. For young women who have not visited the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, this free booklet is very informative; it shows pictures of the buildings and grounds, classrooms, laboratories, library, and social centers enjoyed by those who are student nurses. Full information on entrance requirements and curriculum of study are given. Young women or parents who wish to obtain this information can do so by writing to Miss Nelle Morgan, R. N., Director of Nurses, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Van Horn Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

President Smith says, "We expect the Conference to be a momentous one." Don't miss any of it. The Conference Daily Herald is only $1. Subscribe today.

Should Young Men of College Age Attend College This Year?

By G. N. Briggs, President Emeritus, Graceland College

In view of the new draft law, young men who might attend college now are wondering what their duty is under present conditions. Parents are in a quandary as to what to advise. A government official recently was called upon to give his advice on this same problem. Here is what he said:

The Selective Service Act should not cause any young man to alter his plan for attending college this fall. In view of the recognized need for a great force of technically trained young men as part of a program of national defense, it is essential that high school graduates expecting to enter college work in the fall of 1948 should proceed promptly to carry out their plans for their studies. Even if some of them are called later for military service, the college work they will have completed will be of great value to them.

Should a college student be called during the college year, he will not have his work interrupted immediately. The draft law provides that any person who is satisfactorily pursuing a full-time college course shall have his induction postponed until the end of the academic year. In addition, the law provides that the President may defer any "category or categories of students for such periods of time as he may deem appropriate."

Thus it seems evident that it is the intent of Congress to encourage young men of college age to enter college at once so as to prepare to render the maximum of service when needed. One's greatest loyalty can be evidenced by making the maximum preparation by attending college, and at the same time prepare himself for the most useful life as a civilian by his service to his country and his church.

I strongly recommend to parents and our young men the advisability of making every effort and sacrifice to enter college this September, not only from the standpoint of their own best interests, but for the best interests of the government and the church.

Worship Suggestions for October

These thoughts are suggestive only, and in every case should be adapted to the local needs, according to the various age groups which may use them. Make use of only the materials which may stimulate the spirit of worship, enlarging upon or simplifying them according to the need.

Theme for the Month: I'LL BE WHAT YOU WANT ME TO BE

OCTOBER 3, 1948

I'LL DO WHAT YOU WANT ME TO DO

Instrumental Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 287

Call to Worship:

Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first-born for my transgressions, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee, O man, what is good: and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?—Micah 6: 6-8.

Theme Hymn for the Month: "Lord, Speak to Me, that I May Speak," No. 215

Suggested Scripture:

And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and walk and not faint.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 3.

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.—Ecclesiastes 9: 10.

The story of the rich young ruler as told in Mark 10: 15-26.

Thoughts About Doing:

To do the will of God, the way he requires it to be done, several things are very important to us. We must know exactly:

1. WHAT he wants us to do. The three volumes of Scripture answer this requirement. We must be familiar with the laws of God if we are to obey them.
2. HOW he wants it done. We must be able to look into the mirror of our lives—our souls—and see pictured there the image of God, so that those beholding us may know that we are indeed his sons and daughters.

3. WHEN it is to be done. Now! We cannot wait for tomorrow. It has been well said, "Tomorrow never comes."

4. WHY? Not only for our own good and those we love, but for the entire world—Russians, Jews, Negroes, Germans—our next-door neighbor. We can never be free until all the world is freed by the loving example of Christ, our elder brother.

Hymns: "Work, for the Night Is Coming," No. 222; "Let Us, Brother, Let us Gladly," No. 287; "Spirit of God," No. 198

Poems for Meditation:

I read
In a book
That a man called Christ
Went about doing good.
It is very disconcerting
To me
That I am so easily Satisfied
With just Going about.
—Kagawa.

He who is clear of sight goes forth
And does a kindly deed,
He the thrill of true joy knows—
His example we should heed.
He boasts not of his noble act,
He asks not for reward;
But in his own heart, all intact,
His happiness is stored.
—Carves.

I'LL GO WHERE YOU WANT ME TO GO

Call to Worship:

Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord. He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. Lighten our darkness, we beseech thee, O God. Reveal thyself unto us as we worship thee.—Zion's League Handbook.

Theme Hymn: "Lord, Speak to Me, That I May Speak," No. 215

Scripture:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16: 15.

Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?—Luke 2: 49.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always, unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 18, 19, Inspired Version.

BY IOLA TORDOFF

Quartet: "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," No. 292

Thoughts About Doing:

God requires that some go into foreign lands to spread his gospel—into far places where men of God have never been. It seems heroic and great to us, and it is. It takes courage, self-sacrifice, and a deep love for God and his creation—man. Of many of us he requires that our lives be lived right at home, in the same old place. At home, however, we can "go" where he wants us to go. We can go to work, to school, to play—anywhere—determined as we go, cheerful, helpful, loving, godlike in our going. A man can go home after a particularly trying day at work, or school, and be cross, cranky, kick the cat, nag at the children, and find fault with his wife; or he can go home in the way God wants him to, trying to forget the troubles of the day and trying to make life more pleasant for those he loves. Some of the greatest unsung heroes are those who never travel more than a few miles from their home town, but who each day go where God wants them to go by doing his will in each thing that is said or done.

Hymns: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," No. 297; "A Charge to Keep I Have," No. 201; "Tenderly, Tenderly, Lead Thou Me On," No. 267; "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," No. 213; "Send Me Forth, O Blessed Master," No. 214.

Poetry:

I said, "Let me walk in the fields."
He said, "No; walk in the town."
I said, "There are no flowers there."
He said, "No flowers, but a crown."

I said, "But the skies are black;
There is nothing but noise and din."
And he wept as he sent me back;
"There is more," he said, "there is sin."

I said, "But the air is thick,
And fogs are veiling the sun."
He answered, "Yet souls are sick,
And souls in the dark undone."

I said, "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say."
He answered, "Choose tonight
If I am to miss you, or they."

I pleaded for time to be given,
He said, "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your guide."

I cast one look at the field,
Then set my face to the town;
He said, "My child, do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"

Then into his hand went mine;
And into my heart came he;
And I walked in a light divine,
The path I had feared to see.
—George MacDonald.

To every man there openeth
A high way and a low.
The high soul climbs the high way,
The low soul gropes the low,
While in between on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro,
And to every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go.
—John Oxenham.

I'LL SAY WHAT YOU WANT ME TO SAY

Prelude: "We Come With Joy the Truth to Teach You," No. 393

Call to Worship:

Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight,
O Lord, my strength and my redeemer.—
Psalm 19: 14.

Theme Hymn: "Lord, Speak to Me,
That I May Speak," No. 215

Scripture:

And I give unto you a commandment, that you teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom, teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you . . . teach one another words of wisdom . . . learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, 36, 38.

These things command and teach . . . be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.—I Timothy 4: 11, 12.

Hymns: "I Love to Tell the Story," No.
306; "We've a Story to Tell," No.
397; "We Come With Joy the Truth to Teach You," No. 393; "O Zion, Haste," No. 388

Thoughts About Saying:

Speech is important, but what one says is infinitely more important. One can talk much and yet say nothing; one can speak volumes in but a few words. Man's words reveal the thoughts in his mind.
They are the guide to what he really is.

Inspirational Poem:

We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
When each hour some fate is telling—
To be living is sublime.
Rise, O Saints, in all thy vigor,
Stand erect on holy sod;
Turn from aimless indecision;
Rise up in the strength of God!

Worlds are changing, old forms crumbling,
Souls of courage times demand,
Those who see the way as prophets
Lead toward the promised land.
Rise, O saints, in all thy vision,

Let thy voice be heard abroad,
Speak! let every nerve and sinew
Count for Zion, count for God!

I'LL SERVE AS YOU WANT ME TO SERVE

Prelude: "O Jesus, I Have Promised,"
No. 298.

Call to Worship:

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength . . . if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest . . . and faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Hymns: "The Bread That Giveth,"
No. 225; "Take My Life," No. 307;
"Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling,"
No. 344; "Prince of Peace," No.
278; "O Master Workman of the Race," No. 152.

Scripture:

Choose you this day whom ye will serve
. . . but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.—Joshua 24: 15.

By love serve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Galatians
5: 13, 14.

Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord.—Romans 12: 10, 11.

If any man serve me, let him follow me;
and where I am, there shall also my servant be;
if any man serve me, him will my Father honor.—John 12: 26.

Poem Helps:

O Son of Man, thou madest known
Through quiet work in shop and home
The sacredness of common things,
The chance of life that each day brings.

O workman true, may we fulfill
In daily life thy Father's will;
In duty's call, thy call we hear
To fuller life, through work sincere.

Thou master workman, grant us grace
The challenge of our tasks to face;
By loyal scorn of second best,
By effort true, to meet each test.

And thus we pray in deed and word,
Thy kingdom come on earth, O Lord;
In work that gives effect to prayer
Thy purpose for thy world we share.
—Milton S. Littlefield.

Oh, may we hold the light of faith
Where all the world can see.
And true to thy abiding trust,
Oh, may we ever be.
In love and service lead us on,
We follow glad and free,
Keeping our vision all undimmed,
Reflecting ours from thee.
—Oriole Handbook.

Thoughts on Service:

Here is a man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another obscure village. He worked in a carpenter shop until he was thirty, and then for three years he was an itinerant preacher. He never owned a home. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never put his foot inside a big city. He never traveled two hundred miles from the place he was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompanies greatness. He had no credentials but himself.

While still a young man, the tide of public opinion turned against him. His friends ran away. One of them denied him. He was turned over to his enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed to the cross between two thieves. His executioners gambled for the only piece of property he had on earth while he was dying, and that was his coat. When he was dead, he was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.

Nineteen hundred wide centuries have come and gone, and today he is the centerpiece of the human race and the leader of the column of progress.

I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of man upon this earth as powerfully as has that One Solitary Life.—Author Unknown.

It is because of the manner in which Christ lived, and the service that he lovingly gave to others, that he is so well remembered.

Dedication:

(This may be used as a choral reading, responsive reading by the congregation, or sung—using the verses for a solo, and the congregation singing the chorus.)

"Are ye ready," saith the Master,
"To come in the open gate?
I have entered it before you,
And your coming I await."

"Will you follow," saith the Master,
"Though the way be hard and long?
Will you shun temptations' challenge,
And go forward with a song?"

"Are ye able," saith the Master,
"To stand firm when others fall?
Will you suffer crucifixion
That there might come life for all?"

CHORUS:

Lord, we will follow,
Where'er thou dost lead.
Help us to serve thee
In word and deed.
Thy holy spirit send down from above,
And light thou our pathway,
Oh, thou God of love.

—Roy Cheville.

West Virginia District Conference

The annual West Virginia District Conference will be held on September 25 and 26 at the church in Wheeling (Forty-second and Jacob Streets). The theme for the conference is "Onward Together." The first session will begin at 7 p.m. on Saturday with a song service, after which Elder Merle Guthrie will speak. Sunday's activities include a 9:30 a.m. prayer service; preaching at 11; business session at 2 p.m. (annual reports will be given and district officers elected at this time); and an ordination service at 3:15. Reports should be sent promptly to Mrs. May R. Griffin, 2001 Nineteenth Street, Parkersburg, West Virginia.

Flint-Port Huron District Conference

The annual Flint-Port Huron District Conference will be held in Flint, Michigan, at the Newall Street Church on September 12. A short devotional will be conducted by Elder E. E. Smith, pastor of Port Huron Branch, at 9 a.m., followed by a general prayer service and preaching at 10:45. Dinner will be served at the church. The business session will begin at 2 p.m., at which time annual reports will be read, district officers and General Conference delegates elected, and recommendations for ordination voted upon. All reports and communications should be sent to Mary Sears, 2541 Tiffin Street, Flint, Michigan.

Northwestern Ohio District Conference

The Northwestern Ohio District Conference will be held at Toledo, Ohio, on September 12, beginning with a prayer service at 9 a.m. Jerome Wildermuth of Cleveland, Ohio, will be the guest speaker at 10:45. Dinner will be served at 12 o'clock, followed by a musical program at 1 p.m. The business session, with District President Alvin Wadsworth in charge, will begin at 1:45.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

William F. Brown, Box 107, Model, Colorado, asks to be remembered in the prayers of the Saints. He is seventy-seven years old, an invalid, and is in constant pain.

Charles A. Peck, R. F. D. 2, Box 69, Greenville, Michigan, asks prayers for his wife, that she may have strength to do her work, and for himself that he may be healed of his affliction.

WEDDINGS

Harned-Corbett

Donna Lee Corbett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Corbett of Topeka, Kansas, and Stacey B. Harned, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Raveill of Warrensburg, Missouri, were married March 17 at the Reorganized Church in Warrensburg, Pastor Ward A. Hougas officiating. They are making their home at Lakeside, California. Mr. Harned is in the Navy and is stationed at San Diego.

Davis-Umphrey

Elaine Umphrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Umphrey of Bentley, Michigan, and Earl Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Davis of Pontiac, Michigan, were married July 24 at the Reorganized Church in Bentley. Elder John Umphrey read the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are making their home in southern Missouri.

Jackel-Wilder

Mary Jo Wilder, daughter of Elder and Mrs. J. E. Wilder of Mercedes, Texas, and Wayne Jackel, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Jackel of Edenburg, Texas, were married at the Reorganized Church in Alamo, Texas. Elder Wilder performed the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Jackel, both graduates of Graceland College, will make their home in Marshall, Texas, where Mr. Jackel is employed by Sears, Roebuck and Company.

Worship Suggestions for October

drink; nor yet for your bodies, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Wherefore, seek not the things of this world, but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 28, 38, Inspired Version.

Hymns: "These Things Shall Be," No. 187; "Savior, I Follow on, Guided by Thee," No. 268; "I'm Pressing on the Upward Way," No. 241

Scripture:

Build upon my rock, which is my gospel; deny not the spirit of prophecy.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 11.

Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 18.

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

... And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for this work.—Nehemiah 2: 18.

So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof; for the people had a mind to work.—Nehemiah 4: 6.

Thoughts on Building:

The Church and Youth, a pamphlet by the late President F. M. Smith, is excellent reference material.

We have been given the rules for building Zion. It is up to us to prove what kind of construction engineers we become. It does not matter how well the blue prints are drawn, how explicit the instructions given, or how well located and good the ground, if we do not follow the plan given. Likewise, we need to know how to follow instructions. We can have only the type of building we are willing to erect. It can be small and carelessly constructed, or one that will be an asset to the kingdom of God in every way.

There is no higher calling than that of being a true Saint of God. Let us build our lives and community to that end, for our stewardship is that of a balanced structure of physical, intellectual, spiritual, and social growth. We can, by going, doing, saying, serving, and building, "Be what he wants us to be."

Meditation: "Onward to Zion," No. 436—Piano and violin duet.

Poems:

MAN-MAKING

We are all blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making, if
It does not make the man.

Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilds good?
In vain we build the work, unless The builder also grows.
—Edwin Markham.

Petition:

Thou Master Workman, grant us grace
The challenge of our task to face
By loyal scorn of second best,
By effort true, to meet each test.

And thus we pray in deed and word,
Thy kingdom come on earth, O Lord;
In work that gives effect to prayer
Thy purpose for thy world we share.
—Milton S. Littlefield.

Dedication:

THE SPOKEN PRAYER

(May be sung to the tune, "Aurelia," page 230, Saints' Hymnal.)

We would be building ever
With love to raise each stone,
Assured that we shall never,
If faithful, work alone.
By God's clear light designing
The temple's building plan,
We'll stand, with faith combining;
United man to man.

Teach us, that our creation
Be built on solid rock,
That on this firm foundation
No change shall ever shock,
Thus shall our lofty dreaming
Be sharpened into deed,
Till from the tower gleaming
Speaks out the gospel creed.

Oh, keep us building ever—
May nothing stay our hands.
Nor trifles rise to sever
Our zeal for thy commands.
We build with consecration
A shrine of lasting worth
That in the congregation
Our God may dwell on earth.

It Pays to Keep the Financial Law

When we started keeping a budget in our church income record book about nine years ago, we did not do so because we felt we had to nor because we expected blessings in return; we did it because of a desire within our hearts to do so. When we balanced up our books to make out our inventory at the end of our first year of tithing payments, we found that my husband's salary had doubled, and each year since then he has received an increase in salary. When we were first married—almost ten years ago—we were living in a furnished apartment, but after getting our tithing payments well under way each month, it wasn't long until we were able to get our furniture, pay it out, and tithe it as we went along. We thanked God for this blessing, as we had desired to secure our furniture at a time when we thought it impossible to do so. We have received so many blessings, we cannot begin to repeat them, but there is one incident that I would like to tell about.

A year ago last January my husband was critically injured while delivering mail on his rural route. For ten days the doctors would not give me any encouragement for his recovery, but through prayer and faith and administration he was healed by the power of God. He suffered a crushed right kidney, crushed lungs, nine broken ribs, and a broken collar bone. I had to carry on alone for six or eight weeks by taking over his job at Spartan Branch Post Office, Tulsa, Oklahoma, but there were many expenses to be met along with car payments and living expenses. Being a notary, I had saved thirty dollars in quarters and, with my wages, I was able to meet all of our obligations; this left only a very few pennies for food. The same night, after paying all our bills, I went to the hospital to see my husband, and was met there by one of the rural route carriers. He handed me an envelope with sixty-one dollars in it, and told me that it was a gift from the rural carriers to help me out. I was so overcome with happiness and thankfulness to God my entire body shook with sobs. Little did the carrier know how much I needed that money. I realized that God was watching over us, and I feel that paying our tithing in the past years was, in a way, responsible for it.

We receive many blessings in return for paying only a tenth of our increase. I have now been appointed clerk in charge at Spartan Branch, and my husband is very near the top as to a regular carrier with the main post office in Tulsa. We give our Heavenly Father thanks for these many blessings but feel within our hearts that in many ways it has come to pass from paying our tithing. Our greatest desire is to become more worthy of the blessings we have received and most of all, never to be found guilty of neglecting our tithing. I could write a book on the many things which we have accomplished through blessings from God and through keeping the financial law.

Report From Albin, Wyoming

Sunday, June 20, was a special day for Saints at Albin, Wyoming. For the first time since the organization of the branch in 1914, they had a church building of their own in which to meet. Although not entirely completed on this first Sunday, the basement church has been equipped with electric lighting, water, four large dining tables, seating for more than one hundred persons, silverware, dishes, and a piano. Other improvements and additions are being made week by week.

Guest speaker on the opening Sunday was Elder Houston Hobart of Colorado Springs, Colorado, who is Eastern Colorado district president. During the week of June 20-27, he delivered a series of sermons dealing with the Restoration, its organization, beliefs, and development. These meetings were well attended by a number of nonmembers as well as local members and visitors from Cheyenne, Torrington, Wheatland, and other smaller near-by communities.

Officers for the branch were elected on Wednesday evening, June 23, with Elder Ed P. Anderson being sustained as pastor.

One of the promising enterprises at the present time is the organization of a church school band, under the capable direction of Bruce Bell. He is being assisted by Mrs. Bell, and the group meets to practice each Wednesday evening in the church. The children and their audiences are responding enthusiastically.

Approximately one hundred persons attended the all-day services the opening Sunday, after which a basket dinner was served.

After a long period of inactivity, this branch hopes to increase and prosper now that a meeting place has been constructed. It is also our hope that the church building which has been planned to be built over the present basement will not be long in materializing.

To all Saints living near Albin, Wyoming, or to any who may visit our locality, we extend a sincere welcome to our services each Sunday.

From Mexico City

We left Omaha, Nebraska, on Monday, July 19, and arrived at my daughter's home on Thursday, July 22. Riding the city busses to and from places of interest and losing oneself among the crowds of busy Latinos is such a profitable way to sharpen the mind and loosen the burr on one's tongue.

Today my wife and I stood in front of the Aztec Calendar Stone in the National Museum, talking with an Aztec about thirty years of age. He said he had lived among the ruins and heard of the traditions of his people all his life, but had never realized until now the importance and magnitude of the ancient culture of his people.

In the Mayan room was a display of the arts and culture of that ancient civilization. A Mexican guide was saying, "Modern Mayas are a progressive people. Frequently they come to the city and open upon businesses, making a success of whatever they try."

What an opportunity of evangelization for the Seventies! What a world for exploration! Our missionary task reminds me of the admonition in Doctrine and Covenants 87:1-4, "Set in order your houses," etc. I also remember the saying, "God is never in a hurry—God is never late."

At Silver Lake

Day softly snuffs the stars out
 And lays the moon away,
 Then looks around her Sleepily.
 She tiptoes gently through the trees
 Onto the meadow.
 She stands a moment, lacing little breezes
 Through her hair.
 She stoops to dip her fingers in the shining lake,
 Then slips beneath the tent flaps.
 Silently, she makes the people wake.
 She smiles to see them stretch and yawn,
 And then she hurries on,
 The happy hum of folks awakening,
 In tune with Christ,
 Still singing in her ears.

Purpose of the Daily Herald

Since we must depend so much on the help of many volunteer workers in producing the "Conference Daily Herald," we wish to continue to share with them a discussion of our plans and purposes.

Our job is no playtime business. It's a serious and responsible task. We shall have to work hard, in the short time that we labor together, to do our task as well as we can. Though we shall find pleasure and happiness in this project; we are not primarily concerned with entertainment.

Now, to the purposes of the "Conference Daily Herald":

1. To present the reports to the General Conference in printed and permanent form.
2. To record the minutes of the business sessions of the conference.
3. To give good summaries of the main points and best thoughts presented in every class, forum, sermon, discussion, or meeting.
4. To capture the spirit and feeling of the conference, and interpret its significance to the church.

First, the "Conference Daily Herald" will be a convenience to those who attend. They cannot possibly be at all meetings, nor are they qualified to take notes on all the meetings they attend. Skilled writers and volunteers will make a permanent record of the conference for them to take home.

Second, the "Conference Daily" will bring the story of the conference to those who cannot attend, will give them a record and a picture that will be valuable to them. In condensed form, it will preserve the best thoughts, ideas, and facts produced at the meetings.

PLANS FOR REPORTING CONFERENCE

To be sure that everybody can know how the plan is to work, and be able to co-operate, we repeat the main points of our procedure:

1. Let all those attending the Conference who can write, be ready to serve by helping to report some one class or activity. If each writer will be ready to report one thing, we can cover the conference completely.
2. Equipment for the writer. Bring a portable typewriter if you can. Use standard size letter paper, 8 1/2 x 11. If you write by hand, ink is better than pencil, and both of them are better than the ball-point things, which cause us the most trouble.
3. Appointment of reporters. Each instructor, or discussion leader who is in charge through the conference, should try to appoint a good reporter the first thing Monday morning. Try to get the ablest member of the class to do it. Those who are already interested in the classwork can do the best work.

4. Reporting. As soon as possible after each class, the reporter should write about a three-hundred-word summary (a page, double-spaced typewritten) of the class session. This should be turned in at the "Herald" booth, or the Pressroom, where a box will be kept to receive reports. Reports should be turned in immediately to reach publication in time. Delay will hurt the project.

5. By Thursday, the reporter will know very well what the contribution of the course is. Get your final story in by the afternoon of Thursday, if possible. This will enable us to round out and complete our work. Of course, some classes and the sermons will have material on Friday that should be reported, and we will welcome these.

Working together, everyone doing his or her best, we can render a fine service to the conference, the church, and our church officers. We will welcome and be grateful for your assistance. —L. J. L., for the Editors.

Why the General Conference

AT EVERY GENERAL CONFERENCE, when the expenses of the gathering are considered, there are some members who ask the question, "Why do we have it?" It would be a good thing for every member to try to answer that question for himself, honestly and fully; for it would lead to an appreciation of the General Conferences, and a benefit far greater than members usually enjoy.

In a way, the General Conference is symbolic of the Gathering. For a limited time, and in a few ways, the members of the church establish a community of interest and fellowship that will be enjoyed more fully when the people are gathered on a permanent basis. It is a foretaste of Zion, a preview of the Kingdom which represents our highest and finest ideals.

LAST WEEK at one of the city prayer meetings, there was some discussion of the loneliness and difficulty of living away from other members of the church and of the blessings and benefits of having church people as neighbors and friends. This is a fact that is verified in the testimony of every isolated member who moves to a place where he can enjoy the benefits of fellowship with a strong and thriving branch of the church.

It is true that God can and does bless his children in many ways, even though they may live in places where they are isolated from others of their faith. Many spiritual blessings are conferred directly through prayer and inspiration.

But many of the most significant and satisfying blessings and helps that come to us are given through the ministry of our brothers and sisters in the faith. God did not intend that his children should find all blessings in selfishness or in isolation. The kingdom of God will not consist of many individuals living in splendid isolation. It is rather the ideal described by Paul as "the body of Christ." We are the members of the body. It is an organization, a corporate entity.

FOR EXAMPLE, take the prayer meeting mentioned above. All the people who met there could have obtained blessings if they had remained at home, reading the Scripture and engaging in prayer. It is hardly probable that they would have done it—though it would be possible. But probabilities are much nearer reality than possibilities. Meeting together, they had a fine experience of praying together, exchanging thoughts, and giving each other help and encouragement. No one person can have or originate by himself all the good thoughts on any subject. He is limited to his own single, narrow viewpoint unless he meets others and exchanges thoughts with them. The church provides a meeting ground in which members can give to each other the best that they have learned and thought. The aged and experienced members contribute their wisdom and understanding. The young contribute their youth, their enthusiasm, and devotion. One would have to be very limited in intellectual capacity not to benefit by association with other church members. The more intelligent people can learn something from everyone they meet. Only the dull of mind and heart gain nothing from meeting others.

YESTERDAY, a friend of mine—a man older and more experienced in the church work—came to my office to visit with me. While he visited, we had a foretaste of the intellectual and spiritual fellowship that belongs to Zion. He gave me something that I could never have acquired by myself. Out of his experience and understanding came something peculiarly his own, and beautifully good. But he faced a problem in which he thought I could give him some help. He asked that we might pray together. We did. The bond of friendship that held us together before is even stronger now. We shall always understand each other better for that experience. To be where one can have such fellowship is a part of the gathering. It is a privilege that belongs to the Kingdom. I believe that he is stronger now to meet the problem he must try to solve. And I am stronger, too.

IN OLDER TIMES, the accounts of the General Conferences made much of the meetings for prayer and testimony, of the spiritual gifts, and of the blessings of God. There was much mention of the preaching which was done with power and understanding. Sometimes business transactions were hardly mentioned at all. Business was necessary, but incidental. The main purposes were to strengthen the Saints, to give and receive encouragement, to learn from each other.

Today, we have a tendency to keep our eyes upon the business sessions. It is true that they are very important, but they are not the whole conference. The personal meetings and conversations of church officers and members, the friendship and good will, the good spirit enjoyed in the meetings—these too are basic parts of the conference. Let us appreciate the whole range of our experiences together in the General Conference that is shortly to be here.

When a person lives far from the church, he may have to consider what it will cost him financially to attend. But he must also consider what it will cost him spiritually not to attend. So we must think of our General Conferences. The cost of not holding them would be far greater in terms of things that we value most. We get more out of them than we can ever put into them.

Across the Desk

From Elder James Daugherty, July 21, 1948:

I am happy to report a well-balanced increase for the Wisconsin District for the first six months of 1948. We have, to date, forty-six baptisms for the district. Our membership is small, only 1,011, but we are expecting at least a six per cent increase by the end of the year. We have had a twenty-five per cent increase in attendance and almost a fifty per cent increase in tithing. In fact, we have more tithing paid to date than was paid in both the Southern and Northern Wisconsin Districts last year at this time. This is due to the fine work of Brother Ed Ford, our bishop's agent. If we continue, we will more than double any year Wisconsin has ever had, and we have reason to believe it will get better. We have more than tripled the Annual Tithing Statements.

The Saints of Wisconsin are feeling good about the work of the church, and their prayers are always for the success of the whole organization.

Appreciation of Gifts Sent to Norway

The following letter was received by Elder L. R. Holmes who supervises the packing and mailing of relief boxes for the Saints in Europe. It was translated by Seventy E. Y. Hunker.

Bøn, Norway

Mr. Agent Holmes:

I send you my heartiest thanks for the package (bundle) that I received February 27, 1948. It had been a long time en route. Yes, you can well believe I was happy when I saw all the lovely things it contained. God will reward you again. I receive only fifty-five crowns (kroner) per month as "old-age pension." I was seventy-eight years old on January 2, 1948, but God has been good to me. He has provided for me until the present, and he will continue to do so through the days I still have remaining. It is so good to have a Father in heaven; he cares for us.

I have had many heavy trials, but he has helped me through them all up to the present. I have now belonged to this Latter Day work for over forty years, but I have never doubted. I know it is the truth; and if I remain faithful until the end, he will give me the crown of life. I had never heard the true Latter Day Saints, but the Utah Mormons lived beside us one time. I heard them often but I felt none of God's Spirit, but at this time Muceus came here—the first to inform us about the Reorganized Church. I attended a meeting and sat near the pulpit, and when he entered the pulpit, before he had said a word, I began to tremble so I thought I had become ill, and thought I would go home again, but then I felt calm again, and he began to preach. It was then I understood that this church is the only right one. No longer could I be heedless. I united with the church at once, and not a minute have I doubted this work. I have been administered to and healed of sickness. I have heard the voice of God's Spirit speaking to me, so I know in whom I have believed.

Yes, my prayer is to God, that he may be near me in the days I have left, so I at last may enter into my rest, away from the trials and difficulties down here.

And now I must close, with the best and most affectionate greetings. That God may bless you richly is my fervent prayer.

Hearty thanks for all the good things.

Note: Sister Andersen related to me, personally, her experience at this one meeting, which was the first service of our church she ever attended. She received the testimony that our work is true. Her testimony was given to me over twenty years ago. She still stands by it.

A Gift to Memorial Library

(Copy of a letter)

Bishop G. L. DeLapp
The Auditorium
Dear Brother DeLapp:

We are sending in $135 from the sale of the mottoes containing President F. M. Smith's "Seven Rules of Spiritual Growth and Development," which we prepared for sale last conference.

The members of the General Women's Council decided to give the amount collected to the Frederick Madison Smith Memorial Library Fund and are happy that such a tidy amount has been realized.

Sincerely,

PAULINE J. ARNSON,
Chairman General Council of Women.

Should Laymen Lead in Public Prayer

All of us are called upon to offer prayer from time to time, and there seems to be no reason why representative members of the church who do not hold the priesthood should not be asked to pray in public services when necessity arises. Of course, precedence should always be given to members of the priesthood, but if these are not available, officers may call on others at their discretion.

A Young Boy's Sacrifice

Bishop Harold Cackler, who is in charge of the church program for European relief, relates an interesting and inspiring story of a six-year-old boy who attends the Enoch Hill congregation of the church. This lad, Hyrum Huskey, lives with his parents at Twenty-seventh and Santa Fe, Route five, Independence.

Once each month for the last three months, Hyrum has come to the Auditorium to make a donation of $5.00 for the relief of children and church members in Europe. He earns the money in a working deal with his parents. He learned that if he went to get the milk for use in the home, he could save a nickel a bottle. Hyrum walks a considerable distance to get the milk, and the parents give him the difference in money. This he donates to help out in the good cause.

Conflict in the Local Church

Its Diagnosis and Treatment

By GERALD GABRIEL

This is a chapter, "The Rural Church and Conflicts," from a study being made by the author under the direction of the University of Missouri, to be entitled, "The Rural Church." The author's previous contributions have been widely appreciated, and we look forward to the opportunity of publishing other pieces of his work.

CONFLICTS IN RURAL CHURCHES have led to more downfalls, empty buildings, and lost congregations than any other one factor. However, the church that knows no conflict is quite frequently in a state of stagnancy. Where men are alert and progressive, they will never be free from interest clashes; on the other hand, co-operation is not just an activity, it is a state of mind and can only be achieved by co-operative means.

When one group action cuts across the interest of another group, conflicts begin. If one group is determined to prove how wicked the action of the other group is, while that group is bent on showing how noble it is, neither will be concerned with the church as a whole. Conflict often occurs at the point where a change from existing conditions is proposed, regardless of its worth, unless the matter has been discussed openly and freely over a considerable period of time and some general agreement has been reached. It frequently happens that two groups, whose functions are interdependent, find themselves in conflict because of misconceptions; with a plan of periodic conferring, such wrong ideas could be clarified before they reached a point of antagonism. Various kinds of conflicts may arise in connection with newcomers, race groups or groups of previous relationships; these types of cliques are to be expected in a gathering program.

We usually find ourselves in the midst of conflict without realizing how we arrived there. It is rarely discovered while it is yet impending. When we finally are faced with it, we are baffled, and because of the fog of misunderstanding and mistrust which has arisen, we are further confused in seeking ways and means of proper adjustment. Each group feels itself the champion of a righteous cause, each sees the other as a destructive force against the things it values and cherishes. Disagreement reaches a stage of emotional irritation which stands as a barrier against the usual application of techniques for solving such conflict. In an effort to break up this misunderstanding, "more heat than light" is thrown into the situation.

CONFLICTS FREQUENTLY ARISE from two individuals and then widens to include the entire circle of friends of each of the conflicting individuals. The emotion of each individual re-enforces and, being re-enforced by that of his neighbor, the cumulative reaction is likely to be highly controversial; or it may be re-enforced by the interaction between groups through the process of "circular response," either by action, spoken word, or facial expression of disapproval. All human events belong to the cumulative series, and it is not always profitable to go through the process of unraveling each sequence in relation to a given event. On the other hand, failure to see the relation between immediate conflict and its preceding causal factors prevents understanding and rational treatment of the current conflict. The present conflict may be based on a revival of earlier conflicts that were considered peaceably solved.

It may have grown out of rivals between organizations, leaders, or stimulators of conflict for their own advantage to secure power over the whole when they are in minority or to divert attention from their own shortcomings. In some instances, a church group may be harmonious within itself and then be plunged into destructive conflict because of the attitude of larger groups outside the boundary of the church, which attitudes exert influence over some within.

We might better understand how conflicts start by noting this quotation from Dr. Hornell Harts' conception of social motivation:

As we try to carry out this . . . aim, certain things and certain people prove to be helpful, while other things and other people interfere and thwart our purposes. Now we are all so constructed that we tend to adopt as parts of ourselves, or if you prefer, as annexes to ourselves, those things and people which help us to carry out our purposes. We treasure the becoming hat or the good-looking suit which wins for us attention and approval; we adopt as dear friends those with whom we achieve things; we take in as allies and partners those who help us to wield power; we come to love those who share our griefs and sorrows. But the opposite process also goes on. Even the dog snarls and snaps at the iceman who has beaten him with his tongs. If we have taken orange juice with castor oil, we come to hate the orange juice, not for its own sake, but because it has become associated with a distasteful experience. How much more are we likely to become angry and bitter with people who block us off from achievement, who cause us to be disgraced, who take power from us, who despise and reject us. . . . One focus of comradeship and of shared experience . . . he clings to them, and suffers when he is forced to be separated from them. He aids them, cares for them, and develops them. He believes in them; he thinks of them in terms of beauty and of admiration; he finds excuses for their faults . . . do ill and you rouse his resentment and resistance.

What Can Be Done

THERE ARE, of course, no inflexible rules for dealing with conflict. What we need is to create a readiness always to achieve a genuine solution, emotional as well as intellectual. Instead of having two or more groups wasting their energy in conflict and faultfinding, we need to have those groups co-operating in mind and spirit, working together for a common goal.

It is very often helpful (and a short cut) to search out the individuals who stand as symbols of their respective groups; then proceed from there. In surveying the situation, it is well to use this method as a beginner, but avoid jumping to conclusions. Begin where the people are and have them learn the facts with you (or after you, without their knowing you are ahead of them); then have them make the survey and their own decision under guidance. Try to find the cause, and work from there.

In general, conflicts can be attacked successfully in one of two ways, either by minimizing the conflict, or by integrating the interest of those who are at conflict with one another.

Minimizing Conflicts

(1) Some conflicts may be minimized by allowing a plan to perish of its own weight (although this is time-consuming) when it is recognized that reasoning will not break it up and the plan is so impractical that it is doomed to wear itself out after a short try. (2) Some conflicts can be minimized by recognizing forthcoming changes as inevitable. (3) Another solution is to minimize in such a way as to "save face." Often after a group has been convinced it is wrong, it will continue its stand to "save face." This remaining obstacle must be overcome by contacting those resistant to change in a manner that will bring about the desired end without loss to anyone. (4) When one member of the group has aroused the antagonism of another group toward him or her as a person, and that antagonism threatens the relationship of the two groups, it is sometimes necessary to withdraw that individual in order to safeguard the functioning of the whole. (5) Minimize by taking the other group along in the deliberation. The deliberation being "theirs," they come to an understanding and reverse their combat of discontention to aid its promotion. (6) Minimize by calling on expert opinion. If experts are called in on both sides, each is inclined to support the contention of the group which engaged him, and the solution of the controversy is farther off than ever. It is best not to call in experts until the "mindset" conflict has been replaced by one of agreement; then the expert should co-operate in the gathering of facts and in considering these facts in the light of the interests and needs of the groups involved. (7) Minimize the conflict by long-time planning. Ample time is of utmost importance for developments to take place, so that at every point the obstacles of joint action may be removed and full participation of all concerned may be secured.

(Note—The resolution will be more fruitful if it includes a new factor, which does not touch on those differences that are sore spots of the past and take time to heal over.)

Integrating Interests

To anticipate conflict or to dispel destructive emotions is but a part of the task in combating conflicts; the greater task is the harnessing of energies behind the threatened conflict and then turning it to constructive uses. Compromise leads to repression of antagonisms, which, in turn, brings them forth later in greater intensity—victory of one side leaves the conflict antagonisms still in the ascendant. There must be the devising of a way in which the needs of all groups are adjusted, the discovery of a solution which will add to rather than detract from existing satisfaction.

(1) First the problem must be analyzed; get at the roots of the thing. (2) Then recognize the identity of interests, and (3) utilize existing common interests. (4) If there is no sufficient common interest, create a common interest. (5) If a nominal agreement has been reached, replace it with a real agreement. (6) In the event of adding new groups or minority groups already existing, aid in their self-realization and adjustments.

What Not to Do

1. Do not bring social pressure to bear to solve a conflict.
2. Do not corral by voting it down or by legal action.
3. Do not irritate by mass meetings or publicizing.
4. Do not stifle by denying opportunity for discussion, by threatening, by making appeals to conflicting interest or appeals to loyalty.
5. Do not substitute or obscure the issue.
6. Do not be misled by a small group of people who talk so much they make you think the dissatisfaction is widespread.

Agreement Should Not Involve

1. Victory or defeat for anyone.
2. Only verbal agreement. It should bring functional co-operation.

Echoes from the General Conference Gavel

The Memorable Conference of 1915

PART II

The Presidency Reorganized

By Elbert A. Smith

THE DEATH of President Joseph Smith left the church without a president. However, the First Presidency was not dissolved, as two members remained. A joint council of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, the Presiding Patriarch, and the Presidents of Seventy adopted this resolution:

We pledge our confidence in support of the fidelity of our beloved brethren, F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith, as members of the presiding quorum of the church and acting as the Presidency of the church until the convening of the conference of 1915. — Saints' Herald, December 23, 1914.

The successor to President Joseph Smith had been indicated by revelation, and the church approached the conference of 1915 without uneasiness or trepidation. President Frederick M. Smith had been spending some time in the East, completing certain studies. At the time, I was living in Lamoni and was making preparation for the conference, when, on the second day of April, I received a telegram announcing that President Frederick M. Smith was ill and unable to travel, and prayers were requested on his behalf. This telegram was signed by his wife, Ruth. It indicated quite clearly that Brother Fred M. might not be at the conference at which he was expected to be approved and ordained as President of the Church.

The receipt of this telegram rather set me back on my heels, but it was immediately necessary to find more secure footing. The agent at the station who received the telegram, or some confidential friend, proceeded to broadcast it, so that almost before I had read the message, the news was about town. President Smith was ill with what proved to be double pneumonia and quite a serious illness. Naturally, the people were disturbed. President Joseph Smith, who had been prophet, leader, and friend for more than half a century, was dead. His son, who had been indicated by revelation as his successor, was dangerously ill and probably would not be at the conference. Nevertheless, the people rallied with courage to meet the situation. Having called the conference to order, I felt led to make a statement, quoted in part:

It becomes my unhappy lot this morning to stand before you as the sole representative of the First Presidency present. During the year we have met with the loss of our beloved Prophet and leader, President Joseph Smith. Now, because of this seemingly unfortunate and untimely illness of Frederick M. Smith, I am required to call this sixty-second Conference to order, and stand before you alone for the Presidency. But while I feel bowed down to the earth, personally, so far as the church is concerned, it is no time for doubt, it is no time for wavering. It is a time for courage and devotion and faith.

Someone said since our President died, that the church was like sheep without a shepherd. Have we not learned to say,

PRESIDENTS JOSEPH SMITH AND WILLIAM W. BLAIR

So far as we know, this excellent old-time picture has never before been published. Probably it was taken sometime between 1890 and 1895. The photograph recently came into possession of President I. A. Smith.

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want"? . . . I never felt more confident in this work than I do now. It is a time for courage, it is a time for faith and for devotion. We have had trouble. We shall have more trouble; but God will be with us.

The conference voted to sustain the two members of the Presidency to preside, and at my request, associated with me, Gomer T. Griffiths, President of the Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith.

Into Troubled Waters

We still cherished somewhat the hope that President Frederick M. Smith would recover sufficiently to attend the later sessions of the conference when the matter of his installation might be taken up; and so I rather stalled for time. However, the trouble I had suggested might yet lie before us very quickly materialized.

Bishop E. L. Kelley was growing old and, in the opinion of some, there was not adequate help in his office. There was no charge against his personal integrity. It was thought that with the help he had, and in his declining health, the situation financially was not safe, and there was a determination on the part of some to force an immediate reorganization of the Presiding Bishopric. Others were equally determined in their stand to prevent any such action and to protect the interests of Bishop Kelley until the Bishopric could be organized in the usual manner.

At my suggestion, the entire matter was referred to a mass meeting of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventies, sometimes referred to as the "co-ordinate quorums" in jurisdiction. These quorums proceeded to meet in the lower auditorium of the Brick Church daily. Very soon a deadlock developed which it seemed impossible to break and bring a report to the conference with any degree of unity such as would command respect.

Under these conditions, the conference met daily for a few minutes and adjourned that the quorums might convene in the lower auditorium to wrestle with the problem, which we did daily, usually from 9 o'clock in the forenoon until late at night. The entire financial situation was canvassed pro and con with the division becoming more marked. Our militant Scotch brother, Daniel

JOHNNIE CORNISH, MISSIONARY

One of our best-known and most successful old-time missionaries. A rather homely, friendly, wholesome man who had known mob violence at firsthand, and yet believed in and used three textbooks on "how to win friends and influence people."

McGregor, tossing back his mane of hair and with his fiery oratory, led the forces of those who would compel an immediate reorganization of the Presiding Bishopric. Some radical stands were taken. One man of some standing declared, "If this matter is not adjusted to my satisfaction, I will quit." Such statements challenged me, and I declared, "I do not know what will happen before I die, but as I feel now, when I quit there will not be one plank left to stand on." Down in the audience somewhere I heard John Garver remark, sotto voce, "They are getting Brother Elbert stirred up."

The Way Opens Before Us

This was the situation when the way out opened up suddenly, as it often does when the church is in trouble. I may say without disrespect to Gomer T. Griffiths, my associate at the time, that early in the conference when I yielded the chair to him, he ran into heavy waters. Motions and counter-motions and amendments piled up, confusion developed, and the situation was saved only by adjournment. However, Gomer made ample restitution for this embarrassment which came to him and to his assembly at the time.

Gomer Griffiths at his best was truly an apostle and often received the spirit of prophecy. In the midst of this contention and deadlock (which delayed and annoyed the whole conference), Gomer was seated by my side and suddenly he nudged me and asked permission to speak, saying that he thought he saw a way out. Permission being given, he asked that the meeting be adjourned for "a few minutes" to let the Presidency and the Twelve retire, and emphatically promised that we would return shortly with a recommendation that would be adopted by the quorums and which the conference would approve without debate. That seemed to me a strong promise to make, but we agreed, and the quorums adjourned. Representing the Presidency, I met with the Twelve in the "students' room" in the rear of the old Brick Church. We were there thirty minutes. Gomer had the germ of the idea, and others elaborated it, then I wrote out a resolution to which all agreed. We returned to the mass meeting of the priesthood, which gave its immediate support to our recommendation with only five negative votes.

We adjourned and took our report to the next session of the conference. A tense moment followed its reading, but someone moved its adoption, another moved the previous question, and, without discussion, our report was approved by an overwhelming vote. A feeling of relief and satisfaction came over the conference, and we moved forward unitedly to the task of considering and sustaining the successor in the office of President of the Church.

The Calling of Frederick M. Smith Approved

By now it was apparent that Brother Fred M. would not be able to come to the conference. The bone of contention concerning the Bishopric was removed. Unity had returned. In harmony with the program previously adopted by the chief quorums, Apostle Griffiths, President of the Quorum of Twelve, took the chair; a motion designating President Frederick M. Smith as successor in the Presidency was made by Apostle F. M. Sheehy. The vote in favor by delegates and ex-officio delegates was unanimous. All other members present were then allowed to vote, and their vote was unanimous. Not an opposing vote was cast. Provision was made for the ordination to take place later, which occurred on the evening of Wednesday, May 5, in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri.

Administrations Change But the Church Goes On

Thus the memorable conference of 1915 marked the end of one long period of church administration and the beginning of another. President Frederick M. Smith had been received by a unanimous vote. He was young—a man of extraordinary physical and mental strength. He had not asked for such an office or calling, but it had come to him, and I know that according to his own understanding and conviction, he made studious, prayerful, and careful preparation.

When the gavel fell and the conference was adjourned and we moved out into another year, I could not foresee that the time would come years later when I would for the last time grasp in farewell the hand of this new President and be required again to have some part with others in the reorganization of the Presidency of the church and the calling and sustaining of another President, our beloved President, Israel A. Smith.

General Conference Procedure

General Conference is and always was the supreme legislative body of the church. In it, through their own chosen representatives, the people may initiate legislation from the floor of the conference; and they may approve or disapprove, or refer or amend the legislation suggested by any presiding officer or council of the church; or they may lay the matter on the table—a convenient and dignified way of doing to death legislation on which there is no desire to vote for or against.

The old-time conferences were also very much an open forum of debate. Many questions were debated at considerable length. Those were the days when people liked to listen to debates—debates on church matters and religion in general. Times have changed. Perhaps our people are less given to argument. Besides, the conference is a much larger body. As compared with the old-time conference, if the same percentage of delegates in this larger body took the floor to debate questions as often and as long as they did of old, the conference would be in session continuously for a long, long time. Our procedure has been streamlined. General Conference is still a free and open forum; it alone has the power to limit the time of debate on a given question. But in these days there is no tendency to permit anyone to talk to death either the question or the assembly.

Pen Sketches of Old-timers

Johnny Cornish, Missionary

During fifty years of active ministry, "Johnny" Cornish made his name a household word in Canada and the United States and himself a welcome visitor to our General Conferences.

He was a wiry, active, friendly man with blue eyes and smiling face. When he first began to preach, he had difficulty reading his own text. But he was not minded to remain ignorant. He became a rather well-read man and mastered an admirable working vocabulary as preacher and writer.

He preached to thousands of people, and many were converted. Among those converted, a number became ministers and carried on his work. My recollection of him at conference time had to do with the period before the afternoon business session. He always came early and went up and down the aisles shaking hands with friends. Everyone knew Johnny Cornish—and Johnny Cornish knew everyone. Then quite often he would be invited to the rostrum to talk a while before business was taken up. He held the rapt attention of his hearers with a simple, conviction-bearing testimony of missionary life and spiritual experiences. Most of all, he liked to tell of the time when he was baptizing at night in the River Thames in London, Canada. This was his story in his own words:

On account of working at daily labor this baptism was performed on Wednesday, late in the evening of December 29, 1875; an intensely dark night. After our prayer meeting, Mrs. John Taylor and Miss Sarah Lively, who had, as stated in her letter, attended our meetings in the city, were baptized by me in the River Thames, when suddenly there came a very beautiful light from heaven, which rested upon all—both members and nonmembers—brighter than the sun at noonday. There were about thirty persons present, and I feel sure that none of them could forget that night. It came down with a sound like a mighty rushing wind. We could hear it far above in the distance, and as it reached the place where we stood we were enveloped in the brightest and most beautiful light I ever saw—the glory of the Lord. . . . After baptism and dismissal, the light did not go out, but gradually up until it vanished from our sight, leaving us in darkness as dense and impenetrable as before.—Into the Latter Day Light, J. J. Cornish, pages 48-50.

Evangelist F. G. Pitt

Looking back over the years, there come to mind a great number of men who figured prominently in General Conference gatherings. You will recall Brother F. G. Pitt. His ministry as an ordained man covered a span of a little less than sixty-four years, going back to the early days in Plano when he was associated with Brother Joseph.

We remember his ministry of song ending on the note, "God is so good to me." Marcella Schenck writes, "If I ever reach the good place where he has gone, I plan to ask him to sing that song again, with an angel chorus humming in the background."

A handsome man of soldierly bearing, who had served his country and was also a soldier of the cross, his appearance and personality one time inspired these lines:

There's a look to him like soldiers
Marching up the hill to glory.
There's a sound to him like trumpets,

When he tells the gospel story.
When he sings we hear the angels
Chant salvation's stirring chorus.
And we know that Zion's banner
Rides above us and before us.

Apostle and Evangelist U. W. Greene

tured, Christian gentleman, bringing grace and dignity to the office of minister for Christ. He came at last to live and die in Zion, but some of his heart he left "down East in Maine."

Militant Missionary T. W. Chatburn

There was T. W. Chatburn, one-time Union soldier and member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He always looked the soldier, erect and military in his bearing, and he was of a militant spirit. In a day when Utah Mormon polygamy was an issue of national importance, he returned from a mission in Utah with the smoke of battle in his nostrils and, speaking to the conference, he closed with this statement:

"I am for anything to down Utah Mormonism!" As Bishop M. T. Short would have said, that statement was "too scopative," and immediately it was challenged. Someone rose to a point of order and begged Brother Chatburn to qualify that statement. Cocking one eye toward the ceiling and speaking in a slow, Yankee, nasal drawl, Brother Chatburn said, "Well, I will make it anything r-e-a-s-o-n-a-b-l-y honorable." He could usually be depended on to stick a harpoon of wit into most any problem under discussion. His last statement provoked laughter, it seemed so absurd; but when you stop to think about it, we are told in the Bible that all God wants of any of us is a reasonable service, and reason should go along with honor as with all the other Christian graces.

Heman C. Smith and Joseph Luff

Going back over the earlier years of my recollections and following down some distance, viewing those now gone to their rest, I recall numerous men of strength and weight in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, among them the one-time president, Alexander Smith, John W. Wight, William Kelley, Charles Derry, Peter Anderson, and a number of others. Perhaps no two of them in my recollection carried more weight in our conferences than Apostle Heman C. Smith and Apostle Joseph Luff.

The last two that I have named were quite different in their characteristics and approach, both in preaching and in argumentation on the floor of the conference. When Heman C. Smith felt called upon to join the fray in defense of something he believed in or to attack something he did not believe in, he had tremendous influence with the audience. He drove his arguments home one by one with sledge-hammer blows. He rather rarely made an appeal to the emotions. When he finished, if anyone felt converted to go along with him in his conclusions, that man rather definitely understood his reasons for going along and something about the objective.

Joseph Luff was one of the most brilliant orators the church has ever known. He was of a highly complex organization himself, nervous in temperament, and emotional. He had great power to sway an audience. He was, perhaps, the one man whom I would most rather not have on the other side of a question I felt called upon to defend.

Heman had a dry sort of wit that made him a good traveling companion. He disliked sarcasm and said to me one time, "It is a dangerous two-edged weapon." But he could use it when someone tried to "push him around." There is the traditional episode with the Mormon bishop. One of our brethren in Salt Lake City had died. His wife and children were Utah Mormons. The body was interred in the Mormon cemetery. As Heman stood by the graveside, a Mormon bishop sidled up to him and said: "It is too bad this man has to sleep here among our people—he never did get on with them while he was alive." Heman drew in his breath in a characteristic fashion and blandly replied, "Oh, do not let that worry you too much. He will be up and gone a thousand years ahead of the others."

It was my lot to be with Heman at a tragic moment in his life. His beloved daughter Beth was dying. She was a young wife and mother with much to live for, a lovely person. Heman was a man of iron will, but as it drew on to midnight he dropped on his knees by the bedside of his daughter and said, "O Lord, not my will but thine be done." Beth slipped away almost immediately thereafter. I observed that from that time on Heman had a finer, more compassionate and understanding ministry to the people.

APOSTLE GOMER T. GRIFFITHS

Gomer, known to the Island Saints as "Gomera," is shown here in the prime of his vigor. Hat on, ready to go any time, anywhere, on any mission appointed him by the church: to the United States, Canada, Britain, Europe, Australia, the Islands of the Pacific, or the Holy Land. First ordained as priest, September 3, 1876, he has had approximately seventy-two years in the ministry. Ordained Apostle, 1887; president of the Quorum of Apostles, 1913; Patriarch, 1922.

Presiding Bishop E. L. Kelley

When it came to forensic contests in the General Conference, perhaps no man ever excelled Bishop E. L. Kelley. President F. M. Smith sometimes said that Bishop Kelley was the ablest "catch-as-catch-can" debater in the church. He seldom referred to notes. He always seemed to carry the subject in his mind, including figures and facts. He was an even-tempered and just man and never held a grudge against those who opposed him in conference debate.

He was always considerate of the poor and needy. However, he did not relish being imposed upon. At a time when church offices were on the second floor of the building now housing the Crown Drug Store, a man came into the Bishop's office and told a heart-breaking story about the needs of his family. Bishop Kelley gave him five dollars to relieve their immediate distress. Glancing out the window a moment later, he saw the man entering a saloon just across the street. With considerable celerity, the good bishop was down the stairs and across the street. Entering the saloon, he recovered the five dollars intact. It was reserved for a bishop to enter a saloon in Independence and come out with more money than he had when he went in.

The church needed a man of strong convictions and of impressive and determined action, and the church had such a bishop in E. L. Kelley. When he embarked on an enterprise, it was very difficult to put a road block in his way that would stop him. Our old-time Welch missionary, Evan Morgan (or as his Welsh brethren called him, "E-van Mor-gan," with emphasis on the closing syllables), one time said to me about Bishop Kelley, "He starts down a road. We put a gate across the road and say, 'You can't go this way, Brother Kelley.' And Brother Kelley simply smiles and says, 'Very well, I don't have to go that way,' and then—" At that point, Evan Morgan with his right hand de-

Elements of Spiritual Power—Part 1

By SEVENTY GEORGE A. NJEIM

Substance of a lecture presented at the Convention of Twelve and Seventy, Kansas City, Missouri, January 3 to 9, 1948.

LISTEN

IN ATTEMPTING to find the varied elements of spiritual power, I came to discover that they stem out of two main sources which are listed in the revelation of the latter days as: listen and behold. The use of the former appears almost exclusive with the Doctrine and Covenants, and the latter appears to be more prevalent in the Book of Mormon. It is in these two sources that all elements of spiritual power are combined.

The significance of listen, or that of its synonym, harken, can be seen from the frequent repetition of the words in the early revelations given to the church. The Lord intends us to more than just turn our ears to him when he employs the usage of them. He wants us to be attentive to his word, to devote mind and thought to it, and to completely occupy ourselves with it. True listening can be had only when all the cognitive faculties of our soul become instruments of reception. Our lack of accomplishments in the vocation the Lord has given us (which we have willingly agreed to take upon ourselves) speaks louder than any praises or hosannas we sing to Him.

Of course, the world that we find ourselves in is an organized force blocking the efforts of anyone trying to listen. For the listening that we are talking about, the time element is essential. Our grandfathers and even our fathers were more blessed in finding time for listening than we are. Life in their day was not so complex as ours, and its requirements were much more simple. To "keep up with the Joneses" now takes all the time one can possibly find. Even at that, for some of us there are not sufficient hours in the day for the accomplishment of what society and daily living impose. And when time is available, commercial interests see to it that it is not used in a way that will reduce their gains.

JUST AS IMPORTANT as the time element is the condition for listening. Without peace of mind and soul, no one can listen to the word of God. True listening, as we said, is a property of the soul. The world is ever expanding our wants and needs and placing contentment in the archives of obsolete virtues. Even if contentment were our lot, frustration and defeat meet us at every turn. Prosperity is soon succeeded by depression, and hardly do we hear of peace until hostilities are resumed. And as if that were not enough to make life the bitter pill that it now is, we have in addition the commercialization of sex and its promiscuity that is ever threatening our moral and domestic security. In the face of this, how could we listen?

It is stated that Marshal Foch, leader of the allied armies in the First World War, said, "Our duty is to find a weak spot in the enemy's line of defense and attack. If we can't find one, we must make one." What applies to physical warfare also applies to spiritual warfare. If the voice of Christ is to be heard by us, and the world is jamming reception, we must find a weak spot in the enemy's defense line or make one. There is good advice in the words of the hymn that says, "Take time to be holy." We must take time to read, to meditate, to contemplate, to pray, to work, and to have fellowship with the Saints. These are the elements which, when com-combined, bring us the voice of Christ—the only source of spiritual power. If the world does not permit the natural urge within us to find expression and be in tune with that voice, we must find time.

THE FIRST ELEMENT we suggested in "tuning in" is reading. By that we mean reading the word of God as given us in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The words "poverty in the midst of plenty" have become proverbial, and I do not know of any people they apply to better than us. We have more sacred and divine literature than any other Christian people that we can mention, yet we know very little of what we have. This applies to the local ministry as well as to the laity of the church. I think it was Victor Hugo who said, "Reading is the holding of conversation with and enjoying the companionship of the sages of time." If that be true of literature in general, how much more important should it be regarding the reading of our sacred literature. Here we will have converse with the prophets, saints, and, more especially, with Christ. We will have companionship with them; and, since association infuses the traits of the stronger into the weaker, we will have infused into us the secret of victory. In the homes of our fathers, it was mandatory and habitual to read the Word of God before going to work in the morning or to bed at night. This practice has been generally abandoned in the majority of our homes. With this abandonment has gone the peace and tranquility which characterized their lives.

Next to the reading of our sacred literature, I should like to suggest reading the history of our movement in particular and the history of the Hebrews in general. This knowledge would raise our appreciation of the solidarity of the Word of God and of the frailty of man and his opinions. Also, since our faith is prophetic, it deals with the present epoch, and the reading of current events with the awareness of what the Lord has told us will increase our cognizance of a power infinitely greater than any this world of ours knows. As I look at the disintegration taking place in the world around us, I see it through the eyes of the prophet of Palmyra and become appreciative of the words the Lord gave us over a hundred years ago. The march of events is leading people to two opposing states—the state of fear and the state of hope. We should, if our knowledge of God's dealings with man is strong enough, be inspired with courage.

NO READING of the sacred word, however extensive it may be, is of any lasting value without meditation. Meditation is a lost art to a world ever living in the realm of the material at the expense of the spiritual. When we speak of meditation, we have in mind the thought the Psalmist expressed when he said, "but his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law does he meditate day and night." It is for that reason we have attempted to list meditation after reading. When we read the Word of God and meditate on it, we simply open the cage door of the soul and allow it to enter into the celestial world. When it comes back, we find it radiant with joy. The man who reads the word of God without meditating on it is like the pilot that flies without a compass. If the word of God is our ship, meditation is its anchor. It is partly due to the lack of meditation over the word God gave us that we find the Saints far from the harbor and buffeted by the ever-increasing fury of the storm. Only by listening to the voice of the Almighty can we find our bearing and reach port. As we meditate on the law of God, we give the soul a chance to listen.

THERE ARE TIMES when even the most proficient of us in the scripture and those of us who have drunk deeply of the fount of spiritual insight find ourselves in the gloom of doubt. I would suggest the contemplation of the universe at such times. I remember once, at the close of a series of meetings, I came home only to find myself peeling and coring pears until 1:30 a. m. That alone was no calamity. I love, to the chagrin of my wife, to putter around the kitchen and show her how to cook, and I especially glory in the accumulation of foodstuffs for the winter. On this occasion, however, the branch I had left was riddled with difficulties, and the response to the series was disappointing. Added to that was the return of a deep-seated affliction making spiritual and physical endurance an impossibility. Even God was gone from the picture. For two days previously, I had tried to understand him and his system of justice, but could not find him. At 1:30 a. m., the last of the pears was in the jars, and my wife suggested that I throw the peelings and cores in the garden. As I stepped out, I was immediately greeted by the frosty, refreshing atmosphere that clothes the nights of eastern Canada in late September. The brilliance of stars was more luminous that night than ever before. Even the moon was vibrant with life and splendor. The stillness of the night emptied my soul of every foul element, and the beauty of my surroundings flooded my being. As I stood there, I listened until my wife asked what was keeping me out at such a late hour. I suggested that she come out, too, and she did. Together we watched. We were past the time in our lives when star gazing held romantic appeal, but we were not as yet mature enough not to listen to the voice of the eternal. Pains, aches, and discouragements fled before the exhibition of nature at its best. We understood, then, how the Psalmist saw his salvation coming from the hills.

As a study is made of the lives of holy men, we find that prayer is an inevitable step in their attempt at listening to God. Too many people look at prayer as an act of begging and hence is below their dignity. This element does enter into prayer, but it is insignificantly minute in comparison with the total purpose of prayer. Prayer is not begging. Prayer is the language of a soul attempting to harmonize itself with the God discovered through reading the sacred word—a God whose picture has become indelibly printed on the consciousness through meditation and contemplation. Its first utterance is that of recognition and praise. It recognizes the sovereignty, or as Christ puts it, the fatherhood of God and praises his name. Its second desire is that of a pledge and dedication. In one glance it sees the harmony and peace above and the sin and discord below. Its discontent manifests itself in the petition, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." In its attempt to fulfill its sacred pledge, many features come to hinder it. This might be the need for physical sustenance or the cleansing of internal impurity. Such can hardly be called begging when the benefits accrued are used for the sake of universal harmony. Prayer is a self absorbed in selfless tasks. To some, it is a hardship to pray, but prayer is natural when it follows reading and meditation. It becomes a converse with God.

THE FIFTH STEP in our listening is our Christian warfare. This carries our prayers from the theoretic side of life to the active side. Thus far we have come in contact only with the divine voice. To assure that voice any semblance of permanence, the principles of the kingdom we have prayed for must be lived and promulgated. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Disobedience to the divine command results in severance of heavenly communication. This is true of the movement as well as of individuals in the movement. When we are asked to listen in the Doctrine and Covenants, we are asked to listen to instructions which organize us to preach Jesus Christ and tell us how to live in order that our preaching may be more effective. In the book, this appears under the heading of priesthood and Zion. Those who have been obedient to this instruction always inspire us by their lives as well as by their words. The disunity one sees in the Restoration Movement is the result of disobeying this instruction. As one becomes active in the work of the Lord, he is bound to hear his voice. "Work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts."—Haggai 2: 4.

Too often we hear of the staleness of our prayer meetings and the lack of attendance at them. Can one be wrong in assuming that the Saints lack a testimony? Testimony is the result of experience with God, and experience is the result of our warfare, or, as Paul puts it, our "tribulation." The thing that leads us to tribulation is our faith and its obligatory powers. (Romans 5: 1-4.) The proof of these words of Paul is clearly shown in our own experience. Whenever we were active in the work of the Lord, we carried a cross, which, in return, shortened the distance between him and us so that we could hear his voice.

THE LAST STEP which will assure our hearing God's voice is fellowship. Through the means already mentioned, we listen to the Almighty, but there are times when these means fail and spiritual power is at a low ebb. At such times, fellowship is an indisputable help. On many an occasion, when exceedingly discouraged, I have come into the company of some worth-while Saints. They knew little or nothing of my difficulties, and I had no purpose of visiting them other than our friendship which had developed throughout the years. After meetings of this type, I began to discover that my difficulties disappeared. In analyzing what took place there, I found that unconsciously they told me of their experiences with God, and in return brought out of me that which I was not able to see before. It took me some time to discover that such visits were prayer meetings minus the formality. The promise of the Savior of being present with two or three that come together in his name is true; when we confine that to mean church meetings only, we are wrong. Some means should be discovered to help the Saints have more wholesome fellowship with each other outside church buildings. Fellowship inspires hope in times of despair and dispells the clouds of doubt so the sunshine of the spirit may rejuvenate the drooping soul.

This whole matter of listening to the divine voice that strengthens us may be summed up in the experiences of Moses, Mohammed, Old Testament prophets, Jesus Christ and, finally, the Latter Day Prophet. These men in their different days stood apart from all men because of their contact with the Almighty. Millions of men were blessed through their ministration and were able to contact the source of their strength. The similarity of the means which brought them in contact with the voice of God is outstanding. They were all acquainted with the word of God. Their environment was such that they found themselves freed from tradition and absorbed in meditation. When they looked to the God they knew through the word and became more sure of him through meditation and contemplation, they sought him and he came close to them.

Joseph Smith knew the Bible. This is the part the Reformation played in paving the way for the Restoration—it made the word of God of more avail to the public.

The traditions of the Pilgrim Fathers and all who came to the New World were left behind. The country as a whole was a frontier and afforded time for meditation and contemplation. Their sore needs were presented to the God they knew in the Bible, and whose picture was made much more luminous by the conditioning the environment wrought in them. For that reason, when Joseph besought refuge in that God from the ever-deteriorating spiritual condition, the sanctuary of heaven was opened to him. Through the fellowship of those who had heard that same voice and by virtue of his obedience to his commission, he continued to be the mouthpiece of God and was able to endure unto death.

May we as the missionaries of Christ to the world harken to him and teach others to do so. Let us go to our "desert places." Civilization encumbers the soul.

The Effect of the Income Tax Law on Church Contributions

A GOOD MANY PEOPLE have raised questions about the extent to which deductions could be made for gifts made to the church as tithes or offerings. One who is familiar with the income tax law suggested the following illustration:

In a certain situation, an individual giving $1,000 might actually give this at a cost to himself of only $800, for in that gift the deduction is allowed and the amount of $200 is saved on income tax.

The government has been very generous in this respect, and there are a number of people who have been privileged to take advantage of the provision made in the income tax law to encourage gifts to benevolent institutions by making such a concession in income taxes.

This illustrates how a person can get his tithing brought up to date in these days of high wages and salaries at lower cost through the amount that it saves on his income tax. In some cases the saving would be even higher, twenty-two per cent, twenty-six per cent or more, depending upon the tax bracket in which the person's income places him.

Individual circumstances, of course, have a bearing upon the situation, but as a general rule where a person's other deductions such as taxes paid, interest paid, and medical deduction total approximately ten per cent or more of his adjusted gross income, all religious and charitable contributions during the year (not to exceed fifteen per cent of the adjusted gross income) will be a further deduction and serve to reduce the income tax by twenty per cent, twenty-two per cent, twenty-six per cent or even higher, as the case may be. Therefore, in analyzing his income tax situation, it will be helpful to the taxpayer as well as to the church to see if a substantial increase in church contributions will not assist materially in reducing his income tax; in this way he can, at the same time, catch up on his tithing obligation.

HAVE YOU MADE YOUR WILL?

In connection with this question, you may also desire to have some information as to the proper manner in which to make a bequest or legacy to the church or some of the church institutions. We advise that you have an attorney in your community prepare your will for you to make sure that it complies with all of the laws of your state covering the subject; and when consulting with him, you may give him the following information regarding such amounts as you desire to bequeath to the church or its institutions:

A bequest or legacy to the church should read:

I do hereby give, devise and bequeath unto G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop, as Trustee in Trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to his successors in office for the use and benefit of said church, the sum ofDollars ($.....).

If property is devised, it should be described.

A bequest or legacy to Graceland College should read:

I do hereby give, devise and bequeath unto Graceland College, Inc., of Lamoni, Iowa, the sum of Dollars ($.....).

A bequest or legacy to the Sanitarium should read:

I do hereby give, devise and bequeath unto Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, a corporation of Independence, Missouri, the sum of Dollars ($.....).

A bequest or legacy to the Herald Publishing House should read:

I do hereby give, devise and bequeath unto the Herald Publishing House, a Trust Estate, of Independence, Missouri, the sum ofDollars ($.....)

A bequest or legacy for the Saints' Home at Lamoni, or the Resthaven in Independence, should read:

I do hereby give, devise and bequeath unto G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop, as Trustee in Trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to his successors in office, for the use and benefit of the Saints' Home for the Aged at Lamoni, Iowa (or of the Resthaven, a Convalescent Home, at Independence, Missouri), the sum of Dollars ($.....).

Frequently it is desired to leave the residue of the estate to the church after making provisions for certain legacies or bequests, and the proper manner to show this is as follows:

All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, whether real, personal or mixed and wheresoever situated, I do hereby give, devise and bequeath unto G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop, as Trustee in Trust for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to his successors in office for the use and benefit of said church.

Stretching the Home Furnishing Dollar

By MARIAN BROCK BLUMENSCHN

MANY YOUNG COUPLES have a story to tell of how they set up housekeeping on a very limited budget, of how they refinished old auction pieces or even started from scratch and built their own tables, desks, and coffee table. They are justly proud of their homemade furniture and of having saved as much as a hundred dollars on a single piece. Ours is but one of these stories.

When we moved into our first real home, on being released from the Army, we had two baby beds, a high chair, and an old organ. With a great deal of enthusiasm and very little experience, we set out to make our own furniture. Inspiration for the modern design, which we felt most easily adapted to our needs and to homemade furniture, came directly from our "Idea Book"—a collection of magazine clippings on home furnishing and decorating.

We furnished our large living-dining room with the following items:

Dining table	$ 15.00
Buffet (from material on hand)	2.00
2 sectional davenports	34.00
2 reading lamps	6.00
Desk (from material on hand)	—
Piano	16.00
2 end tables and book shelf (custom made)	60.00
6 birch dining chairs (on sale)	21.00
Total	$154.00

WE COULD HAVE SAVED even more by making our own bookshelves and end tables instead of having a carpenter make them. The dining table, three by seven feet, is designed to fit the dining area at one end of the living room and is large enough to seat eight comfortably. Although the table is constructed of yellow pine, the top

The author attended Graceland in 1938. Her husband, Dr. John Blumenschein, is head of the student church group at Columbia, Missouri. They have three children.

Their living room, pictured below, is even more attractive than the photographs portray it. The matching dining table, chairs, buffet, and piano are interesting features not shown here.

(which must be most durable) is covered with gum plywood and finished in light wheat tone with a varnish called "Bar Top." This Bar Top is a clear varnish with a bakelite base developed for hard wear and service. Its peculiar qualities are resistance to heat, moisture, and scarring; it also brings out the grain of the wood beautifully.

Our buffet is a converted chest of drawers, which was given to us. The top two drawers were removed, shelves were put in their place and simple doors were fitted to the top half of the chest, which now accommodates our dinnerware. Two bottom drawers leave ample space for linens.

THE MOST difficult project of all we undertook was making our modern sectional divan out of old used davenports. The two units, one three-quarters length, the other full-length, fit together to form a continuous corner sofa. I would not minimize the time and patient effort that it takes to redesign and remake a davenport. For several weeks we were regular patrons at Barney's Wednesday night furniture auction. Finally we acquired the following materials with which we set to work:

2 large woven bedspreads	13.00
Cord and tacks50
Total	$34.50

We removed old upholstery cloth and took off the arms and backs. In order to get a new, low, straight-lined look, we built frames for the backs, tied in springs and applied padding, which we borrowed from the third davenport. The least expensive upholstery material we could find was woven bedspreads. Later I made slip covers of cotton twill which snap on and off for easy laundering.

a home column feature

We also made our reading lamps and desk and remodeled the piano. Our boxlike end tables of gum plywood are finished with Bar Top to harmonize with the dining table at the opposite end of the room. They help to eliminate clutter in the living room by keeping current magazines, music, and church materials behind closed doors.

The necessity of stretching our home furnishing dollars gave us an opportunity to work out a problem together, to use our own ingenuity and originality. In the last year and a half we have had good service and derived much satisfaction from our homemade furniture.

Ideas for stretching the clothing dollars

THE OLD ADAGE, "Waste not, want not," may well be applied to our family's clothing as well as to their food. Let's search our closets for old clothes with a future, pull discarded woolens out of moth balls, and, if we can't use them as they are, remake them. By putting idle garments to work, we reduce the demand for new clothing, and we have more money in the family purse for other necessities or for savings. Even before the "new look" forced us to make over our dresses, most of us had made over suits and coats into clothing for the children. But have you ever thought of making over knit garments? What do you do with Pa's old long-legged cotton underdrawers, for instance, or your husband's worn undershirts? Old "knits" can be cut just as you would other materials. Many will not ravel and those loosely-woven ones, such as sweaters, can be machine-stitched close to the edge before or just after cutting. You can use a commercial pattern as you would for other material; cut around pattern pieces as usual. Raw edges may be finished with blanket stitch or single crochet. Convert those worn white cotton undershirts into a soft nightgown for the baby or a T-shirt just like Dad's for a small boy. From a moth-eaten wool bathing suit and a few scraps of bright felt, make a Dutch bonnet and mitten set, the kind school girls like. You'll find instructions for making over knits and many good suggestions in the government bulletin, "Knitwear Make-Overs," Miscellaneous Number 575, Superintendent of Documents, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The Tale of a Shirt

Last spring I made myself a nice white cotton blouse out of one my husband's worn shirts. It was quick and easy to make because I used the buttons and buttonholes just as they were instead of making new ones. Out of discarded shirts, I have made our little girl a white pinafore and Brent, aged four, a stripped blouse. When time and old shirts permit, I plan to make a child's sunsuit and an apron. For all these clothes, I rip the shirts up and use commercial patterns. Sometimes there is only enough good material for handkerchiefs for Dad or a new collar set for myself.

Bag of Tricks

Has your chenille robe faded a bit? Restore its original color by swishing it in a hot dye bath in your washing machine. The same technique is fine for bedspreads and sun-faded drapes. Girls slacks can be made from a man's trousers. Make a child's coat from white flannels. The scrap bag may yield a harvest of unsuspected riches—scarfs, collars, dickies, and new trim for a tired dress. It takes much thought and planning to stretch a slim budget to clothe an active growing family. In these critical times, nothing need be wasted. Clothing that cannot be made over for your own family can be renovated and sent to friends and fellow Saints in faraway, war-torn countries.

For some of these ideas, I'm indebted to the government bulletin, "Knitwear Make-overs" and The New Encyclopedia of Modern Sewing, by Dickson and Blondin.

Our Penny Drive

By Mrs. H. Liberto, North Hollywood, California

OUR PENNY DRIVE started in our ladies' aid group. One woman was chosen to be in charge and take the responsibility. She is always at her little station in the rear of the church after services with her box or money bag.

The Church Bulletin which is handed out at the door to all who come to church Sunday morning contains a notice of the penny drive. Following the services, she collects the pennies. After a year's time, everyone knows when he sees Sister Liggett that it's pennies she's after. She also contacts the group leaders and they pass the word on to their groups, so each one co-operates by saving all the pennies and turning them over to the one in charge. We now have four groups working.

To make the job of collecting pennies a bit easier, Sister Liggett keeps penny wrappers on hand and wraps the coins as she collects them. Enclosed is a clipping from our bulletin as follows:

PENNY DRIVE CONTINUES: Sister Elizabeth Liggett requests that attention be called to the continuation of the "Mile-of-Pennies" effort and expresses appreciation to the groups and individuals who have given generous assistance.

When the news gets around, everyone drops his pennies in a certain little place through the week and brings them to church on Sunday.

This has proved quite satisfactory as a money-making project in our little branch.

Experiences in Church Work

Selections from the Autobiography of J. W. A. BAILEY

An Experience Concerning "Spirit Consciousness."

WHILE DOING MISSIONARY WORK in eastern Oklahoma, I had a talk with one of our missionaries on the subject of the spirit of man. This brother expressed himself as doubting "the consciousness of the spirit between death and the resurrection." Up to this time, I had taken for granted that what our church taught on the subject is right (and I still believe it). But for a time, the argument that Brother X made disturbed me much. And, adding to my concern, on my way home just before General Conference, I got on the train at McAlester and was seated with an Adventist minister who was also a doctor. The subject of "spirit consciousness after death" came up, and I will frankly admit that his argument, for a time, completely upset me.

For days I felt very perturbed over the matter, but I kept it to myself lest I disturb others. As I went about my daily task, I prayed about it, asking for divine light on the subject.

One night, in the latter part of March, 1913, I had another dream or night vision such as I have mentioned several times before. These dreams, that I have had over a period of sixty years, are different from ordinary dreams. They are vivid and impressive, and they remain clear in my memory.

I have tried to relate these experiences accurately without any coloring whatever; in fact, I am not relating them as impressively as they came to me.

On the previously mentioned night, I saw in dream or vision, a spirit being standing by my bed. It appeared to be a young person, very handsome, with fine, penetrating eyes, and a pleasing personality. This being seemed to be transparent, about the color of light amber. It looked so pleasantly at me, I tried to shake hands with it, but I was made to know that I could not do so. While this being never spoke a word to me, its very presence was impressive.

Whether dream or vision, it served the purpose of satisfying my mind on the subject, and stimulated a desire in me to make a study of the matter.

AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1913, I was appointed to labor in the Nodaway District. I found this to be a very interesting field. I came in contact with several fine "old-time" Saints who had been Utah Mormons and were brought out of Utah by United States Government officers. From them, I learned much of the despotic rule of Brigham Young.

I first went to the home of Elder R. K. Ross and labored around Ross Grove, Mound City, and Maitland. While preaching in these parts, I baptized William Rowlett and Mrs. B. V. Chambers, wife of the mayor of Maitland.

I went from here to Guilford, where I held a series of services and had good attendance. The editor of the Guilford paper gave me several fine "write-ups." In August, I started a tent meeting at Ravenwood. While we were holding these services, one Thomas Smith was holding a tent meeting at Parnell, about five miles from Ravenwood. He made several visits to challenge me to a debate. With the consent of our people, I accepted his challenge, and we held a debate with our Campbellite opponent. Elder Ed. Fanning was my moderator, and we had a fine old man—a member of the Catholic Church—to act as chairman. A number of times, he ruled in our favor. This probably caused some of the prejudice that was later manifested against us.

When the debate was over, all of our people who lived miles away left. Also most all the good people of the town left also, and I was alone. I was staying with a fine Jewish man by the name of Louis J. Kaufman. When the tent was empty, a group of men started to come in at the back of the tent. I heard them say, "Here he is. Let's hang him." I quickly turned the lights out and made my way to the front of the tent. There I met an old man by the name of Leary, returning. He walked to me and took hold of my arm and said, "Come with me. My minister is leading a mob against you." We kept in the light of the street lights and started for the Kaufman home, where I was staying. When we got in front of the house, we found a mob waiting for us. They began throwing eggs at us. They hit Mr. Leary, but only one egg came near hitting me. It broke on my brief case. I then walked out into the street and stood under a street light. Mr. Leary went after those he thought threw the eggs that hit him. When he reached the main street, he came up with several of them, especially with the one he thought was the leader of that group. Mr. Leary, who was a fine old man and well-to-do, threw the leader through a front window. This put a stop to the main activity of the mob, for they did not dare to hurt Mr. Leary. Mr. Leary came back to me. I went with him to a telephone and called John Gates, who, with his son, came in and took me out to their home.

I should like to say a few words about this man, John Gates. When I first set up the tent at Ravenwood, Sister Gates told me that, for certain reasons, her husband was not very friendly to the church. During the services, Mr. Gates came but stayed outside. A few evenings after I had been preaching, Sister Gates came into the tent early and said to me, "My husband is outside and would like to see you." I went out and met Mr. Gates. After greetings, he handed me six silver dollars and said, "If my children ask you to baptize them, it will be all right with me."

Rough Treatment

THE DAY AFTER the incident with the mob, I baptized four: Eva M. Powell, daughter of Elder and Sister Joseph Powell; Fannie Fay Gates, who is now Mrs. C. W. Clark; Margaret Esther Gates, who is now the wife of Patriarch F. A. Smith; and their brother, Grant Gates. These baptisms were the great "pay off" for the trials we went through there.

A day or so after the baptismal service, I was back in Ravenwood. I had been up to the Kaufman home getting my things packed. After I had finished, I started to go down to the post office. On the way, I met a tall, gray-haired man—a doctor who lived in Ravenwood. He asked me where I was going. I told him down to the post office. He then said, "I will walk along with you." As yet it had not dawned upon me that he was an enemy. As we were walking down the main street, he said I should leave the town. I told him that I would not leave until I was ready. At that he took hold of my left ear and began to get a little rough. Many thoughts passed through my mind. I first thought I would just knock him down, a thing I could have done easily as I was a strong, young man. But something said to me, "If you do, what effect will it have on the church?" As I was trying to think the matter through (for this was a great humiliation), a Mr. Hiram came out of his store and said to the doctor, "You turn loose of that man." I thanked this storekeeper for his kindness and told him that he had saved me from hitting the doctor.

These little mistreatments and humiliations we have been called upon to endure do not begin to compare to the great sacrifice and humiliation the Blessed Master went through for us.

Sometime after I left that district, I heard that our good friend, Mr. Louis Kaufman, had lost his business at Ravenwood because he had befriended us. I felt bad about the matter and often wished I could talk to him. Years later, when holding services at Atchison, Kansas, I went down town to get a few things. I stepped into a store and the man that met me asked me what he could do for me. When I was about to tell him, I saw Mr. Kaufman in the rear of the building. I excused myself and went back to see him. After greeting him, I began to apologize for what took place at Ravenwood, telling him how sorry I was that he was a clerk in someone else's store. He laughed and said that he was the owner of that store. He also had four other stores like it, besides a garment factory in Kansas City. This fine Jewish man, who is the son of a Rabbi, was very much interested in our work.

The Physical Resurrection

SHORTLY AFTER closing my services at Ravenwood, I went to Guilford to hold another series there, this time in the church.

One Sunday morning, I preached on the subject, "The Physical Resurrection." When I had finished my sermon, the branch president arose and told the audience that what I had preached was not true. I felt terribly hurt and humiliated. I arose and announced that my series of services there was closed. As I was saying good-by to a number of the Saints and friends, another elder came to me and endorsed Brother Ivy's position; he even called in question the scriptural statement (Luke 24: 42, 43) that Jesus ate fish and honeycomb after his resurrection. He said, "If Jesus had eaten a piece of fish or beefsteak after his resurrection, anyone standing by could see it in his stomach." I remarked, "You were not standing by, but the apostles were."

After this experience, I decided to quit missionary work. On my way home I called on President Joseph Smith and asked him the following question, "Will the resurrection be physical, and will we eat and drink in the millennium?" His answer was "Yes," and then he called my attention to the sixty-fifth chapter of Isaiah.

I went on home, unpacked my books and clothing and set about to fix up my fruit and garden farm for operation. I had been home only about a month when I received a letter from Apostle J. W. Rushton, minister in charge. In his letter, he said, "When you get your visit out at home, I would like for you to return to your mission field."

Testing a Spiritual Experience

ONE NIGHT, while sleeping alone in the northeast room of our home near Warrensburg, I heard a voice saying, "Go back to Nodaway." I said to myself, "This is just my subconscious mind speaking." So I turned over and went back to sleep. Again, I heard the same voice saying, "Go back to Nodaway," and again I tried to dismiss the matter and went to sleep. Then, the same voice spoke the third time, repeating the same words, but the voice was more impressive than before. I was not made to feel that this was a spiritual manifestation, so I got up and knelt in prayer, asking God for further light on the matter. Then I went back to bed. Sometime later that night I had a dream or vision in which I saw a group of people standing by a large body of water. Then I saw twelve people step out from the crowd and stand by themselves, and I heard the same voice say, "If you will go back to Nodaway, you can baptize these twelve people."

I did not try to go to sleep again that night but thanked God for his divine direction; I also made a promise that I would return to Nodaway.

When I arose in the morning, I told my family about the matter, which explained my change of mind. When I left home, I went directly to the home of Brother and Sister R. K. Ross. I told them about this experience and asked them to be witnesses. I was determined to make a test of this whole matter.

While I was at the Ross home, I preached a few nights and on Sunday morning at Ross Grove Branch. I also preached on the streets at Mound City in the afternoons.

WHEN I CLOSED these services, Brother William Rowlett, whom I had baptized a few months before, asked me if I would go down to the Bigelow Valley. I said, "Yes," and we left one afternoon.

We reached our destination quite late in the evening. The Rowletts took me to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lundy who lived near a schoolhouse and arranged for me to stay with them for a few days until other arrangements could be made. Mr. Lundy was one of the school directors. In a few days, the Lundys became so interested in the services that they requested me to make their place my missionary home, but to visit about as I might wish.

After we started the services and had an opportunity to look the surroundings over, it seemed to me that I had seen this place sometime before, especially so when the people began to pack the schoolhouse. I felt quite sure I had seen several of these people in my dream or vision. In fact, when I began to baptize several, I spoke to a Mrs. Brown and asked her when she was going to be baptized. She said, "I am not going to be baptized." Then I replied, "Yes, but you will be." "Who knows the most about it, you or I?" she asked. I said, "I do."

Before closing this series of services, I baptized ten, including Mrs. Brown, her brother, Mr. Lundy, and his wife. Here I wish to say a few words about the conversion and baptism of Brother Lundy and his sister, Mrs. Brown.

As I have already said, I stayed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lundy. They were fine people and always expressed themselves as believing our message, so one day I asked Mr. Lundy why he put off being baptized. He said that he could not do so as there were some things that stood in his way. I did not press the question any further then. As he kept getting more favorable to our work, I again asked him why he put off being baptized. This time he told me. He said that there had been a misunderstanding between him and his sister over the division of some property. Here I let the matter rest.

Sometime later as I was walking to the schoolhouse to preach, I was pondering over in my mind what I should preach about when I felt prompted by the spirit that I should preach again on repentance. This I did, with greater liberty than I ever had before on that subject. When I was about through my sermon, I noticed that Mr. Lundy had gotten up out of his seat, which was in the rear of the building on the left side. In a few moments, I noticed that his sister who was seated on the right side of the house arose. I just stood still while they made their way to the stand where they met, embraced each other, and then asked for baptism. Nearly all the people in the house wept. This was a heart-warming experience that I shall never forget.

The Church and Public Relations

By FREDERICK LEE YOUNG

ONE OF THE BIGGEST problems the church has had to face since its organization in 1830 has been its relation to the people who have not been members.

Many of the unfortunate acts which were committed toward the early religious movements were due to a disregard by members of the nonmembers around them.

Today, nearly every large organization—whether religious or commercial—considers public relations so important that it spends millions of dollars annually to improve these relations.

As a church, we have a difficult public relations problem because the branches are so spread out over the world. Each community has different problems, making it difficult for the church to set up policies. This difficulty does have its bright side, however; it allows for greater participation of individual members in the work.

An industrious public relations director can be a great help to his branch or group in many ways. He can stimulate interest in the church work among the members of the congregation, help the priesthood in missionary work, and bring the church before the eyes of nonmembers.

PUBLIC RELATIONS is no longer the hocus-pocus that press-agentry was years ago. Today the public relations director has certain basic tools with which to work in accomplishing his goals. These include newspaper advertising, signs, news stories, personal contacts, and the telephone.

The first step in a public relations program is to have a conference with the leaders of your branch. Let them decide what goals the branch is working toward. Your purpose is not to decide what the goals are but how to reach them.

Some goals to reach for may be making your branch easier to locate by people in the city and by travelers passing through, letting more people know about the Sunday and special services, creating more interest among members in the church work, and beautifying the church.

As you progress in your program, you will find special problems arising that require the decision of the branch leaders, and you will undoubtedly want to change your plans from time to time.

The second step in your campaign will be a plan to work by. You should make an outline of the methods you expect to use and how you expect to use them. Let's take the first mentioned problem as an example.

What tools can you use in gaining this goal? The first is the telephone book. Your pastor's name, address, and telephone number may be put in the telephone directory under the church name in the church section for a small cost. If the church has a telephone, it can be added, too.

Another tool to be used is the directories at hotels, bus and railroad stations, and airports. These places generally maintain church directories for the convenience of their customers. If, after checking, you find that your branch is not listed on the directories, ask that it be placed there.

Where no such directories are kept, there may be bulletin boards on which cards may be posted. A good size for such a card is five by seven inches. Included on the card should be the church name, address, list of services, the pastor's name, address, and telephone number. Make the name of the church large enough that it can be read several feet away. The cards should be printed in an appropriate letter type which is in keeping with the dignity of the church. Most printers will assist you in choosing letter types and colors of ink. Check the bulletin boards periodically to see that the cards are still up and in good condition.

Signboards and other advertisements may be used so long as they are appropriate. Careful consideration must be given to every step in your plan to see that it is in keeping with that which you wish to accomplish.

THIS PLAN should increase your attendance, especially among the new people in your community. It also puts the name of your church before those who previously did not know there was such a church. If you keep a close check, you will find that some people who see the name and address of the church will come out of a desire to see what type of church you have.

The next step in your campaign is to find out how your plan is working. Public relations workers have been studying this problem for years. The only established way to find how the program is progressing is to make surveys. The way you make the survey will depend on the size of your branch.

In a small branch, it will be easy to notice any strangers at services. When you see them come into the church, ask them if any of your notices influenced their coming to church.

At a larger branch, a visitors' register with a column in which they might write "yes" or "no" as to whether your "tools" helped will suffice. Don't be discouraged if you can't see that your work produces big results. It may take years for the effects to come to light. You may never know how much good you have accomplished, but at least you are doing your part to make the church available to anyone who is interested in attending.

MUCH OF PUBLIC RELATIONS WORK is routine. It is doing this routine work with skill and promptness that brings success.

A routine job that pays off is the placing of weekly church notices in the local newspapers. Most papers carry weekly notices free. All that the editor asks is that they be brought in every week in time to be published. Look in your particular paper to see when they are published. The notice should be at the newspaper office the day before it goes to press.

Notices generally include a list of Sunday and weekday services, the time of each, the name of the speaker, and his subject. Also included should be the pastor's name, address, and telephone number, and the name and address of the church. They should be typewritten or plainly printed. Do not use longhand unless you have to; typing is clearer and prevents mistakes. It is not necessary to write the notice exactly as it will appear. As long as you have the essential information, the editor will have it rewritten to conform with the paper's style.

It may seem unnecessary to keep mentioning that the name of the church and the pastor should be included on notices and posters, but experience has shown that these are often omitted by people who have been doing the work for years.

Nearly everyone in your community and surrounding areas reads at least one newspaper every day. Show these people that you think so much of your church you want them to know about it by placing your weekly notices.

Paid newspaper advertising should be used once in a while. Editors are often more willing to co-operate with a public relations director if he adds to the newspaper's income occasionally. As it is, the churches have a chance to get more free advertising than any other organizations. When you have a special series of meetings, don't hesitate to place an ad in the local papers. The newspapers employ people who will help you draw up your ad at no expense to you. They have had experience. Let them help you.

NEWSTORIES are also effective. Check your papers to see what type of church news they carry, then watch your church activities for like events about which you can turn in stories. Some suggested events that are news-worthy are well-known speakers, an election of new officers, church building plans, and recreational activities. Get your stories to the paper in sufficient time to allow for their use. For example, if a picnic is scheduled for Friday evening, have the news story into the paper not later than Thursday noon. If it is a story of something that has already happened, take it or call it in to the paper as soon as possible after the event occurs. There is nothing so useless as an old news story. Don't try to write the story as the newspaper wants it; the editor will rewrite it anyway. Give him the information as you have it. Type to double space your information whenever possible.

Radio stations should be included in the same category as newspapers. However, listen to the station and see what type of church information is used before you ask any favors.

One thing that should not be overlooked in any church public relations campaign is the condition of the church building. Attendance to church services can be increased by keeping the building in good repair. There are people (both members and nonmembers) who feel that they cannot worship in a building that is in poor repair. This is an important part of public relations. If you have a neat, well-kept church, the community will think much better of you than if you have a run-down shack.

SOME BRANCHES and organizations publish newspapers as a means of creating more interest. This is a good idea if properly handled. The paper should be informative. It should be given away, not sold. Papers which are charged for are seldom bought by anyone except those who already have an interest in the group. They should be given to everyone who is willing to accept them. They should be printed if possible, but mimeographing can be used if care is taken in the preparation of the stencil.

Everything that is done in connection with the public relations program should have the same high quality that we consider our religion has.

Public relations is a broad field and the amount of good that can be accomplished is limited only by the ingenuity of the individual and the amount of co-operation received from the branch leaders and members.

Many good books have been written on public relations. You should study them carefully in order to find ways to improve your programs.

Echoes from the General Conference Gavel

scribed a semi-circular motion and then pointed straight ahead, indicating that Bishop Kelley had detoured around the road block and gone on in the way he had planned to go.

President W. W. Blair

W. W. Blair, long-time friend and counselor to President Joseph Smith, was a genial, friendly man with a warm handshake and a cheery smile. He was a confirmed optimist and each recurring conference was always the best. He wore a beard but had a smooth shaven upper lip. His mouth was straight lipped and firm. If you looked closely, you noticed he had very shrewd eyes. He should have been a good checker player—perhaps was. Certainly, he knew his way around in the councils and conferences of the church.

He and his wife Elizabeth were thoroughly committed to the Restored Gospel and made many sacrifices for it. I was told of the time when he was abroad in the mission field when the church was poor—for a time the family at home was reduced to a diet of corn bread and sorghum, and little Fred B. Blair, asked to say grace at the table, said fervently, "Thank God we have plenty of sorghum."

Brother Blair's missionary tours were profitable to the church. For example, quite some years before he was called to the Presidency, in 1864, to be exact, he prosecuted a successful missionary series in Syracuse, Ohio. Among those whom he converted and baptized were David and Martha Griffiths; at the same time he blessed their little son, Gomer T. Griffiths. Gomer was destined to carry the torch farther afield than Brother Blair ever dreamed of traveling.

There was one thing that puzzled me. In politics, Brother Joseph was an ardent and active Republican, dating back, I believe, to the time when he heard Abraham Lincoln debate Stephen A. Douglas. On the other hand, his counselor, Brother Blair, was an active and ardent Democrat. Both were democratic in their relation with the people. But in church policies, Joseph seemed to be the Democrat. Blair believed in, and as one of the Herald editors advocated a very strong central church government. Joseph spent little time arguing about his authority and prerogatives. His friends thought him too prone to surrender some of his Presidential rights.

Brother Blair's campaigning for a strong central church government aroused the opposition of some of the men of the Twelve who feared any sign of that which they termed "Brighamism." I always felt that Brother Joseph, who was more moderate and democratic, fell heir to some of this opposition leveled at his colleague. The esteemed apostle who, during a conference shook his finger at Brother Joseph and said, "We will not tolerate a Pope in this church," must have been thinking primarily about Brother Blair's arguments.

When I was a young man, not yet in the active ministry, looking on from the side lines, President Joseph Smith and President W. W. Blair were the outstanding figures in our General Conference gatherings.

President Joseph Smith

President Joseph Smith gathered about him strong men. It was the era of rugged individualism. In the first place, these men were independent thinkers and rugged individualists of strong convictions or they would not have espoused an unpopular cause. In the second place, they needed to be all of that to withstand the hammering the church took from press and pulpit.

To co-ordinate these strong and divergent personalities and get them to work together as individuals and groups and quorums, was a task that for years challenged the patience, charity, and wisdom of President Joseph Smith. In that work, he succeeded remarkably well, though there were always some carping critics, chronic faultfinders who could and did grieve his soul.

I have always thought that President Joseph Smith was the best balanced embodiment of the Christian graces that I have ever known. He was a man of great dignity, but also of humility. He had a strong sense of justice, always balanced by mercy. He was a man of deep emotions, but they were controlled and disciplined by a strong will and a wise mind.

The tribute paid him in the Kansas City Journal at the time of his death said:

He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen . . . embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation that Joseph Smith leaves to the world as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character.—Kansas City Journal, December 12, 1914.

The Gavel

AS A RULE, each member of the Presidency has had one or several gavels. If I may judge by my own experience, a man does not feel entirely at ease presiding with a gavel that belongs to some other person.

Southwestern Iowa District Conference

The Southwestern Iowa District Conference will be held Sunday, September 12. Two identical services are scheduled for 8:30 and 11 a.m., with Apostle D. T. Williams as speaker. There will be a devotional at 9:45, in which all are privileged to take part. A basket dinner is to be served in the lower auditorium at noon (bring your own lunch). A business session will be held at 2 p.m. for the election of district officers, approval of three priesthood calls, and matters concerning the reunion and youth camp.

AMOS GRAYBILL,
District President.

Books Wanted

D. O. Chesworth, 56 Alumni Street, Fall River, Massachusetts, needs copies of the following books: The Failures of Campbellism, E. E. Long; The Manuscript Found (published in 1908 at Lamoni); The Interpreter, G. T. Griffiths; The Christian Sabbath, Columbus Scott; From Palmyra to Independence, R. Etzenhouser; True Succession in Church Presidency, Heman C. Smith; and Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism Exposed, J. D. Stead. Please do not mail any book without confirmation on the price.

Isaac Carlile, Lamoni, Iowa, wishes to purchase a copy of Blind Fannie's Poetry and J. D. Stead's Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism Exposed.

O. E. Slayton, 1351 South Pearl, Independence, Missouri, wants to purchase a copy of Roth's Gospel Messenger.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Juanita Bowman, Route 4, Box 288, Jasper, Alabama, requests prayers that she might be relieved of pain in her hip and arm and also that she might be healed of goiter. She is an isolated Saint.

Mrs. Andrew A. Emmel, Route 1, Burt, Michigan, requests prayers for her husband's spiritual welfare and for her son, Lawrence, a patient at St. Mary's Hospital. She would also appreciate having any Saints who live near Hazel Park, Michigan, visit her daughter, Miss Cornell Emmel, at 1243 East George Street. She has been isolated from the church for some time.

WEDDINGS

Cimino-Sanderson

Beverly Sanderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lauren H. Sanderson of Colorado Springs, Colorado, and Joseph Cimino, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cimino, also of Colorado Springs, were married August 1 at the Reorganized Church in Colorado Springs. Elder J. D. Curtis performed the double-ring ceremony. The couple will make their home in Colorado Springs.

Astroski-Hanggi

Phyllis Hanggi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Hanggi of Sterling, Michigan, and Cyril Astroski, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Astroski, also of Sterling, were married August 14 in the Bentley, Michigan, Reorganized Church, Elder John Umphrey officiating. They are making their home near Sterling.

Bregoff-Budworth

Barbra-Belle Elise Budworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Budworth, and Robert M. Bregoff, son of Mrs. Sadie Bregoff, of San Francisco, California, were married August 15 at the home of the bride's parents. Elder Floyd Cline read the double-ring ceremony. They will make their home in San Francisco.

The gavel is a symbol or emblem of authority. With our people it may be regarded as representing authority from on high given to the member of the Presidency presiding by virtue of his call and ordination, and authority from the church that, by its vote, has designated the Presidency to preside over a given conference.

President Frederick M. Smith had a number of gavels, only two of which I remember seeing him use. One was made of orange wood and was brought from Jerusalem by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths as a present. This was the one he rather habitually used. The other one, made of ivory, he seemed to prize, but I do not recall that he used it very much in presiding.

President Joseph Smith had two gavels. I do not remember that he had any others. Both of them made front page news at General Conferences. One of them, perhaps the most historic, was made of lignum vitæ, a dark, hard, and heavy wood. It was sent to him by the Saints of Texas by the hands of D. H. Bays, who presented it to him during the fall conference of 1877 in Western Iowa. (See Saints' Herald, 1877, page 292.) Something of a ceremony attended the presentation.

This gavel, President Joseph Smith surrendered to the church at the Conference of 1909, on Wednesday, April 14. He requested that it be preserved in the archives of the church as a historic relic. He remarked that it had been in his possession from the time it was presented to him, and he had used it at each succeeding conference, missing only one spring conference and possibly two of the autumn sessions.

At the conference of 1910, a gavel was brought to the rostrum and, in an eloquent speech, Apostle U. W. Greene presented it to Joseph Smith for the Presidency. Brother Greene remarked that seven years previously the Prince and power of darkness for the third time sought to destroy the Kirtland Temple. A bolt of lightning tore a piece of walnut timber from the corner of the Temple.

From it this gavel had been fashioned. Brother Joseph used it a few times at General Conference and one time remarked that it still had in it "some of the thunder from the bolt that tore it from the Temple."

At one time, I owned three gavels. One was made of oak from one of the buildings erected by the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth. The other was of orange wood and mate to the one presented to President Frederick M. Smith by Apostle Griffiths. This one I habitually used.

The third gavel in my possession was the one from the Temple presented to the Presidency by Apostle U. W. Greene on behalf of some of the Saints of Kirtland in 1910. One day after the death of President Joseph Smith, President F. M. Smith, to my surprise, put the gavel in my hand, and said, "Elbert, you better take care of this." I was delighted to accept the stewardship and cherished that gavel and used it a few times. At the Conference of 1940, with the concurrence of President F. M. Smith, I surrendered it to President Israel A. Smith.

Thus, in imagination, to the echoes of that old-timel gavel, I adjourn this session of General Conference reminiscences.

Conflict in the Local Church Its Diagnosis and Treatment

Things That Can Be Done to Prevent Conflict

1. Be positive in criticism.

(a) Find actions in individuals that can be approved—encourage these. Positive recognition of such naturally brings satisfaction to an individual, and more time and effort will be given to their further improvement.

(b) When individual or group action merits commendation, make a public issue of it.

(c) Negative criticism should be used only as a last resort; then it should be sandwiched between two or more positive criticisms.

2. Be positive toward the gospel.

(a) Affirm the good that it is bringing.
(b) Lead people to live by love—point out the blessings following the good life.

This new teen-age book was published by a New York publisher. The author wrote "Dawn of Peace" for us several years ago, and as a church member she is anxious for her just published book to reach those persons in the church who are interested in a story of the early days in Kansas.

BUFFALO GOLD

Fifteen-year-old Anson Hull, with his father, mother, and sister homestead on the central Kansas plains. Against the grimness of living in a dugout, which further impairs his father's health, and fear of attack by Indians is Anson's love of the land. He discovers that to survive they must contend with Texas cattlemen, make friends with the Indians, hunt wild horses and buffalo, and most important of all find a crop which could survive Kansas droughts and which is suitable for Kansas land. Anson has many thrilling adventures finding security for his family. (Ages 12 to 16)

P. S.

When man would walk
 Among the trinkets of the bargain shelves
 And choose some bauble that can be no worth
 This day or any,
 God in love weeps for what he might have chosen.
 He loves man and lets him feel
 The pain of burns
 Won from fingering cheap merchandise.
 He loves him when he comes back Scarred—
 He rejoices when his earthchild says,
 "I'm sorry, God, and I know better now.
 What good things would you show to me?"
 But scars remain—
 The mark of man's learning
 And God's loving.

* CONFERENCE DAILY HERALD

Coverage: Those who want a complete story of the General Conference should take the Conference Daily Herald. It will contain all the reports, the minutes of the business sessions, accounts of classwork, summaries of as many sermons as can be obtained, and everything that will be of interest to church workers and faithful members. Space will not permit the weekly "Saint's Herald" to duplicate all these features. So far as possible, we shall give a summary of the main news, but the purpose of the two publications is quite distinct.

Auditorium officials and the management of the Herald Publishing House have promised to do everything possible to facilitate our heavy work of reporting the General Conference. This help is deeply appreciated, and very important to the success of our work.

May we ask all writers who can serve as reporters for the conference to read carefully the previous notices that have appeared in the "Herald" concerning our work on the Daily Herald. These will be repeated in summary form in the first issue of the Daily so that all workers will have full directions available.

* ROOMS FOR VISITORS

Visitors at the General Conference should be sure to arrange for their rooms before they come, if at all possible. Otherwise, they should be prepared to accept rooms at a distance from the Auditorium and do some bus traveling. The housing shortage has taken nearly all available space for resident working people, and special arrangements will be necessary to make room for Conference personnel. The Housing Committee finds that its first appeal for rooms is bringing a slow response.

* ACCIDENT PREVENTION

The car hunger in America is reflected in Independence, where there are more cars on the streets than ever before, and where the driver must be as careful as he would have to be in Kansas City or in Chicago. General Conferences seem to have a certain percentage of accidents to pedestrians and drivers, in spite of all the efforts that are made to warn people to be careful, and to protect them by providing extra police forces to direct traffic. The City of Independence has done much to help. The real need is for visitors to co-operate and be careful. Look where you are going—your bones are more fragile than a car or truck. Yield the right-of-way if necessary to protect yourself—better three minutes on the curb than three months in the hospital. Every Conference is saddened for some people by accidents and injuries that could have been avoided easily. Let's make this a safe Conference.

* SEE INDEPENDENCE

Many visitors come a long way to visit the General Conference, and often find it good to visit interesting spots in this area. The Independence Chamber of Commerce has literature about the city which is free to visitors; the office is located in the Memorial Building at Pleasant and Maple Streets. Be sure to see in Independence the following: President Truman's home on North Delaware Street; the Virginia Colonial style courthouse on the Square; the first courthouse of Jackson County (log construction) on Kansas Street just west of Main, back of the City Hall; Slover Park, north of U. S. 24; Noland Road parkway in the south part of the city; the Missouri River from the bluffs, by River Road; the new bridge on Liberty Road (U. S. 71 cut-off).

Approaches to Zion

Two Schools of Thought

FROM THE VERY BEGINNING of the Restoration, it was apparent that Joseph Smith, the prophet of the latter days, had something more important in mind than the building of another church. It was not only his purpose to make Christian individuals out of his converts—he wanted to gather them into groups where they could establish religious, cultural, social, and economic relationships that would result in a truly Christian community life.

For the realization of this ideal, the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants direct the lines of thought and effort along two channels, but toward a common end.

One of these channels of effort is the improvement of the human material out of which the proposed Zion is to be built. A great many appeals to the people have been made to persuade them to strive for higher moral and ethical standards, for a richer spiritual life, for a wider culture and education, for greater competence in the many fields of service to the church.

The other channel of effort is the creation of an organization which shall bring the people into social and economic relationships that will provide justice, equity, and efficiency in the common life.

Around these two channels of effort, two schools of thought have been developed. Those who believe in personal development quote, "For this is Zion, the pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 94:5. Those who believe in the institutional approach quote, "Organize yourselves" (85: 36; 101: 2; etc.). They aim at a single goal.

A Common Purpose

If the students of the problems of Zion of these two schools have not always understood each other, if they have sometimes viewed each other as opponents rather than as partners, we should not necessarily consider the separation of their efforts as inevitable. They can and must get together if Zion is ever to be achieved. No system can ever bring us a real Zion without a redeemed people. No amount of personal redemption can ever achieve Zion without a carefully-planned organization. The two schools need each other. They are a team working for a common purpose. Not everybody is able to serve in both departments of effort. Wherever we serve, we ought to appreciate and try to understand what the other group is doing. "We" cannot succeed without them. "They" cannot succeed without us. All must work together.

The Gathering

How frequently the command has come, "Gather yourselves together unto the land of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 100: 5. Some have wondered why, and some have ventured to question the wisdom of the Gathering.

Yet it must be clear to the thoughtful observer that if church members are to help each other, they must live near groups of other church people. Nomadic church members who scatter themselves to the four winds cannot expect to benefit very much, so far as organization is concerned, from church membership; their principal benefits are personal and spiritual. The economic and social benefits are practically lost. As our people develop the spirit and the institutions of Zion, as they establish the practical features and program of Christian community life, the benefits of living in church communities will be greater in comparison with isolation.

The Fallacy of Perfectionism

Human beings are constituted so that they sometimes expect perfection of others, but not of themselves. Perfection appears so easy to attain in a field where the observer does not know intimately the details and difficulties; in his own field, it seems impossible.

Look at the people in any congregation of the church. Consider the struggles they have within themselves, as well as with their environment. Observe how difficult it is to obtain self-control, as well as control of external conditions. If you know the individuals of the congregation well, try to imagine them as Zion-building material. Your sympathy and understanding of those people will be vastly increased. But you will also see that perfection is a long way off.

If we must expect perfection, let us expect it of ourselves and make generous allowances of time for the development of other people.

Measuring the Gains

Here at headquarters, in the center of the largest concentration of members the church has, we need to take some pains to keep our perspective in judging our progress. We live in most of the same houses that were here a quarter of a century ago; we traverse the same streets that resounded to the tread of pioneer ancestors. Outwardly, conditions do not change very rapidly. The most important gains are those of mind and spirit, and are therefore invisible to the casual observer. Yet it is like living in a different world to be here, as compared with living elsewhere. The strain and loneliness of living far from church members, surrounded by strangers, is like being an exile. Here, one has the feeling of being at home, and among his own people. There are other ways of describing the difference, but this will make it clear. Our ideal of Zion is a place where our church people can feel at home.

Gilbert J. Waller Memorial

At the 1946 General Conference, approval was given by the conference for an appropriation in the amount of $7,500 for the purchase of a site for a church at Honolulu to be known as "The Waller Memorial Church."

It has been called to the attention of the General Church authorities that there are undoubtedly many friends of the late Gilbert J. Waller residing in the districts along the west coast who might wish to make a contribution to this memorial. Those so desiring are invited to send their contributions to Bishop E. C. Burdick, 2445 41st Street, Sacramento, California, who will receipt for them and forward funds to the General Church to be set aside for this purpose.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent Utah District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Joseph Elkins, Route 2, Box 594-C, Sandy, Utah, as Bishop's Agent of the Utah District, succeeding Brother Harry C. Stoker, who is resigning from this office. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of September and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Elkins at the address given.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Stoker for the years of service that he has rendered in this office.

We have also appreciated the support given by the Saints to Brother Stoker during the period of his service and take this opportunity of commending Brother Elkins to the Saints for their favorable consideration and support.

The Auditorium

Quite a number of people have raised questions as to the present status of the Auditorium—why it is not being finished, and what will be involved in its completion. It is encouraging to note the interest of the church membership in regard to this headquarters building, and perhaps a word of explanation would be helpful.

The total amount appropriated to date by General Conferences of recent years is $275,000. When we got figures covering the cost of the contemplated work, it appeared that it would be questionable that we could complete one unit of the work with the amount of money available. We have been giving consideration to covering the dome with copper, doing the stone work on the pinnacle supporting the dome, and putting a roof on the flat deck. As we went into this, we encountered some architectural problems, for it was obvious that whatever work we did on the dome would necessarily have to be tied in with and conform to any revision of style to be considered for the rest of the building. Studies are being made of this at the present time, and additional studies will be made until such time as we have reasonable assurance that our plans have the approval of the church officers concerned.

The amount now invested in the Auditorium is $730,995.87, which in addition to the $275,000 appropriated will mean an investment of $1,005,995.87. It is difficult to estimate the costs that will be involved in its total completion, but we have learned from experience that completing specific units, such as the foyer and ramps leading to the general offices, or the radio department's offices and studios, or the acoustical treatment of the main auditorium, or the floors and seating, will run into a very large sum of money. Yet we think it possible to complete projects of this character on a pay-as-we-go basis, as circumstances permit.

We realize that there are some people throughout the church who become impatient, feeling that we should make more substantial progress. We are quite sure that none of these people can feel quite as deeply as do we, who of necessity spend so much time here in the building, meet so many people, and hear so many complaints—surely they cannot be more desirous of completing the building than we are. We continue in our position that it must be a part of the total program of the church, and additional appropriations will be recommended looking toward the completion of such units as may be within the range of our ability.

There are also those who feel that building conditions will never improve. It seems apparent that it will be a year or two before some of the shortages of building materials will be eliminated, but there are evidences in the economic picture which begin to point toward some stabilization of building costs and of labor.

In the meantime, those who are particularly anxious to see this building completed have available to them the opportunity to make contributions specifically to the Auditorium Fund. All such contributions will be used for the purpose for which given.

Undoubtedly we will be in a position to take some definite action relative to the Auditorium at the General Conference.

As a Young Negro Sees the Church

By Walter Irving Dean, Jr.

During the past year at Graceland, a Sunday morning unit of presentations, discussions, and worship was developed on "The Church and Race." Three groups were studied: the Polynesians, the American Indians, and the Negroes. For the last, Walter Dean of Detroit, Michigan, was invited to speak. He was asked to interpret the role of the Negro in our church. He is a young Latter Day Saint. This article is an abridgment of his presentation.

—Roy A. Cheville, Graceland College.

OUR CHURCH LITERATURE counsels us in many places that the Gospel of the Restoration is to go to all lands, to all peoples, to the farthest islands. In carrying out this command, the church should want to consider the "home market." This involves those who can be reached without spanning waters or going to far places. A sizable ten per cent of that home market is made up by the American Negro. To date, the church has dealt with this ten per cent only casually and with casual results. Now it is time to inquire how the church may earnestly and effectively attempt to convert dark Americans.

Latter Day Saints Can Declare Themselves

We are small—hardly 120,000—and we are widely scattered. We have not the time nor the money, nor the personnel to launch big social projects. But we can throw our influence with the groups who are speaking out for social justice. We can blend our voices with the chorus that sings of brotherhood and possibly now and then take a solo part. We shall need to remember that while we are Zion bound, we do not forget the Zion things for which we have a right to exist.

The places to take action and the places in which to speak out are where we have our greatest strength, and that is in Missouri. The state has over 250,000 Negroes. As we speak of Zion and the gathering, Negroes and students of society learn of Independence as the center place and of Missouri as the home of the church. They are not going to be impressed by a church that speaks one thing and does another. They will wonder if our people are sharing in race relations committees, dealing with housing, employment, education, health, recreation, etc. In both Kansas City and Saint Louis, committees of this nature are doing significant work.

The Roman Catholic Church has been doing some things worthy of study. Of course it has numbers and power and wealth. It has provided schools, colleges, hospitals, and social service, and it has offered a nonsegregated church. It has not just said, "Be ye warmed and filled," it has helped to provide things needful for the body. Our claims for the establishment of a Zion social order places even greater responsibility upon us.

One or Many?

The church faces making a choice between segregation and integration. The very nature of its message is involved. Will it become a chameleon and change colors every time it meets a new people? There is the story of a well-behaved chameleon that came to a Scotch plaid and tried to cross it. He would have to imitate six different yarn colors. He died at the crossroads. Will the church

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

The author is a graduate of Northwestern High School in Detroit and is now a part-time student at Wayne University. He has sixty hours of credit in a general literary curriculum in the Liberal Arts College. He is a journeyman machinist at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company and lives at 15459 Log Cabin, Detroit, Michigan.

change colors and form color churches? Can there not be one multi-colored church? Is there danger that the church will die at the crossroads on the color plaid of races?

In 1946, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ made this declaration:

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America hereby renounces the pattern of segregation in race relations as unnecessary and undesirable and a violation of the gospel of love and human brotherhood. Having taken this action, the Federal Council requests its constituent communions to do likewise. As proof of their sincerity in this renunciation, they will work for a non-segregated church and a nonsegregated society.

Many national gatherings of churches have moved in this direction. Sometimes it seems there has been more talk than action, but such stated policies tend to modify practices. Such matters move slowly.

Our church must think through its policy and speak its voice.

What Kind of Mission Quarters?

The kind of mission places we set up will have much to do with determining the kind of Negro we are going to attract. The type of convert we are aiming to enlist is not likely to be well-impressed by some humble quarters provided. Missions held in abandoned stores or makeshift rental quarters may label themselves as something to be avoided. Some of the ministers assigned to these missions may not be overgifted in their homiletical abilities. We need to remember these things as we see the growth of late of large Negro churches, handsomely furnished and supplied with well-trained clergymen. Much as we might like to attract and convert middle- and upper-class Negroes, our methods may be suited only to the lower, economic class.

In such a situation there is likely to be a spirit of superiority in white members of the church as they meet with Negro members. The social position of Latter Day Saints has bettered through recent years. The very cordial attitude of the white members may involve an unconscious sense of superiority. There may be the tendency to generalize about Negroes and to place them all in an inferior category. We need education that will enable us to see the differences within the Negro world and the socio-economic hierarchies operating there. There must be more than cordiality; there must be understanding that will remove the strains on the brotherhood capacities of Latter Day Saints. Our methods must permit us to speak to more than one class of Negroes.

Understanding Is Indispensable

The job before us calls for something more than sentimentality. Our church must become a school that sees social relationships understandingly. Those who have eliminated and erased hatreds have done so by seeing the reasons for their enmities and prejudices as senseless and groundless. This is being worked at here at Graceland, but the procedure must become more widespread. We want a people that loves knowingly. Such a subject calling for study is the Negro. Our church ought to lead the way in promoting this understanding. In our membership, the Negro is not to be an unknown quantity to be feared and disliked.

Some good work is being done in the educational field of our church. Some of our youth quarterlies have excellent lessons. Some articles in the Herald are launching out. Occasionally, however, materials appear which stimulate us to say, "Brother, your prejudices are showing."

There Is an Urgency

The church must be very discriminating in allotting its energies and in selecting the problems it tackles. But some questions cannot wait. In some areas, we cannot drift along. Yet, no problem can be separated from the total work of the church. The shaping up of a program of converting the Negro and caring for him will be done in the light of all the undertakings of the church. Our educational program, our youth program, our missions abroad program, our priesthood training program—all are related to this task of working with the Negroes about us.

There is an urgency for the church itself. We cannot forget the parable of the ninety and nine. It bids us remember the one that was outside the fold.

"There Ain't No Jesus"

BY MARIE GOSLINE

THERE IS A TRUE STORY about a little Mexican boy named Juan. The teacher in the rural school had taught the first graders the "Lord's Prayer." Just as the children finished repeating it on a certain morning, little Juan raised his hand. When the teacher spoke to him, he rose quietly from his seat and walked up the aisle. That was the first time Miss Jones really saw Juan. She noticed then the hungry look on his face. She saw his bare feet, his ragged, blue overalls. He stood in front of her and looked her squarely in the eye as he said, "Miss Jones, there ain't no Jesus!"

How could Miss Jones tell little Juan that the One who marks a sparrow's fall also cares for hungry little Mexican boys? How could she tell him—who probably had no bed in which to sleep—that there really was a Jesus?

In preaching the gospel to the world, there is a place for each one of us. The woman who serves a dinner to a hungry neighbor and the one who goes into a home to nurse where there is illness are both preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. We must prepare the way for the seventy by seeing that the physical wants of the little Juans are satisfied. One does not need to be a member of the seventy to be a missionary. He who serves in the meanest capacity sometimes serves the best. He who serves those nearest at hand is preaching the gospel to the world. He who serves where the need is greatest is a true missionary.

We "little" people have much to do—much that the Seventy cannot do. We have only a minor part to play in this great drama of preaching Christ to the world, but we have important lines to speak to make the play a success. We must prepare the way for the Seventy and serve after the visiting missionary is gone. Too many times we settle back, after baptism, harboring the thought that the race is won, and we can at last relax. But in this game we are playing, in this great work we have undertaken, there is no time for relaxation. After baptism, it's up to us to help "feed the lambs." We must cut down the number of little Juans. Remember, it isn't Juan's fault that he so firmly believes "there ain't no Jesus." It's yours. It's mine.

Forgetting the Past

By Evan A. Fry

SOMEWHERE I HAVE READ a story of two men who had partaken too freely of the flowing bowl and left their tippling place in the wee hours of the morning to row across a certain body of water to their homes. They entered the boat; each took up an oar and started rowing as vigorously as his condition would allow. As the dawn broke several hours later, they discovered that they had not moved an inch for all their hard rowing. They had forgotten to untie the rope that held the boat to the dock.

So we often fail to untie ourselves from the past, and then spend long, weary hours trying to progress and get ahead in the business of life without result or success. We cannot press forward while we are bound to the past. Paul had to forget those things which were behind before he could press toward the mark, or reach forth to the things which were before. Forgetting is sometimes more important than remembering, for it is the thing which enables memory to function at all. If we constantly had to have at our mental fingertips a vivid memory of each insignificant detail which has happened to us during a lifetime, there would be no room in consciousness for the serious and more important business of living. Because we forget a thousand and one inconsequential incidents and ideas and happenings every day, we have room and capacity to remember the things that need remembering. Forgetting the things that are behind, we reach forth to the things which are before. Leaving behind in forgetfulness the sinful and wicked past is more important than working toward righteousness, for all the work and struggle toward righteousness of which we are capable will not get us anywhere if we are tied securely to the evil of the past. We cannot carry evil with us as we press forward, or it will spoil all the righteousness which we achieve.

THERE ARE TWO TYPES of things we need to forget as we press forward. The first is our own mistakes, sins, follies, and shortcomings; the second is the mistakes, sins, follies, and shortcomings of others.

Many years ago I was thrown into association with a very interesting woman who was a negative example of the first kind of forgetting. She had once been a very sinful woman. Her sinful life culminated in a rather brutal and gory murder, for which she served a number of years in the penitentiary. Somehow, she had a change of heart there; she discovered religion, gave herself—I believe sincerely—to Christ, and when released on parole undertook evangelistic work. So far, so good—but, she never could forget her past life. She rehearsed her sins and crimes to innumerable congregations to prove what Christ could do for a sinful woman. So far as I could observe, her life during this period was above reproach; she was sincerely trying to bring others under the influence of the Christ she had learned to love. But many of her efforts were nullified, and her own personal growth stunted by her failure to forget the past and press forward. She was trying to press forward without cutting the ropes that held her to her past life.

Repentance always involves both forsaking and forgetting the evil past. If the blood of Christ cleanses us from all sin, we should forget that sin, cast it out of our thoughts and our memories—wipe the slate clean—and reach forth to the things that are before. A life which is composed of good but is hopelessly and inextricably mixed with the festering evil of the past has not really felt the cleansing or pardoning or redeeming power of Christ, who makes us new creatures by canceling out the past. Dwelling in memory on the sin of the past, regretting it, sorrowing for it, worrying about it, cannot undo what has been done and only wastes time which should be spent in pressing forward.

The second category of things we need to forget as we press forward consists of the things other people have done—perhaps to us. People who nurture and carefully cherish the memory of every snub, wrong, slight, insult, injury, and injustice are only harming and hindering themselves. When tied fast to such things of the past, they cannot reach forth to those things which are before or press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Furthermore, the constant retention of such things in memory generates physical poisons which give rise to manifold physical and psychical ills. Constant remembrance and fostering of old emotions of hate, anger, resentment, and ill will not only make forward progress impossible, but, if continued, will eventually kill both physically and spiritually the person who harbors and indulges them.

PERHAPS YOU ARE thinking that memory is not so fickle or unreliable that it can forget completely either the personal sins or the sins of others toward us. That is true. If a man has done you a great injury or wrong, you are not apt to forget it so completely that you carelessly put yourself in a position to have the injury repeated by one who has manifested no spirit of repentance. Neither is it psychically or physically healthful to bury your resentment deep in the subconscious where it will fester and grow to poison your whole mind. But there should be a banishing of such unpleasantness from the thoughts in a spirit of forgiveness, and a replacement of those memories with thoughts about more pleasant and profitable things. As Paul recommends in the fourth chapter of Philippians, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Few men have had more to forget than Paul. As one of the leading persecutors of the Christian Church, there was blood on his hands, and many crimes for which he felt himself guilty. You will find Paul making a few references to the greatness of his sin, but never does he descend to describing it in detail. The past was dead and forgotten—canceled, cleansed, blotted out—by the atonement of Christ. As a champion of the Christian Church, he himself was later persecuted and hated, both within and without the church; but there is never a trace of bitterness or resentment or brooding remembrance of injuries done him. He forgot the things which were past and gone, and which could not now be helped, and did one thing—pressed toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Apology

By Frances M. Mills

If a word I've said, or left unsaid,
Has grieved someone so fine;
If a frown has come in place of a smile,
Then I've hurt a friend of mine.

It is easier far to hurt than to heal;
Time is too short to spend
In meaningless grudges and jealousies
When they strike at the heart of a friend.

If a fancied slight to my foolish pride
Has come like a cloud o'er the day,
Let a smile, like the sun, shine through again,
Sweeping the cloud away.

Let's DO Something About the Liquor Evil

By Vida M. Fletcher

WHEN WE ARE faced with the need of actually doing something about some of the problems which plague our world today, the staggering size of them is enough to discourage many people. For that reason, a number of us are living with, or near, evils which could be controlled if we did something about them.

Take the liquor evil, for instance—there are many thousands of taverns in our land; practically every town has one or more. Despite the liquor ads and the loud mouths of some who indulge, there are millions of good people who do not drink and are alarmed at the situation, but who are doing nothing about it.

A few are doing all in their power to arouse public interest, but they feel that their efforts are futile because of lack of support. It is about as effective as for one person to try to lift a ton weight—it can't be done. But a dozen strong men can lift a ton and forty men could do it easily. So, if five million people each lift only an ounce, a quarter of a million tons could be lifted without anyone's feeling that he had contributed his help. Compare this in terms of public opinion—every person who knows that drink is a social evil and does nothing to combat it may be adding his "ounce" of influence to the toleration of this great destroyer. Dr. E. Stanley Jones asks the pertinent question, "As far as it depends on me and on circumstances which I control, what am I doing now; when steps am I taking to end things that are wrong?"

We Latter Day Saints owe the world a demonstration of what could be done, but what are we doing? A comparison with what other churches are doing might be in order. Many churches have a temperance lesson included in their church school studies every quarter and some very pertinent and timely teaching is being done. What are we doing? Is there a temperance lesson a year in our church school texts?

Several churches have temperance boards or committees, and some publish excellent material for educational use. Can we name a single publication that we have sponsored along temperance lines? Other pastors preach temperance sermons several times a year. How often do we hear them from our pulpits? Other churches teach children to sign a temperance pledge and teach them safeguards against the liquor habit. Have your children ever seen a temperance pledge?

Why are we so passive—so strangely silent? Are our youth exempt from the temptations of tobacco and liquor? Are they so divinely endowed that none are being led astray by these traffics in human souls and bodies? Why do we, as the church of the living God, ignore these problems?

AS suggested before, the size of the issue is so great that it is discouraging, but we cannot remain passive and accomplish the work God has given us to do. There are many good people, who, if they could put down an evil with one mighty effort, would gladly make that effort. But evils are not usually eradicated that way. As they were built up by many small wrongs done by many people, they must be overcome by many people lending their influence, whether it be an ounce or a ton, to the cause that is right. Those ounces of influence that seem so small can put the terror of God into the hearts of conspiring men who are forcing this evil upon us to the destruction of our youth.

Perhaps our influence is small, but let's make it count on the right side. Commend people who are trying to do something—maybe they do not do things the way they ought to be done; if that is the case, we can help do it better. Temperance workers hear a great deal of criticism about the way they go at the evil—they would be glad if more of those who feel capable of criticising would lend their superior talents to the good cause. But the main thing is—do something! If we can't do a lot, let's do a little. The least we can do is to keep ourselves free of those evil indulgences which defile the body and destroy the soul. Since temperance is one of the tenets of the Christian faith, no Saint's home should be contaminated by liquor or tobacco.

Also we can lend our influence by voicing our opposition to these evils. In this election year, we should make our votes count for human welfare rather than political expediency. Too long voters have put politics ahead of morals at the ballot box. As Christians and as Saints, we should make our influence felt on the side of temperance.

On Being Unequally Yoked

By CHARLES A. DAVIES

YOUNG PEOPLE SEEKING COUNSEL often ask as to the advisability of marriage to those not of our faith, and particularly to those of the Roman Catholic Church. This is not a matter that can be passed over lightly, nor can it be dealt with on grounds of prejudice. The answer to this question should, of course, be given long before it is asked in a specific case where an attachment has already been formed. My experience has been that where deep attachment has been allowed to take place, the heart wins, at least at the time, and thus the marriage takes place with all the problems in its train to be figured out afterwards. The time to straighten out this problem is before the age of marital decision is reached; and the responsibility rests with the family of each young person. The mind must guide the heart as it surveys the matrimonial field for a likely life-mate.

If parents have analyzed the question dispassionately and made the matter one of open discussion in the family circle, at the table, in family devotionals, sufficient understanding of the difficulties involved in unequal partnerships will have been given to enable the young person to make his own decision with all the facts before him. What more can a parent do to fulfill this responsibility than to see that the facts are before the chooser? Parents in these days do not choose marriage partners for their children. Christian marriage is based, firstly, upon the pure love of one person for another in contrast to some non-Christian philosophies that love is consequent upon marriage, as, for instance, in countries of the East.

IN REGARD TO the Christian point of view, the parental responsibility is not abrogated, but remains for the father and mother to teach such principles that will enable young people to choose wisely. This does not apply solely to religion but to all phases of compatibility. Therefore, I would widen the consideration of the question asked so that it may be answered in the wider vision of the requirements of marriage. From pastoral and counseling experience, I know that there are many reasons for marital disaster other than religious differences. The modern frankness in discussing the whole question of marriage choice among young people should be maintained under healthy, expert guidance. Of the important considerations, three stand out boldly: (1) ignorance of the physical and psychological aspects, (2) infatuation without calm consideration of temperament and interests, and (3) vital differences in religion.

I have said that open discussion is better than clouded ignorance. This I believe is vital in the case of physical and psychological ignorance, but I do not mean that type of discussion which has become pathological in its trend—by which satisfaction is obtained for minds that have become crooked in their attitudes. There is a stimulus in this age that is causing reaction with an undue interest on this level. Parental counsel is the ideal avenue for this understanding essential to a happy choice. Failing this, and it is only too evident that a high percentage of parents do fall down in this responsibility, wise guidance must be had from some other source of good training—ministerial or medical. Much unequal yoking is observed on the level of this first point of importance, and it can be guarded against only in so far as children and young people are given a normal psychological outlook. This is a primary duty of the parents and the church; correct presentation will solve many of the problems associated with distortion and ignorance so fatal to happy marriage.

Parents are charged also with ensuring that growing young people recognize the fact that what may be classed as normal temperaments vary within that normality to such a degree that two normal people may be incompatible. This is often a cause for friction between young people and their parents when parents indicate their feelings concerning a developing incompatible partnership. This problem, too, is best met by the maintenance of open forum in family discussion from childhood up. Love at first sight is like hurling a stone with one's eyes shut after having been turned round three times. It may hit a target, but not necessarily the right target. Parents need to be aware of the demon of prejudice in this matter of temperament, but where such matters have been kept open before the family as a whole, this danger is lessened. Modern youngsters, however, have been freed from the cramping circumstances that ruled in some places in the past and their intelligent reaction is a factor not to be disregarded.

THE THIRD FACTOR which causes a high percentage of fatalities in the unequal marriage partnership is the one which stimulated this article—the religious question. Latter Day Saints are surely faced with a problem here. It has no simple solution. On the one hand we have the statement from Doctrine and Covenants, admonishing all members that they should not be unequally yoked with unbelievers, and on the other hand within a church community such as ours there is not sufficient choice always to permit a selection of a partner with other aspects of the union compatible. This second aspect can best be faced by our seeking social contact within the church fellowship farther from the circumference of our local church life; in this, the reunions and conferences play no mean part in the widening range of compatible choices. The fact is emphasized, however, that Latter Day Saints who are wholeheartedly converted to the aims and ideals of our movement face a terrific handicap in pursuit of their life's ideals if a partner is unable to join in working at tasks toward that goal. The ideal is that both should be able to walk in the same path of faith. There is no more important goal for a Latter Day Saint than to rear a family in the constructive Zionie task of the church. How can that be done if there are widely divergent views held by the parents such as exist when one is a Roman Catholic and the other a Latter Day Saint? Here we have two churches that run parallel in their claim to divine authority. We, as a church, believe that there was an apostasy and that with it divine authority was withdrawn from the supplanting organization and all the denominations that were derived therefrom. Of the two sections, the Roman Catholics have maintained a vigor which might be emulated by our own adherents. The anemia that has attached to the protesting groups may make it possible for partners from their section of church life to be more open to consideration of the Restored Gospel. All things being equal in the first two points of compatibility emphasized in this article, it would appear that Protestant attachments are less likely to lead to disaster than attachments to one of the mother church, but very definite, earnest, and prayerful consideration of both parties is essential. Certainly partnership with a Roman Catholic means a division in the home on the vital question of religion. Our beliefs are positive. The two claims are divergent. What of the religious outlook of the children?

WHEN CHILDREN COME, the problem is acute. Two persons may be compatible in temperament and may conceivably hold divergent views on authoritative religion, but a child cannot be trained in two divergent paths without spiritual and psychological damage of the first magnitude. The Roman Church knows this and logically makes no secret of its opinions, believing, as it does, that the spiritual life of the future family is at stake—and is it not?

It is necessary to give some consideration to the definition of the word unbelievers used in the admonition to the church in these days. It has a much wider application than to limit it to description of those Christians who do not have the understanding of the gospel as we have revealed to us by the mercy of God. The large majority of people in this age are neither of the Roman Catholic nor other derived groups. They are among that body that can best be described as unbelievers. They do not accept God and Christ in any particular way and very often in no way at all. These people are the most needy and are fertile ground for the sowing of our message today. However, if alliance in marriage is had with one from this group, how can the ideals of family responsibility be worked out in the spirit of the latter day work? To contract for a lifelong partnership with one who has no basic faith in God and Jesus Christ is to plan for a life of disharmony or to agree to sink one's vital convictions as to the hope and salvation of the world. What could be done for children of such a marriage?

THESSE ARE THE CONSIDERATIONS I would place before the young people of our church. Compatibility is essential in all matters of import. Physically, psychologically, and spiritually there must be common ground. To what extent you demand, this will be the deciding factor in your choice. If properly trained by parents from childhood, you will be in a position to make a choice with all the factors in mind. You will be able to face the facts, which only each person in a specific case knows, along with these vital factors which I have mentioned. You will be able to make the choice by which your mutual partnership, and those whom you will most likely bring into the world, shall live.

The church leaves the matter with you. We do not forbid you to make your own choice on pain of excommunication, but we ask you to consider the purposes of the kingdom as a priority without question in your vital deliberations.

The Worth of Advertising

A few days ago a middle-aged lady called the church office asking whether or not we had a Bible with Joseph Smith's name in it. She had just been to the Public Library where she saw a copy of the Inspired Version and, after reading the seventh chapter of Genesis, was so inspired that she wanted to read the rest of the Bible.

This lady came into the office, and the office secretary arranged for an interview that the book might be more fully explained to her. She is a nonmember with no church connection whatsoever. She happened to be in the home of a church member at one time and, seeing the Book of Mormon, perused its pages and finally read it. She is completely thrilled with the Book of Mormon and found our office through our ad in the Detroit News. She is one of several who attend a Bible class with some special teacher.

We ought always to have our Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants lying in an appropriate place in our home so that visitors might be able to see and to peruse their pages if they desire.

Through the Dark Glass

THROUGHOUT THE CHURCH, preparations are being made for General Conference. Here in the center place, homes are being scrubbed and polished with extra care so that cleanliness may shine through the open doors of welcome to conference visitors. In other places, plans are being made for vacations to be taken during early October, arrangements are being made for the running of farms and ranches, housewives are making advance schedules, and small children are exacting promises from their playmates to care for the pets left alone at home.

On every hand there is the excitement of material preparation. Are the spiritual preparations we are making as great? We have within us potentialities of spiritual power, ready for expression as we develop in the knowledge and understanding of our Father's laws. Although attainment of knowledge requires consistent study periods, our prayers now may be for understanding—understanding of spiritual development itself, understanding of our church doctrines and procedures, understanding of each other!

The promise given us in Matthew 18: 20, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," should ring joyously in our hearts. Our church was organized in this belief. How wonderful an experience, how wonderful a spirit when thousands are gathered together in his name! The Lord will surely dwell in the midst of his Saints in this condition, unifying, blessing, strengthening, and endowing them. A short time ago the Herald carried this notation: "President Smith says, 'We expect the Conference to be a momentous one.'" Are we preparing individually for a momentous conference? What are we putting into the preparation for it? Are we, as members of the body of Christ, spiritually adequate to follow the direction of

By FRANCES HARTMAN

Christ through his prophet? Have we knelt in humility and earnestness of heart to ask the Father's blessing not only upon the gathering of the Saints but upon the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, the various quorums, counselors, and authorities upon whom rests much responsibility?

IN THE WRITINGS of Paul, we are told that "now we see as through a glass darkly," but we know that through the transforming power of God we may see the light of truth before us if we have prepared for such revelation.

The plan of Zion is a marvelous one. With the world in darkness and transgression, can we afford to call it only a plan? Can we be content to think and talk in terms of the future? Those who have caught a glimpse of the wondrous glory of an active, workable Zion can no longer be satisfied in looking through a dark glass. Their hearts and souls stretch out toward their goal, toward the ultimate Zion. They know that it is only through this goal that the sickened world can regain hope for a healthful recovery from the conditions in which it finds itself. There is no peace on the earth except that established by the Prince of Peace; there is no faith but that planted in human hearts by the Creator; there is no plan that can succeed for the abundant life of which men dream separate from the one called "Zion the beautiful."

If we were to seek spiritual unfoldment for ourselves, we would fast and pray to be purified of our dross so that the holy light might be reflected through us. How much graver is our responsibility in seeking spiritual unfoldment for the General Church. Each member attending conference this year will be representing the peoples of Europe and the peoples of the islands of the sea as well as themselves. Yes, even thrice fold is their responsibility, for they shall represent those other nations of the world which have not yet heard the gospel in its fullness. For these reasons, then, it behooves the Saints to be discontent with the dark glass and to seek the revelation of light. Again in the words of Paul:

The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light.

Forward

God bless New Hampshire, from her granite peaks
Once more the voice of Stark and Langdon speaks:

Who is it now despairs? Oh, faint of heart

Take courage from these northern mountains,
And gather strength to bear a nobler part.

The angel of God's blessing encamps
With freedom on the field of fight;
Still to his banner, day by day are pressing
Unlooked for allies, striking for the right.

Courage then, brave hearts, be firm—be true,
The noble deeds our father did
Can we not also do?

The day is breaking in the East
Of which the prophets told,
And brightens up the Sky of Time,
The Christian Age of Gold.
Battle blade to clerkly pen;
Earth's monarchs are her peoples,
And her serfs stand up as men.

So shall the sturdy pioneer
Go joyful on his way,
To wed Penobscot's waters
With San Francisco Bay;
To make the rugged places smooth
And sow the vales with grain;
And bear with Liberty and Law
The Bible in his train.
The mighty West shall bless the East,
And sea shall answer sea,
And mountain unto mountain call,
"Praise God, for we are free!"

Elements of Spiritual Power—Part 2

By SEVENTY GEORGE A. NJEIM

Substance of a lecture presented at the Convention of Twelve and Seventy, Kansas City, Missouri, January 3 to 9, 1948.

“Behold”

IN APPROACHING the second half of my assignment, I have chosen behold as another source of spiritual strength and have divided this into two main divisions—beholding God in the fulfillment of his word, and beholding him in the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper.

Much of our spiritual weakness can be attributed to our inability to behold the acts of God and to focus our sight on him sufficiently to become like him. Undoubtedly this condition is due to the marvelous things man has accomplished during the last one hundred years, which seem to catch the eye of even the most stalwart of us. Man has bridged the valleys, tunneled the mountains, harnessed the waters, invaded the depth of the oceans, climbed into the stratosphere, used the air waves for communication, conquered stubborn diseases, illuminated the darkness, and is now tampering successfully with the very elements. This conquest by man of the physical creation has displayed his acts in a very prominent position and obscured God and his acts so that we have a difficult task in beholding him. It appears we have forgotten the fact that Isaiah saw the displacement of God by man, and even his denial, and recorded it to us in the twenty-ninth chapter of his book. He branded the act as the “turning of things upside down” and likened it to “a potter’s clay”—devoid of any durability. The laboratory is the new edifice of worship, while the temple of God has become deserted.

Truly, man’s ingenuity has wrought much during the last hundred and fifty years, but what benefit is he deriving from it? His success made it possible for empires to be established in the far corners of the globe; his industry and commerce made it possible for cities to be erected and life to come up from a primitive state to the present state of refinement and comfort. But as we look at it today, we find that all this marvelous work of man is in a state of disintegration. In our own lifetime we have witnessed the rising of empires only to see their dissolution on the morrow. The cities of Europe, which were the pride of our civilization, are now half in ruin. Much industry was bombed out of existence, and more than half of the inhabitants of this earth are living in constant fear and want. It is hardly credible that in a century and half we have been able to see the rise of the greatest of civilizations and also to witness their downfall. History has given us no such parallel.

THE PEOPLE of the world see these things and take them, as the saying goes, “in stride”; but to a Latter Day Saint it should mean more. We should behold God behind these acts. We should behold the one who said, while in Palestine, “Without me, ye can do nothing.” We should behold the one who inspired a young man on this continent over a hundred years ago to tell the world, “Prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is revealed, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of earth.” We should also behold his justice in so doing. It is done because men care not to “hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles”; it is done because “they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken the everlasting covenant”; it is done because they do not “seek the Lord to establish his righteousness,” and finally, it is done because “every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god.” We should behold Moroni descending from the celestial world, announcing to a world wrapped in sin and misery the destruction by the sword, famine, and pestilence if they continue to glorify the ego. We should behold the veracity of his statement in Nagasaki and Hiroshima; we should behold it in the human want represented in the Marshall Plan and the Friendship Train; we should behold it in the flu epidemic and in the concentration camp. But to behold the angel and his message from this angle only is to behold half of the picture. This is only the word of warning. We should behold him revealing to men a record which would convince them that Jesus is the Christ if they would only believe. If fear invaded our soul at his first utterances, we should listen to him announcing the joyful news, “But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings.” If the present leadership in the world is disappointing to us—and who has not been disappointed in it?—let us behold him and hear him declare, “The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple.” This is the message of grace and hope.

AS WE BEHOLD the first side of this picture, we see a matchless missionary weapon, the equal of which the world can never produce. In the hands of a people who are able to behold the other side of it, this weapon becomes most effective because it inspires with strength and courage. To behold the “rending of the kingdoms” is not enough. We must behold the One that also said,

"Ye can not see it now, [in 1832] yet a little while and ye shall see it, and know that I am, and that I will come and reign with my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 24.

To behold God and his acts from this angle only is to behold him intellectually. All of us are amazed at the exhibition of divine power on exactly the prophetic lines given to us by latter day prophets, but we are baffled. We see the desolation of abomination, but we are saddened. We are just beginning to notice that our allegiance to things ephemeral is much greater than to things eternal. With the people of the earth, we are standing afar off and bemoaning the destruction of Babylon. In reality, I am amazed at myself as I notice how intellectually and leisurely I have been beholding God. I preach the rending of man-made kingdoms and the establishment of the kingdom of God. That, however, was all right when it was the German, the French, the Italian, and the Turkish kingdoms. The story has considerably changed as I now see the sword of divine justice hanging over the Arab kingdoms. I dare say that my brethren of the British Empire know what I am talking about as they see the further disintegration of that mighty realm. We think we are beholding Christ only, but it appears that we are beholding Caesar also. We think that our allegiance is to God only, but now we discover that mammon has a claim on it as well. I notice that even my American brethren have defective vision. They seem to stagger at the thought of the prospect that this mighty republic of ours might share the fate of previous American powers mentioned in the Book of Mormon. This intellectual vision by the Saints of the acts of God is responsible, I dare say, for our present condition as a church. To behold God intellectually is not enough; we must behold him in the sacrament of his supper.

THE SACRAMENT OF THE LORD'S SUPPER, like the rest of his teachings, has been thrown into the theological butcher shop and cut beyond recognition. Some have become cannibals and think that they are actually eating the body of the Lord when they partake of the emblems. Some think that Christ never instituted such a sacrament but that Paul introduced it into the Christian Church, taking it from pagan mysteries. Others think it to be for remembrance and passively receive it. And there are those who look at it as the New Passover, and some yet as the feast of the Agab. All these contradictory views are supported by equally contradictory scriptural statements.

To us, however, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper has a unique meaning. If that meaning is made obscure in the New Testament, it certainly is not the case with the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon. In the former, it is stated we should go to the house of the Lord and offer our sacraments so that we "may be kept more fully unspotted from the world."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2. I can see no meaning that is nobler and holier than this. It is here the intellectual vision is combined with the spiritual and together focus on the only and true source of our spiritual power.

Here the question may be raised as to how the Communion may "keep us more fully unspotted from the world." The answer is simple. Our garments are made white in the waters of baptism. That is what we as special witnesses for Christ preach. But in baptism, we do more than have our sins washed away; in baptism we make a covenant with God—he to wash our sins, and we to become perfect; he to bless us, and we to become kingdom-builders. How many of us can truthfully say that we have kept the terms of that covenant? Our white garments have become spotted, and the once perfect life has imperfection appearing in it. The Lord knew that such would be our lot and, for that reason, left us this sacrament. As the ancient Israelites were physically stricken by the venomous reptiles and healed when they beheld the brazen serpent, so do we regain our spiritual strength as we behold the broken body.

THE SACRAMENT OF THE LORD'S SUPPER was timed to purposely come at the close of Christ's ministry on earth. It is the summation of his earthly activity and the conclusion of his sermon of life. It is the chest containing the treasure; when we open it, we behold its beauty. In III Nephi 8: 55, he says, "Behold, I am the light which ye shall hold up, that which ye have seen me do." In the same chapter, verse 49, he tells us that he is our example. It is by remembering the example he set for us in isolated deeds that we remember him. This remembrance is active, not passive. It is intended that the memory of his deeds becomes the yardstick for our actions. For three years, he taught his disciples the way of the abundant life. Now he makes the summary of that life. This sacrament occupied little of his time, but that little is so designed to set a chain reaction in our mentality and set us on fire with righteousness. The question why this man was killed brings us to an inescapable review of his activities and purposes. That is why he said, "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you." This passover was different—it contained the final object lesson. Furthermore, the disciples were ready to be on their own.

When we behold the Communion in that way—and there is no other way for us beside this—we immediately become challenged by two contrasting things. First, "The earnest expectation of the creature for the manifestation of sons of God," and second, the way the Son of man met that expectation. Creation everywhere is groaning under the burden of sin and is exhausted crying for the sons of God—for you and for me. Only One has met the challenge, but the world is in deep doubt about him. Why don't we answer that cry? We are weak; we are crushed;

there is no spiritual strength in us. We have a wishbone, but no will to act. Whenever we think we are ready to act, we do not seem to know how. Let us behold the emblems. In them, we find the remedy for our spiritual ills. We have raised this sacrament to a place of beauty. Let us now raise it to a place of efficacy. Where are the spotted garments that can't be made more fully white? Once we see the purposeful life of that man, we become constrained. We can meet the challenge and manifest ourselves only through Christ who strengthens us.

WHAT, FOR INSTANCE, are the showers that dare spot our garments? The accumulation of earthly goods? They are needed. Christ wanted only his daily bread. He could have accumulated, but there would have been no broken body and manifestation of the Son of God—there could have been no Christian civilization. The love of home and family life? Had he preferred that, there would have been no broken body, and there would have been no joy so far as you and I are concerned. This is the shower that dares spot my garments. I weaken before it and complain, and finally resolve to quit the whole unthankful task as homesickness increases, but I am doing it yet. The body I see on the first Sunday of the month does not permit me to quit. It is a missionary's body. And, furthermore, it was broken because it did not shrink from its responsibility. When the ugly and wild sounds of this jungle which we call civilization frighten me, I dare not turn back. On the first Sunday of the month—and I wish that it could be on every Sunday—I see that body. He was broken when he knew that real danger awaited him in Jerusalem, yet he set his face toward it. When I know that my brother has definitely wronged me, I become angry, yet I dare not bring a "railing accusation" against him. I remember that body. When on the cross, Christ prayed for God to forgive his enemies. I went through a shower of spots this last Sunday as I was on my way to Second Church in Independence to tell the people about the significance of the Lord's Supper, but thank the Lord, I was kept more fully unspotted. I read in the Kansas City Star about the shipment of T.N.T. that was discovered in New York and was intended for the murder of my people, and my bosom was full of hate. With that hate still growing, I sat beholding the emblems. Had my message been given in that mood, it would have been utter mockery, but thank God, it wasn't. As I beheld that body, I beheld life in it. I beheld it moving and speaking to me. These are the words that I heard as I listened: "As I, though geneologically descended from the Jews, was not of them spiritually, they killed me. So will thy people do to you. You only have one family, and that is the family of God; you only have one language, the language of the Spirit." I may have been crazy, my friends, but I was kept more fully unspotted. I beheld, I listened.

THE REASON this Communion has not been a sacrament for us is due perhaps to the misunderstanding of a word. This word is "renewal." To the great majority it has come to mean that we can break the covenant of baptism at will, and at will make it once more as we sit and partake of the emblems. Woe unto him that looks at the Communion of the Lord in that light. He shall have no life in him. By this word, we mean the bracing up of the covenant, not the breaking of it; we mean the regaining of strength, not the loss of it; we mean the infusion of a new life, not extinction of it. I wish that someone of us would find a new word which would fully cover that meaning and bring the Saints out of their delusion. To some, the meaning of this holy sacrament has so degenerated that they dare use it to display their feelings. Somebody was wronged by someone else, or he thinks he was, then he comes soliciting our sympathy by his conspicuous abstinence. The one that would do that has become so defective in vision that he can't behold Christ breaking these emblems and receiving of them in the presence of Judas when he knew that disciple would soon betray him.

What we need as we serve these emblems is the prophetic vision that is rightly promised us when we give the sacramental message. We should have that deep insight into and the exposition of our sinful nature in such a manner that each may become fully aware of his shortcoming and hateful deeds. Then we should have that prophetic ability to see and expose the beauty, the harmony, and the majesty of the life of this Christ so the contrast between the two becomes great. It is then, as we behold Christ, that we cover our eyes with shame and say like Peter of old, "Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man." —Luke 5: 8.

Beholding the acts of God being displayed in the theater of human life, beholding our imperfection contrasted against His perfection, what self could continue to be wrapped in its egotism or worship at the shrine of its own accomplishment? Only in beholding him can we become spiritually strong. He is exhibited through his acts and through the emblems of a body that was broken in the discharge of its duty toward God and in service to humanity. In that way, he becomes our example.

Experiences in Church Work

Selections from the Autobiography of J. W. A. BAILEY

AFTER HAVING PREACHED there for about six weeks or longer and baptizing ten, I thought it would be wise to close the series of services. After that I went home for a while. Later I returned to the district to attend a conference which was held at Bedison. Elders R. K. Ross, Warren E. Peak, Ed. Fannon, and others were there.

During the conference I told Elder Ross that I expected to go home to stay until after General Conference. He then said, "You have not finished your work until you have baptized twelve in a large body of water." I tried to claim that the two I had baptized at Ross Grove would make up the twelve, but he held out, and rightly so, that the twelve were to be baptized after I had received the manifestation and that at the same place.

To be honest about the matter, I did not see how this could be, as it was February and quite cold.

At the close of the conference, Brother Peak to my surprise, asked me if I knew of any place where he and I might go together and hold a few services. I told him that the only place I knew of, just then, would be the schoolhouse near Fortescue. We went there and put out an announcement of our services. At first we had fine attendance, but it soon turned very cold and began to snow, so we agreed to close the next night or so.

As the weather grew colder, I announced that the next night would be our last service for the time. At the close of that evening service, Brother Lundy's daughter came forward and asked for baptism, which I announced would be at ten o'clock the next day at the customary place—the elbow of the Missouri River.

When Brother Peak and I went to our room that night, I said to him, "I believe you should have the honor of performing this baptism." To be honest, I wanted to get out of this cold job, but I could not prevail on Brother Peak to do so. Up to this time the "dream of baptizing twelve" had slipped my mind, but on retiring for the night the "dream" came to mind. Then I said to myself, "If there could have been one more, then the dream would be literally fulfilled."

The next morning, to my surprise, when we reached the bank of the river, there stood another lady dressed in white. She, too, asked for baptism. This completed the manifestation. May I say God is surely in his work.

President Joseph Smith's Testimony

IN THE FALL of 1913, when passing through Independence en route to my field in the Nodaway District, I met President Joseph Smith in front of the Jackson County Bank. I went up to him and said, "Good morning, Brother Joseph." He said, "Good morning, and who are you?" I said, "Bailey of Warrensburg." He then said, "Oh, yes, Brother Bailey, I know you. Where are you going?" I said to him, "I am going to the Nodaway District." Then he said to me, "Before you go, I want to tell you something—tell it to you from my own lips. My father did lay his hands on me and set me apart to be his successor," etc. I thanked him for that personal information, and went on to the Nodaway District to the home of R. K. Ross. While there, I had a dream in which I saw President Joseph Smith standing on a rostrum. Then I saw a personage whom I understood to be Joseph the Seer who was descending from the heavens; he lifted his son Joseph up, and they both disappeared. Then I saw President F. M. Smith step upon the rostrum where his father stood.

A short time later, I met President F. M. Smith and told him about this experience. I also said to him, "Your father is going to leave us in the near future."

Little did I know at the time I had the last two mentioned experiences that I would ever be sent to Utah on a mission and would have to deal with the vital differences between the two churches.

When I was meeting the Mormons, I greatly appreciated what Brother Joseph had told me—that his father had set him apart to be his successor. This coming from such a man of God left no room for doubt.

The dream or vision I had of the "Three Presidents" gave added confirmation to my faith concerning lineal succession of the presidency, which is one of the chief points of difference between the two churches.

President Israel A. Smith

While writing concerning the succession of the presidency, I wish to say a few words about President Israel

A. Smith. As early as 1910, I was impressed that Israel would some day be in the presidency. Years later when I became better acquainted with Brother Israel, I told him several times that he would be the successor to his brother, President F. M. Smith. About six weeks before Israel was chosen to be a counselor in the presidency, I called on him at his office in the Battery Building to have a visit with him before I returned to Salt Lake City. Brother Israel seemed to be somewhat blue. After talking a few minutes, I said to him, "Brother Israel, the next time I see you, you will be in the Presidency." Israel, being an unassuming man, said something like this, "I am not aspiring to any office." He seemed to be doubtful of what I said. After I left his office, I wished I had not made the statement. However, there were a number of things in my mind that led me to say what I did. Shortly after I had returned to Salt Lake City, I received a telegram from Israel, saying that he had been called into the presidency. When I received this telegram, I offered a prayer of thanks to our Heavenly Father.

Kansas

At the General Conference of 1914, I received my first appointment to the Northeastern Kansas District. I first went to Fanning, where the district officers lived.

I held a short series of services there. Then, by the request of the district president, I went to Topeka. After consulting with the branch president, I held a series of meetings in the little church that was located down in the "east bottoms." I soon saw that there was not much opportunity of expansion there. I saw, also, that we had a number of talented people who could help us in a street series. I took the matter up with the branch president first. He agreed to it, then we talked it over with the members, especially those on whom we would depend for help.

We had a group of fine singers, among whom were the Wolfes, Robinsons, Keiffers, Beroniuses, Williams, the Jacobson girls, and a number of others whose names I cannot call to mind just now. These people and the general membership were very loyal to our street and open-air services.

From this group, I later baptized three; J. Franklin Wolfe, Charles H. Beronius, and John T. Williams.

The Experience at Michigan Valley

In 1915, I was requested to go to Michigan Valley, Kansas, to see Brother and Sister William C. Cadwell, who had been isolated from the church for a number of years. I arrived there July 1, and Brother Cadwell, who was the station agent for the Missouri Pacific, met me and took me to their home. We talked over the possibility of holding a few services there.

We obtained a vacant lot at the side of a brick store building just across from a lumber yard near the railroad. I cleaned up the lot, then arranged with the lumber yard man to borrow enough lumber to make a six by twelve platform, and two twelve by twelve box seats. I carried this lumber across the street and arranged the platform and seats, then I put up posters announcing our services.

The first evening I went early and put up a large chart, but when the time came to preach, I was greatly disappointed. Brother and Sister Cadwell were the only ones on the seats. A few others stood on the walk and across the street.

Though badly discouraged, I was determined to give it a good try before calling it quits.

There were in the town two young ministers, pastors of two different denominations. During the week they were attending school somewhere near Michigan Valley, and over the week end, they would take care of their respective churches. The next Saturday evening, after I had started my services, these young preachers called to see me. I had my big chart up and had placed my Bible on the pulpit just before they called. They asked me if I would permit them to occupy for a few minutes when I opened the services.

I told them yes, that they could have half the time (about half an hour) and after they were through, I would use about that much time. While we were waiting for the time to begin the services, the older one of these young preachers walked up to the stand and seeing my Bible, he asked me if he might be permitted to look at it. I said, "Yes, if you will handle it with care and not move the markers." I then went up near the stand. (This Bible was well marked and interleaved with sermon notes.) The young preacher looked my Bible through for a few minutes, then took a seat until the services started.

When I went upon the platform to open the meeting, I noticed that quite a group began to gather in and take seats. When I announced that these young ministers would occupy the first part of the service, those who were yet standing came in and filled all the available seats, and many stood.

The younger man spoke first. He only used about five minutes and did not say much—just a few slurring remarks. But when the older man got up to talk, he started off by saying that he had examined my Bible and found that it is the best-marked Bible he had ever seen. Then he said, "This man knows the Bible through and through, and I warn you people to stay away from here. He is a dangerous man to listen to." He tried to leave the impression that one being so well-posted in the Scriptures could more easily deceive the people. He spoke along this line for about ten or fifteen minutes, then left the stand. Some of the people began to arise to leave, but I quickly took the stand and said to them, "Won't you please remain a little longer? I would like to say a few words to you." They remained. I then said to them, "My friends, who would you rather hear preach or explain the Scriptures, one who knows the Bible or one who admits he does not know the Bible?" This statement had the desired effect. Most of the people caught the meaning of my statement and remained to hear me speak. Night after night the audience kept increasing until we had to enlarge the seating space. People came as far as seventy-five miles. To the right of us, there was quite a vacant space where these people parked their cars.

I preached about two weeks before I announced that I would close on a certain evening in order to return the lumber and get away the next day to fill another appointment. Then a man arose and asked me if I would stay another day if he would have the lumber returned. I said, "Yes, if it can be so arranged with the lumber yard man." He was in the audience and said, "That will be all right." The night I closed, a number of men piled up the lumber and made me a nice little offering. Then they asked me when I could return. I told them that I could bring the district tent there about the first of September. They said they would pay all expenses. Elder Samuel Twombly and I took the tent to Michigan Valley about that time. After we got the tent set up ready for use, the religious opposition got busy and put out a diphtheria scare and, through a doctor who was against us, had all public meetings forbidden.

I suppose they thought we would pack up and leave. I was determined to stay that time, but Brother Twombly had other things to do and could not stay.

During the time, I visited among the people, talking to them in their homes. Those opposing me soon saw that this ban on public meetings was working against the children going to school, so they removed the quarantine.

Then we started the tent services, but it turned quite cool and we had to get several oil stoves to keep the tent warm. I preached for several weeks and had a nice crowd every evening, but it soon became too cold for tent work, so I closed the services. While we did not baptize anyone there, we did make a number of friends, and some investigated our message.

Holden Stake

Believing this to be a ripe spot for missionary work, I intended to return the next year, but before I got around to do so, I was chosen counselor to the Holden Stake Bishop, C. J. Hunt.

Later, the Joint Council requested me to devote all of my time to missionary work.

On April 15, 1920, I was ordained to the office of Seventy, and in 1922, I was appointed supervisor of the missionary work in Holden Stake. During my work in the stake, I made a number of new openings; two of them—Buckner and Blue Springs—have developed into good branches. These congregations are the result of tent services.

From the time (1904) I was ordained a priest, I did quite a bit of street and tent work. The Warrensburg and Wagoner Branches were organized as the result of street preaching. (See Matthew 22: 9; Luke 14: 23.) I opened up the work at Biglow by holding a series of services in a school-house.

In my church work, I discovered that the use of charts and the stereopticon were a wonderful help to get our message across to people.

Besides the other kinds of work I did in the church, other than real missionary work, I baptized over four hundred, all of whom I hope and pray will obtain eternal life.

The Auditorium

In 1932, I was placed in charge of guide work at the Auditorium. Choosing Bishop C. J. Hunt and S. S. Smith as my assistants, I developed the work to explain the church history and doctrines to the many visitors of all faiths who visited the building.

Salt Lake City

On November 10, 1934, I was asked by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and the Presidency if I would go to Salt Lake City and take over the work there. My answer was "Yes." I took a little time to get ready for the trip, which I made the last of December.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp appointed me to be the bishop's agent of the Utah District. In this work I served for nearly eight years.

A short time after I took over the Salt Lake Branch, President Smith appointed me to be president of the Utah District, subject to the approval of the district conference. In this capacity, I also served approximately eight years. At the General Conference of 1936, I was reappointed as missionary and also continued to serve as district president.

In Utah—1935

A few days after I reached Salt Lake City, Elder R. C. Evans of the Utah Church challenged me for a debate which we held in a private home. For several evening of two hours each and thirty alternate speeches, we discussed the main points of differences between the two churches. The main point of discussion centered around "True Succession of the Presidency" and the "Apostasy and Reorganization of the Church."

While laboring in Salt Lake City and the Utah District, we had a number of rich experiences, a few of which I wish to mention briefly.

A number of times I was invited to lecture to different groups on the vital differences between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church. After most of these lectures, I would answer questions sometimes for an hour or more.

These groups included some very fine and prominent people such as Dr. Francis W. Kirkham, the Woodruffs, the Cannons, and others.

A short time after we went to Salt Lake City, Professor J. S. Washburn of Provo requested me to lecture to his seminary class. Before giving my first lecture, I talked it over with the professor. Lest I should offend these people if I talked about the differences, I suggested that it might be best for me to talk on the Book of Mormon. But the professor said, "I can do that. We want you to lecture on the history of the Reorganized Church, its authority, etc." This I did with a good degree of liberty.

The next lecture I gave to these joint classes was on the vital differences between the two churches.

Professor E. Cecil McGavin, who had charge of the Latter Day Saint seminary work in Salt Lake City, brought several of his classes a number of times to our church for me to lecture to them on the main points of difference between the two churches. Many times these classes would come as early as 7:30 and stay until 10 or 10:30, asking questions.

I always invited Professor McGavin and his associate professor to be seated on the rostrum, and I always had Professor McGavin to assist and to act as chairman. I found him to be a fine man, and in all these lectures when I was making some strong point, I would ask Professor McGavin if that were correct; to such questions he always answered "Yes." During my stay at Salt Lake City, Professor McGavin brought hundreds of his people to our church to hear us explain the vital differences between the two churches.

On March 8, 1940, I received a call to come to Malad, Idaho, to lecture to the Latter Day Saint seminary. I got there quite early and met the two seminary teachers. I asked, "When do you want me to give the lecture?" They said, "We want you to give a lecture every hour." I said, "That's fine. We are ready to do so." I gave six lectures to the classes and one to the general assembly.

When I started to lecture, one of the professors said, "Why don't you give the same lecture, as you have a different class each time?" I said to him, "I have the same professor every time, and besides, these classes will talk the matter over."

On May 19, 1940, I preached the baccalaureate sermon in the Mormon tabernacle at Malad. There was a large crowd and fine interest.

Through the courtesy of Radio Station KSL and the kind assistance of our good friend, Harry Clarke, we were permitted to put on a half-hour hymn program on February 18, 1942.

This was one of the finest experiences we had in Utah.

A short time before we left Utah, I received a call to meet with the "Daughters of the Utah Pioneers." On July 20, 1942, I spent two hours lecturing to them and answering questions. I left them some reading matter on the differences between the two churches. I had an interesting meeting with these ladies in the state capitol building.

Just a short time before we were called away from Salt Lake City, Dr. Francis W. Kirkham came to our church office and asked me if I had Emma Smith's last testimony. I told him, yes, that it is recorded in Volume III, pages 353-358 of our Church History. He then asked if he might read it. I said, "Yes, indeed, you may read it here or take the book with you." When I handed him the book, he said, "I will read it here." As he read, he made a few notes. When he finished reading, I said to him, "I would like to ask you one question which you may feel free to answer or not to answer." Then by his consent, I asked him this question, "Do you believe her (Emma Smith's) testimony?" His answer was, "Yes."

It has been impressed upon my mind a number of times that there will come a time when hundreds and thousands of the honest people who are in the Utah Mormon Church will be converted and join the true church in succession. I wish I could live to see that day.

Independence

At the October Joint Council in 1942, it was decided that I should come east. On November 28, 1942, we left Salt Lake City for Independence. On December 28, 1942, I was appointed to labor in Independence under the direction of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

President F. M. Smith asked me to work with President Israel A. Smith in research work on Mormonism. Besides doing this kind of work, I was asked to index the Heralds and to make special notes dealing with the differences between the two churches—especially the statements of the late President Joseph Smith. I indexed some seventy volumes of the Herald, an index volume to each volume of the Herald. I extracted a book of valuable notes and articles, mostly from the pen of Joseph Smith and other leaders of the church.

"From This Day Forward"

By MRS. MARGARET GIBSON

THERE COMES A DAY to each of us, if we are sincerely trying to serve God, when we catch a glimpse of what, with his help, we could make of our lives. If we cherish this vision and act toward its realization, we grow. New avenues of approach to the goal open before us, and we become "growing personalities."

Too often, however, we lose sight of the heavenly vision in our frantic effort to accomplish today's work. Tomorrow, or the day after that, we'll start improvement but how can we improve today with all we have to do?

The tomorrows pass; and suddenly, too suddenly, we are old. A day comes when we realize that we've crossed the summit of the slope and are going "downhill." In genuine anguish, we look over our pitifully small collection of life's sheaves. What have we done with the generous allotment of talents which God has so kindly given us? Once we could write—but somehow we didn't get around to exercising that gift. We always wanted to visit our neighbors, but somehow they've come and gone, and we just smiled and greeted them but never got to know them. And our personalities! Some day we were going to curb our nagging, but today we are ill-tempered, worried, brusque—after all these years!

And we always wanted to look nice, to have an erect carriage, an attractive walk, be well-groomed, and beautifully but simply and economically dressed.

But here we are—poor in posture, not well-groomed, querulous, nagging—our talents buried in the ground—and we are on the "far" side of fifty!

Our hearts fail us. Where is the promise of our early years? God has called us to greatness, to an eternal purpose in his on-going plan. Our brief moment in this mortal sphere was meant to be a beautiful, glowing thing. Men and women have suffered and bled that we might have this spark of time illumined by freedom of choice and opportunity. The Son of God died on the cross that we might have the chance to be but a little lower than the angels of heaven. And—God pity us—look at us! What have we done with our one chance—we who have been called to be Saints of the most high God? We are truly ashamed and repentant.

WE ARE NOT DEAD YET. We are intelligent enough to know that eternity is still ours for growth, though what we call physical life may not be long. Those lessons we learn here, we will not need to learn in the hereafter. Hope stirs within us again as the Spirit of God begins to kindle anew in a repentant and contrite heart.

Our buried talent? Let us dig it up again and invest it before the Master calls for the accounting. Some of the greatest books and poems of all time were written by men and women over fifty years of age. Surely we are richer in experiences of life than we were twenty years ago. Take our talent, Lord and use it! Help us to recognize and know what we should write and give us strength to do it.

Our neighbor whom God expected us to warn? Some, we shall never see again—but we have new ones. Today, not tomorrow, we shall make a call.

Our nagging? That will be a hard thing to overcome at our age. Help us today, Lord, to keep free of it and then tomorrow, and still tomorrow continue to help us. From this day forward help us to be serene.

We've never been good housekeepers, Lord, and now that we're past fifty, we're tired. When we see what needs to be done, it is so much that it discourages us. It's too late now.

No, it isn't. Do all our tasks of today and one thing more. And do all of tomorrow's work tomorrow, and one thing more. God will give us strength for that much, and as we approach our goal, we'll be amazed at the help God gives us. All he asks is that we steadfastly keep on trying, not going faster than he gives us strength.

And grooming. Today we saw a lady, our age, stately, beautiful in her carriage, well-dressed, gracious, perfectly groomed. We have let ourselves go—our figures are poor, our shoulders are round, our heels are run over, and our hair is dry. Let's keep that lady in mind. We can look like her, or certainly just as attractive. We can be well-dressed. We can have a lovely voice, good posture, and perfect grooming. Let's have that satisfaction anyway—for the rest of our lives.

BUT WHERE CAN WE START?

Today we can stand as we saw that woman stand and walk as she walked. Today we can try to fix our hair in a new and becoming way. Today we can manicure our nails, and take our shoes down to have the heels straightened. Help us, Lord, as we walk down town, not to slump, we've slumped all these years. Remind us to stand straight until we feel right.

And, oh, yes, let's do without whipped cream and so much butter today. Tomorrow we'll walk straight, and stand straight on our feet, and use the new hair-do, and leave out the whipped cream and butter, and keep the manicure in order, and one thing more, we'll start on an attractive wardrobe. Our present one has the "old look" and is getting dilapidated.

First let's see what we have and plan to fix that up. We remember that once the church was told that God would send no new revelation until it made use of what instruction it had already received. That principle is basically sound with material possessions, too, and we shall use it now.

All things that need to be sent to the cleaners will go today. And we shall pile in one place all those things which need darning and mending and buttons. Tomorrow we shall fix those; the following day, we'll launder and press all our frilly collars and cuffs. We will find several things we can send away so that someone else can use them—some things that we'd forgotten we have—some things that we can make over. A flower and a veil can make an old hat, and inexpensive earrings can add real charm to a costume.

If we stand straight, keep dainty, take our weight down gradually, and plan wisely for accessories, we are well on the way to personal charm in appearance.

New clothes are very expensive today, but many of us are free to take sewing courses and learn to make our own clothing. The lessons are inexpensive and fun. We learn how to choose colors and styles, and we make friends with many fine people who have the same aims we have.

Charm is deeper than personal appearance, although personal appearance greatly enhances charm. A personality that captivates, warms, and draws people comes from the inner soul of the individual. It cannot be counterfeited; it is the genuine spirit of the Lord. One who truly loves God takes on some of his attributes. He feels, to a degree, the love and compassion toward his fellow men that Christ felt.

THIS WILL BE DIFFICULT to attain.

It will be necessary for us to be constant in prayer, to be slow to anger, to be patient and understanding, and to care little—or not at all—for ourselves. For others, we Latter Day Saints are to be channels through which the love of God can pour.

Today, Lord, let me have toward my husband and my children that mind "which is in Christ Jesus." Let it remain tomorrow and all the tomorrows, and help it grow until it includes all mankind.

Today, let us do all that the day requires and one thing more. If we do that, the Endowment of Power for which God, the church and the world waits will be poured out upon us at the coming General Conference.

WIRE RECORDER

Spoken thoughts, with all the accuracy of their subtle inflections in professional or business contacts can be yours "electronically memorized" by a Webster-Chicago Wire Recorder, using a fine strand of stainless steel wire on a doughnut-sized spool, that records up to a full hour.

Webster-Chicago Wire Recorder is a self-contained, general purpose, portable magnetic wire recorder and player. It comes complete—ready to use—with microphone and three spools of wire. It can be readily carried and takes up no more space than an over-night bag.

Voice and music can be recorded and played with clear, lifelike fidelity. Recordings can be replayed thousands of times or stored for future play with no appreciable loss of volume or tone quality. Programs can be erased in favor of new recordings, these in turn may be played back as many times as desired.

Listen to your Sunday sermons on Saturday—electronically memorized by the Webster-Chicago Wire Recorder. Now you can be your own severest critic in the privacy of your study when you rehearse sermons in advance to give them new inflections—new color.

Perfect for recording complete church services for the enjoyment of shut-ins. Choir groups learn new, intricate harmonies quicker and more surely.

A Square Deal for Everybody

WE ALL SEEK TO FIND a Utopia in our lives. We look forward to the time when we're going to be happy and secure. But I wonder if the man who looks forward to happiness and security is ever going to find it. Real happiness and real security, I think, can be found only in daily and lifelong service to God and to society—today.

Our present society is fraught with evils—wars, poverty, crime and prejudices which eliminate opportunity. Why? Because man wants security and happiness. But it's not the goal that causes evil. I think the goal of happiness and security is certainly a righteous one. The principal evil is that we want happiness and security first for ourselves . . . or first for our families . . . or first for the United States . . . or first for white people . . . or first for Gentiles. That, along with the idea that security and happiness is achieved by possession is the real evil. Happiness and security can be achieved only world-wide and only through service—not possession.

Do you want to see that haughty family across the street have security and happiness? Or would you get a little fiendish glee out of seeing the finance company come and take a few pieces of their furniture or their automobile away? Do you want to see your business competitor have happiness and security? Or would it give you delight to squeeze him out of business with a little underhanded cutthroat competition? Do you want to see the Negro and the Jew have social and economic security? Do you want the money you give to Red Cross and Community Chest and the package you send to Europe to be used to help the Negro and the Jew? Or would you just as soon see that Negro starve because he can't find a job, or that Jew killed in a concentration camp because of his beliefs?

HAPPINESS AND SECURITY can be achieved only world-wide and through service—not possession. If we would have life, we must serve others. Then would be that ultimate achievement in happiness and security.

That life is certainly exemplified by Jesus. He was not after possession, wealth, flattering friends, or economic power. His life was one of service, service to others—all others—without discrimination.

Often in the course of history, we have known of persons and peoples seeking security by primarily one means. That means has been one of possession for themselves. And possession for one or a few necessarily means oppression over the rest. In every one of those historical phases, it has been evident that ideas, emotions, and feelings of people cannot be suppressed. The only way to conquer the world is through ideas and attitudes—to conquer it with a relationship among human beings which is based on the attitude that the happiness and security of every individual, regardless of race, color, or creed is necessary to one's own happiness and security; a faith in human nature; a belief that all people are striving to improve society—striving to co-ordinate their lives to one of service in a righteous society. From this faith and belief will evolve one world with one people, and for each a happiness and security beyond our present comprehension.

By Phil Briggs

We can say, "Thy will be done" by following the principles of Christ in our daily relations with people—the principles of service.

Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. May this be our earnest resolve.

The Trouble-Shooter

Guilty or Not Guilty?

QUESTION: Does the church believe that, if a man enlists in the service of his country and is called upon to fight and kill other men, God will charge him with murder, while if he is drafted and kills others in battle, God will not hold him guilty?

ANSWER: By F. Carl Mesle

To the best of my knowledge, the church has never expressed an official view in this matter, but I believe the Scriptures below would lead us to the interpretation which follows:

Renounce war and proclaim peace And if any nation, tongue, or people should proclaim war against them, they should first lift a standard of peace unto that people, nation, or tongue, and if that people will not accept the offering of peace, neither the second nor the third time, they should bring these testimonies before the Lord; then, I the Lord, would give unto them a commandment and justify them in going out to battle against that nation, tongue, or people.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3, 6.

And I saw a heaven opened, and behold a white horse, and he that sat upon him is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.—Revelation 19: 11.

Now the Nephites were taught to defend themselves against their enemies, even to the shedding of blood, if it were necessary.—Alma 21: 135.

Section 112 of the Doctrine and Covenants opens with the thesis that "governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man." It would seem logical, then, that man should be prepared to defend a good government in time of need.

Men do not generally enlist in the service for the purpose of killing anyone. They enlist rather for one of several reasons, among which are: (1) to make a better living, (2) to serve their country, (3) to escape the draft—that is, to seek an advantage in opportunity or position over those being drafted, or (4) to seek adventure and escape from the "humdrum" existence they normally lead.

Because war is such a gamble for individuals as well as nations, there is a tendency for eligible men to wait until their country calls for their services rather than to speed up the procedure by enlisting and taking the risk that their situation may be made more dangerous and undesirable as a result.

Actually, with war today a national effort, it would be hard to say that the man who fires the gun or drops the bomb is any more responsible for the deaths which may result than is the man or woman who manufactures guns and shells or the farmer who raises corn to feed the workers and fighters, unless the man at the front becomes involved in war atrocities.

The key to our problem would seem to be found rather in the purpose of the war. We entered the last war with an almost unanimous national mind that we were being forced to defend our nation and our principles against those who would have enslaved the world. The men, then, who recognized this danger and stepped forward to enlist could hardly be condemned above the men who simply awaited their turn.

On the other hand, if a person were convinced that his country was fighting a war of aggression entirely out of harmony with God's purposes, and he stepped forward to enlist with the forces of evil, he would certainly earn God's displeasure, whereas if he were drafted against his will, he would seem to bear little responsibility for all the acts to which he might be forced. Even so, let it be recorded that history con-

Will Your Label Stick?

By Grace Crocker

On the shelf of a grocery store, we often see a can with a label that is partly torn. Such is not a true representative of the company which produces it.

So it is with us; we are representing a great company—The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This company claims to have found the way to a more abundant life, and we, as representatives, are responsible for selling the world its product. If we are convinced but not truly converted, we may find our label coming off as we are caught up by the whirl of present-day living. If we are real Latter Day Saints, we will go thousands of miles to sell the world our product.

It makes a difference whether or not our labels stick. We are the salesmen of Christ's great church. If we succeed in building the Zion of our dreams, it will be because our labels stuck. This takes humility, love, a deep desire to learn, a willingness to do that which is asked of us, and open eyes to see the things which are not asked of us but need to be done.

The world is like a shrewd business man—ready to buy our product only after we have proved its quality. Our lives are the best means of representation God has. We are on the shelf before the great human market, and every hour some prospective customer stands before us reading our label.

Let us be all that the label, "Latter Day Saint," implies, and let us hold tenaciously to it.

tains many examples of men, who, having been pressed into battle in a cause to which they were opposed, have died on the field without having made any effort to fight or otherwise defend themselves.

Caring for Sanitarium Babies

Members of the Mothers' Club of Independence carry on a great work for mothers and babies at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Now they are calling for help in their General Conference work in behalf of their service.

By MADGE SIEGFRIED

Historian of the Independence Mothers' Club

WHEN THE INDEPENDENCE MOTHERS' CLUB was organized in June, 1911, the membership consisted of fewer than a dozen young married women. There are now twenty-four. In due time, we were reaching out for an objective other than our social gathering and found that the Children's Home in Lamoni could use our help. Soon after the home was discontinued, we decided on another project—furnishing infant's apparel and nursery equipment for the Independence Sanitarium maternity department. That was in January, 1916, under the leadership of Clara Dudley Haberlein.

This hobby has grown upon our membership to such an extent that we feel a very special interest in the babies themselves, in the nurses who tend them, and in the reactions of parents to our work. When we have asked Miss Copeland, the Hospital Superintendent, if we overstep a bit in our interest in the affairs of "the fourth floor" in general, she has been most indulgent.

We were going strong when Miss Copeland came to the Sanitarium as superintendent twenty-five years ago last January, and we have been cordial friends through the succeeding years. No group was more excited than ours when a reception in her honor was tendered her, celebrating this twenty-fifth anniversary. It was a gala occasion, and long lines of well-wishers streamed in and out of the spacious nurses' lounge all evening; it was the high point of our years of service for the Sanitarium, also.

MATERNITY AND NURSERY DEPARTMENTS

Miss Mabel Faulkner is supervisor of the fourth floor, the maternity department, and Miss Ina Hatty is supervisor of the nursery. The student nurses' education includes theory and practice in the care of the mother and the newborn babe. She attends fifty-four formal lectures in obstetrics and obstetrical nursing, and the balance by Miss Faulkner and Miss Hattey.

THE NURSES' TRAINING

Every nurse has a total of three months in the obstetrical department receiving clinical experience, having had experience in the general care of patients before she is assigned to the maternity department. In this experience, she learns to care for the mother in labor and after delivery of the child. She is taught what to teach the mother as to general hygiene and the care of herself after she goes home from the hospital. When a nurse relays this information to a mother at the hospital, she does it under supervision of a graduate nurse. This instruction is given the mother so that during early ambulation, the mother will do nothing which will interfere with her future good health.

The girls each have their experience as "charge" nurses. They are taught by Miss Faulkner to take charge on the floor as if she were not there. Eventually, after graduation, some are specially chosen for such responsibility, according to their preferences and adaptability.

Then comes the experience given students when they are assigned to the nursery. Miss Hattey's program includes teaching the students "charge" duty also. They are all taught to recognize abnormal symptoms and to report these symptoms to the supervisor and the doctor.

PROBLEM PARENTS

Psychology is taught the student nurses so that they will be better fitted to cope with the unexpected situations which come their way. A young husband, for instance, was completely puzzled, remote, and rather dazed when a little daughter was born instead of the son of which he had dreamed. Besides, she was "such a funny looking little thing," "so tiny," "so red," etc. Miss Hattey simply slipped away with the baby and dressed her in her very best. When the father next saw the baby in its nursery crib, the transformation in him was immediate; tears came as he exclaimed, "Gosh, she's a honey, isn't she?"

One young mother's first child was a boy, and she was disappointed. After four days passed and she still could not be reconciled to a son, the nurse reported the situation to her supervisor. Miss Hattey's efforts in reasoning with the mother were unsuccessful until she said to her, "There is a little girl baby down the hall with her mother now. She is permanently crippled." She then described the case. "Your little son is strong and perfect. This little girl's mother loves her dearly. Would you like me to see if she would consider trading babies with you?" The mother clung to her baby boy and whispered, "No, no, I'll keep him. I WANT him." Later Miss Hattey peeked in and saw the mother fondling and feeding her little son.

THE CHAPLAIN'S WORK

Soon after the nurses come on duty at 7 a.m., Chaplain Donald Lentz appears. He saunters along outside the big nursery window, stops to look at each baby, giving it a smile. Then he calls on the mothers.

When a baby is ill, Latter Day Saint mothers want the chaplain's prayers and administration. This ordinance of our faith is not generally understood by nonmembers and has to be explained. Recently, the supervisor asked a mother if she would like the chaplain to pray for her baby, who was critically ill. She became frightened, thinking the baby was expected to die. When she understood administration and that the nurses also pray over their little charges, she exclaimed, "Oh, yes, please, please do pray for my baby." This baby was taken out of the incubator only four days later! "The happiness on the face of this mother was better payment than any financial remuneration could have been," exclaimed Miss Hattey.

Marvelous new equipment and methods used in the nursery have aided greatly in the preservation of the life of the little "prematures"; and the "spastic ones," who happen along once in a while, have a better chance for normal living now.

WORK OF THE MOTHER'S CLUB

The Mother's Club is happy to have been in a position to adopt the nursery and see to its every need, whether in up-to-date equipment or other supplies. Our latest project—that of making about four dozen appliqued and embroidered bedspreads for the cribs—is nearing completion. In this, we have been ably assisted by a group of young mothers, the Pan-A-Delphia Sewing Club. In many of our former enterprises, we have been the fortunate recipients of generous donations and contributions in both cash and supplies from interested individuals and groups both in the States and abroad for which we wish to again say "Thank You." We also beg continued interest and co-operation. The year, 1948, promises to be a record year for the nursery, with 646 babies having been born from January 1 to August 1.

HELP NEEDED

The Independence Mother's Club will have its usual nursery booth at General Conference this October and will include articles contributed for sale for the Nursery Benefit Fund. Please send requests for patterns and for information to our secretary, Mrs. Rose Etzenhouser, 1317 West College, Independence, Missouri. Other officers for 1948 and 1949 are: Mrs. Ardyce DeLapp, president; Mrs. May Lloyd, vice-president; and Mrs. Fanny McGuire, treasurer.

By request of Apostle C. R. Hield in the latter part of 1944, I made a missionary tour over the southern mission. The principal subject presented was "The Differences Between our Church and the Utah Mormon Church."

I visited nearly all the principal branches in the southern field. Though I worked hard to cover this mission, I enjoyed it immensely and wish I could do it again.

About the first of September, 1945, President Israel A. Smith and Bishop C. A. Skinner asked me to spend a little time in Nauvoo. I made the trip and was met by Elder J. E. Vanderwood, whom I assisted in guide work for about two weeks. Before I returned home, I preached a few

District Secretary.

Wants to Contact Members

Mr. and Mrs. William P. Sterling, 2538 Dodier, Apartment 11, St. Louis, Missouri, will appreciate having members in that vicinity visit them.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested by Mrs. Don Baldwin for Mrs. Mary Huffman whose son was accidentally killed by a neighbor boy. For those who wish to write, her address is 1631 North Main Street, Kewanee, Illinois.

Margaret Leach of Kamiah, Idaho, requests prayers for Herman Hess, who was seriously injured when a log fell on him, breaking his hips and his legs in four places.

Mrs. Virgil Powers, 904 Pearl Street, Greenville, Michigan, asks the Saints to pray for the spiritual welfare of her family.

ENGAGEMENT

Taylor-Butler

Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Butler of Hammond, Indiana, announce the engagement of their daughter, Evalyn La Vern, to Joseph Clifford Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Taylor of Kansas City, Missouri. The wedding will take place October 12 at the Stone Church in Independence.

WEDDINGS

Piedimonte-Nortonen

Hulda Nortonen, foster daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hardy of Lexington, Massachusetts, and Joseph Piedimonte, son of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Piedimonte of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, were married August 15 at the Reorganized Church in Somerville, Massachusetts. Apostle George G. Lewis performed the double-ring ceremony. Both bride and groom attended Graceland College. Follow-nights at Ft. Madison.

On my way home, I felt quite ill. The next day I felt some better, but by October 6, I had to see a doctor. Later I became quite sick and have not as yet recovered.

At the General Conference of 1946, I was superannuated and, while I greatly appreciate the honor extended, I felt that I had reached the "end of the journey."

(The End.)

ing a honeymoon in New Hampshire, they will make their home in Berkeley, California, where Mr. Piedimonte is a student at the University of California.

Ulrich-Hershner

Mary Alta Hershner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob George Hershner of Canon City, Colorado, and James A. Ulrich, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Ulrich, also of Canon City, were married June 13 at the Reorganized Church in Colorado Springs, Colorado. Elder J. D. Curtis performed the ceremony.

Asher-Sharpnack

Wilma Jean Sharpnack, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Zina Sharpnack of Salem, Oregon, and Delman Robert Asher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Asher, also of Salem, were married at the First Christian Church in Salem on July 6.

McCord-Van Valkenburg

Letha Ione Van Valkenburg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Van Valkenburg of Eagle Rock, California, and Hale Clifford McCord, Jr., of Stewartville, Missouri, were married June 12 in the East Los Angeles Reorganized Church. District President Louis J. Ostertag read the double-ring ceremony. After spending the summer in California, Mr. and Mrs. McCord will attend the University of Missouri. Both are Graceland graduates.

Fisher-Shaw

Isabella Agnes Shaw, daughter of Mrs. Stella I. Shaw of Edmonton, Alberta, and Kenneth George Fisher, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Fisher of Birsay, Saskatchewan, were married August 7 at the Reorganized Church in Edmonton. Elder Alvin Walrath performed the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, where Mr. Fisher is attending the university.

Meredith-Church

Marilyn Ruth Church, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles F. Church, Jr., of Independence, Missouri, and Leslie H. Meredith, son of Dr. and Mrs. H. Voas Meredith of Iowa City, Iowa, were married August 29 at the Reorganized Church in Englewood. Patriarch Elbert A. Smith performed the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Meredith, both graduates of Graceland College, will make their home in Iowa City, where they will attend the University of Iowa.

Wolfe-Wolfe

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Wolfe of Carterville, Missouri, announce the marriage of their daughter, Irene, to Wayne W. Wolfe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira C. Wolfe of Columbus, Nebraska. The wedding took place on July 6 in the Reorganized Church at Joplin, Missouri, Elder Arthur J. Rock officiating.

BIRTHS

Dr. and Mrs. Gordon Brown of Essex, Ontario, announce the birth of a son, Robert Charles, born July 10. Mrs. Brown is the former June White of Toronto, Ontario.

A daughter, Mary Judith, was born on August 6 to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Hollaman of Independence, Missouri. Mrs. Hollaman is the former Carol Stubbart of Independence.

A son, Kenneth Ray, was born on July 22 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Murdock at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Murdock is the former Laura Coop.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Holloway of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, James Leonard, born August 11 at the Leon Hospital. Mrs. Holloway is the former Jeanette Shenbondy of Akron, Ohio.

A son, Guy Flynn, was born on March 2 to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Van Eaton of Los Angeles, California. He was blessed on May 2 by District President Louis J. Ostertag. Mrs. Van Eaton, the former Lacygne Van Valkenburg, is a graduate of Graceland College.

A son, Christopher Alan, was born on July 13 to Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Johnson of Los Angeles, California. He was blessed on August 22 by Elder V. L. Lum.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Watson of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Frederick Rodney, born August 3. Mrs. Watson is the former Ruth Cunningham of Galesburg, Illinois.

BRIEFS

NEW YORK DISTRICT.—The annual New York District business meeting was held on May 30 for the election of district officers and delegates to General Conference. High Priest P. L. Weegar of Buffalo was elected president, with Elders S. Hayes and T. Yates as counselors. Six delegates will represent the district at Conference.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.—John, Jr., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John Roberts, and Richard Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis E. Scott, were blessed at the 11 o'clock service on Sunday morning, July 25, by Elders John W. Rushton and Fred A. Cool.

WARRINGTON, ENGLAND.—On July 2, members of the church school, along with forty other groups from the Church of England and the Catholic Church, paraded through the streets, led by Seventy Glen Johnson, Elder Eric Rowe, District President W. Entwistle, and Pastor S. Dawbarn. Priests Lampard and Dawbarn carried the church flag. Other features of the parade were the model fire engine on which was mounted the "gospel ladder"; a large bluebird made of flowers in the center of a ring of roses and carried by the Blue Bird Girls; and a tableau depicting the pure in heart made of flowers and displayed by members of the primary department. Following the parade, the children spent the rest of the day at Walton Gardens.

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND DISTRICT.—The Southern New England District Reunion was held at Onset, Massachusetts, July 17 to 25. The theme of the reunion was "Embark in the Service of God." The annual district business meeting was held on Saturday morning, and the afternoon was devoted to recreation. Apostle George Lewis gave the first sermon of the reunion in the evening. President F. Henry Edwards, Bishop D. O. Chesworth, and E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College, were the Sunday speakers. The daily schedule included an 8:45 prayer service each morning, with a special fellowship for young people; children's activities from 8:45 to 12, under the direction of Elsie Cummings, assisted by Florence Gordon and Edna Chesworth; junior and junior high activities from 8:45 to 12 supervised by Dorothy Fisher, District President Reed Holmes, and Mr. and Mrs. Myron Fisher, Jr.; classes for young people and adults from 10 to 12, President Edwards, Apostle Lewis, E. J. Gleazer, Jr., and Bishop Chesworth instructing; choir rehearsal from 1 to 1:30 under the direction of Alice Chesworth; recreation at 1:30; a class at 3 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday for women, Mrs. F. Henry Edwards teaching; a hobby show on Tuesday and a business meeting on Thursday; a recreational leadership class from 6:30 to 7:15, directed by Reed Holmes; preaching at 7:30; and evensong at 8:45. Features of the final Sunday were a youth fellowship at 7 a.m., a prayer service at 9, a sermon by President Edwards at 11; and a baptismal and confirmation service in the afternoon.

TERLTON, OKLAHOMA.—An all-day service was held at the church on Sunday, August 22. Following church school, Bernie Bayless gave the morning address. At noon, a basket dinner was enjoyed by the group. Two new members were baptized in the afternoon by Elder W. B. Howard. The confirmation service was held in the evening preceding the final sermon of the day, which was preached by L. A. Harper.

EAST LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

—The first anniversary of the organization of East Los Angeles Branch was observed on August 17. A chicken dinner was served to 100 members and friends by the women of the branch; Mrs. Cora Neice, women's leader, baked the "birthday" cake. The after-dinner program consisted of four short talks by Pastor V. L. Lum, Elder Lynn E. Smith, Mrs. Ann Jasper, and District President Louis J. Ostertag. James Campbell sang "The Holy City," and former Pastor L. L. Southerland gave the benediction and blessing. Since the church was finished last year, the grounds have been landscaped and a baby grand piano purchased. A stove and cabinets have been added to the kitchen. As the result of a workers' conference held last September, three credit classes have been completed by twenty persons. A junior church has been established, and splendid use is being made of visual aids.

My Brother's Keeper

Why walkest thou alone, dear soul,
 When I am close to thee?
 Come, put thy hand into mine own,
 Our way is clear to see.

To us all earth is stretched before,
 Sweet is the path we've found.
 And lo, the Spirit of the Lord
 Lifts us above the ground,
 For feet bruise not upon the stones
 When they are led by him;
 And visions glimpsed once through his love
 Can nevermore grow dim.

Release thy burdens, let them go;
 Let faith dissolve thy fear—
 Thy heart shall flood with happiness
 Within this passing year.

The Daily Herald

1. Reminders to instructors and leaders:
 Your subject is important, or it wouldn't be on the Conference Program. It should be reported in the Conference "Daily Herald" so that your message will extend far beyond the class or group, to all the people of the church. We have only one means of getting it reported: that is for you to appoint an able and reliable reporter at the first meeting on Monday. Tell him or her to write the account of each session, and turn it in as soon as possible.

2. Reminders to reporters:
 Attend the classes or meetings of most interest to you. Take full notes. Either before or at the end of class, see the leader to get appointment to report for the class. This will prevent duplication. If you report one good series of class meetings, it will be a fine contribution, and will not hinder your enjoyment of the Conference. Immediately after the class, write your account (about one page double space typewritten) and put it in the Daily box at the Herald Booth or Pressroom. Speed is important.

We also need reporters to cover sermons, prayer meetings, and a number of special events. For some of these assignments, see Daily Editors. Besides these, the Daily can use some good features based upon human interest material, conversations, conference incidents, or personalities. Reporters should sign every contribution so that credit can be given.

DRIVING TO CONFERENCE?

Remember, when you drive to Conference, there are more cars on the road, and many in worse condition, than ever before in our history. More of the drivers are drunk, or untrained, or crazy, too. Drive carefully and save your life. The following rules will help:

1. Drive moderately. Speed kills.
2. Treat your car with care. It is a weapon that can kill you and other people. It has no mechanism to save your life, except your intelligence.
3. Never pass cars on hills or curves.
4. Don't insist too stubbornly on getting your half of the road. The other driver may be too drunk to care or know. Yield a little and live.
5. Never go out on the shoulder to pass another car. It is a sure invitation to the undertaker.
6. If you get in a tight spot, slow down. No matter what threatens, slow down. Only very seldom will speed save you. Your brake is your friend. The accelerator is your enemy.
7. Keep on your side of the center line. It is your life line.
8. Don't pass unless you can see at least half a mile ahead. It takes you up to a minute to pass another car. Another car can send you to eternity in that time. And there's no return ticket.

WEST COLLEGE STREET MISSION is a growing Independence group, sponsored by Stone Church, that has been thriving under the leadership of Odess Athey and his counselor, Joseph White. The group has shown strong devotion and sacrifice in raising the funds for the erection of their church.

On Monday, September 13, the "Independence Examiner" carried a fine account of the laying of the cornerstone for the new church building at 1021 West College Street, the event occurring on Sunday evening, September 12, at six o'clock.

President Israel A. Smith officiated at this service, assisted by Glaude A. Smith, pastor of Stone Church. Copies of "The Examiner," the "Herald," and other items were laid in the metal box back of the cornerstone. Apostle C. G. Mesley delivered the principal address, and Elder Charles V. Graham gave the prayer.

George Gregory Lewis, Apostle

This week death stalked one of our finest families and struck down its guiding spirit. The appalling toll taken by the hazards of highway travel has invaded the Joint Council circle. Today, Thursday, September 16, we have just laid in the tomb our friend and counselor, the loving and lovable Apostle George G. Lewis.

The pomp and circumstance of these last rites are marred by the tragic fact that no one of his kin was able to be present; and all the members of his immediate family, grievously injured but by the grace of God escaping the fowler's snare, lay on hospital beds. In their absence, however, Apostle C. G. Mesley and wife, Bishop Walter N. Johnson and wife, and Patriarch C. A. Dickenson and wife, lifelong acquaintances and friends of Brother Lewis, were present as mourners.

The tragic story is briefly told: Last Sunday when all nature smiled benignly upon the world, Brother Lewis and wife Edith, their daughters Alice June and Judith Ann, aged 17 and 15 respectively, and George, 8, were en route from their home in Kansas City to Lamoni, there to leave Alice June to become a student at Graceland College. From events hardly known on the instant and in the emergency, only now hazily recalled, their automobile collided with a bridge abutment near Winston, Missouri. Brother Lewis alone was thrown from the car, receiving head injuries from the impact, immediately causing unconsciousness from which he did not recover. The hour was approximately 9:30 in the morning.

All the others suffered terribly from the collision, the car being almost totally ruined. Members of the Missouri Highway Patrol were soon on the scene, and Brother Lewis, who was obviously the most critically injured, was rushed to a hospital at Cameron, and the others were taken to a hospital in St. Joseph.

By fortunate circumstance Bishop G. L. DeLapp and family en route to Lamoni on a similar mission came along in a few minutes after the accident. Sending his family on by another car, Bishop DeLapp immediately took charge of the situation. Soon Presidents Garver and Edwards and Dr. C. F. Grabske, Church Physician, were in Cameron, and in midafternoon Brother Lewis was brought to the Independence Sanitarium.

Administration and everything within the power of skilled and professional men have been done to care for this family. However, Brother Lewis during Monday grew steadily weaker and expired a little after midnight on the morning of Tuesday, the 14th.

At present it is expected that Sister Lewis and the children, though suffering fractures and severe lacerations, will survive. Further particulars will be given in a later Herald.

The services this afternoon at the Stone Church were in charge of Apostle Paul M. Hanson. Elder L. F. P. Curry delivered the address. They were assisted by President John F. Garver and Patriarch C. A. Dickenson of Australia.

The active pallbearers, members of the Quorum of Twelve, were: Charles R. Hield, Maurice Draper, D. T. Williams, Wallace Smith, Arthur A. Oakman, Roscoe Davey.

The honorary pallbearers were: Israel A. Smith, president of the church; F. Henry Edwards, member of the First Presidency; Edmund J. Gleazer and D. Blair Jensen, members of the Quorum of Twelve; G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop; Henry L. Livingston, member of the Presiding Bishopric; Z. Z. Renfroe and F. Edward Butterworth, members of the Quorum of Seventies; Floyd M. McDowell, Director of Religious Education; O. W. Newton, Secretary to the First Presidency; Glaude A. Smith, Pastor of the Stone Church, and Dr. Charles F. Grabske, Church Physician.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

The Power to Endure

The General Conference of the church will begin under a shadow—the loss of two splendid men who have occupied positions of high responsibility and who have given outstanding service. Both men came into the church work in the Australasian Mission, and were especially loved and respected by the Australian Saints.

Australia has made a remarkable contribution to the leadership of the church, in men of ability, power, and integrity. The loss will bear down more heavily on them than on others, because of their love and respect for these men.

All the church shares this grief. Americans everywhere deeply loved Apostle Lewis. And in the brief time he was here, Brother Peisker had won the hearts of all who met him. We know that Australia has lost most heavily—but the rest of us feel it very deeply too.

At such a time, our power to endure is tested. Under this trial, some may weaken. Others will brace themselves and become stronger.

Under these circumstances, we have need to examine ourselves to see what we ought to think, how we should feel, and what our reaction to this calamity shall be.

We have not been promised freedom from trouble or trials. But we have been promised that God will give us strength to endure the adversities that come upon us as a result of the conditions of the world, and of life. And we have the hope of eternal life, knowing that this world is not our end or destiny. This gives us the strength by which we can endure all things, if we are faithful.

Apostle George G. Lewis

A most severe shock has come to the church in the serious injury of Apostle George G. Lewis and his family in a motor car accident on Sunday, September 12, and his death from his injuries on Tuesday, September 14. The family were on their way from Kansas City to Lamoni, where the eldest daughter, Alice June, was to have entered Graceland as a freshman. The accident occurred north of Cameron on U.S. highway 69. There are differing accounts of the accident and of the circumstances leading to it, but it is known that the Lewis car crashed into a bridge, and that all of the members of the family were injured badly. Apostle Lewis was taken to a hospital at Cameron, where facilities for treating him were inadequate, until Bishop G. L. DeLapp could arrange to have him brought to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. There the local physicians did all that was possible to save him, calling a brain specialist from Kansas City on account of a skull fracture. During Monday hope was entertained that he might have a chance to recover, but in the evening he was weaker, and life ceased about 12:30 Tuesday morning.

Sister Lewis and the three children—Alice June, seventeen, Judith Ann, fourteen, and George Gregory, eight—were all painfully and dangerously injured, involving bone fractures. At this writing, they have experienced enough improvement to give encouragement to hopes for their ultimate recovery.

Apostle Lewis was born at Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, November 17, 1901. His early education was received in that state, and he entered into civil service for the government, and was in the Navigation Department for six years. From 1924 to 1927 he was at Graceland College, graduating there. Going on to the University of Chicago, he won the degrees Ph. B. and M.A., completing his work in 1929. After that he entered into church work under appointment. He was ordained a member of the Quorum of Twelve on April 15, 1932. After a period of service in the United States, he was appointed to be in charge of the Australasian Mission, remaining in that work until relieved by Apostle C. G. Mesley. He has since been very active in the work of his quorum in the United States, and served as Secretary of the Quorum of Twelve.

Apostle Lewis brought to all his ministerial service, as to all his personal contacts, the kindness and refinement of a Christian gentleman. In culture and education, in spiritual depth, in his sympathy and understanding for people, he brought a rich and devoted ministry to the church. His influence will live in the grateful memories and lives of the people he served.

Brother Lewis had but one standard, and that was the best. He was a fine neighbor and friend, always kind and considerate, always living as a minister and representative of Christ. He will be greatly missed.

With her life hardly more than hanging in the balance, Sister Lewis (she was widely known as Edith Woods before her marriage) will face a most difficult prospect, if the critical injuries she has sustained admit her recovery. While Brother Lewis was away serving the church for long periods of time, she kept the home and took the responsibility for the care and nurture of the family, being with her companion all during the mission abroad. Now, with the sorrow of her loss to weigh her down, she will have the entire burden to carry. The love and sympathy of her many friends will go out to her, and they will consider it an honor to help in whatever way they can.

The loss of Brother Lewis at any time would be a bitter blow. Coming before the General Conference, it has taken a strong worker and leader out of the ranks, and made a gap in the program, since his place must be filled.

This first form of our publication must go to press before we can receive official statements from the leaders of the church or from his quorum. Further statements will be made, either in the second form, or in a succeeding issue.

Beginning at the Grass Roots

AN APPROACH TO MINISTRY

By G. L. DeLapp

Presiding Bishop of the Church

IN THESE DAYS when everything seems to be done on the basis of large-scale operations, we are quite apt to lose sight of the fact that basic to the success of any great project is the consideration and study given to the minute details and the many factors which enter into their organization. It is common knowledge that the victories achieved by our armies in and following the D-Day invasion were the result of the most careful planning and organization ever undertaken in the history of military warfare. The success of business organizations such as General Motors, General Electric, Ford, and others had their origin in the perfecting of mechanics which made possible the development of their products, while at the same time giving especial attention to the organization of the forces of management, finance, and production.

Whether it is government, industry, business, or politics, it is the attention and time given to the individual, to the development of his capacities, to the utilization of those capacities, and to the perfection of organization of individuals into groups, that determines the ultimate success as well as the social contribution made to society. The average person sees the tangible results, but fails to see the elements involved in the attainment of those results. So it is with those of us who envision the goals of the church, and in that envisionment get a comprehensive picture of the desirable objectives toward which we are working. It is not quite so easy to see the relationship of the little things we are doing each day (or fail to do each day) to the attainment of these objectives. It would seem highly essential, then, that if we are to achieve Zion, we should get to the "grass roots" of our problems and our relationships.

THE POINT OF BEGINNING in the attainment of our broad objectives must necessarily be with ministry, and ministry has its beginning in priesthood; priesthood has its beginning in and through the Aaronic order. When the Aaronic priesthood was conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, there was conferred "... the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins." Joseph Smith stated, "Accordingly we went and were baptized. I baptized him first [referring to Oliver Cowdery] and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded."

Thus, in compliance with the instructions received from the messenger who had visited them, they became members of the church, then members of the Aaronic priesthood, and the promise was given to them of the conferring in due time of the Melchisedec priesthood: "The messenger who visited us upon this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger."

Surely there is emphasized in this remarkable experience of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the great importance of the Aaronic priesthood. As we think of the need for ministry within the church, we sense the importance of Aaronic priesthood and the opportunities that it affords the church to extend ministry not only to its members, but also to those who do not have a knowledge of the gospel.

While considerable progress has been made in calling and directing the activities of the Aaronic priesthood, there is now open to us one of the greatest opportunities for expanding this ministry that we have ever enjoyed. The establishment of Zion is dependent upon our achieving a number of intermediate goals; some of these may be listed as follows:

1. Assisting the members of the church to develop a faith in God and an appreciation of the purpose of the church.
2. Strengthening our home ties through ministry to the home.
3. Strengthening the priesthood through the selection and training of men for specific functions.
4. Instructing and training our membership in home management and directing the members of the home toward attainment of special qualities in the fields of economics, business, culture and community interests.

To these could be added many more, but real progress toward their attainment is largely dependent on the type of ministry we develop and give to our church membership. The "grass roots," so far as ministry is concerned, begins with the ministry of the Aaronic priesthood.

IT IS PHYSICALLY IMPOSSIBLE for the pastor of a congregation to give more than occasional ministry to the members in our large congregations, and as our church is now situated, it is only the larger congregations which enjoy the ministry of a full-time pastor. In a given congregation of 400 members, we have represented something between 100 and 150 families. In some branches of this size, the number of families would be greater than this figure, due to the number of "divided families" or families in which there are nonmembers. The responsibility of personal visitation by one pastor to this many families would be so great that relatively few of them could expect to receive much in the way of personal ministry. This personal ministry can be had only through use of the local priesthood, and particularly through use of the Aaronic priesthood.

In a recent survey in one of the stakes, a classification of priesthood was made, covering each congregation, giving consideration to the following: personal qualifications, educational qualifications, standing among the Saints, reputation in the community, personal appearance, attitude toward the church, credit standing, moral standing, physical condition, industry, and initiative. This appraisal was on the basis of 104 different points. Using only one branch as an illustration, on only fifty of the points were members of the priesthood rated "above average," and in only five of the points of those "above average" were found men in the "excellent" column. As to educational qualifications, approximately seventy per cent had gone beyond grade school, thirty per cent had gone through high school, and fifteen per cent had at least two years of college. On the appraisal as to studiousness, fifteen per cent were rated "good," a little under fifty per cent, "average," and about thirty-five per cent, "fair." This branch was made up of some fifty-seven families.

As one examines the status of such a branch, he sees obvious need to give consideration to one of two things—either an educational program which will raise the level of the ability of the priesthood to minister, or the drawing of new blood into the group to stimulate growth in the branch. Probably the solution to this lies in doing both. The ministry of the Aaronic priesthood is most important, and if we can recognize the need for careful selection and training of the members of this order, we will be approaching our problem at the roots where we can do something about it.

WE ARE CARRYING ON in Independence, under the supervision of the Presiding Bishopric, a program of education, quorum work, and training of the Aaronic priesthood; it is an effort to tackle this problem at what we consider a most vital spot. The general area of these studies is that of ministry to the family, and the course is divided into units which include the following:

- I. The Latter Day Saint Family (Home)
- II. The Church and the Home Working Together
- III. The Minister as Counselor
- IV. Ministering in the Home (Visiting)

It is contemplated that Aaronic priesthood training in basic ministries will cover a three-year period of which the first is covered in the foregoing four divisions.

That there is need for activation of this ministry is apparent in some of the statistics that are being gathered. As a part of our program, we have monthly meetings. At the June meeting, when the President of the Church spoke, we had attendance that averaged from eight per cent in one of the congregations to sixty-five per cent of the Aaronic priesthood in another congregation; at the subsequent meeting, attendance of the Aaronic priesthood members ranged from no per cent to forty per cent. Of the total of 492 members of the Aaronic priesthood in Independence, only 165 attended this general meeting of the Aaronic priesthood at its point of highest attendance.

Other percentages of activity are of interest. Of the total of 492 members, 285 have been rated as active. Active priests, teachers and deacons are 134, forty-seven and 104 respectively—or, on a percentage basis, sixty-three per cent, forty-eight per cent and fifty-seven per cent.

These statements are not made critically, but to point out the scope of our problem and to emphasize that attainment of the goals of the church, such as community building, world-wide evangelization, economic organization within the stakes and the establishment of the storehouse, cannot be considered as immediately possible. These things are dependent upon our attacking the job in the area of improved ministry or, as we have suggested, beginning "at the grass roots."

The world prays for power, but rejects the principles in which it is.—
Wm. Penn.

“None Other Name”

Be it known unto you all that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 10-12.

By Evan A. Fry

WE ARE LIVING in a day of conflicting ideologies. Christianity is spreading through the world, but Christians are still a minority among the peoples of the world. This Christian minority is being challenged by many forms of atheism—the atheism of indifference, the atheism of mammon-worship or other forms of idolatry, the atheism of Communism. Christianity is being challenged by many other varieties of “isms” and philosophies. The world continues to be divided by leaders with conflicting claims upon the loyalties and the allegiance of the people. The world continues to be besieged by various political and social messiahs with axes to grind, some of whom ignore Jesus, and some of whom attempt to attach themselves as “tails to his kite.”

Other men are saying that Jesus is not what fundamental Christianity claims him to be—that he was only a great man, a great teacher, a great prophet—but nothing more. Some self-styled prophets in these hectic days have gone so far as to claim equality with him, or even identify themselves with him through some mystic process of reincarnation.

Since the world began, many prophets have claimed to bring the revelation of God to human minds, and to point men to the way of justice, truth, life, light, and peace. Many such prophets have been good men and have taught their followers a way of life superior to the accepted code of their day. But there is no historical proof that any of them ever proved his divinity or supernatural powers by rising from the dead—though some of them claimed they were going to do so.

HOW CAN A MAN in this day and age determine whether he who claims to be a prophet is a prophet? There are several tests which might be applied, but let us call attention to just this one. According to Revelation 19:10, “The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.” A true prophet of God will bear witness to the divinity of God’s only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, for the testimony of Jesus is the very essence and substance of prophecy. All of the Old Testament prophets looked forward to a Messiah, and testified of him; and that testimony proved their calling of God. That is why I am sure that there is something wrong with the usual translations of John 10:8, in which Jesus is made to say, “All who came before me were thieves and robbers.” But how about the ancient prophets who testified of him, looked forward to him, prepared the way for him? A better translation reads, “All who came before me who testified not of me were thieves and robbers,” and this agrees with John’s statement that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

Critics of Christianity have pointed out that there have been many who claimed to be saviors and messiahs—many who claimed to be able to solve all the world’s ills if men would accept and follow their teachings. Some even claimed virgin birth; some were crucified; some claimed immortality; some have based their claim on a theory of transmigration of souls, claiming that Christ dwelt in them in a new body and with a new name. But no savior or messiah except Jesus has proved his divinity and immortality by rising from the grave, keeping the same name, the same physical form, the same body changed to immortality.

Jesus was and is unique in several other ways. Because he conquered the power of sin and death, he became our Redeemer. Through belief on his name and obedience to his laws and principles of life, we, too, may live. Death holds no terrors for the man who has accepted and known Jesus Christ. In his name, and his name alone, we have hope of a glorious resurrection.

JESUS WAS UNIQUE in that he was the supreme revelation of God. Other men have revealed glimpses of God here and there, partially mixed with error. But Jesus was “the word made flesh, full of grace and truth,” a supreme revelation of God. Everything he did, everything he said, everything he was, revealed God. He not only told about God, he was God. He showed to men a God of love—a kind and merciful Heavenly Father. He showed to men a God of justice, a God who could not be bribed by ritualistic worship or wealth or political power. He showed to men a God of holiness, who could not be tempted with evil. He showed a God at work in the world—“My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.” He showed to men an omnipotent God—a God of power. “All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.” He showed to men an immanent God, who is not far from every one of us, in whom we live and move and have our being, a God who is conscious of the lily of the field and the sparrow that falls. Jesus is the supreme revelation of God.

Jesus is our advocate with the Father. When he left the earth, he returned to his Father. Having lived in human flesh, and subjected himself to all the pains and trials and temptations of the flesh, he can plead our case with sympathy and understanding before his Father; for “we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.” “And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous,” who knew joy and sorrow, pleasure and pain, companionship and loneliness, popularity and persecution.

Jesus is unique in that he is the supreme entity in which divergent groups and individuals may lose themselves in a common allegiance and mutual self-surrender—each losing something of himself, and each gaining vastly more than he loses. No man can be happy living for himself alone. He is happy only when he can lose himself in some great cause which gives his life worth and dignity and meaning. When a man and woman marry, each must subordinate and lose self in something which is bigger than either one of them, or both of them together—a new family unit. Some men lose themselves in a business, or a nation, or a labor movement, but every one of the entities which men create draws lines that exclude certain types or classes of other people as inferior or unwelcome. The nation absorbs only its own citizens; it has no room for foreigners. The family includes only husband and wife and children; if it includes more, it ceases to be a family. The church or labor union or corporation includes only those specifically dedicated to that particular cause. But in Christ, we find that supreme entity in which all men may lose themselves. “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.”—Galatians 3: 28. We shall have “one world” only through Christ—not by conquering each other, but by all surrendering to Christ. There is none other name given whereby men may be saved.

WHEN MEN COME to you, seeking your allegiance for this or that or the other scheme which will unify the world and make all men brothers; when they come claiming to be prophets of God, or spiritual reincarnations of Christ, remember that there is no other name given under heaven whereby man may be saved. Remember that Jesus is the only supreme revelation of God, the only Savior and Redeemer of men, our only advocate with the Father, and the only supreme entity in which all the divergent interests and loyalties of the world may be unified. There will be new prophets sent from time to time to re-interpret old truth and to bear witness to their own generation that Jesus is the Christ in the spirit of prophecy, which is the testimony of Jesus. But Jesus will not come as a reincarnation or as a new prophet or as a mystic spiritual essence. In the days in which we live “there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets . . . wherefore, if they say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth; behold he is in the secret chambers, believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of man be.” And “this same Jesus” which was taken up into heaven “shall so come in like manner as you have seen him go into heaven.” No other name is given for men’s salvation, and other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus.

What Is Faith?

FAITH is the dynamic of life. It is one of the greatest controlling forces of life in that practically every act of our lives is a demonstration of faith in something or in someone. To drive a car today is not only proof of faith in yourself, your car, but in the millions of your fellow men.

A man once feared that if he went to sleep he wouldn’t wake up. The strain killed him.

The fact that there is such a wide market for alarm clocks is proof that most of us believe we can be made to wake up. It also demonstrates a childlike faith in alarm clocks.

Faith is the great lubricant which keeps the wheels of the world turning. It is the great basis of all endeavor. All business is conducted on credit, merely another name for faith. The check you write demonstrates your faith in the bank. And the man who accepts it proves his faith in you.

Faith is not only assent, but active belief. Hopeless is the man who lacks faith in God and man. Yes, faith is the dynamic of life. If positive faith dies, a negative faith takes its place. We live by faith of one kind or another.

Questions for the Shepherds

By SEVENTY Z. Z. RENFROE

Substance of a lecture presented at the Convention of Twelve and Seventy held at Kansas City, Missouri, January 3 to 9, 1948.

For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.

How think ye? if a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?

And if it so be that he find it, verily, I say unto you, he rejoiceth more over that sheep, than over the ninety and nine which went not astray.

Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.—Matthew 18: 11-14.

IN THIS SCRIPTURE, Jesus calls our attention to a truth which is all too often overlooked by the church of today. The Master makes it very clear that the scope of the ministerial labor of the priesthood is not for the baptized believer alone, but should reach out into the entire community, by making the church the center of the spiritual life of the people. Jesus says that to accomplish this tremendous task we must leave the ninety and nine who are safe in the sheepfold and go in search of that which is lost. However, in many of our congregations the work of the ministry is expended in trying to solve problems which arise within the membership of the congregation, and therefore little is done in going out in search of those who are lost. Most of these problems arise within the church due to the inactivity of the membership, and inactivity always causes contention, strife, jealousy, and envy.

These problems can be solved only when we carefully and prayerfully organize our priesthood so that every man is able to function according to the call of God to him. As it would be almost impossible for priesthood members to reach the untold hundreds in the church community, they must instruct and train the membership of the group to assist in this great work of soul-winning.

In our endeavor to reach those who are lost, it is necessary to have a well-trained pastoral ministry. When we speak of pastoral ministry, we are not thinking only of the presiding officer of the branch, but of every active member of the priesthood of the branch. Every member of the priesthood of any group has pastoral responsibility regardless of the office he occupies in the priesthood, whether it be high priest, elder, priest, teacher or deacon. Each one has his duties in serving the church in the community.

God, speaking through the Prophet Joseph Smith, said:

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty and to act in the office in which he is appointed in all diligence.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.

In this revelation to the priesthood, God expresses his intention that every man should learn his duty and then to act, in all diligence in his particular office. The various duties of each member of the priesthood are explicitly given in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants as well as in a number of periodicals printed by the church, such as the Pastor's Manual and Priesthood Journals. But many a member of the priesthood feels that he does not have the time, aside from his ministerial labors and providing a living for his family, to make a careful study of his priesthood responsibilities. Where such a condition exists, it would be very helpful if someone could be selected to make a careful study of the duties of all offices and conduct priesthood classes so that every man might come to a better understanding of his duties. With a well-trained priesthood, we could have a much better planned missionary program.

WE HAVE BEEN QUITE SLOW, as a church, in working out a missionary program suitable to our needs. Instead of the branch working in a continued missionary program, its leaders occasionally decide they need a series of missionary meetings. So they secure the missionary, he arrives, and the series begins, after a limited amount of planning and organizing, and usually the results are disappointing. Because this condition exists in so many of our branches, we would like to make some suggestions.

Sometimes in trying to find a solution for our missionary problems, we find that a questionnaire can be a valuable aid in analyzing our problem and grasping the scope of our responsibilities. I shall present some questions that may stimulate original thinking and result in some constructive methods of missionary endeavor. These questions are directed largely to the presiding officer of the branch or group, but, as we have stated before, each member of the priesthood has pastoral responsibilities in carrying out the ministerial labors in the local church. In as much as this is true, each and every local priesthood member might well reflect on these questions and receive them as a challenge to his personal ministry.

1. What are the missionary plans of your branch?

2. Does the membership understand your missionary program?

3. Do you plan your program with your membership?

4. Do you give each member a definite missionary assignment and see to it that he has the necessary equipment for carrying out this assignment?

5. Does your branch have the necessary equipment for conducting cottage meetings?

If you do not have this equipment and do not know what to buy, consult the apostle, the seventy, or the missionary elder of your district. He will advise you in purchasing of visual aids, flannelgraphs, books and periodicals, which will be helpful in your soul-winning campaign. Those who are assigned the task of using these aids must be not only well-informed in teaching the laws of the kingdom, but also skilled in the use of this equipment so that the cottage meeting may bring inspiration and light and the non-member friend will be so inspired that he will invite the priesthood to return for additional meetings.

6. Who should conduct cottage meetings?

Only those who are well-trained and will qualify for such services. There are those who seem to feel that this missionary work should be carried on only by those under church appointment. We believe that it should be supervised by these men, but the actual work ought to be carried on by those local Saints who qualify. General church appointees may be able to conduct such services, but with the shortage we have in our missionary personnel, it seems unwise that these men be expected to carry on all such meetings. However, they should help to organize the priesthood of each branch for such work, that through the co-ordinated efforts of the priesthood and the membership of each branch, this teaching program might be carried on in cottage meetings by use of available aids and by personal contact with non-member friends. When there are a number of nonmembers interested in the work of the church, the branch should plan a series of missionary services to be held at the church as the culmination of the missionary effort of the local group. This is the time when the General Church appointee should be called in for his full-time service. This series of missionary services must be properly advertised, well-planned, and organized. Of equal importance is the fact that we tie the family life of nonmember friends with church life. By all means urge their attendance at church services, giving each one a responsibility such as he is able to perform. Always make the nonmember feel welcome at your meetings.

7. In planning your church service, do you think of the needs of the community, or do you plan your services for the church membership only?

We should plan our church life so as to take in those sheep who are lost. This means the priesthood should know the life of the people in that community and try to plan services which will bring spiritual life and ministry to all.

8. How long has it been since you have visited each member of your branch?

9. Do you have a complete roster of each person in your branch, showing names, addresses, phone numbers, and activity status?

10. When members fail to attend church, how long do you let them go without attention?

There is a danger in letting wounds fester too long. When people suddenly drop out of attendance, there is usually something wrong. If they are disgruntled or ill, they need ministry if they are to maintain spiritual health.

The pastor's duty is to have a genuine interest in the individual problems of each member, and he must act in such a way as to make the member realize the existence of this interest.

11. Have you set a time in your labors in which the members may feel free to consult with you?

12. Do you send birthday and anniversary cards, congratulations when they are in order, and expressions of sympathy in time of sorrow to the members of your group?

13. Have you a means of keeping your members informed concerning the activities of the group, including services and social functions?

14. Do you ask yourself this question in connection with the planning of each service or activity: "Why am I planning this particular type of service, and whom am I trying to reach?"

15. Is it planned that the one who is to officiate may let the Holy Spirit so direct that those who attend may receive their spiritual needs?

16. Do you inform the one who is to preside over services ahead of time so that he can make proper preparations through thought and prayer, and so be able to preside with spiritual power and dignity?

17. Are the members ever embarrassed because of the awkwardness of the one presiding or by the lack of a well-organized and well-planned service?

18. Do you consult with your departmental heads to get their co-operation before services are planned?

Services should be planned in advance so that those who attend may rightly feel that the church is a house of prayer and worship, not a house of confusion.

19. There are members of the church, and sometimes even non-members, who become delinquent and are quite sensitive to their delinquency. Do you handle your affairs in such a way so as not to embarrass them by unwise reference to their past negligence or their present activity?

I am sure that people do not appreciate having their shortcomings broadcast either by members of the priesthood or congregation. However, when a member begins to show signs of negligence, an investigation should be made by the priesthood member; if offenses and misunderstanding exist, a sincere attempt should be made to have such difficulties quickly and harmoniously corrected.

20. Do you tactfully and straightforwardly teach the men of the priesthood, both old and young, their duties to God, to the church, and to the community so that they may more adequately minister to the needs of the people?

Does each member of the priesthood of your branch show by his actions that he is a man of God, a man of faithfulness to his duties, and a man of righteousness, who radiates and exercises true leadership?

Each member of the priesthood should try to analyze himself. Such examinations are necessary in helping us to more fully achieve the goals which God expects the church to accomplish.

The pastor is only one of the many members who go to make up the membership of the branch. He is the one member who has been called by revelation to the priesthood and has been chosen by the people to preside over the branch. The presiding officer and all other members of the priesthood and congregation have great responsibilities to the community. Paul to the Corinthians said of the members that they were called to be saints. Then their responsibility is similar to that of priesthood; they must be filled with the same missionary spirit as the priesthood. Let him who is warned, warn his neighbor.

Men of the priesthood must cultivate higher ministerial standards. They must be active, well-informed in the doctrines of the church; they must be polite, kind, and trustworthy, clean in habits and dress; their conversation must be dignified and constructive.

If a priesthood member does not understand his duties and there is no one in the branch to instruct him, it would be well to call on the missionary arm of the church, so that the general church can send in a competent instructor. This man should not only teach the theory of effective ministry but also should show each priesthood member how to properly function in the office to which he has been called. What this type of instruction, each branch should be able to organize in such a way as to make it possible for its ministry to reach out to all the surrounding regions, so that missions and church schools might be organized in strategic localities.

21. How often should a branch carry on a "priesthood school," conducted by a competent general church appointee?

Such a school should be conducted at least once a year so that the branch may be taught the new methods of evangelism. There should also be instruction given in the use of any new equipment recommended for missionary aids.

A repetition of this training is necessary as there will always be points not entirely understood by the various members of the priesthood, and each year these may be ironed out and clarified, demonstrations may be made and responsibilities shown as an ever-increasing effort to help those who are failing in their ministry. In this way failure may be turned into success.

22. Why should we plan a missionary series several weeks or months in advance?

Such planning should be done so that the Saints can plan their own affairs in a way that will give time to their nonmember friends in an effort to prepare them for the services.

(a) The membership could begin early with fasting and praying for the meetings.

(b) Nonmembers should be notified in advance so they can plan their work and social functions to permit them to attend each evening. It is also important that every member attend each service.

(c) The members should provide transportation for their nonmember friends when necessary.

23. How often should a branch have a missionary series?

This depends on the life of the branch, but we believe each one should have at least two well-planned series of missionary services each year, for the evangelistic program is the life of the branch. Any group without evangelistic power ceases to live. Our Scripture lesson says that Jesus came to save that which was lost. We must all be willing to leave the ninety and nine and go in search of the lost sheep, finding those who have strayed and bringing them into the sheepfold.

The church is governed by priesthood today just as it was in days of old. These men of the priesthood are called by divine revelation, approved by the membership, ordained to officiate in the ordinances of the church. When selected, they are not to use their priesthood to gratify their pride or to exercise dominion or compulsion over the souls of men; they are to be the servants of Jesus Christ, to stand in the Master's stead to serve people. May we as members of the priesthood qualify for this great service.

A stone fit for the wall will not be left by the roadside.—Persian proverb.

Lest We Forget the Lamanite

By VERNEIL W. SIMMONS

THE doorbell rings. You open the door, and the messenger hands you a registered letter. "Are you Jones, Whitney, and Carrigan?" "No, but I'm Carrigan. I'll take it." "Sign here, please."

The messenger leaves, and you break the seal and read it. Careful, don't discard it! It is addressed to Jones and Whitney, also.

In part, this serves to illustrate the circumstances surrounding the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, delivered to the Restored Church by a heavenly messenger. The address on the Book of Mormon message reads, according to Mormon's preface: "Written to the Lamanites who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to the Jew and Gentile." We members of the Gentile church have signed for it, have broken the seal, and some of us have read it. What next?

Do we tell our friends, "You must let me show you a letter I just received . . . it tells all about where the American Indian came from"? Or have we discarded the letter and pasted the envelope in our stamp collection—"postmarked by Deity"? Or have we filed it, intending to keep it as a matter of good business, but feel it nonessential to our present program?

One wonders what the Great Postmaster General would say if the other addressees should ask him, "Say, when are we going to get that letter you promised us?"

In the day when the Book of Mormon was first published, the church was clearly admonished to fulfill its part in forwarding the message to the Lamanite. In section 2, paragraph 6, of the Doctrine and Covenants, we read:

And for this very purpose are these plates preserved which contain these records, that the promises of the Lord might be fulfilled, which he made to his people; and that the Lamanites might come to the knowledge of their fathers, and that they may believe the gospel and rely upon the merits of Jesus Christ, and be glorified through faith in his name, and that through their repentance they might be saved.

In the first half of the nineteenth century, little was known of the Indian population in the Americas. The North American Indian had been pushed beyond the Mississippi River by the advance of the white man from the east. In 1831, the church's first mission was to the Lamanites in eastern Kansas. This missionary journey did not result in the conversion of any appreciable part of the Lamanites who are a remnant of the Book of Mormon peoples. It would appear that there is a great work yet to be done, if we are to be obedient to the commands of Deity in working among the remnant of the seed of Lehi.

PERHAPS if we sense the importance of the "remnant of Jacob" to our hope of establishing Zion, we may take more seriously our responsibility in delivering the message entrusted to us. The Book of Mormon contains many "covenants" made with the "fathers" of the present-day Lamanites. Many of these contain promises concerning the establishment of the New Jerusalem.

And it came to pass that while the angels were ministering unto the disciples, behold, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and ministered unto them.¹

. . . . when they had all given glory unto Jesus, he said unto them, Behold, now I finish the commandment which the Father hath commanded me concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Israel.²

. . . . And the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you this land for your inheritance.³

. . . . Behold, this people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob; and it shall be a new Jerusalem.⁴

. . . . And my people who are a remnant of Jacob, shall be among the Gentiles, yea, in the midst of them, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he go through both treadeth down and tearth in pieces, and none can deliver.⁵

. . . . Yea, wo be unto the Gentiles, except they repent, for it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Father, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots, and I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strongholds.⁶

. . . . But if they will repent, and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come in unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also, as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem.⁷

. . . . And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst and then shall the work of the Father commence, at that day even when this gospel shall be preached among the remnant of this people.⁸

Nearly two thousand years ago, these promises were made by Christ to a small group of people gathered about a temple in the Land Bountiful, somewhere on the American continents. Following his crucifixion, Jesus appeared to the Nephites in this land, fulfilling the words of their prophets. He brought them the assurance that the land on which they lived was to be their perpetual inheritance—a promised land upon which the New Jerusalem should be built.

Following Christ's visit to the Nephites, it is recorded that all the people were converted to his gospel, and for nearly two hundred years they lived under the gospel law. However, this did not fulfill the terms of the preceding prophecy, for the Nephites did not build the New Jerusalem. While among them, Jesus foretold the fate of their nation, reassuring them that, in time to come, his church would be set up again on this continent. He was to establish his church within the Gentile nation, and from that people the gospel was to come again unto the Nephites, a remnant of Jacob.

In that "latter day," this remnant should become a mighty people in the midst of the nations about them, even as a "young lion among the flocks of sheep." Jesus' words were plain: "I will establish my church among them [the Gentiles] . . . and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob, [Lehi's seed] . . . that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem." It is interesting to note that the "remnant of Jacob" is to be the principal agent in building the New Jerusalem, assisted by the Gentiles. The following verses in this prophecy emphasize that it is in the day that this gospel shall be preached unto the "remnant of Jacob" that the work of the Father shall commence in the gathering together of his dispersed peoples.

And now, Joseph, my last born, whom I have brought out of the wilderness of my afflictions, may the Lord bless thee forever, for thy seed shall not utterly be destroyed.⁹

. . . . And there shall raise up one mighty among them, who shall do much good, both in word and in deed, being an instrument in the hands of God, with exceeding faith.

To work mighty wonders, and do that thing which is great in the sight of God, unto the bringing to pass much restoration unto the house of Israel, and unto the seed of thy brethren.

And now blessed art thou, Joseph.¹⁰

Lehi, the leader of the colony which left Jerusalem 600 years before the birth of Christ, left this special blessing upon the head of his youngest son Joseph. From it we learn:

1. The seed of Joseph, son of Lehi, should not be utterly destroyed.

2. The "one mighty" who should assist in restoring the house of Israel should be of the seed of Joseph, son of Lehi.

We are told in the Book of Mormon that Lehi and his family are of the lineage of Manasseh, oldest son of Joseph of Egypt. Since Joseph Smith's patriarchal blessing reveals him to be of the house of Ephraim, he does not fulfill the above prophecy. It must be that out of the scattered seed of Joseph, son of Lehi, one shall yet arise to bring about "much restoration to the house of Israel." Evidently, then, this "one mighty" must arise out of the remnant known as the American Indian. Therefore the establishment of the kingdom of God does have a direct connection with our delivery of the Book of Mormon to, and the conversion of, the Lamanite-Nephite remnant.

IF it be true that the establishment of the kingdom of God is to be concurrent with the conversion of the "remnant of Jacob," then there are several things for us, as a church, to do. We must learn who these peoples are, where they are, and then take the Book of Mormon to them.

Perhaps we are too prone to believe that all the Indians of the American continents are descendants of the sons of Lehi. We do not know this to be true, and it is not borne out by scientific study. Today's anthropologists find many different types of peoples in different portions of the New World and postulate the theory of a multiple origin. Nowhere in the Book of Mormon do we find a statement that those people were the sole inhabitants of this land. There may have been others unknown to them.

If we are to convert the seed of Joseph, then we must have some idea of where this "seed" is to be found. Since we cannot rule out the possibility of other migrations, we must know what portion of the land is likely to contain the descendants of Lehi.

Because the record of the Nephites was found in upper New York state, many have come to believe that the Lamanites and Nephites were spread over all the area now known as the United States. But we cannot find proof for this belief; on the contrary, serious study will lead us to the conclusion that they never inhabited this portion of North America during Book of Mormon history.

When Cortez and his armies reached the land of the Aztecs, they discovered the highest Indian culture on the North American continent. Peru, in South America, was the only other comparable Indian civilization. The North American Indians, with the exception of the Pueblo group, were scattered, nomadic tribes. Dr. Edgar L. Hewett, foremost authority on primitive cultures of the southwest, states that the vast community houses of the Pueblos were built during the second millennium of our time program, beginning with the tenth century A.D. He includes the construction of the huge earth structures of the Ohio mound builders in this same time sequence.¹¹ Dendrochronology, the science of dating by tree rings, has established the dates of southwestern sites quite definitely. Hewett, with other modern archaeologists, believes these cultures to be the highest in the United States previous to the coming of the white man. Since these civilizations came hundreds of years after the Book of Mormon was written, we must rule them out in our search for the land of Lehi's people.

IT is a recognized fact that when this country was first discovered by Europeans, the largest populations of native peoples were in the middle American area, and in the mountainous country of Peru. Why, if the seed of Lehi had previously lived within the greater portion of North America, would they have left the broad, fertile plains and mountain valleys where there was room for all, to migrate across deserts and rocky, barren lands, to the rain forests of Mexico and Guatemala, there to build up the culture found by Cortez? The Nephites and Lamanites were Hebrews, a race accustomed to living in a small geographical area. The area of Palestine is about one hundred forty miles long, twenty-three miles wide in the north, and eighty miles wide in the south. This was the homeland of the Israelites for generations. Intensely nationalistic, they would not be absorbed by another people, even in captivity, and returned to their own land at every opportunity.

It seems reasonable to believe that the people of Lehi had the same racial characteristics. We know that in the land of Nephi, the righteous engaged in warfare with the Lamanites for centuries without showing any intention of giving up their land. It was only when God commanded Mosiah to take the righteous and leave the land that they moved northward and discovered the people of Zarahemla. Later, when the Lamanites attempted to force them out of Zarahemla, they resisted just as stubbornly as before, even though there was ample room northward to move into. Their record indicates that they were not a nomadic people, drifting from place to place, but that they built up the country solidly until "the people were as numerous almost, as it were the sands of the sea," according to the words of Mormon.

In the Book of Mosiah there is the story of a searching party that went from the land of Zarahemla to the land of Nephi to learn the fate of an earlier group who had returned to the land of their first inheritance. The record explains that the searching party did not know the way and was forced to wander forty days before reaching the land of Nephi. In a later chapter in the same book, we read of Alma and his people who fled from the oppression of the king in the land of Nephi to a land eight days distant. When they were eventually found by the Lamanites, they again fled and traveled thirteen days to reach Zarahemla. This gives us a possible distance of twenty-one days travel time between the two lands. We know that the people traveled with their goods, their children, and their stock, so we are safe in assuming that they did not advance many miles a day. The Nephites had lived this short distance from the land of Zarahemla for nearly 400 years before they learned of its existence. This strengthens our belief that they remained true to their racial heritage; they were not explorers by nature.

In all ages when God has worked with a righteous group of people, the principle of the gathering has been employed. Enoch was instructed to gather his people together into one place so they might become more righteous. Jared led his people to this land that they might live together in harmony. The Jews, as a chosen people, lived in a tiny area in close contact with one another. Nephi gathered his people into one land that they might be separate from their wicked brethren, and he taught them to live in city-communities. Their numbers were few, comparatively speaking, and they could not have covered large areas of land and still have been united. Nearly six centuries passed before the Nephites spread beyond the "narrow neck" and inhabited the land northward. When Christ came to these people and brought his kingdom gospel, they were an already gathered group. They did not have to be commanded to rally to a center place, as do the peoples of this age, and their period of kingdom development bore immediate fruit. Certainly they must have occupied a limited area.

WE have indicated that the Nephites, being of Hebrew lineage, would have the instinct to cling to their lands, no matter what befell them. This is graphically portrayed in the story of their final battle. Knowing they were outnumbered and their victory uncertain, they still chose to fight it out rather than concede their land to the Lamanites. Certainly they had an opportunity, during the four-year period of preparation, to move out of the land; but they did not do this. If, for a period of a thousand years of Book of Mormon history, they stayed in the same area, we have every reason to believe that we shall find the remnants of those people still living in the area their forefathers occupied.

Today we find the distribution of Indian peoples to be much the same as when Columbus discovered the New World. In Carleton Beal's recent book, America South, he lists the Indian population in the following ratio:

Country	Total Population	Indian Population	Indian Percentage
Guatemala	3,500,000	2,100,000	60 %
Bolivia	3,000,000	1,500,000	50 %
Ecuador	3,500,000	1,750,000	50 %
Peru	7,000,000	3,500,000	50 %
Mexico	20,000,000	5,000,000	25 %
Argentina	14,000,000	300,000	2.1 %
United States	135,000,000	370,000	.027%

These figures still do not give the true picture. In Guatemala, the remaining forty per cent of the population is largely mestizo, mixed Indian and Spanish. Besides the 5,000,000 of pure Indian blood in Mexico, fifty per cent more is composed of mestizos. We find large percentages of Indians in all Central American countries with the exception of Costa Rica, which is populated almost entirely by Spaniards. Indian predominance is lower in the other South American countries but still makes up a substantial part of the population. Argentina, on the extreme end of the southern continent, had very few Indians at the time of Spanish colonization and has about the same number today.¹²

It appears from the preceding table that Mexico, Guatemala, and the middle western countries of South America have an Indian population far in excess of that in the United States. Therefore we should give close attention to the possibility of those lands fitting the geography of the Book of Mormon.

In attempting the location of Book of Mormon lands, let us examine the geography of those areas described by Mormon in his abridged account of the Book of Alma. Since Mormon lived in the fourth century after the crucifixion of Christ (when the face of the land was greatly changed), we may regard his description of topography as largely similar to what may exist today. Perhaps most familiar is the term "narrow neck of land" which is described as dividing the "land southward" from the "land northward." The conclusion is often too quickly reached that this must have been the Isthmus of Panama, the most narrow portion of land between the two continents. The following reasons will indicate why we do not believe that the "narrow neck" can be the Isthmus of Panama.

GOING first to the story of the Jaredites, as told by Ether, we find that this narrow neck marked the southern boundary of their lands. They used the land southward, called Bountiful by the Nephites, as a game preserve; and the Jaredites built a huge city by the sea, close to the narrow pass. In the time of the Nephites, this narrow passage was traveled rather extensively. People from the land of Zarahemla moved north of the isthmus and settled in Desolation. A large city, called Desolation, was built near the pass, also near the sea. Hagoth built a shipyard at this place and shipped lumber to the people further north, because the latter land was barren of trees. Trade was carried on between the lands across this territory. Close to this passage were abandoned cities of the Jaredites, upon which the Nephites built their centers. During the decline of the Nephite nation, their armies fought Lamanite armies back and forth across this area, first one and then the other being victorious. Many relics of the cultures which overlapped at this point should still be extant today.

In describing the lands south of the "narrow neck," Mormon says:

Thus the land on the northward was called Desolation, and the land on the southward was called Bountiful; . . .

And now it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite, on the line Bountiful, and the land Desolation, from the east to the west sea;

And thus the land of Nephi, and the land of Zarahemla, were nearly surrounded by water; there being a small neck of land between the land northward, and the land southward.

And it came to pass that the Nephites had inhabited the land Bountiful even from the east unto the west sea.¹³

At another point he adds:

And it came to pass that they did multiply and spread, and did go forth from the land southward to the land northward, and did spread insomuch that they began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south, to the sea north, from the sea west, to the sea east.¹⁴

It would appear that assuming the "narrow neck" to be Panama, just because it is the narrowest point, is hardly sufficient to locate the land decisively. The lands southward from the isthmus, nearly surrounded by water must fit into the picture also.

Turn to a map of Central America and the southern part of Mexico, and there it will be found that much of the area is nearly surrounded by water; also there will be found a region that appears to be embraced in the statement "they began to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south, to the sea north, from the sea west, to the sea east."¹⁵

The Isthmus of Tehuantepec, located in southern Mexico, is a much more likely counterpart for the "narrow neck of land" described by Mormon. Although it is somewhat wider than the Isthmus of Panama, it does answer the requirement of a passage linking a southern area nearly surrounded by water to a land northward. Many ruins testify to its early occupation, in contrast to Panama which has produced few, if any, remains of very early cultures.

Eight years ago, Matthew Sterling, a well-known archaeologist, began work in southern Mexico, resulting in the discovery of a culture which today is accepted by most archaeologists as being contemporary with those unnamed cultures labeled Archaic. This archaic period is roughly dated between 500 B. C. and A.D. 300, and the La Venta culture, so named for the first site opened in the state of Vera Cruz, is the first of that period to be definitely isolated and named. The cities and cultural remains of this distinctive people are found in various sites in the Isthmus of Tehuantepec from the east to the west sea.

IN the reports covering the discoveries of these eight years, we find massive stone carvings, giant heads, altars, steles, and other objects of art described. Can we attribute all these things to the Nephites?

In the law of Moses, we read:

Ye shall make you no idols nor graven images, neither rear you up a standing image, neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it, for I am the Lord your God.¹⁶

Thou shalt not make thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth.¹⁷

The Nephites were Hebrews, and they kept the law of Moses until Christ came among them. Proof of this we find in the story of Abinadi, who was burned at the stake by an unrighteous group for preaching the necessity of keeping the law of Moses. And he specifically quoted the passages from Leviticus and Exodus.¹⁸ It would seem extremely unlikely that the Nephites can be credited with carving the many figures of men and animals found among the ruins of the great cities throughout Central America. In connection with this thought, it is interesting to note the following, taken from the report by Sterling:

In our big stratigraphic trenches by the river, we found an early occupation site of the monument carvers, buried under 20 feet of soil. Above this and ten feet beneath the surface was another occupation level with a different style of pottery and different clay figures, showing that after the site had been abandoned by its original builders, another people had arrived and occupied it. . . .

Locating and clearing these stones [referring to several stone carvings described in previous paragraphs] was not easy. Many were almost completely buried. All were hidden in dense jungle and some were gripped in the roots of enormous trees. Most were on the sides or bottoms of the steep ravines which here and there cut through the site.

Our conclusion was that the later people revealed by our stratigraphic trenches had rolled the stones to their present locations, with great effort in an attempt to dispose of them, or at least get them out of sight.¹⁹

In many archaeological reports, we find reference to the discovery of such objects which have apparently been deliberately broken and defaced. If the Nephites moved into the land of the Jaredites and found such idols in their abandoned cities, it seems reasonable to assume that they would have made some such effort to dispose of them.

Here in the vicinity of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec are found evidences of an overlapping of cultures, one of which destroyed the "graven images" of the previous group. Here is an area scattered with cities of "cement" and other traces of a large population. Here the Spaniards found a great civilization, built upon the ruins of previous cultures.

Concerning the antiquity of the ruins in Panama, the modern archaeologist has this to say:

No remains have been unearthed in Panama to which an age of more than two or three centuries before the Spanish conquest can be given.²⁰

At the present time no trace of early migration to South America has been detected in the Isthmian region.²¹

Added to such evidence is the fact that the mountains and high plateaus of western South America certainly do not fit the description of a land nearly surrounded by water.

One other statement of importance is this:

An examination of the topography, vegetation and climate of Panama and the adjacent territory reveals a singularly and surprisingly difficult approach to South America today. Dire necessity alone would force primitive people to attempt the passage of such regions, especially if the difficulties of travel were enhanced by lack of geographical knowledge.²²

Herbert C. Lank, in his book on the Pan American Highway through South America, describes the problem of crossing the territory from the Canal Zone to the Colombian border as one of the major holdups to the completion of the highway. The problem of building a road through this section is so great that other means have been considered, such as putting in a ferry to transport cars to the Colombian coast. It seems unlikely that this portion of land could have been traveled so extensively as we know the "narrow neck" was during the time of Nephite history.

IF we confine the Book of Mormon peoples to Central America, we are then faced with the existence of the Indian nation in Peru, which reveals so many traits similar to the middle American civilizations. There is much archaeological proof that the Peruvian civilization had a common origin with that of the middle American and as much more to indicate that there was an early separation of the two peoples. The Spanish historians recorded many legends found among the Indians at the time of the conquest of Peru which fit nicely into Book of Mormon history. They had the story of the period of darkness at Christ's crucifixion, the tradition of the "bearded white man" who gave them laws by which to live, a belief in the resurrection of the body after death—in fact, so many beliefs similar to Christianity that some historians thought one of the apostles had traveled in this land. But in many ways there was a marked difference between the two Indian centers. The religious concepts of the Peruvians were very different from those of the Aztecs. They worshiped a Creator God, known as Wiracocha. They did not have a war god, such as the Aztecs had, and they did not offer human sacrifices.

It is believed by some that the migration from middle America occurred very early, since there is no indication, thus far, that the Peruvians had any knowledge of calendar inscriptions or the art of hieroglyphic writing, as did the Mayas of Central America.

The late Philip Ainsworth Means, an authority on Peruvian civilizations, in discussing the possible connection between the two countries, makes this statement:

Among the thousands of pottery vessels from Nicaragua only one was obviously Mayan; among tens of thousands of specimens from Costa Rica only one jar may possibly be Mayan. Nothing at all which beyond argument must be of Mayan manufacture is known from Panama or South America.²³

Surely the land of Peru could not be the land of Nephi which carried on extensive trade with the other lands northward.

Did a group of the Nephitic peoples migrate to the lands of Peru? Perhaps one of Hagoth's ships, which sailed away and was never heard of more was responsible for carrying a colony there. These ships, mentioned in Alma's writings, have been used to show the possibility of Nephites being carried to the Hawaiian and other Pacific islands . . . why not Peru?

Mormon wrote but a fraction of the things on the numerous records he had in his possession. Of the groups of people that occasionally moved out from the main body, either knowledge of them was lost (which is probable) or Mormon did not feel their actions important enough to record in his abridgement. In any event, we may assume that a migration from the mother country to Peru occurred.

WE now have a picture of the Book of Mormon lands. The evidence seems to indicate that they existed only in Central America, bounded on the south by the Isthmus of Panama (a virtual barrier rather than a passage way), and divided centrally by the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, with the land Desolation northward in the Mexico of today.

Another problem must be dealt with before we can complete this picture.

If the lands and peoples which Mormon described were not in the United States, then we must answer the question: How did the record of his people come to be in western New York state?

The final battle of the Nephites took place at the hill that Mormon called Cumorah. Indications are that this hill was in the land of Desolation, not far distant from the narrow passage. In the description of the last years of the Nephites, we read of many battles being fought across the narrow neck of land. In the year A.D. 375, the city of Desolation, which was close to the isthmus and also near the sea, fell to the Lamanites, and the Nephites could not retake it. But they did hold the major portion of their land until A.D. 380. In that year the Lamanites came again, and from then on the Nephites were forced to retreat. There is no indication during this period, from A.D. 375 to A.D. 380, that the people fled from their land. On the contrary, they desperately defended the portion of land they still retained. It seems incredible to think that between the time they lost the city Desolation, clearly located near the "narrow neck" and the sea,²⁴ and the time, five years later, when they began the gathering to Hill Cumorah, that a whole nation could have traveled from the isthmus to the hill in New York state.

Mormon was granted a period of four years in which to gather all his people together, and he chose Hill Cumorah for the gathering place because here "we had hopes to gain advantage over the Lamanites."²⁵ Mormon had been a soldier since the age of fifteen. For years he had led his people in battle and knew the art of warfare. The area about Hill Cumorah, or the hill itself, must have offered the best advantages possible for the defense of his people. This fact is doubly emphasized when we realize that the Jaredites chose this same location when they gathered for their battle of extermination.²⁶

In their story, we learn of two leaders and their armies fighting back and forth across the land from sea to sea. Coriantumr pursued Lib to the western sea; here Lib turned upon his enemy and drove him back eastward. Lib was killed in battle, and his brother Shiz took his place. He forced Coriantumr eastward to the eastern seashore. From here the armies moved inland again and finally fought their final battle at the hill Ramah, the same hill which the Nephites called Cumorah.²⁷ It is extremely unlikely that these battles could have been fought from sea to sea, across a country the width of the United States, though it would be entirely possible in the narrow area of Mexico.

I think anyone who has visited the hill in New York will agree that it can hardly be considered as an outstanding strategic point for defense in a battle involving hundreds of thousands of people. And we have no archaeological evidence of any kind to indicate that two mighty races of people fought to the death in the valley about the hill. Not only should there be evidence in weapons of war but in all the artifacts used in everyday living. For around Mormon's Hill Cumorah, the Jareditic and Nephitic nations spent their last few years. But today there is no evidence of such an occupation in the vicinity of the Hill Cumorah in New York state.

There is one other point of great interest concerning the hill which Mormon described. It was during the four years that he lived at this location, during the gathering of his people, that he made the plates and wrote the abridgment of the sacred records. Gold must have been available to him, either in the hill itself or near by. And it was here, just before the final great battle, that he hid all the sacred records, with the exception of the abridgment which he had just made. This he gave to his son Moroni with instructions concerning it. But following the battle, he again took the gold plates of the abridgment and wrote the last chapter in the history of his people—the account of their overwhelming destruction. When Moroni first writes on the plates, it is much later; his father has been killed in battle, and he is alone and without ore to make more plates. In the twenty years or more that pass between Moroni's first writing and his last, we see ample time for him to have traveled from his own land to the distant country where he hid the records. Considering the many evidences that point to the unlikelihood of the hill in New York being the one in which Mormon hid the sacred records, we can only assume that Moroni traveled under divine guidance to this land; and then, in memory of his father and his people, he gave the name Cumorah to the hill in the state of New York where he finally deposited the gold plates of the abridgment.

THE gospel of the kingdom must be preached to the remnant of the seed of Jacob. God preserved their record for centuries that we might have the opportunity to minister to them and to restore them to their proper place in the family of God. We, of the lineage of Ephraim, they, of the seed of Manasseh—both descendants of Joseph, the son of Jacob—must together build the New Jerusalem in this, Joseph's land. We cannot exclude Lehi's people. This is their country by ancient covenant; they dreamed of the New Jerusalem centuries before our day.

If, as logical evidence indicates, the main body of the Nephite-Lamanite remnant exists today in the lands of their former greatness, then we have some problems to meet in carrying the gospel to them. Foremost is the problem of language. In Latin America, the official language is Spanish, but many tribes speak only their own native tongue. Those who would minister to the Latin-American peoples will find a knowledge of Spanish essential. Second in importance is an understanding of the Indian, his culture, his economic problems. How great is the challenge to the young people of our church who are convinced of the necessity of carrying the gospel to the American Indian of Latin America in this, the latter day. We do not imply that it is unnecessary to carry the message to the scattered groups in our own nation, but we do feel this to be a minor step in reaching the main remnant.

Perhaps one may feel that many, many years are needed to convert the Indian into a useful member of society, fit to associate with us in the building of the kingdom. If so, the chapters in the Book of Alma dealing with the ministry of the sons of Mosiah among the Lamanites make interesting reading.²⁸ In the story of the sons of Mosiah, we may have a shadow of things to come. They testified that because they went among their brethren with mercy and love in their hearts, they were able to bring thousands of them to a knowledge of the truth. Their friends laughed at them when they said they were going to the lands of the Lamanites to preach. It was not thought that the Lamanites could be convinced of the wrongness of their traditions, nor be taught to live peaceably among the righteous group of Nephites. Yet God gave Ammon, Aaron, and their brethren such power that they converted whole cities, and so complete was that conversion that they never again carried

Our Gospel Is to All Nations

THE recent appeal of leading Indians prompts the writing of this article. Not only has the work "been at a standstill" as our brother of the Cheyenne tribe asserts, but for years those noble men of the various tribes have pled:

Please come and hold a series of meetings in our community buildings, giving our young people a chance to hear and understand the Restored Gospel as our older people do. We know it is true, but the children do not know. Since the work was stopped among our people, we are starving for the bread of life. Why should this be permitted? Some of our people have joined other churches, but they would all come back if they had a chance to hear the message again, and if the Comforter could be enjoyed once more witnessing to our souls of the truth. We want our babies blessed; we want authoritative baptisms and laying on of hands as the Bible provides. We have seen these things done among our people by the men who brought the Angel's Message and the Book of Mormon to us. We are sure this book was written by our ancestors, when they had prophets and seers among them, as taught by all our traditions which go back to those days.

On my last trip with Jack Koshiway, he made this statement to a house full of Iowa Indians near Perkins, Oklahoma, after I had preached to them in their new community building. "We older Indians know this work is true. Our Indian religion is only a lodge, but the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church is the true church, and our young people are starving for that knowledge and a real drink of the 'living water.'"

Here are a few of the letters I have received since my picture appeared in the Herald (issue of June 5). One is from Charles Wicks of Kingfisher, Oklahoma. He was an Episcopalian minister when he first heard me preach near Kingfisher to the Cheyenne tribe. He had been hearing our preaching for two years when President F. M. Smith and I met with a multitude of Indians on the Otoe reservation. After hearing us preach, he rose and asked permission to speak. I told him to go ahead. This is what he told the people: "I am convinced these men have the Comforter, and that is what we need." Here is the letter he wrote me on June 8.

Dear Brother Case:

This morning when the Saints' Herald with your picture in it reached us here in our humble home, we felt the great power of the Spirit come on us. I just gave a loud utterance praising God, and my wife wept for joy. We have been at a standstill, but now we feel like going forward again for the service of the Lord Jesus Christ and the good of Zion, as the field is white already to harvest. I am one of the laborers, and I am going to work again for the great day. So your missionary work is still in force among the Lamanites, although many of them that you converted and baptized have gone to be with their Master and Savior. Not long ago I visited our beloved Sister Inez Bull and had a wonderful prayer meeting. She had been sick, now she is well again. I am going to try to attend the Pawnee Reunion.

That is all.

Your brother in Christ,

ELDER CHAS. WICKS.

THE next is from a splendid worker and excellent preacher, District President and Pastor Barney Sharp, a Cherokee Indian elder, who wrote to me of his visit with Brother Ralph Dent, head chief of the Otoe tribe. He is a priest in the church. His father, Hoke Dent, was an elder. They, with others, were baptized in 1920 by Brother Gomer T. Griffiths at the Red Rock Reunion.

Dear Brother Case:

I was up in Oklahoma near Perry last week and visited an Indian chief by the name of Ralph Dent. I had a fine visit with him and his good wife. I am sure you will remember Chief Dent of the Otoe tribe. He spoke well of you, but was very much discouraged because no missionaries ever come to see them any more.

They told me that there are several Latter Day Saint Indians there yet who are holding to the faith, but that some had joined other churches. Chief Dent is still a member . . . Their daughter won't join anything else and tells people that she believes the Latter Day Saint Gospel. I had a short visit with the daughter; she has a high school education and is very intelligent. I asked them to attend the Pawnee Reunion in August, and they promised to do so, if you would attend, so I told them that I would write you and see if you could arrange to be there. If you can, I think that it would be a very wise thing for you to go right away and see them. It seems a pity to lose all the good work that you have done among them, and if someone doesn't look after them, they will soon be lost to the work. Nearly all of the young people are well educated and will make fine Latter Day Saints if they are looked after as they should be.

Chief Dent seemed to enjoy my visit; he showed me his headdress, belt, moccasins, and other ornaments. He had me to put them on and stand before the mirror to see how I would look. He wanted my picture, but I did not have any camera with me. He gave me a name (Pawnee) which in their language means sharp; I understand that this was the greatest honor a chief could give a friend.

It seems hard for them to understand why the missionaries quit coming to see them, and my heart goes out in sympathy for them. I wish I could recall a few years and take up the gavel where you had to lay it down. I should like to minister to those starving souls and develop them into the kind of Saints they are capable of becoming. May God send someone to help them. . . . I don't see how we can afford to stop now, after we have them developed up to where we can do something with them.

Brother Case, go to see them if you can, and you may show this letter to President Smith if you desire, for I think those Saints should be cared for. A visit from you would do them more good than anything. Chief Dent would certainly like to see Brother Hoebert (Hubert) Case.

With kindest regards,

T. B. SHARP.

PERMIT me to say our work was growing rapidly twenty years ago with the Omaha, Kaws, Otoes, Iowas, and Cheyennes, other tribes becoming interested also. At one time I met with thirteen tribal leaders whose people numbered into the hundreds and were meeting near Calumet, Oklahoma. After listening to the sermon, all those leaders invited me to visit and preach to their respective tribes. That sermon was delivered with a veritable endowment of the Spirit that moved them to repentance.

Still another great meeting was held on the hill near Clinton, Oklahoma. Four western tribes, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas, and Comanches, met, and I preached to them with four interpreters—each one speaking to his own tribe. This preaching was in great power and demonstration of the Spirit, and a group was organized near Clinton with Brother Ernest Watson as their leader. He was a Cheyenne Indian. Much more could be said, but I plead for your prayers for this starving people who beg of us to feed them spiritual food.

Economy Hints for Housewives

From the Women of Plymouth, Massachusetts, Branch

1. To make soap last longer, unwrap at once to dry.

2. You save money to make your own shampoo at home. This can be done in two ways:

a. Chip up a cake of Castile soap, add a quart of hot water and boil until dissolved.

b. Put all small "ends" of pure mild soap into a pint jar. Fill jar with boiling water. Let stand to form jelly. Stir occasionally.

3. An inexpensive meat substitute dish:

Make a cream sauce, add generous portion of butter, onion juice, dried or fresh parsley (if available), and seasoning, sliced or diced cold-boiled potatoes, and sliced hard-boiled eggs. Serve hot.

4. Sometimes foods we think are cheaper are more expensive in the long run if they lack the essential body-building elements. In spite of all the radio ads to the contrary, there is not the real nutritive goodness in these puffed and flaked prepared cereals that you will find in a dish of cooked cereal—oatmeal, Ralston, or Wheatena. It is a fine investment in health for adults and children to get the habit of eating cooked cereal in the morning. This can be varied in many ways, serving it with sliced fruits in season, or dates, raisins, and other dried fruits. Try it with brown sugar or raw sugar instead of white sugar or molasses.

5. Speaking of molasses—a doctor once told me that if people would use more molasses, they would have less anemia. The present-day trend is all for chocolate, sugar cakes, and cookies. Remember the good old molasses cookies and gingerbread?

We need to revive the use of molasses.

6. If you use gas for cooking, anticipate your cooking time needs. Don't wait until the last few minutes to prepare something, and then turn the gas full on. Start it cooking earlier with very low gas. Low gas turns the meter much more slowly. Here a little forethought will save many pennies on your fuel bill.

7. If you cook with electricity, never leave your unit turned on high heat after your kettle starts to boil. Turn it at once to low, or if it needs only short cooking, turn it off completely, and it will finish cooking on stored heat. Always cover the utensil when cooking with both gas and electricity. This saves fuel and time.

8. When cooking fruits, add the sugar the last two minutes of cooking, and you will use less of it.

9. To get more juice more readily from lemons, oranges, and grapefruit, let stand in hot water before juicing. This will also make them peel much more easily and cleaner.

10. To make your linens last longer, fold them differently, never in the same creases. They tend to wear in the creases. Also reverse your sheets top and bottom, and use them on right and wrong sides. Ironing sheets wears them out faster.

11. Open door of refrigerator as little as possible to save electricity. Think ahead and get out as many things as you know you will need at one time in preparing a meal. In clearing the table, remove all things that are going back in the refrigerator and place them on top of the refrigerator or on a stand right beside it. When everything is assembled there, open the refrigerator and put them all in at the one time.

12. In cleaning painted walls or other things, keep your Spic and Span or other cleaning solution in a separate pan. Always rinse the cloth you are cleaning with in clean water before you put it back in the cleaning solution. This keeps your solution clean, and you can use it a long time without having to change it. If it cools, set the pan on the stove and heat it.

13. To make brown sugar that has become hard and lumpy soft, set it in a warm oven (this will make it soften quickly) or put it in the bread box for a day or night.

14. If you have little children, you can save many pennies by learning to make their clothes. This is one of the biggest ways a mother can help to stretch her dollars. Start when they are little and follow along through the years. Try it on yourself, too.

15. You can save the expense of the annual varnishing of some floors by keeping the sand off them. If your children bring in sand and you leave it there, it acts as sandpaper would when walked on, and you soon lose your floor finish. Eternal vigilance in keeping the sand out or "up" will pay dividends in this way.

16. If you have a family and are about to purchase a refrigerator, there is no economy in buying a small size. The percentage of food spoilage is much greater in a small box with crowded conditions than in a larger one. There must be space for air to circulate freely around the various articles in your refrigerator to keep the food well.

17. Take the butter out of the refrigerator long enough before the meal to make it easily spreadable. If butter is too hard to spread, much of it is wasted.

Don't Let Daughter Cook Her Goose

IS YOUR DAUGHTER planning on getting married? Is your daughter sixteen? Do you even have a daughter? Then I beg of you, start now before it is too late to teach her to cook. Don't send your little lovely off, a blushing bride, without first fortifying her against the frying pan and the boxes of ready-mix.

I firmly believe that the most difficult adjustment in marriage is made by the indigestion-ridden young husband who turns a bilious green every night, remembers Mother's well-set board, and says nothing. Who knows—maybe many a good husband has been transformed into a sour old grouch by his early-gained ulcers from his bride's haphazard cooking.

Please don't let that little dream kitchen become a nightmare to her. All the gadgets in the world won't help her if the soup's a greasy mess and the gravy has lumps in it as big as junior's Adam's apple.

Now, take Grandma, for instance. She was quite a girl, we've heard. You can bet your bottom dollar great-grandmother saw that Grandma knew how to cook. She didn't work in an office perhaps, but when she got married (which is most girls' aim) she wasn't out of her class, either.

So, your daughter objects some, especially if she is quite young. Never mind, be firm about it. The objecting she does now won't equal the wailing she will do later on when she finds out what a goony she was not to absorb a few of the elements of good cooking.

Give her a cookbook for her very own, allowing her to explore it without maternal interference. Granted that the price of food is high. With a little intelligent supervising (without snoopervising) you can protect your investment. The price is little to pay to protect daughter from being miserable in her own kitchen (where she will spend approximately one third of her life).

By LOUISE SCOTT WRIGLEY

Show her what fun it can be while she is young and everything is a new adventure. It will become a pleasant habit. Encourage her to try simple dishes on her own. Forget the mess she may make at first. She will work out a system for herself, and it may surprise you. It might even be better than yours!

THE TIME WILL COME when she might have to entertain the boss and his wife at dinner. She can't make her husband wait five years until she is really good at preparing a meal before he invites someone home. Give her a chance to learn that she can cook a good company feast without having her heart in her mouth every minute until the dessert dishes are cleared away.

True, being a good cook comes with experience but, crowded by other household duties, the bride seems a mighty long time working on it. That is, when cooking can get very dreary unless it is easy. During this practice period, too, husband begins to think more of the comforts of home and table and less of glamor-girl wife who by this time has had influenza, a permanent-growing-out, and a baby.

It is entirely possible that some of the divorce cases started with the night the doughy biscuits laid heavily on husband's stomach. It made him irritable to wife, who, tired of peeling potatoes between children's squabbles, returned the compliment. Perhaps the harsh words rankled for days, causing an uneasy, defensive attitude on both sides which ripened into censure and suspicion.

A few good hearty meals would have reminded husband that wife was really a wonderful little woman, and wife would so appreciate his obvious pleasure in the work of her hands, that they would both be happy again. Instead they are glaring at each other in the judge's chambers.

We won't say this is the way it happened—but it might have.

Barriers or Brotherhood

By MARTHA FORD FLORO

TODAY IS THE TIME for facing facts. No matter what we wish conditions were, the fact is that we are facing a world-wide dilemma of no small proportions. A rapidly-shrinking world is necessitating certain fundamental changes in outlook and perspective.

Since its inception, Christianity has pursued the golden dream of brotherhood. Like our predecessors in the early Christian movement, as well as other religions of the world, we, too, speak of brotherhood, sing of its glorious possibilities, and pray for its coming. Uppermost in the Latter Day Saint movement has been, and we hope still is, the dream of a brotherhood embodied in a concrete community experience called Zion.

Standing in the way of our achieving this brotherhood are barriers—man-made separations between people. God did not make them, not the God who said, "Of one blood . . ." There are many kinds of barriers motivated by differences in speech, color, race, religion, clothing, and other customs.

Barriers belong to an age which is past and gone. The future belongs to the farsighted souls who, with the vision of a new and better brotherhood in their hearts, have the courage to take action today in making those dreams come true.

These barriers which we have allowed to flourish in our midst have many evil effects upon those who foster them. Persons who live behind these walls become warped, ingrown, selfish, provincial, concerned only with their own problems, and intolerant of anyone who is different. Valuable interactions are sacrificed; culture loses the advantage of fresh blood and ideas. There is a lack of understanding between people, and when this lack of understanding grows to involve nations, war results. Today it is unthinkable that our generation, or any other, should be subjected to the horrors of another war.

ARE THERE ANY ALTERNATIVES? There is yet the way of brotherhood waiting to be explored, the way of understanding others and seeing their problems as they see them. This world-wide view is not only imperative for statesmen, but for the little people as well—they are really the important people.

Our church is at the crossroads. Are we going to retain these barriers between our infinitesimal group and the rest of humanity, or any part thereof? If so, we have no right to keep talking about brotherhood.

Do we really mean what we say about loving our neighbor, about being good Samaritans, about building Zion? Zion can never thrive on provincialism or better-than-thou attitudes; there must be no barriers here to shut us off from the rest of the world!

Do we mean it?

The time is ripe, and the hour of our decision weighs heavily upon us.

If the answer is no (please God, we must not answer no), then let's quit.

If yes, we must take action now. If we really propose to take this brotherhood business seriously, we must begin in that direction.

The following are possible steps which we could take now:

1. Make a formal declaration of policy. Let the voice of the church speak—all of us together.
2. Promote a vigorous program of brotherhood. This might well include inter-racial rallies, more emphasis upon the world-view, serious study of "comparative religions," and the exchange of speakers with other faiths, non-Christian as well as Christian. (Do we judge a man by the words of his creed or by the quality of his life and purposes? Let's share our convictions and purposes—what are we trying to do? Maybe we can do it together.)
3. Carry on a personal campaign to develop brotherhood in your block, church, school, city and nation. Find out about political platforms; if a man is narrow, prejudiced, ingrown in his own race and culture, he is not an adequate candidate for local or national office. Vote for and support civil rights measures wherever possible. Determine to do everything within your power to increase understanding between conflicting groups. These are just a few of the things which Latter Day Saints can do now to further the divine plan of human brotherhood. Let's answer in our hearts, "Yes, we mean it," and let our actions speak.

How to Choose a Husband

By MARIE GOSLINE

ONE DOES NOT usually choose a husband in the same way one bakes a cake. The title at the beginning of this article may seem misleading, but there are certain qualities which should be weighed carefully before one chooses a husband, just as the ingredients should be measured carefully before one bakes a cake. Perhaps you will not think these factors are important, however vital they seem to me . . . all cakes are not baked from the same recipe.

Just as there are certain ingredients that make a good cake, so there are certain qualities that are to be found in any good husband, and just as a cake "falls" when the baking powder is left out, so a husband fails to be a success when one of these qualities is missing.

It is not hard to find a husband. Even with the postwar shortage. I say it is not hard. The difficulty lies in getting the kind of husband one wants. Association is the thing which counts when it comes to finding a husband. If a girl associates with low-class people—and I mean low from a standpoint of morality—she marries that sort; if she associates with a higher class, both mentally and morally, she marries into that class. "Water seeks its own level," my grandmother used to say, and that is certainly true when it comes to getting married. If she is content to marry a "bar-fly," let her be seen at the cocktail lounges often enough, and she'll end with that sort of a husband. If something higher is her aim, let her enter into some career enthusiastically—be it teaching, business, or church work—and before she has become settled in a single apartment, she'll be out looking for a double one.

BUT this is written about "how to choose" one, not "how to find" one. In choosing a husband, take

1 cup of good rich stock

You no doubt remember the beautiful Old Testament story of Isaac and Rebekah. Abraham sent many miles away, back to the land of his kinspeople, to find a suitable wife for Isaac. The Canaanite women were not good enough for him. Abraham was particular when it came to choosing a wife for his son. He thought it paid to be particular at such a time. He wanted Isaac to marry one of his own kinspeople, because he knew if he did, he would marry someone with good blood in her veins. He knew well enough that "you can't make something from nothing." Abraham wanted Isaac to marry someone who came from good stock. When the servant slipped the bracelet on Rebekah's arm and she said, "I will go," she came to Isaac from a good family. Then add

1 cup of generosity

Rebekah was chosen to be the wife of Isaac because of her generous nature. She not only drew water for the two men to drink, but said, "I will also draw for thy camels." When the servant inquired where he and his party might spend the night, she immediately invited them to her home.

Then beat in

1 tablespoon of thrift

Isaac did not come to Rebekah empty-handed. He was a prince. He was heir to "flocks, and herds, and silver and gold, and men-servants, and maidservants, and camels, and asses." True, most men do not come to the altar as "well-heeled" as Isaac, but they can come with a dash of thrift in their make-up. Then add

1/4 teaspoon ambition

Abraham was ambitious for his son, or he would not have accumulated so much wealth, and he would not have been so "choosy" when it came to finding him a wife. Rebekah was also ambitious—it was a long way to the bottom of the well, and no mean task to draw all that water. Finish with

1/4 teaspoon sympathy

Sympathy adds to a husband what flavoring does to a cake. Rebekah sensed at once how thirsty those men and camels were—and did something about it. They had come many miles over desert country where water was scarce, if there was any at all to be found. Rebekah was chosen because of her sympathetic nature.

You may not like my recipe. There are many husbands just as there are many cakes, and this is my recipe. These are some of the qualities which to me are important and must be found in the character of a good husband.

BRIEFS

BLUE WATER REUNION.—The Blue Water Reunion, held July 24 to August 1, was outstanding in its spiritual quality. Apostles E. J. Gleazer and Paul Hanson, Bishop W. N. Johnson, and Elders Harry Simons, Blair McClain, Warren Chelline, and Elwood Smith were assisted by local workers in the church school and other activities. Attendance was large; approximately 200 Zion's Leaguers were present throughout the entire reunion period. Eight persons were baptized on the last Sunday.

New facilities added to the reunion grounds include new chairs for the auditorium; new restrooms and a women's lounge; a well and an enlarged water system.

Recreation included sports of every kind. Miss Doreen Trudell of Pontiac was crowned queen of the reunion.

FOREST GROVE, OREGON.—District President J. L. Verhei and F. E. Chapman were present on Sunday, August 29, to organize Forest Grove Mission into a branch. At the business meeting, Robert E. Anderson was sustained as pastor and two priesthood calls were approved: Raymond Huggett, priest, and Lyle Anderson, teacher. Following this session, the women of the branch served dinner. At 2 in the afternoon, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Anderson was blessed by her grandfather, Robert Anderson, and District President Verhei. Brother Verhei also preached the closing sermon.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—During the past year the following persons have been baptized: Frank Tey, George Logan, Mrs. John Moore, Robert Wayne Moore, Mrs. R. E. Maxwell, Mary and Evelyn Armstrong, Charles S. Davenport, Von A. Rich, and Mrs. Frank Wicks. Two children, Warren A. Wilson, Jr., and Gail Bratcher, have been blessed. Apostle Maurice Draper, Seventies Z. Z. Renfroe, Charles May, and A. J. Breckenridge, and Missionary Arthur Rock have represented the general church as speakers. The main auditorium has been redecorated, and the Zion's League has raised $127 for the Missions Abroad fund.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—Elder Arthur E. Starks conducted a successful series of twenty cottage meetings in the homes of Gladys Harris and Fern Bunch. Six of the eight non-members who attended were baptized at the close of the series.

DEATHS

GRAHAM.—Lena Jane, daughter of Daniel F. and Harriett Borley Lambert, was born April 18, 1879, at Sioux City, Iowa, and died August 31, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on May 19, 1898, in Lamoni, Iowa. She was a member of the first regular class to be enrolled at Graceland College in 1895, and was graduated four years later. She won a degree from the Soper School of Oratory in Chicago, did professional work in elocution, and taught at Graceland College from 1910 to 1912. On July 11, 1912, she was married to Charles F. Graham in Lamoni, after which they made their home in Minot, North Dakota, from 1912 to 1916. Returning to Lamoni in 1916, Mr. Graham accepted a position as manager of the telephone company and filled the remainder of a term as mayor, following the death of his predecessor. While serving as mayor, he was killed in an automobile-train accident on July 3, 1917. After this tragedy, Mrs. Graham devoted her time to the support and education of her only child, Kenneth L. Graham. From 1919 to 1933, she was editor of the Lamoni Chronicle and represented several national news services. In 1935, she went to Lawrence, Kansas, to make a home for her son during his university years. After his graduation in 1937, she moved to Kansas City, Missouri, living there until 1939, when she came to Independence. She gave much time to church work, to the women's department, and to visiting the sick and shut-ins. She regularly attended group meetings and prepared many packages for needy families in Europe.

She is survived by her son, Kenneth; and two granddaughters: Donniss Jean and Karen Louise Graham. Services were held at the Stahl Funeral Home in Independence, President John Garver and Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating, and at the Marsh Funeral Chapel in Lamoni. Dr. Roy Cheville and Elder R. Edwin Browne were in charge of this second service. Burial was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

MEYER.—Kaehekoni, daughter of the late Bishop Edward Ingham and Mrs. Emily Ingham of Berkeley, California, died at her home in Berkeley on September 1, 1948, following a brief illness. Before her marriage in 1923 to William Thomas Meyer, she lived with her parents and two sisters in Berkeley. She was born in Honolulu, Hawaii, where she attended the private school of Miss Dodge and the Punahou Preparatory School. In 1910, she came with her family to Berkeley. After high school, she attended the University of California, studying music under Professors George McManus and Roscoe Warren. She taught music for many years and was in charge of the department of music in the church at Oakland and Berkeley. Her talents as organist and pianist and her skill in directing were much appreciated.

She is survived by her husband, William; two daughters: Mrs. Emylie Thompson of Palo Alto, California, and Miss Helen Meyer of the home; two sisters: Mrs. Minnie Naylor of Piedmont, California, and Miss Helen Ingham of Berkeley; and two granddaughters. The funeral was conducted by John W. Rushton at the Chapel of Flowers in Berkeley. Cremation was at the Chapel of the Chimes in Oakland.

RAWLINGS.—Matthew Francis, son of William F. and Annie Flanagan Rawlings, was born July 14, 1892, in Washington, D. C., and died August 14, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium. A member of the Reorganized Church, he worked as a contact man and demonstrator in several midwestern states for the Eastman Kodak Company.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Alice Rawlings of Independence, Missouri; five daughters: Mrs. Mae Botts, Aberdeen, Maryland; Mrs. Annie McPherson, Beaumont, Texas; Mrs. Irene Accomando, Dallas, Texas; Mrs. Emma Daugherty, New York City; and Mrs. Nancy Cholewin, Patterson, New Jersey; three sisters: Mrs. Bessie Kerlin, Mrs. Frances Heil, and Mrs. Louise Dement, all of Washington, D. C.; a brother, William Rawlings, also of

Washington, D. C.; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and W. F. Bolinger at the Roland Speaks Chapel. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WIGHT.—Cyril E., son of Apostle John W. and Elizabeth Stewart Wight, was born April 23, 1891, in Tuncurry, New South Wales, Australia, and died at his home in Temple City, California, on August 15, 1948. At the age of three, he was brought to the United States, and, with his family, settled in Lamoni, Iowa. He was baptized when he was eight and ordained to the Aaronic priesthood at eighteen. He was an honor student at Graceland College and won a scholarship to the University of Iowa. Several years later, he returned to Graceland as a member of the college faculty. He was the first teacher in the Religious Education Department and was later appointed a member of the Board of Trustees. He also served as president of Lamoni Stake. On June 1, 1913, he was married to Luella Benedict of Michigan. In 1925, they moved to Kansas City, Missouri, where he was soon appointed president of the stake and pastor of the Central congregation. Since 1936, they had made their home in California.

He leaves his wife, Luella, of Temple City; three brothers: Leslie S. of Chicago, Illinois; Rupert A. of Long Beach, California; and Keith G. of Tulsa, Oklahoma. Services were held at the Chapel of the Valley in Temple City, Elders Louis J. Ostertag and George A. Njeim in charge. Entombment was in the Pasadena mausoleum.

KEPHART.—Nellie, daughter of Frank and Clara Maxon, was born December 12, 1882, at Glidden, Iowa, and died August 15, 1948, at Des Moines, Iowa. At the age of ten, she moved to Ledyard, Iowa, where she grew to womanhood. In 1900, she was one of the first graduates of the Ledyard High School. In 1904, she married John N. Kephart of Dooliver; one son was born to them. A member of the Reorganized Church for more than thirty years, she served eight years as a worker in the home department.

She is survived by her husband; her son, Maxon J. Kephart; and four grandchildren. Services were held at the Evan Lilly Funeral Home in Des Moines, Elder Clyde E. McDonald officiating. Interment was in Glendale Cemetery.

DROWN.—Albert, was born August 24, 1876, in Michigan and died August 7, 1948, at Los Angeles, California. He left Michigan at the age of five, moving to Cameron, Missouri. At sixteen, he went to Independence, Missouri, to complete his education. On January 9, 1902, he was married to Jemima Lewis of Kansas City; four children were born to them. He and his wife made their home in California in 1921, where he worked as an iron molder for the Pacific Gas Radiator Company for eighteen years and the National Schools for four years. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1886.

He leaves his wife, Jemima, of Los Angeles; two daughters: Ethel Brown of Kansas City, Missouri, and Betty Exner of Los Angeles; a sister, Orpha Small of Kansas City; and five grandchildren. Services were held at Grace Chapel, Elder Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Burial was in the Inglewood Cemetery.

HUFFMAN.—William Jones, was born in Kewanee, Illinois, on November 26, 1929, and was killed July 29, 1948, at the home of his mother in Kewanee. The accident occurred when a companion of William's accidentally discharged a gun; it exploded just as William entered the room and struck him in the abdomen. He was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Marv Huffman of Kewanee; his father, Wayne E. Huffman of Peoria, Illinois; a brother, Earl Eugene, and a sister, Betty Jane, both of the home. Services were held at the Cavanagh and Schueneman Funeral Home. Burial was in the Pleasant View Cemetery.

BADDER.—Henry J., was born June 29, 1861, at Dentville, Ontario, and died August 27, 1948, at his home in Chatham, Ontario. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on November 3, 1872, at Buckhorne, Ontario, and was ordained to the office of teacher on May 15, 1882. On August 2, 1886, he was married to Margaret A. Armstrong, who preceded him in death on October 1, 1921. On September 18, 1934, he married Maria Grayson.

He is survived by his wife, Maria, of the home; a brother, Mose Badder of Luther, Michigan; and a sister, Mrs. Maggie Badder Evans of Alpena, Michigan. Funeral services were conducted at the Speaks Chapel in Independence, Missouri, Elders Glaude Smith and Thomas Butler officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SCOTT.—Eleanor Ella, daughter of Wilson and Laura Kent Hudson, was born December 28, 1866, at Shabbona Grove, Illinois, and died August 21, 1948, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Laura Pennell, in Independence, Missouri. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 22, 1875, by her uncle, Alma Kent, and on September 30, 1883, she was married to William Wesley Scott at Lamoni, Iowa. Mr. Scott preceded her in death on August 26, 1937.

Surviving are three sons: Leland L. of Kansas City, Missouri; Dana E. and Wilson William, both of Independence; four daughters: Mrs. John Pennell of Independence; Mrs. Leona Salisbury, San Rafael, California; Mrs. Ardentia Gifford, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Athena Striplen, Chicago, Illinois; a brother, O. O. Hudson of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Hattie Hall, Santa Barbara, California; a half-sister, Mrs. Flossie Walker, Ava, Missouri; twenty-one grandchildren; and twenty-four great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elder R. D. Weaver officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ARMSTRONG.—Zacharia P., son of Zacharia I. and Willanna Amos Armstrong, was born March 22, 1876, in Louisa County, Virginia, and died August 9, 1948, at his home in Pocatello, Idaho, after a short illness. He moved to Robin, Idaho, in 1910, and married Grace Jane Keplinger in Arbon Valley on May 5, 1913. In 1943, they made their home in Pocatello, where Mrs. Armstrong died in November, 1947.

Surviving are two sons, Z. Clayton and George R. of Pocatello; four daughters: Mrs. Ethel M. Rowland and Mrs. Dorothy Jeanne Richs, also of Pocatello; Mrs. Clarice R. Palmer, Everett, Washington; and Mrs. Helen L. Jones, Malad, Idaho; two brothers: George W. of Pocatello, and Shelton of Portland, Oregon; and four grandchildren. Services were held at the Hall Mortuary Chapel, Elder E. E. Richards officiating. Burial was in the Robins, Idaho, cemetery.

HOYT.—Dema, was born on June 29, 1881, at Loveland, Iowa, and died September 1, 1948, at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She had lived nearly all of her life in Missouri Valley, Iowa, until she moved to Council Bluffs about five years ago. She was married to Oscar E. Hoyt on August 29, 1898. They celebrated their golden wedding anniversary just three days before her death. Mrs. Hoyt had been a member of the Reorganized Church for many years.

She leaves her husband, Oscar, of Council Bluffs; two sons: Kenneth and Paul, both of Missouri Valley; six sisters; two brothers; nine grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. A daughter, Marie, preceded her mother in death. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Missouri Valley, Elder V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs officiating. Burial was in the Missouri Valley cemetery.

JOHNSON.—Warner Alvin, son of Bernice E. and Clyde A. Johnson, was born April 26, 1936, and was killed by a truck near Plad, Missouri, on August 24, 1948, while going to school. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since June 13 of this year. Eighteen days before his death, he moved with his family from Kansas City, Missouri, to Plad. His father died on October 3, 1941.

He is survived by his mother; four sisters: Warnetta Nannetta, Vanessa Loujuana, Evelyn Clydine, and Sandra LaVerna Johnson; a brother, Daniel LeRoy Johnson; a half-sister, Margaret Ann Golithly; two half brothers: Joseph Maurice Golithly, Jr., and James David Golithly; and his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Myrtle Wolfe of Henrietta, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the Plad Community Church. Burial was in the Plad cemetery.

BAKER.—Edwina, daughter of Welcom and Polly Welch, was born October 7, 1859, at Eldred, Pennsylvania, and died July 13, 1948, at Coleman, Michigan. She came to Michigan in 1884, living near Farwell until 1915, when she moved to Midland. On December 3, 1932, she was married to Francis Baker in Coleman, Michigan, where she resided until her death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since April 6, 1893.

She leaves her husband, his seven children, and her two foster children. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Coleman, A. E. Burton officiating. Burial was in the Midland cemetery.

a weapon of war, preferring to give up their own lives rather than take up their sword against their brethren. And it was written of them that their love for their fellow man was greater even than that of the Nephites.

Nephi, one of the twelve chosen by Christ on this continent, records that in the thirteenth year following the sign of Christ's birth, a group of 8,000 Lamanites were relieved of the curse, and they became white like the Nephites. We know this is to occur again in the latter day when they accept the gospel.

Political problems still present obstacles to the promulgation of any immediate missionary efforts in Latin America. However, if the youth of this church will prepare to serve in this field, the Lord will surely open the way to them, even as in the day of Alma. One thing is certain—the "remnant" people will have their part in the kingdom, whether we are with them or not, for Jesus has said:

And the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you this land, for your inheritance.

And I say unto you, that if the Gentiles do not repent, after the blessing which they shall receive, after they have scattered my people, then shall ye who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, go forth among them;

And ye shall be in the midst of them, who shall be many; and ye shall be among them, as a lion among the beasts of the forests, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

And I will gather my people together, as a man gathereth his sheaves into the floor, for I will make my people with whom the Father hath covenanted, yea, I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass.

And thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substances unto the Lord of the whole earth. And behold, I am he who doeth it.

And it shall come to pass, saith the Father, that the sword of my justice shall hang over them at that day; and except they repent, it shall fall upon them, saith the Father, yea, even upon all the nations of the Gentiles.

And it shall come to pass that I will establish my people, O house of Israel.

And behold, this people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made your father Jacob; and it shall be a new Jerusalem.²⁹

Note of Thanks

I wish to express my sincere thanks to all the Saints who remembered me in prayer and with cards and letters during my recent illness. I am also grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Surbrook who requested prayers in my behalf.

I believe it is truly a miracle of God that I am here to write these words.

It Is Not Chance

To those who say, "All things occur by chance,"

I would say this:

How chanced the home?

How chanced the parents' love that shields and guides the child into a better way of life?

Why does the father suffer hardships, even death,
To bring security and peace to those he loves?

Chance does not teach the mother quail
To lure her enemy away with feint of broken wing, so that at last in safety she returns to call her brood.

Nor could the love light in new mothers' eyes
Come from aught else but God.

—MARGARET BULLARD TUCKER.

REPORT ON LEWIS FAMILY. Many inquiries and expressions of concern have come concerning the condition of the Lewis family. A near relative reports that the boy, Gregory, is improving so that it is expected he may be released to be cared for in her home, although precautions are still necessary. Sister Lewis, though somewhat improved, is still weak, and needs the prayers of the people. Alice June has made favorable improvement. Judith is not out of danger yet.

CONFERENCE VISITORS. The General Conference takes on an international aspect with the arrival of visitors from abroad. A number are here, and others are expected soon.

From Australia, Evangelist Charles A. Dickinson and his wife have joined the group that arrived earlier. Don Alberts has been very active in church work, and in gathering materials and information to take back to his native land. Brother Dickinson has accepted appointments to preach at Stone Church and elsewhere.

From Birmingham, England, Elder Ed Norton and his wife Amy have arrived, and are very happily getting acquainted and making many friends. Also from Birmingham, Pearla Harvey is expected to arrive soon. And from Gloucester, England, Miss Elizabeth Harris is on her way.

From Tahiti, French Oceania, come a very genial couple, John (Tihoni) Mervin and his very attractive wife, Emere. They speak French and Tahitian, and wherever they go Missionary Edward Butterworth has been acting as their interpreter. Brother Mervin has a large business in the copra trade, and owns the ranch that was once owned by the author, Zane Gray.

CONFERENCE. All church news in these days surrounds the General Conference. Personnel in every office are striving to prepare for it, and already stemming the stream of visitors that flows into headquarters from railway and bus terminals. Workers are torn between the pleasure of meeting visitors and the pressing necessity of getting work done. So much is happening that few people have time to stop and talk about it, and the frustrated reporter who tries to gather a few facts feels very much like Brother Gomer T. Griffiths who said, "I'll tell you all about it—after Conference!"

Welcome to Conference

ALREADY as I write, by plane, ship, bus, auto, and train, delegates to the General Conference set for October 3 to 10 are arriving, and soon they, the ex-officio members of the priesthood and visitors will converge upon the Center Place. To this time and occasion, we have looked forward for months not only with anticipation but with equal concern. To congregate for fellowship, to meet old friends, and to get acquainted with new members provide desirable rejoicing and spiritual uplift.

Our concern grows out of the imperative need for careful planning and programming for the economical and judicious use of time.

Not many of those who will attend, relatively speaking, will have occasion to know how much work has been involved in the project of a General Conference, and all, I am sure, would be amazed at the many weeks and even months employed by members of the Presidency and some of their assistants in the task. When you get your copy of the Official Program, take a look at the schedule of sermons, prayer services, class hours, and quorum and council meetings. These could only be worked out by careful thought and constant reference to our General Conference experience throughout the years.

Now that these labors are well behind us, our faces are turned toward the principal event, and quite a sizable "army" of the Aaronic priesthood as well as all grades of the Melchisedec priesthood, including the members of the Joint Council, will be required to carry out the program. The Communion services scheduled for the first Sunday can be held successfully only after much preparation and even rehearsal. They cannot be left to last-minute inspiration.

There is not a member of the Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, or the Presiding Bishopric who has not some assignment during the week.

These things are not recounted in any spirit of self-esteem or vanity. The work is done happily under a sense of duty to the church and a desire to minister to the body. But it is always salutary for one to know what labors on his behalf have been involved. It helps one to be grateful, and gratitude, it has been truthfully said, "is the fairest flower of the human heart."

THE late President Joseph Smith some time in 1871 and 1872 published some very comprehensive editorials under the heading, "The Situation." In one of these he wrote as follows:

The holding of local and general conferences we believe to have been, and still to be, one of the surest, safest, and best means that could have been or that can be used to the accomplishment of a proper assimilation of thought and spirit among brethren, and the right understanding of doctrine among the teachers and those taught. These local and general conferences we believe to be authorized by the general laws of the church under which the promulgation of the gospel was to be carried on; and they are not therefore the creatures of local organizations called churches or branches. They are natural and necessary assemblings of the church officers for the transaction of necessary business connected with the carrying out of the great program of salvation, and for the free interchange of thought, expression of opinion, and the preaching of the word. We trust that such assemblings will be more largely attended than heretofore.

The range of business which may be done at these conferences is very wide, and comprises all "things necessary to be done"; the necessity for the doing of any particular business being the law governing the case, "according to the Bible,

Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants."

The organization of numbers of believers into churches, or branches, is a politic necessity; and hence a measure which was introduced at a very early date of the church existence. It was essential then; it is so now. There is ample provision for requisite organization in the Book of Covenants, and the usages of the church, as found in the instructions given from time to time.

We could add little to this and believe his comments are as applicable today as they were when written.

To this General Conference of the church for 1948, which we recognize as the Church of God, and the only one that can rightfully claim to represent the Restored Gospel, are coming and will come during the eight days of meeting, the thousands of faithful members of the church, the children of the covenant; and we shall be concerned with their physical, material, and spiritual welfare while they are here. We have tried to provide what is required for them.

To them, on behalf of the Presidency and the official personnel of the church, we extend our personal and official greetings, and our sincere wish that each one will be edified and strengthened by what he shall experience. Thus the church will find the strength and power to finish the task and accomplish the mission assigned to all.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith.

"A Voice That Is Still"

BROTHER C. CECIL TALCOTT, under date of September 14, writes as follows concerning a prayer service held in Independence a few days before Brother Lewis's death:

On September 8 at 8 p.m. in Bartholomew Hall, Apostle George Lewis bore his testimony to a group of about fifty people. Along with the Saints who had gathered for prayer and testimony meeting were two nonmembers. They were friends of mine who had attended the service by special invitation. Apostle Lewis's testimony about the appearance of God and Christ to Joseph Smith, Jr., rang true to all of us, and the influence of the good Spirit was powerful in our midst. As a result of this meeting, my friends have felt much impressed and are showing further interest in their investigation of the church.

It may have been Brother Lewis's last public testimony before his untimely death, but we may say he bore it with great conviction. The two nonmembers along with the rest of us will not forget his challenge to carry on and establish the kingdom! He emphasized "Our Strong Foundations," telling us always to remember the words of God to Joseph Smith, Jr., "This is my beloved Son, hear him!" Let us look to his words to us in these latter days and move forward according to our responsibilities. Let us make Zion a reality!

We thank Brother Talcott for his letter.

In the words of Tennyson, we often will reflect—

O for the touch of a vanished hand,
The sound of a voice that is still!

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Preconference Reception for Young People

A young people's reception for the younger set among Conference visitors is being planned for Saturday evening, October 2, starting at 7:30 p.m. in the big tent on the west side of the Auditorium.

Welcoming committees of Orioles, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, as well as Zion's Leaguers, will be on hand to meet members of these organizations from out of town and to acquaint them with what is being done in Independence.

A program of mixers and fellowship of interest to all young people will be conducted by the Zion's Leaguers of Independence. All young people are urged to attend.

Attention Deacons and Teachers

All visiting deacons and teachers attending the General Conference are invited and urged to assist in the important work of preparing for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper on the first Sunday. Since many thousands will be served, much help is needed. Please come to the following meetings:

Saturday evening, October 2, at 7:30 p. m., in the back stage of the choir room, the Auditorium, the preparation for the Communion will take place. Come on time and assist.

Sunday, October 3 at 7 a. m., assemble in the Deacon's Room for usher's badges and assignments.

A permanent record will be made of all deacons and teachers participating in this work. Teachers report to Roy Wyatt. Evan Fry will be the speaker at the Communion meeting.

Serving the Communion

All local priests and elders of the Greater Kansas City area are requested to report at the platform of the main Auditorium, at 7:30 p.m., Friday, October 1, to rehearse for serving the Communion on Sunday. Visiting priests and elders who are in the city by that time are also invited to help. A large corps of men is needed to serve the two great Communion services in the Auditorium on Sunday morning, and this rehearsal is very necessary to make it go successfully. Henry W. Stahl is in charge of the serving, as he has been at previous conferences.

OFFICIAL

General Conference Program, Sunday, October 3

We earnestly solicit the co-operation of the Saints of Independence and the Stakes, and of Conference visitors generally, in the Conference activities for Sunday, October 3. This is particularly necessary because we have found it advisable to plan for two Communion services in the Auditorium.

Saints from Independence and vicinity are urged to attend the earlier Communion service, preparatory music for which will begin at 7:45 a.m. with the service proper commencing at 8:00 a.m. This service should conclude about 9:45 a.m., and preaching services will be held at 10:15 a.m. at the Stone Church, the General Conference tent, and the Stone Church Annex.

This arrangement will not only give assistance to Conference visitors who are driving in on Sunday morning and want to have opportunity to attend the later Communion service, but it will also permit local Saints who have guests to get home a little earlier in preparation for the noon meal.

Preparatory music for the second Communion service will commence at 10 a.m., the service proper beginning at 10:15 a.m.

The programs of the two Communion services will be identical.

The choral concert at 2:30 p.m. will be an integral part of the preaching service at which President Israel A. Smith will present his Conference sermon.

There will be congregational singing at 7:30 p.m. at the Auditorium as a prelude to preaching by Elder Paul M. Hanson, President of the Quorum of Twelve.

F. HENRY EDWARDS.

President Smith says, "We expect the Conference to be a momentous one." Don't miss any of it. The Conference Daily Herald is only $1. Subscribe today.

Intellectual Fellowship

INTELLECTUAL FELLOWSHIP is a way of throwing many lights upon a subject so as to develop it thoroughly. It is a way of pooling ideas and knowledges so as to improve the understanding; it is a way of teaching one another. It is an interaction of minds that is mutually enlightening. It is a way of feeding or nurturing the mind; it is mutual edification of the spirit.

Intellectual fellowship is not a "gabfest." It is not mere conversation. It is more than communication which imparts information. It is not mere rearranging of ideas. It is improvement of the understanding.

In intellectual fellowship, either we get new viewpoints or outlooks or we improve the old. In "Restoration" intellectual fellowship, either we experience a shifting in our philosophies of life or we broaden or deepen our vision of the shape of things to come; we refine and mature our ideas of what it is all about; we "fuse" particular ideas so as to develop one idea that is general; we gain "conceptual" ground. Intellectual fellowship is more than a coming to see eye-to-eye experience; it is improvement of "eye-sight."

The intellectual fellowship, which the genius of Restoration would promote (see Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3; 85: 21; 94: 3), is a sumptuous feast of food for thought. It is a bill of fare which many persons help to prepare. It is a mental banquet provided through contributions of ideas of all who feast—contributions which consist in many instances of enlightening questioning; it is a fusion of many ideas in one.

"Teach One Another"

All the good foods for thought are not grown in one mental garden. Some minds do have greater capacity than others for original thinking or for creative vision. But none are able to originate all the good ideas about "the work entrusted to all." Indeed, that may be one of the reasons why it is entrusted to all.

By J. A. KOEHLER

Neither priest nor prophet is sufficient unto himself; neither can think through all the business of the kingdom alone. He cannot develop even his own mental originations thoroughly without communion with other minds. But all who are entrusted with the work have capacity for appreciative vision. So it is intended that, in this church, men of the priesthood in particular should teach one another.

Fellowship of the Wise

"God giveth wisdom unto the wise [not unto the foolish], and knowledge to them that know understanding."—Daniel 2: 21. In the blackness of the night, a road sign gives information only to those who throw upon it the light of understanding. That is true even in daytime. Whatever the situation or circumstances, there must be some understanding if there is to be giving of wisdom. The putting of empty heads together does not fill them.

Restoration priesthood is firstly moral authority; it is firstly capacity to speak with understanding and to act wisely in the field of institutionalized religion. We judge of that capacity by manifestations of ability; but cultivated capacities. And if we judge aright, we make occasion and set the stage for a very distinctive kind of intellectual fellowship—a fellowship of men who are kingdom-building wise; that is the force of D. and C. 94: 3.

The Wise Man said many times that the pooling of empty heads does not make them full. Wisdom, said he, is not the sum of much foolishness. "Intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence." It is when men of understanding put their heads together, or when they have intellectual communion, that there is safety—ideational, conceptual safety. Yes, the Wise Man was sure that, let the heads of the men to whom the "work" has been entrusted be ever so good, they may be improved through the putting of them together through intellectual fellowship.

Greece is said to have been the cradle of philosophy—which is a quest of truth, intellectual questioning, rational explanation. So "All the Athenians and strangers which were here [at Athens in St. Paul's day], spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing."—Acts 17: 21. Those Athenians were human birds of a spiritual feather who flocked together.

Kindred Spirits

Latter Day Saints should be like that. For the intention was that their church should be composed of kindred spirits (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7), of persons who are converts to ideas that distinctly concern the Restoration, of persons who have Restoration minds (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18).

Contemplate the genius of Restoration, as it is depicted in the Doctrine and Covenants. Note its quest of the truth. So, like the Athenians, the prophet of Restoration spent his time "in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing"—respecting the mission of Restoration. What is more to be expected than the admonition of that genius to the priesthood to promote ideational fusion through intellectual fellowship—through the school of the "prophets"?

Common Ground

Babylonian merchants and kingdom prophets have no common ethical ground on which to meet. So, on the question of the right ordering of human relations, they have no intellectual fellowship.

The feathers of philosophers are not all one, for philosophers have ever had somewhat different explanations of things. Nevertheless, real philosophers do meet on common ground; they do have one feather in common; all have one basic conviction; all are sure that existence may be explained rationally. All real philosophers meet on the common ground of open-mindedness or ideational disinterestedness. All have a penchant for conceptual communion.

"The Spirit [of God in man] searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."—I Corinthians 2:10. Restoration was born of that spirit—the spirit which says, "Prove all things," "Come now, let us reason together," "Bring forth your strong reasons." True Restoration is a rational religion; it is philosophical. It is in the "blood" of true Restoration to have intellectual fellowship.

What is the common ground on which we must meet to have distinctive Restoration intellectual fellowship? Is it that God has ordained that the cause of Zion shall be brought forth and established through the offices of the church? Is it that Zion is a distinctive community, a mode of economic self-governance grounded in convictions and sentiments of righteousness and truth? Is it that Zion is "the City"—the mode of society—out of which our God shall shine? Is it that "the government" is upon the shoulders of Restoration, to order it with judgment and to establish it with justice? Say what you think it is; then say whether or not Latter Day Saints can strike up a true Restoration intellectual fellowship except they meet on that common ground.

Conditions of Fellowship

We have already either indicated or alluded to these conditions of intellectual fellowship:

1. Capacity for thought movement.
2. Possession of food for thought—understanding.
3. The art of employing that food to nurture the soul.
4. An impulsion to edify.
5. Humility or teachability (versus intellectual pride).
6. Kindred-spiritedness.
7. Common ground.
8. Hunger and thirst for the truth.
9. Right attitudes or habitual modes of regarding persons and things—especially the persons with whom we are in conceptual disagreement.
10. Disinterestedness or intellectual honesty.

Add to this, or subtract from it, or modify it as you will, but contemplate what you believe to be the conditions of distinctive Restoration intellectual fellowship. Meditate on them day and night, for we Latter Day Saints have great need to practice that art.

As we meditate, as we contemplate each specific condition, we will recall or remember much Scripture—and also many actual current life situations and circumstances that are significant in this relation.

There will come to mind such as this: "If your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:18. Instead, you shall have comprehension.

We will be reminded that Paul said, God "anointed" Jesus because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity (Hebrews 1:9). We may remember that Jesus said that crooked feelers cannot see straight in the field of religion, that—as respects morality and ethics—emotional attachments condition thought movements, that except a man be born again he cannot even "see" the kingdom of God.

We will be reminded that bad feelings toward others—regarded as personalities—is blinding, that he that hates his brother is in darkness, that only love sees the way. We may recall that, "If we walk in the light we have fellowship"—we do have it. It should be highly profitable to contemplate each and all the conditions of intellectual fellowship.

Hindrances and Obstacles

Each of the aforementioned conditions of intellectual fellowship when changed to negative form represents either a hindrance or an obstacle. The negative of "hunger and thirst for righteousness," for instance, is something akin to resistance to the truth. Doctrine and Covenants 102:2, 3, and Romans 1:28 are significant in this relation.

Antipathies, disdainfulness, suspiciousness, the tendency to protect children of the brain from the hazards of examination, aversion to logical criticism or analysis, fear of the consequences of laying all the cards on the table, or of facing all the facts in their nakedness, the habit of mental lone-wolfing, thought narrow-grooving, impatience of the ideas of others, emotional excitability, the tendency to change the subject, the impatient hurry to reach conclusions or to form opinions—there are ever so many purely personal hindrances to intellectual fellowship.

There are obstacles, too. There are outside pressures (or circumstances which cause pressures) that make intellectual fellowship difficult; sometimes they utterly unfit us for that activity. I have in mind, particularly, the pressure of church work of this and that kind.

We are so pressed for practical results—in business, in finance, in property affairs, in proselytism, in letter-writing, in routine and incidental temporal affairs of many kinds, that we do not have time for real intellectual fellowship. Philosophy would not have flourished in Athens if Plato and company had been like that.

There are ever so many obstacles or outside pressures: the need of baby-kissing to "dry those tears and calm those fears"; the pressure (whether real or imaginary) to make records in inventories filed, in numbers of sermons preached, in tracts distributed, in prospects contacted, in candidates baptized, in branches organized, in specific social affairs promoted, and all such; the pressure (whether of our own creation or not) to get such things done if we are to be highly rated by our supervisors or those to whom we may be accountable, or to make good in our own eyes. We have so many "things" to do, so much "business" to attend to, so many "affairs" to look after, that we cannot relax so that we may promote intellectual fellowship.

A Requirement

Love is togetherness. True religion is a walking together; it is a "dwelling" together in unity. The kingdom is that. Zion is that. A truly Christian family is that. "The" church is that. A divine priesthood is that. "If ye are not one [if you do not dwell together in unity] ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6. For to be "mine" is to walk in the light. And "if we walk in the light . . . we have fellowship one with another."

"How can two walk together except they be agreed?" And how can they ever come to be agreed on the business of walking together except they put their heads together—except they have mental communion?

Have you ever observed how quickly we part company when we are in mental disagreement? Have you ever observed that spiritual incompatibles, moral incompatibles, mental incompatibles, do not get along well together? They get along together better separately.

Surely you have known at least one "home" that was not a "heaven" because, through failure of reasoning together, husband and wife did not see eye to eye or understand each other? You may have known a whole church "home" which was like that.

Many "Adams and Eves" have not walked together happily because they did not think through the problems of wedlock together. Many a household has been wrecked on the rock of ideational insulation.

One of the very roots of "human" society is mental agreement. It is consciousness, or awareness, of like-mindedness, it is because free men do have a meeting of minds; it is because they do stand on common, spiritual ground; it is because they do agree on the question of the rights and duties of persons in association; it is for this reason that we have true society. We "walk together" in whatever relation because we are agreed. And we are agreed because we have talked things over together.

Restoration Fellowship

For more than a century, we Latter Day Saints have talked about bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion. But we have yet to walk together as Zion redeemers. Why? Because we have not agreed on that which is the essence and crux of Zion-redeeming. That is the reason the United Nations are dis-united. That is the reason for failure to walk together in any area in which we cannot live alone.

We walk together in some relations—in financial affairs and reunion affairs, in musical affairs, and others. We are agreed so as to walk together in many things that we really want to do. Why can't we walk together in the business of bringing forth and establishing the cause of Zion?

Is it that we do not want it? Or is it that we do not put our heads together in the special manner which is necessary to come to an agreement on what is truly Zion-redeeming? We surface-skim and side-track; we "jack-rabbit" mentally; we give the matter "a lick and a promise" instead. We study this, and we study that, but we do not fulfill the intention of Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21 and 94: 3. Ours is not the curriculum of the "prophets." And without that curriculum, we cannot have that school.

We have done some studying of some good books. We have had some very good schooling. In college and university, we have learned many things that we must know to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. But we have not integrated these knowledges as we must. We have neither learned to interpret history in the light of the Restoration nor Restoration in the light of history. We have not learned economics and sociology and ethics and psychology as Zion-redeeming fundamentals; much less have we learned civil engineering and architecture and business organization and management and finance and other things as features of Zion. We have not learned to make ourselves competent for the business of the Kingdom.

As his languages witness, as other phenomena of "human" life witness, man is constituted psychically for intellectual fellowship. It is a requirement of his "human" nature. It is not only not good that man should "be alone," it is impossible that he do it alone. Neither priesthood nor prophet can come to comprehend "God" through insulated ideation. It is requisite, especially so in Restoration, that there should be intellectual fellowship.

If we would fulfill the conditions of that communion of spirits, if we would really fulfill the intentions of Doctrine and Covenants 94: 3 and 85: 21, it is almost certain (it is certain, if we are truly the "elect") that Zion would soon "prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great and very terrible."

And it is quite as certain that the calamity-stricken nations of the earth would honor her and would say, "Surely, Zion is the city of our God."

Beginning at the Grass Roots

THE FINANCIAL LAW

By G. L. DeLapp

Presiding Bishop of the Church

THE CHURCH has developed a great deal since the beginning of the Reorganization and, with its development, has undertaken at different times some projects which involved considerable financial costs. Among these have been the development of our institutions (including Graceland College, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, the Herald Publishing House, and the Homes for the Aged) as well as the Auditorium, which is incomplete. With the growth of these, there have been increasing costs to provide essential physical facilities.

At the same time, our missionary work has progressed in cycles, a greater number of appointees having been taken on in times of high income, and the personnel reduced in times of low income. Altogether, the financial costs involved have been increasing to a point where it is important that we assure ourselves of continuous income to meet the requirements of our missionary and institutional work.

An analysis of the records of past years reveals some interesting information. Our membership has increased gradually in recent years, as the following figures indicate:

1900	43,824
1910	60,909
1920	92,746
1930	106,140
1940	123,230
1948 (to June 1)	136,467

We do not have complete records showing the percentage of membership contributors to cover these same periods, but the following records give an indication of the extent to which there has been compliance with the financial law:

CONTRIBUTORS TO GENERAL CHURCH, UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Year	Number of Contributors	Enrollment December 31	Percentage Contributors	Number of Filers	Percentage Filing
1936	27,885	109,116	25.6
1937	26,373	110,853	23.8
1938	24,082	113,126	21.3
1939	23,957	114,878	20.9
1940	29,826	116,737	25.5
1941	29,272	118,465	24.7
1942	30,602	119,990	25.5
1943	30,806	121,216	25.4
1944	28,778	122,479	23.5
1945	26,512	123,590	21.5
1946	25,549	123,035	20.7	8,690	7.06
1947	29,300	125,695	23.3	9,230	7.34

IF ONE WERE TO APPROACH this problem negatively, extreme discouragement could result because of what appears to be a lack of compliance on the part of the bulk of our membership. Undoubtedly, however, there are various factors which enter into this, and it is my purpose here to point out the opportunities that are open to us to improve the situation. It may be there is a relationship of this to the lack of ministry of which we made mention in the article having to do with the Aaronic priesthood. Continuous and adequate teaching on the part of the Aaronic priesthood will undoubtedly encourage many of our members to comply with the law, who up to the present have been indifferent or perhaps lacking in understanding of its purposes. The purpose of the financial law is twofold. In results, it provides the church with the resources with which to carry on its work, to which we have already made reference. In intent, it is a way of developing character and providing the individual with the means whereby temporal resources may be used for the attainment of spiritual ends. These spiritual ends are understood by most of us.

The fundamental principles of the gospel, including faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment, have meaning and significance; but we have sensed altogether too infrequently the responsibility which is ours of broadening our understanding of these principles and of teaching others and accomplishing this through compliance with the financial law.

We have been inclined to look at the broad goals and the objectives of the church as desirable of attainment, but we have failed to see the relationship of our attainment of these goals to our acts, or to our failure to act, in supporting the church financially.

THERE IS LITTLE VALUE in talking about community building if we have not learned the ABC's of stewardship, so it is essential that we give consideration to applying ourselves to the tasks which may be said to be those lying close to the "grass roots" of our endeavor. Compliance

3,489 New Members

Last year the church baptized 3,489 new members.

LET US FORGET for a moment the offsetting losses by death, expulsion, and withdrawals and think in terms of the nearly 3,500 precious souls which were inducted into the church of God. It is the largest number of baptisms in any year since 1930. In a church of our size, it is a significant addition to our numerical strength.

The church baptized a greater number of new members last year than the entire membership of the Australasian Mission. The number of baptisms last year is more than twice the number of Latter Day Saints in the British Isles, and considerably more than the total membership of the European Mission. This is sufficient membership for two or three districts. Outside of Independence, only one stake (Kansas City) and one district (Southern California) can boast a greater number of members than were baptized in 1947. If all these new members lived in a single large city, we would need from five to ten church buildings to house them. From their ranks, we would recruit the workers to run a corresponding number of branches.

Yes, let's agree that 3,489 new members is a splendid addition to our church strength.

MEASUREMENTS OF PROGRESS

Few organizations are content to measure progress in terms of size or numbers alone, but make constant effort to find ways of analyzing achievements on a more significant and accurate basis.

For our church, this measurement is admittedly difficult, because we tend to measure the tangible and obvious things and have not become adept in measuring spiritual values. Our pastors will not contend that church attendance is a perfect index of the conditions of the branches, but they know that it is nevertheless a significant factor, for Latter Day Saints do not thrive in isolation. They develop into sainthood in worship, work, and association with others of like faith and ideals.

Nor is the income of a church even a near-perfect measurement of its condition, but it does reflect in some degree the devotion and concern of people for the work of God. We count church contributions and filers of financial statements, again not claiming these to be accurate evaluations of spiritual achievement, but knowing from experience that there is a close correlation between saintly growth and development and the dedication of one's material possessions to the work of the church.

Let us look at these new members in terms of the few measuring devices available. Now beware, Brother and Sister Newly-Baptized, we may be about to do you a grave injustice, for we are going to assume that you are an average church member. If you object, we ask you to be patient with us and remember that everyone in the church was once a newly-baptized member.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE

Last year the church baptized 1,116 new church-goers.

The statistics which are available indicate that about twenty per cent of our membership live in an isolated condition, and of the remaining eighty per cent within reach of branches, about forty-eight per cent do not attend church with sufficient regularity to be classed as church-goers. This means that approximately thirty-two per cent of our total membership attend church with some degree of regularity.

By W. N. Johnson

Counselor to the Presiding Bishop

If these percentages are applied to members baptized in 1947, we find that 698 live beyond branch limits; and of the 2,791 within reach of branches, 1,675 do not attend church, leaving 116 newly-baptized members attending church, participating in its sacraments and associating in the work of the church with other members.

No one can foresee what great results might follow from this number of people being found in church attendance; however, it is immediately apparent that the work of conversion does not end with baptism. If last year's newly-baptized members conform to the general pattern of church attendance, one fifth of them should be encouraged to "gather" into branches, and nearly half of their number should be receiving ministry from the branch officers, whose duty it is to encourage church attendance.

FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTORS

During 1947, our church baptized 885 new financial contributors.

This number will make their presence felt in the church by contributing money to assist in the sending of the gospel throughout the world. Approximately 2,600 of these new members will not contribute any funds to the General Church in this or any other year, and few of them will be found carrying any heavy financial load in branches or districts. On the basis of past experience, our pastors and district presidents will depend largely upon tithepayers to carry local departmental and financial responsibilities.

Last year, 29,300 members (or 25.37 per cent of the membership of the United States, Canada, and Hawaii) contributed to the General Church. Our 885 new contributors will give us an excellent chance of exceeding the 30,000 contributor mark in 1948 for the church in the United States, Canada, and Hawaii. (Statistics are not available for our missions abroad.)

Last year many of our contributors gave less than $1.00 to the church during the entire year. Others were generous with a generosity born of devotion to the cause of God and obedience to the financial law of the church. The average contributor gave almost $38.00 to the General Church in 1947. Our 885 new contributors can be expected to swell the church income by an amount in excess of $33,000 this year if last year's average is maintained.

In 1947, one in four church members contributed financially to the General Church. Our goal is that two members in every five, or forty per cent of membership, shall contribute each year. It is encouraging to note that a few districts have exceeded this mark, and others are approaching it.

STEWARDS OF POSSESSIONS

Last year our church baptized 279 new Tithing Statement filers.

In a church that teaches stewardship of material things, the number of individual church members who acknowledge this stewardship by filing tithing statements as taught by the church should be a very significant figure. If our over-all pattern of tithing statement filers is applicable to new members, we shall expect that we have converted about eight per cent of them to this elementary but very important aspect of stewardship.

Last year, 9,230 Tithing Statements were received at headquarters for the United States, Canada, and Hawaii, or 7.99 per cent of the membership. This year our count by August is slightly in excess of 9,000, and we are hoping to reach the 10,000 mark. Our 279 new statement filers will be a very real help in reaching the goal.

ABOVE AVERAGE

New members are probably "above average." Certainly we should not be satisfied if in 1947 we baptized 100 members in order to secure thirty-two church-goers, twenty-five contributors, and eight tithing statement filers. Nevertheless, on the basis of statistics available for the United States, Canada, and Hawaii, we find that if our new members conform to the general pattern of membership activity, we baptized last year 3,489 new members of whom 1,116 are churchgoers, 885 are financial contributors to the General Church, and 279 are tithing statement filers.

These figures viewed by themselves are discouraging; however, when considered in relationship to church achievements, they are of heart-warming significance. Seventeen years ago, the General Church had a debt of over $60.00 for every contributor. Today it has reserves totaling more than that amount for each contributor. With only one person in twelve filing a Tithing Statement, the church has nevertheless been enabled to expand its missionary program, build reserves, and increase many of its departmental and institutional services. That so much has been accomplished by so few should be a source of continual encouragement to all of us.

At the same time, we need to remember that the cost of baptizing new members is not a light one. There is a price paid in time, effort, and money for each baptism. If our church is to make any rapid progress, the rate of conversion to the basic beliefs and practices of the church is even more important than the baptismal rate.

It is difficult to set a reasonable goal of church attendance, but we cannot afford to be satisfied with our present achievement. It would seem that a goal of fifty per cent should not be beyond our reach. If half our members attend church, our missionary efforts last year would have brought the church 1,744 new church-goers instead of 1,116.

It is surely not too much to expect that forty per cent of our membership shall contribute to the General Church each year. If that were so, last year's effort would have strengthened the church by 1,400 new contributors instead of 885.

We cannot be satisfied in any stake or district with less than twenty-five per cent of our people filing Tithing Statements. Last year the church should have baptized 872 new stewards of possessions, devoting one tenth of their increase to the work of the church.

The word of God to the church with respect to the financial law is: "Until such heed is paid to the word which has been given . . . the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed."

Let us repeat that these measurements of church activity on the part of our membership should not depress or discourage us. Let us find renewed faith and courage in the splendid achievement of church workers over the past years. These figures should challenge everyone to do his part and assure us that within the church are untapped resources of spiritual and material wealth for speeding up the Restoration Movement. To set in motion some of these tremendous unused potentialities might well be the goal of every member who has an interest in this good cause.

Church Beautiful Contest

Bishop C. A. Skinner wishes to remind all who are interested that the "Church Beautiful Contest" closes October 1. The purpose of the contest has been to stimulate improvement and beautification work for local church buildings. He urges those interested to send pictures of the church building and a written account of the improvement made. Send all materials to C. A. Skinner, 1910 Drumm Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Golden Wedding Anniversary Celebration for the Rushtons

By Fred A. Cool

On August 2, 1948, at the Southern California District Reunion, the golden wedding anniversary of Elder and Sister John W. Rushton was celebrated.

The celebration was sponsored by the department of women under the leadership of Mrs. L. J. Ostertag. The beauty and sweetness of this event will live in the minds and hearts of all who witnessed it.

As Margaret Jones played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," Brother and Sister Rushton walked across the stage and were received by Mrs. Ostertag. She presented an orchid corsage to Sister Rushton and a tea rose boutonniere to Brother Rushton.

"Love's Old Sweet Song," their favorite was sung by Pearl Crum Shirk, and "Through the Years" by Garland Tickemyer.

On behalf of the Joint Council of the Church, Apostle Charles R. Hield spoke in appreciation of the many years of service given by both Brother and Sister Rushton. A large bouquet of golden flowers were sent by the Joint Council in token of their regard. District President Louis J. Ostertag then presented a gift, a sum of money which was given by members of the branches and missions of the district.

"The Lord's Prayer" was then sung by Garland Tickemyer. Two daughters—Dorothy (Mrs. Orlo Backer) and Margaret (Mrs. Morey Frazee), and a daughter-in-law, Mrs. John Rushton, were in the receiving line.

Long lines of friends moved slowly past to congratulate their friends of so many years. One hundred young people were in attendance in a body.

Mirrors or Windows?

BY MAUDE ANDERSON

IT HAS BEEN SAID that what the world needs is fewer mirrors and more windows. If you walk into a darkened room where there are no windows, you will see nothing even though a mirror be hanging on every wall. If there is one small window with a beautiful view outside and a mirror hanging opposite that window, the scene will be reflected.

Today the world is confused because so many churches have become only mirrors reflecting the life of the world. To be sure, there are a few small windows admitting the light of God, otherwise we should be in total darkness.

The great mass of people have no will of their own but simply reflect that which is about them. What the world needs is more people whose lives are luminous from the light of heaven. It is often said that children reflect their surroundings. As we become adults, we should learn to think for ourselves and not be merely a reflection of that which is around us.

Every Christian should become a window admitting the light of heaven. To be sure, each pane of glass will be colored by the individual personality; but when all are arranged in a perfect pattern, they will make a beautiful scene. What an inspiring sight it is to walk into a church as the sun sets behind a stained glass window and see the picture of the Christ holding a lamb in his arms. So Christians should be to the world. Instead of merely reflecting the confusion of a pleasure-mad world, we should be able to give people the inspiration derived from walking into a beautiful church with the sun shining upon the stained glass window. We may find the pattern for such a window in I John, chapter 2.

It is an easy matter to love those who love you, but it is a different matter to love those who spitefully use you. Yet that was what Jesus was capable of doing and that is what we must be able to do if we are to reveal the light of God.

The world gives a very good example of loving its own when people advance because of the influence they may have with other influential people rather than because of their ability.

As I walked into a room of a lovely home, I saw a scene above a mantel which defied all description. Then I realized that it was a mirror reflecting that which came through the large window opposite. If outside that window there had been nothing but a rubbish heap, then the reflection in the mirror would have been quite different.

Let us all strive to be windows admitting the light of heaven so that those who are only mirrors may at least reflect beauty.

Refreshments of punch and cake were served. The centerpiece of the table was a cut-out of a golden ring, which framed the picture of Brother and Sister Rushton. A bouquet of yellow rosebuds and four golden candles formed the background.

Young People's Work in Independence

HOW OFTEN have we heard the saying, "The future of the church lies with our young people"? We have heard it often enough, no doubt, that by now we have recognized it is an incomplete statement. It should be stated something like this. "The future of the church depends upon the training we are giving our young people now."

Few things "just happen," least of all the development of God-fearing men with leadership ability, strong convictions, and the courage and initiative to translate those convictions into action. Such men and women are produced only through careful training by wise and devoted parents, by understanding members of the priesthood, and by the skilled hands of men and women trained in the leadership of youth activities.

Youth leaders in our church find it important, then, not only to deal directly with the young people themselves but also to give the benefit of their training to mothers and fathers, to pastors and priesthood, as well as to other leaders of youth activities.

The necessity of this approach, as against the "leader dealing directly with all the youth" concept, can be better understood when we realize that there are in Independence on our church membership records more than twenty-six hundred young people. This includes girls from seven years (the Blue Bird age) to twenty-four, and boys from nine years (Cub Scouts) to twenty-four. Twenty-four is selected as the top age for consideration because it is the recommended age for "graduation" from Zion's League into young adulthood, though it is generally felt that marital status and maturity have as much to do with this change as does chronological age.

In Independence our twenty-six hundred young people are distributed among fifteen congregations. Those who attend the regular congregational services receive there a normal and valuable spiritual ministry along with the adults.

Normal young people, however, have different needs and interests than their parents and older friends—needs not met entirely by the routine church activities. Thus our congregations in Independence, as elsewhere, have adopted specialized programs such as Scouting for boys, Orioles and Girl Scouting for girls, and the Zion's League program for mixed older young people to help meet these needs with approved activities conducted under reliable supervision.

TO FULLY APPRECIATE the work being undertaken in these fields, it is again necessary to look at numbers. In the fifteen congregations there are:

- 8 Cub Packs with 270 Cubs
- 11 Scout Troops with 300 Scouts
- 1 Senior scout unit with 16 senior Scouts
- 27 Blue Bird Bands with 245 Blue Birds
- 17 Oriole Circles with 160 Orioles
- 3 Girl Scout Troops with 50 Girl Scouts
- *17 Zion's Leagues with 400 Leaguers

84 units with 1,441 young people
*Two congregations have both Junior and Senior Zion's Leagues.

Thus we find over 1,400 young people being served in eighty-four units, or better than half of our potential membership of 2,600. A number of these are nonmembers, which brings the percentage of our young people being served by our church units closer to one half. This does not include an estimated 100 more of our girls being served in Girl Scout Troops outside our church or eighty-three Independence students at Graceland last year, which would make a total of 1,624 active young people. While this percentage of participation is probably as good or better than that of the average adult congregation, it represents a challenge. Here is a fertile field of missionary endeavor—the challenge to hold our own young members, a task just as important as winning new members.

The fact that so many of our youth are interested and active in these programs is the best indication that they do have a universal appeal. A study of the programs will leave little doubt as to their value—church-wise, if properly administered. If so, it would seem fair to ask, "Why aren't the other half of our young people interested and active?"

One reason is that their parents are not being reached by the church or are no longer interested. But that does not fully answer the question, or we would not have the children of nonmembers taking an active part in our youth programs.

TWO OF THE MOST IMPORTANT REASONS for our failure to reach more of our young people would seem to be the lack of enough trained and devoted leaders to provide sufficient units to minister to them, and the lack of adequate building facilities to accommodate these units. This is the same basic and crying need of our whole church. Yet, unless the leaders of tomorrow are adequately trained today, what reason do we have for believing or even hoping that Zion will be built in the next generation? The future strength of Zion lies in the number of leaders and followers we can develop and not simply in the strength of a few individuals.

Happily, nearly every congregation in Independence has a building program underway or plans on the drafting board which will improve facilities for both congregational worship and young people's activities. This is most encouraging and gives spur to our plans for the recruiting and training of additional leaders.

As part of the School of Religious Leadership held in Independence this past winter, a course for Zion's League leaders in "The Zion's League Program and How to Use It" was conducted, with an average attendance of twenty-five adult leaders and League officers. In addition, our city-wide Zion's League officers have tried to provide in their regular meetings both planning sessions and training in leadership techniques. For example, whenever the city-wide Zion's League Worship Committee, which is composed of the worship chairmen of all seventeen Leagues in Independence, holds a meeting, the chairman wisely tries to provide time for discussion of local League problems and to give special helps for local League worship programs. Monthly meetings of the Zion's League leaders, i. e., young people's leaders, from each congregation provide a regular opportunity for discussion of the leaders' problems.

One of the best examples of training for our leaders of young people's activities is found in the regular monthly meetings of the Blue Bird Leaders' Band and the Oriole Monitor's Workshop. These groups concentrate on providing techniques and helps for leadership. The administrative council for girls' work, which is composed of the girls' work directors of each congregation, in a monthly meeting conducts the business of the girls' work, as well as receives some training.

Because our larger congregations may have as many as half a dozen or more units with over one hundred young people in them, there has been established in most congregations in Independence the office of Young People's Supervisor. These men, or women, act as pastoral supervisors to tie all the units to the church and to co-ordinate their work for the best interest of the congregation and the young people. The supervisors also meet regularly in combined planning and training sessions.

The two areas in which regular city-wide meetings have not yet been established are in our Girl Scouting and Boy Scouting programs. Efforts to pull the leaders of our church troops together and to tie these units closer to the church are underway. Our Scout units hold many top honors in their districts and council, and most of them serve the church well.

THE BLUE BIRDS AND ORIOLES carry out a number of worthwhile activities throughout the year. These include daily paging at the Sanitarium, two summer one-week camps at Gardner Lake for the Orioles and two overnight camps for the Blue Birds, an anniversary week with both units and city-wide events, a Blue Bird Achievement Day, and an Oriole Institute.

The Zion's Leagues also have their share of activities. By using the organization and programs outlined in the Zion's League Annual, the League members of Independence have been stimulated to effective activities in the fields of worship, study, service, and recreation. In addition to meeting their own and their congregational responsibilities, by April, 1948, they had raised $1,650 toward their goal of $2,500 for Mission's Abroad. A full week of splendid activities, both local and city-wide, were conducted by the Leagues to celebrate the Restoration Festival in April. In May, the combined congregations of Independence indicated their interest in the young church members of the local high school graduating class with a banquet and program which was attended by some ninety graduates and guests. Throughout the winter, recreation nights were planned and conducted in turn by different Leagues in the lower Auditorium. A volleyball conference among boys' and girls' teams has recently been concluded this summer while several Leagues entered softball teams in the city-recreation and Y.M.C.A.

leagues. Through the efforts of the city-wide Zion's League, one tennis and two volleyball courts have been restored with lights for night play on the church-owned Campus.

Another summer activity which has proved very valuable was a series of weekly conferences for older young people on the subject, "Boy Meets Girl," with prominent church men and women covering various phases of preparation for courtship and marriage.

A high light of the year is always the city-wide Zion's League Retreat held over Labor Day week end at the church camp at Gardner Lake near Excelsior Springs, Missouri. This year's theme was, "Zion, City of God." The retreat, attended by about 150 young people, was a stimulating combination of fun, fellowship, study, and worship. Unusual preparation was made this year as the young people sought the finest possible spiritual experiences at the retreat.

Forty of the nearly eighty young people attending Camp Yopeca at Gardner Lake this season were from Independence. Several from Independence also went to Nauvoo and other church youth camps. Nearly the same number of young people attended the Gardner Lake Reunion, where they were rewarded again with the finest of wholesome experiences.

In spite of the numerous city-wide activities, the emphasis for the year has been to strengthen the local Leagues. Through the training of leadership and the development of projects which require the united efforts of each League, this has been carried out to a large extent.

THE MOST IMPORTANT SINGLE OBJECTIVE of our work in Independence is to surround the young people of the church with influences which will give them first a sense of direction and second the will to travel always in the direction which leads them close to God and to the accomplishment of his purposes. This cannot be accomplished by any magic formula nor by any single program.

The home offers the greatest single influence in the lives of young people. It is the attitude of the parents which determines whether or not the children will participate in church activities. Even the finest church program for young people can be seriously handicapped without the sympathetic support of parents.

The second strongest influence for good or evil in the lives of young people is that of the group with whom they regularly associate. Thus it is, to give wholesomeness to this influence, that the church promotes the use of such programs as found in the church school, the Zion's League, Scouting, Orioles, etc., for if the group itself can be brought under the influence of the church and held there by means of activities which both challenge and feed the cravings of youth, the battle against the influences of evil for the lives of our youth is half won.

The task of creating Zionics among our youth in Independence is being attacked constantly from two sides. The first is the effort to keep the home influence strong by means of sermons from the pulpit, church school classes, prayer services, priesthood visits, women's department activities, men's clubs, etc. The second is the effort to control the attitude and activities of the groups in which our young people themselves find their friends and satisfactions. This is accomplished through the promotion of our young people's programs, in what must be a determined effort by our congregations to control this second strongest influence in the lives of our young people.

The devil is a most persistent and clever opponent. Experience teaches us that only through wholehearted efforts by a trained and consecrated people working hand in hand with God can we ever hope to conquer him and achieve the realization of our Zionics dreams.

The Good and Bad of Alcohol

By BESSIE TAYLOR

ALCOHOL has been a problem since ancient times. All races of people have some form of alcoholic beverage, differing in quality and variety. It exists so widely in the human family and affects us so profoundly, that we must stop occasionally to give some thoughtful attention to its influence—especially in these days of increasing consumption. Over 50,000,000 people in our own country use alcoholic beverages moderately and more or less regularly.

In a scientific sense, the term alcohol applies to a large class of substances of the same general character, differing slightly in origin, physical properties, and chemical composition. There is but one source yet known for alcohol—the decomposition of some form of saccharine matter by means of fermentation. Sugar and starch may be viewed together as the source of alcohol, combined with some active decomposing agent at the proper temperature.

Alcohol, when rightly used works to man's benefit. Because of its helpful qualities, it will never be outlawed by the world any more than atomic energy. The keynote lies in the word control. We seldom consider the great benefits of alcohol because we usually associate it with intoxicating beverages.

In the field of art, alcohol has the power to dissolve many substances such as gums, resins, and oils. From the dissolved resin, we manufacture our household varnishes. The word alcohol is of Arabic origin and means "to paint"; it was so called probably because of its power to dissolve pigments which are insoluble to water. In cosmetics, it is the base for many products such as perfumes and lotions.

Alcohol is also valuable in the preparation of drugs. Although the use of it as a stimulating medicine is becoming less and less popular. Just as it dissolves gums and oils, so also does it extract wanted substances from various leaves, barks, seeds, and roots. A large class of drugs, especially the patented medicines, contain a percentage of alcohol. Chloroform is produced from any alcohol by distilling it with chloride of lime. Ether is obtained by the action of sulphuric acid on alcohol at a certain temperature. Alcohol is practically indispensable as a solvent in the preparation of tinctures, medicaments, and therapeutic preparations. It is a pure antiseptic and a valuable massage. It is also the base for many household products.

To the chemist, it is valuable as a convenient fuel, producing in his lamp much heat with no annoyance of smoke; and it is of frequent use as a reagent for separating salts, one of which is soluble and the other insoluble. Since alcohol does not freeze, it is used in carpenter's levels, thermometers, and engine radiators. The antiseptic properties of alcohol lend to its use in preserving specimens of organic matter. Animal matter immersed in it will not decompose.

For industrial purposes, alcohol is denatured. The United States Government removed the tax on denatured alcohol in 1907, thus making it inexpensive. It is used for heat, light, power, and a number of manufacturing purposes. Germany, especially, has used it for lighting and cooking. It is used as a solvent in making plastics such as celluloid, collodion, and cellulose. Photographic films, combs, brush handles, "artificial amber," etc., are products of celluloid. The solution of collodion is used in photography, artificial silks and mercerized cottons. Cellulose is used for insulating electric wires, making hair bristles, nylons, filaments for incandescent electric lamps, bottle caps, and waterproof products. Alcohol is also used in the manufacture of explosives. Without alcohol, much of our material progress would be impossible. Even the future, no doubt, holds greater possibilities.

THE benefits of alcohol cease and its dangers begin when man starts using it internally. "Strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies."—Doctrine and Covenants 86:1. We must have no personal fellowship with this "firewater" in any form. It is the one great devastating force of humanity that lies in our absolute control if we would only exercise it. The employment of alcohol in the preparation of beverages constitutes by far the greatest use made of it. It forms a vital principle in all the spirituous liquors consumed in the world. It is the alcohol in them that makes them intoxicating, and the strength of the liquor varies with the quantity of alcohol it contains. It is the alcohol that gives it the peculiar value in the estimate of those who use it.

The use of alcohol affects every phase of life. It is first noticeable in the physical, then the mental, next the moral, and lastly the spiritual. The harm that alcohol does to the physical body is of less consequence than to the other phases of life it affects. One reason why alcohol is so valuable to science is because it has such a great affinity for water. Thus, when it enters the body, it holds most tenaciously to the fluids of the body and affects most those tissues and glands which are of the greatest percentage water. Because alcohol requires little or no digestion, it passes quickly into the blood and is carried to all parts of the body. It holds greedily to the water of the various parts and absorbs it. It is finally eliminated from the body with little or no change. Everywhere in the body, it has acted as an intruder; nowhere has it given support or food. The action of alcohol upon the blood is very decided, since the blood is so largely composed of water. It causes the corpuscles to shrink by absorption. As alcohol comes in contact with the nerve cells, it likewise draws off the water, causing them to contract and grow hard and paralyzed. The deadening effects of alcohol upon the extremities of sensory nerves is shown in the blunted feelings of those who are under its influence. Such persons are insensible to blows, bruises, burns, and other injuries. As the nerves become blunted, muscular control is impaired. This is why "drunken driving" is so dangerous. Death would be much more common from drinking if the user did not become unconscious. After a certain percentage gets into the blood, one automatically becomes unconscious, thereby allowing the organs to operate at a low level of activity. The main damage caused by alcohol is to the central nervous system. The effect is functional rather than structural.

BECAUSE mind and body are so interdependent, that which affects one also affects the other. The deranged physical condition of the nervous system produced by the effects of alcohol disqualifies the mind to function in its proper order. The action on the nerves is accompanied by undue excitement in the nerve centers, the effect of which is a temporary exhilaration of mind so that the individual feels brightened and cheered. As this first hilarious stage passes off, the second stage is marked by a state of depression. There is a slight chilliness, a fall of temperature, an indisposition to muscular exertion, irritability of temper, and lack of control over words and thoughts. It is at this stage the victim tries to drink more, hoping thereby to regain the original pleasant sensation. The mind loses its power of reason, and the memory becomes less clear and retentive. The imagination is unrestrained. The mind becomes introverted and often cruel and destructive. The finer feelings of the mind and nerves of the body are paralyzed together. The sensibilities first to be obscured are the last acquired by education and culture. The victim first ceases to be refined, then polite, considerate, and chaste. He then descends to selfishness, vulgarity, and brutality until he is fully exhibited in his uncultured and savage form.

The third stage is that deranged insane condition known as "intoxication." The proper action of the brain is obscured, and the animal instincts, uncontrolled by reason and the will, assume dominion. The vital organs become enfeebled.

The fourth stage is that of "unconsciousness." In this, the victim loses all power of control. He cannot see or hear or feel anymore than if he were chloroformed. He is at the stage of temporary paralysis of the whole nervous system and bordering closely upon death. The traditional progressive stages are described by the following descriptive adjectives: dry and decent, delighted and devilish, delinquent and disgusting, dizzy and daffy, debauched and delirious, dead drunk, dethroned and damned.

JUST as the mind depends on the body for its support, so does moral development depend upon the mental condition. The higher up the scale we go, the more positive becomes the alarming consequences of the corruptive influence of alcohol. The indictment against alcohol as a danger to the body is severe. But the indictment is even more severe against the psychic powers. Maladjustments of life become irretrievably fixed by alcohol. Drunkenness places men as much below the level of the brutes as reason elevates him above them. This "genius of degeneration" inflames the passions and dethrones the will. Intoxication, is, itself, temporary insanity. It is not difficult to prove that the influence of alcohol tends to lead directly to the committing of sin. The tendency of alcohol to paralyze the physical nerves, to obscure the more delicate and refining sensibilities of the mental part, and to inflame the animal passions, puts the individual in the very condition that favors evil action. Alcohol helps men to be wicked. It is never drunk with the ends of virtue in view. It is a confirmed fact that it constitutes the greatest of all causes of crime. It is particularly noticeable that, under its influence, an individual loses his power of judgment so that he no longer appreciates the rightfulness or wrongfulness of his actions nor the consequences that follow his deeds.

The most dangerous parts of a city are those portions in which alcoholic liquors are used most—neither is virtue esteemed there. Persons addicted to alcohol become a ready prey to the influence of other stimulants and narcotics.

It is in the spiritual realm that man's greatest penalty must be paid for alcoholic indulgence. When liquor becomes a habit, it becomes a dual sin. First, a sin against self, and second, a sin against others. Prominent characteristics of the alcoholic are selfishness, inability to tolerate reverses, a naive expectation that what he desires should be his for the asking, and little regard for the feelings or opinions of others, which are all averse to the true doctrinal virtues of Christ.

The reason alcoholic beverages are so in demand is because of their anesthetic value which blunts the higher intellectual activities and relieves "anxieties" of general discontent, self-reproach, and apprehensions. It relieves all troubles, fears, and weaknesses, and gives a stuporous sense of well-being. The real tragedy lies in the fact that we cannot overcome our problems by evading them. We must meet them as they come, and the greater the problem, the more need for a high use of reason and intellect. A good prayer meeting can have the desired effect on us in relieving us of our troubles, anxieties, and inferiorities, and the spiritual treatment will be lasting while the liquor is not. Indulgence of liquor increases the complexities of life. As the temporary glory of the alcoholic effects passes off, the victim becomes subject to the full realization of his anxieties and he is back again from where he started. As he emerges, he feels morally weakened and beaten before he starts. A sense of inferiority and hopelessness overtakes him. His "means of escape" makes it harder to

The Beautiful House

ONCE IN A FRIENDLY neighborhood a congenial Mr. and Mrs. owned a beautiful house. A quick peek in the front door would reveal the fact that no cat had ever swung on the point lace curtains, no dog had ever chewed the corners of the Axminster rug, and no child had ever let jam slip past small fingers to land with a soft plop upon the upholstered furniture. It was a "picture" house—pleasant to the eye, but not to the heart.

Then came the first change. In the street in front of the beautiful house, a whizzing car struck a puppy—a black cocker spaniel. For a brief moment the car hesitated, then sped on with a growl. The Mrs., her body half-rigid with fear and anger, rushed to the rescue, brought the dog into the beautiful house, and administered such first aid as she had learned at Red Cross classes during the war. Satisfied with her endeavors, she waited anxiously for some loving owner to claim the dog. As she waited, both she and the Mr. grew to love the black, silky coat and the soft, pleading eyes. The waiting period grew to such a length that it was abandoned. The dog became a part of the household.

Silk, as she was appropriately termed, enjoyed her surroundings. After the first preliminary search of the beautiful house and the spacious flower gardens, she took her environment for granted. She expected her milk in the morning, her meat in the evening, and her flea-soap bath on Saturday. The Mr. learned to step over the holes that sharp claws dug into the choice places of his treasured gardens. The Mrs. decided to pack and store away her Axminster rugs until the time that puppy teeth would lose the desire for chewing.

THE THREE LIVED TOGETHER in joyful union, but the house became less beautiful as their state became happier. There were times when the long, black ears of the dog resembled the long, black curls of a small girl. There were times when a tug on the bottom of a skirt or on a trouser leg felt like the pull of a small hand. There were times when the Mr. and Mrs. wished that Silk were a wee girl in the household.

Then came the second change. It started with the disappearance of Silk. She left in the early afternoon and did not come home for her meat in the evening. The Mr. and Mrs. were troubled deeply. They called frantically and drove the car into divers places, looking for the strayed one. Despondent, they returned home. All searching was apparently hopeless. They might as well fill in the holes in the garden and unpack the expensive rugs and make their house beautiful again. But as they talked, there came a bark at the door. Silk had returned.

The Mr. rushed to the door and opened it. In walked Silk, but she was not alone. Behind her came a sleepy-eyed little boy. He was not an attractive child. Even if his brown hair had been combed, his clothes clean, and his shoes tied, he would not have been an attractive child. For a minute he stood blinking at the bright light of the beautiful house, then in a childish jibber he announced that he was hungry and wanted to eat. While the Mrs. cared for the child and the dog, the Mr. phoned the police department. No, there had been no report of a missing child, but a policeman would call for him immediately.

After the immaculate policeman had arrived, the child shoved his chair precariously back from the table, and calmly stated, "Mommie and Daddie go get dink." The policeman clinched his fists. It was the same old story. The parents preferred the sting of intoxicants to the duty of caring for their offspring.

The events that followed were the same as in other cases. Parents proved unworthy. Child put into proper home. That was the way the beautiful house gained its fourth occupant.

NOW FOUR LIVED TOGETHER in joyful union, but the house became less beautiful as their state became happier. There was romping from one room to another. There were flowers knocked over in the spacious gardens. Things about the yard and house sometimes became mussed and upset and untidy. But there were love and life and laughter.

Now in the friendly neighborhood live the cheerful Mr. and Mrs., an ordinary child, and a black dog. A quick peek in the front door would reveal the fact that there is no longer a beautiful house. There is a beautiful home.

Manners for Mothers:

Do you invite your children's friends into your home? Or do you consider them a bunch of tiresome brats? If you think they are, they will be. Try treating them with the same respect and cordiality you accord a visiting neighbor. You'll soon have a reputation . . . for being a swell Mom!

Does your child get dragged along a downtown street? How about slowing down to his pace for a change. Did you ever think how many extra steps he has to take? If you'll think of how he feels, people will think you enjoy your child . . . instead of resenting him!

A Devotional

MOST of us are interested in some form of interior decoration. Usually we become more conscious in the spring of the year of various changes we'd like to make in our homes—new curtains in some room, paint in another, or a new slip cover for a drab-looking chair. If we weren't limited by the financial part of these changes, no doubt there would be a number of things we'd choose to do. These are all a part of interior decoration.

The other day I was glancing through a home magazine and the title of a poem, "Interior Decoration," caught my eye. When I started reading it, I was immediately made aware of the different kind of interior decoration that it was talking about. It started—

Each one of us is daily furnishing
The house in which his soul long years may dwell.

Then I began to think along a new channel. It's easy to become completely absorbed in the material aspects of our living. Necessary as they are, we mustn't let them crowd out the more vital part.

We should be very much concerned about the kind of interior decorating we're doing in our soul. Are we hanging the proper kinds of pictures there—those that will brighten with the mark of some kindness done? Are the rooms furnished in such a way that it becomes a haven of rest for those who are tired and oppressed and need a cheery word? There are a number of similes that could be drawn, but perhaps the following poem will stimulate our thinking along this line and help us to make some new resolves about our daily living.

What Have You Done Today?

You will do much in the years to come.

By MRS. J. D. ANDERSON

But, what of today?
You will give your talents in goodly sum,
But what will you give today?

You will lift the heart and dry the tear
You will plant a hope in the place of fear,
You will speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did you speak today?

You will be so kind in the after while,
But what of today?
You will bring to each lonely life a smile,
But what have you brought today?
You will give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
You will feed the hungry souls of earth
But whom have you fed today?

Zion, you'll build in the by and by,
But what of today?
You will pay tithing, yes, you'll try,
But why not start today?
'Tis sweet in the idle dreams to bask;
But here and now, are you doing your task?
Yes, this is the thing your soul must ask,
What have you done today?

Song— (To be sung to the tune
"Admonition")

1. Let the light of love adorn you
As you go about your work
Trust the hand of God above you
Do your best and never shirk.
Hearken to the works of wisdom
Train your heart and mind each day;
Help to usher in his kingdom,
Learn to work as well as play.
2. Speak the word with gentle kindness;
Let the spirit have full sway,
That you may lead men from blindness
To the realms of changeless day.
For if this we do in meekness,
We each day shall stronger grow;
Rising thus above our weakness,
We the truth shall come to know.
3. Only as we strive with patience
Can we hope to rise and grow

Into that most sacred station,
Where his truth we all may know.
We must then subdue our passions,
Make them serve the nobler cause;
And in gentleness should fashion
Souls who magnify God's laws.

4. Let us then be strong in spirit,
Filled with purity and love;
That in life we all may merit
Light and power from him above.
Get ye up, then, to your mountain!
Zion of this closing day!
For the glory of his coming,
Waits to break upon your way.

Prayer—In Unison

Our Father, as a new day comes to bring its unmarred opportunity, help us to use it better than we used yesterday. Help us to cultivate the spirit of righteousness and manifest it in our every act and thought. May we not develop virtues merely that they may be seen of men. Inspire us to acquire purity of mind, strength of will, and beauty of spirit that our inmost souls may be temples in which thou wouldst dwell. Keep us from the error of thinking that we have done our best when we have merely refrained from breaking the laws. Help us to keep faith with ourselves and to respect the value of our own personalities. May we live as if thy Son lived every minute of every day with us, and may the radiance of our faces be the indication of the fires of hope and faith and love within us. In Jesus' name we pray. Amen.

—If we work upon immortal souls, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and the love of fellow man, we engrave on those tablets something which will brighten all eternity.—Daniel Webster.

Thirty-five

With clearing minds
Between the years we stand,
Our youth behind,
And middle age at hand.

Some years we spent
On folly, and in vain,
Some years brought love,
And others brought us pain.

The years ahead
Are clean, with paths untrod.
May each of us
Walk hand in hand with God.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 7

Greater Love Hath no Man

Prelude: Duet, Saints' Hymnal, No. 336, or Piano Solo, No. 285.

Call to Worship:

Lord, let me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for others.

Help me in all the work I do,
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all I'd do for you
Must needs be done for others.

Let "self" be crucified and slain
And buried deep; and all in vain
My efforts be to rise again
Unless to live for others.
—Charles Meigs.

Suggested Hymns: Saints' Hymnal, No. 339, No. 341, No. 350.

Prayer

Scripture:

"This is my commandment, That ye love one another as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John 15: 12, 13.

"Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and everyone that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. No man hath seen God at any time, except them who believe. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us."—I John 4: 7-12.

The Story:

ABOUT BEN ADHEM AND THE ANGEL

Abou awakened from a peaceful dream and beheld an angel writing in a book. He asked, "What writest thou?"

"The names of those that love the Lord," was the angel's reply.

"Is mine one?" asked Abou.

"Nay, not so," said the angel. Then Abou spoke very low and said, "I pray thee, then, write me as one who loves his fellow men."

The next night the angel appeared again holding a scroll upon which were the names of those who had been blessed by the love of God in their hearts, and Lo! Abou Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

"And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."—I John 4: 21.

Reading:

What might be done, if man were wise,
What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
Would they unite, in love and right,
And cease their scorn of one another!

Oppression's heart might be imbued
With kindling drops of loving kindness,
And knowledge pour, from shore to shore,
Light on the eyes of mental blindness.

All slavery, warfare, lies, and wrongs,
All vice and crime, might die together:
And wine and corn, to each man born
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The meanest wretch that ever trod,
The deepest sunk in quiet and sorrow
Might stand erect, in self-respect,
And share the teeming world tomorrow.

What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this, my suffering brother;
More than the tongue, e'er said or sung,
If men were wise and loved each other.
—Saints' Herald, October 4, 1947.

Memorial:

On this Armistice Day, as we ponder the teachings of Christ regarding our conduct toward our fellow men, let us keep fresh in our memory the love shown for us and for our country by those brave men and women who gave that last full measure of devotion in the recent conflict as well as in those of previous years. "Greater love hath no man than this," said Christ. Let us stand in silent meditation and prayer as we listen to the singing* of Rudyard Kipling's beautiful hymn of remembrance, "God of our fathers, known of old."

*Quartet or other special group of singers may render this number very softly and quietly, Saints' Hymnal, No. 426.

Closing Hymn: No. 343.

Benediction:

"Lord God of hosts, be with us yet, Lest we forget, lest we forget."
Amen.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 14

"Give, and It Shall Be Given Unto You"

Vocal Prelude: by mixed quartet, Saints' Hymnal, No. 350.

Call to Worship:

Christ bore alone the heavy cross,
The crown of thorns he wore;
He gave with all the strength he had
'Til he could give no more.
He gave his life that I might live;
What do I have that I can give?
—Junior Manual, Behold the Light of the World.

Response:

The bread that giveth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears;

Beauty for ashes may I give away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er;
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith;
I want to do all that the Master saith;

By ALMA LOUISE UTZ

I want to live aright from day to day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.
(Words to No. 225, Saints' Hymnal.)

Opening Hymn: No. 346.

Prayer Poem:

Give us, O God, the power to go on,
To carry our share of thy burden through to
the end,

To live all the years of our lives
Faithful to the highest that we have seen,
With no pondering to the second-best,
No leniency to our own lower selves,
No looking backward,
No cowardice.

Give us the power to give ourselves,
To break the bread of our lives unto starving humanity,

In humble self-subjection to serve others
As thou, O God, dost serve thy world.
In Jesus' name, Amen.

—J. S. Hoyland.

Scripture Reading:

"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again."—Luke 6: 38.

Poem Response:

I, TOO, SHALL GIVE

Because I have been given much,
I, too, shall give;
Because of thy great bounty, Lord,
Each day I live.

I shall divide my gifts from thee
With every brother that I see
Who has need of help from me.

Because I have been sheltered, fed
By thy good care,
I cannot see another's lack
And I not share.

My glowing fire, my loaf of bread,
My roof's shelter overhead,
That he, too, may be comforted.

—Selected, Saints' Herald, September 14, 1946.

Suggested Quartet Number: "A Beautiful Life," Celestial Echoes, No. 70 (Price, 30c, White Wing Publishing House, Cleveland, Tennessee), or "Loving Each Other," Zion's Praises, No. 83.

Suggestions for Theme Talk:

The late Elder E. F. Robertson, long-time missionary and a man upon whom the spirit rested in great power, often bore his testimony to the effect that never in all his long years of missionary effort both at home and abroad had he been able to make even one sacrifice in the name of Christ and the church. "For," said he, "there can be no sacrifice when you receive far more than you can possibly give in his service."

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 345 or No. 216.
Benediction.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 21

Theme: "Offer Unto God Thanksgiving"

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 121.

Call to Worship:

We thank thee, now, O Father,
For all things bright and good;
The seedtime and the harvest,
Our life, our health, our food.
Accept the gifts we offer,
For all thy love imparts,
And, what thou most deservest,
Our humble, thankful hearts.
—Anonymous.

Response:

"Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands. Serve the Lord with gladness; come before his presence with singing. Know ye that the Lord he is God; it is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name. For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations."—Psalm 100.

Opening Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, No. 18 or No. 27.

Prayer: The Lord's Prayer (in unison).

Reading:

THIS YEAR I THANK GOD

This year I thank God
for these familiar walls.
I touch them often to make sure they're real.
I touch them and remember other walls —bleak, broken walls which stood beside great heaps of shattered glass and stone, artless and ugly,
the monuments of war.

I close my eyes and see the unforgettable design of endless caravans of tanks, the sun obscured by clouds of planes, and men—grim, bearded robots, ready to destroy.

I thank God it's a memory—that I no longer pack the tools of death, nor wonder what it is to die upon some nameless beach.

Surely there is much to prayer, for, through those tensioned days and nights,
I prayed for this:
for these familiar walls,
three meals a day, clean clothes, a bed.
—But they were little prayers;
most of all, I prayed for you.

God has kept you for me
as you always were,
smiling and golden.
And this fair replica of you—bright eyes, soft shining hair, and music in her laugh—
she is the answer to another prayer.

Perhaps it cannot last.
Perhaps the dangling and contention and misunderstanding born of men's small minds will end my day of peace;
yet, with all my heart, I thank God for the blessing of this hour—for you, for her, for these familiar walls.
—Saints' Herald, November 23, 1946.

The Story:

"Thanksgiving Day at Jerusalem."—Nehemiah 12: 27-47.

Thanksgiving Hymn: (Tune: "What a Friend We Have in Jesus.")

To the Giver of all blessings,
Let our voices rise in praise,
For the joys and countless mercies
He hath sent to crown our days;
For the homes of peace and plenty,
And a land so fair and wide,
For the labor of the noonday,
And for rest at eventide.

For the splendor of the forest,
For the beauty of the hills,
For the freshness of the meadows,
And a thousand sparkling rills;
For the blossoms of the springtime,
And the memories they bring,
For the ripened fruits of autumn,
Do we thank thee, O our King.

For the wealth of golden harvests,
For the sunlight and the rain,
For the grandeur of the ocean,
For the mountain and the plain;
For the ever-changing seasons
And for comforts which they bring,
For thy love, so great, eternal,
We would thank thee, O our King.
—Unknown.

Poem:

When light is in the morning sky,
When dusk is calm and fair,
At noon, at night, we bow our heads,
And lift our hearts in prayer.
We speak to God and know our word
At any hour is heard.

For life upon the lovely earth,
And guiding all our days,
For love and home and all our joys,
In earnest hymn and happy song
We lift our thanks the whole year long.
—Saints' Herald, October, 1943.

Suggested Hymns for Closing: No. 14, No. 428, and No. 100.

Prayer:

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 28

Theme: "Unto the Measure of the Stature of the Fullness of Christ."

Prelude: Saints' Hymnal, No. 205.

Call to Worship:

Forward with Christ! To him we pledge our best

In all our work, our worship, and our play.
Forward with Christ! With him we meet the best

Of high ideals for living every day.
Forward with Christ! O Master, lead the way.

Help us to find revealed new life today.
—Saints' Herald, October, 1941.

Scripture Response:

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Ephesians 4: 13.

Suggested Hymns: Nos. 210, 217.

Prayer of Invocation Thought:

Our Father, help us ever to move forward in the building of thy kingdom, for we realize that only through our consecrated activity can we come "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Meditation:

Great Master, touch us with thy skillful hand,
Let not the music that is within us die.
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us, not let Hidden and lost thy form within us lie. . . .
Spare not the stroke—do with us as thou wilt,
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred.
Complete thy purpose that we may become Thy perfect image—thou our God and Lord.
—Horatius Bonar, Saints' Herald, October 1941.

Thoughts for Worship Talk:

There is a German legend which tells of a dreaming child. To him the Christ appeared in all the different phases of his character.
He appeared as a healer, and the child thrilled as he watched the lame walk and sick children run and play. He appeared as a teacher and storyteller, and the child listened and longed to tell stories as he did. He appeared as a burden-bearer, helping the weary, and the child wished to do this. But each time the child shook his head sadly. "I can be none of these," he said. And then the Christ appeared as a little child, picking up shavings in his father's carpenter shop and running with them to his mother that she might kindle a fire.
"I can do that!" said the child as he watched,
and he went straightway and helped in his own house.

So we, too, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," must start now with the little things which are near at hand.

Song for Primary Children:

We want to be like Jesus,
We love him, yes, we do!
We want to be like Jesus,
And build his Zion, too!

Chorus:

Jesus, Jesus, we love you;
Jesus, Jesus, we love you.

We must be kind like Jesus,
We love him, yes, we do!
We must be kind like Jesus,
And build his Zion, too!

—Primary Manual, 1947, Vacation and Reunion Church School.

Hymn: Saints' Hymnal, Tune No. 311.

I have often felt a spirit o'er our congregations bend,

Like the strong electric presence of a dearly loved friend,

And have known that Christ was looking, with his patient eyes and true,
At the promise of the future, which was slumbering in you.

Heed the voices that are calling through the storm and through the calm,

Come up higher! Come up higher! Nearer to the great I AM.

Come, ye chosen of Jehovah, ye anointed to the truth.

Let the banner of the higher call unfurl above your youth.

Brightly is our pathway shining like the rainbow's golden arc,
And the Savior's perfect manhood is the beacon in the dark.

Let the worldling, if he chooses, yield to pleasure's soft restraint,

I conceive no higher object than to be a perfect Saint.

—Elbert A. Smith.

Prayer Poem:

"Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways;
Restore to us our rightful mind;
In purer lives thy ways to find,
In deeper reverence, praise.

"In simple trust like theirs, who heard
Beside the Syrian sea,
The gracious calling of the Lord,
Let us, like them, without a word,
Rise up and follow thee."

—Words taken from Saints' Hymnal, No.
243.

Why Are You Going to College?

By RUTH MIDGORDEN GOODWIN

IN THE SPRING a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. By fall he's either succumbed to some young woman's charm and married her or become engaged, or else the romance is off, and he's thinking seriously of school.

At least, I hope he's thinking seriously. I'm not qualified to write a thesis on education, but I have a few ideas for young people starting to college to mull over.

If you happen to be one of the pleasure-loving, go-to-school-on-Dad's-money kids, you aren't going to like me when I get through. Contrary to a great deal of popular belief, college isn't a finishing school for half-brained high school kids. Sometimes when a person looks around at college graduates, he seriously doubts that statement, but his faith is restored when he sees many fine, outstanding men and women who have learned the deeper values of "gettin' an edoocashun."

First of all, let's leave Grace-land out of this. I'm no authority on our church college for I never went to school there, and I hold above it a special kind of halo because of the type of people who come from it and the atmosphere I believe it creates. Instead let's confine this discussion, or harangue if it turns out that way, to the larger institutions of learning. There I can tread more firmly because of personal experience.

Lately I've become a little alarmed by the attitude of some young people toward the money value of a college education. There is a sizable number of young people who give up or never start to college because they find lucrative positions, working on road gangs or in offices. Don't misunderstand me; I've nothing against such types of work. But I'll admit I can't understand any young man or woman whose sole purpose in going to college—or in life—is to make a lot of money.

If your purpose in going to college is to stack up a pile of money, you haven't caught the vision of education or the vision of Zion. Don't misunderstand me there either; I believe college graduates should be justly compensated for the time, money, and effort they've invested in their four or more years of preparation. They should not be expected to work for a pittance.

Maybe I'm too idealistic, but it seems to me that the two big values of education are to teach the individual how to enrich his own life and to enrich the lives of those not fortunate enough to acquire the knowledge he has. It's a satisfying experience to sit in on an occasional meeting of a lively group of college graduates organized into associations such as the American Association for University Women. You catch there the spark of service, the feeling of owing something to society for providing the opportunity to go to school. For few of you are naïve enough to believe the money you spend—an alarmingly large amount though it is—covers the whole expense of putting you through four years of college. The taxpayers of your state, who support your large state colleges and universities, shoulder more of your burden than you realize. Isn't it only right that you should feel indebted to your community and your neighbors—and to your church?

Perhaps it's largely that way of thinking that makes me pretty intolerant of the typical Joe College or Betty Coed. Those immature individuals who go to college to join the fanciest fraternity or sorority on the campus and drive the dreamiest convertibles don't seem to fit into this picture. If you're sensible, you won't let anyone deceive you by telling you that you just have to join a fraternity or sorority to "get any place." I'm not telling you not to join; there are certain advantages for some people in the cliquish life. But if you have an average amount of backbone, and if you're a Latter Day Saint in spirit as well as name, you will probably go farther by being independent of the many ties and obligations fraternal life places upon you.

Maybe it's a bit strong, but from my own personal experience, I've seen only two or three persons who have been able to belong to a fraternity and still attend church on Sunday mornings and participate in the group activities. The very same thing was brought home to me when I was editor of my alma mater's daily newspaper. Loyalty to fraternity or sorority came first, and during the war years, with their shortages of students and consequently of journalism students, we often found it pretty difficult to stomach the excuse of a house meeting or a dance that "I just had to attend" when copy needed editing and proof needed reading.

But again to justify the fine young men and women who did belong to the social groups and who still were my friends, let me say that there are great numbers in the ranks of "independents" who are in the same category which many of us have come to call "typically fraternity."

If you're still reading, let's hit another topic. If you are enrolling in a big school these days, you are going to feel a sensation of being lost in the crowd and of no one's caring about you. Such is the curse of big schools, and most of them these days are big because of the veteran enrollment and other factors. If you are conscientious and if you do have a sincere desire to learn, you're going to feel despondent—maybe all of your first year. It was a great shock to me in my freshman days to find that my instructors didn't have time to answer all the questions I wanted to ask. I found myself cut off short more than once for lack of time. There's no doubt about the fact that many—maybe most—of our large colleges and universities these days are job mills. Put a freshman in one end of the machine and grind him through as speedily as possible until he reaches the outlet marked "graduate" and receives his sheepskin.

College is not leisurely these days; instructors and professors are too overworked and too burdened with other activities than the teaching load. But you needn't let this slightly gloomy picture dismay you. Stick up for your individualism and for your right to be heard, but don't be obnoxious about it.

Gradually, if not right away, you'll become acquainted with those choice gems of college professors and instructors who really love to pass their learning on to you. Your associations with such people will give you richness and memories that you will treasure your whole life through.

I've already said more than a good share of columns. But there's one more thing to say—the most important of all. As you start to school and constantly in the years ahead, keep asking the question, "Where does God fit into all this?" No one, especially an intelligent Latter Day Saint, can refuse to see the need for educated people with vision and emotional stability in our world today. The church cries for people with education and consecration to be builders in the Zion process. Superstitions, selfish desires, stubborn beliefs must largely be broken down by the teaching and guiding of those people who realize there are many ways of thinking and many ways of doing the same thing.

Most of you will realize when you do graduate from college that you are only beginning to see how little you actually do know. Then is the time you will need the most patience with those people who accuse you of thinking you know everything. Then is the time to be humble and full of gratitude to God for the blessings you are enjoying. Then is the time—and during college, too—to give unstintingly to those who didn't get your college education. Be careful not to be too aggressive or too easily discouraged because your ideas are rejected many times over.

Education is a slow process, but done well, it is a lasting one. The challenge of true education is a great one—will it make of you a mature, sound-thinking, kind, generous individual? You'll need those qualities and many more to be of greatest service to God—and isn't that the purpose of all constructive things we do in life?

Letter from Japan

NOTE: New Horizons readers will remember that in the article, "What of Japan?" (see Herald for August 21), the author, Dayle Bethel, offered to supply names of needy Japanese to any who wished to send relief packages. June Robb and Alta Dougherty, both Herald Publishing House employees, were among the first to respond to this appeal for aid. The following letter was received by Miss Robb in response to the one she sent, along with a package of food, to Nobuko Fukada of Kyoto, Japan.

Dear June,

I received your letter today, and it really surprised me. Thank you very much for your kindness of sending me foods. I never dreamt of such a great kind letter from you, and I'm so happy to have friends like you and Alta in America.

When I received your letter, I thought that you are a member of the church which Mr. Bethel belongs to. Is that right? I thought so because Mr. Bethel used to tell me that his church has headquarters in Independence, Missouri, so your address sounds very friendly to me.

I wonder if you know that I'm working with the Military Government here in Kyoto. I have known Mr. Bethel as he was with us in the government work. He was an earnest and intelligent soldier and a preacher for my mother and me. I went to see my mother in spite of a long, long way walk to tell her about the gospel. We really had a splendid time together.

Still I'm wondering who are you. Do you laugh at me if I say that it seems like a dream to get such a nice letter and friends so suddenly? My mother always said that her best friend is America, because when she was young she used to have American friends. But I'm sure you don't know much about me or Japanese.

Most things are too high to buy here, and I'm sure you are having hard times in America, too. I'd like to thank you again and again for your letter and boxes what are sent to me. Please give my best wishes to Alta and tell her that I'm very glad to receive her kindness.

Very truly yours, NOBUKO.

BRIEFS

BEVIER, MISSOURI.—David Linn, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Jay C. Hatton of Hastings, Nebraska, was blessed at the morning service on Sunday, August 8, by Elder Carl Weeks and Pastor John Vanskike. On Sunday, August 29, Rodney Dorr, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Dorr of Bevier was blessed by Elder Carl Weeks at the evening service.

PLANO, ILLINOIS.—Ten persons have been baptized in this historic congregation this summer, four confirmed at the July communion service, and six at the September service. Six were children, two high school girls, a mother who was baptized with her child, and a father with his child. Three young men are to be ordained, and four babies to be blessed this month.

EASTERN MICHIGAN DISTRICT.—The annual Eastern Michigan District Reunion was held at the Cash reunion grounds August 14 to 22. The theme was "Consider Thy Stewardship." Apostle E. J. Gleazer was present for part of the reunion. Elder Blair McClain led the morning prayer services and taught a daily class for men. Other classes were conducted by Bishop T. A. Beck; Mrs. Blair McClain, (women), Elders Luther Troyer and James Phillips (young people), and Lillian Dunlap (juniors). Arthur Carpelus of Detroit was in charge of recreation for the young people. The meals, as usual, were excellent. A unity and co-operation was felt by the workers and all who attended.

DINUBA, CALIFORNIA.—The annual business meeting was held on August 29 under the direction of District President L. A. McDonald and Elder James Damron, former pastor of Tulare Branch and Dinuba Mission. Edward McGoon was elected branch president with Robert Hurley as his assistant. At the close of the business session, Edward McGoon was ordained to the office of elder. There have been four baptisms during the past year: Judith Fowler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Fowler, and Mrs. Alvena Brown, wife of the former mission pastor; Margaret and Clara Andrews, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Elton Andrews. Elder Damron has been appointed to assist Bishop Ed Burdick in Sacramento; he and Mrs. Damron will leave Dinuba soon to make their home there.

BULLETIN BOARD

Wants to Contact Members

Mrs. Kathryn Cooper, 1001 North Main, Newton, Kansas, will appreciate having anyone living in or near Newton call on her. She is an invalid.

Wants "Zion's Praises"

Mrs. Guy Edgar, Route 1, St. Joseph, Missouri, wants as many copies of Zion's Praises as she can get for use in the children's department.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Bessie Elder, 928-A Cullman Street, Chickasaw, Alabama, requests prayers for her daughter (name not given), that she may gain sufficient strength to care for her three children. She is suffering from goiter. Those desiring to know more of this family may contact A. Orlin Crownover, pastor of Mobile Branch, 1612 Eagle Drive, Mobile, Alabama.

George H. Roberson, 320 South Maple, McPherson, Kansas, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of his family and divine guidance for himself.

Prayers are requested for a young sister (who prefers that her name not be mentioned). She has been ill for several years and desires to regain her health so that she may be of greater service to the church and society.

A son, David Allen, was born on March 16 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert N. Bruce at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Bruce is the former Rosalie Pratt.

DEATHS

ANDERSON.—Rose Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Yeager, died May 9, 1948, in Oakland, California, at the age of thirty-nine. She was a native of Colorado. A member of the San Leandro Mission of East Bay Branch, she was active in women's work and a teacher in the church school. She will be remembered for her kindly ways, friendly smile, and fine character.

She is survived by her husband, George F. Anderson; two daughters: Bonnie Jean and Georgia Rose; two sons: Roger Neal and John Wesley; her parents; three brothers: William, Henry, and Samuel Yeager; and four sisters: Mrs. Grace Patterson, Mrs. Frieda Boote, Mrs. Sarah Land, and Pauline Yeager. Funeral services were held in the Little Chapel of the Flowers in Berkeley, California. Elders William Roy and Alma Andrews officiating. Interment was in Sunset View Cemetery, El Cerrito, California.

TAYLOR.—Matthew Asher, was born April 15, 1886, at Lucas, Iowa, and died September 2 at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on April 9, 1916. On October 6, 1935, he was ordained a priest, and on March 4, 1945, an elder. On August 16, 1908, he married Maude J. Miller; two daughters were born to them.

He is survived by his wife; his daughters: Ruth Morehead of Milan, Missouri, and Dorothy McKay of Independence; a sister, Mrs. Grace Quinn of Indianapolis, Indiana; a brother, David Taylor of Chariton, Iowa; and two grandsons. Funeral services were held at the Englewood Reorganized Church. Elder Sanford Downs officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery in Independence.

HUFFMAN.—Mrs. John, was born July 27, 1884, in Parker, Kansas, and died August 23, 1948, at Lake View Home. She was married to John Huffman on March 13, 1921. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1906.

She is survived by her husband and a son by a former marriage. Funeral services were conducted by Ivor Surridge on August 25 at the Edwards Chapel in Bevier, Missouri.

CASTEEL.—Edith Evelyn, daughter of John and Emira Walker, was born July 17, 1872, at Savanna, Illinois, and died August 19, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium following several months of illness. She was married on April 14, 1904, to Grant Casteel in Burlington, Iowa; Mr. Casteel preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since April 15, 1890. Since 1936, she had made her home in Independence with her sister, Mrs. Emma Helm, who survives her.

Services were conducted at the Stahl Funeral Home in Independence, Patriarch Elbert A. Smith and Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in the family lot in the Leon, Iowa, cemetery.

TARZWELL.—Kirby Carman Maxwell, son of Robert Wilson and Mary Tarzwell, was born July 29, 1894, at Hillsburg, Ontario, and died July 10, 1948. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight and, although isolated from church privileges for some years, remained a true follower of Christ. On June 26, 1918, he was married to Amy Batchelor.

Surviving are his wife; a daughter, Mrs. Graham Gerguson of Toronto, Ontario; and two sons, Paul and Donald of Hillsburg. Funeral services were conducted at the home by Elder John F. Sheehy of Toronto. Interment was in Huxley Cemetery, Hillsburg, Ontario.

BOYD.—David S., son of David M. and Mary Scott Boyd, was born August 1, 1863, in Saginaw, Michigan, and died July 7, 1948, in Denver, Colorado. He spent his early years in Iowa, moving at the age of seventeen to Sterling, Colorado. There he married Harriet May Hudson in 1887, moving later to Hillrose, where he engaged in banking. In 1914, they made their home in Ouray, Colorado, where he was cashier in the Citizen's State Bank for thirty years. After retirement, they resided in Denver. Being baptized by James Caffall, he remained a faithful member of the Reorganized Church throughout his life.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Ralph Boyd of Ridgeway, Colorado; a daughter, Mrs. Marguerite Besso of San Diego, California; a sister, Mrs. George McConley of Denver; a brother, James H. Boyd of Estes Park, Colorado; six grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Apostle Myron A. McConley is a surviving nephew. Funeral services were conducted at the Episcopal Church in Ouray, with the Masons officiating at the grave.

BARKHAM.—Arthur John, died at his home in Portland, Oregon, on August 10, 1948. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 25, 1934, and ordained a teacher on October 20, 1935. He was a member of the Southeast Portland congregation.

Funeral services were held at the Mt. Scott Funeral Home, Elder Clark Livingston officiating. Burial was in the Madras, Oregon, cemetery, where he was laid to rest beside his wife who died several years ago.

The Good and Bad of Alcohol

achieve his potential efficiency. Creative efforts suffer most. Too often he is prone to seek again the "wet" avenue of escape, rather than striving for results through integrity and perseverance. Thus, the "vicious circle" drags the soul down, interfering with all the important activities of life. He cannot face reality without alcohol and, on the other hand, adequate adjustment to reality is impossible as long as he uses alcohol. Even the one who partakes only occasionally is dulling his sensibilities and lowering his powers to meet the actual existence of problems. The task of building Zion calls for the continual exercise of the highest powers within us. To live the celestial law requires the whole soul's response. Any force we willfully allow to interfere with our salvation is sin. Alcohol can be listed as one of the great causes of spiritual failure. The character, as well as the pocketbook, becomes impoverished. The addicted drunkard becomes stagnated physically, mentally, economically, socially, morally, and spiritually. The person who drinks has not developed his talents but has kept them dormant. Such is spiritual death.

with the financial law on the part of approximately twenty-five per cent gives evidence that we need to do a lot more groundwork. This groundwork consists of teaching each member the rudiments of home management: (a) the importance of record-keeping, and (b) of budgeting. Related to these is the need for training in the home regarding purchasing, food preparation, dressmaking, etc. The utilization of existing agencies such as Farm Bureaus, State Extension Services, and others may be included as a part of such training.

An understanding is needed of how personal stewardship relates to the business of the church, of how the filing of the financial statement and the payment of tithes provide the church with information and resources which enables it to carry on its broad program. The extent to which we give our attention and our support to this will be the measure of our success.

The slogan, "Keep the Law," which became well known during the period of debt payment, brought outstanding results. A continuation of such a program is essential today until we have increased substantially the number of contributors.

Son of Cain

P. S.

I cast him off for his bitter tongue—
 For the words of scorn and wrath he flung
 At the friends I'd known and loved so long,
 And my anger burned both deep and strong.

I turned away, and I thought it vain
 To speak God's love to this son of Cain.
 My heart was hard as I left him there
 And took from him my thought and care.

But I turned once more, when I heard his cry,
 And saw how God, Himself, stood by
 To touch that soul in mortal pain,
 And I took him to my heart again.

Wherever stands a soul in sin,
 Black rage without, red pain within,
 Don't give him up—God loves him too.
 Remember—God never abandoned you!

* ATTENTION, DAILY HERALD REPORTERS

This year reporters will receive special recognition—a green and white reporter's badge. These will be issued at the "Daily Herald" press headquarters, Room 4, in the lower auditorium, upon presentation of the first report. The badge entitles the wearer to use the facilities of the pressroom.

Reports should be handed in as soon after class as possible. They are to be written in third person and should contain only the high points of the lesson or discussion.

If the reporter cannot type, the material may be neatly written (or printed) in ink, with plenty of space between lines for editorial revisions. Suggested length for reports is one 8½ by 11 page, double-spaced, typewritten, or approximately 350 words.

* EUROPEAN MISSION. Eugene A. Theys, president of the German Mission, reports the following baptisms up to September 16, 1948: Ahlum, five; Augsburg, six; Braunschweig, two; Berlin, thirty-two; Brandenburg, twenty-nine; Elmshorn, eight; Grossraschen, forty-six; Hamburg, nine; Hannover, twenty; Offenbach, eight; Nurnberg, four; Springe, thirty-five. This makes a fine total for the mission of 204. There was also a baptism at Basel, Switzerland.

* HALO

You have heard of the man who had a constant headache because his halo was too tight. But his case was not nearly as bad as that of the poor man whose halo is so big it keeps slipping down over his ears and wearing blisters on his shoulders!

* BELONGING to a church is just like belonging to a club. Perhaps if we raised the dues, tacked on a penalty for not paying them, and restricted the membership to those who worked hard for the cause, we'd pack them in. People don't seem interested in things that are free. They think there's a catch to it . . . and there is. If you don't take it for free, you'll never have it, because you can't buy it anywhere on earth, although it is the most precious thing in the world.

* THINGS that are good, we take for granted. Things that are bad, we notice and condemn. Let's appreciate the good things more, and the bad things will happen less frequently.

"For Hearts Bowed Down"

IN TIME of deep trouble, people feel the inadequacy of their own strength and turn to others for help. Those who have been trained in the Christian faith lift their thoughts to God. When death strikes, when loved ones are lost, when peace and happiness disappear, it is good to know that there is something in the universe beyond humanity to which we may turn.

There is a song in a popular opera, entitled, "The Heart Bowed Down," that conveys more in its beautiful music than can be expressed in words alone. The phrase is reminiscent of a number of passages of Scripture. King David (II Samuel 19: 14) "bowed the heart of all the men of Judah." And in the Psalms (57: 6) we find the words, "My soul is bowed down."

THE PSALMS owe their enduring appeal in part to the fact that the writer lived long in the presence of trouble and danger and turned to God as his only source of refuge and help. He knew the bitterness of disappointment and defeat, the anguish of pain, the sharp stab of fear, the depths of despair. With "heart bowed down," he continually sought God. The Psalms are songs for the soul that is overwhelmed in the depth of trouble.

In all the Scripture, it seems that people turn to the Psalms when their need is greatest, and when their burden of sorrow is hardest to bear.

Lord, how are they increased that trouble me! . . . I cried unto the Lord . . . and he heard me out of his holy hill. . . . O Lord my God, in thee do I put my trust. . . . The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer. . . . though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil. . . . God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. . . . Have mercy upon me, O God. . . . Hear my cry, O God; attend unto my prayer. From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed: lead me to the rock that is higher than I . . .

Men on ships sinking at sea have gone down reading the Psalms against the shrieking of the wind through broken masts, and against the roar of waves pounding against a leaking hull. And in many a home people have turned to the Psalms when their own words and thoughts have failed them.

VERY FEW PEOPLE are able to enjoy long lives of unbroken peace, welfare, and happiness. Sooner or later, every man must enter a Garden of Gethsemane, must face the "dark and cloudy days" of suffering and loss, of pain and grief. Friends do all they can to help, and the strength they give is wonderful. But there are some respects in which the person in sorrow must go his way alone, at least for a time.

Death, the mysterious one, enters the home to touch a member of the family who has suffered too much, or has been too badly hurt in the accidents of this earth. Death breaks the chains that bind the sufferer to the rack of pain, setting the soul free, and conducting it away where mortals in the natural state can neither see nor follow. The "great and precious promises" of the gospel, on which our faith is founded, give assurance that they are better and happier in the eternal life, and that they are forever free from pain and sorrow and the fear of death. A few have been permitted briefly to pierce the veil that separates the physical from the spiritual and eternal order, to have some limited view of loved ones, receiving great comfort from the assurance that experience brings, and bearing testimonies that have cheered those who have not seen for themselves.

WHEN IT COMES to the loss of a loved member of a family, those who are bereaved ask the question, "Why?" Haven't we been taught to believe in a God of love? Isn't he all-powerful and able to save? Isn't he able to control his world? Then why does he permit tragedies to occur to his faithful children? He sometimes sends warnings in advance of some such event; then why can't he help us avoid the fatal acts?

These are questions that would require greater wisdom, knowledge, and understanding than those possessed by the writer to provide an answer. Yet some things are apparent that may help.

First, it appears that we are set here, subject to all the natural conditions of the world and of life, and we are given our minds and hands to protect ourselves. In a sense, we are "on our own" in the matter of responsibility. However, in times of need, God often helps through the exercise of spiritual power.

Second, what looks to us like the callousness and indifference of cold and heartless fate may, in fact, be God's mercy operating. No matter what can happen to us in this life, there are other things, both here and hereafter, that are infinitely worse. This theme has been seriously explored and presented by Mark Twain in "The Mysterious Stranger." The divine purpose operates in ways we cannot always understand.

Third, this life, which seems so all-important to us now, is so small a part of the eternal life—one man has called it the "infancy" which precedes eternity. Our viewpoint is temporal; God's is eternal.

"The heart bowed down" will at first think that God has abandoned him. His first reaction will be to lose faith in God forever. Such abandonment can lead only to the loss of hope and of eternal life itself. There is supreme wisdom in Job's statement, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him," for in letting the body die, God is simply releasing the soul to eternal life. He is the best judge of when our work is done, and when we are to be called Home. L. J. L.

The National Debt

I assume most American citizens are like myself in most matters, and, if so, they must, at times, ask questions as to our National Debt, and what is happening, and what may happen to us on account of it. Here is a brief statement taken from the Scottish Rite News Bulletin, issue of August 5, 1948:

The problem of the national debt keeps bobbing up every so often. The president of a midwest bank, in making his annual report, points out that his bank now has deposits of nearly two million dollars, and that almost a million dollars of war bonds are held by the people in the area his bank serves, and that these amounts are almost five times what they were in 1928—the increase being due to the spending by the Federal Government in the 1930's for relief and pump priming, its vast expenditures for war and lend-lease, plus the present large appropriations for grants and subsidies.

In 1928 the per capita debt was \$146 with a national debt of 17 billions in round numbers, while today the national debt is $14\frac{3}{4}$ times that, or 251 billions, with a per capita debt of \$1,800.

A breakdown of these figures shows, however, that, while the national debt has increased almost 15 times over that of 1928, the per capita indebtedness has increased only 12 times over that of 1928. This raises the question as to how big can the national debt safely be? Economists seem to agree that the national debt can safely go from two to three times the national income. In 1940 the national income was 70 billions and there were between nine and ten million unemployed. By 1943 the national income had risen to 145 billions and no able-bodied man who wanted a job was out of employment. The national income for 1947 was around 150 billions, and the latest figures in the press of the country show that there are at present close to 61,000,000 persons gainfully employed—an all time high.

It is a tragic fact, but a fact nevertheless, that up to now in every nation, except possibly Russia, full employment occurs only when there is war. This is so because in wartime most of the goods manufactured are destroyed in combat, thus making a continuing market for wartime goods. But in peacetime, the situation is changed. When 10 or 20 million homes have been built, and a similar number of radios, autos, typewriters, adding machines, washing machines, and scores of other devices and gadgets, the demand for replacements slows down. Right now heavy industry is busy on government work, while persons with cash are rushing to buy the things they wanted during the war years and could not get. These conditions are said to account for the present all-time high employment record, which means that the national income will continue to rise—some predicting that by 1952, if not by 1950, it will reach the 200 billion mark.

The late Wendell L. Willkie, in one of his campaign speeches, predicted that, if the national income reached 100 billions there would be full employment and that by prudent management the national income might reach 125 billions with prosperity for all—and that was as recently as 1940.

While the increase in the per capita indebtedness looks, on the surface, to be frightening in all its ramifications, yet, when considered with reference to the national income and the peak number of persons now employed, plus the increase in population, the cause for fright is after all not justified. America is a big country, with a large and intelligent population who likes to move in the grand manner, and, as a distinguished entrepreneur was credited with remarking, "Don't sell America short."

Some economists state that, if the national debt were to be wiped out today, then tomorrow there would be a lobby in Washington bigger and more powerful than the combined lobbies of our history to put back the national debt, for it gives a government guaranteed income to the rich. What many persons do not seem to realize is that government debt and personal debt are not identical in principle. The individual cannot refund his indebtedness or tax his fellow citizens for his expenses, but the government can and does. Government indebtedness is backed by the combined earning power of its citizens, and, in the case of the U. S. A., that is not small change. However, there are those who are optimistic about the national debt, and what they say may or may not be correct as no one can tell what is going to happen ten years from now.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent for Arizona

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Russell H. Wood, Route 5, Box 119, Tucson, Arizona, as Bishop's Agent for Arizona, succeeding Brother Paul Bear, whose resignation has been received. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of September and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Russell H. Wood at the above address.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Bear for the years of service he has rendered in this office.

We have also appreciated the support given by the Saints to Brother Bear during the period of his service and take this opportunity of commending Brother Wood to them for their favorable consideration and support.

"Herald" Files

We have an inquiry from the Utah State Historical Society, located in State Capitol, Salt Lake City, inquiring for Herald files. The Society asks us to find if members of our organization might have Heralds from 1860 to 1940 "which they would care to deposit" in their library "for research and reference use."

If there are available files, we should be pleased to have word about them. Please address the First Presidency, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Revolution or Evolution?

By Evan A. Fry

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 4: 11-16.

a philosophy which assumes that our whole philosophy of government, as well as our political, social, economic, and religious systems, should be thrown away so that we can start over. This philosophy teaches that world revolution is the only solution to man's problems, that all our institutions are too worthless to keep, that it would take too long to wait for and need to be corrected—is evolution or revolution the right road to correction and perfection?

IF WE LOOK TO GOD for an example, he seems to use a process of evolution, rather than revolution. He doesn't throw away the whole human race or even a whole species of animal in a sudden fit of petulance or impatience and start over. Even at the time of the flood, he saved the best of the human race and started over with them, rather than perform a complete new creation. If a species disappears, it is because it no longer adapts itself to environment or natural law—and the process is a slow, evolutionary one, rather than a cataclysmic, revolutionary one. Nations come and go in the same way. An old proverb says that Rome wasn't built in a day; neither did it decline in a day.

IF YOU HAVE CHILDREN in your home, you know that they inevitably tend to get dirty. But when the baby crawls around on the floor, or rubs jam in his hair, or smears himself with mud from mud pies, you don't throw away the baby because he is dirty. You bring him in and give him a bath; you throw away the dirty water, but you keep the baby. When a car needs new spark plugs, you don't junk the car, you buy new spark plugs; you throw away the bad and keep the good. When a scientist or an inventor comes up with a new process or a new machine which is basically a good idea which fills a need and which works, we don't throw it away because it has a few imperfections in it. We go to work to eliminate the imperfections while we keep the basic good.

the more orderly processes of social evolution, and, therefore, that the only salvation of the human race is revolution. Such ideas seem to find a ready acceptance among a large number of American citizens, who, by all means, should know better.

Let us grant that there are a number of things very radically wrong with us here in America—socially, politically, economically. We could use not just a little but a considerable amount of reform, in our tax structures, in our tariffs, in our political bosses and their machines, in our tendency to concentrate all power in Washington, and in the tendency of our citizens to flock to the public trough. A press service recently carried the story that one adult out of every six in the nation is now receiving a regular check from Uncle Sam. Grant that these and other things are dangerous in tendency

God always allows men to choose their course. He allows nations—consisting of men collectively—to choose their course, up or down. In a democracy, we have exactly the kind of political and economic system which we want and deserve, for if we do not choose to keep ourselves alert in the defense of our liberties, we deserve to lose them. Learning by mistakes, sometimes rising and sometimes slipping backwards for a while, men and nations climb slowly upwards out of darkness and slavery. Or, if they fail to make wise and righteous choices, they slip slowly back down into the abyss where final extinction awaits.

No man can force another man to be wise or to make right choices. A revolution which tries to force men's lives, their thinking, their worship, and their government into patterns and molds preconceived by the revolutionists is not only wrong but also downright immoral. Who knows what is right and wrong? Who has authority to chose for me and then force me to bear the consequences of his mistaken choices? But it is always characteristic of the revolutionist that he knows he is right and wants to force his rules on everyone else.

Then, too, most revolutionists have a lust for personal power. Being in straightened circumstances and theorizing that they lack because others have too much of wealth or power, they plot to overthrow the favored class which is in power and snatch some of that preferment for themselves. No revolution is ever successful if it merely replaces one favored or specially privileged class with another—if it replaces one wrong with another worse wrong.

OUR NATION BEGAN with what we call the Revolutionary War, but this development was not so much a revolution as it was an evolution. Colonial Englishmen here in America, still loyal to the mother country and to the English ideals of freedom which had evolved over centuries of time to find expression in the Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights, demanded only their rights as Englishmen. Cool and level heads in the British Parliament advised King George III to grant their reasonable requests, but he stubbornly refused. That refusal brought what we call rebellion. But this revolution was unique among all the revolutions the world has ever seen. It did not place a favored class in power or change one favored class for another. It merely extended in America the foundations of freedom which had long since been laid in England.

Before you give sympathy or support to any movement which advocates or condones a revolutionary solution to the imperfections of government and industry and economic structures which exist today, think long and well and clearly about what the results would be. Would revolution give you more freedom or less? More regimentation or less? More human rights or less? More freedom of enterprise or less? More freedom of worship and religion or less? More wealth or less? Granted that we have a certain amount of evil practices and evil men in public life today, would you be willing to trade them for the revolutionary type of leader who knows what is best for you and insists on forcing you to have things his way?

Many things are in need of correction in our national life, but let's not throw out the baby with the dirty bath water. Let's not junk our whole political and economic system that has made us the world's richest and most powerful nation, just to get rid of a few mistakes. If we don't evolve and change for the better, we may go down to destruction in a gradual decline as did Greece and Rome and Babylon and Egypt. But if we throw away all we have in a revolution, we will destroy ourselves and find oblivion overnight.

A New Democracy

By Ella Buck

ANY REAL AMERICAN believes that democracy is the best existing form of government. In this chaotic age, the true thinker undoubtedly feels that this world needs a more effective form of government. Our government is of the people, by the people, and for the people. How wonderful if all the peoples of the world could love democracy as we do. Granted, we are trying to spread it in the hope of keeping the peace, but even if all nations should uproot the traditions and customs of cultures built through centuries past, would a world-wide democracy be strong enough to maintain peace? Would not machine politics struggle for power then as they do now in our own United States?

It seems almost as if we were floundering about for some undisputed power to help mankind rise above its human love for personal power. In all humanity, this group or that fears the selfish desires of another group. It is not enough to say we should go to our Source for light and direction, rather we must integrate the government of God and the government of man. Just as we, the people, voice our opinion and wield our influence in the government of today, so should God have a voice. He should reside as the divine source of wisdom and justice.

In a theocratic-democracy, God designates, and man voices his consent. The free agency of man is not destroyed or hampered as it is in Fascism or Communism. The personality of the individual is held inviolate and allowed to develop to its fullest capacity.

Iniquity abounds on the earth today, perhaps to an unprecedented extent. There are the "haves" and the "have-nots." Those who have not are hungry for food and land. Often they are packed like sardines into small spaces. What other alternative have they than to expand by force, because man is too selfish to give without a fight?

Democracy alone cannot conquer this prime evil, which so often stagnates and degenerates our society. In a government of God and man, humanity would be bound in a common goal and a love and concern for the brotherhood of all men. In this all-inclusive society, all men would have the necessities of comfortable living and yet have ample chance to develop and bring the level of society higher. The opportunities of democracy would still reign, but the hindrances and fears of war would no longer harass the world.

Is it not reasonable to say that a government such as this would be more capable of keeping the peace?

Are You Willing to Live For Your Religion?

By Ruby Tinkham

FOUR STRANGERS met at a crossroads and sat down in the shade of a stately elm to rest. Each carried a heavy load, which he gratefully eased from his tired shoulders and stretched himself carelessly in the soft, green grass.

The youngest, a handsome, dark-haired youth, looked at the others carefully and then at the pack which he had laid at his dusty feet.

"I see that none of you are carrying such a heavy load as I," he complained. "I have so far to go, too. I doubt if I shall ever be able to finish my journey." And there was the peevish, whining quality of the very young in his voice.

The oldest, a man with white hair and a curly beard, carried a heavy fur coat over his arm. He looked at the small bundle at his side and answered slowly, "I shall be glad to exchange my load for yours, Son, but see those mountains over there?" He pointed northward with his thin, frail hand. "My load will take me to top of those mountains. There will be steep cliffs covered with ice. There will be deep crevices and dangerous precipices. There one never feels the warmth of the sun, and the wind shrieks madly in his tortured ears."

The boy shivered and answered quickly, "No, I do not want your load. I could never stand the cold. I'd freeze to death."

The second man, who was tall and thin, wrapped his loose dusty robe around his sunbaked body and spoke up quietly, "I shall be glad to exchange with you, Boy, but my journey takes me out across the burning desert. There will be days without the sight of anything green. If you chose my way, there would be sand in your face and hair and clothes till you'd think surely you would choke to death. There would be little water, and you would swear God had forsaken you."

The boy spoke even more quickly this time. "No, I would not want your load. I hate the heat, and I would die without water."

The last was a wiry, little old man dressed in a faded sailor suit and a jaunty cap on his nearly bald head. He had an infectious grin and a roll in his walk.

"Aye, Lad, and I'll be happy to trade my load for yours. But if you trade, you will have to stand on the deck of a ship and taste the salt wind in your face. The waves will roll angrily under your feet, and you will never be able to keep the food in your belly. Many a long, black night will you spend on a wet, slippery deck and curse the man that made a boat."

The boy answered slowly this time, and there was real regret in his voice. "No, I couldn't carry your load. I hate the water, and I'd always be seasick."

The three men looked at one another in complete understanding. The boy sat there, unconscious of their appraising glances, and finally he jumped to his feet as if he were eager to be on his way.

The old man spoke up gently, "And which way are you going, Son?"

The boy pointed down the road and shouldered his pack.

The sailor jumped to his feet and said excitedly, "But, Lad, didn't you just come by that road?"

This time the boy smiled and stepped forward determinedly, "Yes, but you have made my load so much lighter that I am going back." He raised his head and there was a happy look on his handsome face, "You see, that way is home."

OUR FATHER'S KINGDOM is our rightful home. Every man who has not found his place in this kingdom is carrying some kind of a heavy load, and the journey is endless before him.

Dissatisfaction with our own lives will lead us to believe that the man who is successful is carrying a much lighter load than our own. Often familiarity with the lives of the really great will teach us how wrong we are in this supposition.

The laws of the kingdom are no different than the laws of the land. When obeyed, they bring long, lasting happiness and success. The delay in learning the laws of God is our own punishment for disobedience.

The time has come when we must put on the whole armor of obedience; and even though it hurts painfully here and there, we must wear it determinedly until it becomes a part of our human nature like the outer skin. There is no doubt that this armor will constantly chafe us, especially when it exposes itself prominently to the criticism and ridicule of the outside world. This is all the more reason why we must carefully plan a refuge that will deliver us out of the cruel hands of our enemies and at the same time fulfill the destinies of a group of people promised deliverance at the hand of God.

In this long-deferred plan there is a place for everybody. No one is too small for Zion! Here is a place where everyone can fulfill his destiny. In each of us there is some creative ability. Sometimes it takes a lifetime to find out, because we are so concerned with the demands of everyday living, we neglect asking God for guidance.

How he must pity us—daily thwarting his plans to make us into gods when we are so content to be just men!

Here and there we meet people who have conquered their own selfish desires and have attained real greatness through the service they render to their fellow men. The lesson doesn't last long, because we always credit them with special talents that we are denied.

We seem to forget that God has not denied any of us talent. Once we decide to use that talent in his service, we will find it richly supplemented.

I SOMETIMES WONDER what would happen if for one year every Latter Day Saint would actually become a Latter Day Saint! By that I mean each would use every bit of equipment he possesses in the service of God. Supposing God would reveal to us that we had just one year in which to build Zion, could we do it? Would we try to do it? If so, how would we go about it? As we are now?

There would be a new spirit of frenzied activity. No one would sleep as long as there was any definite thing to be done. It would be as it was back in Jerusalem after the crucifixion. People would hasten to do the ordinary tasks quickly so that there would be plenty of time for renewed service and joyous meetings together to plan new progress.

So many of us look at ourselves with a sense of failure mixed with shame. We want to build the kingdom. We'd like to see Zion a reality. We ask ourselves, "What can I do, stuck off here in a little place like this?"

We tell ourselves, "I am obeying the financial law. I attend church regularly. I read and study the church books. Where am I failing?" And yet we know we are failing as long as Zion is not a reality!

It is true that in order to work successfully for someone, we must get our instructions directly from that person. Since Zion is an accumulative society, then each person in that society must play an important role in the whole. The part you and I must play will not only fit our needs but satisfy our deepest urge for creative expression. God never meant us to be any way but happy. Therefore it is up to each of us personally to establish a working contact with God and find out for ourselves where we can fit into the thing as a whole.

Every prophet of God who was chosen to guide and instruct his people made it plain that his contact with God did not exclude each individual from the responsibility of finding God for himself. If ever a people has preached the spiritual idea of a personal God, we are that people. We owe it to the world to produce such earthly representations as to prove our point.

I often think of God as restlessly pacing the heavens, searching the earth below in an honest and patient endeavor to multiply himself for the rest of the world to see and copy. How many sleepless nights must he have spent since the creation, wondering if he had made a mistake in giving man his agency.

BUT SOMETIMES out of the knowledge that we are failures comes a more resolute determination that approaches success.

Elijah felt that he had failed and asked to die. Moses felt that he had failed, and he had to ask God for renewed strength many times. Peter felt that he had failed and wanted to kill himself. Yet, by facing failure, each of these men found new courage, and their failure served as a spur to new conquests.

You may say, "Yes, but they were not average men."

History teaches us that they were average men with the same personal problems and physical desires that we possess. The records contain only their great moments, and those moments were great because it was there they reached their highest point of willing co-operation with God.

You will remember that Adam ate the apple because he chose to share Eve's punishment, knowing full well what prompted her besides her expressed desire for wisdom. How he must have choked on it!

You will also remember that Sarah was so impatient for the son God had promised Abraham that she finally prevailed on him to take Hagar, and then Sarah hated Hagar all the rest of her life.

Rebecca connived with her son, Jacob, to outwit his aged father, Isaac, and deprived Esau of his rightful blessing, because Jacob was her favorite, and she couldn't wait on God.

Rachel, although the passionate beloved of Jacob, still resented the gentle, quiet Leah and pulled every trick possible to raise a barrier between them.

These faults of enticing curiosity, driving impatience, conniving trickery, and unreasonable jealousy are still prominent in the world today.

There are still plenty of Eves who entice their husbands into frivolous adventures that waste their bodily resources and leave them in a state of perpetual confusion.

There are still the Sarahs who are so impatient for success that they sweep every other thing from their path and leave a trail of bitter desolation and waste behind.

There are still plenty of Rebecas, too, who rob the family as a whole to place one member in an enviable position above the rest.

The Rachels are the most plentiful of all. Their jealousy destroys peace in the home, deprives children of their rightful love, puts companionship and brotherhood on a sordid level, and hinders the possibility of a kingdom here on earth until even God must hang his head in despair.

Yes, as we look back, we can see that they were every inch average people.

FASTING - Who? How? Why?

By Thelona D. Stevens

(Approved for republication by the First Presidency, in answer to the request of the reader whose testimony is given at the end of this article. First published in the "Herald," February 2, 1946.)

Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.—Psalm 50: 5.

Much has been written and said about prayer, but not so much about fasting. Yet, the two terms are almost inseparable in the Scriptures. God's people have always been commanded to fast and pray, because God knows that through this means changes can be wrought in the hearts of men which enable his spirit to work in and through them to the bringing about of his purposes.

Who Should Fast?

When God gives a law or a commandment to his people, it is to all members of the body. In the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants there are repeated commandments having to do with fasting and prayer. Perhaps the spirit of all these may be caught up in this one: "Also I give unto you a commandment, that you shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth."¹

These commandments have never been countermanded. They apply to us all, with the exception of those who are ill or incapacitated. Both the late Joseph Smith and our present prophet have been specific on this point. The following is quoted from the Saints' Herald: "Children, nursing mothers, and members in feeble health are not expected to abstain from food . . . if to do so is likely to create distress."² Refraining from necessary nourishment under such circumstances would be unwise, and fasting under those conditions probably would not even be acceptable to God, for he has commanded us to use wisdom in all things.

Daniel's Fast

Since many of the thoughts expressed in this article are drawn from the story of Daniel's fast, these excerpts from Daniel 10: 2-14, with interpolations, are suggested:

"In those days, I Daniel was mourning [fasting] three full weeks. I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled." (Daniel says he was mourning, which is interpreted to mean fasting, since he himself explains that he was fasting.)

Note, this does not say that he did not eat anything, but shows that he refrained from luxuries during this particular fast. There are some fasts which are total—in which neither food nor water are taken, but when Daniel was fasting, he evidently did not refrain from all nourishment.

Daniel was rewarded for this effort:

Then I lifted up mine eyes . . . and behold a certain man . . . and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire . . . And I Daniel alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves. Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision. [Those who did not fast and make the effort did not receive the reward that Daniel received.]

I heard the voice of his words . . . O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee . . . Fear not, Daniel; for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand [notice the purpose of his fast—to understand] and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words [because Daniel had inquired of God]. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia [the prince of evil, or Satan] withstood me one and twenty days; [the exact period Daniel had set for his fast], but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes [the Doctrine and Covenants explains that Michael was Adam] came to me; and now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days.

Then follows the vision to which Daniel was entitled and which he received because of his fasting and prayer.

How Shall One Fast?

There are many kinds of fasts, as well as many reasons for wanting to fast. The reason prompting the fast, as well as the length of time the fast is to be observed, and the circumstances surrounding the individual all have bearing on how the fast should be conducted. Sometimes a fast may be total abstinence from all food and water (to be done with wisdom); sometimes the fast may be from food but not water; sometimes the fast may be from just certain foods. Daniel ate "no pleasant bread, neither flesh nor wine," but this does not say that he fasted from all foods, such as cereals, vegetables, fruits, and water.

The Doctrine and Covenants bears out the thought that one kind of fasting may include food eaten judiciously:

And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily, this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer.³

Again, fasting is not necessarily limited to food, as the fast may be from certain types of reading, radio programs, or other entertainment, or self-adornment. Sometimes it is impossible for a person to refrain from food without causing comment and even ridicule by other members of the family or associates. An individual whose family does not share his beliefs might excite ridicule or even antagonism by refusing to go to the table with the family. He may still fast by eating, but refusing some foods—say the desserts. Or he may choose to fast from something other than food for a time. Fasting is something so sacred between the individual and God that it should be done without exciting comment by unsympathetic observers.

Jesus' instruction was: "Moreover, when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. . . . But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."⁴ In this quotation, notice that he said "when thou fastest, anoint thy head." This commandment in connection with fasting was not new to the Israelites. Countless passages in the Scriptures refer to this practice, such as the beautiful Twenty-third Psalm, "Thou anointest my head with oil." This obviously was oil consecrated to holy purposes. In contrast, one notes that Daniel did not anoint himself during his three weeks of fasting. He doubtless refrained from the use of perfumed oils, such as is suggested in Amos's reference to those who "anoint themselves with the chief ointment."⁵

Paul suggests another type of fasting. His advice is directed to husband and wife: "Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer.”

How we fast and what we fast from are not the most important things, but rather the attitude that we bear in our hearts—the attitude of willingness to be obedient to the divine command.

Some Benefits From Fasting

Aside from the desire to be obedient to the commands of God to fast, there are a number of reasons for the practice of this principle.

First, it works in accordance with the laws of nature. When one wants to cleanse his body, he refrains from food. An overworked physical structure needs time to rest instead of being forced to do more work by taking in more food. Fasting, then, helps the physical body to rest.

One who wishes to draw close to God in meditation and prayer cannot hope to do so if his body is groggy with food. In order for the mind to function, a goodly supply of blood must be rushed to the brain. It is impossible for the body to spare much blood to the brain if the stomach must use most of the supply.

Again referring to the Doctrine and Covenants, we see the Lord does not want us to break the law he has given concerning the keeping of the Sabbath day holy by preparing and eating big meals on this sacred day. Preparing unnecessarily elaborate meals is not only breaking the law which requires us to keep the day holy, but by eating too much food, we cause the mechanism of our bodies to break the Sabbath day. A definite promise goes with the keeping of this commandment: “that thy joy may be full. Verily, this is fasting and prayer . . . rejoicing and prayer.”⁸

Fervent desire to offer special thanksgiving to God, then, would cause righteous souls to desire to fast, perhaps not from all foods, but at least from more than the body needs for sustenance, not to be overloaded and dull but free from the bondage of too much food that there may be “rejoicing and prayer.” There is nothing said about doing this just occasionally. The commandment is that this shall be done on “the Lord’s day.” It should be the practice on the Sabbath day.

Fasting, then, from a purely physical standpoint brings its own rewards spiritually.

Other Reasons for Fasting

It was in offering sacrifices that Abel, the first martyr, obtained knowledge that he was accepted of God. And from the days of righteous Abel to the present time, the knowledgeable men have that they are accepted in the sight of God is obtained by offering sacrifices. And in the last days, before the Lord comes, he is to gather together his saints who have made a covenant with him in sacrifice.—Psalm 50: 3-5, “Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.”

Those, then, who make the sacrifice, will have the testimony that their course is pleasing in the sight of God; and those who have this testimony will have faith to lay hold on eternal life, and will be enabled, through faith, to endure unto the end, and receive the crown that is laid up for them that love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. But those who do not make the sacrifice can not enjoy this faith, because men are dependent upon this sacrifice in order to obtain this faith; therefore, they cannot lay hold upon eternal life, because the revelations of God do not guarantee unto them the authority so to do, and without this guarantee faith cannot exist.⁹

Faith grows through fasting, or sacrifice, and prayer. A trial successfully met increases one’s faith. Through fasting and prayer, trials may be overcome, but without this means of help, the trials may overcome us. Fasting in itself may be a trial. When we say “no” to the appetite, we are making a choice between the food that feeds the physical man and the food that feeds the spiritual man. Unwillingness to fast then, may be an indication that we, like the Israelites of old, prefer the “flesh pots.” When we rock along in a rut, making no special effort to serve God, we are not growing spiritually, but when we do exert ourselves in special effort to approach God and serve him, we become special targets of Satan.

Witness Satan’s attacks on Christ when he fasted. When we are especially trying, we are especially tried. Perhaps we have been among those who in discouragement have said, “The harder I try, the more things go wrong.” Satan would have us become discouraged and give up the effort. Paul’s words are encouraging, though, for he points out that God “will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.”¹⁰

CLOSELY ASSOCIATED with the development of faith is the impelling urge to gain knowledge and the understanding of the mysteries of God. Notice in the story of Daniel that he had set his “heart to understand.” He wanted to know certain things so much that he was willing to exert extra effort to learn them. This extra effort on his part called forth extra effort on the part of Satan, for he tried to stop the angel whom God sent to reveal the things which Daniel had prayed to know. Notice the explanation which the angel gave: “From the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand . . . thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days.” Then Michael was sent to the rescue of the angel from the Satanic forces, in order that he might continue his mission to Daniel. Notice, too, that the struggle between the angel and Satan lasted the exact number of days that Daniel had set for his fast. Then came the blessing. Ether wrote: “Wherefore, dispute not because ye see not, for ye receive no witness until after the trial of your faith.”¹¹ Daniel did not see the struggle that took place between the angel and his assailant. His faith had to carry him through the three weeks of trial, but, after he successfully withstood the trial, he was rewarded.

Daniel’s trial ended with the period of fast. Not all blessings, however, immediately follow the fast. Perhaps the time of trial may be extended long beyond the period spent in fasting. Sometimes, of course, God does immediately answer our prayers, but at other times we must wait perhaps even years for fulfillment. We may not know his reasons for withholding the answer from our vision, but “dispute not because ye see not.”¹² In his own time and way, God will answer the prayers when the trial is past. We may be quite certain that blessings will not come unless we ardently seek them through the means God has set. Had Daniel not sought this enlightenment, he would not have received this vision and understanding.

Fasting develops admirably the attribute of humility. David the Psalmist knew this and said, “I humbled my soul with fasting.” The occasion was one in which “false witnesses . . . rewarded me evil for good.” His response was to humble himself in fasting and prayer. No desire to retaliate was evidenced by David, but rather through humility, he records, “I behaved myself as though he had been my friend or brother.”¹³

Another reason for fasting and prayer is the welfare of others. Alma records: “the children of God were commanded that they should gather themselves together oft, and join in fasting and mighty prayer, in behalf of the welfare of the souls of those who knew not God.”¹⁴ In fact, in the story of Daniel, we note that his was not a selfish purpose in desiring knowledge. He was concerned about the things that would befall the people “in the latter days.”

Purification Through Fasting and Prayer

Yet another aspect of fasting has to do with repentance. Notice the beginning of the account of Daniel's fast: "I Daniel was mourning." Mourning means grieving. Could he have been grieving over his own sins? Perhaps. He may have been repentant for his own misdeeds and asking forgiveness and strength not to repeat his sins. The twelfth verse bears out this thought, for the angel referred to the time when Daniel set to "chasten thyself before thy God." In order to chasten himself, Daniel was willing to undergo self-discipline, which would of necessity include not only refraining from unnecessary food, but also would express sorrow over his failures, his imperfections, with a desire to be clean before God, for Daniel doubtlessly knew full well that his prayers could not be answered until he was in the right condition before God. He was willing to make a sacrifice in order to bring this about.

Often we quote the words of Jesus, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you,"¹⁴ without considering the conditions, namely: "if ye are purified and cleansed from all sin, ye shall ask whatsoever you will in the name of Jesus, and it shall be done."¹⁵ We have the promise that if we ask on this basis, we shall even be guided in knowing what to pray for—"It shall be given you what you should ask,"¹⁶ and "He that asketh in spirit shall receive in spirit."¹⁷ We are given to know that God cannot dwell in unholy temples, and before we can receive his Spirit to the degree that our prayers are directed by it, we must truly repent of all our sins and be clean in his sight. Then we have this further promise and warning: "Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you, that is expedient for you; and if ye ask for anything that is not expedient for you, it shall turn unto your condemnation."¹⁸

In addition to the great promise of eternal life, obedience to the commandments of God brings us here and now great blessings, as the Scriptures show:

And he never doth vary from that which he hath said; therefore, if ye do keep his commandments, he doth bless you, and prosper you . . . he doth require that ye should do as he hath commanded you, for which if ye do, he doth immediately bless you.¹⁹

I the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.²⁰

We May Ask Ourselves

Have we sufficient reason to exercise the principle of fasting along with prayer—

Do we desire to truly serve God and keep his commandments?

Do we desire spiritual development above physical nourishment?

Do we appreciate God's offer of eternal life enough to go to him with an offering of sacrifice in order to lay hold upon that offer?

Do we so ardently desire knowledge of God's mysteries that we are willing to deny ourselves some passing pleasure for some enduring blessings?

Are we sufficiently humble?

Do we love our fellow men enough to make some sacrifice offerings for their souls to be saved?

Have we such anxiety concerning our appearance in the sight of God that we daily repent and seek the cleansing power of Christ to work in our lives?

If we want all these things enough, we will be willing to "fast and pray without ceasing" for them. We will not only fast frequently from "certain things" but will on many occasions offer "total" fasts to God.

Enrichment in My Life Through Fasting

(A Testimony)

PRESIDENT SMITH'S CALL to the church for fasting and prayer on September 4, 1948, brought a feeling of joy to me. I consider it a privilege to be a part of His "covenanted people" who would jointly approach his altar in humility and devotion and with a willingness to make sacrifices in order that his will be fulfilled in us. Although I am a portion of the "natural increase" of the church, it was not until a year ago that the spirit bore witness to me of the true meaning and significance of fasting in my life. This was stimulated by studying the article, "Fasting—Who? How? Why?" by Thelona D. Stevens, in the Herald of February 2, 1946. The frequent study and use of this material has carried much of the spirit and the knowledge that it was inspired of Him. Prior to this experience, I did not sense the true significance of fasting and prayer. It had been a part of preparing for Communion service, but because it was commanded. Now it seems as if that were "blind obedience" akin to that of Adam when he offered the firstlings of his flock; he knew not the reason "save the Lord commanded me" (Gen. 5: 6).

It is impossible to explain the peace that came to me at the realization of the true meaning of the fast as an offering to God, not the firstling of the flock as in Bible history before Christ's resurrection, but a personal offering as Jesus commanded after he had "fulfilled the law," and given instruction as to the type of offering to be made. (See III Nephi 7: 5-8; 5: 66.) This command was likewise given to "latter day Israel," to offer to him a "broken heart and a contrite spirit" (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2). Because of a special offering and a period of trial, I was made to realize the meaning of such an offering in my life—the willingness to give myself in complete submission to his will and serve him in his way, not in a manner which I felt would be a contribution to his church.

Many statements in the article have been put to a test. It was my privilege to be a part of a group making special offerings for several whose needs were known and taken to the Father. Each individual in the group was willing to sacrifice the physical substance of food in order that those in need could receive spiritual help. Those praying underwent trials, yet there was strength and increased faith in the joint fasting and prayer—in approaching Deity with the knowledge that at the same time various others were likewise petitioning him. In my life, there grew a deeper love for God, as if he were listening. Too, I felt drawn to the other members in the group praying, and I felt a new love for those being remembered. It was a testimony of the power of such offerings when one of them mentioned: "I do not know what has happened, but a month ago [the exact time the fast began] I was made to realize I could not produce what I did several years ago." (This person had become cold to the church after having received much light.) These people, in their humility, were willing to sacrifice that which attributed to the physical strength and make special offerings to God in order that they could more earnestly petition him in behalf of this person, as well as the others being remembered, so that lives would again run in channels where talents could be used for His glorification and for His people.

Scripture references that have been especially helpful in fasting, prayer, and the accompanying trials are: "Whatsoever thing ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is good, in faith believing that ye shall receive, behold it shall be done unto

Concerning Zion - Part I

Which Way? By Edith Barwise

There is a way which seemeth good unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.—Proverbs 14:12.

They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:3.

It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin.—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3.

SINCE HISTORY BEGAN, each man has gone about providing for his needs in whatever way seemed good. From this individualistic pattern, time and experience have cut our present economic way of life. It has seemed a pretty good way, for it contains some constructive principles — industry and thrift. These good points cause many people, even Latter Day Saints, to accept it as all right and be content. Few realize the division, self-serving, and inequality we see on every hand resulting from every man's walking in his own way. Under this system, it is inevitable that some will obtain more than their less-fortunate neighbors. God has said, "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another," and because men do, "The whole world lieth in sin"—sins of many kinds—sins of pride, of envy, of covetousness, of strife, and of war.

That our economic system has seemed all right cannot very well be denied, nor can we deny that the results "are the ways of death." Many and varied are the results of this way, and because they have been so varied, we often have not connected them with their cause; consequently our callous, grasping, economic system goes right on seeming a good way.

THIS SYSTEM is the way of the world at the present time. Most people know nothing else and wonder what other way there could possibly be, for truly the knowledge of another way has been obscured by time and unbelief. There is another way—God's way—and patient study of our Scriptures will reveal it.

It is called variously "the path of life" (Psalm 16: 11), "the way of the Lord" (Isaiah 40: 3), "the path of the just" (Proverbs 4: 18), and "the way of peace" (Luke 1: 78). It is the way Jesus taught. Yes, although he did undeniably teach individual righteousness, he also taught a revolutionary economic system. The Jews of Thessalonica thought that its teachers "turned the world upside down" (Acts 17: 6). Jesus was not merely jesting when he told the rich young man that part of the price of eternal life required him to sell and distribute his surplus property. That was part of the system. As Jesus watched him depart, he remarked how hard it was for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God, adding, "With men that trust in riches, it is impossible" (Mark 10: 22-26).

This kingdom of God is the center around which Jesus built all his teaching and preaching. If the order of ideas in the "Lord's Prayer" is any test, the coming of the kingdom is of first importance. Jesus even put it ahead of daily bread.

When anyone studied under a teacher in New Testament times, he was said to sit at the teacher's feet (Acts 22: 3). Remember this when you read the story of Mary, the sister of Martha, for it says Mary sat at Jesus' feet and heard his words. It was the thrilling news of this kingdom of God that made Mary forget all about getting dinner. It was good news, headline news! This kingdom would set wrong and injustice right; it would cure poverty and want.

If we take a good concordance of the Bible and turn to the word kingdom, we will be surprised to see how many times the phrase kingdom of God occurs in the incomplete record we have (see John 21: 25) of Jesus' sayings.

REMEMBER, MANY BIBLE MEANINGS have become obscure and even changed: for instance, baptize, whose meaning once was, to dip, plunge, or bury in water, came to mean sprinkling a little water. In the same way the teachings of Jesus about the kingdom of God were changed or explained away, until it now has a meaning quite different from the economic establishment which Jesus taught. It was a way of life with him; but the same blindness which confused sprinkling with baptism, confused the kingdom of God here on earth with the kingdom of God in heaven. That the two are not the same is shown in section sixty-five of the Doctrine and Covenants. We find the church was told to "call upon the Lord that his kingdom may go forth on the earth, . . . wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth that the kingdom of heaven may come." This kingdom of heaven is the Zion of Enoch's day which went to heaven and will return with Jesus.

Jesus did tell Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world," but he did not mean earth. This is shown by Jesus' answer when the Pharisees demanded when the kingdom of God should come. They meant come on earth, and Jesus knew it. He could have said, "The kingdom of God never will be on earth," if that had been true. Instead, he told them it wasn't something to say, "Look here or look there" about. It did not come "with observation"—that is to say in a spectacular way. It was not to be the kingdom of pomp and display they were expecting.

When Jesus was sending his disciples out to teach the people (Matthew 6: 26), he told them not to take thought of food, drink, or clothing. They were to seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness (Matthew 6: 38) and all these things would be added. Can this mean that, with the kingdom of God built up and his righteousness (right way) established among us, our temporal needs will be abundantly supplied? To me it can and does mean just that.

THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS which have to do with individual righteousness have been well and widely taught. They should be, but the kingdom of God or social righteousness has been neglected. A man has both a spiritual and a physical nature. In both natures, he is a social as well as an individual being. A man with only one foot is handicapped, and so is a church that tries to hop along with only individual righteousness as a pattern for Zionic development. Jesus gave his church two feet to stand on—"Wherefore, seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The plan was dual. It had two feet: one was "to build up the kingdom of God," the other was "to establish his righteousness." Complete obedience to Christ's commandments requires both. We may say the church is the kingdom of God, although Revelation 12: 7 seems to prove that the kingdom of God is the "man child" which the church is to nurture within her body and give birth to. But if we say the church is the kingdom of God and has been "built up," we are still unable to say or prove that his righteousness has been established. God is the same from everlasting to everlasting. He is, always has been, and always will be righteous. What is meant by establishing his righteousness? In section one, paragraph three of the Doctrine and Covenants, we find a statement which will help in answering this question. It says, "They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way." God has a right way which he wants man to establish. Jesus speaks of it as his righteousness, and we have to seek him to be able to establish it. Man has not done this, preferring to walk in his own way and for his own self. Consequently the world is full of turmoil, war, and fears.

Now God's plan, which he wants his church to establish, will work and bring blessing to all. Other plans may fail. Other plans have already failed. Change God's plan and even it may fail, but his unchanged, righteous plan is sure to work.

The proof of this lies in the nature of God and of material things. God is a God of power. He created all things by the word of his power. He comprehends all things and knows all about his creation. He also knows all about man. He knows that unity brings peace, but individualism brings strife. In short, God has all the wisdom and all knowledge that exist. How, then, could it be possible for him to err in giving directions? He simply cannot be mistaken or in error. When God gives us a plan, it will work. When Jesus says, "It is my purpose to provide for my saints . . . but it must needs be done in mine own way," we had better give diligent heed to do it just that way.

An Important New Volume in the Priesthood Library

manual by one of our successful pastors. Not a book that "Smells of the desk," but one whose every suggestion has been tested in churches and with real people.

Very few generalizations, and none of them vague ones, will be found in these pages. The author takes a specific program and situation, and works out a formula of procedure, with suggestions for mailing pieces, advertising, and bulletin board.

Pastors who need help will find this book one of the most useful we have ever published, full of the wisdom of experience, and having an understanding of the hearts of people that will win them to the church.

How to Increase Sunday Night Attendance

Tomorrow's Opportunities

FROM THE TIME a visitor first asked little Tommy or small Sally, "What are you going to be when you grow up?" the problem of future vocations has loomed before the nation's youth as an all important question.

With the repercussions of the recent depression still in remembrance, and in view of the rapidly changing world conditions, parents—as well as the young folks—should be giving serious thought to the proper choice of vocations. With so much uncertainty, a choice is difficult; but the one saving factor in the situation is that no one need make an irrevocable choice. Each must be flexible because of the rapid economic changes. Each must be prepared to make changes—changes in both location and occupation.

The Tommys and Sallys of today must realize there is no crystal ball which can foretell their life's work, and no set pattern of work for which they are specifically "cut out." Also they must learn there is fallacy in the practice of accidentally "falling" or "drifting" into a career. They need to make a definite—though broad—choice early in life (preferably before entering high school), and that choice should exert a powerful influence in all their school work.

Men in industry, college professors, research technicians, and national leaders have been interested in the choice of vocations by the youth, and have made extensive studies of possible careers for tomorrow. They have found urgent need for better guidance in choosing a vocation. Surveys show that nearly fifty per cent of the labor turnover in the United States occurs during the first six months of employment. According to studies made within the last year, there is practically no positive correlation between what high school seniors plan to do and the employment opportunities open to them. There are more aspirants for white-collar jobs, more girls desirous of stage careers and boys of exploration and adventure, than there are opportunities available. A large proportion expect to enter one of the professions, but few indicate a desire to enter the trades or service occupations, which are the most likely to expand and offer the best promise of employment in the future. Definitely there is a need for more adequate vocational guidance in the schools.

TOMMY AND SALLY should be helped to consider the factors which will affect their success in various occupations. Success on a job often calls for a specific personality type, which is a factor that should be considered in choosing a vocation. Employers who deal with the public in definite relationships prefer the quiet, considerate, and dignified worker. Department store managers want their sales clerks to be attractive, vivacious, and friendly. The amount of education required must be given careful attention. It would be almost foolhardy for poor Widow Jones's son to select a professional career which would require ten or twelve years of specialized training, unless he shows outstanding talent in that direction. Regard should be given also to the number of steps that must be ascended before the desired career is attained—the various accomplishments which will have to be mastered before promotion can be expected.

Another factor a young person should consider is the compensation—monetary and otherwise—he will receive. Some occupations show ample financial returns quickly, while others require a long "working up" period. If the pay check is not the important factor, a job may bring other satisfactions. The joy of serving, feeling of accomplishment, creating new things, and delving into the unexplored are some of the returns from occupations which cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

THE WISE CHOICE of a vocation requires study. A career should be as carefully and deliberately planned as a new house. The number and variety of occupations should be considered first. The United States census report lists more than twenty thousand different jobs. Most people are acquainted with the better known ones; but many infrequently mentioned occupations are highly interesting and less crowded than the more familiar ones.

By considering local opportunities, personal aptitudes, and appeal, Tommy and Sally should narrow the field down to a few; these selections should then be studied seriously. There are three ways to learn about occupations: reading about them, talking with persons engaged in them, and actually trying them out during vacations, off-school hours, or on an experimental or apprentice basis.

There are many fields which will be open to young people in the future. The manufacture of homes, home furnishings, automobiles, airplanes, and innumerable gadgets will open the way for a host of new employment areas. Plastics, wood, glass, light weight metals, and fabrics present unlimited opportunities to chemists, physicists, engineers, designers, and inventors, as well as the resultant merchandising of the finished products.

Plastics have only begun to find their place in our economy. Twenty-five cents out of almost every dollar of profits made in plastics is being used for further research. Plastic production of the future will be on a large scale—not just household gadgets.

Wood is just coming into its own. Research laboratories have found means of making soft maple, gum, poplar, cypress, pine, cane, bamboo, and even sawdust into hard wood which is extremely durable, flame-resistant, and waterproof. Although manufacturers have in the past looked upon wood as a vanishing material to be replaced by plastics, glass, and light-weight metals, it is now up front.

Glass is rapidly being improved upon. Some forms can be sawed like wood, others are strong as steel or light as cork. Glass can be bounced, tossed, and banked with reasonable assurance that it will not break, but there is left for future research to produce a glass which is truly unbreakable and does not crystallize.

Light weight metals such as aluminum, magnesium, and beryllium are headed for an important future. The airplanes, car chassis, household equipment, baby carriages, furniture, and pianos of tomorrow may be moved around by a child when they are made of light-weight metal.

The age of synthetic fibers is but two decades old. Its unlimited future offers numerous employment possibilities for youth. Fabrics may be produced which will reduce the washing and ironing problem to a minimum. We have become familiar with the names rayon, nylon, aralac, and fiberglas. So shall such names as Seran, Velon, Vinyon, and Soydon one day be as common as are cotton and wool today.

OTHER FIELDS, the surfaces of which have scarcely been scratched, are those of electronics, radio, television, and photography. In the future, news will be broadcast with actual scenes of the occurrences; films will be thrown on the screen by television rather than by direct projection; and someday telephone-television will be a reality. In these fields alone there will be potential jobs for four or five million young people who are technically trained, to say nothing of the host of announcers, actors, musicians, script writers, publicity agents, sound effects men, directors, etc. Army and navy experts have proved that the old idea of learning "readin', writin', and 'rithmetic" is definitely on the decline; radio, sound movies, and television will play an important roll in the education of future generations.

THE MILLION NEW HOMES a year, which are needed in the United States, offer employment opportunities. In the future, it will not be unusual to build a full-sized, six-room house in a week. Home-building which will increasingly mean prefabricated housing, will grow, and jobs will grow with it. These millions of homes will be equipped with air-conditioning which will make it possible to keep healthful, exhilarating spring temperatures indoors, regardless of whether the thermometer outdoors reads a hundred above or ten below zero.

Farming in a chemical age will be vastly different from that of the present day. Tomorrow's successful farmer will be a businessman-chemist, who earns as high an income and enjoys as good a living and working conditions as does the city-dweller. Laboratories are developing crops that can be grown in areas too wet, too dry, or too cold for present food crops, and those which are rich in minerals and vitamins, but highly resistant to blights, pests, and diseases. A new word that will be heard with greater frequency as years go by is chemurgy—which refers to the industrial use of farm products, such as soybeans for medicines, vitamins, paint, and cosmetics. In the future, farmers may be growing entire crops, none of which will be used for food.

YOUNG PEOPLE, anxious to find their places among the wage-earners, are asking the question, "Is college necessary?" It is true that some college students overestimate their worth and are unwilling to start from the bottom. Yet, if they do not start via college, they can expect to spend many years at unimportant and perhaps dull jobs while they learn. The faster the learning, the more rapid the advancement. For non-technical jobs, college may not be necessary; but unquestionably the education is needed. The higher the degree of education, the better equipped a person is to face the world. While a college education may not be required, unless there is an equivalent of education received by reading, travel, and informal study, today's youth will be definitely handicapped.

In view of the changing world, young people are curious concerning what may be expected in the era of future employment. Many people, and groups of people, are attempting to predict that future. The following three predictions are made by Darrell and Frances Huff in their book, Twenty Careers of Tomorrow:

1. Industries which will offer the greatest security if there is another depression are: the government (national and local); food production (dairy, meat, flour, cane sugar); trucking companies; publishing; clothing and textile industries; chemical concerns; fuel refining.

2. Industries and trades which are on their way out, having seen their best days are: carpentry, house painting, plastering, ordinary farming, ordinary schoolteaching, architecture, and banking Unskilled jobs in almost all industries will grow scarce as machines do more work.

3. The science that is the basic one underlying all important new industries is chemistry. No research can be carried on without a chemist or a staff of chemists. A college background in chemistry will pave the way to almost any industry.

Fortune Magazine asked a selected number of business executives which of a listed group of industries they would advise a young man to make his first choice. Percentages of the industries given first place by the executives were figured. Results show that the chemical industry drew 50.6 per cent, while the nearest competitor—merchandising—registered only 18.3 per cent. Housing received 10 per cent, transportation, 9.5 per cent, radio manufacture, 5.2 per cent; finance, 2.4; and publishing, .8 per cent.

The Sallys and the Tommys of today should get the broadest training possible, continue to develop their knowledge, and seek further education so they can adapt themselves to changing industry and occupational needs. Jobs in the future will be plentiful, but not for the untrained. The future belongs only to those who prepare for it.

To Latter Day Saint young people, proper choice of a vocation is doubly important, for they have a glorious goal toward which to work. The building of Zion will require well-trained workers in every known field. There is no worthy occupation which cannot be fitted into the Zion-building program.

The Lord needs the youth of the church to combine forces in every field of endeavor to build that perfected society which shall be an ensign to all nations—the society in which Christ himself will someday dwell.

My Friend, Mary

By Ruby Strand

My friend Mary lives in a small midwestern city at the end of a shady street in a time-honored gray house. In the spacious grounds about the home are stately trees—pine, elm, oak, and the graceful olive with its feathery, soft leaves. On a spring day, the air is filled with the scent of honeysuckle and the birds give a musical concert.

Mary lives there with her brother, who is bedfast, caring for him in spite of her failing eyesight and the necessity of using a crutch. She has her trials, but she is cheerful and extends a cordial welcome to the visitor who enters her quaint and charming home.

Conversation with Mary is an adventure in the better things of life—an inspiring poem quoted from memory, a comment about music or something she has read. Reminiscences and early experience enrich the talk, often lifting us closer to God.

Mary has cultivated the habit of happiness. If other people are mentioned, she remembers something good, for it has been her practice to bring out the best in them. I can feel myself growing in her presence.

Occasionally she stirs the fire. On the mantel is a clock from Switzerland. There are pictures on the wall, some of them by her artist brother, one a copy of an original that hangs in a famous art gallery. A few questions about them bring stories of these and other treasures in the room.

Mary inquires, too, about the old house we have bought for remodeling. Years ago she often visited a retired minister and his family there. Her doctor brother had made many calls, and after the death of the father, she and her brother had, in a way, adopted the family. Now she is glad we are bringing the old house back to life.

Too soon it is time to go. Mary has said little of herself or of her afflictions. But she has given me a newness of spirit, and I hope I also have said something to help her. As I leave, I realize that I have been lifted up, and I humbly thank God for Mary.

Costa Rican Journey - By Verneil Simmons

They call it a highway—the Inter-American Highway—but this American family found rugged and exciting adventure in its tropical jungles, death in the oil pits, and baffling fogs and bitter cold on the mountain peaks. A narrative of the beginning of a great trail—

PERHAPS NOT TOO MANY YEARS from now, some of you may cross the Rio Grande and travel down to the Canal Zone over the as yet uncompleted Inter-American Highway. When you reach San José, Costa Rica, you will have passed through colorful Mexico, Indian Guatemala, tiny, overpopulated San Salvador, little-known Honduras, and the hot lowlands of Nicaragua. Panama, and the end of your journey, will lie just beyond the Costa Rican border. Perhaps you will feel that all the thrills and enchantments of the journey have already been experienced and that anything more can only be an anti-climax. Don't be too sure—the best is yet to come.

At present the highway extends only 85 miles beyond San José, with about 100 miles still to be constructed before it will reach David, Panama, where it continues on to the Canal Zone. But in this 85 mile stretch are found some of the most interesting points of the entire trip. The largest oak forest in the world, the highest mountain pass, and the one point from which it is possible to see both the Atlantic and the Pacific, are contained in this section of the highway.

Recently my husband, our two children, and I, in the company of friends traveled over this part of the highway. We wakened the children very early, in the hopes that we could reach the peaks before the daily fog hid everything from sight. Early as we were, others were on the road before us. We had forgotten that it was the day of the annual pilgrimage to the patron saint of the country, Nuestra Señora de los Angeles (Our Lady of the Angels). Yearly, on foot, the faithful make the journey to the church in Cartago, twelve miles beyond San José, where the tiny image of the Virgin is kept. Many come from distant Puntarenas, on the Pacific coast, to pay their devotions. The religious procession promised to be larger than usual this year since the success of the recent revolution was credited by many to the intervention of "Our Lady." Since both the very young and the very old take part in the pilgrimage, first-aid stations were set up all along the way, and another stood near the church.

The Continental Divide is crossed at 5,137 feet, just a short distance before reaching Cartago, which enjoys an altitude of 4,760 feet, nearly a thousand more than the capital. Cartago, the former capital of the country, is the second largest Costa Rican city and will be of interest to travelers. Almost entirely rebuilt after a destructive earthquake some 40 years ago, it serves as a fine point from which to take excursions to near-by points of interest, particularly to the ancient church of Orosi, built over three hundred years ago by the Spanish Fathers.

On the highway north of San José, toward the Nicaraguan border, fields of sugar cane, pineapples, and bananas dominate the scene, but here on the meseta central, "coffee is king." Coffee fincas line the highway between San José and Cartago, and in the vicinity of Tres Ríos (Three Rivers) is grown some of the best coffee in the world.

Beyond Cartago, the highway leads through a beautiful valley. A two-hundred-year-old stone bridge, small and easily unnoticed, is worthy of a stop and a picture. For a time the road climbs lazily in the foothills, swinging back upon itself to give the best possible views of the valley below. To the north, the volcanoes of Irazu' and Turrialba lift 11,000 foot peaks into the clear air, their sides covered with an amazing patchwork of changing greens and yellows. Streamers of blue and white fog lie on the valley floor.

With a last lingering look at the beauty it is leaving, the road definitely turns into the mountains and begins to consider the 10,000 foot peaks looming up in the distance. In well-engineered curves and grades making driving a pleasure, the road picks its way through the first range. Soon the coffee and cane fields are behind and one enters the largest oak forest in the world. From its appearance, it might also be the oldest. The great height of the trees and the massiveness of the trunks speak of many years' growth. These are the tropical rain forests; excessive moisture and lack of sun have blemished and distorted the trees until they bear little resemblance to oaks of the United States. Great vines swaddle the trunks and hang to the ground. The limbs, few in numbers and clustering near the top, are laden with parasitic plants. Many of these veteran trees are dead and stand like stark sentinels among their brothers.

Rain falls nearly every day of the year on these slopes, and the growth is equal to that of a jungle in the lowlands. The undergrowth, made up of various types of cane, bamboo, and many tropical plants unknown to travelers from a northern clime, reaches to twice the height of a man and forms an impenetrable wall.

This great forest, which extends all the way to Panama, is slowly being destroyed. The ancient trees are being cut to clear the hillsides for the growing of grass to feed the increasing herds of cattle. Charcoal makers, watching their fires by the roadside, forecast the ultimate doom of the forest.

I suppose a time shall come when this road will be lined with signboards, and gas stations and hamburger stands will ply their trade, but as yet all the beauty of the mountains and the magnificent scenery is unspoiled. A few settlers are drifting into the area and carving out small patches on the steep hillsides, but these are hidden from view amid the forests.

At an altitude of 8,000 feet, we pause to take pictures of a swamp. A swamp, at this altitude, is interesting in itself, but there is another reason why this one is worthy of a picture. Growing here, in great quantity, are ferns of a species considered the oldest known form of plant life. Fossils of this same plant are found in coal beds, laid down no one knows how many millenniums ago. Wayne waded in among the tall fronds, took pictures, and carried away a small piece, as will probably many a tourist in days to come.

Now in the distance can be seen the bare, wind-blown peaks which stand guard over the Cerro de la Muerte (Death Pass). At this point, we cross the ancient Indian trail, which from time immemorial has been the only means of crossing this great mountain range. In this place, known as the Fairy Garden to the engineers of the highway, we found many strange and lovely flowers. Mosses carpet the rocks and the path with a springy cushion several inches thick. We followed the narrow, rocky trail for a short distance and tried to imagine how long ago the first traveler found his way through the mountains, leaving sufficient track for others to follow him. Indians of prequest days, the Fathers of the Spanish Conquest, travelers and traders of the past 300 years have all left their footsteps on the ancient trail. It is said that it is marked by the graves of those who froze to death on the high peaks, thus giving it the name of Death Pass. One wonders how long it will take for the trail to be forgotten.

Now we have to race the fog if we hope to reach the top before all views are hidden under the blanket rolling in from the sea. A few more curves about the bald knobs and suddenly—we are on the top of the world! On either side, ridges and valleys fall away toward the oceans. If it is a clear day, or if one arrives early enough in the morning, the Atlantic can be seen to the eastward, and to the west, the Pacific! At 10,600 feet we are at the highest point on the entire highway from the Rio Grande to the Canal Zone. Only here can one stand and view two oceans. Not even Balboa, discoverer of the Pacific, had such a thrill! Probably, in years to come, a large modern hotel will await the traveler, advertising rooms with a view of two oceans. But now there is only the empty road, the cold, and the fog.

The highway descends into the valley of San Isidro de El General quite abruptly, dropping from 10,600 feet to 1,500 feet in about thirty miles. Just a short distance below the pass, we arrive at Millsville, a large construction camp, named for the contractor for the highway. It is now used for the maintenance crews and is the only spot on the entire stretch offering hospitality to the tired traveler. A hot breakfast with a promise of lunch later was greatly appreciated.

Anxious to get down to San Isidro and back before the afternoon rains began, we hurriedly packed ourselves into jeeps—there were eight in ours—and began the descent. Engineers will be interested in this stretch of road, for it is here that some of the heaviest highway construction in the Americas has been accomplished. Much of the way, the overload towers 300 to 400 feet above the roadbed. There are no guardrails as yet, and in places slides have narrowed the road to a one-way track skirting the edges of cliffs. Near the head of the San Isidro valley, where the San Isidro River is a silver waterfall down the mountainside, we stopped to see where a slide, during construction, had carried away several pieces of heavy road equipment. The grader is known to be buried near the bottom of the cliff and the bulldozer is about a mile down the canyon. Where the rest are is anybody's guess.

When surveys were begun on the proposed highway, crews were plagued by the natives pulling up the stakes to use for firewood. Finally engineers hit upon the scheme of putting a small wooden crosspiece on each survey stake. The Indians, thinking each cross marked a grave, did not touch a one!

San Isidro de El General is a tiny village, which, until the highway was built, was practically isolated from the rest of the country. For access to it there was only the arduous five-day trail over the mountains, or the expensive hop by plane for those who could afford it. One of the heaviest battles of the recent revolution took place within its limits. So many of the government's men were killed that it became impossible to bury them. A grease pit, for the use of road equipment crews, became a crematory. Hundreds of bodies were burned there, and bones are still visible in the ashes. But this spot, along with other battle sites along the highway, will have lost its interest value long before the first tourist arrives. Only a small shrine by the side of the road will stand as a reminder to the incoming tourist that many gave their lives believing, rightly or wrongly, that it was for the liberty of their country. San Isidro will be remembered as a hot, sleepy, little town where one can recover from the cold and high altitude of the mountains just crossed, and where on Sundays, one can watch the local horsemen ride their horses in fast and furious games in the square.

Our trip back up the mountain to our waiting and long-delayed lunch, was a race with the rain, which we lost. If your plans for touring the highway included a jeep, don't forget your fur parka and plenty of blankets. You may think that tropics mean only bathing suits and palm trees, but two foot icicles have been found at the top of these mountains—so don't say you weren't warned!

After a delicious and more-than-sufficient dinner had filled up all the hollows, we felt able to face the

LETTERS

The Church at Fort Wayne, Indiana

In the fall of 1922, Elder Ira Benham of Warburg, Alberta, Canada, came to Fort Wayne to work. He found the writer the only Latter Day Saint living in Fort Wayne at that time. They met together each Sunday for an hour of worship and study.

When Elder Benham was transferred back to Canada by the company for which he was working, the writer and her small daughter continued to keep this worship and study hour each Sunday.

Later, other members began moving to Fort Wayne; they were Maude M. Crandall, her son, Clair, and family, Gladys Nichols and her husband, Samuel (later ordained elder), and the Clyde Bennett family.

We met in our homes for a long time without any spiritual leader. We wrote a letter to the Saints' Herald, requesting that someone "come over to Macedonia and help us." Brother J. O. Dutton of Galva, Illinois, answering our "S. O. S.," came and baptized seven people.

We rented a hall, and at the end of two years decided to build. We were organized as a branch February 14, 1936, by Apostle D. T. Williams and District President A. C. Barmore.

Ground was broken for the new church August 2, 1939. Brother Mark Gross, realizing our financial condition, volunteered to build our church at a great sacrifice, and we accepted his offer. Brother Gross patterned the interior as was shown to him in a dream, in which the shape of the rostrum and door and window casings were made known to him.

Since the beginning of the branch until his death, Brother A. H. Nieman called and preached for us every three months. Much gratitude is felt for the encouragement and assistance he gave us.

April 25, 1948, marked one of the happiest days in the history of the Fort Wayne congregation. On this day our church building was dedicated to the Lord. President Israel A. Smith, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, District President L. S. Troyer, and Saints from all over Northern Indiana District and St. Marys, Ohio, were present.

The prayer service at 9:30 a.m. was one of the highest spiritual experiences the Saints of Northern Indiana District ever enjoyed. President Israel A. Smith was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service, as well as at the dedication service at 2 p.m. At this time the deed and keys to the church were given to the general church, then the keys were returned to the Fort Wayne Branch to be held in trust for the general church. Apostle Gleazer was the speaker for the evening service.

The services of this day were planned by Pastor G. Earl Burt, who also participated in these spiritual experiences. We have had three pastors: Elder S. M. Nichols, Elder Jack Pray, and Elder G. Earl Burt. Elder Harry Simons and Elder Jack Pray, now under general church appointment, are from Fort Wayne. Seven of our members have been ordained to the priesthood.

My Greatest Adventure

Nine years ago Mother and I left the church in which we had always been members, and began searching for Christ's Church—the New Testament Church mentioned in the Book of Acts. We had many unusual experiences with the different denominations and faiths we considered for the next three years. Discouraged and almost to despair, we were about to return to our former church when a minister of the Reorganization found us and began telling us the Gospel Story.

Mother knew that God had led her to this light, for she had always believed the truths which the church teaches. She read only the Angel Message Tracts before she was baptized. Like so many converted to the church, I read the Book of Mormon and was convinced. Mother and I were baptized on a Palm Sunday by Clyde McDonald, the elder who presented the gospel to us and has since married my mother and given us a happy home.

The adventure does not stop there, however, for we found this church to be a church of opportunity. How many times I have been called upon to give my services in our branches. My patriarchal blessing admonishes me to "help out and assist wherever asked," but I was very timid before I came into the church and for some time afterwards. I could never imagine myself singing or testifying in front of people. I couldn't even pray to God silently before I was baptized. Now I delight in telling others about the gospel, and I enjoy singing, at services. My testimony is the same as Paul's—"I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me."

The greatest adventure of my whole life since baptism has been that of adventuring with God in the many paths of service that bring souls into his fold. I desire with all my heart to continue faithful in the work that is mine.

A Note of Thanks

To the many friends who so generously and kindly remembered us on the occasion of our Golden Wedding Anniversary:

We were deeply moved by the kindly messages and lovely gifts which so many both at home and abroad sent to enrich and brighten this happy day. To each one and all we send our sincere thanks.

We are truly thankful that our lives have been crowned with the inestimable blessing of such friendships and count this as the greatest of the many blessings which have come to us.

As we contemplate the experiences of recent days, we are humbled as well as grateful and we pray that we may prove to be worthy of the affection and confidence expressed.

Very sincerely and gratefully,

Oak Hill Branch Is Organized

Several years ago, those in charge of the Southeastern Mission suggested the consolidation of the Oakland and High Hill Branches of Grave County, West Kentucky. After much discussion and prayerful consideration, a joint meeting was called and, by unanimous vote, the two branches became one. Officers were elected for the new branch, known as Oak Hill, with C. L. Ross of Cottage Grove as pastor. Plans were made for a new church which would be more conveniently located for all members and a building fund was started. A lot has been purchased in Tri-City; this is at the intersection of the Murray-Fulton and Mayfield-Paris Highways; both are paved roads and have regular bus routes.

The High Hill church building has been sold and the money applied to the building fund. Meetings until the new church is finished are being held at the Oakland church, located on Farmington Route 1. Church school is held each Sunday morning at 10 o'clock; Communion at 11 on the first Sunday of the month and preaching on the third.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The new building should be finished by the end of the year. The women's department, under the direction of President Edna B. Hicks, has contributed over $300 to the fund. Members and friends of the church are invited to attend services when they are visiting in or passing through this part of the state.

Wants to Correspond with Members

I am an isolated widow with three small children. My sister, who lives near me, also has three children, and we should like for them to be able to attend a Latter Day Saint church school. We have held some meetings at my grandmother's home in past years, but now she is blind and suffering with cancer. Both she and a friend, who is alone and in poor health, need the prayers of the Saints. I would like some pen pals from twenty-five to thirty years of age, and I ask for prayers for myself and children.

Report From Lamesa, Texas

On July 6, 1947, the scattered Saints of western Texas and New Mexico met to organize a church school at the home of E. C. Riebold in Lamesa. Brother Riebold was chosen pastor and R. E. Stone, church school director. This group continued to meet every first Sunday of the month until January 25, 1948, when services were scheduled to be held on both the first and third Sundays at Lamesa and on the fourth Sunday at Stanton. Average attendance at Lamesa for the past year has been thirty-three; there have been twelve baptisms, seven from Stanton, one from Lubbock, and three from Lamesa. Local offering (not including the building fund) totals $53.75, and general church offering, $102.

Plans are being made for a picnic to be held in Lubbock Park in September. Elder W. C. Haden is to attend, after which he plans to spend a week with each group.

In Appreciation

In behalf of my father, W. S. Macrae, and the Macrae family, I wish to express deep appreciation to the Saints everywhere for the wonderful way in which they evidenced loyalty to him during the eight weeks when he was severely ill at the Sanitarium. The prayers, cards, letters, and personal calls were a great help. I should like especially to thank the Warrensburg Saints for all they have done.

Father is now at home in Warrensburg where he celebrated his eightieth birthday on August 20.

Report From Post Oak, Missouri

We feel that we have made real progress in the past year. Although we are few in number, we hold regular meetings, including a Tuesday evening Bible class, which is held in the homes of various members. Irene and Delbert Crabtree, wife and son of Clarence Crabtree, were baptized recently—a welcome addition to the group. The annual business meeting will be held this month. Tom Rawson is pastor.

God Will Direct Us

When we were at the Ozark Reunion, Apostle Oakman told us that if we would repent and serve the Lord, and be humble and express our desires to be obedient to his will, then he could use us. My testimony is that this is true, because of the experience I had after making this promise to God.

When I went to leave the camp grounds, I had five dollars for my trip left, . . . so I prayed that if God would speak in his still small voice to my heart, I would try to hear and obey it. I went to Independence to church Sunday morning, and there sat down by a man who was clean and neat, whose head was bowed, and who read from the Doctrine and Covenants. While he looked very devout, I noticed that he gave nothing to the offering. A wrong thought came to me, "If he is so pious, why doesn't he give the Lord some money?" Then I felt ashamed of myself, and the Spirit said, "Give this man your five dollars." I opened my purse, took out the money, and after the closing prayer, I turned to him and said, "Would you think I was crazy if I gave you this?" Then I told him what had happened, and how God had told me to give it to him. Tears came into his eyes, and he said, "Now I know God hears and answers prayers." He told me he was out of work and in need and had been praying.

God works in wondrous ways. May he ever keep me humble, for now I know that no one can judge his fellow man out of his own wisdom. May I never again judge in such a way. That I may ever subject myself to his will, and be an instrument in his hands to help others is my prayer.

Wise or Foolish?

When the cry goes forth, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh," will we be classed with the five wise virgins who had sufficient oil in their lamps to light their pathway, or will we be among the five foolish who went to purchase more oil because they had not brought a sufficient supply with them?

In recent years, there has been a tendency to discount the spiritual experiences of the past generation. These are often referred to as "emotionalism." However, the person who has had such experiences is as sure of their source as was the Apostle Peter when he responded to the Master's question, "Whom say ye that I am?" with the words, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus answered, "Flesh and blood have not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

It is not enough to wear beautiful garments and to carry a lamp, no matter how brightly polished it may be, when we start to the wedding supper. Unless we have sufficient spiritual oil to light our pathway, we will find the door closed when we arrive.

We have been told, "The glory of God is intelligence," but we should not become so sure of our own merits that we forget the source of our intelligence.

Signs of Our Times

BY ALETA RUNKLE

YES, THIS IS A NEW ERA. But you and I have heard that so often that to many of us it is little more than a tired phrase. To some, however, it is the call to new fears. The man on the street prophesies a dark future now that atomic power has been discovered. But in 1807, when the new ship, "The Claremont," steamed up the Hudson, I wonder what people said? When the first locomotive puffed across the plains, there were many who trembled with the advent of the iron horse. And when the gas buggy threatened to annihilate every leghorn on the farm, the pious clasped their hands and murmured, "What is the world coming to?"

It is so in every age. Not only do some make gloomy predictions of physical ruin, however, but they anticipate spiritual destruction, point their finger at the "erring" youth and say, "The young people just aren't what they used to be. Every day they're straying further away." I don't believe that, and I think I found signs in my work this summer to disprove such accusations. Let me sketch some examples.

WE WERE SITTING around a campfire one evening in the Garden of the Gods. Tall, rugged spires rising sheer on either side of our little valley created a natural cathedral. The stars were bright overhead. The fire was low. In the fellowship service we shared, there was no play upon emotion, no attempt to excite feelings that might be shallow and momentary. In fact, the staff members said very little. About fifty young men and women simply and sincerely shared with us their desires to help build Zion. They were thinking of practical ways in which they could assist. Many were planning to attend Graceland this fall to begin study in some vocation that would be useful in Zion. Nearly everyone spoke. And then there were some quiet, meaningful prayers. I don't think I have ever enjoyed a service more—and yet, there are those who are afraid that our young people don't pray and "bear their testimony" as they should. I wish they might have enjoyed with us the expressions of those fifty.

AT THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA REUNION this summer, the young people, in accord with the Zion's League plan, worked on projects of the four commissions—worship, study, recreation, and service—throughout the week. Under the supervision of their local leaders and district leader, Russell Ralston, they conceived one of the most interesting service projects I have ever seen—or perhaps I should say two service projects. Their objective was to raise money for the Zion's League Missions' Abroad Fund.

First, they set up a shoeshine stand on the most trafficked walks of the reunion grounds. (If you have ever been on the sandy stretches of Asilomar near the ocean, you know how profitable such a business could be.) Each Leaguer took a hand at the stand, which was open long hours daily. The result—a substantial fund for their project and better-groomed oldsters.

But the major project was a carnival held in the lodge on Saturday night. The average church carnival is a bit dull, don't you think? I'll confess that I wasn't much impressed when I first heard about this one, either. But this was no ordinary carnival. Careful planning and working weeks before the reunion made this carnival the most interesting I have attended. All of the booths and machines—careful copies of professional originals—were made by some of the Leaguers before reunion. No gambling machines were in sight. Everybody received a prize whether he won or lost. There were carnival hats for all—festive and gay—some bonnets reminiscent of the Gay Nineties, some regal ones and other modernistic creations with balloons substituting for the new feather hat. Over in the corner was a photo shop (you know the kind—three shots for a quarter) to preserve your memories for future reference. You could have your head taken with a clown body, or two or three of you could ride in the new Ford. In one corner, a rifle range with the ducks sailing along as smoothly as those at any professional stand. Here, a miniature bowling alley, and there, the refreshment stand. Oldsters played all of the games and, with reckless abandon, mixed hot dogs with punch and candy bars. Everyone was happy—and the financial results, $150 for the Mission's Abroad Fund.

Then there's the new Southwest Mission Zion's Leaguer, a compact little magazine of sixteen pages written by the young people for the

A Plea for Action

By BARBARA McFARLANE

I RECEIVED A LETTER from a friend the other day. He has been working on a combine crew in the wheat harvest down in Texas. He writes:

While there I lived with two Negroes. I was glad for the opportunity to become acquainted with and to observe them. I found them intelligent, clean, and loyal. Their optimistic outlook on life was always uplifting. I became good friends with both of them. They were combine operators and very good ones.

While on the Texas plains, we lived as equals, as I wish we could everywhere. But on the way home I entered a restaurant with one of them only to see him kicked out. Don't ever believe colored people are so used to this sort of treatment that it doesn't hurt them, because it does. For two hours my friend was moody and didn't have much to say. I felt ashamed of my own race and couldn't help feeling that perhaps part of the Negro's resentment was connected with me, as I was a part of the society which caused it. When you have an experience like that, you can see the full senselessness of the established tradition.

This incident and the thing it represents multiplied by 12,000,000 typify the problem that is becoming more and more serious in the United States today. And it is senseless to have become such firm believers in a mistaken feeling of superiority. We shuddered not too long ago at the accounts of what Hitler was doing to the Jews and of what Japan was doing to China, never realizing that in our own country an important minority group is being subjected to similar types of oppression. We have placed these countrymen of ours in the position of Tantalus of the Greek myth. Whenever they reach up for the bough of freedom and opportunity which has been placed within the grasp of every American citizen, we snatch it away. Unlike the myth, however, we have no legitimate reason for this denial.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST of Latter Day Saints has made a reputation for itself. We have some of the highest standards of any group in existence.

We have led the way in many areas of moral conduct, and we are holding our own in an age that is fast losing integrity. But the price of leadership is continual action; and in the face of grave injustice, we have the sober responsibility of an enlightened people.

I want to enter a plea to you, the people of the church, to establish a policy. Why don't we, the body politic of the church, say, "This is what we believe should be the policy of church members toward the Negro race—" "This is what the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is going to do about that belief—."

I would like to suggest four things which I believe vital in the conduct of the church toward the Negro.

We first need a General Conference resolution stating exactly what we do believe about segregation, and stating exactly what the attitude of each of us, regardless of geography, should be. Perhaps some believe that a General Conference resolution would not be sufficiently authoritative to command respect. The resolution on recreational practices, although voted upon many years ago, is still regarded as dogma by a great majority of us. A General Conference resolution would be the foundation for a unified church policy on this vital issue of race.

Evangelization begins at home. We need a systematized missionary effort dedicated to the American Negro. Within the economically and culturally oppressed Negro race, a Zionite plan would surely find "a field white already to harvest."

With a body of Negro converts, we will need equal church opportunities to hold these members. Colored branches have floundered and died of a leadership deficiency. Young people need the assurance that the church offers them the same privileges as it does its white youth.

WE NEED AN ATTITUDE of brotherhood by all church members. Under no circumstance should we engage in the open discrimination which is practiced in many places. Under no circumstance should we approve either by actual practice or silent acquiescence the subtle intonances which make life miserable for the Negro.

The problem of racial disharmony is a serious conflict that cannot be solved by blind brotherhood. A century and a half of slavery followed by another century and a half of freedom to be no better than slaves, and a prevailing attitude of Caucasian superiority have developed a condition of racial maladjustment which can be eliminated only by the elimination of prevailing attitudes and barriers. I mean the Negro should have the advantage of good educational facilities from grade school through college. I mean the Negro should have the expedience of good jobs through which a decent standard of living could be maintained.

True, the united effort of our church will be small in comparison with the magnitude of the problem. But to deny the necessity of that united effort is to deny the telling effect we could have on other groups by the power of our example. We have pioneered before. The opportunity to lead in another area of moral conduct is ours.

Are You Willing to Live for Your Religion?

I WONDER IF CHRIST might not have faced failure there in the Garden of Gethsemane. He must have wondered if he had done his work well—if the little band of followers was going to be strong enough to face the coming opposition—if, without his presence, the spirit of the comforter was going to be sufficient against the great odds already stacked and waiting for his death.

Would you like to go back to that time and throw in your lot with those early Christians who considered the loss of life a great gain? Would it be easy for you to live in constant apprehension of your life and property and rejoice at the same time?

People have been known to die for a cause for which they were unwilling to live. The little sacrifices that are necessary every day in order to become a living example are sometimes much harder to make than the one big plunge taken in the heat of enthusiasm. They died for their cause. Are we willing to live for ours?

Christ is the only one who cared enough about us to foresee the possibility of our carrying heavy loads and took the trouble to say, "Come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Costa Rican Journey

return journey. It was good to be back in a closed car, shutting out the cold and the rain. A few yards beyond the road, all was wiped out by the gray blanket of fog. The tall, misshapen oaks looked like ghosts, giving a nightmarish appearance to the landscape. The return road was made totally new and unfamiliar by the shrouding mists. Home at last, and just in time to catch the sun making a last bow before slipping into the sea beyond the mountains.

In time we hope, like many other Americans, to drive the entire length of the Inter-American Highway, but I wonder if any of it will ever thrill us more than our journey over this part while the road is young.

Signs of Our Times

young people, about young people. The bi-monthly magazine is to be self-supporting on a subscription basis. In the words of the editors, "The purpose of the Zion's Leaguer is to provide an outlet for the many talents among our Zion's League members and to unite the many scattered young people of this area. We of the Leaguer staff feel that the Zion's League has a work to do for the church and that such a publication as the Zion's Leaguer will stimulate us toward action."

I read the magazine. It is inspiring, informative, and entertaining. To me this is just another sign of purposeful, well-planned activity that can be found among many of our Leagues.

I WENT TO PRAYER SERVICE last night here in the Center Place. There must have been 150 people in attendance. I noticed there were scarcely any young people in the group. Probably others were wondering, too. Then the young people's leader stood and mentioned the absence of the Leaguers: "I wish they all could have been here tonight, but they're out building Zion. By their own choice, they're helping to do a lot of work on the Campus that must be done. [The Campus is church-owned property where all the Saints of Zion meet together for Sunday evening services.] There are only some nights in the week they can work, and this is one of them. Much as I wish they could be here, I can hardly condemn them for their choice."

"They're out building Zion." That just about sums up all the activity that I saw this summer among our young people. Yes, this is a new era. These Zion-building activities—these are signs of our times.

you."—Moroni 7:26. (There was an analysis of whether or not that being sought met those requirements.) I Corinthians 10:13 is a comfort in knowing God promises a means of escape for every temptation that the trial may be overcome.

ANOTHER TESTIMONY of the enrichment from special offerings is the greater appreciation of priesthood function. This came while members of a church school class were remembering, in fasting and prayer, the prophet and other priesthood members for a three-month period. Prayers were offered at least three times daily and fasting as each saw fit. Special petitions were placed on that common altar in love with sincerity and humility that the authority and power which Christ shares with the priesthood to carry on his work here might glorify him and result in his people being fed. During prayer early one morning, there came to me a feeling of weighted responsibility that must be upon the shoulders of the prophet. His is a responsibility to God and His people. He is the only living true prophet on earth today—the only avenue through which God can speak to his church. Great must be his humility. He does need our constant and earnest prayers for continued strength.

We read the Scriptures and wonder why the "ancient" or "former day saints" did not follow and support the prophets, and why the apostles were persecuted. While praying, I received the "inner" revelation that it is our opportunity and responsibility to constantly remember God's representatives here on earth. All cannot preach the gospel to every nation as the missionary force of the church is commanded; all do not have "front-line" duties. There are many sacrifices and offerings which can be made by each of us that we might fulfill God's will.

Our humble offerings presented to him in love will not be rejected; the part of our own prayers that are beyond our ability or realm to accomplish can be presented to him for his aid. If that which is desired is great, we shall be willing to "pay the price" or sacrifice commensurate with the blessing sought, regardless of the bitter trials or opposition that we know will accompany our sacrifice. A vital truth I realized is that we cannot count the cost of the sacrifice made; rather, we must consider the result either in the lives of those remembered or in our own and that although blessings are sought for another, there comes personal enrichment of soul to the one who fasts.

As a preparation for his ministry, Jesus was "led up of the Spirit, into the wilderness to be with God." He fasted forty days, as is recorded in Matthew 4: 1-10. We know from the Scriptures that Jesus prayed to his Father. During his personal ministry to the Nephites, Jesus commanded them to pray in their homes and churches. He also said, "Behold ye see that I have prayed unto the Father, and ye have witnessed."—III Nephi 3: 56. Since Jesus, the Redeemer and Son, felt the need for fasting and prayer—a communion with his Father—dare I, in my weakness and insufficiency before him, feel that I can serve him or prepare to work in his kingdom without following that example which he gave so willingly and humbly?

In making our offering, we have that invitation or right to commune or "be with God." We know that same strength to "escape temptations" during trials will be given and blessings will come to his people as a result of his great love to those who are willing to sacrifice and serve. In humility, I approach the altar, knowing many are likewise seeking "that which is good, and in faith in his name," for his prophet and people. May we be willing to give ourselves in complete submission to him to be used in his service and in his way with the realization that there can be no sacrifice offerings made that are too great for his work—the accomplishment of Zion.

Asks for Continued Prayers

With heartfelt sincerity I extend my appreciation to the Saints all over the world who have remembered me in prayer. It has been two years since I was hurt, and the doctors now say I have a tubercular infection. That is why I am at the state sanatorium.

I cannot express in words my joy for having found this church. I hope I will always be able to serve my Creator and help others to find their way into the fold. Because of God's goodness to me, I have faith that I shall someday be healed.

I will be glad to receive letters from members, especially the Filipino Saints in the Hawaiian Islands.

BULLETIN BOARD

Central Michigan District Conference

The Central Michigan District Conference will be held at Beaverton on October 16 and 17. A social service at 9:30 a.m., Saturday, will begin the conference. The business session is scheduled for 11, and lunch will be served in the church dining hall at noon. (Those attending are requested to bring food.) District officers for the coming year will be elected at the 2 p.m. business session, and the evening service will be presented by them. Sunday's activities include a social service at 9 a.m.; preaching at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.; and a brief business meeting at 3. District officers who are to submit reports at the conference are requested to get them ready for presentation.

B. H. DOTY,
District President.

Northern Michigan District Conference

The annual Northern Michigan District Conference will be held at Boyne City on October 23 and 24. The first meeting will be a fellowship at 9:30 on Saturday morning; the business session will follow at 10:45. All branch secretaries are requested to mail their reports to the district secretary, Mrs. Ada Alldread, Boyne City, Michigan, before October 23.

ALLEN SCHREUR,
District President.

Wants Used Hymnals

Mrs. Dan C. Babbitt, Star Route, Grayling, Michigan, wants used Saints' Hymnals (in fair condition) for use in the local church. At the present time, the congregation cannot afford new books. Some disorganized group or branch that has replaced its old hymnals may be able to supply this need.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Ethel Van Treese of Tucson, Arizona, requests the prayers of the Saints for her sister-in-law, Mrs. Anna Crisp, 720 East Speedway, Tucson, who has been in poor health for several years. She is to undergo a serious operation soon.

Mrs. Earl Cox, 1430 North Main, Cape Girardeau, Missouri, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of herself and her family. She would also like to contact any members who live in or near Cape Girardeau.

God Comes Fifth

P. S.

You have heard the statement, "Man is incurably religious." How incurably?

You have heard a lot about putting God first. Do we? In the United States of America, the people are so incurably religious that they put God fifth in the list of their expenditures. They spent, in 1947, 8.7 billion dollars on alcoholic beverages; 6 billion dollars on betting at horse races; 3.8 billion dollars on tobacco; and 1.8 billion dollars on motion pictures. It is estimated that they spent only 1.5 billion dollars on religion.

Yes, the American people love God so much that they spend more on drink, horses, tobacco, and movies than they do on him.

And compare the results! For the money spent on alcohol, we have dirty saloons, and hospitals and asylums filled with victims. For the horses, we have a collection of worthless little cardboard stubs, tokens of an insane desire to get something for nothing. For the tobacco, we have fifty million people with halitosis and stained fingers, our streets littered with cigarette butts, and our homes filled with acrid smoke. As for the movies—a mixed blessing—some are good, but too many fill the children's minds with crime, violence, and sin.

Now look what the churches give us! Beautiful buildings devoted to Christian service, community improvement, and world peace. Foreign missions that have accomplished great good. Rescue work and social reclamation. Vacation Bible schools and wholesome recreation for the young. Hospitals and orphans' homes. In other words, for the pittance we give to the churches, they clean up the messes created by the other things on which we spend more money.

Impressions of General Conference

Secretaries, with sheaves of papers in their hands, mounting invisible horses, and galloping off wildly in all directions. . . .

Tired officials, short of sleep from long sessions in their offices, trying valiantly to keep awake at the regular meetings, and doing fairly well at it. . . .

The word "epistle" came into the conference reports. "What's an epistle?" queried somebody's inquiring junior. Dad, who was tired of answering endless questions, gave him this: "An epistle is the wife of an apostle." It has been making the rounds on a wave of chuckles. . . . Then Sister Davey, looking in vain for a lost husband said, "I'm just an epistle looking for an apostle."

Two men, smiling broadly, advanced toward each other, leading with an open right hand. They went into a routine of arm-pumping and back-slapping until they were out of breath, then parted amiably. Six paces away, each turned to inquire of his wife, "Darling, who was that? I can't think of his name!"

A traveling official is hard put to it at conference time. He meets a charming lady in the foyer, who greets him cordially and launches out into a conversation about things he can recall only dimly. He racks his memory for "Who? Where? and When?" Given time, he could summon it all back, but this descends upon him in split seconds. Chances are she is someone who fed him prime roast beef, fluffy mashed potatoes, and rich brown gravy with biscuits; and finished off with a lemon meringue pie that left him drooling for days. Why doesn't Nature provide people with dependable memories?

Parents, relaxing in comfortable chairs in the lobby, blissfully unaware and unconcerned about what the Juniors are doing. The Juniors in flying phalanxes, training for the spring races along the halls and on the ramps. . . . Teen-agers with a hot dog in one hand, standing patiently at the telephones, trying to locate girls they met when last in town, for an evening date.

Two lines of people at the Laurel Club dining room. Those going in looking patient, anxious, and hungry. Those coming out looking plump, smiling, and satisfied.

The General Conference

Due to the circumstances of publication, which have made the work particularly heavy at this time, this is our first opportunity to report the actual events of the General Conference.

Readers will be interested in the attendance. It may be presumed that everyone here came to Conference on the first Sunday. The Teachers' Quorum was appointed to make the official count, and they report that 9,146 persons were present at the Sunday morning communion services. This is the only count of which we are informed. Other persons made general estimates which ran into higher figures.

But our chief interest is in quality rather than quantity. One must feel proud to be a part of so great an assembly of church people in which dignity, order, and reverence are observed. A spirit of friendliness, hope, and good will prevailed. The leaders of the church took part in the program and presented their messages to an attentive and appreciative gathering.

Sunday afternoon brought an address from President Israel A. Smith in which, under the title, "Our Basic Polity," he discussed the situation and the work of the church in relation to world-wide events. In his quiet manner of presentation, President Smith struck a conservative tone, indicative of the care and consideration that will be given to the leadership of the church in a time of international crisis.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson affirmed the central purpose of church work in his Sunday evening sermon at the Auditorium, as he spoke on "The Call to Evangelism," in an eloquent appeal for expanded missionary endeavors.

The international character of the church was emphasized as cabled greetings to the conference were read from our people in various parts of the world. Tradition was made for the church when President Smith announced, "We will now sing the battle hymn of the church—190." "Redeemer of Israel" has been used to open many a conference of the church, and it is likely that President Smith's declaration will establish it even more firmly in the regard of the people. The name will be remembered.

On Monday, the most elaborate program of classes and educational activity ever presented to a General Conference was begun. It has been estimated that the total number of meetings named in the Official Program will reach a figure of 272, and this does not include many a special meeting not advertized.

The first business session set a swift pace of movement that was a surprise to the assembled delegates and ex officios. Immediately after the conference was declared organized, the first item of business on the table was the presentation of a message given to the church by President Israel A. Smith. Quorums had considered and accepted the document in their morning sessions, and the General Conference followed suit in the afternoon. Changes in the leading quorums were indicated.

Apostle M. A. McConley, who became ill during his recent mission in Europe, was released from the Quorum of Twelve and recommended for ordination as an Evangelist.

Two men were named for ordination as apostles: Percy E. Farrow one of the Presidents of Seventy, and Reed M. Holmes, who has labored under general church appointment for a number of years. It was directed that they should be ordained the next day.

Members of the priesthood were admonished to qualify for greater service. Church members are warned again that the "hastening time" is here. An interpretation of the work of the Twelve and the Seventy in missionary work was given. The church was urged to preserve its unity and spirit of tolerance for the good of all our work.

Adoption of the document was unanimous, and it will be included in the church law and in the Doctrine and Covenants.

The ordination of the two new apostles took place, as planned, at the Tuesday afternoon business session, in a ceremony of dignity and solemnity.

The working pace of the conference continued on this day as the First Presidency presented a recommendation for the ordination of three men as bishops. The first of these is Don A. Alberts, of Sydney, Australia. From the United States, Joseph E. Baldwin of Chicago, and Leslie W. Kohlman of Oklahoma City are also to be ordained bishops. These ordinations were scheduled for the Wednesday business session.

Elder William Patterson, who served in the Order of Evangelists from 1940 to 1944, and as a high priest from 1944 to the present time, has been granted permission, at his request, to return to his labor as an evangelist. Brother Patterson has done a fine work and has brought many people into the church.

The deadline for the introduction of new business was set for Thursday, October 7, at 3 p.m. This was not to include business before the quorums.

A motion was approved setting the meeting time for the next General Conference at Sunday, April 2, 1950.

As a general observation, it may be said truly that this is a happy conference. The people are in a hopeful, pleasant mood. Rumors, generally abundant, have suffered a crop failure.

Emphasis, at this conference, centers upon evangelism, religious educational problems, service, personal development, the enrichment of church and home life, and related matters.

Across the Desk

The following letter is from J. L. Verhei, president of Oregon District.

Vancouver, Washington, Branch re-elected Elder Paul Fishel as pastor at a recent business meeting and reported more baptisms and return of members to regular attendance than in any previous year. This group has several thousand dollars in the building fund and expects to rebuild or obtain another church in the near future to accommodate the increased attendance.

The members of Camas Branch, under the leadership of Pastor Leonard Rhodes and Edward Webberly, chairman of the building committee, are purchasing the Methodist church. It is a beautiful building located in the center of Camas and, when purchased, will be the largest of our churches in Oregon District. These Saints have met for a number of years in the Odd Fellows Hall. Although Camas is in Washington, it is part of the Oregon District, and the new building will accommodate district gatherings.

Elder Cleo Thompson was retained as leader of the Sweethome, Oregon, Branch. This is the oldest group in Oregon District, being organized by the Morrises and Ameses in 1844. The present church is too small for the growing congregation, and a lot is being purchased to build a new church upon.

Forest Grove mission was organized into a branch on Sunday, August 29. Elder Robert E. Anderson was selected to serve as the first pastor of the group. Although meetings are held in the Grange Hall, the members are looking for a suitable location to build a church. Forest Grove is the home of Pacific University and is a beautiful town in the heart of the Tualatin Valley.

Salem Branch re-elected Elder Charles Asher as pastor and recommended that George Speed be ordained to the office of elder at the coming district conference. Members of the building committee, under the direction of Mrs. George Speed, are arranging for many improvements to be made on both the interior and exterior of the church to take care of the needs of the growing congregation.

The Southeast Portland Branch has completed the moving and repairing of their church building under the supervision of Pastor Lester Comer. This group continues to improve its church facilities and increase attendance.

Hood River mission, under the leadership of Pastor Harry Howell, has repainted and completely redecorated the church. This group has taken on new life and is expected to accomplish much. Two young men from the mission, Priests Lee Howell and Robert Dixson, are attending Graceland this year.

The members of Central Branch continue to beautify the grounds around their newly purchased church home. Elder Arthur Gibbs, missionary to the northwest, will conduct meetings here during the month of September.

Israel A. Smith

From Elder J. L. Verhei, president of the Oregon District, we get a short account of the four-district reunion at Silver Lake, Washington. Brother Verhei was chairman of the reunion committee:

The Silver Lake Reunion held at Silver Lake near Everett, Washington, for the Pacific Northwest (which includes the Oregon, Seattle, Spokane, and British Columbia Districts) was a real success this year.

The attendance far exceeded any previous year. There were camped on the grounds nearly 1,000 throughout the reunion, and on the last week end over 2,000 gathered to attend classes and hear Elder John W. Rushton and President Israel A. Smith speak.

The classes were well attended. It was possible to make many more divisions by age groups and classes because of the large attendance and the excellent group of officers from the general church and district.

Those present under general church appointment were: President Israel A. Smith, Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, Elders John W. Rushton, E. Y. Hunker, Arthur Gibbs, Philip W. Moore, Paul Wellington, and James A. Reneau. Joseph Yager and family were guests of the reunion, and several families from other districts were in attendance, among whom were Elder Bowerman and family of Canada.

Under the ministry of these men, the people were taken to new heights, and a spirit of dedication to the unfinished task of building the kingdom became their utmost desire.

The only sad note of the reunion was when the Saints gave a small gift and bade Apostle R. E. Davey and family good-by and Godspeed to their new assignment.

Graceland College is to be commended for the fine group of students in attendance, many of them visitors.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

The Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric

To the First Presidency and General Conference of 1948:

In submitting our report to the General Conference this year, we deemed it advisable to call attention not only to the various funds but to emphasize again the importance of that portion of our policy adopted by the General Conference of 1932 relating to reserves. At the time that policy was adopted, the possibility of setting up reserves seemed quite remote and may not have been fully understood by many who gave the policy their fullest support at the General Conference. It is our opinion, however, that it was quite thoroughly discussed, and the policy had the approval of the Conference because of the bitter experiences the church had gone through in making readjustments because of the decline in income and the payment of the great indebtedness of the church.

Consistent adherence to the policy adopted in 1932, year after year, has resulted in strengthening our financial position as a church, and those days of a dearth of income and financial resources have been supplanted by increases in net income, making possible the establishment of reserves.

Some criticism has been made by individuals throughout the church who apparently have not comprehended the importance of either the policy or the reserves which the church now has. There has been the feeling that the church has set up these reserves at a sacrifice of missionary endeavor, that we have not increased our ministerial lists sufficiently because we were adding to the reserves. This is fallacious thinking, and we wish to call to the attention of the General Conference certain facts at the beginning of this report so that critical examination of the report will reveal the strength of our policy and eliminate any fear on the part of some that sacrifices of our missionary endeavors have been and are being made.

The real sacrifice in our missionary work was made in the thirties, when it was necessary for us to curtail all activities because of a lack of funds. If we had previously operated on the basis of our present policy and provided reserves, it would not have been necessary to release men. Now, with the reserves available, there is no reason why the church cannot add to its ministerial list men who are sufficiently capable to meet the requirements and standards set up by the joint council, keeping in mind as well that these standards are not just the standards of the joint council, for our membership as a whole is demanding a quality of ministry that is difficult to supply. It must be kept in mind, however, that enlargement of our ministerial list must always be in keeping with our ability to finance over a period of time, and we must therefore keep our budget within the average income of preceding years. The Missionary Reserve Fund has made it possible to make inter-conference appointments that formerly could not have been made before the establishment of such a reserve.

While our building needs are obvious, we have deemed it advisable to defer all building projects where the need is not imperative. It is true that the Auditorium is unfinished and that buildings are needed at Graceland College, and the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital is also uncompleted. Approval has been given to proceeding with some construction at Graceland College because the need is such that in our opinion it warranted our approval. It has been our policy to hold building to a minimum under present conditions because of extremely high costs. While funds have been appropriated for work on the Auditorium, it has not been deemed advisable to have this work done up to the present time.

The Ministerial Reserve Fund assures the church of carrying on its ministry by providing funds for the support of its retired missionaries without having to draw from current income.

The Operating Reserve Fund assures us of maintaining the church as a going concern for a good period of time even though there might come a decline in the current income of the church.

With this brief explanation relative to our financial policy and particularly that portion of it relating to reserves, we are glad to call attention to other phases of our report which we are sure will be of interest and concern to the Conference. In our report to the General Conference of 1946, we made the following statement:

"We are now experiencing an inflationary period which has caused our expenditures to rise and which will require larger appropriations than it was thought would suffice at the time of our report to General Conference of 1944."

Further, in our report to the Conference of 1947, we stated:

"The conditions that were outlined in that report substantially carried over into the year 1946, and in the future we see a continuation of these inflationary conditions."

These conditions have continued, and they prove additional justification for adherence to the policy of 1932; for despite the fact that reserves have less actual value in a period of inflation such as we are experiencing now, they nevertheless are necessary to give us financial security in an inflationary period. In a period of deflation, the dollar increases in purchasing power.

Income and Expense

Our total income of tithes and offerings for the year 1947 amounted to $1,161,367.28, as compared with $1,066,988.59 in 1946. Our net income, however, was slightly less in 1947 as compared with 1946, amounting to $550,144.52 and $565,863.72 for the years 1947 and 1946 respectively.

Our total expense, exclusive of Other Income, etc., for 1947, amounted to $632,059.80 as compared with $523,536.98 for 1946. (The details of Income and Expense are shown in "Exhibit B" of the schedules.) As was true in 1946, the bulk of the increase of expenditures arose in Ministerial Family Allowances and Elders' Expenses and Administrative Expense and increase of appropriations made to Graceland College. Our total expenditures for 1947 were within the authorized appropriation for that year.

A supplemental report is being made covering the first six months of 1948, which shows the need for increased appropriations for the balance of this year.

Balance Sheet Assets

Our cash assets at the end of the year show a very favorable position with over $500,000.00 cash on hand and in the banks, and in the hands of Bishops and Agents. Of this amount, however, $75,145.51 was due other funds as of the close of the year. The necessary transfer of this amount has been made since the close of the year. This is offset largely by amounts due the General Fund from other funds, totaling $74,103.01.

Notes receivable have increased $27,778.89. This increase is accounted for in inter-institutional obligations to the General Church approximating $16,000.00 for which United States Government Bonds have been hypothecated. The balance of the increase is made up of notes with deeds of trust as collateral.

Our investment in Furniture and Fixtures increased in the amount of $28,984.93.

Liabilities

Reference has already been made to the amount due other funds of $75,145.51 which represents inter-fund accounts at the end of the year and which has since been adjusted. The Accounts Payable of $12,284.17 represent the current accounts which have subsequently been paid. The item of $29,036.73 shown as exchange is the amount previously deducted from the face value of Canadian Securities, which securities have been transferred to Special Funds.

In our report to the Conference of 1947, we stated that this fund would be transferred as an increase to the surplus of the General Fund, due to the fact that the General Fund was charged with this exchange in past years, and that the establishment of the Canadian dollar on a par with the United States dollar at the time of our report made this reserve unnecessary. However, inasmuch as that was established as an official rate, which applied only to such moneys as were expended in Canada, we have deemed it advisable to maintain this reserve.

Agency Fund

We have maintained this Agency Fund since the policy of the segregation of our accounts was adopted. As stated previously, it is our policy to keep this fund as small as possible for the resources therein represent deposits made by individuals with the church which for reasons which to us seemed adequate have been retained by us as a service to the individuals concerned. The resources are kept liquid so that complete payment of all obligations in this fund is provided for.

Consecration Agreement Fund

We are continuing the policy of segregation of funds which are received which entail liabilities present and future to individuals. These funds for the most part represent assets consisting of cash, bonds, and real estate turned over to the church, wherein the church agrees to meet certain obligations during the lifetime of the individual.

It is our intent to keep this fund liquid, and accumulation of capital will be left in the fund until it is obvious that there is more than enough to meet all obligations; when and if such a situation should develop, it will be permissible to transfer excess capital to the General Fund.

Houses of Worship Fund

Since our report to the General Conference of 1947, we have undertaken a survey of church properties, and a supplemental report is being submitted to the General Conference covering results of our survey. This survey was instituted because the Balance Sheet of this fund does not reflect the true resources of the church invested in houses of worship. It is our hope that the survey will reveal resources that have not been set up on the books.

As will be noted from the Balance Sheet, investments in this fund are kept liquid to enable us to meet obligations owing to congregations or districts. Some of these funds have been loaned to congregations to assist in new building projects. These funds are considered as trust funds and are so treated.

Houses of Worship Revolving Fund

At the General Conference of 1946, an appropriation of $300,000.00 was made for this fund to assist congregations in the building of houses of worship. The loans outstanding as of December 31, 1947, amounted to $126,131.69, but there were in process at that time an additional number of loans which since have been completed, amounting to $57,265.00, which makes a total of $183,396.69 actually loaned out. There are other loans in process, a part of which have been approved and others which may be approved which will use up the complete amount of $300,000.00 appropriated.

In many respects this fund has served the purpose for which it was created, but there has been a tendency on the part of some to consider it as an unlimited fund, and in one or two instances we have encountered some difficulties in getting the congregations to restrict their building projects so as to be within the means of the congregation to finance with such help as could be extended from this fund. Some revision has had to be made as to the basis on which these funds are loaned to congregations in order to more fully meet the needs of the church as a whole. Excellent co-operation has been given by most congregations to whom loans have been made in making repayments to the fund.

Ministerial Reserve Fund

The principle of this fund has been discussed briefly at the beginning of this report. We continue the policy of making current appropriations as men are appointed, adding to the capital of this fund. Undoubtedly the time will come when if there is a decline in income, some restriction may have to be made relative to the number of men appointed; but in such event this restriction would not anywhere near equal what would be required if we did not have these reserves. It is to be noted that a portion of these reserves amounting to $157,739.74 is invested in land, the balance being in cash and in United States Government bonds.

Australian Ministerial Reserve Fund

The same policy is being carried on in Australia in regard to setting up funds to meet the retirement costs of our ministerial personnel, as is practiced at headquarters.

Missionary Reserve Fund

Reference to this fund has also been made at the beginning of this report. The purpose of the fund is to provide support of missionary endeavors in the years which are ahead, to provide funds for the appointment of men between conferences, for the maintenance of the School of Instruction, and for the preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages. Included in this fund was the appropriation for the rehabilitation of the European Mission; and it is to be noted that investments have been made in property in Holland and England, and in equipment to expand our work in England and to establish headquarters at Rotterdam for the Dutch and German Missions; and to provide equipment for these headquarters.

Oblation Fund

This fund has increased in recent years, with the exception of the year 1947 when practically all current income to this fund has been spent as received. We have carried on an extensive program of relief in the European field with the bulk of such help going to Germany. For the year 1947, there was a net increase to the Oblation Fund of but $25,907.03, the total income to this fund in 1947 having amounted to $86,836.50, and the disbursements for aid granted and for maintaining our Homes for the Aged amounting to $60,929.47.

Operating Reserve Fund

This is another fund set up for the purpose of assuring us of a continuity of maintaining our church program, our aim being that of providing enough funds for the operation of the church for a period of at least one year. Because of increased operating costs, recommendations are being made for additional appropriations to this fund.

Stewardship Endowment Fund

This represents the value of the Ather-ton and Spring Branch Farm lands which were hypothecated for the Graceland Endowment Bond issue. This was approved by the action of General Conference of 1944.

Subsidiary Institutional Funds

This represents funds set up by the authority of General Conference to provide for institutional building needs.

We have followed our policy of segregation of these funds to be used as conditions justify.

amounts to $7,426,647.63. The purpose of this exhibit is to enable one to see at a glance the status of all funds that have been set up during recent years.

In our opinion, real progress has been made during recent years in placing our church upon a sound financial basis; but as pointed out at the beginning of this report, we feel that additional education to create an understanding of the purpose of our financial policy is needed. As a church we have assumed tremendous responsibilities. Our program of evangelization is now reaching out into foreign fields on a broader basis than has been true for many years. Our building needs are of such magnitude as to call for a large outlay of funds. The administrative work involved in carrying on the gathering is becoming increasingly more costly, yet all of these will require our continuous support.

We have tried to keep the church informed at all times as to our financial situation. We have inaugurated the system of mailing individual statements of General Church contributions on an annual basis. We are now in a position to give more accurate information as to the number of contributors as well as to the number of those filing their financial statements in the many districts throughout the church.

Many of these improvements have been slow in being executed, but we feel that we have nevertheless made consistent and gradual progress. There is still need, however, for individual compliance with the law as indicated by the number of contributors to the General Church in 1947 in the United States and Canada, which amounted to 29,300 (25.37 per cent of our membership), and the number of those filing financial statements, amounting to 9,230 (7.99 per cent of our membership). With continued support from our membership, and a wider interest in the teaching of the law, there seems no reason why we cannot make greater progress in the immediate years ahead of us. It is true that we face a critical period in our world's history, but we must keep in mind that the church always seems to be facing some crisis. Its work is always in process, and the church must continue to assume the responsibilities which belong to it. Evangelization and the establishment of Zion are synonymous.

It is our sincere prayer that financial administration may be directed to the attainment of these spiritual and economic goals of the church.

Respectfully submitted,
THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DELAPP,
H. I. LIVINGSTON,
W. N. JOHNSON.

Active and Passive Atheists

By Evan A. Fry

MOST OF US take it for granted that the United States of America is a Christian nation. The nation itself was founded by various groups of people—Puritans, Quakers, Catholics, Huguenots, and others—who came to America in search of religious freedom. The Mayflower Compact, which is probably the first state document of the nation which was to be born a century and a half later, began “In the name of God, Amen.” The Declaration of Independence was a thoroughly Christian document, stating that men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. It opens with a devout reference to the laws of nature and of nature’s God, and closes with an appeal to divine Providence for protection and guidance in this bold and daring step. Much of our coinage bears the motto, “In God We Trust,” and the great seal of the United States (which appears on all of our dollar bills)—the eye and the motto over the pyramid—signify God watching over our undertakings.

Although this is a Christian nation, our constitution provides for a freedom of worship and religion so absolute that any man is free to believe in God or not to believe in Him as he chooses. Any man is free to teach others to believe in God (if he can persuade them to listen) or to teach them that there is no God. It is probably by design, rather than by accident, that there is no mention of a supreme being in the Constitution, because the Constitution leaves the way open for any citizen of these United States to believe in anything he pleases religiously, or in nothing at all.

PERHAPS YOU HAVE SEEN recent news stories reporting the agitation about a ruling of the Federal Communications Commission, first made in 1946 and now at issue in another hearing on a similar case, having to do with the rights of atheists on the air. There have been other news stories recently concerning the fight of atheists to stop all co-operation of the public schools in a church-directed program of religious weekday education. The crux of the question before the communications commission is whether or not the broadcasters of the nation shall be obligated by the rules of this regulatory body to provide equal time for atheists when a station broadcasts sermons, church services, prayers, Bible readings, etc. The ruling of the commission is not clear and broadcasters are genuinely concerned.

In a recent hearing on this question, one of the spokesmen for the atheists made an interesting—and I fear a damningly true—observation. He stated in substance he could not say how many genuine atheists there were in the United States, but that fifty million people in this nation act as if there were no God.

That prompts us to ask ourselves, “What is an atheist, anyway?” We are accustomed to think of an atheist in terms of one who either defies God or who actively denies his existence. We think of an atheist as a crusader, trying to bring other people around to his own belief—or rather to his own lack of belief. But the fact of the matter is that the man who is indifferent and contents himself with simply ignoring God may be as much or more of an atheist than the man who actively crusades against the belief in God.

WE ACTUALLY BELIEVE only in the things we incorporate into our actions. If I passively accept the law of gravity, for instance, but deliberately step off the top of a twenty-story building as though there were no such law in operation, my passive belief in the law of gravity becomes a mockery, and my own indifference will kill me. If I assert a belief in the sanctity of personal property, but behave with other people’s property as though it were mine, what do I really believe? The man who says he believes in marriage as a necessary and beneficial human institution but never marries—what does he really believe? Or the married man who acts as if he were not married—who lives independently, never goes home, never contributes to the support of his wife or children, and plays fast and loose with every woman he meets—would you say he regards himself as a married man? A man who professes to be a citizen of the United States, but evades his taxes, shirks jury duty, never votes, and refuses to render military service or obey any laws, is, in some respects, more dangerous than the anarchist or traitor who willfully and definitely sets out to destroy the government.

Millions—perhaps even more than the fifty million estimated by our atheist friend—millions of people in these United States give a sort of apathetic, indifferent assent to the intellectual proposition that there is a God. They might even take God’s side in an argument or debate with an atheist. But at all other times, they simply ignore God; they act as if he did not exist, or at least as if he didn’t care and wasn’t looking. They ignore their obligations of praise and thankfulness and service to him. They ignore or evade the obligations to fellow men imposed on them by a belief in a God who is Creator and Father of all men.

MANY YEARS AGO I heard a good Methodist bishop, whose name I have long since forgotten, say, “Men do not need to be convinced of the existence of God; they need to be convinced of the importance of God.” In other words, many men are intellectual believers but actual atheists. They say they believe but act as if God did not exist—or at least as if his will and his law had small weight in the world he has created. And sometimes I believe that this is the most dangerous kind of atheists, just as the most dangerous citizen is not the Communist who openly advocates revolution, or the traitor whom everybody knows for what he is, but the indifferent man. When a man boldly stands out, states his position, and challenges yours, you know what you have to face. You can prepare your defenses, muster your logic, and meet his arguments. Perhaps you can even show him a fallacy in his logic and convert him to your way of thinking; if not, you know how to defend yourself against him. The indifferent man sways from one side to the other and is raw material for every demagogue who comes along. It was the indifference of the people of Jerusalem who shouted “Hosannah” one day and “Crucify him” the next that helped to put Jesus on the cross.

Where do you stand? Do you believe in God, or are you an atheist? And what do your actions say of your belief? If we believe in God, we must act as if he is, and as if he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him.

Appreciated Remembrances

Sister Martha Luce of the Lansing, Michigan, Branch, died on June 14. She had been bedfast for many months, but her faith, cheerful attitude, and almost unbelievable patience were an inspiration to all who knew her. She was deeply grateful to the local ministers who so willingly answered her every call, and especially did she appreciate a visit from President Israel Smith, who, with Brother E. R. Carter, administered to her. It was her wish that appreciation be expressed to all the Saints who wrote to her in response to her letters in the Herald. She passed away, feeling that she had received many blessings of relief to body and spirit, and her memory will live long in the hearts of those who came in contact with her.

A Philosophy of Life

LENA LAMBERT GRAHAM

THE FOUNDATION of every good life will be found to contain a philosophy and a set of principles that give strength of character and influence to the personality. Whatever a man or woman does or achieves in life finds its explanation in some code of thoughts that is kept in mind, whether it is ever written or not.

The life of the late Lena Lambert Graham was exemplary in many ways. Her aspirations for self-improvement in the line of service were reflected in the preparation that brought her to the faculty of Grace-land College as an instructor.

In her girlhood, her love of home was expressed in an early poem—

I am sitting on the doorstep
Of my dear old home,
And thoughts come rushing o'er me
Of days that are flown.
I see it in my childhood,
With loved ones at my side,
Whose loving smile and tender words
Have passed life's ebbing tide.

It was inevitable that one so rich in talent and charm should find happiness in the companionship of a friend. Her marriage to Charles F. Graham was very happy, but was tragically cut short by his death in an accident on July 3, 1917. Her feeling about this was reflected in a memorial poem, from which we quote:

LITERARY NOTES ON THE LIFE OF LENA LAMBERT GRAHAM

... through the countless years
That holy love knot I see
Still tighter drawn
Until through trials purified
Love draws me to the other side,
And we are one again, my love.

Her faith was tried and was found strong enough to carry her through years of faithfulness to her task of caring for her son. In a poem entitled, “You Say There Is No God?” she wrote:

You have not sensed the spirit of the touch
Of baby arms in trusting love entwined,
Or felt the comfort faith alone can give
When grief o'erwhelms and dulls the mind.

A bit of her personal philosophy is revealed, the product of her mature years, in something she wrote almost a year before her passing.

PRAYER—1947

I do not ask for petty blessings
At the throne of Grace;
But when I kneel
Or sometimes at my work
I ask for guidance for that day,
For strength and courage for the things I face
And cannot see.
For if my strength shall come through sorrow, sacrifice,
His wisdom all embracing,
That I know,
His mercy never spared, will see me through.
Nor would I ask alone these things for me,
But other voyagers on life's uncharted sea.
But first of all, I thank Him for past care,
For blessings, seen and unseen,
For the privilege of walking with him,
And the blessed spirit which he gives
To those who try
In earnestness to do his will.

It is not possible to record the whole of any life. There are always other chapters yet unwritten and unpublished that signify the illimitable reaches of mind and spirit that would require an eternity to explore. In her writings, we find reflected the philosophy and the faith that held her up and kept her going as a mother and homemaker, as a teacher, as a writer, and worker for the church. From the tribute read at the service, we quote: “She lived bravely, devoted to her duty, to her family, her church, and her friends.”

Concerning Zion - Part II

Cause and Because

By Edith Barwise

Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 6:2; 10:3.

Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

The Lord called his people, Zion, because they were of one heart and of one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there were no poor among them.—Genesis 7:23.

Zion! Latter Day Saints love the word. Around it are fabricated the most iridescent of our dreams. And, for the most of us, that is just what Zion is—a gleaming, nebulous, rainbow-colored dream—far from effort or cost or reality. No doubt the ten virgins also dreamed, but they had to wake up before any of them could go to the wedding.

If this generation is to give Zion the reality God intends it to have, we had better wake up and fill our lamps with the oil of God's word. Let us learn what Zion is, what the price will be, and what delay is costing us. We may find that we are losing more by our delay than the initial cost of Zion. Perhaps, like the merchant with the pearl of great price, we should consider Zion worth any price.

In the King James translation of the Bible, we have just one verse about Enoch. It says, "Enoch walked with God and was not, for God took him." In the Inspired Version, we find a more complete record. Here it is stated that Enoch was not merely a righteous individual; he was also a great preacher, who converted many people. Regarding Enoch and his people we read (Genesis 7:23), "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and of one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there were no poor among them." The twenty-fifth verse tells us, "And it came to pass in his [Enoch's] days, that he built a city that was called the city of Holiness, even Zion." Notice the people were called Zion before the city of that name was built. Remember that it got its name, which evidently meant holiness, because it was where Zion—the holy people—lived. Even as English people live in England, so Zion people live in Zion. Many of us say, "Zion is the pure in heart," without realizing that this could refer only to a people—a people who have the quality of purity. In this passage, "Zion" does not apply to individuals, but "is Zion" speaking collectively. I doubt that Zion development can be attained fully without Zion conditions.

SOME WILL ASK, "Why bother to prove that Zion is a people?" The reason for bothering is that every result must have a cause. Although we long for Zion, we are not zealous enough about its cause. I use the term, cause, not in the sense of a crusade, but in the sense of an agent or power that produces a certain result. In this case, the result is Zion. The cause will be a group of people determined to do the will of God. On April 7, 1947, God, speaking through President Israel Smith, said, "The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies." So Zion conditions require a spiritual people.

Enoch and his converts reached such a high spiritual condition that the Lord himself called them Zion. First, it was because they were of one heart and one mind. They were a spiritually-united people, having the Holy Spirit in high degree. If people set their minds, with steadfast determination, to obey God in all things whatsoever he commands them to do, they will have one heart and one mind to that extent. The more earnestly they press toward the goal of full obedience, the more united they will become and the more the Holy Spirit will abide with them. Second, they dwelt in righteousness. We can dwell in a house, a state, or a labor union—something that has been built, established, or organized. We can even dwell in a tent, but it must be set up with ropes and stakes supporting it. In contrast with the people now, Enoch's people evidently had sought the Lord to establish his righteousness. Having established it, they dwelt or continued to abide in it. I believe God's righteousness is something that can be established, something that can be "lived in." It will be the opposite of "every man walking in his own way." Will I be wrong if I say Enoch's people had, under divine direction, set up an organization based on right relations with each other and made such righteousness their fixed dwelling place?

Third, they had no poor among them. The semicolon in the quotation sets this apart and indicates that it is a consequence of their unity and right relations, but all three must go together. It is a threefold cord. A people cannot develop unity if temporal relations are unjust; nor can a condition of inequality promote spiritual health. So long as poverty perpetuates itself, equality, unity, and spirituality will be hindered. When Jesus said, "The poor ye have always with you," it was merely a statement of a fact which was true then. It was not a prophecy nor of necessity always to be true. Enoch and his friends had built up the kingdom of God and established his righteousness; as a consequence, there were no poor among them.

THE "BECAUSES" of Enoch's day will be the "causes" of our day. Let no one convince you we have Zion until we become united on at least this one thing—doing the will of God fully—nor until we have determined what Jesus meant when he said, "A commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him." Last of all, believe no man who tells you we have Zion so long as some possess that which is above another—good homes, expensive cars, and fine clothes—while others go hungry, homeless, and ragged. No! we are not united. We have not set up God's righteous way. We have no condition of temporal equality. Instead we are going the way of the world. Isaiah had a prophetic glimpse of Zion conditions. Compare our present system, with its strife and turmoil, to what Isaiah says: "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."—Isaiah 22:17.

Whose Business?

By LLOYD E. CLEVELAND

SOMEONE HAS MADE the observation that the man who does things without being told earns the most wages. This person probably had reference to men in industry—the kind of industry that puts dollars in your pocket—but he might also have informed us that workers in the Master's vineyard fit the same pattern. He might also have said something to the effect that the kind of man he was talking about didn't just do things, he did intelligent things. The success stories you have read in trade journals, newspapers, or religious publications are all about men who linked their own knowledge with that of the Infinite to bring about some good result.

Today, with most of us living at such a fast tempo in an age of standardization and mass production, we are apt to become confused. We are apt to find that some of the desirable goods require more of us than we are willing to pay, with the consequent substitution of inferior goals, slipshod methods, and shallow thinking. Sometimes we even worship inferior gods, and, like the Greeks of Paul's time, erect altars to them in our lives. Most of us are pretty good at rationalizing. If we are diligent, we can usually find an excuse for whatever course of action we take.

THIS BUSINESS of saving souls—your own and your neighbors'—needs to be operated at a profit just like any other business. Yet it cannot be if the individuals who help manage the business are bankrupt themselves. We are all partners in the most important enterprise ever launched, and if you are my partner in business, I naturally expect you to share the risk, the toil, and the proceeds. In a way, your private life is my affair, too, because your reputation in the community can make or break our business venture. I want active, not silent, partners. Our partnership, to be a complete success, must be based upon mutual respect, understanding, and a clear knowledge of what our goals are.

We speak of our business. Just whose business is it? Is it so much ours that we refuse to let in other partners? Is it so much ours that we become complacent and willing to continue operating in a "hole in the wall" when we should be moving into more commodious quarters and installing more equipment for handling more "customers"? Is it so much ours that we can safely make all important decisions without reference to our Senior Partner?

This business of saving souls—your own and your neighbors'—needs to be operated at a profit just like any other business.

OCCASIONALLY A partner who is occupying a more responsible position for the moment becomes temperamental. If the other partners won't let him run the business as he thinks best, he sulks. And if sulking doesn't bring results, perhaps he'll make them aware of his injured dignity in other ways. Such poor partners have been known to involve the Senior Partner's affairs in such turmoil as to create a great deal of havoc within the organization. At these times, one is tempted to ask such persons, "Just whose business is this, anyway?"

"Exalt not yourself." This commandment from God, which comes to us through the Doctrine and Covenants, is just as vital today and just as binding as when it was given. It seems to be human nature for us to become exalted in mind when we are given a little responsibility and power in relationship to our fellow man. We see examples of such small-mindedness every day in the business world, and sometimes, to our chagrin, we see such persons engaged in church work. Whose business are we operating?

JEALOUSY and unlicensed ill-feeling have held back many branches and caused a great many innocent people to suffer because of the consequent low spiritual tone resulting from a few members who refuse to grow up. Many of us have witnessed instances where men and women in leadership capacity simply could not bear to receive suggestions, friendly criticism, or rebuffs of any nature without taking personal affront and either quitting completely or seeking through devious means to "get back" at someone. It is bad enough to find such retarded personalities in our membership, but it becomes infinitely worse when leadership of any nature is involved.

These clumsy feet, still in the mire,
Go crushing blossoms without end;
These hard, well-meaning hands we thrust
Among the heartstrings of a friend.

This bit of verse, as I remember it, comes back to me strongly on certain occasions when I blunder along as though I owned the whole business and there were no other partners to consult. Even as in our own family we sometimes are more careless about hurting those we love than with strangers, so in our church relationships, we take our "family" too much for granted at times. If we are to be really good partners in this business, we must be sensitive to life. We must condition ourselves to the heavenly atmosphere in this life if we expect to enjoy it in the next. From a clipping in my file, I extract a bit of wisdom which reads: "We get out of life just what we put into it. If we want happiness, we must first learn to make others happy; if we want love and kindness, we must first give our devotion and affection."

IN SOME WAYS this business of saving souls in which we are engaged has much in common with the consumer co-operatives which have overspread the country. Both are organized for the good and benefit of the common man. Both will save—the one money, the other from eternal sorrow and pain. In both, each individual counts only for himself. His stacks of money may not vote for him in overwhelming force. And both must be patronized by the members in order to keep growing. Men are truly wise in their own little worlds, but there is a dearth of the kind of wisdom which endures and which saves the individual. As James Ramsey Ullman puts it, "To know a little less and to understand a little more: that, it seems to me, is our greatest need."

Perhaps you have heard the old saying, "Everybody's business is nobody's business." Or, perhaps, "Too many cooks spoil the broth." It was a wise person who made each of the statements. They bear with equal force upon an individual's personal affairs and upon certain aspects of our church affairs. If every branch member insisted upon a full share in leadership responsibility in running the affairs of the branch, the cumbersome machinery which resulted would lead to chaos. Instead, we elect our most efficient and wise men and women to fill our offices and perform needed services for the entire group. This is a form of representative democracy. Each member is responsible for exercising his best judgment in the selection of branch officers, and then for backing them up in their efforts to make progress.

On the other hand, we must not interpret these sayings to mean that the elected officers are to build Zion without help. That is everybody's business, and unless we all pitch in and take over our share of the work, Zion will be a woefully long time in preparation. If our job of witnessing for Jesus Christ is neglected, then, in effect, we have resigned from partnership in the world's greatest business—that of saving souls. If we are living below our proper level of achievement, and most of us are, then our right to criticize our partners in church work is nonexistent. Visit any going business in your city. You will not find salespeople or managers standing around criticizing each other, gossiping, or engaging in other internal dissensions. Each is doing his best to serve some customer. Well, the world has plenty of customers for our wares. Are we striving to give service?

THE PRINCIPLE of stewardship is one which should occupy a most important place in our lives. If all our thinking is oriented around the basic philosophy that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, our reaction to the possession of property and the use of our time and talents will be that of a wise and faithful steward. We shall endeavor to so manage our portion of business as to merit the approval, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." We shall do things without being told—intelligent things. We shall take time out from rushing hither and yon to seek the Father in quietness and talk over the problems of business which we encounter in our daily life. We shall acknowledge this business of "bringing God into the lives of men and the lives of men into the kingdom of God" to be a mutual one, involving all of us deeply and irrevocably. We shall remain humble. We shall not cease to grow. We will expand our business!

Enriching Our Fellowship

By Carl Mesle

One evening in 1937, I had occasion to be eating dinner in a restaurant in New York with an older acquaintance when he suddenly peered intently across the room and started to arise. Just as suddenly, he sat down.

"I thought for a moment," he said, "that that was an old buddy of mine with whom I fought in France." Then, relaxing further, he added, "It's just as well, for had it been he, there's no telling when I'd have got back to you."

It took a second world war and a few years of experience as a part of it before I could fully grasp the real depth of fellowship among men in uniform. Their fellowship grows out of a life in which they work and play and live constantly together and which makes them consistently dependent upon each other.

To those who are tempted to dismiss too lightly the fellowship of Saints as another Zionitic dream, it might be well to state that there is being enjoyed today a high degree of fellowship among Saints in Independence and elsewhere, but only among those who are working and playing, studying and praying.

Enriching our fellowship calls for more than church attendance alone; it requires our enlisting actively in the work of building God's kingdom on earth. True fellowship is a by-product—a by-product of hard work, well-done, together.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI.—The district conference was held at Rich Hill on September 11 and 12 under the direction of District President William Patterson, Elder C. A. Dickinson of Australia, and district officers C. C. Martin, Leroy Beckhem, Arlie Allen, Dale Crown, and John Deller. Bertha Rogers was in charge of the music. Brother Dickinson showed pictures of Australia on Saturday evening and gave the 11 o'clock address on Sunday. After the business meeting, the following men were ordained to the priesthood: Raymond Loar, elder; Robert Murdock, Joseph Rei, Joseph Wellington, Walter Nash, and Michael Friend, priests; and Floyd Hursh, deacon. There have been fifty-four baptisms so far this year in the district.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA.—The women of the branch met on Tuesday evening, September 7, at the church for a study period and business session. Officers elected for the coming year are Mrs. Marshall White, leader; Mrs. Bessie Jacobs, assistant; and Mrs. Forest Newton, secretary-treasurer.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.—The Arkansas-Louisiana District Reunion was held at Clear Forks Camp in Hot Springs August 9 to 15; the theme was, "Seek First the Kingdom of God." The reunion staff was composed of W. J. Breshears, who was in charge of fellowship services; Roy A. Cheville, who taught the young people and led "evensong"; Mrs. W. J. Breshears, women's teacher; J. F. Curtis, who with Brother Breshears conducted classes for men; Mrs. Norma Edwards and Mrs. Paul Earnhart, children's supervisors; Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Ziegenhorn, Herald Publishing House representatives; and Delmah Cook, recreational director. Seventy J. Charles May also assisted in the services. T. B. Sharp is president of the district. The reunion will be remembered for its outstanding early morning prayer services.

OILTON, OKLAHOMA.—An all-day service was held at the church on Sunday, September 12. Visitors from Stillwater, Yale, Cleveland, and Tulsa attended. Services included a morning sermon, afternoon round-table discussion, and a testimony meeting. The congregation has now cleared its church home of indebtedness.

Southern Michigan District Conference

The Southern Michigan District Conference will be held in Lansing on October 23 and 24. All district officers should mail reports of their activities for the year to District President J. Charles Mottashed, 215 Hanover Street, Belding, Michigan.

Mabel B. Foster, District Secretary.

A daughter, Shella Gail, was born on July 24 to Mr. and Mrs. Bernie G. Hunter of St. Charles, Missouri. Mrs. Hunter is the former Marjorie Francis of Fort Madison, Iowa.

A daughter, Sharon Kay, was born on May 30 to Mr. and Mrs. Chester R. Manning of St. Louis, Missouri. Mrs. Manning is the former Rilla Mae Coose of Silex, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey L. Wise of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Dennis Lloyd, September 3, at the Independence Sanitarium.

DEATHS

MILLER.—Harry Clifton, son of the late Eben and Margaret Alice Miller, was born January 17, 1897, in Kirtland, Ohio, and died September 26, 1948, in the Victory Hospital in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He attended Graceland College and served in the medical corps of the Army in World War I. On January 21, 1920, he was married to Laola Cook; one son was born to them. Mrs. Miller preceded him in death on April 26, 1942. He was active in baseball for many years and assisted in Boy Scout work in Independence. He belonged to the Masonic Order, McDonald Lodge Number 324, and was a member of the Royal Arch Masons of Iowa, Leon Chapter, Number 33. He also belonged to the Ralph A. Judson Post Number 51 of the American Legion in Lamoni. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1908 and attended Stone Church while living in Independence.

He is survived by his son, Richard Wayne of Independence; three sisters: Mrs. E. R. Forbes, Kalamazoo, Michigan; Mrs. E. C. Henderson and Mrs. E. A. Thomas, both of Independence; a brother, David W. Miller, Los Angeles, California; and his stepmother, Mrs. Thomas Campbell, Deckerville, Michigan. The memorial service was held at the Carson Funeral Home in Independence. Elders Glaude A. Smith and Leonard Lea officiating, and the Masonic Lodge conducting its ceremony. Interment was at Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni, Iowa, where the Masons and American Legion gave ceremonial honors to the deceased.

THOMPSON.—Cecil Esther, was born at Lynnville, Indiana, on March 1, 1886, and died at New Albany, Indiana, on September 26, 1948. She was a stalwart worker in the church for thirty-five years and the New Albany branch had its beginning in her home.

She is survived by her husband, Harry Thompson; three sons: Daniel Harold, Wesley Earle, and Maurice Eugene Thompson; one daughter, Mrs. Vivian Ruth Wareham; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Lee Brook Mortuary in New Albany, Evangelist Arthur Gage and Elder Chester B. Metcalf officiating. Burial was in the family lot.

LAUDIE.—Ada Viola, died July 22, 1948, in Salem, Oregon, at the age of fifty-three. She and her husband, Andrew, moved from Amsterdam, Missouri, to Salem last December. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1920.

She leaves her husband; four sons: Truman of Burbank, California; C. Robert of San Jose, California; Lloyd E. of Salem; and Roy of Columbia, Missouri; a sister, Elva Hansen of Los Angeles, California; and five grandchildren.

ODELL.—Grace, daughter of Alfred Burton and Johanna Prettyman Willey, was born March 4, 1864, in Logansport, Indiana, and died August 7 at her home in Joy, Illinois, following a brief illness. She moved with her parents to Mercer County at the age of fourteen, and on November 18, 1880, she was married to James Odell. Six children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since January 19, 1878.

She leaves her husband; a daughter, Mrs. Omri Prouty of New Boston, Illinois; three grandchildren; and a great-grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Joy, Elder Ed Williams of Rock Island officiating.

KIMBALL.—Sarah Ellen Burg, was born September 23, 1861, at Oak Harbor, Ohio, and died at the home of her daughter on June 22, 1948. Her early life was spent in and around Oak Harbor, Elmore, and Catawba Island. On December 1, 1887, she was married to William G. Kimball at St. Louis, Missouri; three children were born to them. She and her husband were baptized into the Reorganization on March 21, 1897, in Lake Erie. Later they moved to Toledo, Ohio, where they were instrumental in organizing the branch. Sister Kimball served the church there as secretary of the women's department.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. Pearl Kirchner of Toledo, Ohio; a son, Edgar, of St. Louis; five grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Walter Funeral Home, Elder Lloyd Adams officiating.

DATHE.—Anton H., was born June 19, 1889, at Wahpeton, North Dakota, and died July 20, 1948, at the Community Hospital at Moose Lake, Minnesota. He was married to Lula J. Carlson on January 1, 1915; three sons were born to them. Although he was not a member of the Reorganized Church, he attended services and was a tithepayer. He was a past president of the Minnesota State Fair and six of the state fair board members served as pallbearers at the funeral.

He is survived by his wife, Lula; and his three sons: Lloyd C. of Bradley Beach, New Jersey; Gordon, a senior at the University of Minnesota; and Donald of the home. Funeral services were held at the Goodell Chapel in Barnum, Minnesota, and at the Hillside Cemetery Chapel in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Interment was in the Hillside Cemetery.

(Note: Mrs. Dathe would appreciate hearing from her friends in Lee's Summit, Missouri, where she used to attend church. Her address is Barnum, Minnesota.)

TIPPY.—Alva Curtis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Tippy, was born July 15, 1881, in Illinois, and died September 3, 1948, in the Wadsworth Hospital at Wadsworth, Kansas. He served in both the Spanish-American War and World War I, and had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 7, 1936.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Minnie Tippy of the home; two sons: Edward and Ralph Tippy of Terre Haute, Indiana; a brother, Dr. Forest Tippy of Davenport, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. Bonnie Hayes of Casey, Illinois, and Mrs. Frank Hartney of Russell, Kansas; four stepdaughters: Mrs. Jess Patton, Mrs. Tom Curtis, Mrs. Jess Roberts, and Mrs. Carl Bradley, all of Independence, Missouri; and two stepsons: Raymond Kaylor of Miami, Florida, and John Kaylor of Orland, Indiana. Services were held at the George C. Carson Funeral Home in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Ammon C. Badder, officiating. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

HAWLEY.—Gideon M., was born at St. George, Utah, on December 30, 1857, and died August 8, 1948, at McPherson, Kansas, of injuries sustained when he was struck by an automobile while crossing the street. His parents were in the Mormon Caravan, but left Utah when Gideon was twelve years old. Upon returning to Iowa, they became members of the Reorganized Church. Until four years ago, he made his home on a farm near Eldorado, Kansas.

Surviving are two daughters: Miss Hazel Hawley and Mrs. Dale C. Osmer, both of McPherson; a sister, Miss Rozine Jeakins, Bakersfield, California; and a granddaughter, Mrs. Hawley died on November 23, 1945. Services were held at the Arnold-Kirby Funeral Home, Reverend L. F. Arend of the Methodist Church officiating. Burial was in Sunset Lawns Cemetery.

KLOHN.—Elizabeth, was born December 20, 1878, at Adair, Michigan, and died August 9, 1948, at the home of her son, Albert E. Klohn, in Port Huron, Michigan, following a long illness. A member of the Reorganized Church, she was married on March 3, 1897, to Frank H. Klohn, who preceded her in death on March 18, 1944.

Surviving are three sons: Albert E., Harold W., and Ralph O. Klohn, all of Port Huron; a daughter, Mrs. Ross D. Carleton of Port Huron; two brothers: William Fetting of Marine City, Michigan, and Herman Fetting of Sandusky, Michigan; a sister, Mrs. Anna Kasdorf of Sandusky; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Reorganized Church in Cash, Michigan, by Elders E. E. Smith and James Phillips. Burial was in the Watertown, Michigan, cemetery.

CONYERS.—Mary Idella, was born July 26, 1871, in Iowa, and died September 9, 1948, at the home of her daughter in East Los Angeles, California. She was married to George Conyers on January 8, 1888, in Iowa; five children were born to them. She had been a resident of Los Angeles for twenty-two years, moving there from Utah, and a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth.

She leaves four sons: Lymon of Los Angeles; Raymond of Alaska; Earl of Long Beach, California; and Dean of Gardena, California; one daughter, Mrs. Pearl Applewhite of Los Angeles; six grandchildren; and ten great-grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elder V. L. Lum at the Cannon Mortuary at Bell, California. Interment was in the Wasatch Lawn Cemetery at Salt Lake City, Utah.

LEWIS.—George Gregory, son of the late Bishop George Lewis and Mrs. Alice Lewis, was born November 17, 1901, at Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, and died September 14, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in Australia and began his ministry there. He came to the United States in 1924 to attend Graceland College, after which he continued his education at the University of Chicago, here he obtained both his bachelor's and master's degrees. He was called to the office of apostle in 1932, and from then until his death served the church in this capacity; he was appointed secretary of the Quorum of Twelve in 1944. Sharing in his labors for Christ was his companion, the former Edith Woods, whom he met at Graceland and married September 9, 1929. During the years he served as an apostle, he was assigned to the missions in Hawaii, Australia, New Zealand, Tahiti, Canada, as well as the United States. He will be affectionately remembered wherever his ministry extended.

He is survived by his wife, Edith; two daughters, Alice June and Judith Ann Lewis; a son, George Gregory, Jr., all of the home; his mother, Mrs. Alice Lewis; six sisters: Mrs. Phoebe McCrrocy, Mrs. Essie Roberts, Mrs. Addie Jones, Mrs. Lily Ley, Mrs. Edith Harris, and Mrs. Sadie Gildey; and a brother, Neal Lewis, all of Australia. Funeral services were conducted at the Stone Church in Independence; L. F. P. Curry gave the sermon, President John Garver, the prayer, and Apostle Paul Hanson, the obituary. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CROWLEY.—Irvin, was born December 23, 1858, in Addison, Maine, and died September 6, 1948, at Soldier Snug Harbor, Staten Island, New York. He was married to Theresa Drisco about seventy years ago; twelve children were born to them. He spent most of his active life as a seaman. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since his youth. Mrs. Crowley and six of the children preceded him in death.

Surviving are four sons: Colon and Earl of Addison; Herbert of Jonesport, Maine; and Benjamin of Portland, Maine; two daughters: Lula of Booth Bay Harbor and Cora of Cherryfield, Maine; fourteen grandchildren; and nine great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Union church in West Jonesport, Maine, Seventy Donald E. Harvey officiating. Burial was in the Indian River Cemetery.

NICHOLS.—Katherine, daughter of Charles Frederick and Susan Roth Muller, was born July 16, 1883, in New York City, and died September 14, 1948, at Independence, Missouri. She was married on July 15, 1906, in New York to William E. Nichols; one son was born to them. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on November 14, 1909, by Benjamin McGuire at Brooklyn Branch. For thirty-three years, she served as a teacher in the church school and for study classes at Brooklyn Branch. In 1942, she moved with her two sisters-in-law, Sara and Helen Nichols to Independence, where she attended first Liberty Street Church and then Slover Park. In addition to teaching, she was a devoted worker at the Campus Shop. Her life was full and enriched by many friends.

She is survived by her husband; her son, William M. Nichols; and two grandsons, all of Independence. She also leaves one sister. Funeral services were held at Stone Church, Elders Richard D. Weaver and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BRIEFS

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.—The Southern California District Reunion was held at Pacific Palisades from July 31 to August 8 with nearly 500 camping on the grounds. The weekly theme, "All Are Called," was developed by a series of daily themes covering various phases of the Latter Day Saint philosophy. Both Apostle W. Wallace Smith and Charles R. Hield were present; they were assisted by district officers in conducting daily classes. Mrs. L. J. Ostertag and Mrs. W. W. Smith were in charge of women's activities. Special events were the musical program presented on the opening Sunday by Mrs. Luella Wight; the program and reception on Monday afternoon in honor of the golden wedding anniversary of Elder and Mrs. John Rush-ton; and three plays presented on Friday evening by the Long Beach, San Bernardino, and Santa Ana branches. The business meeting was held on Saturday, August 7; all district officers were sustained, and the recommendation that Burbank Mission become a branch was approved.

OPHEIM, MONTANA.—The Saints of Glasgow, Opheim, Nashua, Hinsdale, and Fort Peck met at the Miller home for an all-day service on September 5. The regular Opheim church school was held at 10 o'clock, followed by a Communion service. District President V. W. Ditton spoke at this meeting; there were also prayers and testimonies, and Richard Carl, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. House was blessed. Reports of the Southwestern Montana Conference were given in the afternoon. In the evening, Elder Ditton gave an illustrated lecture at the Baldwin home on "Life After Death."

MT. VERNON, OHIO.—Mary Elizabeth Boyer, wife of Oral W. Boyer, was baptized on Sunday, September 26, in the beautiful Kokosing River. Marcella June and Shirley Kaye, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Boyer, were blessed on the same day. The officiating ministers were Elders C. E. Armstrong, R. M. Gray, and R. J. Miller.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA.—At a recent service, the following men were ordained to the priesthood; Leslie Holmes, teacher; Glen Ford and Fred Leckband, deacons.

An Important New Volume in the PRIESTHOOD LIBRARY

WHAT TO DO WITH SUNDAY NIGHTS, to keep up interest, to promote attendance, and to make evening services contribute real values to the local congregation, are the purposes of this practical and informative manual by one of our successful pastors. Developed out of actual experience, this is not a book that "Smells of the desk," but one whose every suggestion has been tested in churches and with real people.

HERBERT MORGAN SCOTT has been the pastor of the congregation of the church at Des Moines, Iowa, since 1947. Previously he was pastor of the Denver congregation from 1942 to 1947, and of the Oklahoma City congregation from the time he accepted general church appointment in 1939 until 1942.

In church circles, he holds the office of high priest. He brings to his ministry an infectious enthusiasm, a vitality, and a love of people that wins friends wherever he goes.

Very few generalizations, and none of them vague ones, will be found in these pages. The author takes a specific program and situation, and works out a formula of procedure, with suggestions for mailing pieces, advertising, and bulletin board.

Pastors who need help will find this book one of the most useful we have ever published, full of the wisdom of experience, and having an understanding of the hearts of people that will win them to the church.

DEFINITION: GRACELAND

P. S.

Graceland is not just a college:
It is a laboratory
In living.

You suspect it
When everyone on the campus
Greets you with a smile.

You find it out in fellowship
When someone with an Alabama accent
Talks intimately with God.

It is a certainty
By Thanksgiving when three people
From Missouri, two from Iowa,
And one from Illinois
Ask you to stay with them
Since Maine is so far away.

There is friendship here,
And a friendly shoulder to share your burdens
With understanding
That prompts them to keep you too busy
For loneliness.

Now and then (Several hours a day, except Saturday And Sunday)
Faculty members hold classes.
And all the students go to Briggs
Or Marietta or the gym.
But classes are not the important Thing. You see

Graceland is not just a college:
It is a laboratory
In living.

* PRESIDENT GLEAZER

To the home of Graceland's president, Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., came recently a new baby girl, not named at the time this report was received. "We have enough for a mixed quartet now," says Ed, "two boys and two girls." Congratulations, best wishes, and a big welcome to the youngest Graceland prospect.

* STUDENT CENTER

The ground-breaking ceremony for the Memorial Student Center Building has been arranged in connection with the Home-coming, October 22-24. It will be located north and east of the Ad Building, in accordance with a comprehensive campus plan that is now being developed.

* FOOTBALL

Graceland and Drake University Junior Varsity are to play a benefit football game in Des Moines, Drake Stadium, where 30,000 people are expected to witness the contest sponsored by the Des Moines Kiwanis Club for a fund to erect a cerebral-palsy hospital building, on October 28. Big business concerns are giving full support, helping with expenses, and underwriting the cost.

The big Graceland band of sixty pieces will be marching, one of the best bands in this part of the country. William Graves is directing it.

* HOLLAND

Hendrik Compier of Holland arrived in Philadelphia, September 30, on the S.S. "Edam." Going directly to Graceland, he came on to the General Conference, where he made an appearance with other Graceland students. It was impossible for him to bring enough money with him on account of currency restrictions in his country. Responding to the needs imposed by this situation, Graceland young people are doing all they can in the way of personal sacrifice, to take care of scholarship, books, clothes, and cash needs.

Bill Stevens, a fine and popular student who died of peritonitis, has had a memorial scholarship raised by students in his memory. This will be lent to Brother Compier and will be a help. The Zion's League of Boston provided transportation from Philadelphia to Lamon.

Hendrick Compier is the first student to come from an enemy-occupied country since the close of the war. Now the spread of Graceland students transcends the old "Maine to California" slogan. This year it's "Holland to Australia."

* THANKS TO REPORTERS AND OTHERS

This is to express a genuine and sincere appreciation to those who acted as reporters and commentators for the "Daily Herald" of the recent General Conference. We recruited you for service through these columns. You did a fine piece of work, better than ever before. In the busy days of Conference, we did not get to see many of you at all. You made good use of the pressroom and handled the equipment well. Now we wish to say thanks through the same columns that called you to service.

* YOU CAN'T build the walls of Zion with rolling stones.

Graceland in Transition

The Graceland College Bulletin arrived the other day, its issue for "Fall, 1948" very attractive and full of plans and hopes. "Graceland in Transition," is the theme, illustrated by two young women, walking hand-in-hand against the background of Walker Hall. Styles change and clothes differ, but, as one observer declared, the Lord's plan of a girl has not changed much in a thousand years. Nor of boys, either. That is probably why the rousing tones of "Graceland Forever" sound just as good today as they did when the song was first composed. Faculty members grow a little older, some retire and are replaced by younger ones; new buildings appear on the campus, giving the veterans an antique air. But the student body is always young, always has about the same needs, and nearly always turns a good product back to the homes from whence the young people came.

The two girls are symbolic of many generations of young people at Graceland. They march in the unseen presence of those who have gone before, and whose hearts and memories are there beside them now, whenever they think of Graceland.

In the old days, we used to talk about "Greater Graceland." It is hardly possible that we really believed all the promising words we spoke. Yet the Graceland of today, if we could have foreseen it, would have appeared to be truly the "Greater Graceland" of our brightest dreams.

And Graceland is still building, still growing. The really "Greater Graceland" is in the future, yet to come. But it is being planned and fashioned by the hands of the builders today.

The Memorial Student Center, a building that has been needed so long and that will be used with much appreciation, occupies the prominent center spread in this issue of the Herald. It will be very modern in appearance, completely functional and utilitarian in design, with no material wasted on useless ornament. Yet it promises to be attractive and to make an agreeable contribution to the family of campus buildings.

The Center will be used for assemblies, religious services, and social functions which will take place in the big main room. Elsewhere in the building will be a kitchen, a place for lunches and refreshments, a bookstore, post office, rest and cloak rooms, a director's office, conference rooms, etc. Above all, it is a good place for students to go in cold weather for that important part of living and learning which lies beyond the realm of books.

The Center has been provided by the contributions of alumni, students, church members, and friends. An economical investment, it will pay fine dividends in the welfare, health, and happiness of the young people there.

Graceland College Day, this year, will fall on October 31. It is the day when church people and congregations everywhere make their gifts to Graceland. As we look forward to this event this year, let us remember that we are not giving to a set of buildings, nor to an institution, but to young people—our young people, who will return to serve when they have completed their training.

It is hardly possible, and it would not be fair, for anybody to think of what the church and its people have done for Graceland young people, without thinking at the same time of what generations of Graceland young people have done for the church and its people. All we need to do is to look at the leading quorums of the church and see the Graceland people there: three members of the presidency, one member of the Presiding Bishopric, eight members of the Quorum of Twelve. They are represented in the Seventy and in the Presidents of Seventy.

They are represented among the volunteer pastors, the church workers, the teachers, and in every line of endeavor in church work. Graceland, of course, doesn't ask all the credit. There are hundreds of fine and able people serving the church who never had the chance to go there. But Graceland would have helped them. And Graceland will help all young people who go there with a sincere desire to try and to work.

Your offerings on Graceland College Day this year will go to help finish the Memorial Student Center. This is distinctly a students' building. Your money is a direct gift to them. Not only to the present student body, but to all students who are to be there in years to come.

It is easier to give when one thinks of it in terms of human need, opportunity, and happiness. If not your son and daughter, it is the son and daughter of friends and neighbors who are there on the Campus this fall, needing the Student Center. If not this year, then it will be next year or the next. It is practically certain that sometime soon, young people that you know and care about will be there. Remember this, and give for them.

America is a strange place. Americans give more to liquor, more to tobacco, more to horse racing, more to gambling, more to killing themselves—many times over—than they give either to religion or education. Yet for the little we give, religion and education are the main things that give us any real benefit for our money. Let us remember that now.

The finest people in the world are those who love young things, and they express their love in many ways: in providing for the needs of body and mind, of spirit and character. Graceland is the expression of our love for the splendid young people of the church.

The Quetzal

BY PAUL M. HANSON

Quetzalcoatl, a noted god of the Aztecs, was inherited by them from the highly civilized Toltecs who had preceded them in Mexico. Quetzalcoatl is usually translated Feathered Snake, or Plumed Serpent, but without an understanding of the quetzal, such a literal translation obscures much of the beauty and richness of meaning in the name. The following is an exceptionally good description of the bird:

The Sacred Quetzal. Many bird lovers claim the quetzal is the most beautiful bird in the world. This is a great distinction when one considers how many handsomely plumaged birds there are. Jose Marti, the Cuban patriot and writer, described it in the following words: "It is a bird that gleams in the light, like the head of the hummingbird, which seems made of precious stones or iridescent jewels which in one light are topaz, in another opal, and in still another amethyst."

Once upon a time, the quetzal was called Quetzalcoatl after the long, lost god of the Mayas and Toltecs. This god taught his people that peace and kindness among themselves were far better than wars and conquest. He also taught that a knowledge of agriculture and offerings of grain, fruits, and perfumes was more acceptable to the gods than human sacrifice. So happiness and prosperity came to his people.

Because of the name it bore, the bird was considered sacred. When Guatemala won its independence, the bird was placed upon the new republic's coat of arms. Because the quetzal cannot live successfully in captivity, it was considered a fitting symbol for the country.

For many years the great beauty of these birds attracted the attention of collectors. Natives skillful in the use of blowguns killed great numbers of them. Now the birds are given legal protection.

The exquisitely colored quetzals have bodies about the size of a turtle dove. Their crested head and back of bright metallic green contrasts with the brilliant crimson breast and long, black wing plumes.

The quetzal cock has a strong, yellow bill. His head bears a royal crest of filamentous feathers. The middle wing-coverts are lengthened into graceful flowing plumes. The upper tail-coverts are very long, sometimes four times the length of the tail. The three central ones are black, the outer ones, white. They blend in color with the golden green of the throat and contrast vividly with the crimson breast, abdomen, and wing-coverts.

The quetzal's chief identification is his graceful tail of bluish-green feathers sweeping in a two-foot arc. Once these royal plumes were highly prized as ornaments to be worn by the high-ranking Mayan chiefs.

This tail is never suspended perpendicularly but held at an angle of as much as 15 to 20 degrees from a vertical line. Every so often it is flashed open and closed suddenly. This action causes the beautiful pendant tail-coverts to vibrate and display their exquisite colors.

The females are more modestly attired. They have a rounded crest. Their eyes are a soft yellowish-brown, and their bills almost ebony colored. They do not wear a train.

Quetzals have a habit of sitting almost motionless on a bough high up in some tree. They balance themselves expertly on their tiny feet. Their only movement is the turning of the head from side to side in a slow and dignified manner. But they are noisy, and their chattering voices betray their presence.

The quetzal is very fond of ripened fruit. When his keen eyes spot his favorite dish, he is off in a flash, his long tail plumes streaming straight behind like satin ribbons. After obtaining the coveted morsel with a sharp snip of the bill, the return trip is made in a straight line to the landing field which is the same bough and almost the same spot from which he took off.

The quetzal calls in low, softly whistled double notes, "whe-oo, whe-oo," which gradually become louder until they swell into a loud melodious note that is held

OFFICIAL Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Brother Hal E. Davenport, 2401 South Buckner Boulevard, Dallas, Texas, as bishop's agent of the Central Texas District, succeeding Brother Frank White, whose resignation has been received. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of October and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Hal E. Davenport at the above address.

We take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to Brother Frank White for the service he has rendered this office.

We have also appreciated the support given by the Saints to Brother White during the period of his service and take this opportunity of commending Brother Davenport to the Saints for their favorable consideration and support.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

for some time.

During February, March, and April, the quetzals are in full nuptial plumage. They are most colorful and resplendent at this time. The nest contains two greenish-blue eggs.

There are five other species of the genus which are closely related to the famous quetzal. They dwell in the forest regions from Venezuela through Colombia and Ecuador to Peru.—"Five Birds of Latin America," The Pan-American Union, Washington, D. C.

Quetzals are now to be seen in certain aviaries in the United States, where their native habitat is maintained.

How far to the Kingdom?

By L. Wayne Updike

The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies; but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.—Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5.

I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.—Romans 12: 1, 2.

ALITTLE OVER one hundred and eighteen years ago, the God of heaven moved among men to give organization to a movement which is destined to become his kingdom on earth. This was not the first time that he moved toward this purpose; but, by his grace and the co-operation of humanity, it will be the last time that such an organization will be necessary.

No, this is not the first time God has sought to have his kingdom built here on earth. He planned it before the world was made. He wrote the desire for the kingdom into the nature of the universe; he stamped it upon humanity. Throughout all the ages of time, he has encouraged men to respond to the upward pull which comes from him. It takes only a glance at the pages of the past to see that the desire of God has always been that men should be free and righteous and endowed with equal opportunities. His purpose has never wavered.

In years long since gone, he exerted this upward pull both upon humanity at large and upon specific individuals who have been instrumental in setting up, in some institutional way, an organization which purposes to do his will. This is far from the first time that the power of the Creator has brought men together that the kingdom of God might be. It is but a continuation of God's eternal purpose and another example of his effort to persuade men to work together with one another and with him for the accomplishment of the goals for which they were created.

Neither is this the first time that men have responded to God in a way that led to an organization specifically designed to accomplish his purpose. As we look backward through the centuries, we find that men who made themselves known have been those who, in the main, have made some contribution toward human progress. Men who have achieved fame have been those who made some contribution in such fields as political thought, medicine, government, or industry. And the Master of men was the greatest of all, because he made a great contribution in all of these fields. So do others share in his greatness as they make a contribution for the good of humanity in any field of human endeavor.

No, this isn't the first time that man has responded to the call of God. Many years ago, according to the scriptural account, Enoch responded to His call and, through his constant leadership and continuous co-operation with his Heavenly Father, led a people to build a society which was acceptable in heaven. In ancient America, a society was built, which, for several hundred years, made it possible for children to grow up in conditions of righteousness surrounded by every good influence of the day and protected from many of the evils which men now commonly know and seek to avoid. What a privilege it is for us to know that God has again set his hand to build upon the earth a society which will eventuate in the kingdom of God! What a privilege for us to be members of the organization already in existence which will eventuate in such a society! And what an ideal for man to hold today—to feel that he can be a part of the society which we shall call Zion, the demonstration phase of the kingdom!

NOT LONG AGO I was driving through Missouri eastward from Kansas City, when I saw a road sign which said "Kingdom City—45 miles." That set my mind going. Soon I saw another sign which said "Kingdom City—37 miles." I never found out what Kingdom City looked like, for the city of Columbia came first, and that was my destination. We Latter Day Saints have not yet built the kingdom because other goals came first. We accepted destinations short of the kingdom.

Since that day in April, one hundred and eighteen years ago, when the organization given in heaven was begun again upon the earth, we have devoted ourselves to a multitude of purposes, but this one great purpose has bound us together and carried us forward. Intermediate goals have been achieved. For a few years, it was our purpose to win many people to a belief in the new book which had come forth and its greater testimony of the Master. When we had gained acceptance of this marvelous record, we considered our work accomplished in the lives of many people, and thousands were gathered to the church who had little or no understanding of the requirements for kingdom-living. We desired the kingdom, but because of the lack of understanding, we devoted ourselves to the accomplishment of lesser goals, and we merely gathered numbers into the organization. This was good, but it was insufficient. Then after catastrophe came to the church, we spent many years looking and longing for a leader and attempting to prove that someone else was wrong. We sought to establish that the truth of the Restoration Movement was not to be found in Utah. We still had hopes of building the kingdom. This bound us together, but often we felt more successful at proving a point than in making steps toward the goal. We have always had the kingdom as our great ideal, but often we bent our real efforts to the accomplishment of some much lesser endeavor.

AFTER A FEW YEARS, a leader came to the church, a new prophet who continued and enlarged the organization which had begun thirty years before. For many years it was our purpose to re-establish ourselves in the center place, to perfect our organization, to stabilize our church, and to win new members. We endeavored to overcome persecution and misunderstanding. All of these purposes were good. They made their contribution to progress, but they diverted our attention from the building of a society which will eventuate in the kingdom of God. Our minds have not dwelt sufficiently on the greatness of the goal before us. We have not understood its requirements.

There came a time when problems of church government drew our attention. These problems, together with the heavy burden of debt, again set for us an intermediate or lesser goal. The accomplishment of these goals has been helpful. In achieving them, we found greater unity. The payment of the debt has placed us in a better position to go forward toward the kingdom. Yet for all the good that has been found in the unity which has resulted from a debt-paying program, we must realize that this problem has momentarily diverted us. Paying the debt has been good for the church, but paying a debt is not sufficient. How far is it to the kingdom? We hope that the payment of the debt will not find our saying, "We didn't get to the kingdom because a secondary destination came first." Let it never be forgotten that while there must be intermediate goals all along the way, the hope of God, the hope of this people, and the hope of the world lie in building a society which can demonstrate kingdom-quality living. The kingdom must become real. Understanding of the quality person that is required for the kingdom of God must become common. No lesser goal can, for long, be acceptable! No nearer destination can be our journey's end!

HOW FAR IS IT to the kingdom? Well, how do we measure distance? Sometimes we measure it in miles, sometimes in yards, sometimes in inches. Today we more often think in terms of time. Europe used to be many months away. Then it became weeks away. Soon it was a matter of days from America to Europe. Now it is merely hours. When I was walking to high school, it was six miles from home to school. Then we bought a "Model T," and, as you can well guess, we began to measure the distance in terms of flat tires and broken fan belts. How shall we measure the distance to the kingdom? After these many years of working toward the goal, and after the accomplishment of so many intermediate goals along the way, how shall we measure the distance that remains before us?

I find the answer to these questions made rather clear in the two passages of Scripture at the beginning of this article. No statement could be more concise and to the point than the one which says, "The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion's conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies." How long will it take for us to develop a people who are willing to "be not conformed to this world, but to be transformed by the renewing of their mind"? I never read this Scripture without thinking of the mind of Jesus and being thrilled by the way in which he could keep continually before him the fact that he was a native of heaven. When he was threatened with physical violence which ordinary man might have feared, his mind was so closely associated with the thoughts of the kingdom, of which he was inherently a part that he reminded his associates that he could summon a legion of angels if necessary. When he was questioned about his conduct, he was completely unembarrassed because he could truthfully say that he did always those things which were the will of his Father.

A HOUSE STANDS in one place, but a home might be stretched over many miles as the members have their minds centered on each other. So it was with Jesus. Having been transformed by the renewing of his mind, he was in constant companionship with his Heavenly Father. How far is it to the kingdom? The distance is measured in the number of days or hours or weeks that it will take for us to renew our minds to the point where we think in terms of the kingdom. We must learn to set intermediate goals in their proper places and hold before us continually the task of becoming kingdom-quality persons. The relationship of our Heavenly Father to us must be such that wherever we go and whatever activities our daily tasks require us to enter into, this relationship will not be broken.

I remember two young people who, for a short time at Graceland College, were good friends. The following year, the girl went away to another school, but the young man was back at Graceland. By correspondence, these two young people agreed that at a certain time of the day, they would pause for a moment and think of each other. The result is that these young people now have a happy home together. People who are working toward the kingdom and always have the goal before them stop to think about it every once in a while, and they always find God waiting. They talk over with him the requirements that must be met. Some missionaries have testified that their homes seem to reach beyond the land and sea, because at a certain time of day, or perhaps just on certain days, the husband and wife have agreed that they will think together and consider the same selection of Scripture. God is interested in the kingdom. The people must be interested in the kingdom. The distance from here to our goal is the time it takes for a group of people to be transformed by the renewing of their minds so that the intermediate goals of this world become of secondary importance. The fellowship of Saints of like mind can bridge the gaps of distance, race, or varying circumstances.

When we think about a kingdom-quality person, we refer to one who will take his part in the building of the kingdom much as a square-cut stone placed in a building. Every stone must bear its load. It is my understanding that in the building of Solomon's Temple a man was sent to the forests and to the quarries to prepare the materials for the temple. So accurate were his measurements, so careful was his work, that when these materials were brought together every piece fitted in its place. No nails were used, for they had no nails in those days. No nails were needed, for every part of the building performed its proper function. Every part carried its load. This could not have been a solid building if some of the blocks had not been square. It could not have been a stable building if there had been humps on some of the rocks, or the corners had been chipped off, or if some of the logs were not carefully trimmed. The kingdom of God cannot be a solid building unless the building blocks of which it is made are of the type which will stand up under pressure and stress. The character of every person must be carefully trimmed. How far is it to the kingdom? It is as far as the time it will take to make of us the kind of society in which everyone is doing his part and doing it well.

HOW FAR IS THE KINGDOM in terms of tolerance? How far in terms of faith? How far in terms of keeping the law? How far in terms of family solidarity? The matter of building the kingdom is a matter of forming our habits as well as adjusting our desires and ways of thinking. It is said when one is seeking to remove a bad habit, the best way is to substitute a good habit. The best way to form a good habit is to keep practicing the action that we want to make a habit. Authorities on the subject say that when one is attempting to do a certain act in a certain good way, he must do it repeatedly and with concentration. If he fails once, or if he does it in the wrong way once, he must perform this act three times correctly in order to restore himself to his former position with regard to the formation of the habit. Thus, one exercise of intolerance means that we must exercise tolerance three times in order to maintain our position. How many more times must we exercise tolerance to build the kingdom? How many times must we keep every phase of the law? How many times must we avoid saying or doing things that will "rock the boat" with regard to family relationships? How far, then, is the kingdom in terms of all the qualities of manhood or womanhood required to make kingdom-quality people?

Various people have taken the position that retardation of forward progress is caused by the fact that we have formed no economic arrangement in which material goods can be pooled. How far is the kingdom insofar as economic demonstration is concerned? Let me ask some questions. How far is it in terms of vocational proficiency? Of earning power? Of education? Of thrift? Of frugality? The demonstration phase of the kingdom awaits a people who not only have kept the law that has to do with the sacred treasury as mentioned in section 101 of the Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 11, but also have worked out their own inheritance and thus make the second treasury, the storehouse, possible (paragraph 12). There is no surplus unless the necessities of life are provided first. We often hear, "Zion is to be built by sacrifice." How can we make a sacrifice of something we don't have? Let everyone who is interested in the distance to the kingdom realize that there is tremendous spiritual import attached to the motives which impel him in economic affairs. What more noble desire can a man have than to provide his family with the necessities of life, which necessities are a part of his inheritance, and then to have a greater store that may be consecrated to the purpose that others also may live by reasonable standards? Surely the distance to the kingdom is measured in terms of not being conformed to this world in that we must buy what others buy, spend our money on the pastimes designed by others to fatten their purses at the sacrifice of our security, or set our standards of life beyond our means. Let those who long for the storehouse practice the principle of the storehouse in their own financial and spiritual affairs. Let their spending be according to their own needs, not according to the purchases made by others. Let those who would help seek to have that they might give. Be not con-

Chips or Two-by-Fours?

By Verda E. Bryant

GOD HAS GIVEN to each of us the same—twenty-four hours a day in association with one another—timber from which to build the kingdom. Will that timber be hewn into chips for our shoulders or two-by-fours to form the framework of Zion?

The building of Zion requires people to live and work together. No two persons are alike. Each has his own distinctive individuality—his own personality. Personality is the product of all previous events of a life. It is the total of a person's characteristics as they concern relations with other people.

Latter Day Saints, working closely together and united in the great kingdom-building cause, need to successfully merge their personalities. It is a task which requires tact, consideration, selflessness, perseverance, and the ability to give and take upon the part of everyone engaged in the work. In the process of merging the many personalities, there is the constant danger of motives being misinterpreted and feelings being trampled upon. Recognizing this fact, infinite wisdom and care should be exercised in the dealings of co-workers, as responsibility for happy relationships rests equally upon all.

THE SENSITIVE SOUL

Usually among any group of workers there is the sensitive soul who presents a problem both to himself and to the group. The man with a chip on his shoulder is probably the last person in the world to acknowledge that fact unless he actually faces himself squarely and analyzes his situation.

The highly sensitive person is easily and acutely affected by the slightest impression to his mind and feelings. It is almost as though he expected others to hurt him—as though he dared the chip to be knocked from his shoulder.

To the sensitive person, the slightest hint or the most casual comment may be interpreted to be a bombshell directed explicitly at him.

WOUNDED FEELINGS

What happens when his feelings are hurt? Immediately he feels squelched and discomfited. He carries with him the memory of every word of conversation, every inflection of voice, and he mulls them over and over in his mind. Like gossip, with each going over a little more is added. It festers until the pin prick has become as an angry boil. Resentment and desire for revenge reign supreme. The heart is sore, and there is an ache in the pit of the stomach. His personality begins to warp, and his inferiority complex bears him lower and lower until he gets only a worm's eye view of the situation. He has impulses, which if carried out, would bring him life-long regrets.

He may emerge from this abyss, but the chip is back on his shoulder, even more precariously balanced. A second hurt finds fertile soil, and a third also, until even a glance opens the wound, and the uncomfortable feeling grows until it seems as though his insides are tied in knots and the whole world is against him. He has let his chip become a stumbling block and then a wall which imprisons him. Unless he can extricate himself, he is of no use to himself or to society.

What happens to the one who is responsible for the catastrophe? Nine times out of ten he has gone on his way entirely unconscious of what he has done, for ninety per cent of the causes of hurt feelings are unintentional or are given with honest intent to help. (The other ten per cent are not worthy of consideration, for why give those who intend to hurt the satisfaction of succeeding?)

Actually, the sensitive man has entangled himself in a web of his own spinning. What can be done about such a situation?

FREE AGENCY

God has granted to man one thing which he gave to none other of his creations—the gift of free agency.

An apple seed, when planted, becomes an apple tree, producing fruit of the same variety as that from which the seed originated. Each mineral crystallizes in exactly the same form now as it did at the beginning of time. A dog is either thoroughbred or mongrel, with or without certain instincts, merely because of his creation.

But to man God has given the right of choice as to what he shall become. True, he cannot alter his height, his profile, nor the color of his hair; but the power is his to become what he chooses, to acquire whatever personality and traits of character he desires to possess.

Psychologists tell us that an adult is the product of the learning he received at his mother's knee (and certainly his childhood greatly influences the desires of his adulthood), but no one can deny that man is pretty much a product of his own desires in his quest for personal happiness. He is using his God-given free agency to make of himself what he really wants to become. Actually, man is what he is because he has not desired to be otherwise.

THE REMEDY

In the light of this fact, and using his free agency, the sensitive one has two choices. Either he may remain imprisoned, building his wall continually higher or he may face the situation squarely, discard his chip, pull himself free and make of himself a two-by-four—a pillar of strength—for the structure of Zion.

Acknowledgment of sensitivity—recognition of the chip on the shoulder—is the first step.

A direct right-about-face is the second step. A change of personality demands an abrupt swing of the pendulum to the opposite extreme, later to be allowed to swing to the normal position. He who has suffered the most has the farthest to go in the opposite direction.

To fortify himself in combating this personality trait, he should build for himself a shell which is impervious to any hurt, however pointed. This is a tough assignment, but it can be done. A firm determination to minimize, to overlook, and to brush aside each questionable dart will pay dividends in peace of mind, in more satisfactory relations with others.

HELPS FROM CRITICISM

When this has been accomplished and the darts have been satisfactorily deflected, he should recognize that what others say to and about him is often a good barometer as to his standing in and usefulness to society. The next step is to open the shell and take the barometer reading, keeping his fortification handy in case he needs it.

Gradually he will realize that he can emerge from this shell to find that remarks which would previously have sent him into the depths of despair now help him on toward the goal he has set for himself. Other people can now help him where previously their hands had been tied.

When he can emerge from his shell completely, he will find that when a hint is dropped, a bit of criticism offered, even a catty remark inflicted, he can either acknowledge or apparently ignore it, and store it away in his mind for future rational reference. It should be taken home, pondered over in the privacy of his own closet, prayed about, and evaluated to determine its worth to him.

Then, as the occasion demands, immediate application of the knowledge gained from the evaluation can be made; it can be pigeon-holed for easy future reference in the recesses of his mind; or it can be completely discarded with the same finality as the insurance folder which comes in the mail periodically.

The building of the kingdom of God on earth is a big undertaking. It is a task worthy of the best in every one of us. It is worthy of a determination to merge our personality with those of our co-workers to help bring about the best possible working force, recognizing that time out for quarrels and hurt feelings hampers construction and delays the coming of the Christ.

Let us use the timber at our disposal not for chips on the shoulder and stumbling blocks but for two-by-fours to build the towers of Zion.

Are You Busy Thinking?

By Merva Bird

YOU carry a picture in your mind of the kind of person you are. But does it agree with what other people see?

The other day I asked our three-year-old son to help his baby sister. He was close to her, and needed only to reach over and release her foot from where she had caught it in her car seat. As a rule, he is proud of his little sister and eager to help in any way, but on this occasion he only answered, "Not just now. I'm busy thinking."

H'm! Where could he have heard anything like that? (As if I didn't know.) Not the part about thinking, perhaps, but surely thinking is quite as important as cooking, scrubbing, ironing, washing diapers, or any of the million things that keep a mother too busy to respond to a little one's "unimportant" requests.

I wonder how many of us are so busy thinking that we're not doing anything. Maybe you think you're a pretty good person, doing everything you can in line with building the kingdom. You may be even quite complacent about your church attendance—or are you patting yourself on the back for that tithing report? How about looking beyond these particular "trees" and scanning the forest of possibilities?

You attend in a small branch, so you are quite familiar with certain ones you see each Sunday. As soon as the minister says, "Amen," you make a mad dash to meet the rest of your crowd and talk things over, just as if it had been months since you had seen each other. In the meantime, the new girl wearing the funny hat waits expectantly around the fringes of the group a few moments, then hurries out and down the steps, disappointed in the lack of welcome shown her. And that shabbily-dressed young man is left to walk away alone, wondering if Christ meant us to be so choosy in deciding who would be our neighbors when he commanded us to love them as ourselves.

You were perfectly right of course in refusing to offer the invocation for worship service. You'd just die if you were expected to stand up and pray in front of all these people! And when the pastor asked you to play the piano during the regular pianist's absence, you explained that you would be glad to if you could play as well as Miss, but since you couldn't, well, you hoped he understood. And so on.

Yes, you really intend to devote yourself to the building of the kingdom, as long as it doesn't require you to change your way of life. Well, it's time to wake up. It's time for you—and for me—to quit just thinking about it. Beginning today, let's do something that will help make Zion a reality.

Pastoral Ministry

By

CHARLES A. DAVIES

IF YOU ARE CONFRONTED with the question, "What are the main functions of the church ministers?" it might well be answered that there are two main tasks. First, Jesus himself set forth the following injunction: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Second, he gave the following just as emphatically; "Feed my sheep."

A Double Necessity

These two injunctions are of equal importance and cannot logically be separated from each other, or the very structure of the Church of Jesus Christ is in danger. It is noticeable that there is a tendency with different individuals and ministers to emphasize one of these functions more than the other; this is natural and desirable. Because God calls men to specific work in one of these two phases of church activity, it is obvious that some are more suited to one than they are to the other. It is also possible to have a measure of ability in both fields. God called some to be apostles and seventies, and he called some to be pastors and teachers, setting them to work in their individual sphere.

Early Evangelization

First of all, the major emphasis in the early Christian Church was upon evangelization in the field at large; later, if we study the Gospels and the other New Testament books, we observe a more definite emphasis upon those phases of ministry that are defined as pastoral in contrast to those termed missionary.

This development is also observable in the various sects that came into being after the reformation began to take place. It is natural and logical, even imperative, that the first effort of a movement necessarily be bent toward the gaining of a numerical strength adequate to take corporate action, and so the early days of sects are largely characterized by missionary zeal. Nor should this zeal ever be allowed to die. On the other hand, were the zeal to continue without adequate development of the body so organized in ability to give nurturing and pastoral care to those won to the movement, the sect would die because of lack of administrative stability. The gathering of the sheep into the fold is the fundamental and essential work, but to feed the sheep so gathered in is also important. In fact, it is an imperative.

Stability by Pastoralization

In the early days of the Restoration Movement, missionary zeal was extraordinary. Before the death of the first prophet-leader, it is estimated that there were gathered into the church nearly two hundred thousand souls. That proselyting outran the strength of the body to organize and stabilize is obvious, and probably this lack of integration as an organization contributed considerably to the tragedy that overtook the early church at the crisis precipitated by the martyrdom at Carthage. The teaching of the fundamentals of the gospel law, the consolidation of spiritual qualities in the lives of individual members, the understanding of the provisions of the Christian code of conduct are as important as the persuading of men and women to throw in their lot with the broad task of establishing the kingdom. In fact, no conversion can be of ultimate value to the church unless the pastoral arm of the church carries forward this work of integration and consolidation. This is true of the conversion of adults as well as children.

The Qualifications

Therefore, while there can never be any cessation of missionary zeal or activity, it is necessary to give much thought and attention to the feeding of the sheep. As this is adequately done, so shall the numerical gains of the missionaries be of maximum value, and in direct proportion only will this be so. It cannot be haphazard. It requires trained personnel. The educational advancement of the times demands that our pastoral ministers be in a position to minister on a skilled and intelligent basis. The modern church demands of its pastors that they be trained by theory and experience in many fields of organization and administration, that they have a broad knowledge of finance, and that they be in a position to assist youth in this age of changing standards. It demands that they have the ability to present their faith intelligently from the pulpit. That a man is a good preacher is a fundamental asset, but he must be able to do more than preach; he must be able to meet with people on a personal level, and this personal contact must be effective and vital.

The Deeper Challenge

In some years of pastoral ministry, I have found that presiding, preaching, and teaching in the congregations and groups of the church is not the most difficult part of a minister's work. In short, I have found that public ministry, though challenging to confidence and self-possession, if basic, is not conclusive. To be confronted by an individual with a pain in his soul as a result of some spiritual or moral problem is to me the most searching test of one's ability to act for the Master of men. This requires real love for mankind, sincerity, faith in God's children, and above all a deep spiritual understanding of the aberrations of human nature.

There is no greater calling in the world than to be a counselor and a physician to the suffering souls of mankind. There is no more exhilarating experience than to look over the contacts of years and see the constructive result of wholesome ministry in the growing souls of men and women. The calling of the medical practitioner is a noble one, but the calling of the physician to the soul is of infinitely greater challenge. We insist that one who ministers to men's bodies should be carefully trained in the matters of physical science. The work of ministering to the eternal part of a man is not to be treated with less importance. We should not take for granted that by some miraculous means, wisdom and knowledge will be vouchsafed to us, without research or effort, when the need arises. The whole tenor of the revelations of God to man is against this. In pastoral work, perhaps more than in any other, is it necessary to seek and to ask diligently that we might know and be ready when called upon to assist God's people in their spiritual growth and in the adjustment of their ills.

Preparation Vital

It is the happy privilege of some men to be gifted with an inborn sympathy and understanding of mankind's needs. Not all are born with natural gifts of understanding, but all whom God calls to these tasks have within them the ability to develop much knowledge and skill in helping people to a fuller expression of their lives in the kingdom of God. In fact, it is a minister's primary duty to know people. If he does not understand, in a measure, the human make-up, his work will be abortive. It matters not how much doctrine he may be able to expound or what prophecies he may be able to trace in fulfillment, if he does not seek and develop understanding in the field of human nature, he cannot give successful

I Blushed for Shame

I SAT AND STARED at the words. I wondered if there was something of the essence of eternal truth lying in their meaning—something that applied here, in 1948, as well as it had applied when they were written. It was about the time the Nephites were preparing to leave their native Jerusalem that the Prophet Habakkuk wrote:

The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him.

I thought of myself in a church service where I had come to worship—to meet the Master. I had come to church that morning in a reverent mood.

As I walked in, I noticed again how the unassuming texture of the walls helped the simple lines of the architecture to lead my attention forward until my gaze rested on the front of the room. There, past the beautiful flowers and between the parted drapes, stood a simple cross—only a simple cross, but what a wealth of the history and hope of humanity was expressed in it! What a story of love was in that small replica! Again I felt a sense of the great compassion of Christ, whose spirit was now so near. And then, softly at first as if it were very far away, strains of music filled the room. Calmly, yet insistently, it carried my inner soul along with it. As I followed the experience, I could feel that the great master who had written the music had been given insight into infinite goodness and had woven the expression of his vision so skillfully into the music that I was now sharing in the experience.

Back again my thoughts came to the words before me. Other Sundays I recalled on which I had entered the auditorium with noisy greetings to my neighbors. I had been so busy passing the time of day with them I had not even heard the organ playing. I hadn't stopped to think that some were trying to hear the still small voice of the Master. Only when the music stopped and the minister arose did I realize that the service had begun. I had missed the beginning and had kept others from sharing in the blessing of the prelude. I knew that the organist had spent hours preparing the interpretation of that great work of music, and I talked merrily right through it.

I looked again at the words in which I had been searching for divine truth:

The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him.

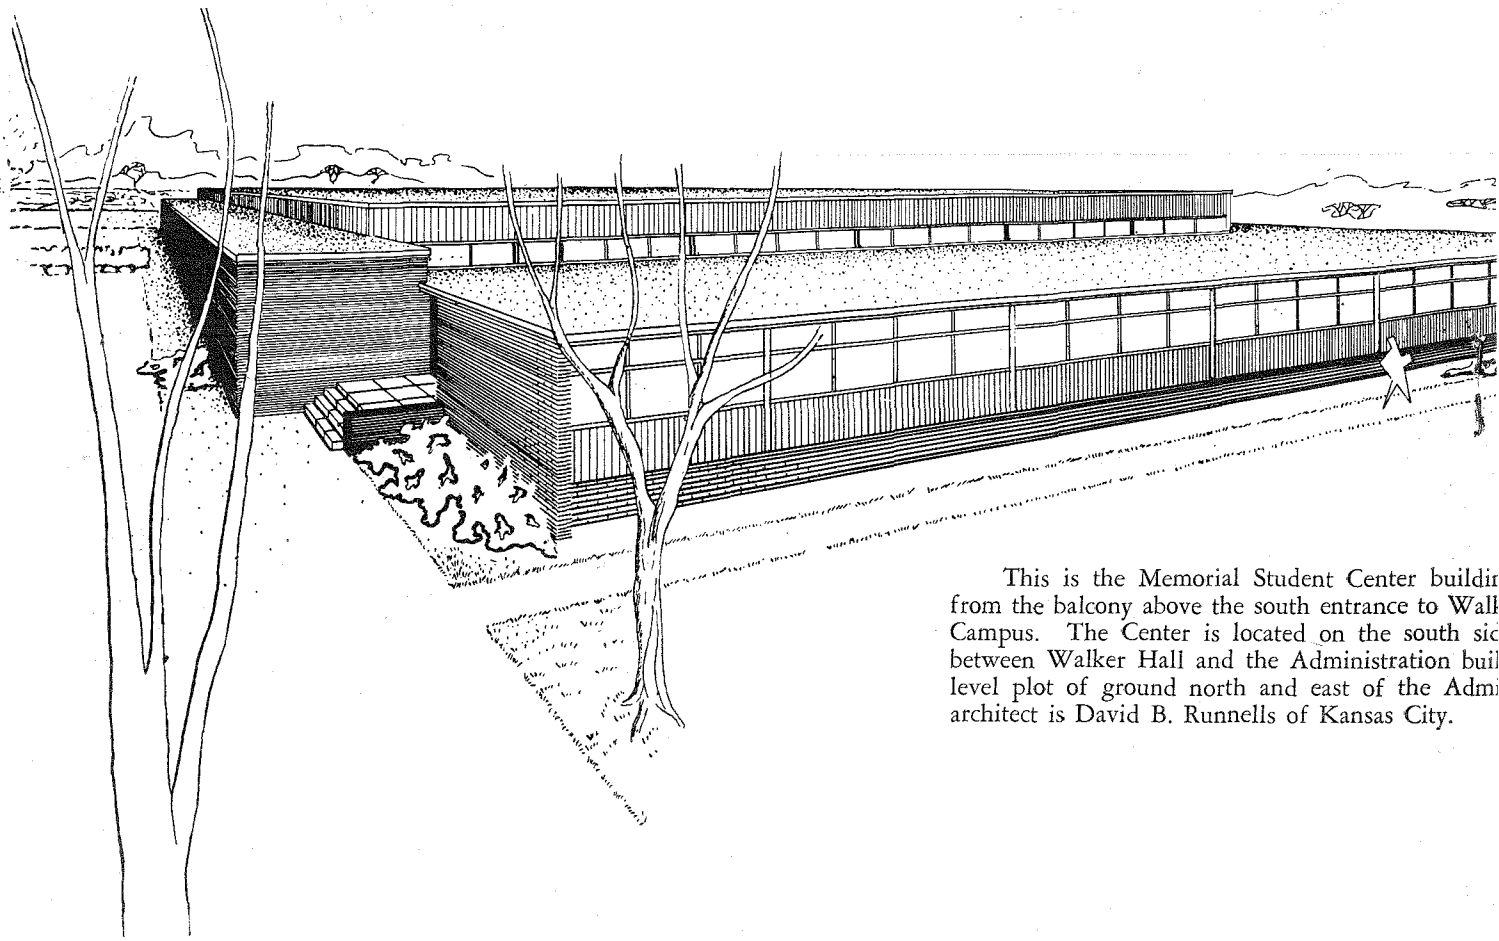

And I blushed for shame.

ministry to the sheep of the fold. Of all men, he must understand motives and learn to interpret the acts of men from this vantage point. He must, therefore, study Christ's way of dealing with men through the various examples of the New Testament. Such understanding brings love and sympathy and gentleness of judgment that are epitomized in the many sayings of the Master, who was able to make such fine distinction between ignorance and willfulness. This is demonstrated in his words, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

The church of today is in great need of shepherds—men who will prepare by study and training to give in the stead of the Master. In the search for knowledge and skill in this field, there are several sources. Naturally, communion with God through prayer is fundamental. There are many textbooks available today which give the research results of good men of science and religion. If, however, one would desire to emphasize one source above another in this field of written experience, there is no better text offered than the Holy Scriptures, and particularly the Gospels wherein is recorded the work and method of the Savior and Chief Shepherd. To all so called to labor, I would commend the study and analysis of the method and Spirit of the Master, Jesus Christ.

This is the Memorial Student Center building from the balcony above the south entrance to Walker Campus. The Center is located on the south side between Walker Hall and the Administration building level plot of ground north and east of the Administration building. The architect is David B. Runnells of Kansas City.

This Is Your Gift to Graceland

Here it is! This is the Memorial Student Center that you have been hearing about, the Center that you are building with the contributions you have given during the past two years on College Day.

The big news is that ground-breaking ceremonies will be held during the Graceland Home-coming this year, and the building will begin to rise on the campus this fall! (Home-coming is October 22, 23, and 24. The ceremony will be on October 24.) It is hoped that the Center will be completed in time for use by Graceland students in 1949.

The major portion of the building will be devoted to a large floor suitable for roller skating, popular student sport. But this building is flexible. That same floor will be used for all-school parties, for all-school assemblies, for church services. One day Graceland hopes to have a real auditorium with a sloping floor, and a dream stage suitable for the finest type of dramatic performances. But for the present, most of those auditorium activities which have been going on during these crowded years in the overworked gymnasium will move to the Center.

Off the main floor is a small stage. It will have facilities so that it can be used for the services mentioned above.

It's on the next part that the architect has really outdone himself. Running the full length of the main floor on one side is a low balcony, just three feet above the level of the main floor. It's a balcony all right, suitable for overflow crowds and overlooking the main auditorium portion, but it's also a corridor, and it's as a corridor that it will be used most of the time. From this corridor students will have access to the following facilities arranged in a line down one side of the Center: the lounge, which will double as a dining room for club banquets and other functions; the kitchen, adjacent to snack shop and lounge; the snack shop, with fountain, booths, and extra tables arrayed in an outdoor-terrace effect on the balcony corridor adjacent to the snack shop; the book-

A Thank You From Graceland

A beautiful new building—the Memorial Student Center—will begin to rise on the campus of Graceland College this fall.

To it will come young people from your branch, and the youth of many lands, for assemblies and chapel services, for worship and recreation, for school supplies and letters from home, for refreshments and student council meetings. This is their Center.

In it will be developed associations of lasting benefit in the lives of these young people and in the life of the church.

This is a "thank you" from the college of your church for your gift on College Days. Your offerings on that day, added to those of others, have made this Center possible.

Now, this year, your College Day gift will complete the building. The heart of this great Memorial Center will begin to beat with the rhythm of the footsteps of the youth of the church in the fall of 1949. A liberal gift from your heart this year—on College Day in your branch—will set that great heart to beating. Remember the youth of the church, and their Center, on this College Day—October 31.

Facts of Note About Graceland

Students from forty states and from England, Holland, Australia, Canada, Hawaii, and the Canal Zone are enrolled in Graceland's international student body this year.

This is Graceland's fifty-fourth year as the institution of higher learning of the church.

The faculty and staff at Graceland this year number fifty.

Graceland this year has an enrollment of five hundred fifty students.

Cost of tuition for a year at Graceland College is $160.

The average total cost for a student attending Graceland this year will be $630, including tuition, matriculation fee, activity fee, books, board and room.

Out of fifty-two Sundays this year, ONE is for Graceland—College Day on October 31.

Over 4,000 living persons are former students of Graceland College.

Graceland owns and operates two farms of more than 300 acres adjacent to the campus.

Life membership in the Graceland College Alumni Association costs $20.

store, with latest ideas for dispensing books and supplies; and the post office where the student will get his mail.

Near the main entrance to the Center, near the right on the drawing, is the office of the activities' director. In that same area are men's and women's rest rooms, cloak-rooms, and a conference room suitable for meetings of the Student Council and other student groups.

This is building number three in an expansion program at Graceland designed to make it possible for our church college to meet the needs of larger enrollment and modern times. Number one was Kelley Hall completed last year. Number two is a new heating plant and shops building now under construction. It is expected that number four will be a new dormitory for men.

All of these and other contemplated structures will be located in accordance with a comprehensive campus plan now being developed with the co-operation of architect-planner David B. Runnells of Kansas City, who designed the Memorial Student Center.

The Friendly Visitor

By MRS. CLARENCE BOHALL

“I WISH I might acquire the art of friendly visiting, for I do have the desire to become active in this work,” is the desire of many of our women. In many of our branches, friendly visiting is largely the work of women; all women are called to be friendly. They do not feel that this service takes the place of priesthood visiting—they only hope to promote good feeling and a co-operative spirit among neighbors, or to assist the priesthood in preparing an opening for their visits. In most of our women’s organizations, there is an established office of friendly visitor. This officer has a tremendous task. She must realize the need of going into homes and sharing in some of the following ways.

The Need of Friendly Visiting

1. To help and cheer in cases of illness.
2. To help and cheer in cases of disaster.
3. To help and cheer shut-ins and elderly people.
4. To help and cheer newcomers to the community.
5. To help and comfort in times of sorrow or death.
6. To help and comfort in times of financial distress.
7. To share in youth problems and activities.
8. To help and encourage inactive and neglected people.
9. To extend invitations to all activities.
10. To encourage and support officials in charge.
11. To show interest in new brides, new babies, and other good fortune.
12. To share in other’s time of celebration, anniversaries, etc.

13. To help open opportunity for priesthood visits.

Again I call to your attention that friendly visiting does not take the form of official priesthood visiting. We, as friendly visitors, may only kindly suggest to the sick: “Perhaps you would like the elders to come”; or to the shut-in: “Perhaps you would like the Communion brought to your home”; or to the needy: “The bishop would be glad to advise you.” Or we can report such cases to the proper priesthood authority, thus tying our efforts with those of the priesthood. Then, as God’s handmaidens, we can labor with our hands by sewing, cooking, or giving in the homes of our neighbors.

The Value of Friendly Visiting

If friendly visiting is properly accomplished, the value of our efforts is easily seen, for in the act of friendly visiting—

1. We broaden our friendships and try to understand people; our hearts are softened—in short, love grows.
2. We learn of many good works going on among our neighbors that we otherwise would fail to see.
3. We have the satisfaction of knowing that our neighbor’s needs have been met.
4. We have helped pave the way for the priesthood visit to follow.
5. We gain more than we give in the pure joy of sharing with and serving others.

A Personal Testimony

This work, if well done, is a full-time job in any branch. One must be devoted to Zion-building and consecrated in heart to accomplish such a work. I have gone through times when it seemed my home has required all of my twenty-four hours a day, and I have been determined to catch up those daily tasks, which, to a homemaker, seem so very important. (And I do realize that a smooth-running home is a blessing in Zion.) But, there have been days when I have forced myself out of my little shell to go into homes to visit a shut-in, an elderly person, or discouraged soul, to return feeling so strengthened I could “move mountains.” Often I can “get at” the cupboard that needs cleaning or some such task with a new zeal and accomplish my homework in half the time. It brought a new mental and spiritual uplift. It is psychologically true that our minds are rested by such diversions, and short rests “set up” speed in any task. Often upon returning, I have found that the chores in my home which seemed so demanding became trivial, and my sense of values changed. My attention had been turned to someone else’s needs rather than my own trivial cares. Then, in ministering to the spiritual or physical needs of others, my spiritual growth began. My challenge is, do not allow yourself to become too “wrapped up” in your own home; it is not good for you, nor your family, nor your neighbor. Feel it your responsibility to do some friendly visiting every day, whether it be over the back yard fence, in the market, or in the home. Take advantage of any opportunity to build friendships.

Suggestions for the Friendly Visitor

The following are some suggestions which we, in our group organization, have adopted as qualities of a good friendly visitor. Although we have one in charge of friendly visiting, we all feel the responsibility of acquiring these qualities and taking upon us the work and the joy of friendly visiting.

a home column feature

1. Train yourself to love everyone.
2. Be cheerful; smile often.
3. Be courteous, sincere, and encouraging.
4. Be interested in others and visit on their level.
5. Be a good listener and encourage others to conversation.
6. Try to see other's point of view and respect their opinion.
7. Assume your friend is of good character.
8. Cause others to feel very capable, and leave them feeling much is expected of them.
9. Always leave a challenge for well-doing.
10. Call your friends by name.
11. Visit homes often, staying not too long at a time.

Suggested Activities for the Friendly Visitor

1. Send a letter, clipping, greeting, or gift to—
 - an old friend
 - a new friend
 - a casual acquaintance
 - an elderly person
 - a lonely person
 - a young person
 - to a person of importance
2. Extend an invitation to some of the above acquaintances for dinner, an outing, or some other occasion.
3. Practice using encouraging words upon each member of the family.
4. Be cheerful in your own home.
5. Use your telephone as a mode of inviting, cheering, and encouraging your neighbors.
6. Do something each day toward friendly visiting.

Your time is limited, but the distance you may go is not.—Saints' Herald, cover 10-12-40.

It's "On the Record"

By FLOY LORENE BENNETT

Music for Quiet Listening

IT IS UNFORTUNATE that many "adult" records suitable for children are so often overlooked, and children are thereby robbed of some of the most pleasurable and stimulating experiences in music. If these recordings were placed in albums decorated to attract the child's eye, more parents might become aware of their suitability for children's listening pleasure. One of the finest of many records of this type is a collection (V-20164) of excellent musical compositions played by various single instruments. There is no better way, short of seeing them played, of acquainting the child with the various instruments than by using this type of record. The music is of the best, and the artists are adequate for intelligent interpretation of the composition as well as capable of bringing out the finer tone qualities of the instruments. On this particular record we have "Badinage," Herbert (piccolo); "Legend of the Bells," Planquette (bells); "Humoresque," Dvorak (violin); "Scherzo" from Third Symphony, Beethoven (bassoon); "Minuet," Paderewski (viola); "Gavotte," Popper (violin); "Minuet," Beethoven (cornet); and "Omaha Indian Game Song," Kinsella (flute-orchestra). Several very short selections on one record is a distinct advantage, since the short attention span of the child is more satisfactorily accommodated by short numbers.

Let us be careful lest we continually "play down" to our children. They are often capable of enjoying the finer things of so-called adult level, and they certainly should be exposed to it often, especially in its more simplified forms.

Tales of Uncle Remus (C-40)

The creator of Uncle Remus, Joel Chandler Harris, was born on a farm in Georgia. The fame of the beloved character is legendary. As a journalist on an Atlanta newspaper, Mr. Harris contributed dialect stories of his own signed "Uncle Remus." These stories attracted national attention. Harris himself said of Uncle Remus, "He was not an invention of my own, but a human syndicate . . . of three or four old darkies whom I had known. I just walloped them all together into one person and called him Uncle Remus. You must remember that sometimes the Negro is a genuine and original philosopher."

The quaint humor, the kindly philosophy, the native sweetness of Uncle Remus, and his affectionate relationship with the Little Boy all unite to lift these animal folk tales and plantation sketches into the realm of real art. Walt Disney has adapted many of these stories to the screen in "Song of the South," and this three-record album is a collection of some of the most lovable stories and anecdotes used in the motion picture. "Brer Rabbit and the Tar Baby," "The Laughing Place," and "Running Away" furnish real enchantment for the child, and the historical and artistic values of the folk stories of a truly philosophical people are very entertaining and worth-while.

"Rock-a-bye Parade" and "Ducklings on Parade"

One of the most appealing songs for children, especially at bedtime, is the "Rock-a-bye Parade" (RCA Victor, Y16) sung by Vaughn de Leath, with instrumental accompaniment. The tune is simple, and the rhythm varied from quick and lively to slow and soothing. The words are simple, too. They are easily un-

The Art of Worship

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman, Instructor
Friday, October 8, 1948

In further elaboration upon the subject of the ordinances of the church, Apostle Oakman explained, "It is essential that the priesthood see in the ordinances of the church, the mechanics of operation by which men draw near to God; it is further necessary for priesthood to understand that in the spiritual significance of the ordinances men receive the ministration of salvation." He said that salvation can be the result of no accident; it is by design that a benevolent Father affords means by which men may subject themselves to him and to his laws.

The ordinances must be applied and performed in accordance with the purpose of Deity in providing them. God has specific and sacred motives for their use, and his servants are required to minister for him accordingly. "We stray from the ordinances when we are careless about the spirit in which we administer them. The ordinances must be administered in accordance with the law, which is clear and complete upon the subject, the Three Books of Scripture establishing the boundaries and objectives of their use."

Discussing the ordinance of administration to the sick, Apostle Oakman warned the eldership that administration must be given with understanding of what is being done. The one officiating must take heed lest he, in his compassion, seeks to impose upon God his will or the will of the one receiving administration. The healing of the mind and of the spirit is God's primary desire; the comfort of the body is not more important than the salvation of the soul. "We believe that we are called and ordained for the purpose of utilizing the ordinances of the gospel for the primary purpose of ministering salvation to the souls of men. The welfare of the physical body, which is unquestionably important to the scheme of things, is yet only contributory and incidental to salvation. Ordinances are set in the church for purposes of salvation and are to be used to that end. It is one thing to have a God; it is quite another thing to belong to God."

"The ordinances," declared Apostle Oakman, "are the means by which the power of God may be manifest in our lives. God founded his plan of redemption upon the power and efficacy of the ordinances."

Saturday, October 9, 1948

Summarizing previous lectures of the week and drawing conclusions for guidance, Apostle Oakman in this final lecture developed his theme, "The Art of Worship." He deplored those pastors who, in their ministrations, do not plan but expect God to supply their need at the moment. It is as if they came to church with an empty pail and expected God to fill it with life-giving water. Such pastors stand before the members with empty hands—with empty minds and hearts—and expect God to fill the people. Theirs is a mistaken conception, and such are admonished to plan with God, to look ahead, to anticipate. Apostle Oakman called for a pastoral ministry with vision.

"The work of the church will never be successful until the channel between heaven and earth functions more perfectly," he advised. "We understand this channel to be priesthood and inspiration. Our ministry is often stricken with poverty for want of planning. We should never deliver a sermon or offer other ministry with empty hand or heart or mind."

"We must fit into the divine scheme of things. Ours must be a process of progressive adjustment. We did not create the stars we observe in their heavenly courses. We only adjust the astronomical mechanism so as to see and study them. Similarly, we did not originate truth or the Spirit of God. It is our part to so adjust our faculties that we see and comprehend, and to so discipline and sanctify ourselves that we are fit and capable of acceptable response. We cannot see God with the natural eye. Only as we become spiritual and gain spiritual sight, do we see God."

Regretfully recalling that members at times give way to unwise criticism—criticising a sermon, a solo, a worship service, or a participant—Brother Oakman made a plea for charity. The priesthood and members alike are urged to manifest the spirit of charity. The members must be warned against critical gossip at home and elsewhere. Such conduct is destructive and does not manifest the Spirit of God. "If someone is failing in some respect," Brother Oakman advised, "do not in your speech abuse him; rather, support and help him in the spirit of the Christ. Be affirmative. Support instead of hindering. Be for things."

"Our ruling passion is our god, whether it be money or appetite, idle pleasure or other things. But God and his projected kingdom must become our ruling passion."

"Intelligent preparation must precede our worship of and communication with God. The six principles of the gospel are our avenue of approach. I think that the expression of repentance should have a part in our worship whether it be by solo, hymn, prayer, Scripture, or sermon. True repentance brings baptism, and baptism must be a continuing process of immersion in the divine purpose."

In conclusion, Brother Oakman remarked, "Some men teach that all men are God's children. This is not so; men become God's children only as they are born in Jesus Christ. God will not condone sin. Men must be born of God."

"If we do not lead men and women into the presence of Almighty God, we fall short of our calling. Our members should leave our services, groaning in spirit with a desire to serve. If we do this, we share with God in his divine purpose."

General Zion's League Council Meeting

Thursday, October 7

This was "workshop day" with the members of the General Zion's League Council being divided into the four League Commissions of Worship, Study, Recreation, and Service, and subdivided into smaller working commissions of 6 to 10 members, each with the assignment to develop an evening program in its field for a local Zion's League meeting.

The text for the assignment was the new Zion's League Annual Number Two on the "Life and Ministry of Christ." Program suggestions for the month of November with the theme, "Setting the Stage," were developed into a complete evening's program by each of the acting commissions.

With time pressing them, one or more programs were then placed on the blackboard for the study, suggestion, and criticism of all the groups in the larger commission.

In this manner, such important considerations as the order of a Zion's League meeting were considered along with the place in the League of both short- and long-range planning and the relation of League programs to the branch program.

Attention was given that representatives of small Leagues (less than twelve members) and of larger Leagues (over twelve members) were segregated so they might give maximum consideration to the distinct problems which arise as the result of the difference in numbers.

In preparation for the final discussions of the four commissions on Friday, from which are to come reports to the general council on Saturday, findings committees have been named to cull out of the discussions those experiences and recommendations worthy of being recorded.

Members of the findings committees reported to date are those of the worship commission, Wanola Fouts, New Albany, Indiana; Margaret McDonald, Lamoni Stake; and Joe Simpson, Joplin, Missouri, for Recreation.

Genuine enthusiasm has been generated in the small commissions as they use the Zion's League Annual in planning meetings on the commission basis, many of them having the experience for the first time. All credit is due the commission leaders who volunteered to lead these groups and to share with them the rich experience and fun which have been theirs in League work.

CARL MESLE, Reporter.

Friday, October 8, 1948

The four commission groups continued their deliberations separately for the third and last time before they reunite on Saturday for reports and findings.

Their charge was to give thought and to draw up their recommendations on the following points:

1. The value of the Zion's League Annual to their particular commission.
2. Future needs, such as
 - a. Themes for new annuals
 - b. Place of the Handbook
 - c. A new church-wide League project

Out of these discussions and the work of the previous two days, the findings committees were asked to glean the best experiences and the recommendations for presentation to the whole council on Saturday in short reports and to write them up for submission to the Department of Religious Education for its use and possible publication in Guide-Lines.

Each commission leader approached the hour's work in his own way. One of the most interesting approaches was that of the worship committee which used a wire recorder to take down the accounts of successful League Worship Services and the discussion which followed on the points of the day.

The service commission found it necessary to take some time to review the organization and operation of the commission plan because of the great numbers of questions asked by those unfamiliar with it. This group, because of its responsibility for promoting whatever church-wide project might be established to correspond to Missions Abroad, waged a lively discussion on possible future projects. One idea that generated enthusiasm was that of the whole Zion's League sponsoring students from each mission abroad to Graceland College.

The findings committee named to report for this group, in addition to the commission leaders, included the following: Tom Wilson, Boise, Idaho, Idaho District Youth Leader; Mary Lee Guilbert, San Jose, California, Northern California District Zion's League President; and L. M. Cottew, Essex, Iowa, Pastor of Shenandoah Branch, Southwestern Iowa District.

The study committee drew on the experiences of several Leagues which reported success in summer study sessions featuring outstanding speakers who dealt with current problems facing the young people of the church. This group evidenced a strong feeling toward a church-wide project based on stewardship in its fullest sense—beyond simply keeping the law. Their findings committee includes: Miss Etelka White, West Toledo, Ohio; Dick Cheville, Lamoni, Iowa; Beverly Grant, Windsor, Ontario; and Mrs. Mamie Neil, Frazee, Minn.

The recreation commission found a general need to tie recreational activities to the monthly themes of the League and branch. Their findings committee members are: Aleah Koury, Toronto, Ontario; Mrs. Kenneth E. Stobaugh, Goodland, Kansas; Jean Powell, Sacramento, California; Herb Tourville, St. Louis, Missouri; Casimir M. Nikel, Cleveland, Ohio, and Jerry Glandon, Columbus, Ohio.

Saturday, October 9, 1948

The General Zion's League Council met on Saturday in the Stone Church annex for its final session under the direction of Dr. F. M. McDowell, John Darling, and Carl Mesle.

Four hundred Zion's Leaguers and young people's leaders packed the annex and rocked its walls with songs led by Dr. Roy Cheville of Graceland College.

Reports of the findings committees of each of the commissions were presented verbally to the group by the following representatives:

- Worship—Charles Kornman.
- Study—Sadi Anka Moon.
- Recreation—Russ Pearson.
- Service—Bernie Fleeharty.

"The purpose of worship is to move the worshiper toward God," began the report of Charles Kornman who stated that the worship materials of the Zion's League Annuals were found to be excellent. Recommendations were made that more discussion programs be included in future Annuals along with more material on the basic doctrine of the church.

Sadi Anka Moon said, "We want our people to have the light of knowledge in their eyes." Her committee also reported a need for more doctrine in the League Annual with suggestions for themes on the Book of Mormon and missionary materials with definite suggestions on how and when to use them. A need was expressed for materials on a full life's stewardship. Materials available in film strips and other visual aids were suggested to the Leagues. A request was made for Leagues to submit accounts of their successful study experiences for inclusion in the Saints' Herald or in Guide-Lines.

The importance of providing a positive recreational program rather than emphasizing recreational "don'ts" was stressed by Russ Pearson who also reported finding an almost universal lack of adequate facilities for recreational activities inside and outside our church buildings.

The publishing of at least three more annuals was recommended by Miss Bernie Fleeharty of the service commission, with the suggestion that they be complete in themselves, though inter-related. A need for more service materials for the smaller Leagues was reported with emphasis in the new annuals on basic beliefs and stewardship helps. Particular stress was placed on the need for training local leadership in the use of the annual and the commission plan.

These reports will be published in full in Guide-Lines for January, 1949.

Dr. F. M. McDowell gave the latest report on the Missions Abroad Fund with the following figures:

FINAL MISSIONS ABROAD REPORT
Total turned in and reported as of October 9, 1948.....	$17,286.29
Total pledged to be turned in as of October 1, 1948, but still in transit or unposted..	1,202.20
<hr/>
TOTAL MISSIONS ABROAD
FUND raised by the Zion's Leagues of the Church to date	$18,488.49

A request for the nomination of a Zion's Leaguer to represent the group in presenting the fund to the Bishop and in conducting the unveiling of the bust of former President Frederick Madison Smith before the General Conference resulted in three names: Dick Cheville, Bernie Fleeharty, and Charles Kornman. Dick Cheville was elected. Named to represent the countries which had contributed to the fund were: Ivan Miller, Canada; Beryl Judd, Australia; Merle North, England; and Charles Kramer, Hawaii.

A new church-wide Zion's League project was then submitted to the Council by Carl Mesle, who acted as spokesman for a committee of the following who had taken the recommendations of all the commissions and developed the new project:

Dorothy Sheffer of Detroit District, Leroy Burdick of Northern California, Richard Cheville of Lamoni Stake, Roy Cheville of Graceland College, and F. M. McDowell, John Darling, Russ Pearson, Glen Stewart, and Sadi Anka Moon, all of Independence. Mrs. Myrtle Burdick of Sacramento, California, acted as secretary.

Announcement was made of young people's prayer service to be held in the Stone Church annex at 7:30 o'clock, Sunday morning, and the meeting was adjourned with the singing of Hymn No. 410, "In the Light," and with the benediction by Dr. F. M. McDowell.

Women's Work in the Branch

Wednesday, October 6, 1948

Miss B. Mildred Nelson of the Nutrition Extension Service of Iowa State University, Ames, Iowa, spoke on the subject, "Worthy Conservations," at the women's class on Wednesday. She evaluated the family unit as most worthy of conservation and enumerated a few of the things which must be conserved if this unit is to fulfill a useful purpose. A high quality of spirituality and living must be developed if the "sweet symphony of abundant living" is attained. Time must be conserved, also, and should not be expended on too many meetings—better a few meetings of high quality than many mediocre ones. They should be planned, and those who attend should go prepared to contribute as well as receive. Bazaars and dinners are worthwhile only if they increase fellowship, knit more closely together those who prepare them, and are rich in spiritual food. Women cannot live by bread alone any more than men can.

Miss Nelson gave the following tips on the saving of time in doing household tasks: (1) Wash dishes once a day. (2) Prepare vegetables with a good scrubbing and little use of the knife. (3) Use a pressure saucepan for quick cooking. (4) Use a chopping board and sharp knife to cut up vegetables. (5) Sit down each morning and plan the day's activities.

Good housekeeping, she said, is important, but a woman's first duty is to be a good homemaker. For the conserving of energy, she suggested that all work be done on the same floor if possible—going up and down steps takes two to four times as much energy as walking on the level. Kitchen equipment should be arranged so that tasks progress easily. Many things can be done just as well while sitting as standing. This will leave more energy for family activities in the evening. A reserve of energy can be built up by proper diet (as outlined in section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants), and sufficient sleep.

Miss Nelson concluded her talk by recommending the material made available by the extension service.—MRS. CHARLES V. GRAHAM, Reporter.

Thursday, October 7, 1948

Mrs. T. B. Franklin, home decoration artist, was guest speaker at the women's class on Thursday. She gave many helpful hints on how to use old articles and make the things on hand more attractive. Her audience watched with awe while she produced miraculous changes with a little paint, rubbing, and varnishing. A few of the suggestions she gave were: refinish an old picture frame and make a shadow box to display prints and flowers; dip old curtains in paint and drape to hang; cover old chests with chintz, secure the top with brass tacks, and touch up with stain-finish varnish; paint and decorate a galvanized pail for a waste basket. Those who attended the class left with many practical ideas for home beautification.—MRS. CHARLES V. GRAHAM, Reporter.

Friday, October 8, 1948

Mrs. C. A. Skinner and Mrs. Roscoe E. Davey discussed "Introducing the Church to Our Friends," and the Independence program of friendly visiting. Mrs. Skinner explained the organization in Independence, the preparation of the booklet, "Points of Interest," to be used in the homes, and introduced a playlet on the technique of visiting presented by the Independence Daughters of Zion. Mrs. Davey's talk, "The Art of Friendly Visiting," contained many helps for one serving in this capacity. These included (1) making prayerful preparation, (2) listening more than talking, (3) making visits at opportune times, (4) keeping visits brief, (5) not putting off until tomorrow what can be done today, (6) not arguing, (7) being patient and understanding, developing leading qualities rather than pushing qualities, (8) being truly converted and enthusiastic, (9) sticking to it, and (10) studying the prospect and establishing common ground. She closed by saying, "Temper visiting with wisdom, and you will be effective in your desire to help in the evangelizing of the world."—MRS. CHARLES V. GRAHAM, Reporter.

Junior Church

"What Is Worship?"

Mrs. Hattie Bell, Instructor

Preparation is necessary to create an attitude for worship in junior church. Good results of the service depend upon a carefully selected theme, appropriate settings and music, and good leadership. Repetition of the theme with different approaches and settings helps make a fixation in the mind of children and is therefore remembered longer.

It is important that children have a comfortable, attractive atmosphere with no distractions. The entire room should be ready and artistically arranged before the children arrive. Complete quiet during the service is necessary for meditation.

The attitude of the leader is influential in attaining a good religious experience. He must have the feeling that he is helping youth to grow and develop spiritually.

Home life can play a large part in this training. Leaders should leave no stone unturned to work in and visit parents who are usually co-operative if approached in a friendly way.

Worship is communion with God. It develops action in the church and should be carried over into other experiences in daily living. If we commune with God in humility and reverence, we will have his help in the guidance of children.

Thursday, October 7

Worship is an emotion touched by direct thinking. In planning this type of program for junior church, a good long-time plan may be consistently made and then broken down into three-month periods which in turn are broken down into individual programs that occur during the month.

Repetition of the theme during the three-month period, with different approaches and settings, but retaining the same hymns, will help children remember important points in the program. If the theme, "Stewardship," is used, it may be divided up into "Stewardship of Time," "Stewardship of Money," "Stewardship of Talent," and "Stewardship of Opportunity."

As many children as possible should be used in carrying out the service, but they should know what they are to do and do it well. This will help the meeting have an orderly, reverent procedure.

An important thing for leaders to remember is to have several things to fall back on in case the planned program does not bring the results you are working for. From the following books can be found good material to use in this connection:

Use of the Bible, Smithers; As Children Worship, Perkins; Junior Worship, Demerist. MARIE FAUCETT, Reporter.

USE OF MUSIC

Music leads us into moods according to its musical content, therefore hymns and preludes should be played and sung in the spirit of worship. Use the best pianist available and have music suitable to the service. This part of the program is not for entertainment. It is the setting which directs emotional tone and awakens appreciation for spiritual inspiration and guidance. By using discrimination in the selection of music, it is possible to develop in youth good habits of meditation.

USE OF THE BIBLE

The Bible is the best guide and inspiration in the age-long quest for God and for the meaning and justification of life. It shows the joys of righteousness and the sadness and despair of sin. It holds the record of Jesus' life and teachings and has helped every age to voice in beautiful and matchless language the devotional outpourings of human heart. Do not forget that the Bible is an adult book and must be interpreted according to children's understanding and experiences. In junior church, it is used to guide growing lives. Scripture used should add to the beauty and reverence of the service. It should emphasize the theme and draw the children's thoughts together. It also adds to the number who can participate in the service.

"Planning Programs"

Mrs. Hattie K. Bell, Instructor

Friday, October 8, 1948

It was Dr. F. M. McDowell who said "we need to rethink these precious three hours used for morning services." We need to use every available minute and opportunity to the best possible advantage. Well-planned, printed programs are therefore essential to get the most from these meetings. Wiggly, inattentive children are an indication that the material being used is uninteresting to them.

Good services must be thoroughly prepared and given in a concrete manner. The overuse of trite and meaningless statements should be eliminated. If a worship center is used, it should be simple, in harmony with the theme, and referred to often throughout the meeting. It should not be cluttered up with unnecessary articles, and leaders should avoid standing in front of it during the service.

To have the service go smoothly, the teachers, leaders, and other participants in the service should get together for prayer before the meeting begins. This will help those officiating to get into the mood of the service.

Building up a junior church library which includes many types of hymns, setting, poems, and short stories is helpful in planning effective programs. A good magazine for this use is Children's Religion, published by Pilgrim Press, 19 South LaSalle, Chicago, Illinois.

The Children's Division in the Church School

Ruth McFarlane, Instructor

Thursday, October 7, 1948

Sister Lea Black addressed the class this morning on "Drama in the Church School."

Sister Black pointed out that the production of a successful play is not just an accident. First, careful selection of the play is important to be sure that it is appropriate and that it can be correctly cast. Second, the casting must be carefully done to be sure that the audience can believe the characters in the parts they play.

The director must plan the play ahead of time and set the "business" of the stage, so that he will know just exactly how the stage is to be set, where the actors are to be, and how to keep the stage balanced at all times. At the first rehearsal, each player should be given specific instructions as to how he is to act, where he is to stand, at what point he moves and where. These instructions should be carefully written on his script. The director has the "whole say." Even professional actors who have had years of experience must have direction.

Selecting the play for the church audience should be done carefully and just as carefully cast. Unless you have an appropriate play and the right persons to play the important parts, a play cannot be successful. It is better to give several performances of a play in a small hall or auditorium, than to give only one performance in a large hall.

Drama can be used in the church school class by reading the story to children and then assigning parts. If the play is to be given before an audience, preparation should be made in advance. The children should be given the lines so they can learn their parts and rehearse. If the story is to be dramatized in the class, after the teacher reads the story, each child plays his part by using his own words. Children like this form of activity. Very often they act out the play afterwards with their playmates.

Friday, October 8, 1948

The talk this morning was given by Mrs. Henry Rowland, on the use of flannelgraphs. The easiest way to remember things is to see them. If they can be seen in a worshipful attitude, they create a more lasting impression. A beautiful picture, flowers, and burning candles are helpful in creating a worshipful attitude. Every church school director should arrange a worship center that presents a beautiful picture.

A flannelgraph depicting the story of the church from the time of Joseph Smith praying in the woods to the organization of the church was very effective. This flannelgraph was presented with a very interesting talk on the conditions of the world at that time, also each step leading to the "Restoration," the personages who talked with Joseph, the visit of the angel Moroni, the finding of the Book of Mormon plates, the restoration of the Aaronic priesthood by John the Baptist, the Three Witnesses, the ordination to the Melchisedec priesthood, and the first Communion.

Any age group could enjoy and understand the story of the Restoration presented in such a manner. The language should, of course, be adapted to the age group. It can be used in any division of the church. Any age can enjoy a flannelgraph if the talk and explanation that go with it are interesting and presented in the right manner.

Flannelgraphs can be used very effectively to tell Bible or Book of Mormon stories. Mrs. Homer Steffens made the figures and scenes for Mrs. Rowland.

Vacation Church School

Blanche Green, Instructor

Friday, October 8, 1948

The vacation church school class had a very interesting and informative session on Friday morning under the teaching of Lillie Jennings and Sadi Anka Moon.

Sister Jennings did her teaching in story form—one she had written herself. She pointed out plainly the negative and positive methods of teaching and her treatment was highly appreciated by the class.

Sister Moon dealt with the "Interpretation of the Junior High Age Group."

What Graceland Means to Me

By Doris Miller

I CANNOT REMEMBER when I first heard of Graceland. It was more or less understood during all of my childhood that I would spend my first two years of college there. Consequently, I rebelled and, for a couple of years during high school, said that I wouldn't go. I changed my mind after hearing of my sister Velma's Graceland experiences and visiting the campus.

And so I arrived at Graceland one Sunday in September, 1945, via the Puddle Jumper. First impressions are always a little bewildering and mixed up, and I can't sort out anything much. I do remember that Graceland was very friendly and the greetings were warm, but during registration I wondered a little. It seemed so mechanized, and I can remember Mr. Faunce (although he was just another stranger then) saying, "Line up there before going through the checkers." After registering at the University of Iowa and becoming student No. 32,353, Graceland's process seems much less complicated. I had a little laugh by myself during registration here at the university when I sat down for a moment and tried to picture one of the professors saying, "I know you would like this, Doris. It's a good course, and you'll get more out of it than just the lesson."

My first evening at Graceland was spent unpacking, and the two sophomores next door in Walker came calling. That was the beginning of my Graceland friendships. A memory of that year and room 210 is the nightly feminine process of "putting up my hair." Nearly every night I would go to Marjorie's room next door to do my hair, or she would come to mine. We would talk over the day, and she'd give me many little friendly aids toward fitting into the Graceland family. The realization came to me that you don't automatically become a real Graceland-er—it is something that you have to work for and build for and grow into mentally, emotionally, and spiritually.

My second year at Graceland, I moved across the hall and acquired a new roommate. Babs, Walker 204, sharing our room and our lives and our own special little whistle are all tied up together. It was fun to make a double dressing table as something different from the other justlike rooms. Each morning we had a routine that varied only on Saturdays and Sundays when we generally slept a little later. The alarm would ring at 6; Babs would shut it off, and we'd both crawl out and have the beds made before we really woke up. Somehow or other, we would get our teeth brushed without sleepily doing each other's, press a skirt or blouse, and generally finish up at the same time, side by side at our dressing table, combing our hair and making the finishing touches.

WHEN I STARTED AT GRACELAND, classes seemed very different from high school, and now at the university they are still more different. Of the three, Graceland's classes have a certain plus value that the others will never be able to attain. I don't recall how it fitted into the lesson, but I remember a day in biology and Dr. Platz and "Platzism" on "love—the warm, rich, human feeling that makes man different from the animal or plant and brings him closer to God." Miss Morgan opened our eyes by the simple process of requiring paragraphs, talking about what she saw, and seeking the heart of each one of us in and out of class. And then Dr. Cheville would "punch" something—"the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man" or tell one of his limitless fund of Graceland stories full of humor, pathos, or both—Mr. Runkle and his plan for Zionistic living, Mr. Closson talking on developing our own personality along with the lesson, Mr. Gould telling us about Homer or Wordsworth or Keats. Here I miss the classroom discussion, the lessons that aren't in the lesson which make classes so rich that the bell is something to groan at rather than cheer. I miss the feeling that the instructor is really interested in what I know and, most of all, in what I don't know.

The first time I climbed to the top of the stadium here, I thought of the wooden bleachers at Graceland and wished I were there. At least I knew the guys on the team down there! At Home-coming last year, a couple of fellows booted one of the penalties, and before the echo died away, three or four kids said, "Hey, we don't do that here." There are many things we didn't do at Graceland that are commonplace elsewhere.

ANOTHER PART of my Graceland experience was the summer crew. It is a grand extra that not everyone receives. Working with a group of kids who have much in common with you is an inspiration in itself. And then there were the tennis games, skates in the gym, climbs to the Tower, the wonderful food, our own fellowships, the special nicknames we had, and the dips in the fountain. We were all helping Graceland to grow and expand each summer for more students the next year, and we felt a part of it.

There are many things that every Gracelander remembers. I remember studying in the library and sometimes it wasn't all study; dancing the Virginia Reel at the Dixie Ball; Abe Lincoln's statue and the time I helped turn him into a bartender and got scolded for it; sounds of practicing in Marietta from a soprano on first and a trombone on third.

Other memories to warm my heart are skates—bell skates, moonlight skates, and grand marches; cheering like mad at the games; getting ready for bed at night with kids in and out and someone hollering that I was next in the shower; fixing devilment in my friends' rooms and then coming home and being unable to find half of my things for a week; classes and companionship with the faculty; working Freshman year in the dining hall and Sophomore year in the office. Only somehow it never seemed like work.

Graceland's parties were fun—wiener roasts, hayrides, and a Nincompoopia party; initiations and banquets; formals and flowers; the excitement of getting buzzed when you knew who it was and when you didn't; studying late at night with a group of kids for a test the next day, and more than once staying up till 4 a.m. just talking to a friend; meeting students from all over the country or across the ocean and having them for friends; the assemblies every Thursday; engagements and birthdays and being sung to in the dining hall; shared meals and conversations, some long and other just snatches, three times a day.

I remember the smiles and "Hellos" and the time when I counted the number of greetings I exchanged with someone while hurrying from Briggs to the Ad Building after class—the total was nineteen; Sunday morning services and the "Friendship, Courtship, Marriage Clinic"; and then the fellowships.

No one can mention Graceland without telling of fellowship. It is unique, the core and center of campus life, and the tie that binds student body and faculty together. For a while we thought the chapel was essential, and then we found it wasn't. Here we would realize that the fun-loving tease who seemed to do nothing but fool around had more to him—a deep personal inside with an awareness of God and others. You have to climb to the heights of a rich experience such as our boxes for Holland, Patriarch Grice's talk on the ministry of little things, the earnest and sincere prayers, the little talks with each other and God, before you can share the true Graceland Fellowship. I can remember some of the themes—"My Graceland Diary," "We Write a Letter Home," "Not Good if Detached," "My Note in Life's Symphony," "Growing Up or Down," and many others—they are all so tied together that I think of them mostly as a whole. I can still remember the happiness of feeling that "My friends are there, and God is there," and as each one participated, I would find more richness and strength to add to my life and continue my growing.

The spiritual resources and fountains are what Graceland means to me. They are made up of everything—each little and big thing I have mentioned. I spent two wonderful years at Graceland—the Doris Miller that left was very different from the Doris Miller who arrived on the Hill that Sunday. While at Graceland, my church and my God became vital, living parts of my life. And when it came time to leave, I knew that Graceland had given me spiritual strength, peace in my soul, and a vision of the ideals and goals of life that are with me now and will always be. I am taking Graceland with me as I move on and forward into the future.

The Path Up

*Love is God's which never asks return,
And when I fall back Goes on loving.*

*If I shrink from heights that I must climb
To find him on his throne,
Or if I stop at some lower plane
Where light is less,
God still helps me
Find what little honor
I may seek.*

*But when I ask with a complete heart
To live with God.
And I direct my path up the mountain,
He rejoices—
He smiles even though the path I make
Is crooked because of my short view,
For his love is wide and yearning.*

*And as my narrow path up to the light
Stops short of greater height another gains,
Because I try to climb—with all my strength—
God reaches down,
Forgiving me the things which keep me there,
And pulls me up,
To spend eternity with him.*

She emphasized the physical and mental characteristics of this group and told of the quality of character a teacher must have to meet the demands of junior high students.

Blanche Green reviewed the first things to do in organizing a vacation church school, namely: to organize the teaching staff immediately, to order materials as soon as they are available so that the leader can familiarize herself with the activities planned for each age group, and to hold a training class for the workers several weeks in advance of the opening date of the school.

Saturday, October 9, 1948

Different vacation church school workers gave flannelgraph demonstrations at the Saturday session which proved to be one of the most interesting and informative classes of the week. Our visions were broadened as to the possibilities in this field, and it is an art that most anyone can use and enlarge upon.

Opal Martin had a series of flannelgraphs portraying the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the events leading up to its coming forth, and the organization of the church. It is one of the best methods of teaching the Restoration Message this reporter has ever seen, and surely each worker must have resolved in her heart to go home and go to work to give to her own group of children this same wonderful story in flannelgraph form. Sister Stanford also gave a demonstration of some of her flannelgraph work. She uses this method in teaching the Three Standard Books, the Restoration, and stories from the Book of Mormon.

Anna B. Fout gave an interesting account of the vacation school held in Phoenix, Arizona, last year. It was their first attempt, and many of the children that enrolled had never before been to a church school of any kind. She told of an outstanding prayer service in which every child participated and at which the adults were afraid to lift their eyes lest the spell be broken. God's Spirit was there in abundance. Slides were also shown of the school in Phoenix, as well as some which were held in Independence.

Every class member has profited abundantly from this week's instruction, and the inspiration received in these classes will surely take root in many branches, resulting in more and better vacation church schools in the future.

LETTERS

Our First Duty

"Onward to Zion"—these words keep ringing through my mind, and I wonder, "will we of this generation live to see the day when the towers of Zion will glisten in the sun, or will our children be the ones who redeem Zion?" Our late president, F. M. Smith, longed for a redeemed Zion, where the people would be of one heart and one mind, loving God and their fellow men. He wasn't permitted to see that day. I have been reading Joseph's City Beautiful and I find that Joseph Smith the Martyr also was looking for Nauvoo to be a great city where the Saints would dwell in peace and unity. As I read on, I find that the Lord told them to finish the Nauvoo Temple in a specified time, but they were more interested in beautifying and finishing the Masonic building.

The older Saints were deeply concerned over what was taking place. They didn't think it was right to dedicate the Masonic building while the temple stood unfinished. I am sure the Lord gave them ample time to finish the temple, but they were putting their time and money on a building that wasn't necessary.

Are we doing any better today? Are we putting our all in the work of the church, or are we spending our time and money on the things of the world? We cannot serve God and mammon.

Dear Saints, let us go forward; let us teach Christ. Then our dream of Zion shall be realized.

How Far to the Kingdom?

formed to this world in the use of your material resources any more than you would in ethical conduct. The violation of the principle of the storehouse leads to insecurity and spiritual ill health on the part of the individual just as truly as it would lead to instability on the part of the church. We can be thankful that this principle has been officially recognized by the church, and that adequate reserves have become a part of our endeavor.

The distance to the kingdom must be measured in terms of the adjustment of our own habits, the application of the principles of life and the principles of kingdom-living, and the ability of the people to think and act toward the kingdom regardless of what other people do. Let all decisions be made on the basis of whether or not they contribute to this great goal. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus," that each of us may become a kingdom-quality person.

It's easy, so easy
Just close your little eyes,
And pretty soon the great big moon
Will sing you lullabies.

Parents will find this song a real aid to the sandman, for who could resist the closing lines?

With a great big yawn
You'll toddle on
In the rock-a-bye parade.
Good night.

"Ducklings on Parade," on the other side of this record, is a gay little tune with just enough drama to stimulate the youngsters to activity. They will want to march with the "one, two, three, four, five, six, seven ducklings on parade." There's humor in this song and lots of fun. All children will enjoy it.

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Howard of New Liberty, Iowa, announce the birth of a son, David Allen, born September 22. Mrs. Howard is the former Marcene Webber.

A daughter, Sandra Ray, was born September 24 to Mr. and Mrs. Ray Gamet of Rock Island, Illinois. Mrs. Gamet was formerly Lillian Williams.

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Weller of Lincoln, Nebraska, announce the birth of a son, Robert Leland, born September 27. Mrs. Weller is the former Betty Katzman of Independence, Missouri.

BRIEFS

WARRINGTON, ENGLAND.—Sixty-two members and friends witnessed the baptism on Wednesday, September 8, of Mrs. L. Keating, Mrs. A. Saunders, and Misses B. Dickson, N. Dickson, Mavis Dickson, N. Brown, and J. Mullineaux. Priest G. O. Lampard officiated at the service.

MARLIN, TEXAS.—Elder Arthur J. Rock, who is attending Baylor University, was the morning speaker on Sunday, September 26. Elder J. M. Nunley of Caldwell was also a recent visitor. The church home has been improved this past year by the addition of Venetian blinds and an air-conditioning system.

NORTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT.—The fifth annual district conference was held August 29 at Coldwater, Michigan, with District President L. S. Troyer and Elder Harry Simons in charge. Delegates to General Conference were chosen, and the following were approved for ordination: John Rees, elder; John Smelser, Marion Blanchard, and John Drader, priests; Merritt Schickley and Lester Tacy, deacons. Elder Troyer was sustained as district president, with Elders S. M. Nichols and V. L. Coonfare as counselors. The finance committee presented a budget of $980 for the coming year; it was approved, along with the allocations to several branches.

BUTMAN, MICHIGAN.—An all-day meeting was held at Butman Branch on Sunday, September 12. Nearly 100 persons attended. Activities of the day included a 9:30 a.m. prayer service; a sermon by Elder S. T. Pendleton at 11; potluck dinner at noon; a round-table discussion at 1:30 p.m.; preaching at 2 by District President B. H. Doty; and a closing sermon at 3 by Alva Pendleton.

LUBBOCK, TEXAS.—Seventy-nine of the scattered Saints in west Texas and New Mexico met for an all-day service and picnic at McKensie State Park in Lubbock on Sunday, September 12. Some drove as far as 150 miles to attend. District President Ralph Wilt and Missionary W. C. Haden were in charge of the services. Members in this territory who do not have church privileges are urged to contact Raymond Stone, 515 Avenue Q, Lubbock, Texas, or Claude Wilt, Cloude, Texas.

A good thought for your every day

Daily Bread

Edited by Chris B. Hartshorn

12 issues each year—

$1.50 in U.S.A. $1.65 in Canada $1.85 in other countries

(no 6 month subscriptions accepted)

In the foreword of the January issue, President Israel A. Smith says: “. . . we commend this publication to the Saints with confidence that if it is sincerely used in their daily home worship, it will strengthen the spiritual foundations on which personal righteousness depends.”

Daily Bread is our new devotional magazine. The first issue is dated January, 1949. It follows the general church theme for each month, and it is issued twelve times each year.

One page is devoted to each day's meditation. A scripture, a devotional reading, hymn meditation, and a prayer seed are prepared for each day's reading.

While this is primarily prepared for family devotions, good prayer meeting themes, worship talks, and even sermon ideas may be found in these magazines.

Every church family will want to subscribe.

Meditation for a New Day

P. S.

I stand upon the threshold of this day
To hold in outstretched hands
Each moment in its turn,
Savoring its newness and its promise
And its opportunity.

So may I use each moment wisely,
Each for which it first was meant to be,
And turn at close of day
To see
Behind me, link on link, a chain of happiness
Forged of such moments, used and loved,
Binding past to present
With intangible content.

* POST-CONFERENCE

It was at a prayer meeting in one of the local churches after Conference. One of the ladies present had worked as a volunteer in the Laurel Club dining room, many hours each day, from morning to night. She said, "I am tired, very tired, but happy for the good I could do and the help I could give. We of the Laurel Club missed nearly every service of the Conference, and we could have let it make us feel blue. But I knew that if I got anything out of the Conference, it would have to be from my own spiritual resources. And I did receive help."

From the work angle, Conference is a long grind for those who work in order that the people may be served. But they have their compensations in a feeling of satisfaction and of participating in an achievement that is a source of good.

One worker said, when Monday came, "Now I can relax and have that attack of flu I've been fighting off for several days." And he did!

* VISITORS

Workers do not get much chance to visit during the Conference, except when they are on the run from hither to yon for a minute or so. One of the pleasures of the after-Conference period is the fact that some folk stay in town to transact business, make purchases, and complete arrangements. Brother and Sister Charles Dickinson are occupied with visual aids equipment and other matters. Brother John Mervin is waiting for his wife to recover from an operation in the Sanitarium. Quorum of Twelve members are mapping fall campaigns for their missions. This is an opportunity for those who could not visit while the crowds were here, and they are grateful for it.

* ONLY ONE OF HIM

Brother Marvin McDole brought in a picture of the early Sunday morning Communion service at the opening of the General Conference. It is a nice picture, with over four thousand of us present, and you can guess who was sitting there right in the front row, all dressed up and looking as if he might be important. Pure illusion, of course.

"Hundreds of people came to look at the picture," said Brother McDole, "all of them wanting to see themselves. They didn't buy unless their own picture showed clearly."

When I tried to find a place in my office to put this picture, the only clear space was below my Hofmann picture of Christ. And I thought, "So many of us. And only one of him! He did so much. We talk so much. We'd really ought to try to do better."

Yes, only one of Him!

* The next time you feel tired, discouraged, and in need of comfort and sympathy, or ready to give up the whole business, try this: Say to yourself, "It isn't as bad as I feel, and I don't have to feel this way. I'm going to feel better, beginning now. Life is good, my friends are nice, I like my work, and I'm going to smile."

It worked for us. Why shouldn't it work for you?

* Don't get the idea that there will be nothing to do in heaven. There will be harps to be re-strung, halos to be retreaded, broken wing feathers to be repaired, and temperamental situations to be settled in the celestial choir. That is, if heaven is populated with the kind of material we have been sending up there for a long, long time.

Graceland College

This year in our congregations throughout the world, College Day will be observed on October 31. On this day, members of the church are reminded of the significant role of Graceland College in the program of the church, and they are given an opportunity to participate in the development of the church college by means of offerings.

In the light of the ever-present need for persons who are qualified to apply themselves significantly to the cause of the church, it is always important that the young men and women of the church give careful attention to the rich educational opportunities offered at Graceland. Owing to the peculiar demands of our present age, the need for the service of persons qualified by the right kind of education is increasingly apparent. Graceland offers the right kind of education for most of the young people of the church.

We urge the membership to support the cause of the church by supporting Graceland College on College Day this year. The offering received will be used to complete the construction of the Memorial Student Center Building—a structure which is designed to be a memorial to all the youth of our church who served in World War II.

Three years ago, the General Church authorized the use of sixty thousand dollars from College Day offerings for the purpose of constructing the Center. As the result of offerings received the past two years, approximately thirty-four thousand dollars has been obtained. These funds added to contributions received from alumni have made possible the beginning of construction this fall.

It is the hope of the college and church officials that this year's church-wide College Day offering will reach a figure enabling the completion of the Center. Your support will be appreciated, and will provide a much-needed service to the splendid young men and women of our church who attend our church college during the coming years.

Our Place of Worship

Geneva Switzerland
September 5, 1948

Dear Editor:

Today I visited the Protestant church of St. Peter, which was erected in 1150. Several days ago I revisited the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris. In traveling through the country, I like to visit churches, and I cannot help but be impressed by the fact that quite small communities and groups of people have given much time and money to erect worthy houses of worship.

I have also seen many of our churches in different places. When traveling with my family, I take a "Church Directory," and together we look at the churches and see as much as possible. Of course, there are great variations, not only in the size of the churches, but also in the grounds and the surroundings. In many cases, we are meeting in rented halls or private homes.

What sort of physical heritage are we going to leave to the future generations of the church? The condition of our houses of worship is important. To many people in our communities, the Latter Day Saint Church is not so much a group of people, nor a specific doctrine, but the physical building. When anyone mentions my home branch and says, "the church in Adelaide," I automatically think first of the building. I believe that some of our meeting places are such that our young people hesitate to ask their friends to services. You may say that this is a wrong attitude, but if you discuss the matter frankly with your young people's group, you will see their point of view. The church building can be something very beautiful and important in our lives. It reflects the deepest spiritual experiences—it is the place where we are blessed, baptized, and married. With proper facilities, it can be the center of our social life, too.

Improving the situation will require long-time planning. I believe that we have sometimes neglected our houses of worship—a matter in which the Bishopric has important responsibilities and can give useful guidance. We are obliged to watch our finances carefully so as not to get in debt, and a period of inflation is the wrong time to build. Because of faulty location, some of the buildings we have erected are now almost empty. While agreeing that God's Spirit can be experienced in any sort of building, I still believe that we should give more thought to the question of our houses of worship. We can carefully consider the architectural aspects before we are ready to build. The church need not be large and expensive; one of the most beautiful buildings I have ever seen is the quite small church of St. John in Canberra. To many of us, the most hallowed place of worship is the simple but lovely "Green Cathedral" at the Tiona Reunion Grounds in Australia.

The least we can do is to make our present meeting place dignified and sacred. As far as possible, for example, we might avoid the use of dance halls. In many branches, those responsible for the care of church property are to be commended on the way they have created suitable conditions. Let us ask ourselves whether there is anything we can do to improve the beauty of our present church home, whatever and wherever it may be.

Although separated by some distance, I participate in fasting and prayer that the church will receive guidance in these times. In considering General Conference, I immediately think of the Auditorium.

I know there are many aspects to be taken into account regarding our church property, but I do hope we can do much in the future to beautify our places of worship. This, I believe, will assist in bringing a spirit of reverence to our church homes and aid us in our missionary endeavors.

Sincerely,
Perce R. Judd

Our Response

to CHRIST'S CALL

By LAURENCE A. MacDONALD

A sermon given at Stone Church on October 9, 1948, during General Conference. The author is president of the Northern California District.

Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven.
—Matthew 5: 16.

THE MOST INTERESTING SUBJECT about which we can write or speak is that of the salvation of men, so let us look at some of the respects in which we can extend the blessings of our divine call.

In the past, when our physical strength was less, this Church of Jesus Christ found spiritual strength to make great decisions and to carry them out.

Today, we face a new challenge to greatness. All the resources needed to meet it are not shown in figures on church attendance or meetings conducted or church income. These resources exist also in the people's willingness to appraise men and issues and choose those they wish to follow and then to come on courageously. We have not always chosen wisely, and experience has proved that unless our beliefs are true, life cannot be right. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

The call of Christ is to know God. This call is to all—boys and girls, men and women alike. If I can know and trust a man, I have no difficulty in believing in that which he does. If you will read the Gospels and pray and follow the path of simple obedience and thus come to know God, other troubles will vanish, and the kingdom way will become the formula for your life.

There are two parables spoken by Jesus to the people of Galilee which teach the paramount value of the kingdom of heaven. They emphasize the supreme importance of evaluating the kingdom way of life above all other interests.

In the parables, two men found great treasures but under different circumstances. One found a treasure in a field. Perhaps he found it unexpectedly, but when he realized its great value, he sold all his other property and bought the field that the treasure might be rightfully his.

The other man was a connoisseur in pearls, searching for particularly fine ones. He found one so perfect in its beauty and of such great value that he sold all he possessed to buy that pearl of great price. He was willing to give up all other possessions to own it.

The man who found the treasure in the field represents a class of people who are not particularly seeking for the gospel truth but who recognize it when they come in contact with it and are willing to forsake all worldly interests to obtain that enduring reward. The merchantman seeking rare pearls represents a class of people who are searching for the truth, who recognize in the Gospel of Christ the perfection of beauty and wisdom for which they gladly exchange all the transient things of the world. These men were honest with themselves.

IT IS A COMMON MISTAKE with all of us to think that we can be religious only when engaged in religious acts. We forget that all our duties are religious duties, that from the most ordinary acts of eating and drinking to the wider sphere of whatever we do, all may be done to the glory of God. There are duties of worship and duties of work, there are duties of Sunday and duties of the week, duties of rest and duties of pleasure, which are all religious if done in the right spirit. If a thing ought to be done, then it is religious to do it. We can serve God by honesty and fair dealing in trade and diligence in business as truly as by fervency in spirit and in prayer. You are religious when engaged in buying and selling or in any trade or profession if your motives and methods are right. One of the leading peculiarities of the religion of Christ is that it does away with the distinction between things sacred and things secular. It does that by making the whole of life sacred.

Religion and business can and do belong together. Christianity is not to be kept as a thing apart from business, unaffected by business and uninfluencing business. They belong side by side.

The Bible nowhere teaches that joy must be turned out of doors before religion can come in. This Gospel of Jesus Christ is not opposed to pleasure, nor is it a life of unnatural self-denial here that we might have joy in the hereafter. In the Bible, Christian experience is set forth as a thing of boundless delight. The burden of the gospel message is "glad tidings of great joy." This is the place to have and to see more of life; Christ said, "I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly." It is our duty and our privilege then, to live the whole of life to the glory of God by more holiness in living, by more zeal in our work, by calm trust, by patience in trial, by obedience, and by showing the happiness and good cheer of the Christian life we have found.

UNDoubtedly it will cost us great effort to be true disciples of Christ. We are not promised that eternal life may be had easily. The man who found the treasure in the field and the merchantman who found the goodly pearl gave up everything to obtain them. Jesus did not conceal the fact that to follow him means self-denial. He taught that it meant walking a straight, narrow way which comparatively few follow because of the allurements of the broad way of worldly pleasure and self-gratification. We must make our choice between these two ways, and we must pay the price entailed.

On every occasion when Jesus taught, his effort was to widen men's concept of life, to raise their thoughts, and to lead them to realize the necessity of the development of the spirit. We study his utterances to those people so many years ago because it is as necessary for us to know those great truths as it was for the people of that day. Life here with its experiences and opportunities should be used to fit us for the greater life to follow. Christ is offering us his gospel of spiritual life now as he offered it then, but how many of us are receiving it in our souls?

We are something like a group of workers who were building a great bridge across a river. The structure was carried from both sides to meet in the middle, but when the central span was swung into place, they found that it did not fit—it fell short by two inches. They telegraphed the designer of the bridge, and in great impatience awaited his reply. When the reply did come, it merely said, "Wait till noon tomorrow." Tomorrow noon the workers found that the sun's rays had expanded the metal so that, section to section, it fit perfectly, and there was no crack at all—the bridge was one. So the love of Christ falls on us, and when the inner principle of his life is revealed, our lives are expanded so that we fit more perfectly into this world. The revelation of his life includes the possibility of our living our lives under the same principle. "As my Father hath sent me into the world, so send I you."

The opportunities are many. What our church needs is that life-saving, vitalizing fire of God's Holy Spirit, which will arouse every one of us to earnest, consecrated personal work. Only as our churches become bands of "able workers," in fact, only as the rank and file of our membership become enlisted in active service for Christ, will his kingdom advance as it should. The work in which we are engaged is rescue work. It is not enough that we save ourselves or lay up personal treasures in heaven, we must turn and strive to save others also. This at least we know, that if every member of the church was a worker filled with the desire and determination to be in active service for Christ, willing to advance his kingdom as it ought to be advanced, then we might exclaim, "The kingdom of God is at hand."

I THINK JESUS always knew that God was with him in a special way, but that does not prevent me from thinking that there were occasions in his life when he was peculiarly aware of it. I think his baptism was such a time, when he heard the divine voice saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." I think the transfiguration was another such time. I think that Passion Week was yet another such time. It is worth noticing that these occasions when our Lord had this peculiar sense of God's presence with him were occasions when he faced the cost of man's redemption and declared himself willing to pay it.

I think much of what is meant in Christ's call to us is shown in the acts of his last night. He knew that he had come from God on a definite errand and to accomplish a particular work. This conviction found expression many a time in the course of his life. "I am come," he said, "not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." There was nothing casual about Christ's coming into this world. He came to do a specific work. He was never in a moment's doubt about his business. God was the beginning and the end of his life. He was at one with his Father: Christ was never more truly godlike than when he girded himself with a towel on this last night and washed the disciples' feet. He took upon himself the form of a slave. We come nearest to that divine love when we, too, stoop to serve and to help and heal. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." I want to say that we, too, came from God—that we were sent here on business; that we have a work to do and a mission to fulfill; that we have a character to form, a soul to win, and a part to play in making the world a happier, better place; and that we are going to God—among other things—to give an account of how we have fulfilled our mission and used our gifts and performed our task. I say no one can live well who does not bear these things in mind. When men forget them, life becomes thin and shallow and sordid. This is a trust from God, and we must fail in our responsibility, for he also gives us the inner power to triumph over every obstacle.

God's purpose is not yet accomplished in us. We are still raising gigantic obstacles in the way of his eternal plan, but it will be accomplished. However, we shall never solve life's pressing problems until we come into line with Christ's thoughts and see that God is most closely implicated with human need. "Whosoever shall give you a cup of cold water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you he shall not lose his reward."

GOD USES THE LIVES of ordinary men for the revelations of himself. From an Old Testament story, we gather the following: A crafty, scheming man despoiled his brother; to escape his immediate vengeance, he hastened away to another country. Years after, events forced him back to the scene of his wrongdoing, and he feared for his life and the lives of his dear ones. To his amazement, he found himself treated in a brotherly manner. Esau proved himself a real man. Jacob, realizing his brother's greatness, was forced to exclaim, "I have seen thy face as one sees the face of God." That rough, profane hunter was a revelation of God. Since the death of Jesus, innumerable men and women have convinced their fellows of the presence of God with and in man. Time would fail were we to try to recount the many who have given the world the reflected glory of God in Christ. Yes, God uses life's ordinary things, life's commonplace incidents as media of his revelations. These ordinary events and instruments are in reality sacraments—outward, visible signs of his indwelling grace. God uses man for the communications of his life and love.

The thing that contributed in a large measure to making the Apostle Paul mighty in the magnifying of his office was his unstinting readiness to bear testimony of the divinity of Christ, the providential working of God in behalf of his people, and the power in the gospel to save man.

It is chiefly the witness of what the church does that convinces men. We believe the gospel when we see that it meets our needs. It seems reasonable, therefore, that we who have joined our own lives and fortunes with the church shall become acquainted with what it has actually done and can do in meeting the needs of men. There is a critical attitude abroad which points constantly to the lack of practical achievement on the part of the church and ignores much that has been done. For our own sakes, then, as well as for the sake of those whom we would win, we must bear testimony of the effectiveness of the church in action. A major factor in inducing belief is to live the gospel into attractive reality. Many factors influence the conversion of an individual, but none are more potent than the lives of those who live their religion. The last important command of Christ in Judea to his disciples was to carry the gospel of the kingdom to the world. The first commandment of the Restoration Movement was a similar one—to go forth and preach the gospel.

EVERY MAN has the fundamental right to hear the gospel in a way which will appeal to him. We must let the truth speak through us to all kinds of people. When we come to know Jesus, we find that he turns our thoughts and purposes outward from our narrow self-centered life, and we become conscious of our neighbors. We begin to think not only of our own privileges but also of our responsibilities and opportunities of service.

The purpose of missionary effort is not merely to try to save the individual, but, through the introduction of Christianity, to create a better condition on the earth which shall increase the presumption that following generations will be converted. It is by a Christlike dedication to the world that Christ saves us from the world. Like a voice out of the sky, he tells us to be close to this world and help it, feel for its wickedness, pity it, sacrifice for it; in so doing, we are safest from its infections, surest not to sacrifice ourselves to it. Men and women of the early church, the latter day church, and many good people of all churches and creeds stand out as true world builders, and beckon us, the beneficiaries of their faith and labor, to carry on to advance this age-long task nearer to its fruition.

As a church, we shall always be what we make ourselves. God has designed the plan of salvation; he has called us to our tasks and stands ready to assist us in every effort, but he does not lead us faster than we are ready to go. The duty of the church to the world is fulfilled only when evangelistic activity and sacred study go hand in hand. It is, perhaps, not to be wondered at that in the joy of saving men, the duty of nurturing them is sometimes forgotten.

THERE ARE FOUR ROADWAYS which all must travel on the route to the city of God. The first of these roadways is the Damascus Road. This is a story familiar to us all—the thing which happened to Paul that day changed his whole life. After this experience, his life had a new direction, new emphasis, and new power. The Damascus Road may be called the road of awakening. It represents a universal experience. Every one of us must walk the road of awakening.

The second is the Jericho Road. The story of this road begins with a theological controversy and ends with a roadside act of kindness. This is a roadway of service, of true neighborliness. Most of us, after we have seen the great light of the Damascus experience, know that we must serve as brothers.

It is not enough to merely render first aid on the highway, or even to go further and provide for the bruised and beaten victim. Something more is required. We must make the roadway safe for others—this is the Jerusalem Road—the road of commitment. On it we see one who "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." Jesus died the way he did because he lived the way he did. On this road of commitment, there is no expedience, no compromise of beauty or goodness or truth.

The fourth is the Emmaus Road—the roadway of fellowship. Two disciples were walking down that road; all their dreams had been shattered, all their hopes wrecked. But as they walked, they became conscious of a presence and new courage, new hope, and new faith came to them.

These four roads converge into the way down which we travel with courage and expectancy into the presence of God and out through Christ to serve our fellow man. It was not to wash the dust from travel-stained feet that Jesus came into the world, but to wash away the deeper stain of the defiled soul. To accomplish that washing, he had to stoop to a depth lower still, and by all the measure in which he had preserved the perfect purity and sensitiveness of his soul, he felt the agony and insult of the Passion more keenly than ordinary men, for sin blunts the sensitiveness and dulls the feelings. But the fact that Jesus was without sin exposed him the more to pain. He expects us to stoop and to serve.

A NEW SPIRIT must permeate our being—a spirit that is intensely interested in making this Church of Jesus Christ function efficiently during the next five or ten or twenty-five years. This means that we shall probably have to revamp a good deal of our thinking and rearrange a good many of our attitudes in the near future, which is even more tricky, expensive and exasperating than the job of retooling a large industrial plant. But the man who has already decided that it is hopeless should no longer participate in active life; he should retire to some quiet spot where he can mutter in the chimney corner without disturbing people who have work to do.

If this life of the kingdom is ever to be successful, if we are ever to enter into the mastery of ourselves, if we ever abandon the disposition to dodge life's responsibilities and

Why Be Religious?

MANY PEOPLE are asking this question in one form or another today. In the solitude of many Christian hearts and minds, the same question is being reviewed. Amid the stresses and strains of the uncertain present and the unpredictable future, these questions are not to be condemned. In fact, it is well sometimes to review the fundamental reasons for our religious beliefs and the basic convictions which prompt us to be religious. A religion—personal or group—which will not bear up under the poundings of modern questions by its very weakness is indicative that it is not the "true" religion.

I am suggesting one reason and duties, it will be made possible largely through the greater outlook on life which will be ours. When we open our eyes and see life's problems in their proper setting, and then appreciate all the resources and reservations which are within the reach of those who try to do God's will, we shall go forth with the step of conquest and enter into the victories which reward the enlarged vision.

What, then, is the conclusion of the whole matter? It is for us all to keep in mind that our church work demands the very best of which we are capable and the church can produce. Deep and earnest feeling is good. If a man's religion never sets him on fire, either there must be very little of it or his whole nature must be frost-bound. There can be no true growth which is not growth in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It is for us to take every power he has bestowed and twist it like strands of a great rope into new zeal for service and a deeper sort of consecration than we have ever known.

This is the roadway which the Christ asks you to walk today, tomorrow, and all the tomorrows.

By John Blackmore

answer to the question, "Why Should We Be Religious?" Because we are convinced that we are dual in nature. Man is both body and soul, physical and spirit. We believe that when the body ceases to function and dies, the soul goes back to God as an intelligent entity. Otherwise many of us would not be very much interested in religion or church life if we believed that physical death meant total obliteration of all personality. We believe fundamentally in the immortality of the soul.

The cynic asks, "What support have we for the idea of a spirit soul?" First, the finest and best inspiration of the ages. There is abundant textual evidence in the "Book of Books," the Bible, which indicates that the prophets of the ages by reason and by inspiration possessed this belief in the existence of the soul in man. Space permits me to quote only two: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 7. "The Lord . . . formeth the spirit of man within him."—Zechariah 12: 1. Jesus on the cross cried, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

The second source of our belief is sound reasoning. The whole of the miracle of life indicates that we are not composed of just material elements; we are spiritual in our composition as well as material. The miracle of thought, of love, of hope all indicate that we are both body and soul. May God always help us in our search for him.—From Omaha Ray-O-Lite.

"Who is it knocks so loud?" "A little lonely sin."
"Slip through," we answer, and all hell is in.

"When Thou Prayest"

By Evan A. Fry

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be ye not therefore like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him.—Matthew 6: 5-8.

IN MY YOUTH, I was taught that the proper thing to do when public prayer was being offered in any kind of meeting was to bow my head and close my eyes. Yet it seems to me, not as a result of one observation, or observation in only one denomination, but from many observations in many congregations and many denominations, that this useful and old-fashioned custom of closing the eyes for prayer is almost universally disregarded. When public prayer is offered today those in the congregation seem to be busy inspecting the preacher and each other, rather than joining in spirit as they are led in prayer.

Let us admit at the outset that much of this casualness about public prayer is the fault of the men who pray as well as those who are supposed to join as they listen. Many of our public prayers are uttered to be heard of men, rather than to be heard and answered of God. Many are too perfunctory—uttered because the printed program, rather than the heart, calls for them. Many of them are too long, oblivious of the fact that the human mind, unless thoroughly disciplined, cannot concentrate on one thing very long. Many are too hackneyed, too full of shopworn, threadbare phraseology. Many—to use the coined word of an old minister of our church—are too "scopative"; they include everything from creation to John on the Isle of Patmos, with special mention for the ten lost tribes of Israel and the final day of judgment.

BUT NOT ALL of the responsibility for the frequent failure of public prayer to accomplish its purpose lies with those who pray. Much lies with the people who hear. They too often do not join in prayer with mind and heart and spirit; they only "stand through" or "sit through" the prayer with eyes open, ears comfortably relaxed to catch all extraneous sounds, mind and heart and spirit inattentive and unconcerned about the burden of the petitions being offered. The time of public prayer is often used as a time to observe the neighbors' latest idiosyncrasies of dress or manner or physiognomy or to observe critically the mechanics of the service or to attempt to trace the orbit of the fly skating on the bald spot of a man in the pew ahead.

Some participants in every church service, by reason of their duties in the service, can't always close their eyes and give 100 per cent attention to public prayer. Ushers must watch for latecomers and direct them so that they do not disturb those who are already worshiping. Musicians may have to open the pages of music and arrange them for easy turning; organists may have to rearrange the organ registration. But the people who have nothing to do but join in the service have no excuse for a wandering of attention during public prayer. I have noted that some churches prescribe the posture of prayer—kneeling—during the public prayer and even for personal prayer in the church. But I have also observed that even a kneeling congregation can be very busy with eyes and ears and minds elsewhere, even while the lips mechanically form the words of a ritual service or a prayer.

IT IS POSSIBLE to pray with the eyes open, with the hands busy at something else. It is possible to work and pray for the success of that work at the same time. It is possible to read and study with the mind while the spirit prays for light and guidance and understanding of what is being read. But this takes practice and discipline, and not all people have the capacity or take the pains and time to achieve this sort of discipline. I once had to learn to write radio scripts in a room with seven desks, five typewriters, five telephones, a loud speaker, and a news teletype just outside the door—but I still prefer a room by myself. I suppose that a woman can sew with all the children under foot, asking questions and playing with the pattern, materials, and sewing machine; but I have observed that when my wife has a particularly difficult piece of sewing or dress-remodeling to do, she waits until the children are in bed and then goes off into a room by herself to wrestle with the problem. Inventors and scientists don't do their work on the sidewalk at a corner like Twelfth and Main in Kansas City or Times Square in New York; they retire into a laboratory and shut the door.

If we are particularly gifted in that way, and if the need arises, any of us may be obligated to voice a public prayer, which necessarily must be performed in the presence of other people. Jesus did not forbid public prayer when the occasion demanded it; but he did caution against public prayer for wrong motives—to be seen and heard of men in pride and haughtiness and superiority. It is better—in fact, it is essential—that personal prayer (as distinguished from congregational prayer) be done in private. "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door," shutting out all outside noise and distraction, "pray to thy Father."

This same principle of "shutting the door" should likewise apply to public or congregational prayer. Public prayer, to be effective, must be joined and participated in by every member of the congregation. And no one in that congregation can join fully if his eyes and ears are open to all the distractions, all the sights and sounds around him—if the mind is pulled away to here and there, if no active, conscious, willful attention is paid to the content of the prayer that is being uttered. Worshipers in a public service should bow their heads (or kneel) and close their eyes for the same reason that a writer shuts the door before he tries to write, or a scientist or inventor shuts the door of his laboratory before he begins to concentrate on his science and invention—for the same reason that a woman shuts the door of the sewing room before she tackles a difficult problem of dressmaking.

It is not enough to go to the closet of prayer and leave the door open so that you won't miss anything which is going on outside while you pray. Notice that Jesus says, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet." That is the first thing to do, but you are not ready to pray yet. "When thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father." When you have shut out the noises and distractions of the outside world, you are ready to pray. Similarly, it is not enough to go to church if you keep eyes and ears cocked so as not to miss anything that is happening outside. When you go to church and the time comes to participate in public prayer, "Shut the door." Close your eyes. Shut out the distractions that would cause your mind to wander. Join heart and mind and spirit in the prayer being offered. And when all learn to do this, God can reward such congregations richly and openly.

He who tries to do good stands knocking at the door, but he who loves finds the door open.—Tagore.

People who put on false fronts usually balance them with big arrears.—Wellman L. France, in Saturday Evening Post.

The Guiding Hand

A true incident told by a member of the priesthood. The name is fictional.

IT WAS ONE of those days when little irritating things continually pop up to prevent a person from accomplishing the tasks set apart for that particular day. Irvin Mann of the State Extension Department found the drive he was to make being "put off" momentarily, so it was late afternoon before he actually started on the trip scheduled for that morning. No need to hurry, for by the time he reached the destination, it would be too late to attend to the business of the day. So Mr. Mann drove leisurely along, meditating on life's problems.

As the car rounded a curve between Savannah and Maryville, a lone hitchhiker wearily trudging along attracted Mr. Mann's attention. He seldom picked up these foot travelers, and the curve was a dangerous one to stop on, but in spite of all the odds, there seemed to be a compelling force stronger than all else that caused him to stop the car.

"Good evening, sir. Would you like a ride?" Mr. Mann invited as he took note of the man's neat appearance and his only baggage—a radio.

Then as the travelers turned to step into the car and Mr. Mann looked into his face and eyes, his heart went out in sympathy. For in the stranger's eyes, Mr. Mann saw a sick soul, weary with heartache and worry, bewildered with unanswered problems. The anguish in his face cried out for sympathetic understanding.

Seeking to find a key to the seat of his trouble, Mr. Mann asked cautiously, "Traveling rather light, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir," the traveler answered wearily. Then after a few moments of silence, he continued, "There is a story back of this radio." Little by little, the story unfolded.

The man was a World War veteran and had been in the veteran's hospital for several months. During those months, he had looked forward to the day when he would once more be with his wife in his own home—the home he had established twenty years before. Then, after seemingly endless days and nights, he was released from the hospital. But there had been no happy reunion when he reached home. The bleakness that greeted him as he opened the door in glad anticipation was even worse than the months of pain and hours of loneliness in the hospital. The house was empty, absolutely void of everything—clothing, furniture, everything—but "this little radio." Gone were the dreams, the plans, and even the wife he had loved these long years. Crushed and bewildered, he had spent two days attempting to understand why his companion had deserted him. Even more discreditable was learning that she had gone with another man—gone and left only "this little radio" to link the past with the present. After spending tortuous hours, wondering and worrying, he had decided to go to relatives in Omaha.

MR. MANN was deeply touched by the story and wondered what he might say or do to relieve the mental anguish of the traveler. He began talking to him about God, his sympathetic nature, broad understanding, and great love. Then he related some of his personal experiences.

Yes, the traveler believed in God and had been reared by religious parents, but he had never affiliated himself with any denomination, for he did not want to be a hypocrite, and he doubted that he could stand in his own strength against the wiles of the world.

As they traveled along, the Spirit of God descended on the car and Mr. Mann stopped and asked the stranger if he might pray for him. As he prayed, the outpouring of God's Spirit seemed to fill the car. The traveler began to cry—tears of spiritual anguish, remorse, and weariness fell from his eyes. But as he wept, his load was lifted.

When they reached the road where they must part and go their separate ways, Mr. Mann was prompted by the Spirit to give the traveler some money. Without hesitancy, he took ten dollars from his billfold and handed it to the wayfarer. He accepted the bill with deep appreciation, but asked, "Why do you do so much for me?"

"Because the Spirit of God has made known to me what I should do," Mr. Mann answered.

Thoughtfully the stranger asked for his name and address so that he might at some future time repay the loan. Mr. Mann had endeavored to make him realize that what had been done was in accordance with God's will, but he obligingly complied with the request. Then with a handclasp of newfound fellowship, the traveler told Mr. Mann "Good-by," and continued on his way, taking with him the little radio—and God!

A Double Life

By RUBY TINKHAM

SEVERAL YEARS AGO there was a movie based on "The Picture of Dorian Gray," by Oscar Wilde, in which a young man had his portrait painted. As he stood before it, admiration showing plainly on his handsome face, he wished that he might always stay exactly as the painting revealed him. In fact, he said to himself, "I'd give my soul if I never need grow any older than that picture."

Oddly enough, that is exactly what happened to him. As the years went by he stayed young and handsome, but something horrible kept happening to the portrait. The first cruelty he perpetrated brought a hard, cynical smile to the once engaging mouth of the picture.

Finally the thing became an obsession with him and, no longer able to bear the sight of it hanging on the wall, he hid it carefully away in the attic where he could steal up and look at it after he had committed some horrible sin.

Finally it became a loathsome, frightening thing with blood dripping from its fingers, sparse, coarse hair hanging over a low beetle brow, pockmarks and scars on the beastlike face, and a toothless smile that was calacious and full of lust.

One day in frenzied rage at the realization that he had traded his soul for perpetual youth, and well aware that his soul strikingly resembled the portrait, he drew a knife and plunged it into the picture.

You can guess what happened. When he tried to murder it, he killed not his soul, which is indestructible, but his own physical body lay on the floor dead, and the picture took on the beautiful attributes in had once possessed.

I SOMETIMES think it would be no more than our just dues if once a year we were forced to look upon our spiritual bodies as separate entities. All those telltale lines resulting from accumulated bad habits and dissipations would assume enormous proportions on that gleaming purity of the plastic soul.

I am sure that the gloating expression we see pictured so often on the diabolical face of the devil is because he has the ability to see us spiritually and notes with ecstatic satisfaction how he can entice us repeatedly to spiritual destruction with simple, disarming physical habits.

If you and I were forced to face our spiritual selves and note from time to time the ravages of unconcerned living, I am sure we would be shocked and ashamed. We would remember that this is the way God sees us all the time!

Some of the soldiers who came back from Europe after viewing firsthand the desecration done over there tell a story of how they found churches deliberately vandalized and literally hacked to pieces.

Beards were wantonly smeared on the Virgin Mary and obscene language crudely written across Christ's face. Paintings and tapestries were used to wipe mud and filth off dirty boots, and empty liquor bottles were broken defiantly across targets of sacred altars.

One boy who had never attended church at all said angrily, "They didn't need to destroy it. They did it on purpose."

I wonder if someday our physical body won't have to stand and listen while someone sadly says about our spiritual self, "You didn't need to destroy it. You did it on purpose."

CHRIST WAS SO CONCERNED about our spiritual bodies that he was always careful to show that physical healing was the result of spiritual cleanness. You can be sure that he would not save a man's body unless his soul was worth saving first.

It was always, "Thy faith hath made thee whole," or, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Always, "Ye must believe that I am the Son of God, and that I have the power to intercede for thee with my Father." Always, "Thy sins must be forgiven by that same Father and thy spirit made clean and whole again before the temple which houses that soul can be made new."

Christ would no more house an evil spirit in a perfect body than he would a clean spirit in a defiled body. Nor would we desire it so. The point is that faith in God and his forgiveness automatically bring about a new spirit, and then the new physical body comes by necessity.

By the way, forgiveness here involves more than just the mere act of repentance. Repentance is not enough. We must not only resolve to leave the old sin behind, but we must also make a sincere resolution to replace it with some act of constructive good. Even this is not enough, for every sin leaves in its wake a trail of accumulated evil, and real repentance includes an honest endeavor to clean up the mess we have made.

After we have replaced this sin with some good habit and made amends to the society we have betrayed, then and then only are we entitled to ask our Father for the forgiveness he is so patiently waiting to grant us.

The important thing is not to get the cart before the horse. Even God cannot rearrange our mistaken ideas about healing until we are ready and willing to make the preparation necessary ourselves.

I CAN SEE JESUS after one of his miraculous healings. The man, who has just been healed, is running joyously down the street calling excitedly to his friends, "See, I am well again! Look, I can walk! I can talk! My skin is clean!" He looks often over his shoulder at the Master standing there quietly with a slow smile transfiguring his benign

The Immortality of Ministry

An address given on Sunday, October 3, at the Stone Church in memory of the seventy-seven members of the high priesthood of the entire church who died in the interconference period.

WHEN WE MEET to honor those of our number who have rendered their "last full measure of devotion," we may find more occasion to rejoice than to mourn. We rejoice that we have known such men, had their fellowship, received of their ministry. We rejoice that they fought the good fight and kept the faith.

HOW CAN WE EXPLAIN TRAGIC BEREAVEMENTS?

Yet, being human, we are shocked and grieved at the sometimes seemingly untimely and tragic death of comrades in arms, dearly loved friends. We are thinking now, for example, of the death of Brother Hermann Peisker, who came from far-off Australia expecting to attend this Conference with us; instead, he sleeps in Zion not far from the graves of Presidents Joseph and Frederick M. Smith.

Our hearts are yet sore because of the tragic death of our beloved Apostle George Lewis. Sometimes such unexpected bereavements baffle and confuse the Saints. I have heard them say that the death of Brother Lewis baffled them, and they have asked me, "How do you explain such a tragedy?"

My answer is that I do not attempt to explain such tragedies, except, perhaps, in part. If we could understand all of God's plans and motives—why he does this or fails to do that—he would be a very small God, no bigger than you, no bigger than me. I remember, too, that even Christ at times seemed baffled. When he hung on the cross, in the extremity of his agony and humiliation, he cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Why? Why? That is the age-old cry of humanity. If Jesus could not understand, how may we hope to understand and explain all the things that baffle those who suffer and grieve? Yet Jesus soon recovered himself and said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my Spirit." If there were times when he could not understand, how may we hope always to understand? Yet with him we may trust ourselves in God's hands—even though it be in the garden of Gethsemane or on a cross that we learn to say, "Not my will but thine be done."

THEIR MINISTRY CONTINUES IN THE BEYOND

The ministry of Jesus did not end at his death. It continued. May we not find consolation today in the belief that the ministry of his ordained servants will continue even after death?

Perhaps more often than we know the tragedies that disrupt our lives are not without forewarning. Evangelist R. V. Hopkins told friends that his ministry was about to end. He continued his work even to the night of his death. He talked to the Fellowship Group in the evening, went home and to bed and to sleep. His work was done, and he was prepared.

Sometime last spring while Sister George Lewis was at work in her kitchen, she was forewarned that George was not to be with her very much longer. She told this to a few friends, who verify her testimony. She was given warning and time to make an adjustment. We were taken by surprise—God was not. I was talking with Brother Lewis's oldest daughter, Alice, and found she, too, had made her adjustment. She said, "Daddy went away on missions so often that it seems that he has only gone on another mission." She verily believes that such is the case, and that he has gone on another mission. His work is not ended.

Section seventy-six in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants rather clearly indicates that ministry shall continue in the next world. Those of the celestial glory are to minister to those of a lower glory, and they in turn to those of the still lesser glory.

Some of our men gifted in music will find their service with the heavenly choirs. In imagination, I can hear F. G. Pitt singing, "God is so good to me." But some of us cannot sing at all. We will not be content to sit and wear a crown. We may need a period of rest. John heard a voice from heaven saying, "Write, blessed are they who die in the Lord, for they shall rest from their labors and their works do follow them." But if I know this ministry, and I think I do, few of them will wish to rest too long. They will desire service. It shall be as here, their service shall be "according to the gifts of God unto them" according to their interests and talents. So, in imagination, I can see George Lewis presently in his apostolic calling, supervising a mission to some group of persons who never heard Christ adequately preached here on earth.

THEIR MINISTRY CONTINUES ALSO WITH US

There is another side to this question of the immortality or continuity of ministry. The ministry of those good men now departed goes on in others. Out of my own experience, I know that many men of a past generation ministered to me in my earlier days. Men like Joseph and Alexander Smith, Joseph Lambert—who preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon I ever heard—and many others of more recent times through whose ministry my life has been enriched. You, too, have in you the record of the ministry of other men that still lives in you and from you is passed on to others.

During the interconference period, a good and faithful minister on the Pacific coast died, Brother Lewis Shippy. He and his wife had purchased a home in Zion, just across the street from my home. They had hoped to share it together. That hope was denied and Sister Shippy came on without him. But his work had not ended. In his memory, a granddaughter of Heman C. and Vida E. Smith's, Nelda Inslee Thompson, wrote a poem, the first verse of which splendidly illustrates the thought of the continuity of ministry. I quote:

There is no dark where he has been,
For he has lighted lamps that still abide.
Lamps that shall glow from deep within Hearts of men he walked beside.

May we, too, as our best tribute to those men gone on before, light other lamps in the hearts of those with whom we walk.

Of Life and Death

By Kathryn C. Metz

WE seldom pause in the midst of life to examine our personal credo, to become acquainted with our own set of beliefs and to put them down into words.

Most of the time we are content to announce with piety that we "believe" in a life hereafter, and we rest our case there. Occasionally, however, a tragic death shocks us into realizing that our "belief in a hereafter" is not nearly so important as our belief in now. Because our very hope of a good life to come depends upon a good life here . . . and now.

And a good life does not depend upon years. Some become old between suns, and some suffer a lifetime in a day. Time means but little, because a useless life, however long, is really only an early death.

Yes, life is more than years. It is a journey, although many use it as a stopping place along the way—a sort of wayside inn where we mark time. It is a long road, and to travel it one must set a good pace and keep at it. Some travel farther along the way in a year than others do in a dozen, thus we note again that the time element is of little value when measuring a span of life.

For some, life is over in a little while, although they continue to eat, sleep and occupy space upon the universe. They are absorbed by a living death, because they have ceased to develop abilities and interests.

On the other hand, life is a long experience and a vital thing to those who pour something interesting and fine into every crevice, however cramped the space.

Life is an adventure, yet many persons fail to find it so and live in a humdrum existence. They miss the high excitement that comes through new experiences, exploring strange fields of service and performing brave acts of courage.

Life is a business. It requires good judgment, constant labor, and keen insight. It takes planning on a long-time scale and not from daylight to dark.

And finally, life is a book. In time each of us will have the humble experience of comparing the story we hoped to write with the volume we have actually authored. And who is to say that a long, dull volume is to be desired over a bright, interesting, and brief story that sparkles and holds the attention of those who are still writing in the Book of Life!—From "Between You and Me," in the Lamoni Chronicle.

The Word of Wisdom and Modern Research

A hungry, undernourished people are a half sick people, physically, mentally, and spiritually. They are the real menace to our republic. Through their apathy, their ignorance, their lack of intelligence, their stunted social judgment (conscience), their sexual immaturity, and their emotional instability they are an easy prey for the psychopathic compatriots among the professions, politicians, and labor leaders. Of such are bloody revolutions and wars made. Therefore let us quit quarreling about details and get down to fundamentals! A sound nutritional program for all, based upon a sound and prosperous agriculture . . . will keep our people free and save our Republic!—Jonathan Forman, M.D., Editor, Ohio State Medical Journal.

IF THE PROBLEM of proper nutrition is important to the welfare of our country, it is doubly so to the church. We are called to life on a higher spiritual and intellectual level than the world about us cares to pay the price to achieve. The Word of Wisdom gives us a great deal of information concerning proper nutrition. True, it was not given by way of commandment. Why should it be necessary to command us to do something which will benefit us? No one needs to command me to turn the light on when I enter a dark room. I know there is the law of electricity waiting to serve me—that if I press the button I shall have light. Would I not be foolish to stumble about in the darkness, refusing to press the button? In the Word of Wisdom, God has revealed to us certain laws of nutrition. We would be foolish to ignore them.

Joseph Smith could not possibly have anticipated the discoveries of the past twenty years which have corroborated the information given in Section 86. This should increase one's faith in the gospel.

This "revelation of the mind and will of God" is a "principle with promise." We are told that if we keep these sayings and walk in obedience to the commandments, we not only shall have health, run and be not weary, and escape the destroying angel, but also shall find great hidden treasures of knowledge. It seems that such a wonderful promise in itself would entice me to refrain from the use of alcohol, tobacco, tea, coffee, or any other food or drink which I suspected might be injurious to health of mind or body. It should also cause me to scrutinize carefully my dietary habits in the light of the best scientific knowledge of the day, measuring this knowledge by the revelations of God.

I suppose none of us have the perfect interpretation of the Word of Wisdom. "The principle" was the raw material God gave us to line us up with truth; had our ancestors faithfully adhered to all the laws of the church, and had we as consistently kept them, we might have had our own great laboratories in which to build upon this principle. We might have had, by this time, more knowledge than the world has about the relationship of foods to health. Our experimentation could not have been aided by the spirit of revelation. Men of research agree that we have only begun to discover the relationships between the soil, plant, and animal life and our own well-being. But if we interpret the revelation as literally as possible and try to obey its suggestions, an abundant vitality of body and mind and spirit can be realized. The blessings are all out of proportion to the cost of obedience.

What the Word of Wisdom is NOT

The Word of Wisdom is not an end in itself. It is not a religion in itself. I have known some who, after many years of illness and suffering, gained such beneficial results from the keeping of the Word of Wisdom that no other part of the gospel seemed important. This is a mistake—the opposite extreme of not keeping it at all. The Word of Wisdom is only a tool to help us attain higher levels of living and thinking that we might more efficiently function as the "light of the world," "an ensign to the nations." In this connection, we should consider the "rider" contained in the promises to those who shall keep the Word of Wisdom "walking in obedience to the commandments." This means we should not only follow the dietary suggestions of Section 86, but also pay our tithing, attend church, keep the moral and financial laws, be temperate in all things, go to bed and arise early, be cheerful in our warfare, and so on.

Bread

Grain is ordained to be the staff of life, and wheat is particularly for the use of man, although other grains can be used also. Here I would like to call attention to the fact that "wheat" and

By May Elliott

"White flour" are not synonymous. Dr. Jonathan Forman says:

There are too many socially minded persons spending too much time and too much energy in planning how to get more care for more sickness. All of this energy should be directed into teaching our people the importance of a good diet, and to seeing that their eating habits are changed to conform to what we already know about nutrition.

It is my personal opinion that we defeat our own program by forcing the so-called enrichment program on the food industry. It is dishonest and un-American and quite inconsistent with all of the other things that we teach.

Dr. Clive M. McCay, Professor of Nutrition, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, in an article titled, "Food For the Aged," says:

The statement is often made that people will not eat dark breads. We forget that the major food item of both the Russian and German armies during the past war consisted of dark, heavy breads. At the Naval medical center in Bethesda, Maryland, several studies were made of breads selected by naval officers and men when they had a choice of rye, whole wheat, and white bread. The officers selected several times as much of the dark breads as they did the white, while the enlisted men reversed the ratio. This was probably a reflection of education, since the officers were largely from the medical staff with some training in foods and nutrition.

I could quote many authorities to prove that whole wheat bread is fundamentally better for human health than any other. Many people not of our church have found that grinding their own wheat for bread brings huge dividends in health. Most of them also discard white sugar and use either unrefined brown sugar or honey.

"You have to buck the white sugar manufacturers, the white flour manufacturers, and it is probably only through foundations that Mr. Sloan has set up that the people will eventually get the true facts," concluded a member of the Public Conference on Nutrition, sponsored by the Chicago Medical Society.

Commercialism

Only under the system of free enterprise can a people or a church enjoy the other freedoms essential to the exercise of agency. God knew this, and I think that is why he told us to build Zion in America. He knew that only where liberty flourished could his kingdom

a home column feature

come to full flower. However, where the good enjoy privileges, evil and designing men are there, too, taking advantage of liberal laws and preying upon society. So it is true that we cannot believe all advertising. One might well ask, "If I use this product, who stands to benefit most from it?"

My little girl has a book with a story about a lion who tried to sell a goat the idea that he should come down into the valley where the lion was. The grass in the lowlands was rank and green, while pastures on the heights where the goat stood were poor. But the goat politely insisted upon remaining where he was, for he was certain that the lion was not much concerned about whether he ate well, but was anticipating a good meal of goat flesh for his own supper.

After discussing the loss to society from illness and disability caused by lack of proper nutrition, John P. O'Neil, M.D., Chairman of the Chicago Medical Society Committee on Nutrition, stated:

All this is the devastating, deplorable, and constantly ignored fact despite the belief of most of us that we partake of a diet that is ample enough and, God knows, costs enough to keep a blue ribboned cow, steer, horse, pig, lamb, goat, chicken, turkey, sheep, etc., in the charmed circle of winning excellence all the time. As a matter of brute fact—these perfect specimens are the faultless, unblemished, grand champions they are BECAUSE THEY CAN'T READ ADVERTISING! You will see animals reject food near at hand and walk miles to obtain foods grown on perfect soils. The brute animal has only instinct to guide it, and obeys, unerringly, the laws of nature with the result that—barring accident or infection—it, in its natural habitat, attains perfect physical well-being. Man—God's supposed masterpiece—is endowed with a fine brain and inspiration, but seemingly he uses neither and as a result shortens his years, decreases his efficiency, lowers his earning power—moans, groans, yells to high heaven for help—and continues to cherish his false ideas. Man curses and damns himself because he unquestioningly accepts and believes so many things that are not so! The one factor which has always prevented individuals, races, nations and governments from gaining knowledge is the counterfeit idea that they already possess it—that they know all there is to know!

True, we have pure food laws. The federal government has one which concerns itself largely with interstate traffic. States have laws, too. Do you know anything about the ones in your state? Did you ever hear of the letter of the law being kept, while the spirit of the law was thwarted? We are never fully protected from law violators, law evaders. Ask any dentist what he thinks of the tooth-paste, toothbrush ads. Ask any reputable physician what he thinks of the ads for tobacco and whisky. There is certainly a possibility that we may be fooled by some of the food advertising. Then there are patent medicines and vitamins. The American public spends millions of dollars yearly for vitamin preparations. Yet some very good authorities say an overdose of certain vitamins can be definitely harmful; others say never to take them without the advise of a physician.

We should form the habit of thinking and judging things for ourselves, rather than letting a voice on the airwaves or a clever artist direct our decisions.

Diet and Achievement

Dr. O'Neil says further:

Age is a condition of the mind. Clear thinking, the retaining of youthful ambitions, the urge to live, the unquenchable longing for greater achievements rests inexorably upon our physical well-being. All of us have known people who died in their twenties, but were not buried until their fifties and sixties.

Now and then, we see persons who are stricken by affliction yet retain strength of character and spirituality, sometimes to a very marked degree. But they are exceptions, and undoubtedly they would be able to shine like stars in their achievements were the added vitality of glowing health bestowed upon them.

Very often when we probe the history of some man or woman who has lived a long life and accomplished a great deal, we find that he had a liking for simple, natural foods and observed other fine health habits.

Appetite

Some do not have an appetite for whole grain breads and cereals; some do not like fruits or vegetables or other articles of wholesome, natural food. But you can satisfy your appetite and your body can still be hungry—even starving—for certain elements you do not crave or have not learned to like. An adult can learn to like foods just as a baby can—by tasting a little every day and deliberately setting himself the task of learning to enjoy the article in question.

Dr. A. C. Ivy, M.D., Ph.D., Vice-president of the University of Illinois Professional Colleges and head of the Department of Clinical Science, says:

I should like to point out and emphasize how some of the bad features of appetite predispose to poor nutrition, to disease, and make food more expensive. . . . Food fads and fancies and commercially produced food appetites may lead to nutritional deficiencies and poor health. In some instances the appetite has been so modified by custom that people have been led to prefer a food with the vitamins and minerals refined out of it to the natural food. For example, the appetite of most of us has been so trained that we absurdly demand that flour be refined to such an extent that we have to add minerals and vitamins to make the flour a desirable food. We go to the expense of milling vitamins and minerals out of the flour and to the still further expense of putting them back in again.

The food economist must condemn such a procedure.

Our nutritional problems arise chiefly from our appetites and arise in the presence of plenty. They are due to undisciplined and pampered appetites and to appetites for unnatural foods created for taste and eye appeal, both of which contribute to the waste and the cost of food.

That is not to say that simple, natural foods cannot be served in an attractive and appealing manner. They can be.

Our Creed

We have a wonderful creed: "All Truth." Section 86 speaks of evils and designs that "do and will exist" in these latter days. A little study of the works of thoughtful men of science, such as those quoted above, will prove to us that evil and designing men are at work in this world, and while there are many individuals whom we can trust, we must be alert to judge which are true and which are false. Then we must be brave enough to stand by the truth once we have found it. When we line ourselves up with truth, we have God and the most powerful forces of the universe for our allies. It has always cost something for an individual to stand for the truth. It cost Jesus his life; it cost Joseph Smith his life; but they gained more than they lost, and so shall we if we have courage to stand by our creed.

Daniel had that kind of courage. He did not cater to the big interests. He ate the kind of foods that kept his body as clean within as he wanted it clean without. We are not told how much money he had, but he did have a rich life.

One time he fasted and prayed a special prayer. A messenger from God came and told him that from the first day he had set about to discipline himself, his prayer was heard. Another angel touched him and said: "Oh, man greatly beloved, fear not. . . . Be strong, yea, be strong." And he was strengthened so that he could receive what God wished him to receive. You cannot buy such an experience with anything you might lose by standing for truth.

We need to build Zion as we perhaps never before had the need. We need to be strong. Adherence to the principles of the Word of Wisdom can be the foundation, physically, for such strength.

NOTE: There are many government and state bulletins, also pamphlets put out by various universities, which agree with and confirm the authorities' opinions which I have quoted. I chose to quote entirely from a book, Food and You, published by the Milk Foundation, 28 East Huron Street, Chicago, which is a report of the Public Conference on Nutrition sponsored by the Chicago Medical Society. Anyone who wishes may check the quotations and find much good in reading the entire treatise.

Awake to Righteousness

A radio address delivered over Station KVOO, Tulsa, Oklahoma, as one in a series sponsored by the Ministerial Alliance.

By LESLIE W. KOHLMAN

IF THE PROBLEMS which are ours today are to be solved, Christianity must play a major part in solving them. And this, as one great church body recently stated, calls for "a Christianity that is undiluted." The situation demands that we find out exactly what Jesus would like us to do. We believe that if any man wants to do right, he cannot do better than to follow Christ.

First, then, we are saying that if we are to "awake to righteousness," it is that we shall come to live in new appreciation and understanding and knowledge of Jesus, our Lord and Savior and Redeemer. There is no resource comparable to Jesus Christ, for "other foundation can no man lay" by which man can come to have the more abundant life. He is the unspeakable gift of God, given because he loved us, and given "that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life." No one has had the courage or the insight to augment or redirect the leadership which Jesus gives. Through his perfect life, he gave new meaning to home and life, to work and friendship, to pleasure and pain. Thus, Jesus lives and reigns with an authority which grows stronger as men know him better. Only by turning afresh to him in simple trust can the Christian and the church recover the secret of God's power to reach and transform this time into "God's time."

Dr. E. Stanley Jones writes, "We cannot live upon a remembrance, however beautiful. We can only live upon a realization."

The great secret of the early disciples' rich and vigorous spiritual life lay in their nearness to Jesus. They had no doubts about him. They knew the Christ of history and of experience. Thus, Paul wrote, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

God, in seeking to teach us of himself, gave us his Son to whom we can turn whenever we lack understanding. In him we see life more truly and understand its purposes and its direction. If this were not so, then we would ask even as Peter once asked, "Lord, to whom shall we go?"

SECOND, if we are to "awake to righteousness," we must have a new appreciation and understanding and knowledge of the Gospel of Christ, which, Paul testified unashamedly, "is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed through faith on his name." The fact of the gospel is not for institutional bias but for revealing to man the correct way of life. It is "good news" offered to man for his highest well-being.

Jesus came preaching the gospel of the kingdom, which is the "good news" of love, and setting before us this one primary objective: "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness." In all the ministry of Jesus, we discover a prophecy of the kingdom, a testimony revealing to us the will of God, and how he would have mankind order itself that it might not perish, but live.

Consider the time when Jesus fed the multitude with the five loaves and two fishes. There were many people needing to be fed, and, according to the understanding of men, there was not food enough to feed them. The disciples offered to go and seek more food. But Jesus forbade them, instructing them to gather the people together and organize them in groups of fifties. Then he moved to make proper distribution of the five loaves and two fishes, according as each man had need. After feeding them, there was left over food sufficient to fill twelve baskets.

TODAY we witness many who are in need of the basic necessities of life, and there is present throughout the world distress and turmoil. Surely this need not be. If we understand the revelation manifested in this experience of Jesus with the multitude, it is that there is present upon this earth sufficient and some to spare of the physical necessities of life. The Lord has revealed unto us through his servant the prophet that "the earth is full, and there is enough, and some to spare."

Today we find the word of the prophet being vindicated. Men of state and of science have declared respectively, "Let us take the main facts. The first fact is this—that poverty is not the fault of Providence. Providence has provided an abundance." "Natural and synthetic processes assure the entire world of sufficient food, clothing, fuel, power, and even luxuries for centuries to come." This being true, it is apparent that our next step is to gather together and organize ourselves and administer our wealth according as each man has need. In so doing, we shall discover not only that there is enough to care for everyone's need but also that there will be some to spare. According to the statement of scientists, the basic need and even luxuries can be supplied for centuries to come.

THE GOSPEL offers man a significance in his situation which transcends the bounds of historical processes. But man cannot live upon the memory of this beautiful story of the gospel of love. To live and to have life more abundantly, he must come to repent from dead works and move out in the exercise of a faith toward God, embodying his word in every act and deed. Thus man can realize the will of God being done here upon the earth, and the peace and security he seeks can be his everlastingly.

In this age, the Christian conscience issues a call to all men to repentance. Men must awaken out of sleep, and become alert to righteousness, casting off the works of darkness. The situation throughout the world is critical, and time does appear to be running out as we witness the ever-increasing manifestations of those signs which Christ stated would appear just prior to his second coming. But we are not without hope, for our problems can be solved in the exercise of our Christian faith, and Christianity must play a major part in solving them. Let us accept Christ and have faith in him, believing in his gospel and implementing it into our lives that we may be free.

THE INVITATION is from Jesus himself: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." For "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me. And now for a man to take up his cross, is to deny himself all ungodliness, and every worldly lust, and keep my commandments. Break not my commandments, for to save your lives; for whosoever will save his life in this world, shall lose it in the world to come. And whosoever will lose his life in this world, for my sake, shall find it in the world to come. Therefore, forsake the world, and save your souls; for what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

What we are called to do today is not

Start Where You Are

By RUTH SELZER

HAVE YOU DECIDED whether to accept yourself as done for or as potentially a worth-while person? If you have decided on the former, you need not read further, because you are definitely satisfied with yourself and do not intend to change. Regardless of whether you are ten or eighty, you should be dissatisfied with yourself at each level of your development to such an extent that you are constantly hoping to change for the better.

One of the ablest women in this country was brought up in poverty. She was fourteen before she started to school. One time she complained to her mother about her hardships, and her mother turned on her and said, "See here, I have given you life. That is about all I will ever be able to give you—life. Now you stop complaining and do something with it." She did. She is a university graduate and the wife of a university president. We can readily assume she continues to find life a challenge to become better.

Religion teaches us that life is a sacred trust. Whatever else has been given to us, the ability to become a worth-while person is our inescapable stewardship. If we fail at that, we fail completely; if we succeed, we succeed supremely. Religion is no downy cushion to lay our life upon. It is a basis for hopeful adventure and a source of power for impossible. Christianity can be lived in the midst of the manifold evils which surround us by day and by night, for it has been lived amid even greater evils. Christ took a body such as we have to demonstrate once and for all the possibility of carrying a godlike character into every human relationship and every human need. Let us not forget that to Jesus was given "all power," and to his disciples he said, "Go ye therefore," and to "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." The kingdom is sure, as well as our salvation, if we are willing to pay the price and "awake to righteousness."

undertaking the responsibility of developing our life's patterns into something worth-while.

Noah, in the play, "Green Pastures," says, "I ain't very much, but I've all I got." That is the place to start. With self-respect and humbleness, we accept ourselves as we are at the moment. Are we going to live this day better than yesterday, and tomorrow even better? He who accepts that task is on the main road of his creation's meaning and is accepting his life as a sacred trust. There will be troubles, hardships, deficiencies, and perhaps even moral failures along the road, for these are the raw materials from which worth-while personalities are made. Religion does not promise us genius, freedom from hardship, or world success, but it does say to each of us, "Whatever you fail at, you need not fail at becoming worth-while."

BE THANKFUL human nature is plastic—that no man need stay the way he is. As a desert is irrigated, it can become fertile; so seemingly hopeless cases of personal failure can be remedied. Personalities become set sometimes, making the remodeling process difficult and painful. Occasionally we need reconstruction, not always because we are at loose ends, but because we are organized and set like plaster in a mold. Once a young man held by a habit that was ruining his entire life came to the minister saying, "I do not believe in God, but if you do, for God's sake pray for me—I need him." The fact that he is a good citizen and a Christian today is evidence that we can repattern our lives and that remodeling of personalities is possible.

Faith in a God who cares, belief in the judgment of someone higher than man who looks upon the heart, recognition of a power beyond ourselves, discovery that prayer supplies us with a steady flow of sustaining power in our daily lives, faith in a goal, certainty that every person counts, and belief that becoming worth-while is of more than temporal concern are the factors that bear a strong influence on the individual who is deciding to accept himself as done for or as potentially a vital part of the kingdom of God. As Wordsworth put it, "So build we up the being that we are."

—man knows partly but conceives beside Creeps ever on from fancies to the fact,
And in this striving, this converting air
Into a solid he may grasp and use, Finds progress, man's distinctive mark alone,
Not God's, and not the beast's: God is,
they are,
Man partly is and wholly hopes to be.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. Ernest B. Blett of 3836 Lorraine Street, S. W., Grand Rapids, Michigan, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Sunday, August 1. They were married on July 30, 1898, at Lansing, Michigan. Brother Welch was also baptized into the Reorganized Church on that day. He is the present editor of the Southkent News and has been the founder of several other newspapers in western Michigan. He began by printing a poultry magazine, after which he edited the Belding Star and papers at Fedwick, Ravenna, Conklin, Farwell, Freeland and Rosebush. During the time J. A. Gunsolley was president of Graceland, Brother Blett organized a self-help department for worthy students. Upon returning to Michigan, he established the Grandville Star and the United Weeklies, now known as the Shopping News.

The Bletts have seven children: Mrs. Vernon Baldwin, Mrs. Roland Cole, George and Ray Blett of Grand Rapids, Donald of Chicago, Illinois; Ernest of Detroit, Michigan; and Robert of Green Lake, Michigan.

Ida Smallwood, Route 1, Tarwill, Indiana, cannot attend church because she is confined to her home. In renewing her subscription, she writes her appreciation of the church, and would like to hear from those who have time to write.

A Thanksgiving Service

Organ Prelude

(As prelude is played, pastor and reader enter rostrum and sit on each side of table, which is covered with a lace cloth.)

Hymn No. 428, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," Congregation

Invocation:

With thankful hearts we come, O Lord,
To worship thee this evening
And to count the blessings of the year
And raise our songs of Thanksgiving and praise.

We thank thee for the church, its glorious message

With its hope of life victorious.
We thank thee for its saints and martyrs
Bearing witness down the ages;
For the heroes of the cross,
Facing winter's cold or desert's burning heat;

We thank thee for fruits that have ripened in
The autumn sun. For all thy good gifts
We bring our thanks, dear Lord. Amen.

Following invocation, special instrumental solo may be used if desired. Pastor and reader both stand for readings.

Reader:

Praise ye the Lord. O give thanks unto the Lord: for he is good for his mercy endureth forever.

Pastor:

Long, long ago, the Pilgrim Fathers,
Driven by their urge for freedom, Sought this land, and in the clearing near the rock-bound coast,
Made their dwelling.
There they labored, there they suffered
Through the cold and dreary winter.
Dark were their hopes, and great were their longings.

But when the harvest came and the autumn time,
They called a day for feasting with the redmen of the forest,
There they praised God the Heavenly Father,
And with truly thankful hearts, they kept the glad

THANKSGIVING

Reader:

For Pilgrim Fathers who sailed the sea,
For sturdy pioneers who trod the wilderness,
For men and women who have lived and died
To make America, our country, free,
We thank thee, Lord.
Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord;
And the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance;
Righteousness exalteth a nation;
Behold, this is a choice land and whatsoever nation
Shall possess it shall be free from bondage and from captivity;
If it will but serve the God of the land who is Jesus Christ.

Trumpet or other instrumental solo,
"America, the Beautiful," No. 418

By HATTIE MAE BISHOP

(As solo is played, two boys in white choir robes march slowly down aisle to front, one carrying American Flag, one has church flag. They hand flags to pastor and reader who place them in stands on platform. Boys sit in chairs, which have been placed back of the pastor and reader, or retire to choir loft.)

Pastor:

For autumn's beauty,
For all the glory of the fields and forest,
When all the hills in grandeur stand
And blue haze touches the distant land,
For golden leaves,
For crimson leaves,
For leaves emblazoned with bronze,
We thank thee, Lord.

Reader:

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land,
For the precious things of heaven, for the dew,
For the precious fruits brought forth by the sun,
And for the precious things put forth by the moon,
And for the precious things of the lasting hills,
And for the precious things of the earth, and fullness thereof.

Let the people praise thee, O God;
Let all the people praise thee.
Then shall the earth yield her increase
And God, even our own God shall bless us.

Pastor:

For golden grains that bent their heads before the wind
And ripened on the hills of summer,
For gathered grain,
Harvested through the weary hours of labor
To become food to feed the hungry of the world,
We thank thee, Lord.

Quartet, Trio, or Duo, "For the Beauty of the Earth," No. 18

(Two boys in white robes march slowly down aisle. One brings greens, cedar, palms, etc., the other carries ears of corn or cornstalks. They hand them to pastor and assistant, who place them on table. Boys retire with preceding boys.)

Clarinet or other instrumental solo may be used at this time if desired.

Reader:

O give thanks unto the Lord for he is good;
For his mercy endureth forever.

Pastor:

For all the crops which bountiful nature brings;
For yields of fertile fields and garden plots;
And all the food to nourish life,
We thank thee, Lord.

Reader:

Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness,

And for his wonderful works to the children of men!

And let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving

And declare his works with rejoicing.

Solo, "What Fruit Have You Gathered,"

No. 221

(Two boys in white choir robes come to front, one has a tray of fruit, one a tray of vegetables. They pass them to pastor and assistant, who place them on table. Boys retire with other boys.)

Reader:

Oh, give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name;
Make known his deeds among the people;
Sing unto him; talk ye of all his wondrous works,
Glory ye in his holy name;
Let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord.

Pastor:

For all the beauties of thy world,
We thank thee, Lord.
For buds which open when spring is new,
And bring the message of returning life;
For flowers that gladden summer hours
And share their fragrant charm;
For blossoms that come when days grow short,
And bring their cheer at autumn time;
For all the flowers of the earth,
Blossoms which speak of thee,
We thank thee, Lord.

Solo, "Thank God for a Garden," Teresa Del Riego

Thank God for a garden, be it ever so small,
Thank God for the sunshine that comes flooding
it all!
Thank God for the flowers, for the rain and the dew,
Thank God for summer, and flowers, too.

Thank God for the sunrise, for the new morning bright,
Thank God for the sunset that is "Shepherd's delight,"
Thank God for the cornfields that grow so tall,
Thank God for flowers, thank God—FOR ALL!

(Boy in white robe brings bouquet or basket of flowers and hands them to pastor who places them on table.)

Reader:

Oh, how I love thy law,
It is my meditation all the day;
Thy word is a lamp unto my feet
And a light unto my path.

Pastor:

For the truth which thou hast given,
Through thy son who came to earth,
For his life, his glorious message,
For his death upon the cross,
For the hope he gives of heaven,
For the faith we have in thy Holy Word,
We thank thee, Lord.

Solo, "Holy Bible, Book Divine," tune, No. 76, "Sovereign and Transforming Grace"

(May be sung by pastor or reader.)

Holy Bible, book divine,
Precious treasure, thou art mine,
Mine to tell me whence I came,
Mine to teach me what I am.

Mine to comfort in distress,
Suffering in this wilderness,
Mine to show by living faith,
Man can triumph over death.

Mine to tell of joys to come
And of peace when day is done,
O, thou Holy Book divine,
Precious treasure, thou art mine.

(Choir boy slowly approaches, carrying a large open Bible, which is placed in center front on table with other offerings.)

Offertory

Offertory Prayer:

Help us to make this a true Thanksgiving week,
May we share our plenty with our needy brothers
In lands which suffer famine and devastation,
To build again the broken shrines,
To set the peoples free,
Freely ye have received, freely give.

(Following offertory, boys in choir robes rise and sing together, "We Plow the Fields and Scatter," No. 429.

countenance.

At same time, the inner man is shouting just as joyously, "Truly, I know for a certainty that this is the Son of God! I will give him the honor, the praise, and the glory forever. I will follow him willingly the rest of my life, and I will bring others that they, too, might see and believe!"

Christ, standing there in the hot sun with his hand laid softly on the head of a little child, would be silently communing with his Father.

"See, Father, it is well that we have healed him. This new spirit will bring others to believe."

And the Father would glance down at his Son and answer tenderly, "Yes, it is well." Then he would sigh a bit wistfully and add, "Oh, that all our work were this easy."

LETTERS

British Isles Mission Reunion

"The Great Restoration" was the theme of the reunion, and as each day's activities were entered into, we saw more clearly how the work of the Restoration can be brought to its completion. True, the gap between where we are and where we ought to be is very wide, but if we can each carry with us into the daily walk of our lives the spirit of the reunion, we shall lessen the gulf until it will be possible for the Master himself to come and dwell on earth again.

It was with regret that Apostle and Sister McConley could not attend, but the Lord indeed blessed us with an outstanding ministry through Brother Frank Fry and the brethren who worked with him during the week.

From the early hours of Saturday, visitors began to arrive from all parts of England, Holland, and Denmark; by 7 p.m., the church was well filled for the official welcome and a brief vesper service.

Sunday morning's worship began at 8 o'clock with a special prayer meeting for the members of the priesthood; at 10, a general Communion and fellowship service was held. The fine spirit prevalent was a foretaste of what we were to receive as we strove each day to climb the spiritual heights. In the afternoon, Seventy Albert Scherer of Holland gave an address on "What Has Been Restored."

As a prelude to the evening service, we were permitted to enjoy a brief period of song under the leadership of John Holmes. An augmented choir of some fifty voices, a solo by Seventy Glen Johnson, and a short time of hymnology, in the inimitable manner we have come to expect from Sister Gertrude Allen, made this a very fitting opening to the main preaching service. Brother Johnson, recently appointed to this Mission, was the speaker. In telling of the Restoration of the New Testament Church, he brought us an enlarged vision of the movement of the Hand of God to bring to pass his unchangeable purposes.

The order of each weekday program was the same, so we shall group together the various phases of worship, teaching, and recreation.

Each morning at 9 o'clock, members of the priesthood met. Those who attended the entire week testified to the uplift and benefit derived from these meetings.

Second hour classwork was divided into three sections. The young people were instructed by Eric Rowe. Practical means of reaching the Zionite goal, the place and purpose of the Three Standard Books, and functions of the priesthood in relation to these objectives were discussed. The men met each day with Brother Frank Fry for a series of lessons based on I Corinthians 12:28. At the same time, the women were instructed by Sisters Allen, Arrowsmith, Bailey and Fry. On the last day, each of the branch leaders present gave a resumé of her work.

The last hour of the morning was devoted to a general adult class with Bishop Trapp and various appointees as speakers.

Two classes were provided each morning for children so that they, too, could participate in the spirit of the gathering.

At 6:30 each evening, a leadership class was conducted by the directors of religious education for the North and South—Ronald Chandler of Warrington and Frank Judd of Enfield. These classes did much to stimulate our thinking and enable us to see ways and means in which we might qualify so that our branches could function more efficiently.

From Monday to Thursday, inclusive, an address was given at 7:20 on various phases of the Restoration, "Of Truth," "Of Light," "Of Authority," and "Of Power."

Friday evening was devoted to a concert which featured orchestral selections, vocal and violin solos, conjuring, etc.

Saturday was left entirely free; but on Sunday morning at 9:30 the closing prayer service was held. We shall not soon forget the fine encouragement and exhortation we received.

The last meeting of the reunion was at 2:30 in the afternoon, when Patriarch John W. Worth, reviewing the entire week and its accomplishments, spoke on the text, "How Can These Things Be"? We were reminded that we had all received much from the reunion, and as this added responsibility came to us, we could only fulfill our high resolves and do God's will if we sought constantly to abide his presence.

It wasn't easy to break from such a fine fellowship as the reunion afforded. In worshiping, studying, and playing together we came to know each other better. We enjoyed the communion of Saints and gained new strength to return to our respective tasks. We were especially happy to welcome Seventy and Sister Albert Scherer from Holland; as they return, our prayers are for them, and for Seventy and Sister Eugene Theys in Germany.

In closing, Brother Fry expressed the gratitude of all to the pastor and Saints

A Problem In Addition

By CHARLES KORNMAN

I am the way, the truth and the life.

IN YEARS LONG SINCE PAST, men came face to face with the idea of a supreme and infinite intelligence. One of them—a grand old man of early Biblical days—was perplexed and concerned about this personality and his creation. He didn't doubt that all was the work of a creator, since it was beyond his comprehension to believe that the wonders of nature and the beauty of the sky had come about by chance. Perhaps one day he was thinking about these things and being filled with that most creative of all emotions—awe—when he called to the Lord in a fervent and heartfelt prayer of praise and commendation. Perhaps this man, Moses, in his contemplation of the majesty of God, cried aloud and asked for an understanding of those things which he could see but could not comprehend.

The Inspired Version makes it plain that the Lord spoke and commanded Moses to write the things which He revealed. We know from our own modern experiences with prayer and the divine response to it that we must come first in humility and faith. There must also be a real need for that which we are asking, and we must be a fit vessel for God to speak through. All these are revealed in that opening sentence of the first act in the drama of the creation of the earth and its divinely-instituted purpose of providing a basis on which man may work out his salvation in company of like-motivated individuals.

We read this magnificent drama that is told in such simple language, and many times we are struck dumb by the intelligence which pervades it. We read it over and over and get a new appreciation each time of the inability of even our increased and enlarged vocabulary to retell the story and tell it any better.

In one of the more important scenes in the dialogue, we find this interesting bit of conversation: "For as I the Lord God liveth, even so my words cannot return void, for, as they go forth out of my mouth, they must be fulfilled." The parting of the ways had come. "Nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself for it is given unto thee." And man chose the way that was to lead to war and peace, the way that was to lead to struggle and quiet hours, the way that was to lead to valleys of depression and mountains of achievement, the way that was to lead to the Cross and 1844, the way that will lead to the building of the kingdom of God, the way that will lead to the final acts of the drama which has been written for these many years but is still being enacted by descendants of the original cast.

WE SPEAK OF THE DIALOGUE being written and men and women being but characters in it. Can that seemingly imperialistic attitude be reconciled with an understanding and loving Heavenly Father? Perhaps it would be well to say that we have the opportunity to ad lib, when we want to. W. E. Wakeman says, "Time is being measured out to the tune of an eternal clock tick." The erroneous idea has crept into many a Latter Day Saint's philosophy that God is going to wait until we are ready to serve him, and that he will stave off his coming so we may have as much time as we want to get ready for the "marriage." But, if time is running short, if the drama is about ended, if the curtain does have its rollers greased ready to drop, if the ticks of that eternal clock are even now within our range of calculations, if we are in the twelfth hour, then it behooves every one of us to cogitate a little—to stop and think—to know that "I am God"—to be able to say, "I have those things which money cannot buy"—to be able to say, "I am keeping the whole law."

"Keeping the law" has become a byword; we've mumbled it over and over until it has become less than meaningless—it has become a symbol of a day that is dead. We are all looking forward to the day when new heavens and a new earth shall appear, and we often pray "Thy kingdom come . . ." But let some fearful-minded individual timidly mention that the law should be kept before we can rightly pray for such an idea as an earthly kingdom, and the multitude will turn on him. If he's in the priesthood, his sermons will be few and far between, because people do not like to be told about their faults and shortcomings. But, kind reader, look back at the fourth paragraph of this article, "my words . . . must be fulfilled." Do you think that God was just making words when he said that, or did he mean only those who loved the Lord their God—only those who loved their fellow man—only those who were tithed—only those who kept the whole law—would find eternal life?

MANY OF US are constantly bothered by the fact that new revelations are not forthcoming every month or so from our general officers. "Why don't 'they' tell us what to do?" Every now and then someone pops up with an expression of a desire for a greater vision on the part of the ministry, thereby producing a greater vision on the part of the laity. But we, as a people, do not need more vision; all we need at the present time is more valor in maintaining the perspective and keeping the law that we already have. Our duty—which word a lot of us would like to be rid of because of its unpleasant connection with work and sacrifice—as young people who are sincerely concerned in a Zion is, first of all, to get our minds straightened out as to what the law says we must and shall do, and then get our hearts straightened out to do it.

"But Elder Brown's daughter goes to shows on Sunday evening. Why can't I?"

"I was over to Brother Smith's house last night, and they served coffee, and he's a high priest. Why can't we have cocoa? It isn't any hotter, and it's certainly a lot better for us."

Such questions are often hard to answer, and we've all been guilty of asking them. Let's consider some of the fundamental issues involved and see if we can't find an intelligent basis on which to build a philosophy. However, before going any further, don't expect to find your answer in a plain "yes" or "no." The little things, ad infinitum, that go to make up our existence—whether we should dance or not, whether we should go to shows on Sunday evening or not, whether we should drink coffee or cocoa or nothing hot at all—aren't to be qualified or disqualified by a blanket statement.

FIRST ON OUR AGENDA is the simple phrase, "center of reference," with all the important and eternal truths involved. A few months ago, Doctor Cheville came to Independence at the request of the City-wide League Cabinet to talk about "Winning a Winner." The lecture was one of a series called "Boy Meets Girl." In his lecture, he mentioned four basic thoughts that must be considered if a boy or a girl would give all reasonable precaution to insuring a good marriage. His last thought, before giving the young people a chance to ask him questions, was this idea of a center of reference. "Are they connected up with something which is worthy of their allegiance?" "Are they supremely interested in an enterprise that will demand the best that is in them?" "By what do they gauge their lives?"

His concerned and authoritative statement was that young people who amount to something in this world are those who are connected with and vitally interested in an organization which is able to demand and command every fiber of character contained in their personalities.

Taking this idea as our point of departure and further analyzing what our Doctor Cheville has said, we find that the Latter Day Saint who is concerned about his church and is firmly convinced that its message and purpose are divine and worthy of every effort is not tempted to emulate the actions of those who he thinks should be examples to those with lesser light. His center of reference has become the Master of Men, and he moves as if under the very eyes of One who can and does see us as we are.

A few paragraphs ago we spoke of an eternal clock. When the hour hand of that gigantic clock came to the ninth hour, an event transpired which shook the world to its very foundation. You know the story as well as I—a baby was born in a manger. He grew to manhood, never getting very far from the geographical area in which he was born. He taught for a few years and then was crucified by the very people who had nurtured him as a youth. In his ministry, he spoke of two paths—no more, or less—one of which we must tread in this life. He told us about both of them and then proceeded to live and walk in the one which he wanted all to walk in. Call it the way of prayer, call it the way of the cross, call it what you may, the essence is that Christ walked in it and invited all who will to go with him all the way. He never said for us to gauge our lives by those around us. He never told us to determine our actions according to those of people around us. He said rather, "I am the way, the truth and the life." In modern lingo—"By me and by me alone, shall you gauge your actions. I am your center of reference."

SO OFTEN we seek to justify ourselves when we want to do something in order to make it seem right. Introspection will often produce this rather startling conclusion; instead of wanting to do what is right—rather than wanting to do what we ought to do—we seek justification by pointing to those who should have no influence whatsoever in our lives and say that because they do such and such, we have the moral right to do it also.

Young people, if you've stuck with us this far in our dissertation, ask yourselves this question: "Do I want to justify myself in the eyes of Christ, or do I want to justify myself in the eyes of the crowd?" The correct answer is rather obvious, but what answer do you get when you add up the factors in your life?

BRIEFS

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting was held on September 18 under the direction of District President John Banks. Elder George Whitney was elected to serve as pastor. An officer's installation service was held on Sunday evening, September 26, with Elder John Grice, assistant to the district president, presiding at the candlelight ceremony.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON. — Everett Branch has begun work on a new church building at the corner of Everett Avenue and Maple Street. Of frame construction, it will have a main auditorium on the first floor; a kitchen, baptismal font, fireplace, and space for junior church in the basement. Elder George Brundage, assisted by Harold Johnson, is in charge of construction.

ENID, OKLAHOMA.—The dedication of the church was held on Sunday, September 26. The first service of the day was a prayer and testimony meeting with Apostle D. T. Williams in charge. This was followed by a communion service at which Bishop Walter Johnson gave a talk on "Remembering." Apostle Williams was the 11 o'clock speaker. After the basket dinner, which was served in the church basement, the service of dedication was held at 2:30. Pastor George W. Hopkins introduced Bishop Johnson and presented the title and key of the church to him. Both were returned to Pastor Hopkins. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Apostle Williams. Visitors from Tulsa, Arkansas City, Ponca City, Oklahoma City, Alva, Sieling, Jet, and Byron attended this special service. The Saints of Enid invite any members passing through the city to visit them. Pastor George Hopkins' address is 906 East Cherokee.

AZUSA, CALIFORNIA. — Rebecca Ann, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Samuel Hacker, was blessed by her granduncle, Elder Richard A. Hacker, at the family home in Azusa on September 19.

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs conducted a series of missionary services from August 29 to September 2. He used slides and flannelgraph illustrations with his sermons, and at the beginning of each travelogue showed colored pictures of places he has been. Seven were baptized at the close of the series.

of Enfield Branch for their fine hospitality. Approximately 150 visitors attended; much effort was required to find beds for them, to supply food for each day's meals, and to provide the kind of recreation which would be helpful.

Although we didn't have the presence of our apostle, the power of the apostolic office rested with Brother Fry to the extent that each partook of his ministry with joy and gratitude.

A letter of good wishes was sent from the reunion to Brother and Sister McConley on their departure for the United States. We will all strive to continue in the path of service so that the fruits of their ministry here and of the reunion may be worthy of our Lord and Master.

New Church at Jack's Creek, Tennessee

The group of Saints formerly known as the Huron congregation now meets in a new church located about three miles east of Jack's Creek on state highway 100. This is a newly-paved highway which carries regular busses from Memphis to Nashville. It has been a real task for the few members of this group to raise funds for a new building, but they have been well repaid for their efforts. Although it is not entirely finished yet, services have been held in the church since August 21, when Elder O. S. Caldwell of Paris began a week's series of services. He was assisted by Priest Everett Smalley of Martin, Tennessee. These meetings were attended by a number of nonmembers.

Church school is held each Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, and prayer service each Sunday evening. Preaching and the Communion service are held the fourth Sunday of every month. The Saints of Jack's Creek invite their friends to come and worship with them in their new church home.

Words of Eternal Life

P. S.

The greatest search that can be made by any man is the search for God. For it is only in finding God that we can truly find ourselves and learn our relationship to the Creator, to the universe, to the world, and our fellow men.

Others have ventured far on this path into the spiritual unknown before us. They have seen the evidences of the Eternal Mind whose thought has given us everything that we have and know, and at times their understanding has been increased so that they have been able to receive and record messages from Him. They have left us the travel notes of their journeying. Their records are in the Holy Scriptures.

Jesus searched the souls of his disciples with the question, "Will ye also go away?"

And Peter revealed to Jesus, as well as discovering to himself, the fullness of the spiritual stature to which he had grown, when he replied, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

That is as true today as it was two thousand years ago. Christ has the words of eternal life for us. There is no one else to whom we can go in certainty of salvation.

Of all the many gifts God has offered us, the greatest and most wonderful is the state of active consciousness, the living mind, which makes us in some small respect, most nearly like himself. By it we are "in his image." To lose it is the death and loss of all things. To retain it is the ultimate of all blessings, "eternal life."

And it is in the Word of God that we find "the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Volume 95

November 6, 1948

Number 45

EDITORS: The First Presidency: Israel A. Smith, John F. Garver, F. Henry Edwards. ASSISTANTS: Leonard J. Lea, Managing Editor; Kenneth L. Graham, Business Manager.

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

* CONFERENCE IN THE "HERALD"

For the benefit of those who did not take the Conference "Daily Herald," essential features of the recent General Conference have been included in our regular weekly publication.

"Welcome to the Conference," an editorial by the First Presidency, was the first of these features, and appeared on page 3 of the October 2 issue.

The October 16 issue contained the Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric, and a summary of the events of the first four days of the conference, including the changes to be made in the leading quorums of the church indicated in the revelation given through President Israel A. Smith.

In this present issue of November 6, we are presenting the revelation, "A Message to the Church," received by the General Conference through President Israel A. Smith. In this issue is also contained "General Conference Resolutions, 1948," a selection of the most important actions of the business sessions. Thus we will have in one issue some of the principal materials of the General Conference. We regret that the text of the revelation was not presented earlier, but it seems appropriate to present it now with the principal resolutions.

Other important conference documents previously presented in the Conference "Daily Herald" are being reserved for special publication: the General Conference Address on "Our Basic Polity," by President Israel A. Smith; the Conference Report of the First Presidency; and the Epistle of the Quorum of Twelve on Evangelism.

Most of the sermons given at the General Conference were taken either on tape recorders or wire recorders, and the First Presidency have given permission for the publication of a number of them. As rapidly as possible, we shall transcribe them, and several have been prepared. Whatever other materials from the General Conference are to be presented in the pages of this publication will be decided by the First Presidency.

* NEW BOOK CLUB

Welcome information comes that the "Christian Herald" will launch a new book club to be called the "Family Bookshelf." If, as we expect, the book club maintains the same high standard the magazine does, it will be a contribution to the Christian home in America.

We have tried other book clubs, and a year's selection of titles brought a few fine books, interspersed with too much trash, especially in fiction.

Admittedly, one of the reasons intelligent people do not buy more books is that so many purchases are disappointing, and it is hard to distinguish the good from the bad in the few minutes you stand in a bookstore, shifting your weight from one foot to the other. To get a selection of books that are really fine, about a dozen a year, would be a real service.

* PLACES OF PRAYER

It is good to be in a land where the people are not ashamed to pray. I have shared the blessing of the Catholics at their table in lowly huts among the mountains of the Tyrol, and knelt with Covenanters at their household altar in the glens of Scotland; and all around the world, where the spirit of prayer is, there is peace.—Henry Van Dyke, in "A Handful of Heather," from "Little Rivers."

In the Spotlight, YOU!

Speaking of Evangelism

We came away from the General Conference, feeling the force of the impact of one theme that was pounded home with an earnestness and persistence that was almost relentless: evangelism. It was not simply a theme that had been thought up for the occasion of this meeting. Speakers dipped back into their early experience, into the events that had brought them into the church and that had led them to abandon other plans for their lives and join in its service.

Wherever they turned, they found the value, the irreplaceable and indispensable importance of testimony of God's love, of the redemptive power of Christ, and of the truth of the Restored Gospel. It is the one ingredient, they say, that has been almost forgotten in the midst of the development of a science and mechanics of church work. In giving our attention to the machine, we have nearly missed the one thing that makes it go.

The Light Turns on You

In your store of childhood memories, you probably have some incident in your school life like this. You haven't studied your lesson, and you go to class unhappy and a little scared. If you felt a little worse, you could be sick and stay away, but you don't. So you go to class anyway. The teacher starts down the line, and she is calling on students closer and closer to you. You slide down in your seat, hoping she won't see you, or just pass you by.

Finally she states the next question and calls your name. You don't know the answer, and you sit up saying, "Who— Me?"

Her voice is firm and positive: "Yes, Willie, I mean you!"

Now you are grown up and in an older world. The classroom is much larger, and all humanity are there, learning from life. And in the midst of the darkness of our world, Christ is swinging the white spotlight of his truth around, searching for a man who will go out, or stand up, or do whatever is necessary, and bear a testimony for him.

And now, in the course of events, the blazing white beam of that spotlight falls upon you, and a question is asked that you are called upon to answer.

Christ is asking the question, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

The Prophet Isaiah answered, "Here am I; send me."

What will your answer be?

The Role of the Volunteer

It is true, said a number of the speakers, that we need more missionaries, more General Conference appointees, more young men and women who will give their lives to the work of Christ. These servants can explain the gospel, completing the work of making converts of those who have become interested through the efforts of local friends and workers. We need these people, and we need them badly. We need pastors to take care of and nurture the converts once they have accepted the faith.

But beyond these and behind them, as Evangelist C. A. Dickinson pointed out in his sermon, we need the laymen, the laywomen, the volunteers: those who bear a testimony for Christ and the gospel without a General Conference appointment, simply because they have had an experience with the Spirit of God, and they wish to tell of it and bring the message of salvation to others.

What You Can Do

If you have been truly converted, if the Spirit of God has come into your life, if you have truly felt the processes of redemption in your soul, if your life has been changed so that a glory of new experience has entered into it, you will want to do something about it. The urge to do something will be strong within you.

But what? How to begin? You want directions, shop notes, so to speak, on procedure.

First, be ready when circumstances arise. There are times favorable for everything and times unfavorable. We read in Ecclesiastes, "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven . . . a time to keep silence, and a time to speak." Let the time and place in which you speak be appropriate. If your friends are sick or discouraged, go to them and pray with them, or read the Scriptures. The gospel relates to life in a thousand ways and offers help for all the conditions and problems of man.

You can give your friends some of the new tracts. You can tell them how God has blessed and helped you. When troubles or difficulties are mentioned, you can say, "I prayed about that, and I received help." Bearing a testimony is simply telling people how God has worked in your life.

You can invite your friends to missionary services or to cottage meetings. You can have meetings at your home and invite them in.

At the Englewood congregation in Independence is a young man, Brother John Puckett. He is married to a fine church girl, and they have made a home life of which the church can be proud. Brother Puckett works as most of the people do. In his spare time, he has converted more than twenty people in the last year and has seen them baptized. Now he goes under church appointment. If he has done so much by bearing his testimony and explaining the gospel to people, can you not do just a little?

Christ has turned the spotlight on you!

Greetings From the Society Islands

Statement to the General Conference, Friday, October 8, 1948. Translated by F. Edward Butterworth.

GREETINGS to you, the legislative body of the church, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

We are very, very happy to have the privilege of coming here to Independence, Missouri, to meet with you good people here in Conference assembled. It is impossible for us to measure in words the wonderful joy that we feel in our hearts because of this experience.

We have been selected by the Islands of the Sea to be representatives, as delegates here to Independence, Missouri. We received this commission with joy, because we knew we would have the opportunity of coming to Independence to meet with Saints who have come from all walks of life, from all over the world, to meet in this assembly. We have also met with the President of the church and also with the Apostles and leaders, who are here assembled, which is a very fine experience for us.

It is some 6,000 miles that we have come by reason of our journey from Papeete to Fiji, and therefore we feel that we have come a long way to this General Conference. As delegates from the Islands of the Sea, we bring greetings to you from the Saints who have been baptized into the church in that far-off mission, and we give these to you at this time.

The Islands of the Sea have not forgotten you, and they rejoice because the Lord has not forgotten them. It is written in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants that the word of the Lord would go to the Islands of the Sea, and it was so. It is also written that the Lord desired the gospel to go to the Islands of the Sea, that they should arise as with one voice and bear testimony of the goodness of God to the peoples of the earth. Before the missionaries were sent to the Islands of the Sea, the Lord spoke, and it is recorded in our book, the Doctrine and Covenants showing that the Lord was aware of the people who lived on the Islands of the Sea. When the missionaries arrived, the people of the islands heard with faith, and since that time they have continued to give obedience to the commandments that have come to them by the missionaries and servants of the Lord. The people are still diligent in their service to the Lord in the Islands of the Sea. In spite of the fact that some of our men have died as they carried the gospel from island to island, traveling in ships that were not sound—died in service—yet the gospel still remains secure and steadfast in the Islands of the Sea. The words that these people have spoken, despite the fact that they have passed on, are still secure in our hearts, and through our bodies surges the spirit of this faith in the Church of Jesus Christ.

We know by reason of the fact that we have now stepped on the soil of Independence, Missouri, that it is true what has been said by the missionaries who have come to the Islands of the Sea, that this is the true Church of Jesus Christ, and that peace reigns among us.

My wife and I have experienced a love that is immeasurable in words as we have been among you in this, the Center Place, for those who have given of themselves and tried to make our stay pleasant. We appreciate this, and will remember it and tell of it when we return to the people of the islands.

Therefore, we desire to ask the leaders of the church to continue to remember us as they have done in the past and give us the things we need to carry the gospel forward, and we shall give of ourselves, even to the last man, to carry our gospel and banners high in the eyes of the people and especially of the French Government. This is our desire, and we come as bearers of this good news. We desire, and all the Islands of the Sea desire that our good President, Brother Israel A. Smith, and his good wife, come to the Islands of the Sea to visit us. We trust that we shall be successful in this request.

Statement of Mrs. John Mervin to the General Conference, Friday, October 8, 1948

Greetings to the members of the church who are here in conference assembled,

Greetings in this our first meeting in the name of Jesus Christ:

There is nothing left for me to say since my husband has said it all. But I do desire to say that it is indeed a pleasure for me to meet here in this the Center Place, with the good women of the church. I had the privilege of sitting in a women's meeting here. Sister Arnson was in charge of that service, and I heard the good word that is taught by this excellent leader of the women, which shall remain with me when I return to the islands to tell the women there. This will be a great benefit to us when we return to the Islands of the Sea. It is good news because we shall carry the love of the people of this General Conference back to the women who are assembled in Tahiti. We shall not forget that you have assisted us and helped us in our stay here. May the Lord continue to bless you and all of us together in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH

To the Quorums, Councils, and Orders of the Church and the General Conference:

Since the day set for a fast and especially since the loss by death of Apostle Lewis, I have been led to seek the divine mind respecting the needs of the body. Light and intelligence have been manifested as a result, and I am permitted to present the following by way of encouragement and direction:

To the Church:

1. My servant George G. Lewis has been taken for mine own purposes. He has been faithful, and his labors have been acceptable to me.

2. My servant Myron A. McConley is honorably released from further duty as an apostle, and he should be ordained to the office of evangelist and labor as a member of that order.

3. In order that the Council of Twelve may be filled and the work of that Quorum be carried forward, it is my will that my servants Percy E. Farrow and Reed M. Holmes be ordained and set apart unto the apostolic office and appointed to mission responsibility.

4. There are others of the leading councils who have likewise served faithfully, whose ministry in my wisdom is continued for a season, but who may be taken to myself, or because of age or infirmity released in mine own due time. There are those with the body of my priesthood who are called and who will be chosen to succeed them, if faithful; therefore, all are admonished to qualify themselves in spirit by ministry and by witnessing for Christ.

5. The hastening time is upon us; the period until the next General Conference, as already provided, must be one of unusual preparation for my church as an organization, for my people, and especially for my priesthood if there shall be those who will be qualified to assume and to carry the responsibilities of those who fall or fail or who are released.

6. Let the seventies under appointment as far as practicable relieve my servants of the Quorum of Twelve from labor in outlying or undeveloped areas, and let the Twelve seek to perfect the work in regions closer to the Center, opening up the work in new places. In these labors, the standing ministers, and especially district and stake authorities, are called to assist. Many of the elders not under appointment have a desire and will labor in new places if requested and given responsibility.

7. The unity and spirit of tolerance evidenced by my servants in the councils of the church are commended of me. Each should strive prayerfully for sustained and greater devotion to the work whereunto he is called. My servants should not become weary of well-doing. The adversary is quick to discourage and thus destroy their effectiveness.

8. The Church is admonished again that joint responsibility is laid on all. Properly and equally borne, this responsibility will insure success, the consummation will be glorious, and all will share in that glory.

Servant of the Church.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS, 1948

The General Conference takes action on many matters, such as ordinations and the appointment of committees. Reference to these will be found in the Conference Minutes published in the Daily Herald. It has been thought wise, however, to reprint here the actions of the General Conference of 1948, having to do with questions of church procedure.

- Procedure in Silencing Ministers* (1)
- Radio* (2)
- Transfer of Church Membership* (3)
- Special Appropriations* (4)
- Sanitarium School of Nursing Day* (5)

RACE RELATIONS

The General Conference also reaffirmed the long-established belief and teaching of the church with respect to race relations as follows:

"All men are God's creatures. He created of one blood all nations and races, and in the presence of God divisions of race are transcended; 'There is neither Greek nor Jew, Barbarian, Scythian, bond or free; but Christ is all, and in all.'"

In connection with this last action, the Presidency were authorized to "print this statement just adopted in one of the regular issues of the Herald with whatever comments they may deem necessary." In harmony with this action a further statement will be made by the Presidency in the Herald in due course.

PROCEDURE IN SILENCING MINISTERS

October 6, 1948.

To the General Conference, Greetings:

The First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve have given joint consideration to our procedure in silencing ministers and recommend that the General Conference adopt the following:

RESOLVED, that all Conference action prior to this date, having to do with the procedure in silencing ministers is hereby rescinded, and that in place thereof the following be enacted:

When any regularly ordained minister of the church is cited for trial before the courts of the church, or where such a minister's loss of reputation or demonstrated lack of ability or similar shortcoming has caused him to lose the power to represent the church effectively, the duty of protecting the interests of the church rests upon the administrative officer or officers having jurisdiction; and where the circumstances require, this duty should be exercised by withdrawing representative or ministerial rights from the minister concerned.

All administrative officers having occasion to place ministers under silence in this manner should immediately file a statement of the ground upon which silence has been imposed with the person silenced, with the next highest administrative officer, and with the First Presidency.

Whenever a minister placed under silence is not satisfied that his rights have been fully protected by this procedure, he should file an appeal with the next higher administrative officer within sixty days of having received notice of the imposition of silence. This right of appeal continues along the administrative line.

In the event a minister placed under silence by any member of the First Presidency believes that there has been an abuse of discretionary power, he has the recourse provided in the law (D. and C. 104: 34-37; 122: 10).

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

On motion of W. Blair McClain and Warren H. Chelline, the document was adopted.

RADIO

October 7, 1948.

To the General Conference, Greetings:

The Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric has given careful and sustained attention to the radio interests of the church, following the authorization for the erection of a radio station which was given by the General Conference of 1947. In light of this discussion, the council recommends as follows:

1. That we continue the development of recorded radio service for places distant from the Center Place.
2. That we continue our present schedule of broadcasting with the improvements made possible by the appropriations to be recommended to this Conference.

3. That we continue our application for a daytime broadcasting license, subject to the approval of the appropriations recommended in the report of the Appropriations Committee.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

On motion of S. E. Mifflin and M. L. Draper, the recommendations were approved.

TRANSFER OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

October 6, 1948.

To the General Conference,
Greetings:

On April 12, 1947, the General Conference referred to the Joint Council for their consideration a proposed motion concerning the method of dealing with requests for transfer of church membership.

The proposed action was given careful consideration by the council, a committee being appointed to make specific recommendations in the light of discussion. The following motion was then approved for presentation to the Conference:

"It is the sense of this body that when a member of the church makes a written request for a letter of transfer to some other religious body, and after due labor by the officers of our church which discloses that no charges are or may be pending, still persists in his request, the First Presidency, on recommendation of the branch and district officers concerned, be authorized to place the name of this person in a special 'withdrawn' file, and to issue to the other religious body a statement giving the dates of his baptism and voluntary withdrawal. In the event that any person having withdrawn in this manner shall later desire to resume association with this church, upon his written request and after due inquiry by the local administrative officers shall give evidence of an understanding and way of life appropriate to such renewing of church membership, he may be restored to fellowship by the First Presidency on recommendation of the administrative officers concerned."

We recommend that this action be adopted.

Very sincerely yours,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By ISRAEL A. SMITH.

A motion to approve was sponsored by Elders E. E. Jennings and L. W. Updike. The motion to approve prevailed.

RESOLUTION

WHEREAS many young women of the church receive training in a desirable environment in the School of Nursing operated and financed by the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, one of our church institutions, and

WHEREAS nurse's training and health programs will be of increasing importance in the development of our Zionie goals, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that the church designate one Sunday each year in the months of April or May to be known as Sanitarium School of Nursing Day, the purpose being (1) to give recognition to the School of Nursing, (2) to encourage qualified young women to enroll therein, and (3) to give opportunity for contributions to be made toward meeting the cost involved in operating this school.

On motion of Elders Prescott Foo and C. W. Clark, the above resolution was adopted.

What some people need even more than a God in heaven is a friend on earth—Be one.

Children's Reunion Work

(A delayed Conference Class report.)

"All service is an overflow," was the comment of Lois Shipley at the beginning of class on Friday, October 8. Much can be gained in prayer and fasting in the preparation and working out of plans for reunion. It is indeed a sacrifice for the children's workers to give up adult services in order to share in the work, but through the sacrifice there have come rich rewards.

"Games shared at reunions can be of a creative nature, and should as much as possible be in harmony with the work already planned for the children," said Mrs. Shipley.

She related an experience of a treasure hunt in which she and the co-ordinators went ahead of the hunt and planned the course for the group to follow. While the group made ready for the hunt, the co-ordinators placed the markers of the trail which were diamond-shaped pieces of construction paper or cardboard bearing a Scripture based on the lesson study. Members of the group guessed the answers and could not go on until this was done. Each child was to find one. All three trails—kindergarten, primary and juniors met at the same place. The juniors had the longest route, as they were capable of moving faster. Another time this same idea was used with arrows and a Scripture or jingle regarding the study. These arrows were placed on trees. Flash cards were shown as well as outline pictures.

Books suggested as aids in planning work for games and recreation were It Can Be Fun by Elva Oakman and Lillie Jennings, and Game Book by Eugene Closson. These can be secured at the Herald Publishing House.

Are Religious Differences Important?

By Evan A. Fry

ONE OF THE MARKS of this religiously indifferent age is the belief that it makes no difference what we believe or to which church we belong. Loyalties shift easily from one denomination to another. One of the remarks most frequently made to me, both in conversation and in correspondence, is that we are all trying for the same place; that there is good in all churches; and that, after all, it's truth and sincerity that count—not creed or organization or method. In other words, all roads lead to heaven, and it doesn't matter very much which one you take. The only thing wrong with this philosophy is that it definitely is not so; and we prove to ourselves that it is not so by eventually becoming indifferent to all churches, once we adopt the idea that it makes no difference which one we choose.

In some ways, the growth of this attitude is a good thing. We have become more tolerant and less inclined to dictate to each other in matters of belief or creed or doctrine or ritual. We are learning how to co-operate with each other in organizations that bring together Protestants, Catholics, and Jews for certain purposes on which we can all agree. In America, we believe that no man should be hindered from believing or worshiping in any manner he deems proper and best, so long as his freedom does no violence to public morals and does not encroach on the liberties of another. Every man should be free to seek God, to see truth, and to worship in any way that seems right to him. But to say that it makes no difference what that way is, and that any way will bring him to the desired goal is supremely foolish. If this is true in religion, it is the only field in which it is true.

Narrow, restricted choice is a principle of success in any field.

Take the field of education, for example. If I want to be an engineer, a chemist, a lawyer, or a doctor, I don't go into a secondhand bookstore and scoop up an armful of books to take home to study. I go to an authority in that field of knowledge, and, under his guidance and instruction, I carefully restrict and limit my reading to those books he prescribes. If I am in earnest and want to gain my diploma or degree in the shortest possible time, with highest possible honors, I even eliminate all nonessential reading; I restrict my other activities, my recreation, and perhaps even my diet so as to achieve my chosen goal.

THE ROAD TO LOS ANGELES becomes a road only when it is confined to narrow limits. On a highway two thousand miles wide, you might miss Los Angeles by as much as one thousand, nine hundred ninety-nine miles—and still be well within the limits of the highway. But a narrow, twenty-four foot highway will lead you right to the front steps of the city hall. Even air liners and ocean steamers follow certain well-defined and plainly marked lanes, guarded by beacons and radio beams. They reach their destination only because they restrict themselves rigidly to the straight and narrow way.

Those who are quite sure that it makes no difference which church they choose or what creed they believe or which leader they follow or which road they take to heaven, never seem to be able to quote Scripture, or even to use logic and reason to prove their point. They wouldn't start off blindly in any old direction to reach a certain city or even a specific location in their own city; they would acquire a map or ask directions and choose the shortest and best way. If they wanted to bake a cake or boil dumplings, they would consult an authoritative cookbook, or a good cook, and follow meticulously the routine laid down for achieving the desired end. If they had to have an appendix removed, they would want a surgeon who knew where and what and how far to cut—not one who thought one place was as good as another, or one method as good as another.

Jesus never said that those who wanted to find God could find him just any way that best suited their convenience. He never said that all roads lead to God. He never promised that it would be of no consequence which route or which method we took to find the kingdom of heaven. He never said that it made no difference what we believed. He did say, "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." He did say, "I am the way, the truth, and the life"—not a way, or a truth, or a life. He did say, "No man cometh to the Father but by me."

IF ONE WAY OF LIFE is as good as another, and a sort of broad, all-inclusive goodness, sincerity, and a following of the Golden Rule are all that is required for salvation, why bother to be a Christian at all? The sinner wants nothing so much as to be left free to continue his sin. If he follows the Golden Rule by making it possible for everybody to sin as he does, is he saved? Is a Christian any more apt to reach the kingdom of God than a Buddhist, or a Taoist, or a follower of Confucius, or Mohammed, or Zoroaster, or Father Divine? Aren't we all trying for the same place? Of course the answer is that we are not all trying for the same place. Each religion has a different concept of the rewards and punishments of the after-life, and these concepts have a great influence in shaping the course of action and determining the quality of this life.

Follow this theory that the details of religion don't matter very much to its logical conclusion, and you will find yourself becoming indifferent to Jesus, himself. Many have claimed to be saviors, and have taught a good way of life. Why bother to follow Christ at all? Yet Peter—who of all men ought to know—stood up and declared on the day of Pentecost that there was no other name given in earth or under heaven whereby men might be saved, except the name of Jesus Christ. If it doesn't make any difference which church you belong to, so long as you are sincerely trying and honest in your belief, Jesus himself certainly made a mistake in passing up all the sects of his day. He could have taken over any one of them as a going concern, financially solvent, well-established, flourishing—already respectable and socially and politically acceptable. But he categorically rejected Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes to make the narrow-minded statement, "I will build my church"—not churches but church.

THAT CHURCH was to be an authoritative church with an authoritative priesthood and members definitely and completely committed to a kingdom way of life, which involved careful restrictions and narrow limitations of action. Those members and officers were to have as close, as definite, and as constant a relationship with each other as the organs and members of the human body have to each other. The line of demarcation which separated this "body of Christ" from other organizations or organisms was not to be vague and general and broad, but quite narrow and definite: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Under the control of that one Spirit, his church was to be united under one head with the members and officers agreed on doctrine, faith, and practice. There was to be one method or ritual or formula for becoming a part of that body—a formula as narrow and dogmatic as the formula by which your food becomes a part of your body. And to follow out the figure of speech, notice that the food you eat does not choose the way in which it is assimilated or where it will go in the body; the body dictates the methods and processes, and the food obeys. The candidate entering the Church of Christ does not come in the way most pleasing or convenient to himself, but in the way and manner and process stipulated by the body of Christ and by the divine intelligence, which is the head and directing force of that body.

"But," says one, "acceptance of Christ is all that is necessary to salvation." All right—suppose we accept Christ. What does that acceptance entail? Does Christ have many ways of life and salvation, or only one? If we accept him, but fail to follow his way of life, have we truly accepted him?

LET US ADMIT without quibbling that there is good in all religions and in all churches, that all prophets have brought some truth. But that fact proves nothing. Even the devil quotes Scripture and advocates some truth in order to win acceptance for his error. Let us admit, too, that in at least one sense it may be true that all roads lead to heaven. I am located now on the eastern side of Kansas City. I can start east, and if I travel far enough—and have unlimited time—I can circumnavigate the globe and arrive on the western edge of Kansas City in due time. But if my time is limited, I will do well to choose the way instead of a way and go by the shortest, most direct, most sensible route westward across the city.

Life is limited. We do not know how long a time we will have, but all of us know that we will have no more than we need. We want to go as far as we can along the road to kingdom citizenship before our time runs out. Is it not sensible to be very cautious in choosing the way we shall follow? The quality of our life here, and the degree of obedience we give to all the divine laws and principles given to govern our growth and development and regeneration will determine the quality of our life in God's kingdom. Not all who are saved by Christ will be saved to the same degree of reward or blessedness. "In my Father's house [or household] are many mansions." There is one glory of the sun, another of the moon, and another of the stars. We will receive the mansion and the glory which we have made ourselves worthy of receiving and capable of appreciating and enjoying. The way we choose, the creeds and beliefs and methods we choose will determine the quality of our life for all eternity.

God's Silence

I snatch bread from the hand of one of God's children
When I entertain some temporal whim:
Selfishness.

A word I speak, unfounded upon
Any degree of wisdom, hurts another:
Gossip.

My own feeling of status I defend
By passing on the cruel statement
Of a brother's weakness:
Criticism.

In this manner I close my ears against a God
Whose laws of order he respects,
Allowing his voice to be unheard,
Even though he longs to penetrate the vacuum of sin
With which I surround myself.

Misdirected Energy

By LEONA M. HANDS

YOU HEAR A LOT these days about energy. It is probably one of the most versatile words in our vocabulary. Certainly it gets tossed around a lot in many fields, and it has taken on new meaning for all of us since the birth of the atomic bomb.

We are constantly reminded by radio and press of the different ways to acquire this wonderful power. Do this and that—live this way, eat that way—so you will have plenty of energy to see you through your day. We all have a certain amount of energy, some more than others. The only important thing is how we use what we have—we must use it for good purposes, rather than expending it uselessly.

No one has to look very far to see a tremendous waste of energy and effort. I remember, as a child, moving into a new neighborhood. On our first evening there, one of the neighbors dropped in to get acquainted and look things over. I shall call her Mrs. Pry, because that is what she soon was known as in our household. Mother was embarrassed—there was little or no order in the house, and Mrs. Pry immediately began to tell us how the last tenants had arranged their furniture. "Over here," she said pointing to a corner in the living room, "is where the other people had their piano. But you don't have a piano, do you?" She voiced her question in such depreciating tones that we children felt as uncomfortably poor as if we didn't own shoes. Mrs. Pry had a habit of dropping in often—usually when we least expected her, and many times when we had company. She would take part in any and all conversations and never failed to "get in her two cents worth," as one of my sisters remarked. I often compare her with another neighbor I had not many years ago who possessed the same distasteful habit of prying into everyone else's affairs. This woman complained that the neighborhood was far below her idea of what an ideal neighborhood should be. As she put it, "Every night, I pray for this neighborhood, but it doesn't get any better." One of the other neighbors who had heard her make this remark said to me later, "She might try moving out of it. That would help."

ONCE I WAS ASKED to work on a committee which was headed by a very charming and capable woman. She called no meetings, outlined all the plans alone, and personally carried them out by herself. One of the committee members called to ask if I had heard from our chairman. When I timidly suggested we call her and volunteer our help, she firmly said, "Most certainly not. If she wants to be Mrs. Atlas and carry the world around by herself, who are we to interfere!" Yet, when the affair was over and our clever chairman was utterly spent, she was heard to complain bitterly about the lack of co-operation she had received.

At home we often laugh about an experience a relative of ours had during the depression. Low on funds, she rented a room in a large rooming house. She had scarcely unpacked before one of the other tenants called on her. The caller proved to be an ardent bargain-hunter. Hardly a day passed but what she made a trip to town and came back loaded down with bargains. She would make an immediate tour of the house, stopping at each room to leave some of her "bargains." Filled with enthusiasm, she would exclaim over her purchases, "My dear, just look at what I found today—only half price at the dime store! Here's your share." And then she would collect from each tenant the cost of the items. No doubt she thought she was going about doing good, and she might have gone on indefinitely (for no one seemed to have the courage to say to her face what they openly discussed behind her back) but one day she overstepped her bounds and came home with five hats, all exactly alike. "They were such bargains—fifty cents each!" This incident brought open rebellion, and all of the roomers bluntly told her not to do any more buying for them. She was hurt, of course, and told everyone she was convinced that people were ungrateful and unkind.

MRS. BUSYBEE lives on a farm not far from our city. She has five boys and is raising them to be good, industrious workers. They arise early and retire early, and each does his share of the chores. Mrs. B. is proud of her sons, and rightly so, but it is a strange home she keeps. Mrs. B. has never believed in showing affections. "No time for such nonsense," she says. Her house is immaculate—a joy to behold—but it's more of a show place than a home. The boys always enter by the back door and immediately change to house slippers. They each take a bath after their work is done and put on clean clothing. None of them sit in the "best chairs," and their evenings are spent in awkward attempts to carry on a conversation that soon drags out into a prolonged silence, after which they give up and retire. Home, sweet home? I doubt that any one of the boys really thinks so. Sadder still is the effect it will have on their later lives.

One of my neighbors spends most of her time away from home. She and her husband go their separate ways, leaving the two children to fend for themselves. The mother is frank to admit she hates housekeeping and has many other interests which take her time. She has convinced herself that it is good for her children to be on their own. She says it develops character and a sense

Masterpieces of Religious Verse

Edited by James Dalton Morrison

2020 Poems by 900 Poets

This anthology of poetry has some especial marks which set it aside from other anthologies: the first being its comprehensiveness and completeness—a re-examination of the works of newer poets as well as those of the old yielded over 1500 poems that are not to be found in any other one anthology; the second distinction is its organization—the arrangement of poems by subject matter progressive in religious thought supplemented by title, author, first line, and topical indexes for great usefulness. A wonderful, wonderful gift book! $5.

CHRIST, THE WONDERFUL

Piano Prelude:

"Star of the East" (Can be purchased from most all music stores.)

Call to Worship:

Long years ago o'er Bethlehem's hills
Was seen a wondrous thing;
As shepherds watched their sleeping flocks
They heard the angels sing.
The anthem rolled among the clouds
When earth was hushed and still;
Its notes proclaimed sweet peace on earth,
To all mankind good will.

That song is sung by rich and poor,
Where'er the Christ is known;
'Tis sung in words, and seen in deeds,
Which bind all hearts in one.
Angels are still the choristers,
But we the shepherds are,
To bear the message which they bring,
To those both near and far.
—Leigh R. Brewer, Saints' Herald, November, 1940.

Opening Hymn: No. 138, "There's a Song in the Air"

Reading:

THE DONKEY'S STORY

"Are you a stranger in this pasture, my shaggy coated little friend?"
"No, often Joseph leaves me here for good food at the journey's end."
"The pasture grass is sweet today."
"Yea, 'tis the frost makes it so, at dawn so thick it lay
That it brought to mind that night long ago
When its depth and whiteness were likened to the snow."
"Snow? What is snow, friend, and of what night speak ye?"
"Yonder donkey, grazing 'neath the cedar tree, He can tell you of snow far better than I
For on the hills of Greece he's seen it lie.
But of the wondrous night, I can tell you better than any other.
Cease your grazing and listen closely, brother, For greater is this I tell than all other stories ever told,
Its truth is sure, for I saw the starlight and saw the Wise Man's gold.
I remember each mile and turn and stop along the way.
How the thousands going down to the taxing had churned the clay
Of the winding path to dust and how it rose in puffs and clouds
At each step, settling grey upon the passing crowds.
Slowly we went, the good carpenter, Joseph, leading, walking,
The patient Mary, speaking to him, talking
Of the beauty of the hills, of the sunlight and the wind's song,

Never saying she was weary though the way was long.

Darkness deepened and night was nigh when we reached the city's edge.

The stars were out and seemed to dance like fires along the hilly ledge

That o'erlooks Bethlehem. 'Tis now just as then,

White roofs, stone streets, and filled with many men.

We made our way from inn to inn.
'No room,' 'Too crowded,' 'Don't let them in,'
I could hear them say

As they turned the weary Mary 'way.
Joseph talked and pleaded in vain,
Though he tried again and again.

At last I heard the gentle Mary sigh,
'Joseph, my time is nigh.'

Upon the hillock beyond the inn square
Was a stable; oft on other trips, I'd slept there.

And tried my best somehow to say,
'You may share my bed of hay, my stable floor.'
But they didn't understand, so I pulled free
And stopped not 'til I reached the door.

When Joseph, panting, reached my side and would have led me 'way,
Mary said, 'Oh, Joseph, let us stay.'

'A stable, Mary, a poor stable, not here.'
'Yes, Joseph, it is good, it is well, for my time is near.

The hay is soft, and hear, Joseph, a dove,
Cooing in the loft above.'

Oh, wonder of that night! A child was born
And the stable shone like the brightest morn.

Above the dove's soft coo
I heard the angel voices, too,
Heard them singing, praising, saying, 'Peace to men,

The Prince, the King, Amen, Amen, Amen!
From the hills came shepherds who had heard the song.

They praised the child and called him Lord,
all the night long.

I shared my hay and water from my jar
With racing camels, who had traveled from afar,

Bearing men, rich-clad, with gifts so rare,
Kings themselves, yet they knelt there

And worshiped with the shepherds, at the infant's bed.

A wondrous light shone round about his head.
They called him Lord, just as I do,
And his gentle touch and smile they never knew.

On the morrow, when Joseph comes for me,
The little Lord may come with him,
Then you may see the lad who was that babe in Bethlehem.

I know not just what it is that he's to do,
But that he is a King greater than all kings,
I knew

That night when kings from the East and shepherds from the hills
Bowed down before a manger and pledged to him

Their hearts and hands and wills."

As with joy they hailed its light,
Leading onward, beaming bright,
So, most gracious Lord, may we Evermore be led to thee.

—William C. Dix, No. 143, Saints' Hymnal.

Responsive Reading:

Leader: The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light:

Response: For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, the everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

Leader: Of the increase of his government and peace there is no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever.

Response:

Joy to the world! the Lord is come;
Let earth receive her King;
Let every heart prepare him room,
And heaven and nature sing.

Leader: Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

Response:

Rejoice! Rejoice! When Jesus reigns,
Saints will their songs employ,
While fields and floods, rocks, hills, and plains

Repeat the sounding joy.

—Responsive readings taken from Isaiah 9: 2, 6, 7; Hymn No. 170; Psalm 95: 2.

Opening Hymn: No. 140, "To Us a Child of Hope Is Born"

Invocation should express gratitude to God the Father for the precious gift of his Son, Jesus.

Suggestions for Theme Talk:

"To me, Christ is easier to picture, talk to, and love than God. Probably because I know more about him than I do about God, and because he lived much the same as I do today. To me, he is the confidant of all my joys and sorrows, my problems and my successes, my responsibilities and my loves. In a common, everyday sort of way, I talk to him often, and it is only occasionally that I really pray to him. But when I really pray, I feel the Holy Spirit from him around me and can imagine in my most agonizing moments that he knows me inside out and in spite of that is willing to forgive and forget. I don't know what I would do without this childlike belief in Christ. Christ is the Son of God and the brother of man. He was the messenger of good tidings, not so much as a babe in a manger—beautiful and wonderful as that was—but as the one of whom Isaiah said, 'and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.' If more need be said, be it that the world sorely needs a 'governor' like Christ, and each and every man, woman, and child needs a 'counselor.' God sent once and waits to bestow again a leader of everlasting might and a minister of princely peace to his earth. When will people be ready and worthy to follow such a leader as Christ?"—F. M. McDowell (Quoted from Zion's League Annual.)

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

Instrumental Prelude: "Silent Night," Saints' Hymnal, No. 147

Call to Worship:

Dear little Babe of Bethlehem,
Did you come to bring us peace?
Dear little Babe of Bethlehem,
Did you come that wars might cease?

The world has forgotten your message, O King,
For the battlefields running blood red;
Where angels sang peace on that night long ago,
The cannons are booming instead.

While Herods of old are ruling the earth
And wise men are searching for thee,
Still Rachel is weeping for children unborn;
O speak! and again set us free.

Dear little Babe of Bethlehem,
Come to the earth once again;
Bring us the message of peace and good will,
Be born in the hearts of men.
—Frances Spaulding Austin, Saints' Herald,

Opening Hymn: No. 137, "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear"

Story:

"In a small village in northern Austria there lived an old shoemaker whose name was Otto. It was necessary for him to work early and late in his little shop in order to earn enough money to feed himself and his wife and to have something to share with his neighbors. As he worked late in the evenings, he often thought of the weary travelers trudging along the road with no light to guide them. So each evening he placed in his window a lighted candle as a sign of welcome to those who were passing along that way.

"Later war and famine came to that country. The people suffered many hardships. Some of them died for lack of food, and others were killed in battle. At last there were only old men left in the village, for the young men were engaged in fighting for the defense of their country.

"The shoemaker's income was small, but he managed in some way to keep the candle burning in the window. Each night it sent forth its message of cheer to guide the traveler passing that way. As the neighbors gathered to talk, it seemed to them that the shoemaker suffered less than the others in the village. They said, 'Surely there is something different about him. It may be that it is because he keeps a candle burning in his window. Let us place lights in our windows also.'

"The war continued and money was scarce, but each family bought a candle and placed it in the window. It so happened that Christmas Eve was the first night that the candles were set to burn in the windows. When the next morning came, snow had fallen, and everything was covered with a velvety whiteness. It seemed to the people of the village that a miracle had happened. There was a strange and mysterious feeling in the air. Why did men insist on fighting each other? Had not Christ taught that they should live together as brothers?

"Early that morning, a messenger came riding into town in great haste. His horse was tired and weary. He brought the glad news that peace had been declared. The church bells rang out the joyous tidings and called the people together to offer up prayers of thanksgiving. There was a feeling of joy and gratitude such as the people had not known for years.

"At once the people began questioning, 'What has brought about the change? How did it happen that peace came to our country?' At last someone suggested, 'It was the candles. They guided the Christ child to our village. It was he who brought peace. Let us always place candles in our windows on his birthday so that we may never forget this occasion.'

"In this way the custom of placing lighted candles in the windows on Christmas Eve began in the little village of Austria. In the years that have followed, this custom has spread to other countries, bringing hope and cheer to all on the eve of Christ's birthday."—"The Christmas Candles," from Worship Programs for Intermediates, by Alice A. Bays, used by permission of Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tennessee.

Benediction:

O Holy child of Bethlehem,
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us today!
We hear the Christmas angels
The great glad tidings tell;
O come to us, abide with us,
Our Lord Immanuel! Amen.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 26,

THE EVERLASTING FATHER

Prelude: No. 140, "To Us a Child of Hope Is Born"

Call to Worship:

High in the heavens, the symbol of the Hebrews
Trembles and burns with clear celestial fires.
Poised on swift wings, the chorus of the angels
Waits for a manger light to sweep their eyes
To wake hosannas from a thousand hillsides,
To start the echoes from ten thousand choirs!

"But lo, my church—I tread a silent city—
The inns are full, my pleas are met with scorn.
Few are the lights that flicker through the windows
Upon my knocking hand, my crown of thorns."

Open your hearts! The star glows in the heavens.
Open your hearts! The angels sweep their strings.

Fling wide the gates! A light glows from the Manger.

Glory to God! He lives—the king of Kings!
—Margaret Gibson, Saints' Herald, December 21, 1940.

Opening Hymn: No. 145, "O Come, All Ye Faithful"

Poem:

Across the miles of years
Again comes Christmas night,
But over a troubled, warring world
There shines a heavenly light.
For along the street of hearts and souls
Jesus has come to reign,
Into the lives of the rich and poor
He is walking again!

But what of men, if they fail to see Jesus, the Holy Light?
What of their souls if worldly lamps
Shine through the Christmas night?
Baubles and tinsel and ribbons gay
Will gladden our worldly eyes,
But the Light of the World, and faith in his word,
Leads man to paradise.

Meditation:

The Wise Men knew 'twas the Lord of the earth
Whose star they had followed afar,
With incense and myrrh and treasures of worth,
They worshiped the Light of that Star;
Then sing to the Star, bright Bethlehem's Star,
The Star that has promise for men;
For the Babe that was born on that glorious morn,
Is Lord of the Earth now,
Is Lord of the Earth now as then.

Closing Thought:

We would see Jesus, in the early morning,
Still as of old, he calleth, "Follow me";
Let us arise, all meaner service scorning;
Lord, we are thine, we give ourselves to thee!
—J. Edgar Park, Saints' Hymnal, No. 155.

There is in every one of us a hero and a coward. The coward shrinks from life or lets it overwhelm him. The hero attacks life boldly and tries to exercise dominion over it.

LETTERS

A Story Just Begun

In February, 1947, in Cincinnati, three women—strangers to each other except that they were members of the Reorganized Church—started calling upon each other. A few more names from various sources were added to the list, and in March they decided to meet together regularly every two weeks. Finally, a few nonmembers began to come to the meetings and find pleasure in the association.

During this time, two families were driving each Sunday to Middletown, thirty-five miles away, to attend services. These families, the women who were meeting together, and friends who had become interested began to think how wonderful it would be to have services in Cincinnati. Elder Floyd Rockwell, the Southern Ohio District president, was contacted, and he said he would send some help.

There was real joy in the hearts of the few who met on November 9 in the apartment of W. T. Cline. Brother Rockwell was the speaker, and the Spirit of God was present. Later, an opportunity to relate personal expressions was given, and the climax of enthusiasm was reached when Mrs. Bessie Manning—then a nonmember and owner of the house—generously gave her permission for the meetings to be continued and said she was happy to have her home used in that way. Since then, she and her two children have joined the church. It was agreed that a meeting should be held every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock for the study of Fundamentals, by F. Henry Edwards, and that there would also be a service at 11 o'clock. Instructions were given to meet under the supervision of the Southern Ohio District with Elder Claude Barker as missionary-in-charge.

When Jack Burlington, the only member of the priesthood living in Cincinnati, was transferred to Kansas City in February, it was a bit discouraging. However, faith and prayers were answered within a few weeks when Everett Smith, a priest, and his family were transferred to Cincinnati from Independence. Brother Smith has been appointed assistant to Elder Barker, and is able to relieve him of some of the responsibility he has carried so faithfully and diligently.

This past year has been a history of "firsts." The first communion service was held on January 4. Apostle George Mesley's first visit was on the evening of January 21—a high spot in the short history of the group. On February 11, the first women's department was organized under the name of "Truth-seekers." The purposes of this group are to promote the interests of the church, increase Christian fellowship, and seek improvement through study. On June 13, the first all-day meeting was held in Cincinnati with President Rockwell and Elder George Howdyshell, district director of religious education, in charge. On the morning of June 22, the first baptismal service was held in conjunction with the Saints of Middletown; four from each city were baptized. On July 4, the ordinance of confirmation was performed for the first time in Cincinnati, Elders Rockwell and Baker officiating.

Members of Cincinnati mission are looking forward to another year, and new officers have been elected to aid the missionary in charge. There are twenty-five on the present roll, but attendance averages sixteen.

Herald readers knowing of members or having friends in Cincinnati who may be interested in attending services, are requested to contact W. T. Cline, 1820 Hawkins Avenue, Cincinnati 11, Ohio (Telephone Humbolt 6261-J), or Mrs. Bessie Manning (Telephone Montana 7394). Prayers are also requested for the spiritual and numerical growth of the group. Special services will be held on November 9, the anniversary of the first meeting to be held in the city.

Healed Through Prayer

I am writing for Brother Robert L. Dortch at Poplar Bluff, Missouri, who wishes to tell of his remarkable recovery. He had been bedfast for nearly two years with creeping paralysis and was under the care of several doctors. After medical science failed to bring a cure, he quit taking all medicine and asked for prayers. Through his faith and the divine supplications of his many friends, he is now beginning to recover from what was believed to be an irremediable affliction. He can stand and walk when assisted, he is regaining his sight, and he is able to talk. He is cheerful and, when asked how he is feeling, always answers, "I am better." He believes that he will yet be completely healed.

He sends his thanks to all who have remembered him in prayer, especially to Elder Clarence German of Fair Dealing who so faithfully brought the Communion emblems to his home in the past. Brother Dortch did missionary work in Paris, Tennessee, for a number of years before moving to Poplar Bluff. Now he wishes for church literature to read while he is recovering so that he will be able to continue his ministry when he is well. He would especially like to have the book of sermons by J. S. Roth. If there are any Herald readers who can supply this book or other religious material, he will be most grateful to hear from them. Although he can read, he is not yet able to write.

He asks that further prayers be offered in his behalf. His faithful wife also needs prayers as she is physically very tired. I, too, shall appreciate being remembered as I am new in the work.

Request for Correspondence

I should be very happy to hear from Saints in the States or other countries, especially Germany, as I will be here for a year or more with my son, and I miss associating with those of like faith. Very few I have met speak English, and I don't speak German, but everyone has been friendly. I attended the Mormon Church with a lady who could interpret part of the sermon, and the girl who works for us told us some of the things the minister said. The service was quite different from ours. My Mormon friend had never heard of the Reorganization until a short while ago. When she was at my home, I loaned her Differences That Persist; she has promised to return it when she has finished the tract.

Letter From Muskogee, Oklahoma

The Muskogee Saints held their annual business meeting on Friday, September 24, under the supervision of L. W. Kohlman. Brother Kohlman was elected group leader; Clyde Pack, church school director; Mrs. Bessie Slayton, secretary; Mrs. Joyce Rosson, treasurer and church school secretary; Mrs. Viola Pack, director of music and publicity agent.

There are now about forty attending services, and we have been greatly blessed by the ministry of Evangelist Ray Whiting, Missionary W. E. Haden, and Elder Henry Castings. Nine have been baptized and nineteen babies have been blessed in the past year.

We are meeting in the I. O. O. F. hall located at 418½ West Okmulgee. Those who have friends or relatives living in or near Muskogee who may want to attend services may write to me and I shall gladly contact them.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints for the progress of this group.

Report From Eldorado, Kansas

Our group has accomplished several things in the past year, but we could do much more if there were an elder here to assist us. One nonmember who attends our services is critically ill, and we shall appreciate having the Saints remember him in prayer. We are always grateful when men of the priesthood visit us. Oscar Case, Glenn Johnston, and Myron LaPointe have helped us greatly with their visits. We elected officers the last of September to serve the coming church year and trust we can grow under their leadership. Our prayers are for the Saints everywhere.

Report From Croswell, Michigan

The members of Croswell Branch are still trying to spread the gospel. On Children's Day, eight church school pupils were baptized in beautiful Lake Huron. District President James Philips has visited the group several times in the past year. Guest speakers have been Bishop's Agent Joseph Muir, Evangelist John Grice, and Elders Carter, J. J. Ledsworth, and Robert McGee. Mrs. Jennie Booth, district women's leader, and Mr. and Mrs. John Rogers were also visitors.

New steps and a front walk have been added, greatly improving the appearance of the church.

Report From Hibbard, Indiana

We feel that we have made real progress in the past year. Although we are still few in number, we have gained several new members. Brother John Smelser, a priest, is helping greatly with the work.

We hold regular meetings including a Book of Mormon study class on Sunday evening and prayer service on Wednesday evening. The women's department is making plans for a fall fair under the direction of Dollis Smelser, the leader.

From a Conference Visitor

Although I spent only a few hours at Conference, I returned to my home feeling much encouraged. It was most impressive to watch the men of the priesthood serving the communion emblems to the thousands of participants at the first service of the Conference. Seeing the Auditorium and Stone Church was the realization of a dream I have long hoped to fulfill. I was baptized at the age of fifteen and am now sixty-seven. We have only a small congregation here at Ponca City, but several have recently joined the group. My prayer is that God will help us all to live clean, pure lives.

Appreciates Herald Letters

I appreciate reading the Herald, especially the letters from members. I love this church and its work, but it seems that I must remain in isolation. Recently I was able to visit the church in Cleveland, Ohio, and appreciated the ministry of Casimir Nikel. I pray for the sick and for all those who have requested our prayers.

Request for Prayers

I have been wonderfully blessed since I last wrote to the Herald. I believe the prayers of the Saints have brought me both physical and spiritual strength; however, I have not yet fully regained my health. I still need your prayers if I am to fulfill my purpose in life, and I shall appreciate your remembering my nephew, also. He is seventy-four years old and is suffering the effects of a stroke. His mouth and tongue are partially paralyzed, and he can hardly swallow enough food to keep alive. He will greatly appreciate your prayers.

My Baby Starts to School

By FLOY
LORENE BENNETT

ALL THE DAYS and weeks of preparation and excitement have culminated in that great adventure. Martha is going to school! As the opening day approached, my own reactions would have been hard to analyze. She had been my baby for four and one-half years—a short time to teach her all the things I felt she should learn from her mother before adventuring into a new world, and such a short time to enjoy her sweet, baby dependence and unwavering faith in me. Her world has enlarged amazingly already. Even now her enthusiastic “I love Miss Craig” makes me sharply aware that I must learn to share my baby’s love and affection, as well as accept with grace the equal or even superior authority of the teacher on nearly every subject of interest to my daughter.

During the days of preparation, Martha was not always sure she wanted to go to school. Once she touched a tender spot when she said, “Mamma, I don’t believe I’ll go to school, because you’ll be too lonesome by yourself.” What keen insight children have who read so accurately our carefully unspoken thoughts. In the end, however, every major objection was overcome by her urge to do what her little friends were doing. Desire for social approval begins to affect our lives at a very early age indeed, so that by the time we are of school age, we feel we must go to school because our friends and playmates are going. Parents are fortunate that this is so. It helps materially in that process of psychological weaning of child from parents which is so necessary for both a happy childhood and adult life.

Parents can do much, too, to make this new experience pleasant and easy for the child. The wise parent never speaks of school as being a place where “You’ll be punished if you don’t behave!” or “You’ll have to mind the teacher, or you’ll be in trouble.” Having been either a student or a teacher nearly all my life, I have encountered a very great many kindergarten and primary-grade teachers, although I was never one of them. An overwhelming majority of teachers of the very young children are infinitely patient and understanding. The child should be so taught at home that he will anticipate with happiness his school experiences and his relationships with the teacher. Even the relationship between a child and a less understanding teacher is not helped by dire warnings and uncomplimentary references to the teacher. Such “preparation” would only tend to aggravate a situation which might be considerably lessened by a wise approach to the matter. We usually find what we are looking for. If we look for good in those about us, including the teachers, we stand a very good chance of finding it. It is so much more wholesome to look for the good and beautiful in human character.

OF COURSE, I have hoped that my daughter could start her school life with a good teacher, and through the years I have set up certain standards which I consider most desirable. Above everything else, I want Martha’s first teacher to be a lover of children and fair in her dealings with them. I want her to have an exuberant, bubbling, infectious sense of humor. I want her to be wise, tolerant, understanding, and patient. I want her to be blessed with good health and enthusiasm for living. I want her to be scrupulously clean and neat, and I hope, sincerely, that she will wear appropriate but pretty clothes. The wise teacher will study the psychology of color, fabric, and design and do her best in this respect in so far as her budget allows.

Then, I hope that my daughter’s teacher will be trained to meet the psychological demands of the young child on her first journey away from her parents and familiar home environment. Of course, the teacher should have sufficient academic and professional training to make it possible for her to take advantage of much that has been learned through ages of research and experimentation in the field of general and specific education. Last of all, I hope Martha’s teacher will love music and good speech so that she may have many pleasant experiences in music and in a varied number of speech activities—some serious, some humorous, even hilarious, but all wholesome and satisfying.

I am not blindly optimistic. I know it is hardly likely that we shall be fortunate enough to find a first teacher for Martha who will excel in all these characteristics, but she may have a great many of them in varying degrees. If we look for the desirable, we shall more nearly attain it than if we have no standards or, perhaps worse, have the measuring stick but make up our minds such a person does not exist even in a small measure and thereby refuse to lend our understanding help to the teacher in her effort to guide our children.

I HAVE NOT ARRIVED at these desirables for my child’s teacher without coming to some pretty definite conclusions about the parent’s part. I have established some definite standards for myself, too, standards which I hope will help the teacher to do her job better and with less effort. First, I am convinced that it is my obligation to teach my child to anticipate the school experience with pleasure. I must build up a teacher loyalty even before the opening of school. I must have prepared Martha to understand something of the cost in effort in her behalf so that she may not lack feelings nor neglect expressions of appreciation. Above all, I must not be remiss in speaking my own gratitude sincerely and often. Low teachers' salaries is a national disgrace so that much of their remuneration must be in the form of "thank you" and heartfelt expressions of appreciation for earnest, sincere effort to accomplish worthwhile aims. However, my child must be taught to be thankful not as a part of teacher's pay but as an obligation for her own benefits received, for effort expended in her behalf. Some of the most soul-stirring experiences I have ever had have come to me because some student remembered to say "thank you." Very satisfying, too, have been the few letters I have had from parents of former students who felt they wanted me to know that their children had learned some lessons in my classrooms which proved of lasting benefit and satisfaction. Yes, gratitude is a great virtue and blesses the one who gives no less than the one who receives.

I MUST MAKE the earliest possible acquaintance with the teacher myself. I shall visit the school several times during this first school year and attempt to make the teacher feel she is welcome to visit in our home at any time. Furthermore, the teacher shall have at least one specific invitation to visit our home every year—several if the school is in a small town. Teachers in small towns have fewer recreational opportunities and a smaller circle of acquaintances. They need our friendship as well as moral support at school. My child's complaints against the teacher will be treated lightly unless they persist, in which event I shall attempt a satisfactory solution through consultation with the teacher herself. I hope to stand ready at all times to help the teacher

In Defense of Martha

By MARIE GOSLINE

THERE IS MUCH to be written in favor of Martha. While of course Mary chose the "good part," it must not be overlooked that it took the two of them, working together as a team, to make their home a success. It was Martha who cooked and served the meals. It was Martha who made that home so inviting that Jesus liked to come there to rest. Had it not been for Martha, I doubt very much if Jesus would have found that home so peaceful.

Every home, to be a success, must have a Martha. I once read that "back of every truly happy and successful man stands a devoted wife." That may sound a little trite, but it is true, nevertheless. And to be a devoted wife, one must have most of Martha's characteristics. I like to think that Martha was a very good "manager." And you who have been married at least as long as I, know what that verb, "to manage" means. It means that if one does not have an extra potato in the vegetable bin for an unexpected guest, she will at least have enough flour and milk to make a pan of biscuits. It means that if there isn't enough money for an ice cream cone for Susie, there will be enough cash left at the end of the week to buy her the pair of shoes she needs so much. It means that because Mother spends her money wisely, there is a bank account when Brother is ready for college. Sometimes I think that the verb "to manage" is the most important, the most comprehensive in the English language! It is up to the Marthas to run well-ordered establishments. It's up to the Marthas to keep our Latter Day Saint homes from being "slipshod."

I LIKE TO THINK that when Jesus walked in Martha's little garden he didn't find it full of weeds, full of broken and discarded toys. He didn't find the lid off the garbage can and the walks in need of sweeping. I like to think that Martha's little garden was beautifully kept, even though flowers were scarce in that rocky soil. And Jesus knew when he came to the end of the garden path that Mary would bathe his tired and aching feet, and Martha would greet him with a gracious smile.

True, Martha whined a little. That is one characteristic of hers we all have! If only we could forget it, our husbands and our children would indeed be grateful.

Latter Day Saint homes should be spiritual, and there are many ways in which a home can express its spirituality. I cannot imagine Jesus' tarrying for very long in any home that was not orderly. I cannot imagine Martha's home as being anything but tidy. She may not have had even a wooden floor in her little cottage, but the dirt must have been swept clean, and the worn little curtains at the windows were freshly ironed and stiff with starch. She had, of course, no silver teapot, no fine linens. She may have had to look a long time to find a cup that wasn't cracked so that Jesus could drink from it. But it doesn't take the finest of material possessions to be hospitable. It doesn't take fine silver and beautiful linens to put Jesus in your home. It takes some things that are much harder to acquire. Jesus came to rest and to visit in Mary and Martha's little home, beautiful in its simplicity, because there he found love, charity, peace, and genuine understanding. He will come to ours if we offer him the same hospitality.

We must never substitute the holiness of beauty for the beauty of holiness.

Why Question?

By WILFORD G. WINHOLTZ

THE TERM "question" used here is identified with a statement of Chancellor Hutchins of the University of Chicago, who recommended and admonished young members of the faculty to "attack the administration." This admonition to continually question established traditional policies and procedures is certainly necessary to create a healthy atmosphere for interested members as well as the administration in progressive change toward increased clarity and efficiency of program and objectives.

This attitude is not unlike the defense of the need of young writers in the New Horizons' section of the Herald to say what they think in face of the adverse criticism of a few oldsters. There is a parallel between this attitude and Voltaire's famous statement: "I wholly disapprove of what you say but will defend to the death your right to say it."

Francis Roger Bacon said, "Read not to contradict and refute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider."

The Bible adds this supporting statement: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

This type of questioning must be encouraged and maintained if progress is desired in any program. When this type of critical analysis diminishes, the paralyzing encroachment of apathy and disinterest creeps upon individuals and indirectly upon the church.

The Herald has always been in my home and the home of my parents.

Always, this periodical has been eagerly received and quickly scanned. It has served as a vital link of communication between the general church and the sparsely scattered membership. In my earlier years, I more or less accepted without serious question everything between the covers of the Herald. I was not unlike most others. In later years, I began to question certain points of view of various writ-he is studying part-time for a Ph.D. in planning at the University of Chicago. Recently, he was promoted from director of planning to executive director of the South Side Planning Board in Chicago, Illinois, and is now engaged in planning the redevelopment of seven square miles of slum area in the heart of that city. He was previously on the staff of the Kansas City, Missouri, Plan Commission and the Detroit City Plan Commission. He was ordained an elder in 1939 and has since served the church as branch pastor, counselor to the district president, stake director of young people's activities, associate director of religious education, and president of the University of Chicago young people's group. He is married and the father of two children.

ers, and occasionally I would find myself disagreeing fundamentally with certain interpretations and representations. The point I wish to make and am concerned with here is the degree of apathy which I—and, no doubt, many others—have had in failing to respond in a rebuttal on such matters.

While it is generally true that the past printed record of the Herald offers little encouragement in the way of precedent, there is at least the one distinctly provocative instance of a few years back concerning the merit and function of prayer meetings. On this occasion rebuttals were specifically encouraged.

ON ANOTHER ASPECT, I find myself not alone in lamenting the fact of so much "wishy-washy" material appearing in the Herald. But on this matter, I realize that the editors can only select material from the articles submitted. We who lament have probably submitted very little, if anything. Such articles as I freely catalogue here cannot be classified as "bad," because their content is "good." They fall short of the mark only when one adds the question, "Good for what?" This matter is akin to the old adage which states that it is not enough that a person be good; he must be good for something.

A portion of the Doctrine and Covenants which has continually whetted my appetite and stirred my imagination as an integral part of general church periodicals is contained in section 123: 9, 10—which, by the way, is not direct revelation but a part of the Joint Council minutes:

DISCUSSIONS IN HERALD

9. Whereas there seems to be a demand for a publication that may be a medium for more progressive and controversial articles for the good of the body than can be supplied by the Herald, therefore be it,

10. Resolved that the board of publication be requested to provide for such want as soon as practicable and without injury or interference with the circulation of the Herald.

New Horizons, in my opinion, has opened up the way of partially fulfilling this need officially expressed over fifty years ago. This section of the Herald should be expanded. I would like to see many more of the

New Horizons

The World-Wide Zion's League Project 1948-50

The hastening time is upon us; the period until the next General Conference, as already provided, must be one of unusual preparation for my church as an organization.

THIS WAS THE CALL of our Lord to the people of the church at General Conference. Thrilling, demanding—an admonition which should stir every member with a sense of urgency.

This call, then, has set the tone for the new eighteen-month project for the Zion's League. The Leaguers are a part of the church of Christ, and as such have set themselves to the fulfilling of some of the basic standards of membership.

Between now and next General Conference, the time has been divided into six periods. Each of these two to three month stretches will be filled with concentrated activity in one field. Rather than spending eighteen months driving home one project, there will be six interesting, varied, important activities.

Here is the outline:

I. December, 1948 -- January, 1949:

I RECOGNIZE MY STEWARDSHIP BY COMPLYING WITH THE THREE PARTS OF THE FINANCIAL LAW.

Each League is encouraged to set a standard and try to reach it in the num-liberal and progressive church members accept the challenge and opportunity of New Horizons (or the Herald in general) by giving expression to important and urgent matters pertinent to life of the modern-day world, and not so much to secondary matters. Such contributions should assist in the formulating of an enlightened and sound orientation toward tangible steps in a practical approach to down to earth kingdom-building that will encompass not only the speaking of the word, but—more important—the doing of the word in actual deed of soundly planned objective and a plan of action to achieve them.

ber of Leaguers—

- A. Filing tithing statements.
- B. Keeping record books.
- C. Becoming regular tithe- and offering-payers.

(Set a percentage goal on December 1 for Leaguer participation. Then strive for this goal to be achieved by January 31. Use the envelope system, which is provided by the local branch. Send in the "count" to the Department of Religious Education!)

Here's opportunity for instruction and activity.

II. February, March, and April, 1949:

I WITNESS FOR CHRIST.

- A. Each local League plans and carries out one missionary activity such as:
 1. A cottage meeting.
 2. A missionary service or series.
 3. A systematic invitation canvass or survey.
 4. The distributing of literature under authorized direction.
 5. The support of a branch missionary program.

All missionary work is to be done in co-operation with and under the supervision of the pastor and priesthood.

- B. Each League will climax its missionary effort with a Restoration Festival involving at least one of the following:

1. Missionary drama.
2. Historical party.
3. Pageant.
4. Dinner.
5. Other activities suggested in Zion's League Annuals.

Send in your report!

III. May, June, July, and August, 1949:

I LEARN OF CHRIST THROUGH FELLOWSHIP.

All Leaguers are encouraged to participate in one of the following:

- A. Reunion.
- B. Youth Camp.
- C. Stake or district conference.
- D. Stake or district youth convention.
- E. Zion's League retreat.
- F. Church history excursion.
- G. Other stake or district activities.

Send in your report!

IV. September, October, November, 1949:

Prepared by the Zion's League Council

I SHARE IN THE LIFE AND WORK OF MY BRANCH.

Each League does the following:

- A. Conducts one or more League projects in service to the branch or district. This may include:

1. Campaigning for the building fund.
2. Decorating the church.
3. Landscaping church grounds.
4. Sponsoring junior church project.
5. Participating as host to a district or stake conference.
6. Purchasing needed equipment.
7. Preparing and conducting a church service or services.
8. Publishing a branch bulletin or newspaper.
9. Sponsoring the supplying of a resource library for local workers.

B. Encourages attendance at regular church services consistently. (Set up a goal and keep records of attendance.)

C. Encourages individual participation in branch business meetings.

Send in your report!

V. December, 1949 - January, 1950:

I GROW IN MY STEWARDSHIP.

- A. Every League is urged to raise the goal for financial stewardship participation over that of the previous year.

- B. Plan a systematic drive to survey individual stewardship of time, energy, and talent. Plan individual record keeping to gain participation in this activity. (STANDARDS OF A STEWARD is suggested in developing this project, or local Leagues may develop their own "Standards of Sainthood for Zion's Leaguers.")

VI. February, March, and April, 1950:

I PREPARE FOR GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Each League participates in one or more of the following:

- A. A study session on what and why General Conference.

BULLETIN BOARD

- B. A preparatory period of fasting and prayer, climaxed by a worship service.
- C. Preparing a letter or sending a delegate with suggestions for General Zion's League Council meeting at General Conference.
- D. Attending General Conference as a group (if close enough).
- E. Preparing and sending some youth-prepared missionary materials for exhibition at General Conference.
- F. Assisting a delegate or League representative (local or district) to attend General Conference.

Credit will be given to all projects carried out during the year, in or out of the suggested season. Credit can be given only if local Leagues report their activities. This will be a universal requirement. Local League secretaries are requested to send complete reports of activities to the District Young People's Leader who in turn will send reports to the Department of Religious Education by certain deadlines which will be set for shortly after the end of each project period. It is hoped the reports of the districts will be tabulated and published regularly in the Saints' Herald. All Leagues should feel their responsibility to their district, because if they don't participate in the project or don't report to the Department of Religious Education, their district's record will be lowered.

All Zion's Leaguers are requested to watch the Saints' Herald for information and helps. Guide-Lines will have information also. It is anticipated that a guide booklet will be published and put on sale through local book stewards or from the Herald House. Every group will want several copies.

This project provides the way for every League and every Leaguer to serve Christ and the church and to obey the commandments he has given:

Ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him; for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

See that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Fear not to do good, my sons, for whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap.—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 15.

Kansas City Stake Women's Institute

An emergency has made necessary a change in the speaker for the Kansas City Stake Women's Institute, which will be held November 10 and 11 at Central Church, 2917 Tracy, Kansas City, Missouri. Mrs. S. A. Burgess will take the place of Mrs. M. A. McConley at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. The rest of the program, beginning at 9:30 a.m., is unchanged. Those attending will bring package lunches.

ESTELLE MOORE.

Special Services at Stratford

Anniversary and dedication services will be held at the church in Stratford, Ontario, on November 14. Apostle P. E. Farrow is to be the guest speaker, and Elder A. W. Sheehy will deliver his farewell address as president of the district. The London District business meeting is scheduled for 3 p.m.

IDA BAYNE,
District Secretary.

Attention, California Members

Members living near or passing through Fort Ord, California, are urged to call on Mrs. E. A. Vickray Bennett, Quarters 2844 D, General Delivery, Fort Ord.

A daughter, Lana Louise, was born on May 13 at Payette, Idaho, to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Perry, now of Olathe, Kansas.

DEATHS

BECK.—Wesley C., was born in Indian Territory near Chelsea, Oklahoma, December 7, 1884, and died at his home in Claremore, Oklahoma, following an illness of seven years. He had been a faithful member of the Reorganized Church since he was fifteen years old. He married Sarah Pearl Boswell on December 29, 1909. For more than twenty-three years, he was employed as a rural mail carrier.

He is survived by his widow; one son, Lawrence of California; four daughters: Mrs. Roy Rafferty of Chelsea; Mrs. Britton Henry of Wichita, Kansas; Mrs. Floyd Farley of Bartlesville, Oklahoma; and Mrs. Louis Kinnear of Henrietta, Texas; three brothers; one half-brother; one sister; and seven grandchildren. Services were held at the funeral home, Elder O. A. McDowell officiating. Burial was in the Claremore cemetery.

STEPHENS.—William Roland, was born on July 29, 1929, at Seminole, Oklahoma, and died in a Seminole hospital on September 13, 1948, of peritonitis. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of nine, and had held the office of priest since 1947. After being graduated from Seminole High School, he went to Graceland in 1946 and 1947. He was planning to return for his sophomore year when he became ill and died.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Stephens of Seminole; a brother, Jack of the home; his paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Stephens of Barnsdall, Oklahoma; and his maternal grandfather, Mr. R. W. Scott of Omaha, Nebraska. Evangelist Ray Whiting was in charge of the funeral at Seminole, and graveside rites were conducted by Elder Hubert Case at Mound Grove Cemetery in Independence, Missouri.

CAMPBELL.—Lee Roy, was born July 11, 1893, in Toronto, Ontario, and died at his home in East Los Angeles, California, on September 27, 1948. He was married to Ruby Brown in Iowa on August 11, 1915, moving to California in 1923. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a boy and was a charter member of the east side branch which was organized in 1925.

Surviving are his wife; four sons: William and James of California; Dick of Oregon; and Lee Roy, Jr., of the United States Navy; three daughters: Elizabeth, Charlotte, and Janie of California; and twelve grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the East Los Angeles Reorganized Church; Elder Virgil Lum gave the sermon. Burial was in the Rose Hill Memorial Park in Whittier, California.

SPENCER.—Harvey F. Sr., was born May 10, 1864, in Tuscola County, Michigan, and died at his home in Moore's Junction, Michigan, on September 30, 1948. In 1889, he was married to Olive Whiteside, who preceded him in death in 1945. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 8, 1915.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Rozelle Cousins, Sterling, Michigan, and Mrs. Olive Harpst, Alma, Michigan; four sons: Robert, Prudenville, Michigan; Walter, Flint, Michigan; Howard and Harvey, Sterling, Michigan. A daughter Lovina, and son, Sidney, preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Sterling Methodist Church, Elder John Umphrey officiating. Interment was in the Sterling cemetery.

LEWIS.—Elmer B., son of Thacher and Elizabeth Lewis, was born in Dennisport, Massachusetts, on June 24, 1884, and died at St. Luke's Hospital in New Bedford, Massachusetts, on October 6, 1948. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on February 26, 1911, was ordained a deacon on February 2, 1913, and an elder on January 18, 1916. For twenty-five years, he served as pastor of the Dennisport Church. He was honest, straight-forward, always true to his trust, and abounding in good deeds. He leaves no immediate survivors. Funeral services were held at the Dennisport church, Elder Abram Law and Patriarch Frederick W. Roberts officiating. Interment was in West Yarmouth cemetery.

CARLSON.—Sandra Lee, infant daughter of Bryon and Josephine Carlson, was born September 1, 1948, at Phoenix, Arizona, and died at her home on September 24, 1948. Services were held in the Colonial Chapel of the Mortensen-Kingsley Funeral Home, Elder W. W. Woods officiating. Interment was in the Greenwood Memorial Park in Phoenix.

BOZARTH.—Mary Jane Murphy, daughter of David E. and Susannah White Norton, was born April 5, 1850, in Toronto, Canada, and died October 12, 1948, at Independence, Missouri. With her parents, she came to the States as a young girl and on October 4, 1870, was married to Leander Murphy at Pit-hole City, Pennsylvania; three children were born to this union. Mr. Murphy died on June 3, 1893, and on April 28, 1894, she married Elder W. T. Bozarth at Independence. Following his death on August 6, 1923, she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Ada Cox, for the last twenty-five years of her life. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1876, having been baptized at Boonsborough, Iowa, by Richard J. Lambert. She is survived by one daughter, the other children having preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Stahl Chapel in Independence, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Burial was in the family lot at Woodlawn Cemetery in Independence.

GRAY.—Rebecca, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Blazey, was born September 1, 1859, at Colborne, Ontario, and died September 25, 1948, at the farm home of her stepson, Alma Gray, near Mitchell, Ontario. She moved with her parents to Mitchell when a child and resided there all of her life. On April 6, 1912, she married Elder William H. Gray, who served as president of the Mitchell Branch for twenty-eight years. Her parents were members of the Utah Mormon Church before leaving England and were converted to the Reorganized Church after moving to Canada. Rebecca was baptized and confirmed on April 17, 1897. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her in the community and church.

Surviving are her stepson, Alma; and two stepdaughters: Mrs. Annie O. Hodgson of London, Ontario, and Mrs. Frank Barker of Bentley, Alberta. Mr. Gray preceded her in death fifteen years ago. The funeral was conducted by Elder Almer W. Sheehy. Interment was in Woodland Cemetery, Mitchell, Ontario.

in any way she may feel she needs me, and I shall try to find time to lend enthusiastic support at all times to the teacher and the school.

These standards for Martha's teacher and her mother are quite ambitious, I know, but when I remember our walk to school that first day, her small hand in mine—a little more persistently than usual, her half-reluctant step through the door of the schoolroom, and the two bright eyes as she relinquished my hand, I cannot feel that my standards for Miss Teacher and myself are too high.

BRIEFS

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—

The annual business meeting was held on September 19 under the direction of Branch President T. A. Dershimer, who was re-elected to serve in that capacity during the coming year. D. R. Ross and John Tenos were elected to be his counselors. Members of the Zion's League raised a total of $115 for Missions Abroad and $1,100 for the organ fund during the past year.

BURBANK, CALIFORNIA.—

On Sunday, August 29, Edward E. Spencer was ordained an elder and Vernon Cline and Harold Eldon White, priests, at a special service held in the Womens' Club House at Sunland. District President Louis J. Ostertag, Charles M. Richeson, Joseph Ruchaber, J. M. Starkey, R. C. Chambers and Douglas Clark were the officiating ministers. On September 5, Catherine Ruth Prentice, infant daughter of Robert and Grace Prentice, was blessed by R. H. Chambers and Joseph Ruchaber. Seventy George A. Njeim conducted a series of services in the mission from September 12 to 24.

DES MOINES DISTRICT.—

The Des Moines District Reunion was held August 15 to 22 at Spring Brook State Park; theme of the reunion was "Evangelize the Home." Guest workers were Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop L. Wayne Urdike, Pastor and Mrs. V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, and Missionary John Conway.

The Des Moines District Conference began with a banquet on Saturday evening, September 18; Apostle Williams was the speaker. Fifteen men of the district were recommended for ordination and approved by the conference at the Sunday business session. Ralph Wicker was re-elected district president, with Robert Morgan and Herbert Scott as counselors.

Webster City Branch has a church now in which to worship. A large house was purchased and remodeled so that services could be held in it. The extra rooms were converted into apartments, which were rented out.

Services are now being held at Red Rock and Metz each Sunday.

MARLETTE, MICHIGAN.—

Vicki Lou, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Cumper of Pontiac, Michigan, was blessed on Sunday, August 1, by her grandfather, J. D. Westover, and Elder Edward Weaver.

North of Heaven, by Biloine Whiting and Josephine Skelton. 303 pages. 1948, Herald House, Independence, Missouri. Price $2.50.

Two young church writers, graduates of Graceland College, and now advanced students at the University of Kansas, have collaborated to produce one of the most interesting pieces of literary work to come from the presses of the church publishing house in recent years. This is a novel based upon the history and life of the "Cutlerite" settlement in early days by the shores of Lake Clitherall in Minnesota. The story is not presented from the historical viewpoint, but through the eyes of the Whitlow family, typical of those who were a part of that pioneering venture in the settlement and development of the West.

The Cutlerite group still has its faithful followers. It began in the Restoration Movement when Alpheus Cutler, after the tragic events that brought the exodus from Nauvoo, sent his people north to the "land between two lakes," to make a settlement, to evangelize the Indians, and to await the call to Zion. Years of struggle and hardship followed. Then came the missionaries of the Reorganization and converted numbers of the people.

Biloine Whiting is a descendant of some of the people who took a major role in the leadership of the community at Old Town by Lake Clitherall. She is the daughter of Evangelist Ray Whiting. Josephine Skelton began her interest in church work with the young people of the London, Ontario, congregation. Both of them are brilliant students and writers. They have been spending the summer together at Vinalhaven, Maine, working on a new literary project.

This book is informative as well as entertaining reading. It will be appreciated by readers of all ages, and especially by the young.

The Pastor and the Children, by Mildred Moody Eakin and Frank Eakin, Macmillan, 1947, 182 pages, price $2.00.

The authors are well-known in this field of publication. They have already published two excellent books which have been widely appreciated and have sold generously: Let's Think About Religion and Your Child's Religion. This new work is fully up to the high standard of the others. It is an individual and personal approach to the child. It seeks to understand him as a personality rather than simply as a unit in society. It also deals with the child's problem in the social group, the church, school, and elsewhere. The reader will find a great many specific helps, especially with individual cases, and practical experience here.

Christian Apologetics, by Alan Richardson, Harper, 1947, 256 pages, price $3.00.

This is a scholarly work intended to appeal to ministers who are schooled to handle the fundamental concepts of religious philosophy. It is well written and brings the subject of Christian apologetics up to date with the most recent thought in the field.

Stop Looking and Listen, by Chad Walsh, Harper, 1947, 112 pages, price $1.25.

The author gives a subtitle to his work: "An invitation to the Christian Life." The book is valuable in the field of pastoral and personal ministry. The pastor and missionary will find many of its reasons and appeals useful in presenting the necessity of organized church life and Christian ideals to the individual who is a prospect for conversion. So many people in the world think they do not need religion or the church. This book will be of help to those who are attempting to win them.

of responsibility. The girl seems to be doing all right, but the boy is hardly ever home and somehow manages to get in at night just before his parents. No one in the family worries about anyone else—each minds his own business. Their friends are concerned, but they can do little about it.

Another of my neighbors is an ardent hater of state sales tax. Almost any time of the day you can see her either going to or coming from the store carrying one small bag. The smaller the purchase, the less the tax, and she has determined not to pay one cent more of "that silly tax" than is absolutely necessary. If you meet her on the street, she will tell you that she's so busy she has no time to call her own, and that her nerves are in a terrible state.

Which brings me to the state of my own nerves. I think it all started back in my younger married days. I had an ironclad schedule then, and everything ran as regular as clockwork. I suppose that if I had stopped to eat an extra piece of toast for breakfast, I wouldn't have caught up all day. I worked at that speed for years until one day when I stooped to tie my shoe and went right on over with a heart attack. It took me a long time to learn to slow up, to redirect my energy. Now I don't attempt to crowd a week's work into one day. I try to put first things first and not be too concerned over things of little importance.

If you are guilty—as I have been—of misusing the energy God has given you, start now to chart a new course. Tomorrow may be too late.

The Open Door

AUDITORIUM NEWS

For many years, the church at London, Ontario, has enjoyed the finest relationships with the city, the service organizations, other churches and ministers, and the press. Officers and ministers of our church there have done excellent work in cultivating good public relations and have extended the influence and good work of the church.

Under the leadership of Almer W. Sheehy, district president and pastor at London, our work has been expanded. Recently the congregation acquired a piece of property that will serve as manse and mission house in an excellent location on the main thoroughfare, Dundas Street, a short distance from the beautiful high school building. The grounds are very pretty, and it is planned to use a picture of the building for one of our covers in the spring.

Smiling and friendly, Brother Sheehy stands at the door of the new mission house and manse. This picture appeared with an article in the London Free Press, by whose permission we are using it. Conference appointment has sent Brother Sheehy back to the States, but his ministry will be long and gratefully remembered in London.

SISTER CLARA SMITH, the wife of Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith, passed away at the Independence Sanitarium early on the morning of Saturday, October 30. Though she had not been well for some time, her death came as a shock to friends and church people here. The funeral was conducted at Stone Church, Independence, by the pastor, Glaude A. Smith, assisted by Dr. F. M. McDowell.

Brother Elbert and Sister Clara have been for years among the best loved of church people. Their home life was an ideal of happiness, peace, and faithful church life. Through the years of work and sometimes of ill health, Brother Elbert was sustained and helped by the loyal and kindly assistance and companionship that Sister Clara gave him. In their home neighborhood on West Walnut Street, they participated in neighborhood activities, prayer meetings, visiting the sick, and all other things. They have been loved and admired by everyone.

The two sons of Brother and Sister Smith have made a fine record in the church and in the world. Dr. Ronald Smith is head of the department of mathematics at the State Teacher's College at Pittsburg, Kansas, and has given splendid service to the church in his district. Lynn Smith, an engineer, now living in the greater Los Angeles area, has always been very active in church work. They have many times paid tribute to their mother's practical wisdom and splendid influence upon them.

This loss, naturally, is a very heavy blow to Brother Elbert Smith. May the church people remember him in their prayers. For the present, he is planning to keep his home and continue active in his work.

Further information is expected a little later concerning Sister Smith.

APOSTLE D. BLAIR JENSEN, his wife, Delia; his son, Roland B., age ten; and his daughter, Cona Grace, age fourteen, sailed from New York for Europe on Friday, October 22, on the Cunard White Star Line, "Queen Elizabeth." It is expected that they have arrived, though word has not yet been received at this writing. The best wishes of the church go with Brother Jensen and his family on this important mission.

APOSTLE ROSCOE E. DAVEY, accompanied by his wife, Sister Mabel Davey, and their daughter Donna, departed Monday night, November 1, for the west coast, where they will leave for Australia. Due to the maritime strike, transportation cannot be arranged by ship, and they are going by air to Honolulu, and will spend eight days in Hawaii. There will be a stop in New Zealand, and they are trying to reach Australia in time for the Tiona Reunion.

RETURNING HOME FROM CONFERENCE. Evangelist Charles A. Dickinson and his wife are going home to Australia. Brother Dickinson left behind him many gracious services, including a fine Conference sermon which was recorded for publication, and a talk to the Rotary Club. Best wishes to these good friends. . . . Brother and Sister Edmund Norton, Miss Elizabeth Harris, and Mrs. Pearla Harvey, all of England, are leaving New York together for home on November 10. They have had a fine visit, and church people here have greatly enjoyed their companionship and friendship.

Bishop Archie McLean

A sad piece of news came to the recent General Conference when it was announced that Bishop Archibald McLean of Toronto had passed away on Saturday, October 9. Brother McLean had been lingering in illness for some time. It was a pleasure for this editor to visit him last spring in Toronto and to find his great kindness and his splendid faith still very strong. He carried the burden of responsibility for the church in that part of Canada in very trying and difficult times, and his name will carry honor with it in the minds of all those who live to remember him. His good companion preceded him in death, and her loss was always a poignant memory to him. He has left a fine heritage in his son, Dr. Charles McLean, and his three daughters. Details of his life will appear later in our publication.

Your Invisible Support

IN THE LANGUAGE of the civil courts, a vagrant, a person homeless and destitute, is one who "has no visible means of support."

A witty philosopher picked up those words and changed them to another use. "An atheist," he said, "is a person who has no invisible means of support."

Times come in our lives when the "invisible means of support"—that is, our spiritual resources—are more important than the visible. You may do your fair-weather sailing across the bay with nothing but your own skill. But when you are upon the high seas of life and the storms arise, threatening both your ship and your life, you need the "invisible supports."

You can see people in want of those supports all the time.

AT A CERTAIN BUSY CORNER there is a drinking and eating place that summer and winter these many years, has cast upon the free air of the community a miasma so foul that normal people shudder as they hurry by. How anybody can enter it is beyond all rational explanation. Yet there is a kind of people who go there by preference.

Pausing at the door of this place recently was a young mother, clad in soiled slacks, cigarette on her lips, and carrying a small son on one hip. Her husband, about the same sort, opened the door and they went in. What an atmosphere to set the pattern of citizenship for that poor child. If anything can make a goon of him, that life will do it.

Somewhere in the lives of those young parents, there should have been some moral and cultural education, some standards of sanitation and righteousness that would have protected them and their child. They quite obviously have no "invisible means of support." And that support would have made life so much happier, safer, and more beautiful for them.

WE WERE DRIVING HOME from another town, enjoying the beauty of the brilliant autumn, the colors of the trees in the countryside under a bright afternoon sun. We came to a place where highways crossed, and saw a tavern, a dispenser of death and misery, at the intersection. Next to the tavern was a garage to pick up the wrecks that the tavern caused.

As we continued down the road a little, we saw a man, dirty and disheveled, staggering homeward from the tavern, carrying a cargo of its wares. There was no garage, nor any other place, to pick up the wreck that the tavern was making of the man.

Nowhere in his life had that man been provided with an "invisible means of support."

WE WERE WALKING down "Petticoat Lane"—center of feminine fashion in Kansas City—in quest of some small item for the distaff side of the house. Just ahead of us a young woman, clad in a brand new, chic, happy looking outfit, was walking. Then she turned around. Her face, a perfect mirror of the internal condition of mind and spirit, gave the lie to everything that her pretty suit said about her. It reflected some of the bitterest discontent possible in a woman's face. She might as well have been wearing a dirty raincoat. It would have been more appropriate.

Here was a person whose "invisible means of support"—if she ever had any—was failing her.

OURS is a materialistic world. We are surrounded by new cars, new homes, new diseases, new cures, new gadgets. We wear ourselves out trying to pay for "labor-saving" devices. We spend our whole lives trying to pay for "time-saving" machinery. The biggest load we carry on our shoulders is something we can't see. It is a mortgage on the future.

Yet if we only knew it, these material things are not the really important factors of our lives. What we really seek and need is peace, friendship, companionship, security, and love. We need kindness in our hearts, and good will for others. We need the Spirit of God. These are invisible and intangible things. These are our true "invisible means of support." Without them we are miserable. With them we are happy.

LIFE is a rugged course, in which we must sometimes climb steep heights, carry heavy loads, walk through stormy and disagreeable weather, face danger, and find our way in the dark. There are the happy and pleasant times, too, of course. But in the hard times, we can only live for the happy times that we hope will come. And in the hard times, we need a strength that is greater than our own to keep us from falling or going astray. We need help to keep in the right course and to reach the goal. We need the "invisible means of support."

THAT HELP, that "invisible means of support," comes from God. We can find it nowhere else. It is true that some folk lean upon other people and play the parasite, but they cannot do it always. Bitter disappointment will teach them that it is not good to trust "in the arm of flesh," because it will fail.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." In sorrow and tribulation, we have found this promise from the Psalms to be true.

The hunger and need of the millions who walk in darkness call for the ministry of the word of the gospel that will give them life and hope.

"The Daily Alta"

SEARCH FOR ORIGINAL ARTICLE FINALLY REWARDED

In the Herald for September 1, 1869, there appeared an article entitled "Interview with Brigham Young," and credited to "Alta, California." For some years we have desired to confirm the article thus reported in the Herald without success until recently when Apostle Charles R. Hield found it in the file of the Daily Alta California, Volume 21, Number 7057, San Francisco, Friday morning, July 16, 1869.

With this information we have secured a photostatic copy of the article. An examination and comparison show that it was correctly printed in the Herald with the exception of the heading.

Because of the interesting admissions of fact by Brigham Young, we believe it will be profitable to reproduce it. With original heading it is as follows:

THE CHICAGO COMMERCIAL PARTY'S INTERVIEW WITH BRIGHAM YOUNG

[From the Special Correspondent of the Alta.]

At the interview of the Chicago commercial party with Brigham Young, which took place last Saturday, at Salt Lake City, heretofore briefly noticed by the telegraph, the Mormon President informed U. S. Senator Trumbull that "great lies" had been printed about the Latter Day Saints by two vile men sent out from Washington as Government officers. "Now," said he, "we intend to send out some of the same sort, and when we do, don't believe more'n half you hear. We have been lied about enough, and will not stand it any longer. If the Government sends bad men here, we shall just politely conduct them on a little trip to the boundary line of the Territory, and bid them go, never to return."

Senator Trumbull—"Well, now, Mr. Young, allow me to suggest to you, that before you do this, before you take such decided steps, that you communicate with President Grant and advise him of your intentions. I am satisfied that the President, who is a good man, will do you justice, and it would be better first to lay any grievances you may have before him."

Brigham Young—"Yes, and perhaps get the same treatment we have always received. Why, what did Mr. Douglas do, when King James (Mr. Buchanan) sent him to us at Nauvoo? He made, as it were, a treaty with us, as the government does with England or any foreign country; promised, if we would go away beyond civilization, we would not be molested. The result was, we were set upon coming here, and 5,000 of our men forced into a legion of soldiers to fight the Mexicans and leave our women and children to starve, and Buchanan said, 'Let them die!'"

Senator Trumbull—"You can depend upon a fair hearing in Congress."

Brigham Young—"What! take our papers and throw them under the table. Send more—under the table they go." [This was said with energetic gesticulation.] "As to our institutions, we know we are right, and polygamy, which you object to, was not originally a part of our system, but was adopted by us as a necessity, after we came here."

Senator Trumbull—"I have no doubt that Congress has a right to legislate upon the subject of the marriage relation and to regulate it."

Brigham Young—"Then why not legislate about the intercourse of the [unmarried] sexes?" Here he went off into the question of slavery, saying: "Congress ought to have made a law compelling the master to treat his slaves well, and then I believe it would have been better than to abolish it."

Brigham then again spoke of the men sent out to them, and it was interpreted that he alluded to present officials; but said: "It's all right; we can take care of ourselves; Cummings was good enough in his way, for you know he was simply Governor of the Territory, while I was and am Governor of the people."

Senator Trumbull—"Mr. Young, may I say to the President that you intend to observe the laws, under the Constitution?"

Brigham Young—"Well—yes—we intend to."

Senator Trumbull—"But may I say to him that you will do so?"

Brigham Young—"Yes, yes; so far as the laws are just, certainly."

The Rev. E. B. Tuttle, Post Chaplain, U. S. A. then said: "Mr. Young, may I ask you a question?"

B. Y.—"Yes, sir."

Mr. T.—"I would like to know how you came to settle just here and not at some other place?"

B. Y.—"Well, we knew just where we were coming to before we came. We had heard of it through Fremont's account, where, you know, he speaks of losing a glass out of his telescope: it was just back of here on Mt. —; and miners told us of it. It was supposed we were going to Vancouver's Island; we had no such intention. We sent a colony in a vessel round to California, with a view to locate there also. But we came here to Mexican territory, planted the American flag, and conquered us a home, and here we mean to stay." "Sirs," said he, "I expect to live to see the time we can go back to Missouri as freely as any body and be undisturbed."

Chaplain Floyd H. Engstrom

Brother Engstrom, formerly of Colorado Springs, Colorado, and a veteran in World War II, has been called back into active duty as a Chaplain, and is located at Camp Chaffee, Arkansas.

We would like to have all of our young men who are sent to Camp Chaffee for training, make a special effort to contact Chaplain Engstrom.

His selection for this service came as a result of an appointment of the First Presidency under a quota arrangement with the office of Chief Chaplain at Washington.

Our Apostolic Stewardship

By E. J. Gleazer, Sr.

A sermon delivered at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, October 17, 1948. From a wire recording by Gordon Resch.

In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

Above it stood the seraphims; Each one had six wings, with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.

And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this has touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged.

Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.—Isaiah 6: 1-8.

WE HAVE TALKED a great deal about our temporal stewardship, the stewardship of wealth. The fact that God trusts us to produce and use the material things of life has long been emphasized to this people. We have forgotten, however, that the sharing of the gospel is also a stewardship. God has permitted us to accept the gospel and all that the term implies. It is not ours. It is his. He has entrusted it to us that we might use it for our own salvation and for the salvation of those who are still without the church.

Of course the two purposes go together. We can save ourselves only as we attempt to save others. Stewardship not only implies a trust imposed in us but also suggests that we shall be held accountable for the manner in which we discharge this trust. While I would not for a moment depreciate the responsibility of being a steward over our temporal possessions, I think that even in this regard we cannot hope to be true stewards unless we sense first of all that we share with God in using and sharing with others the full gospel of our salvation.

Our stewardship, therefore, is a stewardship of witnessing. It is not the responsibility alone of the quorum I represent to witness to the world that Jesus lives and that the power of the gospel is still available to the sons and daughters of men. It is the chief responsibility of my quorum to stress this stewardship—a stewardship of witnessing—in which we are assisted by the Quorum of Seventy. It's our responsibility to organize, to stimulate, to direct this missionary stewardship, just as it's the Bishop's responsibility to stimulate, to organize, and to direct the stewardship of temporalities.

But it is also true that every man in this church is accountable to God for the manner in which he discharges his stewardship of witnessing. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." There is no exception. The very fact that we have permitted ourselves to be brought to Christ through the ordinance of baptism commits us to this stewardship of witnessing for him. There must not be any exceptions.

The hour has arrived in this church when, unless we are discharging our individual responsibility as stewards in witnessing, we shall feel condemned before God.

It might amaze some of you today if I should call attention to the fact that we need to be as conscience-stricken when we disregard our stewardship of witnessing, as some of us are conscience-stricken when we're made to realize to the extent that we have failed to be true stewards over the temporal possessions God has entrusted to us. I can make the observation that I have sat under the ministry of some of our bishops. I have been conscience-stricken on occasion as to my lack of faithfulness in the discharge of our temporal stewardship. I doubt that there are many here today who could claim otherwise. For even in this regard we are only more or less faithful. For if we sensed the full significance of stewardship under God in temporal affairs, Zion would be a reality even now.

In a previous service this morning, I congratulated the members of the Stone Church for the splendid record they have in tithes and offerings. And while that was done in all sincerity, we know there are many of us who may be enrolled in this congregation who have not yet satisfied even this requirement of stewardship. But I hope that together with my brethren of the Quorum of Twelve and the Seventy, under the power of the Spirit, we may be able to fire this church in these next eighteen months with a sense of the responsibility of discharging our witnessing stewardship as we never have in the past. We haven't started to use the potential witnessing power that is within our own membership.

MAY I GO BACK to bring you a few pictures. First, let us consider the situation that was responsible for the Scripture I read this morning. God required a messenger. Even though we pray to Almighty God and recognize the fact that he is a God of power, insofar as he himself is concerned, we refer to him as unlimited. Yet there are some things God cannot do unless he has messengers or witnesses. On this occasion, he moved upon a certain man. Isaiah responded to the divine power, and like every other person who has had this type of experience, he first was made conscious of his own sin and his own limitations. Whenever the Spirit of God is present, we always sense our limitations. Under that same power, Isaiah acknowledged his limitations and his sins. But God was in a position to do something about it. Isaiah's lips were touched with a coal from the altar, indicating that there is power to purge and cleanse the impurities within us. And after this process, when he heard the statement, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Isaiah replied, "Here am I; send me."

It is not possible for us to know now how much good Isaiah accomplished in his time. But we do know that even though he is dead, his ministry still lives today in the beautiful book that carries his name. And many of us are being ministered to by the words which he delivered so many years ago.

I WANT TO THINK WITH YOU now of another experience when it was necessary for God to call for volunteers. After Jesus had spent three years in public ministry and the time for his Crucifixion drew nigh, he set his face steadfastly toward Jerusalem, knowing what awaited him. You are acquainted with those events—how he was crucified and came forth from the tomb, appearing to his disciples and dwelling with them for a time. But he knew that he was to depart to be with his Father. And we have what has been referred to so many times as the "Divine Commission" in the sixteenth chapter of Mark. It is also given by Matthew.

Jesus was about to ascend into heaven. He had appeared to his disciples. And this was the commission: "Go ye into all the world." He was to leave soon. He was speaking to those who remained behind.

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; They shall take up serpents; if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.

Here again the Master of men had occasion to say, "Whom shall we send? Who will go for us?" Thank God for the response that he received on that occasion. Not only the original twelve, not only those who were called upon to take the place of Judas and others who died, but all who identified themselves with the work of God were equally called to "Go ye therefore and share this gospel."

Let us turn our attention to what happened in the early church as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles 5:42: "And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ."

Will you please notice that teaching was not restricted to the temple? In the temple and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ. No wonder they were so successful in those early days. And again in Acts 8:4, the church had commenced to experience a season of persecution following the death of Stephen. Many were threatened with death; some of the apostles were arrested, tried in the various courts, and commanded to no longer teach in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. These men, however, went forth, and as this persecution persisted, they were scattered abroad, and notice what happened then. "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere, preaching the word." Did they depart from the faith? Did they think they had been deluded? No. They who were scattered abroad, even in the midst of persecution, were everywhere testifying of the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And in that respect, their persecution assisted in the work of their God.

I hope that it will not be necessary to scatter the membership of our church in the Center Place abroad in order that we may become effective witnesses of what God has brought to pass in these last days.

I'M THINKING OF ANOTHER OCCASION when it was necessary for God to have witnesses. Many of us pay a great deal of respect to young Joseph Smith, who went into the woods to pray. I have believed for many years that Joseph was moved upon by the Spirit of God to go into the woods and to seek his Father in prayer. He responded to that spirit. He was just a lad, not yet sixteen years of age, when he had that first experience. You know what happened a few years after that, and how the Church of Jesus Christ was organized in the year 1830. I can see in my mind those six men called together by God, sitting in a humble home, organizing the Church of Jesus Christ. God was about to restore the priesthood, to organize his church. He was about to inaugurate the greatest effort that heaven ever made, so far as we have any record, and we have yet to appreciate how momentous that effort is to be. That was just the beginning. Standing on the threshold of the greatest age this world was ever to witness, these humble souls were called together, and God revealed to them something pertaining to his work.

I cannot take the time to read the preface to the Book of Covenants, but there you will find what God initiated, with a description of the conditions that were coming upon the earth, and an indication of what he planned to do to save men from these conditions. He wanted messengers. "Whom will I send? Who will go for us?"

Go back in your history. Observe carefully the first fourteen years after the organization of the church. Now remember, those men and women were just as we are. They had strength, and they had weaknesses. They made mistakes. But so far as sensing a witnessing stewardship, we have yet to duplicate their efforts. Those people were so imbued with the spirit of the Restoration Movement that nothing else seemed to matter. They even moved from the places they had called home. They came to Ohio, some of them at a tremendous sacrifice. They came to Independence when it was practically a wilderness. They endured hardships that we know nothing about. Some lost their lives in massacres, but those who escaped continued to testify of the vision of 1820. They continued to testify of the coming of Moroni. They continued to testify of the marvelous record we know as the Book of Mormon. They continued to tell what God had done in organizing his church in this dispensation of time. And thousands were added to the church.

Some there are who say they baptized too many people—they were not assimilated. And so that we will never be guilty of that great mistake, don't let us baptize anyone. Maybe they were overzealous, but I would to God that if they had a surplus of zeal, we could share a little of it today. I'm glad we are awakening to some of our responsibilities, for we need more of the zeal that characterized those early disciples. God had prepared by the power of his spirit men like Rigdon and others who were ready when the gospel came to them to go forth, utilizing their gifts and callings to the convincing of hundreds of the divinity of this latter-day work.

I have already said that every man is a steward; every woman is a steward; every boy and girl who belong to this church are stewards. We're not all sent to preach or proclaim from the pulpit the words of eternal life. But all are needed to help that this witnessing shall be carried forth. Some of the most effectual men who ever served this church were converted not by a sermon, but by a testimony in some humble home. Some of our former stalwarts were the product of cottage meetings. And some men and women who have blessed this church by a godly life came in contact or united with the church because of the example they witnessed in their neighbors and their business associates.

OUR OWN GENERAL CONFERENCE was concluded just one week ago. Wasn't it marvelous to see all those good people come into our midst from so many, many states in the Union, even some visitors from abroad, from Australia, Great Britain, and other places? With a few exceptions, conference draws together our most active people. You usually meet the best, and I hope they met the best in Independence.

I can recall, too, when I used to sit under that balcony as a member of the elders quorum at the General Conference, when I shared with the seventies in this center section and when the entire ex officios were all seated on the main floor. We still had a little space to spare, so we brought in the delegates, and these balconies were reserved for our visitors. That was the General Conference, not so long ago, of your church and mine. What a change we have lived to see! Thousands of people in attendance, counting those who come in and those who are resident in this territory, gathered together in the Auditorium. Many people returned to their respective branches delighted with what they had witnessed. The appeal of the crowd has registered. But this crowd means little unless, with our additional numbers, we are capable of matching ourselves with the need of this hour. A week ago Saturday evening, when I made a short talk to about 5,000 people in the Auditorium on the fact that they were God's witnesses, I was made to sense what would happen if every one of the 5,000 there could succeed in winning one convert to the church in the next conference period. Just from that group alone, 5,000 converts! It could be done; it could be multiplied many times over.

Did you sense the Spirit of God in our recent conference? I hope you did. I believe that the spirit was made manifest in unity and in teaching. It was revealed in brotherhood. Your leaders had attempted to place special emphasis on missionary work. That which came from God emphasized the fact that the members of my quorum should be concentrated in the center region. Do you know why? God has never changed his mind concerning the building up of Independence, Jackson County, and the regions round about.

There are men and women who need to be converted here. They can be converted, but it requires greater effort than we have put forth in the past. I can appreciate the word of inspiration that calls upon your Presidency to concentrate the men who have been placed in positions of responsibility to organize and direct the missionary work of this church. Evidently the members of the Presidency have not as yet been able to carry out the full import of the divine word. But if we're true to that which comes from God, it shall be carried out.

The late Joseph said several times that he would like to see the time when one could start out from Independence, in the direction of Laramoni, Iowa, and never step off Latter Day Saint land. Some one said to him that it would be impossible to purchase that land. He said he wasn't even thinking of purchasing the land; he was thinking of converting the people who owned the land. That has been a good many years ago.

I HAD AN EXPERIENCE during conference that illustrated some of the things that can happen here which are not even planned. Some friends with whom I labored during my first missionary assignment invited us out to dinner one evening in one of our restaurants. There were about twenty or twenty-five people present. I was a little bit surprised when our host introduced me to two fine residents of Independence. I had heard their names, but had never met them—someone from Pennsylvania introducing me to two Independence business people. As we had our dinner, some of these folk said, "Now Brother Gleazer, why don't you tell us of some of your early experiences back there in Pennsylvania on your first missionary assignment?" And I mentioned a few in which these people had participated—street work in a Catholic community where we hadn't any more sense than to preach on infant baptism, and cottage meetings and some of the conversions that came as a consequence.

And then someone else suggested that one of the brethren present tell of an experience in our church in that part of the territory when Brother John Lentell came there from Scranton as a visiting minister on one occasion. This man got up to tell that he had committed about every offense it is possible for man to commit save murder itself. He told me once himself that he would have been guilty of that if his aim had been correct. And yet that man heard the gospel in a cottage meeting, and united with the church after a period of time. But he had lived such a life that he became discouraged with himself; he thought it useless. "I just can't live in harmony with the teachings of this church." There were some woods in that part of the country, and he told how he went off into those woods to pray. He waited until the church service had already commenced, and he came in and took a place all by himself. And then he described the experience when Brother John Lentell arose—didn't even know the man's name—and told him that his prayers had been heard, told him some of the things he had said in that prayer, and promised him what God would do for him. This man stood right here in Independence, Missouri, in the dining room of one of the local restaurants and bore that testimony with tears running down his cheeks—not just in my presence but in the presence of these two good non-members. That hadn't been planned. You may call it an accident, but it certainly hadn't been planned. And I am wondering right now if that type of indirect witnessing for Christ is not the most effective kind. We ought to talk more of what has happened to us in life. We ought to so serve that more things will happen to us as we go along.

I MENTIONED THE THRONGS that attended General Conference. I am aware of the fact that we have about 10,000 members of this church living in the area we call Independence. What could God do with such people if we sensed our responsibilities as stewards to witness for him? If condemnation should come to any of us because of the manner in which we obtain our wealth, or the manner in which we use or squander or hoard it—can you think of the condemnation that can come to us individually if we are unfaithful in the discharge of our apostolic stewardship? If you are not aware of the fact that this is God's work, if you are not aware of the fact that God has restored this church to save men from the consequences of sins that today are international in scope, then you've never been converted.

Before one can be effective in apostolic witnessing, he must know that Jesus is the Christ. You must have your own experience. That doesn't mean to suggest that Jesus must appear to you in person. I know many of you have shared with me in the testimony that this is the work of God. I know that if you haven't shared, you can share. You must share unless you are going to make shame of your baptism into this church.

All these different events I have mentioned were situations in which the Spirit of God touched men, and they responded to the divine touch. That spirit is still with this church. No one has a monopoly on that power. It is yours if you place yourself in a position to receive it; when you have received it, you will be in a position to discharge your missionary stewardship.

I haven't time to discuss the various examples of this stewardship of witnessing, because we vary in this stewardship just as we do in any other kind of stewardship. I haven't time to discuss the various activities in which we can engage. There isn't a department in the church that is without its missionary possibilities.

I was talking to Brother Carl Mesle on the street just yesterday. I have been informed not only of the hundreds of young men and women he is directing as young people's leader in Independence, but also of the hundreds of young men and women who hold membership in the church but are not receiving the benefits of their membership. I said, "Carl, wouldn't it be marvelous if we had some organization in Independence—someplace where we could bring our young people together and keep them together so they would not patronize the commercial entertainment that leads so many of them from the church and from God?"

I wonder if it has ever occurred to some of us as parents and as businessmen and others how we could help in our witnessing ministry by providing an environment for young Latter Day Saints where they could share together in some of the truths of this great work. I'm not talking now about singing hymns or conducting prayer meetings. I am talking about a fellowship under a righteous environment. Are we going to take it for granted, because our sons and daughters were baptized when they were eight years of age or thereabouts, that they've been saved from sin? Some of these youngsters are not aware that they have united with the church other than the fact that they have observed certain requirements and have joined with us in this organization. Somehow your children and my children must be converted. We should subject them to the experiences in which they would know for themselves that this is the work of God. One of the finest means I know of to convert your sons and daughters is send them after the sons and daughters of other honorable men and women.

You cannot engage with God in preaching, teaching, talking or making opportunities for others to teach and talk about the gospel of Jesus Christ without receiving the spirit of this work. And that is the spirit which will seal us up to full and complete salvation.

May God help us, here in Independence, as we go out from this conference to become more conscious than ever of our stewardship of witnessing. We are called as the apostles are called to witness for Christ. May God enlighten us that we may see ways and means of reaching our friends and neighbors which have not occurred to us in the past. May we be such good neighbors that we shall not be content to acknowledge our friends as honorable men and women, but may we wisely and carefully share with them the divine truth that has come to us.

It may require long-time planning before you or I can succeed in bringing men and women into righteous relationship with Christ. We must first of all win them as friends. It may require a long time to do that. We have to give them proof of our interest and our friendship. But suppose it takes six months? Suppose it takes a year? Do I need to say to you if you labor all your life and bring but one soul to repentance how great your reward will be? We are called to this work together. Some of us can make friends. Some of us can make contacts. Again it is your opportunity to bring to your friends or the people you have contacted those who can talk to them intelligently about the gospel of Jesus Christ. We know that in addition to having a knowledge of this work, in addition to knowing what God has brought to pass, we must know something about humanity.

Too many times in the past we have driven people from us. We have humiliated them. We have insulted them. We have forced them to put up a defensive mechanism against us. I hope that hour has passed. Too many times we have attempted to work in our own strength alone. I am old fashioned enough today to believe that the same God who moved upon men who are not identified with his church and brought them in contact with those who were identified is at work today; if you and I will dedicate ourselves to go where he wants us to go, if we are responsive to the divine invitation, God will make it possible for us to find those who will accept this truth. God will bless us in our ministry individually and collectively that we may be effective in winning souls to a knowledge of the truth.

May God help you in appreciation of what he has done for you to demonstrate your gratitude in moving forward to share this gospel with those who have not yet received it.

May you magnify your apostolic stewardship, for every man that belongs to the church of the living God is called to give an account of his stewardship.

Silent Sermons

THE MINISTER and Mrs. X had just completed a strenuous summer tour. The temperature had been over a hundred for several days. A thousand-mile train journey lay ahead and, with fatigue threatening, some comfort must be assured on the trip. Early reservations secured two corner seats on a "sit-up-all-night" train. The couple flopped into their reserved seats with sighs of relief. The compartment for eight passengers filled up and, sitting opposite the minister was a lady with a child.

Experience with one of his own made him realize what it meant to sit up all night with a tiny child on his knee. From within him, there came the small whisper, "Change with the lady." He answered, "But I'm dead tired, and I reserved early so that I would not have to sit in a seat with no head rest." Then he remembered a number of sermons he had preached on practical Christianity and the like. He remembered what he was endeavoring to instill into his small son. So he changed seats.

Next morning, as daylight dawned, and the company of nine began to stretch and grow free of muscle and speech, a lady passenger sitting in the far corner asked the minister, "Are you Mr. X, son of Missionary X, of"?

"Why, yes," he answered. "How did you know?"

"You see," she said, "my son is a member of your church, and he was thrilled with a sermon he heard you preach at his church the night before we left. He told me all about it." * * *

Sermons are not preached in the pulpit alone, and one never knows when he is preaching. — From The Standard, Australia.

The Commonplace Glorified

By Almer W. Sheeby

OF JESUS, the Master of Men, the Son of God, the Savior and Redeemer of mankind, it was asked, "Is not this the carpenter's son?"

One purpose of the life of Christ was that it should be exemplary. Therefore, as the great mass of humanity which he came to inspire and uplift lives an obscure and humdrum life, he himself chose a humble sphere and thus glorified the commonplace life. We think of those three years of illustrious exploits and forget the thirty preparatory years of obscurity which were just as divine and glorious.

The noble Christian life is not necessarily one of heroic deeds but one animated by the spirit of devotion—a life of commonplace duties done, and burdens borne for the glory of God. In one of Murillo's paintings, we see the interior of a kitchen and there at work are white-winged angels. One serenely puts the kettle on the fire, another lifts a pail of water, and a third is busy at the dresser. As you see them all so cheerily working, you forget the soiled pans and the sooty pots, and kitchen drudgery seems a natural and suitable work for angels. The spirit glorifies the task.

A woman who had cheerfully borne many hardships said that she had been helped through life by some words spoken to her as a child by her father, the village doctor. She came to his office one day, thoroughly exasperated. "What is the matter, Mary?" he asked.

"I am tired to death," she answered, "it's making beds and sweeping floors and washing dishes all day and every day, and what does it all amount to? Next day there are the same beds to make, and floors to sweep, and dishes to wash again. I'm sick and tired of it."

"Look there, my child," said the doctor, "do you see those little empty vials? They are worthless things in themselves; but in one I put a deadly poison, in another a sweet perfume, in a third a healing medicine. The vials are nothing; it is the thing in them that hurts or helps. So these homely tasks of yours count for little in themselves; it is the petulance or patience or zeal that you put into them that makes your life a bane or a blessing."

IT IS A GLAD FACT that in these commonplaces of life we often meet with God. Saul started out to seek his father's animals and found a kingdom. The disciples went out to fish and found the Son of God. It is in the commonplaces of life we meet our Lord. It is on the way to Gaza. It is on the road to Emmaus. It is by some quiet bush in the desert. Often it is that the everyday vocations of life have the richest blessings.

Without the commonplace, the illustrious is impossible. Before the great Mogul engine, the sooty foundry; below the deck of the battleships, the grimy, sweaty stoker. Back of and beneath every great enterprise are many humble auxiliaries, unrecognized by men but used and honored by God.

A king building a cathedral wished to claim all the credit for himself and prohibited all others from helping. A tablet was placed in the wall with his name inscribed on it. One night in a dream he saw his name erased and that of a poor widow substituted. This happened three times. The woman was summoned and angrily questioned: "What have you been doing to my cathedral?" She replied, trembling: "I loved my Lord and longed to do something for his church. So in my poverty, I brought a wisp of hay for the horses that hauled the stones." Then the king saw that he had labored for his own glory, but the widow for the glory of God, and he had her name engraved on the tablet.

Back of every great life there are long years of laborious training, of obscure but essential preparation for service. I have a picture of "Lincoln Training for Greatness." There is the rough Rail Splitter, coarsely clad, his ax resting on a log, near by a maul and a pile of rails on the snow-covered ground. In his hands is an open book from which, by the ruddy glow of the setting sun, he is snatching a few precious thoughts to digest when he resumes his work. Underneath is written: "I'll study and get ready; maybe the chance will come." And it did! Before the hour, the man. We have glimpses at least of Moses' forty years in Midian, of Samuel's service at Shiloh, of Christ in the carpenter shop, of John in the desert, and of Paul's three years in Arabia.

THE STORY IS TOLD of Turner, the great English landscape painter, that when out with a company of his fellow students one day, he spent the whole day sitting upon a rock and throwing pebbles into a lake. When evening came, his companions showed him the sketches they had made and taunted him for having done nothing. "I have done this, at least," he replied, "I have learned how a lake looks when pebbles are thrown into it." And thereafter no artist in England could paint ripples as Turner painted them. His was the discerning eye that could look upon what we call the commonplace and see in it the light that transfigures. For truly the commonplace is beautiful. The only reason we don't see all its essential beauty is because familiarity hides it from us. But it is art's fine prerogative to restore to us the freshness of impression that made familiar things delightful to us before our minds were dulled to their beauty by the mere fact that they had become familiar. To reveal the beauty of the commonplace is one of the finest services any artist can render to mankind. If the School of Seven, and notably Dr. A. Y. Jackson, had done nothing else but point up familiar Canadian beauty, we would be forever indebted to them. But not alone is the commonplace beautiful; it is useful as well. It is possible, and it is a great art to be able to discover the treasures of happiness and usefulness that lie hidden in the common things and the common endowments of the common opportunities of life that men so often pass by. Walt Whitman said:

I find letters from God dropped in the street,
And every one is signed by God's name.
And I leave them where they are, for
I know that whereso'er I go Others will punctually come forever and ever.

Commonplace people and things are often used by God to accomplish great results. Only a rod in Moses' hand—but it smote Egypt, divided the Red Sea, opened the rock, and gave victory to God's people. Only Shamgar's oxgoad—but it slaughtered the Philistines and delivered Israel. Only a sling and a pebble—but they laid low an impious giant and turned the tide of the battle. Only a handful of meal in the widow's jar and a little oil in her cruse—but they nourished the hope of Israel through the years of famine. Only a little boy with his lunch of barley cakes and two small fishes—but they fed the hungry multitude. Only a box of perfume—but its fragrance is "an odor of a sweet smell" wherever the gospel is preached today. Only the needle of Dorcas—but it points out the path of duty for a thousand women's societies. Only a goose-quill pen in the hand of a tinker in jail—but it has guided myriads of pilgrims in their progress toward the celestial city. Only a poor cobbler pegging and preaching—but as he hammers the tacks into his shoes, he hammers the missionary idea into the church and world-wide missions are the result.

IT IS SAID that when a great man's agent traveled all over Italy for samples of the work of all the great painters, the famous Giotto took a piece of chalk and drew a circle with one turn of the wrist. The agent protested, but that circle was all that he would give him. When the man of power saw the circle and heard the story, he examined it carefully and critically, then exclaimed, "Let this artist be sent for; he has done a simple thing so perfectly that I am sure he is the very man to paint the pictures I have in mind." The grace that does not aim for perfection in small things will not reach perfection in large things.

A life itself inglorious may be the origin or inspiration of a glorious one. A little captive maid's pious expression brought healing for body and soul to the commander-in-chief of the Syrian army. Andrew brought Peter to Jesus. Barnabas found Paul for the church. The world is indebted for Moody to a humble Sunday school teacher; and for Gough to a man who found him drunk in a gutter and took him along to prayer meeting.

A mother accomplishes her life's great mission in training a Moses, a Samuel, or a Timothy for his life's work. Consider this parable. One night a man took a taper, lighted it, and went up a long winding stairs. "Where are you going with me?" asked the taper.

"The ships out at sea are looking for our light to come into harbor," answered the man.

"Alas, no ship can see my feeble light," sighed the taper.

"Well, just keeping burning, and leave that to me," said the man. And with the taper, he lit the great lamps, then blew out its light. Its work was done.

All good lives and deeds, however obscure and commonplace, are glorious in God's eye now and will be glorified hereafter.

TWO TRAVELERS were descending a mountain path in the Alps. Suddenly there came floating up from below the most exquisite strains of music, as if the clear notes of piano and violin, the deep, swelling tones of the organ, and the resonant chime of bells were all blended in one delicate harmony of a celestial orchestra. The rock walls and splintered crags of the peaks towering above them echoed and re-echoed the sounds till the whole mountain was pulsing and throbbing with the rapture of the divine antiphony, and the atmosphere seemed pregnant with the glory of another angel song of Bethlehem. The mystified tourists continued their descent, and far down the path they came upon a mountaineer with his big wooden Alpine horn, the flaring end of which fitted into a boxlike hopper. He blew them a blast, harsh and ear-splitting. Yet it was that rude horn blown by an ignorant peasant down in the valley that made the strange music of the mountain heights. The rare atmosphere clarified and harmonized the harsh and discordant notes, and the mountain crags recomposed them into a celestial symphony.

We, too, are far down in the valley where the conditions of life are narrow and its service is hard. The instruments upon which we play are rude and clumsy and their notes displeasing to the ear; but these same tuneless and joyless experiences will "some sweet day" be transformed and glorified into the very music of heaven.

The late Mark Guy Pearse, a great English preacher, once said: "I stood awhile ago and looked at a drinking fountain; a marble angel, (Continued on page 22.)

Beyond Our Church Books

By GERALDINE WYATT

TODAY, in our highly mechanized world with which our spiritual and moral development have not kept pace, literature has the power to raise us to a higher standard of conduct. For there is no influence so powerful as the written word.

When I was in my teens, I heard a minister comment: "I would rather my daughter spend one hour in the company of a person of ill repute, than to spend one hour reading a book written by that person. It would have less effect upon her thinking." The power of the pen has lost none of its might.

An amusing incident which illustrates the command of the written word is told on one of our greatest American newspaper men. He and his landlady had an argument over the breakfast table about the weather. The woman insisted it would rain, and he assured her it would not. The argument waxed strong, and the writer, highly irritated, finally departed for his office. Later in the day, after his paper was out, the landlady called him and apologized: "I'm sorry. You were right. It won't rain, because the paper says it won't."

It is a scientific fact that spectators are inaccurate in relating an incident. Listeners are often unable to retell correctly something they have heard. Even memory can be inexact. The command to read the prayers over the communion emblems shows the possibility of error, and the commonplace acceptance of reciting from rote. But the written text can be handed down from generation to generation without change—its power undiminished.

You can read the best literature a country produces and from it know the dominating force ruling that people. For instance, Germany's best literature was military. Russia's best writing involves the feeling of sympathy of one person for another. And I think one of the finest religious short stories of our time is: "Where Love Is, There God Is Also," written by the great Russian author, Leo Tolstoi.

WITH MAN'S DEVELOPMENT of the written word—the recording of his laws, his experiences in relation to those laws, and his aspirations for brotherly living—progressed the advancement of civilization.

However, this powerful stimulus of behavior is not all uplifting. There is bad writing as well as good writing. And the force which fostered the advance of civilization can also cause its destruction. Today, we have access to the best of this past literature. And it would seem that this was the sole written achievement of these past eras. But these peoples of the past had their choices as we do now. And it was a matter of selection, of progression, of improvement from the first laws of Hammurabi, on through the great Roman legislative achievement—from the story of Ruth in the Old Testament to the parable of "The Prodigal Son," from the you-can't-fight-against-fate dramas of ancient Greece to our problem stories of today.

I had an English teacher in high school who constantly tried to stimulate her pupils' interest in classic literature. She had definite aristocratic leanings. And very characteristic of her was this oft-repeated question: "Would you talk with kitchen maids and stable boys when you could converse with kings and queens?"

She made it clear that the choice was ours. We could stuff our minds with trash, or we could fill them with thoughts of the masters. And her pert, disdainful manner indicated her opinion of those who chose trash. All of the contemporary writers were classed in their niches by her. This one was fourth rate. That one could have been great, but he was unwilling to expend the extra labor or make the necessary sacrifice. The classics were sure first-raters. Time had relegated them to their peerless position. She knew literature; she knew the qualities which made an author's work immortal, and through this knowledge, she was able to judge. The lesson she tried to pass on to us was to learn the best of the past, and by it judge from the wide flood of contemporary writings.

I think that is very good advice today. A person who becomes acquainted with the classics, will be better equipped to judge good literature. For one cannot accept public demand and popularity as a criterion of good writing.

A FEW YEARS AGO Miss Kirkus of the Kirkus Book Shop Service lectured in Kansas City on "What Makes a Best Seller." Miss Kirkus is reputed to read one thousand books a year. These come to her in galley sheets from the major publishing houses. And she, with at that time three or four helpers, sends out advance reviews to libraries and bookshops subscribing to her service.

Miss Kirkus must have lectured for about two hours, giving short reviews on current books, as questions were asked concerning them. She decried the trend toward trash books due to highly advertised writing. In other words, an advertising campaign can make a book a best seller. If a book is highly propagandized and gets banned in Boston, thus insuring it of a movie career, it is a sure-fire success in regard to sales. She discussed certain books of the time which were in the process of being ballyhooed to the public. Although she lamented the procedure and the quality of the books, her predictions concerning them were fulfilled.

With just whom lies the blame of foisting on the public these "must read" books, which are nothing but moral trash, is a moot question. In a recent review on a novel written by one of our Nobel prize-winning authors, the critic blamed it on "an insatiable appetite" of the public for this type of material.

SINCE MOST PUBLISHING HOUSES are more interested in money than in morals, and since all authors do not uphold the honor of their profession as did Sir Walter Scott, who determined he would never write anything of which he would be ashamed when he stood before God to be judged, it rests with the serious-reading public to select not only the better writing for themselves, but to train their children to select it also.

Parents have many times accosted me and bemoaned the fact their children just were not interested in reading. How on earth did I get my daughter to read? Why, they couldn't even get their youngsters to read the required number of books for school reports. At such questions, I always get a mental picture of the type of reading—if any at all—which is done in that home. Our tastes in literature develop just the same as our tastes in music or art, and we certainly have to know about something in order to appreciate it. If children see or hear their parents reading from only newspapers and the pulp magazines, it would really be a phenomenon if those children turned to better reading material.

These parents are the ones who will practically memorize the lurid best-sellers. They are the ones, who, when an author happens in, will try to slide the trashy pulp magazines under the sofa cushions, and if failing time for that, will apologize: "I only read it to relax." They read it because they either are not emotionally mature or lack a maturity in the choice of good writing.

SINCE FICTION is the most highly developed artistic writing, it, of course, has an important place in literature. Yet, amazing though it may seem, I have been told I had no chance of getting to heaven since I wrote fiction. I am always thankful God is our judge instead of man. Man's lack of understanding is a sure sign he needs a few lessons in brotherly living. There has been no better method devised in the past, nor has one been hinted of for the future, than the use of illustration. Great authors are as conversant with the workings of the human mind as great psychiatrists. The number of references on fictional characters made in psychiatric works would amaze those who have never delved into the science of human behavior.

The Jews long practiced the art of storytelling. Besides Biblical stories, with which we are all familiar, there are the stories of The Talmud. Christ, too, set the example of using story illustrations. Remember his parables? It is a method of vivid teaching which has never been excelled.

Incidentally, from a standpoint of technique, these Hebraic stories, and especially Christ's "The Prodigal Son," are considered perfect examples of technical construction. Great authors of fiction have employed this same technique in their masterpieces.

Personally, I do not think there is any finer stimulus for good character building or the development of understanding for our fellow man than good wholesome fiction. The best novelists are chiefly concerned with what makes people behave as they do, and their understanding and compassion should be an inspiration to others.

SOME TIME AGO I read an article, "Has Literature Lost Power?" by William Rose Benet, published in the Saturday Review of Literature.

Mr. Benet wrote: "Literature is truly a great country, but its prestige is no empty matter. It is the core of all civilization. It is the foundation of all humane and gracious living, of all human understanding . . . [Man] lives by the endeavor toward universal truth, of which literature is the greatest channel and conveyor . . . For it is the living word, which is literature, that has raised him above the beast."

The problem confronting us is of choosing truth or that which is good—a selecting of reading material which will cause us to expand mentally, to develop understanding, and prepare ourselves for better service to others in whatever fields lie our endeavors.

For our minds are vast storehouses. I don't think anything is ever lost or forgotten subconsciously. Hence, everything we read or think becomes a part of our behavior. We would do well to use care in our own reading habits and especially in the training of our young.

When a child grows into a love of good books, it isn't the result of indifference toward literature in the home and a hit and miss exposure to a little good reading in school. It is the result of careful training and example. When our youth can have such training, there will be no necessity for locked shelves in our libraries or surreptitious reading of banned books in the home, for trashy reading will have lost its appeal. Even the ballyhoo of publicity cannot foist a rotten book on them.

I Am Not Ashamed

By Evan A. Fry

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, The just shall live by faith.—Romans 1: 16, 17.

ARE YOU AFRAID or ashamed to be known as a religious man or woman? Many who would really like to espouse publicly some form of religious belief and affiliation find themselves filled with timidity, trepidation, and fear when it comes to doing or saying anything which would brand them as religious or God-fearing persons. I have known many such who take good care never to let the world see their better side for fear of being thought weak or soft or effeminate or sentimental, and who, therefore, shy as far away as possible from any public expression of religion or any indication that they feel the need of relying on an eternal power other than themselves.

Let us admit at the outset that too much of our religion is weak and wishy-washy and cringing and sentimental. Too much of our religion is taken out in emotion and good feeling and not enough in action. Too often there has been considerable truth in the charges that some enemies of religion have leveled—charges to the effect that religion is only for weaklings who can't face up to life alone—for cowards, for the weary, the frustrated, the elderly, and the fearful who need someone to hold their hand as they timidly walk the way of life. That is one aspect of the gospel of Jesus Christ who says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," but it is only one. The same Christ who promised rest for the heavy laden demands more of those who try to serve him than any leader ever demanded before or since. To really live the gospel requires men of physical strength and vigor of boldness of courage of spiritual and moral stamina. Christianity is no religion for a weakling; it is a religion for men who, like Paul, can stand fast in the faith and be strong in the Lord.

Some men, I believe, refuse to pay much attention to religion because they resent the idea of being dependent on God or anyone else. They are proud to be able to stand on their own two feet, to battle their way through life, to ask no favors or advantages from anyone, to be independent, self-reliant, self-sufficient. But no man needs to be ashamed to acknowledge his dependence on others. Think for a moment how much we all depend on others. We are born helpless; we have to rely on the love and kindness of someone to take care of us through the years of infancy and youth. All of us owe debts we can never begin to repay to the past: debts to the men who gave us our rights and liberties under a free government—men who have handed down to us wisdom and skill and knowledge—men who have built our communities and our schools and churches and hospitals which we found in operation when we came to this world—men and women who in countless direct and indirect ways have contributed to our mental and moral and spiritual progress and welfare. We are helpless to do for ourselves a thousand and one specialized, highly skilled tasks from taking out an appendix to making a fine watch. We are utterly dependent on each other for the materials and commodities of daily living. When the miners don't dig coal or the dock workers go out on strike or the railroads don't or run the gas pressure fails, the repercussions are felt all through the structure of our society. If we need each other so badly and depend on each other so much, why should any man be ashamed to admit that he needs God? Why be ashamed or hesitant about admitting that it is in God we live and move and have our being, or that it is to God we owe all we have and are or hope to be?

IT TAKES A STRONG, virile, self-reliant man to serve God. He wants no whining, sniveling pussy-footers or fawning sycophants or clinging vines who are afraid of the dark unless he is holding their hand. If God had wanted that kind of men, he would have created us slaves or puppets utterly dependent for everything on his bounty and his will. But instead of that, he has made us free moral agents. He has given us the right to choose for ourselves whom we will serve and how we will serve. He wants men of power—rugged men with the strength of their convictions rather than milk-and-water "yes" men. He offers to every man the opportunity to enter into a partnership with Deity—to be strong, self-reliant, and independent, but to use that strength and that independence to choose the better part and to join forces with him. He wants men to feel a need for him, but more than that, I believe he wants men to dedicate their strength and their manhood and their independent wills to him for the accomplishment of his purposes on the earth. Strong men need God, but God also needs strong men—men who cannot be swerved from their determination to serve him by the sneers, the insults, the jeers, or the persecutions of their associates.

Any weakling can drift with the crowd. Any boy can go out with a wild group and do as the others do for fear of being ridiculed or thought a sissy. But the real sissy is the boy who hasn't the backbone or moral courage to stand alone against the crowd, if necessary, in order to preserve his own integrity and the peace of his own conscience. Any spineless weakling can take the easy path, can give in to every temptation, but the really strong man is he who can perfectly control himself—who knows where he is going, who directs his own life, who despite obstacles, presses toward the goal he has set for himself, which goal is set with an understanding and an admission of his need for God and God's need for him. Any bandit with a large enough army can take a city; any weakling can arm himself with a gun, stifle his fear with drink or drugs, and go out to do robbery or murder, but "he that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

THE REAL COWARD, the real weakling, is the man who is afraid to face his own better self and is still more afraid to face the facts of his dependence upon God. Many a man who shows only a swaggering braggadocio to his friends and associates is trying to escape from himself and God; he is trying to cover up the inner fear he has of facing up to himself as he really is. But man cannot escape from himself. He must live with himself, with his conscience, all the rest of his life. Even death cannot separate him from himself nor the knowledge of his need for God. Death does make it forever impossible for him to give his strength to God at the time it is needed and could be used to greatest advantage.

Make no mistake; sooner or later there comes a time in every man's life when he needs God—when the skill and wisdom and strength of humanity are all pitifully inadequate to the situation. Sooner or later we all—strong and weak—must die. The strong man as well as the weak must face the day when his loved ones are in an extremity which only God can help. In that day, we need not be ashamed or afraid to ask for

The World Council of Churches at Amsterdam

By DR. L. J. MARSHALL

FROM AUGUST 22 TO SEPTEMBER 4, 1948, there was held in Amsterdam what is now known as the World Council of Churches. There were present at that meeting about 1,500 delegates and other officials, representing 150 Protestant and Orthodox churches from more than forty different nations. Not all Protestant denominations of these nations were officially represented, nor was the Roman Catholic Church represented by any official representative from any country. I was not present at this convention and shall not attempt to discuss in any detail the various resolutions passed by the delegates nor the methods of procedure in the convention. However, I have been greatly interested in the convention and its objectives. I am a charter member of the Federated Churches of Christ in America and have been deeply interested for the past fifty years in the problem of Christian co-operation.

From the days of the apostles, Paul and Peter, there has always been someone urging men to forget their religious prejudices and accept the God of Jesus Christ and the doctrine of the brotherhood of Christians as Jesus taught and lived it. This Amsterdam meeting is a continuance of men's efforts to create a church that is united in purpose and will present a solid front in combating the world's moral evils and destructive practices. These men do not desire nor attempt to set up any rigid and unbreakable form of organization nor any fixed and unbreakable creed or doctrine by which all shall be governed in every part of the world. The members of a United Church can be controlled by principles only, never by man-made laws. The declaration that the Council rejects the ideologies of his strength and help if we have given of our hearts and strength to him.

both Communism and capitalism simply means that the church is primarily concerned with the welfare of its people and is not a defender of any particular financing system. Justice and mercy are more important than the particular economic system under which they are obtained. The appeal of the Council at Amsterdam to the Jews throughout the world to co-operate in the work of relief among the Arabs is an attempt to put into practice the doctrine of doing good to those who may have spitefully used you. Our intelligent and spiritually-minded men in all religions are coming to understand that there must be co-operation and good will among all men who want to create a civilization that is humanized and spiritualized. Ghandi was not a professed Christian, but he practiced the philosophy of Christ in a much larger manner, in many things, than do a number of professed Christians. "By their fruits ye shall know them,"—not by their nationality nor their religious denomination. Not all the denominations that did not co-operate in the Amsterdam meeting are opposed to its objectives, nor are all members of the Roman Catholic Church accepting the statement of the Pope that "the unity Christ wanted could be found only in the Roman Catholic Church." Many communions that did not co-operate with the Federated Churches of Christ in America at the beginning of its history have since become leaders in that organization. Great movements move slowly, and men cannot hurry God. The opposing forces of good and evil are in the world. All the forces of good must unite and throw their combined strength against the forces of evil if mankind is to become a human brotherhood, inspired and directed by the philosophy of ONE GOD and FATHER OF US ALL.

"All of This With Zion in View"

The Present Objective of the Women's Department in the Light of Its Beginnings.

EVERY YEAR into the ranks of the women workers of the church come new recruits who do not have a background of the development of the program. Also some were young when the General Women's Department was organized, so I believe it wise and profitable to go back to the beginning of the organization and review the history and early objectives which were pointed out to us by the late President F. M. Smith. This will help us to see more clearly the road we should travel.

Three Great Goals

In 1934, when the General Council of Women was formed, the church had three great objectives: payment of a large debt, the missionary program of evangelization directed to members as well as to nonmembers, and the building of a Zion community.

As you know, the members of the church accomplished the first goal through sacrifice and work; the women had a part in that. Through classwork in local branches, at reunions, and Conference, knowing and keeping the financial law was stressed.

Two great goals remain with us. To evangelize the world, missionaries must be sent out with the gospel; in order to send them, money is needed. Women, through the wise use of the income, can see that funds are put into the hands of the Bishopric for this purpose. Still more important, however, is that there are young men and women ready and willing to be sent if called for. Women's real task in evangelization is the guidance of their children, so that they will be eager to prepare for this great service to the church and to mankind.

Women have a specific part in the task of accomplishing the remaining goal of building Zion. Women, with the help of their husbands, are to build Zion homes. To do this, requires an understanding of the term Zion; the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants furnish the information and the way. Unless we understand what Zion is, we cannot build it. When one attends college, there are basic courses required before others can be taken; similarly, knowledge and belief in the Scriptures are prerequisites for all members of the church. To build Zion homes, women must have a deep conviction of the truthfulness of the gospel and a secure spiritual foundation. Then this allegiance to Christ and his way can be transferred to the members of the family. We have learned that this sure foundation is established in our lives by prayer, faith, work, study, and personal experiences with the Master. We believe that our church was divinely instituted, established in the latter days so that the gospel of Christ could produce a righteous people. When this condition is achieved, we will be able to establish Zion. Let us keep before us always that the great goal of the church is to develop a righteous people who have become so because they have patterned their lives after the example of Christ and have developed Christ-like qualities.

By MRS. S. S. ARNISON

IN THE CHURCH, which is the body of Christ, there are many members, each with a specific work to do. These specific goals are necessary, but the purpose of accomplishing them is to help bring about the kingdom of God on earth. We should keep this in mind and use it as a measuring stick to see if the things we are doing are working toward this end. The women's department, as one of the departments of the church, has a definite responsibility which was originally given to it by the late President F. M. Smith. The First Presidency and other leading officers have concurred with his charge and have continued to lay this responsibility upon the department.

In 1934, President F. M. Smith was asked what the goal of this newly-organized department would be. Showing evidence of slight annoyance that such a question was necessary, he answered, "Why, the development of the Zion home, of course." Through the years, many have made a study of the Zion home. We know, above all, that it is a Christian home where mutual love, understanding, peace, and sympathy abound, where there is regular worship of God, where religion is taught to the members of the family, and where loyalty to Christ and a desire to have a part in his work is uppermost in the minds of its members. It is also a physical house which is clean, neat, harmonious, and artistic, where gracious qualities are developed, and where hospitality and friendliness abound. Both sides are necessary to make a perfect home—a Zion home.

Excerpts from President Smith's Statements

I have looked over some of the articles and statements which President Smith made as he gave direction to the organization of the women's department, and I am touched again with his vision and wisdom. Few, perhaps, have access to these statements, which are of significant interest to women. In an article printed in the Herald in 1934, he advises that the Women's Council be formed so direction could be given to individuals and local groups, that a properly co-ordinated movement and work among the adult women of the church would result, that the council should analyze the work of the women in the light of the objectives of the church and set goals and show or explain the correlation between them and the goals or objectives of the church. He also said, "The women of the church must bear large responsibilities in the development of the church." In the handbook for the work of the women, he continues:

To an organization holding ideals of social progress and reform based on proper interpretation and social application of the Christian religion into practical and everyday affairs, such as our church holds and believes, the home becomes of prime importance, as around it must center the social and religious activities. For our homes to be what they should to the church, they must be occupied and governed by those who by nature and, as we believe, by divine design were made the home-workers—our women must realize that their first duty and chief place of social functioning is in the home, and preparation should be made to make that functioning of the highest order.

His first suggestion, then, was to learn what qualities a homemaker must have and make preparation to become one.

A PROGRAM OF HOME IMPROVEMENT was included in an address on goals and objectives of the church to the Conference of 1942.

If Zion is eventually to be an accomplished fact in bringing about better social, religious, and industrial conditions, we must improve conditions prevailing generally, in our homes.

a home column feature

The physical condition of the home is only a factor, and may even be a minor factor in reaching the standard desired. The social and religious conditions of the home are factors which loom larger in fixing the standard we desire. The ideal should be a high standard of all factors. The economic development of Zion will be directed toward an evening up of the extremes in homes, and the raising of the general standards of physical equipment. While these steps are being taken, there should be a pari passu development of the people in their powers of appreciation of the better things as home factors along all lines. The betterment of the Zion home must take into consideration such things as architecture, location, setting, community life and atmosphere, propinquity to church and school, neighborhood ethos, internal appointments and decorations, home atmosphere, educational and religious activities And all of this with Zion in view.

Aesthetics in the Home

President Smith also stated:

Another matter I am disposed to suggest with the hope that the women will eventually become dynamically interested in it to the extent of making it a definite objective, though of course ancillary to home betterment, is the aesthetics of the home. The interior arrangement and decoration of the home must at times give way in precedence to the factors of utility; but harmony of ensemble having as it doubtlessly does a distinct effect upon the developing youth, should not be ignored, but given careful attention to as great an extent as possible. To a large extent the development of ability to recognize and use the factors of aesthetics is a matter of tastes. So educational processes must be given play in developing the desire for home beautification.

There is now and always will be a parallel development of the material expressions of this people, and the spiritual development. It is necessary for both to progress in a parallel course in order to reach the highest possibility of each.

I have been criticized because I have preached at times a Zion of brick and mortar, yet while I have thought in terms of building, I have always thought in terms of a spiritualized people to occupy those buildings. And while I have thought in terms of streets and roadways to connect people who have gathered in like-mindedness, I have also thought of a social spirit of co-ordination, of co-operation, and the spirit of development which is necessary.

Youth

Many times President Smith spoke of the youth of the church and the need for caring for the natural increase.

The home is entitled to religious heritage; the child has a right to it. Parents living the life of the gospel is necessary. The power of example is the great teacher. Children should have a daily example of what it means to belong to the church. Children are taught everything they know. They learn by observation. Their social viewpoint is acquired, not inherited. Our duty is to direct and advise. We should say to them, "This is the best church with the highest objective." It is our duty to help children follow the right course and tell them what to join.

In 1942, while addressing the women at a Conference class, he said:

I find hope in the present organization of the women working toward the problems of the home and homemaking. In Zion, any woman who fails to impress on her children the ideals of Zion is still far short of her duty; it was an ineradicable belief in Zion that had an effect on all my college study. I was concerned how it might be applied to the work of the church. Civil engineering as it might apply to our cities. You know my first love was electricity. In Graceland, I studied natural science. After I graduated from a scientific course at Graceland College, here I was at the head of a great social organization and I knew too little about sociology. I took an M.A. in sociology and criminology at K. U. When I took my doctor's degree, it was in genetic psychology. If I could impress you with the church giving direction to your studies, I will not have wasted your time at all.

In the Priesthood Journal of January, 1939, may be found this quotation from an epistle issued before the historical Centennial Conference of 1930 by President Smith:

Two great projects above all others engage the attention of the church at this time: our missionary program and the gathering. To evangelize the world is still our primary function. To build, as a result of this successful evangelization, a new type of community, a new and ideal social order. Zion with the right atmosphere for our homes and children. When it was declared, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," a task was set for the church, and on each member is imposed the responsibility of participating in the work of raising before the people of the earth an ensign, which shall be to them a "testimony, a witness." The greatness of the task is matched by the idealism of the purpose. To preach the gospel does not complete our task. There is an additional responsibility of preparing a place from out of which the beauty of perfection and the glory of God shall shine: Zion must become a reality. Out of the nations shall be gathered the elements to comprise Zion from which the effulgent glory of God shall radiate.

Past Accomplishment

Through the years, the women's department has used the instructions given as a guide. It has been concerned first with the spiritual development of the women, knowing that this was essential before any great goals could be accomplished. Suggestions have been made to local groups and districts that they include in their programs for women's work subjects of study which would fortify and strengthen the spiritual foundations of the women. Almost every group has studied God's word, provided for worship through devotionals, familiarized itself with the high lights of the history of the church, as well as using tracts in their program of visiting. Many fine pamphlets have been written by consecrated women who put first the necessity of developing righteousness.

In pamphlets, the instruction of children in religion in the home has been emphasized similarly, as well as health and foods in relation to the church philosophy. We have tried, also, to be alert in seeking out good books written by experts, which we could recommend to women to help them in their own or their families' development.

Our Future Work

In the light of what yet is to be accomplished by the church, and from the instruction which has been specifically given to the women, it is not difficult to outline our future work. Whatever part of this program has been overlooked or undeveloped would be stressed, ever keeping before us the great responsibility that is ours and realizing that whatever we do, in a measure, either hinders or promotes the achievement of the great goals. In the Book of Joshua is told the story of Achan and his family. Israel was not going forward because Achan was found to be in sin, and "wrath fell on all the congregation of Israel, and that man perished not alone in his iniquity." One family kept the whole church from progressing.

The women's organization in the branch is more than a club, although there are many clubs accomplishing good work in the community. We have the responsibility of carrying a part of the mission of the church. Our aim is to increase in stature after the likeness of Christ so that we shall receive his power and guidance. We should be anxious that those who come within our circle of contact shall learn his ways and be persuaded to link their energies with ours to accomplish these great tasks on earth. It is recognized that the tasks can be accomplished more swiftly through organization because of the number engaged in the good work. Numbers of people with quality mean power. Women can't be satisfied that their own families are growing; they must be concerned that others around are growing, too, and the women's department is an avenue through which good literature and material may be distributed to help in this development.

The women's department can help to develop leaders for all phases of church activity. There is always a crying need for leaders. Few of us recognize our potential powers and honestly would prefer to let others occupy. But if given an opportunity to qualify and stimulated to prepare by prayer, study, and consecration, many would be making preparation for the time when they would be needed. A training program of leadership in the women's program would benefit the whole church. One of our responsibilities is to find a place in the church program where every woman can use her talents.

Revolution in Costa Rica

By VERNEIL SIMMONS

THERE IS A RAPIDLY-GROWING CONVICTION in our family that our arrival in a foreign country just before trouble starts is more than a mere coincidence. We found ourselves in Aruba, a Dutch island, just in time for the outbreak of World War II. My arrival practically coincided with the first submarine attack. Not giving this point the consideration we probably should have, we laid plans to take up foreign service again, this time in Costa Rica. We arrived just in time for the revolution. Now I'm beginning to wonder.

Revolutions in Latin America aren't news, but we had confidently assured our families that Costa Rica was the exception that proved the rule—it never had revolutions! We found Costa Ricans telling themselves the same thing, as they busily concealed their money, cars, and extra silver. Bursts of rifle fire which rattled over the city at all hours of the night soon had us wondering if someone could be wrong! We were reassured by the story that the gunfire really wasn't anything to worry about. It seems that it is just an old Latin custom during elections. As there were never any reports of casualties, we are still wondering where all the spent ammunition went.

Things might have continued like this indefinitely if an overly ambitious army officer, hired from Puerto Rica, hadn't attempted a "coup" on the person of the president-elect, Don Utillo Ulate. The communistically-inclined government seemed to be laboring under the delusion that if Señor Ulate "disappeared," the country would fall in line with government policy and the threatened revolution would die a-borning.

We might have known that when the shooting started the Simmons would be at hand. The crack of rifles and chatter of machine guns just around the corner sent the neighbors headlong for cover without a backward glance. The loud slamming of doors up and down the street testified to their belief in the law of self-preservation. No one knew what had provoked the army into using up ammunition in broad daylight, and no one had any intention of seeking firsthand information. The morning paper would do very well.

Not being versed in the ethics governing revolutions and with the usual curiosity of the female of the species, I had to do a bit of kibitzing.

Return fire from the house under attack had discouraged any further shooting. Probably because two of the attacking force were already beyond the need of an ambulance. The "coup" became a siege, with soldiers hurriedly surrounding the block and putting the entire neighborhood under surveillance.

WAYNE'S ARRIVAL added his bit to the story. The occupants of his bus had abandoned it in mid-flight when they heard bullets singing by. He had ducked to safety behind the comforting solidity of a cement shaft dedicated to Columbus until then considered only a traffic hazard. (From now on we shall give Columbus the honor due him.) His cautious return home by back street and footpaths to avoid the trigger-happy soldiers sounded like a plot from a Grade B movie and delighted the children no end.

Our neighbors ventured out only long enough to board up windows and doors. For days they slept on floors behind barricades of furniture. One friend complained that sleeping in the bathtub was giving him permanent curvature of the spine.

The American ambassador stepped in and rescued the besieged men and Señor Ulate was freed. But nothing could stop the revolution now. "Ticos" by the score were taking to the hills to join the rebel leader, "Pepe" Figueres. The government paper vainly proclaimed in three-inch headlines that the country was at peace, but the daily bolas (rumors) brought the news that Figueres' men were winning every battle. The Opposition paper, unable to report the progress of the revolution under threat of liquidation, resorted to publishing every anti-Communist item it could glean from the world's newspapers.

As the tenseness in the city increased, American Flags blossomed on houses in every section. From the number of them, we were forced to conclude that there was a far larger American population than the records show, or that every person having even a speaking acquaintance with an American was seeking protection under our flag. Contrary to most of our fellow countrymen, we refused to fly one. Our reason was based on the suspicion that if the government lost the war, the Red Army leaders might make a national incident of some American, and with our record for being on the spot when trouble starts—well, we preferred to be anonymous!

ONE OF THE FIRST MOVES made by the Opposition was to sabotage a power plant which left San Jose dismally low on current. When there was nothing new and exciting in the way of bolas, we passed the time by speculating on what hours the current would be on. The only hours we could be reasonably sure of were from midnight until 6 a.m. If I arose in the wee hours to do my cooking, we had current all day. If I foolishly trusted it until lunch time, it went off at eleven. When no one expected it to be on, it slyly returned. A mad dash for the kitchen and just as the cake went in the oven—no current! It was a little game we played for days, and I never won. Before the family was reduced to actual starvation, I admitted defeat and purchased what looked like a reconditioned cracker tin, though they assured me it was a charcoal stove. The catch was to find the charcoal. Thanks to Wayne's blond American physiognomy, we were able to secure enough to keep the soup kettle boiling.

Aside from our small domestic difficulties, our greatest problem was the mariachas. These were raw recruits lured into the government forces by the promise of a few cents a day, which, incidently, they never received. A rifle was thrust into their arms, in some cases the first they had ever seen, with the order to "push that and pull this." Then they were sent out to guard the city at night from attack. With the rebel forces moving closer day by day, the frightened mariachas suspected every moving object of being an enemy and acted accordingly. Our social life was soon reduced to reading bedtime stories to the children—and ourselves!

The dullness of such evenings was broken occasionally by a bit of excitement. One night a frightened sentry set his whole company to firing at an imaginary foe. The captain, thinking he was under attack, sent a frantic call to the cuartel (fort) for help. When the reinforcements arrived on the double-quick, they began returning the fire from the "beleaguered" post. Morning found the two companies still popping away at each other. At another time, two planes coming in late at night were met at the airport with several rounds from their own machine guns. The infuriated American pilots, hired to fly government planes, refused to fly again until all the mariachas were removed a safe distance from the airport. In such incidents, their inaccurate marksmanship was a decided asset.

IT SOON BECAME EVIDENT to even the most rabid Caldronista that the government wasn't doing so well against the rebels. In the early battles, they sent mariachas to the front, saving their regular army of good loyal Communists to protect the capital. The first shot fired was sufficient excuse for a mariacha to drop his gun and take to his heels. A lack of pay and often a lack of rations had dispelled any ideas of loyalty that he might have had to begin with. Thus, in a few weeks, the Minister of War found Pepe and his men practically at his front door. In a frenzied effort to stem the tide, every bit of man power went to the front—even the Minister of War, but he had waited too long.

Like rats deserting a ship, government leaders began fleeing for the Nicaraguan border. The diplomatic corps had been working around the clock, trying to effect a settlement which would spare San Jose from being invaded by force. While people waited for the decision, we sent home a cable, enclosing a scoop in the best newspaper style—but inadvertently. Having little to base it on but wanting to reassure the family, we added, "End of war expected momentarily." The employee filing the cable thought us unduly optimistic, expressing his belief that Nicaragua was about to come to the aid of the government. Three hours later the announcement of the capitulation came over the radio. I'll venture he is still wondering how we knew.

Only the last act was left to be played. The overwhelming victory of the relatively small Opposition army must be celebrated. While Jose Figueres, installed as the president of the governing junta, was anxious to start work on the needed reforms for the country, the people must have their fiesta. It was the custom.

A VICTORY DAY was proclaimed, to be high lighted by a parade of the young Ticos who had freed their country from the danger of a Communist-controlled government. Friends, families, and others sympathetic to the new government, which included most of the Americans, filled the city with a festive air. The blue and white colors of the flag of the new Second Republic flew in every shop window, appeared in the dress of the lovely, dark-eyed Ticas, and not a small boy could be found without a soldier's hat in blue and white. Many of the remaining Caldronistas (sympathizers with the late government) prudently became Figueristas over night and waved the blue and white colors as fervently as any.

Victory Day found us at a vantage point with all available cameras loaded, ready to record in color the festivities of the day. Flowers seemed to dominate the scene as the army made its triumphal march through the city. They showered down from every roof top, window, and balcony until the street was carpeted. Nose-gays nodded gaily from each rifle barrel, and bouquets sprouted from the mouths of howitzers. Pepe's car was nearly buried under its burden of blossoms. Flowers, cheers, martial music, flags flying—all the excitement of the day was so infectious that we weren't surprised to find ourselves shouting with the rest: Viva la Republica Segunda—Long live the Second Republic!

beautifully sculptured, stood pointing to heaven. Then came polished granite inscribed with gilt letters and massive slabs of stone. But I noticed that the water came through a small brass pipe, and the people drank from an iron cup attached to an iron chain. And the marble angel pointing heavenwards would have done nobody any good but for the brass pipe and iron cup. Think if the pipe had said, 'If they do not make me of gold, I will not belong to the thing.' Or if the cup had said, 'I must be of silver, or I shall be ashamed to be there at all.' No, I thought I heard the music of the three—common water, common pipe, and common cup. Well, they sang, 'They can't do without us, and we must do our part with the marble angel and polished granite.'"

Common things—common service. Nearly all service is, in a way, commonplace, no matter what the trade or the tool; but it is also sacred, and its commonplaceness is a part of its sanctity.

And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, Their god is a god of the hills, therefore they were stronger than we.

MOST PEOPLE find it easier to believe in the God of the heights than in the God of the plain, in the God of miracles than in the God of the normal. It is the very quietness with which God moves around us that makes his presence unnoticed. It is the calm, daily flow of his benevolence that makes us forget his benefits. If he came in the thunder and the whirlwind, our souls would thrill with worship; but when he is a still, small voice, we do not so much as listen.

God is the God of the commonplace. He is found in the valley as well as on the height, in the humblest as well as the most heroic environment of life or nature or duty. If we do not meet him in the valley, we shall not find him on the hills. He is with us in the path of daily duty—a strong help and a safe guide.

The more I study Christ's life, the more I am impressed with the value he set upon the ordinary. He took a common lily that grew in tens of thousands and said of it, "Not even Solomon in all his glory is arrayed like one of these." He took a commonplace child and said of it, "Of such is the kingdom of God!" For Christ there was a whole universe within a mustard seed. For Christ there was a wealth of meaning in a village. For Christ there was a sacrament in a piece of broken bread. Whatever Naaman did, it is clear that Jesus never turned from the commonplace in a rage.

Every day will be brighter, every task break into music, every commonplace burden have a gleam of heaven in it, if, instead of fretting as did Naaman, we say, "Yes, Lord, because thou biddest me, I will go and wash in Jordan seven times."

I WANT TO RE-EMPHASIZE that whatever we do, we do unto the Lord, and that our daily tasks which are so necessary can be glorified when we have the goals in mind. If we are to be an ensign to the peoples of the earth, we will need to have them see the tangible as well as the lives we live. The homes which were built in Nauvoo, Illinois, show that a progressive people lived there. Within five years after leaving Missouri, they built a community of beautiful homes, correct in architectural detail, beautifully executed inside and out, and constructed so well that they have endured for a century. These homes of early Saints should inspire us to make an effort to beautify our homes so that our youth will take pride in them and be happy to bring their friends into them.

Alice Edwards expresses the sacredness of daily tasks in an article on homes, from which I have her permission to quote:

We know man does not live by bread alone. Living isn't composed simply of eating, and sleeping, and hanging up your clothes. That is entirely true, but things like friendship, and affection, and tolerance, and peace, and love of beauty and religion are all more or less tied up with the primary requirements, from the homemaker's point of view at least, man being a simple creature fundamentally, after all. These other things are just manifestations of the more basic requirements of living, with this significant difference, that they are living with a goal or direction. The breaking of bread is one of the simplest and most fundamental facts of human existence, yet Christ chose it to represent the most sacred relationship known to man, because the breaking of bread is a basic need of humanity, and when it is done in remembrance of the sacrifice which Jesus made to save mankind, it becomes the symbol of repentance and divine communion.

So it is in our homes. The necessary functions of living are glorified when they are given direction and purpose. In addition to the strengthening of our spiritual foundations which come from the study of the word of God, we must learn together in our women's groups the necessary steps of Zion's home-building by providing opportunity for discussion and study of the vital elements which make up these homes.

The priesthood has the definite responsibility of guiding the spiritual development of the church members. The women are charged with the development of the Zion's home. We must not fail, remembering always to do all things with an eye single to the glory of God. "And all of this with Zion in view."

BULLETIN BOARD

Southeastern Illinois District Conference

The Southeastern Illinois District Conference will be held at Mt. Vernon, Illinois (Twentyeth Street and Casey Avenue), on November 13 and 14. The theme of the conference will be "Wax strong in the knowledge of the truth." Apostle E. J. Gleazer will speak at the opening service at 7:30 p.m., Saturday. Activities for Sunday include a 9:30 prayer service; a sermon by Apostle Gleazer and a special junior worship at 11; a business session at 2; and a sermon by Missionary S. R. Coleman at 3:30. Lunch will be served at the church; those attending are requested to bring sandwiches and pie. All branch secretaries should mail their reports to the district secretary, Mrs. Ruby Ellis, 519 South Twelfth Street, Mt. Vernon.

WILLIAM T. GUTHRIE,
District President.

Seattle Home-coming

A fiftieth anniversary home-coming will be held at First Branch in Seattle, Washington, on November 13 and 14. Saturday will feature classwork for priesthood, women, and young people, beginning at 3 p.m., and an old-fashioned party and program at 8 in the evening. Sunday's activities include an early morning prayer service; a business session at 9:45; an address by Apostle C. George Mesley at 11; a basket dinner at noon; a special service, "We Remember," with a play written for the occasion by Jessie Ward LeBaron at 2; a tour of points of interest at 4; and an evening sermon by Apostle Mesley. Amelia Ward, wife of George Edgar Ward, first pastor of the branch, is to be the guest of honor on Sunday. All friends and former members are invited to attend these special services.

PAUL A. WELLINGTON, Pastor.

Anniversary and Home-coming Celebration at Washington, D. C.

The Washington, D. C., congregation will celebrate its twelfth anniversary and home-coming on November 14 and 15. Apostle Paul Hanson will be the speaker on Sunday morning; services will be held at the Pythian Temple, 1012 Ninth Street, N.W. Other general church appointees are expected to be present, also. The annual anniversary banquet will be held on Monday evening at the Y.W.C.A. Building, Seventeenth and K Streets, N.W. All are welcome.

WEDDINGS

Bumpus-Wolf

Wilma Joy Wolf, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde H. Wolf of Walhonding, Ohio, and Dale Bumpus, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Bumpus, also of Walhonding, were married August 1 at the First Church of Christ in Liverton, Ohio, by Elder William Vickroy. They are making their home in Fremont, Michigan.

Dixon-Wentzel

Doris Wentzel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Wentzel of Monessen, Pennsylvania, and William Dixon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Dixon, also of Monessen, were married October 23 at the Reorganized Church in North Charleroi, Pennsylvania, Elder C. I. Winship officiating. They are making their home in Monessen.

Lundgren-Gadberry

Lois Marie Gadberry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Gadberry, and Donald E. Lundgren, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Lundgren, both of Independence, Missouri, were married on August 15 at the Liberty Street Reorganized Church in Independence. Elder Clair Green performed the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Lundgren are making their home in Independence.

Kroesen-Gadberry

Bonnie Lou Gadberry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Gadberry of Independence, Missouri, and Carlos Kroesen, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Kroesen, also of Independence, were married at Liberty Street Church in Independence on August 29. Elder Fred Epperson read the double-ring ceremony. The couple are residing in Independence.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd H. Cobb of Dunlap, Kansas, announce the birth of a daughter, Sharon Lynn, born October 7.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. Alley of Jonesport, Maine, announce the birth of a son, Dennis Ernest, born May 24. Mrs. Alley is the former Phyllis Manchester.

A son, Steven, was born on October 29 at the Independence Sanitarium to Mr. and Mrs. Ira Pulley, Jr., of Oak Grove, Missouri.

A daughter, Marla Joy, was born on October 6 at the Leon Hospital, Leon, Iowa, to Mr. and Mrs. Joe N. DeBarthe of Lamoni, Iowa. She was blessed on October 31 at Riley Center by Elder Harold Tabor. Mary Judith Hollaman was blessed at the same service by her uncle, Elder J. N. DeBarthe.

A son, David Clifford, was born on October 20 to Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Hall of North Charleroi, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Hall is the former Audrey Calfrey.

DEATHS

MILLNER.—Donna Kay, daughter of Willard F. and Josephine Millner, was born August 13, 1941, at Austin, Texas, and died September 29, 1948, following an illness which lasted eight days. She is survived by her parents; a sister, Joann; two brothers: Willard F., Jr., and Jack; her paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Millner; and her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Nora Morgan, all of Austin. The large attendance and many beautiful floral offerings at the funeral bore witness to the friendships formed by this small girl in her short lifetime. Services were held at the Wilke Chapel, Elder H. E. Winegar officiating. Burial was in Memorial Park, Austin, Texas.

HEISTAND.—David E., son of Gideon and Amanda Heistand, was born May 26, 1889, at Pisgah, Iowa, and died at his home in Independence, Missouri, on October 14, 1948. His activities centered in and around Pisgah until 1938 when he and his family moved to Independence. Here he worked as a carpenter until his illness in June of 1948. He was married to Leona Sherer on December 23, 1914. Baptized into the Reorganized Church in his youth, he was a man of character loved by all who knew him.

He is survived by his wife, Leona; one son, David Drexel of Denver, Colorado; a grandson; and three sisters.

HULL.—Claude Lewis, was born November 22, 1887, in Lambertville, New Jersey, and died October 7, 1948, in Detroit, Michigan. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 3, 1911, and was married to Genevieve Turner at Elkton, Maryland, in December, 1913. For years he was employed as general sales manager of the Square D Switch Company in Detroit. He was also a member of the Masonic Lodge.

Surviving are his wife, Genevieve; two daughters Mrs. Bruce Everley and Mrs. Willard J. Musson, all of Detroit; and his father, Elder E. B. Hull of Monongahela, Pennsylvania. Funeral services were held at the William R. Hamilton Chapel in Detroit, the Reverend Robert Frehse officiating. Interment was in the Royal Oak Cemetery.

BRIEFS

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—

At the close of the communion service on August 1, the following men were ordained: John Gann and Robert Nephew, elders; Albert Burdick and Reuben Cline, priests; Keillor Winsor and Lawrence Schall, deacons. On August 8, Florence Weir, Stanley Keith Jacks, and Buford Tannehill were baptized and confirmed. On July 11, Harold Burr was baptized by Priest Robert Colville. Babies blessed at recent services were Timothy Reuben, son of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Cline; Richard Ray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Koski; Richard Dale, son of Mr. and Mrs. Cleland Levitt; and Carol Eileen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Weir.

The new Baldwin electronic organ purchased by the branch was dedicated on Sunday, September 26, Elder John W. Rushton giving the address. Roy Elliott of Berkeley was guest organist. The pastor acknowledged a number of special gifts and offerings with special mention of the sacrifice offering of the children's department and the gift of the cathedral chimes by the Idola Club of the women's department. Lunch was served at the church, and in the afternoon Mr. Elliott gave an informal hour of music, playing hymns requested by the audience.

LAKE ORION, MICHIGAN.—

Approximately 150 persons attended the special services for the laying of the cornerstone on Sunday, September 26. Elder J. J. Ledsworth preached on "The Master Builder" at the morning service. District President Harry Simons was in charge of the 3 o'clock ceremony and gave the address, "The Purpose of a House of God." Bishop J. C. Muir spoke on the financial aspect of building, and Elder D. M. Taylor gave a brief history of the church in Lake Orion. It began thirty years ago with only three members. Elder Taylor and Mayor Brant Stanaback laid the cornerstone, and Elder Ledsworth gave the dedicatory prayer. Special music was provided by Doreen Trudell and Doris Lathwell. Elder Harry Webster is pastor of the Lake Orion congregation, and Albert Mellendorf is chairman of the building committee.

SALEM, OREGON.—The annual business meeting was held on August 29 under the direction of District President J. L. Verhei and F. E. Chapman. Charles H. Asher was elected pastor. George W. Speed was called to the office of elder and elected to serve as director of the church school.

LETTERS

The Need for Testimony

Several weeks ago a question on the blackboard in the junior department attracted my attention. It read, "What kind of a church would my church be if every member were just like me?" I immediately thought of prayer service, and shamefully admitted that if everyone responded as I did, there would be only congregational singing. Many times my soul has longed to tell the whole world of God's goodness to me since joining this church, but I have neglected to voice my gratitude.

I am thankful that I was once a Catholic. Only because I have experienced belonging to the two churches can I fully realize that this is the true and living church of Jesus Christ. What a wonderful soul-satisfying joy is found in the Restored Gospel! The many elaborate ceremonies I attended in the beautiful brick Catholic church can never compare with the sweet communion I have found with my Heavenly Father in the humble church home I now attend.

I know that my Redeemer lives, that he is no respecter of persons, and that he is the same yesterday, today, and forever. Truly, he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him.

If I can brighten someone's life with letters, I shall be happy to do so. Perhaps through correspondence I can cheer one whose burden is heavy. I will answer all who write.

Racial Equality

The article in the Herald of July 10, "Do Not Move—We Are All Equal Here," is a very fine idea, but does it reach out into the hearts and lives of Latter Day Saints who observe the law of stewardship in a material sense, yet do not believe in the stewardship of their lives in regard to the fellowship and understanding of other people? As Latter Day Saints, we were given the custody of the Restored Gospel to share equally with every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, and we should be able to say to other races and colors, "Do Not Move—We Are All Equal Here." Instead, many say, "You move out—We are not equal here or anywhere else because your skin is dark."

It was truly commendable for the Duke of Wellington to grasp the hand of the poor old man and say, "Do not move—We are all equal here," at the communion of the Lord's Supper, but if that man had been a Negro, would he have done likewise when it called for courage, brotherly love, kindness, godliness, and charity to say, "We are all equal here" and include Negroes and other dark-skinned people?

Why is the gospel of the kingdom preached to the colored people, and why are they baptized into the body of Christ, and why are they confirmed and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost if they are not equal with every other person who obeys the same ordinances?

The people of God should be able, under his divine guidance, to solve these problems. Will they?

The Firm Foundation

For years I was a member of another church. After reading the Book of Mormon, I decided to think seriously about the Latter Day Saint doctrine and prayed for guidance to the truth. I wanted to know for myself and not take anyone else's word for it.

One night I dreamed I was standing with a friend in front of the church I had always attended. I could see that the building was leaning to one side and that the foundation rocks were unsteady. My friend insisted that we go in, but as we did, the building began to shake. As we hurriedly walked out, the church fell to the ground with a crash. It was too badly damaged to rebuild, so we walked until we came to another church. This one was small but well-constructed. My friend said, "This isn't a large church, but it has a firm foundation." As we stood looking at it, a minister came out of the door and down the walk to a mailbox from which he took a copy of the Saints' Herald. To me, this was ample proof that the Reorganized Church is the true church of Jesus Christ.

Enjoys the Herald

I enjoy the Herald very much—it is food for my soul. We are isolated, and so the Herald is the only contact we have with the church. I thank each one who has a part in printing it and all who have contributed to it.

A Church for Dubois, Pennsylvania, Mission

For many years the Saints in Dubois have rented halls or houses in which to hold services. Two years ago, we were told we would have to give up the place we had been renting, and it seemed, for a while, there was nowhere else to meet. Since we were few in number and without a priesthood, we were in doubt about what to do until one of the sisters told of a house we could buy for $800. We had only fifty dollars in the treasury, and the house needed repairs, but we decided to purchase it. Through the sacrifice and effort of the men and women of the group—some nonmembers—the house has been converted into a church and is now free of debt. To all who have helped in this work, we extend grateful appreciation. We are thankful, too, for the ministry of Seventy Merle Guthrie, Apostle Blair Jensen, District President Henry Winship, and Elders L. G. Holloway, Donald Ross, Earl Brennan, and William Shay. Our desire is to continue witnessing for Christ that more souls may be brought to him.

AUDITORIUM NEWS

Dear Lord, I thank thee for the burdens
Resting on my heart—for well I know
When thy hand lifts them up and heals the wounds
I will be humbler for the scars that show.

I thank thee that chastisement comes
To gather up a fault while yet it's small
And crush it ere it twines around my heart
To steal the cherished light, a weed grown tall.

O Lord, I thank thee that thy truth reflects
In simple things—a life like mine—
And through the haze of furnaced dross,
I thank thee that pure gold may shine!

EVANGELIST MYRON A. MCCONLEY, retired from the Quorum of Twelve at the recent General Conference, was the recipient of a surprise visit from a number of members of the Quorum recently. In behalf of the body, Apostle Paul M. Hanson presented a beautiful watch as a token of friendship and affection. Brother McConley expresses his deep appreciation. His health is improving, and he is getting some necessary dental work done while he prepares for his new work.

SECOND CHURCH, Independence, is making progress in its church school work under Fred Burroughs, church school director. Taking his inspiration from the program of Zion's League, Brother Burroughs is working on a balanced program of "Study, Recreation, Worship, and Service Experience," the four principal areas of experience.

THE DEPARTMENT OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION is currently engaged in reclassifying its library, discarding old and out-dated books, and retaining those of current value. When finished, this will be a fine workers' library, and will contain special sections on music, dramatics, counseling, quarterlies of past years, copies of "Departments' Journal," school organization, curriculum, special studies, etc. Visitors interested in church school work will be granted access to these resources.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, reports the baptism of three persons in October, according to a letter from John E. Booth, pastor. He adds, "Our winter program is in full swing, with the women, priesthood, and Zion's League working. Next week Missionary Loyd Adams will be here for a series sponsored by the League, and we look forward to a good attendance. . . . Sometime in November we will open a mission in the city."

PICTURES OF MADONNAS formed the beginning of an excellent collection of religious art which has been gathered for a number of years by Mrs. F. M. McDowell of Independence. She and other church people have found her print collection very useful in arranging worship centers and services for special occasions and meetings, and she has been generous in lending her materials to local persons where shipping has not been involved. This offers a suggestion for some thoughtful member in each congregation of the church and a very interesting and instructive hobby.

HEADQUARTERS are gradually becoming quiet again, after a busy and eventful General Conference. Members of the Quorum of Twelve, hastening the completion of office work, have been wrestling with train schedules and getting away to their fields. The permanent staffs are taking up the threads of routine work again. Brother and Sister John Mervin, returning home to Tahiti, leave many new friends behind them. Brother and Sister Edward Butterworth are returning to their missionary work in Tahiti. Transportation, which is difficult to arrange, is causing some delay.

Editorial Review

HERE AND THERE throughout the world, we find items occasionally from the tongues and pens of secular writers and speakers that give support to the distinctive philosophy of our church and its social program. Dr. J. H. Oldham, a British author, is quoted in the October issue of The Voice:

The only way in which desirable changes can be brought about in the structure of society and undesirable changes prevented is by political action. All talk about a better society is idle day-dreaming, until it is translated into public policy. To suppose that we can meet the needs of other men today by individual action except within a very restricted field, is to be blind to the nature of modern society. We can serve man only by social action, which either creates or denies opportunity. Political life today is the real battlefield between the forces of love and callousness, of justice and injustice. For this reason a recall to religion must necessarily mean a recall to politics.

The church, so far as we are informed, has no intention of engaging in politics, but it is concerned by the very nature of its mission and committed to a program of social development and reconstruction, which is another way of referring to the hope of building Zion.

Other churches rely principally upon the conversion of sinners and the dedication of Christian individuals for their contribution to the betterment of the world. This is a fundamental and indispensable service for us as well as for them. But we must go farther if we are to be true to the gospel of Christ. Organization and social institutions are needed to reform a corrupt world and to redeem human nature. This is the field in which our church can make its particular and distinctive contribution.

DR. ARTHUR H. COMPTON, a noted scientist, and Chancellor of Washington University, recently addressed the Associated Industries of Missouri at a meeting in St. Louis, and made a statement that should reduce the hazard of war if the leaders of powerful nations could see the truth of it:

A nation can no longer look to a war of conquest as a means of improvement of its economic position. From here on it becomes increasingly clear that a nation's economic advantage lies rather in promoting its own industrial development as a part of a growth in prosperity. Unless war intervenes in the next thirty years, the growth of commercial interdependence will be such that the advantages of world co-operation will be so clear that the possibility of war will be very remote.

Dr. Compton's thinking appears to be very sound, except at the point where he places too great a reliance upon the intelligence of national leaders. When we remember the stupidity of Hitler and Mussolini, and think of the welfare that both Germany and Italy, along with the whole world, might now be enjoying as the result of peaceful industry and commerce, we are not too optimistic about the remoteness of war. But we trust that Dr. Compton is right, and that someday the laws of economics will prove a stronger barrier to war than diplomacy has been able to provide.

ROBERT J. NEEDHAM of Toronto, Ontario, was a church man who attained eminence as a mechanical and electrical engineer, having served, until his retirement, with the Canadian National Railways. A graduate of McGill University, he was associated with a number of distinguished professional and general organizations and associations. He was a member of our Toronto congregation, a loyal, kindly, and friendly man.

Brother Needham passed away at his home on October 25. When such men are active in church and civic work, they bring honor and prestige to the congregation. His life provides an example for young people to strive to serve and help the church in the many ways that are possible for those who attain to such distinction.

IT IS AN INESCAPABLE FACT that the recent General Conference has left its mark upon the church in many ways. Church officials move back to their appointed tasks with a new spirit of strength, hope, and optimism. They are united, not only in seeing the necessity of a program of evangelistic effort, but also in a stronger spirit of testimony and witnessing for Christ. This spirit touches our people, too, wherever we have observed them. Upon such a foundation we can build, and with such a spirit we can go forward toward the realization of the social and spiritual objectives of the church.

QUEEN VICTORIA served her people with great dignity and with a high regard for the proprieties. In the life of the court, she was attended by ladies-in-waiting, persons of culture, position and refinement, who considered it an honor to serve.

One day, one of the ladies indulged a witticism, a bit of humor that was below standard. As it was clever, the other ladies laughed heartily.

Her Majesty, however, did not take it lightly. She said in severe seriousness, "We are not amused."

It has become a habit to laugh at intoxication, at shady humor, and at things that show the debasement of human nature.

Could we not take a lesson from the great queen, and refuse to be amused at the tragedies that befall other people?

We are aware that the life around us passes judgment upon us. But let us also have the strength of character to pass judgment on life. Let us be able to say, "It isn't funny."

Across the Desk

From Elder Eugene A. Theys, Rotterdam, October 13:

There is a strong missionary feeling sweeping through the German Mission. As I go over the reports coming into my office here, I discover the following results in our missionary efforts: January, four baptisms; February, two; March, seventeen; April, 104; June, thirty-eight; July, fourteen; August, 104; September, sixteen; and so far for the month of October, nineteen. This brings our total number of baptisms up to the moment of 318 baptisms. When I see how rapidly we are taking new members into the church, it frightens me, for I realize that unless we can give them the proper instruction and leadership, many of these people can and will be lost to us in the years to come. We are conducting regular weekly pre-baptismal classes in each of our groups, and we have had several leadership training courses presented to our departmental leaders, as well as a priesthood institute at Hanover during the month of August.

During the war a number of German prisoners came in contact with our church people and our leaders. A number of Saints from England have sent me the addresses of these men, and I have either contacted them personally in the presence of some of our German brethren or I have sent the names and addresses to our local leaders living in the area where these former prisoners of war live. We have baptized at least three of the postwar contacts, and they are making us excellent members in the German Mission. The Saints in England did a fine job in taking these German boys into their homes and sharing not only their daily bread but the spiritual food of our Heavenly Father. These people are to be commended for their unselfish expression of Christian brotherhood. . . . We, the missionaries and the Saints in Germany and Switzerland, would like to have you pay us a visit in this part of the world. You may always feel free to come and stay with us as long as you like, and to share with us whatever we have. We pray God will continue to bless you in your ministry.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

It was a little difficult to keep up with correspondence during General Conference. Because of this, we inadvertently passed by a letter received from Elder Clarence W. Germon during Conference week. Brother Germon had been disquieted and hurt by certain politically inspired cartoons depicting the President of the United States in ways inconsistent with the dignity of the office held by Mr. Truman. Brother Germon felt that some protest against this kind of thing ought to be made in General Conference.

It is difficult for officials of the church to do what Brother Germon had in mind when so many members of the church are deeply interested in a national political campaign. But the election will be over by the time this note appears in print, and we think that we can join with Brother Germon in reminding our people that it is part of the business of being good church members to accord to the officers of our governments the respect rightfully belonging to men chosen for positions of political responsibility in which—having once been elected—these leaders are the guides and representatives of all the people and not just of those who happened to vote for them. We deeply deplore the lack of dignity sometimes manifested in the heat of political campaigns. It betrays a low level of citizenship and tends to nourish this same low level of citizenship in others.

“Lay” Preachers

Our attention has been called to something that appeared in the Daily Herald during Conference, in which Brother L. A. MacDonald, president of Northern California District, was referred to as one of five “lay” preachers speaking before General Conference.

Under our priesthood organizational set-up, it is doubtful if we should refer to any of our ordained ministry as lay preachers or lay ministers, and I wish to thank Elder Arthur H. DuRose of Flint, Michigan, for calling this matter to our attention.

We shall try to govern ourselves accordingly hereafter and commend the suggestion of Brother DuRose for the consideration of all those who have occasion to write anything for the press.

Our ministers are a part of a great God-ordained system of priesthood, and preaching is one of the specific assignments to all those holding office in either of the priesthoods.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Appreciation

Kindly allow me to express my appreciation and thanks to each and all who were so kind as to send me good wishes for recovery and expressions of sympathy in my recent illness.

It was a keen disappointment to me not to be privileged to enjoy the spiritual uplift which I am sure characterized the Conference sessions, both devotional and business. I am grateful to many who, without exception, gave such fine testimony of the spiritual fellowship enjoyed.

I am thankful to say my health seems to be approaching normal, and I hope to resume my ministry this coming Sunday.

We extend best wishes to all our good friends and especially to the brethren who have been ordained and appointed to new positions and given new assignments. May divine grace be granted to each and all that, in the united ministry, the purpose of God may be realized.

Kindly note the change in our address, this move was made necessary by doctor's orders after Sister Rushton's serious illness last spring. The heat of the valley was not good for her, and the climate of the coast is more desirable.

Again we express our sincere appreciation for all the kindly messages and prayers in our behalf.

Called to Be Witnesses

By EVANGELIST CHARLES A. DICKINSON of Sydney, Australia

A sermon delivered on Wednesday, October 6, in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri, during General Conference.

Scripture Reading: Acts 1:1-12.

The Life of the Church Depends Upon Us

I SHOULD LIKE to emphasize this statement at the outset: "The life of the church depends upon us." I do not wish to imply that this church depends upon any individual present here, because it does not. If every one of us here were to fail and leave this church, it would still go on, but this church depends upon its members. I remember a story that illustrates what I want to try to say to you.

It was said of Jesus that when he left this world and went back to his heavenly abode, he met some angels who asked him what he had been doing on earth. He said he had been starting to establish his kingdom and had set up a church. They asked him lots of questions about the church and said, "What have you done that this church may continue?"

"I have left it in the hands of eleven good men and others who will assist them," he replied.

"Have you made any other provision?" the angels asked.

"No," he said, "that's all the provision I've made."

"What if they fail?"

"I am relying upon them," he answered.

The only way that God will build his kingdom here upon earth is by relying on men and women. Those men and women are you and I. And if we fail the Lord in the work he has called us to do, to that extent his work will suffer. The life of this church depends upon you and me.

THE LORD, speaking to his church through the prophet of the latter days, Joseph Smith, said that we should "prosecute the missionary work in this land"—that's the land in which you are living—and also "the land abroad"—the land where I live, and the lands where some of you others live. We are commanded to "prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may." And while that was spoken to the elders of the church in that day, the Lord wanted his people to recognize the fact that this commission was not only to the elders—the priesthood of the church—for he goes on to say that "all are called." If you're not included in that "all," of course, you can set yourself in whatever class you like.

But I am willing, and I wish to be included in the "all." All are called. That means boys and girls. That means the men and women. That means everybody who has made a covenant with God through baptism. We are all called, and that calling is to "prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may."

Some of you people will not prosecute that work as widely as the apostles or the seventies or others. But you can do something in the missionary program of the church that God has called you to do.

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together"—remember that all may labor—"let him that laboreth in the ministry"—and I'm going to put another word in there, and "her"—"let him [and her] that toileth in the affairs of men and women of business and of work labor together." And that isn't all. "Labor together with God." If you people ever think that you can labor in this work by yourself and without God, then you will not be very successful in that which you endeavor to do.

"Labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work"—does it say "entrusted to the President of the church"? No, that isn't what it says—it's not even the Twelve or the Seventy. "Labor together for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all." That's the commission God has given to us.

I WANT to refer you to another text of Scripture which is found in Acts 22: 15: "Thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard."

That statement was made to the Apostle Paul by Ananias. Paul was on the steps of the castle in Jerusalem after being rescued from the mob. He asked permission to speak to the people, and he began to tell them of his conversion. He told them of the wonderful experience he had, and then he told them he went to Damascus and there met a man who told him, "Thou shalt be his witness of those things which thou hast seen and heard."

I want to forget the name of Paul for a moment. I'm not going to mention your name, but I'm going to speak to you directly. You shall be his witnesses of those things which you have seen and heard. And if you have had an experience with God, you will have a desire, you will want to tell the people of the things that you have seen and heard.

This has been God's method of propagating his work since the beginning. I know the Lord sent an angel to Adam. I know that the Lord sent angels to men of old, and sent them out on particular missions. I know that an angel came to Abraham, and that Moses spoke face to face with God. I know that angels have appeared to other men. But the Lord hasn't used that as his regular method for presenting this message to the world. No, he has called men and women for that purpose. And right from the beginning, this work of the Master has progressed or reversed according to the testimony of the people who have had an experience with God.

"Thou shalt be his witness of what thou hast seen and heard." The greatest witness God ever had was his Son. The Prophet Isaiah says, in speaking about Christ, "And he shall be a witness." He also says Christ shall be a commander and a leader, but it says he shall be a witness.

And then we come down through the line and find that all who have been called of God are to tell people of the things they have seen and heard. And the church in the early days of the apostles just after the advent of Christ made progress because of the witnessing of those men.

We read of the testimony of Peter and John when they were arraigned before the Sanhedrin. We remember how they were commanded not to speak in the name of this Jesus of whom they had been preaching. But Peter said, "We can not but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

OTH^{ER} MEN IN THOSE DAYS went forth witnessing. I'm positive that those men and women who had been brought into the church had gone around and told their friends, their relatives, and all they met of the glorious experience which came to them when they received the message of the risen Christ.

You know it is sometimes not so easy to tell the message to our friends. It's not so easy to talk to our relatives. I can stand out in the streets of a city where I'm not known and preach the gospel. It doesn't matter to me; I don't care if somebody does ridicule me—they don't know me.

One time I was on the streets of Leichhardt, Australia. We had preached every Friday night on the streets there, and for some reason we had ceased meetings for a few months. We decided we'd go back again. And the first Friday night on the streets whom did I see but some of my old school pals standing there listening to Charlie Dickinson, the fellow who used to be always playing jokes. Fancy his standing out there preaching! A cold shiver went right down my spine. I felt nervous. I wished they hadn't been there. It's not so easy, sometimes, to stand up when you know that somebody is there listening to you who's acquainted with you and might tell you later on, "Well, you're a silly old fellow to think like that. Fancy you wasting your time in such unprofitable business!" It's not too easy. But when we have received such an experience with Christ, then we want to tell our friends. We want to tell our relatives. We want to tell everybody.

And those men and women of the early church—I'm sure their testimony was such that they went forth and told the people of what had come to them. When they ceased to testify of God's power, the church began to die. We know as we read in the Scriptures that the church did die. Why? Because people began to be afraid to tell of the things that had come to them.

When the church died and went into apostasy, the world was in darkness for over a thousand years. Only priests were allowed to approach God. Then, in the Reformation movement, this tension was eased a little. But thank God for the Restoration. We were brought back to that source of power, and today it is the privilege of the people of the church to go forth and tell the people of the world that God has restored the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost shall come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in Judea and in the uttermost parts of the earth."

Until that power comes into our lives, until we have had that experience with our Lord, we're not going to be able to witness to the world of the saving power and grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. His power comes to us because of our obedience to the gospel that God has revealed to us in these days. This power gives us the privilege of witnessing. Today we have the liberty to worship God as we desire. But with that liberty comes the responsibility that we'll witness for the Lord wherever we may be. The liberty of worship is ours, and the responsibility for witnessing is also ours. If we're going to enjoy the liberty of our worship, we must be willing and ready to tell people of those things which have come to us.

PETER, THE APOSTLE, in writing to the saints in his day, said this: "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

Peter was not speaking to the priesthood of his day—only to the saints, all those who were scattered throughout the country of his time. And that message comes down to us today as individuals. We of this congregation are "a royal priesthood," and I believe in the priesthood of all believers, in that we have the call of God to witness for him among the children of men. We are a "royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." This is the reason of our calling, that we should show forth the praises of him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. If we are going to witness for Christ, we're going to do it in our witnessing for him.

How are we going to witness? By the life we live, by the word we speak.

Jesus, in counseling the disciples, made this statement, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your father who is in heaven."

That is the method of witnessing in the world today, and you can preach the principles of the gospel of Christ from Monday morning till Sunday evening, but if you are not living those principles in your life, your witness is of no value. That is the first fundamental. Jesus knew what was essential in the lives of his people.

The Apostle Paul in writing to the Romans added the requirement of witnessing, when he wrote, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart . . . thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."—Romans 10: 9, 10. We must live; we must speak.

SOME PEOPLE TELL US they are afraid to speak to other people about this gospel. They say, "I don't know anything about the doctrine of Jesus Christ. I couldn't go out and talk about this work to other people."

Friends, if the doctrine of this church, if the gospel of Jesus Christ means anything in the way of honor and morals and life, it is time we do something about it. And if it doesn't mean anything, why worry? But I want to tell you that these things are essential, and it is not possible for us to enjoy the spirit of this work until we at least know something about it. The more we know about the church that Christ has established, the more we shall appreciate his love, the more of his spirit will be ours, and the greater our power will be for witnessing among the children of men. Let us learn what the Lord has revealed to us as far as we can, and then we'll go out without being afraid.

I remember hearing one of my brethren make a statement as he was talking to a group of young people: "You young people go out and tell about the gospel," he said. "Learn this work and tell about the gospel, and you'll come back with a testimony."

Have you ever tried it? Have you gone and told somebody about this gospel of Jesus Christ? And have you received that testimony? Some of the most glorious experiences of my ministerial career have come when I was telling people about this church, telling them about the saving power of Christ, the love of God and what it means to us. One Friday evening I stood on the street till after midnight, talking to a friend of mine about this church. He never joined the church, but that was a memorable experience for me. I can remember that I felt I was walking in the air, I was so happy. The happiest experience you can have in this church comes when you have done a service for your Lord, when you have endeavored to tell people about the message of life and salvation.

Christians, and especially Latter Day Saints, have had an experience with Christ that has changed the whole course of their lives. Have we had such an experience? Has giving obedience to the gospel and the Spirit of Christ altered the course of our lives? Have we been born again as the Prophet Alma said when he was speaking to the people? I ask you, my brethren of the church, have you been spiritually born of God? Is his image manifested in your countenance?

If we have not had this experience, we're not good Latter Day Saints. Forgive me, but I believe it is true. I believe that when we give obedience to this gospel and offer ourselves to God on the altar of service, there comes to us an experience which will change the whole course of our lives and we'll desire to do something. There will be in us something like a fire that will not let us rest, and we'll want to tell people of what has come to us.

That spirit brought success to the church in the early days of the Restoration Movement. That is the reason thousands were converted, notwithstanding persecution. The Saints had an experience, and they told their friends and all they met about it.

And that experience should be ours. It comes to us in different ways, but it should be ours, nevertheless.

ONE Sunday evening in New Zealand, in a town with no Latter Day Saint church, I heard a minister preaching to about seventy persons, and I remember that he said: "I have seventy ministers in this congregation." I have never forgotten that statement. I thought what a wonderful thing it was. If we're not ministers of this church, the great experience hasn't come to us.

The Lord meant it when he said, "All are called." We are all called into the great work of the church and the kingdom of God. We must, I have said, live the life. We must speak the word, and we do this according to the power that comes to us. We must learn about the church so that we can bear witness for it.

One man was telling me about his experiences in Australia. He was in a little town, and some of the people there said to him, "We're not going to talk to you. Even your Sunday school students in your church know too much about the Bible." That was over twenty years ago. Some of us have changed since those days. It is essential that we learn something about this church. We must learn, and we must put that learning into everyday life. What we read in the Scriptures must be put into life.

I've met people who know the Bible from one end to the other; they can debate, and they'll criticize and they'll talk about the foolishness of some of the Saints. They know about the Bible—but what good has it done them? We must put those things into life. Our brain must not be a cold storage; it must be a powerhouse.

Sometimes we store up lots of things in these brains of ours, yet it does nobody any good but ourselves. If we use those things for the benefit of mankind, if that knowledge becomes power, it is augmented by the Spirit of God. Then we can be God's servants and handmaidens, and this church will live. If we do not, this church will die. The life of the church depends upon the things we say and the things we do.

HOW ARE WE GOING to begin this personal testimony? First, we must have personal dedication. We must give ourselves, we must dedicate our lives to the service of the Master. This is not something that will cause us a lot of misery through life. It will not keep us tied down, so that we will not enjoy the things God has provided for our welfare. When we give ourselves to God, we begin to live, and we dedicate our lives—a personal dedication. Second, we must engage in prayer. The Apostle Paul said we should pray continually. That doesn't mean we're always going to be on our knees, but our lives are going to be lives of prayer, and everything we do should be done with an eye single to the glory and honor of God. The Apostle Paul said, "Do all things to the glory of God." He wasn't talking about preaching the gospel only, nor about the things we do in the church. He meant the other things we do in life. It is not alone for his glory, but for our benefit. When we glorify him, we will live a life of prayer. We will pray for somebody we would like to see in the church. If we can center our attention on one individual who we know would be an asset to this church and make it a matter of personal prayer continually, God will bring into that person's life a knowledge of this great work. There is a great power in prayer.

WHEN I WAS YOUNG, I stopped going to church for three or four years. I went bike-riding on Sunday. Instead of going to church, I went out with the fellows. I didn't do anything really bad. I was never arrested, nor did I get in trouble. I just didn't go to church. I don't know why, but one Sunday afternoon I went to the communion service at Balmain, and in that service there came upon me a desire to come back to church. I stood up and said, "Pray for me." That's all I said; I couldn't say anything else. That's all I knew. I just wanted to come back. When I sat down, old Sister Sieberg arose and said, "Thank the Lord, He has answered my prayers. I have been praying for that boy all year."

There were others praying for me, too, I know. My dad and others were praying for me. But that sister had mentioned the fact; don't you think there was a power in that prayer? Don't you think the Lord heeded the prayers of his people?

You, too, may know somebody like that. That's the way we're going to keep this church alive, by keeping the men and the young people in the church by prayer. Possibly somebody who has not entered into the church yet may be brought in by the power of our prayers. Yes, we can bear our testimony to this work through the medium of prayer, and ask God to give us strength. We can see the opportunities when they are presented.

Have any of you missed an opportunity to tell the story of Jesus? I know I have. If we will endeavor always to grasp the opportunity when it is presented, we'll find that there will be a power in our testimony.

SOME OF OUR MEN and women have a natural ability to tell people of this glorious gospel. Sometimes it is a little difficult for others to enter into that conversation.

In Australia I visited quite a lot with an old friend, an elder. I could sit by the fire with him and talk about football or cricket or some other sport, and in two minutes we'd be talking about the gospel. I never knew anybody that could switch the conversation round as he could. He had a natural ability.

We should endeavor to cultivate this ability so that when the opportunity is presented, we can accept it. God has called us to this great work of testimony and we should let him use us in whatever way he will.

Perhaps you say, "Oh, I can't bear my testimony!" Have you ever tried? Don't say you can't do it until you try. I'm confident that if you will try, a testimony will come to you and next time it will be much easier. It will become a pleasure in a very short while, and the greatest desire of your life will be to tell people of Jesus Christ.

You know the Lord is calling for witnesses. He wants somebody to boost his work. He needs somebody in this great church who will be in the advertising business for him. Christ needs witnesses.

THERE'S an old fellow kicking around this world (or is he kicking this world around?) who has plenty of witnesses. You've heard about him. Satan has all the witnesses he needs—more than he needs. Have you ever been riding on the bus and heard the people talking about the races? They've got a good thing for Saturday. Have you ever heard them?

I once had a man working for me who's gone to his reward now. Every Monday morning when he came in, he said, "I had a glorious week end." And he'd tell every man on the job that he'd had a glorious week end. What had he done? He'd had a skin full of beer. That was his glorious week end. He was not ashamed to tell people. He gloried in the experience he had.

We go to church on Sunday, but I wonder how many of us tell those with whom we work that we had a glorious experience? We sit in the house of God, and the spirit of love and fellowship is with us, but how often do we go out and tell people about it? Satan has plenty of witnesses in this world.

Quite a few years ago I went to a business firm in Sydney and bought some covering for the seats of chairs. In those days I had very little money. I spent twenty-five pounds that day, and I thought I was a big man. The salesman said to me, "Mr. Dickinson, have a cigarette." Now, I didn't smoke, but I didn't know what to do. I didn't want to offend this person—I wanted to be a big man. So I took the cigarette out of the packet, and held it in my hand just like a little child that had done something wrong; then you know what I did? I put it in my mouth and lit it. I said good-by almost immediately and went outside to throw that cigarette away. It didn't make me sick at the stomach, as it does some people, but it made me sick at heart. I knew I had done wrong. I wasn't strong enough to say "No." But I did decide something that day—I said, "I'll never take another cigarette from any man." And I haven't. I had meant to be a good boy—I was going to take it home and give it to one of the men in the factory. There were plenty there who smoked, and I was going to give it to them; I thought that would be better than waste. But I'll never do it again, because of the promise I made.

THAT'S WHAT HAPPENS TO US, friends. Satan has all the witnesses he needs to tell about the things he is trying to present to humanity. You've heard so many wonderful stories of the lovely week ends, of the glorious experiences people have had at a dance. You've heard how people will boast of these things and say, "Come along next week end. Come with me next week or tomorrow night, you'll have a good time." You've heard that, haven't you?

What are we doing? Are we telling the world of the great message of love, the message of life, the message of salvation—that which will bring to individuals the greatest joy this world has ever known? God has set his church up for this particular purpose, that men and women might live. And the life of this church is going to depend upon you people, according to your testimony, according to your life.

May we heed the admonition given to us in the revelation I read tonight. "All are called." Every one of us has the calling of God. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them. That God may help us to so use our talent and our time and our energy in building up Zion is my prayer.

Value of Testimony

By Ted Linder

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness.—John 1: 6, 7.

LATER JOHN SAID, "I saw and bear record that this is the Son of God."

Modern advertising—radio, newspapers, and magazines—recognizes the value of testimonies in order to sell products. God recognized the power of testimony when he sent John to bear witness of his Son. John was not that light but was to bear witness of the light. There was a power in John that made him acceptable to the people. He was sent of God, and they knew it. Therefore, the appeal of John was the appeal of authority.

Notice that John was not asked to do wondrous things—to raise people from the dead, to heal the sick, or cast out devils—the main issue of his message was to testify of Jesus Christ. This he did. He told two fishermen upon seeing Jesus near at hand, "Behold the Lamb of God." They followed Jesus. One went out and testified to Peter, and he followed Jesus. Philip testified to Nathaniel; receiving a negative reply, he invited him to "come and see." The testimony and the invitation are two of the most important parts of missionary work.

We are not asked to do great miracles. We are asked to testify of the Christ. The miracles will come as a result of obedience to the task at hand. The woman at the well of Sychar was not a very good woman, but after a few minutes with the Master, she had to tell someone of it. She said: "Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" And the multitudes went to see for themselves. The Scriptures say, "Many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman which testified."

The woman spent only a few minutes with Jesus; she did not know a great deal about him, but she was willing to testify of that which she had experienced, and she got results. We say we desire to serve the church. We wonder how to save souls. Constantly God has cried for us to "be valiant in testimony." The power of testimony will sell more hair tonic, pills, and Jesus Christ than any other method. When God has been good to you, tell someone about it. When prayer has gained results, share it; you will appreciate it even more yourself. Do not be afraid to tell the gospel story. A lady once said, "I was surprised, when I started talking, to find that I knew so much about the church. I knew that I was not alone while facing that person."

Paul in Romans 1: 16, said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation."

Thermometer or Thermostat?

I AM QUITE SURE many of you can still remember the days when even sophisticated city dwellers used the old-fashioned coal or wood range for all their cooking and baking. Baking a loaf of bread or a pie or a cake in that kind of oven was pretty largely guesswork, because there was no way of telling when the oven was hot enough or of making sure that it was not too hot. I'm not exactly ancient myself, but I can still remember my curiosity the first time I saw a thermometer set in an oven door to indicate the temperature within. But in a coal range there wasn't much the thermometer could do about too much heat or too little except to indicate what the condition was. Now, of course, it is quite ordinary to have a thermostat set in the oven of a modern gas or electric range to control the temperature as well as to indicate it. The thermometer indicated the need for more or less heat, but did nothing about it; the thermostat indicates and then does something about it.

Other thermostats in the modern home control the temperatures in your refrigerator, the operation of your heat plant, the temperature of your electric iron or electric table roaster, your hot water heater, and many other household gadgets and appliances. When the thermometer indicates that a change of temperature is necessary, the thermostat gets to work and by switching on the power to which it is connected does something to change the climate it controls.

IS YOUR BRAND of Christianity a thermometer or a thermostat? When Jesus first proclaimed his gospel, its power was such that it changed the climate of the world—spiritually and morally speaking. That gospel toppled empires, condemned conquerors, destroyed customs and institutions of long standing, and changed radically the relations of men socially, economically, politically, and morally. Jesus was not satisfied with merely indicating a need, he did something about it. He gave to men the leaven of the kingdom—a powerful thing which will burst confining walls and permeate the whole lump of the world. Does Christianity have that same power today? Is modern Christianity a thermostat or simply a thermometer?

Christ has not lost his power, but we seem, somehow, to have lost our connection with it. We seem to be content to be thermometers, pointing out and deploring and perhaps condemning the conditions that need to be changed, rather than being thermostats, which connect with the source of power and set in motion the forces that can change the climate of the world.

LET US MAKE NO MISTAKE here or fall into the error of simply deploring and decrying the lack of results from Christianity. The Christian Church has changed many things for the better since its beginnings nearly two thousand years ago. We can best measure its influence today, perhaps, by trying to imagine what the world would be like without it. Our schools, our hospitals, our charities and philanthropies are all the outgrowth of Christian principles and beliefs and teachings put into practice. Our political rights and freedoms, so dearly bought and sometimes so carelessly enjoyed, are based on the affirmations of Christianity. Our laws and our whole system of justice are dependent on Christian example and precept and motivation. The moral tone of any community depends not on its gangsters, gamblers, and prostitutes, but on the Christian people of that community. No one wants to live in a town where there are no churches and no church people. Christianity has changed the world.

But though we are individually kinder and more considerate to each other and more concerned about evil and injustice, somehow our individual feelings have not found adequate or effective corporate expression. We still have few compunctions and conscience about doing to each other in the mass things which we would not tolerate between individuals. When a man steals from an individual, he is a thief; when he steals from the government or makes a handsome profit by strictly legal but morally illegitimate processes, he is simply clever. When one man kills another, that's murder. But when two nations go to war and drop atomic bombs on each other—well, that is war. Individually, few of us would hurt a fly if the fly weren't bothering us, but nationally it seems that the world is just as warlike and cruel and rapacious and cynical as ever the nations of the world were in the day of Ghengis Khan or Caesar or Alexander the Great. The world has made great progress, but there are still millions of people living under such poverty and oppression that they turn to atheistic Communism as their one hope for relief—only to be betrayed and further enslaved and exploited. And the Christian peoples of earth point with alarm and preach against these evils. They are good thermometers, indicating the condition of the world, but they don't seem to act as thermostats, connecting up with the source of power to change the moral and spiritual climate of the world.

THE LATEST EDITION of the World Almanac says that there are approximately three hundred thirty million Catholics in the world, one hundred twenty seven and one-half million members of the Eastern or Orthodox Church, one hundred thirty eight million members of the various Protestant denominations. That is a total of five hundred ninety five and one-half million Christians in a world of two billion, one hundred fifty million people. Add to that number approximately one billion three hundred nineteen million people who live in Christian nations and are nominally Christian but without church affiliation and you have a total of one billion nine hundred fourteen million people, or more than six-sevenths of the world's population. What incalculable and tremendous moral force or energy could that many people wield to change the climate of the world if they would! What changes could be accomplished almost overnight if all of those millions were thermostats in their own family, their own town or village or city, their own church denomination and congregation, their own political party, their own social group, instead of being only thermometers continually indicating the need for repentance and change but never connecting up with the source of power to do anything about it.

In your personal Christian life, are you a thermometer or thermostat? Before the church can change the world, you must have gained the power and ability to change your corner of the world. Do the people most intimately associated with you feel your connection with power—your capacity to change the moral and spiritual climate in your vicinity? Or are you content to be affected by the climate, to indicate it but do nothing about it? May God give us fewer thermometers and more thermostats.

"O Lord, we beseech thee to guide us right, for we are very determined."
(Prayer of a New England deacon.)

Few persons have courage enough to appear as good as they really are.

The Curse of Fear

By R. G. AYRES

WHEN WE GO BACK in religious history, we see many wonderful things which were accomplished by faith, and just taking time out each day to meditate on those happenings of the past should increase our faith. Fear and faith are two great competitive powers struggling for control of the human mind, and we must be on the alert to discern their activity. Fear and undue anxiety cannot help us; they will reduce our efficiency for progress in the thing we so much desire, and the loss in peace and contentment cannot be measured. Overanxiety and fear breed emotionalism, and emotionalism cuts into our moral and spiritual ability, lowers our resistance to evil, and curtails our ability to do good. It does something unexplainable to our faith, and unless put under control, will soon involve others—the thing we would least want to happen for we are still our brother's keeper.

Most of us can recall experiences in which we tried to do something in a hurry, and most generally something or everything went wrong. Why? Because hurry and anxiety show up unpleasant mistakes—stir our emotionalism and show up the bad side of our temperamental qualities.

This only proves what Lord Chesterfield has said: "Whoever is in a hurry proves that the thing he is about to do is too big for him." Fear and overanxiety bring on worry; when worry is established, our efficiency is almost zero. A friend once complained to me that he was confused—he wanted to live so he could get more out of life, but he was getting nowhere. After talking for a while and trying to examine his philosophy of life, I found he spent about one third of his time with the regrets, mistakes, and sins of the past and about one third of his time blowing air castles for the future.

This left only one third of his time for the serious thought and work for the day. What could he expect to do with two strikes on him before he got started? He was carrying a load that would make the strongest buckle at the knees.

We should know by now that where free moral agency is involved progression of a group is sometimes necessarily slow, but if we will cultivate patience, mercy, and love, we will not only enjoy peace and happiness for ourselves but have the satisfaction of seeing others asking for inoculation.

Fear and overanxiety generate mistrust and, in turn, make it hard to find satisfactory help; so when the day is done, we are tired and discouraged. Why? Because fatigue is more often caused by what we think than what we do.

Two hours of intense worry is more damaging both physically and spiritually than a full day of manual labor. We should not take too seriously who we are, where we came from, or what our past has been—it's what we are, where we are going, and what we want to be, that really matters. When we allow fear and overanxiety to take possession, we become critical and impatient.

We should be careful how we criticise, we may not have all the facts, and it may be that our own judgment is being tested. Impatience is evidence of dissatisfaction which in turn breeds doubt, then contention, and soon we are out of step with everyone.

I believe this state of mind is caused by our failing to see and comprehend that it is the goodness of God which leads to repentance. We fail to trust God; then our troubles

The Life of a Child

By GRACE L. KRAHL

THERE ARE TEN or more children who live in the one-block street where I reside or in near-by homes. They range in ages from three to seven or eight years.

One day they are Indians with bows and arrows and feathered headgear; the next day they pretend to be ruffians with toy revolvers (regular size) aiming their weapons at each other—one falling over “dead.”

Sometimes the little girls wear a discarded long skirt of their mother's, high-heel slippers, shawls, and veils; and the little boys, not to be outdone, slip their tiny feet in grandpa's old shoes and go “clop, clop,” down the street, joining the parade of the “ladies.”

ONE MORNING while sitting on the big, broad porch, I had a little fair-haired boy of the group come up to me and, with appropriate solemnity of voice and manner, say, “Did you die?” Well, as my present corporeal existence had never before been questioned, I was a little startled at the inquiry; but with a moment's reflection I was able to assure him, happily, that I was still here. He had heard, no doubt, of the recent death of the good man in the home where I live, and got his identities somewhat mixed. But this surprise question was to be followed by another that baffled me.

This came from a little girl who exclaimed, “I haven't had a birthday in years and years and years.” She was four years old. How she prevents Father Time from chalking up birthdays would be of interest to some of us who have passed many milestones. I think that vaguely in her mind birthdays had some connection with parties, and to her it had been a long time since there had been such an occasion.

A GROUP OF THEM came up on the porch one day—to be sociable, I suppose. They played some of their games and then stood around for something more to do. I asked them if they could sing. From the shy looks and smiles that went around, I understood they could. They chose the little hymn, “Jesus Loves Me.” It was started in two or three different keys and ended up in just as many. This, of course, was an infantile a cappella chorus susceptible to further training, so allowance could be freely made for a few discordant tones in their early career. Credit should be given them, however, for their accurate memory of the words.

Having been entertained by them, I in turn asked them if they would like to hear a story.

They would. There was a scramble for seats, and when all were settled I never saw a Stone Church congregation more quiet, as the story proceeded. When the leisure time for the raconteur expired, the children dispersed happily for another “social hour” at some future time.

If the patience of any chance reader of this has continued up to this point, he shall be rewarded with at least a digression.

RECENTLY A friend and I visited a mutual acquaintance who was convalescing in the Sanitarium. Having spent a pleasant half hour in interchangeable reminiscences, we sought Brother Albert Carmichael's room and were pleased to see him cheerful in spirit, although weary of confinement, awaiting the long recovery from a fractured hip.

We talked, of course, about the gospel and our experiences which finally led to my relating a dream I had recently, two features of which puzzled me. Knowing Brother Carmichael to be a man of spiritual discernment, I anticipated he could give me a satisfactory explanation. The dream was as follows: I seemed to be in a large building where a vast audience had assembled. A broad, high platform extended across one side of the room and in one of the wings stood my brother, J. A. Gardner (deceased) holding a paper in his hand which looked as if it might be a program. There was a most approving smile upon his face. In the center of the stage, a woman, neither young nor old, was giving an address. She spoke fluently and eloquently, and I agreed perfectly with all that she said, though I cannot recall any of it now. The two features that puzzled me in the dream were that the audience was in semi-darkness and the other was, why should a woman be the speaker or instructor—if that was what she was? So I awaited Brother Carmichael's comment. He said: “Women do not hold priesthood on this side of eternity, their calling here is motherhood; but on the other side, they may.” The audience being in semi-darkness, I explained to myself, was because these people had never had the light of the gospel and were being taught in the spirit world. I remember one experience (among a few I have heard related) of Sister J. M. Terry, from whom death had claimed her only beloved little girl. So grieved was she that the kind Father permitted her to see her little girl in the other world. She was tripping along with a group of other children, passing by beautiful flowers where she stooped to smell of one of them. The group was in charge of a woman, neither young nor old—an attendant or teacher, perhaps. And so it may be that on the other side little children will continue to sing, “Jesus Loves Me.”

BEQUEST

Dear child of mine, if it could be
That I had power to give to thee
A gift to cherish, I'd impart
No honor great, fortune, or fame—
None of these treasures would I name,
But will thee first a happy heart.

Isolation Is a Challenge

By
RUBY TINKHAM

SHE IS A SMALL WOMAN in her early thirties who lives too far away to come to church regularly. Her family makes such urgent demands on her time that she is never sure whether she can serve or not. She is, most of all, the isolated woman, stranded in a small town without any church of her own at all.

When I first saw her, she was frustrated and resentful. Her conversation ran something like this, "I never get to go to any important church services. I have never been to a General Conference or an all-day meeting. I have never attended a reunion in all my whole life. I miss everything good."

Knowing full well the conditions in her home which prevented these things and feeling sympathy for her, I marvel now at the miraculous change that had been wrought.

The last we met, we sat down together in a corner all alone. Her face lit up as she leaned toward me and told me her story.

"You know how I used to feel, cheated and denied because I couldn't go and do all the things the others were doing. Well, one day I woke up and saw that I was spending my life in self-pity and hopelessness. For days I went around asking myself, mostly on my knees, 'What can I do? How can I help myself?'"

"One Sunday when I couldn't go to church school, do you know what I did? I said to myself, 'Are you going to let the class go on ahead of you just because you can't go this Sunday? Are you going to believe that God is limited to working only in groups?' Right then and there I started to solve my problem. I studied that lesson until I could have taught it. Every time the rest of the branch went away to an all-day meeting, I stayed at home—but I read and studied. If they had a communion service and I wasn't there, I fasted anyway."

She stopped, and I could see that there were nostalgic memories along the way full of the pathos that accompanies successive temptations. Then she lifted her head and pushed it all away with the pride that comes from achievement of a cherished purpose.

"First thing you know, I could see that I was making progress. And then the really marvelous thing happened. I began to feel that there must be something I, too, could do to help build the kingdom. Knowing how few my talents are, I was perplexed until I suddenly realized that there must be others confused and lost just as I was. There was my field of duty. You already know the rest."

Indeed, I did know the rest. Who do you think made the most progress at the end of the year, this woman who studied at home and used every obstacle as a challenge to serve God personally, or some of the others who came unprepared to class and expected the teacher to carry the whole burden of discussion?

I felt good after I talked with her. Good, because here was a modern woman who had solved her problem and was serving wherever she was, like Ruth and Esther. Here was a woman who was different.

PAUL, INNOCENT, MIGHT HAVE SAID, when he was thrown into prison, "Lord, I cannot serve here. My work is finished. Oh, that I should come to such an untimely end."

But he didn't say that. He converted the jailer and his family and went on to write some of the most valuable literature in the New Testament. Letters full of instruction and encouragement went out constantly to those who needed the inspiration of so humble a man.

He made shipwrecks and prisons and exiles and even isolation look like glorious opportunities to service. He made them stand out so prominently by accomplishment that he is envied instead of pitied. He must have known that there would be others who would follow in his footsteps who would not be as stalwart as he, so he unconsciously set a pattern in achievement that is unexcelled yet today.

Yes, Paul was different.

ABRAHAM COULD HAVE SAID, "Lord, I cannot leave my home and travel to some far-away land. Wild beasts will devour our cattle. Savage tribes will despoil us. I'll be all alone there."

But he didn't say that. He went, and he found what all great men have found—that isolation sometimes produces a greater dependency on God which results in a clearer vision of his purpose for us. Yes, Abraham was different too. Some will say, "Yes, but that's impossible today."

Why is it impossible? We like to think that we are a peculiar people. Peculiar—how? Peculiar might mean absurd, strange, odd, unusual, or even ridiculous, but I like to think that it means different—strikingly different!

If we are as good as the best people in the world, we still aren't different. We must go a step farther and be better than the best. How? By doing the thing that no others have ever accomplished—by building the kingdom of God here on earth and establishing his righteousness through consecrated personal living.

Every prophet who ever lived was peculiar. Take each one apart and place him against the background of his own times, and you will see that he was neither understood, respected, nor appreciated. It took several generations looking backward to imbue his character with the qualities he rightfully possessed.

It is only fair to warn those who have hopes of living in Zion and the world at the same time that we will not be respected or appreciated either, and that Zion will therefore come by necessity as a refuge.

THE TIME EVENTUALLY COMES in every man's life when he must decide for himself whether he will stand for God or against him. It is therefore expedient for each of us to start on a course of character-building under God that will result in a wise decision.

Delay or indifference will only result in unnecessary contrition later. It is already apparent that Zion will be built by a few inspired people who can foresee the necessity of serving God in personal righteousness wherever they are—isolated or not. To delay now means to be lost later—like the man who thought he could save himself from drowning by holding his breath. One way was as bad as the other. It really didn't matter how he lost his life. The important thing was that he should have learned to swim before he got into deep water.

Tact and Talent

Talent is a lovely child,

Tact is plain of face,

Talent wears a haughty air,

Tact is commonplace.

Talent has a sharpened wit,

Tact is full of fun,

Talent never spares a friend,

Tact will injure none.

Talent craves the brightest lights,

Tact loves humble places,

Talent seeks for honor great,

Tact adores Three Graces.

Talent bids for highest praise,

Tact good will imparts,

Talent waits upon the world,

Tact has won all hearts.

Twenty-four-hour Christians

By MRS. ORVAL GATROST

AT THE 1947 General Conference, we were told, as a church, that we were only as near or as far from Zion as our preparation warranted. A statement like this makes us pause and wonder just how far our own personal effort has moved the church's position as a whole and in which direction. In order for us to prepare ourselves personally for a Zion existence, we must put aside the things of the world and clothe ourselves with the garments of charity and love.

This necessitates our watching every minute of the twenty-four hours of every day to see that each of us is a "twenty-four-hour Latter Day Saint." Perhaps some may think this a broad statement, and that God does not expect so much from us, but let us consider a few Scriptures on the subject.

Once in a Zion's League class we figured out that we owed one seventh of our time and one tenth of our surplus money to God as a good steward. But how wrong we were! It is true that in Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 we are told "The inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the sabbath day to keep it holy," but in the Book of Mormon, II Nephi 14: 12, we find, "Ye must pray always, and not faint; that ye must not perform any thing unto the Lord, save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul." "Always" is a big word meaning constantly, continually.

AT ALL TIMES we are expected to maintain a Christlike example. Have you ever had the experience of knowing someone in a business or social connection and then discovering one day that he also belongs to this church? It is quite a revealing experience, and the first thought that comes to mind is, "Have I conducted myself at all times in this person's presence as becomes a Saint?" and the next thought is, "Has he?" This is when twenty-four-hour Christianity comes to the rescue. You never know at what obscure time or place your example may bear fruit.

Even our sleeping hours are not free from commandment. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38 reads, "Retire to thy bed early that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated." Too many of us allow our whole time to be taken up with the temporal affairs of this life, even to the point of losing the sleep which gives us our resistance and strength.

Every time we open our mouths to speak, the words we say become a record that will sometime confront us. We should think carefully upon every word, and honor James's counsel (4: 11), "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge." Our speech is further governed (for our "solemn assemblies") in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 37: "Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all lustful desires, from all pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings." The thirty-eighth verse continues, "Cease to find fault one with another." All gossip, complaining, and pointless chatter must be weeded from our speech, for, as Matthew points out to us in 12: 36, "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

We should thank God for our

afflictions because he gives them to us to strengthen our character, teach us humility, and show us that no matter how hopeless things seem to be he will help us. The promise in Alma 12: 19 reads, "Yet ye shall be patient in long suffering and afflictions, that ye may shew forth good examples unto them in me, and I will make an instrument of thee in my hands, unto the salvation of many souls."

TO ATTAIN a proper attitude toward money, we must remember that, firstly, it is God's, and, secondly, he lets us use it to prove to him how well we understand his law, as the parable of the talents explained. He who is faithful in a few things will be made ruler over many. Therefore, we must not only file a first financial statement and an annual one every following year, but also teach our children from the time they are baptized to keep an account of their monies and pay their tithing, small though it may be. We must not waste our money or buy an excess of unneedful things. But above and beyond these requirements is one given in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10: "If there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants." If we are not willing to do this, the consequences of our selfishness are to be found in section 101 of the Doctrine and Covenants, verse 2: "If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

Perhaps in our twenty-four-hour-a-day program for ourselves, we decide to do something for our branch. It is a worthy desire, but let's not allow it to bog down in man-made mire. One of the first discouraging things about branch work is that we pick out one job for ourselves and discover the pastor had something else in mind. Let us remember then that God has placed this man to be our leader (by directing the thoughts of those in charge of our district or stake when they are selecting nominees for pastor) and let him lead us. If the job seems of small importance, we should remember that the biggest wheels in a mechanism may not turn unless the smallest one also turns. It takes them all together to make a smoothly functioning unit.

If our talents lie along musical lines, let us mentally resolve in the beginning to cast jealousy to one side. This is true not only in music, but in all phases of the work. There are always those who are better than we are, and those who are not so good as we. Therefore, it behooves us to thank God for our talent and use it whenever there is opportunity. If opportunity seems strangely to be only when someone else has suddenly become unable to fill an engagement, let's not grumble about it but accept our lot gracefully. If we do, we will eventually carve a niche of our own by being dependable and willing.

When it becomes our duty to deal with those Saints who are radical or critical or lukewarm, we must remember that the same technique is used for them all. If they are to be won, it will be through love, and all the arguments in the world will never do it. "A soft answer turneth away wrath."

If trouble arises in the branch, even though it may be directed at us, we may defeat Satan's cunning only by remembering one thing: we go to church to worship God.

Paul's admonition (I Thessalonians 5: 22) still applies to us today, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." In this category fall dancing, card-playing, repetition of unsavory jokes, and gambling (including the worthy quilt raffle). These things are unbecoming to a Saint. Instead of endlessly defending these things and trying to seek excuses for them, we should take the church's attitude toward them as our own and earnestly set about finding worthier things to occupy our leisure hours.

In our twenty-four-hour-program, we should put the Word of Wisdom and its marvelous promises at the head of our list, eliminating harmful foods, beverages, and habits from our lives. Unless we are willing to do these things, we are not ready for Zion. The whole spirit of Christianity is embodied in Matthew 5:41, "And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." James adds: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." (1: 27.)

begin. We want to do things in our own way and in our own time with our own inflated wisdom, and God sometimes allows us to do just that so we may see what a mess we can make of things.

Let us not be fearful or impatient with anything or anybody. Fear and impatience are minor evils, but all evils have a gregarious nature—they are clannish; if we don't subdue them, they will subdue us. We should not let our imagination rule our judgment. Remember, it is better to suffer wrong than to do it.

Some causes are so important that the worse off they are, the more we must believe in them.—Harry E. Fosdick.

People seldom improve when they have no model but themselves to copy.—Oliver Goldsmith.

Prayer of Thanks

By Emma M. Phillips

YESTERDAY'S MAIL brought the November issue of a popular magazine and a letter from a church sister who lives in Germany. On the front cover of the magazine is a colorful illustration depicting a Pilgrim Father reading the Bible to an Indian who stood, reverently and still, holding a large turkey in his hands. Each man, in his own way, knew gratitude for the gift of the other. The letter from Germany was also full of gratitude and thanks—thanks for the many boxes of food, and clothing, and daily necessities of the more abundant life. The German sister commented that we people of the United States and Canada, who supplied the contents of these "overseas" boxes, could not possibly understand the joy and comfort our gifts brought to a home that is weary of war and of the long, galling struggle for existence which follows a war.

Just as we cannot comprehend her feeling, so must the Pilgrim Fathers who sat with their Indian guests at the long, food-laden tables of the first Thanksgiving Day have been unable to realize the bountiful future of this land. They could not vision our ease of transportation, our mapped airlines, our intricate miles of firm highways, our ships that constantly come and go. They could not vision our educational system, our well-equipped schools, our colossal museums, our theaters of good learning, or our church schools on Sunday. They could never have dreamed of the conveniences of the modern home such as we know it today. But, with faith unshaken by the uncharted future, they bowed their heads over the first Thanksgiving table of America and offered up prayers of thanks to their Heavenly Father.

FOR OVER THREE HUNDRED YEARS that prayer of thanksgiving has continued in America without termination. We have fought other nations, and we have had insurrections within our own boundaries, but still we have offered up our prayers of thanks. Calvin Coolidge most assuredly spoke the truth when he said, "It is only when men begin to worship that they begin to grow." Three hundred years ago, we began to give thanks, and simultaneously we began to grow. We have never stopped doing either. There are times, however, when our thanks have been mumbled and even muttered in a half-interested attitude. There are times when the Thanksgiving cookbook seems to overshadow the purpose of the Thanksgiving feast itself. But we have continued to give thanks.

This year there is an abundance of the things required for happy living. We may not, as individuals, have all the luxuries of life we desire, but we have more than the peoples of many other nations. For instance, we do not have to walk into cities of ruined buildings where people live in dark, musty basements where babies cry from cold, where fathers cannot secure food for their families, and where listless-eyed children have never seen a new toy. We do not see such things, but we know they exist; and because we know they exist, we send boxes from the Land Bountiful to the lands of misery.

We of this faith know the value of America better than most peoples of the world. We have had unlocked for us the mysterious history of those who flourished upon this continent many years before our present-day period of abundance. We realize that this land, above all lands of the universe, has been blessed with the bounties of life. And because we realize this, we give thanks to God by means of prayer and deeds.

One of the best ways we have found for giving thanks is the sharing of the fruits of this land with our unfortunate brethren who live in distant lands. The grains of our fields, the produce of our factories, the books of our publishing press, the clothing of our mills have been shared and will continue to be shared. Like the proverbial bread cast upon the water, they return to us in letters of gratitude. "My wee daughter thanks you," writes the German sister in her letter, "for the storybook. She cannot read these English words, but the pictures are to her, oh, so beautiful. My little son thanks you for the warm coat. When the first brisk wind of winter came blowing, he began immediately to wear it with pride." Sometimes we are amused by the awkward arrangement of words that are foreign to her, but always we sense the undertone of gratitude and thanksgiving.

THIS THANKSGIVING we shall dutifully recall the dignity of the pious, faithful Pilgrims who braved the perils of a strange land in order that they might offer their prayers in the manner which seemed proper to them. This Thanksgiving we shall continue to share our abundance with our overseas brethren of the faith. Our Thanksgiving dinners, like our prayers of thanks, will span the Atlantic Ocean.

Over the well-filled tables of this continent, there will be many prayers of thanks said. God will hear each prayer, for, as President F. H. Edwards explains in his book, Fundamentals, "He thinks of humanity as a librarian thinks of his books." God knows each individual of all ages and understands the reasons for his prayers. The prayer that to us is merely a prayer of words, can be to God a treasured volume from the soul of that individual. As the librarian finds some books more interesting than others, so God likely finds some prayers of thanks more interesting than others. The fellow who sticks the words "This Thanksgiving Day" into the set prayer he has been repeating for the past two hundred days must make a monotonous ring in the ears of God. The person who prays from a heart that is truly giving thanks must make a joyful sound to the Creator.

Thanksgiving Day brings countless prayers of all depths of sincerity. Regardless of how earnest a prayer is or is not, we cannot deny that it brings us nearer to God and to humanity. Many of our prayers will not be spoken nor even formed into words, yet God will hear and understand them. Other prayers will be set to music and sung in our church gatherings. Attuned by this sacred atmosphere, our voices will unite in singing, "Now thank we all our God with heart and hands and voices." From the wide countryside, the crowded city, the small village, and the humble shelters of the sleeping forest will come our voices of thanksgiving.

We who belong to the Reorganized Church should sing with the greatest depth of feeling, for we have the fuller understanding of the gospel as Jesus taught it to mankind. We can truthfully say of our church: "Our ordinances and our priesthood are the same as in the church Jesus knew while on this earth." For us, the guesswork and suppositions have been taken from the translation of the words of the Master. We have not only a better understanding of the past but also a clearer understanding of the future. We have a goal to reach—a material and spiritual goal. Before that goal is attained, we will offer up many prayers of thanks—thanks for both material and spiritual blessings.

IT MIGHT BE a good idea to pause during our prayers long enough to ask ourselves, "Just what has God got to be thankful for this Thanksgiving?" Humanity, in general, has this world in a rather chaotic condition. Even the people on whom God must depend for the accomplishing of his plan are not always dependable. We are not doing all we should. We are not even grateful enough, at times, for the daily blessings our Heavenly Father gives to us.

Nevertheless, at Thanksgiving time it is good to remember our forefathers, to share our blessings with others, and to sound a prayer of thanks for some of the countless blessings we enjoy. It is good to know that the future, according to our degree of righteousness, will bring a bright light to this earth. It is good to know there is a God of love who listens to and understands each person's prayer on Thanksgiving Day.

Food Tips

Good fresh broccoli can be found in the stores these days and at a fairly reasonable price. Broccoli is one of our very best protective vegetables. It contains calcium, phosphorus, vitamin A, riboflavin, vitamin C, and iron. If you haven't tried it yet, now would be an excellent time to begin. It's a favorite at our house and among our friends. Don't overcook it. Serve it with butter or margarine, lemon juice and butter, or a cheese or hollandaise sauce.

Dried fruits are more plentiful and less expensive now than they have been for a long while. A combination of raisins, prunes, and apricots or peaches makes a nice compote. Slices of lemon cooked with the fruits give them an extra special flavor.

Thanksgiving

This is Thanksgiving:

To let no day go by without a prayer

For someone else. To ask for others, everywhere,

The joy of living

I pray is mine.

To be a friend—the kind who seeks no flaw,

Nor questions faith or creed, nor stoops to draw

Thanksgiving is not

One solitary day in all the year

With prayers sweet-tongued for men to hear,

Yet this is what

I let it be

Until I learn to share. Thanksgiving is

To give to others freely as He gives

Each hour to me.

I Carry a Light An Allegory

BY FRANCES M. MILLS

THERE IS A LAND where it is always night, and those who walk there stumble in darkness unless they carry with them a Light by which to see their way. Beyond the rim of this strange place lies a land where there is no night, and Happy People walk ever in the Light that never grows dim. Between these two lands rises a mountain so high that those within the Dark Land see only a glow in the sky, like that of early dawn, to tell them where lies the object of their journeyings.

I walked within this Dark Land and stumbled and fell and groped about, yet I knew that I was not alone, for the darkness was filled with lost and wanderings souls. The glow in the sky showed me where lay the Bright Land I sought, but try as I might, I could not find the way. There were obstacles in my path and snares for my feet that threw me down to the ground, hurt and bleeding. Around me in the blackness, others ran headlong, and falling, cursed the stones that bruised them. Groans were mingled with sighs and some there were who cried aloud in anguish. I lay still in the darkness amid such fearsome sounds, terror clutching at my heart and hope almost gone.

I prayed . . . slowly through my tears I beheld a luminous creature before me bearing a Light which he placed in my hands.

A Light! No longer would I walk in darkness, for now the way was plain before me. There was a road, narrow and well defined, that led straight up to the Great Mountain and over it into the Bright Land. In great joy I raised my Light and called to those about me. They heeded me not. "They must be deaf or blind," I thought, "for surely no one would be so heedless." I tried to raise one who lay groaning on the ground beside me—he shook me off angrily.

"But see," I said, "I have a Light!"

"Away! I want none of it!" he answered.

Some scolded me bitterly when I would have led them to the Narrow Path. Some only laughed and ran away. I stood alone upon the Path, filled with grief and wonder.

AS MY EYES became accustomed to the brightness of my Light, I perceived that not far from the Path lay another road, very broad and winding pleasantly among the hills and valleys of the Dark Land. It was toward this broad way that the legions of wanderers were struggling, being led to it in large numbers by others bearing torches. But very dim and flickering lights they were, compared to mine.

As I watched, I slowly became aware of a strange thing; these wanderers with their dim lights were able to see only the things most pleasing to them. They could not see the snares and pitfalls about them. Those who followed the torchbearers—and they were many—saw only what the leader wished them to see.

Merrily they traveled along the broad and winding road, stooping frequently to pick a flower, only to find a thorn buried deep. I called to them to come and follow the straight road I was upon, but they shook their heads and laughingly coaxed me to join them.

I was puzzled. Surely they could see the grievous dangers along that broad, well-beaten road! Surely its deep chasms were obvious to anyone having a light! I covered my own Light until it was no more brilliant than those torches and looked about. How fair the land had become! All around were beautiful flowers, soft grass, and a sparkling stream flowed where I had thought a great chasm was before! Gone were the thorny bushes, the rocks and crevices. And through this lovely landscape wound the Broad Road with its easy downward slope for pleasant walking. It was very tempting.

SUDDENLY I NOTICED my hidden Light flickering and growing dim, and a cold fear seized me that it would go out and leave me again in that dismal darkness. Carefully I uncovered my Light, breathed upon it, and watched it glow brightly again. No longer did the surrounding landscape tempt me, for I saw plainly how false its beauty was.

Lifting high my Light, I walked along the Upward Way. My only sorrow now was for those unhappy beings rushing about, blind to my Light, deaf to my pleadings.

Sometimes the Upward Way was very steep, but I was not alone. Others were there bearing Lights as brilliant as mine. Their countenances were bright and their courage was sure; with their help, I passed by the steep places, happy in the knowledge that each struggle brought me nearer the summit of the Great Mountain and the Bright Land beyond.

At the foot of one of those very steep ascents, I heard a voice in the outer darkness weeping. I lowered my Light and looking down by the side of the road, saw the huddled figure of one who had fallen by the way. She lay among the rocks and briars that infest the ground on either side of the Upward Way, placed there to snare and plague those whom temptations lead astray. Holding firmly to my precious Light, I picked my way to her side.

"Do not weep, my child, but arise and follow the Light."

She only wept more bitterly and turned her face away.

"Look upon the Light," I urged, "that you may know joy in place of your sorrow."

"I dare not! I dare not!" she cried. "There is no solace for me. I, too, once carried a Light, but I found the Upward Way so steep, and the Broad Road looked so smooth, I started out across the fields to seek it. My Light grew dim, and then went out. The path was full of stones instead of being soft with grass, as it had appeared. Then I remembered that the Upward Way, though steep, had no snares or pitfalls, and I tried to return to it. How bright the Lights of those within the Narrow Path glowed! How well I remember the joy and peace I once knew! But now it is no use to try. My lamp is dark, and I cannot find the way." She was weeping again, sobbing out her misery and remorse. I looked upon the unlit lamp she still clutched in her hand and whispered.

"Child, give me your hand and let me lead you once more where there is Light. Your soul is sick of this evil darkness."

"Would you—could you, help me? Is there any hope?" She asked it eagerly, yet fearfully.

For answer, I took her hand and helped her to arise. Slowly we began the rugged climb. She stumbled often, but gripped my hand tighter and struggled on.

At last we reached the level of the Path. She gazed, fascinated, at the happy faces around her.

"Yes, I remember—I remember! It was like this before. Why did I ever stray? Why did I ever let my Light go out!" I took the dark lamp, touched it to mine, saw it spring into a Living Light, then placed it again in her hands.

"Thy faith hath made thee whole." The words came softly, yet with remarkable clarity from the di-

Here Is the Writer

Frances Mills was born in Independence, where she has lived most of her life with the exception of ten years in southwestern New Mexico and four years in Ontario, Canada. After high school, she attended Horner Institute in Kansas City, majoring in drama and composition. The institute has since become a part of Kansas City University. Her hobbies include astronomy, knitting and crocheting, drawing, clay modeling, and baseball. "Writing," she says, "has been little more than a hobby, although I hope to go farther with it."

rection of the glowing sky behind the Great Mountain. Joyfully she took her Light and walked ahead.

MANY WERE THE LIGHTS that were relit, many the souls in which night was turned into day, as those who carried a Light journeyed along the Upward Way.

The sky glowed ever brighter over the summit of the Great Mountain, the Barrier that every man must pass when he comes to the end of the Road. Strangely enough, this massive peak that had seemed so formidable a barrier when first I saw it from the Dark Plain, now seemed but a step, for the Upward Way ended at the Summit, and one could step freely into the Bright Land beyond. As I neared that Summit I saw ever more clearly the difference between the Way I had come, and the Broad Road, for it ended at the base of the Great Mountain and entered a huge black cavern, fearful to behold. The multitudes who walked that Road, swept onward by their greed and lusts, found themselves within the pit's yawning mouth, unable to escape. So suddenly did they come upon it that none was prepared for its swift descent into Outer Darkness.

I looked back to the glowing sky and the Summit, now so near. I saw that many who had walked in the Way ahead of me had already reached the peak and passed over into the Bright Land where the Beautiful walk. It seemed almost that we who followed could hear their songs of joy. I looked back. The Path was bright with the Lights of others pressing onward and upward. Many, carrying their Lights before them triumphantly, went into the rough, dark land on either side of the path to help the fallen and guide all who would follow into the Way that they, too, might carry a Light.

* * * *

How bright the Sky has become! No longer are the Lights we have carried so long the only Light by which to see the Way. The very air is luminous. I have reached the Summit; another step and I shall have passed beyond the Barrier with all the Bright Land opening out before me. One step—and I am there.

John Wesley asked his mother, "What is sin?"

She answered: "Would you judge of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of pleasure, take this rule: Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, takes off your relish for spiritual things—whatever increases the authority of the body over the mind—that thing is sin to you, however innocent it may seem in itself."

Reburial of the Martyrs - BY C. J. HUNT

PREFACE

An Autobiographical Note

My maternal grandparents were members of the Latter Day Saint Church at Nauvoo in 1844. My grandfather Dobson and his son, Elder Thomas Dobson, knew the Prophet Joseph as a faithful, law-abiding citizen and churchman. A few years after the assassination at Carthage, my grandparents and all but one of their children located in western Iowa and waited for the coming of the prophet-leader, young Joseph. My grandfather, Benjamin Dobson, was a miller in Nauvoo. His oldest son, Thomas, an elder in the church in Illinois, continued his religious activities in Iowa, preaching, baptizing, establishing local congregations and assisting in organizing districts for the Reorganized Church in Iowa. Although Young Joseph did not come to the church until 1860, some temporary reorganization was going on from 1852. I well remember when I was six years old, living at Deloit, Iowa, "Uncle Tommy" Dobson administered to me and blessed me by laying on of hands and prayer. The healing was permanent. This was in the early days after Joseph Smith III came to the church.

I am of the third generation of this religious faith, having united with the church at Deloit on February 14, 1886. On November 15, 1891, I was ordained to the office of elder, and the following April was appointed as a General Conference missionary. During the ensuing fifty-six years, I preached in the United States and Canada about 7,000 sermons, besides engaging in other special missionary activities. A few years later, I was set apart to the office of Seventy. Then, on June 3, 1900, I was ordained a High Priest and local bishop, continuing in active church work. In January, 1928, the Nauvoo, Illinois, District was my assigned field of labor as a missionary, and so I participated in the last act of the drama of the burial of the martyrs.

MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH

AT THE TIME of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844, the public funeral held in the Mansion House in Nauvoo was followed by secret burial during the night in the Smith family cemetery near the historic Homestead Place. Emma, Joseph's widow, directed this sacred interment, with only a few trusted friends of the family to aid her. Twelve-year-old Joseph, son of Joseph and Emma, and his six-year-old brother, Alexander, sorrowfully and lovingly held their mother's hands during this sad hour—an experience never to be forgotten and a secret to be kept inviolate for many years.

The double, unmarked grave was undisturbed for eighty-four years. About 1910, the late President Joseph Smith and his son, Frederick M. Smith, together with Presiding Patriarch Alexander Hale Smith and his son, Apostle Frederick A. Smith, by special appointment spent a day in Nauvoo. Emma Hale Smith, widow of the martyred Prophet, had died several years prior to this visit and was buried in a marked grave not far from the unmarked graves of the martyrs. The fathers of the two Fredericks were now aged and believed that the time was opportune to show these sons the place of the burial of their forefathers.

THE GRAVES ARE FOUND

Then about the first of January, 1928, the decision was made by President Frederick M. Smith to arrange for the reburial. He engaged Elder William O. Hands, a capable church worker and professional surveyor, to direct the brethren of the Nauvoo locality selected to assist in actually locating and protecting the graves and the bodies, following the description given them by President Smith and Apostle F. A. Smith. The bodies were located and exhumed on Monday, January 16, 1928. (See Saints' Herald, April 25, 1928.)

At this juncture, Elder Hands wired President Smith at Independence that the bodies had been found. The following day, President Smith, in company with Apostle James A. Gillen, president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, Mark H. Siegfried, of the Presiding Bishopric, C. Ed Miller of the Graphic Arts Bureau, and John A. Gardner, General Church Publicity Agent, came to Nauvoo. They were to take part in the re-burial ceremony. The next of kin to Hyrum Smith in Salt Lake City were notified of the reburial. They, in turn, notified S. O. Bennion, in charge of their Central States Mission at Independence. He selected three elders of his church, who went to Nauvoo to witness and identify the remains of the two prophets.

On this memorable occasion, besides Frederick M. Smith, there were three men present whose ancestors had attended the funeral services in the Mansion House in 1844. They were: Bishop Mark H. Siegfried, grandson of Richard Lambert; Daniel B. Sorden, returned missionary from Jerusalem and great grandson of Reuben Martin; and myself.

ON THE DISCOVERY of the bodies, a silk American Flag was appropriately displayed. The entire excavation was covered by a tent, with trusted members of the church placed as guards, night and day, until the funeral was held. Provision was made at the grave for the people to observe the remains closely, so that hundreds of church members and interested visitors, including the mayor of Nauvoo, bankers, and other selected citizens, could view the remains before they were removed from their resting place. The wooden caskets had decayed, but the bones were in a good state of preservation.

A few business men and ministers of Nauvoo assembled in the Homestead Place near the grave and signed affidavits to the effect that they were satisfied of the identity of the remains. They all witnessed the bullet hole in Patriarch Hyrum Smith's head. President Frederick M. Smith consulted the officials from Independence, including Elder Hands, and decided that, inasmuch as Emma Hale Smith's grave was near the open graves, her remains should be buried by the side of her husband, thus making three new burials. In all the work pertaining to the finding and reburial of the bodies, the Nauvoo Saints proved to be accomplished helpers. Brother and Sister Gus Lee of Nauvoo provided the white silk used in the lining of the caskets.

The burial place was about sixty feet southwest of the Old Homestead, a part of the farm bought by Joseph Smith, Jr., when the church first located at Nauvoo. This property, which continued through the years under the direct supervision of Joseph's family, is now owned by the Reorganized Church together with many historic properties, including the Mansion House, the Nauvoo House, part of the old Temple site, the old Smith Homestead, the Sidney Rigdon and William Marks' homes. The church owns six city blocks in Nauvoo, "the City Beautiful," and has a good brick church there with an active congregation of the Saints.

The new graves are located about forty feet from the Homestead Place, in front of the building, where cement foundations were poured for a monument eventually to be erected.

REMOVAL OF THE TWO SKULLS

President Frederick M. Smith selected four of the elders, including Brother C. Ed Miller and the writer, to take the skulls of the two men to the Upper Room of the Mansion House, where they were carefully guarded and cleansed. C. Ed Miller secured from a physician's office instruments for measuring skulls for registration. He also photographed the skulls, which, together with the measurements, were sent to Washington, D. C., for recording and safe-keeping. The First Presidency of the Reorganization has safely guarded copies of these records.

AN HOUR OF SOLEMN REFLECTION

While guarding the sacred skulls in the appointed room in the Mansion House, I was left alone for over an hour. During this time I placed one of my fingers in the bullet hole in the skull of Hyrum Smith.

Both of the skulls were very large and well-preserved. Joseph's was the larger of the two. These were solemn moments in my church experience, and by request I will relate some of the thoughts that came to me while I performed this sacred service as a guardian twenty years ago.

As I looked at the skull of the Prophet, I recalled the experience when, in answer to his prayer in the historic grove near Palmyra, New York, God, the Father, and his Son, Jesus Christ, appeared in vision to him in 1820. His eyes beheld, his ears heard, and his lips conversed with those heavenly beings in that vision. Joseph Smith faithfully complied with all their requirements. I also thought of how he wore the Urim and Thummim long hours during the many days while the translation was being made of the sacred plates of the Book of Mormon. Prior to this, on May 15, 1829, God sent the angel, John the Baptist, to his servants Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, on whose heads he laid his hands to ordain them priests of the Aaronic order. He directed them to baptize each other by immersion, thus beginning the building of the church in this dispensation. I was not unmindful that the lips once used by him spoke every word, to selected scribes, contained in the Book of Mormon. Also I remembered that it was through the inspiration of God that many revelations were given which are contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. This same inspired Prophet, with eyes perfect, quick to respond to the call of God, gave to the church and to the world the Inspired Version of the Bible containing over 1,000 improved passages, and including over 300 more verses than any other Bible; he completed that great task at the age of twenty-eight. The Reorganized Church has the only original manuscripts in their entirety of the Inspired Version of the Bible and of the Book of Mormon. I have handled them and had photographs of them.

I FURTHER REMEMBERED, while gazing at the two notable skulls on the table before me, that on January 18, 1827, in New York State, Joseph Smith married Miss Emma Hale, dark-eyed daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Hale. Eight children were born to this union. Four sons survived the father; one son died at the age of twenty-three. The other three, together with their devoted mother, were active workers in the Reorganized Church. The Prophet Joseph was true and loyal to his marriage vow of 1827, never violating it. Emma, the accomplished, refined bride of his youth, was his only wife. He had no concubines and never taught or practiced polygamy in any form. He was an honest, upright, highly intellectual man. He was large of stature and had a commanding, yet kind personality; he was a student of ability and culture.

I also recalled that prior to the time of the organization of the church on April 6, 1830, three heavenly messengers from the Most High—Peter, James, and John—placed their hands upon this head before me and bestowed the Melchisedec priesthood of God.

In August, 1831, this prophet whose skull I had before me knelt in prayer with seven brethren on that sacred spot of ground in Independence, Missouri, which was dedicated by his direction for the erection of the Lord's Temple in due time.

Thus you may see that in that never-to-be-forgotten more than an hour alone with the skulls of the martyrs before me, I seemed to live nearly a century of historical events. I recalled that this same prophet, with tear-stained face, had put his hands upon the head of his twelve-year-old son, Joseph, and designated him in the presence of witnesses to become in time his successor as president and prophet of the church. This was literally fulfilled in 1860.

REINTERMENT

The hour for the reinterment of the Prophet and Patriarch came at 2:30 on the afternoon of January 20, 1928. This service was in full charge of President Frederick M. Smith. The crypts were placed by affectionate hands and sorrowing hearts. The skulls of the Martyrs were returned and properly placed in their respective positions, and the three gray marble covers were put in order. Sums of money have been subscribed for appropriate monuments.

Hundreds of the members of the Reorganized Church in Nauvoo and vicinity, as well as interested friends, attended this service. After appropriate opening remarks by the President, a very eloquent, feeling prayer for the solemn occasion was offered by Apostle James A. Gillen. Following the prayer, President Frederick M. Smith gave a spiritual dedicatory sermon, during which time he bore a great testimony to the integrity of the two prophets and his grandmother, Emma Hale Smith. He pledged his allegiance to the great mission of Joseph the Martyr, and the carrying out of the well-defined prophetic future of the church for which the two prophets gave their lives. Many of the Saints shed tears on witnessing the power of this testimony and the spiritual foresight which he, Frederick M., so earnestly and concisely portrayed. This service brought to a timely conclusion a needed experience and testimony to the Saints and to the world.

A son, Ronald Edwin, was born on October 5 to Mr. and Mrs. Morris Edwin Batdorf of Westville, New Jersey. Mrs. Batdorf is the former Thelma Birtwistle of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

DEATHS

BLACKMON.—Clarence, son of James Nelson and Mary Frances Blackmon, was born March 15, 1892, at Greenville, Alabama, and died October 24, 1948, at his home in Flomaton, Alabama. On September 17, 1911, he was married to Cornelia Bondurant. He was a member of the Methodist Church most of his life, uniting with the Reorganized Church in April of this year.

He is survived by his wife; three daughters: Mrs. Lanette Sapp of Miami, Florida; Mrs. Eloise Blackwell of Pensacola, Florida; and Miss Ruby Nell Blackmon, Flomaton; and a son, Joe Iry, who is with the armed forces in Vienna. The Reverend W. H. Drake officiated at the funeral service. Interment was in the Mize Cemetery at Flomaton.

BARNES.—Bessie Lee McCurdy, was born September 4, 1896, at Century, Florida, and died October 7, 1948, at Bayou Labatre, Alabama. She was married on June 11, 1916, to Jeff C. Barnes of Brewton, Alabama. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

She is survived by her husband; three daughters Mrs. Arley Cox, Mrs. Vancile Barbour, and Mrs. George Powell; five sons: Eugene, A. D., Benny Earl, Curtis, and Cecil Barnes, all of Bayou Labatre; and sixteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the San Souci Baptist Church, Elders Franklin Steiner and Oscar Tillman officiating. Burial was in the Bayou Labatre cemetery.

MOORE.—Terril S., was born in Somerset, Kentucky, on July 6, 1889, and died at Craig, Colorado, on July 28, 1948, of an acute heart ailment. He was returning home from a vacation on the west coast. Moving to Fort Collins, Colorado, in 1913, he married Elsie Hanawalt on August 23, 1915. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 22, 1927, and was ordained a priest in 1939, serving faithfully in that office until his death. He was custodian of the city cemetery for many years. He also served as church school director and bishop's agent in the Fort Collins Branch and was instrumental in erecting the new church building there.

He is survived by his wife, Elsie; one daughter, Terry; five brothers, and three sisters. Funeral services were conducted by Elders K. G. Brolihar and W. E. Connell. Burial was in the Grand View Cemetery.

McLEAN.—Archibald Francis, was born December 19, 1872, in Hungerford, Hastings County, Ontario, and died October 9, 1948, in Toronto, Ontario. From 1895 to 1896, he taught school in Owen Sound, after which he became associated with White and Company, wholesale fruit dealers. He remained with this company fifty years and held the office of secretary-treasurer when he retired three years ago. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 11, 1897, ordained a priest in 1902, and elder in 1904, a high priest in 1908, and a bishop in 1920. From 1905 to 1920, he served as pastor of the church in Toronto, resigning then to become bishop of Toronto District until 1939. With the exception of A. C. Norris, who is still an active member, Bishop McLean was the oldest member—in years of church membership—of the Toronto congregation. He was married in 1898, to Alice Clark of Waldemar, Ontario; four children were born to them. Mrs. McLean preceded him in death in 1940.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. Roy C. Leslie, Mrs. Kenneth Pugsley and Mrs. Reginald R. Wilson; one son, Dr. Charles McLean; a sister, Mrs. Susannah Leopard; and six grandchildren. Funeral services were held on October 12, Elder John F. Sheehy officiating.

SALES.—Squire Ray, son of the late Edwin and Ella Sales, was born February 13, 1885, at Unadilla, Nebraska, and died October 11, 1948, at Gluckner Hospital in Colorado Springs, Colorado. He was married to Josephine Smith on September 6, 1906; ten children were born to them. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on January 27, 1925, and later ordained to the office of priest. He will be remembered by those who knew him for his cheerful disposition.

Surviving are his wife, Josephine; three sons: Joe and Ed of Grant, Nebraska; and Jake of Colorado Springs; five daughters: Mrs. Rachel Vok of Grant; Mrs. Goldie Reynolds of Ogalalla, Nebraska; Mrs. Annie Fisher of Holyoke, Colorado; Mrs. Georgia Munday and Mrs. Josephine Brodbeck of Colorado Springs; three sisters: Mrs. Sylvia Goddard of Imperial, Nebraska; Mrs. Mary Smith and Mrs. Pearl Smith of Champion, Nebraska; twenty grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. One son and one daughter preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Colorado Springs, Elder Jake Curtis officiating. Burial was in the Evergreen Cemetery.

HINDERKS.—Cora Daries, was born January 1, 1889, near Stewartsville, Missouri, and died October 4, 1948, at Stewartsville. At the age of eighteen, she became a member of the Reorganized Church, and on September 24, 1913, she married Frank L. Hinderks of Stewartsville. No children were born to this union.

She is survived by her husband; three sisters, and a brother, all of Stewartsville. Stake President Emery E. Jennings and High Priest O. Salisbury were in charge of the funeral service.

RAISBECK.—Linda Diane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Raisbeck of Charleroi, Pennsylvania, was born August 14, 1948, and died October 16, 1948, in the Charleroi Monessen Hospital. In addition to her parents, she is survived by one sister, Eileen, and one brother, Richard, Jr. Funeral services were conducted by Elder C. I. Winship. Interment was in the Monongahela, Pennsylvania, cemetery.

HODGKINS.—Mary Estella, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Derby, died April 6, 1948, at her home in Smithville, Ontario, following a long illness. In 1923, she was married to Edward Blake Hodgkins. Born in Selkirk, she also lived in Cayuga, but for the last nineteen years resided in Smithville.

She is survived by her husband; her mother of Hamilton, Ontario; two sisters: Mrs. G. F. Smyth of Hamilton and Mrs. W. A. Campbell of Toronto, Ontario; and two brothers: D. C. Derby of Detroit, Michigan, and G. C. Derby of Vancouver. Services were held at the Book Funeral Home on April 9. Interment was in the Selkirk Union Cemetery.

BOLIE.—Ruth Wilson, was born April 10, 1895, in Oakville, Iowa, and died September 26, 1948, at St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital in Mason City, Iowa. She was married to Christian Bolie on August 21, 1918, at Broken Bow, Nebraska, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on September 9, 1923, at Silverton, Oregon.

Surviving are her husband; six sons: Faye, Kenneth, Weidon, Paul, and David of Burt, Iowa; and Victor of Ames, Iowa; a daughter, Donna of Boise, Idaho; and two granddaughters. Funeral services were held in the Burt Presbyterian Church, Elder Clifford Cole, Priest Ben Fish, and the Reverend R. K. Hill officiating. Burial was in the Burt Township cemetery.

ANN ARBOR, MICHIGAN.—Since its organization in November, 1944, Ann Arbor Branch has enrolled sixty-six members and has approximately twenty-five visiting members who attend the University of Michigan. At the business meeting on September 26, Elder L. O. Brockway was elected pastor with Elder Fred Ellis and Priest Gerald Fitch as counselors. One of the principal purposes of the Ann Arbor Branch is to provide a church home for the student members at the university. It is hoped that a permanent meeting place can be built in the near future. A fund of more than $3,000 has been collected, including contributions from some of the students' parents. The fall program for students has included open house at the pastor's home, a "get-together" supper, and the organization of a new student church school class.

McKENZIE, ALABAMA.—On Sunday, September 12, members of the Pleasant Hill congregation met with visitors and friends for the opening services in their new auditorium. For several months the congregation has been meeting in the basement of the church school annex as the new building was constructed. Much donated labor, contributions of material by business concerns, and lumber by some of the members, together with the financial and spiritual support of the congregation made possible the erection of a fine structure with classrooms, dining hall and kitchen, church school auditorium, and chapel, which seats about 250. Of brick veneer, the church will rival the most attractive buildings in the area as landscaping and decorating are completed.

Four hundred persons attended the opening, representing Mobile, Montgomery, Pensacola, and many localities near by. At the 8:30 prayer service, a fine spirit prevailed, and an inspirational message was given by Evangelist A. D. McCall. Brother McCall also preached at 11 a.m., with the congregation overflowing the building. Many, of a necessity, remained outside. An ordination service in the afternoon was accompanied by a sermon by Elder A. O. Crownover, pastor of the Mobile Branch.

JUNIATA, MICHIGAN.—Two adults, George Davison and Angus Dickerson, and four children, Carol Kowitz, Muriel Jhrke, Verba Jhrke, and Gayle Gregg, have been baptized. A recent blessing was that of infant Ronald John Gregg.

P. S.

What shall a man believe?
 Why, simply this:
 He is, you are,
 And I AM.
 At the beginning it was so,
 For all mankind began with me.
 At the end it will be so,
 For the end is the beginning,
 And time runs on!
 He is, you are,
 I AM.

* PHOTOGRAPHS

You have probably noticed that an increasing number of the fine photographs for our cover cuts have been made by our own people. We are proud of the excellent photography of our camera artists. In modern photography, especially with recent equipment, the technique has become a science. It takes real study to produce the best work. We like what our people produce better than the commercial work—there is a difference in the selection of subject matter and interpretation, even in camera work, where so many factors are mechanical. You cannot escape the psychological factors in any art.

Because of the changes of the seasons, we must work far ahead, and good pictures submitted to us now may not be used for some months. That does not mean neglect or lack of appreciation. It is simply necessary planning.

Remember our needs: glossy prints, 6 x 8 or 8 x 10 inches in size, with good, clear definition, light, and composition. This is because pictures must be sharp to make good cuts.

Wherever our people are doing good camera work, we like to hear from them. If we can't use your material, we will try to indicate the lines of improvement needed. And always we appreciate your help.

* AUTHORS AND WRITERS

"Literary Problems" is one of the phrases that is appearing frequently in our correspondence with writers these days. No matter how long a person may write, he always remains a student of writing. It is an art that is never completely learned, but there is great interest and pleasure in working in a field in which the possibilities are never exhausted. Young writers especially are confronted with the basic literary problems, and will find development and growth if they keep trying and studying.

Writers for our publication are to be congratulated for their earnest and steady effort to improve their work, and to produce better scripts. All our publications, and especially the "Herald," are benefiting by this fact. The editors appreciate the fine progress that has been made. Let's always keep trying to improve.

* REJECTIONS

A dissatisfied author once complained to me, after I had declined to publish a defective article, "But you can publish all that you write because you are the editor."

"Not at all," I replied. "I reject a lot of what I write because it isn't good enough. From one third to a half goes into the wastebasket. And sometimes I think I would do better to reject more of it. And if I reject my own inferior work, why should I print yours?"

* EVAN FRY

Our popular Radio Minister, Evan Fry, was honored in having an article published in the beautiful special patriotic issue of the B. S. & B. "Beacon" (Black, Sivals & Bryson, Inc., of Kansas City) for July, 1948, which has just come to our attention. This issue deals with the history and constitutional freedoms of our country, and Brother Fry's article deals with the subject of tolerance among the many racial groups and minorities that make up the great population of our country.

* BAPTISMS

Church baptisms for October numbered 310, bringing our total for this year to 3,215. This is the best October record in ten years, and the annual figure is surpassed, in the last twenty-five years, only by 1929 and 1930.

What Do You Pay Your Preachers?

“For Sale” Signs

The masculine person who sat down in the train seat beside me was a bit pompous and somewhat stuffy. Something about him reminded me of the young turkey gobblers at home on the farm, strutting.

He turned—or should I say pushed?—our conversation rather abruptly into his own particular rut, which happened to be religion.

“What do you pay your preachers?” he demanded, which gave me the first inkling that there was an invisible “For Sale” sign on his collar. When I told him that a great many of our preachers labored without money, for the love of the work, he was disgusted and sought another seat. It never occurred to him that Jesus had not sat on a rock withholding his ministry until somebody offered him a good parish with a set stipend.

Afterward, I got to thinking, What do we pay our preachers?

Price and Value

Oscar Wilde stuck a pin into a spider when he said, a cynic is “a man who knows the price of everything and the value of nothing.” And he indicated thereby a weakness prevalent in too many of us for judging things by their price tags, and not understanding their intrinsic worth.

The word free—for example—is the worst jinx you can attach to anything. How many people do you see reading the free literature in the little box at the end of your bus or tram? It may deal with eternal life, but they won’t read it. But they will get off the bus and pay money for a magazine or paper they will throw away in an hour or so. The higher the price on some fancy article, the more people will desire it, whether they can buy it or not. Remember this simple fact of commerce when you are tempted to try to make the gospel too easy or too cheap a thing.

Tags on Ministers

It is true that some ministers have their prices, and all of them have their values. There are men on vestry committees who, because of the nature of their church financing, must go out shopping for preachers, listening and talking to many to get the best man they can for the money they can offer. And when some one comes down to the point they can go up to, a deal is made, and the minister “accepts a call.”

I don’t know that there is a preachers’ market where you can talk to a secretary who will show you a list of men, saying, “This one is $2,500. He comes with a frock coat and ritualistic accessories,” or “Here is something nice with an Oxford accent at $3,000,” or “Here is a bargain at $1,500 with no extras.” But we do find a spirit among people that looks for the price tag on a man and ignores the value of his soul. And let none of us imagine that he is blameless in this regard.

The Volunteer Minister

What do you pay your minister? You may not pay him in money, but you pay him in something. He may get no check at the end of the month, but he does not escape without a payment of some kind in another type of commodity.

We have seen volunteer ministers giving their time and effort to congregations that demanded all and gave nothing but trouble. Some of them, trying to keep up both secular work and religious service, have suffered nervous breakdowns for their pains and sacrifices. Some have suffered criticism and endless trouble from people who seemed to care nothing for what they did or who might be hurt.

And it must be remembered that there are many instances in which the relationships between the pastor and congregation are very happy. The minister is glad to serve and finds joy in his labor. Members of the congregation are co-operative and very appreciative of all that is done for them. There are rich rewards on both sides that have nothing to do with money.

What Can We Pay?

The new church year has begun, and the fall work is under way. Of our many pastors, a few are under General Conference appointment, but most of them are on a self-sustaining basis. Let us think whether these good men are going to be well paid this year in love and appreciation, in help and co-operation; or whether their work will be made harder for them by unnecessary difficulties and troublesome problems. No man serves in the work of this church for any financial reward he gets out of it. So far as material things are concerned, he could be better paid in any other business in the world. But he is working for another kind of reward, the knowledge of good being done, of people being helped and led toward the better life of righteousness and spirituality, and the work of God going forward.

What are you, personally, planning to pay your pastor this year? What are you planning to pay his assistants, the officers and teachers and staff? Not money, of course. But you can help the work along with regular payments of appreciation, understanding, co-operation, and good will. Life could be changed marvelously in your branch if everybody would see that these payments are made regularly and sincerely. It could begin with you—you could do it!

"The Messiah" on Columbia Network

Handel's The Messiah will be presented for the thirty-second consecutive year, and for the eleventh time on the Columbia network, on Sunday night, December 19, in an hour and a half performance from 10:30 to 12:00 midnight, Central Standard Time. At this writing, all the details have not been completely planned, but it is understood that the broadcast will be carried by the entire network, except those CBS stations fed from Los Angeles, which will be otherwise engaged for that time. The Messiah Choir will be accompanied by selected musicians from the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra, and Franklyn Weddle will direct. Later announcement will be made of the soloists. It is suggested that local branch presidents and musical directors ascertain whether their CBS outlets will carry this network program, and if so, make plans to publicize it not only among our own members, but in local papers and among musical organizations.

Please note that the time will differ according to the time zones—11:30 p. m. to 1:00 a. m. on the Eastern Time Zone, 10:30 to 12:00 p. m. in the Central, 9:30 to 11:00 p. m. in the Mountain, and 8:30 to 10:00 p. m. in the Pacific Time Zone.

Extract from a letter dated November 1 from V. D. Ruch to the First Presidency:

On the thirteenth we held a baptismal service, at which time six persons united with the church. This makes a total of forty-eight baptisms for 1948. We have another baptismal service scheduled for November 10. There are just two candidates at present, but we expect to have more by that time.

In a recent letter from Elder Ernest E. Crownover:

Here is an achievement I think you should know of. My wife's eldest brother, Elder Clarence E. Owen, of Elkhart, Kansas, has baptized fourteen people this year. Doing what he can for the church in the extreme southwestern corner of the state, he uses all leisure time available from ownership and operation of the Elkhart Variety Store to ably represent the church in that area. Often he leaves the store under supervision of the hired help and spends a day or days caring for the work of the church fifty or a hundred miles away. Although I did some preaching in the area in June, and Walter Chrestensen more recently, these fourteen people are entirely the product of the ministry of Brother Owen. Ranging in age from eight to about sixty years, some of the baptisms complete family circles, some of them break into new families. Doesn't this kind of achievement equal in importance that being accomplished by the men under appointment?

We are in receipt of a letter addressed to Elder Almer W. Sheehy from the Executive Commissioner of the Boy Scouts at London, Ontario, in which Mr. Bryson says:

I notice by a recent newspaper report that you will soon be leaving London for a post in the New England States.

May I take this opportunity of expressing my very best wishes to you for happiness and success in your new position. It was a real pleasure to know you and work with you during the last five years, and I feel sure that your church and our community are much better for all that you gave to them.

I know that I will be thinking of you often and will always remember the very pleasant associations we had together here in London.

OFFICIAL

Appointment of District Presidents

Elder William Patterson having resigned as president of the Rich Hill and Spring River Districts to accept assignment to other territory, Elder Donald L. Kyser has been appointed as president of the Rich Hill District, and Elder John Blackmore as president of the Spring River District, effective immediately. These appointments are made subject to the ratification of the conferences of said districts.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
ISRAEL A. SMITH.

I baptized four young people ranging in age from eleven to sixteen, in a beautiful service at Little River State Park near Huxford. Berrydale, Florida, also reports two baptisms on October 17, which brings the total for the district this year to 145. We are now just five short of our goal of 150 for the year.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Correction

In the article by Brother L. A. MacDonald published in the Herald for October 30, page 6, column 3, paragraph 2, a word has been omitted which makes the meaning incorrect. The sentence should read, "This is a trust from God and we must not fail in our responsibility," etc. We regret this error which was not the fault of the author.

Education is knowing everything of something, and something of everything.—Henry Van Dyke.

Witnessing for Christ

By Roscoe E. Davey

A sermon delivered at Enoch Hill Church, Independence, Missouri, October 24, 1948, just before Apostle Davey and his family departed on their mission to Australia. From a wire recording made by L. E. Fordham.

And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me. And I fell unto the ground, and I heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake unto me. And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed of me for thee to do. And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus. And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him. And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.—Acts 22: 6-15.

ST. PAUL has given us in this story of his conversion a testimony of the experience that transformed his life and changed his course completely. Until his conversion he had gloried in his persecution of the church, thinking he was doing the will of God. Afterward, he went forth in a ministry of service seldom equaled or excelled in Christian history.

Later, he wrote to the Hebrew saints that they should look steadfastly into the face of this man, Jesus, who was the author and finisher of their faith, laying aside "every weight and every sin which doth so easily beset us" that they might run successfully the race which was set before them.

The outstanding theme of the recent General Conference was that of missionary witnessing. We are all cognizant of the fact that this church was born of men in the spirit of truth and in the light of Jesus Christ. Once again Christ appeared and gave guidance and direction to the one through whom this marvelous message was restored. And men were sent forth again with a renewed witness of Jesus Christ, that mankind might come to see and to understand and to know the things which God intended they should, relative to the salvation that was made possible for them through Christ Jesus. Again they testified of what they had seen and heard. With zeal and enthusiasm they bore their witness of Jesus Christ.

BEGINNING WITH A GROUP of six men, the church grew and developed until it reached more than a hundred and fifty thousand souls before the coming of the dark and cloudy day that followed the death of its founder. In its struggling endeavors, it came forth in the Reorganization to carry on the witnessing for Christ once more, and it has grown as a result of the witnessing of those who have come to grips with the message of life and salvation of Jesus Christ, and who are altogether desirous that others of their fellow men might likewise come to see and understand these same marvelous things. They, too, are called of God to bear witness to all men of those things which they have seen and heard, and of the marvelous spiritual experiences that have come into their lives as a result of their yielding obedience to the message of life. This church is a missionary church, and just as soon as we lose our missionary zeal and our missionary drive, we begin to die. That is just as inevitable as any of the forces and laws of life that we see about us. And what is true of the church as a whole is likewise true of us as individuals. When we lose our zeal and enthusiasm for bearing witness for Jesus Christ, we begin to die spiritually.

As we witness for Jesus Christ, let us face one basic fact. We sometimes fall afoul of a rather insidious tendency to betray the very work God would have his people do. We have thought sometimes that our calling is to bear witness of the church—the church of the Restoration. And that is not what we are called to bear witness to. We are called to bear witness to Jesus Christ, the son of the living God, in whom we have our only hope of immortality and eternal life. The church, the Restored Gospel—all these things about which we often bear testimony—are important. They are necessary by-products. But the first basic truth to which everyone who is born of God is called to bear witness is the primacy of Jesus Christ and his saving grace, to the fact that he is the son of God and the only one through whom salvation can come to the human race. When we come to grips with that truth, then and then alone will we be in a position to appreciate, evaluate, and understand his marvelous gospel and the church that he established, by which and through which this salvation is made available to the children of men. Until we realize that at the heart and core of our whole work stands Jesus Christ, all of the rest is mere mechanics. I am firmly convinced that one of the difficulties today which causes such slow and meager progress toward the principal work of establishing God's kingdom is the fact that too many have been converted to the church, and too few have been converted to Jesus Christ. There is a vast difference between the two. It is not difficult to take the Scriptures, and from them convince people that this church is a scriptural church, and that its gospel message is founded on the facts given in the word of God. But unless we are careful, we may convert people to these facts alone, separate and apart from Jesus Christ. It can very easily be done.

I AM INCLINED TO BELIEVE that when the time comes that all of us are deeply, thoroughly converted and convinced that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the only hope and means of our salvation, the church will gain a living and dynamic quality.

Many persons have heard the Gospel Message preached, have yielded obedience to it, and by baptism have become members of the household of faith, when not one single thing had happened in their lives and spiritual experiences. Too often they have gone down into the water dry sinners, they have come up wet sinners, and they have kept right on sinning. Nothing has happened to their souls, nor to their minds. That would be utterly impossible with the individuals who have come under the power of Jesus Christ as the basic fact of their whole life. The church would no longer be a mere auxiliary to their lives. It would not be a by-product, a thing of secondary consideration. It would become the consuming passion of their lives. As it was with Jesus, when he said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work," so it would be with them. When people become convicted of Jesus Christ, then they are going to have a searching within their souls, a desire to do their utmost to qualify themselves as witnesses for him. Until they have this basic conviction, there's not much they're going to do about it.

Often our endeavoring to bear witness for Jesus Christ and the church is nullified because the things we do speak so much louder than the things we say.

AS WE CONSIDER Jesus Christ, looking to him as the author and finisher of our faith, the one who is our example in all things and the one whom we must seek to follow and embody in our own life, we should draw our attention to some of the things that characterize his life and ministry. If we are to come under his power, these things must become a part of us, and in the measure that they become a part of us, we can become living witnesses and efficient testimony-bearers for Christ and for the gospel of the church.

One of the things that characterized Jesus in all of his ministry and all of his life is that never once did he let himself become an obstacle in his own road—never once. He always put first and uppermost what God had sent him to do. Undoubtedly there were many times when Jesus faced the necessity of making decisions as to whether he would seek the ease and comfort of his own body or whether he would do what God had sent him to do, whether he would seek his own pleasure and desires, or whether he would lose himself in the service he had come to render.

Jesus was possessed of our same humanity, wasn't he? He took upon himself our humanity when he was born of the Virgin Mary that he might taste life with us, that he might be tempted and tried in every point as we are, that knowing us as we are, he might become a mediator between us and our God. Jesus knows what it means to us today to be tempted to fail to do the will of God because of a headache or because of something else more pleasant to do or because the garden needs tending or a job at the factory or the store needs to be done or a hundred and one other things.

But Jesus had settled this one thing in his life, and so from his heart he could say, "I do always those things which my Father has commanded me to do."

The person who wishes to develop a witnessing power in his life must love spiritual things and make spiritual responses to all the situations of life. He must give first place to the finer, the more worthwhile and valuable things of life, and he must put the satisfying of his own human desires, his own likes and dislikes in second place. There's the measure of your witness for Jesus Christ—the extent to which you have become representative of him.

Another thing which characterized Jesus was that his life was made beautiful and sublime by its simplicity—nothing ostentatious, nothing gaudy, about him. It was a simplicity that held the world in its place. Do we love the simple things in clothing, in architecture, in house adornment, in all the things of life, or do we prefer the gaudy, the gingerbread, the things that draw attention? Jesus didn't want people to come to him because of some popular attraction. He wanted them to come because of the truth that was in him, and he made no appeal through any other channel.

IF WE WOULD BE WITNESSES for Jesus Christ, we must ask ourselves whether or not our basic concern and desire are for simple things. Years ago, when I was a boy, we young folk would sometimes get together and talk about what we were going to do, and what we would like to have happen when we grew up. Almost invariably we wanted to be in a commanding position where we could tell others what to do, and have others do things for us. We were going to have big houses with plenty of servants, and I don't know what all. Nothing particularly sinful about that—just common and ordinary—just human.

But when we turn to Jesus Christ, the divine example to us in all things, we find that he impressed upon his disciples from the very beginning of his ministry until the time of his crucifixion and ascension, that he who would be greatest in the things of God must be the servant of all.

So, if we would test ourselves as to whether we shall be witnesses for Jesus Christ, all we need to do is ask this simple question—ask it honestly and sincerely—look well within our own lives, watch our responses and reactions—“Which are we the more concerned about, serving or being served?” If we would bear witness for Jesus, we must somehow develop within our natures that something which causes us to find satisfaction in service, and not in being served.

I was at a reunion one time several years ago, many miles from here. About half a dozen of us had nearly worn ourselves out working, cleaning up the grounds, pitching tents—big tents and little tents—getting things ready for the people who were coming. Then they began to arrive, and they came faster than we could take care of them. We got what others we could to help us, doing the very best we could. And finally a man arrived with his wife and family, got out of his car and said, “Where’s our tent?” We said, “We just started, and your tent isn’t pitched yet. There’s a tent, and there’s a place.” “Well, why isn’t it pitched?” We replied, “We haven’t been able to get to it yet. There have been too few of us and too much to do. We’re doing the best we can, and you’ll help us a lot if you’ll just be kind enough to pitch your own tent.” “Huh,” he said, and got in his car and went home. It is just as well that he did—the reunion wouldn’t have done him one bit of good. It didn’t worry me when he went home. Maybe that wasn’t a Christian attitude, but I knew as long as he had that attitude, he could attend reunion and be only a fixture. He would warm a seat and nothing more. Maybe his family would have received some good out of it, but he wouldn’t—not with that attitude. If he really had a Christian attitude, he would have asked, “Where’s the place? Where’s something I can do?” If you want a test of the witnessing power of people for Jesus Christ, right there is where you find it. You don’t find it in the tear-stained faces or emotional testimonies in a prayer meeting. I’m not prejudiced against prayer meetings—I enjoy them. But spirituality is manifested in practical life. A friend recently told me how one brother got up and bore his testimony, and after the meeting a sister going out said, “Wasn’t that a spiritual testimony? Tears were running down his cheeks.” But my friend said, “Bah! he’s just got another attack of hay fever!” Sometimes people weep for various reasons, and others think they are “spiritual.” If we go out where they’re setting up a reunion camp, I can find you the spiritual individuals—the ones that are basically spiritual and not just bubbling over with emotionalism. Spiritual people are busy helping and serving and finding something to do. So in a branch the spiritual ones are generally working, and you don’t have to beg them to come to church.

ANOTHER THING characterized the life of Jesus—he just couldn’t be stopped. No matter what happened, no matter how great the discouragement, no matter how tremendous the obstacles, Jesus never quit. He had that something in him which always enabled him to go the added mile. He had “staying” qualities. He could rise above any amount of discouragement or trouble or disappointment. Like the poem we used to hear, “It’s easy enough to be pleasant, when life goes along like a song; but the man worth-while is the man who can smile when everything goes dead wrong.” Are we easily discouraged? When things don’t go as we think they should, do we lie down and quit? Or do we have staying qualities? Do we know that truth eventually triumphs? Will we be there to help it? What would Jesus do? You know as well as I. The more adversity that came, the more stanch he was in what he knew was right. Many of you had the privilege of meeting or hearing Brother Charles Dickinson from Australia, who was here during Conference and is now on his return home. Several years ago he paid a similar visit to us here in the States. On his return to Australia, the day he landed, his whole furniture manufacturing plant burned to the ground. He got off the boat in time to see the ashes—his whole life’s work gone. He looked at it, smiled, and said, “I still have a mind and two hands. I can rebuild it.” And he did.

What kind of stuff are we made of?

NO ONE CAN IMAGINE Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, being anything but the very essence of cleanliness, in mind, body, and spirit. Dirt will never bear witness for Jesus Christ. I had a rather interesting experience several years ago, when I was holding a missionary series of meetings. On the first night a man came to the service, and if ever you saw a pitiful, dejected sight, he was it. His clothes were dirty, his hair was matted on the top of his head, he hadn’t shaved for weeks, and tobacco stained his clothes. One could hardly tell whether he was human or animal. For several nights there was no improvement. Then one evening he came with his hair combed and his whiskers shaved off, and a short time later he had on a clean shirt and a necktie. At the close of the services, he was a perfect gentleman. As he came increasingly under the power of Jesus Christ, it did what it's always bound to do—it cleaned him up inside and out. And if it doesn't do that for people, you know they haven't come under the power of Christ. They haven't begun to see him. Jesus always kept himself in the background as well as he could. When he healed the sick, he said, "See that you tell no man," or "Go and show yourself to the priests of the temple." He never sought popularity nor put his best foot forward to have people think well of him. When the woman came to him and tried to gain his favor by saying what a wonderful man he was, he immediately said, "Yes, but more blessed is he that doeth the will of my Father who sent me." He didn't glory in a lot of flattery. What does it take to keep us going? Many turn aside because when they do something, it seems nobody appreciates it, nobody pats them on the back, nobody tells them what marvelous things they've done, and they get discouraged. They work for the pats on the back, for the praises that are sung in their ears. If they don't get them, they don't do anything. And then they wonder why they don't bear witness and testimony of Jesus, so that people can see and hear and believe. Jesus never was like that. Can we forget ourselves in the service we render and not think of returns we get out of it? That's what Jesus did.

JESUS WAS ALWAYS GENTLE and kind except in rare cases when things existed that demanded something else. Those who needed sympathetic understanding, those who needed encouragement by gentleness and kindness found help in Jesus. He didn't bluster, and I imagine he always spoke in plain terms. Jesus was the master of his work, of his pleasures, of all of his activities. For him, everything was centered in the one thing—his mission. How many of us have reached the place in our spiritual growth and development where we can forego a cherished position, a desired pleasure, for a prison? That is a real acid test.

My wife and I, while laboring in the Northwest, had planned a certain activity. We looked forward to it with a lot of anticipation. Then just about the time when we were to

There is such a thing as taking ourselves and the world too seriously, or at any rate too anxiously. Half of the secular unrest and dismal, profane sadness of modern society comes from the vain idea that every man is bound to be a critic of life, and to let no day pass without finding some fault with the general order of things or projecting some plan for its improvement. And the other half comes from the greedy notion that a man's life does consist, after all, in the abundance of the things he possesses, and that it is somehow or other more respectable and pious to be always at work making a larger living, than it is to lie on your back in the green pastures and beside the still waters, and thank God that you are alive.—Henry van Dyke, in "Little Rivers," 1895.

fulfill our desire there came a call. It meant that we would have to forego the thing that we had planned on doing—for that time and maybe forever. The call took me many miles from home. We felt rather sorry for ourselves. We began to debate the issue for a while whether we would answer that call, or whether we would wire back and tell them that we couldn't come, and then follow our plan. But when we considered everything, we remembered the marvelous blessings that had come into our lives as a result of the gospel and the church and the goodness of God. We thought of the many ways in which he had blessed us, and the things we had received from his bountiful hand. We felt so ashamed of ourselves that we asked God's forgiveness for feeling the way we did at the beginning, and I answered the call. We never were able to follow our plan, but neither my wife nor I ever in our life regretted the choice we made, because God blessed us richly. Jesus was humble in mind and spirit. There was no pride in him.

All our lives, we are witnessing for somebody or for something. Every life is based upon an idea, a purpose, a loyalty, a plan, for good or bad, for business or pleasure, for destruction or salvation.

Every day, we are witnessing, by word and deed, for or against Christ. There is no neutral ground between Christ and Satan, because those who refuse to identify themselves with the eternal Good eventually become the victims of eternal evil.

Witnesses! What kind of witness are you? And based upon the quality and the character of your witnessing what will your destiny be? By the things that you do and the things that you say, every day of your earthly existence, you are determining where and how you shall spend eternity.

Our Talent

By Retta Parsons Fender

A teacher once asked his pupils what they considered the greatest thing in life one could do. The best answer was given by a little girl who said, "To grow and grow and grow forever."

Gutzon Borglun, the distinguished sculptor who was carving the giants of American history upon the face of Mount Rushmore in the Black Hills of South Dakota, had a stimulating philosophy.

"I cannot tell you how to be a giant anymore than I can tell you how to be eight feet all," he says. "I can merely say 'grow.'"

Our spiritual life must be fed in order to grow. We must give something of ourselves in order to aid that growth and develop it into something useful and beautiful.

Governing Decisions

By Evan A. Fry

For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh; that their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of Christ, who is of God, even the Father; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. And this I say lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him; rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.—Colossians 2: 1-9.

IF YOU HAVE EATEN very many times in a cafeteria, I am sure you have had the experience of getting behind someone in a line who cannot decide what he wants to eat. Over every item of food he lingers interminably, trying to make up his mind to take this or that or something else. One such undecided person can dislocate the noon hour schedules of a whole host of hurrying people in a big city, because he insists on spending an inordinate amount of time in mulling over what ought to be quick and minor decisions.

On the same plane and of the same stripe is the shopper who enters a store on a sale day, when every clerk is busy and every counter crowded, and then stands undecided over whether to take this piece of merchandise or that or another for a dollar more. While dozens of other customers wait, this one undecided shopper vacillates, dawdles, argues with himself, wonders, and finally makes the wrong decision, going home with a purchase he will bring back next day for an exchange.

I have known people who spent half or more of each morning trying to decide what they would do that day; and by the time they decided, it was too late for what they had decided to do—which is probably what they unconsciously wanted in the first place. By failing to decide, they are relieved of the necessity of carrying out any decisions. I have known men who would spend all morning arguing and considering the pros and cons of whether or not to take a morning shave. I have known people who spent all of Sunday morning and part of Saturday night debating with themselves whether they should go to church—and then didn't go after all.

DO YOU SEE YOURSELF in any of these illustrations? How much time do you waste every day in needless debate and indecision and vacillation, when the situation is such that your decision ought to be made immediately? Some decisions, of course, should be thought out long and well and carefully, because once made, they cannot be recalled; and they may influence the course of your soul for eternity. Other decisions are simply not worth wasting time over. If I am in normal health, it won't matter much whether I choose beans or peas from the cafeteria, or black shoes or brown shoes from the shoe store, or a bow tie or a four-in-hand from the haberdasher. Then there are many other questions, problems, and struggles of conscience, which could be avoided entirely by making what have been called "governing" decisions—decisions that are broad, general, all-inclusive, made finally, irrevocably, and decisively to govern a whole area of life, or perhaps all of life. Governing decisions stop in decision, argument with self, vacillation, worry, waste of time, because all minor decisions are made by quick referral to the major governing decision, which governs that area of life.

By way of illustration, let us suppose that I have to stop and hold parley with myself every time I pass a saloon. I consider in my mind again—as I have done many times before—the relative merits of indulgence or abstinence. I argue that this one time won't matter. I consider that I shall probably find some congenial friends within; that it's a hot day, and I really need a cooling drink; that I'm a bit low, and need something to give me a lift. On the other side I argue that drinking is an expensive habit; that I'm apt to forget and take too much; that the friends I shall probably meet might not be of the best after all, etc. These arguments can be prolonged almost indefinitely. But if I have made one governing decision, signed the pledge, and solemnly resolved never to touch alcohol under any circumstances—and if I really mean it—there need never be any weak vacillation as I pass a saloon.

Another illustration. In the course of one day, I could raise dozens of petty questions about whether to eat this or that, whether to indulge in this or that—questions of eating and drinking and smoking and dancing until 4 o'clock in the morning. Arguing each petty case and making a decision will consume a lot of time and usually result in some lost arguments. But if I have made one final, all-inclusive, governing decision that I am going to train to make the football team, or become some sort of champion on the track team, or become the world's champion heavy-weight boxer, all minor decisions can be quickly—almost automatically—resolved by referring them to that one governing decision, and answering the question, "Will what I want to do help me or hinder me in achieving my goal?"

ARE YOU BESET by petty indecisions as to how to spend your money? Set a goal far ahead which you are determined to attain—an education for yourself—a home for your family—a business of your own—and you won't have to argue with yourself over whether or not to spend money for soda pop you don't need. Do you have a hard time deciding whether to spend your time in this way or that? If you have decided on a goal to be attained in the shortest possible time, that governing decision will cover every minor problem of how to spend your time—and do it almost automatically. If you find it easy to be honest in a ten-dollar situation, but debatable as to whether to be honest in a five-cent situation, you can save a lot of time and debate by deciding once and for all on absolute honesty and then referring all petty decisions as to honesty to this governing decision.

In final analysis, only one great governing decision in life will take care of nearly all other decisions, if you make that one decision honestly and determinedly and stick to it in spite of all temptations to depart from it.

No doubt you have already guessed what this great governing decision is. It is the decision to acknowledge Jesus Christ as Lord of your life and make every other decision according to his nature, his will, his law, and his plan. If that one great decision is honestly and firmly and irrevocably made, all minor decisions will fall easily and readily into its pattern, without argument, doubt, or vacillation.

Behold the Lamb

By NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL

IT HAPPENED at leadership laboratory in the children's division class. One of the younger members had been calling the children "kids," and an older member remonstrated the use of the word. The young woman's defense was, "Why, I've often heard you call them little lambs."

The use of similar descriptive terms stems directly from the Old and New Testament. Our whole church is based upon the admonition to "feed my sheep," as given by Christ. The word lamb, for instance, is found twenty-six times in the Book of Revelation. It is interesting to trace the use and meaning of this word.

And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering.—Genesis 4: 4.

This lamb was an offering or propitiation. This was the first sacrifice of a God-loving and God-fearing man. From that day forward, the lamb became the accepted form of sacrifice.

Years passed, and God commanded Abraham to offer up Isaac, his son, as a sacrifice on an altar. What a hard choice for a man whose love for his family was surpassed only by his love for God. So he made ready this human sacrifice. But God had a plan, and the plan did not include the death of Isaac. "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering" (Genesis 22: 8). Here Abraham learned that a symbol could teach a deep lesson, for God did provide a lamb to substitute for the life of a beloved son. Abraham was willing, that was the important thing. Does this not come as a forewarning of still another lamb?

MORE GENERATIONS passed by, mankind sinned and the chosen people found themselves in bondage to the hard Egyptian taskmasters. Repeated petitions of a great leader were of no avail to secure their release; plagues brought only false and broken promises of freedom until God once more employed the device of the lamb.

And the Lord spake unto Moses . . . they shall take to them every man a lamb . . . without blemish . . . and they shall take of the blood and strike it on the . . . door posts of the houses . . . for I will pass through the land of Egypt this night and will smite all of the first-born . . . and the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where you are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you.—Exodus 12: 1-13.

Thus the lamb (and its blood) was protection and safety for those who obeyed the commandments of God. Do you suppose there may have been some unbelievers even among the Israelites who failed to obey this simple command and thus suffered even as the hated enemies? Here is another substitution—the life of a lamb for the life of a first-born—a mighty symbol. This whole ceremony has been carried down through the centuries as an important and meaningful rite of the Jewish religion.

The Book of Leviticus goes into great detail as to the method of sacrifice, and in reading it, we often get the feeling that the ritual became too important in detail rather than as a symbol. Law decreed that the lay member could bring the sacrifice, but the priesthood of the Levitical order (or of the manner of Levi) must be the only accepted channel for the actual offering. The offering came as an atonement for the sins of the individual and was accepted by the priest as absolution for those sins. Thus through the lamb came forgiveness—a representation of man's true repentance as shown by the sacrifice of a "lamb without blemish." Nor would it be too easy to find such a pure and spotless offering.

FORGIVENESS

By Alta Dutton

These people had few cities as yet, and they wandered with their flocks from one pasture land to better grazing fields. Their pitched tents were their homes; their wealth was measured by the size of their flocks. They had no money as such, and in their system of barter, a lamb became the standard of value. All possessions were compared in value to the worth of a lamb. The symbol of the lamb became all important, both spiritually and monetarily.

It is small wonder, then, that the Prophet Isaiah used the simile of the lamb, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter," (Isaiah 53: 7) in referring to the coming of the Messiah. He also said, "All we like sheep have gone astray" (53: 6).

CHRI^ST, HIMSELF, termed his own activities as a shepherd and based many parables upon the sheep-fold.

John, the Baptist, set the stage of Christ's earthly career by his greeting: "Behold the lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1: 29. He came not to remove all the petty individual sins, but to give his life and his example that the whole basis of all sin could be removed. Through the shedding of his blood, as a sacrificial lamb upon an altar, he became the eternal symbol of repentance and the death of sin. Then, in his resurrection, came the infinite symbol of the newness of life through the purity of redemption.

Because it is written . . . forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things . . . but with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish and without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times to you, who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.—I Peter 1: 16-21.

Thus comes my belief—that Christ himself was not the end—but a means of worshiping his father, God, a channel (holy, indeed, of course) from man's sin to God's perfection.

Symbolically we carry on (in the example of Christ, himself) this same sacrificial theme, in the communion service where the blood of the lamb (the blood of Christ—the Lamb of God) is represented in the wine as a reminder of the fact that true repentance is ever evidenced by true sacrifice, even though the sacrifice is made symbolically. We do not go to the extent that we believe in transubstantiation where this lamb's blood becomes the actual blood of Christ, or the wine is actually changed in a physical sense. We recognize this as a symbol, but a symbol of a powerful and holy thing. This same communion will thus serve as glorification to God, for "blessing, and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."—Revelation 5: 13. For Christ came to fulfill the plan of salvation, "And there shall be no more curse [original sin was erased and man placed upon his own merits]; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it [Zion]; and his servants shall serve him."—Revelation 22: 3.

It would be possible to carry on this comparison to a much greater detail, for others have died for their beliefs, beliefs which were based upon the same premise that God is mindful of man and is working for his salvation. Other lives and other bloods have been lost in actuality, but their examples remain as a symbol of this same great truth.

"Oh, to be more like Jesus"—the Lamb of God—and to realize that "The Lord is my Shepherd . . . I shall not want," so long as I am mindful and obedient to the meaning of his sacrifice.

JESUS MEANT what he said when Peter came to him and asked, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?" Jesus said to him, "I say not to thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven."—Matthew 18: 21, 22.

Every commandment given by Jesus finds a place in the lives of people, and every commandment kept by his children carries its own reward and blessing.

In this day (the sifting time), Saints are assailed on every hand, by Satan who tries to keep them from being strong enough to "stand the test," especially those who have walked in the light and have received the spiritual confirmation of the truth of the gospel. Satan hates to lose a battle; like some people, he must rule or ruin. He fights to the last and does not give up gracefully.

We cannot afford to let these things come between us and our heavenly home, no matter how grievously we have been sinned against. With the help of our Heavenly Father we can, through prayer, forgive again and again. When we think of the choice between Satan and Christ (and that's what it is), we know we must choose Christ. Any other course is fatal to us, for if we cannot forgive, we must harbor hatred, and hatred eats into our souls like cancer, warps our minds and deadens our spiritual life until we drift away and become lost and unhappy.

When we are so sinned against, it is very satisfying to go to the Master and humbly ask forgiveness and the power to forgive, and then feel the sweet comforter clearing our minds until our very being is full of light and love for others; then we become concerned about them. As one good member of the priesthood has said, "I cannot afford to let such trivial things mar my life."

ATTITUDES

ONE'S ATTITUDE TOWARD life in general has much to do with his success and happiness. If he is not able to get along with others, it is quite likely that he is not at peace with himself; he lacks poise and self-confidence and usually believes the difficulty lies in the other person. Most of us are like that. We rarely take time to consider what sort of individual we may be, nor do we analyze ourselves to find out why we maintain certain viewpoints. As adults, we do not realize how much our attitude at home may affect the children around us. If we are determined to improve ourselves rationally, we will add much to the world's progress, but it is a slow process. However, that which grows quickly also disintegrates quickly.

Fundamentally, attitude is the way we "lean toward" a thing—the position we take either bodily or mentally or both. Attitude is usually associated with our understanding concerning self and others—what we apprehend in general. Attitude is the lens through which we look upon all of life's experiences. Our attitude colors our judgment; it makes unimportant things seem large or causes us to be indifferent to worth-while events and opportunities. In other words, we may be wearing rose-colored glasses, or we may be hiding our eyes behind a dark lens of pessimism. It is because of our attitudes that we do not see clearly; we may be as one who puts on a pair of glasses which does not in any way fit his eyes, and his vision is distorted.

NOW IS A GOOD TIME for us to consider with what sort of attitude we are viewing the experiences of our life; we should not always "see through a glass darkly." If we can develop an impersonal attitude toward life, an attitude which enables us to see and understand the problems and difficulties of others without becoming involved in them, then we are on the pathway that leads to poise and balance. So often the well-intentioned person seeks to help another out of some difficulty and gets himself in so much trouble that he becomes cynical about helping others. He has so much sympathy that he takes another's troubles upon himself and becomes weak and weary. He gets involved in the trouble and is not of great assistance.

Jesus told the sick man, "Take up thy bed and walk." Had He become involved and taken up the man's bed, no good would have been accomplished. We must never allow ourselves to become a part of another's trouble, nor should we do for another what he can do for himself. Yet neither should our attitude be one of utter indifference, for then we would not see or understand the trouble of others or our own.

The present hour calls for calm and just appraisal and should not be met with indifference or fear. A common attitude of the times is, "So what? If the atom bomb falls on us and kills us all, why worry?" In days past we were taught to watch and pray—that is the solution for these times, too. It is the watchful attitude—an attitude of hope without fear, a being ready always, "for ye know not the hour"—that counts. If we are alert, we will not be living in the past nor in the future; but if our attitude permits us to grow, we will keep "abreast of the times."

THE ATTITUDE OF PEOPLE in general is strongly materialistic—the belief in the power of goods over the power of God. The mass-minded put their trust in things seen and felt and are indifferent to religion, science, and culture except as they add to the material comforts of the race.

Riches and poverty alike are impermanent, and we fluctuate between these two conditions. This is a world of two powers, or rather one power divided into two aspects which try the soul of man through many experiences. Paul taught, "For there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God."—Romans 13: 1.

If we were able to look upon any condition and tell the ultimate result as did Jesus, we could see all things ordered and mankind redeemed. We are too eager to see evil in others and condemn it. We have a self-righteous attitude and feel that we are good because we can see so much that is evil.

Every material object casts a shadow, but we do not need to concentrate on the shadow. Without the shadow, we could not see the object, and of necessity we must accept the shadow as being one with the object, but that does not mean the shadow is evil.

One of the most important evolutions that man as an individual can make in this life is to emerge from attitude to poise and balance and thus be free of bondage or biased thinking. Day by day we grow into the kind of person we have patterned by our attitudes. Attitudes range from the most selfish and depraved to the just and impersonal. If we are friendly, cheerful, courageous, and unselfish, we can gain the heights from which we can see clearly. Attitudes must give way to equilibrium if we are to climb "the old, old path" that leads to the summit of Mt. Zion.

Abn Nuwas, in a lament composed on the death of the Khalifa Al-Amin, paid him the perfect compliment: "His death was the only thing I feared, and now nothing remains for me to dread."—E. V. Lucas, A Boswell of Baghdad.

INA COOLBRITH

By H. S. SALISBURY

Member of the Ina Coolbrith Circle of Authors and Poets.

IT WAS one of those lovely June days in that unique city, Nauvoo the Beautiful. The clear, shining waters of the mighty Mississippi, turning from a westerly course, swung in a great semicircle around the famous city and then hurried southward toward the Gulf of Mexico. The sun in matchless splendor was beaming down upon the curious uncompleted temple of white stone that crowned the high bluff in the midst of the city. Wild Indians, lurking under the green trees far to the westward in Iowa Territory, caught flashes of light reflected from the polished stone walls of the "Temple on the Hills." Peace and quiet reigned.

Suddenly the silence of the primeval paradise was startled by the sounding of a trumpet. Next came the long column of the Nauvoo Legion, marching up Mulholland Street, led by a brilliant twenty-six-starred American Flag. Terse orders rang out. The column halted, then formed at the side of the street and presented arms as one man, for they were well and thoroughly drilled by veteran soldiers who had served under the Duke of Wellington at the Battle of Waterloo.

There was the hoofbeat of galloping horses and their commander, with his staff, rode past the saluting troops and took his place at their head to lead them to the drill ground. The staff was accompanied by a half dozen of their ladies, riding horses equipped with side-saddles. The ladies wore long, flowing black velvet riding habits. On their heads, despite the heat, were black velvet bonnets topped with white ostrich plumes.

Their commander, General Joseph Smith, with his wife Emma riding at his side, was resplendent in the full uniform and plumed chapeau of a lieutenant general of the United States Army. Brigadier General George A. Smith cut a very good figure among the mounted officers; but the cynosure of all admiring eyes was the Prophet's youngest brother, Brigadier General Don Carlos Smith.

He was six feet-four inches tall, straight and athletic, fair of complexion and blue-eyed. No ancient armored knight—from many of which his descent has been traced—no pompous, plumed, parading silken-clad Crusader ever exceeded General Don Carlos Smith in the beauty and majesty of his appearance. He was the pride and idol of the new city. The well-beloved Prophet was a fine appearing man over six feet tall himself; but the Prophet's sisters have told me repeatedly that Don Carlos was by far the handsomest officer in the Nauvoo Legion and would take first honors in appearance in a contest with any group of army officers anywhere on the globe.

In spite of his fine appearance on parade, Don Carlos was no pampered parlor pet. He had been well-seasoned by the hard knocks of pioneer life and missionary work. He was the father of Ina Coolbrith, who was born in Nauvoo in 1841. Both her parents were of tried and true New England stock. Both were of Puritan ancestry.

INA COOLBRITH'S mother, Agnes Coolbrith, came from Maine, according to one of her biographers. Ina Coolbrith was named Josephine Donna Smith after her uncle, the Prophet, and after her father. Her father was a "Mayflower" descendant, and her forebears on both sides had taken a prominent and honorable part on the American side in the Indian wars and the American Revolution. Ina's parents had suffered persecution in Ohio and in Missouri.

While Don Carlos was absent on a mission before Ina's birth, the Missouri mob in Daviess County, Missouri, burned his home, and Agnes Coolbrith Smith fled in the snow on foot with little Agnes strapped on her back and carrying Sophronia in her arms. To reach her friends, she waded across Grand River waist deep amidst cakes of floating ice.

You know the story of how the cruelly persecuted, driven remnant reached Illinois and built the city of Nauvoo. Filled with pity for their plight, and desiring their votes, the politicians of Illinois assigned them arms and commissioned them to form the Nauvoo Legion and take the task of defending the western border of the state against any outlaws and Indians that might make incursions from the wilds of the Territory of Iowa. The Saints had much more reason to fear invasion by the mobs from Missouri, so they accepted the arms and the commissions.

THE NAUVOO LEGION served its purpose. It protected them until they could build their city and establish their schools and university, and teach and educate their people so that when the jealous politicians and preachers of Illinois turned against them and martyred their prophet and scattered them, the effect was like that of scattering a prairie fire, which smoldering here and there, finally revives into a giant, irresistible conflagration that carries all before it.

A sister of the prophet once told me that while a band of lawless Missourians waited in the corner of their state just below Keokuk, Iowa, two of their spies came near Nauvoo and from their hiding place in a thicket watched a parade of the legion. They returned to their band in fearful haste and so frightened them by their account of the military might of Nauvoo that the mob abandoned their plan for invading the city and returned to their homes. The famous Indian scout, Porter Rockwell, sent out by the Prophet to watch for just such movements, had spied on the waiting gang and, galloping back to Nauvoo, had reported to General Joseph Smith that they planned to cross over to Warsaw, Illinois, that evening and sneak up to Nauvoo that night under cover of darkness.

The Legion was called out at once and formed ambuscades around and below the city. They waited all through the short, June night. To their great disappointment, no enemy came. Fired by my grandmother's many accounts of her family's terrible sufferings from the cruelties of the Missouri mobs, I have often shared her deep disappointment that they did not encounter the revenge of the powerful Legion and receive the punishment they so richly deserved. The Missourians planned no more invasions of Nauvoo. Thereafter they confined their sinister activities to sending out small bands to try to kidnap the Prophet or Porter Rockwell when they were away from Nauvoo. They succeeded in that on at least two occasions, but their release was secured through the courts.

It was amid such events in Nauvoo that Ina Coolbrith was born. Soon her sister Sophronia died. Next her wonderful father passed away at the age of twenty-five. Her uncles, Joseph and Hyrum, were taken to Carthage and slain by a mob. The Saints were driven from their city. Her mother, with the Prophet's widow and sisters, refusing to accept Brigham Young as their leader, remained in Nauvoo, and married William Pickett from St. Louis, Missouri, second cousin of the famous General Pickett, who, at the command of Lee, led the noted, forlorn Pickett's Charge against the impregnable Union lines at the Battle of Gettysburg.

IN 1852, the Picketts went to California. They traveled in the usual covered wagon train of that day, drawn by oxen. They endured the usual hardships—danger from Indians, scarcity of water, lack of proper food. Brigham Young had particularly offended the widow and sisters of the Prophet that year by announcing his doctrine of plural marriage, and, as one of the sisters, my grandmother, often said to me, "laying the responsibility for it upon my brother, Joseph, who was entirely innocent of such infamy."

Mr. Pickett never joined the church. The widow of Don Carlos, always true to the original teachings of the Prophet, bitterly resented the taint put upon the church by Brigham's polygamy, and never afterward would acknowledge that she had ever been a member, as in the West Mormonism was synonymous with polygamy. She changed her daughter's name from Josephine Donna Smith to Ina Coolbrith, and her daughter became famous by that name.

While crossing the Carson Sink in western Nevada, the caravan ran out of fresh water. They were saved by a friendly Indian, who advised them to turn their oxen loose and follow where they led. This they did, and the oxen led them to sweet water where it flowed down from the melting snow on a high mountain to mingle with the salt and alkali water of the sink.

Their guide over the high Sierras and into California was none other than the famous western Indian scout, James Beckwith, or as the California historians prefer to spell it, James Beckwourth. He led them over a pass, discovered and explored by him, which still bears his name. Their train is said to have been the first one ever to travel over this pass which lies north of the present road from Reno to Sacramento and now appears on maps of California as Beckwourth Pass.

As they crossed the high divide and came into view of the Sacramento Valley, the poetic Beckwith placed the golden haired little Ina on his horse in front of him so that she would be the first white person ever to enter California over this trail. (Beckwith was of mixed blood.)

As they gazed on the distant valley of the Gold State, he said, "There, little girl, lies your kingdom!"

How prophetic were his words! Could it have been by divine inspiration that he spoke! Did he know that the little, penniless girl, entering the Gold State practically as an exile, would become the most honored lady of California?

THE AUTHOR, H. S. SALISBURY

Ina Coolbrith said that Jim Beckwith was a handsome Indian chief. He was dressed in a very fine set of buckskins, fringed and decorated. His long, black hair was braided with red ribbons. He rode a beautiful spotted horse.

Many dreamers, lying out in the desert, looking up to the everlasting snow on the high peaks, watching the scintillating constellations overhead in the quiet night sky, have been divinely inspired. I know that. I met a Texas cowboy once at a conference in Texas. I asked him how he came to join our church. Were his people in the old church before Nauvoo? "No," he told me. No one related to him, so far as he knew, had ever been a member. While herding cattle out on the Texas range, he read his Bible by his campfire and found there the pattern of the Church of Christ. Looking up at the brilliant stars, he received knowledge that the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church was the right one.

I do know that the view of northern California from the high Sierras can be inspiring. I, myself, have stood on that mighty, serrated backbone of the west and caught my breath in wonder as my fascinated gaze swept across the golden, summer-sunburned valley of the Sacramento and pierced the hazy distance to the lovely bluebird blue of the Coast Range. Then, turning to the northwest, one sees that the azure Coast Range rises higher and higher until it reaches the taller Siskiyou which extend eastward across northern California until they join with the high Sierras.

Now, looking north along the giant ridge of the Sierras, you see Mount Lassen—a live volcano; and beyond Mt. Lassen there rises the towering, snowclad grandeur of Mt. Shasta, crowned by a great mass of creamy vapor, emitting flashes of lightning.

Every calm summer day, the moisture from the warm air ascending the icy slopes of the mountain condenses above the summit, and about 2 p.m. moves off southward down the ridge with its thunders echoing from peak to peak. The cloud sheds little rain, but its lightning starts many forest fires.

Turning my back to the mountain storm, I saw in the south, Jim Beckwourth Peak, and six miles farther south, a granite spire, named Mount Ina Coolbrith!

Standing there alone on top of the world, the storm roaring behind me, viewing a mountain named after one of my family, the inspiring surroundings filled my soul too full for utterance; and as I thought of what that family had undergone—how its members had been persecuted, praised, and slandered—I was moved to tears.

Many of its members have made much of their high heritage, others have accomplished nothing. Several today are successful authors, historians, or poets. Many of them have been high church officials, one a prophet of God, chosen to restore the gospel. Several have been university professors, two of them in Harvard University, one of them a scientist of international reputation. Some of them have been prominent members of our state legislatures, one of them chosen to help make a new constitution for a state that once drove us from its boundaries. But most marvelous of all, to my mind, is the fact that out here in California, one lone exiled member of the Smith family, by her own individual efforts, so carefully and untiringly cultivated the divine spark of genius that the Almighty saw fit to raise her up, even as he once elevated a lone Hebrew slave in ancient Egypt, until she towered, unrivaled and supreme, above all the other women of the Golden West! What an inspiration that should be to our young people of today!

"Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime."

Bidding good-by to Jim Beckwith, the little family descended into the valley and for two years stayed in Maryville by the Sacramento River about forty miles north of Sacramento. Next they removed to the small village of Los Angeles, now the great southern California metropolis, and lived for a while in one of the white adobe cottages shaded by Peruvian pepper trees.

AT AN EARLY AGE, Ina began to write poems. She grew up, a tall, slender, beautiful woman. After a short marriage that ended in the death of her only child, she went north and established herself in San Francisco.

She had lost her wonderful father, her kind stepfather, and her only child. Many a woman under similar circumstances has abandoned herself to despair and bitterness. But not Ina Coolbrith. In her grief, she turned to writing her lovely, lyrical poetry, and to quietly and kindly advising and helping others. She was of that reserved New England type that does not waste words. She refused to talk of herself or of her work. Her poetry, her constant kindness and helpfulness, her beauty and majestic appearance spoke for her and insured her advancement.

She taught school for a while. She was librarian in the Oakland city library for eighteen years and assisted and encouraged many young people to read good books and build good character. Isadora Duncan called her a beautiful and friendly woman whose face lighted up in pleased approval when a young person selected good books. She helped Jack London start his career. It was she who selected the nom de plume "Joaquin" for Cincinnatus Miller, who became famous as Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras. Joaquin Miller denominated her "A daughter of the gods, divinely tall and most divinely fair."

IN SAN FRANCISCO, her home became the gathering place of poets and authors, educators and scientists, not only from California, but from all over the globe. She devoted herself to helping edit the Overland Monthly. She was the close associate and adviser of those who made the Golden Age of California literature, such as Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Joaquin Miller, C. W. Stoddard, John Muir, Prentice Mulford, Jack London, and many others. She was the living symbol of the "Victorian Age" of California. State and city officials came to her evening assemblies. She was elected to membership in many exclusive clubs and societies. One of them was the Society of Authors and Journalists of London, England.

During her very active life, she grew up with California and saw it advance from a virtual wilderness to a very wealthy and populous state. She was honored at city and state celebrations. In stately Spanish costume complete with black lace mantilla, she led the grand march with more than one of the governors of California at California inaugurations. The first time she was selected to do this was with Don Pio Pico at his inauguration as governor of California.

In the 1906 earthquake and fire, her home was destroyed and with it many of her manuscript poems, and her unpublished "History of Western Literature." Also many priceless mementoes were burned, such as letters from Whittier and Lord Tennyson. She did not let this misfortune discourage her. She went right on with her work.

Mills College conferred the degree of Master of Arts on her in 1924. She was twice elected to write a commencement poem for the University of California—an honor conferred on no other person. Many of her choice poems were published in papers and magazines and in books.

When Whittier published his Songs of Three Centuries, he included her poem, "When the Grass Shall Cover Me." When, later on, he discovered that Ina Coolbrith was the author, he invited her to visit him in New England.

IT WAS SAID OF HER that she combined the stately pride, the vigorous intellect and force of Queen Victoria with the bold fearlessness of the western pioneer woman. The noted poet, Clarence Edmund Stedman, called her "The Sappho of the Western Sea."

Professor Charles Phillips of Notre Dame, after her death, published a small volume of her poems with a preface recounting her accomplishments. He says she was a figure absolutely unique in American literature—a true artist; a true poet who accepted her talents as God-given and used them delicately and purposefully. He especially praises the beauty of two groups of her poems, Wings of Sunset and Songs of the Golden Gate.

During the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in 1915, she had charge of the congress of writers which she had been organizing for four years. During the International Congress of Authors and Journalists at the exposition, she was formally crowned with laurel, as were the Greek heroes of old, by the noted Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California. The state legislature acclaimed her as "Loved Laurel-Crowned Poet of California." She was then seventy-four. This was the first time known in the history of America that the title of Poet Laureate was given to anyone.

She passed from this life on February 29, 1928. Her niece, Mrs. Ina Cook Craig of Berkeley, tells me that her crowning as Poet Laureate of California by Benjamin Ide Wheeler was a most impressive and solemn ceremony, a rite in which Ina Coolbrith behaved with all the majesty and poise of a queen.

After her decease, the Legislature of California further honored her by naming a prominent peak in the high Sierras, Mount Ina Coolbrith. It is six miles south of where she entered California.

Soon after the legislature named a mountain in her honor, a large number of her friends and admirers formed the society of authors and poets known as "The Ina Coolbrith Circle." This is no church nor family affair. Ina Craig tells me that she and I are the only members of the Smith family who are members of the circle. Except for the three summer months, we meet the last Sunday in each month in solemn conclave in the music room of the great Suto Library in the Civic Center of San Francisco. There we offer our poems, read those of Ina Coolbrith, and talk of her life and work. We always close by reciting in unison a verse of her poem, "Farewell." The closing has all the solemnity of a prayer. I am not acquainted with many of the members, as yet, but I know some of them are successful authors, and they appear to be very well-to-do people of culture and refinement.

Once we invited the Joaquin Miller Circle to meet with us. J. Winter Smith of San Jose, grandson of the Prophet's brother Samuel, is their president. The meeting was very entertaining, as they recounted stories of the Poet of the Sierras, read old letters, and Mr. Smith's daughter recited his poem, "Columbus," in a very lively manner.

Each year we give a banquet at a Berkeley hotel to which we invite the Joaquin Miller Circle, and also The Society of the Poets of the Pacific. They, in turn, invite us to their annual banquets.

Here are three of Ina Coolbrith's short poems:

LIFE'S PURPOSE

Life is not ours to shame nor ours for play,
Not ours in idle ease to dream away;
But ours for whatsoever work God sends,
For faithful service unto noble ends.

Personality in the Home

And Ideas for Making Christmas Gifts

By AILEEN FRANKLIN

IT SEEMS anyone who takes pen in hand these days starts out with the warning to the poor, beset homemaker that there are rising costs in living. We are all too well aware of this sad fact without being reminded, because we are the ones who have to stretch the exchequer all ways. But what, you wonder, can be done about it? By the time all the menus are planned for good nourishing meals, proper clothing selected, et cetera, there is usually nothing left for beautification in the home, which is so much a part of "living" too.

Since—whether we realize it or not—our homes express our personalities, it is important that we be careful what kind of personality we have "showing." Our homes are our showcases, and it is a source of satisfaction to us when friends and family can enjoy a pleasant atmosphere with us.

We all have pieces of old furniture that are too good to throw away, and yet we sigh when we look at them, because they appear outmoded and ugly. They give the room a drab, dingy, place-to-hang-your-hat look. We would like to replace them, but it is out of the question. These are the pieces we are going to discuss, with hints on how to refreshen and modernize them into attractive, conversational pieces.

Some of the most attractive and restful homes I have seen have been made enjoyable by using the very ordinary things at hand combined with a different touch—a new look added by the homemakers themselves. For example, the old rocking chair in the living room—have you tried padding it with an old quilt and slip-covering it? Have you tried covering your lamp shades with the same material, with a ruffle gathered full at the top and bottom, using the pinking sheers instead of hemming?

And the old picture frames—take them down, add a coat of paint to match your walls, then wipe them before the paint is dry with a clean, soft cloth. A mat added of linen crash or calico adds a world of charm to any picture. Since pictures become outmoded, too, it is well to try a new wrinkle now and then. If you have a large gilt frame, you are indeed fortunate, for I have seen these painted white, and wiped so that the gold shows through on the "high" spots, and then a shadow frame added to the back with a lining of velvet or wallpaper, (the shadow-box is really just a shallow box made to fit the frame) and it makes a most attractive place to show a fancy plate, a vase of flowers, or a figurine—in fact, anything you happen to have that you enjoy looking at. You can change them each week, and it will become a source of interest to friends who call. They will all be interested in the "masterpiece of the week." At Christmas time, you can add a large candle, or a wreath of evergreen. You will find many uses for this frame.

FIREPLACES IN SUMMER are usually uninteresting spots to have to sit and look into, so why not fill them with pine branches, or just leaves? I sometimes use potted ivy and other shade-loving plants. At present, I have an old tin pitcher with a bowl filled with baby-breath which has long since dried out, but still has a soft, feathery look to it. It is a large bouquet and completely covers the dark "gap."

If you have a bunch of old burned-down candles, you will have fun making a large fat candle out of them by melting them in an old sauce pan and pouring the liquid into an empty ice-cream carton, using a new candle for the wick in the center. Stick the new candle in the wax as it is beginning to set, so that it will stay in the center. You can color the odds n' ends of your melted candles by putting a stick of Crayola into it and stirring until it is mixed in with the rest. After the wax is set and hard, you can peel off the carton.

IN THE BEDROOM, you can let your fancy go free. Take the commode and chest of drawers to an old Victorian oak set, and place the commode on top of the chest of drawers. Paint the whole thing in a light color to match the color scheme of the room and then cut out roses from chintz, or wallpaper, and glue them to the center of the drawers. This can all be shellacked or varnished over to preserve it, and if you are handy with the brush, you may find it fun to try your hand at a little French scroll up the sides.

I like to line the drawers with either quilted material or wall paper; this gives them a fresh, attractive look. Then, if all goes well with this venture, why not try to re-vamp your dressing table or vanity? These can be completely dismantled by removing the mirror and hanging it by itself. Then the side pieces, which are the drawers, can be used as bedside tables for lamps. These too, can be decorated to match the chest of drawers we mentioned. Gold striping on the legs adds an elegant touch, if the legs happen to be "turned" and have grooves in them.

And the bed need not be passed by either. The old-fashioned bed with the high back and heavy foot can be turned end to head, saw off the heavy headboard and throw it away. Then put a dust ruffle around the sides and end and sew two large day pillows with wide ruffles to match.

If you do not happen to have a vanity or dressing table, a most attractive arrangement can be made by hanging a shelf under a mirror, paint it, and while the paint is still wet, dip an old worn-out curtain with a ruffle edge in the same paint and spread papers underneath the shelf to catch the "dripping." Then, with plenty of pins at hand, drape the curtain across the front and sides of the shelf and pin into the wood wherever you want a drape to fold. Next morning, when all is dried, remove the pins and gather up the papers. This painted lace, as I call it, never needs replacing, and all you have to do to dust, is brush it with a whisk broom. If in time it begins to show soil, just repaint it.

A WASTEBASKET with a lace ruffle at the top can be made by using the lace off the bottom of a worn-out petticoat or any kind of eyelet embroidery or lace you happen to have. Turn the wastebasket upside down onto a piece of waxed paper. Gather the lace with a needle and thread to fit the top of the basket, then dip it into white paint (regular enamel or wall paint). Squeeze the extra paint out of it and smooth it out flat onto the waxed paper. While the basket is upside down, you can also paint the sides and bottom to match, and the next day, when all is dry, turn it right side up and peel off the waxed paper. This makes a very dainty and lovely bedroom wastebasket. You can also cut out roses for the sides and glue them in place. I usually like to paint the inside of the basket a dainty shell pink by mixing a bit of vermilion to the white paint.

If you have several small pictures, they are especially attractive when hung in "nests" or groups. These can all be different but made uniform by painting the frames alike. Never be afraid to be daring—you may discover something after you begin working that is much better than any of these suggestions. I often feel we are all too timid at times. Part of the fun in loving your home and fixing it lies in the imagination you use. I think our husbands enjoy these touches we give to things, and they will certainly be proud to see us use what we have.

Have you ever seen a painted window? This is especially convenient if you have a window that is hard to keep curtained. A front door or a recessed window in a dormer are wonderful places to try your hand. It saves washing and ironing, and all you have to do to wash both curtain and window is wipe with a wet chamois. Wash the window first, and then try your hand at painting a stained-glass window with enamel paint. White is always good, but I have used colored enamels, too. Enamel washes better than other paints. You can copy a lace doily or any pattern cut from a magazine or wallpaper design. Cut it to fit the space and stick it with Scotch tape to the outside of the glass, then with the brush dipped in the enamel, follow the design on the inside of the glass. You will find that this painting on glass discourages people from looking in, and yet you can see out. It also takes away that blank look windows have at night.

I would like to tell you about a most unusual home we fixed for a young GI who was going to school in a strange town where living space was hard to find. The whole place was dingy, dirty, and drab. Expense was an item, too, as was furniture. With little or nothing, this was transformed into a perfectly beautiful home. First of all, we wanted to cover the dirty walls; a cheap water paint was spread in soft green for the living room, soft pink for the bedroom, and blue for the bathroom. We ran out of paint for the second bedroom, so we mixed all the leftover paint into one bucket, and it turned out to be a grayed-down sort of raspberry.

Next came the furnishings—a sorry assortment to begin with. We took the barrel in which their dishes were shipped, placed it in front of the double windows and cut a top from pressed wood. Over this we cut a large circular piece of material made from gunny sacks dyed dark green. This hung all around in deep folds, just touching the floor. Around the bottom of this we sewed a fringe of white. On the dilapidated couch, we lined up six gay pillows, since slipcovers were out of the budget plan. The pillows hid a multitude of sins. Another bad feature was the heating stove which had to be in the living room. Around this we used a screen made from some old shutters we found in the garage. We painted these white and put a copper kettle on top of the stove. For pictures, we hung a "nest" of the bride's wedding plates, using coat hangers for the wire frames at the back. In the garage, we found an old, wooden washtub, the kind that stands up on four legs. This we painted white and put a scallop of green ivy around the top. We thought this would be a clever way for them to serve pop in cracked ice or cold watermelon. The bride says she brought it into the living room during Christmas time and filled it with dark green huckleberry leaves for a spot of color in front of the windows.

Since a desk was needed for study, we bought a very sad one from the secondhand dealer. This was given a good scrubbing and a coat of white paint, which was wiped off after it had "set" for fifteen minutes. The next day we mixed a solution of linseed oil and burnt umber paint very thin and put it over all with a brush, then wiped it off, so that the whole desk had a mellow antique look, yet the grain of the wood showed through. This is also a good finish for knotty pine walls. We used two tin ladles for candle holders on either side of the door in the hall.

A drop-leap dining table at one end of the room presented a problem because someone had used a hot iron and left it to burn into the wood. We could not sand it down enough to hide the blemish, so we decided to cover it all with the flowered drapery material, which we did with much patching from scraps. We tacked it tight, using brass tacks around the edges. Over all we applied several coats of varnish which mellowed it and made it very usable for serving with place mats.

The kitchen was lovely in canary yellow, with hot pads over the stove made from bright red calico. We painted some strawberries on the door, too, glass and all, and hung a large pine rolling pin for a roller towel holder.

This was all accomplished in a very short time, and the results were amazing. New friends were made, who came to see, and they in turn told others, so that the young couple were continually meeting new people in a place where they were at first unknown. Everyone admires and respects you for what you try to overcome. The college professors took an interest from the first.

Our homes express our personality better than we realize. All of which bears out our belief that these things we make and use are conversational pieces, and people seem to enjoy and love us for the things we make and do, more than if we simply went out and bought them.

LETTERS

Thanks for Co-operation

To those persons who participated in a thesis project recently completed at Northwestern University, I wish to express my sincere appreciation. Because of this support and helpfulness, the investigation was possible.

I am especially grateful to those who were helpful in collecting the data either by administering questionnaires or making possible the administration of questionnaires in various groups. Among these are: Charles Graham, John Banks, Corrine Banks, Reed Holmes, Alvin Wadsworth, Marjorie Wadsworth, Joseph Baldwin, Frank Shank, James W. Barton, Calvin C. Sears, George Armeson, Ralph L. Power, Leonard Chesworth, Glaude Smith, Lloyd Lynn, Walter Wirebaugh, Perry Hiles, Fred O. Davies, Paul Fraccascia, David Wiesen, Adah Wiesen, Paul Frisbie, Leslie S. Wight, D. H. Smith, Kenneth D. Lusha, Martha Floro, Lydia Wight, Wilford Winholtz, Eleanor Chandler, L. V. Butterworth, Belle Simmons, Athena Striblen, Lawrence Brockway, and others.

The title of the thesis is Attachment to a Sect; Mobility and Other Influences. Of the five copies, two were left at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, one available in the Deering Library, and the other located in the sociology department. Another copy is available in the Graceland College library. The fourth copy was presented to the First Presidency of the church, and the fifth copy is in my possession.

We all have hidden talents that remain hidden until we are forced to use them. Try a little imagination, and give these "old uglies" a working over. See if you, too, have a hidden talent for making something interesting out of what you have at hand.

Concerning the Indian Question

Here's a message from a noble Indian who has repeatedly asked me to come and preach in the new Community House among the Iowas near Perkins, Oklahoma, where we baptized nearly half a tribe almost thirty years ago. This plea came after being neglected for twenty years, after the work among the Indians had been stopped. He has begged us to come and preach to them; he says, "Our young people don't know this Gospel, but the older generation knows the church is true, and we want them to know it."

In his letter he states: "I received your welcome letter and was more than glad to hear from you, but I am sorry I did not answer any sooner than this. We often think about the good times we have had together in our meetings. The older people have all passed away. My wife and I and Bob Roubideaux are the only ones of the older members of the church left. Pray for us. I must close for now." (Signed—Jacob Dole)

Another message came from our very excellent young brother, Frank Youngeagle, a full-blooded Pawnee, after he showed my brother his Book of Mormon marked all the way through, emphasizing the points he wished to remember. He worked at Bremerton, Washington, and became well acquainted with Brother Lundeen during the war. This fine Indian member attended church and was loved by the Saints; he expresses himself as being very desirous of making a contribution to the building of Zion. He is a young man, full of promise and ability. His father was Chief Frank Youngeagle, Senior, a member of the Rainbow Division in World War I and a man nationally known for his ability as a lecturer. He was baptized by Charles Harp before World War I and has brought over thirty of his tribe into the church. He passed away about two years ago. This excellent family is truly representative of the church.

I thank the Lord that Brother Barney Sharp, an able Cherokee Indian who spoke in the Conference, October 9, was permitted to be with us so our people could see a representative of the Lamanite people of the largest tribe in the United States. He is a district president and a branch president and is very much interested in seeing the work started again in all Indian tribes. We were very pleased, also, to see our Lamanite friends, Brother and Sister John Mervin from the Society Islands.

I labored four years among those people in my first missionary work and learned to love them. I presume that was one reason I loved the Indians so well and was very much interested in establishing the gospel among them.

I wonder how long it will take us to learn the value of the words of Jesus found in Matthew 28:18-20, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." (Also in Mark 16, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.) When will we learn to love all people—a step which is necessary if we ever build Zion?

As we heard the last day of the Conference at 11 a.m., I am very grateful indeed that this Conference has set forth such a practical program to turn the tide of the church from routine to practical steps toward our goals. One of those goals, as set forth in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, is to establish the work among the Lamanites who are to assist in the building of Zion, as the Book of Mormon plainly shows in many places.

Helped by Fasting

Having suffered with rheumatism for thirteen years, last winter I found it necessary to spend part of each day in bed with a heated blanket to relieve the pain. Much of my work went undone, and I was miserable all the time. In March, I was given a book on fasting and diet—the name of which I will send to anyone wishing to read it—and began following the rules of healthful living contained in it. I fasted for three days with good results, but my appetite for rich food led me back to my former eating habits. Gradually my body became poisoned and the rheumatic condition returned. Then I fasted and prayed for five days, after which I followed the diet recommended in the book. I had faith that God would heal me, but I knew that before this could be possible I must follow his law. I was often tempted to forget my diet, but each time I did, I suffered ill health. After fasting another five days in June, it was much easier for me to refuse rich food. I have been constantly on the mend since that time, and now I feel no pain and am able to work with a song in my heart. I could never have arrived at this better way of life without God's help. I have received great blessings from administration, and by keeping the law of wise eating, I am finding renewed health and strength. I pray now that I may be worthy of the blessings that have come to me.

Victim of Polio

Edwin Scott Bevins, twenty-year-old Navy veteran, was stricken with polio on September 20. He was placed immediately in an iron lung, as he is paralyzed from throat to toes. Latest reports show a slight improvement, but he will be hospitalized for many months. Prior to his illness, he was an automobile plant employee and enjoyed perfect health. While in the Navy, he was stationed at Guam.

Edwin is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Bevins, who live at 311 North Avenue, Route 2, Box 342, Mt. Clemens, Michigan. They are in need of sympathetic understanding and encouragement. Letters or cards from members would be appreciated.

Helped by Prayer

I wish to thank all who responded to my request for prayers prior to my recent operation. The doctor was amazed at my quick recovery. Although I experienced much pain, God gave me the fortitude to endure it, and I have received new spiritual strength as a result. Our home has been wonderfully blessed, and I am glad this experience has come to me as it has brought our Heavenly Father much closer to us.

I also want to express my appreciation for the cards, flowers, and visits from the Saints.

What Is a Woman's Place?

WHAT IS the general consensus of opinion among the leaders of the church as to the present and potential place of women in society and in the home? Did the conference at Graceland College dedicated to the task of preparing a better ministry for college students touch upon this matter or offer any concrete advice? What are some general principles upon which a family can work in meeting this problem in a Christian manner?

Is the educated woman to spend great amounts of time, money, and energy in achieving a professional education and then forsake it completely for fifteen to twenty years while rearing a family? Is it possible to anticipate and work toward the achievement of a society in which a woman has an opportunity to work part time? Although Zion is still clothed in mere words, are the principles we advocate in opposition to a society in which husband and wife share household duties, child-rearing, and the earning of income? Or is our philosophy dedicated to the principle that the wife and mother belong only in the home?

ANSWER: By Dr. Roy Cheville

ANYONE WHO TACKLES this question has plenty of company. No one has any answer—yet. Every contemporary textbook on the family is aware of the problem. Students of the times see the following requisites. First, there must be a fair, honest statement of the question.

Second, there must be a clear phrasing of the values we want to realize. Third, we must pool our resources in achieving the kind of social order that will enable the realization of these ideals. This is simply a matter of deciding what kind of family we want and what woman's place is to be. Let's admit that we have not done too good a job at attacking the question. I can name ever so many capable young women who have been disappointed or even disgusted at replies given them when they have asked what they might do to contribute to the work of the church. The most annoying reply has been, "Marry a missionary." Such a reply is unsatisfactory unless we allot several wives to one of the few missionary appointees we have. Then, too, it tends to place the woman in a secondary role. Most annoying of all is the common smirky smile that accompanies the answer, making the honest inquiry a joke. Our girls are worthy of a better answer.

We shall do well to note that this is not a concern of Latter Day Saints only. "Career or children?" is a problem confronting many a capable girl. Russia is about the only country that has made frank experiments. She releases women from occupational labor to give birth to children, provides maternity assistance, and permits them to return to their work. Our youth need to study this complex social situation and work through to a program of action. We need clear thinking, not kickers.

The June conference on ministry to college students expressed an awareness of this problem, but in the restricted time, did not get around to it. The question remains on the agenda.

A FEW YEARS AGO, I wrote a doctor's dissertation out of ten or more years of research on the educational work of our church. I listed, among the persistent problems, this one: "Ambiguity in the role of women." Investigation revealed two strands of thinking: the patriarchal, with its secondary position of women, and equal status. We do not appear too clear on the matter.

Here are some possibilities for us to work on:

1. The interpretation of household administration and family management as a profession. It is no fill-in for those who cannot do anything else.

2. Inclusion of professional services of women in the roster of church workers. Social service administrators, educators, and physicians can be on the recognized list.

3. Organization of the Zion community to permit women of training and competence to function in areas of their specialization. Group laundries, nurseries, canneries, etc., can release time of mothers who can contribute more effectively in another field. Besides, we need not expect all women to be experts in every phase of family administration.

4. Research concerning the place of the specifically trained women in the life of the church. Such a study would concern the administration officers, the women's department, and the youth group. Especially should the college group be interested. We could profit from conferences on this matter.

5. Study in democratic home management. Such a study would consider the how's of operating the equalitarian home.

Thanks for raising the question. It is vital. My answer is really a call to mobilize our church to work it on a many-sided front. Our church can make a contribution to society in working this through. Let's do it.

I Recognize My Stewardship

By complying with the three parts of the Financial Law

THE ZION'S LEAGUE launches into its world-wide project for the inter-conference period. What better starter could it place before itself than to fulfill a central part of the church law?

EVERY ZION'S LEAGUE SHOULD ENCOURAGE EACH MEMBER TO:

1. File a Tithing Statement, either the first or the annual statement;
2. Keep a Record Book;
3. Pay His Tithes and Offerings Consistently.

HERE'S WHAT'S EXPECTED:

A. Quotas. Every League should set its own quota. "We're going to work to see that sixty per cent (for example) of our Leaguers will comply with these three parts of the law." Set this quota as soon as possible. If you haven't done it by the time you get this, do so promptly.

B. Promotion. Use every technique you can for promotion.

1. Know the Procedure. Invite in the branch solicitor and have a list of questions to present to him in an interview. Then let the Leaguers ask questions. Be sure you understand the law.

2. Have a Worship Service. Present the scriptural foundation for the church's belief.

3. Help Advertise the sermon to be presented by the pastor or solicitor which pushes the financial program. Make a poster to hang on the wall. Urge the Leaguers to hear this sermon.

4. Buy Record Books. At your worship service, present each Leaguer with one, or have them for sale afterwards. You might follow a short worship service with your instruction period. Have the solicitor present to explain all about filling out the book and the tithing statements at a time when each one in attendance has an inventory blank and record book in his hand to look at.

5. Make Posters urging all members to comply with the three parts of the financial law.

- a. On one of them, put a chart showing the members of the League. As each member reports to your League secretary that he has started on each of the three activities, or in the case of the tithing statement has handed it in to the solicitor, note it on the chart.

- b. Or you can have three little thermometers marked off in the number of spaces that you have League members. As a Leaguer reports to the secretary, the secretary will fill in the space. See how the thermometers rise. Label them: "Filed tithing statement," "Keeping record book," "Paying tithes."

6. Annual Statement Party. Have a party and have every Leaguer bring his bookkeeping equipment, receipts, and everything necessary to fill out his annual statement. Spread out on the floor or around tables. Have one or two qualified people there to help answer questions that arise. Everybody will enjoy filling out his statement when the whole group does it together. Have refreshments afterward.

(NOTE: The actual tithing statements, when completely filled out, should be handed to the branch solicitor, who will in turn present them to the bishop's agent. When necessary, local records are made, the statements are then sent to the General Church offices in Independence for permanent filing.)

C. Envelopes. The best way to pay tithes and offerings in a systematic manner is to use the envelope system. Most branches have this system. All Leaguers are encouraged to co-operate in this manner.

D. Provide a Time in each meeting to care for the business of checking and to answer any questions that come up.

E. Reports. On or before February 14, the secretary of the local League should mail to the district young people's supervisor, the results of the project. He should tabulate all local reports and, in turn, mail his report to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, by February 28,

By THE ZION'S LEAGUE COUNCIL

1949. Include in this report: (1) the number of active church members in the League, (2) the number of church members who complied with the three different parts of the law (check each part separately), (3) details of any unusual promotion techniques.

REMEMBER, this is the first of the six projects that the League will work on in the inter-conference period. Every League in the church should participate. Stewardship is a law of the church. This project lasts from December 1, 1948, until January 31, 1949.

When reports are in, they will be tabulated and a report will be published by districts in the Herald. To keep the name of your district in the clear, your Zion's League should take part in this six-point project. Otherwise your district average will be lowered.

Use Zion's League Annual No. II, and The Handbook of the Financial Law for source material. These are obtainable from your local book steward or from the Herald House, 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri.

NOTE: If you are the pastor or the supervisor, please pass on this information to your Zion's League president or supervisor. Every branch should participate in this project.

The Overflow

*In every cup of happiness
Life pours some bitter brew,
That mellows unremembered there
When laughter trickles through.
The cup that's filled beyond the brim
Must ever overflow,
The blending is the essence of
The happiness we know!*

NIGHTFALL AT THE GOLDEN GATE

A rose that purples on the sunset hills
And skies of golden fire.
Silence that like a benediction fills
The hour save where the lyre
Of ocean throbs in strains that fall and rise
Against the harbor bar;
Then dusk and on the brow of Tamalpais
Trembles a single star.

ACROSS THE CHASM

To feel your arms around me,
To see your living face,
Of all within God's giving
This were supremest grace.
To be again together
As in long years ago,
'Twere all, 'twere all of heaven
My soul would ask to know.

Hail and farewell to you, most noble cousin; I sincerely hope that your great soul is now rejoicing with the spirits of those loved ones gone before.

And now, though I know many books have been dedicated to you, and more than a hundred more worthy poems, I will venture to offer at your shrine a verse from a poem written lately by me in an attempt to prove to the talented and cultured members of the Ina Coolbrith Circle that I was qualified for admission to their exclusive club. It is supposed to describe a sunset at your beloved Golden Gate.

While I watch and wait at the Golden Gate

The sun in red glory wanes;
And the western haze is all ablaze
With orange and crimson flames,
And oft I wonder as there I ponder
If it ever should be my fate
To enter the Pearly Gate,

How the glory I'll see on those heavenly towers

Will compare with the beauty reflected from ours

At the gate of our Golden State.

"Stories of Our Hymns" Needed in Holland Mission

Latter Day Saint hymns are now being translated into Dutch in the Holland Mission.
Since these hymns are entirely new to the Dutch members, Seventy Albert Scherer, president of the Holland Mission, would like to have a copy of Carlyle F. Kueffer's Stories of Our Hymns to use in acquainting the people with the translated hymnal. Anyone who has this book is requested to contact Brother Scherer at Annastraat 2, Rotterdam, Holland.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Gladys Hoss, 1211 South 40th, Kansas City, Kansas, asks for continued prayers that she may regain her health and be able to serve in the church. She expresses her appreciation for the prayers offered for her in the past, and for the help she has received through administration.

ENGAGEMENT

Briggs-Platz

Dr. and Mrs. G. A. Platz of Lamoni, Iowa, announce the engagement of their daughter,
Mary Louise, to Thurl H. Briggs of Bassett, Nebraska. No definite date has been set for the wedding.

WEDDINGS

Taylor-Butler

Evalyn LaVerne Butler of Independence, Missouri, daughter of Elder and Mrs. E. O. Butler and Joseph Clifford Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Taylor of Kansas City, Missouri, were married at Stone Church in Independence on October 12. Elder Evan A. Fry performed the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Hammond, Indiana, where Mr. Taylor is employed.

Allen-Coop

Melva Jeannette Coop, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orion V. Coop of Estacada, Oregon, and Leo Lynn Allen, son of Mrs. Alice Allen of Independence, Missouri, were married on October 12 at the Stone Church in Independence. Elder Wilfred E. Wakeman performed the double-ring ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are making their home in Independence.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Barbara Jane, was born on September 20 to Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth O.
Campbell of Webster Groves, Missouri. She will be blessed on November 28 at Stone
Church in Independence by Elders Shankland Armon and John Robinson. Mrs. Campbell is the former Jane L. Isaacks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John O. Isaacks of Independence.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Zamastil of Madison,
Wisconsin, announce the birth of a son, Raymond Belmont, born October 23 at St. Mary's Hospital. Mrs. Zamastil is the former Doral Griswoid of Madison.

DEATHS

HOLMES.—Ora Viola, was born at Boston,
Massachusetts, on February 14, 1866, and died suddenly on September 20, 1948, at her home in Onset, Massachusetts, where she had lived alone in recent years. An intelligent woman of charm and versatile gifts, she held various offices in the church school and Religio in the old Massachusetts District. Besides teaching, she directed the Providence, Rhode Island, choir, and could always be found at reunions and district gatherings. She leaves no immediate survivors.

Funeral services were held at the Cornwell Chapel in Wareham, Elder Calvin C. Sears officiating. Burial was at Pawtucket, Rhode Island.

MASON.—Mrs. L. O., daughter of the late John T. and Elizabeth Williams, died at her home in Bevier, Missouri, on November 6, 1948, following an illness of four months.
Born in Canton, Illinois, she moved with her parents to Bevier as a child. On August 23, 1904, she was married to Dr. L. O. Mason, who preceded her in death several years ago.
Early in life, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church, remaining ever loyal to her covenant and church duties. She was also a member of the Order of Eastern Star, Chapter 289, of Bevier, and the Rebecca Lodge.

Funeral services were conducted on November 9 at the H. G. Edwards Chapel, Ivor Sur-ridge and F. T. Mussels officiating. Burial was in the East Oakwood Cemetery in Bevier.

IVIE.—Grace Adeline, daughter of John W. and Grace McDonald Crawford, was born September 24, 1883, at Savanna, Illinois, and died at her home in Davis City, Iowa, on September 26, 1948. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1899. In 1901, she moved with her family to Emerson, Iowa, where in 1903 she was married to Lawrence E. Ivie; two sons were born to them. After living in a number of communities, they moved to a farm near Lamoni, Iowa, in 1922, and later to Davis City. Mrs. Ivie was a devoted wife and mother and a faithful worker in the church.

She is survived by her husband; two sons:
Forrest S. of San Diego, California, and Loyal
L. of Los Angeles, California; a sister, Mary Crawford of Emerson; four brothers: Gardner of Creston, Iowa; Earl of Emerson; Frank and John of Spokane, Washington; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Davis City, Elders
John Lane and Roy McDonald officiating.
Burial was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

NEEDHAM.—Robert James, died at his home in Toronto, Ontario, on October 25, 1948, at the age of sixty-six. A native of London, Ontario, and a graduate of McGill University, he became an employee of the old Grand Trunk Railway in 1909; two years later, he was appointed electrical engineer for the Grand Trunk System at Montreal, where he subsequently served in various capacities until 1923, when he was appointed regional mechanical and electrical engineer of the Canadian National Railway, with headquarters at Toronto. After his retirement from the railway, he served as consulting engineer of the Canadian Celanese Limited, Drummond-ville, Quebec. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the Electrical Club, the Canadian Club, the Noon Day Bible Club, International Alumni, Toronto Railway Club, and the Electrical Section, Association of American Railroads.

He is survived by his wife, Blanche Allen Needham; a daughter, Mrs. Orville Marshall of London; a son, Robert James Needham,
III, of Montreal; a sister, Bertha of Oceanside, California; and three brothers: John T.
of Jacksonville, Florida; C. F. of Toronto; and W. W. of London. Services were held at the Turner and Porter Funeral Home. Interment was in Park Lawn Cemetery.

BRIEFS

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—Susan Thies and Karen McConnell were baptized on Sunday, October 31. Elder Marion Blakely, Arizona state co-ordinator, was the Graceland Day speaker; at the close of his sermon, an offering of $43.59 was taken for the college. Missionary and Mrs. Howard F. Miller, assigned to the Hawaiian Islands, visited the Phoenix Branch on October 17. Elder Miller, formerly pastor of the Phoenix congregation, commented in his sermon on the growth of the group in recent years. An efficient corps of department leaders has been elected for the coming year to serve under the leadership of Pastor Wilbert W. Wood. The Woods were feted with a food shower at a Halloween party held in the church annex on October 28.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA. — The women's department held a business meeting on October 22, at the home of Irene Gosling, who was sustained as president and teacher of the organization. At the close of the election, talks were given by two of the members who had attended General Conference.

Congratulations of the branch go to Hazel and George Craig who were married on October 16.

At the evening service on October 31, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reg Gosling was blessed by Pastor W. Brown.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA.—A total of twenty-three converts has been baptized since the beginning of the year. This is accreditable largely to the work of Seventy George Njeim and Elders A. O. Corley, H. O. Sacry, and Guy Smith.

A large house adjoining the church property has been purchased and converted into classrooms for the children; the kitchen and larger rooms are also used by the women's department. A four-car garage at the back of the lot has been remodeled and made into a recreation hall; junior church is also held in this building.

Under the leadership of Pastor J. P. Davis, a men's club was organized last year; membership now totals fifty-two, fifteen of whom are nonmembers. Five men have been baptized since their association with the club. Early in the year, the men gave a banquet which netted nearly $200. The money was used to help pay for the newly purchased property. The women set a goal of $1,000 for the year and have already raised $1,825.

On Labor Day, a large group of men and women met at the church to paint the floor of the main auditorium and make other improvements on the building and grounds.

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.—At the request of District President Frank Fry, a business meeting was held early in September. Elder Franklin Schofield was elected pastor, and all other officers were sustained. A vote of thanks was given Elder David A. Oakman for his ministry as pastor during the last three years. Recommendations for the ordination of A. H. Wicks and Roy Oakman to the office of priest and Philip Maloney to the office of deacon were approved.

David Tucker, son of Elder and Sister T. H. E. Tucker, was baptized on Children's Day. The church school presented a pageant depicting the countries to which the Restored Gospel has been taken as another Children's Day feature.

Brother and Sister A. J. Lawrence celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on August 25. Brother Lawrence has been a member of the church for fifty-two years, and Sister Lawrence for sixty.

Harvest thanksgiving services were held on Sunday, September 19. A sum of $35.50 was raised from the sale of harvest gifts the following day. Elder and Sister John W. Foster, former members of Enfield Branch, were September visitors.

The annual bazaar, held on October 30, brought a profit of $308 ($40 more than last year). Apostle Blair Jensen and family were welcomed by the branch on this same day.

Nostalgia

I sit in other churches,
Listening to a fine display of words
Set in a frame of music, only mouthed.

I see a meeting place prepared
To so delight the eye of man
That his own soul be dazzled
And be mute.

And then I long again for aisles
In friendly little meeting halls,
In common churches, clamoring not
For admiration,
Offering freely quiet fellowship
To Saints of many stations
And like hearts.

I long for music sung by consecrated souls who love to sing
For Him.

I long for words from workingman
Turned Sunday preacher,
For he lays a feast before my soul,
And nothing but the truth
Is in this hour.

AUDITORIUM NEWS

THE LEWIS FAMILY. It was a happy occasion when Alice June Lewis was able to attend the Englewood Church on Sunday, November 21, for the Thanksgiving service. She was on crutches, still making recovery from her injuries, and very brave. She is staying at the home of Brother and Sister James Stobaugh. Gregory is attending school and staying at the home of Brother and Sister Frank Ebeling, relatives of his mother. Sister Ebeling was Josephine Smith. Asked how Gregory was, Sister Ebeling laughed, "You'd better ask how I am. We've never had a boy in our home, and he is certainly lively. Doing well at school, too." Judith is still recovering, making her home with church people, the Bernard Wilsons. Sister Edith Lewis remains in the hospital, and, so far as her strength permits, is glad to receive visitors.

APOSTLE DAVEY IN AUSTRALIA. A cable received by the First Presidency brings the information that Apostle Roscoe E. Davey, his wife, and daughter arrived at Sydney, Australia, on Tuesday, November 23. The cable was dated 12:05 a.m., and since the Australian day begins before ours does, it was received here the same day.

PRESIDENT F. HENRY EDWARDS will be away from headquarters for a short time before the winter holidays. In company with Apostles E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and Charles R. Hield, he will direct the organization of the metropolitan district of Los Angeles, and also the organization of the Burbank Mission into a branch. Other work in the west will occupy remaining time, and then he will return home.

APOSTLE D. BLAIR JENSEN, in charge of the European Mission, can be reached by mail at the Mission headquarters, 170 Gravelly Hill, Erdington, Birmingham, England.

EVANGELIST RICHARD JONES, of Chatham, Ontario, was stricken by a heart attack on Saturday, November 20, while at a wedding, and died instantly. He had formerly served the Chatham Branch as pastor for a number of years. His son, Richard, is pastor now at Oklahoma City. Brother Jones has given a fine and faithful ministry to the church and its people.

A NEW PRINTING of the Doctrine and Covenants, including all the latest sections and index brought up to date, is planned by the Herald Publishing House. On other occasions, our readers have given fine assistance in locating errors. This help will be appreciated now. We suggest that our friends write soon to make the deadline.—The Editors.

* PEOPLE sometimes become discouraged, lose faith in themselves, and decide that it is no use for them to try. They think that fate is against them.

This is a costly error. Every person is what he is because of his philosophy of life. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Change your philosophy, and you will change your life. The effects will be slow and gradual at first, but they will steadily grow. The idea that "you can't change human nature" is only true in part, for human nature is one of the most adaptable and adjustable things in the world. We can all be changed for the better. But we must begin with the heart and mind.

Remember Jesus

Already before Thanksgiving Day, the store windows were filled with Christmas goods, in anticipation of a bountiful harvest of money this season. The loudspeakers are now blasting out Christmas carols in the tones of a boiler factory. "O Little Town of Bethlehem" roars like Times Square in New York, and Franz Gruber's gentle melody, "Silent Night," is played in deafening tones.

So far as commerce is concerned, Santa Claus has won a complete monopoly of Christmas. Christ, whose birthday it is, appears not at all, except in the quiet windows of religious bookshops.

If the beautiful story of the birth of Jesus is to be preserved, if it is to mean something in the lives of our children, the churches and the homes will need to do something about it. In too many cases, Santa Claus has been given precedence there, too, and Jesus is forgotten. There is room for both, and adequate honor to each, if we manage it well. Certainly, no sensible person would wish to deprive little children of the pretty Christmas tree, and all the legends and customs that surround it. It is a right of childhood to have this happiness.

But it is also a right of childhood to know the story of the Christ child given in the Gospels, and its significance to the world, which even little children can understand in some degree.

In every church and home, the story of the birth of Jesus can have a prominent and beautiful place. It is not too hard to obtain a creche or Nativity scene and set it up in some prominent place in the home. New figures or improvements in decoration can be added every year, and children will eagerly participate if given an opportunity. And the scene will serve as an effective visual aid while parents tell the story.

This Christmas holiday season, let us remember to celebrate the birthday of Jesus. If we do, both parents and children will find increased happiness, beauty, and significance in life.

Missions Abroad

Our concepts of missionary work in other lands are probably due to undergo some changes. At the beginning of the Restoration Movement, our missionaries went principally to the people of the more advanced civilizations, where economic and cultural life was already established on a high plane, and it was only necessary to "preach the gospel" in order to win converts who were fitted to participate in the church life. We met native peoples in various islands of the seas, dealing principally with spiritual and ethical development.

Missionaries in Europe today cannot avoid having to face the problems of serious economic need among the people they are seeking to convert and help.

When we turn our attention to the countries south of us, and to the serving of native peoples in unprogressive countries, we must be aware of their need of medical service and education as well as religious instruction. Other church missionary organizations have faced this situation for years, and have sent many medical missionaries and teachers abroad to enter this service.

In the future, it is quite certain that any missionaries who are sent to countries south of us or to the Pacific islands or to the Orient, will be equipped to do a better work if they can teach or give medical service so much needed by the people. Missionaries in many countries are confronted every day by problems that relate to basic education and medical needs.

A United World

Dr. George P. Howard, evangelist and missionary, recently said to a Baptist convention in Kansas City: "There are spiritual and cultural barriers which separate the people of the world. A spiritual foundation is a necessary prelude to economic pacts, military agreements, or political treaties. You can't have a world fellowship without enlightened consciences. There is no short cut to world harmony."

The work of the church, then, appears to be more important than some nonchurch people have imagined it to be. There is something to be done for the minds and spirits, the attitudes and principles of people which no agency but the church can do. How important it is, in this age of crisis, when everything that can be done must be done to keep our world from destroying itself, that everybody do all possible. We cannot save ourselves unless we are willing first to turn to the saving of others.

Liquor

The liquor problem is one that we cannot escape. If it is prohibited, there are enough law-breakers to require a large and costly organization to keep it under control. If the sale of liquor is permitted, its social and economic costs are always greater than any amount of taxes that can be derived from it, regardless of how high the rates may be.

The people of Kansas recently decided to repeal their liquor laws. Kansas has always been a fine state, with splendid citizens. The people there may regret, before long, that they have chosen to venture into liquor tolerance, which has brought so much trouble and expense to other states.

Across the Desk

Elder Almer W. Sheehy has been transferred from London, Ontario, to Boston, Massachusetts. This has required him to sever his connection with the Service Club of the Y. M. C. A. in London. Note was taken of Brother Sheehy's leaving at a recent meeting of the club, and the following letter was handed to Brother Sheehy at that time:

Tonight we have a paradoxical situation in our Club. Your fellow members are filled with a gladness and a sadness at one and the same time.

The news of your leaving the city has come as a shock to many of us, but we are filled with a gladness because your superior officers have recognized your ability in your chosen vocation and have seen fit to give you a promotion. The sincere wish of each and every one of us is that you may find happiness and contentment in your endeavors. As to the success of your work—we have not a doubt as to that.

At the same time we are filled with a sadness because your promotion means a severance of your connection with our Club. Your membership with us has been an inspiration to us all. Especially will you be missed in connection with our jail service project. It has been said that no man is so great that another can't take his place, but we doubt if we will ever be able to find a man who can take your place in this project.

It is a pleasure for me tonight to have been chosen by our Club members to present to you, on their behalf, a small token to show the esteem in which you are held by the London Y's Men. We ask you to accept this little gift, not for its intrinsic value, but as a symbol of the friendship which we have enjoyed together during the past few years. We trust that in the years to come it will remind you of the good times spent in this room where you and the rest of us have pledged ourselves "To acknowledge the Duty that Accompanies Every Right."

OFFICIAL

Kansas

Due to a change in the General Conference appointment of Elder D. J. Williams to another field of labor, it is necessary to fill the vacancy thus caused in the presidency of the Southwestern Kansas District. To succeed Brother Williams, Elder J. C. Shannon has been appointed to complete the unexpired term of district president, subject to the approval of the next conference of the new Kansas District.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards.

The Kansas District

To facilitate administrative and evangelistic work in the State of Kansas, the Joint Council has acted to amalgamate the present Northwestern Kansas and the Southwestern Kansas Districts. The newly constituted district is to be designated as the Kansas District, the amalgamation dating from January 1, 1949. It is to be understood that the present officers of the Southwestern Kansas District will be the officers of the new Kansas District from January 1 until the date of the first district conference, at which time officers for the Kansas District will be elected.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards.

Notice Gregg Writers

We have received a letter from Sister Esther Brockway which should be of interest to all of our members who use the Gregg system of shorthand writing. Sister Brockway writes as follows:

November 5, 1948

President I. A. Smith
The Auditorium
Independence, Missouri
Dear President Smith:

Recently Verda Bryant asked me to teach her shorthand. In the course of our study, she suggested that we compile a shorthand dictionary for church stenographers, since there are many words and phrases used in sermons and prayers that a stenographer in a business office does not use.

We compiled a list of approximately 700 words and phrases we accumulated from sermons and patriarchal blessings we reported. We felt that many of the words as they are written in the Gregg dictionary are too long and complicated for our purpose. For example, the Gregg dictionary spells out "steward" and "stewardship," but we use "st." The conventional method of spelling "Jesus" and "Christ" is "jess" and "kris," whereas we spell them "j" and "kr." Thus in phrasing "Jesus Christ our Lord," we write "jkrlr." We have intentionally kept our dictionary short so as not to discourage busy people from studying, although we have attempted to make it long enough to prove adequate. We have made a list of the books of the Bible and some of the more important proper names in the Book of Mormon. We are also including some study helps and practice material.

It can be truly said of stenographers: "He who hesitates is lost." "Doodling" in mid-air while hesitating over an unfamiliar word is ruinous to speed. Patriarch J. F. Curtis told me during Conference that good stenographers are as scarce as diamonds. I have learned in my own experience of reporting blessings that the average patriarch dictates between 100 and 120 words per minute, so that speed is not so essential as an adequate vocabulary. (The average preacher is considerably faster than that.)

We would like to find out if there are enough stenographers who are interested to make it worth-while to reproduce our booklet. Hence Mrs. Bryant and I would like to receive a card or letter from stenographers who are interested in learning to improve their speed and accuracy so that they can take blessings and other prayers.

The price of our booklet will not exceed 25c, to cover the cost of material. We do not propose to add labor costs or any profit. We would like to know how much practice material appropriate to reporting blessings we should include, and would appreciate suggestions from people who are interested.

Since the Gregg characters are copyrighted, we have secured the permission of Gregg Publishing Company to reproduce our booklet by Ditto or mimeograph, whichever proves to be more practical.

We humbly suggest that people who want sermons reported with word-for-word accuracy select better stenographers than we are, or use a wire recorder, for we have not attained that degree of efficiency yet, but we have found by experience that increasing one's vocabulary will certainly assist in taking adequate notes on sermons.

Sincerely,
ESTHER BROCKWAY,

THE WORTH FAMILY RETURNS TO ENGLAND

Left to right: Betty, James, Tom, and Richard. Brother and Sister Worth and their young son, James, came to the United States in April, 1946, to attend General Conference and give a period of service in missionary work. They endeared themselves to church people and friends here. Baby Richard arrived during their stay. They left Independence Friday, November 12, to sail from New York on November 24. In departing they wish to express thanks and appreciation to their many friends on this side of the water. Our best wishes go with them for their happiness in returning home.

God Works in Us By Thomas Worth

Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed, and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit, to another faith, by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. —I Corinthians 12: 1-14.

ONE OF THE GREAT MIRACLES OF the Christian faith is that which permits us all in the sight of God to be equal, and yet to be one. There is but one body of the Church of Christ, and we form a part of that great Christian body. But still we are ourselves, distinct personalities; we are all different from each other. We have our own right of choice; we can do this or that in any given or particular way, and yet each of us in the sight of God is equal to others, and God accepts us into his church, into fellowship, into the secrets of his own way, as equals of his other children. It is right that we should see that none of us can claim any particular favor over anybody else. In his sight, we are equal, and he accepts us on those terms. He has never overlooked man's sinfulness. He knows we are sinners, and he accepts us as such. He sees us as we are; there is nothing hidden from him, and, so to speak, we are an open book before him. And yet despite our shortcomings, and sinning, he is still willing to accept us into divine fellowship. We find ourselves here this morning not compelled to be a church, but impelled to be here because of the promptings of his Spirit within us.

Elsewhere in the world there are great congregations of people who meet Sunday after Sunday, year in and year out, who apparently seem to be developing and progressing equally as well as we are; and yet we say they are not the church of the living God, but that we are the church—at least a part of it. Some members have imagined that, because of the authority of the church, its people have some claim to advantage over others. If I understand the Scriptures rightly, and the cause of the Christian church, I am convinced that one of the greatest things it can give to any of its believers is a new perspective and point of view in life. If anything at all has happened in us since our becoming members of the body of Christ and of his church, we are changed from what we were because our sights are different. We are looking for different things, and we are looking at things differently from what we did before.

When Jesus came to this earth, he came as a man; and yet he was the very embodiment of God himself, the incarnate Son of God. He came and revealed to us a new level of humanity—a new idea of what man could be and could become. Though he was the very Son of God, he went through the human experience in order to know for himself all the trials, pains, and sorrows of his people, to judge them mercifully and righteously.

Some people have argued that Jesus had a better chance in life than we do, that he was more favored than we are. I say he does have and did have an infinitely better chance in life than those who know not God and profess not his name. But the baptized believer has the highest of all privileges—the opportunity for salvation and eternal life. As Jesus came to this earth, born of a woman and of God in heaven, conceived by the Holy Ghost, the life was brought forth in Mary and she conceived and bore a son; by that process, he came to be the person he was. He grew up as a child, his life was unfolded before us on this earth and men could see him. We are born of man and of woman, but in order that we might find our place with God as Jesus did, in divine providence it has been arranged for us that the Holy Ghost might come into our experience somewhere along the line and permit us to become newborn creatures, by the same power which brought Jesus into this life.

Whatever he had of power from the Father is now permitted to men—that is to those who follow and are baptized believers, those who go through the waters of regeneration, whose hearts and souls and bodies have been washed clean and anew in the regenerating power of the very God himself. “As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name”—John 1: 12. He came into a world of problems and difficulty; he lived in it and beyond it and above it. He calls us to do exactly that same thing, but he knows we can never do it unless we are born again; not only of water but of the spirit. And there is vouchsafed to us, the Christian church, the very power of the Holy Ghost. He gave us a revelation of God and interpreted for us the very mind and will of God. Now since he has called us into fellowship—the same fellowship with him as exists between him and God—he has given us the responsibility of showing the world the same kind of revelation he gave, that mankind should not be lost nor driven to destruction. To the Christian church no less an obligation is given, no less a responsibility, than that we give to the world a revelation of God, and that we interpret for the world the very mind and will of God as it pertains to life and godliness. No other people but those of the Christian church have been charged with that responsibility. The Christian church is comprised of people who are reborn by the power of the Holy Ghost, and no baptism is complete until we have received the seal of the Holy Ghost upon us, whether it comes instantaneously upon our baptism or whether it comes in the course of the years that follow. Upon the Christian church rests a great responsibility.

JESUS CHRIST is the light of the world, the center and light of all existence. And he has called us to share with him his labor by becoming the light of the world. He said, “Ye are the salt of the earth. . . . The light of the world.” The profession of our faith is one thing and the living of it in daily experience is sometimes another. But these two can be brought together so they really help us to become the kind of people we should be.

We are indeed a part of the body of Christ, and wherever he exists, he must exist in us. Wherever he exists, he exists that the world might be persuaded to want him. There has ever been only one Christ. There never will be another. So his body which represents his very life, is one body and is not composed of many different elements believing different things. It is a body which is obligated to give to the world the very revelation of God as it is in Christ, and we cannot give that revelation until we ourselves have it.

Despite all the beauties of nature, the wonders of the universe; despite all the majesty of the heavens, the sky, the sun, the moon, and the stars; despite the majesty of all exterior existence, these things can never prove to us that God really does exist and is interested in your life and in mine. They do tell us, of course, if we are that much attuned, that he is interested in the universe as he is interested in all that exists. We need deliverance not from circumstances, but from ourselves.

Although we might prove conclusively to our own satisfaction that God exists in the universe, we can't give the proof to anyone else. You could be a staunch Latter Day Saint, and take an atheist with you up on the most beautiful and highest and finest mountain you could find, surrounded by the most beautiful scenery, and you could say, “Now, my atheist friend, you look out over this great panorama. Isn't it marvelous? Doesn't it prove to you that there must be a divine existence? Doesn't it prove to you there is a God behind all these exterior existences of the universe?” And he'll turn around and say, “No, it doesn't.” It doesn't tell him a thing about God. He sees it as something which exists. He doesn't know how or perhaps for what reason, but you can't persuade him that God is in it, nor that God exists in those things.

It is probably true to say that we can never know the love of God until we ourselves are loving, and equally so it is true to say that we can never know for sure that God exists in the universe until he exists in us. When God is made manifest in me, then I can know for sure he exists in you. And not until I am sure he exists in me can I call you my brother or my sister because

I'm not sure he exists in you.

That is the basis of the Christian church—the brotherhood of man under the Fatherhood of God, called to do a specific work—called and chosen and selected to call the world to repentance. Not just the few whom we label “the church” must be called to repentance constantly and continually; we must call the world to repentance.

IF GOD DWELLS IN US, we are his people. But not until and unless he dwells in us and we realize that in us he is made manifest, can we at all claim or attempt to claim that we are his chosen people. I would like to apply that same principle in the corporate sense. We have seen it, I think, in the personal sense. The work of God in the world obviously is a theocratic democracy. We have already seen that we are all equal in his sight, and so all of us working together have equal rights in whatever is done. We call that common consent. The work and will of God are carried on by his stewards, the men who have chosen him and elected to serve him. In these ways which are before us in the world, we have found this way to be the best. We say now these things are good in the world, it is the best we know, but they are only a part of the great providence of God for in the which mankind can learn to govern himself under God. And though we have proved that this way of life is the best we know, yet it is no guarantee that it is the best way of life for mankind.

We are not living for death. We are living for life. We are living into the future and into eternity. One of your great leaders, Abraham Lincoln, said, “The work that we are doing today is not for today alone, but for a vast and mighty future.” And we might well say that about the church.

I was talking with somebody recently on the matter of our relationship with people in the world and he said, “Are we to believe that, unless a person accepts Christ in this life and becomes baptized into the church, he is cast out and damned forever?” And of course I said, “No such thing.” Somewhere along the line every one of us will have an opportunity to accept or to reject; then we shall see this thing clearly, and I'm sure that all men of good will will accept it. But there are some schools of thought which suppose that unless we go this way or that, we are just cast out once and for all and forever with no hope of redemption. If I understand God rightly, I believe he will never give up his work of redemption for mankind so long as he sees a chance of our being persuaded to follow him.

It is for us that his Son came. It was for mankind that he came and gave himself a very revelation of God. If this church is to show itself in this day as being the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, it will show itself not merely by the preached word from the rostrum, not merely by our ability in being able to visit the families of the church; it will prove itself by the characters it produces in the lives of those who profess its word. That is the final proof. There is no other. So although we are proud of the past history of the church, we should be more proud of the fact that now God has called us and given us an opportunity by which in this day we might prove ourselves to be his church. We need a faith that is backed up by works. Faith without works is dead. And many people have faith, without works—a certain sense of blind belief that God exists. But a faith that is backed up by a life which is lived daily in the fear and admonition of the Lord is the power that can finally prove us to be the heirs of salvation. So, all the works of the church are by one power and one spirit, the power and Spirit of God which has called us into relationship with him; and if the church needs anything today, it needs a new sense of this relationship.

I am not sure we really think of each other as brothers and sisters in the true sense. I'm not sure we would do for one another what we ought to do if really we were brothers and sisters. I am not sure our reactions are really Christian all the time. But though we may yet be a long way from our elected goal, the hope of the Christian church remains.

The hope of redemption is the Redeemer, and Jesus Christ still works with all those who will turn to him, forsake their ways, and come to him. In Doctrine and Covenants, 58:9, we read: “By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins, behold he will confess and forsake them.” It is one thing to confess our faults, but it is another thing to forsake them. A confession of our faults is good, but it is much better to forsake them, even if we don't confess them. But by this simple process we may know that a man repents of his sins—“behold he will confess his sins.” That is, he will confess his guilt to those against whom he has sinned, and then he will forsake his way and turn to God. That is repentance.

The church today needs the great resurging influence of the power of God. We are not waiting for God to move in the church today. He is waiting for us. May I quote a part of the prophecy from the President of our church given at the last General Conference? He said this, and he reiterated it several times. He said that the interim period from last Conference to the next Conference is going to be a very important time in the life of the church. The Lord God himself is calling on the church today to make this next inter-Conference period important. It will become an important period in the history of the church because and only because we make it so. The prophet is really calling upon us. He is calling on the church to exemplify a faith which will again in this sense prove us to be the heirs of God, true children of his, indeed. He is calling

Of Shuttles and Tracts

By Harriet Jordan Glaze

I GET QUITE IMPATIENT with people who say, "Religion is a withered branch on the tree of civilization. We will progress farther and faster if we cut it off." But I become even more impatient with church members who are convinced that everything "in the world" is evil and therefore to be shunned, that those who would build Zion must shut themselves up in the church and "church work" and stay as far away from "the world" as possible.

Both these extremes are erroneous. History has proved that when men have lost the art (even though they have kept the letter) of true Christianity, they no longer progress but fall back into dark ages. And every religious movement which has tried to build and at the same time ignore the materialistic needs of human life has seen the half-completed structure crumble beneath the builder's hands.

The perfect society will be woven from the intermingling of the best threads of both materialism and idealism. And to try to use only one kind is like trying to weave with only warp or only woof threads. Those who would truly "build the kingdom" must act as shuttles weaving the one within the other.

If all Latter Day Saints would so weave, soon a great and beautiful pattern would begin to emerge—the pattern intended by the Master Designer. And others, seeing, would hasten to take up their shuttles also. For men—even those who protest most against it—hunger for the kingdom of God and need only to see fully how it may be accomplished to begin, without coercion, to join in its fabrication.

Such quiet, efficient demonstration, which was Christ's most potent method, would do more than millions of tracts. And I intend no belittling of this fine method of missionary activity.

upon us now with our new vision of life, for without a vision we perish. He is calling on us as baptized believers who have received the Holy Ghost to go forward in faith believing, though we cannot always see all the way. We work from the known present into the unknown future.

Abraham was called by God to go out into a country he had never seen before, which he believed he was to receive as an inheritance, and the Scripture records that he went out "not knowing whither he went," but he certainly knew how he went. And we shall step out into this next eighteen months, not knowing even what tomorrow is going to bring, but we do know we shall step out into the unknown future with our hand in the hand of God, our lives surrendered to a hidden guidance, and ourselves confirmed in the faith and convinced of his way of life. This doesn't mean to say we won't have heartbreak and problems and trials and difficulties. All these things are before each of us in a greater or lesser degree. But we know that although we have these things to face, we can face them with the best advantage possible. We can face them with the best courage, the best assurance, and the best equipment this life affords. Therefore we face the unknown future convinced that ultimately God's will shall reign supreme because we have permitted him to live in us.

May this new level of creation, the very life of God, the characteristics of his son, so become a part of us that, as members of the church, we can look out into the world and see all that exists with eyes that are new and pure and right. We see things differently. We view our brother as a brother, our sister as a sister, and we see life itself in correct perspective. We have a greater purpose than to reach the age of forty-five or fifty or sixty in a comfortable situation. If we can live this life rightly now, tomorrow, and eternity will take care of themselves.

If I could be sure that I am living rightly today—that God lives in me today—then I need not worry about tomorrow.

With our hand in his, and permitting ourselves to be led and guided by a hidden power, we shall arrive finally at the place of our inheritance. We shall find ourselves rightly related to each other as children of the kingdom; and as we are rightly related to each other, we become rightly related to God. He is the Father of all existence, and the Father of those children who have been adopted into his fold and kingdom through the redemptive merits of the life of Christ.

Substitute for Camp

Last summer a group of mothers in one community found they could not afford to send their children to camp. Undiscouraged, they made out a camp program according to the activities that each mother could direct: the best swimmer took the "campers" to the lake, the mother whose hobby was modeling directed the crafts, and the mother who thought she knew nothing took charge of the nature walks, and learned along with the children.

One basic advantage of a camp, they decided, was the way it taught children to take care of themselves, share housekeeping duties gladly, and do chores for the community good. In every home there was a rising bell, breakfast and then a busy half hour before inspection. Then a morning get-together including singing and a discussion of plans. An amazing number of possibilities developed. Trips to dairies, quarries and other points of local interest were taken. They made a nature garden. They learned to make fires and cook simple camp fare. The children learned to work and play as a group. And they came to see their mothers in a new light, as play-fellows with new and interesting abilities. — Katherine Marchand in McCall's.

Blue Pencil Notes

A TRIBUTE AND A TESTIMONY

THIS COLUMN has always been rather informal, and sometimes personal. May I be forgiven if again it sounds a very personal note? My wife always read this column with interest—she had a proprietary interest in it. The first numbers were written at Hermosa Beach, California, in 1917, while she was nursing me back to health after a severe illness. In fact, for many years she read every manuscript that I wrote before it went to the printer. It was a task she loved, and I benefited by it. She caught errors I had overlooked, and moreover I heeded her suggestions and criticisms so kindly given, because I felt that her honest, wise, and candid judgments gave me a preview of the judgments of the good readers of the Saints' Herald, and any books or tracts that I might put forth. So may I render a tribute to her now in this column which she made possible?

To me she was always the living embodiment of the picture of that good woman found in the Book of Proverbs:

The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her . . . she will do him good and not evil all the days of her life . . . she looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness . . . she reacheth forth her hands to the needy . . . she openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness . . . her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

I may be thought prejudiced in her favor, but my good friend John Sheehy, who for years knew her well as a neighbor, to reinforce my own opinion, writes this tribute:

Many of our fine church women have held office in departmental work of the church. Many have had titles of various kinds, including the well-known and beloved Emma, the "Elect Lady." However, I have thought for many years, while observing Sister Smith, that she rightly holds the best title of all—a title that belongs to her—"Good Mother of the Church." She truly was all that a good mother of the church should be. She was quiet, efficient, modest, a willing worker in her group, mother of two fine young men; always humble and kind, she truly represented in every detail, saintly motherhood.

IN AN AGE when so many are flip-pant, cynical, irreverent concerning marriage, when so many enter marriage lightly with an escape clause to the covenant in their minds, it may be well that those who have

SISTER ELBERT A. SMITH

"In her tongue was the law of kindness" had long and fine experiences in the married relationship should bear witness to its sanctity and beauty. My wife and I had fifty-three years together, and I can think of no happier estate this side of heaven. In fact, if heaven has richer and lovelier experiences, it must be those that have not yet entered into the hearts of men, neither been comprehended by them.

Like many another minister, I can say that while I was often before the public preaching, my wife was quietly living every good thing that I preached, and living it better than

I preached it. When I was preaching, if I could see her in the audience and catch a quick smile of encouragement, it always gave me a great uplift of spirit.

The estate of marriage must be entered into with mutual reverence. The pledged love that leads to the altar must be kept alive and growing with diligent care, with daily words of endearment, proved true by acts of tender consideration. It is tragic to see so many homes divided and unhappy when, with less mental and spiritual strain, they could be made enduring, peaceful, happy. The endeavor requires study, prayer, work, patience, love, self-sacrifice, a daily living of the gospel of our Lord and Master—but it pays dividends more than amply justifying the investment.

The strength of the church lies largely in the good homes of the church. May the Lord bless and keep our homes during these trying times, guarding them against dangers that threaten from without and the more insidious dangers that might tear them asunder from within.

TO CLOSE on a happy memory—my wife loved her church and her church work. She loved her home and her homework. I remember her as habitually singing as she went about household duties, which some think of as drudgery. That habit of hers at one time moved me to write some verses, the first of which reads:

My wife always sings at her work,
Though sunny or stormy the way;
And the song that she sings
Is the kind that brings
Me courage and peace for the day.

May many of the good women of the church find such happiness in home-building and homekeeping that their hearts will sing at their work.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Service of Love

THE BRIGHTLY COLORED MOTTO in the restaurant read, "No tips, please. You pay for the food; the service is free." On down the road, a lighted sign in the filling station window read, "A tankful of gas free if we forget to clean your windshield." Scattered along the highway were numerous other quips similar to those already mentioned. "Service with a smile," "Your friendly store," "A pound of coffee if we forget to thank you," etc.

Large corporations as well as small business firms have found that what really pays big dividends is not the service you buy with your money but the extra service you get for nothing.

Business has always had the foresight and wisdom to latch on to any new idea and use it to the hilt. Advertising became an effective medium until the great miracle of service was discovered. What a wonderful new avenue this opened up! Instead of being asked, "What do you want?" when you walked into a store, the clerks began inquiring, "May I help you, Sir?"

Commercialized service is a wonderful thing. It means that you can eat your lunch or see a movie without getting out of your car. It gives you the privilege of buying in several stores with only a name plate for identification. It will deliver your flowers fresh to a loved one several thousand miles away and sing happy birthday at the same time. It brings your baby's formulæ and fresh laundry in the morning and comes back in the evening to offer you your choice of fine entertainment.

Service! We marvel at it, praise it, pay for it, and then, like a lot of blind fools, we string the pearl of great price with some colored glass beads and hang it around our necks to choke us.

THERE WAS A MAN once who knew the real meaning of service. In his day, the idea of anyone's giving himself in service to others with no thought of honor, fame, or personal gain was so new and so unusual that some thought him crazy and many called him a charlatan and a fakir.

Had he been of ordinary moral stamina, he might have given up and left us without any hope or possibility of success in our own endeavor. But he did not give up, and he did leave us a definite pattern of service.

He taught us two things: first, we must love and respect the man we are serving, and second, we must give our devotion and loyalty to the work itself.

Neither of these will stand alone. To say vehemently, "I love Jesus Christ. He is my Lord and Master," and then leave his house with no thought of performing even the minor phases of his work is like a man trying to defend his life with a toy gun.

On the other hand, to engage in his work without first receiving his power and authority through his love is like trying to sell an article in expensive wrappings without ever opening the package to see what is inside.

THERE WAS A MAN who possessed a large farm and hired many men to work for him. Suspecting that his employees were not giving him the time and service he was paying for, he disguised himself and went among his laborers to discover the quality of work he was getting.

His suspicions were confirmed. The farm was suffering from laziness, indifference, and inferior workmanship. On every hand there were wastes and unproductive methods.

Finally in despair he came to the vineyard. Here he stopped in amazement. It was a veritable paradise with long, even rows of vines tied up to the sun and air. No weeds or undergrowth marred the perfection of the fruit hanging heavily on each bough and already scenting the air with the promise of a rich harvest.

Hurrying to the end of a row, he found an old man down on his hands and knees digging in the soil.

Unable to conceal his surprise, he spoke excitedly, "Surely your master must pay you higher wages than the other laborers."

The worker shook his head and went on digging.

The man bent over and continued, "How is it that the vineyard looks so much better than the rest of the farm? Perhaps you work less hours or have more help?"

The laborer, sensing the other's eagerness, merely smiled and continued his digging, shaking his head as before.

The man, no longer able to constrain himself, dropped down beside the old gardener and spoke anxiously, "I must know why the vineyard is doing so well. You see, I am the master of the farm."

The old man stopped in surprise and looked long and searchingly at the one who so anxiously awaited his reply. Then he spoke softly, "No, Master, I get no extra help or higher wages." Then he paused long enough to rest his eyes fondly on the long rows of ripening fruit. "You see, Master, I love the grapes."

F. HENRY EDWARDS, in The Life and Ministry of Jesus, says, "The secret of relationship to Christ, the secret of knowing him, is the secret of love. So many people are wrestling with besetting sins as a prelude to surrendering themselves to Christ instead of surrendering themselves in order to find power to meet sin."

Some will say, "How can I learn to love someone I cannot hear or see or touch?"

We give our loyalty and respect to the President of the United States, and most of us will never see or hear him in person. We give our admiration and devotion to a movie star, because he portrays some exemplary role on the screen, yet we have no assurance that his personal character is worthy of that acclamation at all. We hold up Edison, Washington, Lincoln, and Franklin as ideals before our children and fail to present the greatest living hero of all time.

It would seem, therefore, that we give our love and adoration easily to some people who will live only the short span of a lifetime, but we are wary about giving it to a man who has lived for over two thousand years and needed no publicity or press agents to mark him indelibly on the hearts and minds of all successive generations.

What are these qualities that have endeared this man to all ages?

When an actor decides to play a role in a historical novel, he learns more than the lines in his script. He goes back to the time in which the character he is portraying lived and studies every minute detail of dress, speech, and etiquette. It is that perfect imitation which makes the role live.

Well might we do the same, discovering each of us for himself the qualities of character that made Christ a truly great man.

Once we know what made him great, we can faithfully apply these same principles to our own lives, and we can steadily produce a more perfect likeness. A close study of his life will also reward us by restoring our faith, because his is the only biography known that, given close scrutiny, will reveal divine strength instead of hidden human weaknesses.

Nobody can find him for you but yourself. Nobody can win his love for you but yourself. Nobody can spoil your efforts toward perfection but yourself. A personal God demands personal action!

CHRIST WAS ALWAYS CAREFUL that none should follow him for the food he could provide or for the glamour attached to his performance of miracles. Who else but he would heal so many out of compassion and love for humanity with no thought of fame or money?

That should gladden the hearts of every little person everywhere, for it proves without a doubt that if Christ did not strive for fame and riches in this world, we ought not to work for acclaim either.

How did he go about establishing this rare precedent of service? He did not spread himself out thinly as commercial service does; rather he drew to him a small nucleus of devoted admirers and, before he asked for their love and devotion, he proved himself worthy of it.

He lived with them daily (here is the secret of high quality service) until they became accustomed to humility without abject fear, generosity without repayment, humor without guile, mercy without exaltation, patience without exacting standards, and love without rehabilitation.

After he had served these men devotedly for the period of his earthly ministry, he made it plain that it was necessary for him to leave them for a while. They loved him now as good children love an unselfish parent who is called away unexpectedly and leaves them in charge of the house. They pitched in and did the work willingly.

The disciples could hardly conceal their urgency, for they were so anxious to get all the work done before he should get back. It was their love for him that made them take up his work and carry it on. It was his approbation they were constantly seeking; it colored every decision they made, even to giving up their lives.

Finally it happened! The thing he had been anticipating all along became a reality. They had started out with love for him, and now they were in love with the work itself!

How he must have smiled in rejoicing when, one by one, they joined him, not exactly understanding his motive for dying on the cross, and yet each of them giving his life for the same cause.

REMEMBER WHEN CHRIST talked with Peter that last time along the seashore? Not once, but three times he asked, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?"

The first time Peter was surprised. The second time he was perplexed, and the third time he was grieved. Didn't the Lord know how much he loved him, especially since he had forgiven him for denying him?

Yes, Jesus did know how much Peter loved him. He knew full well what a friend he had made in Peter since the resurrection. There was never any doubt in Christ's mind that Peter loved him. But there was a doubt, perhaps, of what the big, impulsive man might do with that love.

Peter was a man of action. He might decide to avenge Christ. He might decide to go back to fishing and mourn his dearest friend in a kind of frenzied grief. He might break up the little band, and thus begin factions that would dwindle into nothingness.

But he didn't. Why? Because Christ said, "Feed my sheep."

Christ gave him a responsibility. In other words, Christ said to him, "Peter, you are big and strong. You are like a rock against which nothing shall prevail. Take up my work, Peter. Take my load on your shoulders. Be a good shepherd to these poor, lost sheep, and keep them safe until I come back to reclaim them."

How many times in later years must Peter have looked back through the numerous periods of pain and suffering and great sacrifices and heard his beloved Master saying, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?"

Only this time he could raise his eyes and look straight at his Master with a glorious spirit shining undauntedly as he answered, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee."

Man's Coming Dominion

By Evan A. Fry

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write, for these words are true and faithful.—Revelation 12: 1-5.

The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.—Isaiah 11: 6.

IT IS TRITE and repetitious to say again that we are living in a marvelous age, but I am going to chance saying it once more. I do not know of any other age in which it has been so interesting and exciting to be alive. This age seems to be shaping up the culmination of many biblical prophecies. It is marked by challenging developments in social and economic and religious fields, and by the fulfillment of many historical movements and trends which date back for centuries. But it is in the field of scientific advancement that we have made our most notable progress. We are so accustomed to miracles every day that we sometimes are positively bored by them. We take them absolutely for granted. Our children are even quite blasé about some of the things which absolutely amazed their parents not so many years ago. A two- or three-year-old child can now turn on the radio and tune in his favorite program, quite oblivious of the thrill his father first experienced when he hooked up a piece of crystal, a "cat whisker" detector, and a tuning coil and heard music from the air.

In the newspapers and magazines within recent months, I have read of some most amazing things. Yet their advent has created scarcely a ripple upon the calm surface of our daily existence. Scientists are now trying out a new 200-inch telescope on Mount Palomar in California, using a mirror on which work was first begun in 1934. This new telescope more than doubles the distance to which we can peer into space. It will bring to the eyes of man stars that are one thousand million light years away, but I haven't seen a single man or woman very excited about it.

Not long ago I read—and I hope you did, too—that jet planes, accompanied by a pilot, have now crossed the threshold into supersonic flight; scientists used to predict this would be impossible. Planes—with men inside—are now flying faster than sound can travel! I picked up a magazine recently and read a report on the latest television experiment in which television signals were relayed from a plane twenty-five to thirty thousand feet in the air. Since the surface of the earth is curved and television signals travel in a straight line, it has heretofore been impossible to get much distance from a television transmitter—usually less than fifty miles. But now we are putting the television transmitter 30,000 feet in the air and broadcasting to a radius of 200 miles.

NEWS IS BEING PRINTED in the nation's homes, without necessity of printing presses, by facsimile radio. Radar is finding safe paths for ships and airplanes through fog and darkness, showing each obstacle as plainly as if the sun were shining brightly. An air line advertises twenty-four regular Atlantic crossings per week—take your choice. An electronic microscope which magnifies to 50,000 diameters makes visible virus organisms which heretofore have eluded the most powerful optical microscopes. A new weed-killer has been developed which kills weeds but leaves crops undamaged, and which can be sprayed from airplanes over thousands of acres at an amazingly low cost. Foods are cooked in a matter of seconds by electronics. Men are manufacturing weather by sprinkling dry ice from a plane. We are just on the threshold of the atomic age with limitless resources of power waiting to be used in the smallest particles of matter. No wonder we become so surfeited with all these miracles that we scarcely pay attention to the next one which comes along to challenge our imagination and test our credulity.

MAN HAS EXTENDED and is still extending his dominion over astounding aspects of this world. He has subdued the plants and animals, harnessed the forces of nature, and achieved a mastery over material things which make him more powerful than many of the gods his pagan ancestors imagined. The one thing he has not learned to keep under control is himself. War—the ancient pattern for settling differences between men and nations—has steadily become more efficient and more horrible, because men have learned to control so many of the secrets and powerful forces of nature but have not yet learned to control themselves so that those forces and secrets may be used in beneficent, constructive ways. Twice within our own generation, men have plunged the whole world into devastating war, disrupting every nation of the world socially, economically, and spiritually. At home, even in peacetime, we have one divorce for every three marriages—and the rate is increasing, showing that there is a lack of peace and control at home. Suspicion, hatred, racial, national and religious tensions still plague mankind—the same men who have learned to be masters of earth and sky and sea and air, but who have not learned to be masters of themselves. Men are still slaves to their appetites, their prejudices, their ignorance, their fears, their worries, the weakness and decay of their physical bodies. Their life span has been extended; the facilities for using and enjoying life have been multiplied a thousandfold, and yet they themselves are no better and no happier than they were in the day of Alexander the Great.

Man's dominion over the material things by which he is surrounded is a prophecy and an omen of what this world can be like and will be like some day when he has learned to have dominion over himself; when all things are made new; when the present sinful bodies of men, which do not respond to our will and which wear out and deteriorate and slip away from us in spite of all we can do, will be replaced by new, resurrected, immortal bodies that are responsive to the demands of the spirit. Old Testament writers have prophesied of that day when the wolf shall dwell with the lamb and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling shall be together in peace, and a little child shall lead them—when "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain" because "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

Our Christian hope looks forward to that day when the enmity between man and Nature shall be gone, when Nature shall withhold none of her secrets, when the curse shall be removed from the soil so that briars and thorns and weeds will not curse the labors of the husbandman, when the enmity of man for man shall likewise be gone, and the spirit and body inseparably connected shall receive a fullness of joy.

Challenges

Norma Anne Kirkendall

ONCE THERE WAS a little boy who had a girl friend, and that young lady had a birthday coming up. The little boy had just twenty-five cents to buy a gift, and the girl liked perfume. So off went the boy to the corner drugstore where he spied a beautiful bottle of perfume with a "25" sign on it. He asked for the bottle. But the druggist said the "25" meant dollars, not cents, so the little boy went out of the store . . . and got himself another girl.

One might well base a sermon on "The Price of Perfume"—for some of our members are doing just that. There are certain requirements in the church which must be fulfilled in order to live up to the true standards of a steward. An example of this type of requirement is observance of the financial law. If we think enough of the church, there will be no question as to whether or not we observe the financial law or any other part of the law of the kingdom. But for many the price is too high, so they just "go out and get another girl." Such losses in attendance are tragic, and leaders may well look to the programs which should be developing a love for the gospel and for the observance of the laws of God.

I TRAMPED through the woods again. Before, I had always kept my eyes toward the sky, watching the giant trees reach toward the blue. But this time I looked downward. Beneath my feet were the leaves of decades, transformed into rich loam from which now springs countless seedlings of all sorts.

We cannot all be oak trees. Those oak trees could not exist if it were not for the richness of the earth below. The oak trees are the leaders in the forest, but we can be contributing members. It must be from the richness of our lives that the leaders of tomorrow are born. We may be forgotten with the mass, but each life (with the others) is the rich loam feeding the seedling lives of the future.

I RECENTLY BOUGHT a Crosley car and have suffered through the countless jokes about its size. But I laugh last for I average about forty miles to the gallon, and my costs of operation are a mere fraction of those of my former larger car.

All large cities have their cathedrals. These giant spires loom tall. The walls are ivy-covered, and the interiors are beautiful with paintings, carvings, and rich ornamentation. Squares away you find the small "piano-box" buildings, whose designs are simple to a fault. It is obvious that great amounts of money have not been expended in their construction, and often the sacrifice of the members shows in the poverty of the buildings.

The question is: Which building does the most for the membership of the church who inhabits its walls? Or is it the building that is important? My feeling is that the building does add beauty and warmth to worship, the true test of the church, however, is not the building but the gospel taught. The test is not by the looks of the edifice, but by the results shown in the lives of the members.

"One more revival—only one more is needed, the revival of Christian stewardship, the dedication of the money power to God."—Horace Bushness.

Worship Suggestions for January

Theme for the Month: PERSONAL STEWARDSHIP

JANUARY 2, 1949

Theme: I PREPARE FOR STEWARDSHIP

Prelude: "Lift Thine Eyes to the Mountains," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah"*

Call to Worship:

Verily I say unto you, I have appointed . . . you to be stewards over mine house, even stewards indeed . . . for the purpose of building up my church and kingdom on the earth, and to prepare my people for the time when I shall dwell with them, which is nigh at hand.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

Hymn: "Come, Let Us Anew Our Journey Pursue," Saints' Hymnal, No. 433.

Prayer:

This should be a prayer of dedication and analysis of personal needs of the branch members in order that they may feel kinship in their individual preparation to be worthy stewards.

Stewardship Meditation:

WE GIVE THEE BUT THINE OWN

We give thee but thine own,
Whate'er the gift may be:
All that we have is thine alone,
A trust, O Lord, from thee.

May we thy bounties thus
As stewards true receive,
And gladly, as thou blestest us,
To thee our first-fruits give.

To comfort and to bless,
To find a balm for woe,
To tend the lone and fatherless,
Is angels' work below.

The captive to release,
To God the lost to bring,
To teach the way of life and peace,
It is a Christlike thing.

And we believe thy word,
Though dim our faith may be,
Whate'er for thine we do, O Lord,
We do it unto thee.
—William Walsham How.

Inspirational Talk:

It is suggested that this talk be presented by the youth supervisor or church school director of the branch. This should be a special appeal to the youth of the church to enter into the great fellowship of being stewards for their Master, who has said to his people: "Whoso is found a faithful, a just, and a wise steward, shall enter into the joy of his Lord, and shall inherit eternal life."—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 5.

Theme: I TITHE MY TIME

Prelude: "I Shall Not Pass Again This Way," by Stanley S. Effinger*

Call to Worship:

From THE BUILDERS
All are architects of Fate,
Working in these walls of Time;
Some with massive deeds and great,
Some with ornaments of rhyme.

Nothing useless is, or low;
Each thing in its place is best;
And what seems but idle show
Strengthens and supports the rest.

For the structure that we raise,
Time is with materials filled;
Our todays and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.
—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," Saints' Hymnal, No. 322.

Meditation: "A Time Exposure to God"
God needs more of our time. Most of us are so busy with things that we seldom give God an opportunity to develop the characteristics of our natures which only a time exposure can reveal.

Those who make photography either a vocation or a hobby know that there are some pictures which cannot be taken snapshot fashion. It takes a time exposure to catch all the features that are desired. So it is with our lives. We are by nature of too fine a texture to be developed by the snapshot method into strong, efficient Christian characters. God must have more of our time so that the influence of his nature can bring out our finer characteristics.—Author Unknown.

Theme: I TITHE MY TALENTS

Prelude: "Prelude in A Major," Chopin*

Call to Worship:

"Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine."—Exodus 19: 5, Inspired Version.

Hymn: "One Day When Fell the Spirit's Whisper," Saints' Hymnal, No. 1.

A Sermon in Scripture:

A man traveling into a far country . . . called his servants, and delivered unto them his goods.

And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway went on his journey.

Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the same; and gained other five talents.

And likewise he who received two talents, he also gained other two.

But he who received one, went and digged in the earth and hid his Lord's talent.

After a long time the lord of these servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.

And so he that had received the five talents came, and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents; behold, I have gained besides them, five talents more.

His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents; behold I have gained two talents besides them.

His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

Then he who had received the one talent came, and said, Lord, I know thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not scattered.

And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; and lo, here is thy talent; take it from me as thou hast from thine other servants; for it is thine.

His lord answered and said unto him, O wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not scattered.

Having known this, therefore, thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers, and at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

I will take, therefore, the talent from you, and give it unto him who hath ten talents.

For unto every one who hath obtained other talents, shall be given, and he shall have in abundance.

But from him that hath not obtained other talents, shall be taken away even that which he hath received.—Matthew 25: 14-30, Inspired Version.

Theme: I TITHE MY POSSESSIONS

Prelude: "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," by Rathbun*

Call to Worship:

"Every devoted thing is most holy unto the Lord . . . all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord."—Leviticus 27: 28, 30, Inspired Version.

Hymn: "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters," Saints Hymnal, No. 346

Prayer:

This should be a prayer of thanksgiving for substance to share, for the all-sufficient blessings of the Heavenly Father and the great privilege that is ours as a church to learn and understand the law of tithing as revealed by God in the latter days.

Tithing Meditations:

"Stewardship is the management of an investment of God in you."—Albert Carmichael.

"Stewardship puts the Golden Rule in business in place of the rule of gold."—Unknown.

Suggested Presentation:

(From an article by Bishop G. L. DeLapp appearing in the Zion's League Annual Number One.)

One of the most significant features of our church is its belief in present-day revelation. Divest it of that one fundamental, and it would leave a flimsy skeleton for either the individual or group to build for eternity. . . .

It would undoubtedly refresh our minds and inspire us to new resolutions if we would take the time to study section seventy-two of Doctrine and Covenants. If fifty per cent of the membership of our church were to read this revelation, which was given in the year 1831, and resolve to comply therewith, there would be a steady flow of inventories going into the bishop's office, for "it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and eternity."

It will undoubtedly prove most discouraging to those who do not believe in rendering an account this side of eternity to find the issue still confronting them on the other side. However, that is quite incidental.

Our big objective is the establishment of Zion. It can only be accomplished by resolving to comply with the commandments received through revelation.

It was the resolve to carry out God's will that enabled the Saints of the early church to build a strong foundation. It will take revelation plus resolution on our part to build the superstructure. The new year should bring new resolutions. New resolutions should bring a greater number of inventories and increased tithing.

I believe that it is just as important that we accept the individual responsibility of stewardship over material possessions and discharge that responsibility in harmony with the law of stewardships within the church, as it is to believe in those principles of our faith and doctrine. Man cannot come to the fullest stature in life except as he utilizes temporal possessions to improve his own mental and physical being and also to extend benefits to others. He can do this by a process of law through consecration of surplus. The benefits which society receives as at present constituted extend only in a limited way.

Hymn: "Hark! The Voice of Jesus Calling," Saints Hymnal, No. 344

Suggested Presentation:

This new era in which we live demands that we do our thinking on a larger and grander scale than we have done heretofore. The problems of today are universal, and great masses of humanity are looking to the United States to set the example of unity and brotherhood. But before we, as a people, can successfully think in terms of the whole world, we must be sure that our understanding has a firm foundation. As Saints, we must re-examine ourselves before we can lead and expect others to follow.

The necessity for large-scale thinking is also a wonderful opportunity for spiritual growth. It is such attributes as opportunity, responsibility, honest effort, and earnest desire that will establish the kingdom of God upon the earth! Many Saints, consecrated to do the will of our Master, are securing the education necessary to carry the glad tidings of the everlasting gospel to all nations of the world. Many are preparing, or have long since prepared, to thrust in their sickles in the field which is "white already to harvest."

How human is our desire to show others the light we only glimpse ourselves! How zealously we long to bring all peoples to Christ.

Those who have already chosen to take Christ's name upon themselves have chosen also to keep his commandments. Those seeking to keep his commandments agree that it is of vital importance to their own growth and understanding to keep all the commandments he has given us. How strange, then, is the fact that of the Saints today who have chosen to serve the Lord and keep his commandments, less than half are keeping one of his most basic laws—the law of tithing.

Perhaps it is well to review this law, a portion of which is here given from the Doctrine and Covenants, section 106: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my peoples; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord." The paying of tithing should not only be considered an obligation, but a privilege as well. It is the one material way in which each of us can assist in the advancement of the church, and the subsequent progression of God's kingdom on earth—though we may never leave our home branch.

Yes, the redemption of the world is huge and inviting, but there is a law we must learn first. If we would bring the world to Christ, we must send Christ into the world, represented by men who have dedicated their lives to that purpose, men authorized by the church, and sustained by our paying the one tenth.—Adapted from "Narrow Is the Way," which appeared in the Saints' Herald, November 23, 1946.

Hymn: "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," Saints' Hymnal, No. 292.

Suggested Scripture Readings:

Malachi 3: 10; Isaiah 35: 10, Inspired Version.

*These preludes may be found in standard collections of piano and organ music.

To belong to a small, not highly-thought-of religious community is undoubtedly a social disadvantage. Yet the consciousness of being somewhat different from most of one's fellow citizens makes up for it; it gives one the vantage point of detachment. It may prevent one from being swamped by a craving for oneness with a more or less amorphous crowd; it contributes to a kind of personal integrity. It makes it easy to break away from hoary tradition; one has not to pay for personal freedom by being subjected to social excommunication, which might be strong enough to paralyze one's efforts. One becomes free without having to wear a martyr's crown.—Professor M. A. Bonn in Wandering Scholar.

Let's Recapture

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

By STELLA B. OMAHUNDRO

DECEMBER seems to be the shortest month in all the year, when the things to be done are tallied up. There are so many chores of a strictly practical nature for women, yet they are meaningless if we lose sight of the spiritual significance of the events we are celebrating.

What a challenge that offers to a mother these days, when so much expert competition harasses not only adults, but also children in this modern world. Remember last December? We said, "Things are going to be different next year." So let us stop now and consider what we can do in our homes to help our family recapture the true meaning of Christmas and the richness of the simple joys of the season.

Here are some suggestions as a starting point for our thinking:

1. Let us de-emphasize gift expectancy. Most of us adults have learned through experience that it is truly "more blessed to give than it is to receive." But have we given the children a chance to learn this, too? So much talk and action points to "what am I going to get?"

The children will enjoy sharing in planning remembrances for others if they're just given a chance. They will love to share a secret in making something for Daddy.

Many families have found it best to agree that each member shall have one nice gift, often something "useful" rather than each trying to outdo himself for every member of the tribe. A skillful mother can help direct a child's interest toward others by letting him "help."

2. Let us plan at least one specific project in giving in which the whole family can share—perhaps a special fund for the Christmas offering. It may be feasible to plan a Christmas basket and clothing for a needy family. There may be a lonely friend "adopted" for the Christmas season. There are dozens of ways in which you may all work together to "give" to another.

3. Let us create a traditional way of celebrating at home which will enrich the meaning of the Christmas story. Gathering materials for a Bethlehem scene to be placed under the Christmas tree can be a delightful experience for young and old alike. Making a creche for the mantel or hall table would call upon the creative abilities of all the family. A silhouette of the Wise Men for special lighting at the front window is still another idea.

If original artistry does not flourish in your family, enlist the aid of magazines, your library, or the materials the children have at school. Once a start is made, the most difficult part will be over.

4. Do plan now, if you haven't already, to read or tell the Christmas story at a family gathering. Some families like to share this experience on Christmas Eve, after the tree is trimmed, and end by either singing Christmas carols together or listening to good recordings. You can add other favorite Christmas stories, too, such as Dickens' "Christmas Carol," or Van Dyke's, "The Other Wise Man." There are many to select from in any good collection of Christmas stories.

5. Encourage all members of the family to participate fully in the various services planned at church. Many a child remembers happily all his life his first experiences in the church school Christmas programs. It will mean more work for mother to help him learn his part and the songs, to make costumes, and to see that he gets to the church to practice, but, oh, how it will pay dividends in later years. Too, the teenagers may need some prodding to take their part in the vesper services, for instance. But even if they don't admit it, they will enjoy doing their share, particularly in the group singing. And mother might even make the effort herself to sing in the choir for the joy of sharing first hand the Christmas story in song.

A grand finale can be achieved, if all members of the family arrange to sit together, for once, on the Sunday after Christmas; this will emphasize the "specialness" of the occasion.

IT IS GOING to take some down-to-earth planning for mother to have the time, energy, and peaceable state of mind to fully achieve what she would like in her family's observance of Christmas. If she gets too worked up herself over non-essentials, all is lost.

A good place to begin is paring her own personal list of gifts. Don't worry about "remembering everybody." It is a better plan to concentrate on those who need some special cheering. Remember the recently bereaved, the lonely ones, or some older folk who may feel "passed by." Instead of fighting crowds to find just the "right thing" to buy, remember "the gift without the giver is bare." The truly foresighted make things early in the season. A small remembrance you made yourself means more to the recipient than the most expensive present you can buy.

— — — a home column feature — — —

Some housewives have found it a good scheme to make extra glasses of jellies, jams, and such at canning time. Wrapped in gay paper, with a friendly little note, there is nothing more acceptable. You could make a few glasses of marmalade even at this late date for such a purpose.

Homemade candies are a delightful gift. Enlist the aid of daughters and sons, too—for this activity. They will gladly enter into the spirit of the fun, especially if some are intended for home consumption.

Homemade cookies can also be a family project with all hands helping to cut fancy shapes and add special touches of decoration. These, along with small homemade fruit cakes, can be added to the list of homemade goodies used as a remembrance for friends.

By the same token, instead of stewing over a long list of cards to be sent, telephone a cheery message to those within reach, and start early in the month to write a personal note to old friends who are far away.

When it comes to making preparations for the holiday dinner, don't wait till the last minute for anything that can be done ahead of time. Check the state of your linens, china, silver, and such things the week before. Plan a menu that will not involve too much last-minute attention. Enlist the aid of younger members of the family to be responsible for the trimmings and extras. Let daughter work out the plans for the table decorations.

And while you're planning your family gathering, do add some guest to your list who might otherwise eat his Christmas dinner alone. This is another way the family can learn to share with others.

Once you determine to change the hectic pace of your household in the month of December, many, many ways will occur to you to achieve this end.

"Aunt Nannie"

By Marie Gosline

ANNA, SHE WAS christened seventy-four years ago, but to me she has always been "Aunt Nannie." Whether it was the unbreakable Effanbee doll or the silk lingerie she gave me in my childhood which endeared her to me, I do not know. But my favorite aunt she was then; and friend, comrade, teacher, and saint she is to me now.

I do not know what would become of the East Los Angeles branch without Aunt Nannie. Largely because of her that branch was first organized, the first church built and later sold. Today, mostly because of her, there stands a new one to take its place. In her veins flows the blood of a Jewish ancestor and, perhaps because of this, she it was who kept the books on that new building—or maybe it was simply because no one yet has ever been able to "slip anything over" on that old grey head.

So far as I know, there is never a church dinner held that she does not organize and do the hardest part of the work herself. This includes anything from cleaning the church to cooking the food. It is she who uses her influence—and influence she certainly has—to get donations direct from the manufacturers, donations that count for something when a dinner for a few hundred is being given. Did you see the large floral pieces at the dedication service? They came direct to the church from the florists who were friends of Aunt Nannie. Did you see those beautiful candlelabra at the Christmas candlelight service? They came from other friends of Aunt Nannie. Who packed the bags of candy for the children at Christmas? You guessed it! My Aunt Nannie.

But above all is the Christian spirit which is always with Aunt Nannie. No one is too low, too mean, too ignorant, to labor in her great field for Christ. To her, everyone with whom she comes in contact, be he rich or poor, Saint or sinner, is a potential missionary in God's cause.

It seems to me there was one who lived many years ago who had the same ideas as my Aunt Nannie.

Literature for the Women's Department Cradle Roll Worker

In making visits to the home of young mothers, the Cradle Roll worker needs to have a list of worthwhile literature to recommend which will assist the new homemaker in the tasks of caring for her most precious member of the family, the baby. A splendid series of booklets again has been brought to our attention called My Book, by Mary Edna Lloyd. There is a copy for each season of the year, containing simple stories on subjects close to the lives of little ones, nicely illustrated with pictures of real children.

In the fall issue there are such timely subjects as:

"Helping Daddy," "We Go to Church," "Making Cookies," "Thank You, God," "Family Fun," and "Mother's Christmas Story," with two line songs included.

Order these direct from the Herald House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri. These are priced at fifteen cents per copy.

The following booklets come from the U. S. Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C., and are recommended highly. Single copies are free.

Prenatal Care, Publication No. 4.

Infant Care, Publication No. 8.

Your Child From One to Six, Publication No. 30.

Thoughts On Peace

PEACE (Latin: Pax; French: Paix; German: Friede; Russian: Mir; the contrast to war and strife, a state of law and order, the usual form at the termination of wars.

This is one of the customary definitions of peace in dictionaries and encyclopedias. If one tries to apply the term to these days, he certainly is in a quandary.

The more we think about our present plight, the more we feel the need and the urge to do something about it in order to avert impending catastrophes. It is not enough that the governments of all the nations are trying to come to honorary and fair terms, but we as individuals, too, must do our share to promote understanding and to prevent misunderstandings. We must drop racial, national, and religious prejudices and establish contact between individuals.

A little boy in Independence has given us a splendid example as reported in the Saints' Herald, September 11. This little fellow wanted to assist people he did not know at all, but his deed became known all over the world and was read in other languages at meetings in Europe and perhaps elsewhere. This apparently insignificant act of our little friend has definitely done a good bit toward peace.

In a country like defeated Germany with its material ruins and spiritual ravages, there is a great longing for tranquillity. The article entitled "Peace," which appeared in the Saints' Herald of August 28, went right to the hearts of all those who heard the translation of it.

These examples are proof that it is not material assistance alone which is required in present-day Germany but spiritual help as well, and perhaps even more so in order to overcome that feeling of isolation. German men and women need moral support very much in order to be guided along the right path. Whatever can help to make them see life as less purposeless will be in the right direction. At present, they feel forsaken and damned by the world.

Physical hardships and an almost primitive standard of living have done their share to make life appear hopeless; Germans need a strong belief in God's eternal love and encouragement and guidance.

The confidence which emanates from our faith is one of those essential spiritual pillars which is wanted. In proper appreciation of this need, the president of the German Mission, Seventy Eugene Theys, is planning to have a German edition of the Herald published, which will incorporate many of the fine articles from the original Saints' Herald.

This spiritual link between the brothers and sisters will help to give the Germans back that inestimable treasure without which no Christian people can exist, the right to see a silver lining in the horizon and the right to hope of real and lasting peace based on mutual understanding and brotherhood.

Early American Explorers

While looking over some old manuscripts at the museum in St. Petersburg, Florida, I ran across a book written in London, England, in 1671 by John Ogelby, Esq. This was a compilation of the records of all the early explorers to the Americas.

The works of archæologists have always been very interesting to me, so I at once requested permission to read it. I was told this would be impossible, as it would necessitate having a case built for the one book, which could be locked after each page was turned. Due to its age and fragility not even the attendants were allowed to handle it. On several occasions I discussed the matter with Mrs. Apple, who was in charge, and over a period of time I became very friendly with her. I finally suggested that I would furnish a case to house the book if I were granted the privilege to read it. Through her kind efforts, I was given permission.

Upon delivery of the case, I immediately began reading the book. Mrs. Apple turned the pages, using a spatula for the purpose, and locking the case after each page was turned. I was most grateful to her, as it entailed patience and time, which she could have been spending on her other duties.

Knowing some of the ridicule that has been directed at the Book of Mormon because of the claim that there was inadequate proof that certain animals ever existed on this continent, I feel these manuscripts indicate that the Nephite records are true.

The following are observations from the work of John Ogelby and others:

Some of the early travelers found, in various sections of the Americas, remnants of colonies of giants. They also found an abundance of swine, which they used for meat. I never before read anything to indicate that swine existed on this continent in such an early period. However, this bears out the claim of the Book of Mormon.

Francisco Fernandez found the natives in Yucatan using the cross as a symbol of worship. Their tradition had it that, before their time, the nation was possessed by a people who came from the east after enduring long hardship on the sea. They found goats, sheep, rabbits, wild dogs, leopards, lions, tigers, wild hogs, camels, etc. Some of these animals were found to exist on this continent as late as the fourteenth century.

They had a word in their language which signified regeneration or second birth. They practiced baptism and fasted three days before each baptismal ceremony.

In Mexico City was built a great temple called Cu. On each corner of the temple was placed two marble statues and from the description given, there is no doubt as to their representing the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods. On another temple an ascension was made by a flight of eighty steps, before which was a high veil, which opened into a spacious hall hung with tapestry, at the end of which stood large images of the same priesthood.

In the province of Cuazata, they found people practicing circumcision according to their ancient custom. They made an idol of dough—or type of bread—which they used somewhat in the manner of a sacrament—breaking off small bits and serving the priesthood first, then distributing the remainder among the laymen.

The following is a speech made by Lord Fesenco (one of the chieftains of a great province) to Montezuma at the time he was elected high chieftain of the combined provinces of Mexico:

The great happiness, most noble Montezuma, which is befallen this realm by your election, may easily be conjectured from the general joy. None besides yourself being able to undergo an office in the management whereof so much prudence is required. It is a most certain testimony that God loves Mexico, that he has given its inhabitants understanding to make such a choice. Who can doubt, but that you who have expatiated through the heavens, and conversed with God, may easily govern us mortals on earth. Who can despair, but the virtue enclosed within your heart, will extend to the widows and orphans. Therefore, rejoice, oh Mexico, the heavens have granted us a prince without vice; merciful, and not a violator of the laws; affable, not despising common conversation. And you, oh King, let not this great preferment occasion any alteration in your so long known virtues. The crown heads care for the public good. The troubles thereof must extend over the whole realm and each one in the realm.

Another speech was made by Montezuma's brother, who, being captured by the enemy, chose to die rather than to be their king in opposition to Montezuma. Placing himself on a high mast, he spoke these words, after which he jumped to his death:

Chalco seeks to set me upon the throne of my brother. This the heavens will not permit, so learn by me rather to die than to live and be guilty of treason to your country.

It seems that they had been warned many times by God of their evil ways, and he revealed himself in various ways.

They had a tradition that a countryman at labor in the field was caught up by a huge eagle and carried off to a cave where he fell asleep and dreamed that he heard a voice saying, "Do you know that man?" He made no special notice until the person speaking to him appeared and he knew, by his royal apparel, that he was Montezuma, after which the voice was heard again saying, "How soundly doth he sleep. The time is coming which provides punishment for many crimes; burn the sleeper with the torch, which he holds in his hands. He will feel no pain." Not long thereafter, being informed of the vision of this man, Montezuma, looking upon his thigh, to his amazement found the scar of a burn. It was shortly after this that he received news of the Spaniards being just off shore. Then Montezuma sent his priests to a high mountain to consult with their God and there they saw another vision showing Montezuma being slain and the city consumed by fire.

There were many more interesting notes, but I did not have time to copy them.

Appeal to Chicago Friendly Visitors

In May, 1947, the local paper featured a picture of a small boy in Chicago, Illinois, who lost both of his feet in an accident. Since my own son had lost one of his arms, I wrote to this child in care of the hospital where he was a patient. His mother answered the letter, and seven months later I wrote again. The boy was still hospitalized.

I have read in the Herald of the work of friendly visitors in the church. If there are any in Chicago, I should like to suggest they visit this unfortunate little boy. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. Howard G. Richey, whose home address is at 7805 West Rosedale Avenue, Chicago.

English Leaguers Contribute to Missions Abroad Fund

ENFIELD ZION'S LEAGUE "NAUTICAL SOCIAL"

ON SEPTEMBER 30, the Enfield Zion's League presented a sum of sixty-one pounds, ten shillings ($246) to the local bishop's agent to be applied to the Missions Abroad Fund. This money was raised by selling refreshments at two mission reunions, caroling, monthly sacrifice offerings, and the sponsoring of three socials. Although members of the congregation generously patronized these projects, the contributions were made without any decrease in the usual branch income.

League officers elected on September 9 are Rose Worth, President; Roy Oakman, vice-president; Frances Castle, secretary; and Joyce Maloney, treasurer.

Good Advice That Was Followed

(Note: The following letter was originally sent to Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, who passes it on to the "Herald" for publication.)

In September, 1943, I wrote you a lot of questions—questions a weak, uneducated Latter Day Saint would ask. There must be much kindness or spiritual direction wrapped up in your person, for you answered four full typewritten pages! You sent me "Exploring the Church" and advice "even though busy to study."

I am grateful you took time to answer that letter; now I know really how little I knew and how hopeless I must have appeared to be.

Since then, I have completed twenty-three units of credit study and have taught a class on the Book of Mormon. I then decided children should be my first concern, so I have been teaching in church school ever since. I am "friendly visitor" for our women's department and serve in community organizations. Although I am a busy farm wife, almost every day I get a call or am called upon to help people.

I just wanted you to know your time was not wasted. I have a daughter who was graduated this May from Graceland College. I also have three young sons who are being taught about the church. My nine-year-old son knows more of our doctrine (not just Bible stories) than I knew when I wrote you in 1943.

The church has much good material, yet one sees place for improvement, especially in younger group materials. My heart rejoiced this Conference to see the ministry and teachers all so concerned with the children and youth of the church. Maybe soon each family can be visited once a week by a priesthood member and be taught family worship, good home relationship, responsibility to the church, etc.

With your time so taken, do not bother to answer this letter. Just thanks to you. I know God's blessing will continue to follow you in your work.

Remember That Pedestal

By STANLEY JOHNSON

SOMETIMES, when attempting to mention the gospel to a friend or acquaintance, one frequently runs up against a stone wall, and receives a reply like this: "Well, I could be interested in your church, but some of your people I know just—aah, aah—well, you know—they do things that aren't very Christian. I can't understand if your church has so much to offer why they act that way!"

Of all the problems met in an attempted conversion or extended missionary expedition, this is one of the most difficult to overcome.

Why does Mr. H. act the way he does if he believes the gospel? This question is not only frequently formed in the mind of nonmembers but also often presents itself to us—members of the church of Christ. Perhaps it would be well if it were more forcibly impressed upon us oftener, for frequently we fail to realize what bearing our personal actions have upon the church and its influence in the world.

Equally as true as the axiom, "A chain is only as strong as its weakest link," is the statement, "A branch is only as strong as its weakest member." One individual leading a life of misconduct, contrary to the concepts and teachings of the church, can ruin thousands of prospective converts before a missionary has a chance to hold his first cottage meeting. One individual in a local branch who is associated with infamous business dealing, corrupt living, or violation of the generally accepted Christian creed of ethics can ruin and utterly destroy the good name of the branch.

WHEN A PERSON is looking for a new religion, he is looking for an ideal. When a person is dissatisfied with his religion, he seeks something on a higher plane.

With this in mind, then, we can easily analyze the thoughts of a prospective member. To him, all—not just one or two or the pastor and his wife—of the branch should conform with his correlation of the "better" gospel and its effect upon mankind, as individuals. If only one person falls short and fails to make the grade, it appears to the non-member that there is a weak spot in the entire organization; it presents the basis for a growing doubt of the authenticity of the teachings and the effectiveness of the doctrine.

This would, in fact, place each one of us individually upon a pedestal as a personal representative of the church of Christ. Upon the pedestal would be a sign reading, "This person is a true example of my work upon earth in the twentieth century. Signed, Jesus Christ." This exaggerated example expresses well our inefficiency to hold this position; yet we still claim to be members of this organization, and we still tell our friends of the Old Jerusalem Gospel and of the Angel's Message.

The task of preparing ourselves for this position is no great and tedious effort. It is rather the composite of many little things. Many of them in themselves might seem irrelevant, but like a jig-saw puzzle, all the pieces are needed to complete the picture.

Clean, personal living is accepted by most and practiced by all but a few; but again, these scattered few can cause defeat. We are told in the Bible and again in the Doctrine and Covenants that cleanliness is a trait loved and demanded by the Lord. Paul reminds us that the body is God's holy temple and should be treated as such. Moral integrity is also important. A weakness here is fatal to any missionary activity. Cleanliness can go much further than the physical person, too. What about the home and the yard? More important still, what about the local church? Does it compare favorably with other churches in the vicinity? Is it well kept, and is the yard about it tended sufficiently to show results of attention? Can the pastor preach cleanliness from the pulpit and then walk through dirt and mud and weeds and loose boards on his way to the street from the House of God? Does the local branch measure up? Could we put it on the same pedestal with us with the inscription from our Master below?

STABLE AND WELL-BALANCED family relationships are a necessity. If one cannot stabilize his household, what chance does he have of convincing a nonmember of the worth of his religion? A school would not call upon a convict to lecture on citizenship to its students.

Good financial management also plays an important part. This is far more inclusive than just paying tithes and filing an inventory. It includes the everyday management of
www.LatterDayTruth.org

New Horizons

current finances. Financial stability does not necessarily require a large amount of money, but it does demand the wise handling of money. A man who is on relief because of poor management cannot afford cut-glass chandeliers, neither can he afford to speak of the financial law to nonmembers. His actions would drown out his words.

Co-operation and active participation in both church and society are recommended in the Scripture. The commandment most frequently quoted is, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Activity of this type shows a sincere desire for the betterment of the group. Inactivity indicates—whether such is truly the case or not—a selfish, isolationist attitude. Such an attitude is not complimentary to one preaching the plan of Zion.

Honorable financial and business relationships should speak for themselves. Basic integrity should point the right path in this direction. One who has been handed a shady contract from the hands of an individual will not look upon church books presented by the same hands. Truly a man is judged by his works.

THE WHOLE PROBLEM, then, would seem to imply that missionary effort is largely dependent upon a series of small but related situations. Example: the teacher of all can play the part of the missionary at first if given a chance. Realization of this is universal; consciousness of it is not.

The watchword should be, "Remember your pedestal!" You are always on it, and the peoples of the world are looking at you. What are they seeing?

Men Needed--Help Wanted

ONE NIGHT at Graceland fellowship, we sat in God's employment agency. Before us hung a huge sign which read: "Men Needed—Help Wanted." The urgency of this message alerted our senses and quickened our pulses, and the spirit of the testimonies was "I want to prepare myself for this work." My old impatience was fanned into flame again. Why must this job in God's workshop always be before us? Do we not let it always fall into that just-around-the-corner class, like prosperity in 1936, or spring in every March? Is there no on-the-job training in the kingdom? These questions I pondered

On-the-job training was instituted primarily for the benefit of the individual worker. This benefit consists of the opportunity to learn a trade at which one can earn money in the present and develop skills which will assure his capacity to earn money in the future. Would on-the-job training in the kingdom accrue any benefits to the worker?

Before answering that, let us refer to the days before on-the-job training—before the war, back to the days of the great depression. At that time, a sign reading "Men Needed—Help Wanted" was something to clamor after. There was no dilly-dallying in following up want ads then, and when we got to the source of the ad, there was no hesitancy about whether or not we were competent enough to do the job. Regardless of our previous experience or lack of it, regardless of our education, regardless of personality traits—yes, we could handle it. "Just give us a chance," we begged. We didn't need on-the-job training then. We needed the job. Why? Because we needed the money and the opportunity to develop skills to assure the further earning of money.

WE ARE NOT CRASHING the line at God's employment office. Why? Is it because we don't need the work? God needs workers, but do we need the work? We need a place of refuge as soon as the Russians invent an atomic bomb; we need someone to share his food with us when the famine comes; but do we need the work? No, we are earning a fair living. Of course, we are willing to "help out" whenever the "load gets too great," so we put God's work in our time budget alongside the Red Cross and the Community Chest.

But we do need the work as surely as God needs the workers. We need the satisfaction that comes from seeing children grow to worthy adulthood under our teaching. We need the tact we develop from "getting along." We need the humility we learn from cleaning the cobwebs out of the church basement. We need the strength and perseverance we develop from fighting over and over again for what is right. We need the skills we develop in those endless numbers of programs; we need the patience we learn when we try to "get one up." We need the intelligence and wisdom we gain from studying God's whole purpose and plan. In short, we need the work of the kingdom to make us fit to inherit it. All these benefits can be gained "on the job."

"Men Needed—Help Wanted." Shall we say also: "Work Needed—Men Available"?

BRIEFS

FORTESCUE, MISSOURI. — The women's department sponsored a Halloween party on October 28 and held their regular meeting on November 9 with Mrs. John Dunn as hostess. A special class for women is conducted each Sunday evening; the Three Standard Books are being studied.

Recent improvements made to the church include the purchasing of a new oil burner and redecoration. The paper was donated by Mrs. May Boyd; Mrs. Mable Chaney and others provided the labor.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND. —A district conference was held October 23 and 24. On the following Saturday evening, a reception was given for Elder Almer W. Sheehy, Apostle Maurice L. Draper and Reed M. Holmes; Elder Sheehy was the speaker on this occasion. On Sunday, October 31, the infant son of Philip and Helen Stern was blessed by Apostle Holmes and Elder Sheehy; and Sidney L. Thompson was ordained an elder by Apostle Holmes and Elder E. M. Brown.

NELSONVILLE, OHIO.—On October 27 the Nelsonville, The Plains, and Creola Branches sponsored a Halloween party at the Ralph Brown home in McArthur. Another party was held on October 29 in the church basement at Nelsonville. Missionary Loyd Adams visited the branch one evening. A reception was given on Friday, November 12, for Missionary Louis Zonker and his bride.

MAINE DISTRICT.—The Main District Conference was held at Jonesport on November 6 and 7, under the direction of District President Newman Wilson and his associates, Elders Chester Gray and Benjamin Carter. Apostle Maurice Draper, Bishop Don Chesworth, and Pastor Don Harvey were also present for the conference. Music was provided by the Jonesport choir under the direction of Geneva Church. Apostle Draper and Bishop Chesworth each gave a report on General Conference activities, after which district officers were elected for the coming year.

On Sunday, November 14, a conference was held at Stonington; speakers on this occasion were Apostle Draper, Bishop Chesworth, and Elder Don Harvey. The Stonington junior choir, directed by William Wilson, sang at all services during the day.

Both conferences were well attended.

Open Letter to Leaguers

Dear Leaguer:

With the challenge of the General Conference and the words of our prophet, "the period until the next General Conference, as already provided, must be one of unusual preparation for my church as an organization, for my people . . ." still ringing in our ears, the department is busy on plans for the first part of our new Zion's League Project.

December 1 is the time designated for all of us to go to work on "I Recognize My Stewardship By Complying With the Three Parts of the Financial Law" by filing tithing statements, keeping record books, and becoming regular tithe and offering-payers. We want to encourage each and all of you to read the November 6 "Herald" on the Zion's League Project. Sadi Moon and Frances Hartman are busy preparing programs intended to help your League promote the Financial Law.

Leagues and Leaguers can help by obtaining copies of STANDARDS FOR A STEWARD, 10 for 25¢, Herald House.

HANDBOOK OF THE FINANCIAL LAW, 25¢, Herald House.

YOUTH STEWARDSHIP IN PRINCIPLE AND PRACTICE, 15¢, Herald House.

YOUTH INCOME AND EXPENSE RECORD BOOK, or FAMILY INCOME
AND EXPENSE RECORD BOOK, 25¢ each, Herald House.

Perhaps you can work up a round table discussion for your League on why it is important that each and every Leaguer file his first financial statement, pay his tithing, and continue to keep a record. Your young people, through this, will be helped to catch a glimpse of the importance of the financial law as a spiritual law for the people of the church--that they must keep it if ever we are to have Zion--that it is not a man-made law, but a law given of God for the uplifting of his people, and that it is a definite requirement for which we will be held accountable --it is a law for the blessing of God's people. The books listed above will help you.

We hope to work through your district League leader in obtaining reports of what your League has done in order that we may publish the results in the "Herald."

May God bless you as you work in this project of sharing. He will, we know, if you seek him in all that you do.

Your co-workers,

Gulf States Priesthood Institute

The annual Gulf States District Priesthood Institute will be conducted at the Mobile, Alabama, church (1200 Baltimore) on December 10, 11, and 12. Those attending from outside of Mobile should notify Elder A. O. Crownover at the church address so that housing arrangements can be made. The banquet for priesthood members and their wives will be held on Saturday evening. (Unmarried members may bring a friend.) Tickets are $1.00 per person; reservations are to be made with Elder Crownover not later than Friday evening, December 10.

All priesthood members in the Gulf States District and surrounding territory are invited to attend.

Books Wanted

The Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, needs copies of the following: Stories of Our Hymns, by Carlyle F. Kueffer, Young People's Church History, and a Utah Concordance to the Book of Mormon.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Sharon Mildred, was born on August 6 at Stratford, Ontario, to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Smythe. She was blessed on October 17 by Elder Howard Schlotzhauer.

A daughter, Nancy Sue, was born on August 21 to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dearborn of Iowa City, Iowa.

DEATHS

DICKENSON.—Rena Hawes, was born April 19, 1916, at Spray, Oregon, and died February 21, 1948, at The Dalles, Oregon. She was a graduate nurse, and had resided in The Dalles for the past fifteen years.

She is survived by her husband, McCamant Dickenson; two daughters: Joan and Judy; a brother, A. Oden Hawes of Arlington, Oregon; two sisters: Mrs. Clarence Smith of The Dalles, and Mrs. John Rattray of Condon, Oregon; and her father, Amos J. Hawes of Condon. Funeral services were held at the Callaway Chapel, Elders J. L. Verhei and James C. Reneau officiating. Interment was in The Dalles cemetery.

PANTER.—Ella Elsie, was born on October 27, 1862, in Canyonville, Oregon, and died October 19, 1948, at Port Orford, Oregon. She was the widow of Captain William Russell Panter, who founded the Myrtle Point Transportation Company, and operated Bandon-Myrtle Point boats on Coquille River at the turn of the century. She had lived in Coos County, Oregon, for eighty-one years, and had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1900.

Surviving are four sons: T. Walter, William A., and Albert E. of Bandon, Oregon; Archie C. of Fort Smith, Arkansas; three daughters: Mrs. Mary McMullen of Myrtle Point, Oregon; Mrs. Ruby Giberson of Bridge, Oregon; and Mrs. Hatton of Port Orford, Oregon; two half-brothers: James E. McCue of Medford, Oregon, and Charles M. McCue of Empire, Oregon; two half-sisters: Mrs. Minnie Smith of Riverton, Oregon, and Mrs. Neely Anderson of Reedsport, Oregon; twenty grandchildren; thirty-seven great-grandchildren; and five great-great-grandchildren. Elder J. S. Giberson was in charge of the funeral.

HAWKINS.—Johnnie Jefferson, was born December 18, 1898, in Skinnerton, Alabama, and died at his home near Kennett, Missouri, on September 21, 1948, following a long illness. He was married to Mary Thornell in August, 1918. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since a small boy, remaining ever true to his covenant and putting Christ and the church first in his life. He was loved and respected by all who knew him and will be greatly missed.

He is survived by his wife, Mary; a daughter, Mrs. Mavis Smith; his mother, Mrs. Ella Hawkins, and two grandchildren, all of Kennett; three brothers: Heamon of Kennett; A. D. of Mobile, Alabama; and Ed of Selma, California; four sisters: Mrs. Bertha Fuller of Hornbeck, Louisiana; Mrs. Dolly Phillips of Peach Orchard, Missouri; Mrs. Eunice Cleveland and Mrs. Neil Hood of Kennett. Funeral services were held in the Kennett Reorganized Church, Priest Gomer Malone officiating.

MITCHELL.—Maude Brown, was born May 2, 1873, at New Virginia, Iowa, and died of a heart attack on August 17, 1948, at Galesburg, Illinois. She was married to John Mitchell on October 26, 1893, and lived in Warren County until 1923, when they moved to Tomah, Wisconsin. They made their home in Galesburg last March. Mrs. Mitchell was a member of the Reorganized Church.

She is survived by her husband; a son, Guy of Wisconsin; six daughters: Mrs. Arnold Lawrence of Tomah; Mrs. Walter Peterson and Mrs. Gesner Garber of Beloit, Wisconsin; Mrs. H. L. Davis and Mrs. A. T. Lindberg of Galesburg, Illinois; and Mrs. Albert Nelson of Henderson, Illinois; a sister, Mrs. Dora Thompson of Galesburg; a brother, Walter Brown of Alexis, Illinois; and seventeen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Kimber-West Chapel.

SCHEYTT.—Mary Ann, was born October 11, 1864, in York County, Pennsylvania, and died June 6, 1948, at Bozeman, Montana. She moved with her family to Illinois, where on January 6, 1883, she married Henry Scheytt. In 1888, they made their home in Montana, living in Springhill, Reese Creek, and Bozeman. She was a member of the Reorganized Church. Mr. Scheytt died in 1916.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Johannah Reese of Bozeman; a foster daughter, Mrs. Kermit Peterson, also of Bozeman; two brothers: George and John Blockniger of Marshall, Illinois; and one grandson. Three children preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Dokken, Nelson and Kippen Sunset Chapel, Elder Harley Loranec officiating.

MACAULEY.—Eliza Howell White, was born on September 5, 1855, and died November 16, 1948. During the Civil War years, the White family lived near Gailatin, Missouri; four of the boys, Alfred, I. N., D. C., and Rufus were early missionaries and workers in the Reorganized Church. Eliza, also, was a tireless worker and did much to keep the young people busy and interested in the church. She usually led the song services and encouraged her children to sing and play. Her early married life was in and near Newton, Rhodes, and Des Moines, Iowa; in 1900, she and her family moved to Independence. For the past sixteen years, during which time she was a semi-invalid, she was cared for by members of her family, especially her daughter, Clara. Throughout her long illness, she remained cheerful, encouraging her friends when they came to visit. After making a trip to the Society Islands in 1911 to visit her daughter, Belle Savage, whose husband was a missionary, she made California her home.

She is survived by five sons, two daughters; ten grandchildren, nineteen great-grandchildren; and five great-great-grandchildren.

ADAMS.—Georgia Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Collins, was born in Missouri on September 1, 1871, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on October 1, 1948.

She is survived by her husband, Emmett L. Adams of the home in Independence, Missouri; two stepsons Robert O. Adams of Blythe, California, and Arthur L. Crocker of Long Beach, California; and a brother, Garver R. Collins of Independence. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the George C. Carson chapel. Interment was at Nevada, Missouri.

BRIEFS

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA DISTRICT.—The annual district conference was held in Lincoln on November 13 and 14. Elder Clarence Williams was elected president for the coming year, with Elders Paul E. Goodrich and Ernest G. Keller as counselors. Elder Luther Schmoyer will be director of religious education for the district; Mrs. Ernest Keller, secretary; Mrs. Capitola Mechling director of music; and Mrs. Edith Niehaus, women's leader. Apostle D. T. Williams and Missionary J. Charles May were guest speakers at the conference. Vinton Wight was approved for ordination to the office of deacon.

NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN DISTRICT.—The Northern Saskatchewan District convention was held in Saskatoon on October 29, 30 and 31. Visiting ministers were Seventies E. Y. Hunker and Ernest Ledsworth, Non-resident Pastor W. J. Cornish, and Elders G. A. Jordan and E. L. Bowerman. Following the prayer service each morning, classes were conducted by members of the priesthood; Seventies Hunker and Ledsworth were the evening speakers. Four young persons, Donna Pettit, Frances Gendron, David Ward, and James Kirkup were baptized. Garth Henry, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Lester, was blessed, and Alma William Piedt was ordained to the office of priest. At the business meeting, the $789.80 radio fund was recommended for the purchasing of a missionary car, with the general church contributing the other fifty per cent. The conference voted to defer action on the matter until all contributors can be contacted for opinions.

ROSE LAKE, MICHIGAN.—Rose Lake Mission was inaugurated on Sunday evening, November 14, in the Grange Hall near Rose Lake at the corner of Stohl and Upton Roads. Pastor Francis H. Boman was in charge of the service, and Missionary Warren Chelline gave the address. He also conducted a series of meetings which closed on November 28; twelve of the fifty-nine persons attending the first evening were nonmembers. George Whitmore and Gloria Foster were in charge of music during the series. Elder Clyde Youngs of Michigan State College also assisted in the services. Much credit is due the missionary group, headed by Sister Jennie Carleton, and the Saints of the Rose Lake vicinity for the success of this new mission.

Suggestions for Christmas

Christmas is time of celebration and giving of gifts, yet sometimes we give only to ourselves. A gift that will enable someone to more effectively make Christ live in the hearts of men is certainly a gift to Him. How much more appropriate, then, is such a gift, either to the church or an individual. Here are a few suggestions for such gifts.

SVE
AAA
$80

The favorite with thousands for visual education work in the church. Will accommodate 2x2 slides and single or double frame filmstrips. 300 watt lamp, coated lens, and automatic filmstrip rewind.

TDC
Model B, 150 Watt.....$39.75
Model C, 300 Watt.....$49.70
Model D, 300 Watt, fan cooled$62.20
Case$8.50

The ideal projector for the limited budget. It may be converted from the Model B to the Model C at a later date for only $9.95. A filmstrip attachment will be available after January 1.

Webster
Model 80
Wire Recorder
$149.50

Record church services for shut-ins, sermons for transcription or analysis, or choir numbers for more rapid training. The ideal way to record Patriarchal Blessings, letters, and memos for later transcription. Foot control and ear phones available as accessories.

The Forest

The trees, God's soldiers,
 Have slowly marched, through centuries of time,
 Up from the water's edge, their home,
 Extending their bridgehead in a barren land,
 Clothing the shores and plains,
 The foothills and the mountainsides
 With garments of living green,
 Giving the nude earth shade for the summer's sun,
 Mantle for the winter's snow
 And beauty all the year.

HANDEL'S "THE MESSIAH" ON COLUMBIA NETWORK

"Herald" readers are reminded again of the broadcast of Handel's "The Messiah" which will be given over the Columbia Network on the evening of Sunday, December 19, by the Messiah Choir of Independence, Missouri, and an orchestra of forty-three players selected from the Kansas City Philharmonic. The director will again be Mr. Franklyn S. Weddle, who is director of music for the General Church. Soloists will be Josephine Mader, soprano; Annajeon Brown, contralto; Garland Tickemyer, tenor; and Hardin Van Deursen, bass.

This year's broadcast should be a most advantageous one. It is expected at this writing that the program will be made available to the entire Columbia Network, except that portion of it which is fed from Los Angeles, which, because of the time differential on the Pacific coast, will still be committed to commercial programs. This year for the first time, an hour and a half, instead of an hour as heretofore, has been allotted to the broadcast. The time will be from 10:30 p.m. to midnight, Central Standard Time; or 11:30 p.m. to 1:00 a.m., Eastern Standard Time; 9:30 to 11:00 p.m., Mountain Time; 8:30 to 10:00 p.m., Pacific Time.

Local pastors and musical leaders may render the church a real service by ascertaining whether or not their local CBS station will carry "The Messiah" and, if it is, publicizing the event as widely as possible in church bulletins, newspapers, announcements to civic clubs, and promotion among church choirs and music clubs. Public school music supervisors might be willing to publicize it among school children.

The Messiah Choir, now in its thirty-second year, has an enrollment of 274 members and is gaining greater recognition each year for its musical excellence. This year's performance will be its tenth on the Columbia Network. The broadcast will originate from the ballroom of the Hotel Muehlebach in Kansas City and will be closed to the public.

A performance for the people of Independence and Kansas City will be given in the Auditorium on the evening of Friday, December 17, accompanied by the Independence Symphony Orchestra. Soloists will be Miriam Bischoff, Lila Livingston, Don Pyper, and Sam Gillham.

MERLIN, ONTARIO, congregation had a special program on Sunday, November 21, for the dedication of the new pews in their church. This announcement will incur the admiration and envy of some U. S. congregations, who have waited a long time for their church pews, with no success. Perhaps we'd better ask for a little advice across the northern border, where folk seem to know how to get things done.

Robert T. Brown has served the Merlin congregation as pastor since 1931. A group began in 1902 and was first called the Stevenson Branch, under the leadership of Samuel Brown. The Merlin Branch was organized October 4, 1917, and in 1919 the Stevenson group offered their church building to the Merlin Branch, moved it to the new location and disposed of the old lot. Since 1917, there have been three pastors, John Dent, 1917-1927; Charles Osborne, 1928-1930; and now Brother Brown.

In honor of the occasion, the Merlin Saints produced a pretty program folder which includes a history of the branch that members will treasure.

Special Holiday Values

Return to Normal

It has been a long time since anybody has seriously mentioned a "return to normal," which is probably because we have had artificially controlled and chaotic conditions so long that nobody knows what is normal any more. There are young people who have grown up, married, and had children, who have never known what normal economic conditions are.

However, if you are very observing (and very hopeful) you may be able to detect a slight quiver in the economic atmosphere of the world and in the store windows that would indicate a tiny downward shading of prices, hinting of a return to normal. At least there is an upward lift of the clerk's brow when you enter a shop, indicating a reviving interest in the customer. And those far-seeing economic weather prophets, the merchants, who know what is happening in wholesale three months before it hits retail, are welcoming the buying public again. There is an abundance of good merchandise on the shelves, and the old-fashioned laws of competition are beginning to show up again in some fields.

Perhaps we are getting ready for a return to normal, unless we get into another war, in which case all the rules will be indefinitely suspended.

Special Values

Like a nostalgic memory from the past, one sees an occasional sign in a shop window, reading, "Special Holiday Value."

I have been thinking of that sign lately, and considering whether there are not some moral and spiritual implications in it that we have been missing.

When you come to consider them, you observe that the worshipers of Santa Claus do have a set of "special holiday values." If they have been wise, prudent, saving, moderate people in ordinary times, they cast economic caution aside when the Holidays come, and go into a mild orgy of spending. The rich reds and greens of the Yule decorations, the pungent scent of fir and spruce trees, the glitter of gold and silver tinsel, all tend to make them fall for practically anything with a price tag on it. In starry-eyed delirium, they spend beyond their means now, although they know they will have headaches and "first-of-the-year blues," as one friend calls them, when the bills arrive.

Other people have special sets of values, too, for the Holidays. Take the casual New Year's celebrators, for example, who so easily change from casuals to casualties. In most times, wisely, they do not drink alcoholic liquors. But at the turn of the year, they substitute a special set of values for their regular ones, and cut loose. And many a person who goes to a party with this other set of values in his heart, arrives prematurely at the cemetery, where he must leave all values of this world behind him.

Christmas Values

Those who worship Jesus, the Babe in the Manger, also have a special set of values for the holiday season, and it may be good for us to examine them.

For those who take Christmas seriously as well as joyfully, the great personality of the season is Jesus, not Santa Claus. On December 25, whether the chronology is good or bad, they celebrate the birthday of the Prince of Peace, the Savior of the world, the Son of God.

For the follower of Santa Claus, there is the revelry with a paper hat, the tin horn, the tinsel, the extravagant presents, and the enormous feast in which the celebrator is stuffed tighter than the turkey he has eaten. For music he has "Jingle Bells," some ancient Yule songs, and a few of the more earthy of the carols. Many of the traditions of Yule are pretty, harmless, inoffensive, and pleasurable, without having much significance.

For the Christian, Christmas is more of a feast of the soul than of the body, though he, too, will thoroughly enjoy, in their proper place, the bounties and comforts of the earth. But he does not live by these things alone. His set of holiday values lifts him to a higher spiritual and intellectual plane than he occupies during the rest of the year. His values do not cast him down—they lift him up.

At the present time, the Christian rejoices that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He rejoices; he reads again in the Gospels how the birth occurred, and he tells the story to his children. His heart is touched again with a kind of transfiguration as he considers the heavenly chorus that sang, the experiences of the shepherds, and of the Magi.

For music he has the old hymns, the proclamation of "Hark! the herald angels sing," the sweetness of "O, little town of Bethlehem," the exultation of "To us a child of hope is born," the victory of "Hail the blest morn," and the beauty of "O Holy Night." For him there is the majesty and the glory of "The Messiah," which brings him at once close to prayer and to tears. In art, he can share with the greatest men of the ages the beauty they have created under the inspiration of this most important event in the spiritual history of man.

But one cannot permit himself to go on listing the wonderful and beautiful things associated with the Christian traditions of Christmas.

Rural Church folks Visit Lamoni in festival

The following is from the Des Moines Register. It was written by Biloine Whiting, editor of the Lamoni Chronicle.

LAMONI, IOWA.—The Lamoni church was empty last Sunday. The church school rooms over the furniture store were unnaturally quiet, and the doors of the Coliseum, where most of Lamoni meets to worship, were locked.

The fall visiting festival was being held.

Back in 1943, energetic twenty-seven-year-old E. J. Gleazer, jr., had not been a pastor here long before he saw that, despite the rural interest of the community, the town's 1,500 people really knew little about the farmers who lived all around them.

DEvised PROGRAM

To get them together, he devised a program of visiting. On one Sunday, everyone in town would take his dinner and go visit one of the seven country churches around Lamoni. The next Sunday, the town would be host to all of the rural people.

On that first visiting Sunday in 1943, people were dubious about the idea, but they went. The theme was built around man's "stewardship of the soil," and when the rural people had returned the visit the following week, both groups voted to continue the program.

Early last Sunday morning, long lines of cars bound for the country pulled out from seven designated gathering places.

In them people carefully balanced casseroles of beans, pumpkin pies, and potato salad.

When they arrived at the rural church assigned to them, they were met at the door by the pastor who shook their hands, and by the farmer's wife who relieved them of their food.

Most townspeople went in time for church school, stayed through for church, and were on hand when the seats were pushed back to make room for the long tables of food.

Farm wives brought bowls of gelatin covered with whipped cream, and roasters of fried chicken. Spread out on the tables, it looked like twice enough food for everyone.

Children pressed up to the tables first, and when their trays were filled, the adults filed around in a slow moving line.

Some ate in the church, others overflowed onto the church lawns, newly cut for the occasion. By the time the desserts were gone, it was time for the afternoon service.

Today the rural churches are going to return the visits.

CHURCHES LISTED

Arrangements have been made for the visitors to eat in the lower auditorium of the Coliseum, the grade school gym, and in Masonic hall.

Churches taking part in this experiment in friendliness are Andover, Lone Rock, Riley Center, Evergreen, Bloomington, Davis City, and Oland.

Across the Desk

From Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin, November 22, 1948:

It is with some degree of regret that I find it necessary to bring my ministry to a close in the Chicago district. I have enjoyed working with the fine group of people we have in Chicago and feel that they have been able to make a contribution to me and that I have been able to make a contribution to them. There are many things we wanted to do which we have not accomplished. There are some things started which we have not been able to finish. There are some prospects whom I should like to continue working with until they make their decision to come into the church. In spite of all this, I feel we have accomplished some things and have laid the foundation for other accomplishments. I am sure Brother Stuart will be able to take up the work and carry to completion some of the activities we have started and will be able to render a ministry in some ways and accomplish some things I could not do.

Brother Robert T. Brown of Merlin, Ontario, writes to advise us that Brother R. H. Jones, of Erie Beach, has died. He adds:

Sister Brown and I enjoyed our trip to and from the Conference, also the associations while there.

We appreciated meeting Brother and Sister Mervin and being able to converse with them in the Tahitian language once more. Sister Brown taught Sister Mervin as a little girl to play the organ. We were sorry to get a letter from them this past week telling us they would not be able to meet us in our home as had been planned.

Church Beautiful Contest

The Church Beautiful Contest, as was announced in the Saints' Herald of February 28, closed on October 31. The first award went to Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri, and the second award was won by the Second Church, Columbus, Ohio.

We are glad to know that several of our churches made an effort to beautify their grounds, and we think this is very commendable. Our church may be judged by the appearance of the building and grounds. Let us make them more attractive.

"Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters"

By G. Leslie DeLapp

IN THE FIRST CHAPTER of Genesis, verses twenty-nine to thirty-two, is recorded the fact of man's creation and the purpose:

And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

Through the creation, God gave man life and dominion over the fishes of the sea, and the fowl of the air, over the cattle, over all the earth, and over every creeping thing upon the earth. And, as he gave life, he also gave the physical elements to sustain life.

From the beginning of God's relationship with man, the act of giving has been clearly designated as vital to man's welfare. It is the best way in which man can give evidence of his kinship with God. To understand reasonably well the underlying principles of giving, one needs to accept God as the creator and giver of all. With this as a premise upon which to discuss giving, let us examine some of the other evidences recorded in the Bible that indicate the extent to which giving affects the spiritual development of man.

The prophets of Old Testament times taught that sacrificial offerings were essential to the true worship of God, and that concern for the poor could best be evidenced through the sharing of their worldly goods with those in need. It was with this in mind that the writer of Ecclesiastes encouraged the people to acts of charity. To "cast thy bread upon the waters," though a figure of speech, was an entreaty to people to be unselfish in their relations with their fellow men.

Isaiah also revealed the concern of God for those not blessed with worldly possessions:

When the poor and needy seek water and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I, the Lord, will hear them; I, the God of Israel, will not forsake them.

Through God's greatest gift of all, the gift of his Son, there were brought to mankind continued revelations regarding the relationship of men, one to another. There was the occasion when Jesus was teaching his disciples, recorded in St. Luke, chapter six. When admonishing them to love their enemies, to do good, to judge not, there was also emphasized the need to give:

Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over. . . . For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again.

JESUS was always considerate of the poor, and yet there was a time when the very act of giving, in and of itself, was of greater importance than aiding the poor. The story is told in the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew of the woman who came to Jesus with an alabaster box of precious ointment and poured it on his head as he sat in the house:

But when some saw this, they had indignation, saying, Unto what purpose is this waste? For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor. When they said thus, Jesus understood them, and he said unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? For she hath wrought a good work upon me. For ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always.

Jesus was concerned in this instance not as to the benefits accruing to the recipient of the gift, but the value to the giver in the giving of the gift.

Upon another occasion, Paul, in his letter to the Corinthians, admonished the saints to be liberal:

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver.

And in another instance, he reproved his fellow ministers for taking credit for certain work, which credit belonged to God:

So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase.

There are many other illustrations in the Bible, which show the goodness of God in bestowing gifts upon mankind.

FROM SUCH EVIDENCE, we have learned the need for applying the principle of giving to our own lives. The days through which we are passing clearly indicate the need for man to learn not only the principles involved in the act of giving, but also how properly to apply the principles learned.

It is doubtful that at any time in our history there has been more generosity expressed by men in extending physical sustenance and social services to others than at the present time; nor has there been greater need than that which exists today, for the greatest war in the history of mankind has left millions of people without the basic necessities of life, and giving has taken place on a greater scale than ever before. But we may well question whether or not we have learned to give wisely. Billions of dollars in goods and commodities and services are being given by our country to other nations of the world. Some of these billions of dollars have ultimately found their way into the hands of those who not only have been unappreciative of the gift received and of the generous attitude of the giver, but have used these resources to enhance their own position in opposition to the rest of the world. However, other billions of dollars or the equivalent in goods has finally reached the impoverished people in other lands.

America has well been referred to as the "bread basket of the world," but there is the possibility that continuous and unrestricted giving may result in its own impoverishment. Undoubtedly, it is possible to develop techniques in giving that will enable us as a nation to continue to give help and bring about a rehabilitation of peoples whose countries have been devastated by war; and as we are able to develop these techniques, it should do much to avoid war.

IN RECENT YEARS, great strides have been made in our country through organized efforts to minister to the needy, to the youth, to the sick, and to the unfortunate. Evidence of this is given in the results achieved in the Community Chest campaign. In this effort, there was demonstrated the willingness on the part of men and women to serve without compensation, to consecrate their time, energies, and talents to raise the sum needed for carrying on the work of sixty social and youth agencies. And yet, as one engages in this humanitarian project, it is quite noticeable that there are many who have not as yet learned the real spiritual values which come through the act of giving.

Many stories could be told by the workers in this campaign. Some of them never will be told, but if they could be, they might illustrate clearly the need for education in the art of giving. Here is just one example of the many which came to my attention. One of the workers called on a young man, extending to him the invitation to make a contribution, only to be met with the flat refusal, "I don't owe anyone anything, and I'm not asking anyone for anything." This shows a complete lack of understanding of the dependency of man upon man—a refusal to assume any social responsibility, and in such refusal never to know the spiritual warmth that comes to one who gives freely and has concern for the welfare of his fellow men.

ONE OF THE GREAT CONTRIBUTIONS religion makes to the onward progress of civilization is indoctrination of the idea that men are dependent upon God and upon each other, and in that indoctrination to teach the elementary principles which are involved in giving. If men did not sense the great need for giving a portion of that which God has given them, civilization would soon be a thing of the past—there would be no churches, no hospitals, no health clinics, no homes for the aged; our cultural and educational organization and institutions would be relatively few and insignificant. All of these are dependent upon the voluntary giving of millions of people; and if giving were suddenly curtailed, the great spiritual values which we enjoy would become lost. Life would indeed be a drab existence. This being true, how much more wonderful life would be for all of us if men everywhere would open up their hearts to give according to their ability. The act of giving is fundamentally an expression of the heart, as is illustrated by the widow's giving two mites:

And he looked up and saw the rich men casting in their gifts into the treasury and saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites. And he said, Of a truth I say unto you that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all. For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offering of God; but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

But, as giving is an act expressing the attitude of the heart, it can also be enriched by the exercise of wisdom in the giving. Whether the widow was wise in making her gift is not recorded, but there is no question that in the giving there was evidence of her being great in stature and worthy of the Master's commendation.

The benefits which come to those today who receive also bring benefits to those who give. As Paul has stated, "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

THE REAL ART OF GIVING is to be found first in the acknowledgment that good gifts come from God, and that it is better to give than to receive. These fundamentals of human living have come down to us through the ages, and yet man learns slowly. But there is evidence of the fact that he is learning. As long as man continues to give, he will live, and what is true of the individual is true of the group—is true of the nation. For all that we have received is, in the final analysis, a gift from God to be used in the interests of men everywhere.

Through the act of giving, fear may be eliminated from the hearts of men; peace may prevail among

As We Forgive

By R. J. MILLER

PETER'S QUESTION, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive," is indicative of the consideration given by that disciple on the matter of forgiveness. It also appears to reveal a strain which was upon Peter, testing his powers of patient suffering and understanding toward those who aggrieved him.

It is easy to envision the impulsive Peter chafing at the restraint laid upon him by Jesus—irked because of certain transgressions against him for which he may have granted forgiveness several times, secretly hoping there would come a day when he might withhold forgiveness and exact a suitable punishment.

Peter probably felt it was a hard thing for Jesus to require continued forgiveness from him. One might forgive several times and forget the affront; but to continually forgive a fault would tax any man's powers of endurance. Yet this is exactly what the Master told him he must do; it is exactly what he would have us do also.

Jesus was most concerned about his disciples. He held their best interests at heart, and he knew those interests would be best served by a strict manner of life which could and would eventually give them a peace, understanding, and power surpassing their comprehension. He fully realized continual forgiveness was a hard thing for them to develop; for they were just as human as we are today, and just as lacking in complete understanding, tolerance, and love. He also knew the desire was within them to become adopted members of the family of God (Ephesians 1: 5). He knew the potential power was resident within them to acquire the love and understanding which would make forgiving an easy thing for them (Matthew 11: 27-30).

Surely Jesus did not find it hard to forgive those who crucified him (Luke 23: 35), for he understood all things—the twisted thinking inspired by basic human passions—greed, ambition, fear, envy, jealousy, superstitiousness, and the like. He knew mankind had many things to learn, a lot of growing to do, a lot of sacrifices to make, and the power of love to know. In the travail of sorrow over the condition of man, Jesus suffered his Gethsemane.

IN THE BEAUTIFUL LESSON on forgiveness in the fifth chapter of Matthew, beginning with the fortieth verse, Jesus tells us emphatically to "resist not evil" and proceeds to explain his meaning by illustrations. He does not tell us to partake of evil when tempted—to yield to sin; but rather, he makes it quite clear we are not to retaliate by using devices of evil when offended. Paul explains it in these plain and simple words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Romans 12: 21.

God does not show partiality among the creatures of his creation, but causes his "sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth his rain upon the just and upon the unjust." He loves impartially, and because we are predestined by him to be his children (by adoption through Jesus Christ), he commands us to do likewise.

The second great commandment (Matthew 22: 38) does not excuse us from loving some; neither does it allow us to love others less than we love ourselves. Nor does the Golden Rule, as given by our Lord (Matthew 7: 21), allow us to behave toward our fellow men in a manner other than we would have them behave toward us. The law is very clear and definite on this matter of love.

The happiness and well-being of each of us depends upon the condition of society around us. Complete peace, harmony, and joy can be obtained only in an atmosphere of love, where each desires the same benefits for others he desires for himself. In a neighborhood where this condition does not exist, Jesus makes our duty very clear—"Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven."

WE MUST BE WILLING to go over halfway—we must be willing to go all the way. (This also applies in the church and its members.) Again Jesus tells us there is no special merit in doing the usual thing, which is to meet the other party halfway, for "if ye love only them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans the same? Ye are therefore commanded to be perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect."

It is so important for us to appreciate the manner in which God treats us. He behaves towards us as though we were his equal. In the matter of forgiveness, he deals with us exactly as he should with one who has already proved himself worthy of sonship—indeed, exactly as he would with Jesus Christ. We are taught to pray, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." He does not condition our forgiveness upon behavior less than godlike. We can be forgiven only in ratio to our ability to forgive.

God has given us a potential of the qualities he possesses; he has given us the law to guide us; he has given his Son—it is his wish that we use our godly powers in obedience to the law and, in the name of Christ, come into his kingdom.

Peter Stood Up

By Evan A. Fry

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling in Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed and marveled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? . . . And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this? Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine. But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you and hearken to my words. . . .

—Acts 2: 1-8, 12-14.

PETER HAS ALWAYS BEEN for me one of the most interesting characters of the New Testament. Commentators and Bible students are still discussing the pros and cons of the many contradictory traits of character of which he was compounded. We cannot always discern his motives or know the intents of his heart. At times, he is bold, and at times, cowardly. At times, he is quick-tempered, careless of speech, and even violent, and at other times, he is so tender and gentle that he is easily melted to tears. At times, he is flaming with eagerness and zeal; and at other times, he falls the easy victim to a hopeless and abject despair. At times, he is humble—as when he left all to follow Jesus after the great draught of fishes; and at other times, he is proud and boastful of his faithfulness. At times, he seems certain of Jesus' divinity and Messiahship—as when his wife's mother is healed at Capernaum, or the daughter of Jairus raised from the dead; and on another occasion, following the death and burial of Jesus, he lost all his confidence, forgot the promises of a resurrection, and declared to his former associates in the business, "I go a-fishing." At one time, he was so devoted to Jesus and so eager to be with him that he walked on the water to reach him; but in the Garden of Gethsemane, he went to sleep when his Master asked him to watch with him one hour. On one occasion, he vowed that he would never deny his Lord, and soon after denied him three times. Certainly here was a strange blend of conflicting emotions, traits, and urges. Yet this same weak, vacillating, impetuous, fearful, doubtful Peter was called "the Rock," and he became not only one of the top leaders but also one of the earliest martyrs of the Christian Church.

ONE OF THE GREATEST PROOFS of Christ's resurrection is to be found in the change that came over Peter. Seldom in the world's history has so great a change happened to a man in so short a time. When Peter saw with his own eyes and knew that Jesus was alive, after he had been crucified, dead, and buried, all of Peter's grief, bitterness, cynicism, skepticism, doubt, and vacillation simply disappeared. The great fact of the resurrection had worked a miracle in his life; and for the first time, Peter began to be the kind of man Jesus had tried to get him to be—the kind of man Jesus saw it was possible for him to be. The experience of Pentecost supplemented and complemented that change, and it is a brand new Peter who emerges from the opening chapters of the Book of Acts.

Earlier in his Christian experience, after he had "followed afar off," Peter "sat down" in the courtyard of the high priest, watching to see what would happen to Jesus at his trial. There was no one to stand up with Jesus or to stand up for him. All the other disciples left him and fled; only Peter remained, and he first followed afar off, then sat down to watch. Following the ascension, to which Peter was probably a witness, he first began to "stand up." In Acts 1: 15, we read that he "stood up" among the disciples, about a hundred and twenty in number and took the lead in the selection of Matthias as a successor to Judas. He stood up among the people who looked to him for leadership and began for the first time really to exercise that leadership.

By the day of Pentecost, he had reached the place where he could stand up even among his enemies. When the bystanders and the curious throngs at Jerusalem marveled at hearing the story of Jesus preached in so many different tongues by men who knew only the dialect of Galilee, some wondered, some scoffed, and some mocked, charging that the speakers were full of new wine. But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and preached them a sermon that converted three thousand souls in one day! At last Peter had learned to stand up for what he knew and for the Master he loved.

PETER STOOD UP again many times on occasions following this, championing the cause of the Christ he had once denied. Following Pentecost, Peter and John went up to the temple to pray and healed the lame man at the gate called Beautiful. That event attracted a crowd, and again Peter stood up and preached Christ. The priests, the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees (who, because they did not believe in the possibility of any resurrection, scoffed at the idea of a resurrected Jesus) arrested Peter and John and kept them in prison overnight, but that did not stop some five thousand from believing the words Peter had spoken under the continuing power of Pentecost when he stood up for his Lord. Peter had occasion to stand up boldly again the following morning when the officials questioned him about the excitement of the previous day. Those officials, having the healed man before them, could not question the fact that a miracle had been done, but they nevertheless commanded Peter and John to neither speak nor teach in the name of Jesus. Released from the hearing, Peter and John went back to the disciples and joined them in the prayer: "Now, O Lord, behold their threatenings and grant unto thy servants that, with all boldness, they may speak thy word."

The Spirit of God can work equally great changes in the life of any man if he will make himself worthy of and ready for a Pentecostal experience. It can make weak men strong, cowardly men brave, doubtful men sure, vacillating men stable, proud and boastful men humble, quick-tempered men patient, and hopeless men zealous. Under the influence of that Spirit, men who once followed afar off, or fearfully denied their Lord, or gave up in indifference and skeptical despair, once again stand up and begin to speak and act boldly on the side of what they know is right.

Too many today follow afar off, then sit down and watch when the times and conditions in which they live demand action—demand that men stand up and speak out and act boldly regardless of the cost to themselves. Too many men today see sin and immorality and oppression and greed and suffering and injustice with either indifference or fear of the consequences if they stand up and speak out as Peter did. Too many men who have within them the potentialities and capacities for leader-

"You and Who Else?"

By MARGARET GIBSON

PERHAPS THE GREATEST GIFT God has ever given to man is his free agency. Without it, we could never develop through wise choices, and through learning from unwise choices, into strong characters. If we were denied the right to choose wrongly, we should be right merely because we didn't know how to be anything else—and surely there would be no credit due us on that account. We should be spiritual jellyfish, and who ever heard of jellyfish building the kingdom of God?

On the other hand, free agency can be sadly misused. Our freedom to enjoy life and to make our choices must not interfere with another's right to do the same. There is the story of two men who collided on the sidewalk. The first apologized, the second raised his fist to strike the other, saying, "Get out of my way. I was in the middle of the sidewalk. This is a free country, isn't it?"

"Yes," responded the first, "it certainly is, but put your fist down. Your freedom ends just half an inch from my nose!"

God has a wonderful system of checks and balances. Along with free agency, he gave us each a conscience.

We do not live to ourselves alone.

ship see the needs and lacks of men, see and hear people crying for leadership, and merely sit down and watch, making no effort to "stand up" and take their place among the people who need them. At one time Peter followed afar off, sat down and watched, denied his Lord, and then went fishing when he thought it was all over. But after the resurrection and Pentecost, he stood up.

"Watch ye therefore; stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong."

Sometimes we hear people say, "It's my life. Let me live it my own way. It's no one's business but mine what I do with it."

This is false reasoning. In the first place, our lives are not ours. They belong to God, and they are purchased, before our birth, by Christ. Our parents have a tremendous investment in us. Our friends and neighbors pay taxes so we can attend school. Teachers have been trained to teach us. Somewhere there is a husband or wife growing up for us, to whom what we do with our lives is of the deepest importance, and our children will be deeply influenced by what we do now.

As a matter of fact, we belong to God, to Christ, to our families, and to society—and it is an eternal truth, as Jesus says, that when we lay down our lives for these, we find our true selves.

In the second place, it is the business of others what we do with our lives, because what we do with our lives profoundly affects their lives. Our freedom, figuratively speaking, ends just a half inch from their noses. It is said that a serious wrongdoing affects at least twenty lives besides our own.

WE MAY THINK this is a gross exaggeration—but a case in point will offer one example of what we mean.

In a western city, a man left one of the clubs, very intoxicated. He drove like a fiend up the main thoroughfare, hitting and killing two women and seriously injuring the husband of one of the women. A clever and crafty lawyer "horned in" on the case and received a cut of one third of the damages. The driver hadn't enough money to pay the damages, but had been bonded by his company which had to pay the damages. There were three step-children involved. The injured man (who incidentally didn't get enough to pay his doctor's bills from the damages) was lamed; discouraged and heartsick, he eventually took to drinking. The three children were adopted by two people they'd never known before. A brother of small means had to take care of the injured man for a year. Three people who loaned the injured man money, when he was trying to get on his feet, lost their money.

The injured man cashed a worthless check to pay some lodge dues. The lodge lost money and had the man arrested. A young lawyer was drawn into the case to defend him—free. Two policemen, who saw the driver in town, intoxicated and bumping into other cars, knew they should stop him, but didn't and they will know all their lives that they are partly to blame for the catastrophe.

Count them. There are twenty at least. This is a true incident. A man had exercised his free agency to get drunk, and at least twenty persons were involved before he got out of town. Two were killed; another maimed, discouraged, and eventually jailed; three children affected; at least four persons lost money in the affair. That driver had never seen seventeen of the people involved when he took those drinks, but his drinking profoundly affected their lives—many of them for years to come.

No, it isn't our own business what we do with our lives. Any number of incidents could be cited to show the terrible cost others pay for our mistakes. How many millions of people have suffered when brilliant, capable leaders have used their free agency to increase their own power!

FORTUNATELY there are two sides to the picture. Free agency and conscience always should, and often do, walk hand in hand.

Free agency gives us the right to dare to do, conscience limits that choice so that we dare to do and want to do right. As Shakespeare puts it:

I dare do all that may become a man,
Who dares do less, is none.

Perhaps some may say, "Whose free agency is limited by anything, even conscience, is really no longer free."

This is a false conclusion. Conscience, at first, may seem to limit, but it is soon clear that conscience is the one thing which keeps free agency free. We could, of course, use our free agency to make complete drunkards of ourselves; when this had been accomplished, we would be slaves to drink, no longer possessing our free agency. We can use our free agency to squander money, betray our friends, and wreck our health only to find that we are slaves to poverty, loneliness, and illness; then, exercise our agency as we will, we find it is no longer free. But when conscience—or God—directs free agency, how different the picture is! We choose to be chaste and are forever free from the chains of unchastity. We choose to be saving, and we educate our children. We choose to be kind and find ourselves rich in friends. We choose not to drink and soon find a group of fine people—healthy and with clear minds as associates. We choose to study and find that we have knowledge of priceless value.

WHAT CAN ONE GOOD MAN accomplish in his neighborhood? First, his wife and children love and trust him. His children grow up like him. People bring their problems to him. They honor and respect him. He becomes a scout leader and a church worker where he can fill the thirsting minds and hearts of youth with the living water of truth. How many more than twenty people he blesses!

In the November Reader's Digest is the true story of a doctor who has helped to care for over twenty homeless boys. He gave them love, faith, and courage. How many good homes has he helped to establish? These boys will choose good women to be their wives, they will raise children to be clean, honest, and upright, and the fruitage of that man's living effort will go singing through the corridors of time.

No, our lives are not ours alone—they belong to God, to society, to eternity. How very important it is, then, that we give them back to God to be invested by him.

I lay in dust life's glory dead

Forgiveness

By ERMINA ERICKSON

THERE ARE PERSONS who believe there is no such thing as forgiveness. They believe that "as ye sow, so shall ye reap" and that forgiveness has nothing to do with it. They contend that if you plant wheat, it will come up wheat, and no amount of forgiveness would ever change that law. It seems to me they get mixed up in the use or application of the law they have in mind. If it is wheat that has been planted, there can be no need for forgiveness—it was good seed in the first place. But if evil seed had been planted, the need for forgiveness is apparent. Forgiveness in this instance would consist of digging up the foul seed and planting good seed. We know that not all seed which is planted grows. It depends upon other conditions beside its own viability—the rain, sunshine, and soil. A weed seed may lie dormant for years and then come up and flourish, but good seeds usually decay or are harvested in the season of their planting.

For every principle taught in the field of harmonious living, we can find an analogy in nature. No one in his right mind would go out and plant foul seeds—they are already there; neither would one in his right mind go out and deliberately plant the seeds of discord among his fellow men. Those seeds are already there. Many are the persons who stir up the seeds of discord among their fellow human beings and cause them to flourish. A good farmer plows and harrows his fields well before planting and keeps right on cultivating the ground to keep the weeds down. He does not forgive the weeds for growing but uproots them; he would not forgive himself if he allowed the weeds to grow.

FORGIVENESS is something that works in a higher plane than the physical; it is of the mind. Some people in the time of Jesus were technical about forgiveness; they wanted to have a definite number of times stated wherein they forgave the offender. I think they wanted to feel free to punish the offender as they desired. They considered seven times enough, but Jesus declared seventy times seven was more to the point. Forgiveness is not a mathematical proposition; it is a matter of spirit. Jesus knew well enough that we must have a forgiving spirit at all times.

We are prone to think others are trying to harm us, but are they really? Are not the hurts and heartaches that others stir up in us like the weed seeds which are always in the soil, ready to sprout the moment conditions arise conducive to their growth? I have often felt that the trouble is in ourselves, and that we blame others as an excuse for our own faults. It seems that few are willing to shoulder their own burdens; they are too ready to quote, "Woe unto him through whom the offense cometh," and quickly prepare to bring the woeful condition to the offender.

I once heard a sermon by one of our elders, now deceased, concerning the need for keeping a house clean and the children neat and orderly. This particular sermon caused a lot of concern among the women of his congregation, and he was criticized by several. I thought it a timely sermon as many of us were not too careful with our housework, and I told him so. He said he had offended so many, he feared he would never be forgiven. I said, "Brother H., there is nothing to be forgiven; all you said was true." So many difficulties arise from the lack of tact, we need to cultivate a quick forgiveness. That is what I mean about the seed of discord always being in humanity. Elder H. did not plant it—it was already there. He merely brought about a condition in which the seed quickly sprouted. There was a dormant seed of discord in all who were offended. One should not be easily offended. It requires at least two persons to bring about an issue that requires forgiveness—the offender and the offended. So many things could not offend us unless there was a deep seated condition within our own consciousness that some other person could stir up. If others are offending us, we should examine ourselves; perhaps we are suffering from boredom and need a change, or again we may want to hear someone say he is sorry he hurt us. It is safe to say that selfishness has had something to do with it.

WHEN ANY CONDITION is carefully analyzed, the need for forgiveness is recognized or one learns there is nothing to forgive. We sometimes do thoughtless things and need to be forgiven; this should prompt us to be forgiving of others. We should grow past the point where we are offensive or easily offended.

There are instances where it seems that the offense is deliberately calculated and uncalled for. There are conditions where action is necessary, where something has to be done in order to bring about a condition where forgiveness can be extended.

It is proverbially stated, "To understand all is to forgive all." It was that kind of understanding which Jesus had when he said, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

Forgiveness has always been considered a virtue; the real reason for this is that it is good for one. Individually, we suffer when we hold to the thought or idea we have been wronged. Grudges and resentments harm us physically when we harbor them. In our own behalf, we forgive. Forgiveness leaves us at peace. Through forgiveness, we develop the Zionite viewpoint and see with a pure heart, mind, and spirit.

A Report on "Malabar Farm"

(Malabar Farm, by Louis Bromfield, internationally known novelist-farmer (405 pages, Harper, New York).

TO MANY OF YOU, the name of Louis Bromfield is already familiar; but for some, a few words of introduction may be helpful.

This Pulitzer-prize winner and author of two dozen books is the promoter and chief owner of a 1,000-acre, co-operatively-operated farm in hilly Richland County, Ohio, not far from his boyhood home. This farm has become a sort of mecca for those interested in soil conservation and other problems of agriculture. [Besides the constant stream of tourists merely viewing the farm, a large number of visitors are fed almost daily in the "big house." Reports state that it contains over thirty rooms, but Bromfield can count only sixteen, according to an article that appeared in the Kansas City Times for October 21, 1948. He visited Kansas City's American Royal Horse and Livestock show this fall, and his report of it appeared in Section C of the Kansas City Star, Sunday, October 31.]

Although he studied agriculture at Cornell University, he became a New York journalist. He was in France during the First World War, and, finding a deep affinity with French culture, he decided to remain. During his fifteen years in France, he learned much about gardening and farming in general.

He has also lived in Germany, Spain, and India, and has traveled widely in other countries. While in India, he became acquainted with Sir Albert Howard, probably the greatest authority on the relation between soil and the health of the animals and people who eat its products.

By MAXWELL A. CONSTANCE

CHAPTER II—THE PASSING OF A PATTERN

The "pattern" is the "general farm." Bromfield's reaction to the feeling of insecurity derived from having lived through periods of inflation in so many countries was to overemphasize, upon his return to America, a program of self-sufficiency. The security aspect and other phases of his philosophy of farming are treated in Pleasant Valley, to which this book is a sequel. Self-sufficiency turned out to be emotionally satisfying but economically unprofitable. Where they found that the general farm requires too much mechanization for efficiency, they decided to make the main purpose of Malabar that of establishing and maintaining an "efficient grass factory." The light soil (Wooster silt loam) allows the incorporation of humus more rapidly than is usually possible, and two ice sheets had laid down a well-mixed, minerally rich subsoil. This was adapting the land to its natural function. The deep roots of alfalfa and sweet clovers drew these minerals up from the well-balanced subsoil to enrich the top soil.

Fences of old and square fields were torn up to make possible longer contours in plowing. Fairly steep slopes were strip-cropped as well as contoured. As the humus content increased, it was possible to widen the cultivated strips. Grass and small grains (small grains were used for a cash crop and as a seed bed for new stands of legumes) were so profitable that the corn acreage was gradually reduced as the pastures and hay-small grain fields increased in carrying capacity.

Bromfield believes firmly that good diets go far in making good people. He has often quoted the memorable statement of Hugh Ben-

From reading various articles of Bromfield's, besides his books, Pleasant Valley, Malabar Farm, and A Few Brass Tacks, I have gathered the following impressions: he is broad and genuine in his sympathies; his interests are intensive and varied, including flowers, wild life, soil, chemistry, art, architecture, good food, literature, international relations, and Boxer dogs. Philosophically, he is a practical mystic—that is to say, he has the mystic's glowing enthusiasm and faith in those apprehended realities which cannot yet be rationally explained, but he checks his "hunches" by his own experience and by that of others.

Although Malabar Farm contains much factual material that demands an unhurried pace, the average reader, regardless of education, would find this a stimulating, interesting, and very readable book.

Malabar Farm has a prelude and a postlude in the form of letters to a sergeant on Okinawa, and much of the book is a journal kept in the interim. In reading the journal portions of the book, one is amazed at the continuous horde of visitors fed, entertained, or merely taken on a tour at Malabar Farm. In fact, I should like some day to be one of those visitors.

CHAPTER I—MALABAR JOURNAL

The journal opens with the cessation of the drouth of 1944. Good farming at Malabar had enabled the springs to keep flowing while neighbors hauled water. Another interesting portion of this first chapter is his observation of the cattle's eating nettles, dock, and thistles when they could be knee deep in alfalfa, brome grass, and ladino. He reasoned that these "weeds" contained valuable trace elements which the cattle craved at the time.

nett, Chief of the United States Department of Agriculture, "Poor land makes poor people, and poor people make poor land poorer." He also believes that our ideas of surplus were fallacious. "There can be no surpluses of foods in a world where half the population suffers in times of peace from severe malnutrition and where at least five hundred million people are born and die without ever having had enough to eat one day of their lives. There are no surpluses, particularly of high protein foods, in a nation such as this one where in normal times, forty per cent of the population suffers for one reason or another from malnutrition."

The third chapter, "The Cycle of a Farm Pond," is of interest to those who like to fish. In the fourth chapter, "Malabar Journal, Winter 1944-45," is this powerful statement of the relation between poor soil and poor ignorant people: "You cannot cure Bilbo and Rankin of Mississippi until you have cured the poverty, ignorance, and prejudices of the constituencies they represent all too well!"

"GRASS, THE GREAT HEALER"

The fifth and sixth chapters comprise one of the most important sections of the book: they are called, "Grass, the Great Healer."

Bromfield often speaks of the average farmer's carelessness in regard to his pasture. Most farmers forget that pastures need fertilizing, for they overlook the fact that each animal carries off in meat, milk, or butter more fertility than it returns. Mr. Bromfield and his associates have found that it pays to lime and fertilize pasture land almost to the extent that one would a field in a cultivated crop.

One can see Bromfield chuckling with a farmer's peculiar pride as he tells how in four years he built up the soil on one field of the Bailey farm—"the thinnest farm between Newville and Little Washington"—until it produced fifty-three bushels per acre in 1947, whereas four years before the stand of wheat wasn't worth harvesting.

The mainstay of their hay mixtures is alfalfa, brome grass, and ladino. The first cutting is used for silage, the second for hay, and the third is pastured. According to Bromfield, this makes cheap silage—cheap in both labor and money.

Grass and small grain are better for soils than corn or cotton, Bromfield explains, because grass has myriads of tiny rootlets, whereas corn and cotton have large, tough, short roots. The roots of a wheat plant in Manitoba filled a cubic yard, and the roots of a tufted mountain grass plant of Colorado were estimated to be sufficient for reaching 350 miles if placed end to end. Also, grass and small grain fields are subject to severe erosion for only a few days, whereas row crops are subject to severe erosion the entire season.

In this chapter, he writes considerable of composting in connection with feeding. Labor is saved by using a blanket of sawdust, for the composting is done by the cattle as they eat cafeteria style from hay racks and from boxes containing "trace" minerals. The cafeteria style lets them choose their own diets, while the tramping of the refuse saves loss of nitrogen by breaking up the cellulose and thus hastening decomposition (unaided decomposition uses up nitrogen in the process of decay). From H. E. Babcock of Cornell, he got the idea of using movable hayracks and thereby allowing the cattle to eat their way out of the barn in winter. This saves the expense of a second-story hay mow—perhaps less picturesque, but cheaper.

ONE OF THE MOST interesting things in this fact-laden book is how Bromfield and associates have marvelously hastened the processes of nature in building soil. He states that when, in the autumn of 1946, he plowed the "Long Field" of the Anson Place to seed to wheat (comparatory to reseeding to alfalfa, brome grass, and ladino the following spring) he found nine inches of top soil where six and one-half years before there had been scarcely anything but the parent glacial till left.

You may read just what was grown each year but that is unimportant; remarkable results depend upon two practices: (1) rough plowing in of organic material in late autumn, where erosion is not a serious menace, to enable the freezing and thawing to hasten decomposition, and (2) stuffing the soil with organic material. As the humus content of the top few inches became greater, he increased the depth of plowing to turn up more subsoil to be stuffed with organic material.

Bromfield and Ed Faulkner, author of Plowmans Folly and A Second Look, do not believe in "good" plowing. "Good" plowing buries the humus where it is packed by the machinery, causing fermentation that releases harmful acids. Also it does not evenly distribute the humus. By using a Scotch plow made by Ferguson Tractor Company, and by properly adjusting plows, coulters, and jointers, Malabar farmers achieve an almost vertical plowing instead of the old, flat-lying strips. A disking or harrowing complete the fitting of the lands. Incidentally, he states that the French gardeners, which, he claims, are the world's best, spade a strip, apply fertilizer, and then spade another strip.

Where the soil does not drain well, there may be a hardpan made by a farmer always plowing at about the same depth. At Malabar there were spots like that on clayey residual land (in some areas the glacial till had been worn away). To eradicate the poor drainage condition, a subsoiler was used.

In regard to the affinities of certain plants for each other, Bromfield brings forth some interesting evidence and reflections, including a mentioning of successful experiments with corn and alfalfa together at the University of Illinois. Blue grass and white clover are complementary, and corn and soybeans grow better together than separately. Perhaps the Indians didn't know much about some things, but they knew enough to grow beans with corn.

"GARDENING WITHOUT TEARS"

This chapter tells of the role of "trace" elements—boron, sulphur, manganese, cobalt, magnesium, copper, iron, etc., in building resistance to disease in plants. Within five years, the use of common fertilizers and trace elements had eliminated the necessity of using insecticides, and within seven years the garden was virtually free of insects. Also, the plants were more healthful for those who ate them. In the section on grass, I hinted at a principle used in mulching in a statement concerning unaided decomposition and the resultant loss of nitrogen. Since green legumes decompose readily and hence use little nitrogen in decaying and are rich in nitrogen, they make a good mulch for lettuce, cabbage, and other leaf crops. If a soil is rich in nitrogen, use straw (which is slower in decaying and hence uses more nitrogen in being decomposed) if you desire to mulch potatoes or other root crops.

"Sportsmans' Paradise" is partly about the Muskingum Valley Flood Control Project, which was organized after the flood of 1913. It shows the relationship between soil improvement, checking of erosion, flood control, and conservation of wild life and improvement of crops.

The main point of the chapter on Justus Liebig and the organic-chemical fertilizer feud is that it is again not a case of either-or, but of both-and. That is, chemical fertilizer is often necessary, but its value is increased by the presence of a large supply of organic matter.

Let Us Kneel

*O come, let us worship and bow down:
let us kneel before the Lord our maker.—
Psalm 95: 6.*

By VERDA E. BRYANT

DURING THE SERVICE of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the minister rises and says to his congregation, "Let us kneel facing the altar while Brother — offers the prayer of blessing on the bread," whereupon there is a rustle as the members shift positions.

Last communion service, there sat next to me a family—mother, father, and daughter about six or seven years old. My attention was first focused upon them because of the pretty child (little girls are my hobby); then by the lovely voice of the mother as we sang the hymns; but the third impression was not so favorable.

As our pastor arose to say, "Let us kneel facing the altar," and the congregation shifted positions, the little girl went down on her knees only to be pulled back to a sitting position while the gentle hand of the mother guided her head to the bowed position which she and her husband maintained. As the pastor gave the same direction for the blessing of the wine, the action was repeated.

I could not resist the temptation to raise my head during the prayer to observe the congregation from where I was kneeling. This is what I saw: some were kneeling facing the altar. Others had knelt with their heads resting upon their seats facing anywhere but the altar. Some had leaned forward with their heads resting upon the back of the seat in front of them. Some were squatting in the limited space between the pews, while others merely bowed their heads.

IS THERE any significance to the first six words of the minister's direction to his people—"Let us kneel facing the altar"?

In considering the first three words, "let us kneel," I wonder if we as a church are getting away from the art of kneeling, until a generation or so from now we will be only a bowing or a squatting church.

Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22, says that the elder or priest who administers the sacrament of the Lord's Supper shall do so in this manner: "He shall kneel with the church and call upon the Father in solemn prayer." The commandment is to kneel with not before the church. This is a command of God. Does it make any difference whether we kneel, bow, or squat?

When we come to the communion service we are coming before Christ, we are witnessing to all that we do remember him and are signifying our willingness to keep his commandments so his spirit will be with us always. Can anyone come before Christ—into his presence—and not kneel?

Human nature is such that we instinctively kneel (at least mentally) at even the thought of the one we really love as we recognize our inadequacies and express our humility and love. Perhaps this is the instinct upon which was founded the tradition that a man kneels when proposing marriage to his lady love. If this instinct to kneel is present in the exchange of our human love, how much more it should be present in expressing our love for God! At what time do we come closer to our God than at the communion table in the presence of his body and blood as represented by the bread and wine?

Merely taking the kneeling position, and meditating upon the death and resurrection of the Master has a definite tendency to generate within us a humility and love which might not be attained otherwise.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

WHY DON'T PEOPLE want to kneel? Of course, there are the aged and infirm who are physically unable to kneel and whom Christ himself would doubtlessly excuse; but it is not always the elderly who refrain from kneeling. We all have seen the frail person who lays aside his cane or crutch to laboriously get on his knees while others, able-bodied, squat or merely bow.

Are some of these "squatters" and "bowers" afraid of scuffing the toes of new shoes, of popping a run in sheer nylons, of soiling good clothes, of spoiling the crease in recently pressed pants? Are we really witnessing that we do remember Jesus and want to obey his commandments, or is it only lip service we are offering—a "monkey see, monkey do" proposition?

Let us remember the words of the Master, "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much," as he spoke of the woman who had washed his feet with her tears and wiped them with her hair (Luke 7: 44-47).

I once sat in the balcony of Stone Church and watched an acquaintance, who had been raised Catholic, take her first Communion. I was greatly impressed by her sincere simplicity as she knelt on both knees, folded her hands, and bowed her head. I had to admit once again that the Catholics have something there. Her whole attitude showed the love and humility which I knew was expressed in her heart as well as in her posture.

CONSIDERING the next three words of the minister, "facing the altar," the question arises, "Why?" God has said, "Look unto me, and be ye saved . . . for I am God, and there is none else" (Isaiah 45: 22). We don't look at that which we are not facing. We face toward that which we want to see and understand. David, Daniel, and other prophets of old, when they prayed, always faced Jerusalem wherein was the holy temple. To them, this signified looking to God—to the place

God's Orchestra

God's mighty orchestra are we—
Each one an instrument of note,
With some in discord, some in tune.
To music the Creator wrote
And planned to give the harmony
To those who'd seek the master key.

Each instrument to God is known
And plays a part however small;
His Holy Spirit will convey
The harmonies of heav'n to all.
In tune with Infinite alone,
Each vibrates with a sweeter tone.

No instrument too small or great,
Each one he seeks to make his own.
All need the Master's gentle touch,
And none makes harmony alone.
Love is the keynote, Christ the key,
Communion brings the harmony.

LEONA HANDS.

which represented God. It is instinctive to face that upon which we are centering our attention. Can you imagine a man declaring his love for the object of his affection with his back toward her?

In coming before Christ, into his presence, we must face—we must look to—that which represents him, in this case the communion table.

Then this thought runs through my mind—how many who have habitually taken the sacrament of the Lord's Supper over a period of years, can repeat in their minds with the minister the words of the communion prayers? We are not instructed, as lay members, to memorize these communion prayers, but has the repetition of them left them indelibly impressed upon our minds so we can repeat them ourselves?

SOMETIMES I think our pastors should bear down upon us more pertinently in their discourses on the "Significance of the Communion" as to proper decorum during the service.

When Garland Tickemyer was pastor of Stone Church, he attempted something along that line. One communion Sunday there appeared in the bulletin an announcement that ladies should please remove their gloves when partaking of the emblems, and briefly he set forth why the Communion should be taken with bare hands.

I was very much interested in the reaction and noted many remarks at the close of the service and later. They varied widely. I heard, "What business is it of his?" and "Why doesn't he watch what he is doing rather than what we are doing?" (Doubtless there are those who read this who will wonder the same about me.) Some accepted it as a humorous incident, and others heartily agreed with him, depending, I suppose, upon how the shoe fit.

When we take the Communion, let us take it worthily, wholeheartedly, and humbly, letting our attitudes express what is really in our hearts. Let us teach our children the true significance of the Communion, that their attitudes may be acceptable in the sight of the Lord.

And as we kneel facing the altar, meditating upon the Christ who died for us, we will receive more of his Spirit because we have given more of ourselves for him.

"Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters"

nations; happiness and prosperity may become the lot of all, for it is from a sense of fear and a lack of economic resources that nations engage in war.

One of the objectives of our church is that of teaching men their responsibility to God as stewards of temporal and spiritual gifts and talents with which they have been endowed; for we believe that additional light has been given to our church which points the way in which man can discharge his stewardship responsibility to God through sharing of material possessions. It is to improve man's economic and spiritual status that our church functions.

Our Family Worship

By MRS. LEONARD O. SHERMAN

FAMILY WORSHIP in our home has gone through several phases. When the children were small, we started with the morning prayer—prayers of thanks before each meal, after the evening meal, a chapter from the Bible or a story to encourage good thoughts, and a bedtime prayer. The prayers have become essential in our family and have some part in each day's activities, some place in each of our lives.

A more difficult period followed because of an increase in the size of our family and a greater difference in the ages of the children. We continued to have prayer before school, and when any of the school-mates stopped in, they were asked to join with us in prayer. We had prayers before meals and special prayers in times of sickness, or prayers of "thank you" for some happiness. Songs from the Hymnal and stories from the Scriptures were added. Sometimes the children read. However, when a child's pronunciation or expression is poor, the others lose interest; this should be kept in mind when planning a worship period. All these have been used as spiritual nourishment in our home: Bible quizzes, thought-provoking scriptures, an interesting testimony or story told at a moment of quietness, and individual discussions with a child in a time of need or special interest.

Although the manner of worship has varied through the years, there has been purpose in type. Even the smallest child knows of God and Christ and wants to please them. Many times the two smallest, three and four years, give up some treasured toy to the other because "Jesus will like me to."

THE GREATEST JOY comes when the children begin to learn that they can worship God through every phase of life or study; through books (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36), through musical talents (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6), through being in harmony with the laws of the land (Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2), in keeping out of debt (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 6), and through the choices they make. Our oldest, a boy fourteen, was confronted with the problem of dancing. One of his teachers at school decided he should learn with some of the other boys and selected two girls to teach them. He came home for counsel. We checked all the Scriptures and did not find anything particularly enlightening. Our pastor later gave us the General Conference resolutions to read. Judy, the eleven-year-old, came home with the same problem. We decided that sometimes God told us not to do some things and sometimes he advised us not to, and that if we really loved him and wanted to please him, we would listen to his advise.

Our children are learning now through family worship that a man should have one wife and be true to her, and that a woman should have one husband and be true to him, and that the marriage of others should be respected and upheld.

Each one is being taught "that in being obedient to God's laws, nations will be blessed" (Genesis 22: 22; Nephi 4: 29; 9: 64, 65); that we must love and serve each other, and that contention is of the devil.

We believe that if we use the Scriptures as a guide to help us form right attitudes and produce right actions, they are being used in the way God wishes, and if these are in harmony with God's laws, we will become the kind of family that will be of use in his kingdom here on earth. We also hope to be part of a community of people who can and will live together and work together in such a perfect and harmonious way that "nations from afar off will notice and wish to learn also." But we know that we first must be pleasing in the sight of God as individuals and as a family. This is our aim.

THE LIGHT HEART

Were you a good neighbor today?
With a smile for the lady next door
Or a cheery word called across that line
Of fresh, white clothes?

Did you soothe a sick child
Or clasp a hand
In friendship?
Did you open your arms
To a grief-stricken friend?
Or pit your stanch loyalty
Against a gossip's sharp tongue?

Were you kind and forgiving and patient?
Then you found a song upon your lips—
For your blessings are many
And your heart will be ever light.

Tidings from Women's Groups

Mrs. T. W. Bath, the Spring River District women's leader, reports on the branch women's organization in her home town, Pittsburg, Kansas. This local organization attempts to provide groups for all the women members as well as for the husbands who might be interested. She writes, "We have four organized groups. The 'Harmony Circle,' a Thursday afternoon study group, is composed of all ages and anyone is welcome. This is the 'mother group' for it is the oldest circle. The study subjects vary and are chosen by the members to fit their religious and home interests.

"The 'Golden Key' group, ages approximately from twenty-five to forty years, includes many who are employed. There are about sixteen who attend and among them is a nurse, a manager of a dress shop, a telephone operator, and housewives whose children are from six to fifteen.

"Recently the 'Two by Two' group was organized. This is a study group of young married women and their husbands. There were seven couples at my home for the first regular meeting, which started off with a buffet supper. This group is in its infancy, but is quite promising, enthusiastic, and earnest. Several husbands and one wife are not yet in the church. The last group of women we try to care for has about twenty-three members who very seldom get to attend any of the circles. Our Friendly Visitor goes to them. For the past two years, we have had a Christmas party on the Saturday night before Christmas for all men and women past sixty years old. We have a planned evening of games, a white elephant gift exchange, a small personal gift for each one, and refreshments. Transportation is furnished for all. There have already been several inquiries about it. We have a combined meeting of all women the first Thursday in each month. Here we have reports and, in united effort, share together the various activities of the branch.

"At this meeting a mimeographed leaflet outlining the year's projects was handed to each member present. The projects are:

Sunshine Bags

"Each woman will put into a bag or small sack one penny for every day of sunshine during the year. If she feels she can, she deposits a nickel for the sunshiny days and a penny for the cloudy days. The money is put in at noon each day. These bags are turned in each quarter at the group meetings the first Thursday in January, April, July, and October."

Dollar Day

"The dollars collected on this day are to be used for the district reunion fund to equip the kitchen."

Calendar Party

"One person, representing the year, invites twelve persons, representing the months, to a party. To another party, these twelve persons invite four, representing the weeks in a month. Each of these four, invites seven to a party, representing the days in a week. If every invited guest pays twenty-five cents, the 396 persons will pay a total of ninety-nine dollars."

Theme

More Abundant Living by Following the Example of Christ.

"We have three fine groups organized to provide for women of varied interests. The first Thursday in every month is the general meeting day for all women.

"We especially want every woman in the Pittsburg Branch to be in action in our women's department work of this year. We anticipate a fine year together in our work."

AUTUMN

By Nell Guilford Hancock

WE HAVE ONLY TO LOOK about us to know that the year is far spent. Trees that weeks ago stood clothed in rich autumnal splendor are now bare and seemingly lifeless. Bright, late-summer flowers are gone, with the exception of a few hardy varieties that have withstood the frost. Over all there has come a hush as though nature was awaiting some great event.

Those who are in the autumn of life should take a lesson from nature. They should be calm, serene, and patient while awaiting the great change—calm in the knowledge of years well spent, clothed in the glory and richness of God's Spirit; serene, knowing that he who has been with them throughout life, will not now leave them alone. Their lives should be mellow with sweetness, patience, and tolerance.

As the twilight deepens into greater shadow, let them feel no fear, for they have the promise of the springtime of resurrection, when, as nature adorns her world in shining, new raiment, so shall the elect put on dazzling garments and dwell in everlasting light.

New Seed

The winter wheat now wears
A coat of ice and snow,
And dreams are stilled a while.
Old loves are buried deep,
Awaiting spring's new song
And seed.

LETTERS

Missionary Experiences

By Evangelist Henry Castings

(Apostle D. T. Williams arranged to have this fine letter prepared for publication.—Editors.)

In a letter which appeared in the Herald last April, I wrote about visiting my sister and her family at Wagoner, Oklahoma. She is a member of the church and has lived at Wagoner for twenty-five years. She had heard only one Latter Day Saint sermon during the entire time, and that was in 1930 when I was visiting in her home. There are no other members of the church living in that community.

During our visit last February, we heard of a Doctor Powell, who lived at Muskogee and was a member of the church. We went to his home, and he invited me to preach there. My sister and several of her family attended those meetings. After preaching six sermons, I baptized six persons, three of them being members of my sister's family.

When we left Oklahoma, we promised to return some time in June and hold another series of meetings. We returned to Wagoner on July 15 and as the group there had no place to meet, we decided to hold meetings in Doctor Powell's front yard. We put some chairs out in the yard, and I stood on the front porch while preaching to a group of members and non-members. After hearing nine sermons, five requested baptism.

Our meetings closed on Monday night. On Tuesday night, Dale Patton gave us a very fine talk about his travels to Kirtland and other places of interest where he and his family had been the previous week. At the close of his talk, we had a testimony meeting which was very spiritual and was enjoyed by everyone present. On Thursday night, Brother Leslie Kohlman, pastor of the Tulsa Branch, came over to Muskogee; we met in the Church of Christ for the baptismal service. Three other persons decided to be baptized, which made a total of eight—seven adults and one boy about eleven years old. They were all confirmed that same evening. After returning to my sister's home, my nephew decided he wanted to be baptized, so we made arrangements for another service on Saturday.

Since we made the trip to Oklahoma last February, the group has bought a fine lot in a very prominent location in Muskogee and plan to build a church in the very near future. With the faith these members have, and the determination to do something, they will build it.

Brother Oakman asked me last March if I could leave my business long enough to hold some meetings in his field. Arrangements were made for us to go to Fulton, Iowa. We were guests at the home of Brother and Sister Heide. Brother Heide is the branch president. I preached eight sermons in their little church, and Brother Heide and I visited almost all of the members of the branch. One woman gave her name for baptism, but wanted to be baptized later, so on July 3 we returned, preached two sermons and baptized two persons.

On June 18, at the request of Brother Oakman, we went to Kewanee, Illinois. There I preached nine sermons, and one man gave his name for baptism. We were entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Ed Wynquist, also at the home of Brother and Sister Jay Duncan. We were invited to almost every home in the branch, and partook of their hospitality. They have a very nice church building at Kewanee and a very devoted group of Saints; Dave Williams is pastor. At the close of the services, we drove on Sunday afternoon to baptize Albert Peterson. On our return from the river, there were eight of us in one car; we sang hymns, and the Spirit of God was very evident.

Texas Reunion

The 1948 Texas Reunion was held at the new reunion grounds six and one-half miles from Bandera and Media. This consists of twenty acres of wooded territory bordered by the Media River and the Kerrville-San Antonio Highway. Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe and a corps of willing helpers prepared the grounds before the reunion, some working eighteen to twenty hours a day to finish the task on schedule.

In addition to Brother Renfroe, other general church officers attending the reunion were Apostle George Mesley, Missionary W. C. Haden, and Bishop Lewis Landsberg; they were assisted by the district officers.

The young people, under the direction of Apostle Mesley, made an outdoor chapel on a rock ledge overlooking the river. This consisted of an altar made of flat rocks, a small tree, and a low rock wall.

Mrs. Albert Banta and Ella Wheeler directed the women's activities. Individual offerings from this department totaled $100 for this ten-day period. Special classes and activities were held for the children, also.

Communion service was one of the high points of the reunion. A young deacon, Joseph Berry, planned and directed this service. Elder Frank White was in charge of music, and Seventy Renfroe directed priesthood activities. Missionary Haden was the evening speaker during the conference period, and Bishop Landsberg conducted a class on the financial law.

Since reunion, the districts represented at it have voted to purchase an additional five acres adjoining the grounds.

A Letter of Testimony

I am still rejoicing after a membership in this church for more than fifty-five years, and I expect to feel that way for the remainder of my life, as I sincerely appreciate the goodness and loving kindness of our God.

It is wonderful how good our Heavenly Father is to all mankind. What a liberal provider he is for our spiritual and physical needs! How grand the intelligence he bestows on those who diligently seek him! How thankful we should be for his watch care, even though he sometimes allows us to be tempted—allows obstacles to be put in our spiritual paths, allows many things to come our way that are discouraging and disheartening—still he loves us and desires that our faith shall be tried, giving us a chance to prove to him that we are true to the cause we have espoused.

I want to be worthy of his wonderful love. I desire to be worthy of the blessings he is willing to bestow. I feel that I would be ashamed to accept blessings in the hereafter of which I am not worthy, so I am continuing, with the aid of God's Spirit, to cultivate love for our Father, for his Son, and for all his creatures.

Love is the diamond among the jewels of human character. The other graces shine like the precious stones of nature, with their own luster and different hues, but the diamond—love—shines brighter and more beautiful than any of them.

Spiritual love implies sacrifice—will- ingness to give oneself for the happiness of the loved ones, God and Christ. Spiritual love is the blessed sunshine that ripens human fruit.

Thanksgiving in Nauvoo

For the past three years, the Lucy Mack Circle has served a turkey dinner in the church dining hall on Thanksgiving Day free of charge to members and friends. An offering is then taken to be applied on a specific project. The eight hundred dollars collected three years ago were used to clear the church of indebtedness. This year the project was a stoker for the furnace and a sum of $200 was raised. Following the dinner, a Thanksgiving service was presented in the main auditorium of the church.

A union Thanksgiving service was held at 10 a.m. in the Methodist church with Elder R. H. Atkinson as speaker. Music for this service was provided by a mixed choir from the Latter Day Saint, Presbyterian, and Methodist Churches under the direction of Brother Bernard Galbraith. The Presbyterian minister and his wife were guests at the Thanksgiving dinner. Later, they sent a note of appreciation for having been invited, saying that they had enjoyed the day and thought it a privilege to have "fellowship and worshiped with your faithful people, who have the art of magnifying things beautiful, fittingly." They also commented on the "informing and uplifting" sermon.

Dinners were sent to all members unable to be present. A year ago, this same minister's wife was remembered in this way. At that time, both the Presbyterian and Methodist ministers were dinner guests.

The collection at Nauvoo for Grace-land was $114.

Tribute to William S. Smith of Columbus, Ohio

Brother A. E. Anderton, veteran church worker and former district president, writes an interesting letter concerning a church member who has been honored in the newspapers of Columbus, Ohio, recently. He writes, "William S. Smith is a deacon in the First Columbus Branch, a good one, an indefatigable worker. Even today at seventy-seven years he wants to be doing something all the time. He can't keep still. During the more than twenty-three years the writer was president of the Southern Ohio District, Brother Smith was a very valuable man in that one could rely on him to do anything he was asked to do and do it well."

Brother Anderton sends with his letters copies of articles in three newspapers, the Ohio State Journal, the Columbus Citizen, and Columbus Evening Dispatch. In the latter paper, for November 15, is a fine editorial from which we quote:

One of the grand old men of the Columbus Police Department, Bill Smith, who has served day in and day out for almost fifty years, is due for retirement today. He regrets not being able to serve out the few months from now until next May when his golden anniversary with the department could arrive. But really he has nothing to be sorry for.

Bill Smith has been not only one of the most constant and conscientious of public servants; he has in all his long service been an estimable gentleman, commanding by his simple dignity, his daily devotion to his duties and the wisdom he has gained over the years a natural respect both from his fellow officers and others who have had occasion to come into contact with him, whether officially or otherwise.

Brother Smith is seventy-seven years of age, and has been honorably retired because of his health. It is with regret that he surrenders the coveted "Number 1" badge in his department. Our congratulations and best wishes to Brother Smith.

Special Holiday Values

Worship

Certainly at Christmas time we should worship God and return thanks for the gift of his Son. Let us not be content with a little grace, hurriedly and inaudibly rattled off at the table, while all assembled are impatient and drooling to get at the food. Let the families have a real grace that can be heard and understood. And during the day let them sing together the Christmas songs, and play records, if possible, of the great Christmas music. Let them read out of the Book, the old, old story of the Nativity from the Gospels. And then let them pray. A Christmas prayer that is all it should be, could contain a lot of things. Little children, growing up in a home where these traditions are observed could develop a set of "special holiday values" that will give them beautiful memories of home for all their lives to come, and transform those lives into something that the Master of Men can use in the building of his kingdom.

BRIEFS

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—The district conference was held at Mt. Vernon, Illinois, on November 13 and 14. The theme was "Wax Strong in the Knowledge of the Truth." Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke on Saturday evening and Sunday morning. District Missionary S. R. Coleman preached following the basket dinner on Sunday, after which the business meeting was held under the direction of Apostle Gleazer, Seventy William T. Guthrie, and Elder Coleman. Recommendations for ordinations presented at this session were B. R. Yokum, Eugene Greer, and Vernon Whitehead, priests, and Dean Shelton, deacon. S. R. Coleman was elected district president; Ruby Ellis, secretary; Edna Colvin, women's leader; Rufus Rockett, church school director; Ed Colvin, young people's supervisor; Ed Knapp, treasurer and bishop's agent; and Marie Henson, director of music. Appreciation was expressed to Seventy Guthrie for the work he accomplished in the district; he will leave in January for the New York-Philadelphia District.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—James Reynolds, George Wright, Ernest Wright, Jr., and Theresa Wright, baptized at Onset Reunion, are members of Brockton Branch. Recent blessings include Janet Chesworth, Almon White, Elizabeth Cookson, Jean and Alan Wright. Following the Wednesday evening prayer service, Pastor Leonard Chesworth conducts a study class on the Doctrine and Covenants each week. Improvements have been made to the church basement, and a new oil burner has been installed in the furnace. These repairs were financed by the women's department, the building repair fund, and the branch treasury.

SALINA, KANSAS.—Elder J. D. Shower of Independence, Missouri, held a series of missionary meetings from October 29 to November 7; he also visited in the homes, encouraging the members and inviting nonmembers to attend services. District President H. F. Chapin was the speaker on November 14. Louis Hancock, under whose guidance the group began nearly ten years ago, was also a recent visitor. Although attendance is small, a study hour is held each Sunday at the Y. M. C. A. building, and the women meet twice a month as a unit of the Patroness Society to sew for the Independence Sanitarium and to study.

Drafted

By NAOMI RUSSELL

I WASN'T LOOKING for any extra work. To my way of thinking, five days at the office and Saturday's cleaning at home was plenty to justify a nice, quiet Sunday morning with nothing more strenuous to do than sitting through the 8:15 sermon and young people's class. Sabbath afternoons, I reasoned, were meant for visiting one's relatives, or one's husband's, and perhaps having the good fortune of being invited to stay for supper. Then it happened.

The junior supervisor was desperate. She came into the office looking as harried as a campaign manager the day before election. "We need teachers," she said walking over to my desk. "Nobody wants to work in the junior department, but we simply have to have someone to teach those youngsters. What kind of members will they grow up to be if they aren't taught anything at church school? You can't leave it all up to the parents, you know."

I tried to look sympathetic, but I didn't have any intention of being drafted by this or any other designing junior supervisor. As the plea continued, I offered to scout around the adjoining offices and ask for volunteers. It was as futile as hunting for a car at pre-war prices. I went back to my desk, and the plea continued. I tried to see myself before a class of squirming nine-year-olds, but it was no good—I just wasn't the type. The plea continued, "If you can't be a full-time teacher, will you be a substitute?" This seemed like an easy way out, so I agreed to report for duty the following Sunday morning and "sit in" on a class to see how it was done. I didn't look forward to it, but I kept explaining to myself that with this experience I could present a better argument for not going any further with the project.

I WENT and was much impressed by the efficiency of the teacher whose class I visited. "It's a gift," I concluded as I left the room, "but I don't have it." I was all ready to tell the supervisor about my pleasant discovery when she handed me a quarterly and told me I could take the class by myself the following Sunday. And then she was gone.

"I won't do it," I said over and over again on the way home. "I can't teach those kids. I don't want any part of it."

Unfortunately, nature equipped me with a most persistent conscience. Each time I said, "Won't, can't, or don't," Conscience came back with a very cutting, "Oh? Why not? Are you so physically handicapped you aren't able to teach? Are you such a dullard you aren't capable of teaching? Are you going to go on philosophizing about Zion and then refuse to do one of the fundamental things on which it depends?"—That's what got me. Conscience has always had the upper hand, and playing against it is like trying to win the fifty-yard dash wearing hip boots.

The next Sunday was as painful as I dreamed it would be. I was scared and nervous, self-conscious and embarrassed. I smiled, but my heart wasn't in it; I talked, but the words seemed far away and incomprehensible; I looked at my class—six little girls—and tried desperately to remember names. It was hopeless; I couldn't remember the one at my elbow, much less the one at the end of the table. But juniors are very understanding despite their tender years. When class was over, six little girls asked if I would be their teacher again next Sunday, and two of them latched onto my arms to walk out the door with me.

CONSCIENCE LET GO and Ego took over. "Well, what d'ya know," I beamed inwardly, "they like me." And that bit of approbation was responsible for a major change in my Sunday morning routine. It isn't just teaching the class—which has become twelve little girls instead of six—it's playing for the junior worship service at 9:25, plus playing for junior church at 11. In addition to that, there's playing for the junior prayer meeting every Wednesday night. Sunday afternoons aren't what they used to be, either—I study my quarterly as intently as I used to study for finals; I plan extra curricular work to keep the girls interested; I write cards to those who didn't come and ask them why. The average observer would say, "How nice, you've learned to love the work." Well . . . I haven't. I still suffer from a kind of stage fright each time I face the class, and I'm always greatly relieved when the bell rings. However, it's the only way I can get along with Conscience, and if I even toy with the idea of giving it up, Conscience cracks down and suggests an even better way of doing the job.

This one thing I have learned, however, and I'm glad: I've learned how really great the need for workers is, and I'm beginning to see how much depends on the type of training these adolescents receive. Now, since I'm convinced everyone should know what the score is, I want to suggest that all who haven't visited

Confessions and Transgressions

QUESTION: Is that part of the Doctrine and Covenants concerning the confession of sins "before your brethren" still valid?

I was taught that smoking, drinking, dancing, and playing cards are transgressions after one is baptized. Does this not hold true today? If not, what constitutes transgression?

ANSWER: By Chris B. Hartshorn

The first question doubtlessly refers to the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2 which ends, "... but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord." The questioner then may want to know if the command was limited to the day or people of the times in which it was given.

The revelation is addressed to a particular group "who have come up unto this land"—Jackson County, Missouri. The second paragraph, from which the question arose, begins, "Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus:"

In spite of the personal and timing elements cited, there seems no good reason to think the instructions were intended to fit the needs of that day only. James 5: 16 says, "Confess your faults one to another," and I John 1: 9 reads, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." Honest confestheir local junior departments plan to do so . . . and soon. This will give the supervisors opportunity to explain the shortage of personnel and ask for volunteers. The rest I leave to Conscience.

To those who do go, I extend sincere appreciation. To those who don't, I can only say I hope they are never guilty of uttering a Wednesday evening, "I want to serve the church in any way I can." To those who are already teaching, I confess the job has its compensations. I'm not sorry I was drafted.

sion is as good for the soul today as it ever was.

The custom of urging the Saints to make an open confession before partaking of the communion emblems has almost disappeared from our groups. The end sought was rarely accomplished by such procedures. Frequently the wrong people confessed or confessed in the wrong spirit. Those who had made public offenses and needed to make public their remorse seldom sought this means of restitution. It seems to work out best that in such cases the pastor's counsel be sought and followed by those who think their cases demand public acknowledgment of wrongdoing. In F. Henry Edwards's Commentary on this section, we read:

There are times in the life of every Saint when he needs to go to the officers of the church and there make a frank statement of his difficulties and seek spiritual counsel. This is not a suggestion that the ministry of the church should profess to forgive sins except through administering the ordinances of the church, but they should be available to help those whose hearts will be relieved of their burdens by confession.

THE QUESTION of the rightness or wrongness of using tobacco and liquor is easily settled by referring to the basic law of the church as found in Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1 and 119: 3. Few, if any, of those who have been born again fall into these spiritually debilitating habits because of ignorance. Many fall, however, because of associates and carelessness. They are tempted and drawn away by their own appetites and lusts of the flesh. They have forgotten some things through neglect of Scripture reading and prayer.

The matter of dancing and card playing is not in the same class, and needs to be treated with understanding and discriminating words. These are forms of recreation which are not mentioned in the Three Standard Books—except by inference. Our teachings on them grow out of the authority of experience and General Conference resolution. Unlike the basic law in our Scriptures, the attitude of the church has been formally stated as a social judgment. The Conferences of 1886 and 1893 stated thus:

"Resolved That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints." Such harmful effects as accrue to individuals because of doing these things are observable facts in certain lives. Were the Conference asked to take action on these subjects in 1950, it might amend or rescind this resolution 377 just quoted. The basic laws of the Three Standard Books cannot be changed or rescinded. Neither can we rescind the effects which Conference Resolution 317 describes as "... likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel."

Addressing ourselves now to the question, "Does [this] constitute transgression?" the answer is "Yes." Any conduct or action which "goes beyond" or exceeds the rules is by definition a transgression. Usually, our ministry prefer to influence people by a positive approach. Repressive legislation may help some to decide their courses, but when this same legislation becomes a club to hit at other's unwise choices of conduct, it will likely do more harm than good. The answer most likely to win approval among our leaders today is that when one becomes truly converted to Christ and his church, he will feel that indulgence in the things questioned is a waste of precious time. We should hesitate seriously before spurning the voice of the church. Remember Jesus "loved the church and gave his life for it." We can find so many worth-while things to do and to enjoy in Christ's service that we will not have time for those practices the church has frowned upon.

eminently worth-while and revolutionary book on good farming and the good life. Good soil makes good people; and "poor soil makes poor people, and poor people make poor soil poorer."

In both Malabar Farm and in Pleasant Valley, Bromfield with the corroboration of Dr. Borst of the Zanesville, Ohio, experiment station, gives some revolutionary ideas on alfalfa; namely, (1) alfalfa will grow on poor land, (2) it need not be sown in the fall, and (3) a rough seed bed with much decaying organic material secures a better stand than a smooth seed bed.

Below are some sources of information on trace elements:

(1) Hunger Signs in Crops, American Fertilizer Association, Washington, D. C. (This contains many colored plates.)

(2) Battelle Memorial Institute, Columbus, Ohio. (Especially in regard to selenium.)

(3) Cleveland Research and Development Association, Cleveland 10, Ohio. (Especially in regard to manganese.)

A Report on "Malabar Farm"

"OUT OF THE EARTH WE ARE BORN AND TO THE EARTH WE RETURN."

This is not the last chapter, but I am reserving my report on it to the last. In this, Mr. Bromfield reiterates the importance of working with the laws of nature. The material is largely about molds, hormones, and trace elements.

It appears that leukemia, "droop neck" (a type of anemia) and Bang's disease (undulant fever in humans) are caused by deficiencies in zinc, cobalt, and manganese, respectively. The Hunzas of India have not been known to have cancer. All human and animal waste is returned to the soil, and sand and gravel from the Himalayan streams are applied annually to their terraces.

Streptomycin comes from rich well-balanced soils, "preferably those heavily fertilized with good barnyard manure," and chloromycetin, a new potent antibody is a product of molds found in good, mulched soils. It looks as though both our maintenance of health and our eradication of disease depend extensively on the management of the soil.

WEDDINGS

Zonker-Yoder

Betty Yoder and Louis Zonker, both of Wellsburg, West Virginia, were married on October 31 at Parkersburg, West Virginia, by Elder Rice. Both are graduates of Grace-land College, and Louis is finishing his graduate work at Ohio University. They will make their home in Ontario after the first of the year where Louis will serve under General Church appointment.

Doster-Salonimer

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Salonimer of Detroit, Michigan, announce the marriage of their daughter, Rebecca, to Fred Doster of Independence, Missouri. The wedding took place November 5 at the Stone Church in Independence, Elder Joseph H. White officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Doster are making their home in Independence.

A daughter, Marsha Elise, was born on September 20 to Mr. and Mrs. Arnold E. Ellsworth of Topeka, Kansas. Mrs. Ellsworth is the former Gloria Andrew, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Andrew of Independence, Missouri.

A son, Thomas Frank, was born to Paul and Edna Fraccascia of Kansas City, Missouri, on November 5.

Mr. and Mrs. Melvyn Dodds, Britannia Bay, Ontario, announce the birth of a daughter, Diane Elva Rose, born October 9 at Grace Hospital in Ottawa. Mrs. Dodds is the former Elva Blundell.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlos H. Crownover of Richmond, Washington, announce the birth of a daughter, Carla Sue, born November 10. She was blessed on Sunday, November —, by her grandfather, Elder A. J. Crownover. Mrs. Crownover is the former Chrystal Draper of Independence, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Shannon P. Bennett of Dallas, Texas, announce the birth of a daughter, Cherie Suzanne, born November 15. Mrs. Bennett was formerly Elizabeth Maxwell.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wicks of Dallas, Texas, announce the birth of a daughter, Wendy LaVelle, born November 4. Mrs. Wicks is the former Peggie Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Merle Reid Harmon of Denver, Colorado, announce the birth of a son, Merle Reid, Jr., born November 20 at Mercy Hospital in Denver. Mrs. Harmon is the former Jeannette Merle Kinner of Davenport, Iowa. Both parents attended Graceland in 1947.

DEATHS

WILLIS.—Frederick, was born July 24, 1899, and died November 12, 1948, following a long illness. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since October 15, 1948, and attended the Ottawa, Ontario, Branch. Funeral services were held at the Tubman Chapel, Pastor A. E. Caldwell officiating.

BEEBE.—Ethel Cordella, daughter of Devillo and Emma Manlove, was born January 14, 1881, near Weldon, Illinois, and died on November 1, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in August, 1895, and remained a devoted member throughout her life. She was married to Harmon Beebe in August, 1897, at St. Joseph, Missouri; three sons were born to them. Mr. Beebe and one son, Ivan Earl, preceded her in death.

Surviving are two sons: Finis D. of Independence, Missouri, and H. Dale of St. Louis, Missouri; a brother, Clarence O. Manlove of Kansas City, Missouri; two sisters: Mrs. Edith G. Flanders of Independence, and Mrs. Verna A. Neff of Mammoth Springs, Arkansas; and nine grandchildren. Services were held at the Carson Funeral Home in Independence, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating. Burial was beside her husband in the Knob-noster, Missouri, cemetery.

Notes of Thanks

We extend our sincere thanks to all who remembered mother in prayer during her illness. We also appreciate the cards and letters sent to her, and the kindness of those who came to call.

* THE WIRE RECORDER

A great new avenue of church service has been opened through the medium of electrical recording and transcription on the tape and wire recording machines. Because of its technical superiority, the official recordings of the General Conference were made on the tape machine, Russell Resch being in charge of these operations.

However, in the present state of development, the wire recorder has superior controls for transcription which make it better adaptable to securing sermons for publication. In the "Herald" of October 30, the conference sermon of Laurence A. MacDonald, president of the Northern California District, was published from a recording and transcription made by L. E. Fordham of Independence. Brother Fordham used a Webster set like that recommended by our Department of Visual and Auditory Aids.

Brother Fordham uses his wire recorder in his church work. He records the entire service on Sunday morning at Second Church. During the week following, he takes his machine to the homes of the sick and shut-ins and gives them the whole service of music, worship, and sermon. Sometimes people get out their "Hymnals" and join in the singing. Sometimes he finds members who have not been to church for some time, and they become interested in the church again. The possibilities of the machine for missionary purposes are excellent.

Here at the office we have been transcribing sermons recorded by friends for publication in the "Herald," and we are hopeful of obtaining many good sermons we could not otherwise get. Gordon Resch has been very generous in taking such recordings and offering them for use. Through this service, we hope to be able to present sermons and addresses of church leaders much more frequently than in the past.

* THERE IS A WORD FOR IT

How often we listen to certain words, accepting them because they sound impressive, and never taking the trouble to look up their meaning.

Our speaker was quoting the famous "To be, or not to be" speech from "Hamlet," when he came to the question, "Who would fardels bear?"

Now, what are fardels? And of the millions of listeners who have heard the word repeated, how many know what it means?

I didn't know, so I looked it up. And now, whenever I hear it again, I'm going to get a little glow of satisfaction. I'll know something most other folk do not.

No, I'm not going to tell you. It would be a shame to spoil your fun of looking it up for yourself. I'll give you this hint: Shakespeare used the word as a symbol of repugnant menial servitude. And, there, if you like, are a few more nice words to add to your vocabulary.....

* IF YOU would judge the value of anything, look to its consequences, especially in terms of human life. If its benefits are enduring, and if they tend of increase, it is probably good. If it makes people better and happier, not just for today, but for a period of years, you may depend upon it.

Most people are nice, if you look at them right.—John Zion.

What Is Life?

You ask me what life is? Well, who can tell?
 No living man has fathomed its great depths,
 But this I know, that life can conquer all—
 Its force in nature cracks the largest rock;
 It conquers air and water, land and sea,
 Reforming each and adding more of life;
 This sculptor shapes all living things around
 On tree and bush and flower on the ground;
 An artist, life, who colors each live thing—
 Musician who has taught the birds to sing;
 A chemist, too, who changes things to live.
 And life? What is it but the living God?

NEWS AND NOTES

THE MESSIAH

Pastor Herbert Scott of Des Moines, Iowa, phoned to inform us that the Des Moines church choir will give "The Messiah" over Radio Station KWDN from 8 to 9:30 p.m. on December 24. Wilbur Chandler will direct. Soloists will include two of our own church members and two visiting singers.

APOSTLE D. T. WILLIAMS REPORTS

Good conferences in his territory. At Moline, Illinois, Lyle Woodstock was installed as district president, taking the place of W. W. Richards, who was ordained an Evangelist at the last General Conference. At Chicago, where J. C. Stuart was installed as district president, replacing Joseph Baldwin who was ordained a bishop at the recent General Conference and will be sent to Canada.

Friends of Brother Williams will be interested to know that he has moved from his former home at Ottumwa, Iowa, and is now living at 11308 Winner Road, Independence, Missouri.

APOSTLE C. G. MESLEY

Has visited some of the principal centers in the Northwest Missions, attending two district conferences.

APOSTLE W. WALLACE SMITH

Has been busy visiting church centers in the Southern Mission, accompanied by W. J. Breshears, and their schedule will keep them busy until Christmas.

APOSTLE PAUL M. HANSON

Has returned from Joplin, Missouri, where he presided at the installation of John Blackmore as pastor there on Sunday morning, December 5. In the afternoon there was a district priesthood meeting. Sunday evening he spoke to the congregation at Springfield, Missouri.

APOSTLE REED M. HOLMES

Reports progress on church structures. The Denver church will soon have its roof finished, when, without much further work, it will be ready for occupation. The interior is finished with face brick. The Wichita, Kansas, Branch is nearly ready to begin construction of a new building, which will occupy the old lot and an adjoining piece of property.

Baptismal gains have been registered in two missions. At Elkhart, Kansas, under the leadership of Clarence Owen, the mission began two years ago with six, and now has thirty-five. The Muskogee, Oklahoma, Branch has baptized nineteen in the last year. Skiatook, Oklahoma, has baptized seventeen in the last few months. Missionary William Haden is doing good work.

PACIFIC MISSIONS

Word has come to President Israel A. Smith that two of our missionaries to the Society Islands, F. Edward Butterworth and Allen Breckenridge, are still at San Francisco, working on arrangements for their passage to Papeete. Brother Butterworth has his visa and Brother Breckenridge is still awaiting his. If possible, they will depart on their journey by plane, December 18. Brother and Sister John Mervin were scheduled to leave on December 11.

ALBERT A. SCHERER writes from Mission Headquarters, 2 Annastraat, Rotterdam, Holland, of a happy event in his family: "On 19 November, 1948, a daughter, Sandra Lynn, was born. Mother and child are doing well. It was exactly a year previously that we arrived in Holland to take up the work in this mission."

Editorial Review

The Jews and Zion

An editorial in the National Jewish Monthly for November, 1948, contains the following significant statement:

We glory in the victories of Israel in Palestine, in the earnest effort of Jews to establish a good nation, but here is our Zion. And what are we going to do about it?

Here we must establish a Jewish life so lofty and abundant that the stones that anti-Semites throw cannot trouble us. Here is the opportunity to make a Jewish life that is not just of organizations but the good way of every Jew.

Now is the time to make Jewish religion paramount in Jewish life—that is, Jewish religion as a way of life, as a road up the mountainside—a path of living by which every Jew may reach the high elevation that is our ethical teaching.

I like the “Here” and “Now” of that vigorous, challenging editorial. Regardless of what the Jews may be able to do in the land of Palestine, the editor reminds his people that the only Zion of which they can have experience must be here in America. It cannot be for some future age—the time for it is now. And it is a Zion of practical measures—religious life, culture, education, organization, good works.

How that should appeal to the people of our church! And it challenges us, too. The only Zion we can know individually must be here and now. Not for heaven, not for some other country, not for the future, but here and now. There are practical things we must do—strengthening the religious life of our people, improving their education and cultural standards, enriching their life, building institutions in which they co-operate and help each other.

A French philosopher was directing a forester in planting trees on his estate, and handed him a fine but slow-growing variety of tree. “It will take two hundred years for that to grow up!” exclaimed the forester. The philosopher was an aged man. “Good!” he declared. “Then we must begin at once!”

Someone said, “It will take a long time to build Zion.” Let us reply with that philosopher, “Good! Then we must begin at once.”

Friendly

Getting on the bus that runs from Kansas City to Independence, just ahead of me, were two women in their middle twenties, one of them with a young daughter. The mother was saying to her friend, “The people here are so unfriendly. I hardly know anybody at all. I wish Bill didn’t work here. I’d like to get out of it.” Both young women were well educated. The other one agreed about the people. I wondered if these young women were judging Kansas City or Independence. So I waited to see where they would get off. We were still deep in the residence section of Kansas City when they left. Independence has many fine, friendly people.

I find many evidences of the friendliness of people, since I have learned how to be friendly myself; and I want to go on learning. When I bought a Christmas present in a big city store, the clerk snapped at me until she found out I wasn’t snapping. Then she relaxed and said something pleasant, in a good human way. A “Please,” and a smile got me some needed help that the sour shoppers (and there are thousands of them) weren’t getting. I talked with a young father and his small son who waited beside me on Main Street for the return of “Mama” who was shopping. I saw a stranger step up to help a crippled man across a busy intersection. Many good people will be friendly if you give them a chance.

A few days ago I read about a young woman in an eastern town who was kind to an old woman that visited the music store where she worked. She was kind and friendly and forgot about it when the customer left. But the elderly woman did not forget. Some weeks later her son, a businessman, called with a big check as a gift from his mother. In the end, he bought the music store and turned it over to the young woman. Not all acts of kindness pay off that well, but all of them pay off in greater dividends than our original investment. It pays to be kind.

There are some helpful rules for being friendly. Begin with a smile. If the stranger gives you a frozen stare, it won’t hurt you, and you soon forget it. Chances are you will get a smile back, and some little conversation will begin. Don’t talk personal affairs nor ask personal questions; strangers resent prying. Talk on general things, especially what you see at the moment. Don’t push the conversation too far nor try to make too much out of it. Be ready to discontinue when the other party shows an inclination to do so. It is easier for men to talk to men, women to women.

In church affairs, the most effective missionary is the friendly person. Take a lesson from the weather. Rain and sunshine are poured in abundance upon the barren rocks, and upon the rich, productive soil. The rocks shed all of it; the soil turns it into something good and beautiful. Pour out friendship wherever you go. Some of it is bound to fall on good soil and bring a harvest of happiness. The task of our missionaries will be much easier if our people develop the art of friendship.

Friendship must begin in the heart, where all the good things, the great changes, reformations, and improvements of life begin. Jesus understood us. He always went to the heart of things.

Across the Desk

First Letter From Daveys

We were pleased to get a cablegram on the 23d of November, announcing the safe arrival of Apostle Davey and wife and daughter. Now comes their first news letter which we reproduce, dated November 25:

Just a brief note to supplement the cablegram. We arrived in Sydney on the afternoon of November 22 as per schedule, after a very enjoyable trip. The weather was ideal all the way and the flying as smooth as sitting in one's own parlor at home. In fact, it was so smooth that Donna was disappointed; she wanted to have a few bumps thrown in for good measure.

To say that we enjoyed our visit in the Hawaiian Islands is to put it mildly. Brother and Sister Miller and the Saints went all out to make our visit one long to be remembered.

We had our first mission experiences when we arrived in Auckland, and that was a rather cold one—I mean the weather! A cold spell came the day before we arrived; and except for that afternoon, it continued until we left—rain, wind over sixty miles an hour, and cold. We would have enjoyed the opportunity of turning up the thermostats, but instead we just shivered. However we enjoyed our brief visit with the Gunnings and the Auckland Saints.

A fine group of the Sydney Saints and Brother Don Alberts met us when we docked from the sea plane; they gave us a very fine welcome. Thanks to Brother Parks, we were through immigration and custom officials in jig time and taken to the mission house that is to be our home during our stay here; two of the sisters had dinner ready for us. We are all well pleased with our new home; in fact we are more than well pleased, both with the house and its furnishings. Brother Dickinson had a beautiful new bedroom suite put in for us and two new rugs on the bedroom floors.

Our two worst problems are money and traffic—not the lack of money, but knowing what to do with what we have. And I surmise that unless we are run over in the process, we will eventually get used to this driving and walking on the "wrong" side of the street.

Today I shall begin to dig into the office situation, with the help of Brethren Davies and Don Alberts. I hope before long to have a fairly good grasp of the Mission—by that I mean inside of the next few years.

All three of us want you to know that we are happy in our new field and hope we will be able to justify, at least reasonably well, our having been appointed here. Give our regards to all there.

From Elder W. J. Breshears, Pensacola, Florida, dated December 1:

On November 13, I met Apostle W. Wallace Smith at Birmingham, Alabama, and there began a tour of the Gulf States District with him which will end on December 2. On the tour, we have visited all branches and groups of the district, conducting services with them. I feel that this has been a very profitable experience for our people of the south, and it will give Brother Smith a working knowledge of this area as well as furnish him with firsthand information as to the needs of the people and acquaint him with the traditions and customs of the southland. He has been very well received everywhere he has gone, as the people have been eager to meet the grandson of the Prophet Joseph Smith, founder of the church, and the son of "Young Joseph." This has been the first time that many of our people have met a member of the official family of the church

When I made my report last month, I was conducting a missionary series at Huxford, Alabama, and reported four baptisms at that time. At the close of the series, I baptized four more, making a total of eight, and as a result three homes were united and all in another home are now members of the church but the father, whom we hope to win before long.

Brother Crownover, pastor at Mobile, reports seven baptisms this month which together with the four at Huxford brings the total for the district to 156—six over our goal for the year.

We are now laying plans for a busy schedule of district activities for 1949.

From a letter by Elder Amos T. Higdon:

My years as a General Conference appointee were happy ones, but the last few have been somewhat burdensome to me—not that I didn't enjoy my work, but my physical condition was such I was in pain, especially for the last six months. Naturally people are always concerned about one's physical condition, and when asked how I felt, it was hard for me to tell them I was suffering. I have never appreciated being around people who are always complaining, and I was afraid I might leave that impression with some.

The consideration given to me is greatly appreciated. I have enjoyed working with you. Brother Graham was as kind and considerate as he could be, and often said if I could give only two hours a day he would be satisfied, and when I did not feel like going to the office for me to stay at home, but for some reason or other I could not feel satisfied to work that way. The time may come when I will want to work there in Independence, and you can be sure when I do I will get in touch with you. I hope I never become a bother to the general officers, and I am trying to think this thing through now, so that as I grow older I will remember my past thoughts about doing those things that will be helpful and not cause my brethren to wonder what can be done to satisfy me.

Elder John W. Blackstock writes from Chariton, Iowa:

I baptized eleven into the church in November. It was of course the fruits of the labors and prayers of many people. Four of them were from Chariton, which makes sixteen for this year, which I think is an all time high for here.

The Great Design of God

The memorial sermon for Apostle George G. Lewis at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Thursday, September 16, 1948.

I through the law am dead to the law, that I live unto God. I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.—Galatians 2: 19, 20.

I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power . . . that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God. . . . For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, . . . that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.—Ephesians 3: 7-19.

DURING THESE PAST HOURS, I suppose, our hearts have been keeping vigil with Brother Lewis. On unseen wings, our sympathy has gone to Sister Lewis and the children, who, because of the dreadful accident which has taken our brother, may not be with us today. Furthermore, our thought, no doubt, has gone across the water to the mother, the sisters, and the others near to him in faraway Australia. They have lost: the wife, a husband; the children, a father; the mother, a son; and the sisters, a brother. We have lost a friend, and the church has lost one who has been stalwart in its work. The loss is tragic. And when one thinks of the fleeting space of time and small distance separating safety from annihilating danger, the question may be asked, "Why should this result be?" It is not our business this afternoon to attempt an answer to the question, because no man knows the answer. But we do know the love of God. We do know the service of this man who has gone before us. We know that God's love is a sufficient answer to every problem of the human heart, and the work which anyone does for him is accepted upon his altar and has its place in the molding of his work.

AT A TIME like this, I suppose it is natural for our eyes to turn skyward. So, looking in meditation, I have considered the grand design of God, which we comprehend only in the narrowest way. If our comprehension were complete, there might be no such question as has just been asked. However, as far as understanding is possible, the breadth of God's design has been impressed deeply upon my heart as I have thought of Brother Lewis.

APOSTLE GEORGE G. LEWIS

All of us are familiar with the statement, "The course of God is one eternal round." We know his creations are endless. We recall the new stars which have come into being, think of the great concourses of the heavens that manifest his power, consider the extent of his knowledge, and the sweep of his thought. These indicate to us his grand design in creation.

We think, too, of the nations of the world in this day in which we live. They struggle for the light, without which they face grave disaster. The breadth of God's design for the nations is seen when we recall the line in the New Testament, predicting the flying of the angel in the midst of heaven with the gospel of redemption and light for every nation, kindred, and tongue. As we turn our faces upward, thinking of the meaning of the angel message for the nations, the design of God is clear in its everlasting mercy and infinite love. We see that it is not one little group of people God intends to save, but throughout all time his heart has been to save mankind. Turning to the last book of our treasured Scriptures, we find the thought held by some that few will be saved, seems utterly wrong. It is there stated (Revelation 7: 9) that great multitudes from every nation and kindred and tongue stood before God, clad in the white robes which indicate salvation.

This design of God reaches out not only to the nations of our day, but also to the peoples of all time. For you recall that the gospel was preached to those who were disobedient in the days of Noah (I Peter 3: 20).

How humble we are as we ponder the evidence of the greatness of God's design, and then realize that the finger of God touched the shoulder of a young man on the other side of the world from us, brought him into the church, developed him in spirit and knowledge, and placed him in one of the leading quorums of the church that he might carry on for Christ. The grand design of God that contemplates universes still can include the human heart and be significant in the life of a single individual. This earth life is one phase of Brother Lewis' career. For him, God has opened another phase, hidden from our eyes, but nevertheless opened and going forward.

I BELIEVE it is the design of God that he should make clear to us, or endeavor to do so, the nature of his son, Jesus Christ. The design would be incomplete without that incomparable figure. He, himself, testified to the place of that Son on the shore of the River Jordan almost twenty centuries ago. He said, as Jesus came up from the waters of baptism, "This is my Son, in whom I am well pleased." Pleased that he would come to the earth for his work, pleased that he would subject himself to every rule which would be asked of all others, pleased that he would set his face towards a life of service and suffering.

In our century, the testimony has been re-echoed: "This is my beloved Son, hear him;" the words which came to the young man in vision as this church was being founded. In our own Doctrine and Covenants are found precious lines indicating that this Christ is at the center of God's creative work—the light of the moon and sun and the power by which they were made, the power by which the earth came into being, the power by which we ourselves exist. This is the light of Christ, the creative, developing light that proceeds forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2).

The testimony of God to Christ has led to the testimony of men. Brother Lewis shared in this testimony, for there had come to him a conviction of Christ qualifying him to serve. You will recall the statement that to some it is given to know of themselves that Christ is the Son of God; to others to believe their testimony. Knowledge by either method is equally effective in the purpose of God. From my personal and official association with Brother Lewis, from my knowledge of his work, I have the deepest conviction that in his heart he had a knowledge of the divinity of Jesus Christ and that this central status of Christ in the plan of God had made its impress deeply upon his heart.

It was, perhaps, this impress of Christ, as much as anything else, that gave weight to his quiet words and friendly counsel, and to the effective ministry he rendered. He could share with Paul (Colossians 2: 29) the impulse to labor, "striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily." Those might have been the words of Brother Lewis.

A person does not have to exert himself wildly or spectacularly to work for God. Sometimes the very quietness and persistence with which he keeps his face turned toward God are more effective. In the personal aspects of Brother Lewis' life, as well as in his official acts, there was this pressure upon his heart because in him dwelt the life that sprang from Jesus Christ our Lord. It is, then, a beautiful thing—I repeat those words—a beautiful thing, that in all the great work of God, the planning of his heart for mankind and the universe should center in our lives for a single purpose: the effective dwelling of Christ in us.

GOD'S PURPOSE is not finished with one's being taken from the scene. Paul caught the continuing nature of God's intentions when he wrote, "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith . . . to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."—Ephesians 3: 19. In the light of those words, implying all that they do, Paul says, "Yet not I live, but Christ liveth in me." The outflowing of such hearts creates the city of God; it redeems the world.

This indwelling Spirit of God, this manifestation of the indwelling Christ was seen in George (pardon me if I use his first name) in so many ways. He was intelligent; he gave time to preparation, not only in his education but in that which preceded the performance of some problem. He was industrious; he worked early and late, driven by the love that was in him. No man would have the presence of so many as are here today except one who himself loved people. He was patient, perhaps almost beyond the limit of patience. In dealing with those in need of his ministry, he was just, yet merciful in his justness. There was nothing wily or scheming about him; he was straightforward, he was frank, earnest, and sincere. These are almost a catalog of the fruits of the Spirit. These are the fruits that come from one who has been in touch with Christ, into whose soul has entered the spirit of that wonderful being.

Some years ago, I was thinking of the slow progress of the church. My heart was heavy. It happened at the moment that two were near me who somehow impressed themselves upon my mind. Looking at those men, I said to myself, "If the church wins no others, it still is not a failure." Thinking of Brother Lewis today, his ministry, his personal life, the character indubitably his, again I say, if the church were to have won no others, here is a demonstration of the power of God that gives to each of us heart. . . . He was not faultless, but he grew in faith. And he grew because he was in touch with the powers of heaven. He, I think, would be the first to say, "Yet not I live, but Christ liveth in me."

SO IT IS A LOSS indeed; and yet it is a gain. His unseen presence will go before us many times, testifying of the things of light and beauty and truth, encouraging others to go on. Those who remember his counsel will not lose him, though he may never touch their hand again. Those to whom the ministry of his

Commencement Address

The Independence School of Nursing, October 4, 1948

LIFE IN ITS UNFOLDING brings many interesting circumstances hardly anticipated. For instance, the last time Miss Copeland and I shared the stage, she was the nurse, her brother the doctor, and I weighed in at eight pounds, three ounces. Even though I might have been rather articulate about my distress at being ushered into a cold, strange world, still neither she nor I could have imagined that we would be sharing in the drama and significance of this occasion.

A Generation of Change

That was not a great many years ago, but into the period which has passed have been compressed change, revolution, and progress which formerly took many centuries. Fortunately change has not spared us—thirty years ago in Independence stood a small brick building, the Independence Sanitarium. Its function and purpose in the life of the church and of the community was as yet not quite clear. Today, in this growing city and in a church with a future, a modern hospital ministers to thousands of persons in need each year. And yet the conception of the greatness of its work is just beginning to appear. There are some who now envision a health center whose work touches the lives of persons of this fellowship and our friends throughout the world, where men and women of training and devotion can combine spiritual insight with intellectual discipline and application to the end of more abundant living for many.

You who are assembled here tonight have shared intimately in the life of that institution. You've become a part of its personality. You've known the quiet hours of early morning, the joys of the father with twin boys, the hush of sorrow, the pain, happiness, despair, and hope which together weave a fabric of rich experience.

A Worthy Profession

Tonight we recognize the achievements of the young women who entered the school of nursing as novices, but who now will have bestowed upon them symbols indicating successfully completed training. This occasion marks more than their activities, however. It stands as a living memorial to the many, who in church and community and institution have contributed effort and finance. This has been done because the Sanitarium is not just another school of nursing; it is distinguished by greater appreciations than of technical skill alone.

We recognize the worth of your profession and honor it. We are so constituted that life's greatest satisfactions come when we feel we are needed—that our efforts are of some significance. The curse of many occupations today is their emptiness—their lack of relation to the finished product and its utility. Division of labor, mass production have brought their rewards to the consumer; but from that same consumer, as he participates in the processes of fabrication, too often is taken the satisfaction of identification with the product to which he sets his hand. Yours is a work not afflicted by this current problem.

You who have chosen this profession, by the very nature of your work, are able to contribute directly to the well-being of men and women, boys and girls, and, in an indirect but very real way, your training and your interests qualify you for an effectual ministry desperately needed in areas larger than those you perhaps usually consider.

By E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

The Function of Work

Needed today in every community are those who can WORK, those who have the motivation and the skill to work in productive tasks, and those who see work not as a burden but as the vehicle of man's growth. One of the plagues of our day is the popular notion that the good life is one in which there is a decreasing amount of work until finally paradise knows no imposed tasks. So man frantically searched for some way to keep on the move in his leisure time. He calls for recreational programs for youth community centers—something to do to occupy the time—and life's taste becomes flat and unpleasant. Then he searches for greater thrills—the fast car, entertainment, amusement, danger, and excitement; inevitably the result is boredom.

It was the great Physician who knew something of the needs of a man's soul and body who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The invitation is to the laborer—the reward is rest.

"Six days thou shalt labor and on the seventh thou shalt rest." Just as holy is the concern for productive labor on the six days as the rest on the seventh.

A Syrian poet has said that you work so you may keep pace with the earth and the soul of the earth: "For to be idle is to become a stranger unto the seasons and to step out of life's procession that marches in majesty and proud submission toward the infinite."

You can bring to a sadly mistaken world the message and ministry of work, for your discipline knows hard work. It knows the physical cost of hours spent in manual labor, and it knows the unseen and yet heavier load of sharing in the suffering of those in one's care. It knows the superhuman effort required in retaining a sensitivity to human suffering and yet maintaining one's mental health. Work is love made visible. Wherever you go from this place, you can, by your appreciation for the values of work and disciplined application to the job at hand, teach the doctrine of work, its benefits, its rewards.

Life-affirmation

You can also assist in solving one of the great enigmas of the present day. How on one hand life can be considered invaluable, beyond price, and on the other hand a commodity to be readily and easily dispensed with.

We spend millions each year on advertised products which are purported to bring us zest for living, longevity, and regularity—and yet we build our highways eighteen feet wide and two automobiles approach each other at a combined speed of 120 miles an hour. Millions are spent in medical research, often raised through public subscription; billions are spent in inventing an automatic rifle, an atomic bomb, a supersonic military plane. Four billion dollars is spent for all education in this country—private and public; eight billion dollars is spent the same year for alcoholic beverages.

Somewhere there must be those who can bring order and sense out of a crazy-quilt pattern of philosophy that on the one hand resorts to every device to preserve youth and life and on the other hand kills and maims and destroys as no other scourge in man's history.

You can do that. You have seen humanity without the veneer of civilization; in illness the soul is exposed; the raw material of life is unmistakably before you. Can you not see that man does not simply accept his existence as something given but experiences it as something unfathomably mysterious? Then there develops a sense of awe, of reverence, that man does not give life nor take it away; somehow life is related to the order, power, and intelligence of a vibrant, mysterious, marvelous universe. Then the man who has become a thinking being feels a compulsion to give to every other person the same reverence for life he gives to his own. He experiences that other life in his own. He accepts as being good the preservation and promotion of life, the raising of it to the highest value to which it is capable of developing; he accepts as being evil all that destroys and injures life or keeps it from attaining the best it is capable of developing. This we can call life-affirmation. Life is good. It is to be conserved, enriched, stimulated. Only those who deal with the stuff of which it is made can teach men the way of life.

Service

Finally, then, here is an equation: work plus life-affirmation equals service. Service is work life-directed.

Many years ago a very wise Man said, "He who is the greatest among you will be the servant of all." Now we are living in a world that seems to pay little heed to that great teacher, and men say the only way to get people of quality for governmental positions is by making salaries more attractive. If you want good teachers, you must entice them by paying more; they say the nursing profession does not appeal because it is not a high-paying vocation. Here we confront another of the great and basic fallacies of our age—that men and women of real quality are directed in their vocational interests and objectives by the amount of money paid. It is another evidence of the materialistic idol we worship—that a man's prestige and leadership are judged by the income tax he pays. True, the laborer is worthy of his hire, and society many times underpays; but genuine happiness is the reward when a person serves because he wants to serve and likes to serve and in that service loses self. Genuine service is not interpreted in monetary terms, for there can be no real service without love and consideration for humanity as the motivating force. So the eight-hour day loses its importance, and the necessities of those we serve determine the efforts of the day. And this we do happily, not grudgingly; it's an old, old lesson but as current as tonight's newspaper that a man to find life must give it away. You are uniquely qualified to teach this truth as through service, which many times is financially unrewarded, you give yourselves to sustain life in others.

Days of Opportunity

These are critical days in which our lives have their setting, but one might well ask when in the history of the world there has been a time not considered critical by those who were then living. Days of crises are essentially days of opportunity. It is true that there are big problems to be solved, but this can be a stimulant rather than a depressive. People of our age do not wrestle with a three-year-old for exercise. Persons of mature power are not afraid of major problems. It might well be said that it takes big problems to build big people.

Of this you can be sure. As you bring your training and desires to match the marvelous opportunities of the present, you will find the Great Physician as Counselor, Sustainer, and Friend, for those who embark in his service find him as their companion. There can be no greater reward than this.

Three Years From Now

BY GRACE PENNELL TOUSLEY

A PREVIEW OF their own graduation from the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing three years hence was given the members of the class which entered the nursing school on September 1 of this year. These beginners in the study of the science and art of nursing sat on the stage of the Auditorium in Independence with the Sanitarium's graduating class on the night of October 4, and with the thousands of conference visitors heard E. J. Gleazer, Jr., President of Graceland College, talk to the outgoing class about the rewards of a life of service.

Twenty-five young women are enrolled in this new class. Time and tests will cull from this group throughout the entire three-year schooling period, and at graduation time in 1951, it will be considerably smaller numerically, but much larger when measured by knowledge, skill, and wisdom.

This class is the result of the Sanitarium's 1948 Student Nurse Recruitment Committee's months of work which began last April. The committee worked at the local level with the national student nurse recruitment program that was sponsored by the American Hospital Association in co-operation with the National Committee on Careers in Nursing, the American Red Cross, the American Medical Association, the American College of Surgeons, and the United States Public Health Service.

The local committee was chairmanned by Miss Edith Davey, R. N., an instructor in the Sanitarium nursing school. In June, Miss Davey resigned to be married and was succeeded by Miss Nelle Morgan, R. N., director of nurses. Other members of the committee were Miss Gertrude Copeland, R. N., hospital superintendent; Miss Vida E. Butterworth, R. N., educational director of the school; Mrs. George H. Tousley, hospital librarian; Elder Donald Lents, hospital chaplain; Dr. Charles F. Grabske, church physician and member of the hospital medical staff; and J. Orrin Moon, local businessman and civic leader.

THIS CLASS was an expensive group to recruit. The committee used every means it could procure to publicize nursing as a desirable career; the press—news, pictures, advertisements, mailing pieces, the radio, store window displays, motion picture trailers, person-to-person and group contacts. All time was donated by the committee. John Thoman, artist, donated the cover design for a mailing piece; Associated Theaters donated the time for running the movie trailer for which Mrs. Alberta Taylor Steele, one of this year's graduates, permitted her picture to be used; the Sanitarium medical staff paid for a large display advertisement in a local paper; KIMO, Independence's radio station, allotted much free time to nurse recruitment; the local papers generously contributed space to news, pictures, and advertisements about nursing as a career, and recommending the Sanitarium school; the Saints' Herald continued its policy of promoting the Sanitarium and Hospital and its School of Nursing.

Each student is probably worth her weight in gold at the present price if her cost were computed on the basis of the cost of the national and local recruitment campaigns. But the community and church dare not lag in the business of gaining recruits to the profession of nursing; the demand for nurses grows year by year and must be met if we are to be a healthy people. Branch pastors and women's department leaders throughout the church might possibly save the Sanitarium much of this recruitment expense by learning about nursing as a career and then directing the attention of young women toward the Sanitarium school. Write to Miss Nelle Morgan, R. N., Director of Nurses, at the Sanitarium and ask for the "Nursing Packet." It will bring you all of the information you need to promote nursing as a vocational choice.

At this writing, the roster of new students is as follows:

Ive Gene Bonnet, Texas.
 Ella Mae Buck, Independence, Mo.
 Bettie Lou Burris, Kansas City, Mo.
 Bessie Ruth Burris, Kansas City, Mo.
 Rachel Church, Oregon.
 Esther Irene Cline, Oklahoma.
 Wanda Faye Crutcher, Missouri.
 Catherine Bath Davis, Kansas City, Mo.
 Carol Jeanne Dowdy, Missouri.
 Shirley Allen Dew, Independence, Mo.
 Doris Rae Jean Englehard, Michigan.
 Delores Jean Hawkins, Kansas City, Mo.
 Betty Arlene Hays, Kansas City, Mo.
 Ida Louise Horton, Kansas City, Mo.

AN ENTERING CLASS is as eagerly awaited by hospital and school as the hospital and school are anticipated by the new students. Each new group has students which are of especial interest right from the first day. This year we have the Burris twins, Bettie Lou and Bessie Ruth, and no one ever expects to be able to tell which is which. There is also a very young grandmother, Mrs.

Masters of Our fate

See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil: In that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply: and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it. But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go and possess it. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live.—Deuteronomy 30: 15-19.

ONE OF THE BEST ARGUMENTS I know for the existence of a Supreme Being—if such a proposition needs any argument—is the orderliness and law we find in every atom and molecule of the universe. Disorder and chaos would indicate the complete absence of any directing mind or personality or intelligence. But through all the universe, we find law and order and stability. Once the properties of any element have been discovered, we know that the properties of that same element will always be the same, any place in the universe. Once we discover the laws of mathematics or astronomy or chemistry or physics or any other science—and understand them fully and correctly—we can predict with unfailing accuracy the outcome of certain combinations of circumstances. We know fire is always hot, and ice is always cold; hydrogen is always light, and lead is always heavy. We can predict to the fraction of a second the time of the next sunrise or sunset, the time of the next eclipse, the time of the next high tide. We can calculate the strain on a bridge or building to the ounce; we can put together anything from a can opener to an atomic bomb, and know that certain combinations of materials and processes will produce exactly the same result every time the combination is made in exactly the same way.

Law is so universal that we can even compute with an astonishing degree of accuracy the results of what we call the law of chance. If a sufficient number of examples are observed, it is possible to tell pretty accurately how many times out of a hundred a roulette wheel will turn up a certain number or how many times in a hundred plays a slot machine will pay off. Gamblers make their living by knowing these laws of chance and always staying on the safe side of them. Give an accurate sufficient examples, and he can calculate to a fine degree of accuracy the number of men out of every thousand who will die before reaching the age of forty, fifty, sixty, or seventy, and the number out of each thousand deaths that are due to specific causes. He perhaps cannot tell who will die out of an average group of one thousand men, but he can predict how many.

By Evan A. Fry

ONCE WE INTRODUCE the element of mind, personality, intelligence, and will into the picture, however, the most accurate of predictions may be upset. If a roulette wheel or a slot machine is rigged so that some human intelligence controls it, the law of chance is canceled by the will of the man who holds the controls. When men begin to study the problems of disease and accident and introduce the element of intelligence into the picture to prevent accident and disease, old mortality tables have to be revised. Whenever mind enters the picture in such a way that it can exercise a right of choice and control the laws of nature by the interposition of other laws, so one can predict with any degree of accuracy the result. Sir Oliver Lodge once observed that "No mathematician can predict the orbit of even a common housefly," no matter how well he can predict the orbit of stars and comets and planets millions of light years away. You cannot even predict what an amoeba—a little one-celled animal of microscopic size—will do under certain conditions, because he seems to have a certain amount of intelligence and a limited privilege of choice.

Men who have the highest intelligence of any creation on earth are made to act for themselves and not simply to be acted upon like so much inert matter. God made men in his own image—a little lower than the angels—and gave them dominion over the earth, to dress it, to tend it, to subdue it. He gave them a choice of good and evil—of obedience or disobedience. Disobedience brought the fall and a knowledge of good and evil. Again God respected the intelligence he had placed within man and placed him on probation, giving him time in which to exercise his own right of choice and agency. He was free to act and not to be acted upon save by the operation of God's justice and judgment in the last days after he had made his choices during a lifetime.

SOME PEOPLE resign themselves to fate as if they were helpless in the toils of a mechanistic, soulless universe—as if they were made only to be acted upon by that universe and not to act for themselves. Sometimes they carry humility and resignation too far, accepting meekly and supinely whatever comes to them without making any effort to change the course of what they call fate, or chance, or providence. Sometimes they sing,

Have thine own way, Lord, have thine own way;

Thou art the potter; I am the clay.
Mold me and make me, after thy will,
While I am waiting, yielded and still.

supposing that God will mold and make them into what he wants them to be, regardless of their wishes and will in the matter. God does not mold and make anyone against his will. He only helps men to mold and make their own lives according to the pattern they choose. Though the lines have more than a tinge of paganism, I much prefer the sentiments of William Henley's poem, "Invictus":

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

And the concluding lines:

I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul.

A similar sentiment is expressed in Shakespeare's play, "Julius Caesar," where Caesar is made to say:

The fault, dear Brutus,
Lies not in our stars, but in ourselves,
That we are underlings.

MEN CREATE their own fate, choose their own course, determine their own end. They are made to act and not to be acted upon. That is not to say, man is never subject to the vagaries of fate or chance or never affected by the circumstances of his environment. Man is a dual creature—composed of body and spirit. The body is subject to certain outside influences, over which the mind or spirit does not always have complete control. The body may be imprisoned, killed, burned, poisoned, wracked by disease, starved, or thrown to the wild beasts of the arena—but always the spirit has the last word; the spirit is always free to act and not to be acted upon. Nothing that men may do can imprison or kill or burn or poison or infect or starve the spirit unless it willingly consents to that action. The difference between the man who allows himself to become embittered and discouraged by the circumstances over which he has no control and the man who rises above those circumstances to a more glorious victory lies in the realm of the spirit, which is always free to act for itself, not to be acted upon. And when, without any outward compulsion, the body performs those acts which are unwise and rebellious and sinful, it is not the fault of the stars or of blind luck or chance or of God, but of the mind, the will, the personality which chooses for the body.

The world suffers today, not because the physical conditions surrounding us are all wrong, but because the wills of men—the men themselves—are wrong. Never before in the world's history have there been so many inventions and discoveries—so many fine facilities for the more-abundant life. If we are the slaves of the machines and the forces and the situations we have created, it is not God's fault, nor can it be blamed on chance or on the stars or even on the devil. The fault lies within us, because we do not choose wisely and then will to do wisely. The kingdom of God is waiting for the development of a people who do not expect God to do it all, who will quit waiting for a lucky day or just the right combination of circumstances, and in the strength and dignity of their own wills choose life and blessing and good, rejecting death and cursing the evil. Let us be assured that if we continue to choose evil, we place even our spirits under the control of the devil, to be acted upon by God's judgments because we refused to exercise our own will and agency and act as we should.

Make His service your delight, and he'll make your wants his care.—
Gertrude R. Dugan.

Servants of God

BY JOHN (TIHONI) MERVIN

This sermon, delivered in the Tahitian language shortly after the recent General Conference, was translated by Seventy F. Edward Butterworth. The service was held at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you all way, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 16-20.

to the command they received from the Master's lips. They went to the ends of the earth to preach the gospel in obedience to that divine command, and they met with diverse ends. Some were killed, others were boiled in oil, but they met with death in obedience to the command Jesus gave. Some people listened and followed Jesus. Others criticized and tried to persecute him and the disciples, and many of them were persecuted even to death. But when these disciples were killed, darkness covered the earth, and no one knew how to contact the divine source. Men of the world, then, to the best of their ability and with the power of the Spirit they had, organized churches of their own, but they did not follow the plan of the church that was originally founded by Jesus Christ.

Amos, in the eighth chapter, beginning with the eleventh verse, mentions this darkness that was to come on the earth:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, when I will send a famine in the land. Not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it."

According to the statement of Amos, darkness was upon the face of the whole earth, and there was

TO THIS LARGE ASSEMBLY, may you have life, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

I rejoice in this privilege of meeting with you in this lovely sanctuary tonight. This is the first time I have had the privilege of speaking to you in the Stone Church, and I think it will be the last, since we are about to leave for the South Sea Islands. I marvel at all the things I have seen since coming to this chosen land and rejoice greatly because of my contact with you good people here. In this most outstanding and peaceful Conference we have just experienced, I have been renewed in spirit, in body, and in mind. My sermons are now predetermined when I return to the Islands, for I shall carry this Conference to my people who did not have the privilege of coming here. I am not the only one who is rejoicing because of this outstanding Conference. I have seen unity expressed in the faces of the people, and have felt that the fame of this conference shall reach abroad, even to Europe, and to the islands of the sea and beyond.

The first thought I wish to leave with you is that the power both in heaven and in earth which is centered in Christ would be given to those disciples who are sent to the ends of the earth.

And the second thought is the statement of Jesus when he said to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto the ends of the earth, and my Holy Spirit will be with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

I wish to emphasize the last part, "I will be with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The Lord commanded his disciples to go to the ends of the earth to preach the gospel and to baptize the people into the church; not just in the Center Place alone, but throughout the whole earth to preach the gospel for salvation's sake to those who have not yet heard it, that they, too, may be brought into the true church of Jesus Christ. He sent his disciples to the ends of the earth to preach the gospel to those who would hear and obey.

And his disciples went according no light nor ministry because the power of ministry had been taken from the earth. That power was held in the palm of the hand of the Master and was preserved even to the dispensation of Joseph Smith and returned again to the earth according to our own church history; the power of that ministry is again established in the church of Jesus Christ in these, the latter days.

AND AGAIN IT IS WRITTEN in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 1, verse 4:

Wherefore I, the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others that they should proclaim these things unto the world. And all this that it might be fulfilled which was written by the prophets, the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones that man should not counsel his fellow man neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world, that faith also might increase in the earth, that mine everlasting covenant might be established, and the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world and before kings and rulers.

Because the Lord knew he did not have a servant upon the earth at this time, he selected Joseph Smith, Jr., to become a prophet to the children of latter-day Israel. He knew there was not a divine prophet upon the face of the earth, so he selected a new one and gave unto him revelations, which should come to the people and so that light again would break forth in the earth. In these latter days, he said to his servants, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel unto the ends of the earth, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

There is no difference in the commands which come to the prophets of this day and those which came to the prophets of the early days. They have the same commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature.

And Jesus said to his disciples, "I will be with you alway, even unto the end of the world." So in latter-day Scripture in the Doctrine and Covenants, first section, we are told that again the servants are to go forth and say the things which are given to them by commandment in their sermons, even to the end of the world.

I WOULD LIKE to tell you an experience that came firsthand to us in the South Sea Islands. It has to do with the missionaries who have been sent according to this commission. In the year 1903, there was a great storm, a cyclone, that arose on the island of Hikueru. There were over twenty thousand people on this island for the purpose of gathering pearl shell and laying up for themselves treasures of the earth. There were church structures erected at this time on the island, and there was also a servant of the Lord on the island. But because the people were so successful in laying up treasures of earth and gaining wealth, many forgot the church and ceased going to the services. They forgot that the Lord was still on his high throne, so they ceased to obey the commands which had come to them through the mouths of the missionaries.

Gambling houses were opened and the people engaged in drinking intoxicating liquors and doing all manner of evil at that time upon the island of Hikueru. But the Lord finally showed his hand and caused a great cyclonic storm to occur on the island. The storm struck with a tremendous tidal wave which remained for eight hours upon the island. It was not a sweeping tidal wave, but for eight hours the whole island was under water. Some of the natives climbed to the tops of the coconut trees and tied their little children there. Some tied themselves to the base of the trees because of the great winds that came with the storm, but the tidal wave uprooted the trees and they floated out into the ocean.

After this great storm had passed, there was no fresh water on the island. There was no longer food for the people. Even the coconut trees—the source of pure water—were washed away. After the sea had receded to its natural bed, the people scanned the whole island to find one small spring that still had fresh water in it, but they couldn't find a drop of water. But there was a servant of the Lord there by the name of Wilmer Gilbert, who was sent to the island by this great commission.

Fortunately, he was there when the tidal wave struck. The Lord touched his mind, quickened his understanding, and gave him the knowledge of what to do in this time of trial. It was a miracle in the eyes of the natives. He distilled the sea water, and it became pure and fresh through the transformation of the process. This servant of the Lord was a savior of the remnant of the people. He became the director at this time and rationed out the water to the people who were left on the island. Through this rationing, the people were saved. There were many denominations at that time, but the Lord selected his servant—an elder in the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church—to perform this great miracle. Therefore, we in the islands feel that through this church comes light, direction, and intelligence. Why is it that it came through the missionary of this church? Because it is written, "I will be with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

THE SECOND EXPERIENCE that I would like to relate to you has to do with the ministry of Apostle T. W. Smith. Brother Hubert Case can bear testimony to the truthfulness of this experience. T. W. Smith, who was sent to Tahiti in the year 1884, was to go to the island of Anaa to direct a mission conference. He contacted all of the available ships at that time to secure passage to Anaa, but he was not successful. There was one captain in particular, Nari Salmon, who had a ship going straight to that island. He lied to Brother Smith, however, saying that he was not going to Anaa. Since there was no other means of securing passage to these islands, he and his associates took a very small boat and began to strike a pathway through the sea to the island of Anaa. They went out of the lagoon into the ocean beyond the reef, and the wind began to subside. They drifted out into the ocean but could not move forward. It was almost time for the conference to begin at Anaa, and the sailors on the boat doubted that they could get there before the close of conference.

But Apostle T. W. Smith arose and prayed to our Heavenly Father. He asked with faith that God would give them the proper wind to carry them directly to Anaa. Their ship had been drifting in the opposite direction from the island, but the wind began to rise. It started to blow with greater force until the ship's nose turned into the right path, and they were soon on their way. They began to gain speed, and that whole night long they gained such speed that in the morning they set foot on the island of Anaa. But the ship of Nari Salmon that was going directly to the island of Anaa missed the island and did not arrive for several days after the conference. The conference was held, and there was great rejoicing because the servants of the Lord had arrived. Why did this occur? Because Jesus said to his disciples, "I will be with you always, even unto the end of the world."

ABOUT THE YEAR 1920, Apostles Paul Hanson and John Rushton came to Tahiti. They contacted many of the Society Islands by ship. When they arrived at Kaukura, we were living upon the island at that time. One Sunday morning the president of the branch turned the work over to these two apostles. There was a family by the name of Faatahu Richmond living there; on this particular Sunday morning, the little child of the family swallowed a penny which caught in the esophagus and paralyzed his throat. Paul Hanson, who was preaching at the time, was called upon to come and administer to the young lad. He asked them to wait until he had finished with the sermon, then he would go immediately. But the family went from church to church to get help. Missionaries of other denominations went to the house to help this child who was strangling to death on the penny. One of them reached his finger down the throat of the child to pull the penny out, but only pushed it farther down in the esophagus. The family gave up in despair, thinking that this was the end of the child, because he was strangling and his face was turning black. When Paul Hanson and John Rushton finished the service at church, they went directly to this household. When they entered the house, they saw the child's face was black and he was strangling to death. These two servants of the Lord picked the young child up and placed him with his head lower than his feet, and then laid their hands upon his head to administer to him. As soon as Brother Hanson had administered to this young lad, he struck him upon the back, and as he did so, the penny fell out of the throat onto the floor. The child began to breathe normally again. This was a wonderful experience to the people upon the island of Kaukura. They gave thanks to Brother Hanson and Brother Rushton at that time. But Brother Hanson said, "Do not return thanks to us; thank the Lord above who caused this child to live." The Sunday following this experience, all members of the Richmond family were baptized into the church. They knew it to be the church of Jesus Christ and recognized the power which follows the true ministers who are sent under the great commission.

Why did it occur in this manner? Because Jesus said, "I will be with you always, even unto the end of the world." These are some of the reasons why we, the South Sea Island natives, trust in this work and in the missionaries who are sent, because we know this is indeed the true church of Jesus Christ. We have seen the power following the disciples, according to the great commission. Therefore we are happy and rejoice because the gospel has come to us on the islands of the sea.

THERE ARE MANY who are not yet members of the church in Tahiti, but I know that the time is near when they shall come into the true church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, if we remain faithful.

There are many wonderful experiences I could relate to you that have happened as the missionaries have sailed through stormy waters to the islands of the sea, but time does not permit. We sorrow because many of the missionaries have come to our mission and have died and have been buried there in service to the Lord, without returning to their homeland. The very first missionaries who were sent to the islands of the sea buried one of their number before they arrived. His name was Knowlton Hanks. He was the first missionary of the church to be buried at sea. Another missionary, Charles Lake, came to us and after years of ministry was laid to rest on the island of Amanu. On the island of Tahiti lies the body of the first wife of our beloved Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, who also came and gave her all in service to us. There are those, however, who have given themselves in service and have returned. We are happy to meet Brother Case and his good wife and others of the missionaries who have been to the islands of the sea. And it is a thrill for us to meet all the missionaries at this General Conference who have been to Tahiti and also some of their chil-

Concerning the Young

By Russell Tooze

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of the church furnish our only hope for a twentieth century redemption of Zion. They have the zeal, intelligence, and vision which are primary factors in establishing the city of God here on the earth. And back of all of these essentials is a great spiritual endowment. The young men and women of the church have another blessing which most of us do not have—youth. To treat young Latter Day Saints with complacency is merely waving good-by to the greatest event that could ever come to pass in this world—the redemption of Zion.

Young folks want to think, work, and play. These three basic fundamentals of life need careful guidance. Are they getting it in the church? If not, there are many other institutions in the world that will gladly furnish supervision. But we must not lose sight of the fact that the moment our boys and girls enter the schools, organizations, and clubs outside the church, they are being saturated with the teachings and doctrines of the world. Just to that extent their progress in the redemption of Zion is handicapped. As a church, we cannot afford to take such a risk. This is a serious matter which we often reveal as we sing, "We're marching to Zion." Haven't dren who have been born at Tahiti. I shall remember these experiences and shall refer to them often in my sermons when I return home. I shall never forget the wonderful experiences I have had here among you good people. Therefore, you who have been baptized into this church, pledge allegiance as do we of the islands of the sea to the same Lord and the same God. Let us remember the commission is to us, and that he will be beside us always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

you often reflected as to how we are marching? Are we plodding along? Are we gingerly marching forward? Or have we oldsters sat down beside the road as the young people went by in a double-quick step? Regardless of how the church is marching toward Zion, it could certainly move more rapidly. With the proper supervision of our children and teen-agers, the ultimate goal of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints can be attained within fifty years. Do you realize that our church is overdue more than one hundred years in its mission to redeem Zion? Who is to blame—the young or the old? If the writer may be so bold as to venture a judgment, it is that the oldsters since 1830 are guilty of neglect in the first degree. May God have mercy on them!

TRUE, young people jump off the deep end sometimes in their thinking. But doesn't everybody who tries to reason things out reach faulty or startling conclusions at times? Are we to forbid young people the opportunity of participation in church activities just because they err along the way? This is a sure way to annihilate their God-given gift, the spirit. Instead, take them by the hand and lead them onward to Christ. Let us deal with our young people upon the assumption that, if they really think, they will make mistakes, rather than adhere to the criterion which advocates that thinking eliminates all faulty logic. The man or woman who never makes mistakes never does anything.

Now, how are youngsters going to think unless the leaders of the church give them something to think about? (The term leaders means every person of responsibility in the whole church from the Zion's League director to the Prophet.) Mr. Pastor, what are you doing about this problem? Are the young people of your branch attending prayer meeting? If not, have you attempted to find out why? Is your Zion's League functioning at full capacity? If not, have you made an investigation? Are the young people of your branch participating in the choir, special youth programs, and recreational activities? If not, what are you doing about it? Are you and your staff directing the thinking of your young people, or are they being supervised by ball-room attendants, skating rink instructors, amusement park barkers, moving picture magnates, and sponsors of other organizations which are not guided by religious principles? (It may be well to remind you that the Hollywood movie industry was quite recently investigated by the Un-American Activities Committee with rather fruitful results—Senator Thomas will vouch for this statement.) The devil is always ready to misdirect the energies of youth. Now, spiritual father, you answer the question, "What helpful guidance am I giving the young people of my flock?"

Young people like to work. They are builders of the first order. And contrary to what some contend, adolescents desire to think and act constructively. Given an opportunity to use their minds and bodies, there isn't such a thing as a "bad boy or girl." Are the branches throughout the church making use of this untold amount of pent-up energy? Remember, they are going to give off steam, either for good or bad; why not have them building Zion instead of helping to build more dance halls, theaters, and other devices of Satan?

LET US GO ON from generalities to the specific. What about prayer meetings? Do the young people attend? Just their presence will add to the spirituality of the service. If they are there, do they help sing, "Sweet Hour of Prayer"? Do they offer prayer? Do they testify for their Lord? If they do all of these things, then it is up to the priesthood to instruct them as to what constitutes a proper prayer and testimony. Certainly, we Latter Day Saints should be more judicious in our utterances to and for the Almighty than our current meetings reveal. Youth is willing to be taught, so there is no excuse for us to go on in the same old rut. It is the task of both the laity and priesthood to bring the young people to prayer meeting. After getting them to the service, it is the duty of the priesthood to give them instruction in the art of prayer and testimony. When these lessons have been taught, it is then time to give them positions of leadership. Is it infringing upon the authority of the priesthood to have young people sit at the presiding table with the one in charge and read the scripture lesson? Couldn't they be called upon to offer the invocation and benediction? Most certainly a person does not have to be an ordained minister to have the right to read the Scriptures and pray!

Just another thought while we're on the subject of holy supplication. Would it be out of order to have the young people spread the linen over the communion table, carry the bread and wine and place it upon the table after the deacons have prepared it, and then place the linens over the trays? After the service, couldn't they assist the deacons by washing, drying, and putting away the communion set? Is there any reason why the young women couldn't take the linens home and launder them for the next service? How about using both young men and women as assistants to the deacons in ushering and taking up the collection? Are we so tradition-bound that we can't break away from the old way of doing things? It would be very interesting to know how many pastors throughout the church are using young people in these various capacities. Let's not lose souls for the sake of preserving ritual.

YOUTH IS THE GREATEST constructive builder on earth. Does your church yard need reseeding? Do you need some new flower beds? Does the shrubbery need trimming? Do you want more trees set out around the church? All you have to do, Pastor, is tell the young people what you want. They are ready and willing to carry out every one of your reasonable requests or suggestions. Does the basement of the church need cleaning? Does the fence around the church need repairing and painting? Why haven't you told your Zion's Leaguers? They are eager to work on some worth-while project. Don't alibi with that stock argument that young people are lazy or indifferent. If you do, they will turn the gun on you and say that they are not indolent but neglected—and their contention is the absolute truth.

Are your young people giving a play this winter? That is a good way to raise money, and it's enjoyable work, too. Young folk love drama. They like to make stage equipment, experiment with make-up, and play practice. But the big thrill comes the night the production is presented. Can't you remember vividly and with great pride every play in which you had a part?

And how about a pageant? That would take in all of the young people in your church. It is an elaborate spectacle which can be employed in portraying many of the Biblical stories. This is a worth-while project deserving of much consideration by branch leaders. The pageant is a splendid method of developing scholarship (we need more of this in our church), leadership, and citizenship. We must teach our young people all we possibly can in the light of Latter Day Saintism; we mustn't pass this responsibility on to those who "know us not."

Do the young people in your branch sing in the choir? It goes without saying that the excellent singers take part—every means is used to get them to participate. But how about the youngsters with mediocre voices? These are the ones who really need help. The person who cannot carry a tune in a bushel basket often rejoys singing as much as the trained vocalist. All who have a desire should be welcomed by the director and members of the choir. Here is a wonderful opportunity to give them responsibility. Let the more able ones direct the choir occasionally; let others do solo and group singing frequently (don't let any one develop the attitude that he has to be the star of the show or else he won't sing—too many such characters are roaming from church to church now). Arrange for a special musical program to be put on by the young people once or twice a year—this is another way to raise money. After all, it takes quite a lot of financial support to keep up any good musical organization.

YOUNG FOLK like to play. Do you have a well-organized recreational department? If not, you can't blame them for going elsewhere for entertainment. We might as well make up our minds to the fact that young people are going to have their fun. If they can't have it in the church, they will leave the flock. Boys and girls are easily pleased when it comes to recreation. However, they should not be expected to play the same game or games over and over every time they have play night; neither should parlor games be featured as a regular recreational diet. There are so many things to be incorporated in a program that it should never lack variety. For instance, they can play croquet (a good way to keep the lawn in first-class condition), badminton, checkers, chess (for the serious minded), miniature golf, tennis, quoits, baseball, and a thousand other games Mom and Dad used to play. If the church grounds are small, the group could go to a near-by park or amusement center. The wiener roast, pot-luck dinner, box social, and other events of this nature are pleasant means of giving adequate self-expression. The play program of the church requires sterling quality leadership assuring a well-planned play schedule. Poor leadership is almost a certain guarantee that the recreation evenings will turn into petting parties. Encourage the young people to make play equipment and fix up the grounds and recreational rooms. Give them a chance to work off their excess energy by working for a good cause.

EVERY ADULT should take a vital interest in the young people of the church. Don't expect them to go to church just because their parents do, and don't expect them to reach maturity ahead of time just because they are Latter Day Saints. They need guidance and supervision of the highest type.

In order to direct the mental and physical activities of our young people, we must familiarize ourselves with their problems. It will take a lot of study on our part to be able to assume such a grave responsibility.

The woman's department is supervised and petted along by the leadership of the branch (it makes a large financial contribution to the church); the finance committee studies and keeps a firm hand on the budget (church expenses have to be met!); the priesthood dashes out to see why Brother John Doe, age eighty or crowding the century mark, does not attend church regularly, yet a young person can stay away for weeks without the priesthood making a single inquiry. The minister spends hours in preparing sermons for his flock, which is ninety per cent adult. What about the young people? Oh, they are all right, Sister Doe is their leader! Saints, how many of you know what the young people of your branch are doing spiritually and temporally? Remember, they are your brothers and sisters in the gospel, and they are your responsibility.

It is too bad the way the young people of our branches are neglected. Why can't we see that they are the very foundation and life of the church. One of the surest ways to destroy the church is to receive its young with the slightest degree of complacency. There must be someone to carry on this great Latter Day work vigorously and efficiently when we older members pass from the scene. The spiritual development of youth should be the ultimate goal of the church and of the world.

LET US NOT PRAY and work for ourselves alone; let us live for our young people. They are the ones who have the great vision of the latter-day work. It is they who have the enthusiasm, the brightly-kindled spirits, and abundant potential intellect so essential for the redemption of Zion. May it be possible in the near future for the church to hand them the torch of faith with the stern admonition to go throughout this great nation and every other nation on the face of the earth declaring the angel message. And while carrying high this twentieth century religious torch, may Jesus be pleased to come and claim his own. What could be a more beautiful and fitting climax for this age in which we are living?

Let us live and let us give for this younger generation, and may the Almighty be pleased with our efforts when we are summoned to stand before the heavenly bar of justice.

The Bridge

by Arthur Wentworth Hewitt

Here is an invitation to faith, and a personal witness to the love of God in a world of evil. Using the symbolism of a bridge, Dr. Hewitt shows us how faith is the bridge that leads us to God over the river of sorrows and evil which is this world. $1.50

BOOKS

A Story for Young People

Buffalo Gold, by Geraldine Wyatt. Illustrations by E. A. Furman. Longman's, Green & Co., 1948. 184 pages. $2.25.

The story of the author is as interesting to church people as the story of her book. The only member of her family to join the church, she married a fine man who is a church member, and they have a lovely daughter, Alberta, who is growing up, and giving service to the church with her musical talent. The author served much of her apprenticeship in writing for church publications: the Saints' Herald, Stepping Stones, etc., and also wrote a book which we published, Dawn of Peace.

Buffalo Gold is written for teenage readers, and has had excellent reviews in some of our leading literary publications. It has enjoyed a good sale, which is a note of merit. The story is about pioneer life in Kansas, a part of the great romantic saga of the development of the West in America. It is also a heroic story of a boy's hope and dreams, of his courage that held on against odds when his family was ready to quit, and of his part in saving them, and growing up into wonderful manhood. The book centers around home and family life, and the great forces of nature brought to bear upon them: the plains, the drought, the winter cold, the emergence from a sod house into a real home, the cattle, the Indians, and the discovery of the Turkey red wheat.

Adults, too, will enjoy the story. It will make a fine Christmas gift. We are happy in this success that has come to one of our own devoted writers. She has put her ideals and faith to work in her book.

The Message of Christmas—Victory

AT THIS PRE-CHRISTMAS SEASON, the activities and preparation being made to celebrate the birthday of Christ on Christmas Day bring the Master very close to our hearts. At this time, we think of him constantly. Our minds go back in memory to the account of the babe born in a lowly stable, and we love to arrange the tiny figures of the holy family in the manger scene in homes and churches.

In our meditations, however, we think of him as Christ, the Savior of the world, who lived upon this earth and walked with and taught his disciples the way of life. His "Lo, I am with you always," and "If you love me, keep my commandments" ring in our ears as we hear the church bells. We see the reflections of his teachings around us. The second commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor," takes form in the kindly feeling for God's children which springs up in the heart; "Remember the poor," in the baskets of good cheer being distributed; "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," in the Christmas offering which is so gladly brought in at the church school Christmas service by the children.

This appreciation of the living Christ by the masses of people everywhere, even though their comprehension of the Master may be limited, should bring great courage to those who claim to be his children and reassure them that they have chosen the best path and can succeed. His tender promises of assistance are found throughout the Scriptures, and should again bring us confidently to the affirmation that we can do his will, for he is with us. In a very real way, many have believed these promises and have found their minds made clearer, their bodies stronger for the tasks, and their desires to serve strengthened when they have attempted to keep his laws and have a part in his work.

On Christmas Day we give gifts to those we love. Christ has given us daily gifts, for all we have comes from him. Christmas is Christ's birthday. We desire to show our love for him in increased devotion.

The women of the church particularly can bring him precious gifts if they try to keep his commandments. He has given instructions which will help them in all phases of their lives to develop and grow in his likeness.

By Pauline J. Arnson

If we follow him daily, our appreciation for his tender mercies will be expressed every day of the year as well as on Christmas.

The General Department of Women sends sincere good wishes to all. Our hope for the women of the church is that all may worship him through service to the church, and we are confident that victory is possible because HE LIVES.

Christmas and Mother

She made for me
These memories—
Of fragrant Christmas tree
Hung with bright balls and tinsel,
Of turkey simmering in its juice,
Of sparkling cranberry sauce,
And crisp, hot dressing.

She fashioned long ago
With eagerness
The magic of small packages,
And large,
Wrapped with such loving care
And caught forever in her eyes
The hushed expectancy of Christmas morn,
The snow-filled skies,
The lighted hearth,
The family gathered close around.

Before I could remember,
She instilled
A true appreciation of the poignant joy
That simple carols rouse,
The sweet warmth of the half-lit church
At Christmas vespers,
And best of all, the sense of being loved
And cared for Which the Christmas story brings.

CHRISTMAS SELECTIONS

IN THE WORDS of an old folk song, well-loved by children, "Christmas is a-comin'," no other season of the year stimulates quite so much happy anticipation for the children as does the festival of Christmas. From earliest memory, most children in this freeland of America have found Christmas to be a time of excited planning, delightful secrets, and thrilling surprises. There are many customs and traditions which are a part of our Christmas heritage. Along with holly, lighted tree, stocking-hanging and gift-giving, we have the singing of Christmas carols. There is probably no other part of Christmas which means quite so much to us or no other custom which does so much to promote that Christmas feeling as does the singing of Christmas music.

Luke gives us a highly dramatic account of the first Christmas carol as sung by the choir of angels. Just as the lowly shepherds were thrilled by that first song, so have the children of God throughout the ages since that time responded with uplifted hearts to "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Many different carols have become a part of our culture since the angels gave us the original. Words and tunes vary widely, but they all have the same spirit—the spirit of joy.

There is no substitute for vocal participation in carol singing. Such participation is one of the most satisfying and stimulating experiences we can give to our children. The home should contribute its part to this inspirational activity. Schools and churches can do a great deal, but the real spirit of Christmas hovers around the hearth where love and understanding are more nearly complete, where members of the family can sing together in joyous remembrance of the gift of God's love, where they can share gaiety tempered by reverent solemnity, and where the future is but a road to continued unity and ambitions for a worth-while life.

By Floy Lorene Bennett

Although there are no substitutes for vocal participation in carol singing, there are some very effective supplements. One of the best and most satisfactory of these is the record-player. Many beautiful recordings are available for those who want to add to the Christmas spirit in the home while they simultaneously add to their children's musical knowledge and appreciation. These recordings should be selected with careful attention to artistic performance and simplicity of detail. Solo instruments and solo voices should be varied with small ensemble and orchestral groups. Here are a few suggestions which may be used as a guide in selecting your Christmas albums.

- V-20993—Christmas Bells, Gilchrist; Good King Wenceslas, folk; Joy to the World, Handel; Deck the Halls, old Welsh air; We Three Kings of Orient Are, Hopkins; and The First Noel, folk (chimes).
- V-20174—Rock-a-bye, Baby (violin); Sweet and Low, Barnby (violin); Lullaby, Brahms (viola); Adeste Fideles (bells); The First Noel, traditional (trombone); and Nazareth, Gounod (cornet) (orchestra).
- V-19822—Silent Night, Gruber (violin, flute, harp).
- V-26399—Night Before Christmas, The, Moore; and Jingle Bells Fantasy (orchestra, quartet).
- C J-17—Lullabies (piano, strings, voice).

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—An impressive service was held on Sunday, November 21, when two young men were ordained to the office of elder, preparatory to their entering General Church work. They were G. Wayne Smith and Charles Neff; the officiating ministers were Elders Charles Johnson and Fred Mottashed, High Priests Frank McDonald and James Gray. Following the ordinations, Pastor McDonald delivered an inspiring sermonette charging all members to give of their time, talents, and money in spreading the work of the church.

Elder Smith, his wife, Rosaleene, and their seventeen-months-old daughter, Barbara Jean, are being sent to the Chicago and Northeastern Illinois Districts; Elder Neff, his wife, Frances, and their sixteen-months-old son, Robert Charles, will go to Omaha, Nebraska.

DETROIT-WINDSOR DISTRICT.

—A successful conference was held at Central Church in Detroit on Sunday, October 24. The conference opened with a prayer service at 9 a.m., followed by a class at 10 with Bishop Carlson instructing. At 11 a.m. and again at 7 p.m., Apostle Arthur A. Oakman addressed the assembly. Two classes were conducted at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Elder Earl V. Hill discussed church school problems and program, and Missionary Warren H. Chelline led a general discussion. The business meeting convened at 3 p.m. under the direction of Apostle Oakman and the district presidency. Recommendations for ordination approved at the session were Carl Walker, deacon; Jack Beaudette and Harvey Nicholson, priests; Vincent Harrison, Leone R. Weaver, Carl J. Knott and James T. VanBiber, elders. Dinner and supper were served in the lower auditorium of the church by the women of Detroit.

CLEAR LAKE, INDIANA.—Elder E. R. Carter of Lansing, Michigan, conducted a series of meetings in October and November. These services and the ministry of Elder Luther Troyer have brought notable results. Plans have been made for the building of a new basement entrance and for the refinishing of walls and floors. A new electric organ was purchased recently to add to the beauty of the services. Members passing through northeastern Indiana are invited to worship with the Clear Lake congregation. The church is located four miles east of Fremont.

Whose Purpose?

By George K. Shoemaker

(NOTE: Explaining the reason for having written this article, the author says: "It is the outgrowth of a discussion in a class in philosophy of education here at the university. In this class, as in any philosophy class, the central theme is to study and attempt to determine the nature of man and his relation to the universe in which he lives. However, these discussions seemed to be on the plane in which we would look at man, as he is now, in an attempt to search for his origin and nature. It was devoid of any consideration of a living God with purposes greater than those of men. One morning, I sat down to write some questions which I hoped to raise at the next class session to bring out consideration of an ultimate being as the source of the universe in which we live. When I started to write the questions, I found so many had answers readily explainable in the light of Latter Day Saint theology that I wrote the following paper and presented it to the class for consideration.")

WE HAVE LONG SEARCHED for a knowledge of the origin of the universe and man. Many theories have been offered as possible solutions, but none offered by men has ever been accepted by a very great number of people. Scientists have sought truth in many fields but have always been frustrated in explaining with assurity the reasons behind the presence of the world and man. Such a thing as the law of gravity has been described in detail by Newton and others, but none could tell when or how it came. They could not be absolutely certain it would be in effect on the morrow, although it was plausible it would be. One thing was certain, no law of man could legislate against or for this law of nature even though volumes have been written about it.

These same problems that bothered man in ages past still plague him and will continue to do so until he commences to realize his insignificance and the narrow limits of his understanding. Man alienates himself from the "greater power," God, by attempting to explain in the light of his own (man's) experience the answers to these basic questions.

Two philosophies that attempt to explain the nature of man are materialism and idealism. Materialism is a theory which considers the facts

Here Is the Writer

George Shoemaker was graduated from Graceland College in 1943, after which he spent two years in the Navy. He received his degree in general engineering from Iowa State College in March, 1947, and is now doing graduate work at Drake University in the field of education. He teaches part time in the physical science department and is assistant to Dr. P. H. Riggs of the astronomy department. On "public night" (once a week), he has charge of the Drake municipal observatory. He is married to the former Marjorie Robinson, a Graceland graduate of 1947.

of the world sufficiently explained by the existence and nature of matter, per se, and that man acts as a result of his contact with the material world about him or in him. This is quite a fatalistic philosophy and limits him to a considerable extent in the exercise of freedom of choice or agency. It has many things in its favor, however, and can be used to guide one's thinking in the temporal things of life. Idealism is somewhat opposite to this. It is a theory which maintains that only ideas are real, and we can know the world about us only as our senses form ideas for us. Some idealists go so far as to deny the existence of a world outside of the mind of man. It may sound absurd, but some of these would maintain that my automobile exists only while I am thinking of it. The automobile can't exist independent of my thoughts about it. Materialism and idealism have shortcomings the same as many which preceded them in that their search seems to start and stop with man. This is about as logical as if I were to sit before a mirror and ask myself questions about atomic energy (I know relatively nothing about it) and expect the correct answers to come from the image I would see.

SOME PHILOSOPHERS, realizing the inadequacy of the previous theories, admit a God, and as a result, are termed mystics. These proponents of mysticism, however, maintain that the highest knowledge is obtained not by reasoning but by effortless perception or intuition from an unknowable God. (Even a Reorganized Latter Day Saint would discredit this, especially the "effortless perception" aspect.)

It is a popular saying among students of philosophy that when a person first dabbles in metaphysics, he is drawn away from God toward atheism, but as he studies deeper, he attempts to re-establish his contact with a philosophy incorporating God as the central theme.

With this as an introduction, we see that if a man is a materialist and the material world is the source of all his thoughts and his stimulation must come from it, it would seem apparent that he has the potential to know all of the world about him, but no more than that. This, of course, leaves no wall for man to surmount at present, but eventually it may, for he cannot come to know the purposes behind the existence of the material world,

New Horizons

About Time

By Biloine Whiting

or of his own existence for that matter, with only his own world in which to find the answer. If he is to have a deeper purpose in life, then he must become more than a parasite on the world about him; he must have some means of knowing the reasons for the manifestations of nature about him; he must know that he has a niche in the world with a purpose greater than any of the other animate or inanimate objects. As a consequence, he turns to an "ultimate being" for answers in his search for wisdom, guidance, and help—not as a boy turns to a father who can tell him every move to make in his daily life, but as a boy turns to his teacher to form the guideposts in his thinking. This turning to a deity is one of the greatest opportunities afforded man to use his free agency in shaping the future pattern of his life. This accepting a God as the genesis of our world and lives in no way eliminates man's free agency subsequent to the acceptance.

MAN HAS LONG FELT his insignificance in the world about him and has always turned to a greater power than the material world. We might say that this turning to God is inherent in his being and becomes more recognizable in times of stress and strain when the material world fails him in his quest for knowledge and truth.

Without the presence of this greater power, man could not have even the potential to know the ultimate purposes or even hope for the ultimate destinies of mankind. He could not, even by the fondest stretch of imagination, hope for life beyond the existence of the physical body except in an immortality which may shape the lives of those who come after him (as Rockefeller has done in his philanthropic grants to institutions), but the individual himself, according to any philosophy, is dead and devoid of even a spiritual life (life not dependent upon a body) unless there is a greater one with an ultimate purpose above and

TIME IS A FUNNY THING. We don't do anything to get it, and we can't get rid of it.

Time is like air, only it doesn't move as air does. We can't see it or taste it or feel it or hear it or hold it or give it for a present. If it was for sale, no one would know how much to charge for it, because to some it is so worthless they can't give it away, and to others it is life itself.

No one seems to know where time starts or where it ends, and since no one knows anything about it, philosophers and drugstore clerks can debate on whether men move through time like a fish in a stream or in circles like a child on a merry-go-round or if we move at all.

One thing about time is certain, though, and that is that everybody is full of advice on how to spend it. The Mexicans say that time is everywhere, and that a poor man is rich when he can spend time lavishly. So in Mexico when a man has a 2 p. m. appointment with his dentist, he sits down to dinner at 1:30, eats leisurely until 2:15, spends 10 minutes prais-beyond that of man or men. In order for this God to have an effect on one that seeks him, He must have a means of communication with man which will be understood by him. This type of communication between the material world and man is not possible. It is only possible between man and God if God is a living being with powers of receiving the thoughts of man and answering them in an understandable way.

This is not in support of mysticism, nor is it a denial of materialism or any other "ism." It is, however, a revolt against the shallowness of a man-centered philosophy and an appeal to look beyond the mirror of man to understand the ultimate purposes of humanity and the universe.

At 2:45 he saunters out to his car, slides behind the wheel, and then as if to make up for the time lost, he drives at breakneck speed through the city to the dentist's office. He goes through red lights, saving 30 seconds, and narrowly misses hitting a bicyclist with a pan of bread on his head. At 2:55 he arrives at the office for his 2 p. m. appointment, and sinks into a chair with a magazine to wait for the dentist to arrive.

A thousand miles north of Mexico City, a man eats his dinner a half hour early, when he is not even hungry, so as not to be late for the appointment. He ignores his wife because he hasn't time for her, and drives carefully to the office, knowing that the red lights are timed so as to get him through the town in a minimum of time. He arrives at the office just as the town clock is striking 2, but the dentist only gives him a cold stare for not having arrived five minutes early.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S LEADERS and social reformers talk a lot about leisure time and how it can get one into trouble. Wicked ideas come to young people if they have too much time, so leaders find things for them to do and then their time isn't leisure any more.

Slogans have been written about time, such as "A stitch in time saves nine," and every child knows that "Once upon a time" starts something nice.

Even the Bible talks about time. A preacher in the Old Testament wrote, "to everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven.

"A time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted; . . . a time to weep and a time to laugh, a time to mourn, and a time to dance. . . . A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace."

At least there isn't anything very complicated about the time of day. Most of the year the country runs on Standard Time, and we get confused only when we travel or switch to Daylight Saving Time.

But it hasn't always been this easy. Sixty-five years ago, Standard Time didn't exist. Every town had its own time, and so did many business concerns. Railroad stations had a confusing series of clocks since each line used the time in effect where its home office was located. Matters went to such lengths that in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, there were six different times in use.

In 1883, a lot of clocks were stopped at the same time and then started again, and Standard Time with its four time zones became a going concern.

TIME, IN A WAY, is a measuring stick. Things are valued by how much time it takes to do them. A cathedral that took five centuries to build is worth lots more than one that was built in five years, despite stainless steel and indirect lighting.

If we want to say that something is worthless, instead of saying "It isn't worth a tinker's damn," (which sounds like swearing but isn't) we say, "It isn't worth the time it takes to do it."

Time measurements can be embarrassing, because then we realize how many things are worth nothing in time, and how many others are worth everything.

word from the public platform has come have something in their hearts that will spring up continually to good fruit. For the loss, our heart in deepest sympathy goes out to those most nearly affected today. It goes out to the church because of its being denied his further service here. But along the pathway of the skies, where he may now be going, he may be enabled, through the ministry of God and its power, to perform another service the like of which we cannot even forecast, but which nevertheless carries him on in the army of the Lord.

May God's blessings be with us. May the understanding of the breadth of his great design for man, as evidenced not only in those things about us but in this good man who has gone before, enrich our own hearts, bring to us again the depth of our humility as seen in our littleness; yet increase in us the determination to be faithful that we may share in that promise, which Brother Lewis, I am sure, has read hundreds of times to others: "In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you."

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—Ground for the new Argentine church was broken on Sunday, November 7, at the lot on Forty-fifth Street and Shawnee Road. Stake President J. D. Anderson was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder L. B. Moneymaker and Patriarch H. A. Higgins. President Israel A. Smith turned the first shovel full of earth and gave the address.

Since the disorganization of Armourdale congregation, some of the members of that group have begun attending the Argentine church. Because of the increase in numbers, the present building is so inadequate that some of the classes are being held in private homes. The new location allows for parking space and a recreational area. It is centrally located and, when improvements are completed, will make a very attractive setting for the church. There are available vacant lots for those who wish to make their homes near the church. These are on an elevated level, away from the noise of the railroad and industrial section of the city. The proposed church has been designed to take care of a sizeable increase in membership.

FAYETTE CITY, PENNSYLVANIA.—The annual business meeting was held on September 21; Arthur Warner was re-elected to serve as pastor during the coming year with Elders B. F. Warner and Samuel Winship as counselors. The Zion's League raised $54 for the Missions Abroad project, and the women have contributed $25 to the Kirtland ladies' lounge fund. The women held their business meeting in October; Louise Stewart was elected to serve as president. Elder L. G. Holloway visited the branch prior to General Conference; Oria Smith was the guest speaker on November 7. Seventy Merle Guthrie and Apostle Percy Farrow conducted two priesthood services, one at Lock Four and one at Fayette City, which were well attended. Apostle Farrow gave the Sunday morning sermon, and Seventy Guthrie addressed the League. Following the cafeteria lunch, a round-table discussion was held in the afternoon. Approximately 150 persons attended these services.

A son, Dennis Howard, was born November 25, at Midland, Michigan, to Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Martin. Mrs. Martin is the former Barbara Hulmes.

DEATHS

BARRACLOUGH.—Elsie Marie, was born February 25, 1880, at Guilford, Missouri, and died at her home in Guilford in November, 1948, following a long illness. She made all of her funeral arrangements before her death.

Surviving are her husband, G. F. Barracough of Guilford; two sisters: Emma Breit and Bertha Hawley of Conception Junction, Missouri; and one brother, Alma Nelson of Guilford. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Guilford, Elder A. B. Heinrichs officiating. Interment was in the Graves Cemetery.

ALLEN.—Anna Smith, was born September 5, 1869, at Tunnel Hill, Illinois, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on November 25, 1948. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1889, and on June 25, 1899, was married to Lystra T. Allen. One son was born to them. In 1908, the family moved to Missouri, living for a while at Holden and then moving to Independence in 1913. Since 1920, the Allens have made their home at 112 South Chrysler Street.

Mrs. Allen is survived by her husband; her son, Howard J. Allen; a sister, Mrs. Carrie Robinson; and a brother, Isaac M. Smith, all of Independence. She also leaves three grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the Carson Funeral Home. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SPAULDING.—Agnes Rosella Howery, was born November 29, 1864, at Cross Plains, Wisconsin, and died November 16, 1948, at the home of her daughter, Frances Austin, in Los Angeles, California. On May 1, 1884, she was married to Frank Granville Spaulding at West End, Benson County, Dakota Territory—the first white couple to be married in that county. They lived in Dakota until 1944 when they moved to Long Beach, California, where Mr. Spaulding died on May 1, 1946, their sixty-second wedding anniversary. Shortly after their marriage, Mrs. Spaulding was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church and remained a faithful worker throughout her life. A pioneer who helped to "build Dakota," she was a woman of high moral principles; a good mother, always thoughtful of and devoted to her family.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. W. D. Kingsbury, Long Beach, California; Mrs. D. E. Asplund, Los Banos, California; Eva Spaulding, Seattle, Washington; Mrs. C. W. Jackson, Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. J. Arlie Austin, Jr., Los Angeles; two sons: Homer Spaulding, Susanville, California; and C. B. Spaulding, Long Beach; a sister, Miss May Howery, Los Banos; eighteen grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Long Beach, Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Interment was in Sunnyside Cemetery.

KELLEY.—Thomas Clinton, was born May 15, 1857, at Tunnel Hill, Illinois, and died December 8, 1948, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 31, 1875, and was ordained to the office of elder on July 25, 1880. He began his long period of service with the Quorum of Seventy with his ordination on April 13, 1893, at Lamoni, Iowa. On April 18, 1906, he was ordained a President of Seventy at Independence, Missouri. He spent forty-seven years in active missionary work under conference appointment. His assignments took him to the southeastern and south-central states, Maine, Minnesota, Washington, Oregon, Texas, and Oklahoma. During the last fifteen years of his life, he held the office of patriarch, having been ordained to this office on April 14, 1926. He was married on July 7, 1881, to Matilda Jane Hickman; they celebrated their sixty-seventh wedding anniversary this year. Since 1895, they had made their home in Independence, where they reared and educated six children. Brother Kelley's autobiography was published some years ago in the Saints' Herald.

He is survived by his wife; two daughters: Mrs. Fred G. Heffon of Independence, and Mrs. George N. Briggs of Lamoni, Iowa; three sons: George A. and Clifford of the home and Edward Terrance of Houston, Texas; two brothers: W. A. Kelley of Independence and John K. Kelley of Benton, Illinois; seventeen grandchildren; and twenty-seven great-grandchildren. One son, Kearney Lee Kelley, preceded him in death. The funeral was held at Stone Church in Independence; Elder Leonard Lea gave the sermon and Hubert Case the prayer. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WEATHER

There was a heavy wind last week that blew all our days of fair weather far down into the Gulf of Mexico, and splashed a tubful of rain after it. Next morning was clear and bright for a while, and long streamers of high cirrus clouds were tinted an orchid color by the sun coming up from the east. This glory was transient, for soon the day pulled a dull gray cloud blanket over us. Bands of those shrewd folk, the crows, were flopping their way southward, turning their heads sideways as always, out of sheer curiosity, and occasionally speaking to each other with their gravel voices. . . . Winter begins when passengers huddle at the bus stops, turning cheeks away from the wind, looking blue and miserable. . . . These are the days when you must carry sunshine in your heart, if you are to have any at all.

* THE OBITUARY OF MRS. BILL S . . .

An obituary came to the editors recently that leaves us puzzled and baffled. It would probably puzzle the subject, if she were here to see it.

"I'd like to report the death," the reporter wrote in pencil, "of Sister Bill S . . ." and the last name trailed off in choppy little waves of illegibility. It could have been Smith, or Schmidt, or Schmaltz, but we couldn't tell. The reporter didn't give her any Christian name, nor her family name. Maybe she never had any; maybe she was born as Mrs. Bill S . . .

Anyway, she was born in Springfield. There are seventeen Springfields in the U.S.A., but the reporter didn't bother to tell us which one. And she died on Tuesday. Which one of the fifty-two Tuesdays of the year seemed immaterial to the correspondent.

There were six sons, but only five were named. Perhaps the other one didn't have a name. And nothing was said about her marriage. We can only humbly trust that she was married properly, like a Christian. All those important people, the pallbearers, and the honorary pallbearers, were carefully listed; but this information is useless to us because we do not print them. The minister was "Brother Jones," a man with no first name, no address, and no office in the priesthood, if the writer is to be believed. Finally, "she was laid to rest in the family lot." Friends will have to search the cemeteries of the nation to find out which one and where.

To finish up everything in a proper state of confusion, the reporter didn't sign her name nor give her address—a sure way to prevent the editors from asking a lot of questions.

Somebody will probably be mad at us for not publishing that obituary. She will probably talk about us—she may even cancel her subscription. But we have one comfort. We are not the only ones wronged. Away up in heaven, "Sister Bill S . . ." will know all about it, and understand.

SHORT CHANGE

The most dangerous hole in your pocket is the one at the top.

You cannot devalue other people's money without devaluating your own.

If you demand high wages, somebody else will demand high prices.

As you climb up the mountain, the area on which you can stand grows smaller. Eventually, the only way you can go is down. So it is with all kinds of inflation.

No plane or balloon ever left the earth that did not come down again.

God Gave a Star

For God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life.

IT WAS OVER nineteen hundred years ago that God gave us this gift—a gift which becomes more precious as the years roll swiftly by. A wondrous gift this was—not a cheap toy to be boxed up and wrapped in tinsel. This was God's most cherished possession. He gave it to those he loved dearly, and so, that gift came wrapped in the folds of a deep and dark blue sky and a beaming silver star topped that night. This star was a brilliant, holy symbol of a precious and bounteous love. God sent a star into the eyes of all mankind that night and a Savior into the hearts of all mankind forever. It is Christmas, and God even now has a gift for us—a sky of silver stars and the example of his precious Son, Jesus the Christ.

Astronomers have built giant telescopes with which to view the distant stars. They tell us bald, cold facts about their circumferences, the light years distance from the earth, and the relationship of the parts of our solar system. Build a more powerful telescope, and you'll find more stars. But there is one star for which we need no instruments to measure its brilliance or worth in our lives. The Star of Bethlehem sends its beams of hope and salvation into all the world, and we need only open our hearts to learn of its magnitude. We are not shepherds to leave our flocks to follow a star. We are not wise men to mount our camels and journey afar. We are God's children, and we may now, here observe and follow this guiding star, Jesus the Christ.

—NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL.

Special Acknowledgment

At this glad Christmas season, on the eve of a New Year, everybody "of good will" is vying with others in a demonstration of his friendliness toward his neighbor. It is a time for exchange of good cheer and best wishes, usually evidenced by greeting cards and messages.

The writer, if he is conscious of anything, entertains a sincere interest in the welfare of all the members of the church of which he is president; but he has come to realize his inability to send personal greetings to his thousands of acquaintances, as much as he would like to remember all of them in that way.

Therefore, on behalf of himself and companion, he takes occasion in this method of expressing his appreciation and thanks for all messages of greeting received from Saints and friends.

Sincerely,
Israel A. Smith

1,500 HERALDS

When our Shop Foreman, E. H. ("Gene") McKean finished putting together our present December 25 issue, it made a total of 1,500 "Heralds" that he has "made-up." His first issue was in April, 1918, when the shop was at Lamoni. His total loss of time since then has been only about a year, a small percentage of time out. When you figure 52 issues to the year (occasionally 53), it takes a long while to accumulate such a total. Great improvements have been made in the appearance of our publication in those years, and many of them have been a result of his thought, study, and care.

Greetings From the Presidency

A FEW YEARS AGO, President Frederick M. Smith, in a Christmas and New Year greeting, said, "Every year we enter the new year feeling conditions are unique or vastly different from previous years. This attitude may spring from various sources," and among them he mentioned, "we forget easily."

Yes, we are prone to forget the problems and difficulties of yesterday as well as our successes through the years, but we believe, in a large measure, it is because our eyes are upon the future in an effort to reach our objectives. We forget the broken paths and the distances traversed along the foothills where we have come because we look only at the heights beyond, which we feel we must reach.

It would be a mark of ingratitude if we failed at this time, when all Christians pay tribute to our Savior, to acknowledge our thanks for blessings received:

First, we acknowledge the guidance and direction of Him who founded the work, in our personal lives as well as in our labors as the chief administrative quorum of the church. And we pay tribute and give thanks to the brethren in the quorums and councils of the church who have co-operated with us in such labors.

The immediate and pressing problems confronting the church, of course, change from year to year, and in retrospect we see that difficulties of debt and depression and other causes in recent years have been largely overcome. And while the nation and the world are facing international and political problems far transcending in their import any before encountered, we as an organization may rightfully learn from past experience and have the assurance that we need not be defeated by whatever may happen if we but go forward in the unity now in evidence in our ranks.

Unity has been, is, and always will be a problem—and to secure its blessings is a major project. When we have had it not, we strove to secure it. Once realized, we have had to proceed with zealous care to preserve it. All difficulties and problems recede and fade away the nearer we approach the spiritual standard made possible to us.

So as we approach the Christmas period and the beginning of another year, we send our greetings and best wishes, and express our sincere prayers for a merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year on behalf of all the children of the covenant.

But we would not be faithful to our leadings if we did not, with these greetings, remind the church that petty differences, minor questions of prerogative or the law—which, like the poor, are ever with us—and things of like unimportant character, must not be allowed to interfere with that love and fellowship to which we are entitled and which can be perpetuated through the ministry of Christ if we but carry on with an eye single to the glory of God, the "author of our salvation."

Christmas Greetings From the Holland Mission

On behalf of the Saints of the Holland Mission, we send Christmas greetings to the Saints in all the other lands of the world.

Over three years have passed since the yoke of the captor was broken in Holland, and there are still vivid memories of gross mistreatment and gnawing hunger. Fortunately, economic conditions in this progressive little country are rapidly making possible the replenishing of the larders of each home with the necessities of life. Latter Day Saints here have been challenged by the practical expression of concern of brothers and sisters in other lands; with the arrival of each food or clothing package, they have sought for some appropriate means of expressing their thanks. All too often they have felt that whatever they did in return was insufficient.

Clothing is still rationed, but most of the staple foods are now off ration. While weekly earnings are low, it is generally felt that the critical stage is now past. Therefore, as the relief program ceases here, the Holland Saints send their heartfelt gratitude for the packages that have been sent and for the kindness and warmth of friendship that have been shared. We pledge ourselves to continued devotion to Him whose birth we commemorate, and faithfulness to the great cause for which he too, so unselfishly gave of himself.

My family and I send our thanks to all who have remembered us with cards and prayers and wish all a Merry Christmas and abundant blessings in the new year.

ALBERT A. SCHERER,
President, Holland Mission

Notice to Relief Sponsors

In view of the above information from Brother Albert Scherer, president of the Holland Mission, we wish to take this means of notifying all individuals, clubs, groups, and branches who have been supplying food and clothing regularly each month to families in Holland under our sponsorship plan that such assistance is no longer necessary.

We wish to take this opportunity to sincerely thank those sponsors who have co-operated so splendidly and have given so much in time and materials to assist in the rehabilitation of many families in Holland.

Although the critical need in Holland is past, the need in Germany continues. We shall be glad to send the name of a needy German family and all the necessary details as to their needs, as well as shipping instructions, to anyone who is interested in sending a regular monthly package of food and clothing.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

T. C. Kelley Passes

After a number of years in retirement, Brother Thomas Clinton Kelley, former missionary, member of the seventy, president of the Second Quorum of Seventy for twenty-five years, and an evangelist for fifteen years, passed away on Sunday, December 5. A pioneer in missionary work in the southeastern states, his labors also carried him to many other states, and he is lovingly remembered by thousands of people for his valiant and devoted ministry through many hardships and persecutions. Sister Kelley survives, but has not been in good health, and is receiving the care of her family. Further information will be published in another department.

Across the Desk

From Elder Floyd H. Engstrom, Chaplain at Fort Smith, Arkansas, (Camp Crowder) we quote the following:

I am enclosing a copy of my report for the month of November. As you will see, I made quite a large number of contacts. There were several of our church boys in these figures. Baptists, however, seem to predominate.

A number of mothers have written me about their sons since seeing the note in the Herald, and we have been more than happy to make personal contact with the boys. We have had one in our home, and others have been invited. We are always happy to invite them to our home, and Mrs. Engstrom and Jeune do their best to make them welcome.

There are not as many Catholics or Hebrews here as we usually find in the Army. Most of the states in our area seem to be predominately Protestant. As the draft progresses, I expect to see many of our own men here.

ISRAEL A. SMITH

Anybody can invite a friend to church. Anybody can bear a testimony of God's goodness, his mercy, love, and power. If you are new in the church, if you have no great education, if you have not had much opportunity to study the doctrine and the history of the church, you can still be a servant of God and a witness for Jesus Christ, and tell as much of the gospel story as you know and can understand.

The work of Christ in the world is retarded not by the great evil forces of society, but by the friends and disciples who sit silent, tight-lipped, and useless in the presence of the great hungering spiritual needs of humanity, keeping Christ from the world.

The Failure

By Winifred Milner

DAVID GRAHAM saw Lew Davis come into the bar, and then he heard him speaking behind him in low tones. "Come on home, David. Your girls will be waiting for you.

It's Christmas, boy."

David knew Lew was his friend. Five months ago they had worked in the same church together, and David had thought he hated this sort of thing. He leaned against the counter, acting careless for the benefit of the men who were watching. Nothing made sense any more. Monday he would go to the bank and put a mortgage on his house. A man out of work with two little girls to support couldn't live without money, and Pete Wimberly had told him he didn't need to sell any more farm implements until he could sell sober—that after ten years of working up a good business with state farmers for Wimberly.

"Tomorrow is Christmas," Lew urged.

David picked up a bottle and poured himself another drink. What did Lew Davis or Pete Wimberly or any of them know about the loneliness that gnawed like a sore inside a man? Lew's wife was alive and well. She hadn't been killed in her automobile while she was driving home from a church service. Faith had been gone five months, but he still felt the hunger and pain as if she had died yesterday. He gulped his drink.

"I wish you would come home with me, David. But if you won't, then Merry Christmas."

David heard the door swing shut, and he knew Lew had gone. He sat without talking to anybody. Christmas had always been Faith's day—waxed furniture, polished floors. He could see her—apron on, cheeks flushed, eyes bright, hands busy—little cakes, cookies, candies shaped like stars, angels, bells, Santa Clauses—a sugar plum tree, always part of the table decorations—rooms decked in holly, mistletoe, magnolia leaves. "Faith was won-ner-ful." He spoke the words out to everybody without caring whether anyone listened. His voice was getting thick.

Nobody wanted to talk about her. He got up and buttoned himself into his coat. He pulled on his gloves and ordered a bottle of whisky, dropping the few pennies change into his pocket as though they were not his last. Did it matter that he had lost his self-respect? At first he had done it to hit back at God for taking Faith—revenge—and then he had found that it dulled the ache. Enough of the stuff inside him, and he didn't care about anything. His feet carried him unsteadily into the street. It was colder out and snowing. The street was white. He fastened his coat at the neck and pulled his hat low. It must be late afternoon—five o'clock maybe. He put his hands into his pockets and made his irregular way down Progress Street, bending his head against the wind. He passed Culpepper's Hardware and the Old Boston Store; lots of last-minute shoppers were on the street. He knew most of them, but he spoke only if someone spoke to him first. They shamed him. He was seeing them as if there were a screen between them and himself.

I ought to get something for Caroline and Midgy, he told himself. Kids expect presents at Christmas. But what could he buy with a few dimes and a quarter? Lundy's had good candy, but he didn't turn around. No use going a block for a bag of sweets. The girls were old enough to understand that they couldn't celebrate Christmas without their mother.

A COLD WIND blew against him, and he shivered. Finally he could see his house. He tried to make his feet co-ordinate in a faster walk, remembering that Mary Marshall, the colored maid, had refused to work another day without pay. She had been gone four days. The children were alone.

The pillars of the porch gleamed white in the snow. One Christmas he and Faith had covered the pillars with red and white crepe paper, and they looked like huge sticks of peppermint candy. Across the front of the porch in the shape of an arch, they had hung green pine boughs and holly, and in the middle of the arch, they had fastened a big candy cane tied with an enormous red satin bow. They had lit the whole thing with Christmas tree lights. That year Chesterville had awarded them the prize for the prettiest outdoor decorations in town. He remembered Faith rolling the paper up afterward and carrying it to the attic. "I want to save it," she had said. "We'll make it again someday." But they never had.

David tore his eyes away from the white pillars of the porch. He stumbled up the steps and reached a cold hand to open the door. There was no soul in him, no life, no light.

He moved from one cold cluttered room to another, looking for Caroline and Midgy. The place was dirty, but he couldn't expect the girls to keep house—not girls aged ten and seven. He went upstairs to unmade beds, and down to the basement to light a fire in the furnace. It took him a long time to light the fire, because his hands didn't co-ordinate. The girls should have been home from school hours ago. He would have to speak to Caroline.

Going through the dining room, he stumbled over the morning paper opened at the funny sheet. He stooped and picked it up; then he took a book off Midgy's chair and sat down at the table, pushing dirty dishes out of the way to make room for the paper. He sat scanning first one item of news and then another, trying to concentrate on the printed words while Faith's face danced through the blurred sentences. When the girls came home, they found him staring at empty oatmeal dishes with the food dried on them.

THE GIRLS came up to the table where he was sitting. "Mrs. Davis sent your supper," Caroline began timidly. She put a covered tray in front of him and took off the lid.

It took his dulled mind a little while to take in the situation. "So that's where you've been?" he said after a moment. "Next door with the Davises." His voice was harsher than he had meant it to be.

"We ate at the Davises, but we didn't ask. They invited us."

"Caroline told Mrs. Davis we ate roast beef sandwiches and cake for lunch. But we didn't, Daddy. We didn't eat anything. There wasn't any bread, and Caroline wouldn't spend any of the money she earned last night sitting with Mrs. Blythe's baby. She bought you a present—"

"Hush, Midgy, you don't have to tell everything."

"She got me one, too. Look. I helped pick it out."

David looked up then. Midgy was holding a small doll, the ten cent store variety. Her eyes had the sort of shine that children's eyes get at Christmas. Caroline had combed her straight yellow hair into two braids and tied the ends with red ribbon that looked as if it might have come off someone's Christmas package. "Mrs. Davis gave me a package, and one for Caroline. We can't open them until tomorrow," Midgy said.

Caroline stood behind her sister like a shadow. He could feel her eyes gravely studying him. "Aunt Augusta was here and left a note asking us to spend Christmas day with them." Her tall, thin body straightened itself. "Please Dad—I don't want to go there—not for Christmas."

Perhaps it was her politeness that irritated him. Maybe it was her face that looked so much like Faith's without being Faith. There was no reproof in her eyes, no hint that she knew he was not measuring up as a father, yet she made him see himself exactly as he was, and he resented it more than if she had openly rebuked him. "You'll go to Aunt Augusta's tomorrow," he said. "It's all the Christmas you'll get. We certainly can't celebrate Christmas here, with your mother gone."

"Caroline promised to make a sugar plum tree like Mamma's." Midgy's lips were trembling. She was looking at David. "We colored a thorn bush last night with Mamma's silver paint that Caroline found. This morning we planted the bush in a pot, but we need candy. We have to stick pieces of candy on all the thorns." The tears in Midgy's eyes spilled over.

"Don't cry, Midgy." Caroline's eyes didn't meet David's. "We don't need candy. I can make flowers and birds and butterflies with Mamma's crepe paper. I've seen her do it lots of times."

"You ought to show me," Midgy said, "then if we don't live together, I'll know how."

Caroline's eyes covered David's as if she were weighing him. "The kids at school say the women in town are going to find Midgy and me places to live, because we don't have a woman to look after us." Her voice became a little unsteady, and she waited a moment before she went on. "Don't worry about us. We're managing fine. We aren't going anywhere." She walked away then, holding her thin shoulders high. Under one arm she carried a package—David's present.

NEXT MORNING David was awakened by the sound of Midgy's crying. Then he heard bare feet running up the stairs, and Midgy burst into his bedroom with Caroline behind her. Midgy was holding up a limp stocking. "Santa Claus didn't come." She pushed the stocking at him and dropped to the floor, sobbing against the covers.

Caroline gave David a look that said she had expected bigger things of him; then she was bending over Midgy. "Don't cry. Santa had so many children this year. I'm sure he didn't mean to forget. Come on. We'll go down and open the presents Mrs. Davis gave us."

When they had gone, David lay staring at the ceiling. A house fell apart when there wasn't a woman in it. He had let the kids down, but life had let him down, too. He turned over, staring at Faith's empty pillow. She ought to be lying there asleep with her brown hair disheveled and her arm flung across him. She had always liked sleeping close. He pulled the pillow to him and buried his face in it. He missed her, missed her. "Merry Christmas, Faith," he said into the pillow. "Merry Christmas, darling."

He put on his clothes and went downstairs. He hadn't seen Caroline make Midgy's tree, but it was in the center of the dining room table. He wouldn't have believed Caroline could make such paper ornaments, but they were there. He stopped and touched them; it was like touching something Faith had made.

Caroline and Midgy were sitting on the rug in the living room. Caroline was reading to Midgy, and Midgy was pouring imaginary tea from a small teapot into little cups. Midgy called to him. "Come in and see the tea set Mrs. Davis gave me. And Caroline got Black Beauty. It's got a plastic cover. We saw it on sale at the Old Boston Store. It cost a dollar ninety-eight."

Midgy poured him a cup of imaginary tea which he pretended to drink. Caroline got up and brought his present. Both girls watched him open it. It was a silk tie with swirls of red and blue on a gray background.

"It's the nicest tie I've ever had," David said, and Caroline's face lost its tight, pinched look. She smiled.

He carried the tie and put it under the sugar plum tree. The girls followed him in. Then he went to the kitchen and took down a glass.

"Do you have to have it, Daddy?" Caroline asked.

"I have to have it."

Her large eyes watched him pour it out. "I was hoping—" her face looked tight and old again.

He drained the glass. "Did you and Midgy have breakfast?"

Caroline shook her head. "There isn't anything except an egg—"

"And the tray of food you didn't eat last night." Midgy added. "Can I have it?"

He began scouring through the cupboard. There was a little sugar, flour, a can of milk. "Say—" the idea came to him suddenly. "Let's have pancakes and sugar syrup."

"Could you? Oh, Daddy, I didn't know you could make them." Caroline looked at Midgy, and they both giggled.

IT WAS NEARLY NOON when they arrived at Aunt Augusta's. Midgy stood on tiptoe and rang the bell, then she put her nose up to the glass, watching for someone to come to open the door. Caroline hung back on the steps as if she dreaded going in, and David said irritably, "Come up here and act as if you are glad we came. After all, Augusta is my sister you know."

"We ought to have a present for them," Caroline said. "They'll be sure to give us something."

David frowned.

It was Cousin Geraldine who opened the door. Geraldine was four months older than Caroline, and David didn't usually notice her clothes, but today her outfit was something that had to be looked at. The dress was some kind of soft blue wool, hand embroidered around the skirt, neck, and sleeves. Her hair hung in red curls to her waist and was tied with a large blue taffeta bow. She had on black patent leather pumps and looked as pretty as a doll in the Old Boston Store window—only a doll couldn't look quite so haughty.

Geraldine ignored David and Midgy, her eyes were on Caroline. "Come in if you're going to," she said, "and stop gawking."

Midgy said, "You think you're smart, Geraldine. You think you're smart because you got everything new for Christmas."

David hadn't planned to stay. He had meant to leave the girls and go to Tony's bar, but Caroline was looking at her unpolished shoes as if she wanted to sit on them, and her face was a white mask, with large eyes showing the emotional upheaval inside her.

There was the scent of perfume. Augusta was at the door, bracelets flashing as she reached out her arms in a gesture of embrace without really touching any of them. "David," her arched brows came together reproachfully. "Why couldn't you have left off drinking just this once? Joe was counting on a game of chess. You used to be such a good player."

"We don't have to come in, Augusta."

"But of course you do. We've planned Geraldine's tree for Caroline and Margaret, too. I'll bet you didn't make Christmas for them."

"He did, too—pancakes and everything." Midgy gave Aunt Augusta a round, fat smile.

"Pancakes." Augusta's arched brows lifted this time, and she laughed. "It must have been fun."

"I guess it was pretty corny," David said. He was following Augusta against his will into the living room.

He saw the tree first before he saw Joe. It was a silver-tipped fur that reached nearly to the ceiling. David knew that Augusta's and Joe's living room was similar to his own, but today it looked like a magazine page advertising Christmas. Then Joe was standing beside him. David put out his hand. "Hello, Joe."

"Hello, David." Joe's limp hand barely connected before it was withdrawn again.

David noted Joe's new suit, the white shirt, the new necktie. He was glad he had shaved and had worn Caroline's tie. They stood together eying the tree, Geraldine's new red bicycle, the big jointed doll with hair that she was holding up for inspection and warning the girls not to touch. Augusta was trying on her new fur coat. David had a feeling they were trying to show him up.

"Take their wraps, Joe. And Geraldine, darling, give the girls their presents." She was modeling the coat for David, front view, side, and back.

Geraldine laid the doll under the tree and began rumaging through a mound of things, then she came up with two packages.

"Yours," she said to Caroline. "And yours," to Midgy. She thrust them at the girls almost rudely.

"Thank you," Midgy beamed and sat down tearing at the ribbons and the wrapping.

Caroline's "thank you" was subdued and withdrawn, and David thought, she ought to show a little more enthusiasm. They expect it of her.

Then Midgy's voice. "Oh, it's Geraldine's doll with real hair, the doll I like that she got last Christmas. You can put a new hand on it, can't you, Daddy?"

Caroline had unwrapped her present. It was Black Beauty, a book exactly like the one the Davises had given her, and she was carrying her disappointment like a trooper, smiling and saying how much she liked books.

"That's the same book you got from the Davises this morning, Caroline." Midgy was looking at everybody. "Caroline don't need two Black Beautys. You'd better take it back, Geraldine."

Augusta was taking off her fur coat. "What a shame, Caroline. But of course you can take the other book back. I wrote on the fly leaf of this one."

Caroline's eyes met David's; she didn't say that the Davises had written in the other book too.

AUGUSTA'S DINNER had been good. The girls stuffed turkey until David hoped they wouldn't be sick. It was during dessert that Geraldine said, "Aren't you going to tell them what's going to happen next week, Mamma?" She looked contemptuously first at Caroline and then at Midgy. "And don't think we want you. It's something we can't help. After all, you are our relatives, and you have to be looked after. Mamma said so."

Augusta gave an embarrassed laugh. "Geraldine, you don't have to be so raw about it."

David pushed his chair away from the table and stood up, facing them.

Caroline's eyes were too big for her face. She moved her chair away from the table and stood up too.

Joe cleared his throat. "It isn't that we don't want the girls—it's just that—they aren't our responsibility. We have all we can do to take care of ourselves."

David tried to keep his anger under control. "Who asked you to take care of them? I'm going to mortgage the house tomorrow—"

"And drink it up so the girls won't have anything." Augusta was standing up now. They were facing each other across the table. "The superintendent of Caroline's school and the mayor's wife were here yesterday, and I promised to take the girls. You can't stop drinking, David. You're no good. A man can't go the way you've been going since Faith died and stop just like that."

Caroline had disappeared, and Midgy was crying. "Let's go home, Daddy. Let's go home."

Augusta brought their wraps, Caroline had already taken hers and gone. Midgy picked up her doll.

All the way home David kept telling himself: I'll straighten out, I'll see Pete Wimberly tomorrow and get my job back. I'll live my life the way I lived it before with Faith. Yet inside him was the craving, the uncontrollable desire; it was as if he were two people.

Caroline was home. She met him at the door, caught his hand and clung to it. "Promise me we don't have to live with Aunt Augusta—promise me—promise me."

"You don't have to live with Aunt Augusta." He moved past her to the kitchen.

Caroline fled as his hand reached for the bottle. "I was going to pour it out," she called back hysterically. "I was going to pour it out, but I was afraid. Now I wish I had. When you want me, you'll find me at the Davises."

He swallowed the liquor and sat down at the table, feeling a sudden bitter disgust for himself. He stared at the wall. The bottle and glass were in front of him. Augusta was right, he was no good.

He didn't know how long he sat there, and then he heard Caroline coming back. Lew Davis was with her, he recognized Lew's voice. "Caroline and I are driving into the woods, Dave, after holly and magnolia leaves. Where's Midgy? I thought maybe you'd give a hand, too—the wife wants quite a bit of green stuff."

THE WOODS WERE BEAUTIFUL. He hadn't realized how much the girls would enjoy such an outing. They returned with the back seat loaded with pine boughs, magnolia leaves, and holly, so that Midgy and Caroline were half buried in green foliage.

Lew said, "Part of this stuff is yours, Dave."

"Let's decorate the porch, Daddy—please." Caroline caught hold of his hand. "We have all that paper in the attic. We could build the peppermint sticks and make the arch and everything."

Lew was loading his arms with green foliage. "Sounds like a good idea. I'll carry this to the wife and come over to help you."

It was a game now. The children raced ahead of David to the attic. They were having fun—they were having more fun than Geraldine had had with all her fine presents. Caroline made the big candy cane for the arch of pine boughs out of red and white crepe paper, and Midgy made the big red paper bow. They all worked steadily for a couple of hours, and when the lights from last year's Christmas tree were on and lighted, they walked out to the road to get a good view of the beauty they had made.

While they were standing there, Lew said, "I've got some weight with a certain committee that I'm going to call. I want them to see the porch. And Martha is getting ready to have a party for the girls. That's why she wouldn't go to the woods with us. It's Caroline and Midgy's first Christmas without their mother, and when you didn't stay at your sister's, she thought it would be fun to have a few of the girls' friends in to sing carols. She had planned it for a surprise, but—" He grinned at the girls. "I think half the fun of having a party is thinking about it, don't you?"

"Thank's a lot, old man," David said. "Thanks for everything."

"It's nothing, David. You would do the same for me. Just be sure you come over with the girls, that's all we want."

They had put on old clothes to go to the woods; now they went into the house to dress for the party.

They were almost ready to go to the Davises. Caroline was combing Midgy's hair, and David was brushing his teeth when the doorbell rang. He went to the door, expecting Lew there to tell them Martha was ready, but it was the Chesterville Christmas award committee. He knew the men, all friends of Lew's—Dr. Brannon, Councilman Warren, and Tom McFarlan, who owned a saw mill.

"Don't ask us in, Graham," Tom McFarlan was saying. "We can't stay. Lew asked us to see this porch. He says it's the best looking one in town, and we're inclined to agree with him." He held out an envelope. "Congratulations!"

WHEN THEY HAD GONE, David opened the envelope and stood with the bills in his hand.

The girls were excited. "What are we going to buy, Daddy? What shall we get?"

He put on his coat slowly. He could go to the bar now. He could be host for the crowd. He went to the table, picked up the bottle he had left there, and put it in his pocket. "Go on to the Davises," he said harshly. "Go on over there and have a good time." He pulled his eyes away from Caroline's face; it was like a dead leaf that had been torn by the wind. He put his hat on and his gloves. Caroline was crying with almost no sound. Midgy was standing at the window. It was dark out, and her face was pressed against the glass. She didn't turn around when he opened the door. He walked down the porch steps and out into the street, then he turned around for a last look at the porch. Midgy or Caroline had turned on the Christmas lights. The house was in shadow; the porch was like an etching on a Christmas card. Chesterville was filled with streets and houses, but tonight he had the prettiest porch—the prettiest front. That's what it was—a front—inside was clutter and disorder. While he stood there, he thought he caught sight of Faith's face, but it was Caroline standing beside Midgy at the window. The sight had startled him. He was like the inside of his house. Then he remembered something Faith had said once, "There are quiet victories, none the less difficult to obtain because they have no tale, no audience."

Lew was standing on the porch—and all at once David knew—the money the award committee had given him was Lew's money. Lew was that kind of friend.

Caroline had opened the door. She was running down the steps. He reached for her. "It's all right, honey. Get Midgy, and we'll go to the party."

A Christmas Reverie

By JENNIE Z. ELLIOTT

Herbert C. Lively, pastor of Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri, writes: "Our church is across the street from the Catherine Hale Home for Blind Women. Several of the ladies attend our church, and some are members. Sister Elliott has an especially sweet and cheerful attitude toward her blindness. She writes everything in Braille until she is satisfied with it. Then she types it out on a regular typewriter for others to read."

I WAS SO LITTLE, I don't even remember when Grandmother first told me the Christmas story. All I know is that every year the story becomes so real to me that—

With the eyes of faith, I see the star shedding its bright, glorious light upon the three Wise Men journeying along Bethlehem's road, and upon the shepherds out on their little farms of the Judean countryside, keeping watch over their flocks by night. I see them as together they pause in holy awe before an angel-filled sky. With the ears of faith, I hear the angel saying, "Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger." And I hear the angel-choir singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." With the eyes of faith, I see the Star shining into that lowly stable upon Joseph and Mary and, with surpassing brilliance, upon their Holy Child. I see the three kings offering him their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh, symbolizing the rich and powerful of the earth. I see the shepherds bringing to him as gifts the lambs of their flocks, symbolizing the poor and meek of the earth. I see them kneeling there together in worship, paying homage to him who was to be the Good Shepherd and the King of Kings.

Today, I sat and thought of the Christmas that is almost ours in a modern world as dark with the threat of war and strife as was that ancient world. And with the eyes of faith, I could see the Star shedding its glorious light upon four men, symbolizing the four great nations of the earth, as they lead a whole multitude of other men including all the nations of the earth, along the Highway of World Peace, traveling even to Bethlehem. I saw them, as together they paused in holy wonder, before an angel-filled sky which stretched over all the earth.

With the ears of faith, I heard the angel's words: "Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people" every race and creed, and every color and tongue, which dwell upon the face of the earth. "For unto you is born this day in the hearts of men, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." I heard the angelic hosts' song: "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men." With the eyes of faith, I saw all the nations of men, led by the four great nations, kneeling together in the light of the Star, worshiping before the manger-bed of the Babe of Bethlehem. I saw them offering not gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh, but the gift of World Peace to Christ, who is the Prince of Peace.

Christmas Customs in Our Homes

ASSEMBLED AND INTRODUCED BY PAULINE ARNSON

SPECIAL DAYS are home days. The most special one of the year is Christmas when members of the family, no matter how far separated, are drawn together by ties of love to celebrate His birthday. The customs which each family have developed and made a tradition through the years, symbolizing the relationship one to the other and to Christ, are especially important, for they do much to help maintain a united family circle. A tradition is merely doing something worth-while over and over through the years, and so it isn't too late to start a custom in your family, which, when remembered or repeated, will bring a warm glow to the heart.

The church is one large family in interests and purpose, and the activities of each group have a world-wide appeal. We hope that these intimate glimpses into the family life of church members, who have so willingly shared them with us, will stimulate all families to make the day more meaningful because of the experiences they share from year to year on Christ's birthday.

For many years in the home of President Israel A. Smith, Richard, Reginald and Wallace—sons of Brother Joseph and Sister Ada—joined the family group. Sister Nina Smith in a reminiscent way writes of the meaning of Christmas and the activities which made this home so pleasant.

The members of our family, as in all Christian homes, have looked forward to Christmas as the one great event of the year. That being Christ's birthday, every one should be made happy. I was inclined to think that in a measure we had realized our ambition, when last year W. Wallace Smith in his Christmas letter said, "I wish I could be at 1214 West Short about now to imbibe some of the Christmas spirit that always seemed so plentiful at this time of the year." It was gratifying to learn he remembered the good times we had as they were growing up.

The Christmas tree seemed a necessity. I remember one that reached the ceiling—and that is close to ten feet. However, size has nothing to do with the enjoyment. I recall times, since the family has been scattered, our only tree graced the dining room table; small, but nicely decorated, it brought Christmas cheer.

Last year our tree came from Jonesport, Maine, sent by our friends, the Grays. Such a beautiful tree it was, and so much pleasure it brought to us! Brother Mundy brought beautiful door decorations from Colorado. I have saved the cones to add to my collection.

One of the first steps toward preparing for the event is decorating the mantel. Pine cones from different States I keep for this purpose. I like the arrangement of pine cones and spruce boughs with candles—simple but effective.

The wreath for the door seems important, too, either of pine boughs or of holly. I can remember thinking at different times, when it was being placed in position, of its significance: "This is a Christian home. The people within are keeping Christ's birthday.

I think too of the legend of Christ's visits to the homes of those who were pure in heart. It should be a challenge to prepare ourselves for some such test: Would we be humble and spiritual enough to recognize him or one of his messengers should they come in disguise?

I really think we are children grown tall, because the element of surprise, in regard to gifts, is so important: packages hidden in closets come out to be stacked around the tree or placed beside the plate to be opened—after breakfast—Christmas morning, knowing that substantial food is important before one is tempted to sample too many sweets.

When the children were small and hung up their stockings for Santa to fill, of course, their curiosity had to be satisfied before food could interest them.

We found that having the exchange of gifts in the morning was an advantage for several reasons: the children were rested and eager for their portion—with hours ahead to enjoy Santa's bounty.

It is nice to have something to look forward to aside from the continuance of dinner preparations which have been in progress for days. And it is nice to slip in and lay gifts under the tree, hoping you are giving as much pleasure as you have received in planning for this or that loved one.

The dinner for Christmas Day is the climax of the pleasure we look forward to, a turkey if possible (and ours the last few years has been made possible through the kindness of our good friends, the John Carlises of New Philadelphia, Ohio. We think Brother Carlisle must be an authority on turkeys, for his are the best we have tasted).

That is one of the charms of this particular holiday—our friends enter our family circle, bearing gifts: turkey, cut flowers or potted plants, the many messages of love from friends far and near, and interwoven through it all we hear the message of the carolers as they sing—

Joy to the world! The Lord is come,
And earth receive her King;
Let every heart prepare him room,
And saints and angels sing.

CHRISTMAS AS CELEBRATED in Apostle Arthur Oakman's home is vividly and interestingly described by Sister Elva Oakman, his wife, who has worked so successfully with the young people of the church in their religious development. She has written several quarterlies and made other contributions to church literature.

Christmas! Jesus' birthday! It is the loveliest day in all the year. Since we want it to be a restful day, there is no big meal to prepare; since it is his birthday, there is only a gift for him which we've been saving.

To be sure, all of our home decorations help us to think of him. The Christmas scene is made up of figurines and lighted by Christmas tree lights. The campfire about which the shepherds are gathered is red; a white globe lights the angel, and a yellow one sends out a golden glow from the stable we've spent hours in making. It is placed low enough so children can see and touch it. They delight in readjusting the little figures or moving the trees or stable. After all, they may know better than we how things were on that night so long ago.

The choicest space on our walls is adorned with a picture of the Master. About it, holly is placed. In front of it, there is a spotlight, concealed if possible. The rest of the room will be lighted with candles.

Our celebration begins on Christmas Eve when we set our lights aglow. In such a setting it is fun to sing Christmas carols, and to listen to the reading of great Christmas stories such as The Other Wise Man, Dicken's Christmas Carol, When the Chimes Rang, or perhaps The Wee One. Sometimes we use the record player for these, and each year we add to our collection of lovely records.

Christmas Day begins with a carefully planned worship service in a special setting. Once it was a crudely built manger with a big doll in it and the scene lighted by a lantern. Another time our guests had, with crepe paper, made the room look like a cathedral with the picture of Jesus as the focal point. When possible, one person cares for the setting so it is a surprise. The service itself is planned to give all a part. The high point is when we lay our money gift for Jesus before his picture. That gift will later be given in his church.

Dinner is a lot of fun. Everyone helps, and often we draw slips to find out who does what. The table center is always a large white birthday cake with candles. These will be lighted and blown out at the last of the meal. And of course we'll sing, "Happy birthday to you, Dear Jesus." Sometimes there is a dish of wee notes from which each will draw as the meal proceeds. They suggest surprise questions or things to do.

Guests? Why the finest times we've ever had were when we invited lonely folks to share our fun, and afterwards when they've said, "Why, it's been so different I forgot I was alone and far from home," we felt as though our cup of joy was full, for after all that's what I think He'd do, don't you?

BISHOP G. LESLIE DELAPP'S home radiates with warmth from the personality of Ardyce, his gracious wife and the other members of the family. Sister Ardyce has been associated with the Nursery Department of the Stone Church Sunday school. We are happy that she has consented to tell some of the things that make their Christmas such a happy one.

The lovely hymn, "Silent Night," seems to hold all the spirit of Christmas in its words and melody. It is so beautiful and yet so simple that little children learn it easily and sing it quite well and ask for it in any season of the year. For old and young, it always gives a feeling of joy and a lift to the spirit. The little customs that make Christmas for a family come to be something like that—they never grow old or tiresome, and the thought of them as well as the doing gives a warm feeling of happiness to each member of the family.

Making gifts that are useful and pretty and making decorations for the house by painting dried flowers or seed stalks or pine cones all start weeks ahead. Decorating the tree a week or so before Christmas takes on the importance of a ceremony, because most of the ornaments have been used over and over again. By adding a few each year and storing them carefully, they come to have added value and significance for each of us as we think of the happy Christmases in the past.

From the time the children could understand anything about Christmas, each of them has given gifts as well as received them. Wrapping them as carefully and artistically as they were able to has always been a part of expressing their love along with the gift, and as they grew older, their ability along that line increased, of course, and so the beauty of their packages.

Christmas Eve is a time for the family to be together. We have never made a special point of a devotional, but it was always a time for singing Christmas carols to the children, for retelling the Christmas story, and for family prayer. So when the children grew older and wanted to plan the evening, we were happy that their "programs" were only an enlargement of the thing we had been doing, but giving each one of the family a definite part. Placing the gifts under the tree, each in his turn, is always the last thing on Christmas Eve.

We have one custom that may be a bit different from some families. We have breakfast before anyone can even peek at the tree and the gifts. It all started when our children were very small and when candy and nuts before breakfast were too great a temptation and usually resulted in someone being upset before the day was over. They co-operated perfectly, and it has all become part of the fun, so now that they are high school and college age, we all hurry to breakfast without even a glance at the tree.

There are no special foods that are peculiar to Christmas for us, but the big Christmas dinner with aunts and uncles, Grandma and Grandpa, and all the cousins who are in town is a very fitting climax.

So the little things that have made Christmas a happy time become more precious as they are done year after year, and, like the beautiful hymn, never seem "to grow old."

BROTHER EVAN A. FRY, radio pastor, writes of Christmas in his home. He is supported in his work by his talented family who contribute willingly, to the many calls made upon them. His wife, Dorothy, carries on her home duties in a calm and capable way and is known in many musical circles.

I don't know that our family can be said to have any quaint or any very interesting Christmas customs. During the earlier years of our married life, our home was nearly always the center of a Christmas gathering for all the relatives, with a big Christmas dinner, of course. Now that most of the in-laws have scattered and some are helping to entertain their own grandchildren at Christmas time, this custom has largely fallen off. In later years, it has been our custom to have a few special friends in on Christmas Eve when possible and to let them share in the opening of presents, which have been piled under the Christmas tree, waiting for this occasion.

Perhaps the outstanding thing about our Christmases has been our participation in music. Both Sister Fry and I were members of the Messiah Choir for several years before our marriage, and we have always sung in it when in Independence. That, plus Stone Church Choir and extra radio programs for me, makes for a very busy season. As soon as our oldest daughter was able to play, we helped her choose some Christmas music each year and now she finds herself in demand for solos and accompaniments both at school and at church. Our second daughter is now just beginning to play simple hymns, and for several weeks before and after Christmas, our piano seldom goes for half an hour during the time the girls are at home without giving out some Christmas melody. Now the baby, aged four, is learning to sing to her older sisters' accompaniment, and the two older girls are looking forward with eager anticipation to the day when they can sing in the Messiah Choir. Some day we hope to have a record player and some good records of the kind of music we cannot make, but until that day we are having fun making our own.

THE BELCHERS, Dan and Florence, are a young couple, in the first years of building a home. Florence is a daughter of Brother S. A. and Sister Alice Burgess. From her article, we see thought is being taken that their home will be a stable and happy one. This is encouraging, because we feel sure other young church couples are thinking along this same line.

Dan and I were married in September, 1941, a few months prior to the now famous December 7. Three Christmases later saw us together for the first time at the Christmas tree. While Dan was away the first year, I included in his Christmas package a ten-cent artificial Christmas tree, which has since become a reminder of those early years. Each season this decoration occupies a cardinal position on our Christmas table.

Christmas is a time of tradition. When a new home is founded, each partner brings Christmas customs from his parent's home. Together the couple must decide which traditions to keep and what new ones they want to establish. Truthfully, we have had as much enjoyment discussing one tradition that conflicted as we have over any other single part of our Christmas celebration. Every year, as Christmas draws near, we assemble our arguments on the weighty subject of "shall we open our gifts Christmas Eve or on Christmas morning?" After all, Christmas is a spirit and feeling, and whether or not you believe in Santa—whether he comes Christmas Eve or Christmas morning—doesn't really matter.

To me, the joy of Christmas is in giving or doing, either for or with someone important to me. Last year, we started something new to us—the making of Christmas cookies. One of my friends and I made them "like mad," at least eight different kinds, and the evenings were spent in decorating and frosting them with much assistance from our husbands. These make a nice way to say "Merry Christmas" to children and also make it possible for us to send some of our Christmas to Dan's parents.

We both feel a Christmas tree must be selected and decorated by the whole family. This year our ten-month-old daughter, Danielle Marie, will probably not help much, but it won't be long before she will add her bit to our Christmas tree. As she grows, we hope she will enjoy making her own decorations.

The Yuletide season would not be complete, as long as we live near Independence, without hearing our church people sing Handel's "The Messiah" either in person or on the air. Near to Independence or far from it, we will always try to hear as many as we can of the beautiful broadcasts of Christmas songs. To wrap gifts for loved ones while listening to lovely music—what could be more perfect! Two recordings have become part of our family celebration; they are "Mr. Pickwick's Christmas" and the story of Christ's birth. Both are read by the celebrated English actor, Charles Laughton, who once studied for the ministry. Mr. Laughton reads the Christmas story from Luke 2: 1-20 and Matthew 3: 1-12. All this makes Christmas and the Baby Jesus very near and real.

Then, just a few days before Christmas, we gather some friends together and sing Christmas carols either around the piano or Grandpa Chase's old organ. All voices seem at their best singing these loved hymns.

That is our Christmas and its traditions now. Let me add that in the future we shall build more. We hope the tradition of giving can become a real part of our children's lives. For after all, at Christmas more than at any other time of the year, it is more blessed to give than to receive. Christmas, Christ's birth, becomes ours as we give to our loved ones and plan, work and sing with those around us.

THE MARK SIEGFRIED home is given to hospitality. No group is too large or too small to be welcomed there. Brother Mark, because of his extensive knowledge of church history, is called upon to take many visitors to the historical spots. Sister Madge is well known because she has been active in women's work, the Mother's Club, and the Music Club. Her interesting account of Christmas in the Center Place is a fitting close to the "Christmas Customs in Our Homes."

Here in the "Center Place," the Christmas season assumes larger proportions for many of us than does the ordinary holiday. Plans are made for guests in order to help the Gracelanders and the nurses from our Sanitarium, who cannot go home for the holidays, enjoy the spirit of Christmas away from their family altars.

Three of our four children attended Graceland, and that meant a pretty steady use of the doors, beds, refrigerator, cutlery, etc., over a period of years at Christmas time. All four are married now and have families, but always we are together at some time on Christmas Day as usual. Last year they bought "Daddy Mark" a wire recorder and secretly set it up in a spot where it recorded both his and my remarks as we opened our gifts. Needless to say, the presentation to "Dad" was a success, and I shared in the surprise shock of the reproduction.

One of our sons used to take special interest in the nurses in training and gave them numerous rides en masse! Eventually one of the girls who was living at our home, married a splendid young man on Christmas Day at the Stone Church and she had a delightful reception at our home after the ceremony. Our guest books are quite revealing, and it is pleasant to read the lines of comment and recall the special exuberance and joy of Christmas. No other holiday is the same.

Last winter, due to the housing shortage, a family of five grown-ups were with us several months; it is a good thing our living room is twenty-five feet long, due to the removal of a partition, for there had to be a tree for those three young folk, as well as a place for our little tree, which is unfolded and trimmed annually ever since Arthur H. Mills, remembered for his musical contribution to the church, presented it to our first child when he was a tot.

The spirit of Christmas is like a tremendous tide—a desire to do something for somebody. Giving is such a satisfaction. To see lonely friends and relatives enjoy our family festivity—an annual occurrence with us as with most other people—is part of that satisfaction. In recent years, we have had as many as thirty or forty unexpected callers on Christmas Day, callers on various ones in our circle as well as on our-

December in Guatemala

By MARIE GOSLINE

DECEMBER—which is summertime in Guatemala—is a beautiful month. It is flower-time there; the orchids are in full bloom, the mountains are green, and the streams and rivers are full. As you travel along over the winding trails, you meet many “carriers” packing odd burdens to the markets. If you ask one of these carriers how much farther it is to the next village, you are almost certain to receive the answer, “Una bajarita y una suvitita.” (A little ways down, and a little ways up.)

Luis, a pottery carrier, and his wife, Julia, a weaver, have just arrived at the little village of Panajachel on the green shores of Lake Atitlan. They have come this far on their long journey to the lowlands or tropics. On their way, they stop at all the little villages to peddle their wares, making a few centavos here and a few there—enough to buy a little corn, a tamale for Julia or some frijoles for Luis. Once reaching the lowlands—they will by this time have sold out—they will reload with bananas, pineapples, and some coconuts which they will sell, stopping on their way back to the highlands at all the mercados. Theirs is a popular profession among the Guatemalan Indians. They love their life and do not consider themselves poor. Does not Luis have enough centavos in his pocket for today, and, pues, tomorrow hasn't come yet!

There are two other members of this tiny family: Marukita, the baby Julia carries tied to her back with a serape, and the burro—the ever-so-important animal, the burro. Luis, a Quiché Indian, and Julia, from the same tribe, have no home, but they do have a burro. That puts Luis in a class almost by himself, for few pottery carriers have burros. They are far too expensive.

THE ROAD is their home, and what a beautiful home it is! Muy sinuoso (very winding) the natives call it. This road leads them up sometimes to 11,000 feet, with waterfalls 300 feet high tumbling down the mountainsides. It leads them down through ravines where orchids hang by the armload—“air plants,” the natives call them. It leads them past fincas and fields of corn. It leads them where the coffee berries hang red like cranberries. It leads them past trees of golden bananas, ripe pineapples, and coconuts. It leads them down in the valleys where tiny parrots dart in and out among the trees. Truly, December is a month of wonders, and Luis and his family feel rich in the beauty of their land.

Each morning after Julia has bathed her baby in a lake, stream, or river, and they have eaten their breakfast of tortillas, they go on their way. They stop only at the mercados to peddle their wares. Each village has its own market day. In San Lucas Toliman, for instance, it is on Monday, while in Chichicastenango it is on Thursday. Luis ties his burro to a tree at Panajachel, for San Lucas can be reached only by water. As he and his family board the launch, he can see the three volcanoes towering above the lake and on their slopes patches of corn which the Indians have cultivated. Within an hour, the little family step off the launch into the village of San Lucas. Here, although it is still early in the morning, the market is already in progress. Down the main street of the village squat the peddlers. Here one can buy anything from beans and tortillas cooked on the spot to huarachos made to order. In this tiny village, the natives do not speak to “outsiders.” They speak only to other natives, and then they say, “Buenas dias, Patrón!” The costumes of the villagers are picturesque. The men wear short red and white striped trousers while the women wear white phuipiles (blouses) embroidered in gay colors, with striped skirts. In San Lucas, Luis and Julia did not sell much—just a few towels that Julia had woven—but it brought them in enough to pay their launch fare and gave them a few extra centavos. It is not much, but it is enough for today, and, pues, tomorrow is another day!

THERE IS ALWAYS another market day somewhere down the long, long road. The next one is at Chichicastenango, only twenty miles away. It was here at Chiche that Luis and Julia were married by the “White Father” a few years ago. He had come to Guatemala to convert the heathen and had stayed too short a time, but Julia could not forget him. Julia loved that White Father, and she loved the wife of the missionary, for this good woman had given her medicine for Marukita when she had the fever. She had saved Marukita's life and Julia, Indianlike, never forgets. She could not forget that story of the little white baby born in a stable—just like her own Marukita. She could not forget how he had said that the stars shone brightly down that night, and each time Julia spread down her palata under the stars and made ready for the night, she remembered the story of the little white baby.

Neither could Julia forget that strange but beautiful song the White Father had taught her, "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" Although Julia knows only those three words in English, she can hum the tune from beginning to end. Ah, it is a beautiful song—more beautiful even than the songs the marimba players sing in the market places.

WHEN LUIS and his family reach Chichecastanango, they go directly to the market place, which is a huge square in front of the church of Santo Tomás. Here they go to sleep, only to be awakened at 4 o'clock the next morning by the sound of rockets being shot in the air. Julia turns her head toward the steps of the church; and as she does so, she sees a huge balloon, brightly colored, like a large Japanese lantern leave the earth and then grow smaller as it reaches the heavens. Through the dim morning light, Julia can see the Indians crowding together on the fourteen steps of Santo Tomás. They are shooting rockets high in the air and sending up balloons, believing that in so doing their prayers will be more certain to reach their gods. Julia can smell the incense burning, and despite the noise of the rockets, she can hear the constant murmur of the Indians' prayers, "Sacarebara dios mundo" (Let things be as they are).

Although Luis and Julia do not pray to the heathen gods—for they have never forgotten the White Father and his story of the little baby, his medicine, and his beautiful song—they notice that the other Indians take no chances. Inside Santo Tomás, the Indians say the prayers the priest teaches them, but once outside on the steps they pray to their heathen gods, and even on their way home they stop at the "Idol" and pray to their gods again.

So the days go by and Luis and his little family stop at each mercado, earning a few centavos here, a few there until at last Christmas Eve finds them in the little village of San Marcos—the little village that is so far off the beaten track. Julia's brother works in an inn here. Salvador comes running to greet them. Of course they can sleep at the back of the adobe building! Luis can tie his burro on the same post with his, and the pen of cuchies (pigs) won't bother them too much. So Julia spreads down her paleta, unties Marukita, and makes ready for the night. As she looks up into the brightly shining stars, she remembers again the story—the one the White Father told her.

"Luis," she whispers, "it was a night like this. It was in a place just like this with the animals close around. What was his name? Oh, yes, it was Jesus." Then softly humming, "Onward, Christian Soldiers" to Marukita, Julia falls asleep.

Christmas Customs in Our Homes

selves. One Christmas evening there were seven people of other church affiliations than ours present. We enjoyed a real "songfest." It was good to forget creeds and have "equal room in our hearts" for the Babe in the Manger.

We save our Nativity scene from year to year. It is composed of figurines and little frosted trees which cozy the group arranged on the mantel. Children love to see and hear about them before Christmas and big ones meditate. This makes me think of "Miss Tessie" and her helpers in our Stone Church Sunday school. She has superintended the four-year olds for a period of years, and every Sunday morning in December, they share the age-old stories of the babe, Jesus, and the angels and the manager and the Wise Men and the beautiful Mother Mary. They are always ready to give their annual nativity play presented impromptu (with but one rehearsal the evening before in order to know who will be who) on the Sunday morning before Christmas.

Tribute to a Life of Service

I am writing this tribute to Brother Adolphus Edwards of Baltimore, Maryland. He was called, as a young man, to witness for Christ in his native land, Llanelly, Wales, and continues his ministry even now in his seventy-sixth year. His testimony of the church is an inspiration to all who hear it. His life has been an outstanding example of Christian living in preaching, administering and helping, both in the church and community. Truly, he is a "doer" of the word, and not a "hearer" only.

Recently, he and Mrs. Edwards celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. They have seven children, all active in church work. With their own family as a nucleus, they started the Baltimore Branch, which has grown under the leadership of Brother Edwards and is now in the charge of their son, Arthur. Brother Edwards has never slighted his ministerial duties although he is superintendent of the Bethlehem Steel Mills. Sister Edwards is equally devoted, although the sacrifices she has made have been many.

We who know them extend our sincere appreciation for their services. May God's richest blessings be theirs the remainder of their lives.

Tribute to Pfc. Sylvester Poort

Numerous friends and the family of Brother and Sister John B. Poort, of Mansfield, Missouri, filled the largest church in town to pay tribute to their son, Pfc. Sylvester Poort, at the memorial service held for him. He gave his life for his country on foreign soil, in the recent world war.

On his last furlough home, he expressed the desire to be baptized, but no opportunity was presented. In his letters home he often asked for prayers for himself and his comrades, and said: "If it is God's will I will come home again." He was wounded in France on July 14, 1944, and received the Purple Heart. He recovered and rejoined his unit. On March 26, 1945, he was wounded a second time near Blumerskath, Germany, and died as a result of his wounds at the 100th Evacuation Hospital on March 27.

Sylvester was a devoted son to his parents, and kind and friendly to all who knew him. His Commanding Officer, Colonel Walter M. Johnson, wrote "Your son died in line of duty, in keeping with the highest standards and traditions of the army and of his country, which he served so nobly and so well." Evangelist James W. Davis

Polio Victim Improves

I would like to thank all the Saints for remembering our five-year-old daughter, Betty Ann, in prayer. She was stricken with polio on September 5; now she is home from the hospital but can't walk. We are still praying the time when she can will not be far off. The doctors say she has made a fast recovery to have been as paralyzed as she was originally. She received administration several times, and we know God truly blessed her. The many cards and letters we received were most encouraging and helped us to bear the load more easily. We ask continued prayers for her, believing that "the prayers of the Saints availeth much."

An Answer to Prayer

On August 26 of this year, my son was accidentally shot. He was rushed to the hospital and, five minutes later, pronounced dead. No one will ever know how I felt when I heard them call for the undertaker and realized that my son was forever gone.

At the funeral home, as I sat waiting for the service to begin, I seemed to hear a voice saying, "Pray." I knelt beside the casket and asked God to give me strength to bear my sorrow and to be able to realize that his will was superior to mine.

At times, I miss my son very much, but God has truly "wiped away my tears." The prayers of my friends and those who wrote to me helped a great deal. I want to thank all who remembered me and my other two children during that time. My hope is that we can live close to the Master and the wonderful gospel he has given us.

Expression of Gratitude

Nearly a year ago I was very ill, but through prayer and administration, I have been greatly blessed and am again able to do my housework. I am eighty-five years old.

Our Gospel Is to All Nations

By Hubert Case

Since General Conference, I have had many letters from all over the country, from local workers volunteering to go and work among our Lamanites—not among the tribes where we have opened the work, but to make new openings, as among the Sioux and many other tribes who are calling for missionaries to bring the Gospel Message to their people.

In our dealings with the Indian peoples, as in relationships with people of all other races, we must treat them without racial prejudice, for when an Indian is offended, he will simply stay away, and the offender will lose all power and influence.

In recent weeks, I have had evidence of the opening up of channels of service among the Indian people which had been closed.

Two letters have come to me recently from Brother T. B. Sharp, a Cherokee Indian, who appeared and spoke in the business session of the recent General Conference. We have baptized many of that noble race, which is regarded by informed persons as one of the very finest and ablest of the native races encountered by the white man in America. I am presenting parts of Brother Sharp's letters below.

The Scriptures admonish us to carry the gospel to all nations (Matthew 28: 19; Mark 16: 15). The Indian peoples are the recipients of great and wonderful promises (Book of Mormon, pages 662-665).

My love for people has carried me far and into thousands of their homes. I truly thank God at the sunset of my life that I have been able to spend my years in ministry, general and local, to the people, and particularly to the members of both the races so important to the destiny of America.

May I make a plea for the work of evangelism among the Indian people, in order that they may become an important factor in the building of Zion.

Winthrop, Arkansas
October 25, 1948

Dear Brother Case:

I received your card several days ago asking that I go and visit the Indian friends, but it appears that I will not be able to visit them for some time, as I am left alone to look after the Arkansas and Louisiana District. There was no missionary assigned to this field, and I must give practically all of my time to it. The field is large, covering all of Louisiana and Arkansas, three counties in Texas, and two in Oklahoma. I am just back from Oklahoma where we have a little group of Saints at Hochatown. I baptized four there Sunday—which makes sixty-two for this district so far this year—with the help of a missionary. But now, without help, it will crowd me to minister to the needs of this people.

the great goal that we have talked about so long.

T. B. Sharp

(The following is from a letter dated November 15.)

I appreciate the vision the Lord showed you in regard to the future work among the Indians, and I am anxious to see the work go forward among them. I baptized a Cherokee Indian woman since the General Conference at Hochatown, Oklahoma. I

ELDER AND MRS. T. B. SHARP

I do hope that something may be done for the Indians. Some have the idea that a man must have a lot of special training to minister to them, but God has said that faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies one for the work (Doctrine and Covenants 4:1). And if a man will go to those people filled with the Holy Spirit of God, he will be able to minister to their needs and bring them into the kingdom of God. But so long as a man feels above them, he cannot minister to them, and he will fail to reach white people also.

I see no need to wait for any special training when there is an emergency. All we need is men of faith. . . . Zion will never be built until we get the racial prejudice out of our systems and love our brothers as ourselves. If God's word can be trusted, these people are going to have a great part in the redemption of Zion, and the sooner the Saints realize that, the sooner we will be able to start toward had a remarkable vision in regard to it before it happened, and I don't think I was ever blessed with a greater blessing on confirmation than I was in confirming her. It was truly an outstanding experience. I wish I could have it recorded.

As ever,

Your friend and brother,

T. B. Sharp

Acknowledgment of Appreciation

I am writing for my brother-in-law, Ralph Dett, Route 1, Swift Road, Lombard, Illinois, who wishes to express his appreciation for those who remembered him in prayer or wrote to him, following the request in the Herald last spring. He is still in the hospital but is recovering.

WEDDINGS

Grimmett-Rush

Mrs. Clela Forester Rush of Clarksburg, West Virginia, announces the marriage of her daughter, Helen Dolores, to Claud Curtis Grimmett, Jr., of Craigmoor, West Virginia. The wedding took place on September 12 at the First Presbyterian Church in Clarksburg, Elder John Trieber officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Grimmett are residing at Buckhannon, West Virginia, where both are students at the West Virginia Wesleyan College.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Goodwin of Shawnee, Oklahoma, announce the birth of a daughter, Ann Ellen, born November 26. Mrs. Goodwin is the former Ruth Midgorden of Ames, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Nephi Torsch of Alpena, Michigan, announce the birth of a daughter, Karen Sue, born November 3. Mrs. Torsch is the former Mildred Howell, a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing, class of '47.

A son, Charlie Keith, was born on December 1 to Mr. and Mrs. Keith B. Shover of Waterloo, Iowa. Mrs. Shover was formerly Glatha Bobst of Anamosa, Iowa.

DEATHS

EMLAW.—Josephine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Causley, Sr., was born August 16, 1865, in Sarnia, Ontario, and died at Port Huron, Michigan, at the age of eighty-three. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for over forty-five years and sang in the church choir for fifteen years. Her husband, Jedd J. Emlaw, died on October 21, 1929.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Lila Harris and Mrs. Josephine Carpenter, both of Port Huron; four sons: William A., Jed E., and Wewey A. of Port Huron, and Charles W. of Belleville, Michigan; a sister, Mrs. Robert Scroggie, and two brothers, Levi and Leonard Causley, all of Sarnia; twenty-nine grandchildren; and eighteen great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Albert A. Falk and Son Funeral Home, Evangelist John Grice, assisted by Elders C. C. Whitford and E. E. Smith, officiating. Burial was in the Lakeside Cemetery.

FERGUSON.—George Herbert, was born May 14, 1875, at Nashville, Tennessee, and died November 19, 1948. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on December 10, 1899; being ordained a priest on February 4, 1912, and an elder on August 4, 1912. Many persons were blessed through his ministry. On October 15, 1905, he was married to Margaret Schmitt Knodel, who survives him. He also leaves four daughters: Mrs. Nita Burwell, Mrs. Margaret Stacy, Mrs. Louise Wilhoite, and Mrs. Ester Weis; two sons: William Herbert and Harry Arthur; and two brothers: Arthur E. and William Palmer Ferguson.

JONES.—Richard Henry, son of the late William Jones and Sarah Wellington, died November 20, 1948, at the age of sixty-nine, at Ridgetown, Ontario. He was ordained an elder in 1916, and an evangelist in 1946. For several years he officiated as pastor of the Chatham, Ontario, congregation and was held in high esteem by all in that community. For thirty-six years he managed a grocery business in Chatham, retiring in 1946. He appeared to be in good health and had gone to Ridgetown to conduct a wedding, but just as the ceremony ended, he suffered a heart attack and died almost immediately.

He is survived by his wife, the former Alice Marion Carless; two daughters: Mrs. Richard K. Wood of Royal Oak, Michigan, and Mrs. Floyd Wilson of London, Ontario; three sons: Richard J. of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Ivan of Bothwell, and Ira of Hamilton; a sister, Mrs. Thomas Farby of Detroit, Michigan; five brothers: John, Thomas, and Mancell of Chatham; Roy of Windsor, and Cedric of Riverside; and nineteen grandchildren. A daughter, Verlyn, and a son, Levi, preceded him in death. Services were conducted at the Campbell Funeral Home, Elder J. A. Gray and Bishop J. C. Dent officiating. Interment was in the Rosedale Cemetery in Tilbury East Township.

ALLEN.—Maud Stone, was born March 18, 1876, near Bradford, Ontario, and died in September, 1948, at Marazion Cornwall, England. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in January, 1901, at Owen Sound; despite the fact that she lived much of her life in isolation from the church, she did much for the work. At New Liskeard, where there was no branch, she conducted a Sunday school in her home and made contacts for the missionaries when they came; this was the beginning of the work in that city. Following the death of her first husband, Thomas Stafford, she married E. Allen, a native of Cornwall, and in 1938, they made their home in England. Here, she constantly endeavored to hold up the gospel to her friends and neighbors. Recently, meetings were held in the Allen home, and Elder F. A. Fry was permitted to speak in the Methodist Church as a result of Sister Allen's endeavor. In February, she prepared and read an essay on the Restored Gospel at the Methodist women's group. This was well received, and it is believed her work has prepared a good opening for missionaries.

She is survived by her husband, Mr. Allen of Cornwall, and one daughter, Mrs. H. Cavanaugh of Alberta, Canada.

JAQUES.—Joseph A., son of William and Rachel Jaques, was born August 13, 1881, at Belleville, Illinois, and died June 27, 1948, at the home of his son in Glenview, Illinois. He held the office of high priest and was a tireless worker in the church, serving as president of both the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Northeastern Illinois Districts. He was a favorite of young people and always eager to extend to them the benefit of his experience and understanding.

He is survived by his wife, Grace P. Jaques; three sons: William E., Arthur R., and Paul S.; and six grandchildren. Services were held at the Ryan-Parke Funeral Home in Park Ridge, Illinois, Elder Frank McDonald officiating. Interment was in the Town of Maine Cemetery, Park Ridge.

POORT.—Sylvester, son of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Poort, was born December 9, 1909, at Minong, Wisconsin, and died on March 27, 1945, at the One Hundredth Evacuation Hospital near Blumberskath, Germany, as a result of wounds received in battle. He had been previously wounded on July 14, 1944, for which he received the Purple Heart award, but recovered and returned to his unit. He moved with his parents to Mansfield as a child and lived in that vicinity until he was called into service.

He is survived by his mother and father; three brothers: Alien of Tabor, Iowa; Norman and Marvin of Wichita, Kansas; and three sisters: Mrs. August Oetting and Mrs. Oscar Oetting of Mansfield; and Mrs. Floyd Davis of Seymour, Missouri. The funeral was conducted by Evangelist J. W. Davis, assisted by the pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Burial was in the family lot in Mansfield cemetery.

*CONCERNING PUNKS

I've just had my feelings ruffled, my suit spattered with mud, and my sense of justice outraged, and I want to write an essay on punks.

The punk is a thing with the body of a man and the soul of an ape. He meets your smile with a scowl and your greeting with a growl. He is against you and the whole world, and nothing you can do will please him. When it comes to public relations, he'd rather be mad than right.

You are waiting on the corner for a bus, convinced that all bus drivers are decent, kindly chaps. The bus approaches, the driver glares at you, pulls way out around and races away, throwing hot fumes and dust in your face. It is the Punk at work. . . . Or you are driving your car and stop to let an old lady cross the street. Just as she reaches your left front wheel, there is a honk of a horn and a car races by, narrowly missing the lady, and scaring her badly. It is the Punk again. . . . Or you are having traffic trouble, and the gorilla with the badge (in spite of the fact that most cops are gentlemen) gives you a bawling (sic) out that wilts your ears and brings on a set of strawberry colored freckles. Sure, it's the Punk again. . . . Or a young woman leans against the bus stop waiting for a private ride, dumbly shaking her head as each bus stops to pick her up. It's a she Punk this time.

There ought to be an open season on punks, with all of them officially tagged, and a Winchester in the hands of every decent citizen. Or they should be banned from all jobs except cleaning sewers and collecting garbage, at least until they recover.

Sometimes the Punk is a clerk, sometimes a customer. Sometimes a driver, sometimes a pedestrian. Sometimes a citizen, sometimes an official. You have all met one or more punks in your life, and it didn't do you any good. We all have to watch ourselves, too, just to see that we don't act like punks.

And meanwhile, here's a tip for Munro Leaf, the self-appointed inspector of all the faults of childhood: "Are you a Punk? This is a watch-bird watching a Punk. This is a watch-bird watching You!"

And now I'm going home and look in the mirror to see if that Punk splashed any of his miserable disposition on my personality and left it clinging there!—L. L.

* PRONUNCIATION

When we named our principal church building the Auditorium (a place for an audience to hear), we did not anticipate the acoustical difficulties we were going to have with it, but the problem was nearly solved at the last General Conference by a new type of public address system.

But there is another problem that afflicts the hearing, and that is the way so many people pronounce the name. They say it as if it were spelled "Odd-i-torium," which should be avoided for obvious reasons, at least.

Look it up in "Webster's New International Dictionary," the best authority on American pronunciation. (Its "Guide to Pronunciation" is helpful.) The first syllable, "au," is marked with an "o" circumflex, which means that the "au" is pronounced like the "o" in "Lord," "orb," and "order." If you pronounce an "au" like "aw" you won't be far wrong.
